Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table the requisite number of copies of an emergent resolution relating to deregulation of utilities from the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, which says in part:

Whereas Alberta's farmers, businesses, industry, residents and not-for-profit groups have faced hardships through higher annual energy costs, inconsistent provincial rebate programs, unfair and inefficient billing procedures and uncertainty in market supplies and contracts;

Therefore be it resolved that the AAMD & C request that the Government of Alberta abandon and reverse the process of deregulation of utilities.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd table the required number of copies of letters addressed to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake from nurses who are distressed over what is being asked of them in the current contract negotiations and the tactics that are being used by the employer in those negotiations. The letters are from Diane Antoniuk, Frances Galambos, Linda Chislett, Marie Cardinal, Edith Monette, Linda Lynes-Franklin, Bonita Kalinsky.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from a hardworking, well-meaning teacher and constituent, Mary Dunnigan, with her kudos, comments, and areas of concern regarding the Learning Commission report.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table an additional selection of letters that were written by young voters at a Get Political party that I hosted on November 8. The first letter is from Colleen M.T. Sharpe, who is writing about her $30,000 student debt; a second letter from Don Stuike, who's writing about student debt and higher education becoming a commodity for the rich; a letter from Justin Lachance and Lyndsie Plowman commenting that Bill 43 is crippling student organizations "with underhanded and questionable legislation"; a letter from Laura Winton, who's outlining her concerns with the current tuition, eliminating the tuition cap, and the higher cost of living for students; and, finally, a letter from Michelle Kelly with grave concerns over Bill 43, accessibility, and student tuition.

Thank you very much.

2:50

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a document, Auto Insurance Review, dated October 15, 2003, put together by Alberta Finance, and in here it clearly indicates discrimination against Edmonton motorists with this insurance proposal.

The second group of tablings that I have this afternoon are letters that have been written to the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and copied to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview among others. These letters are from Louise Dumaine, Jodi Gammage, Carol Lyne Martens, and Marlene Wiebe. They are expressing concern over negotiations between the Provincial Health Authorities and the registered nurses, especially concerning patient safety.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings. The first is the appropriate number of copies of our Liberal vision for the health of Albertans, our health care policy, which I'm very proud of.

The second is a set of letters written to me by a number of nurses in my constituency expressing concern over the state of negotiations between health authorities and the nurses raising questions about patient safety and so on. Each one is a handwritten personal letter. They are from Karen Wolgemuth, Carmen Vervoorst, Anita Ashmore, Dorothy Barclay, Darlene Heald, Heidi Lawton,* Angie Toner,* Nola Trynchy, Don Cytoko, Kaye Schultz, Joyce Hvingelby, Colleen Trimble, and Judy Koufogiannakis.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I'm very pleased to table five copies of a brochure produced by the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. It's the Page Biographies, Third Session, fall sitting, 25th Legislature.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would ask the government to share with us the projected government business for next week.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to do that. On Monday afternoon we'll be dealing with private members' business, written questions and motions for returns, followed by public bills and orders other than government bills and orders. In the evening from 8 to 9 we will deal with motions other than government motions, and at 9 we hope to deal with second reading of Bill 47, Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003, and Bill 51, the Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act, 2003. If we need to, we would also deal with third reading of Bill 6, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2003; Bill 36, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2003; and Bill 37, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. Should time permit, we would go to Committee of the Whole on bills 47 and 51 as well as Bill 43, the Post-secondary Learning Act.

On Tuesday afternoon under Government Bills and Orders we hope to proceed with second reading of Bill 50, the Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003, and Bill 51 as well as Bill 44, the Personal Information Protection Act, and Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), and otherwise as per the Order Paper. On Tuesday evening under Government Bills and Orders we hope to be in Committee of the Whole on Bill 45, the Family Law Act, as well as bills 44 and 43 and thereafter second reading of Bill 53, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday afternoon under Government Bills and Orders, messages and supplementary supply, we intend to bring forward a government motion for a supply motion followed by second reading of Bill 48, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Amendment Act, 2003, as well as Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), and Committee of the Whole for Bill 38, and otherwise as per the Order Paper. On Wednesday evening under Government Bills and Orders we hope to be at second reading with Bill 49, Public Lands Amendment Act, 2003, and Bill 53, and thereafter we would go to Committee of Supply – it would be supplementary supply day 1 of one – followed by a reversion to Introduction of Bills for the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act at first reading, followed by second reading of Bill 53 and Committee of the Whole for Bill 38 and Bill 53.

On Thursday afternoon under Government Bills and Orders we hope to consider second reading of the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act along with Bill 52, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2003, and Bill 46, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2003; thereafter, time permitting and so on, third reading of Bill 36, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2003, and Bill 37, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act; and, again time permitting, second reading and perhaps Committee of the Whole on Bill 53.

That is the projected government business for next week.

2010 Vancouver/Whistler Olympic Games

24. Mr. Zwozdesky moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly show its support to the province of British Columbia in their efforts to bring awareness to all Canadians of the benefits of the 2010 Vancouver/Whistler Olympic Games to our athletes and young aspiring athletes as well as the benefits to maximize tourism and economic benefits relating to these games.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I might add, Mr. Speaker, that Albertans do share in the excitement as the Winter Olympics return to Canada in 2010, and I'm so very pleased that there will be opportunities for Alberta and British Columbia to collaborate on initiatives such as tourism and other developmental initiatives associated with these games.

The 2010 Olympics will give Alberta's athletes a true chance to shine, and we do have the opportunity to work with British Columbia on high performance athlete development. These games will also give young athletes a chance to watch their heroes up close and to see what it takes to become a top-calibre athlete.

As minister responsible for sport I'm obviously very excited by this, and I'm also excited as the minister responsible for the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities because Alberta athletes with disabilities will also have a chance to participate in the Paralympics, which will be held in Vancouver/Whistler immediately following the Olympics. These athletes will compete in eight Paralympic sports and will have the opportunity to showcase their skills and talents to the world.

These Olympics and Paralympics participants are tremendous role models for aspiring athletes as well as for all Albertans in demonstrating the many positive outcomes of a rich and active lifestyle. Alberta and B.C. should work together in an effort to link educational and physical activities to the principles of the games, which, overall, do support healthy living and learning initiatives.

There are countless other opportunities, Mr. Speaker, that come with the Olympics, including increased tourism. From our vibrant city centres to our natural scenic beauty Alberta has so much to offer the estimated 5,000 athletes and officials, over 10,000 media members, more than 14,000 volunteers, and about 2.3 million attendees who will be visiting western Canada. Alberta and B.C. have already taken a very big step forward when both provinces signed the joint memorandum of understanding on tourism initiatives on October 8 of this year and agreed to pursue the development of an Olympics corridor between Calgary and Whistler with the goal of bringing Olympics-related tourists to more areas of both our provinces.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, as Alberta learned through the 1988 Calgary Olympics and through the 2001 World Championships in Athletics in Edmonton, the spirit and the benefits of these major games do live on through legacies left behind. Those legacies include such things as facilities, community organizations, strengthened volunteerism, and the very long-lasting benefits of promoting active living and lifestyles.

Thank you very much for your anticipated support.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We in the Official Opposition support this motion, stating that the Legislative Assembly show its support to the province of British Columbia in their efforts to bring awareness to all Canadians of the benefits of the 2010 Vancouver/Whistler Olympic Games to our athletes and young aspiring athletes.

There is no doubt that this is going to have a huge economic impact in western Canada. Just the number of game tickets is going to be huge. It's estimated at 1.8 million tickets available. The GDP impact of the event will be well over $2 billion. The estimated total GDP impact will be well over $3 billion. We will see 55,000 direct person-years of employment being created as a result of these games and substantial taxes collected at the federal, provincial, and local tax levels, which will be a huge economic stimulus for the regions.

Also, there is going to be a direct benefit to Edmonton as a result of these games, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a complete benefit from the Olympic Games as the Institute for Olympic Education is located here in Edmonton at the University of Alberta. It is located in the Department of Elementary Education in the Faculty of Education. The Vancouver LegaciesNow 2010 committee chose the Institute for Olympic Education at the U of A to help develop its curriculum for its various web tools, which will be a large part of the educational component. So what we see is a real integration of economic impact, educational impact in a manner to profile our country from a tourism perspective, from employment, and from our outstanding athletes and those outstanding athletes of other countries.

So it is our pleasure to support this particular motion and wish the province of B.C. every success in 2010.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister to conclude?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Just to call the question, please.

head: Second Reading

Public Lands Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move second reading of the Public Lands Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of this bill is to strengthen and clarify the government's role as the land manager of public lands. This is a huge role for government, to oversee 100 million acres of public lands throughout our province. We take this role very seriously. The changes being introduced today in this piece of legislation will allow our government to deal swiftly and effectively with instances of noncompliance on public lands and respond to increased demand within the agricultural industry to allow some bison grazing on public land.

Basically, the first set of amendments deals with unauthorized use of closed roads or trailways on public lands. Without going into specifics on all the amendments, I will highlight a number of them which will strengthen the existing act.

First of all, in order to avoid confusion, we need to have it clearly stated in legislation that it is unlawful for people to travel on a closed road or to place barriers that impede lawful use of a road. Government can require the placement of signs saying that the road is closed, but if people refuse to obey these signs, we need to be able to deal with this effectively and swiftly.

We also need to clarify a police officer's authority to remove a person if they refuse to leave a closed-off area. Currently there is a gray area in dealing with who is responsible to deal with unlawful acts of accessing a closed area on public lands. Since it will be clearly stated in legislation that it is illegal to do so, we can then quite simply take it to the next level and have a police officer deal with the situation. Now, this is not to say that we won't be applying some law of reason to this situation. Much of the time we will hopefully be able to reason with the individual and won't need to call in the police. However, if things do need to go to the next level, we now have the legislation to enable us to do that.

Another change to the legislation deals with clearly outlining who is the land manager for this public land, which of course is the government of Alberta. This is important to remember because the next amendment explains that it is illegal for an individual to demand payment, money, or other goods in exchange for access to public lands which they are already entitled to enter. Essentially, as an Albertan you can't demand money from another individual for them to access public land, especially when the government is the land manager.

The last area in relation to access on public lands deals with the government's ability to take action against those individuals who illegally travel on a closed road. Explaining what currently goes on in trying to deal with this situation may shed some light on why this amendment needs to be put in place. Currently when people travel on a closed road or illegally place a barricade on public land, our only recourse is through a ministerial order. As many of you can understand, this can be a very long and arduous process. We need amendments in this legislation to streamline the process so that we can safely and legally control access on public land.

It's important to note that we are always improving the way we manage our public lands. As Alberta's population increases and more users wish to access public lands, we need to continue to find innovative ways to balance the needs of Albertans.

The other amendments that are in this bill will accommodate bison grazing. The bison industry has been one of the fastest growing agricultural industries in Alberta. In fact, estimates indicate that approximately $15 million was generated from the sale of bison meat last year. These new amendments will allow for some bison grazing on public lands, agricultural dispositions under certain conditions. It's important to note that we have worked very closely with the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on these amendments. This change is being proposed after serious review.

A multistakeholder committee which had representatives from the Alberta Bison Association, the Alberta Beef Producers, the Federation of Alberta Naturalists, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, the Alberta chapter of the Wildlife Society, the Peace Country Bison Association, the Alberta Grazing Leaseholders Association, and the Alberta Fish and Game Association was consulted. The committee was very concerned about disease transmission from wild to farmed bison.

Sustainable Resource Development has worked with the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development to develop disease-free testing, tracking, and marking requirements for bison grazing on public land. These requirements and the establishment of a high-risk area, which is north of Manning, will greatly reduce the risk of certain diseases spreading from wild bison herds to farmed bison. There will not be any bison allowed to graze on public land in the high-risk area.

Now, this is only the first step in allowing bison to graze on certain lands. Changes to the dispositions and fee regulations will also be required. Once the legislative changes are proclaimed, government will begin to review applications for bison grazing using criteria developed from the stakeholder committee recommendations.

So, in closing, Mr. Speaker, these are the changes being proposed to the Public Lands Act that will enable government to better manage this resource. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 49, Public Lands Amendment Act, 2003. The sponsor of this bill, the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, called me some time ago, actually, to arrange a meeting to be briefed on this particular bill, and we managed to do that this week. He and a member of the minister's department and someone I believe from the Public Affairs Bureau sat down with me and went over two aspects of this bill, and I thought: well, I don't know what the big briefing was about because it seems to be pretty innocuous as we go through it.

What they talked to me about during that meeting was the part of the bill that talks about regulating the use and misuse of roads on public lands, and we've long talked about that as an outstanding issue that needed to be resolved. I support the piece of the legislation that deals with that. What that means is that when you have public lands and they've been closed for some reason and people still use that road, going against the posted signs and the barriers that might be across the road, then there should be some penalties associated with that. We support that.

Often the roads are closed because of environmental degradation reasons or because of impact on wildlife or other associated reasons, and they are closed for very good reasons. For people caught trespassing in those particular circumstances, I and also all of the consumer groups I've dealt with and environmental groups and municipalities believe that penalties should be higher and that there should be some enforcement. So that part of the bill I was very happy with.

The second part of the bill they talked about was the grazing of bison on public lands. While some people have an issue with this, particularly to do with disease control, I don't and neither have the people I have talked to. Bison grazing on public lands is a traditional use of those lands and is really reverting to a natural-state use and a way to maintain in most cases the ecological integrity of the land in accordance with century-old traditions. So I certainly didn't have a problem with that, and that was the end of our little briefing session.

I get back to the office and take a look at the bill and start to go through it and find out that there's a whole other piece of this particular legislation that didn't happen to get discussed in our briefing time which I have some really grave concerns about, Mr. Speaker. That's the part that allows peace officers, police officers to direct others not necessarily associated with law enforcement to remove or seize property barricading an entry point to Crown lands. This deals with a section, primarily section 54, in this particular bill.

Now, we see this as a targeted example of this government trying to resolve the issue that we saw last year and which has developed over the course of a couple of years where some aboriginal communities have blocked access by oil exploration companies on Crown land. This was a big deal that was talked about last spring, and the government brought forward requests for funds to try to resolve this particular problem in last year's budget that was debated.

At that point, we expected the government to take a leadership role in developing a consultation process that would bring both parties to the table and resolve the outstanding issues through some form of negotiation. We also expected the federal government to be brought to the table in terms of discussing some of these issues because while they don't have jurisdiction over public lands per se in Alberta, they do have jurisdiction over a lot of the outstanding issues that I believe were being discussed at that time.

So it came as quite a surprise to us to see that the outcome of those dollars being spent and the outcome of what we thought were going to be positions of negotiation was this bill, which certainly at first glance looks like we could see a huge escalation of the potential for confrontation on those particular public lands. I haven't heard any reasonable explanation for why the government at this particular point in time thinks they need to give more power to the police in those regions and in fact what seems to be excessive power, enabling police officers to designate other people to assist them in bringing down barricades.

When we take a look at the past history in this country and we take a look at the situations of confrontation between aboriginal groups and land users, be they business or recreational users, we see that there have been some situations that have gotten completely out of control. We certainly do not want to see an Oka situation develop in the oil fields here in Alberta, and it seems like that's where this particular piece of legislation could land us.

Yes, there is conflict between oil field contractors and First Nations in Alberta's north, but we want to see that conflict resolved in a nonconfrontational manner, and we believe that that is certainly possible. We do not believe that those negotiations or this government are in a situation at this particular point in time where they are forced into bringing in legislation that empowers police to take more aggressive action. We certainly have very grave concerns about what this bill does in terms of empowering police to remove blockades that obstruct access to land.

We've seen in the past that some northern Alberta First Nation bands have used blockades to block nonaboriginal contractors when working in the oil industry, and some bands have claimed that their treaty rights grant them the rights of first refusal on contract work or a right to a cut of oil industry profits. But blockades and the way they are outlined to be handled in this particular bill we believe will only increase tension between First Nations and other communities, and that's not a situation that we want to see happen.

I need some answers to some questions. Why bring in this bill at this particular time? Where are the negotiations on resolving those issues? What about all the discussion we had in the spring? What were the outcomes of those? What are the contractors saying now? I don't think anybody wants people traveling in the northern part of our communities fearful that they're going to be facing confrontational kinds of situations. Everybody loses in that situation, Mr. Speaker, particularly the directly affected parties: the First Nations, the contractors, the police officers who are going to have to police this situation, and any people from the community who are going to be enlisted in this process.

That means a loss of negotiating ability between all parties involved. It means a huge loss of revenue for those people who would like to do business. I believe that it creates conflict and makes it very much more difficult to negotiate any of the land claim settlements that are currently at stake. It means that we have millions of dollars of oil revenue at issue here. So we could see where the situation in Alberta has even higher stakes at risk than those in Oka, and we do not want to see that kind of situation develop here.

We want to know what the negotiations were with the northern oil field conflict and the federal government. I heard this afternoon that the federal government said that because they're provincial Crown lands, they don't want to get involved, but I don't believe that's good enough. I believe this is a situation where both levels of government and the directly affected parties need to sit down and negotiate a settlement. This government allocated $6 million in the 2003 budget. If this is the only outcome that we see as a result of that, then that was money very poorly spent, Mr. Speaker. We expect that that money would have been spent on consultation that actually led to a solution, not to legislation coming forward that can increase the ability for conflict.

In principle, if that's the way this bill stands, Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not very pleased with it, and I will not be supporting it at this stage. I do expect some detailed discussion and negotiation of this particular bill when we get to committee, and I expect some answers to those questions from the sponsor of this bill. So I hope he takes them under serious advisement and we get some more detail on where this bill is going, what the intent of it was, and how otherwise those negotiations are going in the north.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with interest that one gets to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 49, the Public Lands Amendment Act. Certainly, the changes that were originally expressed by the government and by the sponsor of this bill are now reasons for a second look at these proposed changes.

You know, certainly when you think that the changes are being proposed to strengthen existing legislation with regard to regulating the use and misuse of roads and public lands – that is, to prevent people from traveling or being on a closed licence-of-occupation road, the idea to permit the grazing of bison on public land, and to allow peace officers to direct others not necessarily associated with law enforcement to remove or seize property barricading an entry point to Crown lands. Well, the first two issues are fair enough, but I think that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is absolutely right. We could live with that; we could accept that.

Whenever we are going to discuss allowing peace officers to direct others not necessarily associated with law enforcement – I hope that's not a vigilante group, which I'm sure it isn't – to remove or seize property barricading an entry point to Crown lands, what specifically is the intention of this? We had quite a discussion regarding this, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glegarry and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie certainly had some very thoughtful suggestions and observations in regard to this land issue. There have been incidents in the past, particularly in the northern part of the province. The membership of the Northern Oilfield Contractors Association is scattered and located throughout northern Alberta. They had some issues around access. Even the Slave Lake Chamber of Commerce expressed concern about the issue of land access.

Now, I'm also of the view that this bill as it's presented to us could increase tension or the potential of conflict between oil field contractors and the First Nations of Alberta's north, and I don't think we need to be increasing the potential for conflict or increasing the potential for tension between those parties. It has been described as the Alberta government's bill that could lead to an Oka in the oil fields. We all know and understand and appreciate just exactly how beneficial oil field activity is to the economic well-being of this province. We don't need to have confrontation. I think we should have consultation and we should have negotiation, and that is particularly expressed very well in the document that was tabled in this Legislative Assembly this past February, I believe, by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

The whole idea in this legislation of empowering police to remove blockades that obstruct access to land – well, we all know that some northern Alberta First Nations bands have used blockades to block nonaboriginal contractors from working in the oil industry. Some bands have claimed that their treaty rights grant them the right of first refusal on contract work or a right to a portion of all oil industry profits. Now, surely we can have some consultation and discussion. I would be interested to know – and perhaps we'll find out in committee if not at second reading – if there has been a process of consultation in regard to the drafting of this Bill 49 and if there has been consultation just exactly what the affected parties had to say to the government in regard to this matter.

Now, when we talk about recommendations and solutions, instead of talking about forming a posse, we should form a group that will discuss the issues and perhaps come to an understanding. Instead of passing this legislation at this time, I think we would be better off taking some of the suggestions from this report of the Northern Oilfield Contractors Association.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Some of the things that they have suggested, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, are the formation of community advisory groups in small numbers that are manageable and that the government of Alberta through an independent facilitator could lead discussions but that solutions are to come from the stakeholders. Now, I don't believe this item in Bill 49 is a solution. Also, "recognize that the end result is a fair, open, and (if desired) competitive business market in Alberta's resource sector throughout all Crown Land." The contractors' association also wants to point out, "Recognize that racism and discrimination are unacceptable elements throughout a free Canadian Society." Their association "is committed to eliminating all factors which foster discrimination both in the workplace and our community environment."

To think that we would be willing to go ahead with this sort of legislation at this time is just plain wrong, and I think there should be, as other people have said, a greater focus on education and training. I would urge all members of this Assembly to say no, in fact say no to the entire Bill 49 because of what could happen in the future. I don't think it has been thought out – and others may disagree and rightfully so – but there have been solutions and recommendations presented in regard to these matters that do not require that we increase armed presence where there are disputes, because the consequences could be catastrophic.

As this day progresses, we should recognize, each and every one of us, just what a peaceful and democratic country we live in. There is almost total chaos, almost total anarchy in the country of Turkey as we speak, and it is unfortunate. It is unfortunate that we cannot learn from the lessons of others. Let's have a process of negotiation and consultation, not enhance some sort of idea that we can have confrontation.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions?

Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll keep my comments fairly brief as I need to think this one through and mull it over. I see it as a genuinely tough issue, a real dilemma here underlying the intent or motivation of this bill, or at least I'm assuming so.

The bill clearly does clarify the controls of the provincial government and of peace officers and police over roads and access to Crown land, to public lands. I think there's something to be said for making rules clear, and I can see also that there are times when these provisions perhaps are necessary. There are some obvious things here, I think. Making it illegal to demand payment for access to public lands: that kind of thing is certainly worthy.

My unease with the bill comes from its sense, when I read it, of a kind of aggressive stance, which seems to probably increase, if not increase then certainly clarify very much, the capacity of police and their deputies and so on to remove barriers on roads, to be armed, and so on. Again, there are times when that's undoubtedly legitimate. My concern is that this could be seen as an inflammatory bill, and that's what I'm weighing in my mind.

Are we setting the stage here for unnecessary and violent confrontation, which could in fact be more destructive than anyone intends? I mean, the people of Quebec are still struggling with the Oka showdown. I think it's eight years ago or something. There have been similar ones in B.C. and elsewhere. I think the people of Alberta and, frankly, the government of Alberta and the police of Alberta deserve credit that while there have been tensions over land access in northern Alberta, so far they have not come to a violent head. I think that if they were, we might find the repercussions and downfalls of that to be so severe that they weren't worth a confrontation and that a slow, patient approach would have been better.

I'm going to listen carefully to the debate. I look forward to many, many MLAs participating in this. I'll be certainly reading as widely on it as I can and consulting with others on it. I find that this bill, to me, presents a series of issues that I am not yet resolved on but I am concerned about.

So with those comments for now, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat and look forward to further debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close debate.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly undertake to provide responses to all the questions that were brought forward during second reading and provide that at the next stage of the bill. So I'd now ask for the question.

Bill 51
Natural Resources Conservation Board
Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move second reading of the Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act, 2003.

I'm bringing this act forward on behalf of my colleague the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Administrative changes are required to deal with the expanded role of the Natural Resources Conservation Board. Amendments are also needed to clearly separate the quasi-judicial function of the board from its administrative function. These changes will also clarify financial controls, membership of the board, and the unbiased nature of the appeals.

The purpose of the Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act is to provide an impartial process to review projects that could affect Alberta's natural resources. The board reviews these kinds of projects to ensure that they are in Alberta's best interest. The board closely examines possible social, economic, and environmental impacts of these projects. Under this act the board may also give other responsibility under other acts such as the Agricultural Operation Practices Act. Those responsibilities may include running a regulatory system in addition to the board's quasi-judicial status.

This act also standardizes the term for board members to five years. The requirement for an address before the Legislature to remove a board member will also be repealed. Finally, to maintain consistency with standard government financial practices, the board's budget will fall under the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development's budget.

In January 2002 the NRCB gained responsibility for regulating Alberta's confined feeding operations and for administering the Agricultural Operation Practices Act. Since then the NRCB has had two distinct functions: making important quasi-judicial decisions regarding applications under the NRCB Act and the Agricultural Operation Practices Act and administering the regulatory system for the Agricultural Operation Practices Act and supporting and hearing the structure for the NRCB Act.

In the past year there has been some confusion around the board's new responsibilities. These issues reflect the board's initial role and the legislative framework created to accomplish its more limited objectives. The board's increased responsibilities have resulted in the need for greater clarity between its quasi-judicial and operational roles. Both the regulatory and the quasi-judicial functions are essential to the board's current role. Both need to be clear. The amendments clarify the board's role regarding these two separate and distinct functions.

Changes will also ensure that financial practices are similar to standard government procedures, reinforcing financial controls. Currently funds transferred to the board must first be approved by a vote in the Legislative Assembly. With the changes the board's budget will be included under SRD's budget. The board will report to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development for budget approval. Although the board will have a new financial reporting structure, it will not impact the board's quasi-judicial or operational roles or decision-making abilities. Consistent with current practice the minister will have no jurisdiction over these NRCB areas. Including the board's budget with SRD's budget will enhance accountability of both the board and of government.

These amendments will also standardize to five years the terms for which members are appointed. At the end of the term board members' performance will be reviewed. If a member seeks renewal, that review will be incorporated into any decisions surrounding potential membership renewal. Currently, an address before the Legislature is required to remove a board member. This is a time-consuming and costly process that prevents the minister from responding quickly to issues involving the board membership. Removing the requirement for the legislative address will give the government the necessary flexibility to resolve such matters. Other changes may include adjusting the number of board members to meet the board's changing responsibilities.

All of these amendments will permit the board to fill its quasi-judicial role in a fair and neutral fashion and still keep its administration businesslike and efficient. The changes will bring clarity to the role of the NRCB and enhance the accountability of government.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 51. Thank you.

head: Third Reading

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development on behalf.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, I am pleased today to move third reading of Bill 6, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

As all members of the House are aware, these acts are often used to consolidate and to bring forth minor changes to justice legislation. The bill currently before the House includes amendments to four justice acts, the first of which is the Judicature Act.

First, minor amendments to the Judicature Act will ensure that security staff can respond appropriately to security threats in courthouses and other buildings that contain courtrooms and will clarify that the minister may appoint either individuals or an entire class of people as courthouse security officers. This change is part of Alberta Justice's and Alberta Solicitor General's commitment to work with judges and justices in all three levels of court to deal with courthouse security concerns while ensuring our courts remain open and accessible to all Albertans.

The second act affected here is the Alberta Young Offenders Act. As the members of this House are aware, the federal Youth Criminal Justice Act came into force on April 1, 2003, and replaced the former Young Offenders Act. Now, Alberta already has provincial legislation that sets out the procedures related to provincial offences committed by those under 18 years of age such as offences under the Traffic Safety Act and the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act, for example. Bill 6 will amend that provincial legislation to mirror the changes made under the new Youth Criminal Justice Act. For instance, some terminology will be changed and the maximum fine for provincial offences will be increased from $500 to $1,000 to conform to the maximum set out in the Youth Criminal Justice Act. Finally, the current name of our act, the Young Offenders Act, will become the Youth Justice Act.

The third and fourth relevant acts here are the Petty Trespass Act and Trespass to Premises Act. I'll refer to the amendments to the final two bills, the Petty Trespass Act and the Trespass to Premises Act, together since the changes are related.

Mr. Speaker, many members of this House have heard concerns from rural constituents about trespassers on their land. Sometimes trespassers come onto the property with all-terrain vehicles, damaging the land or even posing a threat to children and livestock. Under current legislation a land or property owner must appear before a justice of the peace to lay a charge against an alleged trespasser. Albertans told us this was an unnecessarily onerous process and the available penalties were too small. As a result, these acts are being amended to allow peace officers to lay charges and the maximum fines are being increased to $2,000 and to $5,000 if it is the second or subsequent offence for the trespasser against the same property.

The amendments also provide that if the land in question is obviously private land as indicated by cultivation, fenced areas, the presence of livestock, and so on, then entry is prohibited unless the landowner gives his or her permission.

A further amendment to the Petty Trespass Act will also make it an offence to remove or deface no-trespassing signs. The maximum penalty for this will be $2,000.

Thank you for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, and I would encourage all members to carefully consider this bill and support it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've seen some debate on this particular bill in the spring, and then it was held over during the course of the summer. Some amendments were brought forward that we had the opportunity to review and debate earlier this week. Generally speaking, we were in support of the amendments and the general direction of this bill. It was mainly a bill that dealt with small changes or definitional changes and from our perspective wasn't really controversial in any way. So we have in fact supported this bill at all readings and continue to support it at this particular time.

So with that, I'll take my seat and call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

Bill 36
Environmental Protection and Enhancement
Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to move third reading of Bill 36, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2003, on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Environment.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, Bill 36 allows electronic reporting of environmental incidents and strengthens Alberta Environment's ability to adopt and enforce codes of practice. The bill also supports recent changes to the reclamation and remediation program for upstream oil and gas operations.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, this is a bill that we saw in the spring, and it came back this fall. While it deals with four quite different objectives, it is fairly minor in nature as far as we can see at this particular time, and we haven't had over the course of the summer any huge number of people or organizations in opposition to any of the particular sections of this act.

Really, it does four different things here in the act. One is with regard to the electronic reporting. This is just bringing their legislation up to current standards. Many people fax or e-mail, and it makes it much easier for people or organizations who have to report to the department to do so as fast as they can. If they release a substance that can cause an adverse affect, the requirement is that they report to the director, so now they can do it by fax or by e-mail with this change. We support that because when there has been a problem, the department needs to know sooner rather than later, and it certainly is better than just being able to appear in person or send a written letter.

Then it talks about the codes of practice. We always have lots of controversy in this province about whether or not business should be done by regulation or whether a code of practice is acceptable. It has been the common practice of this government to often use codes of practice for different kinds of what would otherwise be regulations in terms of enforcement issues. So what we're seeing here is a little bit of cleaning up in this area. The standards are laid out, I think, a little more clearly, and so that's good news.

The third thing is that they're eliminating the 25-year limit to issuing environmental protection orders for sites that have been granted a reclamation certificate. This is the piece that has required the most amount of debate in this House. It isn't hugely controversial, although some organizations, some corporations don't like it because it means that their environmental liability can be extended. We have found through practice that that's a very good idea because, particularly with well site reclamation, sometimes it takes a very long time to see what the subsequent or resultant impact is on the land, and then the government is on the hook for the cleanup.

We have numerous situations like this throughout this province. The government has a substantial contingent liability in this regard. We asked the minister of environmental protection to tell us what that contingent liability would be before we voted on this bill, and he has been unable to do so, so far. Perhaps we'll have to resort to written questions to get that particular answer. It's too bad. It would have been nice if it had happened in this debate because the government is on the hook for a lot of dollars for cleanup. Wherever we can extend this responsibility to the corporations responsible, the better it is for all concerned, I think. So that's what happens here. The corporations need to be more vigilant in their reclamation activities, and it gives them time so that as standards are improved, corporations can bring those standards into practice on lands that they previously used. So that's a good thing.

The last little bit of this piece of legislation was some minor cleanup that we saw happening to wording and so on, not substantive in nature and things that we supported.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks on this bill. We will be supporting it in third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to indicate to the House that we continue to have mixed feelings about this bill, you could say. We are prepared to applaud the extension of liability for abandoned well sites to 25 years, and we think that's a positive step. If the government makes use of that in the future, I think that would be a potential benefit to the people of Alberta.

We do continue to have serious reservations about the use of self-regulation in this matter, and notwithstanding the use of reclamation specialists and paperwork being submitted to the government and so on or even the codes of practice for acceptable reclamation, it is problematic from our point of view that government inspectors would only do random audits of reclaimed well sites, access roads, and abandoned rights-of-way. That is a concern, Mr. Speaker, from our point of view. It depends very much on the resourcing of the department and the proportion that is put towards this problem. There's now a backlog of 40,000 uninspected sites in this province, and the department as it now stands can only do 1,700 per year. So, clearly, there should be an increase in the resources available to do this, and we are not sure that just passing off the lion's share of the responsibility to the oil and gas companies themselves is exactly what is required here.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and indicate that we will not be supporting Bill 36 at this time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a third time]

Bill 37

Climate Change and Emissions Management Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Environment it's my pleasure to stand today and to move third reading of Bill 37, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act.

In quick summary, Mr. Speaker, Bill 37 addresses specific greenhouse gas emissions in the context of our government's action plan on climate change. This bill would provide for sectoral agreements, emissions trading, programs, reporting, and funding of technological approaches to climate change.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a bill we don't like.

It's a silly bill. It's one that doesn't really address the real issues at hand. It's a grandstanding bill brought forward by this government to try and justify their positions, which is really too bad, because the bureaucracies of the various departments, being the Department of Energy and the Department of Environment, are making great progress and, I believe, do have the solutions for this province to meet all the Kyoto targets, but this government likes to position themselves on the time line of dinosaurs and has done so once again with this particular bill. We raised our concerns about it in the spring, over the course of this summer, and again in the fall. I was hoping that the government would take this bill and not bring it back, but that's not what they chose to do.

There aren't any sections here, really, that show any promise. My biggest concerns are with section 3, where they talk about the specified gas emission targets. It's really the key part of the bill, and it states that the greenhouse gas emission target "is a reduction by December 31, 2020 of specified gas emissions [related] to Gross Domestic Product to an amount that is equal to or less than 50% of 1990 [totals]." So if it was just a reduction by 50 percent, then it would be good, but it talks about the relationship of this to the GDP.

What this really means is that the Alberta plan would let emissions in Alberta increase but at a slower rate than business as usual. Well, that isn't acceptable. It isn't acceptable for this province, for this country, or for any other country as we try to address this particular issue. There are lots of ways that government can stimulate this reduction, and it's really not a smart idea for them to be promoting growth of GHGs, greenhouse gas emissions, as they are in this particular part.

We also see part of this section giving cabinet the ability to make regulations regarding interim emission targets and targets for specified gases and for different sectors of the economy. So there is no certainty that by doing this, they'll be able to meet any of the targets in their preamble. We completely don't support this.

The sectoral agreements that are talked about in section 4 are also an issue. Why are they proposing sectoral agreements? In spite of having asked this question a number of times, we haven't got any answers to this. A better solution for us would be . . .

Mr. MacDonald: A Liberal government.

Ms Carlson: Yeah. There you go. That would be a way better solution. I like that one a lot.

Mr. Magnus: I can't believe who said that.

Ms Carlson: I see it's seconded by one of the government members from Calgary, Mr. Speaker. Finally, they're starting to see the light on that side of the House. It's about time.

So what we really need the government to do is to provide a better framework, and that's what we've asked for all along for this and then consult with sectoral interests and then legislate what they deem to be appropriate. This is a top-down approach that doesn't work, and we just simply can't support it.

Section 5, where they talk about emission offsets, is also a problem. We asked some questions around this. Once again, Mr. Speaker, we didn't get any answers. No big surprise. The front bench doesn't have the answers. We really need to go to the staff, because they're the people who know what's going on here and should be moving this particular issue forward. Section 5 deals with emission offsets, and this section gives cabinet the ability to make regulations respecting the offsets, the credits, and the sink rights.

The biggest problem is that the wording of this particular section does not force them to make any regulations respecting offsets, and we really need some direction on this in terms of what the government is going to be expecting of industry. We want a concrete plan that talks about how offsets and credits and a credit exchange might work. You know, there's already a market for these, and this government once again is four steps behind everybody else. It's a hollow section and doesn't give us any information.

The mandatory reporting section, which is section 6, is a problem. It indicates that anyone who releases or permits the release of greenhouse gases at levels in excess of the level dictated by the regulations must report that release according to the regulations. So my question there, Mr. Speaker, is: so what? They report it and then what happens? This government has an abysmal record when it comes to monitoring and enforcement. We need a concrete number for what the threshold will be. We need specific rules regarding the reporting. We need to know what the penalties will be. We need to know what the enforcement process is. Nothing here.

Section 7 talks about the associated programs, and what it talks about is that they may create programs. Well, we've seen by the kind of popular reaction that we had to bringing in a program for consumers to be able to retrofit their homes that this government is not going to do anything to help people in this province in terms of reducing their own personal greenhouse gas emissions or reducing their energy costs. So once again it's a very poor performance by a government who is completely out of touch with the concerns of average Albertans and the escalating costs that they face with the direction that this government takes. [interjection] Well, perhaps you'd like to stand up and get your comments on the record in terms of this particular bill. That would be more helpful than just chirping away from the other side.

Mr. MacDonald: Calgary-North Hill.

Ms Carlson: Yes. Calgary-North Hill needs to stand up, Mr. Speaker, and put his comments officially on the record rather than just chirping away from his seat.

Section 8 talks about the agreements regarding interjurisdictional co-operation. This is the issue of greatest contention for this province. What should be sent in the report cards that go home to consumers is: does not play well with others. [interjection] Well, it's true. My colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar likes that comment, and it's very true. This is a government who not only doesn't play well with others, won't play well with others, and we've seen a great deal of evidence this past week in the words and actions of the Premier and in their negotiations with other provinces and the federal government. So, you know, really they've got to get with the program one of these days and talk about how they're going to co-operate with other jurisdictions, because if they don't, it's going to impair Alberta's growth, Mr. Speaker, and that would be a shame because we have a great many opportunities in this province that this government is seeing go by the wayside.

Section 9 talks about property right: "A sink right is a property right." We haven't seen any of the rules come out about this or even any of the guidelines or any of the discussion. We still need to know: does this particular section indicate that the province can't claim credits for sinks that are privately owned, and what are the implications for the interjurisdictional issues that will be falling out of this? So, then, what's this government's position on carbon sinks as a commodity? We know what the globe is saying, but what's this province saying?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

My other major concern then – I'm reading my last major concern, which includes every section in this bill – is section 10, which talks about the climate change and emissions management fund. This section establishes that fund and suggests what it could be used for and talks about some of the financial management. Generally speaking, we've said that having a fund in place is a good idea, but we need to know what the specific activities of the fund will be. We need to know what the programs are going to be, how they'll be operated, what projects will be funded, how funding applications are made, and how decisions are made as to which projects they're going to fund. From everything we've heard from the front bench, a retrofit fund is not going to be a part of this. So who is going to gain the benefit, I guess, is a very good question.

Overall, I don't like the bill, never liked the bill, never got any good answers to it, and won't support it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to vigorously oppose Bill 37, the so-called Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. Speaking to some of the broad perspectives contained in the bill, it's very, very difficult to fathom the chutzpah of the government in writing some of these things into this bill. For example, the very first clause of the bill under the preamble says, "Whereas the Government of Alberta has a deep and well established commitment to protect Alberta's environment." The sheer gall.

We could list a litany of dreadful happenings to our environment while this government has sat by not with benign neglect but perhaps with malign neglect: the despoliation of our northern forests, the spread of factory farms, the contamination of our underground water by underregulated drilling practices in this province, the failure to deal with the special areas that were promised at one point by this government. There is just no end to the damage that has happened to Alberta's environment under this government.

They go on, Mr. Speaker, in the whereases of the bill to say that we own our natural resources in Alberta on behalf of all Albertans. Well, that's true that Albertans own them. Whether or not they're being managed for the interests of Albertans as opposed to the oil companies is a very debatable point, and I'd be happy to debate that at any time in this Legislature.

It goes on to say with breathtaking lack of modesty that "Alberta is recognized around the world for leading-edge innovation in environmentally sustainable technologies" and that we recognize that "the management of emissions of carbon dioxide, methane and other specified gases will serve to protect Alberta's environment." Well, they may recognize that the management of these things will serve to protect Alberta's environment, but actually doing so in a meaningful way is something that has escaped the government, Mr. Speaker.

It says that it "will work co-operatively with other jurisdictions to harmonize efforts to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide, methane [and so on] without impairing economic growth." So as long as there's no impact on economic growth, they will co-operate. Perhaps they will co-operate around the world, Mr. Speaker, a little bit more than they will co-operate here at home in Canada.

You know, we have seen this government seize every opportunity to ride into battle against the federal government for both real and imagined wrongs. There are definitely some real wrongs that the provincial government has a duty to stand up to on behalf of Albertans, but clearly one of the main thrusts of the government is to find every opportunity to pick a fight with the government in Ottawa. There are plenty of examples.

Now, why are they doing that, Mr. Speaker? Well, it's pretty clear that it is easier to campaign against Ottawa than it is to defend this government's sorry record on so many issues. They would rather talk about the Wheat Board than about electricity deregulation. They would rather talk about Senate reform than meaningful insurance reform. They would rather talk about health councils than they would like to talk about laying off a thousand teachers and then hiring them back.

So it's clearly a political strategy, Mr. Speaker. Rather than defend their own record and their own actions, they would pick a fight with Ottawa. I presume that they have polling data to indicate that this is a beneficial political strategy on their part, but I do believe that Albertans will want to hold this government accountable at election time for its own actions and policies and record as opposed to the federal government's policy and record, which is also a pretty poor one. I might just add that in.

You know, we move along in this bill, and it wants to provide certainty – well, that's fine – and it says that carbon dioxide and methane in the atmosphere are not toxic. Well, that's fine, but we come to the clause “specified gas emission target,” which is 3(1). I think it should be relettered to 3(1)(w), and that should be pronounced “dubya” because this is in fact the Bush formula for dealing with CO₂ emissions, and that is not to talk about it in terms of an absolute reduction in CO₂ emissions but in terms of a percentage of the gross domestic product.

By doing that, they permit a steady growth in the actual absolute output of CO₂ from this province. That's the approach of the government. As long as they can keep the economy growing, then they're going to continue to turn out more CO₂. Of course, turning out more CO₂ will only accelerate the changes that are produced by global warming, the climate change that the bill claims to be all about.

So we have a circular argument contained within the bill, Mr. Speaker. You start out saying that we have a commitment to the environment and that we recognize we have to manage these things. Then you insert a formula that allows the CO₂ emissions to continue to rise, and you come back to the same point that we're at now.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that the New Democrat opposition is strongly opposed to this bill, and I think we're the first out of the gate in respect to the importance of ratifying Kyoto. We do not believe that the ratification of Kyoto necessarily should harm the Alberta economy in any way. In fact, we believe that it provides clear opportunities for Alberta businesses to expand, and if we do want to actually become the leaders in environmental protection, then this is a real opportunity.

Of course, in very significant ways in the negotiations with the federal government, the federal government caved in to Alberta, and that's why the severe opposition to Kyoto more or less disappeared. This was introduced with great fanfare in our spring session as the pre-eminent piece of legislation that was going to be basically the flagship of legislation, yet it was allowed to just end and be reintroduced here in our fall session. That, I think, indicates that our analysis of the purpose of this bill is correct. That is to say that this bill was designed as a flag on a hill to rally the troops against Ottawa and to rally the troops against Kyoto.

When Alberta had achieved some of its goals on behalf of the oil and gas industry and when it became apparent that the federal Liberal government had absolutely no intention of actually enforcing the Kyoto accord, then the provincial government backed off. All of a sudden the bill no longer had the priority that it initially seemed to have, and that is, in my view, directly related to the hypocrisy of the federal Liberal government on this issue. They want the thing ratified. They have no intention of really enacting it and following the goals and the guidelines that they say.

I have no reason to believe that under the new leader this is going to change. Perhaps an element of hypocrisy will be removed, but certainly the federal government will have no more interest in seriously meeting our Kyoto obligations than the Alberta government has, Mr. Speaker. I think, to the Alberta government's credit, it's at least a little more honest about where it stands.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we are strongly opposed to the so-called Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, and we think that it is entirely in contradiction to the noble goals set forth in its own preamble, particularly that “the Government of Alberta has a deep and well established commitment to protect Alberta's environment for future generations.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a third time]

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Revenue it's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 41, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2003.

There has already been some very good debate on this bill over the past couple of days in fact, and I know that the Minister of Revenue has addressed the majority of the opposition's questions in Committee of the Whole last night. However, there do remain a few questions that the Minister of Revenue has committed to provide responses to, and I know he will be doing that.

I would also like to mention that we continue to hear on a daily basis the many benefits of living, working, and investing in Alberta, and Bill 41 continues this government's commitment to corporate and small business and acknowledges the positive economic effects recognized by businesses and governments throughout the country.

As such, I'm pleased to move this third reading of Bill 41 and to support the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2003.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, on this particular bill there's been very little debate. All the debate that has occurred on the bill has been by opposition members with the exception of the people who have introduced the bills on the government side of the various readings. It's a good example of the commitment that the government has to being in this Legislature. We see this week once again: it's not even 4:30 this afternoon; we are finished with the business of the day early once again. Seventy-four government MLAs can't make a commitment to talk about the business that they bring before this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In direct response to what the hon. member just said, I have a bill before this Legislative Assembly that I would be more than happy to speak about, but through courtesy to the opposition we have asked not to speak about that until Monday.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, are you asking a question or making a comment?

Mr. MacDonald: No. I would like to participate in debate on Bill 41. He can go first.

Mr. Mason: Yeah. I'd love to respond to the hon. minister's comments, but I'm going to talk to the bill, Mr. Speaker. I just want to put on record once again the New Democrat opposition's opposition to this bill or to significant parts of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the provincial government has, I think, acted in a difficult and irresponsible manner with respect to the province's finances. They should be managing the province's finances as if we didn't have all the oil and gas revenue. They have become very dependent on this depleting source of revenue and particularly royalties from natural gas, which provide the lion's share of the extra money that this provincial government has.

What they've done in taking advantage of that depleting source of revenue is they've offered a billion-dollar tax cut to corporations, and at the same time they continue to say that they're going to maintain a high level of funding for health care, education, and other important programs enjoyed by Albertans. Yet we saw just a year ago a sudden drop in the price of natural gas, which created a crisis in the government, Mr. Speaker. It created a financial crisis because the Provincial Treasurer was so afraid that she was going to go to jail if she ran a deficit, she immediately started to slash important programs. You know, there was a sudden reduction in funding for things like programs for aboriginal children at risk, and that was a devastating blow. It wasn't because the Minister of Children's Services or the government didn't actually believe in these programs, because I think they do. They're not very high priority, but they do believe in them and they wanted to provide those programs. But all of a sudden the natural gas prices fell, and we didn't have the revenue to sustain them, so they had to cancel some of these programs, and these kids were hurt by that.

The reason is that they don't pay enough attention to their basic tax base. They think that they can offer tax cuts and that they can offer different programs at the same time because they're going to finance a lot of it just out of natural gas royalty revenue and other royalty revenue. So, you know, they're on thin ice, Mr. Speaker, because these sources of revenue are temporary. The last report I saw showed that we had less than nine years of proven reserves of natural gas left in this province. So how are we going to do that and offer these big tax cuts to the corporations? This is the real problem that I have with what the government is doing, because I don't think they are being fiscally responsible. If they were, they would be putting the lion's share of that revenue aside and living within our means.

Mr. Speaker, can you imagine this government if it had to run the province of Saskatchewan? Can you imagine? Without the natural gas and the oil revenues that this province has, this government would be out on its ear within one election because they couldn't manage. They couldn't manage an economy that was half the size of this one. They couldn't manage without all of that extra oil and gas revenue. They couldn't manage. They couldn't live within their means because they're bad financial managers and they are so used to having money. They're like a really rich kid that's never had to work, you know, never had to get out and actually earn a living. Their allowance is so big, so large that if they screw up, if they make a mistake, they can just say: "Here; this will take care of it. Here's $2 billion for electricity rebates because, you know, we kind of screwed that up. Oh, here's $2 billion more for natural gas rebates because we screwed that up. Oh, we laid off a thousand teachers? Well, here's a few million dollars. We'll fix that." You know, this is not responsible government.

So I think, quite frankly, that we ought not to cut out a billion dollars of our tax revenue. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that's what it comes down to. We can support the small business tax reduction. We can support reductions that have been made in the personal income tax and the increase in the personal exemption, but we have to draw the line at a billion dollars in corporate tax cuts because there's no evidence whatsoever that these are going to produce any increased activity in this province. I know that's the theory of the government, but the Auditor General's report indicates that when we have these kinds of tax cut programs, we've got to have clearly defined and measurable objectives. The government doesn't have those. They are just offering a tax cut to the very corporations that support them handsomely at election time. There's no benefit that the government has proven for the average individual Albertan from these corporate tax cuts.

So I would urge all members of the Assembly to vote against Bill 41 because it's fiscally irresponsible and does not represent the best interests of the vast majority of Albertans, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions? Comments?

If none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise, too, this afternoon to participate in the debate on Bill 41. My remarks certainly will not take as long, and I hope they're not as flat as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands'.

Mr. Mason: Flat?

Mr. MacDonald: As flat. Saskatchewan is a wonderful place, but it's flat. Certainly, for the New Democrats in Saskatchewan I think their greatest insurance – and we're going to talk about insurance here in a minute or two – against defeat is the past record of the Progressive Conservative government there.

Mr. Mason: The ones in jail, you mean?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

However, in regard to the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act and what has been stated by the previous speaker, one has to at all times recognize the important contribution that small businesses make to the Alberta economy. Small businesses are under siege right now from a government that seems to be more willing to fly away than it is to stick around and try to resolve the problems, some of the financial problems that small businesses find themselves in, Mr. Speaker. The Lenny Kaplan tax cuts that are advocated in here are just what they need at this time.

They are faced with rising costs for WCB. The utility costs: I'm not going to get into that. We talked about a report from Quebec earlier this afternoon, and to our amazement we find that for power consumers in this province the study concludes that without a doubt we have some of the highest prices in Canada for customers using electricity for residential use. Also, the average price for some large power customers, Edmonton, Alberta, for instance, is the highest in the country. It's the highest in the country, Mr. Speaker.

So when you look at some of the costs that, let's say, a small power customer would use, someone that is using, let's say, 40 kilowatts of electricity, a small business using that much electricity – and I don't know if they would go that high – is looking at a $1,275 bill, even in Halifax. Nova Scotia was mentioned earlier this week in question period. In Halifax the same outfit would pay about $100 less for their electricity. So that is just one indication of where small business, if we are to pass this bill, could use the savings in this tax cut. They could use it, certainly, for their utility costs, for the WCB, and insurance costs.

I regret to have to say this, but it's an ideal time to inform the government. The last time we informed the government – it was last November, as a matter of fact – of the crisis that was looming in the auto insurance industry, did they listen? No. I wish they had. I certainly wish they had, but they did not. So now, hopefully, they will learn from the past, Mr. Speaker.

The next insurance crisis is going to be in the high cost of commercial liability insurance, and what is this government going to do about it? Small business will need this tax cut for the utility costs. Where are they going to get the money to pay their increased insurance costs, if they can find someone to cover them? I've had three businesses approach me in the last two weeks, and to my astonishment they tell me that they can't get someone to carry their liability insurance. That will be the next test for this government. Now, they've failed, in my opinion to date, to pass the insurance tests and certainly have failed miserably to get some sort of handle on electricity prices and natural gas prices in this province for domestic consumers. So on the report card certainly they're going home this weekend with a dismal F, Mr. Speaker, on both of those issues.

In conclusion, I would certainly urge for the sake of no one else but the small businesses across this province that in light of the increased cost pressures they've had in operating their businesses because of government inaction, let's pass Bill 41, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act.

Thank you.

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:41 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The chair stands to be corrected, but I understand that if you are in the Chamber, you either vote for the motion or oppose the motion. If you wish to abstain, then presumably you're at some other place.

Dr. Taft: I'll vote with my party and the caucus. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, would you confirm that you voted in support of the motion?

Dr. Taft: Yes. I confirm that. Thanks.

[Motion carried; Bill 41 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very good first week of the fall session, so given the good progress that has been made and given the very large snowfall that has made roadways very difficult to manoeuvre and knowing full well that many of our colleagues have many miles to go tonight – and we want to ensure that they get to their constituencies safely – I would move that we call it 5:30 and that the Assembly stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Monday, November 24.

[Motion carried; at 4:55 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Monday, November 24, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/11/24

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we begin our deliberations in the Legislature today, we ask You, O God, to surround us with the insight we need to do Your will to the benefit of our province and its people and to the benefit of our country. Amen.

Hon. members, on Saturday last Mr. Paul Lorieau led over 58,000 people in the singing of Canada's national anthem before a national and international television audience from Alberta's capital city of Edmonton. He's with us here today, and we'll invite him to lead all of us in the singing of our national anthem. Please participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: I might add that Mr. Lorieau looked well attired the other day with a toque and a tuxedo.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. In a few minutes I will deliver a special ministerial statement regarding the now much-revered and famous Molson Canadian Heritage Classic, but in lead-up to that statement it is my great pleasure to first introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today five outstanding individuals who helped dream, organize, and implement the most memorable hockey event in the history of the game. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask each one of them to rise as I call their name and to please remain standing. Given that Mr. Paul Lorieau's now famous singing of O Canada has taken place, I know our guests feel right at home. The 25th anniversary of the national anthem as sung by Mr. Lorieau was of course enhanced by a special arrangement by another famous Edmontonian, Mr. George Blondheim. So I want to salute you as well, Mr. Lorieau.

Now, our special guests are the chairman of the Molson Canadian Heritage Classic, Mr. Doug Goss; the president of the Edmonton Oilers, Mr. Patrick LaForge; the vice-president of marketing for the Edmonton Oilers, Mr. Allan Watt; the project manager for the Molson Canadian Heritage Classic, Mr. Nick Wilson; and, finally, Mr. Speaker, the man who personally talked Wayne Gretzky into doing this Molson Canadian Heritage Classic, general manager and Oiler hockey great himself Mr. Kevin Lowe. Please welcome all of our special guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to other members of the Assembly 18 very special people who are located in the Speaker's gallery. They are all members of the board of ALSA, the Alberta Liquor Store Association. This past September we celebrated here in the province the 10th anniversary of privatization of liquor retailing.

It was in January 1994 that the predecessor of ALSA was established, and a gentleman and a lady that I will be introducing are very instrumental in the success that we have had in the province in increasing the number of stores from just over 200 to about 1,000. I would ask the folks to rise and remain standing as I call their names: John Szumlas, Jim Bell, Janice Chomik, Kirk Frandsen, Joanne Leipert, Debbie Boyko, Laura Wright, Bill Hull, Greg Krischke, Murray Einhorn, Randy Dawson, Bruce Webster, John Dong, Lynn Prefontaine, Marvin Tkach, Rick Crook, Doug Mulholland, and Michael Tarkowski. I would ask the Assembly to now give the appropriate recognition to our guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 24 grade 6 students from Earl Buxton school in the Edmonton-Whitemud constituency. They're accompanied today by their teacher, Mrs. Donna Spooner, who, I understand, was a page in this Assembly in earlier years, and by parents Mrs. Winkelaar and Mr. Larry Nikiforuk. They're here today to observe and learn with keen interest about government. They're seated in the members' gallery, and before I ask them to stand, I'd also like to acknowledge their teacher, Andrea Berg, who was to be with them today but couldn't be with them. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 17 of the finest young men and women from the Edmonton-Calder constituency. They're the grades 5 and 6 students from Coralwood academy, accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Colin Forde, and a parent helper, Dr. Neville Case. They've toured the building. We had a brief meeting and will be meeting subsequent to their visit. I'd ask them to rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly. They are seated in the members' gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to members of the Assembly it's my pleasure to introduce 25 students from Richard Secord elementary school, located in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. The 25 students are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Donna Yoder, and parent helpers Jan Scammell and Mrs. Karen Smilski. We welcome the students to your Legislature and hope that their day is filled full of majesty and wonder. Thank you very much for being here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly teachers Mrs. Norma Nay and Mr. Scott Markine, parents Mrs. Bhavna Ashta and Mrs. Kim Bastide, and 32 students from Tipaskan elementary school in Mill

Woods. With your permission I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A little bit later, around 2 o'clock, a school group will be joining us. There are 14 students as well as their teacher, Corey Collwell. They're coming from Breton high school. They're touring our building right now, so I hope that all the MLAs will give them a big wave when they come in in a few minutes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 17 students. I know that they're not in the members' gallery. They may be on their way up to the public gallery. We just had our pictures taken. Anyway, we have 17 students visiting from the Calgary Waldorf school, and with them is teacher Tonia Schmordok and also parents Mrs. Robin McLeod and Mr. Teodor Stafie. Students, if you are in the public gallery, please rise, and I would like the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly Ms Bernadette Vermaas. She is a recent recipient of the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission bronze medal for bravery. She is a resident of Edmonton-Gold Bar and works downtown on Jasper Avenue in her own hair salon, and I would ask her now to please rise – she's in the public gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. The first is Mr. Gerald Zagrosh, who is the founder of the Pain Elimination and Tissue Regeneration Clinic, which uses electric stimulation to treat pain. He's in the public gallery, and I ask him to rise. He has brought with him some of his clients who have benefited from his treatment: Mr. Walter Romaniuk, Mr. William Fleming, Ms Joan Robinson, Mr. Craig Maslin, and Mrs. Shaylee Maslin. Please give them a warm welcome.

I am also pleased to introduce students from Parkview school. I'm not sure if they're in the gallery or on tour right now. They are 37 of the very, very finest young citizens of Alberta. They are accompanied by their teachers, Miss Laurie Ewald and Mrs. Aydan Kudrinko, and by parents Lori Chomyk, Reg Kozoway, and Kelly Woodward. Please give them all a warm welcome, and if they're here, would they please rise.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Molson Canadian Heritage Classic

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As minister responsible for sports and volunteerism and as a former hockey player and coach and manager myself I am extremely excited to rise today to recognize a truly remarkable and historic event for our city, our province, our country, and, of course, for the entire National Hockey League which occurred so very successfully this past weekend.

Every winter on any day in any corner of our province enthusiasts young and old strap on their skates and take to their local pond, their local outdoor rink or arena to enjoy a game of hockey. Whether the ice is large or small, whether the players are just learning to skate or are already seasoned professionals, the game of hockey has become an important part of who we are and how we see ourselves as Albertans and Canadians.

Last Saturday our love of hockey was on display for the entire world to see. Mr. Speaker, nearly 60,000 cheering fans braved the cold to take part in the Molson Canadian Heritage Classic, a celebration of hockey's past and present and, if the fans were any indication, a sign of even greater things to come. The game brought together Edmonton Oilers alumni and Montreal Canadiens alumni teams as well as current Oilers and Canadiens in a spectacular display of skill and dedication and a return to the roots of the great game of hockey.

We were also treated to outstanding entertainment as presented and performed by Edmonton's own George Blonheim and Canada's great rocker Tom Cochrane as well as a very special performance by Paulina Gretzky and the already mentioned special rendition of O Canada by Paul Lorieau. All of Edmonton and area were caught up with the celebrations, the hosting events, and the incredible displays commemorating this classic event, which yielded an economic impact of about $25 million and a spiritual impact of memories that cannot be measured that surpass everything.

Mr. Speaker, the amount of work that went into these events and in the preparation of Commonwealth Stadium for the game is immense, and I would again like to salute our special guests in the gallery – Doug Goss, chairman of the Molson Canadian Heritage Classic; Patrick LaForge, president of the Edmonton Oilers; Kevin Lowe, general manager of the Edmonton Oilers; Allan Watt, vice-president of marketing for the Edmonton Oilers; Nick Wilson, project manager for the Heritage Classic; Don Metz, director of broadcasting for the Oilers – all the other broadcasters, sponsors, players, coaches, trainers, ice makers, entertainers, spectators, and fans who tuned in from around the world, and of course the fabulous team of volunteers for bringing a vision of this magnitude into reality. Our city has much to be proud of, and the success of this game has truly elevated Edmonton's reputation as the City of Champions. Despite the cold, there was an unbelievable spirit in the air thanks to the enthusiasm of our city and those visitors from around the world who came to take part.

In closing, I want to also thank the ministers of Gaming and Economic Development for contributing to this incredible event, and I would now invite all members of this Assembly to join me in congratulating our special guests once again and everyone who was involved in putting on the most incredible hockey memory in our history.

We love hockey. We love Edmonton. We love Alberta. Thank you, all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the hockey world focused on Edmonton. As temperatures plummeted in the days leading up to the Molson Canadian Heritage Classic, the buzz and excitement in the city continued to grow. Despite the cold, fans couldn't wait for another opportunity to watch Wayne Gretzky, Guy Lafleur, and a host of other stars from the past participate in the megastars game. Many fans came to relive memories from the past, never thinking that they would leave the stadium with a host of new memories that they will cherish for a lifetime.

Over 57,000 fans crowded Commonwealth Stadium for hours in frigid temperatures to watch the games. In the megastars game they were treated to heroes from the past wearing toques and scraping the ice between periods. The smiles radiating from the benches were a clear indication of their enthusiasm and enjoyment. After this game fans were treated to another hard-fought and entertaining game between the current editions of the Oilers and the Canadiens.

As Canadians we have always prided ourselves on our durability when playing the game. Games of hockey continue to be played everywhere in Canada: on ponds, on the backyard rinks, on community rinks, and in arenas. Players of all ages have assembled to play and enjoy the game.

Mr. Speaker, there are many to be thanked for having a vision and for putting this great event together through their thousands of hours of hard work. The executive and staff of the Edmonton Oilers have put their heart and soul into the Molson Canadian Heritage Classic. The Oilers organization is never offside. They are Edmonton's pride. The city of Edmonton has proven that inclement weather did not deter their pride and support for this unique event. This event has raised Edmonton's reputation as a great hockey town, and the fans in a true Canadian spirit came through when the going got tough.

To the Oilers, the city of Edmonton, and all others involved in the organizing and planning of this great event, thank you for the memories.

head: Oral Question Period

Access to Crown Land

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, last spring the Alberta government allocated over $6 million to find a solution to the conflict between First Nations communities and the non First Nations contractors in the Slave Lake area. This conflict had resulted in roadblocks on Crown land used by the oil industry. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What did your department do with its portion of the $6 million in trying to solve this problem?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, you know, the $6 million is, of course, a partial solution to the challenges we had in dealing with that particular issue. It's a very challenging issue. Each ministry that had the allocation, of course, had the opportunity to administer those dollars based on how the department operates and how they intend to administer the dollars to increase consultation between the First Nations, industry, and the oilfield contractors. To discuss the administrative process in this Assembly I don't believe is the answer.

The other part that the hon. leader should always remember also is that we are talking about First Nations, which is the jurisdiction of their cousins in Ottawa. What did they do?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of aboriginal affairs: why didn't you work with the federal government to get a clarification of the meaning of access to and the use of Crown land that First Nations have under their treaty rights?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, how does he know that I'm not working with the federal government? How does he know that? I would like to put it here that we are working with the federal government on a number of initiatives.

The second issue is the access issue. The natural resources transfer agreement, which was signed in the 1930s, gives the government of Alberta the right to manage the land. It is very important to make sure that we continue to do that but take into consideration, Mr. Speaker, the aboriginal and treaty rights of First Nations, and that's exactly what we've been doing on this consultation initiative. It takes a long time to be able to get to that point. However, it is very important, no matter what we do, that we continue to work with all the groups that are involved in this whole process.

Dr. Nicol: My final question, again to the minister of aboriginal affairs: what did you do to remove the reason that these roadblocks came into place in the first place? In other words, how have you worked with the First Nations communities to get their understanding of their role?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we have a number of people who have been employed through Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development to work on the consultation initiative. That's one component that we've been working on with the various First Nations, asking them to come to the table to be able to deal with this issue.

Secondly, I as the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development have been working with the First Nations to ensure that they are aware of what we've been doing. I've been going around the province on a continual basis, talking about what needed to be done, how we could do that, and requesting the involvement of the First Nations so that we can take care of their concerns relative to the aboriginal and treaty rights. It's very important and very key, no matter what we do, that we continue to do that, because this province – this province – really has a beautiful relationship with First Nations.

Industrial Development in Protected Areas

Dr. Nicol: Last week Tempest Resources received approval to drill two gas wells near the Ministik bird sanctuary. This sanctuary is one of North America's largest migratory havens for waterfowl, and it also supports populations of moose, white-tailed deer, elk, and lynx. To the Minister of Community Development: what is the point of natural places legislation if it won't protect areas like the Ministik sanctuary from industrial development?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a number of specially protected areas in this province, as members here will know, and for many of them we have management plans. I think we have about 18 on the go right now. On the particular issue that he's raising right now, if there is some violation that has occurred that he's aware of and he wants to forward that to me, I'd be happy to look into it and see to it that that issue is resolved as quickly as possible. To my knowledge there haven't been any violations in that area to date.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the same minister: will the minister ensure that there will be no further industrial projects affecting the Ministik bird sanctuary?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that there is a protected area. There are rules that govern that protected area within the boundaries of that protected area. If he's talking about something outside that boundary, then maybe he should make that a little clearer. I can assure you that to my knowledge there's nothing that's actually happened in the sanctuary, the protected area itself.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the same minister: will the minister ensure that there are no more industrial projects in any of Alberta's special places?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we have a comprehensive list of existing lease dispositions in some areas, and when the protected areas program was brought in, it was made very clear that we would do everything we can to honour existing commitments, be they to leaseholders or trappers or guides or outfitters or whatever have you. We worked very hard through the public consultation process to ensure that those particular policies and guidelines were followed, and I can assure the hon. member that we will continue to protect those areas within the guidelines that have been set down, approved, and been through the public consultation process.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Class Sizes

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Chronic underfunding of our schools has resulted in the average kindergarten class in Calgary public being five students above the average recommended by the Learning Commission. In Edmonton public almost three-quarters of the K to 3 children sit in similar overcrowded classrooms. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Given that the limited restoration money announced last week falls far short of the $140 million boards needed just to keep even, when will there be relief for these overcrowded five year olds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a couple of issues to that question that I will address. First of all, the hon. member is talking about kindergarten to grade 3 at a level of 22 students, and I think that number really needs to be reinforced. The Learning Commission has indeed recommended 17, and we are looking at how we can bring those numbers down.

The other key component though – he mentioned $140 million. Mr. Speaker, one of the tasks that the Learning Commission had was to take a look at the financing of education, and what they came back with was not a $140 million shortfall. Indeed, what they actually said was that there was a $19.8 million shortfall due to the inflationary pressures over two years. They also said that there was about a $23 million shortfall in money that was not necessarily allocated but in money that was budgeted to be allocated, and they felt that it should be speeded up. There were also issues with the grade 10 CEU credits.

Mr. Speaker, each and every one of those was reallocated as of last week, as the hon. member knows. So I do take a little bit of exception when people are all of a sudden calling $60 million a mere pittance.

Dr. Massey: My question is again to the same minister. Given that even with their share of the restoration money announced last week Calgary public will be short at least $80 million, how will they be able to even look at the class size targets in the commission's report?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, today there was a press release put out by the Calgary public school system. That press release said that they have balanced their budget for last year, which is indeed good news. They roughly had a surplus of about .25 percent, I believe. In the upcoming year as their amount of dollars is actually known, is actually discovered and found out in the upcoming budget, Calgary public will work and, I'm sure, will do the best job they can for the students of Alberta. They're an excellent school system and will continue to be an excellent school system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that it's now nearly two months since the Learning Commission reported, when can parents expect to see a plan to implement class size reductions in this province?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the prerequisites of the Learning Commission was that there be no interference from myself, no interference from my own department, that it be a completely objective report. It took the Learning Commission around 15 or 16 months to go through everything around the province. We have just received that, as the hon. member has stated. We have our processes that it will be going through, and we are on-line for the date that I initially suggested, which is the first part of December. We are on course; we are on-line for that. All things going in the right direction, we will be making an announcement the first part of December.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mature Animal Market Transition Program

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This morning at long last the minister of agriculture announced compensation for mature cows and bulls, whose worth has plummeted to cents on the dollar since the discovery of a single BSE case last May. While it's a bit more generous than the federal program announced last Friday, this mature cow and bull program seems to fall short of the very generous assistance package given earlier to feedlot operators. My question is to the minister of agriculture. Why did the government come up with a program costing hundreds of millions of dollars for a small number of feedlot owners within weeks of the discovery of BSE whereas tens of thousands of cow/calf producers have had to wait for more than six months to get only partial compensation for their losses?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the question indicates the member's understanding of the industry or lack thereof.

Mr. Speaker, since May 20, when a single cow was found with BSE, the whole cattle industry has changed significantly in this province. It quickly became very apparent to us, working with the industry at our side, that we would have to manage this situation in a staged way. The first matter was to move some 700,000, 800,000, 900,000 or thereabouts fat cattle that were in terminal feedlots. These cattle were destined for mainly export markets and, as this is a perishable item, did not have a lot of time to move.

If the hon. member understood the cattle industry, he would know that the market program we put in for market mature cattle this morning is to deal with cattle that are no longer useful in the breeding herd. This is still a valuable product, Mr. Speaker, but it is a commercial beef product when it is not of value to the breeding herd. That generally is not established until sometime throughout the summer or fall months. In fact, culls happen, generally, heavier in the fall and the remaining cull in the spring for each year.

So to recognize this issue, Mr. Speaker, where 70 percent of that product primarily went outside of this country on an export basis, 100 percent of it now has to be in this country. We realized that we had to deal with a place for the product, whether there was a slaughter capacity for the product, and deal with it in a manner that set the stage for the future marketing of this product.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I appreciate the little lecture from the minister, I would like to ask her why she has designed a BSE program for cow/calf producers that, while welcome, appears to fall significantly short of the generosity shown to feedlot owners, who are guaranteed 90 percent of the U.S. slaughter price.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, before one talks about something as complex as the cattle industry, one should do some research into how this industry really does work. I'm serious about that, because to suggest that the feedlot operators somehow came off with a huge profit out of this would be so very, very wrong. In fact, their losses are absolutely incredible, especially coming off last year where we had a drought and their cost for feed went up so significantly.

Mr. Speaker, we have some 38,000 farms in this province that have animals on them. This is a big industry in this province, and we have sat down with the industry, the total industry – the trucking, packing, cow/calf, and feeder industries, the feedlots, the sales agents, whether they be auction markets, order buyers, whatever – in a room together week after week after week, many times day after day after day, to try and address the many, many issues facing this industry and to move them forward into a new reality for this industry in an orderly way and in a way that interfered as little as possible in the marketplace.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, can the minister, then, demonstrate to this House that none of the hundreds of millions of dollars in BSE compensation that has already gone out ended up benefiting cattle brokers, speculators, or meat packing plants rather than cattle producers themselves?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again, cattle producers themselves received a huge benefit from the dollars that went into the fed cattle program. That was shown very clearly if you sat in the auction markets this fall and watched the calf prices, which were indeed as high as last year or higher, for one reason: because there is a place to place those calves today which there would not have been if those hundreds of thousands of fed cattle were still there or had had to be destroyed.

Mr. Speaker, the beef industry is an incredibly important industry to this province, contributing about 60 percent of the farm cash receipts, contributing over 60 percent of the processing industry, which is huge for us. I appreciate the hon. member's interest in this, but to try and pick sides and decide who may or may not have won or lost in this is not a very useful discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Edmonton City Centre Airport

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's most appropriate today that the Molson Heritage Classic game was recognized earlier by the Minister of Community Development. Interestingly enough, a southern Alberta air carrier, Integra Air, carried an aircraft full of fans to watch that game on a typical 75-minute flight which landed directly at the Muni airport. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Considering the discussion this past week about the future of Edmonton's city airport and its effect on northern Alberta, I can tell you, Mr. Minister, and this Assembly that Lethbridge and Medicine Hat are also affected by proposed changes at the Muni, whether it's scheduled flight services by smaller air carriers, lab examinations, charter services, or medevac services, including fixed wing aircraft. Will the Minister of Economic Development advise this Assembly what's being done to address these additional concerns that affect northern and southern Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Little Bow for asking a great question which underscores, really, what this issue is all about, and it's air service and transportation service to all of Alberta, not specifically northern Alberta, although that's clearly one of the most important pieces of this. We had some very encouraging news on Friday that the airports authority is going to take a step back, and they are going to talk to all stakeholders, not only in northern Alberta and Edmonton and the medical community but in southern Alberta, specifically Lethbridge and of course Calgary, which have direct flights into the City Centre Airport. I think that what we really need to talk about is taking a step back and saying that the service we are dealing with is adequate and that the people of this province rely on it, because the city of Edmonton is the capital city, and in order to do business here, it makes it very, very convenient for people in Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, and southern Alberta.

So we are going to work with the stakeholders, and certainly the people from southern Alberta will be included. I'm hoping, Mr. Speaker, that we can show how vital that air link is to not only northern Alberta but the whole province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to applaud you for the work that you are doing. My second question to you and the last supplementary: will these people be able to expect some fairly quick results from this consultation?

Mr. Norris: I'd like to again thank the hon. member, and I'll take your applause anytime you want to offer it, Member for Little Bow, so thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to advise the House that as early as this morning we had a conference call with all the stakeholders. The committee agreed that we should move very, very quickly on the first set of talks. That's going to be going on in the next couple of weeks. We hope to have some kind of hard copy by the end of the year, certainly to deal with the closure of the airport, the scheduled flights. Then longer term consultation with the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the Minister of Transportation, myself, and others will be undertaken. We know for a fact that we will have something concrete within the next six weeks.

Again, I would like to offer my thanks to the Member for Peace River, who has been very, very forthright in bringing these issues to the table.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Corrections Review Committee Report

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Solicitor General appointed an MLA review committee on corrections in May 2002, which reported to the government a year ago. During the spring sitting the Solicitor General responded to my request to table the report in the Assembly by saying that she was still studying it. My questions are all to the Solicitor General. What is the subject in the report that is requiring such intense study from the Solicitor General?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the hon. member's question. Yes, what she has said is correct. The corrections review committee that went out over a year ago has done one very, very good job in looking at our corrections and how we're going to deal with it. The reason the Solicitor General is taking so long to deal with this report is that there are some difficult decisions that have to be made, and we want to make sure the decisions that we're making are right, not like our federal cousins who just ram legislation in without any consultation.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Solicitor General: when do Alberta taxpayers get to see the report that they paid for?

Mrs. Forsyth: Again, Mr. Speaker, I answered that in my previous answer. I don't think taxpayers in this province mind waiting for a report that has taken a long time to do. We want to make sure we've made the right decisions. The committee that went out there with the members for Red Deer-North and Lac La Biche-St. Paul and Edmonton-Castle Downs did a really, really good job of reviewing our corrections. We have some difficult decisions that have to be made. People have to understand some of the things that we're facing in this province, with the conditional sentencing that the federal government passed in '96 and all the probation people that we're dealing with. So in due time it will be out, and it will be done correctly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Is the minister considering more legislative change for the spring 2004 session based on this report, and will Albertans be able to see the report before that legislative change comes?

Mrs. Forsyth: No, Mr. Speaker, the minister isn't considering any legislative changes at this time. If I do consider legislation changes, we will let Albertans know about it, and I'm sure they'll be supportive, as they were with the Corrections Amendment Act in regard to dealing with drugs in jails.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mature Animal Market Transition Program

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the federal government announced the national cull cow/bull program, and the Alberta government immediately announced that it was not taking part. Today, as previously mentioned, our government announced a different, made-in-Alberta program, the mature animal market transition program. My first question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Why has the Alberta government decided to forgo the national program?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it was with a great deal of regret that we had to announce that we would not be participating in a national program. We have worked for at least five weeks with the other provinces in Canada and the federal government to try to devise a program for these commercial market mature animals and, unfortunately, were unable to come to an agreement.

In Alberta we have some very clear principles that we stand on, and one is that you must have choice in the marketplace. That is not available when you limit your buyers to one or, in our case, perhaps two. So it was with a great deal of regret that we had to say, with our industry, that we would not participate, that we would indeed proceed with a program that we think does respect those principles that establish a marketplace.

It would have been much better had we had a national program. It certainly would have less effect on the marketplace across Canada, but, as I said, it does not meet our criteria, and we did not proceed with it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Could she tell me: how does the Alberta mature ruminant program work compared to the national program?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the main difference is that it offers choice in what a producer does with the animal that is extra to its breeding herd needs. You may keep that animal and apply for a per head payment, which would amount to about a dollar a day for your winter feeding months, or you can offer that animal for sale, and that's the key. You offer the animal for sale through a sales methodology. It can be through an auction market, through an order buyer, through tape sales, TEAM sales, whatever there is available to you, but you do offer that animal for sale. That allows other buyers into the marketplace. Then you are paid on a differential between the traditional 10-year average of the top price for cattle, a floor price of 20 cents, which we think sets out about the division for the classes of cattle, and you get a differential of about 60 percent of that.

Mr. Speaker, it's offering choice, allows a marketplace to work, and it also recognizes, if you sell that animal, the difference in value between two animals. It's hard for me to conceive that a 1,600-pound bull that's 32 months old has exactly the same value as a 12-year-old cow that may have had 10 or 11 calves, and the federal government does not in any way recognize a difference in value of animals.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the same minister. How much money is available through this program?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we announced some time ago that we would commit another $100 million to deal with the issue of the mature market animal and to complete the fed cattle program. We're not announcing the split on those dollars or how they are because we think that that, again, could interfere in the marketplace, and market neutrality is our goal.

Anglo-Canadian Clinics

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, in September the Alberta Liberal opposition uncovered plans by the Calgary health region to provide health services in Great Britain with private partners under the name Anglo-Canadian Clinics. This private consortium has been approved as preferred bidder to run three clinics in London, England. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: what reassurances can the minister give that doctors and nurses and other health professionals badly needed in Calgary won't be spending time supporting services in Britain?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the approach being taken by Anglo-Canadian and the regional health authority and the University of Calgary in a partnership is a proactive approach to try and bring additional dollars from outside of Canada into Canada. This, of course, relates directly to our ability to continue to finance the health care system, which is one of the recommendations of the Mazankowski report. There are going to be no frontline services that will be affected. No frontline physicians are going to the United Kingdom. Only a limited number of physicians who are either on sabbatical or are in teaching positions will take part. There is some effort being put forward by the University of Calgary as a partner to this agreement. The health region is participating in only the planning process and in providing their management expertise, something that they already do but have never gotten money for doing.

As a result, Mr. Speaker, now if there is money that accrues to the regional health authority as a result of this partnership, 100 percent of that money would be used to improve frontline health services in the Calgary health region.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given his reassurances and given that you can't get something for nothing – they're selling services abroad – again will the minister commit here and now that Calgarians will not lose any health professionals as a result of the region's involvement in Great Britain?

Mr. Mar: I just did give such an assurance, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Taft: Will the minister confirm that the Premier will be discussing Anglo-Canadian Clinics while he is in England this week?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I can't speak on behalf of the Premier. I'm certain that somebody will be able to confirm that on behalf of the Premier's office, but I can neither confirm nor deny that that will be part of the Premier's discussions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Community Health Councils

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year, after the RHAs were expanded, there were 11 community health councils within the Aspen health authority. They are now being reorganized into six councils. My constituents in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne are worried that they will no longer be properly represented on these councils and, in turn, not adequately represented to the RHA. My first question is to the minister of health. How do you plan on selecting the members to serve on these community health councils, and what will be their role once they are appointed?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, community health councils represent the people that live in the communities from which they come, and their role is to provide another way for citizens to provide input into local health care planning. Council members are volunteers. They put their names forward to serve on such councils, and they are appointed not by the government but by the regional health authorities themselves.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the Aspen region has now been expanded, how can residents expect to be well served by even fewer health councils?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, when health regions were expanded earlier this year, they included the carryover from the existing community health councils from the previous regions as well as their own, and there were wide discrepancies in the number of people who served on these health councils. They ranged from nine members in one case to up to 15 in another. By establishing six equal councils, the Aspen health region is ensuring that there is a fair and equitable distribution and representation for all of its residents. Four of these councils will represent people from a geographic area within the health region, one will represent residents of Indian reserves, and the remaining one will represent residents of Métis settlements.

Mr. Speaker, my best advice is that the Aspen health region will soon be advertising for volunteers to serve on these six new health councils, and certainly those residents who have an interest in this, providing input to local health care planning, should put their names forward. The other eight health regions in the province of Alberta are also re-establishing their own local health councils.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you.

Driver Examinations

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the 2002-2003 Auditor General report recommends that the Ministry of Transportation increase monitoring and auditing processes for driver examiners due to increased corruption and inconsistencies in services. This points to the inadequacies of the privatization of driver examinations, which has led to unqualified drivers obtaining their licences, thus risking the safety of the traveling public. To the Minister of Transportation: why has this ministry not adequately monitored and audited processes for driver examiners?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we will take, of course, the recommendations of the Auditor General very seriously and will shortly be laying out a plan as to how we will accommodate all those recommendations.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: why is it that since the privatization of driver examinations the ministry has failed to identify and investigate examiners who are not conducting examinations in accordance with legislation and policy?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, although I admire the hon. gentleman across, what he has said is not absolutely true. We have had investigated a number of operations, and a number of individuals were suspended during that period of time.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: why is it that the ministry has moved to privatization of driver examinations when it is clear that this move has risked the quality of this essential public service while endangering the safety of traveling Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, without a doubt the level of service has improved immensely across this province, and there is something to be said about privatizing some of these services. There's a feeling, perhaps by some members across, that the minute something is privatized – it's like something can go wrong in the private sector and somebody can perhaps do something illegally, but when it's conducted by the public sector, nothing can go wrong and nothing can happen that will perhaps question the service.

So I think, generally speaking, that when you look at the huge privatization that occurred in this province in the early 1990s, the improvement in level of service, the number of issues that were handled by this government to ensure that the safety of the traveling public was first and paramount, I believe we've done an excellent job. We will continue to monitor, and in those cases where someone has done something inappropriate, they will be punished.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta students have seen postsecondary tuition fees triple over the last decade, and this government doesn't seem to have any intention to see that trend stop or any will to reverse it. This government has spent $430 million on corporate giveaways, but it can't afford a fraction of that amount, all that would be needed, to freeze tuition. It's not surprising that the TD Bank found that only 43 percent of Alberta high school students continue on to postsecondary learning, the lowest in Canada. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. If the government can afford corporate tax cuts, why can't it afford a tuition freeze?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, there needs to be a little bit of light put into this argument; that is, Maclean's, which is probably a very unbiased group when it comes to tuition, shows that the University of Alberta is number 24, the University of Calgary is number 25, and the University of Lethbridge is number 40 out of roughly 50 to 55 universities in the country when it comes to tuition and fees. This is right in the ballpark of where we want the institutions to be. They're not the highest; they're not the lowest.

The other issue is that the tuition fees will be allowed to go up when you hit the 30 percent ceiling, will be allowed to go up 5 percent at most, Mr. Speaker, and that is what is going to occur. We absolutely want the tuition fees to be affordable.

The other key component which the hon. member brought up was the TD study about the Calgary/Edmonton corridor. One thing that they refused to do in that study – and the hon. member knows this and really should have said this – is they did not include apprenticeships as part of the postsecondary system. Here in Alberta we think apprenticeships and trades are extremely important and, indeed, are completed in those numbers, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is it that Quebec, Saskatchewan, Manitoba can freeze tuition fees, Newfoundland can reduce tuition fees by 10 percent, but in Alberta the minister seems determined to make sure that tuition fees keep going up?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, in Quebec tuition fees for out-of-province Canadians are an average of all the other tuition fees across the country, so that's what they have chosen to do. They have chosen to keep their fees artificially low for their own residents, and that's a policy decision that they have made.

Mr. Speaker, Manitoba recently froze their fees, and again that is their issue.

In Newfoundland, though, there's something else that is very interesting, and that is that because of the lack of students in Newfoundland there are actually now, today, more seats in the postsecondary system than there are students available to actually sit in those seats. So, Mr. Speaker, they have conducted an extensive recruiting drive across Canada and across the world in order to get students to actually physically come to their universities. So that's one of the reasons that they have done it.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I will say that our universities – the University of Alberta, number 24; the University of Calgary, number 25; the University of Lethbridge, number 40 – are right where we want them to be in comparison with the rest of the country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the TD Bank study concludes that Alberta tuition rates are too high, will the government at least listen to its corporate friends and give young Albertans a better deal on tuition; i.e., freeze tuition fees?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, again, the Toronto-Dominion Bank basically stated that the tuition fees were a concern when it came to access. I do not believe that they specifically said that the tuition fees were too high. What they would have had to have said is that that would have translated across Canada, and they would have seen that they are very competitive across Canada.

To put it in perspective, Mr. Speaker, the tuition plus fees for University of Alberta are $4,782. You know, it's only slightly smaller than the pension that the hon. member gets from the University of Alberta. So $4,700: I have four kids that are presently going to university, and I would be more than happy to pay that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Skills Development Program

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Mr. Minister, while Alberta's economy is going strong and more Albertans are working than ever before, many employers in my constituency tell me it's difficult to find skilled workers and many hardworking employees also tell me they are stuck in low-paying jobs. So as the Minister of Human Resources and Employment what are you doing to address these important issues?

Mr. Dunford: Well, the hon. member is onto an issue here, and that, of course, is the fact that we have huge dollars that we're investing in the skills training of Albertans. At the same time, any Albertan driving around and certainly those of us that spent the weekend here in Edmonton in our normal activities see the hiring signs. There's a disconnect, almost, at times between the skills that are available and actually finding the placement for them. As recently as today, Mr. Speaker, we were talking about just that kind of situation, whether we shouldn't have more direct access for the employer right into our department to see if we can't somehow get the two folks together more rapidly.

In the meantime, we are spending our budget on the development of skilled employees in this province. I think that later this week, you know, we'll actually have to come in front of the folks of this Legislature and ask for some additional dollars in order to meet our commitments. We are oversubscribed in this area.

But it's the only thing that works. You have to provide the kind of transition to get people from assistance and dependence into the workforce, where they can be self-reliant Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: I heard you mention a skills investment strategy, so what specific initiative under this program will help employees and employers?

Mr. Dunford: Well, this is a bit of reform for us because at one time skills training tended to follow along traditional lines. We would look at a situation, and if the person had not completed grade 12, for an example, then we'd automatically put them into academic upgrading through one of our postsecondary institutions. We started to look at that, and we said: "Why would we just look at that one aspect? Why don't we look at the more complete person and determine, make some kind of assessment as to what it is they would logically be doing within this economy and in a specific period of time?" If that meant academic upgrading, well, of course, let's go through that. But if there was a quicker way through training on the job or some other program that we would have that could move them into the workforce and that's what they want, why would we not be prepared to do this? So that's part of what we're doing now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: I don't have one.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Workers' Compensation Board

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government always insists it's at arm's length from the WCB. Documents received recently through freedom of information show that successive government ministers are at arm's length from the WCB board of directors, but it's at arm's length across the dining room table at the Mayfair country club. To the minister of human resources and enjoyment: why did the WCB fork out over $41,000 in golf course and social fees at the Mayfair Golf and Country Club between 1998 and 2001 for two top executives when injured workers had to camp out on the streets to have their cases heard?

Mr. Dunford: Well, that's an operating situation that would of course fall within the responsibility of the board of directors – you know, it's now broadcast on the Internet live, so they might be watching today – and that would be something that would be taken up with them.

But you should know that the meal that I would've had at the Mayfair course with them was a very nice meal. There were a number of us from my department that met with them on one occasion down there. It was a very, very tough meeting for both the board of directors and for the minister. If we were to recall the exact date, Mr. Speaker, it was right in the midst of the determination by this minister and this government to reform some of the aspects of the appeal system inside the WCB. That was one occasion when they did offer to provide a site for us to have those discussions, and believe me, sir, we had them.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, that meeting occurred on June 19, 2001, and it cost $671.

Now, to the same minister: how can injured workers with long-standing contentious claims be denied while the WCB spends so lavishly on country club fees?

Mr. Dunford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member is aware of the activities of Human Resources and Employment. Since that structure was put into place in May of 1999, we have worked very hard and, I believe, successfully toward making a better WCB system in this province, particularly, then, as it would relate to injured workers. Now, the hon. member was here in the House, and I don't recall particularly, but I believe that he supported some of the changes that we made to the WCB system through legislation. We've also done this, of course, through regulation.

So I don't know that as the responsible minister for this government we need to apologize to anybody for the actions we have taken as a government and for the actions we have taken as the ministry responsible for the legislation as it leads to workers' compensation. As a matter of fact, we've had pretty good support from some sectors of injured workers in what we've tried to do. But, yes, there are a couple of associations that continue to be critical of not only this government but of this minister in particular. That's just the way it goes.

I would want to indicate to the hon. member that I believe that I have an understanding of my role as it relates to workers' comp, and I believe that this government will continue with that particular role and continue to move forward on behalf of all parties involved in the WCB, not just injured workers but the employers who pay the cost of this program as well.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister in regard to those employers: why does the WCB pay out over $41,000 in country club fees for the top two executives when at the same time Alberta businesses, large and small, are faced with double-digit premium increases?

Mr. Dunford: If there's a member in this House that is not supportive of health care reform in this province, then they are not supportive of the kinds of issues that are being dealt with by the WCB. The increases in the WCB assessment, hon. member, aren't due to a $41,000 cost item; they are the fact that health care costs in this province as it relates to WCB claims have more than doubled in the last four or five years.

Now, because of the hon. member's question I believe that we should look to him for support in the health care reforms in this province. If he is going to portray himself as a speaker on behalf of injured workers, on behalf of employers, then get with it and get outside and get on right now.

2:40head: Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven to participate in Recognitions, but pending that, today we'll recognize that it's November 24 and is the anniversary of birth for the hon. members for Drayton Valley-Calmar and Calgary-West.

The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mary Gervais

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A Falher poet's literary creation was picked as the Editor's Choice award for poetry sponsored by the International Library of Poetry.

Longtime poet Mary Gervais was notified of her selection in September. Her poem entitled River Bank Memories was selected based on its unique perspective, original creativity, and expansive qualities and will be one of 33 poems to be recorded on a special CD poetry collection called The Sound of Poetry. Her poem is also featured in Eternal Portraits, a hardbound edition featuring the talents of poets from across Canada.

Mrs. Gervais has been a poet for many years and has written more than a hundred poems, many of which have received the attention of Canadian and U.S.-based poetry book publishers. According to Mrs. Gervais her inspiration for putting pen to paper and writing is life itself.

Congratulations to Mrs. Gervais on her recent prestigious award for her poem River Bank Memories.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Red Motel Pictures

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a pleasure for me to help draw attention to the work of incredibly talented Albertans, especially since so many of them live in Calgary-Currie. Red Motel Pictures is the Calgary video production company with a social conscience being built by Jeth Weinrich and his partner, Braun Farnon. Their story isn't just of interest in Calgary-Currie or Alberta, for that matter. The facts are that this is a true international success story and proof that Canadians can compete with anybody anywhere.

Jeth and Braun started by producing over a hundred commercials for some of the world's largest companies and institutions, a list that includes the U.S. Navy, DuPont, First Bank of America, Pfizer, Royal Bank, and dozens of others. Along the way Jeth picked up a Clio, the world's top advertising excellence award, and made the list of North America's 10 most up-and-coming new directors.

They do feature films. Moon of the Desperados has become a rodeo circuit cult classic, working with names such as Tuff Hedeman, Budweiser, and Wrangler. Heartland is a film about cystic fibrosis with a soundtrack developed by Jann Arden, Los Lobos, and Ozzy Osbourne. Three Juno winners and 60 videos: Jann Arden's Insensitive is the most famous of them.

They are really putting Calgary-Currie on the map with redmotel.com, and I'd like to offer my congratulations to Jeth and Braun and all the rest of the talented people there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Pam Irving

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year on November 14 Her Excellency the Rt. Hon. Adrienne Clarkson presented Pam Irving of Millarville community school in Highwood with the Governor General's award for excellence in teaching Canadian history to elementary school students.

In winning this national award, Pam gives full credit to her mentor, Barb Martin, from the Galileo Educational Network mentorship program. The Galileo program emphasizes students researching primary-source information including contact with First Nations people and families of original homesteaders as well as visiting local museums and historic sites and then utilizing student skills in writing, art, drama, and technology to reflect and strengthen their understandings.

Congratulations to a great teacher, Pam, and to her mentor, Barb, and to the Foothills school division.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Bernadette Vermaas

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give recognition to Ms Bernadette Vermaas, a recipient of the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission bronze medal. The commission honours people from Canada and the United States who risk their lives to an extraordinary degree trying to save others.

Ms Vermaas rescued Ljiljana Samuels from an assault by a woman who attacked her with a knife and two syringes on January 23, 2001. She heard the assault from her shop next door and rushed over. The shop owner was shielding her bloody face with her hands, with the armed assailant looming over her. With a snow shovel in her hand Ms Vermaas cleared the counter and began to approach the assailant, who then fled. Ms Vermaas followed the assailant through back alleys and parking lots until police intervened. Ms Samuels required surgery for a broken nose and recovered fully.

For her bravery Ms Vermaas became one of only 17 women to receive this award and the first from Edmonton. In all, 686 Canadians, 53 from Alberta, have been awarded Carnegie medals since 1904. I would ask Ms Vermaas again to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly for her bravery.

Thank you.

Grant Fuhr

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise to recognize a great Canadian and, more than that, a great Canadian hockey player. I'm speaking of Grant Fuhr, who was inducted into the Hockey Hall of Fame this year. His jersey was also retired by the Edmonton Oilers in October of this year, and of course he participated in the Molson Canadian Heritage Classic, where he once again displayed his lightning-quick reflexes with another memorable glove save. Fuhr played 19 seasons in the NHL and helped the Oilers win five Stanley Cups.

The native of Spruce Grove, who finished his glorious career in the 1999-2000 season, won the NHL's Vezina trophy for outstanding goalkeeper in the 1987-88 season. His contributions to NHL hockey shall be remembered for all time and will be expanded as he tries his hand as a hockey commentator, but he is also passing his hockey knowledge to the next generation by helping kids improve their game here in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all members to join me in congratulating this great Albertan and recognizing his achievements.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Edmonton Firefighters

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week Ivan Clancey's car left a slippery road in Edmonton during a blizzard and drove through ice into a drainage ditch, landing upside down. Passersby tried to help. It was up to two firefighters, Mike Haessel and Mike Tessier, not wearing protective clothing, to wade into four feet of oil, water, and sludge in minus 15 degree temperatures to find the driver. The car was pulled out. The driver is miraculously alive after 30 minutes underwater, and our prayers go out to him for a full recovery.

In those prayers will be a word of gratitude for the firefighters at station 6: Randy Owen, Bob Taylor, Ray Baron, Brian Paziuk, Doug Ardis, Graham DeLong, Dave Drebert, Rob McNallie, Scott MacDonald, Wayne Grotski, Daryl Harper, Walter Gahler, Mike Dawood, Bruce Ouellette, Ross Horton, and Greg Holubowich.

Firefighters and other emergency workers are called on daily to put themselves in danger. They do so without a second thought. It's their duty, they say. But from time to time these folks demonstrate a kind of bravery that elevates them from emergency workers to heroes. On behalf of the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, let's recognize those heroes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Dream Keeper Premiere

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 8 my husband and I attended a premiere of Dream Keeper, an amazing aboriginal film that through a grandfather and his grandson explores the tradition of storytelling and native culture. Dream Keeper will be broadcast on ABC television on December 28 and 29, 2003, for all Albertans to see. The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development attended with her sister and her daughter along with the MLA for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and his wife. The Premier spoke at a grand reception following.

Not only does Dream Keeper depict the rich traditions of aboriginal people; it also is an excellent example of the talent in our province. Dream Keeper was shot over 78 days and in over 70 locations throughout Alberta. Over 1,500 aboriginal people were involved as actors, background actors, special skills extras, cultural experts, and crew.

The Blood tribe, Treaty 7 Tribal Council, Telus, Dreamkeeper Productions, Alberta Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, Alberta Community Development, and all the cast and crew should be recognized for their contributions. Films such as Dream Keeper are bringing aboriginal talent into the mainstream and are an excellent way for aboriginal people to share their stories and traditions. Watch on December 28 and 29.

Thank you.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, as chair of the Select Special Ethics Commissioner and Ombudsman Search Committee I would like to table part 2 of the committee's report, containing its recommendation for the appointment of Mr. G.B. (Gord) Button as Ombudsman for the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition that was signed by 828 residents of Alberta requesting "the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to regulate energy corporations in order to lower the price of natural gas and electricity."

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2)

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to request leave to introduce a bill being the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2).

This bill will allow the government to introduce an insurance reform package that will allow automobile insurance to be made available to all Albertans in an affordable, accessible manner and will also allow for the provision of a rate freeze in the interim until the new reform package is available to all Albertans.

[Motion carried; Bill 53 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 53 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Financial Summit Act

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 218, Financial Summit Act.

Given that the demands for public money are increasing, new approaches for allocation of public funding should be considered. This bill is about a public forum that addresses the demands for public money by stakeholder groups in front of one another.

[Motion carried; Bill 218 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Bill 224

Long-Term Care Ombudsperson Act

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Long-Term Care Ombudsperson Act.

This is a bill that recognizes that persons receiving long-term or residential care deserve to be treated with dignity and maintain the greatest control possible over how they live their lives. Those persons are amongst the most vulnerable members of society wherein their interests and opinions and those of their families are too often disregarded.

[Motion carried; Bill 224 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Cost of Living Protection Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce

Bill 229, the Cost of Living Protection Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

The bill addresses three issues. It ensures that seniors living on fixed incomes and low-income Albertans, whether employed, unable to work, or disabled, receive an annual cost-of-living adjustment on a formula similar to that used to annually adjust the remuneration of Members of the Legislative Assembly. Second, the bill makes amendments to appropriate legislation to annually adjust the seniors' benefits, minimum wage, social assistance rates, and monthly AISH benefits to at least keep pace with inflation and the cost of living in Alberta. Finally, in terms of long-term care accommodation charges Bill 229 would require any future adjustments to these rates to be either at or below the inflation rate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 229 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of 165 signatures that I received from constituents regarding the government's handling of the long-term care accommodation rate increase. These constituents do not agree with the proposed implementation of a 40 percent increase in the accommodation rate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of a letter sent to me by constituent Sandra Lowe in which she commends several of the recommendations of the Learning Commission but, however, is opposed to some recommendations, including removing principals from the ATA.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. The first is a letter from the Coalition of Seniors Advocates, COSA, an organization from Calgary. The letter dated July 16, 2003, addressed to the Premier, is expressing concern with the failure of government to address the well-being of seniors, the homeless, and the disabled population of Alberta.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is also a letter, with the appropriate number of copies, written by Melanee Thomas, executive director of CAUS, and Brett Bergie, provincial director of ACTISEC, addressed to the Minister of Learning, dated November 24, 2003. Both CAUS and ACTISEC do not support the removal of the tuition fee cap or the creation of a framework to increase tuition above 30 percent of an institution's net operating expense.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition. He has received a letter from Doreen Purcell of Thorsby, Alberta. She's a senior, and she is dismayed to see that over $1 million was spent in attempting to change the opinion of the public regarding negotiations between the registered nurses and the Provincial Health Authorities.

The second tabling is from a constituent of mine, Sandra Brayer. She is also a registered nurse, with 15 years' experience, and is also very concerned about the negotiations that have been conducted between the PHAA and the UNA.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I table letters from Denise Joel, Helen Johnson, Tracy Mitchell, Gerry Laing, and Linda Brown to the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, upset with the employers' strategy in the nurses' negotiations and in particular concerned that the practice that has local nurses practise locally might be changed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter that our office received from Mr. Barry Wiens on Varsity Drive N.W. in Calgary. Mr. Wiens is expressing concern over the proposed government of Alberta natural gas rebate program. He finds it confusing, and he feels totally left out.

The second tabling I have, Mr. Speaker, is copies of letters expressing concern over patient safety in the negotiations between the nurses and the Provincial Health Authorities association. These letters are from Don Cytko of 78th Street and 102nd Avenue, Karen Wolgemuth from 107th Avenue and 63rd Street, and from Sheila Coulson in the constituency of Edmonton-Norwood.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of two letters, one from Diana Choma and the other from Anita Ashmore. Both are nurses and are very concerned over what is being asked of them in the current contract negotiations and the tactics that are being used by the employer in those negotiations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is a letter written to me, tabled with permission. It's from Gerald Zagrosch, the founder of the Pain Elimination and Tissue Regeneration Clinic. It's a letter offering a 100 percent guarantee of his clinic's services to the government of Alberta to eliminate pain from hip, knee, ulcerative colitis, and irritable bowel syndrome without using surgery.

The second letter tabled with permission is from Karen Ferrari expressing concern about the level of funding for education in Alberta, supporting some aspects of the Learning Commission but particularly concerned about class sizes.

The third tabling is from Adrienne Wiebe, who says, "I feel very strongly that the Alberta government has lacked a long range vision in its policies and programs" concerning education, health care, and social services.

The final tabling is a letter from Susan Hannon, tabled with permission, expressing concern about the level of funding to primary and secondary schools.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a letter from Kevin Sommer addressed to the Minister of Energy, dated November 22, 2003. He asks the minister to admit that his deregulation scheme was a mistake and to stop wasting public funds and to go back to regulating utilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling five copies each of 146 letters from Albertans that support the repair and restoration of a beautiful old landmark, the historic old Michener administration building, that's considered to be an unparalleled heritage resource and among the last of the grand old public buildings in our community and province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 60 letters from Edmontonians and 86 letters from Calgarians supporting Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a number of individuals that are attending this afternoon's session who provided me with assistance over the last two years as an MLA and in bringing forward Bill 206, which will be presented shortly for third reading this afternoon.

I'd like to introduce to you and acknowledge those members from the Community Action Project, north-central Edmonton citizens' power organization. In particular, Michael Walters is here with Rena Debit, Elaine Manteau, and Father Frank Steple. Also, from the Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation of Edmonton Kate Quinn, Ed Campbell, Tracey Patience, and Chris Basualdo are here. As well, I'd like to acknowledge four police officers that also assisted me: Detective Randy Wikens and Detective Jim Morrissey from the Edmonton Police Service as well as Detective Len Dafeo and Staff Sergeant Joe Houben from the Calgary Police Service.

I'd like them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Privilege Contempt of the Assembly

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair is now prepared to rule on a purported question of privilege raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview a few days ago. On November 14, 2003, the chair received written notice from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview of his intention to raise the purported question of privilege. On November 17, 2003, at 11:15 a.m. the chair received a signed letter from the member indicating his intention to raise this matter. The letter indicated that it was copied to the Minister of Infrastructure in conformity with Standing Order 15(2), which provides that a member wishing to raise a question of privilege shall give written notice containing a brief statement of the question to the Speaker and, if practicable, to any person whose conduct may be called into question, at least two hours before the opening of the sitting.

Under Standing Order 15(5) a question of privilege may be raised as soon as "the words are uttered or the events occur." The chair assumes that the member chose to review the minister's answers and tablings and presumably did not have that opportunity to raise the matter before the end of the sitting on May 15, 2003, which ended at 4:37 p.m. that day. Neither the member bringing forward the application nor the minister addressed whether this matter was raised at the earliest possible opportunity, which is one of the grounds under Standing Order 15(6) for the chair to consider in ruling on a purported question of privilege. Given that there seems to be no dispute on the point, the chair finds that it was brought forward at the earliest opportunity and that the requirements of Standing Order 15(5) were met.

Before reviewing the particulars of this application, the chair wants to comment on the procedure for raising questions of privilege. As privilege is the most serious issue that can be raised in this Assembly, the chair was very lenient with the time taken by both these members. However, the chair would like to quote from Marleau and Montpetit's book, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, at page 125.

A Member recognized on a question of privilege is expected to be brief and concise in explaining the event which has given rise to the question of privilege and the reasons why consideration of the event complained of should be given precedence over other House business. Generally, the Member tries to provide the Chair with relevant references to the Standing Orders, precedents and citations from procedural authorities.

The Speaker's role is to determine whether there is a prima facie question of privilege. It is up to the Assembly to decide whether there is an actual question of privilege. If the chair finds that there is a prima facie question of privilege, then the usual practice is for someone to move that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing, that would hear evidence on the matter. When the members of that committee conclude their work, their report would be submitted to the Assembly and would contain recommendations on what action should be taken. In short, hon. members, all the evidence does not have to be presented when the question is first raised in the Assembly.

In this case there were very few references to precedents or authorities cited by the two main participants. The chair has ruled three times in approximately the last year and a half on the issue of deliberately misleading the Assembly. The chair refers to rulings on March 12 and March 20, 2002, found at pages 267, 465, and 466 of Alberta Hansard for those days, and February 19, 2003, at pages 18 and 19 of Alberta Hansard. None of these rulings were referred to by either the member raising the allegation or by the minister in his response.

The basis of the member's purported question of privilege is that the Minister of Infrastructure deliberately misled the Assembly on May 15, 2003, and possibly before, concerning questions about testing for mold at what was formerly the Holy Cross hospital in the city of Calgary. In the member's November 17 letter he indicates that in response to his questions surrounding the test results for toxic mold at the Holy Cross hospital, and I quote: the minister indicated that he did not have the tests; the documents he tabled proved he did. End of quote.

The exchange is recorded at page 1674 of Alberta Hansard for May 15, which the chair closely reviewed. On that day the member asked in his main question what the minister had “learned about his department’s testing for toxic mold at the Holy Cross hospital.” In his response the minister made certain allegations against the member, which were the subject of a point of order that day and for which the minister apologized.

In his first supplementary question the member asked the minister if the department had “in its possession any lab results that speak of toxic mold at the former Holy Cross hospital.” In his response the minister quoted from a copy of an e-mail exchange between an official in his department and Mr. Tang Lee on May 14, 2003. At the request of the chair the minister tabled this e-mail in the House, which became sessional paper 597/2003. The minister quoted from part of the e-mail where Mr. Lee said that he “did not complete [the] report for the Holy Cross Hospital as the decision was made for the Court of Appeal not to move into [that] building.”

In the first part of the e-mail tabled by the minister, Mr. Lee indicates that he is enclosing “the report from the Microbiological laboratory that was completed on October 24, 2001.” The icons at the top of the e-mail indicate two attachments to the e-mail. These attached documents were not tabled on May 15 or in the minister’s tablings on November 19, 2003.

In his final supplementary the member asked: “Is the minister saying that his department has never had possession of positive tests for toxic mold at the Holy Cross hospital? Yes or no.” The minister’s response was:

Mr. Speaker, once again I will put on the record what has happened. The fact is that when we were looking at locations to house the Court of Appeal, the Court of Appeal asked Mr. Tang Lee to do an air quality test, and clearly, as this shows, the tests were never completed.

As the chair has indicated in previous rulings, accusing someone of deliberately misleading the Assembly is a very serious allegation that is hardly ever made out. The tests are presented well by David McGee in his book Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand, second edition, which was relied upon by the House of Commons committee that investigated the Eggleton affair and recommended that there was no breach of privilege. McGee says at page 491:

There are two ingredients to be established when it is alleged that a member is in contempt on this ground: the statement must, in fact, have been misleading; and it must be established that the member making the statement knew at the time the statement was made that it was incorrect and that, in making it, the member intended to mislead the House.

He goes on to state: “In order to show that a misleading of the House was deliberate, there must be something in the nature of the incorrect statement that indicates an intention to mislead.”

In this case, we heard at some length about different interpretations of test results. The minister believed that he never had final test results, while the member insists that the minister should have been advised that he had some test results, although on May 15 the member asked in his final supplementary if the minister had “positive” test results.

The minister had some documents, as demonstrated by the e-mail exchange between an official in his department and Mr. Lee, as the e-mail shows two attachments, which are referred to as “the report from the Microbiological laboratory.” The chair notes that it was the minister himself who tabled this document that seems to be the basis of the allegations by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. From the minister’s statement on November 19 he did not find the results conclusive.

As it appears that the chair is being asked to rule on the basis of what is a test, what is a final test, what is a positive test, or what is a final report, the chair would like to quote from the March 20, 2002, ruling on a similar allegation involving the Solicitor General found on page 465 of Alberta Hansard for that date.

It would be difficult for the chair to conclude that a contempt of the House arises every time a minister misspeaks or misstates department policy. Exactness in all answers to questions in question period would also require exactness in all questions. This would seem to amount to an impossible standard of perfection that would certainly go beyond the standard expected in a Westminster-style parliament.

After listening to the hon. member and the minister, it was clear to the chair that the minister offered responses that the hon. member thought did not answer his questions, but it seems that there was considerable room for subjective interpretation and ambiguity. Furthermore, as the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford alluded to, these matters are usually a dispute over facts. As Marleau and Montpetit state at page 433, in most instances, when a point of order or a question of privilege has been raised in . . . response to an oral question, the Speaker has ruled that the matter is a disagreement among Members over the facts surrounding the issue. As such, these matters are more a question of debate and do not constitute a breach of the rules or of privilege.

Accordingly, the chair cannot find that the minister was trying to deliberately mislead the Assembly. As such, the chair finds there is no prima facie case of privilege.

Before moving to Orders of the Day, the chair wants to encourage any members who bring forward questions of privilege to be succinct in their presentations and to be able to advise the House of the authorities that they are relying upon.

Pheasant Lease Agreement

Q15. Dr. Taft moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that the following question be accepted.

Why has the number of pheasants released under a lease agreement between the Brooks Pheasant Hatchery and the Pheasants Unlimited, administered by the Department of Infrastructure, not met the 15,000 pheasant release requirement, what are the terms of the lease agreement, and what happens when the lease expires?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we were prepared to respond, and I would like to indicate that we are prepared to accept Written Question 15.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to close the debate.

Dr. Taft: If the minister cares to provide his response, I’m sure the head: Third Reading

Bill 206

Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to begin debate on third reading of Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. Over the past two years I've met with hundreds of inner-city residents in Calgary and Edmonton who have all said the same thing: if people understood the problems related to prostitution, they would want to do anything possible to help get these women off the streets. Based on the support from inner-city residents, police agencies, city councils, and members of this House, I think the support for this bill is strong and growing.

I would like to remind this House that johns continue to drive around looking to satisfy their cravings. Even though the number of prostitutes has been reduced, the customers have not stopped shopping. A lot of work has been done to reduce the number of prostitutes walking the streets. This bill combined with other programs will make further progress to remove sex offenders and allow communities to rebuild into safe places for children and families.

Throughout debate on Bill 206 this Assembly has heard about the problems associated with street prostitution in Alberta's inner cities, but we've also heard about what some neighbourhoods and community groups are doing to battle prostitution. Whereas some community groups meet regularly to discuss the construction of a playground, a growing number of groups meet to decide how to clean up dirty condoms and used needles left on the sidewalk. I don't think people should be subjected to this sort of pressure, and any effort to reduce street prostitution would be a step in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, at every stage of the legislative process I tried to make it clear that Bill 206 will help reduce street prostitution. I can't stress enough the fact that this bill is only an option for police services, not a magic bullet that will eliminate prostitution completely. If the resources are available, then vice units will have vehicle seizure as an option. I strongly believe that this bill, if passed, will complement the efforts and programs already under way to further reduce street prostitution.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of this bill because it comes in part from communities affected by street prostitution. I have enjoyed meeting with residents and community groups who share my concern for the safety of innocent people. I found that talking and working with police services and community groups across Alberta has created legislation that effectively achieves its purpose.

There are many people who have helped me encourage this Assembly to help Alberta's communities. The number of letters and the diversity of the addresses made a very important statement. Now, I have tabled letters in this Assembly from residents of Edmonton and Calgary as well as outlying areas of the major centres including Sherwood Park, Strathmore, Viking, High River, and Canmore. This campaign was more proof that while street prostitution may occur primarily in the inner city, its effects have an impact throughout the surrounding area.

Mr. Speaker, individuals, as I mentioned earlier in Recognitions, such as Kate Quinn and Ed Campbell from the Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation of Edmonton as well as Michael Walters from the Community Action Project here in Edmonton as well as individuals like Carol Potter from the Communities for Awareness and Action on Prostitution Issues in Calgary have all done great work with their respective cities related to street prostitution including urging their aldermen to support the seizure of vehicles in this proposed bill.

Officers from the Calgary and Edmonton police services also helped educate citizens who had no understanding of the issues surrounding street prostitution. These men shared their experiences with several members in this House about the horrible costs of street prostitution. Initially the support from the police community was lukewarm because they saw problems using the exact legislation for Manitoba and Alberta, but they never rejected the idea and offered thoughtful advice that made this bill more effective by ensuring that the sex trade offender is held accountable without punishing his family.

These people have shared their real-life experiences with my colleagues and myself. Their contribution cannot be overstated, and I'd once again like to thank them for all of their help. They took time out of their busy schedules to offer their support and insight into the street prostitution issue and how to deal with it.

As I've said before, Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal of hard work being done that has reduced street prostitution in Alberta, but I believe that more work needs to be done. Johns need to understand the consequences of their actions. Women need help to get off the streets. Inner-city neighbourhoods need more assistance to prevent dirty needles and condoms from proliferating in their playgrounds, sidewalks, and backyards. Police services need the tools to effectively deter johns from destroying inner-city communities. Bill 206 is an attempt to achieve these goals.

Mr. Speaker, one final thought. In Vancouver there are over 60 missing street prostitutes. Some of you may know that Richard Pickton is accused of killing more than a dozen women, all of them street prostitutes in Vancouver's Hastings area. In Washington state the Green River killer, Gary Ridgeway, killed 48 women. All of his victims were prostitutes. In his own words, Ridgeway chose prostitutes because he thought he could kill as many as he wanted to without being caught. He also knew that they would not be reported missing right away and might never be reported missing at all.

I read an interesting article in the Ottawa Citizen last week, Mr. Speaker, that talked about Pickton and Ridgeway and the problem society has in recognizing victims of violence. All of Ridgeway's victims were women and all were prostitutes, and in Vancouver 60 female street prostitutes are missing and Pickton faces 50 murder charges. Some may say that this could never happen in Alberta, but the numbers tell a different story. Presently there are 83 missing street prostitutes in Alberta. In the past 15 years nine prostitutes have been murdered in the Edmonton area. Five of these murders have occurred in the past year.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, excluding the recent murders in Edmonton and excluding the 60 missing women in Vancouver and 73 prostitutes that have been killed in Canada over the past 10 years, there's one section of this article that made an important point. The author explained that it doesn't take a statistician to spot the common denominator in these numbers. Yes, serial killers are often involved but not always, and if we were to add the horrific number of assaults, robberies, rapes suffered by women on the street, then the blank-eyed monsters are reduced to bit players. The real story here is not about serial killers; it's one of street prostitutes being attacked by men ranging from psychopaths to mechanics to accountants to any walk of life.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not saying that the vehicle seizure alone would save the lives of these women or stop these killers, but I am convinced that Bill 206 will move many johns out of the inner-city areas where they shop for sex. By doing this, more time and resources can be concentrated on the serious offenders. I believe that the end result will save lives, and if this bill saves one life, it's worth it.

I've talked with the Minister of Transportation about this bill, and he supports it fully and knows that something has to be done. I look forward to working with him to ensure that this bill is proclaimed into law as soon as possible.

I believe that the legislation proposed in Bill 206 will help inner-city residents live in safer neighbourhoods by deterring sex offenders from cruising their neighbourhood streets, and I urge all members to vote in favour of Bill 206. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to participate in debate on Bill 206. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is to be recognized for the work that the member has done along with others in getting this bill before this Assembly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member spoke earlier about many of the prostitutes in Vancouver who unfortunately have disappeared and, it's been recognized, have lost their lives. Unfortunately, an eerily similar crime spree has affected this city and this region. Certainly, whenever one talks to or knows a parent of one of those prostitutes who has disappeared and disappeared for some time, is later found in a farmer's field or on an acreage, it is sad indeed. If anything can be done to prevent similar circumstances from occurring, then I would urge all members of this Assembly to support this legislation.

It's certainly not perfect. When we consider that Bill 206 perhaps will undermine one of the main principles of the Canadian justice system – that is that you're innocent until you are proven guilty. This is a strong measure that undermines that principle, but when we look at one of those mothers who has lost a child – and in some cases these prostitutes are not 18 – if this measure would go in any way to reduce prostitution, then I, again, urge everyone to support this.

Certainly, the communities that were consulted are solidly behind this legislation, and we have to respect the wishes of those individuals in the community that the hon. member has consulted with, and we have to hope that the wishes of the community and the civil rights of the public are going to be in balance here. Those are difficult issues to balance sometimes in a democracy, but hopefully we will be able to do that with this bill.

Bill 206 is also going to give quite a bit of discretionary power to police officers. If you are caught soliciting for prostitution, a vehicle can be seized. Now, there is a list of conditions that hopefully we will get a chance to discuss in this Assembly, but certainly I would encourage all members of this Assembly to have a look at the issue of prostitution and the solicitation of prostitutes and consider this.

This is a deterrent, but there is also another deterrent out there, and that is the publishing of the names of the individuals who are cruising on any night of the week and soliciting prostitutes. If they're caught and if they're found guilty, let's have those names publicly displayed somewhere. It may be that whenever the john comes home to Jill, shall I say, Mr. Speaker, then a little bit of humiliation can go a long, long way to stopping this practice.

Now, that worked in the past as I understand it, as people in the community have told me. Perhaps we should look at going back to that way, and that is simply: the names of those that are found guilty are displayed in a public place for all to see.

With those remarks, I will cede the floor to another hon. member that wants to participate in the debate, but I would certainly urge members to please consider supporting this legislation initiative from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with a strong, positive feeling that I stand today to encourage my colleagues to vote in favour of Bill 206 in third reading. I've watched this bill proceed through the various stages of debate, and in listening to the pros and cons between members, I've concluded that the bill will be an effective tool for fighting prostitution and cleaning up neighbourhoods. As such, it will receive my support because it fights for the ability of families in areas overrun by prostitution to take control of those areas and clean them up for the better.

A common misconception about Bill 206 is that those fighting for the bill are doing so out of emotion whereas those fighting against the bill are doing so out of logic and reason. It's true that there are many valid emotional arguments that can be used in support of Bill 206, but there are also a lot of good, logical arguments that support the bill as well. The two types of arguments work together to ensure that the bill we pass is satisfactory both on an emotional level as well as on a logical level.

Today I want to talk about these two types of arguments and how they're working together in support of Bill 206. When we talk about any sort of legislation, we always start by asking two questions. First, is this law something that Albertans want or desire? Second, will this law be good for Alberta in the long run? These two questions form part of an age-old debate about legislation. As a government is it our job to decide what is good for Albertans, or is it our job to give Albertans what they want? That's an interesting debate, but in reality those of us in the Assembly know that in most cases the answer lies somewhere in the gray area in between.

Bill 206 is a piece of legislation that lies in that gray area. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo along with the Community Action Project went into communities riddled with prostitution and asked: what do you want done about this? The response far and away was: get pimps, johns, and prostitutes along with their used condoms and dirty syringes out of our neighbourhood; give us and policemen the power to make our neighbourhoods safe again. They gave a lot of good reasons for this response too. These vary from a personal concern for the well-being of street prostitutes, often children, to a concern for the safety of their own families, to a desire for a clean neighbourhood, to a desire for property values to increase.

On the emotional side of the coin some women have expressed unease and humiliation over being hollered at and mistaken for prostitutes by passing johns. Others are simply disgusted by the sight and knowledge of prostitution-related activities taking place in their back alleys or around the corner in the parks and playgrounds where kids are supposed to be riding the teeter-totter or playing soccer, not watching out for dirty needles. Yes, these are emotional arguments, but I see no reason why they should not be considered valid arguments for measures which would curtail street prostitution.

On a very real level these are concerns that people living in these neighbourhoods have to face. They are concerns about actions which are in and of themselves demeaning and can lead to other actions which may cross the line from demeaning and humiliating behaviour right into violent or illegal acts. This is where concern over humiliation takes on an even greater significance and where we come to see that while some arguments may be deemed emotional, they are in fact logical and reasonable in their own right.

For example, any concerned parent must wonder just what neighbourhood their kids will be growing up in if behaviour such as this is not tackled as strongly as possible by our legislation. When we take away a vehicle from somebody, we ensure that the driver will not find their way back into these neighbourhoods to pick up street prostitutes, get their fix, or holler catcalls at mothers or their young daughters. In short, this bill banks upon a common economic logic: if there are no customers, there will be no incentive to try to sell a product. This bill takes away the customer, so it should be met with a corresponding drop in street prostitutes attempting to sell their bodies in those neighbourhoods.

Families and community organizations will have at least a fighting chance to clean up neighbourhoods and make them the places they can be, places they are proud to raise their children in. When the neighbourhoods are clean, when they are normal by any reasonable person's standards, then the fruits of Bill 206 will be seen. Kids will be able to play in the front yard or in the park across the street without parents' fears about their safety being compromised by criminal or perverted elements.

When these neighbourhoods are clean, homeowners and landowners can feel good about taking care of their yards without having a dirty condom or needle from a passing truck thrown onto their property. They won't have to worry about drunken johns driving dangerously through their neighbourhoods looking for a prostitute. On another, very real level homeowners would finally be confident that the value of their property would increase for a change. They would be confident that they may get their investment back on their property.

I'm not suggesting that Bill 206 would cure all of these problems and do all of these wonderful things. Obviously, it won't, but it's a step. It needs to be supported by the political will of all levels of government, a committed police force, and, finally, committed community action groups and individuals. Well, we do have committed police officers, and the people on the ground in these communities have said that they want this to happen. They have been working on their own to rid their streets of prostitution for some time now. All that's missing is the political will. With the passage of Bill 206 we will show that the political will is not missing at all. We'll show these communities that this Legislature is behind them full force in getting rid of prostitution. Mr. Speaker, it's time to take effective action concerning prostitution.

York University sociologist John O'Neill has suggested decriminalization of prostitution and collecting the tax. Bill 206 is a good first step.

I applaud my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo for having the courage and the faith to bring this bill forward. I support it, and I urge all my colleagues to support it as well. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a bit of a cough, so I will try and get through this speech without frying the microphone.

I welcome the opportunity to briefly speak during third reading debate on Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. I spoke on it as well, Mr. Speaker, at second reading. I want to begin by acknowledging those in attendance in the gallery today. Some of those who have joined us today live and/or work in inner-city neighbourhoods that have been hard hit by the negative consequences of street prostitution-related activities.

These negative consequences include noise and congestion on residential streets and avenues, particularly late at night, when people are trying to sleep and hope to enjoy some peace and quiet. It also involves the harassment of people, and it involves the health risks of needles and condoms that are left in back alleys, playgrounds, and schoolyards. Women, for example, cannot do simple things like walking to the corner store or to the neighbour's without being stopped and harassed. Excessive traffic on residential streets and avenues increases the chances of accidents both to residents and to property. Needles and other litter left behind also create dangers and other health hazards.

Unfortunately, a growing number of neighbourhoods in both Edmonton and Calgary as well as some smaller cities are experiencing the negative impacts of street prostitution and related drug activity. Until 15 years ago street prostitution was largely confined to the downtown core. In the late '80s and early '90s business and police action shifted the activity from the downtown core to the residential neighbourhoods adjacent to downtown.

In the late '90s growth in the drug trade, cuts to welfare and other social supports, and a severe shortage of affordable housing contributed to more vulnerable women on the streets and an increase in the number of neighbourhoods impacted. Today more than a dozen neighbourhoods from Westmount to Beverly are being negatively impacted by this dangerous and undesirable activity in Edmonton.

We have vulnerable youth and adults being recruited and getting hooked on crystal meth and cocaine and then being forced to prostitute themselves to get the money to pay the dealers. From 1992 to 2002 effective police, new agency resources such as Safe House, Crossroads, Street Outreach, the protection of children involved in prostitution initiative, and community action reduced the numbers from 975 to 250, but in 2003 we have seen a spike to around 350 individuals on the street. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is directly attributable to the drug trade.

The greatest danger of prostitution-related activity is to the women themselves. In the last year alone five women have disappeared off city streets only to be found dead sometime later, usually in a remote location outside the city. In the past 20 years the number of women that have disappeared off city streets has rivaled the number of women that have disappeared in Vancouver's downtown east side albeit the Vancouver disappearances took place over a shorter period of time.

Clearly, a range of measures needs to be taken to address the danger and nuisance that results from johns cruising residential streets to pick up women who are prostituting. Most importantly we need to reduce the number of young women and some men who are living lives of such desperation that they feel that they have no alternative but to sell their bodies on the street. We need to address issues of poverty by making sure that people have safe, affordable housing. We need to make sure these women have adequate incomes so that they can feed themselves and their children and are able to put a roof over their heads so that they don't need to expose themselves to the danger of the streets. We need to address the underlying problem of drug addiction and ensure that appropriate supports are in place so that vulnerable women don't have to turn to street prostitution.

Mr. Speaker, we also need to address the demand side of the equation. We have to acknowledge that the residents in these neighbourhoods have every right to be angry about their neighbourhood being shown such a lack of respect and that they and their children are exposed not only to unnecessary noise and pollution and the dangers imposed by distracted drivers of these vehicles but also to dangers such as needles and other litter.

Some positive steps have already been taken to address this unacceptable nuisance. One is the setting up of a john school for those charged with solicitation offences. There has been a prostitution offender program running in Edmonton for the past seven years. This is an alternative measures program which men who have been charged for the first time can attend to learn about the brutal realities of the street sex trade. Its success is demonstrated by the low number of repeat offenders.

I note that Bill 206 contains a provision for first-time offenders: if they choose an alternative measures program like the prostitution offender program, they will have their vehicles returned. A survey done of men attending the program indicated that 78 percent believed that they would be deterred if there was a risk that their vehicles would be seized. I am aware of some concerns that have been expressed about whether seizing the vehicles of those charged with solicitation violates the presumption of innocence. I have to admit, Mr. Speaker, that this argument is a concern of mine as well because it's an important legal principle, but at the same time it's important to note that in other offences that involve summary convictions legal consequences result prior to having someone having their day in court to fight the charges.

In this respect, the rights of the accused need to be balanced against the rights of neighbourhood residents. I believe that safeguarding the rights of residents in neighbourhoods afflicted by street prostitution activity has to take precedence. We need to send a clear message to johns that engaging in this kind of dangerous behaviour is not acceptable and will result in severe consequences. We need to deter this type of unacceptable behaviour, and the provisions of Bill 206 provide the police with another tool for doing this.

On that basis, I will on behalf of the New Democrat opposition be supporting Bill 206 at third and final reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise and join the debate on Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Before I begin, having worked with the hon. member on the Alberta police review, I've long respected his work and his commitment to policing. I'm very pleased that he has brought forward this bill, which represents a great deal of work and takes into account his past many long years as a well-respected police officer. So he is not only looking at it from a policing standpoint but also taking into consideration the community as a whole.

Throughout debate several hon. members have expressed concerns with Bill 206, and I feel that these concerns need to be addressed as we continue on the process of, hopefully, passing this legislation. Mr. Speaker, the first and most prominent concern is the assumption that under Bill 206 the suspects would be sentenced before their right to a trial. The second concern with Bill 206 is the progression of street-level prostitution to more of an underground, less visible environment. Although this concern is not directly related to Bill 206, it is a consequence of legislation whose purpose is to rid the streets of prostitutes, pimps, and johns. I find these two concerns to be the major arguments against this legislation. Thus, they need to be addressed so that there is no disputing that Bill 206 is a necessary part of Alberta's Traffic Safety Act.

Before I submit my arguments concerning these two issues, I would like to remind the Assembly that Bill 206 is designed to clean up urban neighbourhoods torn apart by crime and debris related to street prostitution. It's just that simple. We are very, very lucky actually, Mr. Speaker, as I represent a rural area. There's not a great deal of prostitution in smaller communities. However, I'm sure many MLAs in this Assembly that do represent towns and villages can tell of stories where young girls have been lured away from the smaller community, quit school, and gone off to Calgary to seek fame and fortune and often – often – end up on the streets as prostitutes. So we, too, from rural Alberta have to take this very seriously.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 206 is closely connected with another piece of important legislation that passed during the spring session this year. Part of Bill 1, Alberta's promise act, is a pledge to all Albertans that we will work together to provide safe and healthy communities for our children's growth, education, and development. I firmly believe that Bill 206 is a major step in fulfilling Alberta's promise to make our communities and streets a safe environment for our children to live, learn, and play. I trust that every member in the Assembly strongly supports getting those involved in prostitution-related offences off our streets and out of our communities.

As part of my argument against those who feel that it is important that people convicted of a crime have their day in court, I want to compare similar legislation that allows police officers to take immediate action against a suspect before they appear in court. In fact, this argument has been used during previous stages of debate on this bill, but since there are still some concerns with the proposed legislation, I would like to use this opportunity to help clarify those concerns by breaking the argument down into its simplest form.

Mr. Speaker, it is a criminal offence to operate or be in care or control of a motor vehicle while alcohol or drugs impair one's ability, as is clearly stated in the Criminal Code of Canada with further restrictions in the Alberta Traffic Safety Act. For an individual suspected by a police officer to be in violation of the impaired driving laws, a number of different consequences can result, depending on the number of occasions an individual has been involved in an impaired driving offence. The consequences for operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol or drugs include the immediate seizure of the suspect's licence for one year as well as the seizure and impoundment of the vehicle. The suspect as well can be limited to operating it for a term of 30 days.

The decision to seize the suspect's licence and vehicle is made by the peace officer that is performing the traffic stop. This, of course, doesn't mean that the suspect will not have their day in court. Every individual accused of committing an illegal act, whether speeding or jaywalking or any other offence, has the right to a trial. There has never been any reason to doubt that this will not be. Mr. Speaker, to say that an individual who would be accused of prostitution-related charges under the Traffic Safety Act amendment proposed by Bill 206 will not have their day in court carries as much truth as saying that a drunk driver, a speeder, or a jaywalker won't have their day in court.

Bill 206 reminds me a lot of the legislation that is now in place for impaired driving offences. I use this example for one reason: there is an immediate consequence for the illegal actions taken by an individual. That immediate action includes the seizure of the accused's licence and car for impaired driving and the seizure of the accused's car for soliciting a prostitute. Both actions are illegal, and both actions contribute to unsafe streets and dangerous communities. Mr. Speaker, the bare bones of both these crimes are very similar. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has recognized that, and I applaud him for doing so. Hopefully, Bill 206 will clean up our urban streets and neighbourhoods just as impaired driving legislation has made our communities and roads safer.

I would like to make another point to clear up any confusion about the issue of the opportunity of suspected individuals involved in a prostitution-related offence to defend themselves. Mr. Speaker, as I have mentioned earlier, this bill is designed as a simple bill to address an uncomplicated but complicated issue. When a vice unit is on the street waiting for a john to pull up in his or her vehicle, they know exactly what they are looking for. The undercover officer isn't waiting for a lost tourist to stop and ask for directions nor is the undercover officer waiting for a stressed-out smoker to pull over looking for a light, and if he was under 18 he probably could be charged under our new legislation.

No, Mr. Speaker. The vice unit will be focused on an individual who approaches in their vehicle with the purpose to solicit the undercover officer for sexual acts. This means that the individual and the undercover officer will have to be involved in a business deal which includes the exchange of money for the promise of sexual favours. This issue doesn't get more basic and uncomplicated than that.

There is no way to misconstrue the events that need to take place for an officer to seize the vehicle. The act of soliciting a prostitute on the streets of our great province is illegal. If an individual commits this act, then their vehicle will be seized until other arrangements are made or the charges are dropped once the culprit has had their day in court.

Mr. Speaker, to ensure that this legislation does not bring any undue hardship to the innocent family of the accused, this bill prevents vehicle seizure from punishing the suspect's family. Should this turn out to be the case, the vehicle will not be seized or it will be returned as soon as possible. So johns be warned: if your vehicle is a vital part of your family's well-being, do not solicit prostitutes while operating it.

Again, I can see similarities between impaired driving legislation and Bill 206. This may be a broad scale and hard to comprehend; however, with today's laws and regulations it is safer to not drive even if you have had only one drink. Just as one is drinking and driving or one is not, just as one is soliciting a prostitute or one is not, this is extremely black and white, and I have full confidence in the vice unit's training and expertise to make the appropriate decision.

Mr. Speaker, on to my second concern. There are some who feel that Bill 206 will take prostitution off the streets and force it underground where we cannot find it, where it isn't seen. I completely disagree with this. There is prostitution in parts of Alberta,

Canada, and North America that is very underground today. Bill 206 is about streets, communities, prostitutes, johns, vehicles, drugs, and all those things that deter from a community, that make it unsafe for the residents that live there, that make it hard for parents to point out to children what these people are doing and why the neighbourhood is seemingly always having these types of people around it and in it.

We must very, very seriously look at what the hon. member is trying to achieve with this legislation. He's obviously talked to his inner-city communities as he represents downtown Calgary, and we know the inner city in Edmonton. Both of these inner cities have this problem, and I hope that Bill 206 goes a long way to alleviate it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak in support of Bill 206, but before I do that, I'd like to express my sincere thanks and gratitude to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing forward this important piece of legislation. I know that this piece of legislation is very important to my own constituency of Calgary-East and to the constituents of Calgary-East and from talking to my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Norwood, who is vigorously supporting this bill.

Prostitution, according to a comment made at the United Nations Fourth World Conference on Women, is one of the greatest human tragedies. It is also one of the oldest forms of oppression on Earth. Prostitution not only harms its participants but is also detrimental to societies in general. Prostitution, Mr. Speaker, is no small problem. This is why I fully support Bill 206, not because it's going to be a miracle cure for street prostitution in Alberta but because it will be one extra tool in battling a real and serious problem in our society.

Mr. Speaker, there are three fundamental functions of Bill 206 that will help strengthen and secure Alberta's families and communities. First, Bill 206 is proactive. It goes after the demand side of this social problem. If johns can be deterred from buying sex, the problems of street prostitution could be vastly reduced. By reducing the number of potential sex buyers, Bill 206 will help decrease the number of women involved in street prostitution.

I think we should seize this opportunity to reduce the number of children who are brought into this world already disadvantaged by devastating cycles of poverty. Mr. Speaker, statistics show that of the female juvenile prostitutes surveyed, 11 percent had given birth to children. The family unit will be strengthened by Bill 206 by allowing more street prostitutes to break out of the cycle of poverty before they start a family or return to their own family.

Mr. Speaker, stronger families lead to my third point in support of Bill 206, which is stronger and more productive communities. This goal is the end result sought by most legislation put forward in this House. As legislators we have a real chance to put a serious dent in street prostitution and help many urban communities grow and prosper.

The first element of Bill 206, of being proactive, is an important aspect of this legislation. Many times governments are too reactionary to social problems and seek the simplest solutions to complex issues. This has been our approach to street prostitution, and it is clear that overall it is not working. By going after johns, Mr. Speaker, we are directly attacking the demand side of this social problem. We are going after the perpetrators of this crime and not the victims, which in many cases are underage women. A 1996 study revealed that 96 percent of prostitutes enter the profession under the age of 18. Many of these women are fleeing homes where physical violence and emotional and sexual abuse are occurring. Prostitutes in these situations are not the real criminals in the perpetuating cycle of violence and poverty.

The real criminals are the pimps and johns who exploit these women. However, these two groups are the elements in the act of street prostitution that are least likely to be charged and convicted. Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 changes all of this. One group of exploiters, the johns, will be brought to justice, and the number of victims, the women involved in prostitution, will be reduced by the reduction in those who buy their services. Bill 206 works on the basic economic philosophy of supply and demand: a reduced demand and the supply will naturally be reduced.

Mr. Speaker, skeptics may ask how Bill 206 will reduce the number of johns prowling the streets. One has to look no further than the success of john school throughout North America and the positive effects it has had on street prostitution. Bill 206 will put more men in john school and reduce the reoccurrence of the offence.

Mr. Speaker, a local Edmonton organization, PAAFE, along with the Edmonton Police Service and Crown prosecutors run the prostitution offender program, or john school, here in Edmonton. The alternative program for first-time offenders charged with soliciting for the purpose of prostitution costs $400 for the one-day course. Many johns have the mind-set that prostitution is a victimless crime. However, after the eight-hour emotional day of lectures from former prostitutes and parents whose children have become entangled in prostitution, many johns begin to see the truth about prostitution, that it is far from a victimless crime and erodes the spirit of many females and neighbourhoods.

Out of the 1,524 men who have completed the course since 1996, Mr. Speaker, only 20 have been charged again. These numbers speak for themselves. Bill 206 will put more men into john school and similar alternative measures programs and will eventually help dwindle the demand for street prostitutes.

Mr. Speaker, the second element of Bill 206 that I feel is important is the one of strengthening and securing the family unit. As daughters and mothers prostitutes are part of a family unit that is obviously traumatized by the profession. Equally destructive are the actions of johns to their own families, not just physically by spreading disease but also emotionally and mentally.

As mentioned earlier, of the female juvenile prostitutes surveyed by one study, 11 percent had given birth to children. These young girls are in no position to be raising children and are only condemned to a life of prostitution to provide for their children. These children are very likely to be victims of the same abuse that led their mothers to flee their homes, just compounding the cycle of abuse, poverty, and violence. With daughters on the streets the families of these prostitutes are continually distraught and continually wondering if their child or sibling is still alive. Imagine what such a feeling would do to the family unit. Anxiety and depression must be rampant in these cases.

On the other side of the sex trade, Mr. Speaker, are the families of johns. The same 1996 study I mentioned earlier found that 80 percent of johns are married men. Sexually transmitted diseases are the first problem that come to my mind when I hear statistics like these brought forward. However, the emotional destruction of having your partner buying sex can be even more catastrophic. Families are dismantled and children are left to bear these scars for the remainder of their years. Bill 206, by deterring johns from partaking in the sex trade, has the potential to save families on both sides of the equation.

Mr. Speaker, the third and final reason I support Bill 206 is that it achieves the goal that all legislators strive for. It strengthens and helps communities grow. This simple explanation should be the reason that all of us should be supporting Bill 206. Productive families are directly linked to making stronger communities because the family unit is the cornerstone of any community. Naturally, if families are in turmoil, the communities will be as well.

On more of the social side street prostitution erodes communities by perpetuating the drug trade, littering the streets with needles and condoms and causing fear in innocent members of society who have nothing to do with the sex trade at all. Mr. Speaker, we have all heard stories of johns approaching young girls that are waiting for the bus or of small children playing with used condoms or needles. There is no reason not to give police a strong tool in battling street prostitution to help rid our communities of these disturbing problems.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge all my colleagues to vote in support of Bill 206. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thankful for the opportunity to join in debate in third reading of Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by my friend and colleague from Calgary-Buffalo. I think this is a good bill, an important bill, a long-overdue bill that will help a lot of people, likely save lives, and especially help a lot of communities deal with street prostitution, making inner-city streets and parks safe for family use, no more fear, no more harassment.

The goal of Bill 206 is to reduce the number of men driving around looking for prostitutes. Reducing the number of johns will likely reduce the amount of this sort of garbage in inner-city areas. Mr. Speaker, for nearly 20 years I was the administrator of a wonderful school, Victoria school of performing and visual arts, located in the inner city. If you haven't lived or worked in the inner city, you can't appreciate the enormity of this problem.

I wonder how many people know that this isn't just an evening or a weekend activity. You'd be shocked to know how many men are leaving their wives and children in the morning, giving them a kiss good-bye on their way to work, and stopping in the inner city to satisfy their lust, looking for prostitutes as early as 6:30 or 7. I mean, there's a lot of activity, a lot of trade happening at that time. I can tell you that my school opened at 6:30 in the morning for students who came for athletics, for their arts activities, and so on, and these young people, young females, were constantly being harassed by these johns cruising the streets looking for whatever action that they wanted to satisfy.

Let me make it clear. You know, johns are not committing a minor offence. Let's remember that they rape and exploit young women. At the very least johns would owe an explanation to their families and employers for losing their vehicle. I think that public embarrassment is an appropriate first step, just the first step, in dealing with these monsters. If johns truly understood the consequences of their so-called harmless actions, then young women wouldn't be found frozen and strangled in farmers' fields. As other members have stated, women are being killed, yet little seems to be done because they're sex-trade workers.

Before we wrap up debate on this bill, I would like to raise an important point that can't be stressed enough. We've heard about the problems normal people face living around prostitution. Picking up the garbage left behind by prostitutes and their customers has been talked about a great deal, but I must remind this House again that I have personal experience with these cleanup efforts and the harassment of females by cruising johns. It was always sad and frustrating to walk around the school property in the morning before students arrived to look for used needles.

You know, I had to put a 10-foot chain-link fence around the elementary playground so that it would not be used by these predators in the evenings and weekends. Children in the community could not use these facilities. What a crime that was to the people in the community that I had to fence the playground because these people thought that would be a great place for their activities. You know, if for no other reason, I would urge members in this House to support this bill in the hope that parents, day care workers, and teachers won't have to walk through playgrounds looking for potentially lethal drug material.

Some may say this bill goes too far, that the punishment exceeds the crime. I think it's important to recognize all the people that risk their health and even their lives to keep these areas safe for children. I think the rights of these people take precedence over the rights of sexual predators.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat that this bill isn't a quick fix, but I have no doubt that it will help everyone fight street prostitution. Let's recognize the prostitution problem in inner-city communities and help fix it. I think that's the most important aspect of this bill.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I'll end my comments on Bill 206. I urge all members in this Assembly to vote in favour of this legislation. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say that this is a great opportunity for me to rise to speak in support of Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. This may be one of the most important private member's bills to come before this Legislature for quite some time. I would like to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for having the sensibility and the conviction to introduce this initiative.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 is all about improving peoples lives, about deterrence to committing vices and crimes. From the prostitutes to the johns who use them and from the families whose lives are affected by street prostitution to the neighbourhoods which are made unsafe by prostitution, everyone stands to gain something from this bill.

According to research data on prostitution, it seems to me that there is always some form of necessity or coercion or both present. What right does anyone – I mean anyone – have to coerce teenagers into a downward spiral of drugs, violence, disease, and abuse?

Mr. Speaker, prostitution is not only a local but a global issue. I have the privilege of assisting an Alberta-grown group, The Future Group, consisting of young and caring Calgary students. This group now is expanding. It has chapters in many locations around the world to combat the traffic of human beings in the sex trade and prosecute johns who avoid local laws by practising offensive sex in other countries where laws are lacking or not enforced. As a footnote I want to commend The Future Group members and their executive on their outstanding work.

If there is one thing the prostitutes and the johns in Alberta have in common, it is that they come from all over the province and they come from all kinds of backgrounds and they come from both urban and rural environments and from both poverty and affluence and anywhere in between. There is not one trait or characteristic that can be said to typify a prostitute any more than there is one that signals johns. Both, however, are part of the breakdown of community. The difference is that whereas the prostitute seldom if ever has a choice in the matter, a john does.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, but under Standing Order 8(5)(a)(iii), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would like to invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to close debate on Bill 206.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to move third reading of Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003.

Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users)
Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate May 12: Mr. Stevens]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a while since this bill was first debated, but it's my pleasure to rise today and continue that debate on Bill 208, the Occupiers Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003. As a member for a rural riding, I have a little awareness of the concerns of rural Albertans. This bill is quite important to the farmers and landowners of my area and, I'd suggest, important to most residents of Alberta as well. It's the third time a bill of this nature has surfaced since I've been a member of this Assembly, and I certainly hope that this time we can bring it through to completion and enactment as a law. Even though it is predominantly a rural bill, I think it will have benefit for urban folks as well. Rural people have been asking for it for quite some time, and I think it's overdue that we proceed with it.

Although urban residents are becoming more and more aware of rural issues, I still often feel that city folks have a minimal awareness of the problems faced by someone who owns a large parcel of land, particularly in regard to liability. Most of this property on farms is not something where you could look out of your upstairs window and see the land that's involved, so a lot of times you don't even have much of an idea of what's going on in the far reaches. Few people likely are aware of how little protection the existing occupiers' liability law gives farmers.

In the short run, as I said, this will be most beneficial to farmers, but in the long run it's also going to be a benefit to hikers and cyclists, anglers, snowmobilers, and all types of recreational users. Although I represent a rural riding, I think I can assure other members in this House that it is not a rural versus urban issue and that the benefit will eventually come to everyone.

As the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul pointed out earlier in the debate, our current legislation creates an unequal responsibility between landowner and the land user. The landowner must in essence protect recreational users from themselves. Alberta's present Occupiers' Liability Act was written almost 25 years ago, and I think everyone would agree that times and situations have changed significantly since then. People have become much more aware of rural attractions and are using rural areas more often to get back to nature, so to speak.

They are using our park systems on a greater scale than ever before, Mr. Speaker, but the natural areas of Alberta are not limited to parks alone. Many of the areas that people would like to use for recreation are on private land, but with the current liability risks the owners are reluctant to allow others on their land. I have to say that under these circumstances I would do the same.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that the members from other rural areas would also agree with me that Bill 208 is not an intrusive one in that we're not forcing people to open their land to the general public, but we certainly would be giving them more of an incentive to do so if they wished.

There are many landowners right now who do allow others on their land, but usually this is limited to friends or neighbours or people you know. These friends are considered visitors under the current legislation, and they should use their permission in the spirit in which it was given them. They don't generally go onto the land thinking that they might have an opportunity to sue the owner if they hurt themselves. They generally assume the consequences of their own actions. However, even if they do go on and assume the risks at the time, the fact is that they can sue. I'm sure that we've all heard of instances where an accident has ended up turning one friend against another in litigation, especially so if an insurance claim is involved. Mr. Speaker, we would remove the need for landowners to assume full risk for visitors who use their land for recreation if we pass this bill.

We should help open up rural attractions to the ever growing number of recreational users. We're very fortunate in this province. We have the landscape to support most every type of outdoor sport, and we should help to ensure that people can participate if they wish.

Ecotourism is an expanding industry, and we should encourage such initiatives. These businesses could use private land as well as wilderness areas to bring people closer to nature. Ecotourism is a positive step toward increasing environmental awareness. We would be doing not only the wilderness but wildlife a service if these people returned from vacations with a greater awareness of the things that we can do in an open Alberta. Bill 208 may also create new opportunities for these businesses to grow. I don't believe that there's a region in this province that couldn't use a boost to local tourism.

If people go on private land knowing that they're responsible for their own well-being, it's also more likely that they will take greater care. Visitors should always be limited to using the land for permitted activities only. If they do something that the owner has not allowed, then they would no longer be a visitor but they would now be a trespasser, and trespassers are not entitled to common duty of care even under the current legislation, and I refer to section 12(1) of the current legislation.

Mr. Speaker, with the provisions of Bill 208 and the current legislation regarding trespassers, it would seem to me that the likelihood of landowners allowing people onto the land would increase dramatically. They would not be held liable for injury or accident to a visitor if the landowner were not willfully reckless. People in urban areas already have this protection. You can't go into someone else's yard in town and do as you please. Rural property owners should have this same protection, and that is what is being proposed by the bill.

Most people in rural Alberta would be willing to work with recreational clubs such as cross-country skiing, horseback riding, or any of the outside activities if they had some sort of protection. Under Bill 208 we would be providing the help that they've been asking for for quite some time.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this Assembly to review this bill thoroughly, and if they do that, I'm sure they will support it. I plan on doing just that. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to join debate on Bill 209, sponsored by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. First of all, I think landowners and occupiers need a certain degree of legal protection. I'm confident that this bill will be effective in instances where injuries occur on a landowner's or an occupier's property subsequent, of course, to permission being granted for that individual who was so injured to enter the land, but we should be very clear that Bill 208 will not solve all or even most of the liability claims. It is a step in the right direction. I agree with Bill 208 because of the current vulnerability that landowners and occupiers face from litigation by people who don't always want to take responsibility for their own actions.

Mr. Speaker, the member and I may be from opposite corners of the province, but we still have a great deal in common. There are a number of ranchers and farmers living in the Highwood constituency as there are in Lac La Biche-St. Paul. One of the issues that transcends all rural ridings in Alberta is the gray area surrounding the liability of property owners and occupiers. Like the hon. member I, too, have received complaints from landowners who may face legal action from recreation users who could injure themselves on their property. So there are two sides to that. One is just the continuous worry that anytime somebody is on your property they may become injured by not seeing a fence and going through it with their snowmobile or not seeing that there's a dugout or a washed-out interior road on the ranch and rolling their quad over or whatever.

I'm sure that urban members in this Assembly may have difficulty relating to this issue, but I can assure this House that it is having an adverse effect on the sense of community in rural Alberta. I would also concede that landowner and occupier liability may not be attracting a great deal of attention from the media, but that doesn't mean that it isn't having a major impact on certain Albertans. The urbanite, I'm sure, would identify with the potential liability of a lawsuit when someone slips and falls on an icy residential sidewalk leading to their house or the steps up to their house. Urban dwellers with a swimming pool, for instance, have fences and locked gates to limit their liability exposure.

Well, imagine the potential liability of a ranch that may be several miles in length as well as in width, that may cover a few thousand acres – it may be a few hundred – and in that land there would be forests, there may be streams, ponds, wetlands, steep hills, all of those kinds of things that could cause someone who doesn't know about it or who isn't paying attention to injure themselves. That's not to mention things like old barbed wire that's tied up in a corner.

I think there's a reason why landowner and occupier liability hasn't attracted much attention. The types of property included in this bill, such as rural premises used for agricultural purposes, may be vacant or undeveloped land. Forested and wilderness areas are examples of property that are located away from major highway arteries and secondary roads. Some of this land isn't cultivated and provides food and shelter for grazing animals. These areas are harder to see and, therefore, monitor. The owner may not be able to see a great deal of his or her land.

An owner cannot simply post warning signs and assume that he is absolved from all liability if someone were to be injured. Warnings of possible risks do not effectively protect people from dangerous situations. Liability is generally defined as responsibility under the law. So if a person or a company is responsible or partially responsible for someone else's injury, they can be held liable in a court of law. I believe that we must be careful when we introduce laws that try to pin down liability, but this bill deals with situations where someone gets injured as a result of their own actions.

The different types of property defined in Bill 208 are excellent terrain for recreation users. Sometimes recreation users have the courtesy to ask permission before traveling on someone's property, but these users mustn't assume that permission absolves them of personal responsibility. I think it's important to clear up the difference between granting permission to enter onto someone's land and ensuring that the land is safe for the user under any or all possible uses. As a result of this growing concern landowners and land occupiers are becoming more reluctant to let recreational users on their land because of the growing threat of liability. Mr. Speaker, who can really blame them?

I think it's unfortunate that this bill has to be debated in this Assembly. It's unfortunate when some recreation users try to blame their accident and their injuries on the landowners and land occupiers, but we live in a society that increasingly allows people to point the finger at someone else rather than take responsibility for their own actions. It's unfortunate that laws must be made to attempt to define common sense and preserve the tradition of a community like that which exists in rural Alberta. This moves Alberta away from the philosophy of looking after your neighbour.

It is also unfortunate that farmers, ranchers, and landowners and occupiers are growing more and more reluctant to let these recreational users use their property. I know that landowners themselves enjoy the outdoors but at the same time cannot justify the risk to themselves of someone blaming them for injuries caused on their property. This bill helps to define who's responsible and when liability falls on the landowner or land occupier. This Assembly is in a good position to help towards resolving these issues by clearly defining who is at fault. Bill 208 attempts to reduce liability on landowners and occupiers regarding injuries that may occur on their property.

I think it's obvious that landowners, occupiers, and recreational users must each accept a reasonable level of responsibility. Visitors must understand that they may not be familiar with the land and should exercise caution. It should also be obvious that landowners ensure that their property is reasonably safe for users or, for that matter, members of their own family before they grant permission and give appropriate caution to those who are granted permission. Mr. Speaker, there's a long list of obstacles that could easily cause injury if a person were not too careful. Gravel pits, old barbed wire fences, dugouts, and snow-covered bails are only a few examples of potential hazards, all of which, of course, are manmade. They are commonly found on the land as defined in Bill 208.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's history is filled with instances of selfless acts and wonderful generosity. Twelve-Foot Davis used to leave his outposts unmanned and unlocked. People traveling by his property could come and go as they wished and could take any supplies they needed. Most of the time people would repay their debt the next time they saw him. Both Davis and the customer accepted the honour system and understood the meaning of goodwill.

I realize that Twelve-Foot Davis may be Alberta folklore and his legacy may be embellished a little bit over time, but I still feel that it does speak to the spirit of the community of the day, and it's sad that that spirit of community that used to be so common in rural Alberta is becoming a thing of the past and is threatened. One only has to visit the remains of the monument of Twelve-Foot Davis near Peace River to understand how far we have fallen. His vandalized monument is a fitting symbol to the level of importance that some people place on other people's property.

Mr. Speaker, some may say that I'm being melodramatic, that things aren't really that bad, but constituents in my riding have shown me pictures of land that has been damaged by frequent use of quads, four-wheel drives, and dirt bike recreation users, and I have those pictures in my office for anyone who'd care to see them. The damaged land is an investment and very important to the family farm, ranch, or acreage, but the reality is that too many people fail to respect the property of others, and when accidents occur, the common reaction is to seek legal advice. Take a look at the Edmonton yellow telephone list to see how many injury lawyers and firms are listed. I counted 69 pages of them. Then look and see how many pages there are for doctors or accountants.

Is it a landowners' fault if someone is riding an ATV and fails to negotiate a dugout or veers off a recreation trail and drives into a barbed wire fence? But some victims now take advantage of a potentially lucrative legal opportunity. Bill 208 attempts to draw a more distinguishable line between recklessness and liability. This bill, if passed, would make liability less onerous to the landowner or occupier. Landowners and occupiers are responsible for their property, but they cannot reasonably control or monitor their property at all times.

This bill, then, Mr. Speaker, is a step in the right direction to strengthen the proud spirit of community life in rural Alberta. I encourage all members of this Assembly to support Bill 208. Congratulations to the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul for bringing this forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find that these debates when everybody gets involved are some of the most interesting in the Legislature. This bill, although in some ways a simple bill, addresses some genuine dilemmas.

As I read the bill and considered it, it brought back various thoughts and memories for me. For example, when it addresses under section 2(6.1)(2)(a)(ii) “vacant or undeveloped premises” and access to those, it made me think back to a time when I was a child spending time on a very popular holiday beach in Alberta. Near that beach, just up the hill behind the beach, was an abandoned house sitting on several acres of land. As kids will be kids, it wasn't uncommon for us to leave the beach and go up the trail to the top of the hill and explore this haunted house. There were no signs, no warnings about trespassing. There were no fences or gates or anything. But we'd go in, and of course it was a great adventure. The floors were rotten, and we'd try not to break through the floors and try to chase the mice and see if we could climb the stairs without falling through.

None of us ever got injured, but it's interesting to wonder: who was really responsible there? Was it the landowner who left this ruined old home wide open for kids to explore without any signage at all? Was it the kids? Was it us? Were we as probably 10 or 11 or 12 year olds entirely responsible for getting enticed into this situation? Was it our parents? Who was responsible? In some ways the question of responsibility is really what is at the core of this bill. In fact, I would say not in some ways; I'd say that that's exactly what's at the core of this bill.

I also reflect back on a more recent experience I had in Great Britain and which I've alluded to a couple of times previously in the Assembly on the amazing system of walking trails there are across Great Britain. There's a completely different culture to walking trails here than there is in Britain. In Britain the public rights-of-way to historic walking trails are guaranteed even if those trails go right through farmers' fields, through barnyards, through people's front yards and out their backyards. Whatever the ownership may be, as long as those trails are recognized as historic trails and are walked at least once every five years, then there is complete public access.

I don't know what the liability is. I'm sure the British have had to address it because these trails are heavily, heavily used by walkers and hikers in Great Britain, and undoubtedly there are injuries, and undoubtedly questions of liability come up there.

Here we have such a different culture. Our waterways are often freely accessible. We can canoe down a river through somebody's farm or ranch or whatever, and we have free access to the river. But once we get off the water and start hiking through a farmer's field, suddenly we are trespassing unless, of course, we have permission.

The issues here are ones of weighing who is responsible for what, and I'm inclined to agree with the thrust of this bill, which is to lighten the burden of liability and responsibility carried by the landowner and to shift it to the land user. If the land user, the recreational user has permission to visit the land, that should not free them of responsibility for good sense and self-preservation as it were. So the intent of this bill is to open up access to our lands, to make landowners feel less nervous, less intimidated about allowing recreational use of their land and to reduce the penalty they may pay through quite possibly no fault of their own.

So I am inclined at this point to support Bill 208. I'll be listening carefully to debate, and I hope that somebody in here is going to argue against the bill so that I can get a good feel for why I might want to consider changing my view. But as it is right now, I'm convinced that this bill makes good, reasonable sense, and I expect to support it.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to be able to rise and speak, actually, in favour of the Occupiers' Liability Amendment Act, 2003. Sorry to the opposition; I'm going to be in favour of this one.

I would like to thank my colleague the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul for bringing this idea forward. He worked very hard on the recreation trails to try and come up with what some of the issues were. Part of what's in this bill addresses some of the concerns of landowners particularly in my area, where the causeway landowners group is that opposes the trails that our colleague across the way so eloquently spoke about in Britain. I'm sure that in Britain, where there are 60 million people, maybe they are well used and perhaps even well respected. Out here there are areas where the respect level may not be quite so high, and the risk to farms and agriculture can be fairly high.

What I like about this bill is that it does something that the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act doesn't do, and that is that it comes into force upon being passed as opposed to proclamation or royal assent. So that's a good thing. It saves us from having it sit on the books for another two or three years while we think about it some more.

What I wanted to talk about was the reductions to landowners' and occupiers' liability while ensuring at the same time that they must not be negligent with regard to allowing people onto their land. Owners and occupiers will still be liable if they display reckless or willful conduct in areas where it could hurt people. I think that that's a wise move, Mr. Speaker. On the other hand, in normal farm situations or dangers, things like barbed wire fences or dugouts and even gopher holes would not be a cause for concern for owners and occupiers to be held liable for as they have been at risk of in the past.

As well, Bill 208 ensures that it will be proclaimed by an agreed date rather than on proclamation, as I mentioned earlier, and 208 will open up private land for recreational use if the landowner or occupier so chooses. Currently landowners are very reluctant to allow recreational users access to their private land because of frivolous lawsuits, something that has become much more prevalent in our society today.

Bill 208 sets out to accomplish something more than the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act. The ag statutes amendment act added a section to the Occupiers' Liability Act which clarified the responsibility for recreational users on agricultural land; however, that legislation has yet to be proclaimed. By bringing this bill forward, we can deal with that now. Bill 208 not only does what the ADSAA attempted to do but goes a step further by including other forms of private land, Mr. Speaker, such as golf courses when they're not being used as golf courses or recreational trails and not just specifically with regard to agricultural land.

We in Alberta are behind in liability legislation. British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and Prince Edward Island all have some sort of legislation that specifically outlines who is responsible for something when accidents occur specific to recreational users being on agricultural land. In British Columbia the legislation allows for entrants to a premise to willingly accept risks on their own behalf. It also outlines the responsibility of individuals who enter the property for recreational use. There are two conditions that would apply to this. The first is that the owner or occupier of the premises must receive no compensation for the entry or activity of the recreational user, and second, the owner or occupier of the premises must not provide the person with accommodation while they're on those premises.

Saskatchewan has adopted a completely unique approach to this situation. They have two different acts which govern hunters and snowmobilers. The Snowmobile Act, for example, contains a section that limits the liability of landowners for any injury, loss, or damage suffered as a result of or stemming from a person using a snowmobile while on their land. Manitoba has legislation that is similar to Alberta's legislation, but it sets out specific rules for recreational users who use the land for off-road vehicles. This then outlines the responsibilities for both the user and the owner. Ontario legislation contains a separate section that rules that trespassers and recreational users are assumed to have willingly assumed all risks upon entering the premises.

I believe that my colleague has tried to come up with a moderate proposal, Mr. Speaker, that will certainly help landowners deal with frivolous lawsuits and hopefully, on the other side, help recreational users know what is actually appropriate.

An example I wanted to give you is that in Beiseker I have a family that lives on a farm who constantly feel that they are being harassed by people coming onto their private land. They have no-trespassing signs up because they have a lot of large equipment in this one specific area of their farm. The sign gets knocked down, and the comments that are always being made to them are: if somebody gets hurt on your land, they're going to be liable. Our Occupiers' Liability Act has been woefully negligent in not being able to help these people. Even though I might have liked it to be a bit tougher than this, I think that there are some really good things in this bill, and I hope that it will go forward and actually pass and come into force for all Albertans.

When we were farming up in Athabasca years ago, people wanted to use our land for snowmobile use. We had no objection to their coming in and using it except for the fact that they were cutting our fences all the time. If you end up with 20 or 30 head of cattle on a 20,000 acre grazing lease that you can't find, it's not a really good day. On the flip side of owners of land being responsible, I think that recreational users of land also have to be responsible. There needs to be quid pro quo. If they're going to break the rules, they need to pay the price. If a farmer is good enough to let somebody use their land, they should not have to be afraid of lawsuits coming after them.

Anyway, once again to my colleague, congratulations on bringing this forward, and I hope that we're able to get it through this session. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand today and speak in favour of Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003. The intent of this bill sponsored by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul is to amend the Occupiers' Liability Act. The amendment would reduce the burden of legal liability on landowners and occupiers with regard to recreational users on their land.

With the passage of this bill liability concerns for farmers, ranchers, and land occupiers would be reduced to the same level that is owed trespassers, and therefore they may be more disposed to allow recreational users on their land. This bill offers the opportunity and option of owners and occupiers to make accessible their land to recreational users.

Mr. Speaker, land can often serve multiple purposes. In addition to agricultural functions much of Alberta's land may also be used during the summer months for a wide range of activities including horseback riding, hunting, fishing, and hiking. Many Albertans enjoy other outdoor pursuits such as using all-terrain vehicles or dirt bikes. The winter months often breathe a new life into Alberta's landscape. Instead of lying dormant during the months when crops can't grow and livestock are unable to graze, Alberta's vast fields are used for winter activities including skiing and snowmobiling.

Unfortunately, liability concerns often curb such activity and prevent many Albertans from participating in recreational pursuits. Many Alberta landowners are becoming less and less likely to allow others onto their property as the threat of litigation increases. While Alberta was the first province in Canada to implement an Occupiers' Liability Act, our current act is in need of an update. The act is often confusing, especially pertaining to the issue of liability, and because it does not place an adequate amount of responsibility on recreational users, it promotes litigation.

Mr. Speaker, the reading of the Occupiers' Liability Act often causes confusion for both landowners and recreational users regarding the issue of liability. Currently the act makes a distinction between visitors and trespassers and the duties that are owed them, stating that visitors are entitled to a common duty of care on the part of the occupier. Trespassers are not owed a duty of care by the occupier, but the occupier is liable for damages for death or injury to a trespasser that results from an occupier's willful or reckless conduct.

When the act elaborates on this common duty of care owed to visitors, it states that the occupier must "take such care as in all the circumstances of the case is reasonable to see that the visitor will be reasonably safe in using the premises." The problem is that the act does not explicitly offer any guidelines as to what constitutes the reasonable care to which visitors are entitled. Nor does it shed any further light on the term "reasonably safe." This leaves this portion of the act open to interpretation, and in the courtroom common sense does not always prevail.

Bill 208 offers a solution to the confusion. It seeks to shift the balance of responsibility somewhat and make recreational users more accountable for their own actions.

The proposed amendment to the act does not mean that landowners and occupiers will have no responsibility to those they grant permission to use their lands. Landowners will still be liable for reckless or willful conduct that results in injury or death. Farmers, ranchers, and landowners should still ensure that their land is safe for recreational purposes if they allow people to use their premises, but recreational users will be required to take more responsibility for their own actions.

The ramifications of Bill 208 will largely be seen in our rural communities as there is simply more open land in these areas. Rural residents have a special sense of community, Mr. Speaker. Nobody wants to be thought of as a bad neighbour, but the current legislation often makes some landowners wary of allowing recreational users on their property. This is largely due to the current risk of liability. The fear of possible litigation has limited the access of Alberta's beautiful lands to recreational users and visitors.

Often the areas that will be most affected by the bill can appear to be dangerous to those unfamiliar with agricultural practices. Farms and fields have many inherent hazards. Farm equipment is often left out in the field. Barbed wire fences are used to fence in cattle. Livestock may pose a threat to recreational users. These are all common occurrences on agricultural lands such as farms and ranches. Should Alberta's farmers and ranchers remain liable for accidents that could happen under conditions such as these, which, while appearing dangerous, are commonplace on most farms? Should landowners and occupiers be held liable for pre-existing natural conditions such as swamps, gullies, trees, or cliffs? Even something as seemingly harmless as a gopher hole or a fallen tree could cause an injury. Should they be held liable for changes in the weather such as heavy snowfalls or intense rainstorms, which may lead to an accident on their property?

The proposed bill would remove much of this unnecessary burden on landowners and make it easier for Albertans to let others access their lands if they so choose. By shifting more responsibility to recreational users, there will be less hesitation to allow their property to be used for recreational purposes.

This means that Alberta's lands could be better enjoyed all year round. These lands could be used by individuals, friends, and families for activities ranging from hiking or bird-watching to using all-terrain vehicles. A land occupier will be more likely to allow families to partake in walks across his or her land if there is no danger of a potential lawsuit if one of the children is injured by tripping over an exposed tree root. Similarly, farmers may be more likely to allow users of snowmobiles to enjoy their land if they won't be held liable for injuries. Such injury could be caused if a snowmobile operator drives his or her sled into farm equipment or dips in the ground camouflaged by a recent snowfall, to name just one example.

While these are merely hypothetical examples, Mr. Speaker, they are not out of line with reality. In today's increasingly litigious society these concerns and hundreds like them are very real to occupiers of Alberta's rural lands. It is regrettable that lawmakers are being called upon to promote common sense, but it is becoming more and more necessary.

Under the current legislation when land occupiers do not grant recreational users permission to use their land, they often use the land anyway, becoming trespassers. This is where the ramifications of Bill 208 would extend beyond liability issues. This bill will enhance safety as the landowner will be more likely to know who is on his property and what activities are transpiring if he or she grants permissions to users. If landowners know who is on their property and what they are doing, it will be easier for them to maintain safety on their property. They will be better able to co-ordinate activities on their land to prevent incompatible activities such as hunting and bird-watching or skiing and skidooring from taking place at the same time. Land occupiers will also have an easier time keeping their land safe and hazard free if they are aware of recreational users on their property.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to highlight another piece of legislation that addresses the issue of liability: Bill 31, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 1999. Bill 31 was passed in '99 but has yet to be proclaimed. This act included an amendment to the Occupiers' Liability Act which would allow recreational users permitted onto agricultural dispositions by disposition holders for recreational purposes the same duty as is owed a trespasser and not the duty of care previously owed in the act.

Bill 208 would essentially take the same approach that the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act took to public lands by reducing the liability owed to recreational users by private landowners. Bill 208 is currently written to apply to agricultural land, deeded land, community pastures, leased land, recreational trails, and golf courses when not open for playing. In addition, Bill 208 would ensure that this amendment would be proclaimed by an agreed date rather than by proclamation by Royal Assent, where it has stayed for over three years.

Mr. Speaker, it seems like almost every rural Albertan has a story or has a neighbour with a story involving recreational users and the accidents on their land. There is an increasing fear of litigation among these people. It would be a real shame if lawsuits stopped people from enjoying Alberta's lands. Bill 208 offers one solution to this problem, a fair solution that would strike a better balance of responsibility between landowners, farmers, ranchers, and recreational users, and for this reason I support this initiative and encourage all of my colleagues to vote in favour of Bill 208.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to join the debate speaking in favour of Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003.

To begin with, I'd like to offer my congratulations to my colleague, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. This is a bill that makes a lot of sense. It offers concrete results for all Albertans. Mr. Speaker, as an outdoor person myself, I enjoy the splendor of Alberta's natural setting. Just like many other Albertans, myself and my family members do skiing in the winter, hiking and fishing in the summer, and relate well to the subject of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, as I was preparing to make these remarks, it occurred to me that we live in an age where we seem a little bit too prone to abdicate responsibility for our own actions. There appears to be a lot of blame to go around, and it is never very difficult to find someone who's an unwilling victim of almost any kind of unpleasantry or nuisance. The problem as I see it is that in the not too distant past there were not issues where there was a need to involve others. Nowadays, however, we see or hear about them almost every day.

We've all heard about people suing fast-food restaurants for spilling coffee on themselves or suing airlines for multimillion dollar amounts for turbulence in the air and lost pets or other similar things, more or less outrageous cases. I'm sure that in some of these cases very real pain was experienced by the plaintiffs. However, what makes these cases stand out, at least to my way of thinking, is the lack of personal responsibility, the urge to blame others and take legal action against what are essentially matters of personal conduct rather than instances of negligence. Even where there is evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants, how can astronomical sums of money be seen as proper compensation for what most often is a temporary imposition or inconvenience?

Mr. Speaker, I mention this because I see Bill 208 as having the potential to spare Albertans similarly frivolous lawsuits and needless burden on the legal system. Bill 208, as far as I can see, would place personal responsibility squarely where it belongs and allow the courts to handle the concerns of people whose lives have been truly affected by misdeeds and negligence.

With this in mind I will freely admit that I was surprised to learn that here in Alberta landowners can be held liable for events where recreational land users who have sought and been granted permission to access the property sustained injury to themselves or damage to their vehicle. Quite frankly, this makes little sense to me. So I started thinking. Imagine, for instance, that a person happened to enjoy cross-country skiing in the wintertime. This is a popular spare-time activity for quite a number of Albertans and for many people in other parts of the world where the winter is especially enjoyable.

In any event, here in Alberta most public trails are groomed to accommodate cross-country skiers in the winter, but as it happens, not all trails lead to where the skiers may want to go. So they may seek permission from landowners to drive across their fields. With the snow cover being several feet deep, there is no risk of damage to the crops, so there's no discernible harm expected from traversing an otherwise frozen field. It is a matter of common courtesy, I may say, to inquire with the landowner if he or she will give his or her permission for a skier to cross the property. This is to be expected. Barring some particular pressing circumstances or conditions, one might also expect that the request will be granted.

Now, as the law currently reads and is applied, granting permission can prove to have some rather unwelcome consequences if the skier has an accident and if any skiing equipment is damaged. If that happens and the skiers are so inclined, the landowner can be held liable for injuries and damages and associated costs. This, Mr. Speaker, is not right. Here we have a landowner who upon request grants permission to enter his or her land for recreational use, and this visitor can turn around and sue him or her. Did they ever think about the old saying: don't bite the hand that feeds you? While this example is not based on an actual event, it is a realistic example of something that can actually happen in our province today.

Mr. Speaker, I'm a firm believer in personal responsibility. There is, however, a trend in our society today to blame others for what happens to us. This is something that I find very disturbing. One of the reasons I'm so proud to be an Albertan is that this province and this government have emphasized and continue to emphasize the importance of personal responsibility. Yes, the government will provide assistance where necessary and where it is warranted to help Albertans to improve their lives, but I do not believe that this is such a situation.

As it is written now, Mr. Speaker, the Occupiers' Liability Act holds that the landowners have the responsibility "to take such care as in all the circumstances of the case is reasonable to see that the visitor will be reasonably safe in using the premises for the purposes for which [he] is invited or permitted . . . to be there." Wow. As I see it, the section I just quoted can be applied so broadly and arbitrarily that landowners could be held liable for just about anything that happens to the users. Even if the charges filed lack merit, to be taken to court is no picnic. It's not an experience anyone voluntarily seeks.

In the long run, therefore, I see landowners becoming increasingly reluctant to let recreational users access their land, whether it is a matter of agricultural land, deeded land, leased land, or community pastures. The risk will be too great, and because of that I think the willingness to give others permission to use the land will decrease. This is, of course, an unfortunate development, but I don't think you can blame anyone for choosing to play it safe when the alternative is a very real possibility of going to court for being generous.

Mr. Speaker, as I alluded to a moment ago, I see this bill as being consistent with so much that Alberta stands for and has stood for historically. I was pleased to learn that our colleagues in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and Prince Edward Island have all passed laws that reduce rural landowners' and occupiers' liability where the land is being used for recreational purposes.

The great poet Robert Frost in his famous poem, Mending Wall, made immortal the following phrase: "Good fences make good neighbors." I think the sentiment that the phrase expresses applies to the purpose of Bill 208. No, Mr. Speaker, the fences do not isolate us from one another. Rather, what they do is decrease the confusion, letting us know what belongs to whom and what boundaries we must respect. By respecting the boundaries, the fences will be markers only, and we will be able to pass through them rather than be kept out. This is what Bill 208 does. It will decrease confusion surrounding liability, and perhaps even more importantly, it will make clear where personal responsibility begins and where it ends. This will not only make us good neighbours but better Albertans.

For this very reason, Mr. Speaker, I support Bill 208 and encourage all my colleagues to do so. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul to close the debate.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe the merits of the bill have been raised, and I want to thank all hon. members for their comments and support this afternoon. I would also like to thank the other individuals that helped mold this philosophical idea into a bill that you see before you today.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of this bill is to reduce liability for landowners and occupiers, making lands more accessible for Albertans to enjoy outdoor recreational activities. This bill would provide landowners and occupiers the ease of allowing recreational visitors on the land without the worry of potential lawsuits. I would like to comment to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. He did have some questions, but to compliment him, I would suggest that you answered him in the final part of your presentation. I think he does understand the point that the bill does potentially say that there needs to be a transfer of liability from the landowner to the recreational user.

Mr. Speaker, I believe very strongly in the purpose of this bill and in the advantages and benefits that will stem from making specific areas of Alberta more accessible and easily approachable to visitors for recreational activities without the fear of excess liability for landowners or occupiers.

Thank you once again to everyone for their participation in the debate and the discussion of Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act.

Mr. Speaker, I now move that the question be put. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a second time]

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not that often I identify a relative in public, but I have to because I'm sure you're all wondering who came and watched us this afternoon. Dave moved to Alberta 28 years ago and never went back, just another example that when you do things right, they will come. My cousin David Marsh.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn to reassemble at 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:19 p.m.]

Association for Former MLAs

511. Mr. Johnson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly institute an all-party former members' association of the Legislative Assembly to focus on the interests of the membership and the good of parliamentary precinct, history, and process.

[Debate adjourned May 12: Mr. Maskell speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to rise today and offer some of my comments with regard to Motion 511, sponsored by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. The purpose of Motion 511 is to create an all-party former members' association whose purpose would be to promote and provide support for the parliamentary system of governance here in Alberta and also in the rest of Canada. I believe that creating an association made up of former Members of the Legislative Assembly would be a highly important and valuable development which would not only benefit former members but all Albertans as well.

I say this for two reasons. My primary motivation behind supporting this motion has to do with the fact that a former members' association would be a perfect organization for encouraging and educating the general public and especially our young people about our parliamentary system and how it works in real life. Former Members of the Legislative Assembly are in an ideal position to share this kind of knowledge because unlike active MLAs they have more time to dedicate to this cause and they have the luxury of space to properly analyze and reflect on our system of governance. As a result, former members would be able to visit high schools and various university campuses and share their experiences with the students and especially those who are interested in pursuing a career in politics. I believe that it is imperative that our youth have access to this kind of information because whereas a textbook can teach them about the basic principles of our parliamentary system of government, a former parliamentarian can offer them invaluable insight into how the system really operates when you add the human factor into the equation.

My second motivation for supporting Motion 511, Madam Speaker, is because I believe that many Albertans are truly disengaged and detached from the political developments occurring in our province and from the folks who make these developments happen. Some Albertans become detached to the point where their lack of understanding of our system of governance and the way important political decisions are made translates into a lack of trust in elected officials. This is a worrisome trend. An organization such as the one proposed in Motion 511 could act as a remedy to this problem. By having more time than active MLAs, former members would be in a position to visit our province's communities, hold public meetings and information sessions, all of which would be designed to offer firsthand insight into how our political system works and how the decisions affecting Albertans are made.

I sincerely believe that by being proactive and going into our communities and neighbourhoods, former MLAs would be providing Albertans with a service that active members are unable to do. By sharing their knowledge and experiences as representatives of the public, former members would not only be helping many Albertans understand the process of political decision-making, but they would also be encouraging them to get involved and become a part of the system and the solution. I'm sure that everyone in this House would agree that serving the public is a privilege, an honour, and a very rewarding experience. The former members' association would permit us to serve and work directly with the public in a different and equally rewarding setting after our careers as members of this House are completed.

As I've said earlier, Madam Speaker, creating an association made up of former Members of this Legislative Assembly would be highly beneficial to our province's high school and university students. One of the main functions of the association could be to give former MLAs the opportunity to visit and hold sessions with students regarding matters relating to our system of government. Such conferences would give former members the opportunity to share with students, especially those interested in political matters, their life stories, experiences, and their view of how our government works and how political decisions are made in Alberta. Since the members who would take part in these visits would have undoubtedly come from different political parties, they would be able to present the future leaders of our province with diverse points of view and differing outlooks on how the parliamentary system operates and what are some of the leading issues that affect it every day.

As I have said before, books provide students with only a certain degree of understanding when it comes to the matters relating to governance. By this, Madam Speaker, I am referring to the difference between the theory and application. By having former MLAs come to their schools and their campuses, students will have an opportunity to see a human side to politics, which books sometimes cannot effectively portray.

The human factor is an important aspect of any system of government, especially a parliamentary democracy. Knowing how to relate to and interact with people is one of the most important skills for any person to have, especially one that serves as a representative of the general public. In most cases some of the best politicians are those who understand people and human nature and who are able to utilize this skill in order to benefit their province and their country.

By having former MLAs speak at their school or on their campus grounds, our students could be getting an unbiased and a well-rounded understanding of how their provincial representatives come together to govern effectively and in the interests of their constituents and the province as a whole. Seeing how the chain of communication between the constituency and the House, the Premier, and various departmental offices works would be invaluable knowledge to our younger generation, who we will rely on as the future leaders of Alberta. Equipped with a true and candid understanding of how our parliamentary system of government works in real life, our young people will not only be equipped with the necessary tools that they need to lead our province into the future but also to continue to improve upon our current system.

Apart from offering important insight into some of the vital mechanisms of our democratic institutions, the visits of former Members of the Legislative Assembly to high school and university campuses will be important because such visits could inspire students, especially those interested in subjects such as political science, to pursue related government and public service careers. By having taken the long road to public office, former parliamentarians would have the intimate knowledge of what skills, credentials, and kind of knowledge and determination is required in order for one to attain a position within the public service. Madam Speaker, the Alberta government is always in need of young, intelligent, and outgoing individuals. I believe that having former MLAs visit schools and universities and sharing their experiences as representatives would inspire many ambitious young men and women to pursue rewarding careers in the public service sector.

Campus visits of this nature, Madam Speaker, are not a newly developed idea. Such organized visits by former public representatives take place in a number of jurisdictions, most commonly in the United States. The United States Association of Former Members of Congress was created in 1970 in order to foster public understanding of the function and the role that Congress plays within the American system of government. The association has a very effective program in place called the Congress to campus program. Congress to campus is designed to engage and educate young American students about the various aspects of the U.S. political system and how they can participate in making a difference. Over the years the program has received some excellent reviews, and the campus visits by former members of Congress continue to take place all around the country.

I believe that by having an organization such as the former members' association institute a similar program here in Alberta, we would be making sure that our youth become more educated about the role of this Legislature and some of the other branches of our government. Apart from giving our youth invaluable insight into our parliamentary system of governance and providing them with the incentive and inspiration to pursue a career in public service, an organization such as the former members' association would also serve to foster further understanding of our parliamentary system of government among the general population. Having former MLAs visit our province's communities and interact with ordinary Albertans, especially those who don't quite understand how the system works, would help many of them overcome the sense of isolation and disconnectedness from the issues and decisions that are made in this House.

By helping Albertans understand the various aspects of parliamentary democracy and encouraging them to utilize and become part of the process, we would not only be guaranteeing the inclusive nature of our political system, but we'd also be addressing some important issues such as low voter turnout and voter apathy. History, Madam Speaker, has proven time and time again that a politically active and educated and vibrant electorate produces skilled, responsible, and competent public servants. I believe that by creating a former members' association, we would be making sure that this trend continues in Alberta well into the future.

I, therefore, urge all of my colleagues to support our parliamentary system and all of its democratic institutions by voting in favour of Motion 511. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I am anxious to participate in the debate this evening on Motion 511 to establish a former MLA association, and the motion reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly institute an all-party former members' association of the Legislative Assembly to focus on the interests of the membership and the good of parliamentary precinct, history, and process.

Now, as I understand it, there's nothing new or startling or hidden in this particular motion which should concern us. The province of British Columbia, for instance, has established an association. The B.C. act lays out that the association, which was once under the Society Act of that province, now be a stand-alone entity.

It's interesting that we would be debating this particular motion in this particular Assembly when, in my view, we have not been particularly interested to date, Madam Speaker, in promoting good parliamentary practices. For instance, there are some committees of the sitting members of this Assembly that have not met in the time I've been in this Assembly. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is more of a historian on these committees than I, but certainly there are some committees, it has been reported, that have not sat for close to 10 years, if not 12 years. Then sometimes committees, if there are too many cobwebs surrounding their structure, are abolished.

We have a motion coming up later on this evening to discuss an all-party committee of this Legislative Assembly to look at the entire insurance industry in this province, and hopefully that one will be passed. We could certainly have an all-party committee of this Assembly to look at electricity deregulation and the consequences of that electricity deregulation and natural gas deregulation as well, but I'm not holding my breath waiting for that to happen. If I did, I might turn Tory blue, and then I would have the same policy void as this Conservative government has with electricity deregulation. Certainly, whenever one looks at electricity deregulation, it's obvious there has been oxygen deprivation in the committee rooms where they have discussed this.

There are many retired members, Madam Speaker, from this Legislative Assembly that have been very, very distinguished not only in their careers here but after they have left. [interjection] Someone over there said that there would be seven more, but my greatest insurance, if you want to talk about insurance against political defeat, is keep up with those good electricity deregulation policies, keep up with this insurance policy that does not solve any of the problems of the consumers. I'm not going to get into Spiro Agnew and Richard Nixon here, but certainly the policies that have been articulated by this government recently are not going over very well with the voters of this province.

Dr. Taft: Would Spiro Agnew be an honorary member of this club?

Mr. MacDonald: Spiro Agnew, perhaps, could be an honorary member of this club. Maybe we could have honorary members of this club.

There have been some members of this Assembly, Madam Speaker, that have been very distinguished in their careers in this Assembly and certainly after they have left this Assembly. I don't think that at this time, when you consider the parliamentary practices, the erosion of democracy as we see it in Alberta, this is a necessary motion, and I would urge all hon. members to just say no to this.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, am very pleased to join this debate on Motion 511, which was put forward by my friend and colleague from Wetaskiwin-Camrose. I can understand why my colleague did put forward this motion to the Legislature. It's a very worthwhile motion. I couldn't disagree more with the former speaker.

I know that this past July the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose and myself had the privilege of attending the Canadian Parliamentary Association conference in Victoria, British Columbia. We attended that conference on behalf of our hon. Speaker, the Member for Barrhead-Westlock, along with my colleagues in the Legislature here this evening: the members for Drayton Valley-Calmor, Edmonton-Manning, as well as Edmonton-Norwood and also, yes, a member that is from the opposition, Madam Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. It was all just members from the Legislature attending a conference with other members from Legislatures across this country, and we learned a great deal from one another. [interjection] I did. I mentioned my colleagues, yes, and that we attended along with you, hon. member.

Madam Speaker, what I did learn at this conference is that parliamentary associations across the country approach issues in a much different way than we do here in Alberta, yet we have many similarities. As I said, there were members from all areas, like from the opposition and from the ruling government.

I found it very interesting about the different processes that were in place. For example, in the province of Alberta we have the privilege as backbenchers of putting forward bills before the Assembly. Previous to our current Premier backbenchers never did have a bill pass second reading in the Assembly. Now we have a number of bills. We had one today, Madam Speaker, that was passed in the Legislature, by my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo. It went through all readings of the Assembly, received third reading today, and was passed unanimously. That did not happen 12 years ago in the Assembly, for example.

So, yes, Alberta is much different than other areas of our nation, but also we would have that privilege through this motion. I don't mean to sound redundant as to what was put forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark, but just as he had mentioned in his debate, we would have the privilege of sharing our experiences with our young people in our schools and in our universities.

I think that is a very important concept that this motion is putting forward. It's a vision that my colleague has in putting forward this motion: that we have a former members' association. Just to read the motion once again to the Assembly, it's resolving that the Legislative Assembly institute an all-party former members' association of the Legislative Assembly to focus on the interests of the membership and the good of parliamentary precinct, history, and process.

I think, quite frankly, that's wonderful. Hon. member, I do hope that this motion that you've put before the Assembly passes this evening. I hope that we all support this motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a privilege to address you as Madam Speaker with the last few seconds here.

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead, hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you. I'd like to shed some light and speak this evening in favour of this motion to establish an association made up of former members of this Assembly. Madam Speaker, one of the biggest challenges the government faces is how to maintain and improve communication between itself and the general public. In many instances this communication link has been poor because the average voter tends to know very little about the political system practised by this country, province, and city.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

This lack of understanding has been particularly responsible for the lack of political involvement practised by the majority of constituents. As a result, most of the electorate gets politically involved only during the times of general elections. However, in many cases the turnout is so poor that a good third of the populace can be considered to be completely politically inactive.

In Alberta, Mr. Speaker, the situation could not be more critical, but it can definitely be improved. Voter apathy and low turnout are potential problems in Alberta that have to be redeemed. I believe that this problem can be fixed if this House commits itself to ensure that the average Albertan understands his or her role within our parliamentary system of government and how it works and how to use the system in order to voice their concerns and express their political will.

We can take a step forward toward effective accomplishments in this task, Mr. Speaker, by establishing an all-party former members' association which would assist Albertans by providing them with knowledge and understanding of how Alberta's parliamentary system is structured and of the avenues they could pursue in order to access it in an easy and effective manner. As my colleagues have previously mentioned, such an association would be made up of former members of this Assembly, and one of the roles would be to provide a nonpartisan support for our system by having former members travel to the communities and schools, universities.

Mr. Speaker, I think this would foster a good understanding, offering invaluable insight into how our system operates in the real-world setting. Visits to various urban and rural communities would undoubtedly help bridge some of the gaps between the average citizen and their elected representatives. Such events would also help Albertans gain insight into all the components that power the engine of our democracy. Visits to schools would be extremely beneficial to our students because having former members give lectures at their schools, colleges, and universities would offer them the insight that no Alberta political textbook can hope to accomplish.

Having that firsthand contact with a person who has served the people in our province will hopefully encourage our young people to further their interest in politics and even pursue a political career in this field. Our students, Mr. Speaker, will one day take over the reins from us and become the leaders of this province. I believe that it is our responsibility to ensure that we equip them with all the necessary resources and tools so they can steer Alberta down the road to success.

Mr. Speaker, as I've previously said, it's imperative that Albertans feel that they're a part of a system of governance and that without their input and involvement the system cannot operate effectively. It is important that we try to eliminate some of the negative general perceptions associated with government regardless of what political party is in power. One way of accomplishing this task is to encourage former members to educate Albertans about how demanding and rewarding the job of an MLA really is. Constituents may be interested to know that our political system is people-driven by those who express their problems and desires to do their parliamentary duties.

On the other hand, former members of the Assembly could also help explain that not all government actions and legislation are decided by elected members of the House. One such example that comes to mind is the process concerning electoral boundaries. I'm sure that many of my colleagues are aware of the fact that there is a perception among Albertans that electoral boundary adjustments and alterations are a result of government policy rather than the findings of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, even though it's stacked.

Mr. Speaker, many Albertans are still not aware of the fact that the commission is a body that conducts its business independently of government. It is a body which looks at trends such as changes in population distribution, interest of communities, and placement of geographical boundaries rather than government policy to draft its final recommendations. These recommendations are scrutinized by the government, but the legislation which emerges, by and large, is reflective of the commission's findings and recommendations. Having Albertans understand how this particular process operates may encourage them to get involved and become part of electoral boundaries decisions.

On a different note, Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite certain that many Albertans are clear on the role that our Lieutenant Governor plays within our parliamentary system of government. Some Albertans may think that her role is purely ceremonial, a part of our British heritage. Others might think that her major function is to offer greetings at special events and luncheons. However, she enjoys a far larger spectrum of responsibilities. She enjoys extraordinary powers which allow her to act and uphold the Constitution. This means that bills passed by this House do not come into effect until her office proclaims them. In certain circumstances the Lieutenant Governor reserves the right not to proclaim a particular piece of legislation if she considers it to be unconstitutional. The last time that happened in Alberta was in 1936, when the Lieutenant Governor, Hon. J.J. Bowen, did not grant royal assent to three bills because he considered them to be in violation of the Constitution. Furthermore, the Lieutenant Governor also has the power to dismiss a government and call an election in times of political crisis.

Another interesting fact regarding our parliamentary system is that a member does not have to be a cabinet minister in order to bring forward a specific piece of legislation such as a bill or motion. The system allows all members of the Assembly to bring forward legislation that can potentially turn into law. This aspect of our political system gives the Alberta electorate an unprecedented degree of political power because if they can convince their MLA to pursue a particular bill or motion, it means that the constituents play a bigger role in the affairs of this House. Mr. Speaker, I can attest to that because constituents of mine urged me to bring in legislation that runs tandem with the Speech from the Throne. One example would be Bill 210.

The only concern, Mr. Speaker, is that a large number of Albertans are just not aware of the vast political power that they possess. A former members' association could not only help Albertans realize the use of this power; it would also bridge the gap between voters and their elected officials.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that establishing a former members' association will not only ensure that our parliamentary system will continue to serve Albertans in a responsible and effective manner; it will ensure that Albertans will continue to take active roles in the political future of this province. I, therefore, urge all my colleagues to support Motion 511.

Mr. Speaker, thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me in the time remaining to rise and join the debate on Motion 511, sponsored by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, urging the Assembly to establish a nonpartisan former members' association.

It is often said that when one travels a road taken by another, they can learn a great deal about where that road leads and what to expect from those that have preceded them. There has been a very successful association, the United States Association of Former Members of Congress, and it was created in 1970, so it has over 30 years of experience that we can possibly learn from.

I just wanted to quote for you in the few minutes that I have a number of things that this association of 550 members, I believe, has done in terms of specific projects. One of the things they did in 2001 was to publish a book entitled Inside the House: Former Members Reveal How Congress Really Works. Both teachers and students have requested this book, that incorporated information that members obtained along the way, and there have been many lectures and talks given across the country. The book is a collection of essays describing a full range of topics about life in Congress from an insider's point of view.

Also, another example is that they have formed a Congress to campus program, established in 1976, and it certainly addresses several aspects of civic learning, which, I think, is so important to the young public. Again, as I think another member mentioned earlier, either singly or in pairs these retired members visit colleges, universities, and communities and speak to students. So, all in all, we have educational objectives that are being satisfied.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I regret the interruption, but, hon. member, Standing Order 8(4) provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate.

I would now invite the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose to close debate.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion 511 was introduced in the spring session, as most of you realize, so most of the debate took place some time ago. I was pleased at that time at the level of support, and of course I want to thank the speakers tonight for the support as well.

This motion is a little different than other pieces of legislation because it urges the Assembly into action rather than the Alberta government. In order to move the idea of a former members' association forward, this House will have to pass a private member's bill, which I would like to introduce in the next spring session of the Legislature. The details of how the former members' association would operate would of course be debated at that time.

I've been asked why we need this Assembly to create the association. Some have asked: what is preventing a former MLA from pursuing this on their own? Well, the simple answer is that other provinces have tried and learned that the legislating of the association adds legitimacy and direction for its members. One of the most important reasons to legislate the association is to ensure that the members and their mandate are non-partisan. I know from attending events around Alberta that there are many former MLAs who miss the honour of sitting in this House. I also know that many of them can effectively serve the public interest in advancing our parliamentary system. A former members' association would be a great opportunity for these men and women to share their experiences with Albertans, especially young Albertans in our schools and universities.

The provinces of Ontario, Quebec, B.C., and the federal Parliament have all passed legislation establishing a former members' association. It is the intent through this motion that Alberta would also benefit from such an association.

I would like to thank all members who rose in support of Motion 511, former members' association, and I hope that everyone in this House will vote in favour of Motion 511.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 511 carried]

Automobile Insurance

512. Mr. MacDonald moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to strike an all-party committee to study the rising premium rates for automobile insurance, insurance companies handpicking clients, and increasing insurance claims in the province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and present Motion 512 to the Legislative Assembly, and I would urge all members of the Assembly to consider supporting this motion, certainly, in light of the disasters that have occurred around the insurance consultation process and the fact that we now have to have not one but two bills before the Legislative Assembly to try to deal with this problem.

Alberta drivers are fed up with skyrocketing auto insurance premiums, and they realize that freezing rates after we've allowed rates to increase for three years isn't a solution. In fact, Mr. Speaker, from February 2002 to February 2003 premiums increased in this province, according to Statistics Canada, by 59 percent. The insurance industry is getting rich, and it is at the expense of the insurance consumers, and the Alberta government, as we said in the Assembly here the other day, is involved in this hit and run: hit consumers with skyrocketing premiums and run away with the insurance industry insiders and have a consultation process that does not involve the public.

Now, in the second quarter of 2003 the insurance industry reported $644 million in profits, and that was up from $110 million at the same time last year. The insurance industry's watchdog in this province is toothless. Last year the Automobile Insurance Board rubber-stamped a hundred and fifty-five of a hundred and fifty-seven proposals for rate increases. Drivers are paying higher premiums, and the insurance industry is getting more and more profit.

Certainly, we had some very good alternative solutions to make this Automobile Insurance Board more consumer friendly, so to speak. They were, again, good ideas, but they were ignored by that side of the House. Now, every time there is a rate increase, we could have a public consultation process. We could have consumers educated so that they could access a web site with the Alberta Automobile Insurance Board's proceedings on that web site, and they could be made public.

Last year the Alberta Liberal opposition proposed that an all-party committee be struck to seek out solutions to the crisis in the automobile insurance business. We did this in a letter addressed to the Premier on November 12, 2002, and this was long before other governments across the country ran into problems with private insurance and skyrocketing premiums. We certainly were ahead of the trend. We suggested that there would be some hon. members in this Assembly very capable of chairing that particular committee, but again our advice was ignored, and we see the problem that has come about.

It's a serious problem. This government has to have two bills on the Order Paper at the same time trying to deal with it. But since our request for an all-party committee was virtually ignored, the government struck the Automobile Insurance Reform Implementation Team, consisting of government MLAs and industry representatives. In fact, some of those industry representatives, it's been acknowledged, are members of Conservative constituency associations in this city.

Mr. Strang: No.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, it's true. It certainly is.

The committee at the start, including the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, dismissed the concept of moving to a public system of insurance before it even began to have any investigations. So you're eliminating a concept that has worked well in British Columbia. It has worked well in Saskatchewan. It has worked well in Manitoba. There are all different forms of public automobile insurance, but, Mr. Speaker, they're all cheaper for consumers than what we are paying in this province.

Now, a recent survey of more than 1,300 eligible Alberta voters showed that 80 percent of them believe that the actions by the provincial government would place the interests of the citizens after the interests of the insurance industry. There would be a better chance for the interests of consumers to be put first if we had an all-party committee looking at this issue with public hearings across the province. If you were to put an opposition member or maybe two or maybe even three opposition members on this committee, I think that consumers would get a much fairer shake. An all-party committee may not have to throw its hands in the air and resort to a one-year freeze on insurance premiums, but there could be viable solutions to this consumer crisis in this province because there would be consultations with everyone, not just the insurance industry.

An all-party committee certainly wouldn't have given unanimous approval to a cap on pain and suffering awards for so-called minor injuries. A telephone survey of 500 Alberta auto insurance policyholders conducted last month found that 67 percent of Albertans support the government committee's proposal to tie premium costs to driving record rather than factors such as age, gender, or marital status, but 85 percent of Albertans oppose a proposal to cap compensation for people who suffer nonpermanent injuries in motor vehicle accidents.

Decisions made by members of just one party and representatives of just one side of an issue may well have been made by just one person. Opposition MLAs were democratically elected by their constituents and represent those who may or may not have voted for them just as government MLAs are supposed to do as well. So why are the voices of some Albertans listened to while others are not? The formation of the Automobile Insurance Reform Implementation Team was so flawed that it didn't even include a consumers' advocate at the table. An all-party committee was badly needed to study the automobile insurance crisis in this province when I wrote the Premier a letter over a year ago; an all-party committee is desperately needed today still.

Even the Member for Edmonton-Calder has raised some very valid concerns, and I'm sure he's not alone in that caucus, that huge caucus.

Mr. Snelgrove: Yeah. It's a big bunch over here.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. If it gets any larger, Mr. Speaker, it's going to be the size of an elementary classroom in this province.

I don't care who comes up with the solution to stabilize automobile insurance rates just as long as someone does. I think we need to work with the consumers of this province. We can't be just asking them to dig into their pockets for more money for insurance premiums, because they're already digging into their pockets to try to pay their energy bills as a result of electricity and natural gas deregulation. They've got very little left at the end of the month as it is. We need to work to come up with a solution, and just consulting with the industry stakeholders is no longer any good.

There's a whole list of issues we could look at. There's the issue of cell phones and how that's affecting our accident rates. We could look at headrests and educate the drivers so that everyone adjusts their headrests properly. We could look at the whole issue of reinsurance costs. How is this affecting Alberta insurance consumers? We could look at the cost of privatizing our health care system and what that has done to rehabilitation costs for accident victims. There are many, many statistics available from Ontario but very few from Alberta as to what these costs are. A decade ago rehabilitation costs for accident victims were $300 million; now they're $1.5 billion.

Please vote for Motion 512. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to be able to speak to this motion brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Not that I agree with the motion, but I do like the fact that it gives me the opportunity to talk about some of the good things that the government is doing in this area.

The government has been taking on this problem for more than a year now and is entering into a phase in which we'll be able to promote solutions that benefit all drivers but especially those who operate safely and have a clean record. Later in my remarks I'll talk about our process, but first I want to make clear that nobody denies that rising auto insurance rates are a major problem, and certainly nobody in this House is blind to the negative consequences that rising rates are having for individual Albertans as well as for the province as a whole. The member does well to raise this point in his motion, but I'd like to remind the sponsoring member that it isn't fair to say that the government is lax on this issue.

For example, let's look at what this government is doing about rising premiums. Alberta Finance has proposed a benchmark entry-level premium, taking age, sex, and marital status out of the equation. Alberta Finance is putting forward a premium grid to help standardize rates. The purpose of this grid is to reward safe drivers and punish bad drivers. The differentiation between rates in Edmonton and Calgary will disappear over a three-year period. All in all, these changes indicate the government's seriousness in tackling this issue, and it certainly isn't fair to suggest, as the member across the way has suggested, that the government's process for solving the problem is tainted because it hasn't included the Official Opposition or the third party in the process.

In fact, contrary to what the member across the way would have you believe, the government's approach to automobile insurance is responsible, methodical, and fair. The conscientious way that the government under the direction of the Minister of Finance and the Member for Medicine Hat are dealing with this issue shows the people of this province that they have a government that they can trust and a government that is going to look at all different angles before coming to a conclusion. It also shows that every member in the government caucus has put forward challenging positions and questions and has had their say in shaping the policy, including 11 total hours, I believe, of debate in a standing policy committee. The conclusion members come to in this House will be the right one for all Albertans.

To illustrate this point, let me digress a little bit into the context of the motion. We have seen over the summer many provincial elections where auto insurance has become a major issue. Citizens are concerned over rising premiums; they have been for a while now. In recent elections they've shown their dissatisfaction with governments for not being able to get a handle on the issue. The outcomes of elections in other provinces, however, have not caused this government to rush willy-nilly into providing stopgap solutions that will only cause problems down the road. In fact, this government has stuck to our original plan of hammering out a good long-term solution.

The government, regardless of what the member across the way tells average Albertans, has been on top of this issue for quite a while. The Minister of Finance is engaged in a three-part process that will ensure that our auto insurance system is one that is fair, accessible, and not prohibitive in terms of cost. These steps have been taken in an apolitical environment, one in which the government can accurately assess the needs of consumers and collision victims.

In a first step Alberta Finance asked Albertans what their thoughts on the auto insurance system were in our province. The Department of Finance wanted to know where Albertans thought improvements could be made and the suggestions they had for how to change the system to make it more responsive to Albertans and more affordable for consumers, and Albertans responded. They said that there was no room for profiting from an injury. They said that they wanted the focus to be on rehabilitation from an injury, getting the claimant physically well again. They said that insurance companies – the hon. member from across the way wants to be on the committee, but he doesn't want to even listen to advice that's being shared in the House this evening.

Albertans also said that insurance companies were acting in an excessively unfair way towards consumers, especially younger consumers with clean records. Finally, they said that they wanted rates to come down, and they wanted good drivers rewarded for their good driving, not penalized with rate increases.

I might also add that under this process the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was more than welcome to send in his suggestions to the Minister of Finance for her review. That being said, the member across the way seems upset – well, actually I'm not sure he looks upset; he looks pretty relaxed. But he has said that he does want to be involved in this process in a formal way and he hasn't been invited to take part. I, frankly, don't see how his inclusion or any other opposition inclusion is going to help the situation given that he already has all the answers and given that his answers don't come from years of studying the issue and instead come from some sort of electoral expediency. Politicizing the issue doesn't help. His actions put politics ahead of good solutions for Albertans. Forgive the government if it is above that type of petty politics, Mr. Speaker.

What the government has decided to do is to pursue a strategy for long-lasting satisfaction amongst insurance consumers and providers as well as accident victims. In the meantime, rates are in the process of being frozen. The government put together a big-picture committee to study the input that Albertans gave us. Their task is to make comprehensive recommendations for changes that are inclusive of the suggestions that Albertans have made. Finally, it is this caucus's job to implement those changes.

I know that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar would love to have his fingers in the decision-making process, but I guess that's the difference between winning and losing elections. The people of Alberta returned a Progressive Conservative government to this House. In turn, they returned seven Liberals and two New Democrats. That to me is a great honour. It says that Albertans have great trust in this government. It also shows Albertans' ambivalence for the two opposition parties. From that ambivalence comes the demands from that opposition for more inclusion, for the government to implement their ideas, which voters soundly rejected in the last election.

If you ask me, the government is doing it the right way. We've gone directly to Albertans through a fair and open consultation process and are using their suggestions to find a solution. This is especially satisfying for me, Mr. Speaker, because it always gets me when the opposition argues that the government operates in secret. This is their fallback when they don't have anything of substance to say. They haven't thought the problem out. You see, unlike our opposition, who whenever there's a problem, screams for government intervention, we'd much rather take positions that are well thought out, sensible, and mindful of the big picture. The opposition has given the easy, short-term solution, but any sensible person knows that the easy, short-term solution just causes long-term problems. So I'll reiterate it once again. This government will look out for the long-term benefit of Albertans, not short-term political interest.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the cost of insurance has angered a lot of Albertans. It has angered our caucus. Albertans have expressed discontent to us, and Canadians have expressed discontent to governments across this country. But what would anger Albertans more would be if we stopped our whole process to start a new one just to appease the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I'm not willing to do that, so I will not support this motion. I urge all of my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak briefly to Motion 512, which is calling on this Assembly to urge the government to strike an all-party committee to study the rising premium rates for automobile insurance, insurance companies handpicking clients, and increasing insurance claims in the province.

The motion, Mr. Speaker, is I think asking for the right thing insofar as it goes; that is, to call for an all-party committee which should hold public hearings and study the matter. It falls short because it doesn't really talk about public auto insurance as a clear alternative that must be studied and Albertans must be consulted on as part of the hearings that such a committee would hold. The public auto insurance alternative is a real choice that must be put before Albertans. They must be consulted on it. Three provinces over the last almost 40 years have implemented public auto insurance, and experience based on this long-term practice demonstrates without doubt that public auto insurance is the cheapest, the fairest way to provide auto insurance to all drivers regardless of region, gender, class, age, and so on and so forth.

Based on their careful study of the advantages of public insurance, the Consumers' Association of Canada came out earlier this summer clearly in favour of public auto insurance. On August 27 the New Democrat opposition called on the Alberta government to put this choice of auto insurance among other choices before Albertans. The best way, of course, to put this choice before Albertans is to hold public consultations, and there's no better vehicle to do that than the all-party committee that should be struck by this Legislature, representing this Legislature and going out to Albertans and seeking as broad-based an input from Albertans as we can possibly get.

I don't know what the problem with striking an all-party committee is. It would be most representative of this Assembly, and it would certainly be welcomed by Albertans. The experience that Albertans had in my six years in this House with one all-party committee that went around this province and held public hearings has been very, very good. They welcomed this all-party committee on justice, and this all-party committee on justice took that job very seriously.

All of us worked together in a very collaborative manner regardless of our party labels and came up with a report as a result of that extensive public hearing experience that I think we are finding very useful. The government is using it now to make changes in our justice system in order to make our justice system more accessible, more sensitive to the needs of Albertans who need to seek justice and need to use the court system and the justice system in order to have their matters addressed.

Based on that alone, I don't see why this Assembly in its wisdom should not in fact proceed with the establishment of an all-party committee on an issue as important as this one. Auto insurance affects everyone in this province. Whether we are a business, whether we are individuals, whether we are families, whether we are students, whether we are seniors: everyone is affected by this. The massive rate increases in the auto insurance premiums that Albertans have been burdened with over the past couple of years call for an effective action that will prove the test of time.

We know that auto insurance has proved the test of time in three other provinces. It is true that when each of the three other provinces brought in auto insurance, it was brought in by an NDP government. No doubt about this. That alone, just because it was brought in by an NDP government, is no reason to reject it out of hand when we have an opportunity in this province to consider that as a serious choice.

There is a convergence growing in this province. Recently I took the lead in calling for auto insurance in this province. Our Liberal colleagues joined with us in this call. I think that if we held public hearings now, it's very likely that many of my colleagues sitting on the other side would also join in with us on this side of the House, and hopefully Albertans would be able to get the best possible deal on auto insurance, which is public insurance, as a result of these hearings.

Public opinion surveys indicate that more than half of drivers in the public auto insurance provinces like that particular choice whereas in private auto insurance provinces 25 percent or less of the drivers like what they are offered. So, clearly, regardless of the province in which they live, regardless of the region they are part of, when Canadians are given choices, they make right decisions. Here, I think, not to have a broad-based public hearing process organized by an all-party committee would deprive Albertans from making such a choice if they so choose.

Mr. Speaker, you think my time is up. I think I made my point. I would like to take my seat. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Actually, I'm interrupting the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona because the time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has concluded.

9:00head: Government Bills and Orders
head: Second Reading

Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 47, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2).

The amendments in this bill reduce the cigar tax rate from 183 percent of the taxable price to 95 percent of the taxable price with a minimum tax of 15 cents and a maximum tax of $5 per cigar. The cigar rate even with this reduction still represents an increase from the 2002 levels. All tobacco taxes were increased in Budget 2002. While other provinces followed suit with cigarette and loose tobacco tax rate increases, they did not do the same with cigar taxes. This amendment will better align Alberta's cigar tax rate with those in neighbouring provinces and improve the competitiveness of Alberta retailers.

In addition to decreasing the cigar tax rate, we have also addressed some administrative concerns, including the changing of definitions of tobacco products to harmonize with other provinces. Included is a specific trust account for the collection of tobacco taxes as an alternative to surety, licensing of tear tape manufacturers to assist in guarding against counterfeit marking, and provisions to extend liability for tax collected to corporate representatives where they have drained their tax funds from business.

These administrative concerns have all been discussed with the tobacco tax industry, and I urge all members to give their full support to Bill 47. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Two members rose]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was first up.

Mr. MacDonald: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar then.

Point of Order

Bills Containing Similar Provisions

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising under Beauchesne 319 and 321 in regard to Beauchesne 653. If you could clarify for me, please, I would be very grateful. I'm speaking in reference to Bill 33, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003, which has been on the Order Paper for some time under the name of the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, and also the bill introduced today, Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2).

I was discussing briefly these legislative initiatives in my remarks on Motion 512, and I thought I would have a look at them, and in light of Beauchesne 653, if it could be clarified for me, I would be very grateful as to what is the status of Bill 33 now that we have Bill 53 before the Assembly, because Bill 33 really is amendments to section 626 of the Insurance Act.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair is greatly perplexed by the question that is being asked and the continuous reference to a bill that is not in front of the Assembly. We have in the Assembly at this moment Bill 47, and you're talking about Bill 53.

Mr. MacDonald: Bills 53 and 33, Mr. Speaker. Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Neither of those bills appears to be under debate at this moment, so perhaps if you wanted to raise a point, you might when those bills are called, but they're not called at this point. The debate is on the motion for second reading of Bill 47, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2).

Mr. MacDonald: But, Mr. Speaker, I rose under Beauchesne 319, which states, "Any Member is entitled, even bound, to bring to the Speaker's immediate notice any instance of a breach of order." Also 321 would apply to this matter because after I was speaking during the debate on Motion 512, I thought I would have a closer look at bills 33 and 53. At some point in the future if I could have a clarification on this, I would be very grateful.

Beauchesne's 653 indicates that "if the bill has been given or refused a second reading, the other is not proceeded with if it contains substantially the same provisions." Now, Bill 33 contains many of the same provisions, all of the same provisions, as a matter of fact, that are in Bill 53, and that is the amendments to the current Insurance Act in section 626. If we could have a clarification of that, I would be grateful.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on these points of order that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has raised.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, on the purported point of order, Mr. Speaker, it's quite clear in 319 that a member is entitled at any time to bring to the Speaker's immediate attention any instance of a breach of order. However, there is no breach of order. We are simply debating Bill 47. If the hon. member does not recall, perhaps he should just be reminded that the government has at its prerogative to call whichever bill it wants in order to move that particular bill along, and right now we're trying to move along with the bill that has just been moved at second. If the member wishes to meet with me outside the Assembly and review that proceeding, I'd be happy to review that proceeding with him and bring him up to speed on it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. The two bills that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has referred to, 33 and 53, have not been decided at this stage. Neither of them has received approval at second reading, so I think that if you read more carefully on 653, it does say: where a decision has already been taken. A decision has not been taken on those two bills, which really doesn't relate, then, to what we're talking about now. The premise on which you're raising this question, which is presumably Beauchesne's 653, talks about: the second one can't come on if the first one has had a decision taken on it. That may be very well true, but we have not as an Assembly made a decision on either of those bills. So that doesn't trigger. In addition to that, we're actually on Bill 47, so I think that in either case, hon. member, your point of order should await at least one of those two bills that you refer to as receiving second reading before the next one goes.

I did recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, who wishes to debate Bill 47.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was a very interesting discussion we just witnessed.

So Bill 47. The minister has encouraged every member of this Assembly to support it. That's not going to happen. I hate to disappoint him, but I just find that this is a troubling bill.

Last night I found time to go to a movie with my family, and in the previews to the movie – in fact, the very first preview was paid for by this government. The entire screen was simply filled with the face of Barb Tarbox, Barb Tarbox speaking about the impact of tobacco on her life and on her death, and in those 30 or maybe 45 seconds she delivered a very, very powerful message paid for by this government, and I commend this government for doing that.

So when I come to Bill 47, one of the first things I do is ask myself: what would Barb Tarbox do? We've all admired Barb Tarbox. In fact, I did a recognition for her husband and daughter last year just before she died, which I frankly struggled with because I found it so emotional. I think we need to remember that woman's message for all of us and for this government, and the irony that this government has paid for those messages to be broadcast all over and then brings forward a bill like this is amazing. What advice would she give? Well, it's pretty clear. She would tell us to vote this bill down.

So with that as a sort of context for my comments, I have to tell you that I'm not going to be supporting this bill, and I hope a majority of members are equally strong on this. I suspect the minister himself, from the reports I hear, is a bit uneasy with this bill.

The kind of information that we're gleaning about this bill is that it is, in fact, a result of the efforts of a rather well-connected lobbying effort by a group called the Small Guys Tobacco Group, a classic kind of deceptive name, a name that conceals the fact that big tobacco was behind that lobbying. If it was an accurate name, it would be the big tobacco lobbying group, and big tobacco is exactly who's behind this bill. Big tobacco, operating under this misleading name of the Small Guys Tobacco Group, has hired a former executive assistant to I think, in fact, more than one cabinet minister here and has set that fellow to work. I guess from his point of view he's done his job well, but from the point of view of the people of Alberta, who in the long run are going to pay and pay and pay for this through their failing health and through their tax dollars going into the health care system, this is a shameful effort. Frankly, the lobbyists behind this should hang their heads in shame as well.

This government in the last budget actually took a far-sighted stance on tobacco taxes and raised them I think, as we all know, very significantly and raised them across the board on all tobacco products: cigarettes, loose tobacco, pipe tobacco, cigars. It was all covered there, and the effects were dramatic and they were immediate. As a result, within weeks we saw tobacco consumption in this province begin to decline dramatically, and that is of great benefit to everybody. It's of great benefit to the people who smoke and start to recover their health. It's of great benefit to the families and friends of those people who won't be faced with mourning and grieving their untimely deaths, and it's of great benefit to all Albertans who will be living in a healthier society.

So now we have an exemption brought forward for cigars, and it makes me wonder if this isn't the sort of foot in the door for a full-scale rollback or a much more substantial rollback of the tobacco tax program that was brought in last year. I mean, after all, if we can do it for the cigar industry, well, why not for the cigarette industry? Why not for all tobacco? If we're taking one step, are we going to see those amendment acts brought in next and see the great progress that was made in the last year entirely reversed? I certainly hope not.

This bill will cost the provincial government about $8 million in lost revenue, $8 million that we're giving up so that the cigar sellers of Alberta can have an easier time of it in selling their dangerous products to people and perhaps focusing specifically on children. Frankly, I've gone to many a gas station and seen small cigars deliberately marketed to children, and now we'll be able to market those more effectively and appeal to more children by lowering the price. This is, again I say, shameful. Eight million dollars that we're giving up in this could have instead funded, for example, 80 new long-term care beds, could have funded a whole raft – I couldn't count how many MRI procedures but certainly in the hundreds if not in the thousands. It could have offset a whole further anti-smoking campaign by this government, but oh, no, we'd rather have that $8 million go to the cigar industry.

Why are we doing that? Well, the minister in introducing this bill mentioned the struggles of the cigar stores close to the Saskatchewan and B.C. boundaries. Well, frankly, my heart doesn't bleed at all for those particular stores.

Mr. Snelgrove: They'll remember that.

Dr. Taft: I don't mind if they remember it. They're welcome to remember that. They'll know where I stand, and I hope you'll stand up and let them know where you stand as well.

But beyond that, I mean, the minister himself is on record here from just six or seven months ago, in fact, and I quote from the Calgary Herald. In reference to the small cigar stores near the Saskatchewan and B.C. borders he said, "We were concerned about whether we were really destroying this industry, but they don't seem to have been largely impacted." Again, I suspect that what this is really about is effective lobbying by big tobacco, and that, of course, raises an issue which I won't dwell on but I do need to mention, which is the desperate need in this province for an effective lobbyist registry.

Thirty percent of all cancer deaths in this province can be attributed to tobacco use. Thirty percent. We took a huge step forward in addressing that problem in this Assembly last spring. We're now backtracking, and we should be ashamed of this. Because of the step we took last spring, ultimately over 36,000 Albertans are expected to quit smoking because we made the obstacles to obtaining tobacco higher. We raised the price. We made it tougher for people to buy tobacco, especially for the people who are most likely to get hooked on tobacco, teenagers. So because of the step that this government took last spring, 36,000 Albertans are expected to quit smoking. Again I ask you: why are we backtracking on that?

So, Mr. Speaker, I think my comments are pretty clear. I think everybody here knows where I stand. I hope that the Small Guys Tobacco Group, which is a front for big tobacco, has the guts to contact me and try to lobby me and see what my reaction is. I hope that they have the guts to make public who's paying their bills. I'd love to know how much they paid the former executive assistant to the cabinet minister so that he could arrange the meetings with cabinet. I hope that they have the courage for that. I know where I stand. I have the courage to say: there's no damned way I'm voting for this bill.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak to Bill 47, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2). As I read through this bill, I noticed that the government is proposing by way of this bill to reduce the tax it would collect on users of tobacco albeit in the form of cigars.

I was somewhat spooked. We know that tobacco is a harmful substance. We know that its use can be discouraged through education, through taxation, and through counseling for people who are addicted to it. We know that it has serious health consequences. We know that users of tobacco face severe, almost lifelong health problems, and we know that the health system has to bear the costs of this entirely avoidable set of illnesses or diseases or disabilities that results from chronic smoking of tobacco products including cigars.

It was I guess driven by that knowledge about the relationship between smoking of tobacco and the illnesses that it produces not only in the users, the smokers of tobacco, but also those who sit next to the smokers – the secondhand smoke produces its own victims – so the government I thought did the right thing when last year it decided to increase tobacco taxes as one means of sending out a clear signal to everybody in this province that it's a product that should not be used and those who will use it will find it a very costly habit for themselves. Because of the social costs of the illnesses and disabilities that it produces, I think it entirely appropriate to use taxation as a means of discouraging, if not punishing, those who hurt themselves when they smoke and hurt others who sit next to them when they smoke.

So when this amendment to Bill 41 returned to the House with proposed rollbacks in the application of those tax hikes, thereby making exemptions in the case of smokers of cigars, I was frankly quite surprised. Eight million dollars in lost revenues is a large sum: $8 million is $8 million. We could find lots of uses for that revenue, and in addition we would of course benefit as a province, as communities, as individuals if we maintained the originally legislated rate of tax on cigars because it will certainly help reduce illnesses that are induced or caused by use of tobacco.

That's how people get tongue cancer and throat cancer: from smoking cigars, Mr. Speaker. Everyone who gets unfortunately stricken by this terrible disease because they smoke or smoked then has to end up in the hospital for treatment. Costs go up there. So we are losing $8 million, if this bill passes, in revenues that are badly needed that you could use in education, health, seniors, the homeless, you name it. And on the other hand, we'll also be losing because the cost of providing health care for those who get these unnecessary, altogether preventable illnesses that result from smoking is another cost. So when you add up the costs both in terms of forgone revenues as proposed in this bill and the increased costs that are related to illness and health and hospital use and use of medical facilities, the costs are quite a bit higher than the $8 million that are directly lost.

I cannot see the logic behind this other than to argue that a few stores near the borders of this province, east and west, need to be saved before lives in this province can be saved, before health care dollars can be saved, and before revenues that are generated by it can be used to save young lives by giving young children nutrition or early childhood education or providing them with good day care facilities. There are all kinds of good causes, good places where the public revenues that are properly generated both to prevent illness and to protect those who otherwise wouldn't have stopped smoking can be used.

So in light of these arguments, I fail to see any compelling reason why Albertans who have a preference for cigars as distinct from cigarettes should be offered very preferential treatment and an exception to the general logic and its operation which lie behind the increase in tobacco taxes and cigarette taxes and cigar taxes, those increases that were introduced last year. Because of that, Mr. Speaker, I will find it absolutely necessary to oppose this very unreasonable bill, Bill 47.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. As a fairly recently reformed smoker I'm having to make sure that I don't become one of those nonsmokers who is more antismoking than the nonsmokers ever were. I don't think I'm doing that.

A couple of things come to mind to me around this whole issue on what's being brought forward in this bill. First, my interest that we're in fact really just passing a bill that's far after the fact because it appears that the tax reduction has already been granted and came into effect on the 1st of August. So here we are on November 24 actually getting around to the legislation on that. Well, it's always interesting being in the Legislative Assembly in Alberta. Here we are to ratify, in fact, what's already come into effect some time before.

It strikes me around this whole issue of trying to discourage people from smoking that politicians at various levels of government are trying to put restrictions in place to encourage people to stop. As a matter of fact, I heard the federal Minister of Health talking on the radio this afternoon. She was questioned about why politicians couldn't just make it all illegal, just make smoking illegal. That would be it. Her response was that in fact there was a lack of political will. I think we're seeing that reflected here.

We've certainly seen that struggle played out in my own city of Edmonton, where we had city council go back and forth on a no-smoking bylaw that ended up banning children rather than banning smoking, because anyplace where smoking was allowed, then children were banned. We seem to have come to grips with that for the most part, and there is a total ban on smoking in public buildings, I think, and in restaurants and bars that is coming into effect, phased in.

But it does seem to be really difficult for politicians to take this strong stand. I appreciate the comments – actually, declarations is probably a better description – of my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Riverview because he felt strongly enough on this to come out swinging and put his statements on the record and challenge anyone that wanted to try and lobby him otherwise to get in touch with him. This is a matter of political will.

So we have a decision that was made. It was supported by government at the time. Then they were subjected to very clever marketing – very clever marketing – because what we had was cigar smokers presented as charming and kind of roguish and the small guys, not connected to big business, not connected to anything sort of large or scary, no. The group is called – let me find them here – the Small Guys Tobacco Group. Very clever marketing to make people think that they were, you know, harmless and just kind of a couple of guys, a bunch of guys, couldn't really scare anybody, not going to amount to much of a lobby group, but boy were they ever effective because against the wishes of the Revenue minister they managed to get this through the government caucus. That's pretty darn good marketing. They were very effective, and they managed to turn themselves into exactly the opposite of what they were. They're not roguish, they're not charming, and they're certainly not representing small guys. They're representing a multibillion dollar industry. Very clever marketing.

So this is about political will. This is about the legislators that come to this Assembly every day going: "Okay; we look at all the studies. You can look at the insurance actuarial tables. You can look at the cost that we now know it costs the health care system. You can talk to educators. You can look at the legacy that Barb Tarbox left us and say that this is definitely what we should do. We should do everything in our power to discourage people from smoking." In fact, what happens here? A small move is made by the government during the budget in 2002, and a year later they're backing off on it in response to a very clever marketing campaign and saying: well, okay; we're going to let these guys have what they're lobbying for.

A couple of people have already raised the issue of the $8 million in forgone revenue, and that, of course, is always an interest of mine. I'm wondering if the Revenue minister has been able, as he's certainly had the time, to do the cost analysis, to do a measurement of whether we got value for our money on that $8 million. What exactly is it that that $8 million would have done had he had it, and what's the value of it if he's going to forgo it? What is he expecting out there? What's the performance measurement on this? How much tax are these Small Guys going to generate as small businesspeople that's going to come back into the government coffers? What kind of financial analysis has been done on this that we can now look at?

Perhaps we'd like to come back on this a year from now and review what the Revenue minister has been able to come up with and present his argument and go: "You know what? We looked at this, and we didn't get our money's worth out of that $8 million of forgone revenue. This wasn't a good decision to make, and we should reverse it and go for a policy with some vigour, with some vigilance, with some commitment." But all we stand for provincially around tobacco use legislation is prevarication and a huge susceptibility to lobbying, and whether that's a Wednesday night host night or whether it's some other lobbying venture that has not been made public, certainly these Small Guys were successful. I just think it's interesting to see how all the wheels go round in this government and who manages to talk them out of things and who manages to be successful. In this case, they sure crumbled fast in front of the Small Guys lobbying group, and they folded very fast in front of that lobbying effort.

So a disappointment. I think others have spoken certainly more forcefully than I, and I'm sure others will continue to. I just wanted to get those observations on the record around the political will. I think that, overall, tobacco use reduction is about removing that band-aid. Are you going to take it off fast, or are you going to take it off slowly, ripping every little hair off your arm with excruciating slowness as you go? It seems that the government is opting for the slower and far more excruciating version of doing this. Personally, I'd recommend that you just take that band-aid and rip that sucker off and get some very strong leadership. How about we get some real leadership from this government on tobacco use and on reduction of tobacco use? There would be something that I could admire in this government if they could take leadership on that one. But, no. We're going to have this very slow, very painful, and for some people deathly slow response to reducing tobacco use in the province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2)

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Chairman, thank you. It's been a long time since we've had an opportunity to talk about Bill 47, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2). I hope all members can remember the topic of the discussion.

I just wanted to clarify. There are some things with respect to cigar tax versus cigarette, loose tobacco, raw leaf, and the like that are quite different in our calculation. It always has been different. Cigars are the only ones that are taxed as a percentage of the price, not as a flat calculation. Cigarettes are amount per cigarette. Regardless of price, the tax component is a specific amount per carton, per cigarette. Same with loose tobacco: it's per gram; it's a weight. The tax is a component of the weight and, therefore, the same with cigarettes. With cigars it's unrelated to weight and content, and it's a percentage of the price.

What you do find is that when we put up the cigar tax rates, we put them up the same as we did cigarettes, but that ignored – and I would say, by mistake – the formula, that they were different. Cigars have always captured an increase with inflation and so forth, so through the years when there's been no escalation in cigarette taxes, cigar taxes continued to escalate as the price of cigars went up. Right now, by reducing it to just 95 percent – I mean, at 95 percent close to half the cost of a cigar is still a tax component. That's close to what cigarettes are now: $32 per carton is the tax component in Alberta. As such, that will equate to less than half the cost of a carton of cigarettes. So you find the tax component for the product is now actually a closer and fairer comparison. That's why we considered it regardless of who lobbied or what was said or whatever.

The other component that is good to know is that we do try to keep within a range of taxes of all the other provinces for a lot of issues, smuggling being one of the biggest problems you have, actually, in this industry. You look at the cigar rates: B.C. is at 77 percent, Alberta is now going to be at 95 percent, Saskatchewan is at 95 percent, Manitoba is at 60 percent, Ontario is at 56 percent, and they may increase theirs in the near future. We still are at the highest end for cigar taxes of all the provinces in this country.

We are not backing off. This is in no way backing off the commitment to the substantial increases in taxes on tobacco products. They were designed to help reduce the consumption of tobacco, and they have proven to be just that. We changed the rate to ensure that we had a better, fairer comparison of tax content on cigars to cigarettes and to ensure that there would be some comparability to the provinces around us to help reduce smuggling problems between borders.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I didn't get an opportunity at second reading to participate in the debate on the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, and I welcome the opportunity now to participate. As one sits here and reflects on this significant reduction in taxes on cigars, one could certainly come to the conclusion – and it's odd that a person could come to this conclusion in light of the stubborn, persistent, reluctant acceptance by this government of public insurance similar to what B.C. has. They say that it's socialist. I even heard some of them say that it was communist. Well, this legislation looks to me like this provincial government is pro Castro. That certainly astonishes me after how reluctant they are to accept a public insurance plan. Never mind that we own our own bank here or that we have gas and electricity provided to rural Albertans on a cost recovery basis.

But this bill is not about electricity or natural gas; it's about the price of cigars. Certainly, for some of the generators of electricity in this province, it wouldn't cost them any sleep if they were to pay a lot more for their cigars.

Certainly, this bill amends the existing act to reflect a reduction in the cigar tax rate. This tax reduction already came into effect as of August, this summer. All tobacco taxes were increased in the budget of 2002 and the new rate – the hon. minister is correct – still represents an increase in cigar taxes over the 2002 levels.

Now, this bill amends the existing act. We talk about having an amendment that will more closely align the rate with surrounding provinces, that the new rate in no way represents a backing off on the commitment of this government's high tax strategy to discourage tobacco use. Just the other day we gave significant tax reductions to small and medium-sized businesses and also big businesses. So perhaps those big businesses, if they need a refrigerator with a few cigars in it to entertain after a long day's work, could just take that huge corporate tax break they got and pay for their cigars that way.

Dr. Taft: They couldn't afford the power for the refrigerator.

Mr. MacDonald: That's a good point that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview brings up, that perhaps they couldn't afford a refrigerated case for their expensive cigars because of the cost of electricity. That's a very good point, hon. member.

When we raise tobacco taxes, many things happen, including the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, who has become a nonsmoker after . . .

Ms Blakeman: Thirty-two years.

Mr. MacDonald: After 32 years. I know it's a very difficult thing to do, to quit smoking.

High prices reduce consumption, there's no doubt about that, Mr. Chairman. Taxes on cigars in the budget of 2002 certainly were increased from 80 percent to 183 percent of the retailer's cost plus markup and the minimum tax per cigar from $2.50 to $8. Due to the fact that higher tobacco taxes increase the incentive potentially to smuggle, I'm under the understanding that the government tightened its legislation and committed an additional $3 million for enforcement. I didn't know that cigar smuggling was a problem, but I can accept that.

At the time of the original tax increases this government reasoned that studies proved that increased tobacco taxes encourage Albertans, especially young Albertans, to quit smoking or to never take up the habit. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview reminded us of the last months of the late Barb Tarbox's life and her commitment to encourage as many junior high students in this province and, in fact, across the country to never, ever take up tobacco use.

The government's line now is that they are still committed to a high tax strategy to discourage tobacco use but that Alberta needs to align its tax rate with that of surrounding provinces. A person can go to B.C. or Saskatchewan and get a cigar for about half the price in Alberta. On the record the tax cut is intended to boost cigar retailers situated near Alberta's borders and at airports. Off the record, however, everyone, including this member – and that's why I cannot support this legislation – believes that the government's flip-flop is due to a well-organized lobbying effort by a small but vocal lobby group called the Small Guys Tobacco Group.

If we had a lobbyist registry in this province, which, again, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre are enthusiastic about, it could be alphabetically listed, and Small Guys, of course, would be about two-thirds of the way down the list. It would be a good idea, and I would encourage all members of this Assembly to support a lobbyist registry in this province.

A lot has happened after this lobby group caught on fire, so to speak. In March the government refused to roll back the tax, so we had a letter-writing campaign from this lobbyist group. Lo and behold, in July the Tory caucus – I hope it wasn't over cognac and cigars somewhere like the Royal Glenora – changed its mind, and the tax reduction has been in effect.

Ms Blakeman: At the Mayfair.

Mr. MacDonald: Not at the Mayfair. No. Golf costs too much there.

But the Small Guys Tobacco Group was successful, and here we are with this reduction in price.

Mr. Chairman, studies prove that increased tobacco taxes encourage people, especially the young, to quit smoking or, as we said earlier, never start at all. This is straight out of the government's public relations campaigns.

This backtracking of the 2002 tobacco tax increase undermines the government's commitment to a tobacco reduction strategy. There's no good reason for the tobacco tax cut. Firstly, the tax rate as it currently stands has not affected cigar smokers that greatly. Since 2002 cigarette sales have fallen by 24 percent in this province. In comparison, cigar sales have only fallen by a meagre 3.6 percent. Clearly, cigar smokers are not overly burdened by the current tax rate. Secondly, the province is set to lose around $8 million from this cigar tax reduction. Last year the government raised over $618 million from tobacco tax revenue. That was almost double what tobacco tax revenue brought in the year before.

While $8 million may seem like a drop in the tax revenue ocean, it would certainly, as other people have suggested, mean a new MRI machine. We could have used that money to reduce class sizes. We could hire a significant number of nonsmoking teachers for that amount of money. There are a lot of purposes for this money. It could be used also to fund long-term care beds. Maybe we wouldn't have had to put a 42 percent increase on long-term care beds in the middle of the summer. It could fund over 30 hospital beds for an entire year. AADAC, the government agency that does a very good job of fighting drug and alcohol addictions, could use the money to defray the costs of its over $10 million antismoking initiative. There are many, many uses for this money.

Another reason – and I'm going to get into this in a little bit more detail; we sort of discussed it earlier, Mr. Chairman. The government states that they must align Alberta's cigar tax rate with that of our provincial neighbours. This is because they fear the current tax is hurting tobacco retail businesses on the border and in the airports. However, in early March 2003, as I understand it, the hon. Minister of Revenue said that cabinet examined whether the policy was hurting small businesses and found that no one was in grave danger of having to close their shop. In a March 2003 article from a Calgary paper the hon. minister stated: "We were concerned about whether we are really destroying this industry, but they don't seem to have been largely impacted."

In summary, at this time in committee, Mr. Chairman, I would urge all hon. members to reconsider their vote at second because this bill sends a very bad signal that the government is not serious about its tobacco reduction strategy. Cigars should not receive special treatment. They are just as harmful to people's health as cigarettes and loose tobacco. Furthermore, this policy flip-flop is completely unnecessary. I know that there are people in here that are probably anxious to stand up and debate and say: well, George Burns smoked cigars, and he lived a very, very long time. I think I might stand corrected, but he enjoyed a century. All tobacco use reduces our life expectancy. There's the odd exception, but it's an odd exception, Mr. Chairman.

The 2002 tobacco tax increases did not cause a significant drop in cigar smoking. Cigar smokers can afford to keep smoking. Also, small tobacco retailers, again, were not significantly harmed. And we have many, many places across this province that could use this $8 million in lost revenue.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude my remarks on this bill at this time. I would urge all members to have a second look at this and recognize that this is not in the interests of the majority of Albertans in this province at this time.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd also like to make a few comments on this bill and ask a question of the minister, if I might, that he may be able to answer. I have heard a lot of debate about smoking over the years, and in fact I've done quite a bit of research on it out of curiosity more than anything else. Suffice it to say that I don't smoke, myself, but I do have to say that I think much of the debate on this issue is overstated at best and especially by our opposition here. Epidemiological studies are much less conclusive and compelling than are generally believed on this subject, and while I don't exactly use the term junk science, frankly there are similarities between the debate on smoking and the so-called toxic mold debate.

Having said that, I do have a question of the minister. I don't want to get into this whole issue tonight, but I have a very persistent constituent who is really upset at what happened to the price of pipe tobacco when all of this first occurred last year. Apparently the price of pipe tobacco nearly tripled, according to him, and while pipe tobacco and pipe smoking is not something that may affect a lot of people, a lot of Albertans, those who do smoke a pipe are very loyal and eloquent and persistent in their pursuit of that particular vice. They want to know why cigar smokers are getting a break but not pipe smokers, and I'm wondering if perhaps a future amendment or some other thing might be done to address the concerns of pipe smokers and pipe tobacco.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are no changes in rates with respect to loose tobacco, pipe tobacco, or otherwise. It is all priced the same, whether it's loose tobacco, raw leaf, or otherwise, at $32 per 200 grams. The price of the product is by weight content.

Clearly, some will object. The prices have gone up substantially because of substantial increases in taxes, but that was the specific design of the tax increase.

Public Lands Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Today I'd like to speak to the major amendments that are being proposed under the Public Lands Amendment Act, 2003. As well, later on I will address any issues that were brought up in second reading debate. I just want to take this opportunity to briefly go over some of the major points about this piece of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the intent of this bill is to strengthen and clarify the government's role as the land manager of public lands. The changes in this piece of legislation will allow our government to deal swiftly and effectively with instances of noncompliance on public lands and respond to increased demand within the agricultural industry to allow some bison grazing on public land. Going through this piece of legislation, you will see that the first set of amendments deals with unauthorized use of closed roads or trailways on public lands. Section 54.01 deals with some of the offences that will now be clearly stated in the legislation as being unlawful. For instance, it clearly outlines that a person who travels on a closed road, destroys signage, or blocks access to a legitimate licence holder is guilty of an offence.

In order to understand where this is coming from, I must provide some background. There are presently no provisions in the Public Lands Act or its regulations that provide a quick or efficient remedy to prevent persons from traveling or being on a closed road. The only option that we have right now is to use a ministerial order and, if necessary, a subsequent court order. But now that it is clearly outlined as an offence, we can deal with these infractions efficiently and safely.

For instance, in the amendments under Bill 49 the steps for dealing with a blockade of a licence of occupation could be as follows: the amendment makes it clear that a police officer, upon knowing that there is a blockade, has clear authority to step in at the outset and post a notice requiring removal of the blockade. Also, the police officer has immediate authority to step in and seize property to remove the blockade and to arrest people if there is noncompliance with the posted order. At the end of the day what Bill 49 does is to provide clarity around the issue and provide the police and the courts clear direction.

Also, under section 54.01(4) we have the amendment that deals with the unlawfulness surrounding access fees. It will strictly prohibit requesting or making payment of money or other goods in exchange for access to public lands unless the person requesting or receiving the payment is the holder of the disposition or authorization under the Public Lands Act and is entitled at law to request to receive payment for that purpose.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie indicated in second reading debate that she agreed with the access issues on the bill. In fact, she agreed that being able to manage our public lands and regulating misuse was a long-outstanding issue that needed to be dealt with. I'm glad to see that the hon. member understands the challenge that our government has in managing a hundred million acres of public lands. Unfortunately, there seems to be a level of nonunderstanding on some key aspects of the bill that deal with barricades and our ability to enforce the law. For some reason the member seems to be under the impression that this legislation will in some strange way incite violence, that it will in fact escalate disagreement between some aboriginal groups and contractors in northern Alberta.

To be honest, Mr. Chairman, this type of misrepresentation of the facts is not only misleading to Albertans but also quite irresponsible. The intent of this legislation is to be able to deal respectfully and legally with unlawful activities on our public land. It is not directed at any one group or individual, and to say that it is creating problems with our First Nations groups and contractors is completely inaccurate. We know that we have had conflict situations in the past. This act is intended to reduce conflict. I think that Albertans expect that government should take action on illegal activities in a safe and effective way.

Now, another point that the hon. member makes concerns the whole issue of access fees and barricades, which has gained quite a bit of media attention during the past year. I would like to respond to the member's questions about how the issue is tied into the changes that are being proposed in the Public Lands Amendment Act. These amendments will deal with a number of issues that are occurring on our public lands, which may include unlawfully blocking access or accepting or making payments for access where there is no legal obligation to do so. However, it also will strengthen our ability to deal with a number of long-standing issues that are occurring in our public lands. This piece of legislation does not place new restrictions on access. The department has had long-standing concerns that we needed greater clarity in our Public Lands Act to better deal with a range of issues from wildlife management to industrial access to streambed reclamation.

Now, the other question that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie brought up concerned the status of the consultation on resource issues that is being done throughout our province. It is my understanding that a government facilitator has met with First Nations contractors, industry, and municipal leaders to gather information and input. The facilitator has finished his report and has forwarded his recommendations to government. Amending the Public Lands Act is just one of his recommendations. The report is now going through the government approval process.

So again, Mr. Chairman, I want to repeat that this legislation is about better enforcement for unlawful activities on public land regardless of who commits these acts. I hope this clarifies what the real intent of this legislation is and puts to rest some of the outlandish accusations that were brought forward earlier in debate.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to take this opportunity to respond to some of the comments raised last week by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. For some reason this member seems to think that this bill will give some type of excessive force to a peace officer to deal with an unlawful activity on public land. This is completely inaccurate. You just need to read the legislation once to have it made clear. Then you would see that it only makes reference to a police officer. We are not giving excessive rights to deal with access issues randomly to people on the street. We are clearly outlining the roles for our police officers to follow the law. In fact, the legislation specifically limits police officers to having the authority to seize property or arrest people. This is so they can apply the existing provisions under the Criminal Code to deal with illegal activities.

Also, it is clearly stated that the minister has the authority to administer the Public Lands Act. It can't be delegated to ordinary citizens. It can only be delegated to employees of the government, only under ministerial order.

The other point that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar brings up concerns consultation: how have we consulted on this piece of legislation? Well, Mr. Chairman, as can be realistically understood, government doesn't go out and consult on how we deal with a very small percentage of the population who are breaking the law. I'm pretty certain that law-abiding, tax-paying Albertans would just as soon we deal with these occurrences. That's certainly what we're doing with this piece of legislation. When it comes to consulting specifically on the access blockade issue that came up in northern Alberta, I believe I've explained to the Assembly just where we're at from a government perspective on consulting in that area. We are consulting. We're out there meeting face-to-face with the contractors, First Nations, and aboriginal groups, and we are working towards a solution.

Now, of course, the other amendments that are in this bill will accommodate bison grazing on public land. Since there were no questions raised in debate about these amendments and members seemed to be in agreement about them, I will just go over briefly what they will accomplish. The bison industry has been one of the fastest growing agricultural industries in Alberta. In fact, estimates indicate that approximately $15 million was generated from the sale of bison meat last year. These new amendments will allow for some bison grazing on public lands' agricultural dispositions under certain conditions.

It's important to note that we have worked very closely with the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on these amendments. This change is being proposed after serious review. Since much has been said in debate on the need for consultation, I can tell you that much consultation has been done on these amendments. A multistakeholder committee was consulted which had representatives from the Alberta Bison Association, Alberta Beef Producers, Federation of Alberta Naturalists, Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, Alberta Chapter of the Wildlife Society, Peace Country Bison Association, Alberta Grazing Leaseholders Association, and the Alberta Fish and Game Association.

The committee was very concerned about disease transmission from wild to farmed bison. Sustainable Resource Development has worked with the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development to develop disease-free testing, tracking, and marketing requirements for bison grazing on public land. These requirements and the establishment of a high-risk area, which is in the northern area of the province, will greatly reduce the risk of certain diseases spreading from wild bison herds to farmed bison. The new opportunities for bison grazing on public land will not be in the high-risk area. Now, this is only the first step in allowing bison to graze on certain lands. Changes to the dispositions and fees regulation will also be required.

I would like to thank you, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me to explain to the Assembly and all the members here today what the true intention is with these amendments. I believe that this is good legislation for Albertans, and it will help us effectively manage our public lands now and in the future.

Once again, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak in committee to Bill 49, the Public Lands Amendment Act, 2003. Well, the government seems to have been stung by some words that must have happened in the earlier reading of this bill and some of the action in the media over the weekend around the issues that have arisen. Always interesting when that engenders discussion in the Assembly.

The member defending the bill felt that it was very clear in the legislation which people could be authorized, but in fact there's not much expansion on that in the actual bill, and since we are in Committee of the Whole, I will take the opportunity to spell it out.

Section 54.04 reads:

Where section 54.01(7) or an order under section 54.03 authorizes a police officer to remove or seize and remove property, the police officer may cause the property to be removed or seized and removed by another person under the police officer's direction and control.

So that's not very specific. That is not giving us the clarity that the member seems to feel is written into the legislation.

This says, "another person." It doesn't say another deputized person. It doesn't say another person that is in the employ of the provincial government. It doesn't say another person that's already a wildlife officer or another officer as designated by such and such legislation. It says, "another person." So that does seem to indicate that an officer could go and find someone they know or didn't know that was available to them and just say: you are under my direction and control, and I ask you to go and remove this barrier.

So if the member sponsoring this seems to feel so strongly that this is all spelled out, where is he reading the additional wording that clarifies this that is not available to me in the reading of this bill? It just says, "another person." It doesn't expand upon it in the way that the member seemed to be saying in his remarks. Since we're in committee, he has an opportunity to respond back to me.

Are there regulations that are coming that are going to spell this out some way or clarify it more? Great. Let's get it on the record now. Part of the issue is that as much as we'd like to think that everyone hangs on every word spoken in here, that doesn't happen, and once legislation is passed, people go back and read the legislation and where they can find it they read the regulations. So if they're trying to figure out what was intended by the Legislative Assembly when the legislation was written, that's often all that's available to them. As we get Hansard in electronic form, that problem may in fact be addressed, but right now people will tend to go back to the legislation, and there's nothing drawn out or clarified here that this is somehow an employee or a designated person, an already appointed wildlife officer, or holding some sort of provincial office or designation that's clear that they're under the control of the provincial government in some way.

The other issue that I wanted to raise is the member's apparent shock and surprise that the opposition would be questioning a consultation process, but, you know, the government has these closed-door standing policy committees. They have these quiet stakeholder meetings that don't seem to be publicized very much. So it's not easily apparent to us in the opposition who, in fact, the government has chosen to meet with, usually behind closed doors. We don't know who they've met with. Then they stand up and huff and puff: oh, my goodness, we met with everybody, and we've consulted with everybody. Really? Well, how many of these were publicly documented? Were posted where? In how many places? Over what period of time had you this tremendous consultation with all of these people? Not that I am doubting the member's word that, in fact, there was consultation that took place, but please, you know, don't be so surprised that we're questioning this when so much of what the government does is behind closed doors. If it becomes habitual for members of the government, then they don't understand how the rest of the people would consider a public consultation to be run.

I did go over the initial comments that were raised by the Official Opposition critic on this. She was obviously fine with most parts of the bill, certainly with the section around the road closures and people using the roads and what can be done around that. She went over the grazing of the bison on the public lands, very clearly didn't have a problem with that. Where she had this problem seems to be with something that she didn't feel that she was particularly briefed on, and that's why she's raised the point. That's her job: to question all of that.

Now, I know that the member indicated that he would respond back to me, and I will take my seat and allow him the opportunity to do that. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It certainly gives me great pleasure in terms of clarifying and giving answers in regard to the questions that came forward from the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

In regard to 54.04, where the officer has the authority in terms of gathering assistance from another ordinary citizen is in the instance – for example, it's fine if you've got a barricade that's basically a wooden barricade. An officer would be able to pick up the barricade and physically move it. But when you have, for instance, a D9 Caterpillar or a construction shack that has been used to blockade access to the road, certainly, you know, our RCMP are strong individuals but would not be able to go and physically manhandle a big piece of equipment or a construction shack. So in that case the officer has the authority in terms of being able to pass on, hire a winch truck operator with a trailer in terms of being to load these huge obstructions and have them removed from the blockade area.

In regard to the consultation, I believe that there was lots of media attention concerning this over the past year, into last fall and last winter, where a government facilitator was meeting with the First Nations contractors, industry, and municipal leaders in terms of coming up with some type of resolution in regard to the blockades that were taking place. So I believe that the government did their due diligence in terms of working together, and as I have mentioned in my opening remarks in second reading and again in committee, one of the recommendations that came forward from the facilitator was to make amendments to the Public Lands Act. That's what we're here debating today.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I appreciate the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake being willing to engage in a debate, in the question and answer here.

I appreciate his clarification around section 54.04. Given what he's explained, then, about being able to direct, for example, an operator of heavy equipment to remove a piece of equipment that was there being used as a barricade or perhaps to operate the equipment to remove another kind of barricade, fine. Is there an anticipation by the government, then, as protection for the officer, to be able to prove that he didn't get himself into the situation that is being anticipated?

Let me take a step back and clarify that. Has the government anticipated that the officer may need to be proving that exactly what they did was direct someone to operate a piece of machinery to remove this barrier, some kind of written instruction that they are to keep a record of, or do they just use their normal note-taking procedure, which they all do? Is anything else being anticipated there? You can tell how quick people were to react to this concept or possibility that an officer is saying – well, it's the example I used last week: will no one rid me of this man? And other people, thinking that they are in fact obeying the wishes if not the explicit instructions, rush off and do what they think is the bidding.

In fact, it wasn't the bidding, and it was not an explicit instruction. Nonetheless, the damage gets done by people who are wholeheartedly believing they are doing the right thing. What has the government anticipated to protect the officer and to protect everybody else in these circumstances? We know that this can be a hot-button issue here. What's been done to make sure that the officer is protected and there's protection to make sure that the situation doesn't get out of control?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, before any problem escalates to that type of level where ordinary citizens have to be involved, we certainly hope that discussions will take place between those that are setting up the barricade, whether it be the contractors, before it has to escalate in terms of having to bring the police in. In fact, if we do have to bring the police in in terms of them doing their job according to the legislation, all their actions will be duly recorded in their police report.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I also appreciate the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake's responses here, the fine gentleman across the way.

The first time I read this bill, I was struck with questions around why some of these issues aren't already covered under other legislation, and those questions still remain for me. For example, under section 54.01(2), "No person shall (a) travel on or enter on a closed road, (b) damage, destroy, remove or alter any posted notice or sign denoting a closed road" and so on and on, and there are other places where it prohibits setting up barriers and barricades on roads, that kind of thing. I would've thought that this was already covered under legislation, and I assume that it's already against the law for me to go out and put up a barricade on a highway or it's already against the law for me to take down a sign that says "road closed" and that kind of thing. So my question is essentially this: can the member assure me that there's been careful co-ordination in the drafting of this legislation with other pieces of legislation so that we're not duplicating ourselves here or perhaps creating conflicts among bills?

My second question is: has the preparation of this bill had any relation to the work of the committee that was struck last spring? I can't recall the name of the committee, but I think of it as the $6 million committee because that's how much money it was given in the budget. I think it's jointly under the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development; anyway, the committee that came out of this crisis. Has it had any input into the drafting of Bill 49?

Those are my two sets of questions. Thank you

The Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again I'd like to emphasize, as I did in my earlier remarks, that the law is very clear. We're not making any changes to the law as to what an offence is. What the problem was with the present legislation was that it was not very clear as to what actions could be taken, if anything, on these occurrences of someone getting access where they shouldn't be on public lands or denying access. So, basically, the changes that are coming forward now are just to, certainly, highlight it, identify it, and make it clear as to what the repercussions are and what actions can be taken in terms of going after those that do not obey the law.

In regard to your second question, yes, the committee did have input in regard to the legislative changes that are coming forward, along with the government facilitator, who met with the different groups.

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 25, 2003 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 03/11/25
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Though we as legislators of this great province and its people are taken from among the people and selected by You to be architects of our history, give us wisdom and understanding to do Your will in all that we do. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 23 grade 6 students and their teacher, Margo Cahn, along with parents Jayne Hope and Nadine Kern from Earl Buxton elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're here today on a short visit to observe and learn about government. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very dedicated group of employees of Alberta Government Services. This is the business and financial planning team within our department, and they're here today in the Legislature to take a look at some of the activities and to tour the Legislature Building, which I think is a really good opportunity for our public service. I'm going to ask them to stand as I repeat their names. We have Laura Cameron, Scott Beeby, Ken White, Robin Anderson, Myrna Weingardt, and Helena Lee. I would ask the Assembly to please give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have some of my department staff here. These are the people from zone 5. So for those of you who are in Calgary, Strathmore, Rocky View, all of these, these are the people that look after the school boards and school districts in those areas. I would ask them to rise as their names are read: Merla Bolender, Millicent Bain, John Blevins, Elinor Burwash, Bryna Clarke, Dorothy Haines, James Hamilton, Aimee Kovacs, Cheryl Lewis, Sylvia Mutch, Nahid Mulji, Wendy Narang, Mike Reikie, Bruce Stonell, Ronald St. Jean, Robert St. Onge, Sylvia Veillette, Pamela Wolfe, and Kathryn Young. These people do yeoman's service to the Department of Learning in zone 5. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the pleasure of too many visitors, but certainly today I'm delighted to have a hardworking Alberta family from Wembley visiting me. Dick and Joanne Barendregt are very, very good at home schooling their children, and part of the studies that they undertake is to come in and see how we operate here in the Legislative Assembly, so they're making that visit today. With Dick and Joanne are five of their children. They also have two children who are overseas in Japan at the moment and another son that's at home, I believe. I would ask Dick and Joanne Barendregt and their children Morgan, Caleb, Jessica, Josiah, and Jeremy to rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung I am pleased to introduce to you and through you 50 super grade 6 students from Ormsby elementary school. Accompanying the students are their teachers, Mr. Thomas Lock and Mrs. Alana Eaton; their teacher assistant, Mrs. Branco; and parent Mrs. Olsen. By the way, the students will be decorating Christmas trees in the Legislature pedway. Our guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 12 students from St. Albert high school. They are residents in the constituency of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and the constituency of St. Albert. They are members of Mlle Tamie Froment's class. They are grade 10 études sociales students, and I'd ask them to please rise – they are in the gallery – and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 11 students accompanied by their teacher. These are students from the Alberta College campus, Grant MacEwan College, in the English for academic purposes class, and Edeana Malcolm is their instructor. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a pleasure to introduce one of Alberta's emerging artistic talents. Today I'm introducing Geoff Moore, who is seated in the public gallery. Geoff is a Calgarian whose first novel, Murder Incorporated, has just been released by Falcon Press, which is a Calgary publisher. This is a story with an authentic Canadian voice telling about a week in the life of a Calgary advertising man. Although it's a dark rumination on life, death, nostalgia, and the advertising world, it's a story that makes the reader laugh out loud. Geoff will be at Audreys tonight at 7:30 for a book launch. He's accompanied by Ann Murray and Deb Bennett. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 35 visitors; however, they're not here just yet. They will be arriving at 2 o'clock. There are 31 students and four adults from Thorhild school, and it's certainly my pleasure to be able to recognize them as being here this afternoon visiting our Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head:

Oral Question Period

Budget Surplus

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, yet again the Alberta government is set to announce a bigger surplus in the budget all the while shortchanging Albertans by sacrificing spending on education and infrastructure. Even after emergency spending on agriculture, forest fires, and natural gas rebates, the surplus reportedly could top $2 billion. Current legislation requires that all surpluses go to debt payment. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Will you recognize that infrastructure deficit is part of the debt and use some of the surplus to catch up on the backlog of required construction for our schools, hospitals, and roads?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the second-quarter report will be released in the fullness of time.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the minister: will you make sure that Alberta's students share in the needed surplus and commit to funding the infrastructure needed to meet the Learning Commission's recommendations for classroom size?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, in the budget that we filed in April and that has gone through a first-quarter update, we've clearly made a commitment to capital by putting in place a capital plan that says that dollars that are allocated to that capital plan have to stay in the capital account, can't go back out into operating funds. We've made that commitment; in fact, we've legislated it. So our commitment to infrastructure is clearly there. In fact, we had $5.5 billion of capital put aside in the budget process already for the next three years, so I hope that when the hon. Leader of the Opposition talks about a commitment, he realizes that we're the only government in Canada that does this.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, to the minister again. We're asking: will you make an additional commitment given the pending surpluses of this province to spend some of that surplus on catching up further on some of the capital deficit that we've created in the last 10 years?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, the second-quarter report has not been filed or released as yet, but what I can tell the hon. Leader of the Opposition is that our government is committed to capital projects. In fact, yesterday I attended a P3 conference in Toronto, representing Alberta, encouraging investors to come to Alberta and to work with us as part of the capital plan for alternative financing, and they were very pleased that we were there. We had officials from the Department of Infrastructure and the Department of Transportation in attendance at the conference, and the reception was most favourable for the province of Alberta.

Electricity Exports

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Energy attended an energy conference in Oregon. Plans were discussed at the conference to export Alberta electricity to the Pacific Northwest. This would require $1.5 billion in new transmission lines, an increased export capacity of electricity from 600 to 2,000 megawatts.

This year when Alberta needed new transmission lines, this government saw to it that consumers picked up the tab with $2 billion in additional charges on their bills. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. How can Albertans be sure they won't get stuck with the costs of transmission for exporting this power to the U.S.? [interjections]

Mr. Smith: Well, it is a good question, Mr. Speaker. It's good to see the Leader of the Opposition back from missing last Thursday. I was here.

The Speaker: Please. We're not doing that. We're above all that.

Mr. Smith: No, we're not.

The Speaker: Don't argue with me, Minister. We are above that. Civility and courtesy will always prevail in this Assembly.

Hon. minister, do you want to supplement your answer?

Mr. Smith: No. Thank you.

Dr. Nicol: That's one way to get around answering.

Again to the minister: why is Alberta planning to boost its electricity exports when deregulation at home hasn't provided us with stable and low prices?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the export policies are very clear, very open. They're open for all Albertans. They've been in place for over 18 months, and the price of electricity today is very clear as to what will be starting the 1st of January. We're over the worst of it in the Aquila/EPCOR network. We've seen consistent pricing in the ATCO network, and I think that we can safely say that nobody's blacked out. We've had a province where we've had unprecedented prosperity. We've been able to deliver the electricity necessary to provide the fuel for that economic growth.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, back to my first question. Will the minister guarantee that Albertans will not pay for the transmission costs of that power that's going to be exported to the United States?

Mr. Smith: Again, Mr. Speaker, all he has to do is refer to the export policy principles that are now at least 18 months old, and he will see very clearly in there that anybody who exports power shall pay. The people who benefit shall pay for those transmission costs. It's very clear, it's very open, and I'm surprised that it merits a question in this House today.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Natural Gas Marketing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Everyone in this Assembly certainly knows that cars cost less in Wetaskiwin, but electricity costs are as high there as they are anywhere in the province. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that a legal document commissioned by several consumer groups, including rural utilities in Alberta, calculates that Direct Energy, if the sale through the EUB goes ahead, will hold an 89 percent share of the natural gas retail market, why is this government promising Albertans more competition in the marketplace when Direct Energy will hold such a huge monopoly on the natural gas in the marketplace?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, everybody knows that yesterday at the chamber of commerce meeting I had two or three people comment to me that we had four to five times the number of people attend than showed up for the Liberal Unplugged open house. So it was great to be able to talk through and past the opposition and deliver real facts to the people of Wetaskiwin.

In that 45-minute discussion on deregulation, on utilities, on natural gas prices, there were five questions, Mr. Speaker, from the floor, and they were dealt with. It's very clear that the current sitting Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose has done an excellent job of putting forward the government's position in that jurisdiction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the sale of Direct Energy is reported to cost consumers an additional $7 per month on their bill, how will Direct Energy's huge monopoly encourage the company to offer competitive prices?

The Speaker: A lot of speculation there, hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Given that there's a lot of speculation there, Mr. Speaker, I think we will just allow the speculation to continue until the EUB has ruled on that.

Mr. MacDonald: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that two out of three major gas utility companies will be charging under $5.50 per gigajoule for gas in December, how will the government explain to customers of ATCO south that they will not be receiving a rebate even though they will possibly be paying $6.22 per gigajoule for gas in December, well above the famous trigger price of $5.50 per gigajoule?

Mr. Smith: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the final decision has not been ruled on and put forth by the EUB, at that time the government will come forward and comment on the decision of the EUB.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Assistance to Cattle Industry

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the past six months a staggering $400 million of federal and $300 million of provincial money has been poured into compensation programs for finished cattle since the discovery of a single BSE case last spring. Thousands of small-scale cow/calf operators have yet to get a dime, and they're wondering who did. My question is to the minister of agriculture. Given that a handful of large feedlots apparently got the lion's share of the massive BSE program for finished cattle, when can Albertans expect to receive a full accounting of who got how much?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, to say that a handful of large feedlots got the majority of compensation might be somewhat accurate if those feedlots handled the majority of the cattle, because the compensation that was provided was on a per head basis, whether you were a small feedlot holder or a large one.

I explained yesterday to the hon. member that this industry operates in a chain and that it was important to start at the top of the chain, which was the full feedlot that had an animal to move in order to provide a place for this fall calf crop. Now, if in the last four weeks the hon. member had wanted to go over to Edmonton Stock Yards, not a long trip, and sit in that market, he would have seen calf prices that equaled or exceeded last year's prices, in a year when we have had BSE. That's where our cow/calf operators really got the full effect.

The second thing is the announcement that we made yesterday that will assist those cow/calf operators in making a choice of how to handle the animals that are extra to their breeding herds, whether they offer them for market, which will not give them the same return as they had last year but a better return, or they choose to keep them for another year.

So, Mr. Speaker, to say that thousands of cow/calf producers have not benefited is wrong. The chairman of the Alberta Beef Producers sat at my side yesterday in the news conference and certainly didn't suggest in any way that the programs that this government has supported were wrong.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Deputy Premier and Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has failed to answer the basic question, will she, then, commit to authorizing a special investigation by the Auditor General to ensure that the program was put to good use – $300 million of provincial taxpayers' money – and that no one got money they weren't entitled to?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we have indicated clearly all along that there would be audits of this program, and in fact there have been field audits to date to ensure that the funds are passing appropriately. Also, the Auditor General will be auditing overall the whole program that we have.

Mr. Speaker, to call for a special investigation makes the suggestion that something has been done that was wrong. If that hon. member has any evidence to support that, he has a responsibility to bring that forward. If he does not, he should apologize for casting those aspersions.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of a full, independent investigation by the Auditor General, how can Albertans be sure that moneys expended went to cattle producers and did not leak out to cattle brokers, speculators, and appear on the bottom line of packing plants?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the dollars that have been expended in these programs went to the owner of the animal. It is the only way it could be paid.

Were there benefits to other parts of the industry? Well, I sincerely hope so because this program was intended to assist people who are in the cattle dealing industry, who are in the auction market industry, who are in the trucking industry, who do sell hardware at the hardware store, who operate the corner cafés. This was intended to flow the dollars, at least a portion of them, back into that overall system, that employs thousands and thousands and thousands of Albertans every day, many of them, I'm sure, in the member's constituency. If he realizes that 167 companies in the greater Edmonton region process agriculture, food, and beverage products and a large majority of those are meat products, he would understand the importance of this industry and the support to it.

Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area

Mrs. Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, with over 2 million visitors a year Kananaskis Country is a major contributor to the beauty and the prosperity of our province. This year the crown jewel of Alberta's parks and protected areas celebrated its 25th anniversary. Many constituents and Albertans are very interested in the future management plans for this natural asset and, in particular, the Evan-Thomas provincial recreation area. Could the Minister of Community Development please tell us what is happening with the planning process for the Evan-Thomas area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, a very solid and timely question. The short answer is that there's a lot that is happening with the Evan-Thomas management plan, and a lot has been happening over the three years since the local advisory committee there undertook this project. Given, however, that we've had somewhere in the neighbourhood of 2,000 responses to the draft management plan from the public and probably another couple of thousand more from outside the country, it has taken a little longer than expected to work this entire process through.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, what will happen is that we will strive to attain the goal in the management plan of ensuring that the area remains protected and appreciated with appropriate recreation and tourism opportunities considered as well as the local needs and desires of the community living there, what they want done, and also putting into place some formal public consultation or future review process should that become necessary.

So in short order I anticipate being able to bring forward a final management plan for the important area of Evan-Thomas and K Country, and that will come up through the government process as soon as it's ready.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what assurances can the minister give us that the final Evan-Thomas management plan will respond to both environmental concerns as well as the request from potential business and tourism operators?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can give her and all members of the House and all Albertans for that matter every assurance that we will abide by the policies that were laid down in the Kananaskis Country recreation policy of the late 1990s wherein it was clearly depicted that things such as proposals for potentially large-scale developments would be directed outside not only the Evan-Thomas area but, indeed, outside Kananaskis Country itself.

I think it also has to be remembered that prior to the special places program, we had about 15 percent of K Country designated for one form of protection or another, and today I'm happy to tell everyone that we have over 60 percent of K Country designated. Our intention is to ensure that that fine balance between natural and environmental concerns in tandem with business, tourism, and recreational concerns remains focused and balanced.

To that end, Mr. Speaker, I have met with environmental groups, I've met with business communities and with the local Kananaskis Improvement District Council to hear their views, and I will ensure that those views are reflected when the final plan comes forward shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Chinchaga Wildland Park

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A report released by Greenpeace and ForestEthics entitled Chinchaga Wilderness documents the ecological values of the Chinchaga region and demonstrates that it is an endangered forest area requiring immediate protection. With less than 2 percent of the boreal eastern foothills ecoregion currently protected, the Chinchaga is a conservation priority. The existing protected area is simply too small to be ecologically viable. To the Minister of Community Development: given that the minister has just in his last answer acknowledged the changes needed in the Evan-Thomas area, will he also recognize the ecological importance of this area and protect the endangered region?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Chinchaga area does have a fair amount of land already designated. It came forward through the special places program, and it has wildland provincial park status, which is reasonably high in terms of protection.

I do acknowledge and recognize that that particular area in the northwest quadrant of our province is a very special and unique area, and that's why it was given some protected status. I'm not aware of anything else that will violate that status, but at this point the special places program has been concluded. That doesn't mean that people aren't continually asking me to look at protecting more areas, but that is not happening at this time.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, given that only 2 percent of that area is currently protected, will the minister implement a science-based land use plan that identifies an appropriate protected area as well as a surrounding special management zone, as recommended by the Chinchaga report?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, that particular management plan is one of more than a dozen plans we have under way right now. Considering the area of Chinchaga very seriously, it's before a public advisory review committee as we speak, and since it also integrates somewhat with the Sustainable Resource Development ministry, I would ask if the Minister of SRD wishes to supplement.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I promise that I didn't give the member opposite the question, but I'd like to definitely answer, because I just did a press release today that ties into that specific area to announce a forest management unit, P8, just northwest of the Chinchaga area. It's about 350,000 hectares. We will not be allocating any forestry in that area, although the area continues to have some multi-use in the oil and gas industry, which we will be co-ordinating. In fact, we are going to be setting up a committee as of January 1 of this coming year, and the committee will involve the public in relation to how we develop the resources in that area in a balanced way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Community Development follow the lead of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and insist that a moratorium on new industrial development is put in place in this area and then commit to protecting the area's boundaries and having a full discussion on that, as the Chinchaga report recommends?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, under the classification of wildland provincial park no new oil and gas activities are permitted to occur. So I hope that alleviates any concerns in that respect.

The final thing is that we'll wait for the local advisory management committee's final comment to come forward before we take any further steps.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would only supplement the answer insofar as the opposition continually asks for reinvestment in learning, continually asks for reinvestment in infrastructure, continually asks for reinvestment in many areas. I would just want to remind them that oil and gas revenues in the last three years have equaled the last seven years combined, and it is the great good fortune of this province that those oil and gas revenues, through environmentally responsible drilling, have been allowed to deliver the revenues that we've been able to reinvest in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Gas Well Drilling in Hastings Lake Area

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board has issued licences for two gas wells to be drilled in the Hastings Lake area of Strathcona county. With that approval the EUB has dismissed 87 objections filed by residents of the Hastings Lake area. Could the minister responsible for the EUB, the Minister of Energy, explain why the objections were dismissed by the EUB?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. The EUB has worked responsibly throughout its history in conservation of the resource as well as in ensuring the safety of all Albertans, so it has in its purview a wide-open mandate to examine every submission and every reason. I can tell you through discussions in my portfolio, which is responsible for the EUB, that the EUB has reported to me that they cannot find any scientific reason why they would preclude or prohibit the orderly development of these two gas wells, which are in a pool, as I understand, that would be producing for a very short period of time in geological history. In fact, they would be drilled in a very short period of time, produced in a very short period of time, and then abandoned and reclaimed in such a way as not to disturb the residents and, again, to ensure that there's good environmental stewardship around the process and around the orderly drilling and development of these important resources for all Albertans.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what has the EUB done to ensure the protection of water wells and to address the concerns of residents over flaring and also their concerns about the possibility of sour gas emissions?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to answer those three questions. On the one with respect to the drilling of water, there are clear and definable EUB standards as to casing, putting a cement bond between the drill hole and the outside formation, so that there is absolutely no chance, zero chance, of invasion into the aquifer.

Secondly, with respect to flaring, in fact the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board has been considered a world leader in the reduction of flaring. In many circumstances, Mr. Speaker, we have been asked to respond to the World Bank, to international situations reducing flaring, because we in fact reduced flaring by over 54 percent in a very short period of time. That is, in fact, thank you to a joint group, including Martha's and Henry's comments from throughout Alberta, so there's been good environmental stewardship in that area. The other thing is that the company, in its environmentally responsible manner, has agreed to closed chamber testing and the fact that there will be no flaring during the period of testing planned.

Mr. Speaker, another thing is that the EUB has said very clearly that the wells to be drilled are sweet. That means that not only will they have the liquids that are so necessary to the great prosperity that the member represents in the county of Strathcona through the drilling of these gas wells but also will deliver royalties to the province of Alberta to the benefit of all Albertans.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Energy also identify if there is any way for this decision of the EUB to either be appealed or reviewed?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are always the two elements that parties have. One is to challenge the EUB, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, on what is called a review in variance. The second thing is to take it to the Court of Appeal for Alberta.

Charles Camsell Hospital

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, after a deal last week to sell the Charles Camsell hospital fell through for the second time in as many years, the Camsell is back on the auction block at a price one-third lower than it was listed at last week. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. Will the minister confirm whether the government is entertaining all possible bids for the Charles Camsell site, or is it only looking at bids from developers considering a health care function at the facility?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, when we put facilities like the Charles Camsell hospital up for open and public bids, we don't even ask the question: what is this facility going to be used for? That doesn't enter into the equation at all. Whatever a proponent feels that the facility can be used for in the marketplace, what they're prepared to pay for it is all we're interested in.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that acute care hospitals in Edmonton are being used at a whopping 107 percent of capacity, would the minister consider selling the facility to the Capital health region?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the Capital health region are the people that would make the decision whether they were even interested in purchasing the facility. At this time I haven't heard anything from them relative to that facility, but certainly if they were interested in having a look at it, we are only too happy to open the doors.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, if I may supplement, sir. Last week on November 20, 2003, in Alberta Hansard at page 1774 the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview sought my assurance that this facility would not even be used for long-term care. He was feeling and intimating that this was not even sufficient for long-term care, and now by reason of his press release dated today, less than a week later, he suggests that this should be an acute care hospital. What a difference a week makes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bonner: In Calgary they blow them up.

Dr. Taft: Yeah. We don't want to see it blown up.

It would only be fair for me to ask this to the Minister of Infrastructure: is the minister aware of any problems preventing the sale such as asbestos or toxic molds?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge we haven't done any air quality monitoring in that building. Anytime that you have a building that has been vacant for a number of years, the air quality probably is a component that, depending on its use, you would want to assess, but we have not done that.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, if I may supplement. I mean, not only does this press release comment on this being suggested to be used for a hospital; he suggests that the cost of doing so would be $4.1 million. He has completely ignored the fact that this facility has been empty for a number of years. He has ignored the fact that there would be operating costs associated. He's ignored the fact that there would be enormous costs of retrofit associated with it. So, again, this suggestion that it's merely $4.1 million: you could look it up on their web site, www.albertaliberaloppositionfairytale.com.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Gun Registration Prosecutions

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was mortified this morning when I again had to read about the escalating costs of the federal gun registry. Many of my constituents remain concerned not only about this colossal waste of taxpayers' dollars but about the fact that gun owners, including a former Sergeant-at-Arms of this Legislature, may face charges in our courtrooms when their only offence has been their refusal to register their guns. My questions today are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister advise what role provincial Crown prosecutors will play when charges for unregistered firearms are laid?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has been a leader in this country in fighting the gun registry law and for good reason. We've been fighting the gun registry law because it's a colossal waste of money, money which could have been used to effectively be tough on crime in this province and across this country. We have made it perfectly clear and other jurisdictions in this country, particularly Manitoba and Nova Scotia, have followed our lead to say: we will not prosecute under the federal firearms registry act.

We believe that when people use guns illegally in the commission of a crime or where they do not follow the laws with respect to being licensed or with respect to storing firearms properly, then we obviously will continue to do what we always have done and prosecute for the purpose of ensuring that our communities remain safe. But we will not prosecute under the federal gun registry act, and where it's clear that a charge relates solely to registration or the intention is with respect to registration, we've asked the RCMP and we've sent a direction out to police forces in this province to send the file to the federal government and have them pursue it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the province's opposition to the registry, can the minister explain why Alberta Crown prosecutors would ever be involved in conducting prosecutions for registration charges?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, Crown prosecutors, I'll re-emphasize, will not be involved when the charge is under the federal registration act or where it's exclusively relative to registration. We will, however, continue to follow our constitutional obligation to prosecute under the Criminal Code when firearms are used illegally in other senses, which is, for example, unsafe use; unlicensed use, where you haven't properly obtained a licence, which involves screening, training, the requirement of mandatory courses; where you're storing inappropriately; where you take a gun to a public meeting. Those sorts of Criminal Code offences that we've always prosecuted we will continue to prosecute. But where it is simply a question of registration and the massive boondoggle, the waste of money that the federal government is engaged in, we will not be part of that and provincial prosecutors will not be part of that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, again to the same minister: is there anything the province can do to prevent Albertans from being prosecuted for registration offences?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. Simply put, we have an obligation. We have a Criminal Code in the country. The federal government passed both a federal gun registry law and amendments to the Criminal Code to put registration in the Criminal Code as an offence. We have a constitutional obligation provincially to administer the Criminal Code and to lay charges under the Criminal Code. We have indicated that we will not lay those charges where it simply relates to registration or where the intent of the charge is relative to registration, but we do have to authorize the federal government in those circumstances to administer the Criminal Code. So provincial Crown prosecutors will not be involved in those types of prosecutions. We will not prosecute those offences. We will not waste Alberta taxpayers' money prosecuting offences that simply relate to registry. We will continue to put Alberta taxpayers' money to good use in combating crime where crime exists in this province, but we will not be involved in that area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Provincewide Policing Standards

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General reiterated the concern from last year that a manual for provincewide policing standards and a plan to implement it is lacking from this government. The Auditor General stated: "Until the plan is implemented, the Ministry does not know whether police services meet . . . minimum policing standards. Public safety could be at risk." My questions are to the Solicitor General. When are we going to see the publication of this manual and the implementation of a plan for policing standards?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The policing standards that the hon. member is referring to are in the works as we speak. We have put together a working group, we have got their approval in regard to the standards, and it's something that I hope to have by the end of the year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Given that the Auditor General has stated that public safety could be at risk, could the minister explain the delay in both the publishing and in the response?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to clarify something first, if I may. I believe all police in this province do a wonderful job, and at no time do they put the public at risk.

I will say, though, in regard to the standards that we've had a working group put together, which is the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police and other members of the stakeholders that are involved in this. They have finalized the standards and are pleased with what we're moving forward on and will be implementing by the end of the year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again, since the Auditor General notes that the minister has tied implementation of the standards to the province's response to the MLA review on policing, when are we going to see the province's response?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's no different than how I answered yesterday on the corrections review. We put together a working group, which was the MLA for Lacombe-Stettler, the MLA for Calgary-Buffalo, and – I'm sorry; I'm missing the other name. These MLAs went out and they worked very hard in regard to reviewing policing in our province. We have put a considerable amount of work together on this particular review. We have finally got, for the first time in 31 years, recommendations that have been agreed on between the AUMA and the AAMD and C, and that will be a recommendation that was an agreement with both groups and will benefit not only the people in this Legislature but 3 million Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Calgary Regional Health Authority

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last March the Tory government fired the elected health authority boards after less than 18 months in office and replaced them with handpicked government appointees. With news that the Calgary health region deficit has ballooned beyond $25 million, it is pretty clear that these Tory-friendly appointees don't know the first thing about spending money where it's really needed. Instead, they give their CEO a $523,000 pay package and dole money out on lucrative consulting contracts. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister ask his handpicked appointees on the Calgary health board to fire their high-priced CEO because of his failure to balance the books, and if not, why not?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I presume that if he asked such a thing of the CEO in Calgary, he would ask the same thing of the CEO in the city of Edmonton, the Capital health region, which is also running a deficit.

It's not because there's mismanagement on the part of these boards. It is because they are providing the very best service anywhere in this country. Don't take my word for it; listen to Mr. Romanow. Don't take my word for it; listen to Senator Kirby. Don't take my word for it; look at Maclean's magazine. Look at the CIHI data. Look at what Mr. Romanow has to say about our health care system. Look at what Senator Kirby has to say about our health care system. We have nothing to be ashamed of in our health care system. It's the best in the country.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am listening to the Auditor General's words. Given that the Auditor General again this year criticized the Calgary health region for its sloppy contracting out, when is the minister going to put a stop to the continuing draining away of public health care dollars into the pockets of private, for-profit sector interests?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. member would be a little more specific about this, but the fact of the matter is that he knows that under our legislation we allow for the provision of insured services under contract by regional health authorities. It is perfectly transparent. If the individual wishes to look at any of the contracts provided between the regional health authority and private providers through private surgical facilities in Calgary or in Edmonton or anywhere else in the province of Alberta, he's certainly welcome to look at them. These are providing important services.

Let me say this, Mr. Speaker. The individual here, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, is caught up in his ideology. The government is concerned with access to high-quality, publicly affordable, accessible services. It's not about ideology. This man, however, is locked up in ideology.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the minister talking about ideology: how can Albertans have any assurance that there won't be mismanagement of dollars on the new P3 hospital in Calgary when the handpicked board and senior management of the Calgary health region can't seem to properly manage their finances?

Mr. Mar: All I can say, Mr. Speaker: better that we handpick them than him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Long-term Care Facilities

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just yesterday I spoke at length to a constituent in Calgary-West about her concerns around her aging parents, who were separated when her father was admitted to long-term care in Lethbridge, leaving her mother in an assisted-living setting. Her father, though, is receiving excellent care, looks better than he has in 10 years. The staff really care by their actions who he is and was as a person in the community. A nurse even kisses him good night. My constituent is concerned over their separation as it appears to be no solution. My main question is to the minister of health. What recognition is there within the health system in Alberta for this kind of situation?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, these are difficult situations. There are very many complex needs in the area of long-term care. Our first and most immediate concern is ensuring that the individual's complex health needs are being met, and I'm pleased that the individual here, the father, is getting the care that he needs.

As continuing care reform moves forward, Mr. Speaker, we are working with operators to develop new housing operations that will recognize these types of situations that will allow families not to be split but to be able to be closer together. There are a number of examples of this throughout the province. For example, in Calgary Wentworth Court and Colonel Belcher offer long-term care and assisted living within the same facility. In the Capital health region Kensington provides the same service. Also here in the city of Edmonton, in Mill Woods, Shepherd's Care offers assisted living that's located physically next door to a long-term care facility.

Operators throughout the province are moving towards this type of concept, recognizing, again, the importance of keeping families together. So in the future, Mr. Speaker, I do see more such facilities being built to accommodate those types of needs.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you. My first supplemental question is also to the same minister. Given that the mother has been recently assessed as very depressed, are there things that can be done in order to help her?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm hesitant to comment on the mental condition of the mother in this particular case not knowing all of the details nor being qualified to do so, but I would suggest that if she has seen a physician and has been diagnosed with depression, she does through her family physician seek appropriate access to mental health care.

Also, Mr. Speaker, if the depression is related to her concern, with her anxiety associated with being separated from her husband, family members are always welcome in long-term care centres to participate in the day-to-day care planning for their loved ones. They can even participate in the care activities themselves, which of course allows them to spend more time together. Long-term care centres don't have visiting hours, so at any time certainly this family member can come and visit the resident of the facility.

Finally, spouses and family members are always welcome to participate in resident family councils, Mr. Speaker, and these councils operate informally with long-term care operators to allow families to work as a group with the operators in improving the quality of care for their loved ones.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Southern Alberta Institute of Technology is considering a 27.6 percent tuition hike over three years. This hike is being blamed in part on inadequate provincial funding. My questions are to the Minister of Learning.

Does the minister consider that the government's tuition policy is working successfully when students face increases of this magnitude?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under the existing tuition fee policy that includes a tuition fee cap, the jurisdictions, the postsecondary institutions, do have the ability to raise it by $276 this year, $284 next year, which is the hard cap on the tuition increases. SAIT has put forward a possibility for the next three years of increasing it by the maximum amount allowable. That is what has come out in the newspaper. Obviously, this is something that has to go before the students' associations. It has to go before the board of governors themselves. A key thing to remember here is that the average tuition at SAIT is still considerably less than the average tuition at a college or university.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. To the same minister: when will the province take the pressure off tuition by creating a long-term funding plan for our postsecondary schools that will provide adequate, stable, and appropriate funding? We need a plan.

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, tonight in the debate on Bill 43 you'll see part of that plan. On our three-year business plan that will be coming forward with the budget you'll see another very integral part of that plan.

But I will just bring to the attention of the Assembly something that came out, actually, today that's called the Education Indicators in Canada. What this shows is the percent change in public expenditures in education, which included both K to 12 and postsecondary education, between '97 and '98 and 2001 and 2002. In Alberta it went up 19 percent in public funding. That's from all sources. Nineteen percent, Mr. Speaker.

I was asked a question yesterday by the same member about Newfoundland. Well, Mr. Speaker, during the same time frame, where ours went up 19 percent, Newfoundland's has dropped 17 percent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. I'll remind him: they cut postsecondary schools by 20 percent.

Again to the Minister of Learning: will the government at least undertake the long-term review of postsecondary schools as recommended in the Learning Commission?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, we are currently looking at the recommendations of the Learning Commission. We have had extensive debate and extensive collaboration amongst the postsecondary learning system on Bill 43. We've had it on the Renner report on postsecondary funding, which was out about a year ago, so there's been a lot of consultation that has occurred.

Mr. Speaker, there is one other point that I really want to throw in here as well, and that's something that always seems to be brought up in the Legislative Assembly also, which is the level of debt. Interestingly enough, in the same document that I was talking about, the second lowest level of debt after five years of graduation is in Alberta, with the average amount of about $6,200. So five years after graduation our people are out there getting jobs, paying off their student loans, and the average debt is $6,200.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Timber Allocation in Northern Alberta

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. For quite some time now the issue of timber allocation in northern Alberta has been put on hold pending the outcome of negotiations on the softwood lumber dispute. A number of mills in my area as well as others elsewhere are struggling with their timber supply, particularly in light of wood loss through recent forest fires. I understand that some decisions have finally been made, and I wonder if the minister could tell us what these are.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before in this House, forestry continues to play a very important role in our overall economic diversification plan in Alberta. It's over an $8 billion industry, and over 50,000 people are employed in that industry.

Most recently we are facing some challenges in the industry, and one is, of course, the softwood lumber negotiations and the lack of an agreement. We've been waiting close to two years now for an agreement to be in place in order to allocate some resources that we have. We have now decided that we can't wait any longer. We have come to a solution that balances the need of Alberta industry and deals with the softwood concerns at the same time. We've done this by selling wood based on market prices, and the department has decided to allocate over 400,000 cubic metres of timber in the Grande Prairie area, Peace River area, Fort McMurray, Athabasca, Lac La Biche, Slave Lake, and High Prairie also through public auction and direct sales.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new agreement involves management goals that likely will affect the oil and gas industry as well, and I wonder if the minister could tell us what those implications might be.

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, with most of the harvesting that takes place through the forest management agreements, commercial timber permits, and also the quota system, there is a multi-use area in relation to development of resources, and that will continue. I mentioned earlier in the House, Mr. Speaker, that we are not allocating an area that covers about 350,000 square kilometres north of the Chinchaga area. That will be done in co-operation. We are putting the committee in place, as I mentioned before, and we will work with the stakeholders to ensure that we continue developing resources as required and maintaining the balance between the economy and the environment.

Mr. Friedel: Mr. Speaker, the minister mentioned working with stakeholders. Is this going to mean any new processes in stakeholder feedback?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, we have, of course, a number of examples in relation to developing multi-use areas. The Bighorn backcountry is one example. The Ghost-Waiparous, which we're working on right now, is another example. We may use some of the same processes in order to achieve what we need to achieve.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of four to participate in Members' Statements.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

(reversion)

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to rise today to recognize two individuals that work really hard on behalf of their constituents. First of all is Dan MacLennan. He's the representative from AUPE who comes in and makes sure that the debate in the Legislature reflects the interests of his members. I'd like Dan to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the second person is a young southern Albertan who is now representing the students of the province through CAUS and the work that they do on behalf of university students. I'd ask Melanee Thomas to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Chinchaga Wildland Park

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a link in the ever important boreal forest, the Chinchaga wilderness region represents one of the best and last opportunities for conservation and sustainable development left in the world. The importance of the Chinchaga rests on the fact that it contains a wide diversity of ecosystems including old-growth forests, marshes, lakes, and peatlands as well as diminishing wildlife populations such as the grizzly bear, woodland caribou, wolverine, and a variety of birds that depend on the area to nest and raise their young.

A report released by Greenpeace and ForestEthics entitled Chinchaga Wilderness documents the ecological values of the Chinchaga region and demonstrates that it is an endangered forest area requiring immediate protection. The Chinchaga wilderness is considered an endangered forest because it contains critical forest fragments of remaining old-growth and undisturbed forest in an ecoregion in which less than 2 percent of the total area is protected and less than 30 percent remains functionally intact. It also contains habitat for focal conservation species, being grizzly bear, woodland caribou, wolverine, and migratory birds, all of which are declining in Alberta as a result of industrial activities in the forest. If not protected adequately, the Chinchaga will continue to face a variety of threats that will eventually lead to its degradation and to the loss of this vital ecosystem here in Canada.

Logging presents just one serious threat to almost all of Alberta's northern forests. This practice removes old-growth habitat, organic material and nutrients, and fragments in the forest. Site preparation following logging destroys soil structure, and the use of herbicides alters the natural succession of the forest over time.

The roads necessary for logging are also detrimental to wildlife. Studies of the effects of linear disturbance on caribou in Alberta indicate the serious effects that oil and gas development can have on wildlife, supporting the need for protected areas to prevent further decline of caribou populations.

We urge the government to support the Chinchaga.

Tom Couture

Mrs. Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today and recognize and congratulate an outstanding Albertan and Canadian.

Mr. Tom Couture of Calgary has recently completed a challenging, cross-Canada cycling expedition along the Trans Canada Trail, which spans this great country. He began his journey on May 10 in St. John's, Newfoundland, and concluded his five-month trek at mile zero of the Trans Canada Trail in Victoria on October 12, Thanksgiving weekend.

Tom, who works as a ground logistics/helicopter co-ordinator for Mount Assiniboine Lodge, has previously traveled many other countries by bike. His passion for cycling coupled with his interest in the Trans Canada Trail made this adventure decision an easy one to make. However, the journey would prove to be harder as Tom faced many long, solitary, and sometimes very challenging hours on his bike.

The cycling trip captured the attention of thousands of Canadians. His progress, as well as daily updates of Tom's experiences, was posted on the Trans Canada Trail web site. Canadians from coast to coast logged on to the site to read his lively updates about the countryside, its people, their hospitality, and the culture of our great nation.

In addition to documenting his personal experiences, Tom, who carried some of the latest computer and mapping technology with him on his journey, also documented many of the physical characteristics of the trail. His equipment system included GPS as well as a cycle computer, which tracked position, distance, altitude, gradient of slope, daily temperature, and Tom's power production and heart rate. This information will be added to a database about the Trans Canada Trail and will be used to generate maps and provide other users of the trail with information they can use when planning their respective trips.

Tom met many Canadians while on his trip and considers these interactions as one of the highlights of his adventure. He believes he is very fortunate to have been able to explore our awe-inspiring country.

Please join me in congratulating Tom on his endeavour and thanking him for his contributions towards the Trans Canada Trail. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Michener Centre Administration Building

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. She is a grand old lady loved by thousands of people in Alberta. She started her career in 1913 providing a good education for young women. After 1919 she provided a loving home for shell-shocked veterans of World War I, and after that she embraced mentally handicapped children who needed a provincial home. This grand old lady has now been seriously injured, and she's depending on the people and the government of Alberta to restore her to her original elegance.

This is the story of the distinguished Michener services south administration building, that was damaged on June 18 after being struck by lightning and having her fourth floor and part of her third floor burn down. The Michener services building is cherished by many who support the repair and restoration of this heritage resource that is recognized for outstanding architecture and provincially significant history. It is one of the last of the historical public buildings in Red Deer.

Last week I tabled a petition with 5,255 signatures and over 151 letters asking the provincial government to rebuild and restore this building. If preservation of our heritage is important to us as Albertans, then it is important for us to restore this building.

The Alberta Department of Infrastructure is waiting for a final engineering report on the strength of the steel structure to determine if it is structurally sound and a final report on the cost of building and restoring. Local businesses, contractors, institutions, and Red Deer city council have agreed to come together to discuss the future of this heritage site with the Department of Infrastructure and the Department of Community Development.

When all the reports are in place, if the building is structurally sound and if the costs can be met, a decision will be made to restore the building, named in honour of Governor General Roland Michener and one of the first buildings in Alberta to be designated a municipal historical resource under the Historical Resources Act.

Firefighters fought courageously to save this landmark. It is now up to the people of the community and the government to fight courageously to rebuild and restore this grand old lady to her former grandeur.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Drug Addiction

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of Alberta's biggest issues is crime and punishment, most of it directly or indirectly associated with drugs and drug addictions. It is clear that when we add up the costs of dealing with drug problems in our society – the cost of police, jails, our justice system, judges, lawyers, prison guards, social workers, a society in fear, extra money for insurance, security, safety, locks on our doors, the homeless situation that is created, and most importantly the human toll, lost people who might otherwise have been good, talented contributors to society – well, the cost of dealing with drug problems in our society is practically criminal, you might say.

Extrapolating from U.S. figures, losses associated with drug addiction in Alberta may be as high as $1.5 billion per year. That's $15 billion per decade alone in Alberta, money diverted away from economic development, education, and so on, and diverted into population control and the big stick of enforcement. I wonder why we as a society haven't decided to just tackle and solve the underlying disease of drug addiction instead of just spending so much money treating the symptoms, beating down the so-called bad people, trying to control the uncontrollable. Would a little more carrot and a little less stick be a better direction? How about a medical cure, a pill a day to keep the cravings away?

Recently, Mr. Speaker, I tabled documents on reward deficiency syndrome, the best explanation I have heard about why people get addicted to drugs in the first place – it's a medical problem – as well as news on a controversial new drug called HC 18, which is derived from a controversial old drug called Ibogaine, which is reported to be able to cure most forms of drug addiction in one single dose. Since then, I have heard of a few other possible drug addiction cures, but the most striking thing in common for any of these potential solutions is the almost complete lack of interest in funding they seem to be receiving from the medical research community worldwide.

Alberta is in a unique position, unlike almost anywhere in the world. In the same manner that President Kennedy decided to do the impossible and put a man on the moon, why couldn't we in Alberta decide to find a cure for drug addiction? It's a cure that the whole world desperately needs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to present with your permission 1,264 Albertans who petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to “introduce and pass a Resident’s Bill of Rights for persons living in nursing homes in the province of Alberta.” I’m not looking to revert to Introduction of Guests but would like to mention three people supportive of this petition in the gallery: Carol Wodak, Linda Fillmore, and Murray Carson.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise to table a petition signed by 196 Albertans from various communities spread across this province who are petitioning this Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to recognize and value the contributions and sacrifices the seniors have made in building the Province of Alberta, and treat them with due respect and dignity by reversing those policies that cause unnecessary financial hardship for them and undermine their quality of life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I am presenting a petition signed by exactly 1,000 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the government of Alberta to “introduce legislation declaring a moratorium on any future expansion of Confined Feeding Operations, with a view to phasing out existing operations within the next three years.”

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased today to table the 30th annual report, 2003, for the Alberta Law Foundation pursuant to section 124(2) of the Alberta Legal Profession Act. The Law Foundation is an important stakeholder for Alberta Justice through its commitment to conducting research and making recommendations on law reform and the administration of justice. The foundation is an important supporter of the public legal education programs, of Alberta aboriginal law programs, and of the legal aid program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with five copies of a letter sent to me by a constituent, Donna Shannon, at her request. Her letter shows support for several areas of the Learning Commission’s report, which she feels benefits both students and teachers; however, she does have three specific concerns with the report.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. The first is a letter from Martin Linlove, the senior sales manager for the Shaw Conference Centre, outlining his concerns that "should Alberta's Commission on Learning Report – Recommendation 72 be ratified, all teachers' conventions will be eliminated." He feels these "provide significant economic impact for the downtown core" and asks for support to retain this institution.

My final selection of letters on Bill 43, written by people attending the November 8 Get Political party that I hosted. The first is from Duncan Taylor, who has concerns about unpredictability of tuition, comparing it to electrical deregulation.

From Samantha Power a powerful letter on the need for higher education to achieve a diversified economy and supporting the need for arts and fine arts as well as engineering.

From Chris Wudarck concerns over tuition increases up to 5 percent after the 30 percent cap is lifted.

From Morgan Smith making the point: "If debt is so bad for the Alberta Government, why is it so good for me?"

From Laurie Savard, who talks about working full-time while going to school full-time.

Finally, from Amy Binder, who asked the government to recognize "the long-term implications of preventing access to education."

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to table a letter addressed to the Member for Calgary-Shaw and CCed to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. It's from a Sandi Johnson, registered nurse and bachelor of nursing, and in it she expresses her overwhelming disbelief and fury that our Government would allow and actually encourage the Employer's . . . bargaining group . . . to promote and stand fast on a proposal package that would take nursing and health care back more than 30 years.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling

Tabling Documents

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to ask the House leaders to get together one of these days and have a good discussion about what the purpose of tablings is all about, but when we start tabling copies of letters that were sent to one member and then another member tables them, I think we've gone way beyond what was intended to be tabled. So I make the plea to the three House leaders over the winter to get together and have a discussion on this. This is way beyond it.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, did you have tablings?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, I do. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. These are letters from Cheryl Androschuk and Nicole Bownes, and they are from the constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona. They are copied to my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview. They are expressing their concern with the current negotiations between the United Nurses of Alberta and the Provincial Health Authorities of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings. The first set contains two letters which I have selected from hundreds of letters that I've received through my constituency office from registered nurses across this province. These two letters are from two registered nurses: Cynthia Perkins and Beryl Scott. They are asking the government to show due respect to nurses as professionals.

The second tabling is a letter from the president of the Alberta Graduate Council indicating that the amendments to Bill 43 partially address the concerns of graduate students and that further revisions are required to fully address them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from the Coalition of Seniors Advocates Association dated November 20, 2003, and addressed to all members of the Legislature. COSAA is deeply concerned with the continuing reduction of seniors' benefits, and they're being subjected to discriminatory double means tests.

The second tabling is a government of Alberta news release dated August 22, 2003, titled Market Adjustment Program Supports Alberta's Cattle Industry.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Part of the addendum to House leaders is: why would an hon. member want to stand up in the House and table a press release already issued by the government? It's part of the public record. This has got to be sorted out.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two letters I am tabling today. The first is written to me, tabled with permission, and it's urging me to work to "immediately protect the Bighorn as a Wildland Park."

The second is a copy of a letter to the Minister of Seniors which I was copied expressing concern over the increase in long-term care rates.

Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 50

Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move second reading of the Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003.

It's a great pleasure today to rise and speak on Bill 50, Mr. Speaker. The intent of the proposed bill is to make the Wildlife Act more effective in a number of areas, including enforcement and administration. In terms of enforcement Alberta will have more effective ways to deter and respond to wildlife poaching and to better protect and manage wildlife.

A substantial increase in penalties will help deter this illegal activity. With the amendments Alberta will have among the highest poaching fines in Canada. All wildlife offences will fall into one of two penalty ranges: up to $50,000 and/or 12 months in prison or up to $100,000 and/or 24 months in prison. More offences, such as those involving grizzly bears, will be included in the highest penalty range of $100,000 or two years in prison. Increasing the fines for wildlife violations sends a clear message to the public and to the courts that Alberta takes such violations very seriously. I believe that once people know that poaching violations can lead to significant penalties in Alberta, this will act as an effective deterrent.

Further to the enforcement side of the act, Alberta will have the authorization to seize and retain equipment used by poachers. All the provinces will have reciprocal agreements with other jurisdictions to see that those convicted of serious wildlife violations elsewhere would not be able to get hunting licences in Alberta or vice versa. People who have not paid fines for angling violations will not be able to obtain a hunting licence until the angling fines have been paid and taken care of.

A final amendment relates to enforcement and improving the effectiveness of the act, which comes to illegal selling of wildlife. For example, advertising wildlife for sale would be considered an act of trafficking in wildlife.

Another key amendment of the proposed act involves the reduction in wildlife/human encounters. The act gives Alberta the authority to issue cleanup orders for situations where people leave out food or garbage that might attract wildlife. For example, food and garbage are the source of most bear/human problems. Cleanup orders will help protect bears as well as elk, deer, and other species that come into conflict with humans because of the food sources that lure wildlife to settlement areas.

Mr. Speaker, there are a few other options, administrative amendments to this act regarding traps and certain licences and permits. However, I've highlighted the key amendments for you. Alberta is a very big province, and it is impossible to monitor everyone in the wilderness areas. Therefore, the Wildlife Amendment Act will introduce additional, practical tools so the province can better protect and manage Alberta wildlife.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm having to compete hard here to get on the floor against my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, so I'm sure he'll be speaking later.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 50, the Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003. In fact, this is an amending act that is supported by many of us in the Official Opposition because it does address a number of problems that have been addressed in the past. The member has gone through some of those on the list. I'll try not to repeat him as I go through what my notes are offering up.

Essentially, we're looking in some sort of general areas around penalties for poaching, wildlife/human conflicts, escape of captive animals, removal of traps, trafficking in wildlife, guide designations, dog training and trialing, exemptions for employees, circumstances where fines are not paid, reciprocal agreements, seized items, and access to warrants and authorizations. So it's covering a fair amount of ground here, and thus far I haven't identified anything that really jumps out at me as being of great concern.

Just a couple of questions. When we look at the escape of captive animals, this is allowing game animal production farmers to attempt to recapture escaped animals. It's also requiring the operator of premises like a zoo or a game farm or something from which an animal escapes to make a reasonable capture. I'm wondering if this is cross-jurisdictional. Does Community Development have jurisdiction over things like zoos? How do those things work together?

On the removal of traps I'm wondering if there was consultation with aboriginal groups there, because it seems to be indicating that where a trapper has exclusive rights to trap in an area, the act provides that they may remove the traps found in that area or direct someone else to do it. So what's the conversation that has gone on or what kind of consultations or how much effort was put into holding a consultation with aboriginal groups?

I'm also interested in the dog training and trialing. It's not prohibiting activities in this area. [interjection] I'm sorry; the current legislation doesn't prohibit activities in this area, but it looks like a review of the activity has been completed. There was consultation with the dog trainers and trialers, and regulatory changes happened in 2001. So I'm taking it that these amendments are in fact adopting and incorporating all of these changes into the act and simplifying regulations. If I can just get confirmation on that, please. I wouldn't have thought that this was enough of an activity to have required special attention, but I'm obviously not up on how much dog training and trialing there is.

So I'm willing to support the recommendations that are being made here, particularly the provision of authority to officers to order the cleanup or removal of items that may be attracting bears to an area. To not have had that in legislation prior to this must have been an immense frustration to wildlife officers that are trying to protect both the wildlife and the humans from each other.

I'm sure that those that are trying to work on poaching appreciate the inclusion of advertising of wildlife for sale as an act of trafficking. That should be helpful in the arsenal to deal with illegal poaching and trafficking in wildlife animals.

So those are just a few questions that I wanted to raise. I'm happy to support this at this point, in second reading.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also a pleasure at this time to participate in the debate on Bill 50, the Wildlife Amendment Act, as proposed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. Certainly, in that constituency there are a lot of very responsible hunters and outdoors persons who have a great deal of respect and admiration not only for the outdoors but for the wildlife. When you look at the Globe and Mail today, you would almost think from the front page that there would be no need for legislation such as this, whenever a guy is reading about obesity in bears. Who would have known? But here we are.

Certainly, there are requirements in this province for this legislation. I was listening to the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. Two years ago I went to his constituency and paid for a permit, $5, for a Christmas tree, and we had a very pleasant day selecting a Christmas tree from West Yellowhead. After we cut down our tree and had it trimmed and ready for the trip back to the city, we got talking about the hunting season that had just ended, and I was surprised to be told this story, Mr. Speaker, and it was in regard to a poaching incident.

Poachers had been driving very close to Jasper, the townsite, and they shot an elk. They put it in the back of a pickup, and they went to Edson with this elk. Somehow the wardens had placed a transmitter earlier in the summer on this elk. The hunters missed this. When the animal was butchered for its meat, it was also missed, and to their credit the wildlife officers traced the remains of this animal, the meat, to a freezer, and the story goes that it was in a freezer east of Edson. This individual was rightfully charged. That story is not only an indication of how far people will go to poach, but it also indicates just how effective some of our enforcement agencies can be.

Now, when we look at the amendments, we're looking at improvements. We are looking at a proposal to decrease penalty ranges. With regard to poaching, however, we are increasing penalties for corporate and repeat offenders as well as those convicted of offences involving key species such as a grizzly bear.

Bill 50 is also proposing to provide authority to an officer to order the cleanup of garbage on sites that would reduce the potential conflict between wildlife and humans; for instance, if hikers were to stumble upon some refuse or whatever on a hiking trail.

Now, we're also looking here at proposals that Albertans must obtain a licence prior to using a trap to recapture escaped animals in order to prevent unlawful trapping, and I certainly think that's a very good idea. I'm not going to remind the Assembly or bore the Assembly with the story of the teenager who was trapped in a bear trap. I'm sure the hon. Member for West Yellowhead is quite familiar with that teenager.

We're also looking at better ways to identify advertising of wildlife for sale as an act of trafficking in order to combat illegal trafficking of wildlife. We are looking at changes to treat guides' designations equal to licences and permits so that key provisions of the act are available to deal with illegal behaviour. We are also looking here, as I understand it, at some changes to the rules regarding dog training in certain areas.

We are looking at exemptions to the Wildlife Act to recognize employees performing sanctioned duties that are contrary to the act. If, for the record, the hon. member perhaps at committee could explain this a little further, I would be very grateful.

Also, we're looking at proposals here to take away access to all recreational licences such as hunting that are issued under the Wildlife Act as well as licences issued under the Fisheries (Alberta) Act for people with outstanding fines. There are certain rules here regarding the suspension of serious violators, creating a significant deterrent effect.

There are certainly expansions here for various authorities. We're going to have the expansion of the use of warrants in investigations of offences under this act.

All in all, upon review of this Bill 50 I think it is quite acceptable, and I, too, am going to recommend, the same as the Member for Edmonton-Centre, that we endorse this Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if there are questions to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

If not, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Please proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 50, the Wildlife Amendment Act. I want to say from the outset that the provisions of this bill as they stand are something that the New Democrat opposition can support. It's clear that increasing fines for poaching is one component of effectively dealing with the threat to our wildlife, and certainly strengthening the authority of the fish and wildlife officers to deal with offences is another laudable goal. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, in and of themselves they are not sufficient to deal with the problem facing our wildlife, and I'd like to talk a little bit about that.

The highlights of the act include a substantial increase in penalties to deter poaching. For example, the maximum fine for poaching grizzly bears will be as high as $100,000. The authority to seize and retain equipment used by poachers is good. The capacity to cooperate with other jurisdictions so that those convicted of serious wildlife violations elsewhere won't be able to get a hunting licence in Alberta and vice versa is good, and the authority to issue cleanup orders for situations where people leave out food or garbage that might attract wildlife to help reduce wildlife and human conflicts is good.

The question is, Mr. Speaker: if you raise a penalty and no one is in the forest to enforce the penalty, is there a sound? Is there, in fact, enforcement? This is the real fly in the ointment as far as this bill is concerned, and that is that the resources are not there to properly enforce it. Just jacking up fines doesn't help you catch perpetrators. I think it's really the fear of being caught that is the main deterrent, and there's a really serious problem.

I'd like to quote a news release issued by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. The president, Mr. MacLennan, says that while it is a positive idea to introduce a law raising fines for poachers, the department has cut operating funds to front-line Fish and Wildlife enforcement officers to the point that they are unable to enforce the law as the public deserves.

He indicates that "operating budgets for fish and wildlife enforcement districts across Alberta have been slashed" between 20 and 50 percent. "Obviously, a commitment to enforcement means we have to pay for enforcement," says Mr. MacLennan.

You know, it goes on. It talks about the government's promises to improve enforcement.

This laudable goal cannot be achieved when Fish and Wildlife Officers are only allowed to respond to specific complaints and are no longer allowed to conduct the routine patrols that have nabbed most poachers.

MacLennan goes on and says that the department's own statistics tell the story.

In the 2000/2001 fiscal year, Fish and Wildlife Officers made 230,000 contacts with the public. In 2001/2002 [the following year] that was down to 116,000, and in the 2002/2003 fiscal year it has fallen to 70,000.

So I think that that's a serious problem.

The Alberta Game Warden Association also has serious concerns, and it indicates that there are a number of impacts being felt by fish and wildlife officers due almost exclusively to the lack of available funding. One, the reduction or elimination of proactive or preventative enforcement compliance efforts. Two, district equipment being inoperable and needing repair or replacement. Equipment being unsafe or unreliable to conduct patrols and compliance checks. No funding for specialized patrols, operations, or programs such as helicopter or horse patrols, surrogate operations, night flights, or identified priority fish or wildlife enforcement programs. Reduced ability to meet personal and public expectations for an adequate level of service due to vacancies in fish and wildlife officer, district administration, wildlife and fisheries biologist positions, office closures, district budgetary restrictions. Unable to replace an older vehicle fleet thus placing a larger financial burden on district budgets for maintenance and, in turn, on costs. Reduction in funding for surveys of fish and wildlife population, and they are thus unable to accurately allocate resources. Inadequate funding to provide producers with fencing needs to mitigate ungulate damage due to stacked feed. No funding for officer transfers or development.

They're unable to meet expectations outlined in the performance management agreement and learning plans. No resources or support services to provide education initiatives. Less monitoring of commercial fisheries. Unable to gather intelligence to be utilized in targeting serious resource abusers. Loss of credibility to the public, other agency stakeholder groups, and even other divisions within the department. The abandonment of the MDMRS radio system, thus jeopardizing officer safety and increased communications expenses.

It goes on to say that the officers feel demoralized and worthless.

Staff surveys in health and wellness programs do not compensate for the officers' dedication and commitment to the protection of Alberta's natural resources. They can't meet the obligations of occupational health and safety and so on. There are no injections of funds for specialized programs such as chronic wasting disease collection and West Nile virus testing thus placing the burden of cost on the divisional and district budgets. There is no dedicated budget to support the delivery of programs such as bear response teams and surveillance operations that by default are charged to already taxed district budgets.

Mr. Speaker, this general problem was related in an article in one of the newspapers. There's quite a good article that dealt with the shortfalls in the department.

So, Mr. Speaker, while the New Democrat opposition is prepared to support this bill, we believe that it is incumbent on the minister and the government to follow through on the commitments that they have made to increase funding to adequate levels in this department so that enforcement can actually take place. You know, there are some places where you can cut and you'll get an immediate response. If you cut in health care, if you cut in education, there's generally a lot of reaction, and the public is aware of it. There are other places in the government where you can cut and there won't be an immediate outcry, and this might be one of them. The fact remains that the damage that is done is sometimes very long term and very difficult to correct.

It's not a question necessarily that if there's no immediate outcry, everything is okay, because I think that there are lots of examples which indicate that compliance on general patrols has been curtailed. There is just a long list of evidence, Mr. Speaker, that the department is unable to do its job because of funding constraints, and this is probably the most crucial thing. I would rather have an adequate budget for this branch of the department than have all the penalties in the world that you want to stack up here, because if you can't catch the people, you can't enforce a higher penalty, and people can operate with impunity irrespective of the penalty. You could put people in jail for life, and if they know that they're not going to be caught, it's not going to affect their behaviour.

So something, I think, needs to be done here. I will be looking forward to the minister's comments with respect to how he is in practice going to adequately fund his department, and I hope that other members of the government, in particular the Treasury Board, will support the minister when he does come forward because these resources are an indispensable part of Albertans' birthright and they deserve to be protected.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for five minutes if required.

Shall I call on the hon. Member for West Yellowhead to close the debate?

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to answer a number of the questions that were asked, and if I don't catch them all, I'll catch them in Committee of the Whole.

I guess the first question that was asked by the Member for Edmonton-Centre is on the aspect of escaped animals that were in captivity. I guess the amendment to section 1(2)(c) clearly denies the use of a trap to recapture escaped animals without first obtaining a licence.

On the other aspect, the removal of traps, as you realize, in the Hinton area we have a grizzly bear study. We use a lot of traps there to catch hair samples and that so we can develop a DNA sample and find out how many bears we've got in the area. But from the aboriginal side the amendment to this act requires that a trapper first have the grounds and the belief that traps were unlawfully set and report such traps to an officer. So if an aboriginal person is trapping for his own food, he's allowed to on his trapline, but if he's trapping for some other reason or if he feels some other person is in there trapping illegally, all he has to do is go to the officer to look at that, and they will look after that.

On the dog training and trailing, amendments to this act provide for the dog training and trailing, as the case may be, to be prohibited in certain areas if such areas are specified in the regulation. So it's just getting more site specific because of the aspect of, specifically, grizzly bears that we're looking at. Of course, a lot of times when we're going out there, we've had certain dogs that are trained to try to find bear scat, and then from that, when they analyze the bear scat, they're able to develop a listing of DNA, so then they know the different areas. That also helps from the aspect, number one, of reinforcing the different populations and the different areas in which we have bears.

So at this time I'd move second reading of Bill 50. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 50 read a second time]

Bill 51 Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate November 20: Mr. VanderBurg]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you. Just to continue with Bill 51, I had made my comments at that time. I'd just like to hear if anyone else in the Assembly has any comments to Bill 51, and we'll continue with the debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill 51, the Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act, 2003, at first glance looks like something that is quite acceptable, but when you have a closer look, I think we are going away from being transparent and accountable into a process that I certainly won't describe as secret, the budgeting process, but the deletion or the repealing of section 42 is what I refer directly to. One considers that in section 42:

(1) All salaries, expenses and expenditures incurred by the Board in the performance of its powers and duties shall be charged against money provided in accordance with this section.

And it goes on.

(2) In each fiscal year, funds equivalent to the estimated net expenditures to be incurred in the year by the Board shall be provided from money voted by [this body].

It goes on in (3) and (4).

(4) In preparing its estimate of net expenditures to be incurred, the Board shall have regard to its estimate of any deficit or surplus existing at the end of each fiscal year from funds for such expenditures received from the Government in previous years.

We are going to have a process now where the board's funding will be just part of the ministry's budget. Whenever someone looks at a ministry's budget or if someone is curious and wants to know where tax dollars are being spent in this province, well, they're told to use the freedom of information laws and find out, but there are so many exclusions to that that I don't think this part of Bill 51 is a good idea. I don't know why the board's funding would be just placed globally in the budget. There's no scrutiny, there's no accountability there, there's no mechanism, and I think that is just, plain and simple, Mr. Speaker, wrong.

The membership of the board. Now, we're having these issues around accountability, and we're expanding the board here from five to six members. I would like to know through the course of this debate: why do we need to expand the board? The board, if this bill were to become law, would not have more than six members, and the board in the past – the current legislation reads that it “shall consist of not more than 5 members.” Why do we need to expand membership of this board? I find it quite a contradiction that on one hand we're expanding the membership of the board – the criteria of how these people are selected is another issue – when there's obviously going to be a cost involved in that, but at the same time we are removing from public scrutiny, in my view, by repealing section 42, an opportunity for scrutiny of the funding.

So those would be my reasons, Mr. Speaker, for having reservations about this bill, and during the course of the debate I'm sure there will be very valid explanations as to why this is necessary. But those are my concerns, and I appreciate the time to get them on the record.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. My concern around Bill 51, Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act, is the section around money and the control of money, and I'm curious as to why section 42 is being repealed completely. That was addressing that salaries and expenses and expenditures incurred by the board in the performance of its duties could be charged against money that was provided; in other words, against a budget that had been approved; that in each fiscal year funds equivalent to the net expenditures were to be provided from money voted by the Legislature for that purpose from the general revenue fund; that the Provincial Treasurer would advance to the board the funds that were provided by the vote and then gives installment dates and things like that; and that in preparing its estimate of net expenditures to be incurred, the Board shall have regard to its estimate of any deficit or surplus existing at the end of each fiscal year from funds for such expenditures received from the Government in previous years; in other words, to incorporate the surplus or deficit.

I'm very cautious around changes in structure, especially around changes in control of budgets, where this government is concerned, so I am seeking clarification on why the government would be choosing to do this. Certainly, a budget is how the government can control the operations of a department or an arm's-length agency. That's what we're dealing with here, and it looks to me like they're pulling the operation of the agency closer under the wing of the ministry.

I think that needs to lead us to a larger discussion about whether that's a good idea or not. How independent do we need this board to be? Does it at times have to criticize the government? If it's concerned about whether it's going to have enough budget next time to do something, will it be able to make those criticisms with vigour, or will they be pulling their punches, so to speak, for fear that they might be downsized to smaller and draftier office space or have some of their other expenditures limited?

I know that when I was with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues – and government was much more generous in those days – we were very aware that that was how government ultimately could control us. We had fairly strong enabling legislation, but ultimately if we didn't have enough money in the budget, then we couldn't contract with outside consultants for additional research or publish the reports that we wrote, and we were writing some very good ones. So that's how the activities of the organization get controlled.

I'm cautious and curious as to why that would be abolished, because at this point that would mean that the budget allocation is completely inside of the ministry that this board is attached to. I think that's problematic, but I am interested in hearing a strong defence from the sponsoring member as to why these choices have been made. I think it's about trusting this government, and I haven't had a lot of good examples in my experience with the government about why I should be trusting them.

When I see moves like this made, it's usually a precursor to something else, and certainly when we have a board that's in a position to criticize or make recommendations that government probably should be responding to and when I see changes made that bring it closer underneath the control of the ministry or the minister, that's a way of muzzling the work of the agency. If you're going to change it that much, well, fess up and come right out and say: “We don't want it to do this anymore,” or “We don't like it,” or “It's criticizing us too much,” or “It's going too much in a certain direction. Let's abolish the whole thing and start over.” I just don't like things being done in a behind-the-scenes sort of way, and that's what I'm seeing here.

Additionally, I'm wondering whether, when the bill was opened up, instituting and incorporating into the legislation, into this amending act, there was consideration of incorporating a section that would do something like a health impact assessment. Certainly, that's something that my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview has been a proponent of, and I would like to see that sort of filter, a screen, incorporated into all legislation. This seems to be an excellent place to start.

Aside from the recommendation coming from my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview, knowing the government isn't probably going to view that with too much of a friendly eye, did it occur to anybody else? Was it brought up by anybody else? Was it considered at all when you looked to open up this act? You don't open up acts without a good reason, and you want to accomplish certain things. We're not doing very much here. We're clarifying the board's administrative role in that it can be dictated additional responsibilities. It's changing the board membership to add one more person to the board, and that's interesting too. It puts me in mind of previous Prime Minister Mulroney adding Senators in order to get what he wanted out of a piece of legislation, having a piece of legislation pass. Is that what's anticipated here?

The third piece, of course, is closer control of the budget and moving it under the ministry.

I'd like to know why these things are happening or at least a defence from the sponsoring member raised to my concerns, because I'm going to have trouble supporting this without some good reasoning here.

Thanks for the opportunity to speak in second reading.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in.

Anybody else who wishes to speak on the bill?

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne to close debate.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for those comments. Some of the comments raised in the point on membership. I think that it was very clear when I introduced this that added duties were being brought forward to the NRCB and that expanded full-time membership was needed to meet the workload. Just one thing that comes to mind is precious mines and minerals in the province of Alberta. There's really no organization that we have to fully deal with applications. These may be things that come in the future to the NRCB.

On section 42 comments were brought by both members opposite. It was clear, again in my previous comments, that to make the administrative role match that of the administrative procedures, financial procedures of the ministry were needed, but I'll get further information and comment in Committee of the Whole on that.

With regard to the health impact statement I'll comment on that as well in Committee of the Whole.

So at this time, Mr. Speaker, I'd call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 51 read a second time]

Bill 44 Personal Information Protection Act

[Adjourned debate November 19: Mr. Stevens]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments about the principles that Bill 44, the Personal Information Protection Act, is based upon. The importance and the growing concern about personal information make this a most appropriate bill for us to be dealing with at this time. I was listening to a radio report that indicated that one of the most popular Christmas purchases this year was a shredder, that people concerned about their personal information being discovered through the trash and garbage collection services were buying and giving shredders for Christmas.

Ms Blakeman: Does it come in designer colours?

Dr. Massey: I'm not sure whether it comes in designer colours.

I also heard in another report that even the shredders were being criticized for not doing an adequate job of destroying the data that was fed into them. So there's a lot of concern out there about our personal information, and we also read the horror stories in the press about identities that have been stolen and the difficulties that that provides. The opportunities for people with motives that are not the best to do damage to our reputations – and people have suffered financial difficulties as a result of their identity being stolen – are many.

I had a bit of personal experience, Mr. Speaker, where an inmate in Grande Cache was able to access my Visa number and charge thousands of dollars' worth of flowers to my account by telephoning orders in from the Grande Cache jail and then selling those orders to his friends at a 50 percent discount. It was rather creative, but it did cause a little consternation for a while in my household.

The bill has been commented upon by the federal Privacy Commissioner, and the Standards Association has a set of principles that they put forward as being appropriate principles for privacy legislation to follow. I'll just briefly look at some of those principles, Mr. Speaker, and then I'll contrast what we find in Bill 44.

The first principle that they put forward is accountability, and that is that organizations have to be accountable for the personal information under their control and have to designate an individual or individuals who have that as a task to account for the organization's information with respect to individuals, and that is a provision of Bill 44.

A second principle is that the purposes for which the information is being collected has to be identified by the organization before or when that information is being collected.

A third and really very important principle and one where there is some concern with respect to Bill 44 is consent. The knowledge and consent of the individuals must be acquired before the information is collected or any of it is disclosed.

There is a principle that's concerned with limiting collection. That is that only the information necessary for the purposes identified by the organization shall be collected, and it has to be done by fair, of course, and lawful means. So the principle that sits underneath any piece of legislation should be to respect this notion of limiting what is collected.

The fifth principle that the association puts forward is limiting use, disclosure, and retention, and that is that the personal information shall not be used or disclosed for purposes other than that for which it is being collected except with the consent of the individual or the law. This is a concern. We all are aware of the practice of selling lists in the commercial world, where lists will be sold and, in fact, a number of businesses will have a disclaimer when they ask for your information assuring you that that information will be used for the purposes for which they've gathered it and that it won't be sold or passed on to any other organization. So the provisions that limit the use and the disclosure and the retention of information are important.

The accuracy of the information, of course, is a must. It's up to the organization that's gathering the information to make sure that that information is accurate, and there are provisions in Bill 44 that allow individuals to check on the accuracy of that information, although there are some reservations about it.

The seventh principle is with respect to safeguards, that there is a security system in place that will safeguard the information. We saw what happens when medical information can be left on a computer hard disk and then discarded. We have also seen what's happened with wireless communications now with respect to someone being able to drive down the street and pick up information from a computer with the appropriate technology and receiver system. Making sure that the information that businesses have, that individuals are in charge of, is safeguarded is really important.

The eighth principle that the association puts forward is openness: "An organization shall make readily available to individuals specific information about its policies and practices relating to the management of personal information." So there has to be a statement that has to be public, and it has to be clear how they are going to protect what they'll be doing with the information that they collect.

The ninth principle – and this is for individuals that have run into difficulty in the past – is that there has to be individual access. You have to be able to get your hands on information that an organization has about you, and you have a right as an individual to challenge the accuracy and the completeness of the information. You also should have – it should be a general principle – the power as an individual to have that information amended and made accurate.

The 10th principle that they outline is that you should be able to challenge the compliance. You should be able to challenge an organization with respect to the principles that have been listed, and that organization should have to respond to such a challenge.

So those are the 10 principles as based on the Canadian Standards Association model code for the protection of personal information, and I think it's a very comprehensive and useful set of principles to have in mind as we look at Bill 44 and pass it through the House.

Now, as I indicated, the bill has been criticized in a number of aspects. One of them is the broad authority in the bill to make regulations, and the making of regulations is a problem not only of this bill but of a great deal of the legislation that we deal with in the Assembly. I think we have . . . [Dr. Massey's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in. Anybody else wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that, in general, I would like to indicate that the Personal Information Protection Act, Bill 44, looks like it will fulfill a positive role in respect to information that might be held by organizations other than the government. I would just like to indicate that I concur with many of the comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods with respect to some of the general principles applied in this act.

I want to raise one question, Mr. Speaker, which I'm going to come back to in committee stage. Much of the language in Bill 44 mirrors that in the FOIP Act. There is a change, however, and it deals with a clause under section 20 in division 5, and it deals with the issue of disclosure with respect to people providing information without the consent of the individuals. The wording in this act is considerably more restrictive than that in the FOIP Act. The disclosure in 20(c) is quite a bit different. In the FOIP Act it has language that allows disclosure. This is in the FOIP Act, section 40(1)(e), which allows for disclosure "for the purpose of complying with an enactment of Alberta or Canada or with a treaty, arrangement or agreement made under an enactment of Alberta or Canada."

In PIPA there is no mention of an agreement, which is the critical phrase as far as union organizing is concerned, Mr. Speaker. If a union wishes to organize a workplace, it must necessarily have access to the list of employees that are eligible to join that union. This is also the case when the union is seeking its first contract. It must be able to communicate with its members with respect to the negotiations that are going on.

After that, Mr. Speaker, it's usually the norm that the contract provides language that allows the disclosure of the names of the employees of that business to the union, so it ceases to be a problem at that point. The problem arises in the case where a union is trying to organize an employer or when it is trying to reach its first contract.

So the change in the language in this act, Mr. Speaker, removes some certainty as to the rights of a union when it is organizing or negotiating its first contract, and that language in the FOIP Act has been relied upon by the labour board in some of its decisions. So it's potentially a critical piece of language and, I think, will create some uncertainty for the labour board and for labour relations generally with respect to this.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that that is a considerable concern and believe that it may infringe on the ability of unions to canvass potential members and, indeed, on the rights of individual employees of a firm to be able to make a choice as to whether they wish to join a union or not.

So having said that, Mr. Speaker, I will come back to that in committee stage and just indicate that I think that this is a good extension of the rights of freedom of information and the protection of information, which has long been established in the public sector, into the private sector, and we'd be pleased to support the bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29.

Anybody else wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert on behalf of the Minister of Government Services to close debate.

Mr. Horner: I call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 44 read a second time]

Bill 53

Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's, indeed, my pleasure to stand in my place this afternoon and move second reading of Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003, (No. 2).

Mr. Speaker, the amendments that we'll be dealing with in the next little while with respect to Bill 33 will accomplish a number of initiatives, but in rough terms the intent is to bring about the legislative authority so that government can proceed with extensive insurance reforms, that have been the discussion of much public debate of late, and as well implement as an interim measure a premium freeze so that there is stability in the marketplace as the new system is developed.

The impetus of this new system, Mr. Speaker, is that we will have a process where premiums become much more dependent upon individual driving behaviour. The amount that an individual pays for his automobile insurance will have a direct relationship to whether or not the individual has demonstrated himself to be a safe driver, in which case he or she will earn discounts. On the contrary, if an individual has demonstrated a proclivity for unsafe driving through being the at-fault driver in traffic collisions or being the recipient of a number of speeding tickets and other traffic violations or in more serious instances being convicted under the Criminal Code, such as impaired driving, considerable surcharges will accrue to the driver.

Proposals have taken age, gender, and marital status from the equation. No longer will Albertans be judged based upon their demographic profile; rather their experience behind the wheel will be the overriding determinant for the price that they will pay for their automobile insurance.

Essentially, the legislation proposes changes to two parts of the auto insurance system: the premium side, which is what we've been talking about, the reduction of premiums and ensuring that all Albertans have access to affordable, accessible insurance, and at the same time reflecting that we're dealing with a balance. If we're going to make significant reductions on the premium side, we'll also have to find appropriate savings on the benefit side. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I would like to discuss both aspects of the bill in some detail as we begin the discussion at second reading.

So let's look at premiums. The focus is to bring down premiums to a level that is fair and affordable to the average Albertan and comparable to other western provinces. Basic coverage will continue to be mandated by the government, but there will be a new entry-level benchmark premium for mandatory coverage, and insurance companies will not be able to charge more than that to their customers. I think it's absolutely essential, Mr. Speaker, that I emphasize that the benchmark premiums will establish maximum prices. We fully expect the competitive marketplace to continue in place and that certainly for groups of drivers who have demonstrated their long-term safe driving, the competitive marketplace that exists today will continue to exist, and prices that will be charged in the marketplace will in many cases be significantly below the benchmarks.

The drivers that are currently benefiting from the fierce competition in the marketplace, Mr. Speaker, frankly are not the focus of the proposed reforms. They will continue to pay low premiums under the new system. The drivers that we are targeting with these reforms are those who may have high premiums for reasons that are totally unrelated to their driving record. Such examples include being too young or too old or involved in accidents that aren't their fault. Perhaps they have worked out of province for a while and their insurance has lapsed. Many of these drivers are being asked to pay premiums that are far too high or, in fact, in some cases are even being refused coverage in the regular market and are being forced to purchase their insurance through the Facility Association.

Under the new system that we propose to put in place through this bill, there will be an all-comers rule that will require insurers to sell insurance to anyone provided that they are legally licensed in the province of Alberta, and the insurance will be sold at no more than the prescribed rates. Instead of having the Automobile Insurance Board approve premiums proposed by individual insurance companies, as they do today, the maximum base premiums for mandatory coverage will now be set by government. Eventually that rate-setting function will be handed over to the new public body that this bill creates, the rate-setting board.

Mr. Speaker, it's no secret that a lot of Albertans have been frustrated by the lack of clarity in the way insurance companies determine premiums. There are a myriad of factors that are used under the current system, and most people don't see any rhyme or reason or in some cases even fairness in the way their premiums are set. In the proposals that we outline in this legislation, drivers will no longer be penalized simply because they are young or old or for accidents that are not their fault. They will receive credit for a clean driving record.

So let's look at what some of the proposed rating factors are. There are three rating factors that I want to spend a little bit of time talking about. The first is the geographic territory. Rates vary by geographic territory because of the density of traffic in most cases. Weather conditions could contribute to it, but at the end of the day they are a reflection of the actual costs on an average basis within that particular territory. In the current system that we operate under, there are four territories; namely, Alberta north, south, Calgary, and Edmonton. The new system proposes to reduce four territories to three. We'll still have north and we'll still have south, and Calgary and Edmonton will be combined into a metropolitan area.

There is also in the existing system a rating factor that is for vehicle use. Frankly, it makes sense, Mr. Speaker. Some vehicles are used very little. For example, someone may have a truck that they use only to pull their RV, and they infrequently use their RV. Well, that truck is simply not exposed to the same level of risk. It's not exposed to traffic at the same degree as someone who uses their vehicle to commute back and forth to work everyday. So it simply makes sense to have some rating based upon the use of the vehicle, but what we have done is simplified the rating structure for classes, and we have reduced the number of classes from 14 under the existing system to six. These classes will include two for pleasure, two for work or school use, and a class for business users.

The business class, I need to point out, does not include taxis, tow trucks, courier, or cargo vehicles. These commercial kinds of vehicles will be dealt with as we move further in our reform initiative but will not be dealt with at this point in time in the first round of regulations that will be developed.

There's also a new class, Mr. Speaker, for farm users. This will continue to ensure that farmers enjoy discounts already in place for them. I talked about the example of someone who uses a light-duty truck to pull a trailer for RV use. In many cases our farm community has a number of vehicles that are used in the same way. They might own a truck that's only used twice a year: once to haul grain at seeding time and again to haul grain at harvest time. That's why traditionally they have enjoyed significant discounts when it comes to determining their insurance rates. Rather than continuing with a system of deep discounts, it was determined that the best way to deal with it would be to create a new class that will apply to farm use only.

The third level that has to be considered when we talk about third-party liability is the amount of coverage that is required. Under the legislation that is before us, the minimum will continue to be $200,000, but drivers can purchase and make decisions to purchase liability insurance up to $2 million. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that in Alberta the vast majority of drivers carry more than the minimum $200,000. So recognizing the market realities that most drivers carry either a million or $2 million, the legislation provides for the benchmark rates to be set not only at the minimum $200,000 but also at $500,000, $1 million, and $2 million.

Using the three factors of territory, level of liability, and vehicle class, we established then an entry-level benchmark premium for each vehicle class in each geographic location. The final rates will be determined after the regulations in new territory and minor injuries are finalized.

Once the entry-level benchmark is established, insurers will factor in an individual's personal driving history. Drivers will be credited for the number of years of safe driving and penalized for at-fault claims and traffic violations. The benchmark rates, surcharges, and discounts will be contained in regulations. Again, there has been a great deal of discussion on this issue, but it's pretty straightforward. Individuals will earn discounts by having a clean driving record without at-fault claims, and they will earn surcharges when they have claims and also when they are convicted of traffic offences. The amount of surcharges and claims, again, will be finally determined in regulation.

I'd like to make one very vital point regarding the proposed hard line that we intend to take on drivers who fail to act responsibly behind the wheel. A Criminal Code conviction, like impaired driving or criminal negligence, will automatically mean a substantial increase in premiums for each conviction. We deliberately set these surcharges at a substantial level to ensure that the new system does not give a break to anyone with traffic-related Criminal Code convictions.

So, Mr. Speaker, when we talk about Albertans paying less for insurance under the new regime, we recognize that there are Albertans who will not pay less under the new regime, and those are the Albertans who do not deserve to pay less under the new regime. There are other, less serious convictions that will also result in increases, although not as much. Under our current laws none of these offences result in demerit points on your licence.

So putting it all together, your benchmark premium will be determined by where you live and how you use your vehicle. You'll then move to an at-fault claims grid to determine surcharges for claims or for discounts based upon the years of clean driving. The maximum discount on the grid will be 65 percent after six years of clean driving. While discounts don't increase beyond six years, you actually will be able to accumulate clean driving records for up to 10 years.

The effect, Mr. Speaker, of doing that is that if someone with 10 years of clean driving should find themselves as an at-fault driver in a collision, they would effectively be reduced by four levels on the grid, moving from 10 years to six years, and that would mean that they would continue to have the 65 percent discount. In essence, what we put in place is a system where after 10 years of claim-free driving, an individual has earned the right to one claim without it affecting their rates. Unfortunately, the same thing doesn't apply on the issues that we talked about earlier, convictions, unfortunately for that individual, fortunately for everyone else on the road.

Finally, if you qualify for any company discounts offered such as a multi-vehicle discount, it would be applied at the end of the process. Company discounts are not part of the proposed system, and they're at the discretion of the insurance company, but as I mentioned earlier, there is a fairly competitive marketplace, particularly when we're dealing with drivers with longtime clean driving records, and we fully expect that the companies will continue to offer discounts above and beyond the discounts that are contemplated in the legislation.

The bottom line to all this is that our actuaries have calculated that approximately 80 percent of Albertans will pay less for their automobile insurance under the new system than they pay under the existing system. Also based on our actuarial assessment, there is the potential that some drivers could see their rates increase under the new system but only if insurance companies chose to charge at the maximum level. I've already explained that we don't expect that to be the case, Mr. Speaker, as most of the drivers affected in this way would be those who have earned very low rates based upon their driving experience, but for those drivers we would freeze their rates at current levels. I can say with conviction that no Albertan will pay more for their insurance under the new regime than they would have paid under the existing one.

Now, in order to achieve these savings, we need to address the cost side of the equation because, as I mentioned earlier, there are two sides to the equation: one is the way that we collect revenue through premiums to put into a pool. The other side is how we distribute that pool as people benefit from insurance through either being compensated for injury or property damage. So the majority of our savings will be achieved as a result of changes to the benefit side. Before we get into the cost savings on the benefit side, I want to talk about something that is critical, and that is an enhancement on the benefit side. We see a significant enhancement in that we plan to increase section B accident benefits for medical and rehab costs from the current $10,000 maximum to $50,000 maximum.

I know that there's been a lot of speculation and confusion about what a proposed cap in compensation for injured workers is all about, and I want to spend a little bit of time talking about the proposed $4,000 cap on compensation for pain and suffering. I want to emphasize that it applies only to minor injuries, and the definition of minor injuries is well along, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Larry Ohlhauser has been working with a number of significant stakeholders: the health professions that are involved with treating injury victims. He's also had consultation with the insurers as well as the legal community and is working towards a consensus, not necessarily unanimous but a consensus position, on exactly how we intend to define minor injury. I understand that he has advised that he's making significant progress in that task and should be back shortly with his final consensus recommendations that the government will then move forward through regulation.

I want to emphasize that the proposed changes do not in any way restrict an individual's ability to sue an at-fault party for injuries that they sustained in an automobile accident, but if the injury is determined to be minor, there will be a $4,000 cap.

I see that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to getting into more detail at committee stage, and in the meantime I encourage all members to support this bill at second reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been anxious to participate in the discussion around insurance reform in this province for some time in a public forum. Other than public meetings that have been hosted by this hon. member and others, it is the first opportunity I have had to do so.

Now, before I get into my remarks on Bill 53, at this time I think it's important to note the diligence and the enthusiasm that the hon. Member for Medicine Hat has put forward in his study. There are many people, this member included, that think it was a very limited study, but you can't deny the guy his work habits. They are a reflection on the values of the citizens of Medicine Hat. I would also at this time like to express my appreciation for the time that the hon. member has spent in reviewing this proposed legislation with this side of the House. I appreciate that as well.

But I think that the hon. member has been put in a very difficult position because the regulation of the automobile insurance industry in this province has been allowed to slip and slide until we have now this crisis with skyrocketing premiums. Many people, through no fault of their own, have been in my view denied insurance on a mandatory financial product. Certainly, the hon. Member for Medicine Hat has been in my view called in to do a massive repair job on a system that has been allowed to slip by a government that has not been listening to the citizens.

Certainly, members on this side of the House were aware well over a year ago that there were problems with premiums, and at that time we had suggested that there should be an all-party committee, and it was rejected. The hon. minister did tell me in correspondence that this would be dealt with swiftly and decisively. Well, this bill is the second attempt at dealing with a crisis for many Albertans.

Mr. Mason: Not too swift.

Mr. MacDonald: No. I wouldn't consider it to be swift, nor would I consider it to be decisive.

As far as the hon. Member for Medicine Hat being given a very, very hard, difficult job: well, we had extensive reforms, suggestions, to the automobile insurance regulatory process in this province in 1990. There are two volumes in the Legislature Library. If you were to put one on top of the other, they would be at least four inches in height, and there were some really good ideas in those recommendations, but they sat there for 12 years. Premiums were stable, but then we had this massive increase in premiums.

Regardless of who you talk to, whether it is the individuals from Stats Canada, who say that there are 59 or 57 percent increases in this province from February 2002 to February 2003, or you look at the Insurance Bureau of Canada statistics – and of course they are significantly less – what the motoring public knows to be true is that insurance costs for automobiles are getting to be unaffordable. So Alberta drivers are fed up with skyrocketing auto insurance premiums. The alternative is public automobile insurance, but unfortunately it was not even discussed in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, when we're discussing reforms to insurance, we should be looking at public delivery of a mandatory product. This province has no trouble owning its own bank. In my experience – and that could change – this province has no trouble allowing rural Albertans to have gas and electricity delivered to their homes on a cost recovery basis, so why can we not have insurance for everyone on a cost recovery basis? That is essentially what the public model in British Columbia, if we were to adopt it here, would provide for citizens of this province who are driving a passenger car: they could have insurance on a cost recovery basis. So if it's good enough for rural utilities, if it's good enough that we own our own bank, why can we not have a public insurance system?

Now, Bill 53, Mr. Speaker, deals with a premium freeze, and a freeze was an idea that we advocated. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East was advocating back late in the summer that there should be a freeze of premiums and there should be a rollback, a rollback of the mandatory portion, the third-party liability portion, of the insurance premiums of 15 percent. That would make for significant savings for Alberta consumers. The freeze is fine, but it has to be with a rollback.

When you have a consultation process, that the hon. Member for Medicine Hat was encouraged to initiate, and the hon. member certainly did and deserves credit, you can't just talk to the insurance industry or you can't just talk to one group. You have to have a balance. With this process and the development of this bill that's going to penalize, in my view, victims, we are not taking everyone's view into consideration.

Who's going to benefit from Bill 53? Hopefully, it would be consumers. But I believe who is going to benefit here are the insurance companies. There are about 90, as I understand it, Mr. Speaker, selling insurance in this province. They are going to benefit. They got some of their wishes in this bill; there's no doubt about that. The lobbying that goes on by the insurance industry is quite extensive. Will this be a Christmas present for the insurance industry and a lump of coal for drivers? I think so. I think so because, again, there is no rollback with this proposal.

We have not discussed many, many things that affect insurance premiums for automobiles with the insurance industry in this debate that has occurred across the province. There's the whole issue of what effect the privatization of our health care system has made on skyrocketing rehabilitation costs for accident victims. This has never been publicly debated. We haven't entertained how we're going to allocate resources for a public education campaign to try to make our roads safer and reduce accidents that way.

Many of the citizens don't know that accident claims have actually gone down. If we were to take a snapshot for the last decade of claims in this province, we would find a significant reduction, Mr. Speaker. That is happening at the same time as the number of vehicles on the road has increased. The speed limit has increased on the roads. So we essentially have more cars and more drivers and fewer claims. But claims costs are increasing.

There are a number of reasons that claims costs are increasing that have not been discussed. We simply can't just blame it on the victims, point fingers. Or we can blame it on the lawyers. Or we can simply open the yellow pages and say: wow, look at all the injury lawyers; it's their fault. I don't think that's right. [some applause] The Member for Wainwright is obviously clapping and believes that, you know, it may be their fault, but I for one think there are a number of circumstances.

If you look at the asset base of the insurance industry, for one thing, Mr. Speaker, you will see that there has been a significant increase in the asset base between 1998 and 2002, according to Stats Canada again, by the insurance industry. They're pleading poverty. They're not making a dollar. But if they're not making a dollar, I have to ask this question of all hon. members: why are the banks so anxious to get a cut of this action? If there's not a buck to be made selling automobile insurance, then what is the interest of the banks? The asset base of the insurance industry in this country has increased significantly in the last four to five years.

So money is going somewhere in the insurance industry. You talk to the panel beaters. There have actually been a number of autobody shops in this province close. It's a highly competitive business, and they're not making any extra money.

An Hon. Member: So who's making money?

Mr. MacDonald: Who is making the money in all of this? Perhaps the industry is putting money aside in case McNaughton versus the Cooperators turns into one of the biggest class-action suits in the history of this country. Hopefully we'll get into the potential effect the McNaughton versus the Cooperators case in Ontario would have on auto insurance premiums.

In regard specifically to Bill 53, Mr. Speaker, we have to be very, very careful with this legislation. You open Bill 53, and the first thing you see is reference to base capital and having an adequate base capital for companies that are licensed to operate in this province. What problems do we have now in regard to base capital? I certainly hope we have none. What measures are being used to ensure that consumers know if there are any problems?

Now, when we talk about the Auto Insurance Board, we're going to have a lot to say about this, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, in committee, because in the summer we had made some recommendations to improve how the Auto Insurance Board works, and again they were ignored. I was pleased to learn that there is at least going to be an attempt made to strengthen the Auto Insurance Board.

But at this time, Mr. Speaker, I have a reasoned amendment to Bill 53. [interjection] Yes, I do. I would like to have it circulated to all hon. members, please.

Mr. Speaker, shall I continue, or shall we wait until the amendment is circulated?

The Acting Speaker: Just wait for a minute, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you may proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the record the amendment that I am presenting to the Legislative Assembly this afternoon in regard to Bill 53 is that Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill fails to address overpayment of automobile insurance premiums by Albertans over the past year.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are fed up with skyrocketing auto insurance premiums. If you look at the time period from February of 2002 to February of 2003, according to Stats Canada, I believe it is, premiums increased by 59 percent. The insurance industry is getting rich at the expense of insurance consumers, and the Alberta government, in my view, has done very little. This is an industry that needs to be regulated. There has been no regulation by this government. There's been no attempt to regulate by this government. In fact, in the second quarter of 2003 the insurance industry reported $644 million in profits, up from $110 million the same time last year.

Now, the insurance government's watchdog, the Automobile Insurance Board, has been, in my view, toothless. For instance, in that board we rubber-stamped 155 of 157 proposals for rate increases. Drivers are paying higher premiums, the insurance industry is profiting, and how much more can consumers in this province bear?

We can't just allow the rates to skyrocket or to escalate one year to the next to the next and then, after the rates have gone through the roof, have a freeze. There has to be a rollback, a rollback of rates, and you have to roll back the third-party liability, or the mandatory portion of the insurance product. That's what we would like to see. Unfortunately, it's not in this legislation, and that's why I think this amendment in second reading is very appropriate. I would encourage the hon. members to support this amendment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there certainly has been a great deal of controversy over these proposed insurance reforms. There have been expressions of concern from the legal community. There have been expressions of concern from consumers, no doubt. There have been expressions of concern from opposition members. Even some government members have expressed concern. There has been a great deal of concern by government members about the direction of this, and some of that concern I believe has changed how the new format is going to work in Bill 53, but that, again, is not enough.

We look, Mr. Speaker, at the auto insurance rate comparison study from the Consumers' Association of Canada. I got this from the Legislature Library, and I would encourage all members to read it. This is a snapshot of 17 cities in four western provinces, and three of those four western provinces have public insurance of one form or another.

Why do we need to reject this bill without rollbacks? Well, the average annual auto insurance rate by province is in here. This was just released, Mr. Speaker, in August of 2003, so it is essentially the last information that has been available. In Alberta we're paying $1,853 on average for annual auto insurance rates, in British Columbia it's $1,105, in Saskatchewan it's $904, and in Manitoba it is $787. Now, when we're talking here about Saskatchewan and Manitoba – and we have to be very careful about this – these are no-fault insurance.

Mr. Speaker, when we look at, for instance, a young driver for insurance, a principal driver under 25 years of age, and the rates for Alberta and the public auto insurance provinces, Alberta is the highest.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the member for bringing forward this reasoned amendment not so much because I intend to support it – I don't – but it does give me an opportunity to address some of the issues that I wasn't able to address in my opening remarks.

I want to advise you that members should not support this reasoned amendment because if they support this reasoned amendment, there are a number of other things that this bill will do that this reasoned amendment would exclude. One of those things, Mr. Speaker, has to do with the case of a freeze.

In my opening comments I made reference to a freeze, and I want to spend a little bit of time explaining what this reasoned amendment would exclude from the benefit that Albertans would have from this bill. The freeze that's contemplated is a freeze retroactive to October 30 of this year. That means that for every premium that is renewed after October 30, that policy would come under the purview of this freeze.

We recognize that it is going to require some work on the part of the insurers to implement the freeze, and the fact that we haven't passed the legislation – and if we were to pass this reasoned amendment, we wouldn't be passing legislation and the freeze would never be implemented. In the meantime, what we're asking Albertans to do is to continue to pay their renewals and then we will work out, through a process of regulations that are authorized by this bill, the process by which Albertans would have adjustments made for any that paid premiums that are in excess of what would be allowed under the freeze.

So the freeze covers all insurance premiums, Mr. Speaker, even those that are not included in this bill. For example, it includes the mandatory coverage, section B coverage, all optional coverage including collision, comprehensive, and all perils. The only area that the freeze will not affect is discounts for good drivers, scheduled discounts, or rate increases for bad drivers. Again, we're not going to protect individuals from increases that they deserve. Also, if a person's vehicle or driving status changes, there could be changes made to the premium, but as long as an individual is driving the same vehicle and maintaining the same status, the freeze will apply.

I also would like to point out that the freeze applies to all mandatory optional coverage for all classes of vehicles including passenger, commercial, recreational, and motorcycles, but the freeze does not include commercial fleets.

I want to talk just a little bit about something else that's in this bill that this motion would preclude Albertans from benefiting from. I was just talking earlier about how we're going to be dealing with issues related to the cost side of the equation. We talked about savings that will accrue as a result of putting a limit on the amount of compensation an individual can receive for pain and suffering for a minor injury, but I'm not sure that I had time to make it abundantly clear that that does not affect compensation an individual would receive for out-of-pocket expenses, for medical expenses, for lost income.

So all of that right to sue is totally unaffected by this bill. The only restriction that comes into play would be where an individual has what is deemed to be a minor injury. There would be a maximum of $4,000 available to that individual for the pain and suffering component only of their suit. Nothing would prohibit the individual from going to court to pursue action, and in fact nothing would prohibit that individual from arguing in court that the definition of minor injury should not apply to them if they have evidence indicating otherwise.

The other thing that this reasoned amendment would preclude is our proceeding with the aspects of this bill that refer to the previous discussion on a bill that's on the Order Paper, Bill 33. The provisions of Bill 33 and the cost saving that was involved in Bill 33 are built into this bill, but there's a significant difference, Mr. Speaker, a very, very significant difference between Bill 53 and the Bill 33 provisions contained within Bill 53, and that is that Bill 53 doesn't rely on the goodwill of the insurance industry to pass savings on to the consumer. Bill 53 very clearly is intended to base premiums and cost savings that would be passed on to the consumer upon the grid structure that I talked about earlier. So any savings that would accrue to the cost side as a result of the section of this bill that previously was Bill 33 will be incorporated into the grid structure and will be truly reflected in savings that would pass on to the consumer.

Mr. Speaker, I can only say that there are tremendous benefits to all Albertans as a result of this bill, and I must emphasize to all members of the House that to concur in and pass the motion that's currently on the floor, the reasoned amendment suggesting that this bill not be dealt with now, would preclude significant benefits to the consumers and individuals in Alberta, who stand to have significant benefit through government action and intervention in the automobile insurance industry. I urge all members to resoundingly defeat this motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to the amendment. The amendment indicates that Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), not be read at this time because “the Assembly is of the view that the bill fails to address overpayment of automobile insurance premiums by Albertans over the past year.” Now, I can think of many reasons why we ought not to pass this bill, but certainly the failure to address the dramatic increase in insurance rates in the past year, or in the year 2002 in particular, is probably one of the pre-eminent reasons why we ought not to give this bill the second reading.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order

Amendments at Second Reading

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do hesitate to interrupt the Member for Edmonton-Highlands in debate on the amendment, but I would draw your attention to page 640 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice and the second bullet on that page, which indicates that “it must not relate to particulars of the bill, if what is sought may be accomplished by amendments in committee.” It would seem to me, on the face of the amendment that’s being put forward, that that is something which could be accomplished by an amendment to the bill in committee by adding a provision which would be entirely consistent with the concept of the freeze that’s provided for in the bill. You could also propose an amendment to that provision to provide for a rollback. So I would suggest that the amendment is out of order.

The Speaker: A little difficulty, Government House Leader. The amendment has been accepted to this point in time. Three people have already participated on it, and that would relegate back into ancient history, I guess, those aspects of the debate. But it’s very, very clear, as well, in Beauchesne 667 what the restrictions are with respect to debate with respect to this aspect of the bill. So we’ll continue on the narrowness of what’s outlined in Beauchesne.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that.

As I was saying, one of the primary reasons if not the premier reason for not now considering this bill at second reading is the very fact that it fails to address the overpayment of automobile insurance premiums over the past year particularly, the year 2002. The Consumers’ Association of Canada produced an excellent report, which I urge all members to read, that showed that, in fact, rates in this province rose a shocking 57 percent in the year 2002. So the bill and the freeze that is part and parcel of the bill locks in that increase, and the government expects drivers to be grateful. I suppose they should be because of course the rates could go up considerably more than that.

If you look at the amendment, clearly the lion’s share of increases in insurance in this province have already taken place. I think that we need to take a look at that because the insurance companies have been lobbying the government very intensively in order to protect their interests in whatever the government may do. If the government had been concerned about this increase, it would have acted long before now. It’s not generally known, Mr. Speaker, but every rate increase that has taken place in this province for car insurance has been approved by the government through its agency the insurance review board. This little private committee, this little known committee that doesn’t publish its proceedings, that doesn’t have a web site, which just rubber-stamps increase after increase as the rates go up, has resulted in some very, very high insurance rates in this province that need to be addressed, and this bill doesn’t address them.

It’s important that Albertans know . . .

Mr. McClelland: Point of order.

The Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. McClelland: The point of order is on relevance, Mr. Speaker. The amendment says that the bill fails to address overpayment of automobile insurance premiums by Albertans, so it would be overpayment of premiums. For instance, if my premium was $100 and I paid $110, that would be an overpayment by an Albertan. So I understand it’s difficult, but this is a very narrow amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, please continue.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I interpret and I confirmed with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that, in fact, he does mean dramatic increases in rates when he talks about overpayments. So I think that I have a correct understanding of the amendment.

Mr. Mason: So, Mr. Speaker, it’s a fact little known to Albertans that this government has approved every automobile insurance rate increase that they have received, and it has been done in secret without any knowledge, without any ability of individuals, citizens, or organizations to challenge the rate increases. In fact, a very large number of rate increases were approved and only three in the end were rejected. So the government has a very, very broad responsibility for the mess that we’re in in this province.

Now, it’s also interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the government knew that this was going on, because presumably their little insurance committee board reports to them regularly, and I’m sure that at least the Minister of Finance reads their reports. So the government has known that insurance rates were shooting up in this province and did nothing about it until they had an epiphany. They were struck by a blinding light on the road to Damascus, and that was the New Brunswick election. The Lord came to them – that is, Premier Lord – and Premier Lord said that in fact there was a serious problem, that they almost lost the election because of high car insurance in the province of New Brunswick. Other provinces had similar problems.

All of a sudden we had the government’s attention. They never acted; they never did a thing. They never cared about the increase in auto insurance rates affecting their constituents until another Tory government almost lost an election over it. Then all of a sudden all the lights came on, and they began to realize that this could be a problem for them. So they started to work overtime and they started to deal with the high rates, but they never, never had any intention of doing anything but managing it as a political issue so that it didn’t affect their chances for re-election in the next election. They certainly had no intention of doing anything that would fundamentally harm the interests of the insurance industry; maybe the injury lawyers but certainly not the insurance industry, Mr. Speaker.

So they set about finding a way to deal with this problem from their narrow political perspective, and this has resulted in a bill which may or may not fulfill their objectives. I happen to believe that this does not solve the political problems for the Conservative Party amongst its voters in the next election and will not solve the problem because they are simply rearranging who pays. It's simply a shell game. It's three walnuts laid out on the table, and they're twirling them around and trying to figure out who's going to end up paying. So it's no longer going to be young male drivers, and it's no longer going to be senior citizens. They have taken a laudable step, Mr. Speaker, in eliminating discrimination against those categories of individuals.

However, they continue to have the same blind spot that they've always had, and that is Edmonton. They have a blind spot when it comes to Edmonton, and while they won't allow discrimination based on gender or age – and so they shouldn't – they will allow it on the basis of living in Edmonton. I don't know who is on this MLA committee and whether or not there was a proper representation from the Edmonton caucus, but surely to goodness if the Edmonton caucus was doing its job, it would not have allowed specific discrimination based on living in Edmonton. But that is where the government is going. That's what they're going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Point of Order
Imputing Motives

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), imputing motives. He is imputing motives there with the Edmonton caucus, which is completely out of order.

The Speaker: Imputing motives with respect to another member would be entirely out of order, yes.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is perhaps going to go down in history as the most interrupted speech in the entire session. I don't know.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that we have a situation where people are getting gouged. Different people are going to get gouged because they haven't done the right thing, and that is to eliminate the high profits of the insurance industry, which is the real thing that drives the rates up. The insurance industry has made the claim that increased insurance claims are, in fact, responsible. But in the same year that insurance premiums went up 57 percent, guess how much claims went up? Three percent, according to the Insurance Bureau's own figures. So it's not that that's driven up rates.

What happens in this industry, Mr. Speaker, is that all of the insurance companies work together. They all work together and they take all of their premium revenue, all of the money that they get from that, and they invest it in the stock market. And guess what? The last couple of years, particularly since we've had the Bush administration in Washington, the stock market has gone way down. It's gone way down, and lots of people who have RRSPs and so on realize this. They've taken losses. I've taken losses myself on my RRSPs, as have probably most of the people in this Chamber, and so have the insurance companies. When I lose money on my RRSP, I can't go to the insurance company and say: you have to lower my premiums to compensate. But if you turn it the other way around, that's exactly what the insurance companies have been doing. They've been jacking up people's rates for no particular reason in order to compensate for their losses by investing in the stock market.

This is what the government bill is trying to protect. Instead of saying, "This is completely unacceptable, and we're going to protect the individuals from this kind of gouging," they say, "Oh, hey, we're going to freeze." It's a little bit, Mr. Speaker, like closing the barn door after the horses have all gotten out. All 57 horses have escaped from the barn. There might be a few left in there, Mr. Speaker, but most of the herd is already out grazing on the range.

I don't think this bill is going to cut it. By eliminating discrimination against young male drivers and against seniors, the government is probably going to have to reallocate higher premiums. They've been very clear about it. They're going to punish people who have bad driving records. They seem to think that this is a laudable goal. Well, maybe it is; maybe it's not. But when we started down this road of insurance reform, the objective was never to punish bad drivers. That's not quite the same thing as promoting safe driving. They're just redistributing who's being victimized by the insurance companies. So if somebody has a family vehicle and has a couple of minor fender benders, they're going to be paying a lot of money, paying a lot more than they are now. That doesn't necessarily make them bad drivers, and it doesn't necessarily mean that they're going to be any safer just because their insurance rates go up. I know that Tory thinking is that if you punish someone enough, they'll eventually stop doing something, but it doesn't always work that way, Mr. Speaker.

So I just want to indicate that the minister – and I attended her news availability when she talked about the savings along with the Member for Medicine Hat – indicated that there would be savings of about $250 million as a result of these government proposals out of a total of $2 billion. If you do the math, that's about one-eighth of the total insurance industry that's going to be saved. That's about 12 percent, as I do the math, Mr. Speaker. So at the very most the government's proposals will bring down rates, when they're fully implemented, by 12 percent overall. The Liberal plan is to reduce it by 15 percent, which is a slight improvement.

We're saying that we have to go back to square one. We have to eliminate that 57 percent increase in premiums that took place in the year 2002 before we can do it. We can go further, Mr. Speaker, because public auto insurance is the only means proven in this country of delivering regular, stable, low premiums for auto insurance. That's the proposal that has been put forward by our party, and it has only been implemented in three provinces by three New Democrat governments; that is, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia. Even when Conservative governments get elected in this country – for example, the conservative Liberal government in British Columbia – they won't touch it because it is so superior and so popular that there is no way that even the most right-wing government has ever been willing to touch public auto insurance once it's been implemented.

Now, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar was quoted in a refreshing moment of absolute blunt honesty as saying that the one thing that wasn't on the table as far as this committee was concerned was public auto insurance because it wasn't the Conservative thing to do. What is that, "It's not the Conservative thing to do"? Is it ideology? I think it probably is. The Liberals to their credit are far less concerned with ideology than members over there. They'll gladly steal our idea, and they have.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to be able to stand and speak in support of the reasoned amendment put forward by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar. That reasoned amendment is asking that this Bill 53 “be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill fails to address overpayment of automobile insurance premiums by Albertans over the past year.” I think we could argue that it was even more than the past year, but the specificity of the amendment is “the past year.”

In fact, auto insurance premiums have definitely gone up. We’ve got all kinds of documentation about that. Even the Insurance Bureau of Canada’s site and annual reports are happy to supply people with the statistics on that, depending on exactly what month to what month you’re going to look at. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands talked about a 57 percent increase from February of 2002 to February of 2003. We were looking at a 59 percent increase. No question in my mind of the accuracy of the amendment, that there has been significant overpayment of premiums by Albertans.

The bill does not rectify this situation. It offers a number of smaller and shorter term fixes for the problems that are being seen in the insurance industry and with insuring private automobiles, but it is by no means looking at what Albertans are asking for, and that is an immediate reduction of the premiums that they are paying. Certainly, when I look at some of the letters and e-mails that I’ve had from my constituents – and I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I will have to table these tomorrow when I have the complete document. I’m looking at excerpts, and I’ll bring the rest, the full document, tomorrow to table. I think these four or five letters are a good illustration of what’s been happening to people in Alberta.

We have Mr. ’93 Mazda, who was willing to pay his $2,200 per year, perfectly willing to do that, even though this person is a full-time university student. His concern around this was that he was in a car accident. The damage to his car was minimal, but he has missed a significant amount of work, some 10 weeks, plus had physiotherapy appointments, massage therapy appointments, lost hours of sleep, and had emotional pain, and under the system that’s being proposed here he would be eligible for a grand $4,000. Now he is also having to set aside his application to go into the police service since as a part of this same accident he tore a ligament and seems to have also injured his neck. So this certainly affected him. He doesn’t feel that a cap is going to help him, and certainly for the money that he’s paying, he’s overpaying at this point. So he didn’t object to what he was paying before. He’s certainly objecting to what he’s paying now.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order subject to rule 459 of Beauchesne’s. I think I heard you in your earlier ruling indicate that because this was a reasoned amendment, we must stick strictly to the issues of the amendment. The amendment deals specifically with overpayment of automobile insurance premiums. I’m not sure, but I think I heard the member opposite talking about a restriction on damage payments, which is clearly not part of the overpayment provisions in the amendment. So I would suggest that she’s not speaking in a relevant manner to the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: If the minister had listened further, he would have heard me completing the points that had been raised by the constituent, that he felt he was now paying too much and overpaying as a result of that, which feeds exactly into the overpayment that is outlined in the reasoned amendment that’s brought forward. So I was very much on point, raising the constituent’s concerns.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Debate Continued

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Mr. Small Cheap Car, who has also written to me, was in the situation of usually driving a company car. He’s made comparisons with being insured in both the United States and the U.K. Here he is back in Alberta, looking to purchase a small, cheap car for his wife and son, and after 25 years of driving with zero claims, he was put in a high-risk category and is looking at a $4,500 car and $2,800 a year insurance. He most definitely feels that he is being overcharged, considering a perfect driving record and this isn’t even a very expensive car. So he is most concerned with a lack of a solution that’s being offered in this legislation.

Now we’re looking at Mr. Plymouth Laser, who has also written in. [interjection] I can’t tell if that’s fanfare for Plymouth Lasers; perhaps it is. In this case he was concerned that the rate freeze is not being addressed to him. So not only did he feel that he was overpaying to begin with, but with the rate freeze he expected that overpayment to at least stay at the same level, and that, in fact, is not what’s happened to him. He’s been with his present insurance company for five years, and he made one claim a number of years ago, a very small claim. It turns out that the particular program that he was on has mysteriously been canceled. The last time he checked, back in August, the program was still in existence, and now it’s disappeared. So now he’s no longer even going to be subjected to a so-called rate freeze and is being put in a category where he’s just paying an unbelievable amount of money. So there’s another person who feels very much that there’s an overpayment of automobile insurance premiums and that this legislation is not addressing it. So those are just samples of what I’ve heard from my constituents.

You know, who’s reaping the profit of this overpayment? What we can see is that the government has certainly been responsible and has allowed through their insurance review council for the premiums to be raised repeatedly. I heard someone else quote how many times. There it is: 155 proposals for rate increases were in fact approved. All those were for rate increases; they weren’t for rate decreases. So over that period of time that we’re looking at, 155 different kinds of rate increases, obviously not all of them applicable to every individual but together they certainly result in Albertans paying significantly more in automobile insurance premiums. We have an auto insurance industry that reported $644 million in profits, which is up an additional $110 million in profits from the same time last year.

So the arguments that we’re hearing about why we would need to have higher insurance premiums don’t seem to be playing out or they’re not substantiated by statistical backup. The statistical backup that we can look at tells us that the insurance industry decided to go ahead – and I think I’ve heard them describe it in their words as rate shock – and repeatedly raise the rates. The government approved those rate increases. They were applied to Albertans, who are now paying substantially more than they were a year ago, 18 months ago, or two years ago.

The initial claims about why this needed to be increased had to do with the payouts – and I think the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has already gone over that, so I won’t belabour the point – but that was not a reasonable argument for the insurance industry to be using about why these rates were going up so much. The payouts, in fact, I think had gone up by 2.8 percent, which certainly didn't equal the enormous amount that the insurance industry had been able to raise the rest of the rates by.

So here we have a bill that's coming forward. It's dealing with a number of small band-aids, including incorporating what was in a completely different piece of legislation before plus adding in a number of things that have now been researched by the Member for Medicine Hat over the summer, and they don't appear to be resulting in substantial reductions or a correction of this overpayment for Albertans.

Particularly peeving me is the insistence on the continued discrimination based on geography, and that, again, is directly related to an overpayment, and this is an overpayment or a higher premium paid specifically by Edmontonians. The government has been unable or unwilling to give any kind of clear answer as to why they would support removing the discrimination based on gender or age but insist on keeping in place discrimination based on geographic location, that is Edmonton, and I think it also applies to northern Alberta.

As an Edmonton MLA that's of great concern to me: that my constituents are going to have to pay more money than someone somewhere else, but other reasons that are often quoted by the insurance companies for a rate differentiation that they can prove statistically, that being gender and age, have both been removed as a reason for discrimination and, therefore, for a higher rate by the government. We have not had a clear answer from the government why they feel that it's okay to overcharge on these based on geographic location.

Some of the other issues around higher automobile premiums that are not addressed in this bill are around that a person can't collect twice for the same accident. Now, that's something that I had raised as a concern before. It's a situation that people get caught in where they need to keep insurance because they're in a contract position or they're not able to get it subsidized through their work, and this legislation is going to put them in a position where they're paying for insurance that they won't even be allowed to collect on. But for most self-employed people or contract workers they have to keep that insurance up because some day that insurance may not be covered by their employer and they would be subject to extraordinarily high rates to go into an insurance plan at that point at an older age with different life circumstances. The whole idea is that you get in younger and you keep paying those rates with the same company and you're supposed to be getting some sort of a better deal or a recognition of your long term with them.

So this continues to be a great concern for me. Not only is it not addressed, but it's in fact being reinforced in the legislation, and it's certainly not going to reduce a higher payment or an overpayment by Albertans.

Thanks very much for the opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the amendment.

Dr. Massey: On the amendment, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. The amendment focuses on overpayment and really strikes at fairness: how fairly have Alberta drivers been treated, and have they in fact suffered because they have been overcharged, made overpayment on their insurance policies?

It's been mentioned before, but the review of the automobile insurance rates by the Consumers' Association of Canada provides some very useful information. One of the comparisons – and they indicated that it's the most fascinating comparison that they made – is the one between rates in Alberta and rates in Saskatchewan in the city of Lloydminster. I think that by looking at those rates, it could be put forward as one piece of evidence that Alberta drivers, in fact, have been overpaying with respect to automobile insurance premiums.

They have 34 rating profiles, but three of them really are quite stark in the comparison that they make. If you take an individual in the ninth rating profile driving a 1990 Dodge Spirit, a female 22 years of age with no claims or convictions, in the Saskatchewan part of Lloydminster that driver would be paying a little less than a thousand dollars. Well, if you lived in Alberta, the same driver would be paying $3,000, almost three times as much for automobile insurance, Mr. Speaker.

Another example: someone in the 18th rating profile driving a 1990 Jeep Cherokee, a male 40 years of age with claims or convictions. In Lloydminster, Saskatchewan, that individual would be paying roughly $1,500 a year in premiums. In Alberta that same individual driving the same vehicle with the same kind of driving record would be paying an outstanding $6,500 a year in premiums.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of examples, and as I said, the study indicates that this is probably the most stark in terms of examples. I think it does provide ample proof that Alberta's drivers have been making overpayments with respect to automobile insurance premiums and that there is good reason for the reasoned amendment to be before the House and for the Assembly to support it.

There are a number of other comparisons that are made in the study, Mr. Speaker. There's the average annual insurance cost city by city. We find that a number of Ontario cities, as one might expect, are at the highest cost with respect to rates, but right behind them, very close, are the major cities in our province, and they are considerably higher than those that we find in other parts of the country, particularly Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

So with respect to the reasoned amendment, Mr. Speaker, I think there is ample evidence that Alberta drivers have been overpaying, and it's unfortunate that the bill before us doesn't deal with that overpayment.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 25, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/11/25

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order. I wonder if the committee as its first item would agree to a brief introduction of guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To you and through you to colleagues it's my pleasure to reintroduce Sarah Monkman, who is in the Speaker's gallery. As members will know, Sarah Monkman is a former page here and was of great assistance to us for two years, 2000-2002. Sarah is now a student at Grant MacEwan. She's in a two-year general studies program leading to a career in nursing. So, Sarah, would you rise, and we would be delighted to give you the traditional welcome.

Personal Information Protection Act

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise this evening in Committee of the Whole to discuss Bill 44, the proposed Personal Information Protection Act. Just a few general comments before bringing in some amendments.

I want to speak about the content of the bill, and I want to talk briefly about the importance of the bill. The Personal Information Protection Act will help protect Albertan's personal information by establishing clear, concise, and commonsense rules for the private sector when collecting, using, and disclosing personal information. If Alberta does not enact the Personal Information Protection Act, the federal private-sector privacy act will govern personal information in Alberta's private sector on January 1, 2004. The Personal Information Protection Act will address Alberta's private-sector needs better than the federal act. Our legislation is drafted to make it easier for small businesses to follow. For these reasons the government of Alberta strongly supports the proposed Personal Information Protection Act, and we urge the opposition to join with us in supporting this bill.

I'll turn my comments to the content of the bill for just a few moments before the amendments. As the members know, Bill 44 had first reading in the spring 2003 session, but it was held over until the fall session to allow time for additional stakeholder input. Stakeholder input has led to a number of proposed House amendments to Bill 44 and a few consequential amendments to other government statutes to ensure their consistency with Bill 44.

So, Mr. Chairman, with your permission I propose to address the House amendments and the consequential amendments this evening as we go through committee, through the substance of the bill, and I am pleased to introduce these amendments to Bill 44, which I wish to move as a package and have voted on as a single vote.

Section 1 of the bill sets out a number of definitions including the terms "business contact information," "investigation," "personal information," and "organization."

We are making a few House amendments to the definition section. First, the term "credit reporting organization" is being defined to clarify the provision in the act that uses this term.

Secondly, the definition for the term "investigation" is being simplified but not substantially changed.

Third, the term "organization" is being clarified to address how the act deals with contractors and agents of an organization. The reference to contractors and agents is being moved from the definition of the term "organization" to section 5, the provision of the act that deals with compliance. This amendment is housekeeping in nature and will make it clearer that organizations are responsible for their contractors' and agents' compliance with the act but that contractors and agents must still comply with the act.

Finally, the definition of "personal information" is being modified. Currently personal information is defined to exclude business contact information. On the advice of our drafter the exclusion of business contact information is being removed from the definition section to the section that deals with all of the other exclusions from the act, which is section 4. This amendment is housekeeping only and will not change how the act addresses business contact information. Business contact information will still be excluded from the act when it is used for the purposes of contacting individuals in their capacity as an employee or an official of an organization.

When it comes to the reasonable standards in section 2, the bill sets the standard for compliance with the act, and that standard is the reasonableness standard. This standard is important because it ensures that the act is flexible for small and medium-sized businesses. If businesses act reasonably, they have no problem with complying with the act.

Section 3 establishes the purpose of the act, and the purpose is to govern an organization's "collection, use and disclosure of personal information" in a manner that balances the privacy rights of individuals with the need of organizations to collect, use, and disclose personal information for reasonable business purposes.

Under Application in section 4 it establishes what is not governed by the act. The act does not govern matters such as the collection, use, or disclosure of personal information for personal or domestic purposes, artistic or literary purposes, or journalistic purposes. The act also does not govern personal information that is collected by the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

We are making a few House amendments to section 4. First, as mentioned earlier, we are moving the exclusion of business contact information from the definition section to section 4.

Secondly, at the request of Health and Wellness the exclusion for health information in section 4(3)(e) is being amended. This amendment will exclude from Bill 44 all health information "where that information is collected, used, or disclosed by an organization for health care purposes."

The third House amendment to section 4 will exclude from the act personal information in records deposited in archival institutions prior to the coming into force of the act where public access to the records has been unrestricted.

The fourth and fifth House amendments to section 4 will exclude political parties, constituency associations, and candidates for public office from Bill 44. The personal information held by political parties and constituency associations is already protected under the Election Act, which includes serious penalties for misuse of this information.

Section 5 indicates compliance with the act, that "an organization is responsible for personal information . . . in its custody or under its control.” As mentioned earlier, we are making a House amendment to section 5 to clarify that organizations are responsible for their contractors’ and agents’ compliance with the act but that contractors and agents must still comply with the act.

When it comes to policies and practices under section 6, this establishes that organizations must develop and follow reasonable policies and practices to meet their obligations under the act. Organizations must also make information about their policies and practices available upon request.

Where it comes to consent under section 7, section 7 states that unless the act allows otherwise, an organization must obtain the consent of an individual when the organization collects, uses, or discloses the individual’s personal information.

Under Form of Consent in section 8 it provides that consent can be given orally or in writing or it can be implied when an individual volunteers his or her personal information to the organization. Organizations can also give individuals the choice to opt out of the organization’s collection, use, or disclosure of the personal information.

Section 9, where we look at withdrawing of consent, allows individuals to withdraw or vary their consent as long as there are no legal obligations and they’re not affected.

Consent obtained by deception: section 10 states that consent obtained by deceit is not valid.

Limitations on collection in section 11 requires organizations to “collect personal information only for purposes that are reasonable.”

Limitation on sources for collection: section 12 states that organizations can collect an individual’s personal information from someone other than that individual if the act allows this information to be collected without consent.

When it comes to section 13, requiring notification for collection, organizations are to notify an individual of the purpose for which their personal information is being collected and the name of someone in the organization who can answer questions about the collection. However, this requirement does not apply if the individual voluntarily provides his or her personal information.

Collection without consent: section 14 describes the situations where consent is not needed for the collection of someone’s personal information. These situations include where the collection is authorized or required by law, the collection is for a legal proceeding or investigation, or where the information is publicly available.

We are proposing three House amendments to section 14. Two of them are housekeeping in nature. One clarifies the intent of the opening paragraphs of section 14, and the other clarifies the meaning of section 14(g). The third House amendment to section 14 adds to the act another situation where consent is not needed for collection of personal information. The additional situation is where the collection of information is from a public body that is required or authorized by legislation to disclose the information.

Section 15 allows an organization to collect personal employee information without consent in certain circumstances. We are proposing two House amendments to section 15. The first amendment will require organizations to provide notice to employees prior to the collection of their personal employee information unless the information can be otherwise collected without consent under the act. The second House amendment to section 15 is the deletion of a requirement for organizations to destroy the personal information of potential employees if these individuals are not hired after a recruitment process. The act’s general provisions regarding record retention address this issue sufficiently.

Under section 16 a limitation of uses requires organizations to use personal information only for purposes that are reasonable, and section 17 describes the situations where consent is not needed for the use of someone’s personal information. This provision mirrors section 14, which deals with collection of personal information without consent, and the situations where consent is not needed for the use of someone’s personal information include where the use is authorized or required by law, the use is for a legal proceeding or an investigation, or where the information is publicly available.

We are proposing two House amendments to section 17. These amendments mirror two of the House amendments proposed for section 14. One of the amendments is housekeeping in nature, and it simply clarifies the intent of the opening paragraph of section 17. The House amendment to section 17 adds to the act a situation where consent is not needed for the use of personal information. The additional situation is where the information is collected from a public body that is required or authorized by legislation to disclose the information.

Section 18 allows for an organization to use personal employee information without consent in certain circumstances. This section mirrors section 15, which deals with collection of personal employee information without consent. One House amendment is proposed for section 18, and it mirrors one of the amendments proposed to section 15. The amendment will require organizations to provide notice to employees prior to the use of personal employee information unless the information can be otherwise used without consent under the act.

Limitations on disclosure: section 19 allows organizations to disclose personal information only for purposes which are reasonable.

Section 20 describes the situations where consent is not needed for the disclosure of someone’s personal information, and this section mirrors sections 14 and 17, which deal with the collection and use of personal information without consent. The situations where consent is not needed for the disclosure of someone’s personal information include where the disclosure is authorized or required by law, where the disclosure is for legal proceedings or investigations, or where the information is publicly available.

There are four House amendments proposed for section 20. Two of the amendments mirror amendments proposed for section 14. The first amendment is housekeeping in nature, and it simply clarifies the intent of the opening paragraph of section 20.

The second House amendment to section 20 adds to the act another situation where consent is not needed for disclosure of personal information. The additional situation is where the disclosure of information is to a public body that is required or authorized by legislation to collect the information.

The third House amendment to section 20 clarifies the position that allows disclosure without consent for the prevention of fraud. The amendment has been requested by Alberta Revenue to ensure that regulation of the securities industry can continue its presence under the act. It clarifies that this provision also allows disclosure without consent for the prevention of market manipulation and unfair trading practices in the securities industry.

The final House amendment to section 20 is housekeeping in nature and clarifies that disclosure without consent under section 20(n) can only be carried out by a credit reporting organization.

Section 21 allows for an organization to disclose personal employee information without consent in certain circumstances. This section mirrors sections 15 and 18, which deal with collection and use of personal employee information without consent. One House amendment is proposed for section 21, and this amendment mirrors one of the amendments proposed for sections 15 and 18. It will require organizations to provide notice to employees prior to the disclosure of their personal information unless the information can otherwise be disclosed without consent under the act.

Section 22, when it comes to business transactions, allows organizations to collect, use, and disclose personal information without consent to another organization where the one organization is selling its business to another organization. There is one amendment proposed for section 22 that is housekeeping in nature, and the amendment will ensure that there is no conflict between this section and any other section in the act.

Sections 23 and 24, access to personal information, define two terms. Section 24 sets out the process an individual needs to follow to obtain access to his or her own personal information held by an organization, and it's important to note that the act only allows an individual to request his or her own information. The act does not allow people to request information about other individuals or about the organization itself. Section 24 describes the situations where organizations either may or must refuse access requests.

We are proposing two House amendments to section 24. The first amendment will ensure that individuals can only request access to their own personal information contained in a record. An organization will not be required to provide access to personal information disclosed in oral conversations. The second amendment clarifies that an organization does not have to provide access when access would reveal the identity of an individual who provided an opinion about the individual if the opinion was provided in confidence.

Section 25 gives individuals the right to request an organization to correct their personal information that is held by that organization, and section 26 establishes how individuals make requests for access to their personal information.

Section 27 requires organizations to make reasonable efforts to help applicants with access requests, and section 28 gives businesses 45 days to respond to an applicant's request for access unless the time period is extended under another section of the act.

Section 29 requires organizations to advise applicants whether access will be granted or why not. If an access request is granted, section 30 allows organizations to either provide the applicant with access to the records or copies of that record.

Section 31 allows organizations to take an extra 30 days to respond to an access request or, with the permission of the Privacy Commissioner, longer if the request would interfere with the operation of the organization.

Section 32 gives organizations the right to charge applicants reasonable fees for access requests.

Section 33 states that organizations must make reasonable efforts to ensure that personal information they collect, use, or disclose is accurate and complete.

Section 34 requires organizations to make reasonable security arrangements to protect personal information in its custody or under its control, and section 35 allows organizations to retain personal information as long as is reasonable for legal or business purposes.

The role of the commissioner in section 36 sets out general powers of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, and these powers include conducting investigations if complaints are received, holding inquiries into potential breaches of the act, and informing the public about the act.

Section 37 gives the commissioner the power to allow an organization to disregard an access request if the request would unreasonably interfere with the organization's operations or because the request is frivolous.

Section 38 describes the commissioner's powers when the commissioner is conducting an investigation or holding an inquiry, and we are proposing one House amendment to section 38. The House amendment would allow the commissioner to publish any findings or decisions in a complete or abridged form.

Sections 39, 40, and 41 place limits on the use and disclosure of statements or information provided to the commissioner during an investigation or inquiry, and sections 42 and 44 are general provisions relating to the operations of the commissioner's office.

Sections 45 and 47 allow how individuals initiate a complaint with the commissioner or ask the commissioner to review an organization's decision, act, or failure to act.

Section 48 establishes who the commissioner must notify when he receives a complaint about an organization or a request for a review into the conduct of that organization.

Section 49 gives the commissioner the power to mediate complaints or any matter under review. Sections 50 and 51 set out the procedures for a commissioner's inquiry. Sections 52 to 54 address what the commissioner can order at the conclusion of any inquiry and how long organizations have to comply with an order of the commissioner.

Section 55 applies to professional regulatory organizations such as the Law Society of Alberta or the governing body of engineers. Section 55 allows professional organizations to develop and follow a personal information code instead of the act as long as the code is consistent with the act. [Mr. Coutts' speaking time expired]

The Chair: I wonder if we might get unanimous consent to allow the minister to finish his comments so that we might get this on the table.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for the indulgence of the House. I have three and a half more, and I'll keep reading at the same speed and get it done. It is important to get this on the record.

We are proposing two House amendments to section 55. The first amendment ensures that the commissioner has the power to apply provisions of the act where a personal information code is inconsistent with the act or silent on the matter. The second amendment clarifies how a professional regulatory organization can obtain the minister's approval to have a personal information code stand in place of the act.

In terms of nonprofit organizations section 56 establishes that the act only applies to nonprofit organizations when they collect personal information in the course of a commercial activity. Section 57 states that the organizations are protected from legal action if they act in good faith when disclosing or failing to disclose personal information under the act.

Section 58, protection of employees, provides that organizations cannot take negative employment action against an employee if the employee in good faith informs the commissioner that the organization has contravened the act.

When it comes to offences and penalties, section 59 sets out all of the offences and penalties under the act. Under damages for the breach of the act, section 60 gives an individual the right to seek compensation in court if the commissioner has found that an organization has breached the act.

Section 61 sets out who can act on behalf of an individual in exercising an individual's right under the act, and section 62 contains the authority for cabinet to make regulations under the act. Regulations on unforeseen matters, which appear in section 63, allow cabinet to amend the act through regulation, and a House amendment deletes this section.

Section 64 requires a legislative review of the act to start within three years of the act coming into force, and section 65 states that the act is to come into force January 1, 2004.

Included with this are the consequential amendments, Mr. Chairman. The Personal Information Protection Act makes a number of consequential amendments to other government statutes. The consequential amendments will ensure that the collection, use, and disclosure of personal information through these statutes will occur within the spirit and intent of Bill 44. In addition, a couple of the consequential amendments will permit disclosure of personal information for proper corporate governance matters.

The list of statutes being consequentially amended is as follows: Cemetery Companies Act, Charitable Fund-raising Act, Co-operatives Act, Credit Union Act, Financial Consumers Act, Insurance Act, Loan and Trust Corporations Act, Religious Societies' Land Act, Securities Act, Societies Act, and the Vital Statistics Act.

Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Chairman, and I now move that we adjourn debate on Bill 44 in committee.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 43 Post-secondary Learning Act

The Chair: We have an amendment, which at the moment is known as amendment A1.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Pursuant to Standing Order 32(2.1) I would request unanimous consent of the House that when division bells are called during consideration of amendments of this bill, the time of those division bells be reduced to one minute. I believe we have the consent of the opposition.

The Chair: Hon. Minister of Learning, go ahead.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To continue debate?

The Chair: The first item that I must deal with is how we're going to divide this thing, so if you're speaking to that, please go ahead.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Chairman, following consultation with the opposition, it has been agreed that the amendments currently on the floor and tabled by myself be split up in the following way to accommodate specific discussion, voting, and subamendments.

First of all, the main amendment we propose will still remain amendment A1. Section L, or tuition fees, in the amendments will be broken out to become A2. Section Q, which is regulations, will be broken out to become A3. Section S, which is labour, will be broken out to become A4. Section U, arbitration, will be broken out to become A5. Section Z, audits, will be broken out to become A6. Finally, Mr. Chairman, Section II, business plans, will be broken out to become A7.

Thank you.

The Chair: The opposition concurs with this split? Agreed? Okay. We're ready to go, then, on amendment A1 under the outlined scheme, which means, then, that we're dealing with a whole bunch of things: A to K, M to P, R, T, V to Y, AA to HH, and JJ to PP.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on amendment A1.

Dr. Massey: I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman. Was A1 section 62? [interjection] The rest of the amendments? Okay.

So in just talking, then, generally to the rest, let me start by thanking the minister for agreeing to pull out those portions of the amendments that we would like to focus on – we appreciate that; it makes it easier for us to deal with the number of amendments that are before us – and also for agreeing to the one-minute bells, because if there should be standing votes, that will, I think, expedite the business of the House. I think there are some general comments to be left with the number of amendments that are left.

Mr. Chairman, the process that the government used where they introduced the bill in the spring session and then consulted with groups over the summer and fall has many strengths, but it does have some downsides, and one is the number of amendments that you end up trying to deal with. I've got my bill tabbed, and it's a purple sea of tabs trying to keep track of all the information. Nevertheless, it was a process that the government undertook, and I think that having met some of the interest groups, it has allowed the interest groups to have their input, not always got the reaction that they wanted, but at least they had the opportunity to make and suggest some changes.

The minister earlier in the day tabled letters of support from a number of the institutions across the province, and we've had calls and contact from a number of the administrators and people in charge of those institutions in support of Bill 43, as we have with a number of the employee associations, not that they're universally happy, but they feel that the changes and the work that they did on Bill 43 has been recognized, and at this point they're for the most part satisfied with the provisions of the bill. There are a couple of sections that they aren't and that we'd like to raise, and that's why we've asked for those sections to be parceled out for further deliberation this evening.

So with those sort of preface remarks, Mr. Chairman, I think that if you look at the amendments in total, one of the concerns – and I think we've mentioned this before – that we've had with the bill is the centralizing of power in Edmonton. It seems that this is consistent with a number of pieces of legislation that have had a similar impact in funneling decision-making into Edmonton. I know that there are good reasons for that, but I also know that it's done at a price.

One of the concerns that it raises for us, particularly with Bill 43, is the treatment of all of the postsecondary schools in the province as one group. One of the great strengths, of course, of the Alberta system has been the uniqueness of the postsecondary learning institutions in the province. You only have to travel to Keyano College, SAIT, the University of Calgary, or the University of Alberta, and you realize how unique each of those institutions is and the special kind of niche that they have developed for the kinds of courses and programs that they offer students. The fear of the kind of centralizing that's gone on in the bill and goes on and is reflected further in these amendments and also the Campus Alberta initiatives are going to have a negative impact on that uniqueness. I think it's going to be, maybe in retrospect, something that we'll regret down the road.

I can understand, you know, Campus Alberta and the need to try to develop a seamless system across the province where pieces are interchangeable, but I also am worried about the quality of the offerings that would be made under such an arrangement. As I said,

I worry about the uniqueness of institutions being lost in this one huge massive system with pieces that are supposedly interchangeable, and it would be, I suspect, the future to see whether or not those fears are realized.

There are a number of good things that I personally support. I like the notion of students being able to access degrees and programs close to their own homes. I realize, given the vast geography of this province, that by not offering programs locally, we rule out further education and the pursuit of particular interests by a number of Albertans.

I referred to the quality. I think that sometimes we overstate the quality fear in terms of institutions. If you look south of the border and even with our own province, institutions become known for their reputation. When people attend a community college, I think they judge the credential that they receive from that college and value it every bit as much as the credential that someone earns from one of our major universities. So I think the institutions have a reputation and are known for the work that they do, and again I think sometimes the quality fears are overblown.

The sections in the amendments that have been proposed with respect to Campus Alberta I think are a move in the right direction and do focus on quality.

So with those general comments about Bill 43, I think I'll conclude my comments, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on amendment A1.

Dr. Pannu: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak to the proposed package of amendments with the exception of those six that will be dealt with separately. I also do want to acknowledge the minister's attempt to make a decision on these amendments in a way that will I think help us deal more effectively with the bill and the amendments to it before us. So I am pleased that we have come to this agreement.

On the amendment A1, to distinguish it from the others, I have some concerns that I expressed during debate in the second reading of the bill. The primary concerns that I have still remain. The excessive centralization and over co-ordination of the system I think lead to one key concern that I have about the bill. The bill is being a sort of omnibus bill which tries to incorporate under one piece of legislation a very diverse group of postsecondary institutions, starting with highly research-based and -driven universities to a university that deals primarily with distance learning and another university in Lethbridge which prides itself on focusing very much on providing quality undergraduate degrees, although not exclusively undergraduate programs, to technical institutes to public colleges and many other colleges which, in addition to providing a large number of educational experiences, are on the borderline of high school and postsecondary, are focused on skill development and are directly related to work or labour markets.

All of these institutions draw attention to a great diversity, and any piece of legislation that tries to, of course, deal with this diversity under one piece of legislation is likely to run into some difficulties. To make the notion of Campus Alberta a seamless system I think is a far too ambitious ideal although it's desirable that within the, say, university-based related programs or courses the transferability issues should be dealt with in a way that facilitates students' attempts to get postsecondary education, leading them to complete their university credentials or degrees by moving from one institution to the other without much difficulty.

So some standardization, some harmonization is, indeed, important and desirable, and on that I think there's no difference of opinion, but the notion of Campus Alberta to me is based on perhaps an assumption which I find difficult to validate or find valid, that all these institutions can be sort of blended within the system in a way that makes it seamless. It is neither possible nor I think desirable.

One of the great characteristics of the postsecondary system is and should be ability to innovate, ability to be flexible, ability to experiment both within institutions and between and among institutions. This kind of flexibility, this kind of ability to compete with each other in pursuing in ways that are novel and fresh and nonroutine academic activity, academic work, I think is a highly desirable quality of a vibrant, productive, creative postsecondary system.

The Campus Alberta notion I think would make great sense if we were to assume that the only reason for being a postsecondary system is to feed into the economic growth or development initiatives and needs of the province. Clearly, an educational system, a postsecondary system, which includes universities, colleges, technical institutes, and other types of colleges, to define its purpose entirely and exclusively in terms of the relevance of their work to economic growth or economic development is really to start going down a path which in the not too distant future is likely to prove to be not only futile but very, very harmful to the future development – social, political, economic – of our very diverse and dynamic province and provincial community.

Universities particularly exist not only within the boundaries of a province; they have a sort of international and national context. The conditions that they're called upon to meet, the imposition of requirements on them in terms of the development of courses, programs, and variety in the research efforts and others must therefore be not so restrictive as to make it difficult for them to see themselves as part of this national and international network of scholarly and academic activity I call the international academic marketplace.

We have in Canada, for example, a national Association of Universities and Colleges, AUCC, which in a sense is an accrediting body. Most of the postsecondary institutions, degree-granting colleges and universities, aspire to get the seal of approval with respect to their work from this national academic association called the AUCC.

Necessarily, then, the notion of Campus Alberta must remain accommodative to this national body and its standards, its accreditation requirements, its expectations, and the desire on the part of its member institutions and those institutions which aspire to become members of it to be able to freely participate in the mandate of this organization called AUCC and to be able to keep their membership, retain it if they already have it, or to be able to meet the requirements of this body to become members and, therefore, enjoy the accreditation of this body. The requirements in the bill therefore, I think, must be considered in light of any possible conflicts between the requirements that may be outlined by way of legislation here and the requirements for accreditation that may be deemed necessary by the AUCC.

At this point I simply want to raise this point. I think we need closer scrutiny of the provisions of the bill to see whether there is potential for difficulties that might arise in the way the provisions of this bill interact with those requirements and expectations that the AUCC sets out for its membership of institutions and for the accreditation process that it uses and the accreditation requirements that it uses.

One other point I would like to make by way of general comments on amendment A1 is the need for a respect of autonomy of institutions. The historical experience of academic systems, the history of academic institutions that are the envy of the world, clearly draws attention to the fundamental necessity, fundamental need for these institutions to enjoy as great an autonomy in defining their purpose, defining their goals, defining their missions as possible.

Again, I think the notion of Campus Alberta in a sense, in my view, will take away from that autonomy that is seen to be so necessary and that historically has proved to have such a critical role in allowing these institutions to become world leaders in the academic world and the academic community. So the principle of autonomy would seem to be something that may be compromised if the notion of Campus Alberta as broadly defined here and outlined here in the bill is taken to its logical conclusion.

So uniqueness and diversity of institutions within a system and autonomy of each leading institution within the system are important. The notion of Campus Alberta and the desire to create sort of a seamless system may run counter to these two principles to some extent. At least that's my concern.

The third point that I made has to do with the national context in which the whole question of accreditation of courses, programs, and institutions has to be addressed. It can't be seen as primarily a provincial matter as it seems to me is assumed in Bill 43, specifically the portion of it that we now refer to as amendment A1.

With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude my preliminary remarks and move on to the other members.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on A1.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to add my comments and concerns on this particular bill, Bill 43, the Post-secondary Learning Act, specifically to the amendments that we have labeled A1.

I always think it's better if the government does a little more consultation up front and irons out the problems in proposed legislation before it hits the floor of the Assembly. It's much easier for us to deal with, it's easier to get buy-in from people in the community if they can be part of the drafting of the legislation, and I think generally speaking it's beneficial for everyone concerned.

When that doesn't happen and when the government looks to change legislation that is comprehensive such as we saw when they first brought Bill 43 in in the late spring, then there are bound to be extensive amendments. The good news is that if there are extensive amendments, the government has listened to at least what some people have said. The bad news is that we end up seeing them in this Legislature at a very late date without a great deal of time to consult stakeholders and review the bills. Generally speaking, the government likes to bring them in in one big honking package like we've seen this time, and that isn't very conducive to thorough review and examination, Mr. Chairman.

Fortunately, the government agreed to pull some of the more contentious issues out of this particular package for individual debate, and we have before us now amendment A1, which, in fact, covers many, many sections of this particular bill. While some of them I don't have a depth of knowledge on to comment, there are some concerns that I do have about some of these amendments in A1 that I would like to put on the record and in some instances some things that I like.

For instance, in section A, when we talk about the applied degree being able to be granted by public colleges or technical institutes on the completion of the appropriate course work, for the most part I am in real agreement with this. It is nice in a province like Alberta that we can try to make education accessible to people. Allowing some of these other organizations to provide degrees certainly increases the possibilities for people in more remote areas of Alberta to get an education. It isn't always that they can't afford to come to the city to take their education, but they don't always choose to do so, Mr. Chairman, for lifestyle considerations.

It seems to me, particularly when I talk to young women across this province, that they're apprehensive about pulling up stakes at home and moving to a large city and finding accommodation and fitting into that kind of a venue. Generally speaking, in those first transition years out of high school they want to go for more education in a place that's closer to home, and this certainly gives them that potential. As they become a little more comfortable, then they can make the choice whether or not to move to a larger area where there are universities. There's another upside to that. Generally speaking, the public colleges or technical institutes have much smaller class sizes, and most students would agree that that's a real benefit in their first year. As they make the transition to more self-directed study, it's helpful to them to not be in very large classes.

The downside of having these kinds of applied degrees, as I see it, is that you lose the research ability that the larger institutes have.

So you have to wonder what kind of impact that has in the long term on the students and on the institute's ability to be leaders in whatever the particular field is that they're offering. Without research it's really tough for learning institutes to grow and to build and to think outside of the box and develop new ideas and technology, which has been a hallmark of Alberta institutes. I think we have to be cognizant that this could present an issue and that over time it might be a problem in this province. With that caution, I hope that the minister plans to monitor this in some fashion, and I hope that all of the directly affected institutes will be reporting back to the minister on how they see that impacting their ability to provide education to the students and to still be leaders in a variety of fields.

There's usually quite a large differential in price for tuition in colleges and other institutes as compared to universities, and a large component of that is often tied to research dollars. So if people don't understand the necessity or the importance of research and they base their decisions on where they're attending solely on the basis of a cost, then I think that we could have some long-term problems in that regard. However, given the long waiting lists that we currently have for the universities and the high level of marks that students have to attain in order to be admitted in the first instance – perhaps I'm overly concerned about this – I think a cautionary flag should go up. I think that it is something that should be watched not just for the next year or two but, more importantly, watched and monitored for the next 10 to 15 years because I think that's when we're going to see that the impact is really over the long term rather than over the short term.

The next part of the amendment that I want to talk about in A1 is section G, and that's a section that talks about the changes for the institutes and colleges to "establish a process for the review and approval of proposed programs of study to be submitted to the Minister." I don't actually have an opinion on this one, Mr. Chairman, because I'm not sure what the minister does when he gets all of the that information in. Is he trying to co-ordinate a standard level of programming, or are you just archiving the information? I really don't know what you do with it, and I wouldn't mind if you would answer that question for me.

The next concern I have is section P, that talks about the borrowing abilities that are being given to the institutes. I have a problem with educational institutes having access to being able to borrow money whether it's general overdrafts or for more comprehensive changes to the institute like infrastructure changes. I know that many of the financial institutes would completely disagree with me on this one, but I think that it is the responsibility of government to make sure not only that the institutes have their money on time, when they need it, but that there is a long-term planning function in place so that retrofits and expansions and upgrades and regular significant maintenance and repairs are done and are done in a capital manner in accordance with funding from the government.

What we see in section P are several areas of changes with regard to borrowing abilities. The first one, in 73(1), talks about

A board may borrow from any bank or treasury branch or from any other person any sum of money required to meet the expenses of the public post-secondary institution until the time the revenues for the current year are available.

This is an out for the institutions to be able to meet their expenses if the government doesn't have the money forthcoming in a reasonable time period. I would expect the financial institutions to be handling the other moneys they have available to them in a way that is consistent with those moneys becoming available at the time they need them.

It seems to me that this is particularly addressing the government's timing issues around money. That's been a pet peeve of mine in this Legislature since I was first here, and that is that the government often doesn't have its budgets ready for approval by the end of the fiscal year, and by the time those approvals are given, people are somewhat into their fiscal year and do have real problems with shortfalls of cash. It isn't just educational institutions. It's everyone who receives money from the government, be it small nonprofit organizations or otherwise.

So there's an extra administration burden placed on these financial institutions, including a cost of borrowing for the interest charges. What they need to do is then have staff in place to do the planning. If the money doesn't come in by here, where do we go for the money? How are we going to negotiate the interest rates? How are we going to pay it back? What happens if we take a short-term loan and the money still isn't available? What if there's some last-minute change in the dollars available? Higher is not a problem, but lower certainly is a problem. So it creates unnecessary stress on organizations.

I believe that it should be a requirement of governments to have their budgets in to Legislatures by February when the fiscal year is March 31 and fully debated by March 15 so that moneys can be disbursed in a time that works with the year that the government uses for their fiscal time period. It just seems to be good common sense, and anything less than that creates a lot of unnecessary paperwork and concern for the people receiving the moneys.

Section 73(3) talks about:

Subject to the approval of the Minister, a board may for the purposes of the public post-secondary institution, as defined in section 73.1, borrow by way of temporary loans from any bank or treasury branch or from any other person any sums of money on any terms the board determines, by way of an overdraft or line of credit or by the pledging as security for the temporary loans of notes, bonds, debentures or other securities of the board pending the sale of them, or instead of selling them, or in any other manner the board determines.

Once again, I just think this is an unnecessary clause to have. Proper timing for institutions is doable and should be the way that business is conducted. It isn't like I don't know what I'm talking about here, because that is my background. Prior to being in politics, I did a lot of work with organizations to ensure that the timing of their money received coincided with the time that they needed it. It isn't that tough to do. A little planning and you can be there.

Then they go on to talk about debenture borrowing in section 73.1(1), and this talks about borrowing sums of money from time to time and issuing notes, bonds, debentures or other securities. It then goes on to list a number of the conditions, which really result in no conditions. It seems to be pretty easy to access them.

Debenture funding usually occurs for large kinds of infrastructure concerns or developments or buildings. This specifically speaks to a move away from the government being a base funder for educational institutions and, I think, paves the way for P3s and other kinds of expansion opportunities for these institutions that, I'm pretty sure, 20 years hence we're going to be concerned about and say: this was a very bad idea. I don't think that debenture borrowing is the way that we should be looking at for our educational institutions to be financing their expansions or major renovations. So I really don't like that one and would have like to have seen that as a stand-alone amendment that came up for debate that we could show to a few people prior to having this debate this evening.

Other than that, it seems like the rest of the amendments in this package of A1 are not of any really grave concern to me. I look forward to debating the more contentious amendments that are on the floor for a little later this evening.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my place and listen to the rest of the debate on this particular amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We now move to amendment A2, which is section L. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You almost need a program to follow what we're doing this evening.

Amendment A2 is that portion of those amendments that refer to section 62, and section 62 is the part of the bill – I guess it's been the most contentious part of the bill – that sets the tuition rates in our postsecondary institutions or sets out the laws that have to govern it.

One of the things that was done in the early '90s was the placing in the act of a tuition cap of 30 percent. I remember talking to students at the time and asking them why they had agreed to 30 percent. Their response was that they had no choice, that the minister of the day told them that he wasn't willing to talk to them unless they were willing to accept a 30 percent cap. Now, whether that's true or not, that's how the history of the 30 percent cap was related to me. But the 30 percent cap represented a change in public policy in our province, a change that would see students and their parents and families bearing a greater portion of postsecondary school costs. It's had a significant effect on students and, I think, a number of unintended consequences.

The cap has allowed tuition rates to rise. I know the minister is fond of pointing to the ranking of tuitions that various institutions in the province enjoy, but it would seem to me that of all the provinces in the dominion, ours is the one that could provide leadership in having the very lowest of tuitions. No other province is as blessed as we are. I think no other province is in the position to recognize the huge, huge benefits of having a well-educated population and has the resources to do something about it.

We constantly hear the notion of education being treated as an investment, and that analogy still bothers me, the notion that we view everything we do within the context of a business model, but I think there are some sound economic arguments for having the best educated population that we possible can and particularly the best postsecondary programs and graduates that we possibly can.

Nevertheless, the 30 percent cap has been in place. A number of institutions will never come anywhere close to that cap. I suspect that Keyano College, a number of places, will never be close to the 30 percent, but there are a number of others – and the minister has mentioned the University of Lethbridge – that are approaching the cap. What this provision does is really nullify the effect of having a 30 percent cap, because if they reach the cap, then some other provisions kick in which allow them to exceed the 30 percent cap that's in place. They are allowed to increase the tuition in the following year to match the "Consumer Price Index plus 2%, which must not result in a decrease or be greater than 5%."

So there are provisions for tuition in this portion, and this amendment opens the door for institutions to far exceed 30 percent, and if the institutions took advantage of it year after year, we could see where the tuition could represent a significant portion, well past 30 percent, of the operating cost of the institution. In fact, there was, I think, a sobering communiqué from one of our technical colleges today that they're going to be over a three-year period looking at a 26 percent plus increase in tuition. I suspect that should this become enacted, that's going to be more the practice than not, and we're going to see some rather large tuition increases that will affect the kinds of students that attend our institutions and will affect the kinds of programs that students choose when they're thinking of pursuing a postsecondary education. There's already some evidence that students from middle-income families are becoming underrepresented in postsecondary populations.

So it's with that in mind, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to propose an amendment to what we are calling amendment A2, to section L.

The Chair: Hon. member, a subamendment?

Dr. Massey: Yes. A subamendment to section L.

The Chair: The subamendment will be known as SA1, which is amending amendment A2. A subamendment to A2. So SA1 amends amendment A2.

Did you want to go ahead?

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment before us reflects, I think, some of the current thinking of student leaders in the province with respect to what they would like to see in a tuition policy, but I take full responsibility for it because there are some pieces that are not of their doing.

What it would do first would be to strike out section L and then to substitute the following. I think it's fairly clear what we have in mind. First of all, "tuition fees at public post-secondary institutions shall not be increased beyond 2003-2004 levels until" – and then these are the provisions; so, actually, there's a tuition freeze – "the Minister establishes an independent panel to conduct a comprehensive review of Alberta's post-secondary institutions."

So, first of all, we'd like an independent panel to look at our postsecondary schools, and we've mentioned this a number of times during the session, Mr. Chairman. I think it's becoming imperative that the province look down the road in terms of where we are going 10, 15, 20 years from now with respect to funding our postsecondary institutions. I think there's a need to try to make sure that those institutions are going to be, firstly, adequately funded so they can do the job that they're mandated to do and, secondly, that it be affordable for students and, third, that there be some predictability with respect to funding.

Mr. Chairman, in funding Alberta's postsecondary institutions, the problems that we face are similar to the problems faced in all the provinces, and to my knowledge no province has taken the lead. I don't think this can be done solely by the province, because the federal government has a role in this, but I think there has to be a real attempt to sit down and hammer out a long-term plan that would bring some stability to the funding of postsecondary schools and help take the pressure off institutes continually having to turn to students to make up operating costs. So the first part of our amendment is to have an independent panel review the postsecondary institutions, and this is consistent with what the Learning Commission has asked for.

Secondly, the panel's report would be forwarded to the minister, who would share copies with the members of the Assembly and make the report public. So the minister would make public those recommendations that refer particularly to tuition, and "upon completion of the report prepared under subsection (1), . . . tuition fees must be set in accordance with the regulations."

The third one would really place the 30 percent cap and make it a real cap, that they should not exceed 30 percent of net operating expenditures. If the review is undertaken and does its job, then I would think that the yearly battle we have over tuition might no longer be with us.

Then, fourthly, "This section does not apply in respect of students in apprenticeships programs under the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act."

So, briefly, that's our subamendment with respect to section L of the government's amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition on subamendment SA1.

Dr. Nicol: Yes, on subamendment SA1, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to talk about the importance that we place on having an absolute built into tuition fees. I know that the whole system of what is fair and what is equitable in terms of institutions starts to come up when we start to talk about a cap, or a limit, being put on tuition fees as a percentage of an institution's operating grant, but we also have to look at the long-term effect that this has on students. You know, the way the original amendment is being applied in the sense of having a cap with exceptions leads to what creates some discussion about: is the exception appropriate? In effect, we end up in a situation like we heard about today, where SAIT is talking about applying for exceptions to bring in their tuition on a regular basis at levels above what the base level would allow but being subject to that exception.

I know the minister has pointed out the fact that the University of Lethbridge in my home community supports this kind of an idea, but it's more a reflection of the fact that the funding formulas don't reflect the difference between institutions rather than that all institutions should be treated the same, with one set of regulations. When we look at it from the point of view of what is the relevant cost of educating a student and who gets the benefits, if we used the 30 percent as the approximate ratio between the public good and the individual good of the student, then we should be making that kind of a relationship exist for all students. But when we come along and say at some point in time that an institution, whether it be a technical institute or a college or a university, can apply for exemptions, then we're saying that they're going to be treated differently based on their circumstances.

What we should be doing is making sure that the funding formula we use to measure operating expenses is unique and equal across all those institutions so that that relationship between the public and private funding of a student's education is consistent no matter which institution you go to and no matter which program you're in.

A situation came up today in a discussion I was having with a couple of individuals about funding for education. We were talking about capital funding as well. Some of the institutions now are in effect using their operating grants to fund capital projects. What's happening is that they're leasing space, and they're building this into their operating grants, especially if they're getting research grants that have that option built into them where they can expand space. Well, that jacks up the operating grant of the institution so that they can subsequently jack up tuition by 30 percent of that capital cost as well. This in effect varies, then, by institution, whether an institution needs to expand capital assets through the operating grants or whether they expand their capital assets through a capital grant that doesn't get included in their operating grant.

So what we in effect have is a real discrepancy being created between the management of institutions. We're encouraging institutions now to start managing to increase their operating grants so that they can increase tuition and further increase their revenues by having higher tuition to carry on their programs. This reflects on the fact that we don't have the right funding formulas. I guess that as we start to look at who gets the benefit out of an education, yes, the individuals do, but we also do get this kind of benefit at a societal level from having individuals with quality and abundant levels of education and a large percentage of our population with postsecondary education.

We don't want to be in a position where we're creating discrepancies. By giving exception to the rules under regulation, we're in effect making political decisions about the relative shared costs of an individual's education and the institution that that individual may end up taking that from. We should take the politics of ministerial decision-making out of whether or not a student goes to this institution or takes that program at an institution. That, in effect, is what the current amendments would end up doing by giving institutions the right to apply for exemptions to the 30 percent level of tuition as a percentage of their operating grant.

Mr. Chairman, I don't want to spend a lot of time on it, but I just want to make sure that we get a chance to look at it. It's better to change the formula and the way we measure operating revenues and operating expenditures than to try to create political situations where who can make the best argument or who can't make the best argument gets the option to change their tuition fees. That, in effect, makes tuition policy political instead of a policy based on what is appropriate, fair, and equitable for all students in this province.

So I would encourage everybody to support this subamendment because this basically says: let's make sure that all students relative to the operating costs of their institution are treated fairly. So I hope everybody supports it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, am very much in support of the subamendment presented by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and am very much opposed to the government's amendment as we see it in A2. It's a very important issue that we talk about in terms of tuition fees. There are all kinds of outstanding issues that need to be resolved about how they are determined and whether or not institutions have started at the same place, that there's a level playing field out there. It is clear, I think, that there isn't when you take a look at the government amendment talking about different rules for different organizations.

I very much support the establishment of an independent panel to conduct a comprehensive review of institutions and then that that report and recommendations are forwarded to the minister and then, hopefully, acted on with regard to tuition fees, because what we have right now is a situation where many students are just scared off by the costs and that there doesn't seem to be any continuity from year to year. When they're planning their education and if they're lucky enough to have parents who are helping to finance that process, it would be nice to know in a three- or four- or five-year bundle what kinds of expenses they're truly looking at and be able to incorporate that into the process.

I know that there are lots of institutions and lots of faculties who don't support tuition caps, who would like to make the changes, and certainly we have this discussion at home quite often. I understand the argument that to be globally competitive, you have to pay higher priced salaries to attract some professors. I understand that argument, and I want Alberta's institutes to be globally competitive. I want people to be paid fair and reasonable salaries, but I don't think you do that on the backs of students. I just don't think that's right.

I fundamentally believe that in Alberta we should be committed to providing accessible and affordable education, particularly postsecondary education, for anybody who wants it. If we really think that lifelong learning means from cradle to grave, then we have to facilitate that process. One of the best ways we can do that, one of the best economic drivers we can have for our economy, is to provide free or as close to free postsecondary education as we can. There are lots of countries who have done this and who have proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that that is the economic driver that you're looking for.

I do not believe that fiddling around with caps or lifting caps or increasing the percentage that students pay for tuition facilitates that process in any way, and it does not attract the best possible students to our institutions to do that. They need some certainty in their lives. There are other ways to be able to fund institutions, and I think that this subamendment brought in by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods certainly addresses those issues and starts us on a path to finding a resolution that is long term in nature and that is sustainable for this province and for the students of this province for a long time to come.

So I very much support this subamendment, and I very much do not support the government's tuition fees amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise this evening and speak to Bill 43, subamendment SA1, as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. Certainly it is a needed amendment to Bill 43, and it is a required amendment at this particular time because it occurs at a time in our postsecondary institutions when tuition fees are rapidly becoming out of reach for many of our students. Certainly, while the students do benefit from education at a postsecondary institution, the benefits to us as a society are great.

As well, Mr. Chairman, we do have to put on a permanent cap that isn't flexible, and that is exactly what this particular amendment will do. Under section 62(1) tuition fees at . . . post-secondary institutions shall not be increased beyond 2003-2004 levels until

- (a) the Minister establishes an independent panel to conduct a comprehensive review of Alberta's post secondary institutions, and

- (b) the panel's report on recommendations are forwarded to the Minister who shall immediately furnish copies of it to all members of the Legislative Assembly and to the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly and in so doing the report shall be made public.

Of course, this is essential because this is, certainly, one of the recommendations that will address the concerns of the student leaders at many of these institutions.

We all know today that students do encounter many hardships, particularly those that don't have the luxury of living at home while attending a postsecondary institution. As well, not only is tuition one of the major hurdles that they face, but they face the increased costs of transportation, food, shelter, and textbooks. When I see the price that my daughters have had to pay for textbooks, in excess of $100, these costs certainly provide a big burden.

So with this amendment, when we cap the tuition fees, this has gone a long way to make education very affordable for students and certainly will give them some certainty when they are trying to plan their careers. It is one of those situations where we do have today students who have an average debt of somewhere in the vicinity of $25,000 when they graduate. We don't want to see that escalate because we all realize the benefits that we get from a well-educated populace.

Now, then, as well, one of the reasons that I support this particular amendment is that these fees will be set. They will not be allowed to increase. The amendments that were put forth earlier indicated that those institutions that reach their 30 percent cap will then be allowed to increase their tuition fees to the consumer price index plus 2 to 5 percent.

So it is with those few comments, Mr. Chairman, that I will certainly support the passing of this particular subamendment, SA1, and I would urge all members of the Assembly to also support this worthy amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to briefly speak to subamendment SA1, that's being debated before the House. The amendment, first of all, speaks to the fact that the amendments proposed by the minister under amendment A2 do not satisfy either the students or, certainly, this member with respect to the issue of the capping of the tuition fees. What the amendment A2 does, in fact, is to allow institutions which have reached a 30 percent ceiling to go beyond that, and institutions that haven't yet reached there have been given the legislative undertaking that once they reach that point, then they'll be able to go beyond it as well.

So changes that the minister has made other than putting the magnitude of the increase beyond 30 percent in legislation – and that magnitude is defined as consumer price index plus 2 percent or 5 percent, whichever is greater. That guarantees, as a matter of fact, that the minimum increase beyond the 30 percent level maximum guaranteed to institutions would be up to 5 percent. To me that doesn't at all address the concerns that students have expressed over the last six or seven months that this bill has been available publicly and for public debate and scrutiny.

Mr. Chairman, the current level of tuition fees is so onerous for so many students and their families now that many students from middle-class families, families whose income levels are such that students coming from those families cannot even qualify for student loans, are beginning to make decisions not to go to postsecondary institutions because in the absence of their ability to avail of the student loans, they simply cannot see themselves funding their way through postsecondary institutions. So already, even in institutions where the tuition fees are below the 30 percent ceiling, many young men and women in Alberta wanting to go to those universities and institutions are saying: "No. I can't afford it. It's not for me."

The issue of affordability is already a major issue even though the 30 percent ceiling has not been reached by many of these institutions in the province. Students are in fact beginning to stay away. They're beginning to decide not to go to college or university because of the high cost of going there.

Tuition fees are one portion of those costs which, certainly, is subject to some control by way of public policy. That's where, I guess, the government's tuition fee policy becomes so critically important for students. They know that this is subject to influence by public policy. This particular amendment A2 and the subamendment to it, proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, speaks to that condition, that affordability and accessibility are already at stake. Affordability is already being denied by the current levels of tuition fees that prevail at the institutions which haven't yet reached 30 percent.

In spite of the fact that that is the case, this amendment proposed by the minister fails to acknowledge that problem of unaffordability and accessibility and, in fact, prescribes continuing, unending increases in tuition fees year after year even beyond the time when the 30 percent limit is reached. Clearly, I think that amendment proposed by the minister as A2 is unacceptable and hence the subamendment SA1 by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

The amendment proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods in the first part, at least, calls for a tuition fee freeze up to a certain time, until such time as an independent panel conducts an investigation. I'm not entirely satisfied with the second part, but certainly to the extent that the amendment speaks to the need to freeze tuition fee levels at the current level, I'm supportive of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is urgent need for this Assembly to speak strongly and clearly in favour of making postsecondary education accessible and affordable, affordable for all families and young men and women coming from all parts of Alberta. Merely granting institutions the powers to grant degrees in places which are now colleges is not enough. We must control the cost for all students regardless of where they live in this province so that they are not deterred and discouraged from their plans and aspirations to enter postsecondary institutions and get a diploma or a degree depending upon their ability to earn it, not depending on their ability to pay for it.

So I am with some reservations supportive of the amendment that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has put before the House. Thank you.

The Chair: Before actually voting on the question, in case there is a division, a reminder to all the members of the Assembly: it's one minute between the bells as agreed to earlier this evening, so altogether it's about two minutes and 30 seconds. Judge yourself accordingly.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to make a subamendment to amendment A2. That is the section dealing with tuition fees in the proposed amendment by the minister.

The Chair: Hon. member, would you provide the table with copies, and hopefully you'll have the original.

Dr. Pannu: Indeed, yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: And the rest of the copies for other members.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Okay. Mr. Chairman, I move subamendment SA2 to amendment A2 to Bill 43, the Post-secondary Learning Act. I move that it be amended by striking out section L and substituting the following. Section 62 is struck out, and the following is substituted.

62(1) Subject to subsection (2), the board of a public post-secondary institution other than the Banff Centre shall set the tuition fees of the public post-secondary institution in accordance with the regulations.

(2) The board shall not set tuition fees in excess of 2003-2004 levels.

So that's the amendment, Mr. Chairman. It's very straightforward. It's clear in its intent. It seeks to radically amend amendment A2 and calls on making changes with legislation to freeze tuition fees at the 2003-2004 academic year level.

The justification and the reasons for this amendment are very clear. As I've said already, a very large number of postsecondary students in this province are victims of the financial hardship that skyrocketing tuition fees that have tripled over the last three years have caused for them. Not only is it the case with students coming from modest-income families or low-income families; it's becoming a problem for middle-income families and students coming from them. The budgets of all families, including middle-class families, are stretched to the limit, and there's no more room for parents to further subsidize the postsecondary education costs of their children.

So it's necessary that this bill must take cognizance of this situation and take appropriate actions, and the action required, Mr. Chairman, as I say, is to begin by freezing the tuition fees at the level at which they are during the current academic year, and then in the following years this Legislature should consider, in fact, a reduction in those tuition fees rather than allowing them to increase endlessly year after year as proposed in amendment A2 by the minister.

So I ask all members for their support for subamendment SA2 to amendment A2. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on SA2.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The subamendment as put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I think, again underscores the importance of the provisions in this bill with respect to tuition, and I regret that we're having to deal with it this way, but the whole business of tuition as seen from a student and a parent's perspective has been dealt with, I think, very unsatisfactorily.

What we would have here, again, would be a freeze for the 2003-2004 levels. I would hope, again – and it was the proposal that we made in other forums – that if there is a freeze put in place, there is an attempt to rationalize the tuition policy. I think this would be a good intermediate step, but I think that we need much more. We've seen what freezes have done in other provinces. When they were lifted, there has been a rapid increase, and I don't think that that's sound planning either.

I think the student proposal that there be an independent committee look at tuition fees makes sense, but we need more than that. We need to rationalize the financing of postsecondary institutions in the province. We need, as I think I've indicated on a number of occasions, a long-term plan. I don't think the kind of ad hoc budgeting that's done with respect to tuition and financing of our institutions is viable any longer, and we desperately need to rationalize what's being done.

I think that if the notion of having students pay more of the freight with respect to their postsecondary education were put to the vote in the province, it would fail. I think that there's widespread public support for making sure that postsecondary education is as affordable and accessible as possible for students, and I don't think the provisions in the bill as amended by the government do that.

So I support the subamendment that we have before us and hope that it will receive the sanction of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Chair: We now proceed to the next item, which is amendment A3, which is section Q. Are there any comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: I'm on my feet so that I don't miss an opportunity, Mr. Chairman.

Section Q, the amendment as proposed by the government, would amend section 78(1)(a). If you go back to the original bill, 78(1) talks about the accountability of boards and, in particular, the business plans. The government's proposal says:

Each year a board must prepare and approve a business plan that includes

- (a) the budget and other information required under the regulations, and
- (b) any other information required by the Minister.

This amendment Q as proposed by the government would strike out "and other information required under the regulations." On the whole section and particularly that section that says, "Any other information required by the minister," and then subsection (2), "The business plan approved under subsection (1) must be submitted to the Minister on or before the date specified by the Minister," we've had some discussion with the minister about the requirement on the submission of business plans, and there has been reference to two other statutes and their bearing on the preparation and submission and approval of business plans by the ministry.

This is particularly troubling with respect to the independence of universities. Other institutions, I think, are different from universities with respect to the role that universities are expected to play with respect to criticism. Universities are expected to be open forums, and they're expected to provide social criticism of our institutions. Often that involves criticism of governments, and it seems to me it places universities in a possibly very difficult position should they take issue with the government of the day and then have to depend upon that same government for the approval of their business plans. So that is the root of the difficulty with this section, Mr. Chairman.

I think we've seen examples in this House of members upset with reports that have been produced by institutes. I remember a report that was produced by an institute that examined the role of government cuts on women and children in the province and how that report was met with outrage that was expressed in this House and a suggestion that something should be done with respect to the institute that had commissioned and issued the report. So I think that there are examples of when the government has been displeased, to say the least, with criticism coming from institutes and from university quarters, and the worry is that they're going to lose some of their independence.

Though it's been practice for universities to submit those business plans, we think that this is the opportunity to see that practice discontinued and to ensure that universities are the independent institutions that I think universities, at least universities with international reputations, have become known for: their independence and the independence of the thinkers that work in those institutions. We think that anything that would harm that is something to be avoided.

So I would like to propose an amendment, Mr. Chairman, that would strike section 78 out of Bill 43. I have copies of that.

The Chair: This is subamendment SA3. Do you have the original?

Dr. Massey: Yes, I do.

The Chair: That's needed for the official records. Has the minister got one?

Dr. Oberg: Yes, I have.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on subamendment SA3.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm sorry if some of the members are upset that we're spending so much time on this bill, but this is a huge bill. Bill 43 is an important bill, and it's the first opportunity that the opposition has had to make suggestions and to try to effect some change. So I know that the evening is long for some of the members, but as I indicated, this is an important piece of legislation. It's worthy of our examination, particularly when we're faced with the number of amendments that the government has put forward.

The subamendment I've put forward is straightforward. I've spoken to it already. We're asking that section 78, that would have the minister approving the plans and in fact controlling some of the information that is submitted by in particular universities but in this case all boards, just be removed from the original bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Very, very quickly, if we were to vote for subsection 78, it would not change the universities' need to put in business plans as that is under the Government Accountability Act. The reason it is included in this act is that the Government Accountability Act does not apply to the Banff Centre, and we are currently ensuring that the Banff Centre, being a public institution, puts forward its business plans to the ministry as well.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to amendment A3 and the subamendment proposed to it. The amendment that is made in A3 doesn't go far enough to ensure that the minister and the government, that is the state, do not through this legislation give themselves the right for interference in the independence and autonomy of postsecondary institutions, particularly the university.

In my opening remarks earlier this evening on Bill 43 and its study during committee I drew attention to certain principles that should guide any legislation and policy affecting postsecondary education institutions and particularly universities, and one of those principles was the principle of autonomy. Mr. Chairman, it's of absolute and critical importance that the independence of universities be maintained. A healthy, democratic, open society in fact must guarantee for its own openness, in defence of its own democratic institutions and processes and values, that we guarantee to institutions such as universities the full freedom that will allow the researchers, the writers, the speakers, the faculty, and the academy as a whole to be able to speak freely and without restraint about matters of public good, common good, public policy.

So the amendment proposed here, A3, retains within it the powers for the minister to seek any other information than would be necessary just for financial accountability. I think that challenges the fundamental principles of a democratic and open society in which the universities play a very key role in encouraging debate, in presenting dissenting views, in presenting fearless but thoughtful criticism of people and groups in authority and in power. The state is one of the most powerful institutions in our modern society, and therefore it must not reserve for itself the right to demand and receive any information of the universities that its representatives might require.

Information with respect to financial accountability: yes, that certainly is part of the business plans, and that is a reasonable requirement given that public funds, taxpayers' money, is being spent on that. But taxpayers also expect as democratic citizens their institutions such as universities to have the full freedom to express themselves on matters that the members of universities – academics, students, administrators – think are critical to the preservation, protection, and enhancement of public interest and common good.

Since this amendment A3 in my judgment strikes at the very root of what the university is about – free speech, free thought, expression of dissent, and undeterred criticism of powers that be – I think that the subamendment proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods does go a long way in removing what I consider to be a very, very flawed part of Bill 43 in its amended form.

So I speak in favour of the subamendment as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

[Motion on subamendment SA3 lost]

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

10:30

The Chair: We now have for our consideration in committee amendment A4, which is to the part that's section S.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment for section 88 strikes out the section that is in the bill and substitutes a section entitled Compulsory binding arbitration, and 88(1) says:

Where a dispute that arises during the negotiation of an agreement under section 87 cannot be resolved by the board and the academic staff association of

- a public college,
- a technical institute, or
- a public post-secondary institution established after the coming into force of this Act, the board or the academic staff association shall refer the dispute to compulsory binding arbitration.

(2) Where a dispute that arises during the negotiation of an agreement under section 96 cannot be resolved by the board and the graduate students association of a university, the board or the graduate students association shall refer the dispute to compulsory binding arbitration.

So these are the two sections of this particular part of the bill that have caused some consternation. I believe, if my history is correct, and I think it is, there has not been a strike by academic staff in any of our institutions in the history of the province. Now, as I say, I stand to be corrected.

I think that in the past associations have voluntarily given up this right, have made provision in the contract that would disallow strikes and would prevent job action. So the strike provisions are being struck from this bill, and they're being replaced with binding arbitration. I think, given the practice and the history of negotiations in the province, that it's an unnecessary restriction.

I think it's a solution that is being proposed before there's a problem. It's unnecessary. I think it's inflammatory. I think that trying to prevent and to solve problems before they arise in this case is maybe well-intentioned but I think in the end does a disservice with respect to employees. I think the provisions are, as I said, unnecessary, and I think it's unfortunate that they're here, Mr. Chairman, and I would urge members of the Assembly to vote against it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to the subamendment to amendment A4. Amendment A4 represents a very, very minor retreat from the position that was taken by the minister, who is the sponsor of the act, in the original motion where, of course, strikes and lockouts are prohibited. The language itself is very hostile to some very fundamental democratic rights in the area of employer/employee relationships. The Alberta labour code, although it's not the model to be followed in the rest of the country, does include the right to strike as a legitimate democratic civil right. So the provisions in the original draft were in that sense quite odious, odious to democratic principles and democratic values.

The retreat from that is a good sign, but the retreat seems to be merely symbolic because in effect the substitution of the prohibition of strikes with compulsory binding arbitration and that being the only avenue available to employees and employers amounts to the same thing. It still takes away the right to strike, and, Mr. Chairman, removal of the right to strike as provided for in this legislation is unnecessary in the sense that the incidence of such decisions or such actions has been rare indeed. The 40-some years that I have spent either directly in postsecondary institutions or being around them tell me that it's a very, very, very rare occurrence.

But democratic rights must be respected regardless of whether they're exercised or not. If democratic rights are respected only if those who have these rights give the undertaking that they will exercise them, then there's no point in having such rights. So even if it were the case that strikes had been used in the past more frequently than perhaps once – one occasion has been brought to my attention – that's no reason to be apologetic about the demand about the expectation that this right must be respected, must be retained in legislation for employees of universities.

The compulsory arbitration is no substitute for the right to strike. It doesn't in any way diminish the severity and the real intent of this legislation, which is to extinguish this fundamental and democratic right of employees. For that reason alone, I'm opposed to amendment A4. I don't think it does anything at all to show respect for that fundamental right to strike that in a democratic society is a common thing. It's not something that's an exceptional right that somehow needs to be rolled back now because its existence and its exercise have done some irreparable damage to the postsecondary system in this province. They've no such evidence. It has not been exercised. Even if it is exercised, there is no reason to take it away.

It seems to me that the attempt in this bill to take away this right from university employees, university faculty, students is another step towards taking this right away from all categories of public service employees, and that is simply not something that should be acceptable in our province and to this Legislature.

I have expressed, I think, my strong opposition to the provisions of amendment A4, and the only way that we can improve this bill with respect to this particular issue is by simply striking out section 88 altogether from the bill. So I speak in favour of the amendment proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Hon. member, I'm sorry. You kind of lost me. Right now I don't have an amendment on the floor from Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I stand corrected. I'm ahead of myself. I think you're right. I apologize for the error.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it's safe to say, though, he doesn't like what the government's doing, and neither do I.

When you take a look at this particular amendment, where they bring in compulsory binding arbitration, you have to ask yourself the question: why would they bring this particular amendment in? It seems to me that when we look at amending legislation, there should be a good reason for doing it, something substantive. It corrects an existing problem, or it changes current legislation to fall in line with practices that have changed or something of that nature. When we take a look at this, when you take a look at staff that haven't gone on strike – I also don't remember an instance of that ever happening in this province – you have to wonder why the government would think they had to bring in a heavy foot and put in place compulsory binding arbitration when there's never been an existing problem.

Does the government have information that we don't have? Are they expecting some ongoing problems, or are they just pursuing a political philosophy? If they're just pursuing a political philosophy, which is to stop people from organizing or having a right to have some say in how they are employed and how they are compensated for that employment, then I have a real problem with these kinds of amendments.

We don't want to see unnecessary amendments and legislation coming forward in this Assembly. It's a waste of everybody's time, and it often brings in legislation that is punitive in nature and does not help the process of us getting the business done of educating students and having world-class education facilities in this province.

So I am completely opposed to this particular amendment, and I am very surprised that the government would have brought it in at this time.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Very quickly and very briefly in response to the hon. members who have just spoken, last year Mount Royal College was within about four hours of a strike and/or lockout which would have lost approximately 3,000 students their one semester and their one year.

The Chair: Any further debate?

[Motion on amendment A4 carried]

The Chair: Our next amendment for consideration this evening is amendment A5, which is item U in the package, amending section 92. Any comments with respect to this amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to make some comments about the A5 amendment. This is the section with respect to model dispute settlements, Mr. Chairman. Briefly, the amendment as proposed by the government is that if an agreement concluded or renewed under section 87(1) does not contain provisions respecting the matters set out in section 87(3)(b), (4)(e) and (g), (5)(d) and (e) or (7), as the case may be, the agreement is deemed to contain the provisions set out in the regulations in respect of which the agreement is silent.

If you go back to the original bill, I think you have to reference it in 92(1):

If an agreement between the board and the academic staff association of a university does not contain the provisions required under . . . 87(3)(b), the agreement is deemed to contain those provisions set out in the regulations in respect of which is silent.

Sorry, Mr. Chairman, but you have to find your way between the different provisions of the act.

The provision that they're referring to is:

An agreement between the board and the academic staff association of a university shall, with respect to the employment of academic staff members, contain provisions respecting at least the following matters:

- (a) establishment of salary rate and wage rate schedules for the purpose of setting the salaries or wages payable;
- (b) procedures respecting the settlement of differences between the parties arising from the interpretation, application or operation of the agreement.

So it's saying that those provisions with respect to wages must be included. It's part and parcel of the writing of agreements in the negotiations that go on between the board and the associations that we're concerned about and the dictating of those provisions in legislation.

I think that that briefly is what the amendment is about, and our concern, as I indicated, is that the provisions of agreements are being dictated by the act and not being left to the two parties involved to work out and determine.

The Chair: I wanted to just ask a question for clarification so that the chair might understand. In section 92 in the amendment A5 there isn't a number subsequent to 92, so is this amending subsection (1), (2), or (3) of this section?

Dr. Oberg: Three.

The Chair: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I see that since my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods started debating this particular amendment, we've been joined by more people in the gallery, and if it sounds confusing to you up there, it's confusing to us too.

We have a big bill. We have a huge package of amendments. We have huge sections that this act refers to that are being deleted or somewhat deleted or slightly changed. While we've had these amendments for a few days to look at them, there hasn't been an opportunity to take them out en masse to stakeholder groups, and we are getting feedback coming back to us in bits and dribs, and the government does not stand up and defend their positions on these particular amendments. So it's very slow going tonight. At least the government consented to break part of this big amendment package out so that we could deal with some of the more contentious issues as they come forward.

This one, amendment A5, the model dispute settlement provisions, is quite contentious, Mr. Chairman. It takes away the right for people to negotiate their livelihood, and that's a real problem as far as I can see it. There is nothing good about what they've eliminated from the act, and with the model dispute settlement provisions that they've put in place, once again how academic staff can negotiate their contracts is going to be decided by a political mandate rather than equal partners coming to the table and being able to negotiate an agreement that is compatible for everyone concerned. So I certainly find this to be an offensive amendment and will be quite pleased to vote against it.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, this section of the bill and amendment A5 reflects once again a sort of authoritarian streak that runs throughout this bill, and that's why I find it unsettling that we are rushing through this at this speed. It's a bill which has provisions which are highly consequential for everyone working at postsecondary institutions, and there's no real debate on the floor with respect to the possible consequences of these provisions.

This particular amendment really does nothing to reassure me that the minister and the government are not trying by way of this bill to centralize more and more authority and power in their own hands at the expense of the rights of both employers and employees at each of the postsecondary institutions to have the opportunity to engage in meaningful negotiations and determine what is going to be contained in the agreements that they negotiate and what's not to be contained in there. That should be a matter for open and free negotiation between employers and employees and not a matter that should be determined or decided in the end by user regulations, by the minister, or by the government.

So it's yet another, I think, instance of the authoritarian nature of this whole bill and how it strikes at the very root of what values should inform our postsecondary institutions, not only in specific instances but in general. The very culture of postsecondary institutions must be such, and the legislation should encourage the development of culture so that it is such that it encourages democratic values, strengthens democratic values, respects democratic principles and the democratic way of doing things, making decisions, interacting with each other in business matters that pervade every aspect of the institutions. After all, these are institutions which are the sites where our future leaders are growing up, are learning and growing as persons, as citizens as well as scholars and experts, and to infuse these institutions with a sort of authoritarian set of values as embodied in this act is highly disturbing and unsettling for me.

So I'm opposed to this particular section. In the original bill it's section 92, and its amended form as expressed by A5 still falls far short of what I expect the Ministry of Learning to be wanting to do in order to strengthen democratic values and democratic decision-making in postsecondary institutions. So I'm opposed to this amendment, Mr. Chairman, for that reason.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. No offence to the previous speakers, but quite simply what this amendment states is that if certain factors are not included, if they are not negotiated within the contract, then they will be deemed negotiated as per the regulations.

I'll give you an example. Number 5(e) states, "Procedures for determining rights relating to copyrights and patent matters involving discoveries made in the course of employment." Quite simply, Mr. Chairman, if these are not ironed out in their contract, there can be a considerable amount of difficulties for the professor who has made an invention, for example.

So all we're saying is that if they are not in the contract, they will be deemed to be in the contract by virtue of regulation. This in no way stops the two parties from being able to negotiate what is in the contract.

[Motion on amendment A5 carried]

The Chair: Our next item for consideration is amendment A6, which is item Z on page 13, dealing with section 97. Comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This particular section, section 97, has been of great interest to students because it directly affects the operation of their organizations.

Section 97 and the five subsections of the bill as circulated last May have been struck, and in their place is this amendment Z. Under section (1) each student organization of a public post-secondary institution shall provide audited financial statements annually to the board of the public post-secondary institution and shall make the audited financial statements available to students of the public post-secondary institution on request.

(2) Where an investigator appointed under section 99 finds irregularities in the management of the financial affairs of a student organization, the Minister may and it goes on to say,

- (a) suspend or terminate the term of office of one or more members of the council . . .
- (b) appoint an administrator to exercise the powers and perform the duties of the council until a new council is elected, and
- (c) take any other action that the Minister considers appropriate to remedy the irregularity.

And then

(3) An administrator appointed under subsection (2)(b) shall be paid the remuneration and expenses determined by the Minister out of the funds of the student organization.

So for students it's a hard provision to swallow, and it strikes, I think, at the view that's built into this bill of students and student organizations.

Mr. Chairman, the overwhelming majority of students attending postsecondary institutions are adults. They're 18-plus. They form student organizations. They're duly elected by the student body, and I think they've always viewed themselves as fairly independent, that they are really in charge of their own affairs. The history of student organizations in the province – there have been literally thousands of student councils over the years, and they've conducted their affairs as we would expect an adult organization to conduct its affairs in the interest of its membership.

So I think it's with that kind of background, that sort of context, that students find the provisions of the bill and the way they're being treated somewhat offensive. These particular provisions with respect to audits are troubling for students. Again, it seems to be a paternalistic approach to student organizations by the government, that students feel is unwarranted. They find these provisions unacceptable, Mr. Chairman.

I would like to now move a subamendment that I think would better reflect how students would see the whole business of audits handled.

The Chair: This will be called SA4. You've given me the original?

Dr. Massey: Yes.

The Chair: Good show. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. The amendment would simplify section 97 and provide that each student organization of a public post-secondary institution shall make publicly available audited financial statements when a simple majority of students who are members of the student organization have indicated in a plebiscite that the organization should prepare an audited financial statement.

I think the intent is rather clear, Mr. Chairman. The organizations are required to adhere to a number of regulations and procedures. They have internal mechanisms for dealing with their financial affairs. They have public obligations with respect to those financial affairs, and the notion of an outside investigator being appointed and all the provisions of the subamendment I think they feel are unnecessary given the kinds of obligations that they already have.

My colleague will speak briefly about the costs involved under section 97 with respect to audits. The proposal in the amendment would simply relieve the student organizations of those costs, yet there would be a provision that should students want audited statements made public and distributed publicly, that could be handled, and the mechanism is suggested in the subamendment.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do not like the government amendment brought in, A6, but I certainly do support the subamendment that was brought forward by the students to our caucus. Once again I ask: what's the purpose of having put this original amendment in place? Have there been consistent problems with the kinds of financial statements that have been provided by these organizations?

What happens is that all organizations provide some form of financial statement. Most of them are at least review engagement reports where accountants have looked at them, have compiled the figures, and have some verification of the information provided to them. If these organizations are required to go to audited statements for each financial year, then they are looking at substantial cost increases. A review engagement report can be compiled, depending on the size of the organization, for anywhere from $700 to $1,500. I've never seen an audited financial statement for even a very small organization that came in with a price tag of less than $5,000.

So where are the students supposed to get this kind of money? They're students. They don't have money in the first place by the time they end up paying out money for their tuition and for their living accommodations and for their student loans and for their books and for their ability to eat once in a while. Then if they belong to a student organization, look at the fees that are going to have to be charged to be able to provide this service, which I don't see as being a necessary service.

Now, this amendment the way the government has brought it in is a way to force students to disband and to minimize those students who can afford to join organizations. So we bring a class tiering system into student organizations, which I think is completely against any philosophy that we should be supporting at the education level. Definitely for the financial constraints but also definitely for the real ceiling this puts on students' rights to be able to organize and to form associations, this has got to be one of the worst amendments we've seen.

The benefit of having student organizations is immense. The ability for them to participate in educational processes, in democratic processes, their rights to free speech and to bring contentious issues to the public for discussion and for debate is of importance, as all generations have recognized and all times in history have recognized. This is the fountain of new ideas. This is where we get the out-of-the-box solutions, and this is what propels us to next-generation innovations. If we start to put a lid on these organizations, we are really stifling their independence and their creativity and their ability to fully participate in the same way that all of us had an opportunity to participate when we were students.

So I'm going to support this subamendment and vote against the government amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Amendment after amendment continues to disappoint those of us who have a very different vision of postsecondary institutions and the kinds of procedures and rules and values by which those institutions and their members should live and act. This audit requirement and the minister's attempt to give to himself the power to dismiss duly democratically elected student bodies and send investigators to do the job for them carry a message which is very unhealthy when you combine it with other sections of the bill.

I must, Mr. Chairman, with your permission apologize to the House for not being able to find my way through the procedural maze. I had an amendment to section 93 of the bill on student affairs. I wanted to amend that section to again remove some of the limitations set around the ability of a student organization to define the purposes of the organization independently of what the purposes of the institution's members may be. Both the provisions of section 93, which obliges student bodies to conduct their affairs consistent with the purposes of the public postsecondary institution, and the provisions of this section 97 as amended by amendment A6 in my view take away from these duly elected bodies and student bodies in general the right to exercise their liberties and freedoms, which are the rights of all of us as citizens and as adults and as members of a democratic community.

So I stand opposed to amendment A6 and would like to support the subamendment introduced by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A6 carried]

The Chair: We next have for our consideration this evening amendment A7 as moved by the hon. Minister of Learning.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. These are the provisions in the amendments with respect to the Lieutenant Governor in Council regulations. The original bill has an extensive list of powers that are given to the cabinet, to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and the amendments as proposed in section II are just as extensive. One of the questions it raises is one that was raised in a previous piece of legislation that we examined earlier today, the privacy legislation, where the federal Privacy Commissioner made some comments about regulations. To paraphrase what the commissioner said, it was that regulations should be made with respect to minor housekeeping items with respect to that legislation.

That certainly stands in contrast to what is being authorized here. It says:

- The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations
- (a) defining, for the purposes of this Act and the regulations, any word or expression used but not defined in this Act;
 - (b) respecting tuition fees, for all boards other than the board of Banff Centre, including regulations
 - (i) respecting the publication of information . . .
 - (c) respecting the application of section 62 to students.

So with those sections on tuition they can make regulations and effect its application.

- (d) listing pension plans . . .

Almost every aspect of the legislation is detailed or possibly affected by the regulations that are laid out in section 124 of the act.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this goes too far, that the kind of regulatory authority being given to the cabinet is really, really being overdone. I wonder, if the legislation is as good as we would hope it would be after the government has presented it and consulted with groups across the summer and fall period, why there would be need to delegate to the Lieutenant Governor in Council the powers that we see listed under this section of the act. I think it's unfortunate. I think it also contributes to the feeling that somehow or other the act hasn't been carefully enough thought through in places to stand alone and not require additional modification and changes by the cabinet.

We've raised the whole business of regulations in previous debates, Mr. Chairman. I think we've made some small progress. The Minister of Justice was good enough to post the provisional – I think it's provisional – or draft set of regulations with respect to legislation that was going to be put forward. I think that that was a step forward, because as we all know, the devil is in the detail of the regulations. But I think the whole business of leaving to regulations so much of the authority for what happens has been sort of a slippery slope that we've gone down in the province, and I think this is an example of where we shouldn't be going with respect to the regulating ability of the cabinet.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I too speak against this particular amendment. It's my belief that this government would be quite happy if it could say that Bill 43 were changing postsecondary education and that all the detail will be in the regulations and we'll figure it out later, because that's what we've seen time after time in this Legislature with bills that they've brought forward. They like to spend the least amount of time in here. They do not like to defend their policies. They like to bring in legislation that is very loosely put together, that does not have a lot of definitions or defining moments in it, and everything is pushed off to the side to regulations, where they can do them behind closed doors and where they don't give anybody, public or opposition or anyone, the opportunity to review and have some input in them.

As the Minister of Justice knows, this isn't a common practice. Other jurisdictions post their regulations well in advance of the legislation being debated. He's tried to do that with some of his legislation, and that's a positive move. What it does is put the detail out there for people to see where the intention of the legislation is in terms of where it's going to go, and then there's an opportunity for stakeholders and other directly affected parties to look at it, to debate it, to talk amongst their organizations, to see whether or not the regulation is going to be a positive or a negative impact and then negotiate with the sponsoring government members to change them as necessary.

Not here. Not with this government. They bring in a flawed bill from the beginning, have to take months to go out to people and try and get it fixed, and then bring in another huge package of amendments that still aren't very good. We bring in subamendments to their amendments to try and improve it, and still the bulk of the issues are going to be dealt with in regulations. Well, that's just poor legislation, it's just poor government, and I'm not going to vote for it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is the last of the amendments, and it certainly is reflective of the general tone of the bill. The skeleton is in the bill and the substance is in the regulations, and in this Legislature, which should be insisting on dealing with the substance, the matters that really affect and are going to impact students, faculty, institutions simply are not going to be available to this House for debate.

In debate as it has been in this House tonight on this very important bill, only one side has been speaking. There can't be a debate if there's a sort of monologue going on here, which is regrettable, I think. Putting much of the substantive matter into the regulations, which are to be decided by the cabinet, where there's never going to be an opportunity for this House to look at them, debate them, criticize them, analyze them, examine them, is a practice that must sooner or later stop, but I don't expect the present government to take steps to move in that direction.

The powers of this Legislature have been moving gradually into the hands of the executive, and this particular amendment is a good example of how that shift in relative powers of the Legislature and the executive have changed over the last six and a half years that I've been part of this process. I regret that, and I must say that I will be voting against this amendment.

Thank you.

[Motion carried]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 26, 2003 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 2003/11/26
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, we give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.
 Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Dr. George Joseph, consul general for the Republic of India. Dr. Joseph is on his first official visit to Alberta since taking up his new diplomatic post in Vancouver.

Alberta and India have a long and close relationship, a friendship that continues to grow stronger. Alberta has a vibrant Indo-Canadian community; 61,000 people of Indian origin now call our province home, and these citizens greatly contribute to making Alberta one of the best places in the world to live. Also, businesses from our two areas continually co-operate, most recently in the oil and natural gas sector. With India's population expected to exceed China's by the middle of this century, India holds huge potential as a growing market for goods from Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also proud to note the role our province plays in improving the quality of life for many citizens of India through health, education, and other social initiatives funded by the Alberta Wild Rose Foundation.

We are grateful Dr. Joseph has chosen to visit us, and we hope that he has an opportunity to return again soon. I would ask that our honoured guest please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you. I have the great pleasure of introducing to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Alberta's Ombudsman, Mr. Gordon Button, and his assistant, Ms Dixie Watson. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Button was sworn in as Alberta's seventh Ombudsman on October 20, 2003. I would ask both of them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you seven fine members from the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta, otherwise known as APEGGA. APEGGA is a self-governing association responsible to the people of Alberta for licensing of professional engineers, geologists, and geophysicists; the maintaining of professional standards; and upholding the code of ethics. Over the past several months I have been working with APEGGA on a variety of issues, and I have really enjoyed the time that I have spent with them.

APEGGA reached 30,000 members in March of 1988, and the reason they are with us today is they are celebrating the registration of their 40,000th member, quite an achievement. That member is Sebsibe Asfaw, a professional geologist. Mr. Asfaw was born in Ethiopia in 1962 and came to Canada in 1997. I would ask that they rise as I call out their names: Sebsibe Asfaw; Mike Smyth, professional engineer, president of APEGGA; Neil Windsor, professional engineer and executive director and registrar of APEGGA – I would also just make a note that Neil is a past member of the Legislature in Newfoundland – Linda Van Gastel, professional engineer and president-elect of APEGGA; Andy Gilliland, professional engineer and vice-president of APEGGA; Philip Mulder, manager of communications; and Mike Koziol, professional engineer and member of the council of APEGGA. Congratulations and thank you for introducing your 40,000th member. Please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly special guests who are joining us from Sakaw elementary school today. Mrs. Phyllis Morhaliek is the grade 6 teacher of 29 of the students, and Mr. John McQuay is the grades 5 and 6 teacher of 25 of the students. One of the young gentlemen in their classes, after the last election, asked me if he could use a couple of my signs for his tree fort, so that was a very good recycling use. Today they are accompanied by parent helpers Mr. Glen Keats, Mrs. Tracy Ballantyne, Mrs. Rose-Mary Hall, Mr. Mark Sanders, Ms Holly Dyck, Mr. Bill and Mrs. Bev Ross, Mrs. Sheri Rau, and Mrs. Tessa Strachan. I'd ask them all to please stand now and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce students, staff, and parents from one of the finest schools in Alberta, a consistently very high-achieving school, and that's the school of Windsor Park. I'd ask the students to rise. There are 24 of them, and as well they are accompanied by three parents – Mrs. Val West, Dr. Sheri Samuels, and Mrs. Margaret Rolf – and by their teacher, who I've worked with a couple of times during Read-in Week, Mrs. Jennifer Health. So please give them all a warm welcome, and I hope they enjoy their tour.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the House a prominent health care professional and leader, very busily involved in the negotiations between the United Nurses of Alberta and the Provincial Health Authorities. She is Ms Bev Dick, first vice-president of United Nurses of Alberta, known as UNA. She's seated in the public gallery. I'm so pleased that she was able to join us for a brief while today and observe the proceedings of the House. I would ask her now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. The first is a group of 13 students and their teacher from Concordia high school in the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands, and I would ask that the students and their teacher, Mr. Mark Rothfos, please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, we will be joined a bit later today by students from Mount Royal elementary school, which is also in the constituency. There are 28 students accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Woelfle, and I would ask that when they arrive, maybe people can just give them a bit of a wave.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe my guests have arrived as yet, but it is my pleasure to rise on behalf of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and for the Member for St. Albert and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of men who are the 2003 60-plus Canadian slow-pitch champions. With us today are the St. Albert White Sox slow-pitch team, who I will be recognizing later this afternoon. The 15 members, led by their captain, Vern Holland, will be seated in the members' gallery. As I can't see if they're there, I'd ask them to rise, but I do believe they'll be coming in a little bit later, and at that point perhaps we could give them a warm welcome.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two new staff members that just started in my office recently: Jeanna Woodward and Tennille Auch. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie introduced Bill and Bev Ross. Bill also has a distinction that many people in the Assembly don't know about, and that is that for over 40 years he's been a valued volunteer in the Edmonton Minor Hockey Association. Each January during Minor Hockey Week he co-ordinates a group of volunteers in the tournament headquarters, where they keep in line 500 teams and over 7,500 participants in the 20 arenas in the city of Edmonton. Mr. Ross is also better known as Mr. Central. So to Bill and Bev, please stand and enjoy the traditional warm welcome we give to volunteers here in the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there young people from the School of Hope in Vermilion and Tulliby Lake school in either of the galleries? Would you rise, please. On behalf of your Member of the Legislative Assembly might I extend a warm greeting to all of you for attending the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, despite the Alberta government's surplus this government still isn't financially prepared for salary increases for provincial employees and still hasn't planned adequately for paying off Alberta's $7 billion infrastructure debt. To the Minister of Finance: why has the government yet again failed to plan for wage increases by not having an adequate contingency fund in the budget?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, today I released the second-quarter report, that clearly indicated that Alberta's fiscal structure is in fact working, that the business planning process does work, and that we have a sound basis for growth within the province. Clearly, a number of the issues that maybe the hon. member may think are not addressed, in fact, do become addressed through our process of business planning.

Might I remind him that we are, I believe, the only government in Canada that goes through a quarterly update, and this is our second-quarter update and reflects a really positive trend for the province. I would hope that he will read the reports. Clearly, I'm going to be tabling some reports a little bit later, Mr. Speaker, insofar as the supplementary supply, and there's a lot of detail in those documents.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Minister of Finance: will your government outline tight controls over the capital fund to prevent it from becoming a pre-election spending fund?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, in our new structure we put in place two key components, one of them being a sustainability fund and the other being a capital fund. The sustainability fund, of course, is there to protect Albertans from the volatility from the oil and gas revenues, to make sure that core programs are always kept in place and financially maintained.

The other element that was key in the new structure – it was recommended by the Financial Management Commission – was, in fact, the capital plan. In the past it was easy to announce projects and then not follow through on them. The discipline with the capital plan that we have today is that once the funds are in the capital plan, the funds, in fact, stay there, and even if the projects aren't completed in the current fiscal year, the money is allowed to proceed on to the next fiscal year. So the capital announcements that have been made actually get built.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Finance: will you commit your government to review the budgeting process to account for the sequence of surpluses in the past few years?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that Albertans are quite pleased with the economic performance of this province. Once again we will lead the nation on economic growth. We will lead the nation on investment per capita. We will have the lowest unemployment rate in the country. The net migration to the province again will be roughly 55,000 people.

I think people in the province of Alberta have a lot of confidence in the fiscal management and the fiscal responsibility that this government has demonstrated. The review is done every quarter and through the budget process.

Budget Surplus

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, even with budget surpluses the Alberta government won't adequately fund major infrastructure projects. Instead, the government wants private companies to build our courthouses, roads, and hospitals through public/private partnerships, or P3s. In the short term the government may save money. In the long term Alberta taxpayers will pay more because of the private companies' higher borrowing costs. To the Minister of Finance: why won't this government use some of the surplus to build a southeast hospital in Calgary instead of burdening Albertans with the cost of a P3?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I believe we're probably the only government in Canada that actually has put in place a solid capital plan. Prior to today the capital plan over the next three years was worth $5.5 billion. Today we added another $428 million to that plan to bring us up to close to $6 billion. That's a commitment of capital that will, in fact, go into much-needed projects. Whether they're roads or schools or hospitals or different types of postsecondary education facilities, those will be determined and put forward in a plan that people can count on. The one benefit of this structure is that when we go through our budget process, we identify where those dollars are being spent, and they actually get spent in those areas.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Minister of Finance: why won't the government commit some of this surplus to building the Calgary courthouse instead of burdening Alberta taxpayers with a P3?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a capital plan in place that we are in fact following. Clearly, we have laid out the priorities of our government, we have enhanced that program, and we're moving forward.

I'll ask the Minister of Infrastructure to supplement though.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the process that we have in place relative to assessing P3s is one that is the envy of many jurisdictions. The hon. member being an economist, I'm very surprised that he's suggesting that this is going to burden future Albertans with additional costs. The fact is that through the P3 process, it has to be shown that there's an economic benefit to the province of Alberta before it would proceed.

When the final documents come out, I'm sure the hon. member will be able to assess them and will probably be only too happy to stand up and congratulate the government for having gone down this road.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, if they can ever show to my satisfaction that they saved money in the long run for Albertans, I will stand in this House and congratulate them, but I don't think I'll ever have to do it.

My final question is to the Minister of Finance. How will you meet the Learning Commission's class size standards if you don't invest now in building more classrooms?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, we just announced today that we've added $428 million in capital dollars to our already $5.5 billion capital plan over the next three years. I'm sure that the Minister of Learning and the Minister of Infrastructure will be working together to come up with a plan to address the pressure points in the Learning Commission and in the postsecondary education field.

I'll ask the Minister of Learning to supplement the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the Assembly well knows, there was money just put into the Learning Commission report. About $90 million was announced just a week or so ago. Quite frankly, the school authorities, the school boards, will have the ability to use that to address class size.

From an infrastructure point of view, we are looking at all the different possibilities, all the different combinations and permutations of how we can build up the capital to actually have more classrooms. That's what we're doing right now, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Finance just stated, there's a lot of money in the capital account, and we'll see how that money is spent.

Water Management

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, the issue of water scarcity has become a huge concern here in Alberta, particularly as the rapidly growing southern region dries up and industrial use intensifies and multiplies. My questions today are to the Minister of Environment. Given that industry uses approximately 46 billion litres of potable water annually for injection and this water is permanently removed from the cycle, when is he going to prohibit this practice?

Dr. Taylor: Well, the member does raise an important and good point. At the present time we recognize that the industrial use of potable water – that is, industrial use that takes water out of the water cycle, and as this member has correctly identified, it never goes back into the water cycle – is a large issue. People have typically just looked at the oil patch, but it's broader than the oil patch. It's other industries as well.

So what we've done to deal with that, Mr. Speaker, is we've put together a group of people to come back to us by March with some recommendations. That group of people consists of CAPP; it consists of NGOs, nongovernmental organizations, and environmental groups. It consists of all the stakeholders around this whole issue of water and injection of potable water, which then, of course, becomes nonpotable. So we are there. Remember that there are the nongovernmental organizations and the environmental groups there as well. I expect to have a report back from them in March.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, how does this minister propose to regulate and conserve water in this province when there are currently no means available to track total water usage?

Dr. Taylor: I'm not sure if she's referring to her original question or not. One of the issues that we had to define is: how much is actually being used by the various groups that take it from the potable cycle and then it becomes nonpotable? We actually have those numbers available, and I believe they're on our web site. So if that's the question, then the answer, the amount of water that is being used like that, is on the web site. But I'm not sure that that's what she was asking me.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was specifically referring to total usage throughout the province.

My final question is: given that agriculture and irrigation account for almost half the water usage in this province, how does the minister propose to implement a plan that would require local farms and ranches, already on the brink of bankruptcy, to pay for water usage?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, we have never said that we're going to charge for water. What we are saying is that we have to understand the economic value of water to our society. Quite frankly, we don't understand that yet. What is the economic value of water to you, the consumer? What is the economic value of water to industry?

The other thing we don't understand is: what is true cost accounting around water infrastructure? We really don't know what the true cost is to get water from the city treatment plant to your house or to my house. We don't really know what the true cost is of getting water from the irrigation dam, the Bassano dam, to the irrigators. So what we're talking about there is, one, understanding true cost accounting, knowing what stuff costs us, and, two, understanding the economic value of water to our society.

So we're not talking about charging people for water; we're talking about understanding the economics around water.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Year after year the government posts massive, supposedly unanticipated surpluses. Today the second-quarter financial update shows a projected $3.4 billion surplus. Yet despite the misplaced enthusiasm of the Tory backbenchers, first school boards and now health authorities are forced to run deficits. To the Minister of Finance: is this a deliberate strategy on the part of the government to post huge surpluses while school boards and health authorities run multimillion dollar deficits, or is it financial incompetence?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, what would be financial incompetence would be to run huge deficits, and that's against the law in this province.

We budget based on the best information we have. This year we went with a structure that would take out the volatility of oil and gas prices so that we could in fact count on revenues coming through to support our core programs. The hon. member opposite knows perfectly well that to have uncertainty in revenues can have a negative impact on health authorities, school boards, municipalities, et cetera. So our budget process takes that volatility out of the mix. In fact, we looked at our core revenues of oil and gas and said: what is a reasonable number that we can count on to support those programs? That was $3.5 billion. We said that if, in fact, it's more than that, we'll still spend $3.5 billion because that's a reasonable amount of money to support the core programs of the province.

This is a new structure. Because we have additional operating cash flow that came in this year, we were able to do some other things, because anything over $3.5 billion goes to our sustainability fund. Mr. Speaker, we were able to take the money from this year and the additional cash that came from last year and fulfill our obligation to the sustainability fund plus put $428 million into a capital fund to enhance that plus allocate $428 million to our debt retirement. That's fiscally responsible.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why didn't the government act to prevent deficits at both the Capital region and Calgary health authority when it knew it had billions of, quote, unanticipated dollars in its pocket?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, here's a message that particularly the Official Opposition could send. We had an announcement last year from the federal government that said: we will allocate $2 billion in additional moneys for health care. We haven't seen a penny of that yet. The last word we heard: those dollars may not come until next October or November. I'm reluctant to book that commitment until I see the cheque, quite frankly. So if there's a message that can come from the members opposite, get on the phone to your kissing cousins in Ottawa and tell them to write the cheque.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Other than once again blaming it all on the feds, why is it that with all the riches any government this side of the Persian Gulf could desire, this government cannot meet the basic needs of Alberta in a stable, debt-free manner?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, at the end of question period, I will be bringing forward a tabling of supplementary estimates, and I believe that the hon. member should have a good look at those because they will in fact show the allocation that has gone to support operating and disasters that have occurred this year in this province.

We are very fortunate in Alberta to have been able to deal with some very, very difficult times, and anybody in rural Alberta knows very well that this government has been there for them this year. Our Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has led the nation in bringing forward a program that helps our agricultural community. Also, Mr. Speaker – and I have to say this – we had some difficulty in our forest fire fighting, and we had to supplement extra dollars into that program. We were in a position to be able to do that. We had $210 million of operating contingency. We have allocated through this second quarter $174 million of that to meet pressure points on programs from Seniors to Learning, all the way through, where they were needed. We've done a good job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Calgary Regional Health Authority

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the population of Calgary, the city itself, has reached the 1 million mark and with the growth of a hundred thousand during the past five years, the Calgary health region experienced a population increase of 2.9 percent this year. The pressure of this tremendous population growth combined with rising costs, lower than expected revenues, and growing demands for services are making it difficult for the region to balance its budget. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister explain why these factors were not taken into consideration when the region's budget was set?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that question is that we do. Our population funding formula does take into account growth. It also takes into account factors such as the age of the population, demographics such as the gender and the socioeconomic status of the population. So the short answer is that we do.

Now, just recently, yesterday in fact, I sat down with the chief executive officers from both the Capital health region and the Calgary health region, and the good news is that in Calgary the chief executive officer of the regional health authority tells me: we're 97 percent of the way there; we get 97 percent of the funding that we need, but we need to sharpen our pencils as a regional health authority to find more efficiencies and ways that we can save money. We also need to look at ways that we can raise money that are within the parameters of the Canada Health Act. We do not want regional health authorities doing things to raise revenues that are inconsistent with the Canada Health Act, but the province also has a responsibility to ensure that we try and close that 3 percent gap.

I want to assure all Albertans though, Mr. Speaker, that people are aware that the $4.1 billion that goes into the province's regional health authorities is allocated on a fair basis. There is recognition, as I said, not only for the growth of the population but for demographic factors as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Given that the population of the city of Calgary is the highest in the province and it has the highest growth rate, my constituents are concerned that the budget allocation does not reflect this. Can the minister explain why Calgary's budget increase per capita was less than other areas such as the Capital region?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, in comparing the two largest health regions in the province of Alberta for the current budget year, Calgary received an increase of 7.6 percent and the Capital region received an increase of 6.6 percent. So the actual percentage increase was larger in Calgary than it was in Capital, but it is correct to say that on a per capita basis the Capital health region receives more funding than the per capita funding for the city of Calgary. The reason is because of the demographic factors that I described. The population served by the Capital health region tends to be older. They tend to come from a lower socioeconomic status. These people tend to be sicker, and it does serve a much larger area.

As an example, Mr. Speaker, transfers of moneys that go into the regional health authority in the Capital region for services that they provide to northern Albertans totaled approximately $120 million. While Calgary also serves a large area outside of the Calgary health region's boundaries, its transfers from other regional health authorities only totaled $44 million. So the Capital health authority does serve a larger population in terms of transfers from other regional health authorities than does the city of Calgary.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. I would like to ask the minister to explain why he has not moved forward more quickly with health reform initiatives that would give Calgary more options to balance their budget?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have moved aggressively on overall health care reform. That, of course, is not an excuse not to be fiscally responsible, and in examining the operations of regional health authorities throughout this province, I can tell you that I am satisfied that regional health authorities are doing a pretty good job of staying within their fiscal parameters. They're not doing a perfect job, but they're doing a very good job.

Now, with respect to reforms on increasing options for how regional health authorities can raise money, again, Mr. Speaker, while we encourage that, the parameter has to be that any efforts to raise moneys on the part of regional health authorities have to conform with the principles of the Canada Health Act, which principles have been enshrined in our own provincial legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. How many tax dollars are invested through the Department of Finance in electricity deregulation in this province at this moment?

Mrs. Nelson: I think that that question, Mr. Speaker, would probably fit on the Order Paper under Written Questions.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that Enmax has listed in its last annual report long-term debt of $183 million owed to the taxpayers through the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation, how can this government continue to say that we have no public debt as a result of electricity deregulation?

Mrs. Nelson: Again, Mr. Speaker, I would think that that question is better suited to the Order Paper under Written Questions for returns.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, then, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. The minister is in charge of the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, as it's now called. How much money did Alberta Finance loan through Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation in the year 2000, and was any of that money loaned to Enmax to participate in the power purchase arrangement auction?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe he asked for the year 2000. I'd have to take that question under advisement.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to supplement.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that we're very proud of the Alberta finance corporation because it assists municipalities in many ways. In fact, for the hon. member's benefit, a hundred million dollars of Alberta finance corporation funding has been going directly back to municipalities to help them on the whole issue of energy retrofits, which is a good example of the Alberta finance corporation's work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Turner Valley Gas Plant Historic Site

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Exploration for oil and gas in the Turner Valley area started some 90 years ago, when the first well successfully struck a petroleum production zone in 1914. It changed the industrial face of Alberta and, indeed, the rest of Canada. The economic impact of the oil and gas industry is enormous to our province, and preserving the Turner Valley Gas Plant as a provincial and a national historic site is important to all of us. Equally important to the residents of the area and downstream is the reclamation of the important historic site of Hell's Half Acre. To the Minister of Community Development: can the minister tell the Assembly when the cleanup work at the Turner Valley Gas Plant historic site will finally be completed?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, the site cleanup, reclamation, and restoration of the historic Turner Valley site has been progressing quite quickly, of late especially. Going back several years ago, an historical resources impact assessment was done for that area, followed by a risk management plan. I'm happy to tell the House that virtually all of the hazardous materials have now been removed: the asbestos, mercury, hydrocarbons, sulphur, and so on. There is still some work that obviously remains to be done. For example, when the Sheep River flooded a few years ago, it eroded the banks and exposed some of the vessels in that area. So we're just waiting for approvals now from the federal government, specifically the Fisheries and Oceans department, before we can proceed with that spring cleanup of those few final steps, which I hope will be before the spring runoff.

We do have to do this carefully, Mr. Speaker, because it is a national and a provincial historic site. So reclamation and cleanup is one part, but maintaining the integrity of the site is equally important.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that, then are any of the local residents or the visitors to this site at any risk whatsoever to their health or to their well-being?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, no, I don't believe that anyone visiting the site or living in that immediate area is in any imminent danger or risk. We have conducted or Environment or Alberta Infrastructure has conducted – together we've all had different parts of different tests conducted there. Based on the information that we've seen, we don't believe there are any measurable levels of contaminants in the water, for example, which anyone should be alarmed over, but on the side of safety we do provide fact sheets informing people of any potential risks that might still be there. For example, we've removed all the mercury that we possibly could from the soil, and where it occurred in some of the facilities, the physical buildings and structures, those have been sealed off and contained.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you. My final supplemental is again to the same minister. Mr. Minister, what further action, then, is the government of Alberta and your department going to undertake to alleviate the concerns of the people who live in the Turner Valley area as well as those who are downstream of Sheep River?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we spent a good deal of time consulting with the community there. In fact, just last week we held an open house. There were two of them. I believe they took place on Thursday. They were information sharing sessions, questions and answers, if you will, which involved individuals with expertise in this area from my department, from Alberta Environment, and, I believe, from Alberta Infrastructure as well.

We've also stepped up the funding or restored it in the one case. We've already spent as the Ministry of Community Development over half a million dollars on the site, and I think Alberta Infrastructure also spent about three-quarters of a million. This year we've added another $1.5 million to complete the important cleanliness of that site just to ensure its integrity and at the same time provide a safe visitation for people coming to the site.

Southeast Calgary Hospital

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, on a day when this government is lighting cigars and patting itself on the back for again running a huge surplus, it refuses to fund a badly needed hospital in southeast Calgary. Instead, the health region is moving ahead with a P3 proposal despite a recent report by four prominent economists, including a former chief economist with the TD Bank, who found that P3 hospitals are more costly, less accountable, and will lead to a deterioration in health services. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What assurances can the minister give Albertans that he will not give approval to providing services in a P3 hospital in southeast Calgary given that a P3 hospital will lead to – and I quote the report – “a deterioration of hospital services, diminished accountability, an increase in two-tier care, and needless cost”?

Mr. Mar: Well, like the hon. member, I do a lot of reading. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, I've gone to albertaliberaalfairytales.com, and I've looked at some interesting material from that web site. The opposition has a health care policy paper that's put on their web site. In fact, I look at the reading list that is prepared for the Alberta Liberal opposition, a recommended reading list which includes a reference to the hon. member's own book. Talk about the use of public dollars, the use of public dollars to shill his own writings. That is shameful.

Mr. Speaker, look; the whole point of this is that the Alberta government is focused on two things as it relates to health care. Those are improving access and maintaining or improving the quality of health services that are enjoyed and appreciated by the people of the province of Alberta. We are not ideologues. The Leader of the Opposition and his band of Liberals are ideologues, and that's the reason why we focus on being open minded and looking at different ways of delivering services. We're open minded to a public service that we support in this province, the best public health care system in Canada, I would argue.

We are open minded to the idea of using P3s as a way of funding capital, not making a privatized, for-profit health care system but a P3 system that allows us to look at different ways of using money to create capital that improves access in the delivery of services. We are open minded to the idea that there are other ways of delivering service, like private surgical facilities. We are open minded to the idea of private facilities providing publicly paid-for services for the benefit of the public and not charging user fees for such services. We are open minded to all these things because we are focused on health care, access, and delivery. Mr. Speaker, these people are focused on ideology.

The Speaker: Hon. Official Opposition House Leader, you rose on a point of order that we will deal with at the conclusion of the question period.

Ms Carlson: Thank you.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, be prepared for the debate. Okay?

The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We'll give a different minister a platform to play at being Premier. To the Minister of Infrastructure. What assurances can he give Albertans that he will not give his approval to a P3 hospital in southeast Calgary given that, and I quote the report I referred to: it is reasonable to expect P3 hospitals to be at least 10 percent more costly than their public-sector equivalents?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we've got in place a very good process for assessing any P3 that might come forward, whether it be a hospital, a courthouse, a school, or a postsecondary institution. That process involves, first of all, having a committee look at the proposal. They look at it to see if there's any possibility of it being the type of proposal that would reap the benefits that we insist that must be there for Albertans. If that looks like it has that potential, the proponent must then come forward with a business case, must bring the whole operating costs and the capital back to present-day value.

If, in fact, that is accomplished, then it goes to an outside committee, a committee completely outside, made up of the private sector. Now, I know that they don't like to hear that, that the private sector would be assessing a project, but the fact is that they, then, will delve into it and make sure that there is a value for dollars for Albertans.

As far as it costing 10 percent extra, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting if he relates that to the courthouse, because we already know that in the case of the courthouse we put out, as far as the construction and the capital costs, a proposal for a dummy bid, and guess what? The dummy bid came in quite a bit above what we thought it would cost us to build it, and the proponent is even below the numbers that we thought it would cost us to build. So it's considerably lower. I think you've got the plus and minus mixed up.

Dr. Taft: Well, to the same minister: given that the Calgary hospital P3 process is so far advanced, what evidence can this government produce to show that P3 hospitals won't cost Alberta taxpayers more and lead to a deterioration in health services?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, so far advanced? The Calgary regional health authority hasn't even put out a request for interest at this point, and that's the first entry point. Then there would have to be a request for qualifications, then an RFP. That's before we even get heavily involved in it. This is a concept at this point, and we haven't even seen anything from the regional health authority.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Load Securement Standards

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently a group of farmers in the Carstairs area organized a hay drive to donate and haul hay from Alberta to drought-stricken and burned-out areas of British Columbia. They advised me that they received verbal assurance from the British Columbia government that B.C. would forgo permit taxes and other fees and that load security requirements, which were the same as Alberta's with the addition of bulkheads, would be accepted as requested. On October 29, 12 loads left Carstairs only to be stopped at Golden, where more conditions were applied before they could carry on, even though many other trucks were hauling hay past them secured the same way without incident. Could the Minister of Transportation explain what happened at the Golden inspection station, and what involvement, if any, did Alberta Transportation have in resolving this issue under the terms of the memorandum of understanding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let me commend all those individuals that quickly responded to the need of British Columbians with respect to drought and also the huge burnt-out areas of feed.

Prior to the movement of hay from Alberta to British Columbia, both provinces had met and discussed the issues of fuel taxes, permitting, and some load securement issues. Organizers at that time, according to the information I have, were told of the higher degree of load securement on the B.C. side. That was one component of the discussions that we agreed to: that on the B.C. side there would be more of a load securement issue.

When department staff were told of the detainment at Golden, we, of course, made contact with B.C. to clarify the issue. Of course, it's outside our jurisdiction. We have no authority in terms of their particular regulations. I will say that after the vehicles were seized, local residents came together, helped the truckers there put on the additional load securement that was deemed necessary by the B.C. Department of Transportation, and then the loads moved on from there.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister explain why the memorandum of understanding between the western provinces did not work in this particular instance?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to the memorandum of understanding that was signed between Alberta and British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba in the year when we had a serious drought. It allowed for larger dimensions of bales to travel from those three provinces to Alberta. It served us extremely well, except this is a different situation where Alberta feed was traveling into the province of B.C., and they have deemed it necessary to keep the current load securement rules in place. We have to, as Alberta, honour that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: is Alberta going to renegotiate this agreement and amend the load security requirements in the future?

Mr. Stelmach: Good point. There is something called the North American load securement standard, and there are negotiations under way with all the provinces to try and harmonize all of our regulations with respect to this particular issue so that we don't run into these issues again in the future, which increase the costs not only to the trucking industry but certainly to the farmers that are awaiting their badly needed feed at the other end. So we hope to have some positive movement on this to report to the House in the very near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Grade 12 Diploma Exams

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents and teachers are baffled by Alberta Learning's decision to split the grade 12 diploma exams and advance the administration of part A by a week. They believe that shortening the instructional time is not in the best interests of students and places them at a disadvantage. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Given that research concludes that the time spent on learning makes a difference in achievement, why has the instructional year been shortened?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The diploma exams have been split into two for a couple of reasons. First of all, we split the exams in the first year of the strike, in 1982, and we noticed something very interesting in social studies. What we found is that the students actually did considerably better, statistically better, on the exams when the two exams were split, being a written component and multiple-choice component, a machine-scorable component. So that was one thing. Then when you combine that with the fact that we are now able to have the exam fully marked by the end of June, that's a plus. The third plus is that we can guarantee that the teachers will be there to mark the exams because they will not have to go into July, into their time off, to mark the exams.

So when you put all of that together, what we have come up with is an exam time frame that has about a week – I believe the most is eight days – between a part A and a part B. The hon. member has asked a question about instructional time, and the people who do curriculum say that the written component of the exams in all the science issues that are there will be complete by that time. There is time after that written component to have more instruction time to be able to prepare for the multiple-choice exam.

So, Mr. Speaker, that's the rationale. We fully anticipate that our students will do some 4 or 5 percent better on their exams by splitting them than what they would have before.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Then again to the same minister: will the minister just admit that the move is a strike proofing tactic and has really nothing at all to do with student learning? That's all it is.

Dr. Oberg: Oh, Mr. Speaker, first of all, it is not solely a strike proofing technique. It is, though, because at this particular point in time we have no agreement that the exams will be marked in July. It is my job as Minister of Learning to ensure that the students have their exam marks so that their marks can go on to university, so that their marks can be utilized and read. We had a very nasty situation when the strike was on, and quite literally we have not received any assurances in the form of legislation or anything else as to the reason why.

Mr. Speaker, the other important thing – and I'll reiterate it – is that quite literally the students are doing better. We think it is important that our students have the ability and the opportunity to do as well as possible on the achievement tests, and we have been quite surprised at this. It's been a very positive element.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister: why are our students being placed at a disadvantage in the competition for scholarships and entry to programs outside this province by reducing their instructional time?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely wrong for a couple of reasons. First of all, as I've said for the third time, the students are doing better. Their scores are higher. Also, when it comes to scholarships, when it comes to awards outside of the province, we also will have the exams marked quicker. So, quite simply, by the end of June we will guarantee that the marks are in the students' hands, that they're in the parents' hands, and they will be able to take that to the universities and get in there faster, quicker, better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Health Care Labour Relations

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the province's two largest health regions announced that they were wallowing in $120 million of red ink. At the same time Alberta's health authorities association has been engaged in a million-dollar advertising campaign to discredit Alberta's nurses in the current round of negotiations. The health authorities association has been bargaining in such bad faith that they had to be ordered back to the bargaining table by the Labour Relations Board. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why does the government allow health authorities to waste millions on public misinformation campaigns when RHAs are wallowing in a sea of red ink?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier in a response to another hon. member, the fact is that our regional health authorities are doing a good job. They're doing a good job with respect to the delivery of care. They're doing a good job with respect to the quality of the health service that they provide. They're doing a good job on the financial side of things. There are some legitimate issues that Albertans raise from time to time with respect to access. Regional health authorities are being responsive to that.

Mr. Speaker, regional health authorities throughout this province have a $4.1 billion budget. So, again, the good news is that in Calgary, as an example, 97 percent of what they require to do the very good job that they do is being met. They have indicated that they're willing to again continue to sharpen their pencils.

As well, the provincial government and, of course, as reminded by my learned friend the Minister of Finance, Ottawa also have a responsibility here to come through with some money that was previously promised. Now, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that when the federal government makes good on that commitment of $2 billion to the provinces and territories, Alberta's share will be approximately $200 million. One of our top priorities – in fact, I would suggest, the top priority among members of this caucus – is to ensure that regional health authorities get the lion's share of that money to deal with the circumstances they face.

Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons why health care costs continue to rise. We're working on providing the increased supply of services that people are looking for. We're also working at trying to reduce the demand on these services. People would be aware, for example, of our Healthy U campaign. They would be aware of the fact that we've reduced the number of smokers in this province by 44,000. People would be aware of efforts that we're making in schools for daily mandatory physical education. So these are all aspects that we're moving forward on. It's part of our reform package.

But, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the narrow point of the spending of the Provincial Health Authorities association moneys on advertising, as the nurses often do, it's only appropriate that the Provincial Health Authorities association also be able to get their position out to the public. It is no different. We have no prohibition on the nurses doing such activities. We ought not to have such a prohibition on regional health authorities either.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Then let me ask the minister: why has the government chosen the path of confrontation with the province's registered nurses by trying to impose a settlement that rolls back nurses' working conditions and endangers patient safety?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, every time we go to the bargaining table between the regional health authorities and the nurses, the nurses characterize everything as being a rollback. I'd say: look at the last contract. Some rollback, hon. member. A 22 percent increase in salary. When you include benefits and such, it's closer to 40 percent.

Mr. Speaker, it's entirely appropriate that this process be left in the situation that it's in, which is to say that the parties are at the bargaining table now. We hope that nurses, who are a very, very important part of our health care system, will bargain in good faith. We instruct the regional health authorities to do the same thing. If, as nurses suggest, they're interested in patients being placed first, as is the case with the government and the regional health authorities, then we have some sense of encouragement that, in fact, a contract will be struck.

Now, Mr. Speaker, should bargaining fail, there is still a process that has been set out by legislation for a compulsory arbitration process. That is another process by which we can also resolve this impasse between employers and their nurses.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: when is the minister going to take charge and order his handpicked PHAA negotiating teams committee to bring a fair contract offer to the table that values nurses as health care professionals and helps resolve the impasse that he's talking about?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't handpick any negotiators. That's the responsibility of the employers, in this case the Provincial Health Authorities association. They are instructed, of course, by their regional health authorities to bargain in good faith. I trust that nurses will do the same.

Again, we do value nurses. We recognize that they are a very important part of our health care system.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, in about 30 seconds from now we'll call on the first of seven members to participate. Prior to that, let me just do some recognitions on behalf of all of you.

Today is the 38th wedding anniversary of the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky and his long-serving and long-suffering wife, so awards and recognitions should be provided to her.

Yesterday was the birthday of the Minister of Innovation and Science.

Sunday was the 16th anniversary of the first election of the hon. Deputy Premier to this Assembly.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

St. Albert White Sox

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to acknowledge a group of men who have proven age has little to do with athletic ability. The St. Albert White Sox are the 2003 60-plus Canadian slow-pitch champions. These gentlemen are not strangers to this House as past recognitions of have been done for the national championship wins of 1994-95 as a plus-50 team and in 1998 and 2000 as a plus-55 squad.

Al Brown, Norm Carruthers, Ron Crosby, Peter Eskiw, Gavin Davidson, Rod Gauf, Lloyd Haddon, Vern Holland, Clarence McDonald, Archie Miskiw, Gil Oko, Jack Rudd, Don Stewart, Bernie Tymko, and Jim Walsh made up the White Sox squad, which defeated the Calgary Viagra Boys 13-9 on August 4 in the tournament final.

Not only should this group of men be recognized for a feat such as this national championship but also for the example they set for Albertans of all ages. I would like to congratulate the St. Albert White Sox on their national championship and thank them for being a role model for all Albertans.

I understand that they are in the members' gallery. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that they rise and receive the recognition of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

St. Albert Learning Community

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the broad learning community in St. Albert and their efforts in support of the work of the Learning Commission.

While recently attending all of our high schools' awards nights, the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and I have had the privilege of presenting scholarships funded through the Alberta heritage scholarship trust fund, which was established by our government in the 1980s, for a total worth in excess of $350,000. These numbers tell me that students in our community of 53,000 people know that studying pays off.

I'm equally proud to say that while a very high percentage of St. Albert students complete their high school studies, likewise more than 80 percent of our high school graduates go on to postsecondary education.

The good governance provided by our three school boards – public, separate, and Francophone – coupled with quality central office and school administrators, excellent teachers, and the identification of education as a high priority by our parents, students, and our taxpayers all contribute to a vibrant continuous learning community in St. Albert.

University of Alberta's Global Health Initiative

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, this morning's national news carried disturbing stories of the HIV/AIDS epidemic in Africa, where millions of people have died of AIDS, leaving 11 million children orphaned. These numbers will soar in the next several years.

Earlier this fall these stories became all too real for me. I had the privilege of meeting a courageous, thoughtful, and compassionate man named Winston Zulu. Winston is from Zambia in Africa. Ten years ago he learned that he was infected with HIV, and as commonly happens, he subsequently developed tuberculosis. Fortunately for him he was able to obtain drugs to treat the TB at a total cost of $40. Five of his brothers and a sister were not so lucky. They all died for lack of the drugs and the $40 each needed to buy them, leaving many orphaned children behind.

Winston is working hard to raise international awareness about the problems of Africans with HIV/AIDS and to speak about possible solutions. He was in Edmonton this October as part of the efforts of the global health initiative at the University of Alberta. The U of A's global health initiative under the Faculty of Medicine and Dentistry is striving to raise knowledge and awareness about global health disparities. They are to be commended. Work such as theirs lays the foundations for a healthier, more just, and peaceful planet.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Communities in Bloom Alberta Town of Millet

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to recognize the Communities in Bloom organization in Millet for receiving the Friends of Tourism Alberta Tourism award on November 3.

Communities in Bloom Alberta is part of a nonprofit Canadian organization that encourages partnerships between civic groups, individuals, businesses, and local councils and is organized by volunteers from the community. The goal of the program is to not only beautify the community with flowers and boost civic pride, but also its goals are rooted in environmental education and heritage preservation. Under the guidance of Bernice Knight Millet has become known as one of the prettiest little towns in Alberta.

The town of Millet is extremely proud to play host to this wonderful organization as its volunteers work tirelessly to ensure that this program blooms across Alberta. Communities in Bloom and the residents of the prettiest little town in Alberta are especially excited that Travel Alberta and the ALTO awards recognize this outstanding organization and its contribution to Alberta tourism.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Canadian Finals Rodeo Athletes

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to acknowledge a group of rodeo athletes who have proven that consistency and hard work eventually pays off.

Olds resident Travis Gallais is wearing the belt buckle that accompanies a team-roping national championship. Competing with teammate Rocky Dallyn of Nanton, the two picked up first place at the Canadian Finals Rodeo held earlier this month in Edmonton.

Sundre area resident Linda Burrell added another cattle-penning buckle to her collection as her team secured the reserve championship at the CFR. Burrell along with partners Shaylene and Billy Gladstone placed second in the group of 137 teams.

Bill Boyd of Olds, Cliff Williamson of Madden, Todd Gallais of Olds, and Jeremy Harden of Water Valley were other area cowboys that represented Alberta at this prestigious event.

This group deserves congratulations for their successes and a constant dedication to their craft.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

2:40

Bernie Zolner

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition to the tributes already given to this weekend's Molson Canadian Heritage Classic, I would like to add one special salute from an arts perspective to Mr. Bernie Zolner, an outstanding Edmontonian and talented producer.

Bernie Zolner co-produced the musical presentations with George Blondheim for the Friday night gala festivities and for the hockey classic itself. The presentations were all live first-class performances for a world-class event, and I would like to thank Mr. Zolner for pulling it all together and ensuring its success.

Mr. Zolner is a shining example of Alberta talent at its finest. From his beginnings as a child prodigy performing at the Spokane World's Fair in the 1970s to his current career as a producer and songwriter, he has been an inspirational role model for many artists.

Mr. Speaker, Bernie Zolner firmly believes in Alberta's artists and has demonstrated his commitment again this past weekend.

On behalf of the Minister of Community Development, myself, and all members here we salute Mr. Bernie Zolner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

United Nurses of Alberta

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the United Nurses of Alberta. Since 1977 UNA has worked to improve working conditions for registered nurses as well as to improve frontline health care delivery focusing on patient care. UNA's mandate includes the safe and professional care of patients. Through UNA's advocacy registered nurses have led the fight to strengthen and sustain the quality and universality of medicare and our public health care system.

The United Nurses of Alberta are currently engaged in contract negotiations with Alberta's health regions. The New Democrat opposition supports the efforts of nurses to secure a fair contract at the bargaining table and opposes imposing a settlement on nurses through binding arbitration or legislation. It's time for the government to reverse course and recognize nurses as the valued health professionals they are. Let us recruit and retain more nurses, not drive them out of the profession and out of the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present a petition with over 470 signatures from residents of the Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency and area requesting the extension of pavement on the north portion of highway 867 to highway 55.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to ask leave to introduce a petition signed by 178 Albertans from many different constituencies across Alberta. It's regarding their great concern with the issue of grandparents' rights and the difficulties they're having gaining access to their own grandchildren. It calls for this Legislative Assembly to "make the necessary changes to legislation and enable the grandparents to maintain ongoing contact with their [own] grandchildren."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed not only by my constituents but also some from Fort Saskatchewan, Edmonton, St. Albert, Spruce Grove, and Leduc requesting that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to "remove abortion from the list of insured services that will be paid for through Alberta Health."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly this afternoon, and it is from Albertans that live in Didsbury and some from Olds, Cremona, and also from Calgary. Now, this petition reads: "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to implement the income recommendations of the 2001 MLA Committee Low Income Programs Review."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting a petition on long-term care signed by 560 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to recognize and value the contributions and sacrifices the seniors have made in building the Province of Alberta, and treat them with due respect and dignity by reversing those policies that cause unnecessary financial hardship for them and undermine their quality of life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have two tablings. First, I would table the annual report of the Livestock Identification Services Ltd., which incorporates the Brand Act, the Livestock Identification Brand Inspection Act, the Livestock and Livestock Products Act, and the Stray Animals Act, and their associated audited financial statements for the year ended March 31, 2003.

Additionally, I'm pleased to table the eighth annual report of the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2003, which contains a summary of the transactions and affairs of the corporation, its revenues, and the application of its expenditures. Additional copies would be available through my office on request.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table various documents relating to the government's financial affairs and those of the Ministry of Finance. Most of these documents have been made public since we last sat in the House.

Pursuant to section 10 of the Government Accountability Act I am tabling the annual report of the government of Alberta for the year 2002-2003. This report showed net results for fiscal policy purposes of $1.989 billion. It was made public on June 24.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all ministers I am tabling the annual report for each ministry, including each ministry's department and agencies, pursuant to both section 45 of the Legislative Assembly Act and section 14 of the Government Accountability Act. The reports for these ministries were made public on September 30. They are Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, Children's Services, Community Development, Economic Development, Energy, Environment, Executive Council, Finance, Gaming, Government Services, Health and Wellness, Human Resources and Employment, Infrastructure, Innovation and Science, International and Intergovernmental Relations, Justice, Learning, Municipal Affairs, Revenue, Seniors, Solicitor General, Sustainable Resource Development, and Transportation.

Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 9 of the Government Accountability Act I am tabling the first-quarter fiscal update for 2003-2004. This shows increased nonrenewable resource revenues as well as increased spending on agriculture disaster. The report was made public on August 27.

I am also tabling the first-quarter activity report for 2003-2004, which describes the major achievements of our government during that period. This was also made public on August 27.

Pursuant to section 30 of the Alberta Capital Finance Authority Act, which used to be called the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Act, I am tabling the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation 2002 annual report, which was released on April 10.

Also being tabled is the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation 2002 annual report, which was released on March 31.

Five copies of each of these 29 reports have been delivered in advance to the Clerk's office as they are too numerous and heavy to bring into the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a letter from Athabasca University confirming the support of Bill 43, from Dr. Dominique Abrioux, who, I will say, just received an honorary doctorate from the British Open University.

I will also table a letter from Olds College. This letter confirms the support of Bill 43 from Tom Thompson of Olds College.

From Keyano College Jim Foote writes: "It is the position of Keyano College that Bill 43 . . . and amendments is a positive change."

From Red Deer College Ron Woodward, president, says: "This letter is to confirm the support of Bill 43."

From Portage College Bill Persley, president, says: "This letter is to confirm the support of Bill 43."

I also have a letter from the Alberta Graduate Council, who gives their concerns and issues about Bill 43, as well as from CAUS and ACTISEC.

I've tabled the requisite copies of all these tablings.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a presentation report from and with response comments by the Alberta Grandparents Association pertaining to the grandchild/grandparent access provisions of Bill 45. It's dated September 30, 2003.

I'm also tabling the requisite number of copies of five other very compelling and in-depth reports – I won't go into them – all of which are strongly supportive of the great benefits of having grandparents involved with youth in our society, especially at-risk youth, including one authored by Dr. Barbara Thomlison, one of our own Alberta professors at the University of Calgary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a report I referred to in question period, entitled Funding Hospital Infrastructure: Why P3s Don't Work, and What Will. It's authored by several prominent people, including a former staff with the federal Auditor General and a former economist with the TD Bank.

The other tabling is information relating to my recognition today. It provides information on the Centre for Global Health and Development being developed at the University of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from a Mr. Claude Gould of 43rd Avenue in Stony Plain, and Mr. Gould is writing to the hon. Premier and 19 other MLAs in regard to auto insurance.

The second tabling I have is the tabling of 625 signatures from Albertans from all over the province who are still expressing concern over the high cost of natural gas.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of eight handwritten letters from registered nurses Frances Galambos, Sharon Goodman-Popowich, Tim Grahn, Diane Lantz, Heidi Lawton, Katrina Plamondon, and D. Woodward. These letters are addressed to the Premier and the Minister of Health and Wellness. These letters are expressing their concern about the nursing shortage and the recruitment and retention of nurses and also are asking for respect and the negotiation of a fair contract for nurses.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today copies of seven separate letters from registered nurses regarding their concerns with negotiations and the need for a fair contract. The nurses are Ana Bebe, Alan Besecker, Larry Connell, Darlene Graumann, Tracey Huizer, Betty Patterson, and Mecana Tsang.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to table the appropriate copies of a memorandum from the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul requesting that should Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003, pass Committee of the Whole on Monday, December 1, 2003, it be given early consideration for third reading.

Pursuant to section 28(1) of the Ombudsman Act I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 36th annual report of the office of the Ombudsman for the period April 1, 2002, to March 31, 2003, and the financial statements of the office of the Ombudsman for the period ended March 31, 2003.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Now, hon. members, the hon. Official Opposition House Leader on a point of order.

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I refer to an exchange in question period between the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the minister of health. The minister of health made several comments that we found particularly inappropriate in this Assembly. I refer members to Standing Orders 23(j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," and (1), "introduces any matter in debate which offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly."

I also refer to Beauchesne 487(1), "Threatening language is unparliamentary," and (2), "Words may not be used hypothetically or conditionally, if they are plainly intended to convey a direct imputation," and Beauchesne 64, "The House has occasionally taken notice of attacks on individual Members."

Finally, Marleau and Montpetit talk about unparliamentary language. "The use of offensive, provocative or threatening language . . . is strictly forbidden."

I don't have the Blues in front of me, Mr. Speaker, but there was a general context in the response from the minister of health that included name-calling, which is really not appropriate. It included also some insinuations of intent, which is particularly offensive and definitely unnecessary in this Assembly. We had young children here in the Assembly. We have a wide audience now because of our Internet access. The way the minister was conducting himself, he seemed to be particularly attacking the Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

When he spoke specifically about the use of including a suggested reading list on the web site he visited where the Member for Edmonton-Riverview had a published book, he said that he was using that to shill his wares or something to that effect. It is completely inappropriate. Reading lists and bibliographies are suggestions for reading, not for purchasing, and definitely that is something that we should keep in mind when we're taking a look at what he talked about here. I couldn't find the use of the term "shill" on any particular unparliamentary list, but I think that's a word that should be added to that list. Certainly, in the context that it was spoken in the House this afternoon, it was intended to be a very unparliamentary usage and intended to be a direct insinuation about how the Member for Edmonton-Riverview conducts his work.

There were other words used there that I think also added to his intention. We have been particularly easygoing in this session in terms of points of order to try and facilitate the use of this House, but it has been escalating in terms of the use of words that I find to be unparliamentary and unbecoming of all members of this House and a reflection on all the members of this House.

I would ask that the minister of health apologize and withdraw those comments.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I can find for you a copy of the Blues on this section because I think we have to be a little more specific than to simply say: well, I believe or I think. So as a courtesy to you, I want to give you an opportunity to read that so that if you have some specific thing that you want to raise, I think you should raise it.

Ms Carlson: Yes. Mr. Speaker, when I look at this now that this has just arrived in front of me, I specifically am concerned about the use of albertaliberalairytales.com, which is not an existing site. Also, "Talk about the use of public dollars, the use of public dollars to shill his own writings," and he says, "That is shameful." I take particular offence with "the use of public dollars to shill his own writings." I think that's what we need to be paying attention to this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: So that's the point of the point of order?

Ms Carlson: "To shill his own writings," yes. Definitely there's an imputation of false motives with this, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the other citations I brought forward.

The Speaker: Okay. Well, the Minister of Health and Wellness is not here, so I presume that the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General as the Government House Leader is prepared to make a comment.

Mr. Hancock: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. I was prepared to respond, but now I'm perplexed because I didn't actually hear anything that I would have considered to be a point of order. The give-and-take of question period is sometimes rambunctious, and today was tamer than most.

The minister of health – and I don't have the benefit of the Blues – as I heard him, was giving as good as he got, to put it in the parlance and, in fact, a little bit better perhaps. There was nothing in the language that he used that in any way was inappropriate. In fact, it might have been entirely appropriate to point out that a member of the opposition was touting himself as an authority on a particular thing by including his own works in a bibliography published on a web site.

To complain that the web site is referred to as albertaliberalairytales.com, no one misapprehends exactly what web site was being referred to. In fact, with the addition of "airytales" there was probably a better indication of what web site was being referred to.

So, Mr. Speaker, we do have to have decorum in the House, and question period is a place for decorum, but every day in question period we have preambles to questions which raise insinuations and attack and are aggressive in nature and, I would suggest, way more aggressive than anything that was included in the response.

Now, if in fact public dollars are used and a document is published on that web site and the member that published it or the people that published it have included a work as a purported authority to be referred to, then I presume that one can make the assumption that one should go and look at that authority, whether they go to a public library or go and buy it. If, in fact, the intention is that they go and buy it, then it fits entirely, Mr. Speaker, within the definition of shill and shilling.

So I see nothing in what was suggested that would suggest anything other than the normal give-and-take of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. third party House leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to restrict my comments on this matter to just one point, and that is section 23(h) of our Standing Orders: "Makes allegations against another member." I'm not going to comment on the minister's comments with respect to albertaliberalfairytale.com, but I do want to refer to this point here.

I look at the reading list that is prepared for the Alberta Liberal opposition, a recommended reading list, which includes a reference to the hon. member's own book. Talk about the use of public dollars, the use of public dollars to shill his own writings. That is shameful.

I believe that very clearly this violates section 23(h). It is an allegation against the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and I think it is unacceptable in the House. I have read the hon. member's book. I note that he wrote it before he became a Liberal MLA, and it is in no way diminished by the fact that he's now a Liberal MLA. It's a good book, we have made use of it, and it deserves a place on any reading list that anyone who cares about health care in this province would like to see.

So, Mr. Speaker, I can support the Official Opposition's contention that the minister ought to withdraw the remarks and apologize.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise also under 23(h) and (i), "makes allegations against another member" and "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member," specifically about the sentences that were just alluded to: "Talk about the use of public dollars, the use of public dollars to shill his own writings. That is shameful."

Clearly, the Government House Leader is right: this question period is a rambunctious time. But there is a line which is crossed when we begin accusing each other of somehow personally profiting from our actions. I can tell you that that is indeed imputing a false motive. The book in question, Clear Answers, was in fact a national bestseller, and it's a standard reference book in health economics courses across the country. It's one of many, many references covered there.

So the imputation from the minister of health that somehow that was included as a means of shilling copies of the book is, in fact, absolutely an allegation against me and an imputing of a false motive.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs on this point of order?

Mr. Lukaszuk: That's correct, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A citation?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Standing Order 23(h) and (i). The same point, Mr. Speaker.

With the benefit of having a laptop before me, I have actually taken the time to log on to the Liberal opposition's official web page, which then has links to individual members. When one logs on to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's web site entitled – and I'm using this in the context of a title – MLA Kevin Taft web site, then you find a review of those two books in question. Mr. Speaker, they are not just citations for purposes of bibliography but four paragraphs advising the reader of what the content of the book is, what magazines the book has been reviewed by, and who has been the publisher of this particular book. So perhaps it should be understood by this Chamber that these are not just bibliography listings but are book reviews that are appearing on this web page.

Dr. Taft: Can I respond?

The Speaker: Well, sir, I've recognized you once. This is not a debate here. Thank you.

Well, okay. Citations have been provided with respect to this whole matter. We've heard from a number of speakers with respect to this. I appreciate the citations provided by the hon. Opposition House Leader with respect to this matter, and I'm going to go back to the Blues, to what I understand is the section that prompted the intervention.

Well, Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member I do a lot of reading as well. The fact is I've gone to albertaliberalfairytale.com, and I've looked at some interesting material from that web site. The opposition has a health care policy paper that's put on their web site. In fact, I look at the reading list that is prepared for the Alberta Liberal opposition, a recommended reading list, which includes a reference to the hon. member's own book.

Okay. The next section then:

Talk about the use of public dollars, the use of public dollars to shill his own writings. That is shameful.

Then it goes on. When I heard this this afternoon – and I listened to it very attentively – my response basically dealt with the question of public dollars. That is the concern that prompted me to anticipate that there would be a point of order with respect to this, but nobody has talked about this.

Now, the question here is: what does public dollars mean in the context of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta? If this web site is funded by the Alberta Liberal Party, then in the connotation I would use, this is not public dollars. If, on the other hand, the public dollars they're referring to are funded by the Alberta Legislative Assembly, then there is a very serious problem. I'm just assuming that that doesn't seem to be the issue here in terms of what has been addressed in the last few minutes. I'm going to assume that, in fact, it's the Alberta Liberal Party that pays for this web site, not the Legislative Assembly, because if it is the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta, that's a clear violation of everything dealing with the Legislative Assembly and the use of public dollars in the context that we know it.

So the next section, then, is: "The use of public dollars to shill his own writings." I'll quote again from the text: "That is shameful." The word "shill" from the Oxford dictionary basically refers to the origin as North American informal. As a noun it's "an accomplice of a hawker, gambler, or swindler who acts as an enthusiastic customer to entice others." As a verb it's to "act as a shill." Well, now, that is not helpful for anybody's interjection with respect to this.

There's absolutely no doubt at all about the fact that certain members in this Assembly, I do believe, study the dictionary on a daily basis and in the past have come here with the word of the day that they would try and work into their answers. Now, we're aware of this going back for a number of years. This is a form, I guess, of their attempt at humour or the irony that I said was a great way to deal with things: use irony and use humour, not name-calling or anything else.

There's no doubt at all in my mind, in terms of looking at the questions, that the response usually comes from some degree of liberty taken with respect to the question to turn the question into an argumentative statement, a statement with innuendo, a statement with things that may necessarily be just on the edge. As an example, the chair heard today very, very clearly one member stand up and say: well, what are you prepared to do to deal with this, member, when it's so far advanced? Then the minister got up and said: well, it hasn't been advanced at all; we haven't even started. But by the use of the phrase in the question, it basically leaves an innuendo that isn't correct, which requires some debate then to be enticed.

This is a question period. This is a parliament. We're going to have these kinds of situations develop. I would not, as a minister of the Crown, use the word "shill" in this case, if I had been a minister of the Crown. Probably a bit exciting, too excitable for this situation, and probably on the edge.

If the hon. Government House Leader can assure me that the intent of his colleague the Minister of Health and Wellness was not to violate any of the Standing Orders that we have with respect to allegations against another member, then I'll say that we've dealt with this matter. I'm just asking the hon. Government House Leader to assure me that there was no intent at casting aspersions on another member by his colleague.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I did have a very brief conversation with the minister as he left the House, in order to ascertain the limits of what I might be able to assure the House, and I think that falls within the discussion that I had and that I can assure the House that there was no intent to malign the character of the member.

Transmittal of Estimates

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, prior to moving a number of motions relevant to the supplementary estimates, I wish to advise that this morning I provided the government's 2003-2004 quarterly budget report for the second quarter to all MLAs. We have also made this report public, as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act.

I am now tabling this quarterly budget report as the amended consolidated fiscal plan. This revised plan is required by section 8 of the same act whenever a subsequent set of estimates is tabled during the fiscal year.

I am also tabling the second-quarter activity report for 2003-2004. This document describes the major achievements of our government during the recent period.

I now wish to table the 2003-2004 supplementary estimates. These supplementary estimates will provide additional spending authority to the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner and 15 departments of the government. When passed, these estimates will authorize an increase of $1,228,295,000 in voted operating expense and equipment and inventory purchases of $21,040,000 in voted capital investment.

Mr. Speaker, section 8 of the Government Accountability Act requires that the government table a new and amended consolidated fiscal plan when there is another set of estimates. I have just tabled the new fiscal plan, the 2003-2004 quarterly budget report for the second quarter in the Legislative Assembly.

head: Government Motions

25. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the message of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2003-04 supplementary estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance to close the debate?

[Government Motion 25 carried]

26. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 58(9) the number of days that the Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2003-04 supplementary estimates for the general revenue fund shall be one day.

The Speaker: As Motion 26 is not debatable, I'll now call the question.

[Government Motion 26 carried]

Bill 48

Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 48, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Amendment Act, 2003.

The Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research was established by this government three years ago with an endowment of $500 million. The objective is to ensure stable payments from the endowment to support a balanced, long-term program of science and engineering research based in Alberta. The fund benefits Albertans by nurturing the discovery of new knowledge and supporting world-class science and engineering research. As we know, strategic investments in research are an investment in our future.

The fund is more commonly known as the Alberta ingenuity fund. The trustees of the fund work in partnership with a number of community organizations that support the mandate to promote science and engineering research in the province. World-class researchers are coming to our province's institutions to get first-class training, and these researchers are helping to establish Alberta as a recognized centre for energy and agricultural innovations, wireless communications, and nanotechnology.

Recently Alberta Ingenuity established the Alberta Ingenuity Centre for Water Research. This world-class research centre is focusing on studies and applications related to the health of freshwater systems. It's building upon a group of leading water research scientists and engineers at three of Alberta's research universities: the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, and the University of Lethbridge. This centre is expected to attract some of the world's leading water research specialists to work in our province.

The talented researchers receiving Alberta ingenuity funding are leading science and engineering into new frontiers. The government of Alberta is committed to working in partnership with our universities, businesses, and industry as well as other governments to support research activities in our priority areas of energy research, life sciences, and information and communications technology. That is why it is important to ensure the long-term stability of this fund for future generations.

The amendments proposed today are administrative in nature but ensure that this fund's value is maintained over the long term, and they satisfy the concerns that have been raised by the Auditor General. The Auditor General has asked the ministry to clarify the meaning of the term "real value of the Endowment Fund over the long term." Officials from Innovation and Science did some research and worked closely with officials from Alberta Revenue. They looked at the way other endowment funds are managed in North America. What they found was that most endowment funds set a limit for disbursements at a percentage of between 4 and 5 percent based on the market value of the fund. Market value refers to what an asset is worth at a moment in time according to the ups and downs of the marketplace.

So this bill chooses the average at 4 and a half percent. These amendments mean that the disbursement or spending from the fund will be established at 4 and a half percent of the market value of the fund. The Minister of Revenue, who is charged with the responsibility of managing the fund, will manage the spending within this amount. Any amount earned over 4 and a half percent is reinvested in the fund.

This change in the way the funds are disbursed ensures short-term growth and long-term stability of the fund. It allows for growth of the fund, and it guarantees the future of the fund. This course of action clarifies our expectations for the fund in future years. This amendment also provides for more stable disbursements in a volatile market, which is important for the trustees in their support for important initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, I've talked about the importance of the amendments for the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act. When passed, these amendments ensure that funding will continue to be available for important scientific research that benefits Albertans.

I encourage members of this Assembly to provide their support for Bill 48. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to support Bill 48, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Amendment Act, 2003. I'd like to preface my remarks with thanks to the minister. We had some discussions about a possible amendment to miscellaneous statutes that didn't go in the direction we both would have wished, and the result is Bill 48, and I'm happy it's here.

I've been an enthusiastic supporter of the Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research. I think that it is a significant move with respect to research in our province, and the projects that the minister has just cited I think are proof of that.

In reviewing my notes for today, I looked back at the Heritage Foundation for Medical Research. It started off with $300 million over 20 years ago, and the great work that that foundation has been able to do is just quite marvelous, and the benefits not just to Albertans but to the entire world have been truly remarkable.

I think we all have similar hopes for this foundation, and we look with great anticipation to the next foundation which we're sure is going to be established, one that will make similar amounts of money available for the arts and the social sciences.

It's with those comments that I'd like to support the bill and hope it can pass with some speed. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. Bill 48 poses some interesting questions for us. In principle, of course, it's a terrific idea to establish a heritage foundation for science and engineering and to further its development. This particular act addresses how the endowment fund is to be managed and how funds from the endowment fund are to be transferred to actual researchers.

I guess there are two ways to approach how to draw the money out of the fund to support research. One is to place fundamental priority on preserving the size of the endowment, and instinctively that feels like, perhaps, the right thing to do. You would never draw enough funds out of the core capital of the endowment fund that you would threaten the value of that fund. In other words, you would never want to draw so much out of it that you were lowering its value. In fact, you would want to not only leave the initial capital untouched; you would want to leave enough in place to inflation-proof the endowment. That way, the fund is there forever.

The drawback of that approach is that the very thing that is being funded, the research, then becomes entirely subject to the rate of return that the fund earns through its investments. So you might for a couple of years have a good rate of return. You're funding research. You're attracting researchers to Alberta. They're establishing labs and research centres, bringing in staff. And in the third year the bottom falls out of the market, the fund loses money, and you're no longer able to support that research. Then what do you do? Do you disband the lab, send the people back to whatever corners of the planet they came from? Do you completely wipe out the research program to protect the value of the endowment?

Or, on the other hand, do you risk some of the value of the endowment to maintain stability for the research program? The risk there is that you would continue to support the research programs even if it meant lowering the value of the endowment in bad years. The risk there, then, is that while the research goes on steadily, it is gradually in the very long term threatened by diminishing value of the endowment fund.

This particular bill tries to bridge that dilemma, and the amendment proposed here I think, perhaps, does a reasonable job of striking a middle ground by limiting the amount that can be drawn out of the endowment fund to 4 and a half percent of the market value of the endowment fund a year. Yet if I'm reading the bill correctly, it doesn't actually say that in losing years the fund must stop paying out.

So I'll be interested in other comments of people who are following this particular bill. I can see many attentive faces here, and I'd be curious to know how people have weighed this out in their own minds, because I would take their thoughts into serious consideration.

As the bill stands at the moment, I'm just barely leaning toward supporting it, but I'm, as I say, waiting to hear other people's comments. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to take this opportunity to commend the ministry and the minister for running this foundation and the endowment fund for research in science and engineering.

Just to illustrate a point, let's say you pick up a cup of water here, and you take a sip. There's a lot of engineering behind it. You can think about the connection between the drop of water that you taste to maybe a hundred thousand miles of pipelines and engineering, water treatment, and all those things. So engineering is very important to our daily life. Sometimes we take it for granted.

This foundation and the establishment of the endowment fund and now the amendment on how to spend that money are very good for Alberta. It'll keep Alberta in the forefront. So I would just want to commend the government for setting it up to start, and the minister will now administer it and make Alberta a better, greater place.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you. Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 48 read a second time]

Bill 53 Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2)

[Debate adjourned November 25]

The Speaker: Just to remind everybody, this is now the third speaker at second reading. We've dealt with the first amendment, so that's out of the way.

Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, please proceed.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise today and join the debate on Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2). As the Assembly well knows, I was the sponsor of the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 1), which is Bill 33. Therefore, I felt it incumbent upon myself to stand up and join the debate and lend my support to this new bill, which actually encompasses basically all of the parts of Bill 33.

Bill 33 was a bill that would eliminate the potential for double-dipping or recovering compensation for the same expenses from more than one insurer. The other purpose was to ensure that income replacement awards were based on an individual's net versus gross pay.

These amendments have been incorporated into Bill 53, and again I have to commend the hon. Member for Medicine Hat for all of the hard work that he has done. He has gone above and beyond what Bill 33 could ever hope to do and has brought in some tremendous reforms which will help the insurance industry greatly in the province of Alberta and, more importantly, will help the consumers, which is the majority of Albertans who have auto insurance.

I support the freeze. I know that some of the opposition parties have said that they do not support the freeze, but I support that. I support the all-comers rule. I support the maximum premiums that will be set by the government, including the discounts and the surcharges. I also believe that by doing this, it will allow competition amongst our over 75 different insurance companies that we have in the province now. I would not like to see this go to public insurance, as some of the opposition have stated. I feel that it would be a real hindrance to keeping the rates low and keeping them manageable, so this is definitely the right direction.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Another big thing that Bill 53 incorporates is my own private member's bill, Bill 204, which talked about changing section B benefits. My proposal was to go from $10,000 to $25,000. Again, this bill goes even further to protect the individual consumer by going from $10,000 to $50,000. So this bill is, again, very generous as far as helping people on the rehabilitation side and in recovering.

As you look at the cap side on pain and suffering, this is an issue that I did talk to my constituents about, and I have to say that some of my constituents were against it. Once we explained it further and started to talk about how we're going to define minor injury, that it will in fact be minor, that it will be very easy to determine if an injury is minor or not, then my constituents started to realize that this is a good thing, and they did actually ask me to support the bill on their behalf.

Again, the bill is an excellent one. It seems to incorporate all of the different areas that needed to be incorporated. I know that one of the problems, I guess, if you could call it that, with Bill 33 was that there was no way of ensuring that the savings would be passed on to the consumer, and now with the base rate set by this proposal, there will be an assurance that the rate savings will be passed on to the consumer. So that's very important.

I want to share a little story with the Assembly, kind of going back to where this whole thing began, at least for me anyway. It was about six months after I became the MLA for Drayton Valley-Calmar that I had a school principal call me into the school one day. I'd been called into the principal's office many times previously but never as an MLA, so this was quite interesting to see what he was going to have to say. This fellow was not only a principal; he was also a coach of a midget hockey team and had been hearing a lot of the concerns about some of the teenagers and how they had been facing very, very, very high insurance rates.

He was talking about how some of them were contemplating going on to university, but they were thinking of maybe going to university in B.C. or Saskatchewan or somewhere where they could afford to drive and go to university at the same time. He was telling me about premiums at that time in the range of $3,000 and $4,000 for these teenagers, and of course since then they went up a little bit, even this past year. You know, we've heard of premiums in the range of $5,000 and $6,000, and really it was a very bad situation for the young people of our province.

Again, being in an oil patch constituency, Mr. Speaker, I had a lot of young people who were in the patch who were saying: "You know, I can't even afford to drive a car. I spend all this time driving a company vehicle, and then when I try to go and insure my own vehicle, none of that driving record counts." So I think this is going to be a really, really good way to start to reduce the rates for some of these young people.

I know that by bringing in Bill 204 and Bill 33, really it was only scratching the surface of what needed to be done. The comprehensive review that the ministry and the hon. Member for Medicine Hat went through really dug down and found out where the issues needed to be corrected, and like I said, they went ahead and corrected those in this bill. So I think this is really, really good.

Looking at the driving record, looking at the geography: those are the things that should matter when you're setting rates for insurance premiums. It should not just be looking at age or gender or marital status.

Again on a personal level, I got married at a young age, and I was able to capitalize on a fairly low insurance rate. Some of my buddies that didn't get married so young were paying a lot higher insurance than I was, and the fact of the matter is that we had the exact same – I had other benefits as well – driving record, yet we were paying different rates. We had the same driving history, we had the same years of driving, same driving record, yet we were paying different rates.

So, really, Mr. Speaker, there were some flaws in the old system, and I know that it was exactly that. It was an old system that needed to be updated, and through this bill it has been updated.

I don't want to spend a long time talking. I just want to lend my support. As the sponsor of Bill 204 and Bill 33 I want to lend my support to this Bill 53 as a bill that does incorporate all of the changes and more to make this a better system for everybody.

Mr. Speaker pursuant to Standing Order 47 I move that this question be now put.

The Deputy Speaker: I don't think that's quite the phraseology. The question now be put? The previous question?

Rev. Abbott: It is the previous question Standing Order, but that's how you say it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, what I understand you're trying to say or what you are saying is that there be no further amendments until the debate has run out.

Mr. Hancock: That's right, Mr. Speaker. Standing Order 47 provides that "the previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendment of the main question. The previous question shall be in the following words: 'That this question be now put.'" It doesn't stop debate. It allows for a full rotation of every member in the House who wishes to speak to speak, but it does not provide for further amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Right.

Ms Carlson: Well, this is a very nice way for the government to get around any extensive debate on this bill without having to bring in closure, Mr. Speaker. We speak completely against that particular point of view. Who are you afraid of? There are seven opposition members and two NDs. We only get to talk once each at second reading. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: We've got a number of people who are endeavouring to speak on a variety of topics, one of which is the legitimacy of the question, which is part of our Standing Orders, so I don't think there's any point in debating that. But we do have in front of us Bill 53. That we can debate.

The hon. member.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that clarification, but I think a little rant is in order in terms of who this Goliath government is completely worried about in terms of this bill. How bad is it to have a full public debate on the principle of the issue? I think it's not bad at all, and in fact if you look at the parliamentary precedents, how many other options do we have? We could bring in perhaps one more amendment, and then we could hoist it, but hoist it to what? It's in second reading. We certainly didn't have any plans to do that.

So what the government is trying to do is stifle debate on a particular bill that could cost them the election, Mr. Speaker. That's what's happening here. They know this. They know that this is one more bag of trouble that they're not going to be able to manage their way out of, as has happened in other provinces.

Insurance rates are a highly contentious issue. They are a pocketbook issue. People care about how much money they're paying for their car insurance. They care about whether or not they can put their kids in vehicles, in safe vehicles that they can drive, and they care that they can't afford to do that and/or make a vehicle payment and/or contribute to the rest of the living expenses that they have. So that is why this government has tried to fast-track an answer to what is truly a large problem, and it has been unable to successfully do so, as this bill so clearly points out.

So I think that for them to move that the question now be put when we have hardly anybody left to speak – we have the Leader of the Official Opposition to speak. We have the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and I believe that we have the Member for Edmonton-Centre yet, and that's it on our side of the House. What does that constitute? Forty-five minutes of debate? [interjections] Well, that's a good point, Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. That Calgary member certainly hasn't stood up and defended his particular position on this bill.

This is an appalling situation that we see ourselves in here, Mr. Speaker, with this particular piece of legislation. This is a government that isn't able to be long-term thinking in terms of their strategic planning. In fact, to link strategic planning and this government in the same sentence is something that many people would question in the first place because on the issues that matter to people, which are pocketbook issues like electricity prices and like the cost of insurance for their home and like the gas prices to heat their homes, this government has not been able to find a viable solution. This government that talks all the time about getting out of the business of business, in fact ends up putting in more regulations to try and fix the problems that they've created in the first place, like deregulation.

Who here has got a lower power bill now that this government has brought in deregulation? Nobody. How many of us are hearing from constituents who are low-income earners, who are seniors, who are small business owners, who are large business owners who are absolutely at the end of their tether because they cannot afford to pay their bills? Why? Because this government brought in a poorly managed and poorly thought-out deregulation plan. What shows us in this particular bill that Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), is going to be anything different? Well, I'll tell you. Absolutely nothing. They can't even agree amongst themselves how to solve this problem.

We put forward a very good idea for this particular government to follow, and that is a public insurance program, because it is time to do that in this province, Mr. Speaker. It isn't like this government has never got into business before. They own a bank, for heaven's sake. If they own a bank, they can put together an insurance program and perhaps can run that well.

I know that this government talks all the time about free enterprise being able to provide lower operating costs and better service to people, but in fact when you look at the numbers, it isn't always true. Things like public health care are cheaper to provide. It's direct service to the direct person. There's no middleman. There are no administration costs, and there are no big companies sitting on the sidelines. [interjection] Well, comparatively speaking. I'm sorry; I heard a guffaw from a Calgary MLA.

An Hon. Member: No. You heard someone who's having a heart attack.

Ms Carlson: Well, if he is, the doctor's in the House, so we're okay.

So when you talk about administrative costs, comparatively speaking, a public system to a private system has substantially reduced costs, and that's what we're looking at here with the Insurance Amendment Act. If you keep this kind of a private system in place, what you're going to see is an industry that's continually driven by the very large companies who are only motivated by profit. In a public system the profit is watched, is monitored, is reported, is controlled, and the administrative costs are significantly different.

Those mom-and-pop operations that are selling insurance to local people now can still be in existence. They can still run their small business, but the administration of the system is much better and much more effective. It results in lower prices, and at the end of the day that's what consumers want: lower prices. If we can provide that through leadership and through a strong administration provided in a public system, then why in the world wouldn't we go there? Why? Maybe because this government thinks they can't do it.

Well, maybe they can't, Mr. Speaker, but we can. We have an excellent plan. We've seen it modeled in a number of other provinces, and it's a plan that could be put forward, one that isn't going to be impossible to implement, as we see this particular insurance plan rolling out.

The parallels between this and their deregulation problems are blatant and jump off the page at you. We can see that down the road this particular plan that they're putting in place is going to be costly in the extreme and it's not going to solve the problems. We're doing them a favour by giving them another great idea that they can steal. [interjection] Well, it's true. You've done it many times before, and good on you for doing it. It makes government better.

Dr. Massey: Look at the stability fund.

Ms Carlson: Well, the stability fund is a really good example. The Minister of Environment recently took a great idea I had and is implementing it and is doing a great job. You know, good for Albertans and good for you guys. Just once in a while we'd like to get the credit for some of those really good ideas that we put forward.

We've had big ideas they've taken over and small ideas they've taken over, and they've been very positive and very effective. Just take this one over too. When you wouldn't do it on deregulation, you made a great big huge mess and look what's happened, so take this one. Save yourselves the next election, ladies and gentlemen, and accept our great idea about public insurance and turf this particular bill, which, quite frankly, doesn't look like it's going to work and, therefore, makes it not worth the paper it's written on.

I see that I have another colleague who would like to speak to this bill. I'll sit and take my place at this time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to clarify whether we were still on that motion or whether we were now back on the bill again, but it's on the bill now.

Ms Carlson: It's a nondebatable motion.

Dr. Nicol: Yeah. That's right.

The whole issue of Bill 53 that looks at the idea of dealing with what is, in effect, fair and reasonable insurance in Alberta is, I guess, one of the questions that we have to look at in terms of dealing with the expectations of Albertans. I happened to be at a meeting the other day, and we were talking about this, and somebody asked: well, you know, what's going on here? In some ways, you know, we look at this, and the change in insurance that's gone on over the last few years in all areas, not only auto insurance, has resulted from a whole series of different factors. One of the things that happened this year is that there were a number of provinces that went into elections, and all of a sudden auto insurance became a political issue rather than what-is-right-and-wrong issue.

In order to deal with this, then, the public started to question why rates were changing, and what we didn't see at that time, Mr. Speaker, was a good explanation that reflected why rates had actually changed. We saw all kinds of differences in reported rates of change in insurance premiums, all the way from the numbers that we see regularly quoted out of Statistics Canada that say rates in Alberta went up 59 percent to the other side of the equation where the auto insurance companies are saying that they only went up 13 percent. So what you end up with is a whole range there. What's the truth? What is the real rate change for Albertans?

When this debate really got started, we in effect said, "Okay; let's clarify the issue; let's truly understand what's happening," and in August we asked for a freeze right then. We asked for disclosure by the insurance companies, by anybody who had information and data that would reflect what was the true revenue intake and payment outflow in the insurance industry so that Albertans could understand what truly was happening to their auto insurance industry. That didn't materialize, so we still ended up with all of these different discussions and different debates going on about what's really happening in our insurance industry.

Coincidental to this, the committee chaired by the Member for Medicine Hat was meeting to try and figure out what to do in Alberta, and this is the issue that comes up, then, about: what was the intent of the committee? In effect, we have to go back and ask the question – or I guess it would be good if we knew the true question that was put to the committee. What happened was that we ended up within that discussion with a whole series: what should be the objective of auto insurance; what should be the direction we take with auto insurance; what should be the structure of an auto insurance program?

Mr. Speaker, historically our auto insurance premiums in Alberta have been based on the expectation of an accident in the future. On that basis, they broke down classes of insurance categories based on what your likelihood was of having an accident in the future. Young males were historically a high risk, so in the future they were expected to be a high risk.

We ended up, then, with all of these categories that were divided up and would give you different rates based on your characteristics, your geography, your age, your sex, your marital status, on and on. What we ended up with then was, in effect, those groups that had the expectation of the highest rate of accident or the highest likelihood of an outflow of cash from the insurance industry having to pay the highest premiums. I guess we go back and say: well, what is the purpose of insurance? Are we kind of jointly trying to cover the risk associated with a large outflow of cash? You know, that's basically what insurance is all about.

As you go ahead and start segmenting the market and the people who are being covered by insurance, the end result of that, if you segmented it enough, would be back to no insurance at all because we would each be paying the insurance premium that reflected our own individual likelihood of having an accident. That, in effect, is the extreme. You know, I'm not suggesting that we would ever get there, but that's the end result of it. The more we divided that up, the more closely we approach the idea that we, in effect, were self-insuring by putting our money into an insurance company so that we could get it back out when we had our accident.

The philosophy that came out of the government committee, in effect, said: no, let's not deal with the expectation of an accident; let's make the insurance premium reflect our driving characteristics, our driving habits. So if we've had accidents or if we've had tickets that likely lead to accidents, then we should be paying more. So the philosophy of what was the basis of insurance, in effect, is being changed by the directions that have been suggested by the committee.

We end up, then, saying: what impact does that have? If we've taken out some of those subdivisions and tried to have those subdivisions collapsed back into a driving record factor instead of an expectation of accident, then why is it that we still leave some of them in? I refer here to the fact that we took out age, we took out sex, we took out marital status, et cetera, but we left in geography.

You know, that in itself is also a factor when instead of geography what we should have had was the intensity of use of your vehicle. What's wrong with somebody in a rural area that doesn't drive very much as compared to a person in an urban area that doesn't drive very much, a person in a rural area that has a bad driving record, a person in an urban area that has a bad driving record? What we should be doing is basing the factors on the likelihood of or contributing factors to an accident: the number of kilometres you drive in a year or the intensity of driving that you do, the number of tickets you get, the frequency of past accidents. Those are the kinds of things, you know, if we're dealing with expectation of accidents as opposed to trying to keep in place the demographic factors. So, you know, the rural part versus Edmonton/Calgary: there is some question as to why that was left in.

The other aspect that I think has been brought out in this whole debate was the focus on the mandatory requirement of PL/PD and medical as opposed to the voluntary part that's associated with collision. I see that, in effect, being an issue of legislated mandate. Yes, we require by legislation levels of public liability and medical. We don't require collision, but we do require collision in the sense of our mortgages or our loans to buy a car, our leases to undertake to drive a car: all of these different factors require collision. So, in effect, that is also in some ways compulsory, but the level to which you do that is voluntary. You don't have to buy a $30,000 or $50,000 car; you can buy a $5,000 car. So in that way it is a voluntary component.

I guess that the debate that comes out of this is: how do you go about making sure that we're truly changing the cost structure of the industry? I've had a number of insurance people call and say: you know, Ken, we can't get the government's balance out of this in the sense that what they're saying they are going to implement in terms of cost savings doesn't flow through to what they're saying in terms of reductions in revenues. So when they're talking about 80 percent of all drivers will get a reduced premium and the other 20 percent will either have a constant premium or, if it would have gone up, it'll be frozen until some time in the future – this is how it was described at the news conference – how does that fit with the fact that the cost reductions on the outflow side don't seem to match the dollars that are lost on the revenue side for the insurance companies in trying to balance their books and make sure that they do have a cash flow, that they can service their requirements.

Just on that. An interesting message that was on my desk when I got back after question period was from an Albertan who said that they had just been notified by their insurance company that because of the problems of cash flow relative to the expected changes in insurance they were no longer going to offer auto insurance in Alberta. That's the first case that has come to my attention of that happening, and, I guess, what is the end result going to be if other insurers come to the same conclusion?

I guess, Mr. Speaker, I think that part of that right now is the uncertainty that surrounds what is actually going to be the implementation model. You know, we've talked about a lot of things. Bill 53, as such, gives a framework, but it doesn't give the regulations that will in effect operationalize that framework. So we don't have a structure there that an insurance company can look at and say, "Yes, this will work within our mandate," or, "No, it won't."

So you've got uncertainty there that can be, in my mind, the only reason that this particular company that was referenced in this message chose to leave, because until they actually know what the regulations are, how can they make a judgment on whether or not they're going to be able to sustain cash flow? So the uncertainty must have been the reason that they chose not to write policies any longer in Alberta. It would be interesting to pursue it and see what's happening, or is it just that this was another way that they can cut off an individual person from insurance through their company, by saying: we're leaving the province.

This is something that we need to act quickly on and clarify for both the users of insurance in Alberta, like the Alberta drivers, and for the insurers in Alberta, the companies that are going to underwrite for those drivers. They need to know what's happening and need to know how they're going to be able to function as a company. The most important thing is that as we go through trying to make this adjustment, we have to recognize that in a private-sector world the industry puts its money where it can get a return.

If we constrain the opportunities for insurance underwriters in Alberta to in effect offer car insurance because there's no cash flow that will give them a return equivalent to what they can do by investing their money somewhere else, a competitive market says: let's go take the money somewhere else and invest it. We have to make sure as we go through this adjustment and bring in regulations that we're not in effect creating a structure that would take the necessary capital out of the Alberta auto insurance industry.

The other issues that have come up in terms of looking at the structure of changes that are going to be put into place here surround a lot of the debate that's gone on between the government and the public as much in terms of possibilities for change as actual end positions on this change. There needs to be a lot of activity go on to inform Albertans about what is going to be the new structure of an insurance policy in this province.

There have been a couple of people raise questions about whether or not some of the new structure issues of the new regulations are going to be really fair. If you look at it from the point of view of the suggestion that, in effect, individuals will only collect from one source, yes, that needs to be clarified for Albertans if it's a concept of do you collect from WCB versus do you collect from your auto insurance if you're getting paid for that same injury.

But there are cases, Mr. Speaker, where individuals actually carry double insurance policies, and they're actually paying in with their own cash to those policies. Why do we legislate someone who pays twice not to get covered from both sources if they're willing to make that payment? In the insurance industry the idea is that you're going to pay in more than you're ever going to get back out. Well, if somebody truly believes that they can pay in twice and they're willing to take that risk, why do we legislate saying that they can't get paid by both companies? Like I said, I've got no problem with restrictions on a payment from a publicly funded source versus the auto insurance, like WCB or Canada pension disability or these kinds of things.

But when you end up with somebody paying in to two policies – Mr. Speaker, I can give you an example not in the auto insurance industry but in my farming activities. Insurance companies put a limit on the amount they're willing to insure, so on an annual basis I insure the same crop on the same acre with more than one company so that if I get a hailstorm and I lose that crop, I can get out of the collection of more than one insurance company enough to cover the costs I've put into that acre for that crop. Why can't we do that in auto insurance?

In effect, I respect fully the rights of an insurance company to say: this is the limit we're going to put on a payment based on the ability that we have to take a risk. So they put a limit on how much I can insure my crop for with that insurance company. But I can go and get it from another insurance company, and what happens is that if I get a 50 percent hailstorm, each one of them pays me 50 percent of their insured value. If I get a 100 percent hailstorm, each one of them pays 100 percent. So, you know, this is the kind of thing that gives the opportunity for individuals to take a risk or insure against that risk. We say that we're not going to allow them to collect twice, yet they've paid twice for insurance.

Another example of this was when I was in a storm in Manitoba about three years ago and a deer jumped out of the snowstorm and landed right on the car we were driving. It was a rental car.

An Hon. Member: Is this a joke?

Dr. Nicol: No, this is not. It's not a joke.

It was a rental car, and the credit card that I had charged this car to paid for the damage because I had an auto rental waiver for the liability on it. But with my auto insurance company in Lethbridge I also carried other-vehicle insurance, so if I'm driving somebody else's vehicle and it gets damaged, they'll pay for it. So, in effect, here were both of these companies saying: yes, you can get it paid for. In order to make sure that the rental company didn't get paid twice, we worked with those two companies and each one of them paid a part of it. But, you know, the idea is that I paid twice because I pay for my credit card and I pay for my insurance. In effect, I had the option to get paid from both of those companies had I not told each one of them about the other one. So big deal. I paid for that. I paid twice for it, so I should have got paid twice. I should have had the right to collect twice on it.

The other real concern that comes in about how we reduce the cost structure of the industry and the one that I think has really caused a lot of concern and debate with the people who have called my office and who have talked to me at different meetings is the cap of $4,000 or whatever on soft tissue injury. Mr. Speaker, you know, we have to deal with that. There are all kinds of reasons out there for limits, but in the context of how do we define it and how do we make it operational, it really starts to raise some concerns.

I think the nightmare that we may want to compare to what we're talking about here in auto insurance is what we see in the WCB, where you end up with the WCB doctors saying, "No; you're able to go back to work," yet the victim's doctors are saying, "Don't go back to work." So when you end up, in effect, through public policy trying to define in words what constitutes pain and suffering and injury, this is the kind of thing that we should be leaving to the medical community rather than trying to put into words.

We should also be leaving to the process how we compensate for that injury. Historically we've done that through either negotiation, arbitration, or litigation, and, you know, in a sense it's worked. For us to go in there now and say that someone, in effect, cannot get compensation for an injury when we don't really know what the consequences of that injury are – you know, the approach that we take to that is, I think, raising the spectrum of another series of the conflicts that we see now in WCB. I think that almost every one of us in this Chamber spends a significant amount of our time dealing with constituents, Albertans who have an issue with how they were treated under this debate, the debate that we have with WCB, about what is an injury: are you able to go back to work or not? I think it would be really unfortunate if we ended up with that same debate in our auto insurance injury process.

The thing that we have to look at, then, is kind of: where do we go from here? I think the process that we went through as the Official Opposition, Mr. Speaker, was to say: well, what can really be done to reduce the cost of insurance without reducing the coverage and the ability for compensation that Albertans have? The approach that we've wanted to take to this was to, in effect, reduce the reserve requirements of insurance by having a public insurance system that underwrites the base level, the legally required level of insurance. In other words, the $250,000 public liability and the $50,000 medical would be underwritten by a public reserve. So the cash flow in and out in the years that it didn't match would be covered by the stability fund. Then the premiums would be adjusted the subsequent year to pay back. It's not a transfer from the stability fund in the long run. The stability fund truly would be that: it would be a stabilization component to our insurance cash flow.

This would reduce the return on capital and the equity requirements for the insurance industry and truly bring a cost reduction. We don't want to create a bureaucracy that would have to administer this, so it would be done through the agents of the private insurance industry. Your local agent that sells you your insurance now would write the one policy to the base level, and then after that you could expand it either through the continuation of the public or you could go to a private-sector offering for your top-up and your collision. This is the kind of thing that we would see as a true reduction in the cost side of the insurance industry. You wouldn't end up with, in effect, trying to guess at how much the costs had to be reduced. You could actually calculate the reductions and say that by enacting this, you'll get a premium reduction of the specified amount.

So this is the kind of thing that we think is a true solution to reduce the costs associated with providing insurance, thereby reducing the need for revenues, thereby reducing premiums for Albertans. That's the kind of approach that we think should be taken to make sure that we do, in a sense, achieve the reduction, the equity, the fairness that Albertans are looking for.

You know, it's unfortunate that when we start to try and make comparisons across Canada about what insurance rates are, it's now a political debate as opposed to a comparison of what the true cost of insurance is. Very seldom for the next I don't know how many years are we going to be able to say how our insurance in Alberta compares to somebody else's because they've got a freeze, they've got a rollback, or they've got a no-fault. You can't make those comparisons anymore. So we have to look at what's fair and what's structurally right for Albertans, and we truly believe that using this public component for the reserve fund for the base level, the required legalized level of insurance, would be a way to truly reduce the cost of insurance to Albertans.

As we go through and look at some of the other things that are suggested in terms of Bill 53, I think it's appropriate that the government establish the auto insurance rate board, which I think is the title they're giving it in the bill. But what we've got to do is make sure that that board has a true ability to deal with transparency in evaluating what are fair insurance rates, what are appropriate offerings, levels of coverage. What we need to do is to encourage, I think, more diversity in offerings rather than basically going to every company and getting the same grid. They say: now, pick your spot on the grid and that's what we'll charge you. So we've got to really make sure that the automobile insurance rate board, as they're calling this new entity, has the ability to delve into and look at the cost structures on behalf of Albertans.

You know, when the whole situation comes up and we start talking about what the cost structure is, with the big insurance companies now, the cross-Canada and even multinational insurance companies, where's their headquarters, and how much of the money goes to the headquarters? It's really hard to get that, but if we had this kind of an insurance board with audit provisions, then it would really provide the ability for a balance between premium intake and payments for the insurance program. Then you can track from year to year kind of the administrative costs or the overhead costs. You can't really track that if it stays in the province or moves out, but you know the payments in the province and you know the premiums in the province.

In that way, we could track it and see whether or not the margin is going up or down, and that, in effect, would give a fairly reasonable approach to determining whether or not rates were accelerating too fast relative to the industry requirements or whether or not there was a problem with fair premium rates relative to the industry needs. So I think it's important that we make sure that that board gets full powers to investigate and to review and doesn't in effect become just: "Yeah. Okay. You've asked for a rate increase. You can have it." That doesn't provide for the kind of competition and the kind of direct trade-off that we need to make sure that there is a watchdog on insurance in the province.

Mr. Speaker, that's kind of the overview that I wanted to lay in place today for insurance. It's important that the debate go on, that the public be kept involved in the discussions about the regulations, that they be implemented quickly. I know that the government is progressing in this way, but it would be really appropriate, I think, if in a very public way they would debate the issue of a public insurance system with Albertans.

The polls that are out there, the responses that come through, information collection are indicating that Albertans are open to the idea. We truly need to look at it, not from the idea of creating a big bureaucracy that has to be managed at added costs. We can create a publicly backed insurance offering that is still offered through those private-sector, small businesspeople that are the basis of our communities. We need to give them a signal that this is not a program that's going to destroy their livelihood.

It's a program that will give stability to the industry and make sure that Albertans feel that they're being treated fairly and that their insurance costs are truly reflective of what they're insuring and that we don't have limits on what they can collect if they are injured. That's important. That's why we have insurance. So if and when there is an opportunity to get compensation, we don't want to destroy that for Albertans.

I guess, as I close, I would encourage the government to make sure that this process of dealing with the regulations is open, it's broad, it's consultative, and as they go through it, not to forget that a publicly backed base level system is an option that a lot of Albertans would like to see discussed and either compared or justified as to why it's not used or given serious consideration.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to the previous question, the motion put by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. I would cite section 522 of Beauchesne's, which says that "Members who have spoken to the main motion or amendments" – and I have spoken to the amendment but not to the main motion – "may speak again to the previous question." It also says, "The debate on the previous question is subject to closure."

So I want to ask one clarification from the chair, Mr. Speaker, before I begin. I see nothing here that would prevent my speaking to the previous question and coming back to speak to second reading of the bill as well. Is there any such rule that exists that would prevent me from speaking to the second reading if I speak to the previous question?

The Deputy Speaker: No. They tend to be one and the same. As the chair would understand, it's a bit of a formality, a procedure, but once the question has been put, all members then may proceed to debate the main question, which in this case is second reading. So you're free to go ahead.

Mr. Mason: So if I speak to the previous question as a separate item, then . . .

The Deputy Speaker: You speak twice; you mean?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: No.

Mr. Mason: No?

The Deputy Speaker: But you may now speak on the bill. I mean, that's what it does; it limits additional amendments. So you may speak on the bill. It doesn't preclude you from doing that. But if you just want to talk about the previous question for 15 minutes and then take your questions and then come back and speak again . . .

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: No. You get one 15-minute shot.

Mr. Mason: That's very unfortunate, Mr. Speaker. In that case, I'll cede the floor to my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona.

4:20

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the purpose of this part of the debate was only a clarification?

Mr. Mason: Yeah, it was only a clarification, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I share the disappointment of my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Highlands. I know that the government benches are in some sort of inexplicable hurry to push this bill through. It's Bill 53, Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), and I want to look at the bill carefully.

It's going to mean a great deal in terms of the impact that it will have.

The Deputy Speaker: We have a point of order. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order
Imputing Motives

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order under 23(i), "imputes false or unavowed motives." A number of members, including this member, have alleged that the intention of the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar was to limit people's participation or that we were somewhat rushed to put the bill through. There is a clear misunderstanding of the purport of the Standing Order which allows the previous question, which clearly allows every member of the House one more opportunity to debate at second reading. So it's imputing a false motive to suggest that it's limiting debate.

What it does do is to preclude reasoned amendments. The hon. member might understand that in the previous evening the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar moved a reasoned amendment. There was a full debate on the reasoned amendment and the vote taken on the reasoned amendment. Having done that, every member of the House has the opportunity to speak at second reading. No one is forestalled from speaking to the bill at second reading, which is exactly the opportunity they have under our rules to speak at second reading.

So to suggest that the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar or any member of the government is trying to rush this through is absolutely wrong. However, when a member of the opposition or any other member rises to move a reasoned amendment as the first speaker of the opposition, one has to assume that there may be other amendments and that there may be an opportunity on the opposition side to be extending debate.

So as a House leader it's incumbent upon me to make sure that we don't have the type of operation in the House that we use reasoned amendments inappropriately. As I wasn't able to have the reasoned amendment ruled out of order, because I raised my objection too late, although it clearly was out of order, I had to come back in this forum to encourage the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar to use the rules of the House in an appropriate manner to ensure that every member of the House has an opportunity to address this bill in an important way in second reading and to do it again if they wish, of course, in committee and third reading.

So, clearly, the member is imputing a false motive to the Member of Drayton Valley-Calmar.

The Deputy Speaker: On the purported point of order, which seems to be as much as anything a point of clarification, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the hon. House leader has made it as a point of order, and I would like to take this opportunity to respond to his point of order as thoroughly as may be necessary.

Section 23(i) says, "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." Now, Mr. Speaker, it's true what the hon. Government House Leader says, and that is that everyone would still have a chance to speak to second reading. However, it is part of the normal course of debate that is provided for in these rules to have the opportunity to propose reasoned amendments.

It so happens that our caucus had a reasoned amendment. This is a legitimate form of parliamentary discourse, and the government has moved, as the Government House Leader has now admitted, to cut off that opportunity which is provided for us in the rules. What other reason would they possibly have than that they wish to constrain the opposition, as small as it is, from making use of the tools that are put at its disposal by the rules of this Assembly to debate issues that it believes are important?

So the government, notwithstanding its massive majority, is indeed working to try and limit the ability of the opposition to make legitimate parliamentary discourse on their bill. Therefore, I would say that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's comments are entirely justified and are not imputing false or unavowed motives in any way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair would observe that it seemed that the hon. Government House Leader was putting forth a clarification of what the procedure was, but he also did defend the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar as having not avowed any of the motives that were cast to him.

Now, in the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands talking about the reasoned amendment and that they had one, one only has to think about what would happen if Assemblies in Canada allowed that. There are some Assemblies in the country that don't allow a reasoned amendment at second reading. We were unable to find out, if I'm correct, looking at the Clerk, that there were no Assemblies that allowed more than one. Is that not so? [interjection] Well, thank you. There is an exception to what I've just said, in the House of Commons and in Ontario, but B.C. and others were not, so we found some. But the tradition in this House has been one reasoned amendment at second reading.

Now on to the debate, hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to resume my comments. Now that the matter has been put to rest with respect to my intentions, I want to zero right in on the bill itself in its second reading.

The bill, as I was in the middle of saying, is a much-awaited piece of legislation. Lots of media attention has been sought in the process of the preparation of this bill, lots of promises have been made, and lots of expectations have been raised. In my remarks I want to see to what extent this bill measures up to the promises made and the expectations raised and to what extent this bill does nothing more than sort of engage in a shell game. So those are the sorts of questions that I want to address as I speak on this in second reading, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, let me begin where one needs to begin. Why this bill in the first place? Why has the government, after a long period of doing nothing and, in effect, allowing the crisis around the skyrocketing of auto insurance rates in this province, failed to do anything until its hand was forced by developments that took place on the eastern end of our great country, in New Brunswick, then in Nova Scotia? The Ontario election, of course, had this as an important issue as well. So the government's hand was forced. It had to overcome its own complicity in what has happened in this province and reluctance to do anything about it because there was a huge political risk in continuing to allow Alberta drivers to be gouged in a fashion that's unprecedented across the provincial jurisdictions in this great country of ours.

The Alberta government under Alberta legislation has had in place

the Alberta Automobile Insurance Board, appointed by the Minister of Finance, reporting to the Minister of Finance, and the members of this board, the directors of the board, are the appointees of the Minister of Finance. This Alberta Automobile Insurance Board has an incredibly low profile. I didn't know about it until we started talking about the crisis in auto insurance in this province. It doesn't even have a web site. It does publish an annual report, but this is not even posted on the government web site, nor are the directors of the AIB. That says volumes about what this board is about, what the government intends it to do, and how this board and the government account for what both of these agencies do to the drivers of this province.

This board reviews behind closed doors, Mr. Speaker, rate application increases for compulsory coverage, mostly third-party liability. There's no opportunity whatsoever for policy holders or consumer advocates to challenge rate increases. Locations and dates of board meetings are not advertised or even made public. Minutes of board meetings are not published or made public. I ask the question: why? In relation to the discussion of this bill we've got to ask these questions. What is there to hide in the decision-making activities of this board that nothing is made public: the meetings, the dates, the places, no web site saying how to access this board?

The AIB appears largely to act as a rubber stamp for the insurance industry. It's the government's board. It's there because it's mandated by the Insurance Act of this province, which is going to be amended by way of this Bill 53. So the AIB appears largely to act as a rubber stamp. Only two out of 157 rate applications in 2002, which is less than 2 percent.

Mr. Mason: How many?

Dr. Pannu: Two out of 157. Less than 2 percent, 1.5 per cent perhaps, of the applications were rejected by the AIB. Another 14 were approved with modifications. The balance were accepted as applied for. And it was the year 2002, the banner year for the insurance industry in this province, Mr. Speaker, a banner year because it was during that year that according to Stats Canada the average auto insurance premium in this province increased by a whopping 57 percent. Fifty-seven percent. Not my figures, Stats Canada figures.

Someone gave the approval for those increases, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are asking, Albertans have a right to know who okayed that. Was it the Finance minister, was it the board, or was it some other agency in the government? It cannot be anyone other than the board and the Finance minister. There are questions that must be answered as to why that 57 percent increase in 2002 was mandated, was authorized, was approved. So when you ask this question, that raises the question of what the government's bill, Bill 53, is going to do about that 57 percent increase.

I want to make sure that we know what the average increase in the payouts was for the insurance industry for claims during the same period, Mr. Speaker. There was a 3 percent increase in auto insurance related claim payouts, a 3 percent increase in what insurance companies had to pay to settle the claims made to them, but they were granted a 57 percent increase at the same time. The difference between the two is 54 percent. Someone granted that increase. Bill 53 now promises Albertans a maximum of 12 percent relief after the bill, if passed, becomes law and is implemented.

In the meantime, this bill promises that the insurance companies will enjoy that most unreasonable, inexplicably unjustifiable 57 percent increase and promises that the companies will continue to enjoy the benefits of this windfall granted to them by this government. When the drivers of this province get any relief – and it all is quite hypothetical at this moment who will get that relief and how much it, in fact, will be – they will have to continue to pay that 57 percent increase granted by the government of Alberta to insurance companies during the year 2002.

So the freezing of rates that's promised in this bill is simply a deception. It's a shell game. Freezing the rates at a level which is the highest in the history of this province, freezing the rates while having granted a 57 percent increase in one year alone is no freeze at all. It's simply an attempt to mislead Albertans into believing that the government is serious about providing them with real – real – relief from the gouging that they've been subjected to by the insurance companies in this province and the rights to gouge that have been granted by the very government which now is promising a relief of sorts. There is no relief, Mr. Speaker.

Even if you take 12 percent from 57 percent, the 2002 increase still, according to my calculations, remains at about a 45 percent level of increase. Keeping it at a 45 percent level of increase is certainly not going to be seen by any drivers in this province as a relief. So the promise made by this bill with respect to providing relief and fairness is an empty promise and nothing more.

Another aspect of this bill, Mr. Speaker, will guarantee that Edmontonians will continue to pay higher rates because they live in Edmonton. There's exception made here by this bill to punish Edmontonians for the fact that they live in this city. Whether it's intentional, whether it's an oversight, the effect is the same. They will pay more. They will be discriminated against based on the place of their residence, the region or the area of their residence. Talk about fairness, that this bill delivers on fairness; it does not. It does not.

The third thing that the bill doesn't do, Mr. Speaker, is allow even any real competition. Bill 53 does not repeal section 22 of the old bill which will be amended by way of this, the Insurance Act, which prohibits public insurers from the other three provinces – B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba – from competing for business in Alberta. Talk about choices; talk about this government's rhetoric about providing Albertans with choice. This bill, that has taken close to eight months for this government to come up with, denies Albertans the choice, the choice between private insurance companies that charge exceedingly high rates, rates that are most unreasonable – that's why this bill is here; otherwise it would not have been here had the point not been conceded even by the government that private insurance companies have been charging exorbitant rates in this province relative to other western provinces.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. Your time is up. Any comments or questions?

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On questions and comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona made the point that he felt that the rates in Edmonton were going to go up. I'd like to ask the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona if he was aware of the fact that there had been a 20 percent premium for drivers in Edmonton historically? I certainly didn't know that we were paying a premium. Most of the people that I've asked didn't know.

So my question to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is this: did the member know that he had historically been paying a 20 percent premium over Calgary, and is he aware that over a three-year period that premium is going to be equalized? How could that in anyone's estimation, if the premium is going to be equalized, which means that that 20 percent disparity is going to be removed, possibly equate to an increase in premiums?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I didn't know that AIB, Alberta Auto Insurance Board, operated the way it did either, but is that a reason for not speaking out against AIB and the way it's been operating? I respectfully submit not. Just because I didn't know about how AIB has been operating, that's no reason to remain silent. It is my duty to my constituents, to Albertans to speak on these matters as I become aware of them.

Similarly, I think the question of whether or not I knew that Edmontonians paid 20 percent more is irrelevant. The question concedes the fact that Edmonton drivers have been levied an additional 20 percent premium because they live where they do. If we acknowledge this, the question then is: is this legitimate? Is it right? Should it be continued for yet another three years? If it has been unjust for it to have happened over the past 10 years, should that injustice be continued for the next three? That's what Bill 53 does. My answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lukaszuk: My question to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona would be: in all his years in this Chamber why would he not have done due diligence to find out that Edmontonians were paying higher rates and do something about it then instead of wait for this government and MLAs from this city to find that out and make sure that that doesn't happen in the future?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I laugh at the question. What due diligence is he talking about? The Minister of Finance, the backbenchers on the government side brought this matter forward. They are the ones who have the inside knowledge of these things. We have to struggle hard to get there, and we have gotten there.

The New Democrat opposition's position paper, A Better Deal for Drivers, which was released in October, certainly reflects that we have carefully studied every aspect related to fairness, reasonableness of premiums, and the kinds of discrimination that have been allowed to be practised whether they were based on age, marital status, region, geography. Those were allowed to go on unchallenged up to this point, and we have done due diligence in drawing attention to them and presenting a clear alternative, which, in our view, is one of public auto insurance, which, we argue, is a far better deal than anything that the Tories have presented, including this Bill 53.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry, hon. members for Edmonton-Rutherford and Edmonton-Castle Downs and others that wanted to ask further questions, we're now ready to continue debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I haven't had a chance yet to speak to this bill, but it is a bill of real concern to my constituents. I've been surprised at the amount of correspondence I've had on this bill, the number of phone calls, the number of letters on this particular issue of auto insurance, so I do feel compelled to address some of the questions the constituents have raised. I'll do some of that in the opportunity I have here at second reading, and hopefully I'll have other opportunities during committee and third reading, should the bill get that far. I expect it will.

The concerns that my constituents and, indeed, people from across Alberta have brought to me are pretty consistent in terms of the substance, but they come from a very broad range of people. I've been struck with that. The substance of the concerns, the obvious one, is people upset about big increases in their rates; secondly, people upset about becoming ineligible for insurance; and people finding that their treatment is, in their view, very unjust.

For example, I've had a number of letters from people who have had insurance with a company for years and years and years and in some cases decades and decades, and then they make one claim and find that they're no longer eligible. They're cut off from the insurance company. Of course, that can be a devastating blow, especially for an older person. It can in fact drive them to have to completely change their way of life. So those are the kinds of concerns: eligibility concerns and cost concerns.

What has surprised me is the range of people that these concerns have come from. The assumption in the public – and it's an assumption I held – is that the people most affected by insurance problems were young males. I've found that, in fact, the problem goes way, way, way beyond that, and that's been a good lesson for me to learn. I'm always open to learning new lessons.

I've had calls, for example, from various nonprofit groups. I think of a call I had from a church group who runs a couple of minibuses for youth and underprivileged youth. The service is to help underprivileged youth get to places like summer camps or to other services around the city. Their insurance rates went up something like 10 times for their vehicles, and because it is a nonprofit group run out of a church, they can't afford that kind of an increase. They're looking at having to end that service. I've had calls from seniors who are no longer eligible or no longer able to afford their insurance, and that has a devastating effect on their lives because suddenly they can't get around. They're socially isolated. They can't easily go out for groceries or to visit friends or to get to the doctor or anything like that. So that's a serious problem. Service clubs that run vehicles have also brought concerns to me.

It goes beyond that. Businesses. I had a call, for example, from a trucking company that runs a fleet of trucks between B.C. and Ontario and is urging us to advocate for public insurance because the cost of insurance for the trucking fleet in Alberta is so high that they, in fact, operate now most of their trucks out of other provinces. Construction companies that might have a fleet of pickup trucks or smaller vehicles, often driven by younger males, suddenly find their costs are going through the roof as well.

So this is a very broadly based problem, and it's one that I think merits the full debate that we're giving it here and the full attention that the government has given it and then some, I would argue. So those are the kinds of things I'm hearing from my constituents.

I then turn to the evidence, and I look at interprovincial comparisons. The first example I had of that was at least two years ago, when relatives of mine in Saskatchewan were commenting on how inexpensive their insurance was. I came back and checked it out, and they were right. I'm not saying that we want to go to the Saskatchewan system, but it led me to raise the issue with caucus and with the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and he began investigations. He already had his own concerns about the issue. So we were beginning to work on this a couple of years ago.

When you look at interprovincial comparisons across western Canada, there are real problems to be addressed here because it looks like in the last few years, at least, Alberta's auto insurance rates have climbed far more dramatically than any others in western Canada, and that does become a long-term economic drag. When we have, as I mentioned earlier, big trucking companies deliberately moving their fleets out of Alberta so they can get less expensive insurance, that's a problem for us.

Generally, if it adds to the cost of doing business with people in Alberta, that's a problem for us. If it adds to the cost of living here, that's a problem for us. So when we look at the western half of the country, at least, we'd better pay attention here, or we will have an Alberta disadvantage rather than an Alberta advantage.

The other point I'd like to make is that this becomes a particular obstacle for the less privileged in our society. If you're in a lower income household and you're trying to pull yourself out of that lower income by, say, seeking a job that might require a vehicle or by going back to school, or maybe you have to have a vehicle to run your young kids around to soccer or to school or whatever, and you're faced with an additional charge of $2,000 or $3,000 or $4,000 for auto insurance even on an older automobile, that's a real obstacle that, frankly, people at higher income levels can afford. So for lower income people or people just getting started, younger couples, younger families, we are putting yet one more obstacle in their way, and I think we're doing that unnecessarily.

So those are some of the motivations that drive me to speak to this issue and are certainly driving my constituents to speak to me.

When I look at this issue from an economic perspective, it's interesting. Do we turn to the market? Do we turn to regulation? Do we turn to a full private system? You know, when conditions are well suited to a market, I think markets can be terrific. They are creative. They can be dynamic. They can serve customers well. They can drive costs down. But when circumstances aren't right for a market, then they can be the worst possible way to try to deliver a service. So what do we have here? Do we have a product that lends itself to free market forces or not?

One of the fundamental differences here is that by law people have to carry auto insurance. As a result, if they want to drive in our society, then they have to have, by law, auto insurance. So we are requiring people to buy this product. Now, you might say that the choice is: don't drive; don't own a car. For some people that's a reasonable option, but the way we've organized our cities, the way we've organized our countryside, it's darn tough for an awful lot of people not to own a car. So right away one of the basic principles of a free market is gone, and that basic principle is the opportunity of the customer simply to walk away from the product. They can't. They have to, by law, buy auto insurance. So that right there says: warning; this may not be suited to an open market. In fact, as I look at auto insurance more and more, I'm struck with the parallels to both electricity and to health care from an economic perspective. [interjections] No, I'm not going there.

I'm struck with the parallels to both electricity as a public service and to health care and the need that we face as a society to provide this in the most effective way. There are reasons that we ended up in a public health care system, and they weren't just social justice reasons, although those were, I think, the pre-eminent reasons, the original motivating forces, and frankly the most important reasons. But they were also economic. We learned through experience that we could actually deliver more health care at less cost more efficiently through a public system, and that's a lesson that's been proven over and over.

The same kind of forces led us into a regulated electricity market, which served this province so well for so many decades. We learned the hard way early in the last century that electricity is not a product that lends itself to a free market. In fact, there were all kinds of issues, if you go back in the early history of the electricity industry, around safety, around costs, around standards of service and access, and on and on, that led to a publicly regulated and in many parts of this country and indeed in many part of the United States, a publicly owned electricity system.

Well, I've come to the conclusion that auto insurance is probably the same kind of product, and we're in the same kind of economic situation with auto insurance that we face in health care and electricity. The appropriate response, then, is to substantially increase the public-sector role in the auto insurance industry. Lo and behold, when you look at the evidence – despite comments earlier today from the government, this is not a matter of ideology; it's a matter of evidence – the evidence that I've seen suggests to me that in our neighbouring provinces to both the west and the east there are lessons to be learned of functioning auto insurance markets handled and managed through a public system.

So when I weigh all of that out – the comments I'm hearing from constituents, looking at the economics of it, and looking at the evidence – it seems hard to come to a conclusion other than that we need to provide auto insurance through a public auto plan.

Frankly, we are a province that owns its own bank, and that's a remarkable sign of commitment to public ownership. Since we own our own bank – and, frankly, I think it's a bank that functions well: it turns a profit virtually every year and it serves rural Alberta very well; it's very popular; it's popular with many urban Albertans – why can't we also, then, own our own insurance company? If you look at the other provinces, like B.C., you'll find that those insurance companies year after year after year provide excellent coverage at a low cost and at a profit for their taxpayers.

So when I look at Bill 53 and I look at the underlying premises of that bill, I find myself ultimately thinking that this isn't going to work, that these are like the same steps that led us into the electricity deregulation mess. We're probably meddling in the marketplace in such a way that this government is just going to get drawn in further and further and further. We're not likely to see the benefits that are being claimed. We're going to make a whole bunch of people upset or disappointed, and we won't achieve what we want to achieve, which is lower rates, greater efficiency, and better access.

If we aren't going to go there – and apparently we aren't going to go into a public system – then we have to ask some other questions. Why aren't we opening the market to the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia and to the Saskatchewan and Manitoba auto insurance plans so that at least they can compete with the private insurers in this province?

The Deputy Speaker: Questions? Comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I listened very intently when the Official Opposition House Leader spoke and again when the Leader of the Opposition spoke and now with the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. In two cases I heard people calling for a public system, yet when I listened to the hon. leader's speech, I didn't hear him call for that at all. So I'm confused as to what the Liberal position really is because in two cases we hear that we should be doing a public system and then when the leader speaks, he doesn't mention it. So I'd like to ask whether or not this is the view of the Liberal Party or just the individual members.

Dr. Taft: Yeah. There's a very clear answer to that. The view of the Liberal Party, the view of the Liberal caucus, and it's broadcast all over the province in print, on television, and on radio, and you can go to our web site as well. Yes, we are supporting a public auto insurance plan, based essentially on the B.C. model, which provides a combination of stable rates, a core of public service that's accessible for everybody at reasonable levels and yet allows a functioning court system so that people can take their concerns over their injuries to court if need be, so there's a fully functioning judicial aspect to it as well.

I should also reinforce that the B.C. model does allow, for example – it's sold through private local brokers. So there's a pretty interesting model at work in B.C., and we unequivocally advocate for that.

It's a good question. I'm happy to give the answer.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments or questions? Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do, for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. You know, I would like to compliment the Liberal caucus on their position on public auto insurance. We couldn't have written it better ourselves, so it's very good.

I'd like to ask the hon. member a question that he was just trying to get to when he ran out of time. That has to do with the government's provision in the legislation which prevents Sask Insurance, which is the export arm, I guess, if you will, of the Saskatchewan auto insurance corporation, from operating in the province of Alberta and whether or not he feels that this is a restriction by the government on the right of Albertans to free choice in insurance.

The Deputy Speaker: Interesting when you ask a question and offer its own answer.

Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, obviously, it's a restriction on Albertans' services, but I think we have to ask: who does that restriction serve, and why is it there? I suspect it's there because of very effective lobbying from the for-profit insurance industry, who wants to keep the competition from other provinces out of Alberta. I'm just speculating there, but that would seem to me to explain it.

If we want to open it up to a free market, then I think it would be a really interesting step to take, to in fact go the other way from this government and say: "Let's just open this up. Let's let ICBC in here. Let's let Sask Insurance in here." They are, after all, companies that do make a profit year after year. Let's make the market open and see how they stand up, and let's try to drive insurance rates down that way.

That would have been a pretty interesting suggestion to come from the government. Unfortunately, we didn't see it.

Ms Carlson: I have a question for the member, Mr. Speaker. My question is this. I didn't hear if the Member for Edmonton-Riverview in his overview of what was happening spoke directly to the key concerns that his constituents are talking about in terms of insurance rates and their concerns with the government's policies, so if he could share that with us.

The Deputy Speaker: The time is up.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to join in debate of Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2). I'd like to address my remarks this afternoon to the principles of the bill. I think that the underlying principles with respect to this particular piece of legislation are extremely important. The government web site provided some information with respect to the intention of the government with respect to principles, the principles that they wanted in the legislation, and there are a number of them.

The very first principle, of course, and the one that has caused the greatest debate – well, almost the greatest debate – is the whole question of fairness. The debate in the press, the debate between the insurance industry and the personal injury lawyers, has really focused a lot of their arguments on fairness. It's certainly a concern of Albertans.

A second principle that the government has indicated as a principle that they wanted as part of the proposed legislation is that insurance be affordable for Albertans. Again, that I think is really what has prompted the legislation before us, that for many Albertans insurance was becoming unaffordable. The comparison with other jurisdictions, other provinces, was extremely irritating to a number of citizens who felt that not only was it unaffordable but it was unnecessarily so.

A third principle that the government has outlined as important is that insurance be accessible to drivers. I think the concern was that accessible premiums be available. Again, the issues raised here primarily with respect to young Albertans and to young males in terms of their accessibility to premiums – and we've all heard from young constituents who have in some cases had to give up driving because the premiums for their insurance just were too much for them. So for them the premiums weren't accessible.

A further principle of the government, if we believe what the web site indicates, is that there would be incentives, that there should be incentives built into the system for motorists to drive safely. The legislation before us has, in fact, some incentives for individuals who have a safe driving record, and there are provisions for rewarding safe driving.

Another principle was that there had to be penalties and that the legislation should outline penalties for those drivers who cause accidents and violate the Traffic Safety Act and commit Criminal Code offences.

There was a further one, and that's the principle of personal responsibility: that as drivers all of us have to accept some personal responsibility behind the wheel and that, in effect, will have some bearing on the kinds of premiums that we pay.

So those principles that focus on fairness, affordability, accessibility, incentives, penalties, and personal responsibilities were the principles that were put forward by the government on their web site as preparation or prelude to Bill 53. Now that we actually have the bill, it's possible for us to look at those principles as stated and to look at the provisions of the bill and to make some assessment in terms of how well the legislation reflects those particular principles.

The business of fairness seems to permeate a number of the provisions of the bill. The setting of a benchmark entry-level premium, how that is to be determined. According to the bill it's going to be determined on geographic territory and third-party liability coverage. Age, sex, and marital status will no longer be factors in setting those premiums. We've already heard that the bill provides provisions for differences in geography, and that is a basic concern of fairness, particularly for Edmonton drivers, who are going to be penalized for living in the capital city compared to their fellow citizens in Calgary. That unfairness will continue for three years according to the bill. So the principle of fairness and whether it's being applied with respect to premiums I think is questionable, Mr. Speaker.

I think there's a further question of fairness when the bill attempts to assess and set premiums that are going to be similar to the coverage in other western provinces. That for many Alberta has been a thorn in the side, and there's been great concern that it was unfair for Albertans to be paying premiums that were much higher than our neighbours to the east and our neighbours to the west.

There was the striking difference that the Consumers' Association of Canada pointed out in their comparisons of Lloydminster, where the premiums for those on the Alberta side of the border were dramatically higher than those on the Saskatchewan side of the border. So the whole notion of fairness was one, and there's an attempt in the bill to introduce fairness with respect to the premiums paid by Albertans in comparison to their provincial neighbours.

The second principle, the principle of affordability, has been addressed in a number of ways, and I think the benchmark entry-level premium is going to be of great interest to Albertans. There's a fairly good description or elaboration of the system, the benchmark entry-level premium, how it's going to operate, again on the government web site that does expand on what we see in the bill, and that is that you will enter a maximum benchmark premium determined by the vehicle use and third-party liability coverage. So you enter the scale, and then for each year without an at-fault claim the drivers would move one level down the grid, and after six claim-free years the premiums reach a maximum discount of 65 percent. So the notion is that they're trying to make it more affordable, and you can make your insurance premiums even more affordable by driving safely and not being involved in accidents that you're responsible for.

If you are in accidents, then just the opposite. Each at-fault claim moves the premium four levels up the grid, so as you are involved in more accidents that you're responsible for, then you're going to move up the grid.

After 10 years without an at-fault claim vehicle owners that do submit a claim would move up four levels on the grid but would retain their 65 percent discount. So an attempt in trying to make the premiums affordable to factor in the driving record and to give drivers at least some control over the premiums they pay and to make it affordable.

I think the affordability has been addressed in that that maximum benchmark premium would initially be set by the government. So, again, they've tried to address that principle of affordability in the bill by setting the initial benchmark premium.

An additional provision is the provision that would have insurance companies file their rates for optional coverage with the government, and the purpose for filing those rates is to have the rates monitored. Again, the motive behind this has to be, I suspect, the desire to keep the premiums affordable.

Affordability has been addressed in the bill in a number of ways. Now, whether it is actually going to operate that way I guess is still a matter of speculation. Again, it's an attempt in the bill to address the principle of affordability.

The notion of incentives has been addressed in a number of provisions. I've already mentioned that you move up and down. You move up the grid and you receive a discount for claims-free driving. You'll also have a surcharge added to your premium should you be involved in chargeable claims.

So, again, the system of incentives, which seems to be a principle that the bill is built upon, is built into the bill. Each claim-free year lowers the premium by moving the insured down the grid to a maximum 65 percent discount after six years. I guess the percentages sound good, but what you really need to do is see the actual numbers with respect to your own insurance to see how significant that is. Whether those are adequate incentives I guess is a question that we have to determine, and we'll be able to go back and visit that again when the bill moves into committee.

The principle that there have to be penalties. There are a couple of provisions in the bill. [Dr. Massey's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Comments? Questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was going to first of all thank the hon. member for talking about accountability in insurance because the previous speaker talked about the B.C. model. So I'd like to ask the member if he thinks the B.C. model is, in fact, the appropriate model.

When we read articles like there was in The Globe and Mail on October 22, I think it was, a person by the name of Lawrence Solomon talks about public and private insurance. I'm going to paraphrase what's in there to formulate my question. He says that in a recent study of British Columbia the Insurance Bureau of Canada found that B.C. suffers 16,000 more injuries and 1,800 more deaths because of its unaccountable premium setting. Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview would want us to base our system on that. He goes on to say that had the government not gone down that road, B.C. residents would be saving about $2.5 billion per year. So I'm wondering if the hon. member believes that we should model the insurance in Alberta on B.C.'s.

Dr. Massey: Thank you very much for the question. I appreciate it, Mr. Speaker. I think a couple of comments. One, I give as much credibility to information from the Insurance Bureau of Canada as I do to the Fraser Institute, and I'm reluctant to use their information.

I have more confidence in the report that was put out by the Consumers' Association of Canada where they compare the rates across the country for major cities and for provinces. I think that if you look at the information in the Consumers' Association's publications – they put out an Auto Insurance Rate Comparison Study, Release No. 3, 17 Cities in Four Western Provinces – you can see fairly conclusively that the public systems have delivered more affordable insurance rates for most of the citizens than have the private ones.

I'm not sure I have it here, but they have a second study. Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker, and it's the Consumers' Association of Canada's review of automobile insurance rates in 40 Canadian cities in 10 provinces. Again, if you examine the data from those two studies, I think you'll find that the support for publicly administered systems is justified.

Mr. Herard: Just following from that, I'm a little confused now because the hon. member did say that, you know, insurance should be accountable, and now he's talking about lower rates in certain types of insurance companies. I'm talking lives. I'm not talking rates. I'm talking about the type of rate structure that makes people totally unaccountable and therefore creates more carnage on our roads. That's what we're talking about.

Dr. Massey: I guess I have a little difficulty with the question if I'm understanding it correctly. I don't understand how someone can believe that a person would drive to endanger their life based on a premium. I really do find difficulty with that, and I think that's the assumption underneath your question.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to make a point of order with respect to the question which was previously asked by the Member for Calgary-Egmont. [interjection] Well, this is a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Let's have a citation then, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: I'm trying to find the citation right now, Mr. Speaker.

I know that it's there, and it is quoting from newspaper articles in the House. Perhaps you could assist me with that, but I believe that there is a section in Beauchesne that specifically exempts this from being used.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, if you don't have the citation, we don't really have a point of order, and in all honesty I don't know to which you refer.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker . . .

The Deputy Speaker: We're going to persist?

Mr. Mason: I have found something.

The Deputy Speaker: The time is up for the questions and comments.

Now, you want a point of order, but you don't have a citation.

Point of Order Quotations

Mr. Mason: Well, I do, Mr. Speaker. I've been trying to find it, and it says that "to be cited, a document must be quoted or specifically used to influence debate." This is under 495, documents cited.

496. A Member may read extracts from documents, books or other printed publications as part of a speech provided that . . . no rule is infringed. A speech should not, however, consist . . . of a single long quotation, or a series of quotations joined together with a few [statements].

So I think the hon. member has violated this in his quotation from the computer.

The Deputy Speaker: We're at 5:30. The chair is supposed to leave, and the House naturally adjourns, so the chair proposes to do that.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise tonight to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two special guests visiting Linda and I this evening with their three children, who aren't here: my son Troy, the man who runs the ranch for me when I'm here and at other times, and his wife, Stacy. I'm very pleased to introduce them and would ask that they rise and receive the warm greetings of the Assembly.

Bill 53 Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I'm really glad I was able to get in an opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2). Now, I was able to raise some of the points that had been brought to my attention by constituents who had written in to me, and I forgot to bring them for the tablings. I apologize to you, Mr. Speaker. I was able to raise those issues when we were discussing the reasoned amendment that had been proposed.

I'd like to go over some of the other issues that I have around what's being proposed here. It strikes me that this is a bit of a David and Goliath story. I hope it has that ending, but I fear that it won't. I think that little David is going to get stoned here. Essentially, what we're talking about is individuals, all of whom are required by law, by this government, to carry a minimum level of automobile insurance. Up against that or on the other side of this, we have insurance companies, private corporations that offer the insurance under agreement of the government of Alberta. We discussed earlier how the government has an insurance review council that had in fact approved, I think, 155 out of 159 rate increases that were proposed by the insurance industry over the last 12-month or so period of time.

So, on the one side, we have Albertans who have to have this insurance, and they don't have an unending supply of money. I had outlined some of the difficulties that had been raised with me. There's one other one that I think was really interesting. My neighbour stopped me in the back alley the other day. She was walking with her son, and she said: "You know, I just want to let you know that we sold our car. That's how we're dealing with this issue of rising automobile insurance premiums." Their premiums had gone from $1,600 to $1,800 to $2,400, and the family at that point said: enough. In fact, what they do is rent a car on one of those Thursday to Sunday rates, those four-day weekend rates, a couple of times a month, and that's how they go and do their shopping and other trips that they need to take. The rest of the time they're catching rides with friends or neighbours, taking the bus, or walking, because it just hit the point for them where they went: that's enough.

Twenty-four hundred dollars of insurance for people with no problems with their driving records. They're not young people; they're not old people. You know, there's no other mark against them except that they live in Edmonton and this government believes it's okay to discriminate based on geographic location, but there wasn't much they could do about that. As a result, they just sold their car because they were not willing to pay that kind of insurance rate.

On the one hand, I think: well, okay; this might have an unexpected side benefit if we get more conservation and more working to eliminate greenhouse gases because people simply don't drive private automobiles anymore. But I think that for many, many people in Alberta that's just not a possibility. That's not a realistic solution to the problem that's in front of them.

The idea behind the premiums, or at least what individual Albertans are seeking, is an assurance that if they have an accident, if they unintentionally hurt someone else or someone hurts them, they will be looked after. That's why they're paying those premiums. They're required to by law, but they willingly do it because that's the deal. That's how they're willing to look at this, as a deal. People are quite alarmed at the idea that they would be paying money in order to be assisted if there was an accident or a tragedy, and they're quite alarmed at the idea that, in fact, they would not be able to be looked after. That's how they see that $4,000 cap that's put in place here. In particular, people are worried for longer term recovery periods.

Now, we've heard some things from the sponsoring member that, no, they could still go to court and sue and some things are still available to them, but it's always in that area where people don't know quite what to do. They think they're going to recover from an accident with soft tissue injuries fairly quickly. They're off work for three weeks. Well, they can handle that. It stretches to six weeks. Well, it's a bit more difficult. Certainly, they're worrying about rent, mortgage payments, things like that. It stretches beyond that into three months. Okay. Now do they get a lawyer and start looking at suing, or will they be back to work any day? What's their doctor saying? That's how the time rolls out for people, and the longer it goes on, the worse shape people are in. All the way along there they're going: "Do I take the $4,000, or do I fight this? At what point do I know that I'm in serious trouble and that I need to take a different course of action?"

Most people hope they're never in that situation, and when they're in that situation, they are by no means an expert. Very few people are in that situation more than once or repeatedly, so as an average citizen you don't rack up an experience, a knowledge base in: how much time should I be off work, and how badly injured am I this time? You don't build up that wealth of experience that assists you in whether this is the time when you now go and get a lawyer and try and fight this or you take the money. Of course, most people are saying: I need that money to pay the rent. So this is where the problem is caused for people.

Looking at that David and Goliath scenario again, we have individuals, as I said, with very little money, very little resources to back them up, and on the other side of this is a very wealthy insurance industry, that's able to purchase ad campaigns, newspaper campaigns, lobbyists. They can be very persuasive in trying to encourage people to settle, and that's part of the argument that we've heard from the lawyers who come in between these two sets going: "You know what? When people don't get a lawyer, then they don't get as good a deal.” Certainly, that’s what insurance companies are trying to do: get people to settle for as little money as possible. The individuals are trying to get as much money as possible, and this is where the conflict is caused.

Out of all of this, if we look at having something like a cap in place, what that does, really, is remove full accountability or full accounting from poor drivers or bad drivers, and it also is taking away full compensation for their victims because that cap is put in place. That cap, in effect, says “no fault” under that amount of money or with this kind of injury. It does nothing to really punish a bad driver or nothing to really compensate someone who suffers extreme pain and suffering. I think that a piece we would not be well advised to lose is that punishment factor, and if the only punishment factor we’re looking at is, “Well, their insurance rates will skyrocket,” I don’t know that that really got us where we wanted to be.

Who’s taking the risk, and who gains the benefit from this? I don’t think we’ve got those assigned to the right parties at this point. I continue to be concerned, and we have sought answers from the government repeatedly and don’t have the answers – it’s actually been sort of made into a joke – about why the government would say: oh, it’s not right or fair to discriminate based on age or based on gender. Okay. Good. Congratulations to the government for recognizing that, but then they give us no reasoning for why they feel it’s okay to discriminate based on geographic location; that is, for those drivers that are insuring themselves to be driving in Edmonton.

Now, one of the other things that is carried forward in this bill that I had spoken against before was this whole idea of so-called double-dipping, and I would argue with that because double-dipping is when you are paying for the same action or activity twice out of the same pot. That is not what, in fact, is going on here. I’m referring to the clauses that are saying that if someone has coverage from more than one company or more than one policy, only one policy would be allowed to pay off. I really disagree with this because this discriminates against anyone who is a contract worker, against anyone who is self-employed.

Now, on the one hand, we say that we want you to take responsibility if you’re going to be out there working on your own: good on you, but take responsibility and make sure that you have insurance that covers you. Okay. Fine. Well, for a lot of the people that I’ve spent many years working with in, for example, the nonprofit sector – disability insurance, for example. You know, I’ve always carried my own disability insurance. It’s cost me a lot of money to do that, but I’ve had to do it consistently because once I get on with a company, I’m going to get a better rate if I stay with them. Occasionally I’ve had periods of employment of three or four or five years where I’ve been able to get disability insurance coverage through my employer, as I do right now as an MLA. I won’t be an MLA forever and I wasn’t in some of those other jobs forever, but if I dropped that coverage that I was carrying and paying for myself, once I was no longer with the employer who was giving me coverage, I would be paying significantly more money to try and get that coverage back.

So to individuals who work on their own – and there are more and more people that do that; we recognize that – you’re saying, “Well, we want you to keep up that insurance on your own,” but then we’re not going to let it pay off. So I really have a problem with this. If the individual is paying that policy on their own or that premium on their own, they should be able to have it pay off for them. We as legislators should not be saying: “No. Sorry. Tough luck. Only one of those policies is going to pay off in this particular instance.” I really disagree with that. I think you are unfairly discriminating against people who work contract or are self-employed in a variety of different fields.

You know, we have to understand that people have all different kinds of lifestyles and different ways of trying to look after themselves, and they are trying to look after themselves. For this Assembly to turn around and say, “Well, we’re going to make you pay that policy on your own, but we’re not going to allow for it to pay off,” it is placing a very unfair burden on people, and I’ve never had that explained as to why the choices are made in this legislation to do that. I cannot speak strongly enough against that particular section.

That is the section that’s also, you know, reducing awards by the amounts of income tax, Canada pension plan contributions, employment insurance premiums, et cetera, so that it basically nets out. This is a reduction of automobile accident claim awards that ensures that a person can’t collect twice for the same accident. Well, why not? If they paid for two premiums, why can’t they collect twice? They paid for it. Now you’re saying that somebody can pay for something but they don’t get the benefit of it. How does that work? Why are you discriminating against these people? Particularly, you’re discriminating against people that are self-employed or who work on a contract-to-contract basis, and that covers a lot of my colleagues in the nonprofit sector who, frankly, can’t afford to be carrying this extra insurance premium and never having it pay off for them should they need it.

Those are the remarks that I wanted to make to Bill 53 in second reading. I’m not willing to support this bill in principle at second reading. It’s not fixing the problem. We started out with this because we had astronomically high insurance premiums that had increased I don’t know how many fold over the last 18 months with the total approval of the government of Alberta. That was the situation we started with. Does this bill rectify that situation? No, it does not. Who carries the risk for this? Albertans. Who does not get the benefit for this? Albertans. Who does get the benefit? Insurance companies. So I’m not at all happy with this bill at this point.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in. Any questions for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre?

There being none, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d move that we adjourn debate on Bill 53.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: We’ll call the committee to order.

General Revenue Fund

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I’m pleased to begin the discussion in Committee of Supply as Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has a large amount of the vote we’re going to talk about tonight.

The majority of the dollars that we are addressing tonight are to handle what could have been a very devastating situation with the single case of BSE that was discovered on May 20. That pretty well brought our industry to a standstill, and it became very apparent very quickly in discussions with the industry that action would have to be taken very quickly to move what we thought was about 650,000 fat cattle out of the feedlots in our province, which turned out to be closer to a million head of fat cattle.

Of course, a large part of this is what we called the Canada/Alberta BSE recovery program. After that program concluded, of course we found that there were still many thousand head that were not covered. We felt it was important that we recognize the deep concern that there was going to be a real hole in our marketing in about October or November the way the cattle were passing through, so we introduced the market set-aside program and covered about 110,000 head in that.

Of course, when we got the good news that the border was going to open for boneless cuts of meat, we still had a fairly large number of fat cattle in our yards, but we felt it was important that we design a program that would put some market and price determination into the industry. That may have been our most successful program.

In both of the programs that Alberta introduced on their own, market prices moved up in the first instance about 20 cents and close to 30 cents, and we're seeing them drop back a little bit now but still reasonable.

So those were some of the things that we covered with the bulk of the money, but maybe as important are the smaller amounts of money that are in BSE recovery. Of course, one is the expanded lab facilities. We will be, through Infrastructure, building a level 3 lab in Alberta. When the federal government through CFIA did a review of labs across Canada, they found a very strong lack of labs west of Manitoba. This will respond to that, but maybe as important are the improvements to our level 2 lab that will allow us to do the quick test, and hopefully at some point that will be recognized as the test.

Right now we do quick tests. If we were to find a suspicious slide, then we would take it to what we call the gold test. Quick test can be done in four or five hours and probably costs a third of what the gold test would, but it is important that we have those facilities and that we have staffing for them, and that is in there.

The latest thing that we've dealt with in BSE of course is what we call the mature market cattle and other ruminants, and that is for breeding animals that are extra to the breeding program but still are a good beef product, to try to assist moving those through. Of course, the Alberta program does offer marketing choice. It allows the producer to keep it, gives them what would be about a daily feeding allowance, and/or to send it to slaughter. We think that's important because it's important that we have the capacity to slaughter these animals, which we don't today. It's important that we have a place for the product after we do slaughter them, which we don't today. Seventy percent of that product prior to May 20 went into the U.S. We do have the opportunity to turn this challenge into an opportunity and develop that market here, and we believe that will happen, but it'll take a bit of time.

The last thing I'll just mention is our farm water program, which the federal government is cost-sharing with us this year. We're very pleased to have them participating. This is something that we think is incredibly important. The grasshopper control program as well, which, again, the federal government is co-operating with us on, and then our funding for what will be the Canadian agriculture income stabilization program. We think it's a good program. We're trying to encourage at least one of the two provinces that need to sign that agreement to resolve their issues with it and get on with having a good safety net for our producers into the future. We believe that through raising the caps on that program, which we have agreed to do in our province, we could handle anything, including perhaps what we had this year. The old program simply wouldn't under its levels.

So I would prefer to take some questions rather than use time in discussion. As I have in the past, if I don't give you the answer tonight, I will respond and you will have it before the end of session.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the minister for her opening comments. She does answer the questions promptly and in writing if she can't give the kind of detail she wants at the time, and we do appreciate that.

With regard to the moneys asked for here in Committee of Supply in supplementary estimates, I have a few questions that she probably can answer this evening. I know that we've heard lots of talk about the global impact on the province from this experience that we had this past year, but I'm interested in a more representative discussion about a local impact on small-town cow/calf operators, small feedlots, things like that. How many have we lost for good in the province? Is there any assistance for those who are on the verge of bankruptcy and may or may not get through the winter?

I know that often in business we want the marginal businesses to disappear, but farming has a bit of a different history in this province, and we know the impact of losing those farmers in the communities economically in terms of other kinds of ripple effects and spin-offs. So if the minister could address that for me, I would really appreciate that.

Can she explain for us tonight one more time, because I'm not sure that I know the exact sequence of events, how come it took so long to get that initial cow tested?

Also, I'd like to know what percentage of our export market is outside of the U.S. We heard a lot about the U.S., and we heard a lot about Japan, but it seems to me that we have export markets in other countries.

Also, I'm wondering what the impact is on our export possibilities if the Common Market stays closed to us and other countries join it in Europe. So if she could answer that.

The grasshoppers. I had forgotten about that, so thanks very much for mentioning them. It seems to me from what I've read and heard that next year is going to be a very bad year in many regions again, that all five of the species that are prevalent here are going to be a problem. Are you anticipating building into the next year's budget some dollars to cover that, and can you talk just a little bit about the kind of impact that has? When you have a double whammy in agriculture of either drought, infestations, or something like the BSE, it's pretty hard to recover from.

In agriculture I had one more question, and that is: are you using any money for research to find a live test for BSE, and would that come out of your department or would that be in conjunction perhaps with science and technology? If that's the case, could you give us any kind of an update on what kind of progress is being made there.

So I'll ask a few more questions of a few other ministers, but those are the questions I have at this time for agriculture. I'm just going to go down the list in the order that they're here in terms of the questions I have.

The office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner is getting a little more than half a million dollars in the supplementary estimates, and we would like some detail on what that is. When they just come in as a lump sum line item, we don't get any breakdown on them, and it looks like this is for additional services on the Personal Information Protection Act, but we would like some details. We knew this was coming. We knew what costs were going to be associated with it, and it seems like to ask for another half a million dollars for this last quarter seems quite substantial.

Perhaps I'll talk now about Sustainable Resource Development because the other big whack of money this time is I'm assuming primarily for the fires. Maybe before I ask my questions, actually, I'll ask the minister of agriculture to answer whatever questions she can, and if the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development could talk about the fire expenditure, and then I'll ask my questions.

Mrs. McClellan: Yes. On the local impact. The impact is very, very far reaching as I said in the House yesterday, and it's not just the small towns. In the capital region there are about 167 companies that process food and beverage, and a large amount of that is often in the livestock area, and beef is the largest of the livestock. Pork is second. So the impact is everywhere. It's in the corner café; it's in the hardware store; it's in the dress shops; it's at events in the community. It's everywhere. So beyond the traditional, what we think of as the industry – the trucking industry, the retailers, the processors, the packers, the cow/calf operator, the feedlot guy, and the auction markets that didn't hold sales – those are sort of the ones that are right immediate in it. All of these others were impacted in a huge way.

We haven't lost any, and that's the good news. Will we? It's possible. There were probably some operations – there always are – that may have been marginal or having difficulties before BSE that may have trouble surviving, but we haven't lost any.

I give a lot of credit to the Canadian bankers as well as our own institutions here. Minister Vanclief had a meeting early on with the Canadian Bankers Association. We had a follow-up meeting in Calgary with the western regional bankers, including Ag Financial Services here and ATB, and told them that we would as much as possible keep them informed as to what we knew of the state of how things were moving. We've had a couple of follow-up discussions with them since, and I think that's been really helpful. They don't want to own a whole bunch of cattle, and this is some major parts of their portfolios, and they don't want to lose it either. So we've been working together on that.

On the test we have a policy – and we won't change this policy – that animals that are tested to go for human food consumption will be first. Nobody has ever disagreed with that. Had this animal shown any signs of neurological problems, it would have been probably put on a priority test, but it did not. It was down, and it was condemned immediately. It didn't even come close to the food chain. The pathology suggested that it had pneumonia and was thin. Of course, we all know that the only test for BSE right now is brain tissue slices and testing, so that is the sequence.

We had a heavy, heavy cull of older cattle in our province last year because of the drought, so of course there was pressure. There's no question. Will our improved lab facilities address that? Yes. Will we reduce our testing? No. We were testing at probably three and a half times the OIE requirements, and we feel that that's important.

On the export side, quickly, the U.S. continues and will continue to be our largest customer, almost 40 percent. We consume probably 13 percent, maybe, in Alberta, 15 percent to Quebec, and a little bit to the rest of the provinces. Four percent of our product goes to Japan and close to 15 percent to Mexico. It is a growth market and has grown in a huge way in the last 10 to 15 years. Europe is a smaller player, but every market that we have in the world is important to us, whether it's $100 million or whether it's our U.S. boneless beef, about $1.3 billion the year before this all happened. They are all important, and you have to continue to look for new markets.

The grasshopper program. This is our second year of intensive assistance for our producers. We'd like Mother Nature to look after it. We need a cold, wet spring. One thing that's encouraging to me, although I haven't had any scientists tell me what the reason is, is that a number of producers are telling me that they found grasshoppers dead on the heads and that were discoloured in fields. That could mean something because it's usually a parasite or something like that that Mother Nature brings in that really deals with it. The outbreak was bad, but it was more localized than last year, and when you have drought, you're going to have them.

Are we doing work on a live test for BSE? CFIA is generally our agency for dealing with that type of testing. We've had any number of people come forward and say: we have a test. I hope we do, but unless it is approved by the international community, it doesn't matter. So, yes, we need to keep working on a test, but we have to make sure that it is recognized by the international community, because for just us to do it and say that this is good won't work. So we worked with CFIA, with the U.S., with other countries because we'd all like to have that test.

I'll conclude there.

Sustainable Resource Development

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman and hon. members. As the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development I'm here to discuss the supplementary estimates to my ministry's budget. As you well know, these estimates relate to the forest protection area and the Natural Resources Conservation Board.

To begin with, I will speak to the increase in funding needed to deal with another busy fire season. The supplementary estimate is a result of a very challenging fire season, although it was not as big as the fire season before. I believe the previous year we spent over $319 million on the fires and burned over 5,000 hectares of forested area. This year we're considerably less than that. Additional to our existing budget of $75 million, we are requesting another $126 million to deal with, of course, additional resources and costs associated with fire fighting.

As many of you will remember, we dealt with the Lost Creek fire this summer in the Crowsnest Pass area. This was a huge fire that took place in the mountains, a very challenging terrain to fight fires in. Fighting a fire in the mountains is very, very difficult and costly. Between this fire and over a thousand other fires about 57,000 hectares, or 142,000 acres, were burned this past summer. As well, approximately 3,000 individuals in seven communities were evacuated, and thanks to Municipal Affairs and the municipality and the MLA, of course. They did a super job in that particular process.

Due to the hard work and organization done by the staff and the disaster service area in the municipalities and the local volunteers, we did not lose any structures. We did quite well compared to other jurisdictions around us, when you watch the TV, all the houses that burned down. Our staff and resources that we had out there did not lose any structures.

We had crews at 25 primary camps and 15 secondary camps throughout the province, and 128 lookout towers were in full operation throughout the summer.

This just gives you some idea of the size of our operation, both in personnel and keeping our equipment on the move to the right places at the right times. This is why we are requesting the supplementary estimate of $113 million in protection costs and $13 million to deal directly with the FireNet communications system, which is just being finalized this fall. It, of course, is a telecommunications system that will be in place by early spring. It will enable us to know where our resources are in the field when we are fighting fires. So we should do a better job and have safer communities and, at the same time, protect our forest resources, because it is getting more and more challenging.

Communities have expanded into forested areas. Industries and recreation activities have also increased, especially as our economy improves. There are more than 320 communities now in the protected forest areas. Of course, many of those are at reasonably high risk from wildfires. I would hope that the hon. members here tonight will support these increases.

In the area of the Natural Resources Conservation Board, as you know, the NRCB has been given an additional mandate as of last January to deal with confined feeding operations, or CFOs. Basically, when the NRCB assumed this responsibility back in January of 2002, which I just mentioned, we knew that the increased role of dealing with these applications would require additional funding. However, we made the decision to wait and see what kind of increase would actually come into place. Therefore, this is why we now want to make sure that we didn't over budget. At the same time, we want to make sure that there was a process in place to ensure that the additional finances that are required to continue operating are put in place, so we are asking for $0.6 million to offset the ongoing operating costs.

So I'd just like to again thank you for giving me the opportunity to do the presentation here tonight. I'll try and answer as many of the questions as I can without taking the whole evening, and I will also ask my staff, then, to review Hansard and answer any of the questions that could be answered in writing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few questions for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. The fire was quite impressive this year in the mountains. It's the first time my kids had ever driven through a road that had been closed and then temporarily opened and the smoke and the firefighters and the watering down of the firebreaks, and when you see how the fire has crowned and then it's jumped the road, it's something to see. When you can't see the sun because the smoke is so thick and you can't breathe the air, it gives you some idea of the kind of impact fires really do have.

[Mr. Johnson in the chair]

Driving through that fire I wondered whether you had any reciprocal agreement arrangements with the province of B.C. and whether you shared workers and resources to fight those fires in the mountains this year, and if you did send help to the interior of B.C. with their fires, we'd like to know what that was.

You talked about lookout towers. How many do you have in total, and how many of them are actually staffed during the summer? I know that in years past there's been some discussion about some of them being shut down and hours reduced and so on. So if the minister could review that for me, that would be very helpful.

I'd like a little more information on the communications system that you're putting in place, specifically the reasons why you think it's going to improve the situation you have there.

Also, I would like you to comment on whether or not you have a process for reviewing the way the dollars are spent after the fire, a systems audit from the inside out to see where you could be more effective and where you could save money. I know that when items required by the crews are needed, they're needed immediately, so they must be bought, and that's not a very efficient way to operate. We can't anticipate all needs, but I'm wondering if you do take a look at that and look at doing any kind of internal audit after the fact so that the systems can be improved. These fires are hugely expensive, and anything we can do to improve the efficiency of the people on the ground means the fire goes out faster and means we save a lot of money in the long run.

The other question I have is – it's just slipped my mind, what it is now. Just blew right out of my head. It's about the fires.

Mr. Lund: How they start?

Ms Carlson: Yeah, how they start. That's exactly right. I know that changes are coming in to find people who start them. Thank you. It's a minister who had to answer these questions from me in the past who knows the kinds of questions I ask. Actually, how do you see that happening on the ground? Our questions during debate before were things like: if your teenagers are participants in a party and start a fire as a result of not properly putting out a campfire they might have started, who's going to be held responsible and what are the fines going to look like? What are industrial fines going to look like? I know that trains start a lot of these fires, and how do you see that process being managed? So if you could give us a bit of an overview on that, that would be helpful.

Thank you. Thanks, Ty.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much. I won't be very long. Again, like I said, my staff will review Hansard and answer most of those questions in writing.

I do have, you know, a few comments in relation to reciprocal agreements with B.C., Saskatchewan, and other jurisdictions. We do have an understanding that if they require our resources, as long as our situation is in a reasonable state, we will go there and help.

The other area that we're looking at right now which you may be interested in – and you may actually help us to talk to the feds – is the issue of reciprocal agreements in relation to the purchase of new water bombers. We could use your help in that because I believe that between Saskatchewan, B.C., and Alberta we could probably afford to use the same planes in fighting fires. Some of those new planes move very fast and are very effective. Therefore, we are in fact talking to the company that produces those planes now, and we'll continue those discussions.

That is really going to help in relation to being proactive. We have a policy in Alberta now – and former ministers, of course, had that too – that early detection and early response is the key. If a fire starts, for example, in the evening, we will have our water bombers on-site by 4:30 the next morning. The old policy used to be that they'd start about 10:30 in the morning. By then, the fire was gone. We are making some of those changes. We have over a hundred lookout towers yet, and with the new operations that are being set up under the FireNet program, of course, we'll have a quicker response and quicker communication system in relation to identifying where the fires are.

The other area in relation to reviewing the fire costs. Those are pretty detailed, and we like to do one year-to-year, so I'll get that one in writing to you to show exactly where the dollars are going, more than this year but, say, three or four years in the past. That will give you an idea how we arrive at trying to estimate what our budget should be.

As far as fires, about 40 percent of the fires are started by man, and we do investigate all of them. In cases where we do find whoever started the fire, they are charged, and we will go through the court systems. We have done that in the past, and we'll continue doing that.

I think that covers some of the questions you had, and the rest we'll answer in writing. Thank you.

Ms Carlson: Thank you very much.

Community Development

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I am a critic on five departments, and four of them have supplementary supply in this document. I'd like to do one of them right now, two if I can, and then I'll come back later and do the others.

I'll draw your attention to the supplementary estimate requested by Community Development appearing on pages 33 to 35. This is indicating that, in fact, there's $5 million that is being allocated, $4 million of which is coming back, helping to offset the total cost, so there's only $1 million being requested. But it is looking at a reallocation of $5 million toward "operations and maintenance of libraries, provincial parks," and then just "other publicly supported facilities." So my first question is: could I get a detailed list, please, of the money under vote 5.2.1, cultural facilities and historical resources grants? It appears to be $900,000. Could I get a detailed list, please, or explanation of which facilities and exactly what's being done?

Then I'm curious with the other two. A budget was passed here six months ago. It was passed in May. We're back here in November, and there are proportionately substantial requests for this department, anyway, for libraries and provincial parks. Under vote 2.2.2, library operating grants, we're looking at a request of $1.658 million, and for the parks, vote 6.0.3, we're looking at $2.442 million.

So I'm wondering, given that we've just had a second quarter update or something today, if what I'm seeing here – and maybe the minister can talk about this – is that we only see these two areas move forward when there is a surplus from which money can be allocated. Does the minister consider that that is appropriate management of our assets like libraries and the stock that they have or, for example, the provincial parks, which are an asset belonging to all Albertans? Is that appropriate management if we only get the money put in here when there's a surplus? Does he recognize, then, that this is in fact creating an infrastructure deficit if that much-needed money only goes in when there's a surplus or when he can convince his colleagues to allocate it?

It's not as though this department doesn't know this. In the budget that we passed six months ago, Alberta 2003 budget, under Strategic Issues, appearing on page 92 of the business plans, notation number 2 under Challenges and Opportunities, "rising expectations of Albertans for equitable access to the public library system from anywhere in Alberta in support of their work, leisure and learning goals" is understood to be a challenge and an opportunity here. So this is not news.

We've got two or three notations – 8, 9, and 10 – that are talking about the public's expectations for outdoor recreational activities, protection and preservation of provincial parks and protected areas, protection and monitoring of parks, "integrating new information technologies . . . to optimize the preservation, protection and presentation of Alberta's history, culture, provincial parks and protected areas." Number 11: "needs to upgrade and renew the aging infrastructure for provincial historic sites, museums, interpretative centres, parks and protected areas."

So obviously the department and the minister were well aware of the pressures here. We didn't particularly, I don't think, see increases in those areas in the budget. Here we are six months later on the very day that we have a surplus announced, and now we've got a matching supplementary supply request. So I am curious about the management strategy here.

You know, I have to agree with the need for the provincial parks because I had started to notice this. I went out this summer and did a short tour, stopping in as many of the provincial sites as I could find, and I agree with what the Auditor General was pointing out, that there was a definite need to have a close look at upgrading and maintaining these assets because they have fallen behind. Some of them were in quite good condition, and in other ones, you know, the signage had come down and had not been replaced or had been tacked up or pieces had been broken off a sign, the boulders and the landscaping at the bottom had never been replaced, the male and female indicators on the outhouses were missing, railings were broken. I mean, that's just a small sample of some of the things that I saw.

I have to point out that it was uneven. In other ones, there was nothing that I could complain about. It was in very good shape. It was well-maintained. The parks people were excellent. It was well-signed. It was well-lit. Everything you would expect from our parks system.

So what I'm seeing is that the experiment to privatize the maintenance of the provincial parks was not a success, and I notice that in a number of places where it had been privatized to the nonprofit sector or privatized to other groups outside of government to do the maintenance, it's quietly now been taken back. In the local park next door to where I often go, it was the local fish and game association that took over the maintenance. They tacked a sign up over top of the familiar Alberta parks sign, and now that's quietly disappeared. Obviously, Alberta parks and recreation is now doing the maintenance on the place again. To my eye – and I'd like to hear the minister discuss it – I think the decline in quality and the problems with the maintenance in the provincial parks has to do with that attempt to privatize the maintenance. I'd like to hear his discussion on that. [interjection]

My colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry is quietly musing about what's protecting our investment in all of these parks across Alberta. And that's the problem: I think it's not being protected particularly, and it's certainly not being kept up. So I'm looking for the detail, and I'm also looking for a larger discussion around how this is going to be managed. Obviously, the department sees it and understands it, it's in their Strategic Issues: Challenges and Opportunities section. But is this how it gets managed? Only when we've got a surplus and maybe if he can convince his colleagues on Treasury Board to okay it do we actually get some movement forward here? If that's how we're going to do this, I think we're in trouble with protecting those assets.

Those are the questions I'd like to start with. I'll maybe stop now and get an answer from the minister and see if there's a need to follow up with the additional questions that I have. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the hon. member for her comments, most of which were very insightful and perhaps will even prove helpful in the long run.

I want to begin by saying that the total requested moneys, total moneys requested that would be new moneys over and above my budget, are indeed only $1 million, as the member has accurately pointed out. The total moneys from the '03-04 economic cushion that we're really looking at, which is a combination of new moneys requested plus other moneys being reallocated, does in fact come to $5 million, as she has pointed out.

Basically, what we're looking at here is cost pressures for daily operations and routine maintenance items that exist in the libraries, the provincial parks, and other publicly supported facilities. The largest of that group, by the way, is the museums. We have literally hundreds of museums throughout the province. A lot of them are small community museums, some are mom-and-pop-type operated museums and, of course, our own.

In any event, to answer the first part of the question, we did identify that there was $4 million allocated in the existing budget of Community Development for '03-04 for the First Nations development fund utilization. Because those funds will not be utilized this year because there are no eligible casinos in operation this year, I proposed and received permission so far to have those funds reallocated elsewhere in the department, and I'll comment a little bit more on that. So, in other words, there was no need to flow out $4 million for First Nations gaming purposes, because there weren't any approved under the criteria established.

The additional funding, however, will help us to maintain some important program areas which the member has alluded to and will help expand that high quality of life that we're all striving to see in every aspect of the government's operations. I should say that it's quite a challenge, obviously, meeting some of these priorities. I don't want to imply that any of the areas were necessarily underfunded, but I would say that it's always desirable to have more funds for areas that haven't enjoyed the same kind of increases, perhaps, that other government departments have enjoyed. In that respect, the changes in our budget before us tonight from the supplementary estimates side certainly do affect the parks and protected areas aspect of the department the most. I'd like to just explain some of that.

The area for largest reinvestment, if you will, which includes new moneys, the $1 million new and some reallocated funds, totals $2.44 million, and that would go to public safety aspects and maintenance aspects at various provincial park facilities. I know the member had indicated on a few occasions that she wanted a larger discussion on this, and we can certainly have that discussion, but it would take probably longer than we have here tonight, so I'll do my best to sort of summarize it for you. In the end, if you wish to see a complete list of every detailed expenditure, where the money went, I'd be happy to provide that to you once this has been approved and we've actually made the expenditures happen.

The funding before us is an interim response to the larger issue of, indeed, some deteriorating facilities in our provincial parks and protected areas, and we do have a reinvestment strategy already prepared. Unfortunately, I didn't have the success that I had hoped last year in presenting it for consideration, and there were reasons for that, but I have that reinvestment strategy prepared again. It will be going forward as part of the request for the overall '04-05 budget cycle. I know it will be given very serious consideration there.

Nonetheless, we are committed to doing the best we can with the moneys that we have. Just in general, on the question asked about why the parks area, 6.0.3, is getting the larger amount in this reallocation and new investment scenario, the answer simply is because the parks and protected areas are the only area within Community Development that I was not successful to get an increase for in the '03-04 budget. As you will know, I'm sure, we got an increase for libraries; we got an increase for all of the foundations. The Alberta Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Education Fund Advisory Committee got an increase. The Wild Rose Foundation got an increase. The Alberta Foundation for the Arts got an increase. The Alberta Historical Resources Foundation got an increase. The Alberta film development fund got an increase, and PDD got an increase, and I could go on and on. But the parks area did not. It's unfortunate, but that's the fact.

So we're trying to get that base budget increased in the coming budget discussions. In order to help offset some of the cost pressures, I thought it would be prudent to put a little bit more into the parks and protected areas budget, albeit on a onetime basis. Nonetheless, at least there will be something that will be put forward, assuming that we approve these supplementary estimates tonight. So that answers that question, I hope.

The other question was with respect to public libraries. I alluded to this a little earlier, and I did indicate that we saw the first increase to the library system in about 10 years, but in fact that increase, as the hon. member knows, I'm sure, only took us back up to where we were in around the 1993-94 period. Nonetheless, it was $1.3 million more, for a total of approximately $18 million for libraries. As a result of that $1.3 million, we were able to increase the per capita rate from $4.03 up to $4.29 and also the per capita rate for library systems, which, I believe, went up from $3.07 to about $3.22, again per capita, and those were very helpful items.

These specific new moneys that we're talking about tonight are on the operations and maintenance side, quite specifically. Based on the calls and letters and so on I've received so far, the anticipated use of moneys and any increases will be very appreciated by the library community. So we're hoping to make a difference there. With that in mind, the onetime funding within the $4 million reallocation for libraries will amount to about $1.658 million, or roughly $1.7 million, to be reallocated to library boards, the systems, and some special library projects that some of the libraries might have in mind to help them with the increasing operating costs.

The final allocation, Mr. Chairman, of funding to other cultural facilities and historical resources grants, which show up in the estimates as $900,000, are indeed for the museums area, and I know that the museums are another area that are struggling with operation and maintenance costs. So we were able to make some additional moneys, again from the reallocated portion, available for extraordinary operational costs to the member agencies who are part of the Museums Alberta network and also to the Alberta Society of Archivists. With those funds, we're able to help about 207 small museums or archival-type facilities and about 20 larger counterparts across the province. Again, should the hon. member wish to have a detailed list of the names of those museums and archival facilities, their locations, the amounts, whatever it is that you'd require, I'd be happy to provide them to her at a later date.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased that we're able to reallocate some funds within the department's budget for a total of 4 million in reallocated dollars plus the $1 million in actual new moneys asked for in tonight's supplementary estimates to help improve conditions and circumstances for parks and protected areas as well as public libraries and grants to local museums and archives.

My final comment would be with respect to the question about the management strategy. I did allude to that earlier, but the bottom line is that with respect to provincial parks and protected areas I would certainly be the first to agree with the hon. member that we do need more investment in that area. We are suffering from some seriously dilapidated and otherwise run-down facilities in many cases. Now, that having been said, there was also a downsizing in staff, which I'm sure you were aware of, that occurred over the years.

With respect to the management strategy I guess our strategy is to do the best we can with what we have but to continue to put the pressures forward and try and make the case for the '04-05 budget cycle for a significant investment to be made if possible, recognizing, of course, there are all these other cost pressures in health care and education and in roads and infrastructure and mad cow disease and fires and so on, and the list goes on. We've heard those speeches before. I'm hoping that within the balance overall that the government tries to find, parks and protected areas will receive some level of prominence. I don't know the outcome of those discussions yet because they're not concluded, but I'm sure trying my best to ensure that we get those additional moneys, and once we have them, then we'll be able to put forward a much better management approach and management strategy to in some cases restore the parks and other facilities in those parks up to the standard that tourists and Albertans alike are more accustomed to. Where we aren't successful, then we'll have to reshuffle and rejuggle and try to do the best we can in those areas to fulfill the strategy of providing continued excellent facilities for Albertans and tourists to our province.

So perhaps I'll stop there, Mr. Chairman, and see if there are any follow-up questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I'm sure that the minister knows that I'm going to support these requests for allocations. I just have really serious concerns when I'm hearing a management strategy that is – and I'm sure this is, you know, not for any lack of trying on the minister's part; it's more of an overall response. But when I hear that routine operations and maintenance are subject to a supplementary supply, there is something wrong here. We are talking about assets that belong to all Albertans that are deteriorating, and we can't even keep them up to any kind of a standard here. This is some wild game of catch-up that happens long after the fact. I have to put on record my deep and serious concerns with this as a management strategy.

We know recently from the paper that Kananaskis Country is in trouble. It's an area that people are very attracted to. There's heavy usage of it, and there's not enough money going in there to keep up the public safety aspects and the environmental protection aspects of that park and of the access into that protected area. So we legislators have a stewardship role on behalf of all Albertans to safeguard their assets, and this is not happening here.

We have a deterioration in the value of assets in our parks in these historical sites and cultural facilities and, I would also argue, with our library stock, and that will now become the electronic equipment that becomes part of the library experience, so not only the buildings and the books but also the electronic infrastructure that goes along with it. This is a serious problem, and frankly I don't think there should be a surplus. I think this money should be allocated adequately to begin with, and I think there's something seriously wrong when we're having to cheat a number of areas of the adequacy of their budgets in order to roll over these stupendous surpluses and then reallocate that money. Something is wrong here. We are not keeping up the asset base that belongs to all Albertans.

I will officially put on record, then, my request for the list of exactly who and for what reason gets the funding under the parks vote and also for the list of the 207 small and 20 larger museums and archival facilities that are receiving money under the 5.2.1 vote.

So those are my comments for the Minister of Community Development, and I will support his request for that allocation.

Solicitor General Justice

Ms Blakeman: I'd like to turn now to the Solicitor General, whose supplementary estimate is appearing on pages 91 to 95. Once again, I make the note that a budget was approved a mere six months ago, in May of '03. Here we are in November of '03, six months later, and there is a request here for $3.5 million. The obvious question is: why wasn't this money in the last budget? Why is it coming forward six months later? What kind of planning process are we in that six months later we have a request for $3.5 million?

Now, I mean, with this government now spending – how many billions? – $24 billion, $3.5 million isn't a lot in the scheme of things, but it's still $3.5 million. I say: "Okay. Well, was this a surprise? Was this an unexpected amount of money? Did something stupendous happen here?" That's what I expect supplementary estimates to be. It was unforeseen expenses that we now have to go and find the money to pay for because the government was in a position where it had to pay out money that had not been previously budgeted. But every year this supplementary estimates book gets thicker. Every year there are more departments that are requesting funds, and I'm going: "Okay. Well, was this a surprise?"

I go back again. I look at a document that's six months old; that's the Alberta 2003 budget. I look under the Solicitor General's business plans to see if there was anything in there about organized crime or gangs. Somehow was this amount of money so unanticipated that it now has to be fit into the plans? Well, no. Under goals, strategies, and performance measurements, appearing on page 351 of the business plans, strategy 1.2: "Support the Provincial Organized and Serious Crime Strategy in partnership with Alberta Justice, the Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta (CISA) and policing services." This is flowing out of the justice summit theme: to enhance community partnerships. So, no, this is not new.

Okay. I keep looking, and under 1.17, same page, under the Solicitor General's business plan, "Work with law enforcement and appropriate federal government agencies in developing a proposal to address gang activity in Alberta." Obviously, the Solicitor General is aware of the issue. Why wasn't the money budgeted six months ago? Why wasn't it already in the budget? There's not a new gang organized crime problem here. We've known about it for some time. My colleague the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has been working with her community on organized crime and gang crime problems for years. So this is not a surprise. This is not unexpected.

Ms Carlson: And unfortunately going to funerals frequently.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. My colleague is pointing out that she's been attending funerals because of this kind of crime activity for an equally long period of time.

My point is that this is not unexpected activity. So why, six months after the budget was approved, are we back here with a request for additional money? Why wasn't this in the original budget? What is going wrong with the planning and budgeting process in this government that they can't even hold a budget for six months? They're back here for things that are in their strategies.

They're in their goals. They're well known. They're well anticipated. What's going on here? What's wrong?

Now, when I'm looking at the money that's been spent under this vote in which the additional $3.5 million is being requested, which is under Policing Programs, specifically provincial policing programs, vote 2.2.2, in the 2002 budget that provincial policing vote was $103.4 million. In the budget year that we're in, it was $106.9 million. And now we're having it go up to $110.4 million for that. That's a significant increase over that period of time. That's more than 6 percent that we're looking at being increased in that one line item. I keep hearing about holding the line and not getting out of control. Here's 6 percent.

Once again I say: okay; well, then, where's the plan? I was on my feet in this House this week asking the minister to release the manual that is long promised and the plan for implementing a policing strategy in Alberta. I'm assuming that this $3.5 million is part of that policing plan. It's part of that vote. Well, where's the manual, and where's the policing plan? I'm told by her: well, we don't have it; we're working on it. I think it was pretty clear from her answer that we're not going to get it.

When I asked for the province's official response to the MLA policing review, we're not going to get it. When I ask for her to release the corrections review report from the MLA committee that taxpayers funded, we're not going to get it. A lot of money has been spent here. A lot of backbenchers were sent around the province and around the country exploring things. Obviously, decisions are being made, but the taxpayers don't get to see the reports on which these decisions are being based. We're also not seeing what the government's official response is to the recommendations coming out of both of these reports, policing and corrections.

So what's the deal here? There's a serious lack of disclosure coming out of this department. There is a serious lack of accountability. There is a serious lack of planning. Here we have it back again for an additional amount of money six months after we just passed a budget. I think this minister has some explaining to do to the people of Alberta about why certain choices are being made and why there is such a problem with disclosure and accountability in this department.

We have no idea what this money is going to be used for. All we get is one sentence that says, "This Supplementary Estimate of $3,500,000 is requested to implement the integrated response to organized crime and gangs in Alberta." Uh-huh. So where's the report that this is based on? Where's the government response that this is based on? This is based on thin air, and this is a serious problem, and Albertans want to know what the government is going to do about it. We're getting a one-line response, and we're not getting the two reports we've already paid for.

So I think this minister needs to buckle down and do some work. If I can get a response tonight from this minister, I'd be delighted. Perhaps someone else can fill in.

Ms Blakeman: There's a request here for $1.5 million to provide for improvements to the maintenance enforcement program. My favourite. A long history between myself and this and the previous Minister of Justice and Attorney General flowing out of a question I asked many years ago now around maintenance enforcement which resulted in the creation of the MLA review which was chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed and resulted in legislative change, which I think for the most part has been very positive legislative change.

But once again I'm saying to myself: is this a shock? Is this unanticipated? Why are we looking at having to do supplementary estimates now, six months after the last budget was passed in this very House?

That's it. All it says is: "This Supplementary Estimate of $1,500,000 is requested to provide for improvements to the Maintenance Enforcement program." So perhaps I'll sit down and allow the minister to tell me why he needs an extra $1.5 million at this point. I'm sure I will support him in it, but once again I'm questioning this process. Do you only get to add much-needed infrastructure money, I'm assuming, when there's a surplus? Are you satisfied, then, with that kind of a management plan for infrastructure? I would argue that we are creating an infrastructure deficit here, but I'll allow the minister to answer those questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We do have a Minister of Infrastructure, and I guess that if there were questions about infrastructure, he'd be delighted to answer them. But, actually, this has absolutely nothing to do with infrastructure; it has to do with operations.

Mr. Lund: I wasn't listening to them.

Mr. Hancock: Don't worry. It had nothing to do with infrastructure. It has to do with the operations.

I'll speak to two aspects of this. The first is, of course, the process. There has been quite a bit of rambling with respect to the process, both with respect to the Solicitor General and to Justice, and then some specific questions.

The hon. member will know or ought to know that there is in the budget each year a 1 percent contingency line, which allows for some in-year adjustments, a very modest amount of in-year adjustment under that line. Nonetheless, as we move through the year, there is an opportunity there to bring forward projects that hadn't previously been funded or business cases on something which ought to go forward.

If one can make the case on that and it looks like the contingency allowance won't be needed for urgent in-year pressures, there may be a way to make the case that a project which has been in the planning or which has come to fruition, come to that part of the planning stage, perhaps ought not to wait until the next business plan year for it to go ahead but perhaps can go ahead in-year with a modest amount of supplemental funding.

What we're talking about here for both the Solicitor General and for Justice is really modest money. Three and a half million dollars is a lot of money to me, but in terms of a $20.5 billion budget it's really a modest adjustment and for two very important projects. For the Solicitor General's project, the integrated organized crime and gang enforcement unit, which is really an adjunct to the concept that was set up with CISA where RCMP, Calgary and Edmonton Police Services will be working together, pulling together an enforcement unit with respect to investigations and cracking down on organized crime.

The hon. member is absolutely right. This is not a surprise. It's something that has been known about and worked about, but as we go forward in terms of finding newer and better ways to deal with issues in our community to make our community a safer place, we try and figure out the best, most effective way to bring together resources.

So during the course of the past year or so there have been discussions about how to best organize to combat organized crime. We're able to bring that forward together, and the Solicitor General was able to bring forward a proposal and a business plan that had been worked on by the respective police forces with the Department of Solicitor General and make the case that 3 and a half million dollars allocated now rather than waiting for the next business plan would get a good start on that project to get it up and running earlier rather than waiting for a new budget year.

It seems to me that it makes sense not to wait for the next business cycle but to do things as the business planning process and the discussions with our partners make it sensible and reasonable to move ahead and when money is available. Obviously, the hon. member doesn't realize that the budgeting process is a very, very difficult process because there are a finite amount of dollars and an infinite number of ideas and infinite numbers of ways in which you could do things which would be valuable to make the community a safer place or to improve education or to build new buildings or those sorts of things.

So one has to be able to put forward projects that make sense, to convince government that now is the time to move forward with the project, and that's what happened with respect to the Solicitor General's project that she brought forward on behalf of the Solicitor General's department and the partners in the RCMP, Calgary and Edmonton police forces with respect to the integrated organized crime and gang enforcement unit.

As well, with respect to maintenance enforcement, I mean, it's, again, I think fairly well known by the hon. member that the portfolio, the book of business so to speak, has been increasing every year at a steady pace. The ability to keep up with that portfolio of files, those numbers of Alberta children who need maintenance enforcement's help to make sure that the maintenance payments which will support them are there, becomes increasingly difficult when you have finite resources.

So we were able to put together a business plan, go to Treasury Board and to government and say: with the investment of an modest additional sum of money, we can increase the return that we get on our files. Now, that would be a laudable objective, I think, under anybody's sense of measurement, that if we can increase the return on files, if we can improve the amount of collections on behalf of the children of Alberta, that's not something that ought to wait until next year. That's something which, if one can find the resources, ought to be proceeded with on a timely basis. So we were able to take forward that process to say: with an additional tranche of funds, a modest input of $1.5 million, we can beef up our maintenance enforcement program, provide better service to Albertans, and improve our collection ratios.

So I think that while, yes, those two items could have waited for another business planning cycle, they were both projects which were ready to go ahead. I think that in both cases the Solicitor General and myself were able to demonstrate that they were at a place where they could be started or improved upon, and rather than wait for the next budget, the next business cycle, to bring them on now because there were resources available out of the contingency allocation made good sense. The government thankfully agreed, and hopefully the Legislature will agree, and we'll be able to vote those estimates tonight.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The minister is being just a tiny bit disingenuous. I wasn't indicating in any way that the government should have waited or the Solicitor General and the Justice minister could have or should have waited. My questions very clearly were: it's six months since we passed the last budget; why was this not back in that budget and therefore already happening in the year that we're in?

Now, what I would like to know – and I don't expect the minister to have these at his fingertips, but they're fairly common questions from me, so maybe he's already got the information assembled. Once again, I'm interested, since this extra money is being asked for to improve the collection rate and collection percentage, in what is the percentage currently of money collected on the total amount owed. Now, this is the statistic that I keep asking for, and prior to now the government has been unable to provide it for me. What they were able to provide is a percentage of files on which there's been any activity. Even if they'd paid a dollar, it would show up as activity and therefore it counted as any activity on the account. I'm looking for how much money is owed and how much money has been collected or you can give that to me as a percentage.

I'm also interested right now in what is the amount of arrears that we are seeking. Each of these court orders is based on a monthly payment, so we know that in any given month X amount of money should be flowing through the maintenance enforcement program and out to the custodial parents of children. I'm interested in: what is the amount of arrears that the maintenance enforcement program is also seeking? In other words, for people that have fallen behind on their monthly payments and that is accruing, what is the amount of arrears that we're sitting at right now? If he wants to give me the total percentage of activity, that's fine, but I think that according to what we have been discussing over the last four years, with the new system the government should be able to know, as a management tool at the very least – but I'm specifically asking for it – how much money is being collected on the total amount that's been ordered by the courts to be paid. That tells us how successful we're being in that program ultimately. I don't think activity level on the files tells us how successful we're being.

Those are the three statistics that I'm looking for from the Solicitor General. If I could also get him to expand on what exactly the money is being used for. He talked about it being for operations. The one-sentence description that's in the estimates book is "to provide for improvements to the Maintenance Enforcement program." But what's this money spent on? Additional staff? Additional computers? No, it doesn't seem to be. This is not appearing under the equipment line. He's saying that this is to keep up with an increase in volume. Do I take it, then, that across the board this is going to result in more staff, more desks, more telephone lines, more trips to court? Is this an overall approach, or is the money being directed into specific areas?

One of the other areas that I've tracked in the past and where there's been a demonstrated problem is very high turnover in staff and a lot of vacancies in staff positions while people are off on stress leave or illness. Has that number improved? Do we now have the full complement of FTEs that are assigned to the maintenance enforcement program? Are they filled? So what's the total complement of FTEs assigned to the maintenance enforcement program at this point? How many of those are filled? As a subcategory to that, how many of those filled positions are currently off on any kind of stress or illness leave?

I'm willing to support this if I can hear exactly what it's being used for. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would first start by indicating that our maintenance enforcement program and particularly the staff of that program do yeoman's service on behalf of Alberta's kids, but there's no question that they have been asked to work longer and harder in performing that function. For example, the province of Quebec, I'm given to understand, which has a 90 percent collection ratio, has 790 staff monitoring 117,000 files, whereas in Alberta we have 50,000 files, 151 full-time equivalent employees, and a 15 percent vacancy rate at the present time. So the staff are working very hard, getting very effective results, in fact collecting at about a 79 percent ratio, I'm given to understand.

That still means, Mr. Chairman, that 14,000 kids in Alberta are not getting their monthly collections, are not getting their monthly support. We do need to add to the staff and add to the support for the staff so that we can bring that ratio up to 90 percent, which would be, as they say, full employment, if you will. That's certainly a goal that we should strive for and, I think, one that is attainable. This modest tranche in here will get us started on that so that we can build up over the next period of time into the next year so that we can really achieve that kind of collection ratio which we believe is possible with the additional staff and support for them to do that.

On the maintenance enforcement program I'll make sure that with respect to the other questions that were asked, if I've missed any of the detail that the hon. member would like and to the extent that it's available, I'd be happy to provide it. But those are really the essential answers to your question. We have 151 staff operating over 50,000 files. Our files go up about 5 percent a year. Obviously, our staff have not increased at that rate, so the increased service that's being provided – and we have improved services through, as the hon. member knows, improving the computerization process, making it more accessible 24 hours a day, seven days a week through the web, and those sorts of issues. We've engaged in a whole lot of programs to make sure that service delivery is better. We've made sure that clients, both payers and payees, are respected in the process. We've done a lot on the maintenance enforcement side to improve service to Albertans, but there's more we can do. This $1.5 million that we're requesting in the supplementary estimate will help us ramp up that program so that we can move from the 79 percent collection ratio up to the 90 percent ratio in an appropriate period of time.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Infrastructure

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to speak this evening to supplementary estimates and particularly on the day the government announced a $3.4 billion surplus. I am quite happy to see that in the estimates we have $210,600,000 in operating expense and equipment and inventory purchases and an additional $8 million for capital investment. Of the $210 million, $30 million has been added for operations and maintenance cost to schools, and $181 million is forecast to be transferred from the sustainability fund for natural gas rebates.

I certainly agree with the Minister of Justice when he says that it is very difficult to budget, but this government has consistently missed the mark by billions of dollars from revenues that come in. Today's announcement was just another indicator of that. So while appreciating the difficulty the government has in forecasting revenues, there are certainly many areas that suffer, and because of whether it be poor or difficult budgeting practices, needy programs are underfunded. Certainly, in the area of infrastructure we have many concerns, and those concerns begin with the fact that we have somewhere in the neighbourhood of a $7 billion to $8 billion deficit in infrastructure. When I look and see that of the money that has been asked for in supplementary estimates, $181 million is forecast to be transferred for natural gas rebates, that causes concern because this really does not go to increasing the assets of Albertans but simply out of one pocket and into another.

As well, I do not see in here any type of allocation for rebates on electricity. Again, the cost that schools in this province have in regard to not only natural gas but electricity is incredibly high. Certainly, shortfalls in funding from Infrastructure have to be made up from some other area, and of course that takes away from programs for students. So we do have many, many concerns still in the Department of Infrastructure.

One of the questions that I do have for the minister is if he could please elaborate on what type of maintenance costs the $30 million is going to go towards. As I've toured the province and talked with school trustees last week at a breakfast, they have major concerns about the upkeep of their schools, as well about the janitorial costs in the schools and how there just are not adequate funds available to keep the schools clean, to keep them safe.

One of the questions that did come up was certainly that in some of the schools they were finding mold.

An Hon. Member: Mold?

Mr. Bonner: Mold again, now in the schools. We've had the go-round about hospitals. Certainly, one of their major concerns is that there just is not adequate maintenance in the schools. So $30 million is certainly a move in the right direction, but I would like to hear what the minister is going to indicate that these moneys are going for. Again, the $180 million for natural gas rebates is welcome because schools are facing incredible pressures with their very tight budgets.

Now, in looking on page 9 of the Alberta 2003 budget, the second-quarter fiscal update, I see that we have capital assets. Our capital assets are somewhere in the neighbourhood of $10.5 billion, and these include buildings, land, equipment, highways, roads, bridges, dams, and others. I also noticed in the spring budget that there was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1.3 billion to $1.4 billion allocated for alternative financing. Certainly, one of the questions that has to be asked is: when we move to a P3 model, whether it be for the south extension of Anthony Henday Drive, whether it be the hospital in Calgary, whether it be the new building for the courts in Calgary, all of which are going to be supplied by a P3 model, what happens to these capital assets? Albertans are paying a tremendous amount of money and certainly at least 10 percent more in financing costs because private providers are going to supply that capital. So what happens to our capital assets as we continue along this road of building with the P3 model?

Now, as well, we have liabilities somewhere in the neighbourhood of $18.6 billion, and this is broken down into accumulated debt, pension obligations, self-supporting lending organizations, and others. Again, will we see in future statements, such as what we have here in the second-quarter fiscal update, where our P3s are placed into the liabilities section in our summaries?

As well, I see here on page 9 that our school construction loan repayments are in the neighbourhood of $83 million, and certainly when we have such a backlog of requests for schools in this province and we have only $83 million in school construction loan repayments, we have a problem. Part of that problem is the fact that we have not been building schools at the rate at which they're required, and there is a tremendous backlog. Of course, that is what contributes greatly to our infrastructure debt.

So my question to the minister would be that if, as he has proposed for some of the new schools in Calgary-Shaw, they could perhaps look at a P3 model, then will we see those types of loan repayments or payments that are being made to private providers that have built those schools and financed those schools? Where in this document will those costs show up to us as taxpayers?

One of the other areas that I would like to ask a question on today, as well, is for the Minister of Revenue. I know he's around somewhere, and I will probably save that for a few minutes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We're pleased to hear that the hon. member is pleased to see these amounts that we're bringing forward. Just a bit of an explanation on the $30 million. That $30 million was actually paid to the school boards last June, and it was to bring up the funding for the operation and maintenance in the schools. Because of a combination of things, we will admit that the operating and maintenance budget for the actual maintenance has probably not been sufficient when you look at the square footage that the school boards had to operate with. Of course, there was an increase in the utility costs over the last year, so this $30 million was paid to them. Because of the variance in the school fiscal year versus our fiscal year, it was actually in their last fiscal year. They could of course apply some of the money to that, but they could also carry it forward and use it in this particular fiscal year.

The member mentioned the cost of electricity. Well, it seems like pretty well all of the boards within the province have actually got contracts, so they have a fixed rate as far as the price of electricity is concerned. Most of them don't have a gas contract, so last winter they did see a spike in those prices.

I didn't realize that we were getting into a debate on the budget that was passed last spring. I've got no problem making some comments about the $180.6 million that is going to be for the natural gas rebate program. I think the member has to understand that that money came out of the sustainability fund. It is deemed to be one of those that can take funds out of that particular account. It doesn't come out of the capital account, so we're not sacrificing some capital to accommodate the gas rebate program.

As far as the P3s, you folks are going to be interested when you see the numbers that are coming out on the courthouse. I'm not sure where this nonsense – absolute nonsense – about it costing more money is coming from. Just think about it for one moment. If we build the building and we put out contracts, do you think the contractor is being benevolent and makes no money? Of course he makes money. So does everybody else that works on it. They make money. Why do you think that a P3 all of a sudden drives the cost up? In fact, you're going to see that some of the cost savings and the risk off-loading far outweigh the increased cost in the financing, far outweigh it. [interjection] There's an hon. member doing some chirping, and I can't quite make out what the song is.

In any case, I suspect that what it is is that she's not agreeing but probably trying to make herself believe that the extra cost in the money is high enough so we can never erode that when we look at the off-loading of risk. That's one issue.

Another major issue: when you look at the time frame when we can have a facility up and running and the use of that facility, that is worth a lot of money as well. For example, on the courthouse we have no risk for the increased cost that will occur over the two years that it will take to build the building, and that can be a very substantial cost. When you get a chance to look at these and see the analysis, I can tell you that you're going to find that these comments about them being so much more expensive just simply are not true.

As a matter of fact, the committee that will be looking at them is made up of accountants and engineers and people from the private sector. Those folks will in fact show us if there's some flaw in the way we have assessed it. It has to show that it's good for Albertans, or else the project will not go ahead. It's that simple.

In other areas that have done these, many, many have worked well. There are some failures, but we're learning from those that have failed. When you talk about the way it's going to be accounted for, that's one issue that we still haven't got worked out, just exactly how. In conversation with the Auditor General, he feels that he needs to see the contract before he can tell us exactly how they need to be accounted for. They will show up, but just how they will show up we're not sure.

As far as the capital assets, that will be part of the overall agreement. For example, it could very well be that after 30 years of the proponent owning and operating, maybe we own the building at the end of it. Maybe they own the building. It'll be depending on the proponent and what kind of an agreement we can make with them. But at the end of the day it has to show that it's going to pay, that it's going to pay for Albertans, or else we won't go ahead.

I think you were looking at the 83 – you said “million,” but it's $83,000. It's just a very small payment in that second quarter. I can't tell you exactly which school that is. I think I know, but I don't want to until making absolutely sure. We can get that for you.

I think that pretty well covers the issues that were mentioned.

Mr. Bonner: Just a quick point for the minister. On page 9 in his net financing requirements “millions of dollars” is stated, and we have $83 million for school construction loan repayments, not $83,000.

Mr. Lund: I'm looking at page 9 and school construction loan repayments. It's got 83, and then there'll be three zeros. In any case, we'll get that.

Mr. Bonner: Perhaps the minister is not looking at the same line item here: page 9, in the middle section, Net Financing Requirements. This is in millions of dollars, as stated in my book. Under requirements, school construction loan repayments, it says 83. That's $83 million.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, just for the clarification of the chair, are you looking at the supplementary estimates, page 9?

Mr. Bonner: No, I'm not. I'm looking on the second-quarter fiscal update that we received today.

Mr. Lund: The member's right.

The Deputy Chair: That clarifies the issue.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Seniors

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I've managed to do my questioning on the Solicitor General, Justice, and Community Development, so this is my last at bat. I'm looking at the money that's requested as a supplementary estimate for Seniors. Here we're looking at a supplementary estimate of $36,970,000, which I will note is above any possible 1 percent contingency, so I am looking for some explanation here.

It strikes me, according to what's being set out in the explanation – it's talking about $17.3 million for the Alberta seniors' benefit program in assisting low-income seniors to cover the increases in long-term care accommodation costs; $11,750,000 for special needs assistance, of which $5,750,000 is to assist senior citizens with utility costs, and $6 million for extraordinary, onetime personal expenses. Finally, under housing authorities and contracted agencies, operations and maintenance costs, $7,920,000. So that's vote 3.5.3, other grants, plus 3.1.3, housing development program delivery. So those two together are giving us the $7.9 million.

So I think what we're having pretty clearly illustrated here is the choices the government has made in other areas that have become major hot-button issues for seniors and, I think many seniors would argue, a failure of the government towards seniors. We have problems with electrical deregulation which have resulted in higher utility costs, which now have to be covered through this department. We've got increases in the long-term care rates. Again, we have to provide additional assistance for low-income seniors to pay for those costs. I would imagine – but I'll ask for clarification – that we're also seeing here the effects of the elimination of the extended health benefits program, which I'm assuming is part of that $6 million of extraordinary, onetime personal expenses.

So this is more than the 1 percent contingency fee which I'm hearing from previous ministers is the argument against the points I've been raising. This is no surprise. Why are we six months into a budget year having this number of expenditure requests coming forward under supplementary supply? I'm being given the reason: oh, we have a 1 percent contingency, and we're just reallocating that now. I do not remember this kind of reallocation happening previously, and I have to admit that the size and weight and number of ministries in the supplementary supplies are increasing every year.

So specific questions that I would like the Minister of Seniors and housing to answer. I guess he can provide it in writing. I would like details, please, on the categories of the $6 million of onetime extraordinary personal expenses being allocated under the special needs assistance program. I would like a breakdown of what the money has been requested for. I think that's going to tell us where seniors are struggling.

I'm wondering how much money is being allocated for dental costs, for optical costs, for other medical costs, what's being asked for by way of assistance for winter clothing, how much is being asked for, or how many applications. Actually, it would be interesting to get it that way. How many applications have been asked for in different categories like the ones I've been listing and including the ones I've been listing, and what's the dollar amount that's been requested for those various categories as well? How much and how many times have we had requests for furniture or appliance replacement and other categories? I'd like to see the breakdown of why people are applying for this money.

I don't need personal information. This need not be a FOIP request or any invasion of privacy, but I think we need to know why we've got a $6 million increase in a onetime request for assistance to individual seniors. What are they needing the money for? That may tell us some other information that might be useful for management.

There's also the almost $8 million for onetime funding for housing authorities with operations and maintenance costs. Now, I'm looking for an explanation on this. Could I please get a detailed breakdown of where the money went to and exactly what it went for? What is the stated expenditure that they're being given the money for? I'm assuming that this is around the homeless shelter and affordable housing problems. Two different problems here, but I know that in Calgary, for example, recently there was money given to, I think, the Calgary homeless shelter and perhaps Mustard Seed, and I also know that there were some things that fell through.

Now, what's happened to the money for the hard-to-house seniors project? I know that at one point there were negotiations going on with Trinity, and I understand that the government took a fairly hard line and in the end the negotiations fell apart. So what was the hard line about that they lost Trinity as a partner in this hard-to-house seniors project? I don't think anyone else is going to step up to bat on that one, so who's going to do this hard-to-house seniors project? It's inappropriate to put those hard-to-house seniors, usually because of long-term, long-standing substance abuse problems, with other seniors, so what are you going to do with them here?

I'm looking for the exact breakdown of that $8 million – who's getting it, and for what? – and again an explanation of why six months into a budget cycle we're having to look at an additional almost $37 million worth of funding to assist seniors and for housing and, I'm assuming, homeless costs. Again, I've gone back and checked the business plans from a mere six months ago, and I've checked the other budget items. None of this is a surprise. It's all listed as areas of concern. Now, this might be the one department of all the ones I've examined where there were unexpected costs or things that escalated at a rate that wasn't anticipated, but come on. We've had homeless before. We know that this is an increasing problem. This is not a surprise.

Again, I want to know what's going on around that longer term planning for the homeless and the issues around housing. We're going to continue to have these issues with the homeless until we are able to build better partnerships to provide affordable housing both for people to rent and for them to buy. So what's the plan here? These extra things don't seem to be outlined that clearly in the budget plan.

Now, what's the plan with the rest of this? Is it stopgap? Is it maintenance? Does this only happen when we get a surplus and they can drop some money on the homeless? Is this going to mean that we're not going to go forward with the plan to charge the homeless a user fee now that there's enough of a surplus, or is that user fee deal still in the works, to be unveiled with more pomp and circumstance at a later date?

So those are the questions that I would like answered, and I'm happy to receive them in writing. Thanks very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll take the hon. member's suggestion and have the Minister of Seniors respond to most of the questions in writing.

I think that with respect to the supplementary estimates themselves, though, it should be fairly clear – and I think the hon. member answered most of her questions that were directly related to the supplementary estimates just about as soon as she asked them – that the $17.3 million is for the Alberta seniors' benefits program. Obviously, as is well known, long-term care rates were increased effective August 1, and in keeping with the commitment that we've made to seniors in need and seniors who have support, we assist low-income seniors with the increases in those long-term care rates. Seniors who have the ability to afford to pay the rates for accommodation pay those rates, but of course those who cannot afford to pay them come under the government's seniors' benefits program. So there was an increase of $17.3 million to accommodate that.

Special-needs assistance. As the hon. member quite frankly noted, $5.75 million to assist with utility costs and $6 million to assist low-income seniors with extraordinary onetime personal expenses, again consistent entirely with the government's commitment to ensure that low-income seniors do not have to go wanting. When they have needs, there's a program that can be applied for, and if they don't have the income and they do have immediate need, they can get support from the government to help deal with that. So those utility costs were unexpectedly high for many people this year, and of course seniors in their homes who couldn't afford to pay them were able to apply for support. Then, of course, Seniors, as do many other organizations in government, contract with organizations; in this case, housing authorities and agencies. So the operation and maintenance costs of $7.9 million.

As I say, the hon. member, in asking her questions, I think anticipated the answer. She asked a lot of other detailed questions that really don't have anything to do with supplementary supply, and I will refer those to the Minister of Seniors, and he may wish to supply her with answers with respect to those questions in due course.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Again, I'm referring to the second-quarter fiscal update, page 8. What I'm looking at is a page entitled Net Financial and Capital Assets. On this particular page, the second bullet, top left, Pension Obligations: "Pension obligations are forecast at $5.1 billion. They are scheduled for elimination under a separate legislative plan and are not subject to the Fiscal Responsibility Act." Certainly, one of my questions would be: how are these obligations going to be eliminated under the separate legislative plan, and when can we learn of how they are going to be eliminated?

As well, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, and that is on the same page, under Financial Assets.

Mr. Hancock: What page?

Mr. Bonner: Page 8. Minister of Finance, I have a question for you, please.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Bonner: Revenue. You're right. Thank you.

An Hon. Member: The second Minister of Finance.

Mr. Bonner: The next Minister of Finance.

Under Financial Assets we have heritage fund external investments with note (b). When I go down to (b), it says: "Excludes $95 million in internal government investments in 2003-04." If the minister could please tell us where these $95 million in internal government investments are.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. The $95 million in internal government investments, note (b) – I've got to see where the reference to that is. Alberta heritage fund external investments. I don't know – in particular, this could be the Prince Rupert grain terminal because that's potentially that amount. I'm not certain if that's what it's referring to. The heritage fund also has some investments in Alberta bonds, so when you actually look at the consolidated income that we have – the heritage fund does earn income on the bonds that we hold, some of them being Alberta bonds, and they're eliminated on a consolidated basis.

For the external investments I think I'll have to follow up in specifics. My only guess at a number that is about that is the Prince Rupert grain terminal. I will provide you with the specifics in due course. I'd be delighted to.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

Bill 54
Appropriation (Supplementary
Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2)

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do thank the House, including members of the opposition, for their indulgence in allowing us to go ahead with moving supplementary supply, and therefore I would request leave to introduce Bill 54, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003 (No.2). This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Bill 53

[Adjourned debate November 26: Mr. Hancock]

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2). I think it might be worth while to quickly review a little more briefly some of the history that I covered when I spoke to the reasoned amendment of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on this bill.

According to the Consumers' Association of Canada Alberta has the highest insurance rates of the four western provinces. Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, it is those provinces which at various times have been guided by the benevolent rule of the New Democrats, and all, as a result, have public auto insurance systems.

Interestingly enough, from time to time the voters in their apparent wisdom have elected other governments in those provinces, Conservative governments and Liberal governments, and none of those governments have seen fit to eliminate the public insurance systems in those provinces because they've concluded that to do so would be ill advised both from a policy and their own survival point of view. Most recently the very conservative Liberal government of British Columbia has made a decision to retain the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia because they've been very impressed with its performance and they know that, in fact, getting rid of it would be a big political mistake.

Mr. Speaker, we have in fact got some very high rates in Alberta presently, and this bill purports to deal with that. I'll just give briefly some of the highlights from the report which was produced by the Consumers' Association of Canada, and it surveyed 17 cities in the four western provinces.

Just to indicate the methodology a little bit, the data is obtained directly from industry sources, and all rate quotes are from the period July 2 to 11, 2003. For each city a total of 34 rating profiles were used to provide a wide cross-sectional analysis of vehicle types, gender, location, age, driving history, and claims record. For each of the 34 rating profiles, a total of 10 rate quotes were obtained for each city in Alberta. For the other three provinces that operated public auto systems, only one rate quote was required for each profile for each city. The following criteria were used for all rate quotes: liability coverage, $2 million; collision deductible, $500; comprehensive deductible, $300, and in Manitoba quotes it was $500.

Here are the highlights of the report, Mr. Speaker.

1. Alberta consumers pay on average about twice as much for auto insurance than consumers in the other three western provinces with public auto insurance systems.

2. A consumer in Lloydminster, Alberta could pay up to $8,980 more annually for auto insurance than if they lived literally across the street in Lloydminster, Saskatchewan.
3. A driver in Winnipeg could pay up to $9,080 less for auto insurance than if they lived in Edmonton, a comparable sized city with similar prairie-like driving conditions.
4. In Alberta older drivers who drive newer, much more expensive cars, and who have driving convictions, pay up to $2,430 less annually for auto insurance than young drivers with clean driving records. In the three public auto provinces, where rates are based on a driver's record, a young good driver pays less than a bad older driver.

Mr. Speaker, just again to quickly review, how did this situation come about? Statistics Canada figures, which were drawn on the Insurance Bureau information, indicate that auto insurance rates rose 54 percent in the year 2002 in the province of Alberta. Every one of those increases was approved by this government. It is also the case – and I think it's been demonstrated quite clearly – that the reason for these increases was not an increase in claims, as the insurance industry suggests, because the claims in the same year only rose 3 percent, but in fact it was due to the insurance industry compensating for their losses on the stock market, which is the source of their revenue and profits.

So the government sat back and did nothing about any of this while it was going on even though they knew that rates were dramatically increasing, and they probably knew why as well. However, then came the New Brunswick election, and the government, as we have seen, sprang into action in order to head off a potentially serious problem.

It brings us to the bill before us today, Mr. Speaker, Bill 53. It's interesting that this bill follows the same sort of pattern that we've seen increasingly from this government, and that is what we call a framework bill. It has a legislative framework that allows all of the serious and important content of the bill to be established by regulation. That is, it doesn't come to this Assembly, it's not debated in public, the opposition doesn't get to speak about it, and it is just determined by the cabinet. This is a real trend here, and this bill, not to disappoint, gives the Conservative government a blank cheque to finalize its auto insurance reforms behind the closed door of the Tory caucus in the cabinet room.

All major planks in the reforms will be decided behind closed doors through regulation. For example, the definition of what will constitute a minor injury, section 650.1(1), will be defined in regulation. Even the $4,000 cap on minor injuries is not contained in the legislation itself.

Premiums for basic coverage of entry-level drivers, section 656, will be decided by the new automobile insurance rate board that is being set up under Bill 53 in section 652 or by the cabinet directly under section 656(2).

Section 661.1 authorizes the cabinet to freeze premiums, and the effective date for the freeze, according to the Premier, will be October 30, 2003. The best way, I guess, to characterize this is that the government is locking in the highest rates in western Canada. This freeze, Mr. Speaker, is freezing rates at 57 percent higher than they should be. People who are getting renewal notices after October 30 are being told to pay the higher rate and they will be reimbursed by their insurance company at a later date. This is a significant financial hardship, especially for young drivers and those on low or fixed incomes. The new automobile insurance rate board will replace the existing Automobile Insurance Board, which will be phased out. Well, hallelujah. That little closed-door committee that rubber-stamped all of the rate increases that Albertans are being forced to pay is not going to be grieved, I might say, by those Albertans who even know of its existence. Very few members of the public know of the existence of this particular Automobile Insurance Board.

I just want to indicate, Mr. Speaker, for the record that the Automobile Insurance Board reports to the Minister of Finance and its directors are appointed by the minister. It has a very low profile, doesn't even have a web site. It does publish an annual report, but that is not even posted on the government web site, nor are the directors of the Automobile Insurance Board.

Mr. Speaker, it has reviewed, behind closed doors, rate application increases for compulsory coverage, mostly third-party liability. There is no opportunity for policyholders to challenge rate increases. Locations and dates of board meetings are not advertised or even made public. Minutes of board meetings are not published or made public.

The AIB appears to largely act as a rubber stamp for the insurance industry, Mr. Speaker. Only two out of 157 rate applications in 2002 were rejected outright by the AIB. Another 14 were approved with modifications. The balance, the vast majority, were accepted as applied for, often many, many applications in a single sitting. Clearly, the Alberta Automobile Insurance Board needs to be transformed into a government watchdog rather than an industry lapdog.

If we can go back to the regulations and the power of the government to set regulations. The new board will have the power to actually set rates rather than just simply review applications and approve them or not. There still is nothing in the act to indicate whether or not there will be a public, as opposed to a closed-door, rate-setting process. I would be very interested, Mr. Speaker, in hearing the minister responsible at some point in the debate on this bill address this point: will the new board, the automobile insurance rate board, operate in a public fashion, and will consumers and customers of insurance companies have a right to appear before the board and argue against changes in their rates or changes in the coverage that they receive for their policies? I think the government should set the record straight on that one.

The cabinet, under this act, also has the power to define what constitutes basic coverage that will be subject to government-mandated rate caps and what is optional coverage not subject to rate caps. Section 661.5(1) also provides the government with a blank cheque, allowing the cabinet to make additional regulations on so-called unforeseen matters which are not covered by Bill 53.

I want to make another point that's important, Mr. Speaker, and that is that Bill 53 does not repeal section 22 of the Insurance Act. That section prohibits public insurers from British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba from competing for business in Alberta. As a result, the government through this action, this act of neglect by failing to repeal this, is continuing its policy of denying the people of Alberta the choice of insurer and the chance to get the lowest rates because these insurance companies – particularly Saskatchewan Insurance offers competitive rates and actually operates in some other provinces besides Saskatchewan on a competitive basis, in some provinces that don't have public auto insurance.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that the approach that the government has taken is not going to resolve the questions. They are essentially going to try and find some savings which will be passed on in overall rate reductions of a very modest character, and basically they're going to find that the lion's share of those savings, which the minister quantified at $250 million, will come as a result of payment caps. So what the government is offering is slightly cheaper insurance which is slightly less insurance, so you pay less for less, and that's where most of the savings are.

There is apparently going to be some savings as a result of use of mediation, but that's a small portion. All of the rest of it, Mr. Speaker, is simply rearranging who pays exorbitant premiums. It won't be young male drivers any longer, and it shouldn't be, and it won't be seniors any longer, and it shouldn't be them either. Edmontonians, however, will continue to be discriminated against. You know, I'd like to see maybe some members of the Conservative Edmonton caucus stand up and address this question, how this was allowed to occur.

In my subsequent . . . [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired] They have a chance now in the five minutes.

So, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much, and with that I will conclude my debate on second reading.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29. Any questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just thrilled to be able to ask this member a question. My first question for him is this: does he think that the government's proposal for a 15 percent rollback after rates increased for most people by more than 40 percent is really a rollback?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the 15 percent rollback, just to correct the hon. Member for Edmonton Ellerslie, is actually the proposal of the Liberal caucus. Our calculations are that the government will only offer 12 percent, even if all of their savings are there. You know, it's a 57 percent increase, and then a reduction comes after that.

I appreciate the comment from the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie because as I calculate it, to get rid of the 57 percent increase, you would have to reduce the premiums that people are now paying by approximately a third, which incidentally would put Alberta rates back in a comparable position to what people are paying in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and British Columbia, where people are paying anywhere between $800 and $1,000 less for their auto insurance than we are.

Certainly, the Consumers' Association report is the most definitive report on this matter and certainly stands a greater scrutiny than anything anybody's been able to quote on the government side.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Carlson: One more question for the member. Could we hear you say just one more time how great you think the Liberal idea is for a public insurance plan, and how you couldn't have done it any better yourself?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie: you know, it is a wonderful plan, and I could say we couldn't have done it any better ourselves, but actually we did do it.

You know, I certainly appreciate the lack of any – I know that the Minister of Health and Wellness called one of the Liberal members an ideologue today, and to call a Liberal an ideologue, Mr. Speaker, is a bit of an oxymoron, I must say. They have a luxury that we and the Tories don't have, and that is almost a total absence.

Thank you.

10:40

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it is a pleasure to rise this evening and make some comments on Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No.2). Certainly, by comments made by other members to date on this particular bill, we can see that it is a contentious bill. There are some factors to insurance here in the province that add to the varying views that people have.

Certainly, when we look at where we are in the province with insurance, automobile insurance is mandatory, so it must be fair, affordable, and accessible to all. When we look at other sections, medical treatment and rehabilitation must be provided to those who need it but without unnecessary extra costs. I think that's a principle that we all can agree with as well. A third principle is that we must ensure a fair and honest marketplace where policies will be in plain language and explanations readily available to consumers. Those are three principles that we do have for insurance, and certainly when we have compulsory insurance in the province, those principles must be paramount.

Now, then, all of us here that pay insurance have seen that this has now become a pocketbook issue where we are now spending many more dollars each month on insurance. It is such a contentious issue that certainly it has toppled, or almost toppled, other provincial governments and quite rightfully so, because the increased dollars that we now spend on automobile insurance premiums affects the quality of our life. So certainly we need an alternative to high automobile insurance costs.

There are so many comparisons when we look at what is happening in the automobile insurance industry and in the WCB that it is scary. In the WCB we had a report by Justice Friedman, and one of his comments was that in the WCB the playing field was tilted certainly not in favour of the injured worker. This is one of those bills, again, Mr. Speaker, that I feel very strongly tilts that field not in favour of the injured party in an accident or the party in the accident whose car has been banged up, but it tilts it in favour of the insurance industry. That is certainly not something that we want to see.

One of the ways it does this is it reduces awards by the amounts of income from Canada pension plan contributions, employment insurance contributions, and it also caps what the awards will be. Now, then, this does some things that we certainly don't like. It tells people that they do not have a claim to advance, that they will get $4,000 and that is it. A maximum of $4,000. It tells lawyers in this province that they don't have people to represent because now we have a cap on what these settlements can be. What this does is it disenfranchises a whole segment of people that cannot speak for themselves when this occurs.

The other thing that this cap does is that it trivializes the pain and suffering encountered by those in an automobile accident. What it also does, more importantly, is that this legislation hurts the majority of people who clearly do not fit outside of the cap, and it takes away the fairness for those people that have been seriously injured and also takes away their justice. In my estimation and the estimation of most people, the victim should be the last person that has to sacrifice because of an unfortunate accident.

We know that the insurance industry is cyclical, and one of the reasons that it is cyclical is the fact that they have so many investments. Certainly, this government was lobbied quite heavily by the industry when the economic cycle was at a low, when all of our investments went for quite a tumble, but since that time things have rebounded, and we see today that insurance companies are making quite a sizable profit. With the announcement today that the economic recovery in the United States is even greater than what was expected, insurance companies are poised to make even more profits, yet we have a bill that is going to freeze insurance rates at an all-time high. So this is not a bill that favours the average Albertan. This is a bill that certainly favours insurance companies.

What also happens with this bill is that we take the burden of proof for injuries and we place it directly on the individual. Certainly, these people do not have the background, they do not have the resources to fight multimillion dollar companies such as insurance companies. Even if they go to court, they must make certain that their settlement is going to be well in advance of $4,000 for a serious injury in order just to cover their legal costs. So, again, this is a bill that doesn't help the average person.

We all know that insurance companies don't pay out easily. That's not their function. As we have heard many times with WCB from injured workers who have outstanding contentious claims that in their estimation haven't been settled, they feel that WCB says no and says no and says no, hoping that at some point they will just give up and go away. So in that particular case justice is not served. It is the company that has the resources to hang on that is going to eventually win, because it won't be to the injured party's advantage to fight and fight and fight for a small sum.

We have seen, as well, in this province, Mr. Speaker, a huge increase in the amount of fines for certain offences. We have also seen that since those fines have been increased, the revenues have been lower. I can't believe that we have had such a decrease in violations. I think that our violations are just as great. We continue to have higher accident rates. So when we have higher accident rates, when we have higher fines, again we are putting the one person, the driver, in the most compromising position.

As well, when we look at the difference in injuries today as compared to years when the use of seatbelts was not mandatory, we have moved away from the types of injuries where we had broken bones and lacerations to soft tissue injuries. These come about from the rapid acceleration and deceleration of people involved in accidents. We have also seen a tremendous increase in the number of injuries that are associated with the jaw, the TMJ type of injuries.

Now, what's happened is we've also had amazing strides taken in the detection and treatment of these soft tissue injuries. As well, we find that some of these injuries just don't heal and that people are affected for the rest of their lives. When we talk about fraud in these insurance claims, how fraudulent is it to only offer a $4,000 settlement when some of these injuries are much more serious and when even going to court is no guarantee that you'll be fairly compensated for your injury? Again, it is a gamble on the part of people that they can take the $4,000 and go and hopefully get better down the road. It is another issue when dealing with soft tissue injuries that the time frame for healing in many of these types of injuries is certainly a lot longer. A broken bone mends in six to eight weeks. However, soft tissue injuries can take years.

When we look at the whole idea as to why we buy insurance, we buy insurance because that is our defence. Certainly, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre had outlined earlier, you buy that insurance, and then when you need that insurance, you should be compensated. There should not be only one person or one type of policy that will cover you. If you have multiple coverage, then you should be paid by each one of those plans.

So with those comments, I would like to close by talking about the psychological damage that some of these people receive in these accidents. I think of the tragic situation here of an accident on the Yellowhead Trail where a car was severed, was split in half, where one of the brothers was killed and the other was severely burned, yet that mother that was in that car has no recourse for psychological damage. That is going to be a vision that haunts that person for the rest of her life.

I think that this bill, Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), is not good legislation. I think that it is something that we have to revisit and revisit soon. I look forward to certainly making a number of amendments to this bill in committee, and I thank you for the opportunity to make these comments tonight.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, November 27, 2003 1:30 p.m.
Date: 2003/11/27
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our divine Father, as we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our thanks and ask that we may continue our work under Your guidance. Amen.

Mr. John McInnis
October 19, 1950, to November 26, 2003

The Speaker: It is with sadness that my office learned today of the passing of former member John McInnis on Wednesday, November 26, 2003, at the age of 53 years.

Mr. McInnis was first elected to the Alberta Legislature in the general election of March 20, 1989, and served until June 15, 1993. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Edmonton-Jasper Place for the New Democrat Party.

During his years in the Legislature Mr. McInnis served on the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, the Standing Committee on Public Affairs, and the Special Committee on Constitutional Reform.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of his family who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember John McInnis as you have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

Please be seated. [as submitted]

Failure of Sound System

The Speaker: [Not recorded] The speaker system doesn't work, so let's proceed.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to members of this Assembly the members and staff of the Northern Alberta Development Council. They're here in Edmonton today and tomorrow for meetings. Once each year we hold a meeting in Edmonton so we can get together with all the northern MLAs and the folks in Edmonton who we deal with and do business with. It's my pleasure to introduce these members, and I'm going to ask them to rise as I call their names and to remain standing: Sandra Cardinal, member from Kikino-Lac La Biche, Wendell MacEachern from Fort McMurray, Ron Faulkner from McLennan, Maurice Rivard from Bonnyville-Cold Lake, Mike Mihaly from High Level, Doris Courtoreille from Kinuso. Our staff: first of all, my executive assistant, Gladys Gammon; Tom Baldwin, the executive director of NADC; Jennifer Bisley; Jan Mazurik; and Brad Bishop. I would ask that we show them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and to members assembled a person seated in a wheelchair in your gallery. His name is Sam Sullivan. He's a Vancouver city councilor and a founder of the Tetra Society of North America. As members know, persons with disabilities often need custom-designed assistive devices, perhaps like a special loop of velcro or a flexible cell phone holder or some wheelchair modifications. The Tetra Society brings skilled volunteers together with persons with disabilities who need such assistive devices to improve their quality of life and perhaps help them do their jobs more easily. We're fortunate to have the Tetra Society operating in Red Deer, Medicine Hat, Edmonton, Calgary, and Lethbridge. I'd ask members assembled to please welcome Sam to the Alberta Legislature.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, today it's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 19 students from Rimbey Christian school. They are accompanied by teachers Kathy Nieuwenhuis and Wendy Dolman and parent and teacher helpers Jim Buist, Gail Loov, Shawn Rode, and Anna Van Haastert. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is an historic day. Several government MLAs had lunch with several ATA local presidents. In fact, they bought, so that was really good. I'm not sure if they've got into the gallery yet, but if they are in the public gallery, I'd like them to stand and we'll give them a big welcome from the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and to this House two politically engaged young Albertans who have campaigned tirelessly over the last several months against the removal of the tuition cap in the province. They are Shannon Phillips, co-host of a radio show called Rise Up: Radio Free Edmonton, and Melanee Thomas, who is executive director of the Council of Alberta University Students. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Mr. Kenneth Dombrosky. Mr. Dombrosky was injured in October of 1981. He's been through the appeal process for WCB many times and has no further recourse barring the establishment of a long-standing claims tribunal. My constituency office in Edmonton-Highlands has been assisting Mr. Dombrosky with his concerns. I'd ask Mr. Dombrosky to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly Rob Harris. Rob is a new public affairs officer in my department. If Rob can hear me, I'd like him to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to the House a number of people that have made the Water for Life strategy work, and I'll be making a ministerial statement on that in a minute. We have here from my department Bev Yee, Justin Toner, Robert Harrison – Peter Watson is not here – and Valerie Mellesmoen, my communications director, who, I can assure you, does a very difficult job. Would those people please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Water Management

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and talk about what I consider will be the most important issue of the 21st century, and that's water. In Alberta our quality of life and life itself depends on a healthy and sustainable water supply for the environment, for our communities, and for our own economic well-being. As everyone here knows, Alberta is facing significant pressures on its water resources. Population growth, drought, agricultural and industrial development are increasing the pressure on water supplies. This government is committed to wise management of Alberta's water and to ensure that we have a healthy, sustainable supply into the future.

As a reflection of that commitment, I'm pleased to announce that earlier today on behalf of my colleagues I released Water for Life: Alberta's Strategy for Sustainability. Because water is vital to all Albertans in all areas and all communities across the province, their opinions and ideas played a vital role in the development of this strategy. An extensive provincial consultation process began almost two years ago. There was an ideas generation group, public outreach and consultation, and a minister's forum on water. Albertans from all corners of the province contributed to this, Mr. Speaker. As a result, we have a truly Alberta-made solution: Water for Life. No other jurisdiction in the country is trying to do this broad Water for Life strategy, as we're doing here. Later this afternoon I will table the appropriate number of copies, Mr. Speaker.

Albertans told us that this Water for Life strategy is a blueprint for how citizens, communities, industries, and governments would work together to ensure that Albertans have safe drinking water, that Albertans have healthy river systems, that Albertans have healthy ecosystems, and also that Albertans want water managed effectively to support sustainable economic development.

In order to fulfill these commitments and meet the specific targets, the actions outlined in this strategy revolve around three core areas: knowledge and research, partnerships, and water conservation. By working together, all Albertans can improve their knowledge. We can take steps to ensure that we have a vital and safe supply of water for drinking and for the ecosystem and for the economy. I believe that if Albertans are going to continue to benefit from a reliable source of clean water, we all have to change the way we deal with water – you, Mr. Speaker, myself, everybody in the House.

In conclusion, I will say that this is an evolving document. As we move forward, we will see things that need to change, Mr. Speaker. We will see things where we need to add more dollars in terms of development. So it is evolving.

Finally, I'd like to thank my colleagues who sit in the House. I couldn't have done it without them. They've been supportive. They've offered constructively critical comments when necessary. So thanks to all my colleagues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We agree that water is a crucial issue for this century. This is a time for wise decisions to be made for the future. We have an obligation to our children and our grandchildren. Therefore, we applaud the government for finally starting the process of developing a water strategy. We applaud that first step they are taking in developing an education system for water conservation.

But that doesn't take the process nearly far enough. We're looking for leadership. We're looking for vision. We're looking for goals and measured outcomes. We haven't seen this in this water strategy. So we need this government to take the next step and make some hard decisions: to inventory the water that we have in this province, to determine what kind of usages we can make of the water we have and where development can occur. Then we have a place where we can devise the strategy for the future. We need this government to not pass the buck and make municipalities responsible for metering, and they have no responsibility there. If it takes dollars, if it takes any other kind of assistance, this government needs to make that commitment, because right now more than half of this province does not have metered water going into households, and that is really irrevocably bad in terms of looking for long-term water conservation.

So while this government has taken the first baby step, the path that we're on leads up a steep hill, and they've got to be way more aggressive before we see the final outcomes.

Thank you.

1:50

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you would like to participate?

Mr. Mason: Yes, please.

The Speaker: Under our rules we would need unanimous consent of the Assembly because your party is not a recognized party because of the two seats it has in the Assembly.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, and thank you to all my colleagues in the Legislature for this opportunity for me to participate. There is much to like in the Water for Life strategy announced today by the Minister of Environment. Water is essential in life itself. Climate change, combined with ongoing growth in population and industry, is putting pressure on this essential resource. The focus on conserving and reducing water use is commendable, as is the initiative to improve drinking water quality in all Alberta communities, large and small.

At the same time, serious questions remain, Mr. Speaker. For instance, increasing amounts of our finite water resources are being used by the oil and gas industry for enhanced recovery schemes. Once injected, this water is lost forever. Will the government put some teeth into its standards to phase out these uses by the energy industry?

Secondly, I hope the government won't use the looming water crisis to go on a dam-building spree. There is currently a push to build a dam on the Red River.

Finally, the water strategy must not turn bulk water into a market commodity to be bought, sold, and possibly exported. The New Democrat opposition will be watching closely as this water strategy unfolds.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Oral Question Period

Water Management

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the government's water strategy has been carefully crafted. After two years and much stakeholder consultation what we have is a splashy ad campaign and a water strategy full of holes. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Why are you waiting until 2007, after the next election, to discuss "economic instruments" – in other words, charging for water – as a necessary tool to meet water conservation objectives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would point out that if you look at the strategy, it's a 10-year plan. Before we do move forward on anything, we have to gather information. Our knowledge base is not adequate to make appropriate decisions in some areas at this time. So there has to be a gathering of knowledge, a gathering of scientific information. So in terms of economic instruments, we have to first of all determine: what is the economic value of water to our society? We have to determine that.

Secondly, we have to determine issues around the context of the actual cost of delivering water to you. For instance, we do not know the true cost of accounting in delivering water to the members' houses in Edmonton or Lethbridge or wherever they happen to live. So we have to determine economic value. We have to determine, as I say, the true cost of accounting in water, which we estimate will take us anywhere from one to three years to do in consultation with Albertans, and at that stage, Mr. Speaker, we will be able to consult with Albertans on other issues.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how effective will your water strategy be given that you still don't have an inventory of water resources in this province?

Dr. Taylor: Well, that's exactly the point I just made, Mr. Speaker. If you look at the budget for the water strategy, about half the budget is operational and about half is capital, and on the operational side we readily admit that we need to develop a knowledge base. That's what the strategy is about.

If I could point out, Mr. Speaker, around Edson we have a fairly good idea of where the groundwater is. Around the Milk River basin we have a fairly good idea where the groundwater is and how much there is and of what quality. But for much of the rest of Alberta we don't have that information. So as we move forward, before we make decisions, we have to develop a knowledge base, and I think the member will appreciate that.

Dr. Nicol: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why does your strategy not openly discuss a plan to conserve water through metering of residential and industrial users?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, one of the main thrusts of our strategy, one of the three main points, is conservation. I mean, how can you be any clearer than to say con-ser-va-tion. It's very clear; it is one of the main points. Metering for both industrial and homes is very important. I said it at the news conference, and I've said it many times before: if water is metered, people use about half the amount of water than where it is not metered.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, it's good to hear him talking so positively about metering.

The government's water strategy includes plans for, and I quote: developing a water allocation transfer system to ensure a viable market exists. End of quote. To the minister: does this mean that the licence holders will be able to sell surplus water from their licence and profit from a public resource that is given to them free?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, we already have in southern Alberta the water allocation transfer system. If I go back to 2001, as the member knows, in the irrigation districts, because they could get about 50 percent of their water for the farmers in each district, they allowed farmers to transfer water to another person. So, in fact, they need a lot of water. If you didn't have enough water, I could transfer, sell water to the member here. The system is in existence today, and it will continue to be in existence. What it does is it drives water to its highest value use.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you. The minister is talking about determining market value for water. How are you going to do that unless you have a truly open market that's accessible to all Albertans, not just the transfers that you've talked about where one irrigation farmer can transfer to another irrigation farmer?

Dr. Taylor: Actually, Mr. Speaker, in southern Alberta in the South Saskatchewan River basin it is broader than just irrigation farmers. Anybody that holds a licence in the South Saskatchewan River basin can transfer water to another user, and it's up to them to determine what sort of deal. Do they transfer it for one year? Do they transfer it permanently? Do they transfer all of it? Do they transfer part of it? That system was in existence, and we see that system being expanded to the rest of the province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: will this kind of system that he's talking about allow for interbasin marketing of water as well?

Dr. Taylor: No, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta's case we have legislation that says that if there's going to be any interbasin transfer of water, we have to have a special act of the Legislature. If you remember, as I'm sure you do, Mr. Speaker, last year I brought forward an act to allow an interbasin transfer around Red Deer, and that's the way we'd have to go. Even in spite of that, if he's suggesting that we will sell water to the U.S., that is clearly prohibited in Alberta law.

Municipal Regulation of Oil and Gas Development

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, residents of rural Alberta have given up on this government ever fixing its energy deregulation mess. At a meeting last night residents and councillors from the county of Strathcona started planning how to regulate the energy industry at the municipal level because this government has failed to do it at the provincial level. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will the government support the efforts of the residents of Strathcona county to regulate the energy industry at the municipal level?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member, municipalities are important stakeholders in the EUB decision-making process. They often participate in the process along with the residents and ratepayers. Municipal submissions to the EUB could include a comprehensive municipal planning policy on oil and gas development as well as considering the community's long-term growth patterns and sensitive landscapes.

2:00

Now, oil and gas development is seen to be beneficial to all Albertans. The importance of the provincial interest is reflected in the fact that oil and gas wells, batteries, and pipelines are specifically exempted from local municipal planning authority under the Municipal Government Act. The specific section, actually, is 620, for the hon. member's benefit.

Furthermore, section 619 of the MGA provides that the decisions of the EUB take precedence over municipal statutory plans, land use bylaws, and planning decisions.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: given that municipalities feel that the Energy and Utilities Board ignores their interests, when will the government start to defend municipalities' interests and recommend a review of the EUB's mandate?

Mr. Boutilier: Once again, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member, section 619 of the MGA does state that the decisions of the EUB take precedence over any municipal statutory plan, land use bylaw, and planning decision. That is what's taking place, but clearly it is not pre-emptive of citizens and municipal leaders participating in the EUB process in terms of the concerns that the hon. member has raised.

Mr. Bonner: To the Minister of Energy: why is the government's record on regulating oil and gas development so bad that the municipalities feel that they have to do it themselves?

Mr. Smith: Well, the short and simple fact, Mr. Speaker, is that the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board is not doing a bad job. In fact, if you look at the most recent press release with respect to gas prices, you can see that gas prices have been reduced.

Mr. Speaker, the important part is that this resource belongs to all Albertans. All Albertans benefit. For example, the county of Strathcona, located immediately adjacent to Sherwood Park, has the highest municipal machinery and equipment tax income in the land because of the way it processes petrochemicals. So, for God's sake, let's take a look at where the money comes from. It's very clear that we operate in the interests of all Albertans, and it has ruled on an all-Alberta basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Natural Gas Prices

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Calgarians learned that December ATCO natural gas bills would jump by 20 percent, something which would have triggered the government's elusive gas rebates. Today Edmontonians learned that to save the government from issuing gas rebates in a nonelection year, they would be stuck paying for the gas used by Calgarians. Calgarians are no doubt relieved to dodge higher energy bills from this government, but Edmontonians are outraged and are demanding to know who stands up for Edmonton. My question is to the Minister of Energy and Member for Calgary-Varsity. Will he stand up for Edmontonians and northern Albertans and direct the EUB to tell ATCO to take a long walk off a short pier?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I were telling anybody to take that walk, it would be a member of this Assembly, the one who has actually just asked the question. In order to correct the erroneous preamble, he would only have had to listen to the response to the former question from the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. The EUB acts in the interests of all Albertans. It walked through the process with ATCO. In fact, I think we should be quite thankful that gas rates aren't as high that they would kick in this rebate and, in fact, are at a lower price.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is to the Minister of Finance and Member for Calgary-Foothills. Will she stand up for Edmontonians and northern Albertans and ensure that funding for Calgarians' natural gas rebates is made available so that Edmontonians don't have to pick up the tab?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. Difficulty hearing the question? Actually, it's the same question as the previous one. It was directed to you as both a minister and a member for Calgary: are you going to stand up for Edmonton?

Mrs. Nelson: Same answer.

Mr. Smith: Can I supplement that, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Smith: It's very evident that the member does not realize that the job of the government of Alberta, the job of the majority leaders, the job of the government under Premier Ralph Klein is to stand up for all Albertans.

The Speaker: We won't mention names because that violates our rules.

Now, to the hon. member, your third question.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier and Member for Calgary-Elbow: will he stand up for Edmontonians and northern Albertans and encourage his ministers . . .

The Speaker: Okay. Now, hon. member, we know that we have an audio problem, but did the member look?

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Family Violence

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Family violence is a very serious issue. Last year there were six deaths attributed to spousal abuse in this province. In 2001 there were five deaths. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. What is the government doing to prevent similar tragedies from occurring in the future?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the issue of family violence is one that's horrific. It's a tragedy that affects us all. If you put it in purely economic terms across Canada, it's a tragedy that costs Canadians either in the workforce or through health care or through other counseling services $4.2 billion estimated annually.

In Alberta we have taken great pains over the last year to initiate a number of things. In co-operation with the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters and with the RCMP we have a memorandum of understanding for protocol so that when issues of domestic violence occur, the RCMP are very clear on the management of that, and the shelters in receipt of the individuals are very clear. The interrogation of those that may have perpetrated violence is something that is a learned response by the RCMP. Mr. Speaker, today we are systematically training RCMP officers across Alberta, all 2,200 of them, in the manner in which they respond to domestic violence cases.

Mr. Speaker, we're doing more. We have prevention programs for family and community services. The Premier has announced a roundtable where we can take a look at the community partnerships, our collaboration strategies. With the other ministers that are on the Alberta children and youth initiative, all nine ministers are working together to put their piece of action firmly forward to make a difference both at the community level and in the way government responds to the issues of domestic violence.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is also to the Minister of Children's Services. Can the minister tell us: what is the goal of the provincial family violence roundtable and when it will be held?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, early in the new year, probably during the month of February, we will have mini regional roundtables to get the collective views from local regions on how we should manage domestic violence, family violence issues, and look at bullying as well in those communities and in those regions. We have planned to have an Alberta-wide roundtable on May 7.

Mr. Speaker, on familyviolenceroundtable.gov.ab.ca you can learn more or register your support or become involved in the roundtable. Every MLA will receive information about roundtables in their region, and we are working right now to put together that proper team of support so that all of the venues that may need to be covered, including elder abuse, justice issues with the Justice minister and the Solicitor General – in every single solitary area where family violence touches the society in Alberta, we are looking at providing supports for their involvement relative to the roundtable.

Mr. Speaker, one more comment to the member opposite, who does a considerable amount in his community to curb the issues of family violence and profile the need to stop and make Alberta violence free. Government is not and cannot be alone in resolving this problem. This is a problem that rests in the homes of the nation and a problem in Alberta homes, and everybody, including those individuals involved, must be involved in finding solutions to resolve family violence.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, is that it? Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy: after ATCO Gas's initial rate filing for December, why did natural gas rates change and increase by $8 per month on average, or 36 cents per gigajoule, for northern Alberta consumers and drop by $25 a month on average, or 97 cents per gigajoule, for southern Alberta consumers?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member knows full well that that's an answer for ATCO and should be directed to the gentlemen that were introduced earlier in the Legislature today.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how much of this extra $8 per month from northern Alberta consumers will be used to subsidize consumers in southern Alberta?

Mr. Smith: I'd refer him to the three answers, Mr. Speaker, to the previous questions from the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry and the Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that the minister's performances at mime for Alberta TV watchers will certainly be better than his performance as Energy minister, will this government force ATCO to wait until after the next provincial election to recover those costs from its southern Alberta consumers, just like it did with electricity bills after the last election with deferral accounts?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, there's not enough time left in question period to correct the errors in the preamble, but I will say that the process of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, which has the best reputation in North America if not globally, for the work that it does in regulating an industry that has delivered in the last three years some $24 billion in hard cash dollars to help this province move toward the most prosperous economic jurisdiction in North America – they do a good job, they did a good job, they're doing a good job today, and I expect them to do a good job tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Consultation with First Nations and Energy Industry

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituents need some clarification between the government's consultation process with our First Nations and the contractors' issues dealing with oil and gas exploration and development in northern Alberta. My questions today are to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Can the minister please illuminate the difference between consultation initiatives and the contractors' issues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, unfortunately, there have been erroneous reports that have led to some confusion. I would like to state that the contractors using the government's consultation process are two completely separate processes. However, there is a connection between the two, and the connection is that the contractor issues are a symptom of consultation processes not yet completed. So we're trying to deal with these specifically in different ways.

I just want to talk about the aboriginal policy framework, which is a government policy. It has actually committed Alberta to work with the First Nations and aboriginal communities and industry to improve aboriginal participation in the economy. As a result, the consultation initiative was championed by my ministry in the spring of 2003, and we were able to get $6 million, which was shared between six ministries: Sustainable Resource Development, Energy, Community Development, Environment, Justice, and of course Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

This was to ensure that the development of regulatory processes affecting land and resource management was to occur. This also meant that we would work with the First Nations and make sure that we began a consultation process, because, Mr. Speaker, once we develop the consultation policy and the guidelines, First Nations and other aboriginal communities and industry and governments will have a better understanding of our individual roles and responsibilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the same minister. I think that I heard most of it, but I need to know: what has occurred to date, to now, and when can we expect a policy or guidelines to be completely in place?

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, so far we have met with representatives from First Nations and industry and a number of other groups that had wanted to be involved. We have just begun the second round of meetings to ensure that we know what they have told us and to confirm what they have said to us. Whatever we do, we want to move forward and make sure that we listen to all parties that have been involved. This is a complex issue, and change can't be made overnight. However, improving and developing mutually beneficial relationships among industry, government, and First Nations is an integral part of the work we are committed to fulfilling. It's our intent to have that policy ready by spring of 2004.

Universities' Business Plans

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, for several years the Minister of Learning has asked universities to submit business plans for his approval. To that minister: what process of review does his department undertake with these business plans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Each and every institution under the Government Accountability Act is responsible to submit business plans to me. We review the business plans and, essentially, file them, give any comments, if we have any comments, back to them. We do not change and have not yet changed these business plans. The only institution that is exempt from this is the Banff Centre. Included in Bill 43 is the mandatory ability for the Banff Centre to submit business plans to the minister for approval as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Has the Department of Learning ever requested changes to a university's business plan?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, off the top, I would suggest no, but I know that there may have been some very minor ones in the way that the business plans are formatted. There have never been any major ones.

Dr. Taft: Given that provincial government funding for the University of Alberta is below 50 percent of the university's total budget, on what basis does the minister assume the right to control the business plans covering 100 percent of the university's expenditures?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, in Alberta we have a huge interest in our postsecondary education, not just on the operational side but also on the capital side. It's absolutely imperative that we know what the universities are doing, that we know the direction the colleges are taking, that we know the directions the technical institutes are heading in, in order for us to budget, in order for us to plan. The access fund is a perfectly good example of that, where we're able to say: this is where we want to go. Universities and colleges and technical schools then say, "Well, we want to go in this direction," and it becomes very much a combined effort.

Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely critical that the public of Alberta—the public of Alberta—have the knowledge of the business plans of the postsecondary institutions of Alberta. I find it very hard to believe that this hon. member would not want the public of Alberta to have the ability to see the business plans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Deerfoot Trail Extension

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the last three years the constituency of Calgary-Shaw and the constituency of Highwood as well as the entire city of Calgary have been watching with some excitement and anxiety as the construction of the Deerfoot Trail extension has been proceeding. As you know, this is an important part of the north/south trade corridor, and it is very much hoped in my neighbourhoods that it will relieve some of the traffic congestion. My question is for the Minister of Transportation. I understand that the long-awaited Deerfoot Trail extension is going to open on Friday, and I was wondering if the minister could tell me if this large and important project has been able to stay on budget.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm extremely pleased to announce on behalf of our colleagues here in the Legislature and on behalf of all Albertans that, yes, we are going to officially open the extension of the Deerfoot Trail tomorrow.

This is a $100 million project that has come to completion. It is a three-year project, and it's about a month off schedule, with outstanding results by our contractors, our consulting engineers, given all of the many people in the construction of that road. Not only will it improve the safety of the traveling, motoring public in that particular area and the surrounding communities, but, as the hon. member mentioned, it is a critical improvement for our north/south trade corridor, and in the end it helps improve our competitiveness in the marketplace.

Mrs. Ady: Mr. Speaker, I only have one supplemental question. I have had the privilege of driving down this extension and was so impressed with the beauty of the valley that it goes between. As you know, it crosses the Bow River, and there are fish and wildlife habitats there. What did Alberta Transportation do to minimize the environmental impacts?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, on the environmental issue, we spent a considerable amount of time with the consulting engineers trying to mitigate all of the risks to the environment. The first thing done was to build a bridge, so to speak, for the wildlife to pass under the highway during the construction. We also had to put a fence along the highway to ensure that we didn't have any deer or coyotes wandering out onto the highway and into the construction. Most importantly, the Bow River Bridge was moved about 40 metres to the west because there was some critical fish habitat that we didn't want to risk any damage to. We took exceptional care to ensure that any drainage, any type of turbidity in the water was completely minimized or eliminated. As a result, this is a project that we can hold as applying to other projects in Alberta in terms of ensuring the protection of the environment.

Calgary Board of Education

Dr. Massey: The Minister of Learning announced with some pride that the Calgary board of education will have a balanced budget. What the minister failed to mention is that that board lost another 260 teachers, 127 support staff, and 25 custodial staff. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How can the government continue to proudly announce budget surpluses while a major school board in this province was given no choice but to continue to cut teachers and to increase class sizes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary board of education came in right on budget this year. I believe it was .25 or .025 percent, so the surplus, quite obviously, is minimal. Part of the job of any elected trustee is to ensure that they are fiscally accountable. The school boards have another job, which is to ensure the delivery of educational services, and often the fine line that is between, that these large school boards have to walk, has to be managed each and every day.

Mr. Speaker, the nice thing about the Calgary board of education is that their results continue to be excellent. The students continue to do well. The students continue to learn well. Were there issues this year with teachers being let go, contracts not being renewed? Yeah, there were. The Calgary board of education had to make some very tough decisions, decisions that were not easy at all, but they did them in what they feel was probably the best way that they could, and I certainly applaud them for that. I applaud them for their difficult decisions, and I applaud them for coming in with a budget that is on-line.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that underfunded Calgary schools had to turn to school fees and that a parent has calculated that the fees amount, effectively, to a 40 percent provincial tax rate for some families, will the minister do the right thing and offer the Calgary school board some financial relief?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, about a week and a half ago we gave all the boards in Alberta some financial relief to the tune of around $90 million. Thirty million dollars of that was given in July of this year; another $60 million was given now. So that's a considerable amount of financial relief for the boards of all of Alberta, not just Calgary. It's pretty hard to selectively pick one specific board when the money is given out to all boards in exactly the same fashion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: has the minister considered offering the Calgary board of education some relief through a onetime expenditure from the province's surplus to help pay off their long-term debt?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, this year in the long-term debt of the Calgary public board I believe they're down to about $12 million or $13 million or $14 million. Their payments are actually ahead of schedule from what they were, and they have continued to make them.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I go back to the same point that I just made. Over the past 10 or 15 years all boards have received the same amount of dollars. Back in May of 1999 we did give all the boards a onetime payment of $151 million, which was to eliminate all deficits. At that particular point in time, there was about $25 million to $30 million that was turned out that the Calgary board was paid. They continued to make those payments because [inaudible]

Postsecondary Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the government announced that it is on track to post yet another multibillion dollar budget surplus. The government can't seem to find enough mattresses to stuff this windfall into, yet universities, colleges, and technical institutes are announcing tuition increases next year ranging from 5 to 10 percent. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Why does the government place a high priority on racking up multibillion dollar budget surpluses than it places on giving postsecondary students a break by freezing tuition fees?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, part of the process that we've gone through was to put forward a fiscal plan that balances off the needs of Albertans but also recognizes that programs have to be sustainable, and in doing that, we recognize that if we ramp up programs in one year when we have banner oil and gas revenues, the next year we likely would have to hold back on some of the programs, which those guys would like us to do.

We're not going to do that. We've struck a balance where we recognize, I believe and our colleagues believe, the needs of the core programs of this government, but we've also said: let's put money aside for when we don't have those revenue bases so that those programs are preserved and protected. That's what's in the sustainability fund, and we were able this year to say that we're going to fully fund that protection for Albertans in the long term. Plus, we've said that we will put the balance of the dollars into continuing to pay off our debt, which secures the future for our kids and our grandkids. Plus, we said that we will add dollars to our capital account. To me that's the right balance, and I hope that the hon. member will agree with that.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Dr. Oberg: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member asked specifically about tuition fees. The institutions right now are working under the 30 percent cap that is existing at the moment. They have the ability to raise their tuitions approximately $276 this year at most. I would just like to read something that the hon. member said at the debate on November 25: "Mr. Chairman, it's of absolute and critical importance that the independence of universities [is] maintained." Their independence in picking their tuition fees is exactly what is being maintained.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is again to the Minister of Finance. Given yet another corporate tax cut in this year's budget, why is the government imposing higher tuition fees on Alberta's young people, who pay for corporate tax handouts?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, creating the right framework for the long-term security of the province becomes critically important. The structure in this province is one that balances things off, and it's seen maybe not by this hon. member but by people from the province and from outside the province. When I go to a Finance ministers meeting and have another minister say, "Our young people are migrating to your province," they're coming here because there's opportunity, there's a future, and there's an opportunity for them to have their children have a long-term future. Why is that? Because we have an attractive package on the fiscal side which includes low taxes overall on the personal side but also on the corporate side, which means that there are jobs. There's a long-term economic future for these people coming to this province and for people that live here.

So striking that balance, again, becomes very important, and I can tell you that students coming out of the university are grateful that there are opportunities for two or three different types of positions for them to go into when they graduate from the universities and the colleges and the technical schools in the province of Alberta. They have the opportunity. That's not present anywhere else in Canada.

The Speaker: To supplement, hon. minister?

Dr. Oberg: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member made an insinuation that the government sets tuition fees. It is the government that limited the raises of tuition fees. In fact, the hon. member in the debate on Tuesday night said that taxpayers also expect as democratic citizens their institutions such as universities to have the full freedom to express themselves on matters that the members of the universities . . . think are critical to the preservation, protection, and enhancement of public interest and common good.

That's exactly what the universities told us.

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. leader briefly and the response briefly. We've now spent six minutes on this exchange. This is question period, not debate period.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With that kind of balance, one couldn't even ride a bicycle.

To the same minister: why doesn't this minister get her priorities straight, take the roughly 1 percent of the projected surplus that would be required to freeze tuition fees, and give postsecondary students a break?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I believe that our government's priorities are straightened out, and this hon. member should maybe get onboard. We're concerned with the people of this province. We're concerned with our kids, we're concerned with our grandkids, and we want to leave them with something that they can afford to sustain and flourish on and be able to have a profitable future in this province. This person would destroy that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Flu Shot Campaign

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm one of the many thousands of Albertans who's had a flu shot this fall. It's my understanding that Alberta, in fact, has had one of its most successful flu shot campaigns ever. I thought I was well protected until I heard media reports that a new strain of influenza known as A-Fujian has appeared worldwide. Media reports claim that the current vaccine holds little protection against this deadly new strain. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Minister, I guess I'm getting cynical in my old age or maybe a little nervous or worried, but I'm wondering: what is the point of Albertans getting their flu shots?

The Speaker: Please, hon. member. Beauchesne 408 says that questions should "not inquire whether statements made in [the press or] a newspaper are correct." I hope that's not the intent of the question.

Mr. Mar: Nor will it be the intent of the answer, Mr. Speaker.

The A-Fujian strain of flu is closely related to the A-Panama strain of flu, and the A-Panama strain is one of the three components of the current flu vaccine. The provincial health office implemented its 2003 influenza plan in October of this year. It strongly advises Albertans to get flu shots. Albertans should be aware of flu symptoms like fever, aches, chills, and they should limit contact with people when these symptoms are present.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, just last week the World Health Organization reported that the current flu vaccine does offer significant protection against influenza caused by the new A-Fujian strain.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Seniors – that's the 65-plus group – children, and people with chronic health problems are extremely vulnerable. Is there anything that can be done to protect these citizens?

Mr. Mar: Well, seniors, health care workers, those living with chronic illness continue to be the major target groups for immunization against influenza. From last year's campaign, Mr. Speaker, roughly two out of every three seniors in this province got a flu shot. This flu season my department has enhanced the immunization program by offering vaccinations at no charge to anyone living with somebody who is at high risk.

We reached our goal of immunizing 90 percent of long-term care residents. We surpassed our goal of 65 percent of workers in those facilities getting a flu shot. We certainly encourage all health care workers to get their annual flu vaccination to protect not only themselves but their families and the people that they look after.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the same minister. Is this strain of flu the precursor to a pandemic illness?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, this current flu is not considered to be a pandemic illness. The World Health Organization has identified this strain of flu as being a minor genetic shift of the virus. I can tell you that within the last two weeks A-Fujian has been found here in Alberta. As of November 15 we identified 654 cases of influenza, and only 15 of those cases have been the A-Fujian influenza strain.

Mr. Speaker, of course, many people will be aware and will recall that earlier this week the province launched its pandemic influenza plan. The goals of this plan are to reduce the incidence of serious illness and death and to try and reduce the disruption to communities and to try and slow down the spread of such an influenza pandemic when it arrives.

Street Divergence Program

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the 2002 budget debates the Solicitor General outlined her strategy for the street divergence program, which diverts mentally ill people into appropriate programs and away from the criminal justice system. Six months ago the minister of health talked about the excellent diversion project in Calgary. At the time, he indicated that funding was only secure until March of 2004. My question is to the Solicitor General. Has the minister decided which ministry will keep this program running?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. This is a program that is clearly run by the minister of health, and if I may, it's been a very, very successful program. We've been pleased with what's happened. We believe that the mentally ill should not be allowed to enter the corrections facilities, and we're pleased with the program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Then I will direct the next question to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is there a timetable for introducing this same program into other centres in Alberta?

Mr. Mar: Not at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Blakeman: Why not?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, we haven't completed our evaluation of the current program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Grandparents' Access to Grandchildren

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are all to the Minister of Justice. Respondents to the Alberta law reform stakeholders report indicated that grandchildren should have the right to have a relationship with their grandparents. Can the minister tell this Assembly: why don't grandchildren have this right whether they are from a one-parent or two-parent family unit?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, we don't set out the rights of grandparents, but I do remember dealing with changes to the Provincial Court Act. It was actually brought forward under a private member's bill by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, now the Solicitor General, some years ago, which provided for grandparents' ability to apply to the court for access to grandchildren when that was being denied by their parents.

We did a review of family law. In fact, the bill on family law is going to be before the House today, so I won't speak directly to that. But in the course of that consultation, of course, it became clear that some Albertans wanted greater access by grandparents and, perhaps, a presumption of grandparents' right of access. Others believed that parents should be in the position to make the decision. Albertans recognize that grandparents play a very important role in the lives of grandchildren, and the Provincial Court Act, by providing that right of access, which is going to be brought forward into Bill 45, will recognize that.

Albertans, however, also recognize the need for guardians, who are usually parents, to protect and guide children and for the right of parents to make decisions in the best interests of their children. We have heard from many parents who say that there's a financial and emotional cost to contested applications by grandparents, particularly when in many cases the courts will also reject the grandparents' application. So we have to strike a balance, Mr. Speaker, so that we do not prevent grandparents from applying for access, because each individual case has got to be determined within the best interests of the child.

The law as it stands now and the law as it will hopefully be is that parents should make the decision with respect to the children. Grandparents, if they cannot resolve issues within the family, would have the right of access to the courts to have the courts make a determination about what's in the best interests of the child.

Mr. Yankowsky: Mr. Speaker, again to the minister. Respondents to the same consultation indicated that when parents deny grandparents access to grandchildren, they should be required to provide valid reasons for denying access. Why are parents not required to provide valid reasons for denying their child access to their grandparents, their larger family unit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the member is absolutely right. Respondents to the law reform project did say that, but other respondents also said that applications in intact families cause disruptions and ignore the rights of parents to decide what's in the best interests of the children in their care. Clearly, we can't have it both ways. This is proof of the complexity of the issue and the fact that there are a number of aspects which have to be taken into account. We feel that we've struck the appropriate balance in what has been determined to be brought forward.

There is no presumption of contact between a child and a grandparent, but as I said before, when parents and grandparents can't agree, there needs to be a mechanism to resolve that dispute and to resolve that dispute in the best interests of the child, and that is allowing the grandparents to apply for a contact order. But it is up to the grandparents to show the reasons why the contact is beneficial to the child and the reasons why the denial is unreasonable. The court then will take into account the significance of the relationship, if any, and the other aspects of concern which show that it's in the best interests of the child.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister referred to the high emotional and financial costs of these disputes. Can the minister advise what steps his department has taken to address the cost of applications for grandparent access or other family law matters?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, in almost all family law matters that go to court, the financial and emotional costs are far too high, and that's why we work very hard to try and encourage collaborative law processes, to try and encourage processes which involve precourt processes in terms of family counseling and family mediation. We've developed a series of family law books that help people who choose to make applications without a lawyer. They're available at the family law information centres in Edmonton and Calgary.

Our department boosts a number of important projects to help people work collaboratively towards resolving disputes on their own: as I mentioned, programs of mediation, courts are participating with judicial dispute resolution, and of course there's the very successful parenting after separation program, all of which are designed to reduce conflict, help parties refocus their energy on the children, and deal with the primary aspect, which, I can't say often enough, is what's in the best interests of the child.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds I'll call upon the first member to participate in Members' Statements.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Natural Track Luge Races

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Races down the Smoky River hill near DeBolt, Alberta, in January are designed to put the sport of natural track luge on the path to the 2010 Olympics. Grande Prairie is reaping the rewards of Canada's successful Winter Olympics bid by getting to host the first-ever Canadian World Cup natural track luge races January 2 to 4, 2004. It's the first of many races to be held in Canada during the next several years, all with an eye to getting the sport into the Olympics. With DeBolt having the nation's only sanctioned track to date, it will likely play host to future World Cup races.

The decision came after Vancouver/Whistler was named as host for the 2010 Winter Olympics. It's part of a long-range plan to get the sport's international federation to have the sport in the Winter Olympics. Grande Prairie will get international exposure as the races are broadcast in central Europe, where the sport draws bigger television audiences than downhill skiing and is second only to soccer.

Again, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a leader in Canada, and Grande Prairie is a leader in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Bonnyville White Ribbon Campaign

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize the Bonnyville White Ribbon campaign. The Bonnyville White Ribbon campaign has the distinction, along with the cities of Toronto and Sarnia, Ontario, of having the longest-running campaign addressing the issue of men's violence against women. November 25 through December 6 marks White Ribbon Week. During this week, men of goodwill wear white ribbons to symbolize their pledge to neither commit, condone, nor remain silent about men's violence against women in our society.

Many people who talk about violence against women cite statistics that show an incredible number of men victimizing far too many women, but one fact about this form of violence stands out more than any other: 76 percent of the victims are assaulted by someone they know. It would be too easy to say that women need to be protected from the stranger lurking in the shadows. Some people believe that arming women with a whistle or signing them up in a self-defence class could reduce the victimization of women, but it isn't that simple. Husbands, boyfriends, acquaintances, and co-workers are committing these horrible acts, not just the stranger on the street. We hope that these men will one day take a long look in the mirror and see what they have become. Maybe they would change after realizing the effects of their horrible behaviour.

If we saw signs that these problems could be solved without our help, then we wouldn't need the White Ribbon campaign. Wearing these ribbons is a way for everyone, especially men, to show their anger toward violence against women.

Everyone has a mother, and most of us have a wife, a sister, or a daughter. What would happen if they had been raped, beaten, or murdered? Stop and think about the anger and the hopelessness that would stay with you for years if not forever. Imagine the feeling of shame and terror felt by the victim. You must also remember that you would most likely have met the man who committed the offence.

There is no denying that violence against women is a horrible problem with few easy solutions, but there is no doubt that the first step is awareness. I encourage all members to wear a white ribbon and recognize the horror that thousands of women in Alberta must endure.

In closing, I wish to commend the local organizers for undertaking the White Ribbon campaign to raise awareness of and to counteract domestic violence in the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Adequacy Funding for Education

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The report of the Learning Commission has given new urgency for the need to provide a school funding formula that focuses less on equity and more on adequacy. Simply put, adequacy funding provides the dollars needed to ensure that all children perform at a high level. We need a shift in financing from thinking about the number of dollars being put into the system to the number of dollars needed to ensure that students meet specific objectives, a shift from inputs to outcomes.

In Alberta adequacy has been defined as the number of dollars that the government deems available. The dollars decided upon have little to do with students and much to do with politics. These political decisions to cut school funding or increase funding in no way are decisions based on the dollars needed to make possible predetermined student achievement.

The Learning Commission has provided a useful start in helping us shift our thinking and helping us begin to understand how much money should be allocated to our schools. Recommendations 5 through 9 begin the work of defining outcomes. We have been given a starting list of intellectual, personal, and value expectations for specific grades and for high school graduates. Fleshing out that list and assigning the dollars needed to make attainment possible is the heart of adequacy funding.

A focus on adequacy will involve a major change in the way schools operate. We will need better systems for diagnosing and tracking the progress of individual students. We will need different organizations that will allow students who complete a course quickly to move on to the next level without waiting for the start of a new term. We will need a broader range of assessment practices than are now in use.

The commission has provided valuable direction for learning in Alberta. However, the promise of the commission will be lost if the province fails to change the current approach to funding and provide adequate funds to make the recommendations a reality.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Alberta Seniors

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government is responsible for supporting the well-being and independence of Alberta seniors. It says that its programs and services are designed to help those in-need seniors live healthier lives and more independent lives, preferably living in their own homes and their own communities.

However, since 1993 the Tory government's words have been contradicted by its actions many times over by making changes to programs that result in seniors paying more for necessities. The following puts a lie to the long-cherished belief that with hard work and perseverance anyone can afford a secure retirement. Here is that list: loss of dental care and eye care coverage, rental increases for seniors' accommodations, deregulation of utilities leading to intolerably high utility bills for seniors, an increase in the co-payment for prescriptions drugs, and the elimination of health care premium exemptions.

In some cases programs have been eliminated entirely. In other cases, means testing has been introduced. Perhaps the unkindest cut of all took place this summer, that being the unilateral decision with barely a month's notice to hike the accommodation rates in long-term care facilities between 40 and 48 percent.

The Coalition of Seniors Advocates, COSA, has noted that Alberta seniors have been economically brutalized by the so-called Alberta advantage, that has taken away many essential services and benefits that seniors enjoyed prior to 1997, and that these service cuts have caused unbearable hardship for many seniors. The Alberta Council on Aging, who are overwhelmed working for and helping seniors, believe that we should all be recognizing seniors' contributions, not devaluing them.

There is a quip that goes something like this, Mr. Speaker: it gets harder and harder to make ends meet, especially if someone keeps moving the ends. The Tory government needs to stop moving the ends farther apart and stop its attack on the retirement savings of the province's seniors.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition here. I'm presenting this petition on long-term care signed by 570 Albertans from Edmonton, Bashaw, Bon Accord, Camrose, Hardisty, Killam, Sedgewick, Tofield, Viking, and other areas of Alberta. They're petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to recognize and value the contributions and sacrifices the seniors have made in building the Province of Alberta, and treat them with due respect and dignity by reversing those policies that cause unnecessary financial hardship for them and undermine their quality of life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'm presenting a petition on long-term care signed by 441 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to recognize and value the contributions and sacrifices the seniors have made in building the Province of Alberta, and treat them with due respect and dignity by reversing those policies that cause unnecessary financial hardships for them and undermine their quality of life.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three petitions this afternoon. The first is primarily from citizens in Calgary, and these 353 citizens urge the government to "acknowledge its responsibility in maintaining public education with public funds by increasing the per pupil grant."

The second petition is from 432 Albertans urging the government to acknowledge that the maintenance and construction costs of schools, hospitals and roads are part of the provincial debt and to consider splitting the budget surplus between monetary debt and infrastructure debt.

The third petition is from 340 Albertans expressing their concern and asking the government to resolve the crisis in education by addressing the lack of teaching staff and large class sizes and the elimination of many programs including special academic programs and urging the government to increase funding for public education.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday we will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday we will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly today five copies of each of the annual reports for Municipal Affairs' delegated administration organizations. The organizations are the Alberta Boilers Safety Association, the Alberta Elevating Devices and Amusement Rides Safety Association, the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta, and since the Alberta Propane Vehicle Administration Organization ceased on June 1, '03, I'm tabling their 2002 annual report.

I'm also tabling an activity summary from our authorized accredited agencies, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I'm taking this opportunity to table five copies of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research 2004 calendar along with 2002-2003 financial highlights, and the consolidated audited financial statement for 2002-2003. A copy of this document had been previously sent to all members of the Legislature directly from the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of the Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of the Water for Life: Alberta's Strategy for Sustainability, that I commented on earlier.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would table on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Lethbridge-East, copies of literally hundreds of e-mails and letters that the member has received from people here in Alberta and around the world objecting to the consideration of the development of the Milk River dam, indicating that many studies have already been done on this, and all have suggested that a dam would be detrimental to the environment.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of a letter to me from Laurie Reid objecting to the proposals that are being put forward by the employer in the current health care negotiations, indicating that they could be very devastating with respect to the delivery of health care in the province.

And then I have letters from Rose Badura, Betty Patterson, Stella Callender, Antje Toner objecting to the proposals being put forward in the nurses' negotiations and details [inaudible] putting the proposals on the table would put on health care system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is an electricity rate chart that has been created by [inaudible] of Edson, who documents an overall increase in the cost of electricity and natural gas from April 2000 to June 2003.

The second tabling is a letter and enclosed article from Pam Head, a resident of Edmonton, who wants it on public record that she is totally against the idea of deregulating utilities. She states this in regards to the Premier: the Premier "needs to regulate the utilities remembering they are a necessity . . ."

The Speaker: Hon. member, the tradition is to table the document, not to read it.

Mr. MacDonald: My third tablings are letters addressed to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment, from Lethbridge-West, from L. Watt, who expresses concern about negotiations between PHAA and UNA.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona I am tabling a background brief prepared by Bev McKay and other prominent Albertans requesting the Auditor General of Alberta to conduct an audit of long-term care facilities in Alberta.

I'm also tabling copies of Mr. Kenneth Dombrowsky's correspondence with respect to his WCB appeal. Mr. Dombrowsky was injured 22 years ago and has been fighting appeals since that time, and I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of that tabling.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table letters from Cari Smith, Gwyneth Foster-Newell, I Lut Lo, and Janick Hebert, who are all constituents and all nurses writing about their concern for the lack of negotiations between nurses and the RHAs.

I'd also like to table some of the letters I referred to in debate the other day regarding insurance. The first is from Tim Peterson, directed to me with concerns about claims versus insurance and penalties for lapsed insurance; also, the individual I referred to as the Eagle Talon, who's actually named Janice MacNeil, concerned about her son and the amount that he was having to pay for insurance for a used car; the individual I referred to as Mr. Mazda and his concerns around the $4,000 cap on soft tissue injuries; also, a letter addressed to me from Bennett Moore, concerned about Bill 53 and what the government is proposing for auto insurance; and, finally, directed towards me from Jeff Fixen asking me to vote against the insurance industry's proposal on soft tissue injuries.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My tablings today are all done with permission and, in fact, at the request of the writers. They are letters from Ross and Yelena Pambrun, Donna Maxwell, and Angela Krizan, copied to me and addressed to the Member for Calgary-Bow, expressing concern over the nurses' negotiations.

The second tabling is a letter from Susan Kean, copied to me and originally addressed to the Member for Fort McMurray, also expressing concern over these negotiations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. With your permission I have two tablings today, Mr. Speaker. The first is 45 signatures from residents of the Hastings Lake area who are worried about the proposed Tempest gas wells, which have recently been approved by the Energy and Utilities Board without public consultation, and that they may affect both the quality and quantity of potable water. They want the wells tested before and after drilling by an independent, unbiased . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the intent is to table, not read.

Mr. Bonner: My second tabling is a decision by the Supreme Court of Canada on an application for leave to appeal. The appeal by the Workers' Compensation Board was dismissed with costs to allow the respondent, Thomas Shuchuk, to advance a claim against the WCB based on the tort of abuse of public office.

The Speaker: Others?

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk by the hon. Bill 54
Appropriation (Supplementary
Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to be able to stand today and move second reading of Bill 54, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2).

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was able to bring forward the second quarter in the supplementary estimates, and clearly we are in a position in this province to deal with some of the pressure points. A lot of them, in fact the majority, are a result of disasters and emergency situations that have occurred within our province, and this government clearly responded to those disaster requirements and needs I believe faster and with more earnest than any other province in this country.

I know that there was dialogue last night on supplementary estimates, and I'm sure that all members and colleagues were proud of the way that, in particular, the ministries with the disasters were able to move quickly and with a clear direction to help alleviate some of the pain from the disasters that occurred in the province, conditions, Mr. Speaker, that we were also seeing focus on some priority areas that clearly were necessary to deal with some issues that had arisen through the year. This particular bill reflects those positions, and I am pleased to move second reading.

At this point, though, I'd like to adjourn debate, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 52
Health Professions Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move for second reading Bill 52, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, as we move forward with health reform, we need to support health professionals in providing safe and effective health services. We've already done much to make the health care system more efficient and responsive to patient needs. In Alberta an electronic health record system has been built to give health providers secure electronic access to current health information when providing patient care. This leading technology, the first of its kind in Canada, gives physicians and other health care providers correct information about a patient's prescriptions, allergies, and test results. Providers will have appropriate access to patient information no matter where the patient lives or where they receive care.

Physicians and pharmacists have already reported that the electronic health record system is an effective tool in making decisions about patient care. The system aims to prevent drug prescription errors and avoid having patients undergo unnecessary diagnostic tests. Physicians say that immediate computer access to patient information and clinical guidelines are helping them to make better decisions about patient care.

Mr. Speaker, the electronic health record system also depends on the ability to collect and share accurate and appropriate information about health professionals who provide care. Bill 52, the Health Professions Amendment Act, will allow for the development of a health provider directory, which is a database of all regulated health professionals in the province of Alberta. Bill 52 will give regulatory colleges the authority to collect and share information on all individual health professionals who will need to access electronic health record information to provide patient care.

The Health Professions Act was passed in 1999 to regulate all 30 health professions in the province. This legislation requires all regulatory colleges to follow common rules, to investigate complaints and set educational and practice standards for registered members. Bill 52 will expand the information that can be collected and shared about health professionals while protecting their privacy. This bill will require all professional colleges to collect standard information on all of their regulated members.

This data is essential to the function of not only our electronic health record system but will also ensure that Alberta can provide standard data to national initiatives such as the development of a pan-Canadian electronic health record system. The new system will allow for interprovincial communications on patient referrals, telehealth, and research.

Bill 52 will also authorize the use of anonymous and aggregate health provider information to help Alberta monitor and plan for health workforce needs. Professional colleges are asked for changes in how they define themselves and their regulated members.

New professional schedules under Bill 52 will provide new college names and new professional titles to reflect current scopes of practice. The practice statements for some colleges have been amended to better reflect the range of services regulated practitioners provide.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 52 will assist professional colleges and their regulated members to provide safe and effective patient care. Regulatory colleges and health authorities recognize and support the need for these changes to improve patient access and care. Bill 52 is an essential step in being responsive to the needs of Albertans and to the needs of health care providers. This bill advances our progress in health reform and helps us build a better public health care system.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move Bill 52 at second reading, and at this time I wish to adjourn debate on Bill 52.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 46Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Municipal Government Act provides the framework for governance in the administration of 357 municipal authorities and therefore affects the vast majority of over 3 million Albertans. This government acknowledges the key role of the Municipal Government Act, and it's firmly committed to ensuring the act's continued viability and relevance.

After consulting with stakeholders, the government has concluded that additional amendments are appropriate in strengthening the Municipal Government Act. Stakeholders such as the Urban Municipalities Association and the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties along with many other stakeholders were consulted.

The purpose of Bill 46, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2003, is to improve the act by doing the following: first, it will provide enabling legislation to allow municipalities to collect an off-site road levy as a condition of subdivision or development, and second, it will enhance the liability protection for municipal boxing and wrestling commissions.

In addition, amendments are proposed to change the effective date of provisions in Bill 23, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2002, regarding the revised equalized assessment reporting system.

Mr. Speaker, let me begin with those amendments that apply to off-site road levies. Municipalities experiencing rapid growth have requested through the Minister's Provincial/Municipal Council on Roles, Responsibilities and Resources in the 21st Century an amendment to help offset some of the transportation costs related to new growth. The council is the first of its kind in Canada. Members from this Assembly, including Whitecourt-St. Anne, Edmonton-Rutherford and Calgary-Mountain View, join me. Also sitting on the council of stakeholders are the AUMA president, the AAMD and C president, the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary, and also a representative from Alberta Economic Development Authority.

A recent court decision in the MD of Rocky View challenging the validity of a municipality to collect an off-site road levy resulted in a ruling that sufficient authority for this did not exist in the act, one of the purposes of our amendments today. Provision is therefore proposed to confirm the authority of the municipalities to collect an off-site levy as a condition of subdivision or development to help offset some of the transportation and lading costs that come with new growth.

An example of where this would have benefited a municipality is the massive Simons Valley subdivision in Calgary. With a projected population of 50,000 people the development was put on hold by Calgary council last December due to a shortage of infrastructure funds for roadway construction. An agreement with developers to help pay for the roadways was not settled until the following spring.

Now, to ensure that the process is accountable, transparent, and subject to public scrutiny, provisions will also be added to the act to require off-site levy bylaws to be subject to advertising provisions in the Municipal Government Act and to require separate accounting procedures for all off-site levy bylaws, ensuring their accountability. To provide a stronger policy framework for setting off-site road levies, a new regulation-making authority of the Lieutenant Governor in Council will be included to establish principles and criteria that apply to municipalities in setting these levies. This will be in addition to the existing power in the MGA to set the maximum amount that a municipality may establish or impose as an off-site levy.

In the past there have been challenges made to the right of the municipality to charge off-site levies as a part of the development agreement. To address this particular issue raised by our stakeholders and any other potential challenges, a clause is proposed to ensure that those development agreements entered into prior to the coming into force of the proposed off-site road levy provisions are deemed to have been in force as though the off-site levy was authorized in the act.

Mr. Speaker, finally, the second set of proposed amendments would give municipal boxing and wrestling commissions immunity from any liability arising from all combative sports regulated by the commission and cover referees, judges, employees, and other officials in the performance of their duties in good faith. This request was raised by the city of Edmonton on behalf of the Edmonton Boxing and Wrestling Commission and also received verbal support from the city of Calgary on behalf of the Calgary Boxing and Wrestling Commission.

Therefore, it is proposed that section 535.1(1) be amended to include the following combative sports: full-contact karate, kick-boxing, and all other sports that hold contests between opponents including striking with feet, hands, knees, or elbows. Question period is not part of this coverage.

It is also proposed that section 535.1(2) be amended to protect officials, commissioners, referees, judges, and timekeepers from liability for anything said, done, or omitted to be done in good faith.

Finally, the proposed liability protection will be very similar to that provided to councillors, municipal officers, and volunteer workers of a municipality.

Let me conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that sections 10, 11, 13, 16, 17, and 20 of Bill 23, the MGA Act of 2002, are to come into force January 1, 2004. These sections pertain to the preparation of municipal equalized assessments, and the effective date is causing concern for some municipalities. I've heard their concern and am very pleased today to say that the amendments – municipalities and their service providers may require additional time to complete those required changes to their systems to comply with the revised equalized assessment and reporting system that was provided in Bill 23. Therefore, it is proposed that sections 10, 11, 13, 16, 17, 20 of Bill 23 be amended to come into force on proclamation rather than on January 1, 2004.

It is further proposed that in section 13 of Bill 23 the wording of section 321.1(2) be amended from January 1, 2004, to "by the date this section comes into force."

Mr. Speaker, in closing, this bill addresses the needs of Albertans and will maintain the Municipal Government Act as a model piece of legislation of every similar kind of any place in Canada.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to say that these are good amendments, and I would at this time like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 45
Family Law Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments? The committee will deal with amendment A1. Are there any questions or comments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Further to the package of amendments that was introduced and marked, I would like to advise you that following consultation with the opposition, it has been agreed that the amendments to Bill 45 which are currently on the floor be split up in the following way to accommodate specific discussion, voting, and subamendments.

First, we would ask that the main amendment that we have proposed will remain amendment A1, that section B will be broken out to become A2, section G will be broken out to become A3, section J will be broken out to become A4, section EE be broken out to become A5, and finally, Mr. Chairman, section A be broken out to become A6.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. I presume that there is an agreement on that.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, and I appreciate the cooperation of the sponsoring member and the House leaders in coming to this arrangement.

The Deputy Chair: Very well. We shall do accordingly.

Ms Graham: I'll continue, then, Mr. Chairman. As I mentioned in my remarks on second reading, since the introduction of Bill 45 last spring there has been additional consultation on the contents of the bill over the summer and into the early fall, and government has accepted many of the suggestions received over this period for the purpose of improving and strengthening the content of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, there are some 65 amendments in our package of amendments, and although it may seem that this is a high number of revisions, I would like to say that this has really been the first opportunity for those who will work with this bill to actually view it. So these changes reflect the scrutiny which has been brought to bear by the individuals and organizations with expertise about it and who will be working with it.

You will see, Mr. Chairman, that the majority of the amendments are drafting changes which improve clarity. There are certain policy changes which extend from those of minor significance to those of, I'll call, ordinary significance. We feel that there are really only three policy changes that are of major significance, and I will identify those for members as I give the description of them later on.

Just to sum up, then, the amendments really fine-tune the provisions of the bill such that there will be less opportunity for interpretation, I guess I could say, for greater clarification of intent, for wording that better harmonizes with the federal Divorce Act, and to remove some sections that were, in retrospect, thought to be not necessary.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to state that I believe and I think members would agree that there is a higher than usual need for clarity in this bill as it will be used very heavily day in and day out by judges, clerks, lawyers, self-represented litigants, and others working within the family law system. So it's very important that the bill be clear and easy to follow, and I think that the amendments that we are proposing respond to this need.

It will be my intent, Mr. Chairman, in the time remaining to summarize the amendments for members. I have grouped these amendments together by general subject matter, and although it isn't my intent to go into each one of the 65 in detail, I will try to hit the high spots, so to speak.

Addressing, then, the amendments, Mr. Chairman, the first grouping I will call court jurisdiction and powers and alternative dispute resolution. I would suggest that House amendment A, which defines "respondent" in a less adversarial way, as well as amendment C, which amends section 4 of the bill to add collaborative processes to mediation and other services which lawyers must bring to the attention of their clients to help parties resolve their differences, go to making the court processes simpler, more family friendly, and are certainly encouraging of the use of alternative dispute resolution mechanisms.

The next two House amendments, B and C. Amendment B revises section 3, the jurisdiction of our Court of Queen's Bench and our Provincial Court, both of which act in this area, but it sets out the jurisdiction of the respective courts specifically in the Family Law Act. Section 3.1 would then deal with procedures to apply when there are duplicate applications and for combining matters.

Mr. Chairman, originally the plan was – and the bill so reads – to designate the court by regulation; that is, what court would have responsibility for a lot of contingent applications. However, a question was raised about the legality of doing this; thus the amendment to designate the court in the statute. Amendment D is a reference to the elimination of the need for regulations to set out the court that would be required because we are designating the court. I hope that makes sense.

Next are a number of amendments to definitions and court powers which will reduce the adversarialism in the courts and increase the use of alternative dispute resolution. House amendments E, Z, X, KK, MM, QQ, RR, SS, and ZZ are amendments which clarify court powers in relation to the making or varying of orders or declarations.

Then, Mr. Chairman, House amendments TT, UU, WW, and XX add court powers to make stays and order costs and conditions in certain situations.

The next grouping relates to child support for children over the age of 18 and the procedures for determining child support, and the amendments here, Mr. Chairman, involve two of the major policy changes that we have identified. What the bill basically does is erase the differences between child support procedure for the children of married parents and those children of unmarried parents by harmonizing with the Divorce Act, by bringing in a definition for when child support is payable, and by bringing in the use of child support guidelines which exist in the Divorce Act.

So what you will see, Mr. Chairman, is the addition of support obligations for certain children over the age of 18 but not older than 22 years of age to balance the obligation of the child to support himself or herself with the Divorce Act obligation to pay support after age 18 and with the government policy that supports education. We will find these changes in House amendments BB, CC, KK(a)(iii), which amend section 47(b)(ii), defining how a child over the age of 18 would qualify for child support and also requiring the adult child to contribute to his or her own support.

The other major change, as I mentioned, is the inclusion of child support guidelines which really reflect the current reality that is happening in the courts, because our courts are applying them with great success. So House amendment EE would amend section 52 to add child support guidelines and set the rules for when these guidelines may and may not be used.

Two additional amendments, I and DD, relate to powers on findings of parentage, and they make it clear that the court can make findings of parentage for child support and can order blood tests in aid of that.

The next subject matter of revisions deals with the removal of the person-in-need support provisions, which currently are part 3, division 3 of the bill. These re-enact the provisions of the Maintenance Order Act and would impose a legal obligation on extended family members, including grandparents, parents, children, and grandchildren, to support family members who cannot support themselves because of disability or similar causes. Because these sections are rarely used by private citizens and never by government and are no longer consistent with government policy, which is to support the independence of disabled adults, it was determined that these provisions should be removed from the act. In fact, House amendment HH does do that. It strikes out all of part 3, division 3. This is the third major policy change which is contained in our amendments.

The next subject matter deals with the clarification of children's interests and their participation in matters affecting them. Mr. Chairman, the bill does encourage a focus on the child and on the child's unique situation and best interests, and it encourages the appropriate inclusion of the child in matters affecting him or her. We find changes consistent with this in House amendments F and J, which have to do with the notice of court procedures on children. These House amendments amend sections 10 and 16 to ensure that children who are under the age of 18 are properly notified of court proceedings affecting them. We've changed the age from 12 years and older to 16 years and older, at which point children would be notified of proceedings involving them. As well, it does still leave open the discretion of the court to give notice in other circumstances.

House amendment K addresses the best-interest criteria and amends section 17(2)(b)(iv) and (ix) and allows for the child's and guardian's views to be considered if appropriate in determining best interests. It also amends subsection (vi) of 17(2)(b) and 17(3) by improving the definition of family violence as it relates to children. It will include all household members as well as acts of sexual abuse and forced confinement, but it will exclude normal discipline as might be meted out in the household.

House amendments YY and ZZ affect sections 96 and 97 and redraft them to better aim at the protection of children by limiting publication of proceedings and, of course, enable the court to do this.

The next subject matter would be entitlement to contact with the child, and grandparents' access comes under this heading. An amendment has been made in response to the Alberta Grandparents Association submission, which gave input to all MLAs in this regard. House amendment Y would see a change to section 35(4)(a), which makes the test for obtaining leave to bring an application for contact with the child for grandparents and other nonparents to be less onerous in the case of intact families.

The next subject matter is under reproductive technology, and there are new changes in Bill 45 designed to help infertile individuals. House amendment G would see section 12, which addresses this, improved by using better wording in place of "artificial insemination," which is viewed as an outdated term and not descriptive of the process, to be replaced with the new and better wording of "assisted conception." It will also improve clarity about the ways that men, particularly those who have fertility problems, can be considered biological fathers through assisted conception. It also allows exceptions to be made in the regulations to the rule that anonymous sperm donors are not fathers.

The next grouping surrounds the entitlements and powers of guardians of children and trusteeship of children's estates. These provisions are found in part 2, division 1. Mr. Chairman, this is the first time in Alberta law that all the entitlements and responsibilities of guardians have been codified. Where there are disputes in relation to these powers, they are often difficult ones, so clear rules should help reduce conflict in this regard.

I can advise the members, as well, that procedures for obtaining a trusteeship order for children's estates have been adjusted after consultation with and in anticipation of the planned amendments to the Minors' Property Act. So the House amendments under this heading, Mr. Chairman, are found in House amendment L, which specifies the guardians' powers and affects section 20(2) and 20(5)(m.1), where there's a clarification of the guardians' entitlements and obligations to share information.

Under section 20(3) there's a clarification that there's no financial responsibility associated with guardianship.

Under section 20(5) there is a requirement that the child's maturity level, which is an evolving capacity, must be taken into account when they make their decisions.

Under section (20)(5)(b) and subsection (l) are further clarifications of the guardianship powers.

Under House amendment O there is a change to ensure that in making a guardianship order, there is never a gap in these guardianship orders, and it also removes an unnecessary leave to court application.

House amendments P, Q, R, and T speak to the trusteeship of the estate of the child and affect section 26 such that any eligible person can be a trustee, not just the guardian. As well, it affects section 28 such that the consent of the Public Trustee is not necessary as the Public Trustee will get notice of these applications in any event. It also affects section 30, which gives the power to the court to help the trustee, where the trustee can now apply for directions.

House amendment S will affect section 29, which clarifies the court's power to review a guardian's decisions.

The next subject matter is parenting orders found in part 2, division 2, and involve House amendments U and V, which clarify the definition of parenting time and moves this to a better location in section 32 and also affects section 32(3), which is removed because it would likely cause some conflict. It had been included for the purposes of the Hague convention but is now being withdrawn.

The next subject matter is enforcement of time with the child, which is found in part 2, division 4, and is . . . [Ms Graham's speaking time expired]

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, given that we do have some sound problems, it's very important for Hansard to be able to pick up the speaker's remarks. I would request everyone to please respect the problem that we have today. Please, everyone, allow the speaker to be heard by the microphones so that, at least, Hansard can record what's being said.

Debate Continued

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to commence the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 45 by acknowledging and thanking the government for its co-operation in reorganizing the amendments that had been proposed. In general, I am supportive of the amendments that were brought forward in the package by the sponsoring Member for Calgary-Lougheed. However, there are a number of areas where I wish to bring a subamendment or where I had concerns. I didn't want to be in a position of voting against the entire package because of concerns that I had with a few clauses, so I appreciate the co-operation in pulling those clauses out.

I am aware of the time pressure today in that there is a desire by the government to return to the appropriations bill by 5 o'clock, which leaves about an hour and 10 minutes for this debate. What I would like to do is respond first to the general amendment, amendment A1, which is the larger package of amendments, and then I'm perfectly happy to have that voted. Then we would go on to amendment A2, which is on the courts, discuss it, vote on it, and then to amendment 3, which is on assisted conception. I do have a subamendment. Then amendment 4 on notification, amendment 5 on child support, and amendment 6 on definitions. Finally, I have an amendment to the original bill, which would happen after we've voted on all the other amendment packages currently on the floor.

To start out, looking at the general package, the sponsoring Member for Calgary-Lougheed has apparently gone through to outline what the government was attempting to do with such a large amendment package. There's no question that 65 amendments contained in 38 pages is a large amending document, though I support the government in the work that was done. This bill was originally put on the floor in the spring session and left over the summer for people in communities, interested stakeholder parties, to look at it and give input. As a result of that input we have the amending package before us. I think the process is a good one, and I'm pleased that it, indeed, has happened.

I would make a couple of comments on the package A1, the guardianship order section. I think that once we have fixed the surrogacy and assisted conception sections – and I have amendments to that. The guardians: here again we're speaking about a mother and father, and additional guardians or alternate guardians can be appointed where necessary. This continues the previous law, and it's fine.

When we look at contact orders here under division 3, this is where the test is set out to allow someone to stand in place, the best-interest test. We have some concerns which were brought to me by the Grandparents Association, that felt that the test was too hard, and the Member for Calgary-Lougheed did mention that there had been an amendment in the A1 package to make that easier. I would maintain that the test is still too difficult, but at this point it's come down to a difference in philosophy. The government prefers to have a philosophy of parental rights first and foremost, and that's reflected in the legislation. I would have preferred that there be a wider recognition of different kinds of families, and when we're looking at the best interests of the child, I would have preferred the test be put on the parents to prove why someone else couldn't have contact with their children, but not a hill that I'm going to die on because I think I'm not going to be able to move them on this, and they have been willing to come partway with this amendment, that they have already committed to this. I think it can be argued that the best interest of the child is an actual test that grandparents meet.

Now the enforcement of access to the child, which appears in division 4, sections 38 to 46. This provides the government with powers to address interference with access, and the provisions are taken directly from the Domestic Relations Act. They are not new. They have been around for some time, and I remember doing an amendment to the Domestic Relations Act in my time here, in '98 or '99, in which the access enforcement section was inserted, and that did seem to have brought a lot of problems.

My concern now is the same as it was back then in that these provisions with enforcement of access I believe contain threats of fines and imprisonment that can be used by access parents to coerce or threaten custodial parents. Often we have a situation where there's a gender bias built into this. In other words, the custodial parent is still in this day and age more likely to be the mother. The access-seeking parent is more likely to be the father. The fathers often have more financial resources, although I've been corrected recently that it's people with great resources or almost no resources who, in fact, take advantage of the public resources to delay, to go back to court repeatedly.

It becomes a form of harassment to continually go back to court on every variance, on every order and challenge everything, and the custodial parent is having to take time off work, arrange for child care, perhaps are losing salary if they're on wage per hour. If they don't work, they don't get paid. They're having to look at parking costs and travel costs to go back over and over and over again to court to defend themselves. So I still have a concern that that's possible here. I have not seen an improvement, and I think we need to look at this, maybe even address this in the future.

There are no parallel penalties in place for access parents who refuse to take the access as ordered by the court except for a very small provision which allows the custodial parent to get reimbursed for actual costs that were incurred. So a parent has said: "Okay. I'm the custodial parent. I've arranged to go to a family reunion in Newfoundland. I've bought my ticket. This is the weekend that the access parent is going to take the child or children. I bought a dress for the family reunion." Then comes Friday afternoon and the access parent doesn't come. They're out-of-pocket for the plane ticket and the outfit and the hotel and everything else involved. They could apply to the courts for reimbursement. That is the only section that addresses people that don't take the access that the court has allowed them.

I think there's an imbalance there. There's a great deal of effort to coerce custodial parents to grant access. There is no effort to encourage those parents that have an access order to actually make use of it and to have formed a relationship and have ongoing access with the child. That is a place where we are lacking as legislators, and we do need to go back and address this. Noncustodial parents are given all the rights of access to children but not the responsibility of exercising that access.

Another area that I want to make note of is in section 71, around financial disclosure. There are two issues here. One is that the parent need only provide financial disclosure one time per year, and I think that given how much jobs change, conditions change, that is not enough. If we have a parent who gets a much better job two weeks after their disclosure, that doesn't matter. That child is still going to go through the next whole year getting the same amount, and the children should be able to benefit right away if a parent, in fact, gets a better job or their financial circumstance improves. They could win the lottery or inherit money. There are any number of ways for their financial situation to improve, and in this case the children do not benefit from that, and they should. We have no mechanism in place to allow that; it's once a year only. I think this section is another that needs to be looked at, perhaps not now – I don't see the change in what the government has brought forward – but I would urge the government to consider this perhaps under a miscellaneous statutes or an amending bill.

The second part of my concern around the financial disclosure is always around safety. Of course, given my history, I'm concerned for the safety of battered spouses. I have found instances where harassing spouses can use the information in the financial disclosure, particularly the address of the workplace, to continue harassment. They didn't know where the wife or ex-wife was working. In the financial disclosure document, because it's been verified – and that's the point – there was the address of where she worked, and he was now able to start showing up at work and phoning and harassing her and most of her colleagues in the parking lot, et cetera, et cetera. So I think we need to be very careful here, to be aware that once the information has been verified, there is no reason for any court officer to be releasing the rest of that financial information. It should not be used as a stick to continue to beat people with.

I am supportive of the efforts that the government has made to reduce the adversarial nature of what we have in our setup. We are in a position where we're using the courts as a final resort, and it does set people up on opposite sides. It is a hostile environment. It is adversarial, and it certainly leads to an escalation of already hostile emotions.

Those are the general comments that I think I wanted to put on the record specific to amendment A1. I am, overall, quite pleased with the improvements that have come forward in this pending document. I think that for the most part the government was pretty good about listening to stakeholder groups. As I mentioned, the one that has been most vocal in expressing their concern that their concerns were not addressed were the grandparents' access groups. As I say, I will continue to work on this, and I hope that the government is focused to continue to work on their end.

There has been a minor amendment made already. Because there are so many other amendments that I want to spend time on today that are more critical to me, at this time I'm going to resume my seat and see if my colleague wants to speak to it. We may well be able to vote on this amendment and move on to some of the ones that are more contentious in my opinion.

Thank you for the opportunity to bring forward a few points of concern with this overall amendment A1.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to at this time extend my thanks to the Member for Edmonton-Centre for her general support of the bill and of the amendments and for her cooperation in the process by which we are doing this and the anticipated subamendments upcoming and the process by which we will, hopefully, adopt the amendments as a whole.

I would like to just complete the overall summary of the bill. I don't think I will take this opportunity to respond to the comments made on amendment A1 at this time.

So, Mr. Chairman, just to carry on with my remarks, I was talking about the subject matter of the bill dealing with the enforcement of time with a child, which is part 2, division 4, all of which has been removed by way of House amendment AA. It has been redrafted to remove the term "access" and replace it with the term "time with a child," which refers to the actual subject of the enforcement, which is the denial of time with a child.

The next subject matter deals with House amendments providing greater clarification in the act. There are many small changes which have been made to clarify intent, to remove certain sections, and to adjust the wording to better match with the Divorce Act. These House amendments are found in A, H, M, W, FF, GG, II, JJ, LL, NN, OO, PP, VV, and BB(d).

The next groupings have to do with consequential amendments which were not included in the bill for the most part. This allowed for consultation with affected government departments, which took place over the summer. Most of the consequential amendments that have been brought in are aimed at bringing other statutes into line with the concepts and terminology of this bill.

We have House amendment EEE, which adds a new means to end an adult interdependent partnership by obtaining a declaration of irreconcilability.

We have House amendments AAA, FFF, and MMM, which as a group amend the Change of Name Act, the Child Welfare Act, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, the Law of Property Act, the Maintenance Enforcement Act, the School Act, the Vital Statistics Act, and the Marriage Act. There is also a change to move the loss of consortium through injury to the Tort-feasors Act.

The next grouping relates to regulations and transitional provisions. Some changes have been made as a result of changes in other areas of the act, and we find these at House amendment CCC, which adds regulation-making power for child support guidelines and exceptions for sperm donors relative to a declaration of fatherhood.

House amendment DDD allows for the interpretation of current custody and access orders and the continuation of current guardian and trustee orders.

And the last group, Mr. Chairman, effects amendments affecting government officers, and these references are found in House amendments D, A, J, L, N, and S(b).

That completes my overall description of our amendment package, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Just for clarification between the two sides, the government side and the opposition side, there was the understanding that you will be voting on each amendment, as you've agreed to, separately and have debate in between; correct?

Ms Graham: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We could, then, vote on amendment A1.

The Deputy Chair: At this time the committee is going to have a vote on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We will now debate and then have a vote on amendment A2. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Amendment A2 is pulling out section 3, which is discussing court jurisdiction. I have an issue with this because the section was to delineate which courts have jurisdiction to deal with matters before them. Sorry; this section originally left it up to the minister to designate which court it was going to be. The amendment that was brought in and that we're looking at, amendment A2, was to delineate which courts have jurisdiction to deal with which matters. The section does define which matters the Court of Queen's Bench has exclusive jurisdiction over. That appears in section 3(1), and many of the matters can be dealt with by either the Provincial Court or Queen's Bench, and that's been the situation for some time; in other words, concurrent jurisdiction. If there were two orders, a Queen's Bench, or QB, order prevailed over a provincial order.

But this bill is now saying that where two courts have jurisdiction, the first court engaged has jurisdiction; that is, if the two courts have jurisdiction, whichever court has had an application applied for first has the jurisdiction, and the other court cannot deal with the matter. So section 3(1) sets up the Queen's Bench; section 3(2) sets up the Provincial Court.

Then there are a number of exceptions to what the Provincial Court can deal with, and it's a very long list. It includes things like declaration of parentage, surrogacy, declaration of irreconcilability, trusteeship orders, consent to trusteeship, termination of trusteeship, referral of questions to court, exclusive possession of the home, exclusive use of household goods, cancellation of registration order, amount held in trust or conditions, property transfer held in trust, payment severed by a charge, injunction against disposal of property, authorizing another person to transfer or convey, authorizing mortgage or security, a default of amounts, and the ability to appoint a receiver. So those things cannot be dealt with by the Provincial Court.

But where it gets interesting is when we get into what's called concurrent proceedings, which is 3.1 and the subclauses that follow, and that is, essentially, upholding that "whoever gets there first." So we have a problem here because different courts can apply different rules. If Queen's Bench can apply the Divorce Act and the Provincial Court can only apply this act that's under consideration here, the Family Law Act, if the two create different rules, and they do, then kids can be treated according to what court the documents were filed in first. So this becomes a first-to-file scenario that can hurt the kids.

For example, child support. Queen's Bench has jurisdiction to apply the Divorce Act; Provincial Court does not. It can apply only the Family Law Act. If documents were first filed in QB, the Divorce Act applies and a child over 18 can get support if circumstances warrant. If the documents were first filed in Provincial Court, no Divorce Act, only this act, so no support could be ordered. Now, there was an amendment – it's under the support section – that did allow for the maintenance support up to 22 only if either married parents or unmarried parents.

I'm noting that the government amendment had dealt with the specific case of maintenance for at-home children in university full-time. But I think there are other examples where support of children can be obtained under one court but not under the other, and it becomes a matter of who filed in which court first, which is unfair to the kids. So we have not only children of common-law relationships treated differently but also children of divorce if an application was brought into Provincial Court first, for example.

This is not fair and according to the Charter would not be allowed. So I think we are setting up, potentially, a Charter challenge, and I will fight that now. I don't think I'm going to get the government to change their mind today, but I think we need to deal with this. So this is setting up an arbitrary first-to-file type of system, and if a payor/noncustodial spouse wins the race to file first in Provincial Court, I think the kids could lose out, and if a payee or custodial spouse wins the race to file first in Queen's Bench, then the kids get a better deal. I think this is capricious and unfair because it's based on a footrace. I think it will be subject to a Charter challenge, and I don't think it will survive that challenge. Unfortunately, Alberta children will have to wait a couple of years to get lawyers to be able to go back and fix this problem.

So amendment A2, which is pulling out that section 3 around court jurisdiction, is not one that I can support because I think that it is not Charter challenge-proof, and I think it is setting up an inequity between children of parents who are applying through the Divorce Act [inaudible] and children of parents who cannot. That does not seem fair to me.

So those are my comments on amendment A2, and I would urge members not to support this amendment. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We'll now proceed with amendment A3. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. This section, which we are calling amendment A3 and which would be referred to in the amendment package as G, is on assisted conception. This used to be called artificial insemination. I don't whether it lost out to the term artificial intelligence, AI, and that's why we're now calling this assisted conception. I don't know. Somebody lobbied somebody somewhere, and now we're going to call it assisted conception. Fine. It's AC instead of AI. Okay. Fine.

My concern here – and I do have a subamendment that I would like to present under this section – is that we're trying to create parents.

The Deputy Chair: Are you moving the subamendment [inaudible]?

Ms Blakeman: You have them there, and when I'm ready, I'll ask you to circulate them, unless you want to do it in advance, but I'm not speaking to the amendment at the moment.

Because we have, for whatever reason, a biological impediment to creating a child here, we are using other means to do so, and in doing so, we now have to legally create parents out of it. So in this situation – and I'd spoken about this in second reading – we're going to have Sally and Dick who want to have a child, but in this case Sally can't get pregnant because Dick is infertile. They go to a clinic. She gets assisted with conception, what we're going to call artificially inseminated, and when that child is born, everyone expects that Sally and Dick are the parents of this child. The problem is that Sally is the mother because she gave birth to the child, and we're going to call that a mother – okay; good – but Dick is not the father. He will have to adopt the child, which is costly and unnecessary. There needs to be an easier way to make these two parents be parents.

So we have a set of amendments that is trying to create a dad, but I would like to present a subamendment here, and I'm mindful of the language that was used by the present member where she talked about greater clarification and better harmonization with the federal legislation. I think that what's important here is that we wanted to Charter-proof, and because this is being so gender specific in the way people are laid out – male and female, father and mother – I think we've gotten ourselves into a problem here.

The Deputy Chair: Just for the record we will refer to this as subamendment SA1. Proceed with your point.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. So I can read subamendment SA1 into the record here. We're looking in this section G of the amendment package in the proposed section 12 at adding the following after subsection (2). It would be 2.1.

A person who was the spouse of or in a relationship of interdependence of some permanence with a female person at the time she was artificially inseminated is the parent of the resulting child if the person consented in advance of the insemination to being a parent of the resulting child.

4:20

So this is getting around that problem where we're sending people off to court after the fact basically for them to adopt a child and go through the court process. I think we want it to be Charter-proof and we want to have this open to many different kinds of families. Specifically, I think we need to be alive to the possibilities of same-sex parents here, so I brought forward this amendment hoping that we could get support for this and be able to do it right the first time and not have to come back with a Charter challenge and fix it later. So there may well be some people who disagree. All right?

So with this point, I would urge all members to vote in favour of subamendment SA1. Thank you.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: On Amendment A3.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Given that I was not successful in convincing my colleagues in the Assembly of the need to try and get into legislation that is Charter-proof, I believe that we are now looking at amendment A3, which will not be Charter-proof because what we've set out here is that a woman who's been artificially inseminated and is giving birth is automatically the mother. There are some very specific sections in section 12 to name the father, and there is a section there to shield those who just wish to be sperm donors, I'm assuming.

I think this is too specific. It has muddied the waters here. It is not harmonizing with federal legislation, it is not harmonizing itself in terms of the Charter, it will be back on our plates, and we're going to have to deal with it in the future. I don't like to see this happening over and over and over again at the expense of the Alberta taxpayer, and I would urge all members to vote against amendment A3.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We'll now proceed to amendment A4.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Amendment A4 is concerned with section 16, which is specific to notification, and in the amending document that you have, you are looking for section J. This is around notice of application, who gets notification of various court order applications, and it's setting out that "unless the court directs otherwise, the following persons must, in accordance with the regulations, be served with notice of an application." That includes the guardians of the child. "In the case of an application for a guardianship order, each proposed guardian, and a director" of child welfare – that's what comes into play – and "in the case of an application for trusteeship order, the Public Trustee; any other person . . ." and "before making an order . . . the court must consider whether it is appropriate for a child . . . to be given notice" under this section.

My reading of this notice section sets out that the child is to receive notices of all guardianship and contact court applications provided that the child is older than 16 years and subject to court direction, and I will note here that the previous version had said 12 years old, that they would receive notification if they were older than 12. So this is an improvement, saying that it's 16.

The concern here is that people in a relationship that is coming apart – a divorce or a common-law relationship or an adult interdependent relationship that is coming apart – do stupid, awful, nasty, vile things to each other. They do, and anybody who's close to divorcing people knows that. I've been shocked by the behaviour of people that I'm close to that have been divorcing, at how nasty and small and mean-minded things get.

Here we are saying, "Well, sure. Let's give 16 year olds an eyeful. Let them read these affidavits that are being filed in the courts by these people." Could this be used as a weapon in trying to seek the loyalty of the child? Absolutely. Is this a great way to get out there and slag your ex-spouse or your ex-partner, and your kid gets to read it? Yup. That's what could happen here.

On the one hand, I believe in disclosure and I believe in common sense, but I'm also aware that in this circumstance people do stupid and awful things. Do we really need to be putting 16 year olds and older in the middle of this forum to be reading nasty, inflammatory statements that have been written by people who in all likelihood loathe, detest, or hate each other? Kids are dragged into the breakup of their parents' relationships enough. Do we really need to be underlining this with a heavy black felt pen and having them read it?

Notice is not required under the Divorce Act. It only is common-law relationships who will be served with these kinds of documents. Once again, we have an unfairness that is worked into the system here, that will now be entrenched in the system, that children of divorcing parents will not be subject to this but children of parents who are using the Family Law Act as a way of ending their relationship will be subject to this. Where's the fairness in that? What's the deal here? I think we need to be adult about this and understand that there are repercussions for young people that are the children in this.

So with amendment A4, the notification section, which appears in section J, where you're amending passages in section 16 in the original bill, I think we could've done better. I'm not willing to support this the way it is because it's such a simple thing for us to address and save, certainly, some kids a great deal of pain. Knowing that, we could've done something here, and I'm not willing to support it going forward in the form that it's in.

So I urge all Members of the Legislative Assembly to vote against amendment A4. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A4 carried]

4:30

The Deputy Chair: We shall now proceed with amendment A5.

Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, the noise level is getting very high for Hansard to pick up the sound. Please do respect the problem that we have.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Amendment A5 is with the act's child support section, which is section EE of your amending document and sections 52 and 53 of your originating bill. Now, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed's opening remarks have caused me a dilemma here because in my reading of this section I was looking specifically for a direct reference to the federal child support guidelines, and in my reading of what we have before us, that reference is not there. What we have in front of us under amendment A5, section 52(1), determining child support: "In making a child support order, the court shall do so in accordance with the prescribed guidelines."

Now, these words are not capitalized. They are not italicized. There's nothing to indicate that they refer to a document that exists somewhere else. It just says "prescribed guidelines." I thought: okay; well, maybe in the definition section at the beginning it will give me that; it will spell that out so that anybody reading this document could understand very clearly that the prescribed guidelines are referring to the federal child support guidelines.

But when you go and look at the definitions that exist in the front of the document under section 1, it's not giving us that, and there's nothing in here that is – there's, you know, definitions for applicant, birth, child, contact order, court, father, grandparent, minister, mother, parent, parenting order, party, person standing in the place of a parent, relationship of interdependence, and respondent. Nothing in here that says that when we say prescribed guidelines, we mean the federal government child support guidelines.

So I have a real concern that this could be misunderstood, and we were seeking clarity here. I don't think this clarifies things; I think it makes them worse because I think we didn't have a reference to this in the past. It was just the reference in there, with which I was very pleased, but I don't think we've accomplished that. Now, I heard the member clearly saying when she talked about this section that she was talking about the federal child support guidelines, but that's not what this says. It does not set it out as referring to a separate document. There's none of the sort of hints, the directional signs that we're used to picking up when we read legislation that indicates that. It's not italicizing it. It's not in quotation marks. It's not even capitalized. It's lowercase in plain type that matches the rest of the sentence. So I think we've got a problem here because we don't know what prescribed guidelines they're referring to.

What we could have here, if it's not clear that we're talking about the federal government's child support guidelines, is that we can have the court ignore any guideline in some circumstances and allowing parties by consent to ignore the support guidelines, and that does occur in this section. It's going on. Saying, well: "Notwithstanding subsection (1)," in making a child support order, "a court may award an amount that is different from the amount that would be determined in accordance with the prescribed guidelines if"—and then it goes through a series of reasons that the court is setting up as a criteria. You know, if they're satisfied that a special petition is in order for the direct transfer of property or to indirectly benefit a child or that somehow the guidelines would result in an amount of child support that's inequitable given special provisions.

So it says that we're going to adhere to these prescribed guidelines, but it doesn't tell us what the prescribed guidelines are. Then it says: but we can ignore that if given these other circumstances that we decide appear here. Once again, we are setting up a difference in the way children of divorced parents are going to be treated and the way the ending of their relationship comes about through the use of this Family Law Act. Once again we are setting up an inequity between the children of Alberta, and I do not think that is right, I don't think it's fair, and I think it will be subject to a Charter challenge.

So once again the government is setting us up for a lot of money to be spent while we get dragged through court by whoever wants to challenge it. First one up gets to try and straighten this mess out. I think it's very wrong to be setting this up where children get treated differently.

That's what my concern with this amendment A5 is. One, it's not clear that the prescribed guidelines that are being referred to here are the federal child support guidelines, and two, we're setting up for a difference on how children are treated whether they are children of parents who are ending their relationship through use of the Divorce Act or children whose parents can only end their relationship through the use of the Family Law Act. I think that's wrong, and we're causing ourselves a huge problem.

So I would urge all members to vote against amendment A5. Thank you.

Ms Graham: If I might, Mr. Chairman. Just very briefly, I do not think, like the Member for Edmonton-Centre, that it is not clear on a reading of section 52 that the federal child support guidelines haven't been incorporated by this. But I can assure the member and all other members that that is certainly the intent, that the provincial guidelines consistent with the federal child support guidelines will be adopted by regulation. There's no doubt that every government department, every lawyer, every judge, anyone who commented on this section urged us to adopt the child support guidelines. So that was the decision of caucus, and this is more in the form than in the content. That's I think the best I can say at this point: it will be done.

I would ask that we vote on amendment A5.

[Motion on amendment A5 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We shall now proceed to amendment A6.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is another amendment that I have a subamendment to. This is referring specifically to the definition section at the beginning of the bill. These definitions are important because throughout the bill, when you're trying to figure out exactly who it applies to and who it affects, you go back and look at those definitions that are set out at the beginning of the bill. So this is critical. I've already demonstrated another example where you get some confusion and you say, "Oh, well, maybe it's defined at the beginning," and you go to the beginning and look for the definition of who's covered and who it affects. My concern here is that — and it's a choice of this government; no question — the definitions are too gender specific. What I am trying to do here is again align us more clearly with the Charter and help us to harmonize, which is the word the Member for Calgary-Lougheed uses, with the federal legislation.

What we're trying to do is set up the ability of same-sex couples to be involved in what is set out or enabled through this legislation, and that's difficult for some people in this Assembly. But the law is saying that we have to treat people equally, and this legislation is entrenching inequality, and we need to get away from that. One, because it's the right thing to do, two, because it will point to the Charter and inevitably get taken to court, and undoubtedly we will lose. [Inaudible] of this as the government has tried to defend that inequity.

So what we're looking at here is in the definition section, where we've got the definition of parent, it's saying the mother or father of the child. We already know that that gets a little difficult because, as I pointed out in the surrogacy and assisted conception section, the fact that we could have a situation where we have only one parent, and the second parent had to go through extraordinary measures to get them appointed guardian. So what I was trying to do here is set it up as the second parent.

The subamendment could be distributed at this time, if you like, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the subamendment is being moved, and for the record we shall refer to this as subamendment SA2.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Subamendment SA2, then, is referring to the definition section at the beginning of the bill, and specifically to section (k), which says, "'Parent' means the father or mother of a child." This would add the following: ". . . for the purposes of sections 11 and 12," the surrogacy and assisted conception sections again, ". . . a person who is in a relationship of interdependence with the mother or father of a child." So that's taken the gender out of this and allowing us to talk about persons. I think that ultimately what we want to talk about is the parents, the first parent or the second parent of the child. This would have aligned us and would have also said a bit more by defining the person by their position according to the child rather than their anatomical genitalia.

So that's my recommendation and the reasons why I'm bringing this forward. I would like to encourage everyone to vote in favour of subamendment SA2. Thanks.

[Motion on subamendment SA2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will proceed with amendment A6. Anybody else want to enter the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. In that case, given that we are now about to pass something that is unconstitutional and that's going to cost Alberta taxpayers a lot of money to fix, I do not support this amendment A6, which entrenches that inequitable definition, and because it is not going to effect change, a disappointment I'm sure. If we are not able to understand what we're causing, it can come back before us sometime in the future when it doesn't pass muster. Plus, there seems to be a lack of concern in the House today to sort out when taxpayers on the hooks are going back to court repeatedly, and I would urge members not to support amendment A6. Save taxpayers some money. Do the right thing and promote an equitable House amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to respond briefly on this subject. I think it's clear that the bill has been drafted in terms of the parents being defined as a mother or father of a child, and if we are going to create a new category of parents, such as the same-sex parent, we would have to review the act in its entirety, and an analysis of a number of changes would have to be undertaken.

Just to put on the record, for same-sex partners that want to be declared as parents, the provisions of the act are aimed at establishing who is the biological parent of the child. They are not trying to create rights to parentage where there is no biological connection. However, an exception is made in the bill where there are circumstances where a disability prevents a person from becoming a biological parent, and the surrogacy sections are aimed at substituting fertility for biological, as well. So, all told, they are designed to assist women who are not able to conceive or carry a child and men who are infertile.

There are ways that same-sex partners can become involved with children. Alberta's adoption legislation was amended several years ago to allow for same-sex couples to adopt, so there is that avenue open. There are also the guardianship provisions of the Family Law Act, Bill 45, which are separate from the parental provisions, that do allow for same-sex partners to apply for authority in relation to the child if they are not biologically connected.

So I make those remarks, Mr. Chairman, and ask you to call for the vote on amendment A6.

4:50

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I appreciate the member joining in, but she has exactly underlined my point in that they are creating different circumstances, a different test and different requirements for certain people for the same situation. When they have a bill which is legally creating mothers and fathers – and that's what we're doing in these sections; we're having to figure out a way to allow people to be legally created as a parent in a situation of assisted conception or surrogacy – we should be applying that equally to all those who are interested in engaging in that and being a parent.

But what's being created here is yet again a barrier, a different test, an inequality by expecting that one group of people who somehow have a different way, with an additional amount of money – they're going to have to get a lawyer. They're going to have to go through a different process in order to adopt, and it does set up inequality. It is unequal. It is discrimination, and it is not acceptable, in my opinion.

So once again I urge members to vote against amendment A6. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A6 carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. We have now completed all the amendments and variations of amendments that the government has put on the floor on this bill. At this point I have an additional amendment that I would ask the table to please distribute.

The Deputy Chair: For the record we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A7.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This is the other half of the equation that I have been referring to. Earlier, when we were discussing government amendment A3, we were looking at the creation of parents around assisted conception, and I was urging with my subamendment that we be equal in those who were inclined to be parents.

We have an interesting process here in that I've had to bring forward a subamendment because the government has an amendment on the floor. In the case of the surrogacy section, which appears as section 11 in the bill, it has not been amended. I will now bring forward my amendment A7, which directly amends the bill. There's no other government amendment that I'm aware of. This is the other half of that. I've already mentioned my view that around assisted conception we're trying to create fathers. With the surrogacy we are having to legally create a mother, and that generally recognizes the person who gives birth as the mother. In this case, a third party is involved in that, who is the gestational mother. So legally it'd be best not to say: okay, but it's this person over here.

To go back to my original example where we were talking about Sally and Dick wanting to have children, Sally for whatever reason could not carry a child to term, so they opted for a surrogate situation. The bill was creating the opportunity for Sally to be legally made a mother.

What I'm trying to do with this amendment A7 that's before us is create the opportunity for the second parent to be involved without naming a gender along with that, allowing same-sex parents to be involved in this. So in section 11 we'd be creating a section (6.1). Section (6) reads: "A genetic donor who is declared to be the sole mother of the child under subsection (5) is deemed to be the mother at and from the time of the birth of the child." This would create a section (6.1) below that.

When the court has made an order under subsection (5) the court, on application by a person who is the spouse of or in a relationship of interdependence with the mother of the child, and with the consent of the mother of the child, shall order that the applicant is a parent of the child.

So it's setting up the second parent. Rather than require that this person go through an additional proceeding – hire a lawyer, go to court, and officially adopt – this would allow it to be set up at the beginning, prior to the birth of the child.

This, I think, is important. Again, it does harmonize us federally with the Charter. It would protect us from a Charter challenge because we are being equitable to all those who request an interest in this. It treats all couples coming forward the same rather than requiring some to go through a different process than others. I think this is the right thing to do for this Assembly, and I urge all members to vote in favour of amendment A7.

Thank you.

Ms Graham: Again, Mr. Chairman, very briefly, I would comment on the impact of this amendment for men who want to be recognized as fathers. I'd like to point out that there already is provision in the legislation to do what this amendment would do.

For same-sex partners who want to be declared as parents, I would just reiterate the comments that I made on the record relative to subamendment A2, and I'd ask the chair to call for the vote.

Bill 54
Appropriation (Supplementary

[Adjourned debate November 27: Mrs. Nelson]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, once again we find ourselves going back to the coffers to fill in holes in the budget, and as always there are some instances where that's well justified, some where there are real questions that have to be asked. This is a very large appropriation bill in my brief experience as an MLA. We're looking at a total here of over $1.2 billion in supplementary supply for operating expenses and another $21 million for capital investment. So it's a very large sum of money, and it bears the same kind of attention as our budget debates in the spring normally get, particularly because a good portion of this money, nearly half or about half, [inaudible] and then there were problems that were not anticipated at all since the last budget, since the outbreak of bovine spongiform encephalopathy. To respond to that and the so-called mad cow crisis, we are asked to be on the hook through this bill for $564,285,000 directly through Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and another $135 million through the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program. That is a staggering amount of money to have to respond to a problem created by one cow. It's a tragedy. It's a three-quarters of a billion dollar cow and water under the bridge, I guess.

In hindsight, Mr. Speaker, the lesson that we all learned from that certainly concerned the testing that was delayed for three or four months, although in the end that was only one part of a much bigger problem. It certainly raises concern over general food safety and over, frankly, the assumption we took that a brand that's as valuable as Alberta beef was solid. In fact, in hindsight I guess we could have somehow taken other steps to protect that brand nationally and, more importantly, internationally and maybe avoided a three-quarter of a billion dollar and growing expenditure.

So that one issue has a dramatic impact on this bill and on the Alberta taxpayer, and to put it into perspective, the amount of money we've put into that problem in the last six months would probably build two southeast Calgary hospitals, and just the astonishing needs in education and so many other areas. Instead, we're being asked, and understandably so, to put that money into responding to a crisis. I'm sure it's very frustrating for all of us to have to open up the public bank account to that extent for that kind of use.

The other sorts of expenditures that we see here come from a range of issues, the kinds of issues that we see every year in appropriations: a certain amount to respond to forest fires – I'm trying to find a figure here, but in any case it's a substantial amount – and then a handful of amounts for other programs. I shouldn't probably use the term "handful" because they add up still costing millions of dollars.

So this just raises for me most fundamentally a question about how we budget. I'm sure I'm on the record many times expressing frustration over the fact that there seems to be a disconnect between the budget cycle of this Legislature and the budget cycle of some of the largest spenders that the Legislature supports. Most specifically, I comment frequently on how the regional health authorities budget cycle and the budget cycle of this Legislature exactly overlap. The problem has arisen where by the time the RHAs have negotiated their budgets with the Department of Health and Wellness, they're halfway through their fiscal year, so that gives obvious problems on budget controls. I'm afraid that sort of problem is repeated in some of the other public agencies that are supported through the budget.

We're looking here at a cost overrun of about 5 percent or so of the total planned expenditures. This is more than just a contingency. I understand from flipping through Hansard that the discussion of this is really not recording contingency expenditures, but the fact is that the contingencies have already been built into the budget we approved last spring, so this is in excess of contingencies, and again it raises real questions for me about how we control our finances.

So, Mr. Speaker, it would be interesting to see if we have any more supplementary bills. I do note that there are no requirements from the Department of Health and Wellness, and I congratulate the minister on that level of management. I hope he's able to see it through to the end of the year, although I think it's going to be a challenge given the position of the RHAs in the last few days. There's always been a real challenge in balancing the demands of the regional health authorities or support at the hospital boards, the ability of the government to meet its budget, delivering its budget. So it'll be interesting to see how that plays out.

I'd also note that I think in here we are seeing under Infrastructure an amount that includes an allocation for energy rebates. On page 64 of these supplementary estimates the details are here that there's $180 million set aside for potential energy rebates. I guess we could ask ourselves: if it's only a potential expenditure, why don't we hold off until we actually see if it's necessary, or is this some kind of signal that, in fact, the government is planning to hand out energy rebates this winter? The Treasurer is nodding her head. We are committed to these energy rebates?

Mrs. Nelson: Yeah.

5:10

Dr. Taft: All right. Well, it'll be interesting, then, to see. The phrasing in the supplementary estimates this afternoon is "potential energy rebates." Maybe it should say actual energy rebates, and we'll see all those cheques come in.

Anyway, those are my comments for now, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to debate a handful of issues. It's over a billion dollars, so I expect government MLAs will be standing and helping to account for how they've managed to overrun the budget by such a large amount in six months.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance to close debate?

Mrs. Nelson: No. Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 54 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until next Monday afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 5:12 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Our Father, keep us mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work give us strength and wisdom. Amen.

Now would you please remain standing, hon. members, and join in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau, and would all participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!

head: Statement by the Speaker

Chamber Sound System

The Speaker: Before we commence, hon. members will know and were made aware of the difficulties we experienced on Thursday last with the sound system which resulted in no sound being available to our television broadcast on Access TV and the difficulty that we had with our Internet video and audio services and over the loudspeaker system throughout the Legislature Building and the Annex.

In light of the uncertainty as to the ability to repair the sound system before the start of the House business today, we've had officials from Alberta Infrastructure work diligently over the weekend with staff from the Alberta Legislative Assembly to implement a backup sound system for the balance of this sitting. Members will note that there are microphones on each desk and speakers at the corner of the Chamber. I would like to advise hon. members that there's no need to press the white button even though it's a natural response for everybody to want to press the white button. There's no need. We have a system that has been repaired. This is a backup system. If required, it would require about a five-minute recess, and that would only be declared if necessary, should the original system break down again.

I want to thank all the Hansard staff, who had the onerous task of producing the Hansard, and I also want to thank the officials from the Department of Alberta Infrastructure who spent the weekend assisting to work out this particular process.

So, once again, the microphone system on your desk is a backup system. The original system is in place. Hopefully it'll function. There's no need to press the white button. Thank you very much for your indulgence.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Hans-Michael Schwandt, consul general of the Republic of Germany who resides in Vancouver. He is accompanied today by his wife, Dr. Heidi Schwandt-Boden, Mr. Fritz Koenig, honorary consul of the Republic of Germany in Edmonton, and Mrs. Barbara Koenig.

Mr. Speaker, almost $750 million in bilateral trade flows back and forth between Alberta and Germany each year. In recognition of the level of trade, tourism, and investment between Alberta and Germany an Alberta office was opened in Munich two years ago, and Alberta and the German state of Saxony have forged a special relationship through a co-operation agreement. The government of Alberta appreciates the diligent work of the consular representatives and their contribution to ensuring Alberta continued success in the global marketplace.

I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Fort McMurray is considered the oil sands capital of the world or, as the Minister of Finance says, the jewel of the north. It's my pleasure today to introduce two proud Albertans. One of them happens to be the chairman of the Canadian Council of Chief Executives from all over Canada. Of course, his company, again, is part of the billions of dollars that are taking place in the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. I'd like to ask the CEO of Suncor, Rick George, and his vice-president, Pat O'Reilly, to stand. They're here today visiting the Legislature, and I'm proud to say that they truly are a living example of the Alberta advantage.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we speak of the City of Champions, of course everybody immediately thinks of Edmonton and immediately thinks sports. I'm pleased and proud to tell you today that we also have champions in the arts. One of those champions is with us today. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a friend and a longtime good friend and associate of my wife, Janet. Mr. Glen Huser is an author having three published novels, including the book Stitches, for which on November 10 he received the Governor General's award for children's literature. My colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark will bring a recognition later on in our agenda, but I'd like to ask award-winning author and Edmonton champion Glen Huser to rise in the members' gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. Mr. Huser is accompanied by his mother, Mrs. Bea Huser.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, Edmonton-Castle Downs has taken over the galleries today, so I will ask for your grace in allowing me a little bit more time. I have 60 visitors from Lorelei elementary school who are being accompanied by Mr. Mark George and Brad Gibson, teachers of the grade 6 classes over there. I had the pleasure of visiting those classes, and their knowledge on municipal, provincial, and federal politics was just astonishing, and that's coming from another teacher. So I would ask them to rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly today.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I have today in the building but perhaps not in the gallery at this point Lorelei playschool, a fabulous group of 36 visitors, 24 students and 12 adults, who have contributed to our Christmas decorations in this Legislature and have decorated Christmas trees in the pedway. I would like to thank them for their attendance and ask them to accept the gracious warm welcome of this Assembly today.

Last but definitely not least, I have a very valuable constituent with us today, a gentleman who is literally a jack-of-all-trades, volunteering his time to many not-for-profit groups in Edmonton-Castle Downs, who definitely is one of my biggest assets with the Castle Downs PC Association, and who was a tremendous asset in my being able to appear over here before you, Mr. Speaker. His name is Mr. Colin Brown, a fine gentleman indeed. I would like to ask him to rise and accept your warm welcome as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is, indeed, a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 33 bright and active students from Coronation school. Accompanying them today is their teacher, Arlyn Belden, and parent helpers Mark Sulz, Dee Bochar, Karen Bielech, Cara Lee Stevenson. In addition, accompanying the class is an employee of visitor services, tour guide Mrs. Diane Thomas, who is a tireless volunteer in the community of Glenora. When a job is asked to be done in our community, everybody turns to Mrs. Thomas. So I would ask the group to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very wonderful and important family from Red Deer-North. I know that most of you will recognize the president of the provincial PC Party, Mr. Chris Warren, who has worked exceptionally hard this year to keep the party in tune and on track with Albertans. And we know that behind every successful man there's an even greater woman. Chris is here today with his lovely wife, Sandy, to whom I would like to say: thank you very much for all the support and encouragement that you give to Chris, because that makes us better too. With Chris and Sandy today are their two children, Mitchell and Natalie. Mitchell is 11 years old, in grade 6 at Central middle school, and Natalie is seven years old, in grade 2 at Grandview elementary. They are here today on a family trip to observe how government operates, because Mitchell is in grade 6 and studying government. We wish you a very enjoyable visit, and we hope that Mitchell will be able to take a great report back to his classroom. They're in the members' gallery, and I would ask you all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 25 students who are situated in the members' gallery. They are participants in School at the Legislature. They are here today. They attend Keenooshayo school in St. Albert. They are seated with their teacher, Mrs. Barb Hubbard, and they are accompanied by the parent of one of the students, Mr. Darwin Switner. I would ask them all to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms. Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my honour to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a man who is very well known and well respected in northern Alberta. We are joined today by Chief Archie Waquan from the Mikisew Cree First Nation from Fort Chipewyan. He's here in opposition to Bill 49 and to share his concerns. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Roberta Allen and Kevyn Cormack. They are here today to witness me table a letter on their behalf later in the proceedings. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a gentleman who is visiting today from Grande Prairie, Mr. Art Macklin. Mr. Macklin operates a grain and beef farm with his wife and son at DeBolt in the Peace River area. This farm was created from a bush homestead in 1964. Mr. Macklin is a former president of the National Farmers' Union and was elected three times to four-year terms representing farmers on the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee. He was re-elected last year to a second four-year term on the Canadian Wheat Board's board of directors on a strong single-desk platform, representing approximately 8,000 Alberta wheat and barley farmers in district 1 of the Canadian Wheat Board. I would ask Mr. Macklin to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bad public policies on health care, on education, on soaring auto insurance costs, and on energy deregulation cannot be fixed with a trip to England. My first question is to the Premier. Given that the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties passed a resolution on November 20, part of which reads that Alberta's farmers, businesses, industry, residents and not-for-profit groups have faced hardships through higher annual energy costs, inconsistent provincial rebate programs, unfair and inefficient billing procedures and uncertainty in market supplies and contracts, why is this government continuing to ignore this group of rural leaders who request that the government of Alberta abandon and reverse this process of energy deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as is so typical of the Liberal opposition, they want to focus on what is wrong or what they perceive to be wrong or, as I say, the five Cs that make for good news stories, the five Cs of conflict, controversy, chaos, confusion, and confrontation. I choose to focus on what is good and what is right about this province. Certainly, all the issues that the hon. member mentioned are issues. They are the day-to-day challenges that this government is required to meet, and we do the best we can in meeting them in terms of serving the needs of all Albertans or as many Albertans as we possibly can.

As I tell my own caucus and as I tell the public and I'll tell this Legislature today, we need to look at the bigger picture. People from all across Canada are choosing Alberta as their new home, and they're doing it in record numbers. Mr. Speaker, that's because they are not listening to the complaints of the opposition. They're coming here because Alberta has the lowest unemployment rate in the country. They're coming here because Alberta has the lowest tax regime in the country with no sales tax. They're coming here because Alberta has the highest average personal disposable income in the country. They're coming here because we have the highest GDP in the country. They're coming here because we have the highest spending per capita on education and health care in the country.

Mr. MacDonald: You are not listening to farmers.

Given that Enmax has listed in its last annual report long-term debt of $183 million owed to the taxpayers, to the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation, how can this government continue to say that there is no public debt as a result of electricity deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, relative to the specifics as it relates to financing of electricity, I'll have the hon. minister reply.

Relative to the assertion in the hon. member's prelude, that we don't pay attention to farmers is absolutely false and nonsense. I would remind the hon. member that the majority, I would say, of Members of the Legislative Assembly on the government side are from rural areas. I would remind the hon. member also that none of their members are from the rural areas, and this is because we pay attention to farm concerns and agricultural concerns.

I have to say at this point and publicly acknowledge the fine work done by our Deputy Premier and Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, especially on the BSE issue. It has been a tremendous challenge for her. Believe me; farmers did not look to the opposition for solutions to this serious problem. They looked to the government, and we responded.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that the hon. Premier announced that during his trip to London he would be meeting with Centrica, the parent company of Direct Energy, whose application to buy an Alberta energy company is currently before the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, does the Premier's meeting with Centrica in London interfere with the regulatory approval process here in Alberta?

Mr. Klein: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker; I didn't meet with Centrica in London. I ran into a representative of the company and exchanged a few words with him, none of which were related to business other than to have that individual indicate to me that they're hopeful of having their issue vis-à-vis Direct Energy resolved before the Energy and Utilities Board very shortly. That was the beginning, the middle, and the end of the conversation.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

1:50

Natural Gas Rebates

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday Alberta

Energy confirmed that there will be no consumer gas rebates in December because prices will not rise above the $5.50 per gigajoule trigger level. My first question is to the Premier. Why, then, are there natural gas rebates for certain agricultural users who certainly, we all know, need this help, and there are none for seniors, there are none for institutions, there are none for nonprofit organizations, and no rebates for other hardworking Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, relative to the issue as it pertains to agricultural users, I'll have the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development respond.

Relative to consumers generally, residential consumers, I believe he was talking about natural gas. If that is the case, the trigger price has not been reached, as far as I know, at least not this month.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, this way of dealing with certain agricultural producers is the same as it was in the last rebate program. It recognizes – and I hope the hon. member would understand this – that irrigators do not irrigate in the winter months, that dehydrators, grain dryers, and greenhouses tend to not have heavy usage in those months. They are treated exactly the same as all consumers, only they have a different five-month period, and it only triggers if it exceeds $5.50 a gigajoule.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Premier: this government is again picking winners and losers.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. You bet.

The losers in this case are the seniors. How can you tell seniors living on a fixed income in this province who had to endure high gas prices last April that they are not eligible for the $3.25 per gigajoule amount that is going to other select consumers in this province? How do you say no to seniors?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, once the trigger price is reached – and I believe it's $5.50 a gigajoule – during the winter months seniors along with every other citizen will be eligible for rebates. The hon. minister explained full well why irrigators and dehydrators are being treated differently in that their high consumption rates are during the summer rather than the winter.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the advice to most Alberta consumers last winter was to put on a sweater and we know that that is no longer good enough, when will this government allow all consumers the option of choosing the five months in 2003 that they receive their natural gas rebates as well as other select consumers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, what the hon. member says doesn't make any sense whatsoever. You know, I can just imagine consumers in this province saying: I want to take the summer months. Well, of course, they won't get a rebate because very little gas is used during the summer months. So it just stands to reason that people want to take advantage of the rebate, and the government, being responsible and understanding when usage is the highest, has designated the winter months. That makes sense. It's beyond me why he would even consider such a thing.

Private/Public Partnerships for Hospital Construction

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberal opposition has asked the following questions on behalf of Albertans and received no response from this government's ministers. Since the buck stops with the Premier, I'd like him to answer the questions his ministers can't or won't. To the Premier: what evidence can the Premier or his government produce to refute the credible and overwhelming evidence showing that P3 hospitals will cost Alberta taxpayers more and lead to a deterioration in health services?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there is irrefutable evidence that shows that. Certainly, there have been some failures relative to P3s; there have been some successes relative to P3s. That's why we have put in place an adjudication committee to do thorough due diligence before a recommendation is made to the minister.

I can share with the opposition in this Legislature that while I was in London, I had the opportunity of traveling to Swindon, which is west of London, to see a P3 hospital.

Mr. MacDonald: Stonehenge.

Mr. Klein: Not quite Stonehenge. Unlike the hospital, Stonehenge, as I understand it, is off limits. The hospital is very much on limits.

Now, this is a 500-bed hospital that was constructed by the private sector. The private sector provides all the ancillary services; i.e. the maintenance and, I believe, laundry and food services and so on. The hospital staff confine themselves to medical treatment, Mr. Speaker. The cost is about even, but the fact is that they were able to get a badly needed hospital onstream immediately. In this case they had to shut down four hospitals, one of which was built in the '50s. The other three go right back to the Victorian era. So they needed the hospital very badly. They were able to get it onstream. The cost, amortization versus lease, is about the same, but at the end of the day, at the end of the lease period the hospital then reverts entirely to, I believe, the district health authority.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Well, this is very interesting.

When the Premier met with the officials at the Great Western hospital in Swindon, did they tell him that the cost of this P3 hospital soared from £45 million to £90 million and ultimately to £148 million? Did they tell him that?

Mr. Klein: No, nor were they that concerned, because the one thing that they did point out, Mr. Speaker . . . [interjection] Now, I don't know where the hon. member is getting his information, but maybe he should travel to Swindon and find out for himself. The hospital officials I met with said that the price that was quoted was the price that they paid. So if the builders went out of scope, if the project went out of scope and it cost more, then that fell on the shoulders of the contractors, not on the hospital.

Dr. Taft: When the Premier met with the U.K. officials about the Great Western hospital in Swindon, a P3 hospital, was he informed of the bed shortages and increases in staff and patient complaints?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, they replaced exactly the number of beds that they closed down, but Swindon is a growing community, so they are now adding to the facility. I believe they're adding about 120 beds to the facility. The project is now under construction. Again, it's a P3 project. There was a quoted price, and that is the price that the health district is required to pay: no more, no less.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Long-term Care Accommodation Rates

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past summer the government chose to gouge long-term care residents with close to 50 percent hikes in fees, causing hardship among Alberta seniors and their families. The government defended itself by claiming in a news release that the increase was needed to improve the quality of care. Since then, Extencicare, an operator of 13 long-term care homes in Alberta, has posted a 75 percent increase in profits and credits much of its improved profit picture to long-term care fee hikes in Ontario and Alberta. My questions are to the Premier. If jacking up fees by 40 to 48 percent was supposed to improve the quality of care, why are the increased fees improving the profits of companies like Extencicare?

The Speaker: I'm not sure that that's a question that can be answered under administrative competence. We're dealing here with the profit margin of private-sector companies. I have no idea how a government can respond to that.

Dr. Pannu: My next question, Mr. Speaker: given that seniors' groups like FAIRE are asking for the Auditor General to do an audit, will the Premier show some leadership and ask the Auditor General on behalf of the government of Alberta to do an audit of how the increased fees are being used, and if not, why not?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I think the Auditor General – I stand to be corrected – is an officer of the Legislature, and I have no authority to direct the Auditor General to do anything. If this Legislature wants to direct the Auditor General to investigate a certain aspect of government or an outside agency, I guess that's the prerogative of the Legislature.

I would have no problems – I'll say that publicly – with the Auditor General investigating anything, because I'm quite convinced, relative to long-term care fees, that they are, indeed, in line with the actual cost of providing the service, considering that we're still subsidizing, I think, long-term care, basic care to the tune of about – what? – $70, $80 a day.

I'll have the hon. minister respond, and perhaps he can provide the absolutely correct information.

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be made quite clear first of all that of the 14,000 people that are in long-term care, some 10,000 of those are receiving support from Alberta Seniors to the point where very few, if any, had a negative impact. We've also implemented along with this new rate schedule the possibility for these people to appeal directly to the ministry after they've talked to their operators.

With respect to the rate specifically, the semiprivate rate of $42 a day works out to about $1,300 a month, which is very reasonable and barely covers the operational costs.

On some of the things that are alluded to by the hon. member across about what should or shouldn't have been done with the money, I don't know where he's getting his information from. I do know, however, quite clearly that in the Edmonton area, Mr. Speaker, there were some 500 beds that were facing closure if rate increases weren't implemented fairly quickly, and these were not by private operators.

It's also very important to point out that a significant number of the operators in this province are the public health people, so a good portion of this money for the increased rates goes right back into the health authorities' coffers.

So I feel that the rates are very fair. We've done everything possible to help people who are short on finances, and we've left the door open to look at special cases of any nature.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the Premier: given that seniors and their families are complaining about a continuing and further decline in service quality since the rate increase, how can the Premier justify a rate increase as a means to improve care when the opposite seems to have occurred?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have received – well, I don't know, but I don't see it as noticeable or certainly prominent in my mail – complaints about the level of care being received by seniors in assisted living or long-term care centres. There might be the odd occasion when that happens, and those situations are investigated on the complaint basis.

Dr. Pannu: How many?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as an aside, the opposition leader said: how many? As I say, I just don't see it as a great item relative to the cards and letters and mail and phone calls that we get. I would just say, you know, a handful over the course of maybe a month or two months or three months, but they are individual complaints.

Mr. Speaker, the increase in fees was put in place to reflect the realities of the situation and to bring us up to where we should have been some years ago relative to offsetting the costs of providing a tremendous service.

Drug Addiction Research

Mr. Lord: Because of its psychedelic side effects the drug Ibogaine was declared illegal in the U.S. back in 1970, and this classification has prevented it from getting any serious scientific studies since then, despite its underground reputation for being able to cure any drug addiction with as little as one single dose. Recently it has attracted the attention of a handful of top researchers who are reporting considerable success, and since it is not illegal elsewhere in the world, a controversial new clinic has just opened in Vancouver. The proponents of that clinic have offered to come to Alberta to treat a few drug addicts here for free. My questions are to the minister of health. Are there opportunities for us in Alberta to promote serious and credentialed research and development programs to look for potential medical cures for drug addiction?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, the best advice that I have most recently is that the drug Ibogaine has not been approved by Health Canada for use in this country unless it's been approved specifically for investigational or research purposes. Researchers who do want to work with a drug that is not approved for use in Canada have to apply to Health Canada for permission to conduct clinical trials. The clinical trials that will be approved by Health Canada must meet scientific requirements of Health Canada, and the methods of study are included in a review by an ethics review board to ensure protection of the research participants.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there are researchers who wish to investigate this particular drug and its use in breaking drug habits of individuals, there are sources of funding in this province available to such researchers to investigate potential medical therapies. For example, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research on behalf of the Department of Health and Wellness administers a health research fund. That health research fund provides opportunities for relevant, high-quality health research across the entire spectrum of research areas, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you. Is there any work that your department is currently doing in regard to drug addiction research specifically as it pertains to such drugs as Ibogaine or 18-methoxyoronaridine?

Mr. Mar: Not to the best of my understanding, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lord: Does your department track or otherwise quantify what costs we are incurring in our health care system which might be avoided if we could reduce or eliminate substance abuse and drug addiction?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the cost to the health care system would be difficult to estimate because the potential maladies associated with addictions are innumerable. I did, however, take the opportunity to review a report that was published on this subject by the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse. It estimated that the cost to Canadian society for abuse as at 1992 was estimated at some 18 billion dollars a year.

Of course, here in the province of Alberta AADAC, the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, offers a variety of prevention and cessation programs aimed at reducing addictions in Alberta, including methadone programs to help break addictions to opiates, and provides counseling. In Alberta we provide close to some 60 million dollars annually for AADAC's addiction prevention and support programs.

Access to Crown Land

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, this spring the Premier announced that his government would contribute $6 million to finding a solution to the conflict between First Nations and oil field contractors in the Slave Lake area, yet last week government ministers couldn't tell us what they did with the money and who they consulted. Now the chiefs of Treaty 8 are telling the Alberta Liberal opposition that they have not been consulted on this issue. To the Premier: why did the government fail to consult with the chiefs of Treaty 8 before Bill 49 hit the Legislature?

2:10

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that Chief Waquan is in the gallery today, because we would like to express to Chief Waquan our apologies. It was a case of the legislation getting out ahead of the consultation process. The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is looking into the matter, and we'll be discussing this with the chiefs of Treaty 8 to sort it all out.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, how does the Premier respond now to the chiefs who are telling him that Bill 49 has to be withdrawn?

Mr. Klein: It's not a matter of withdrawing the bill, Mr. Speaker. It's a matter of perhaps delaying the bill until this consultation takes place.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier be willing to put an exclusion clause into this legislation for those First Nations who will be negotiating with oil field contractors?

Mr. Klein: I'm not about to get into that right now. It hasn't been discussed. But I'll have the hon. minister respond as to the action she plans to take from here on in relative to this situation.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated last week, there are two processes we're talking about here. The first process has to do with the issue that she's talking about. As a matter of fact, I want to talk about the fact of the irresponsible action by the member in terms of inciting civil disobedience. I really feel strongly that we have to be able to look at the whole issue of what this is all about.

Number one, we have to be able to deal, especially when we're talking about trying to attempt an amicable solution to everything that's been occurring. There have been some concerns expressed by a number of people. There have been some concerns expressed by First Nations. What we have done is we hired a consultant who went out and talked to the various groups to see what needed to be done. These recommendations will be brought to the current specific areas that we need to deal with. Those ones are, number one, that we have to be able to ensure that we work with the First Nations, and that's very important. That's what we're attempting to do.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, we're trying to make sure that we deal with the issue of the oil field contractors. I know my colleague from Sustainable Resource Development would like to talk on behalf of Bill 49.

However, on the consultation issue we've been working with the First Nations. I've met with the Treaty 8 First Nations. I've met with the all-chiefs summit. I've met with a number of First Nations who are willing to meet with us. My team has been sent to work with the various First Nations so that we can continue on the consultation process, but we have to be able to ensure that we also deal with other issues as they come up, because it was their leader who said that we have to deal with all these areas, and that's exactly what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Funding inequities between Calgary and Edmonton can cause major concern for residents in both cities. Recently a University of Calgary document provided financial data on inequities in funding between the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta of $1,052 per student higher in Edmonton. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Is this the case?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a question that has been asked and has been publicized for probably the past six or seven years. The hon. Member for Medicine Hat looked at this exact question in the year 2000, and I will report back what he said. I will also report back as to what the differences are as of today.

I will say that in their last funding year that we have the information for, which was '01-02, there was actually a $1,500 difference between the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta on an FTE basis. Mr. Speaker, the reason for that is programs such as agriculture and forestry. An agricultural and forestry program accounts for 100 percent more than an undergraduate arts program.

At the University of Alberta there's 2.4 percent of their enrollment taken up in agriculture. In medicine and dentistry, for example, there's a difference of 2.3 percent. This program in itself is five times the cost of an arts program, and so on.

The actual difference ends up being 20.2 percent, which is, in essence, the difference in funding between the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta. There are also differences in masters' programs and PhD programs.

So, Mr. Speaker, in order to let the hon. member know, we look at this constantly, and the actual numbers are very similar when you take into account the program mix. This is something that the hon. Member for Medicine Hat found out in his review in the year 2000 as well as our figures here today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the Minister of Learning. Would a third-party study of funding differences prove these inequities?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have looked at this recently. In the year 2000 we undertook a full review of the postsecondary funding system. This was done by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat – these are the reports that came in – and he actually made quite substantial changes, which were instituted. Right now we are looking at the Learning Commission, where one of the recommendations is that we undertake a review of the total postsecondary system. That is still under review and is yet to come back.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Postsecondary Education Tuition Fees

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 13 years tuition at the University of Calgary has gone up about 375 percent. If this trend continues, children in kindergarten today will be paying roughly $16,400 a year in tuition. My question is to the Premier. Is the government satisfied that Calgary's parents should be looking at saving at least $65,000 to cover the future tuition costs of their children's degree programs? Sixty-five thousand dollars, Mr. Premier, if the trend continues.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's hypothetical, to say the least, and highly speculative. As you know, we're going through the recommendations now of the Learning Commission. The hon. minister will be addressing the whole issue of postsecondary education. None of us can foresee what the circumstances will be 16 or 17 years down the road. We try to predict as best we can, but perhaps the hon. minister can shed some more light on it.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The numbers that the hon. member had put forward are true when you go back. But the issue is that when you go ahead – the numbers at the University of Calgary, for example, are that their tuition increase is limited this year to $276. Following this, it is limited to $276 plus the cost of living, so do the math. There's no way that the numbers can be that high.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that the latest government policy changes effectively remove any restraint on tuition, how high will tuition rates have to go before the government takes some action?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, that statement is not accurate. That statement is not accurate at all. Bill 43, as I understand it, and we're talking about law as opposed to policy, includes a new tuition fee policy that replaces the current 30 percent tuition cap with other controls – with other controls – to ensure that tuition increases continue to be predictable and manageable.

Dr. Massey: Again to the Premier: given the importance that Albertans place on postsecondary education and the financial resources of our province, why isn't tuition here the lowest in the country?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where we stack up in terms of other universities in other jurisdictions across the country. Perhaps the hon. minister can respond.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The University of Lethbridge is roughly number 40 out of 50 universities when it comes to tuition. The University of Alberta and the University of Calgary are numbers 24 and 25 respectively out of roughly 50 or 53 institutions around the country.

There needs to be something corrected here, and that is that the tuition policy does in fact place limits on the amount of dollars that the tuition can be increased by. At the University of Calgary, which is the example that the hon. member has used, the amount is $276 per year this year. Following this year, it is $276 plus the CPI. So I really have an issue and a problem when the hon. member is out there fear mongering, saying things that are entirely not true.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Police Services

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget deliberations are going on in Edmonton and Calgary and other municipalities across the province, and police services have raised a concern about their financial ability to recruit and train officers so that they can put their resources onto the street and fight crime. To the Solicitor General: would the minister consider helping Alberta police services save money on recruiting and training costs by centralizing police training as recommended by her own policing review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has brought to the floor a good question, and it's something that we're considering. We support the idea of centralized recruiting, think it's a good idea, and would be willing to move forward on that.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, my second and last supplementary: would the minister also consider helping police services save money through economies of scale and allowing them to bulk purchase equipment, weapons, and other supplies so that they can save more money and put more officers on the streets?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Another good question. It wasn't one of the recommendations that came forward in the policing review that was done some time ago; however, it's something that we are currently looking at and considering doing in First Nations. If there's somewhere we can help the police in this province with some cost savings for them, we'd be more than willing to look at it.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Infrastructure refuses to seriously address questions on P3 projects in Alberta, my questions today are to the Premier. When will this government provide evidence that a P3 courthouse in Calgary will not cost Alberta taxpayers more and lead to a deterioration of judicial independence in Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the question was answered generally, but I'll repeat my answer. First of all, before any P3 project is considered, it has to go through an adjudication process. These people are all people outside of government. They're experts in finance, developing, law and are much more qualified than any member of the opposition to make an appropriate evaluation as to whether a project should go ahead or not and whether there can be a savings to the taxpayer. Once that adjudication is made, a recommendation is then made to the minister. The minister follows a very lengthy and detailed process before a project is finally accepted.

I believe it's about four or five stages that the developers have to go through at their own expense. As a matter of fact, one of the complaints from the proponents is that on a project the size of the Calgary courthouse the proponents have had to spend literally millions of dollars to prepare their cases. That is their own expense and is not included in the cost of the project.

So after all is said and done, there has to be a proper adjudication and proper evidence presented to the minister that indeed this makes sense from the point of view of bringing needed capital works projects onstream as quickly as we possibly can and that at the end of the day there is a savings or, at worst, the taxpayer is on the hook for no more.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that again we have not got any provision for evidence to be provided, when will this government produce evidence to prove that P3 hospitals won't lead to a deterioration in health services? That question is to the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the services in the hospitals have nothing to do with the construction of the hospitals. In the case of Swindon and, I believe, the case here as well, basic requirements are put forward relative to what is needed in the hospital. In other words, an MRI room, a diagnostic room, operating theatres, emergency: all of the components associated with a hospital are determined by the medical people. The contractor is simply there to build the building and to assume the risks relative to the costs of the building. In the case of Swindon, the contractor builds at a set price, and the hospital leases it back, but the hospital itself – the medical staff, the board, the policymakers, and the medical people – is entirely responsible for the way medical services are delivered in the hospital. That has nothing to do with the contract whatsoever.

Mr. Bonner: To the Premier: will the Premier, then, table these reports so that Albertans can see that they will not be paying more under a P3 model?

Mr. Klein: I'm sorry. There's only one active proposal right now that I know of. Maybe two. I think that Transportation has a P3 project for the east extension of the Anthony Henday. Of course, the Calgary courthouse proposal is the major one and the only active one, and I don't know the extent to which the information is available. But, certainly, as much of the information as we possibly can without violating proprietary rights will be made available. Perhaps the hon. minister can respond.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the member last week, once this whole process has been completed and the final contract is signed so that we can reveal all of this information, we will reveal it. It will all be out in the open. I can hardly wait, if the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is still in this Assembly, for him to jump up and fulfill the promise that he made to us last week, when he said that he would jump up and praise it once we have the contract signed, because we will show that, in fact, it is good for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Grain Marketing

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the government's relentless attempts to undermine the Canadian Wheat Board, a bill was passed last fall that would set up a test market to let grain producers bypass the Wheat Board. We also had the spectacle last fall of the Premier grandstanding on the steps of the Lethbridge courthouse in support of a few farmers who chose to deliberately break custom laws. This government consistently ignores the interests of the majority of wheat and barley farmers of Alberta. My question is to the Premier. Why does the Premier support a tiny minority of grain producers who engage in civil disobedience and law-breaking while failing to support grain producers, who last fall elected pro Wheat Board directors in all three Alberta districts where those elections were held?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm so glad that a representative of the Wheat Board is here, first of all, to listen to the absolutely ridiculous diatribe coming from the mouth of the opposition NDP member; secondly, to put on the record that we do not oppose the Wheat Board and never have. But what we do support is the fundamental democratic principle of choice.

Now, I know that the NDs just hate the thought of democracy. They like the thought of control. Our farmers in this province, not a handful of farmers, have voted 64 percent for choice to market their wheat, and I believe it's higher than that, 68 percent, for barley. Choice, Mr. Speaker.

If the Wheat Board is deemed to be the right vehicle through which these farmers should sell their wheat and barley, then so be it. Go ahead. The Wheat Board does a great job on the international stage selling wheat and barley, but if a barley or wheat farmer has next door to him a pasta manufacturer or a bread manufacturer or a cookie manufacturer and says, "Lookit; I just want to grow my wheat in accordance with the quality standards you set and sell it to you, just take it off and sell it to you; you grind it up and you make your cookies rather than going through the Wheat Board," that is choice. That's what the opposition opposes. They oppose choice. They oppose democracy.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that I consulted on my question with the director from the Wheat Board that's with us today, will the Premier apologize to him and to Alberta wheat farmers for his denigrating remarks?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the only person who has made denigrating remarks is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, who implied that he opposes democracy. I'll point out one more area in which he opposes democracy. He says that it's all right for Ontario farmers to market freely and have choice relative to their wheat and barley or in Quebec or in the Maritime provinces or in British Columbia but not in Alberta, not in Manitoba, not in Saskatchewan, not in a small corner of British Columbia, and not in a small corner of Ontario; the rest of the country can do as they wish.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that wheat and barley farmers in Alberta, when given a choice, consistently elect pro Wheat Board single-desk directors, will the Premier stop grandstanding on the courthouse steps of Lethbridge in favour of people who have broken the law and actually stand up for wheat farmers in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, these are all small points. It wasn't on the courthouse steps. It was in Lethbridge. That part he has right. There were about a thousand farmers there along with our minister of agriculture. I don't know if the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition was there or not, but I think he was there supporting the farmers who had to go to such steps as to break the law, which we did not condone. They broke the law, yes. They paid the penalty; some of them went to jail.

Dr. Pannu: So civil disobedience is okay.

Mr. Klein: No. We did not support civil disobedience. We said that it's a bad law, and it is a bad law. It is a bad law. Any law that prohibits choice, any law that discriminates against provinces is a bad law, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member should understand that. You know, even the words New Democrats, democracy – it defies all the conventions of democracy, all the fundamentals of democracy, yet they support it. The New Democrats, they call themselves, support a monopoly. They do not support democracy. I find it so very, very strange.

Mr. Speaker, again I have to remind the hon. member that in a plebiscite 64 percent of Alberta farmers said that they wanted choice relative to the marketing of wheat; 68 percent said that they wanted choice relative to the marketing of barley. That's a majority.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, 30 seconds from now I'm going to call upon the first of seven members to participate.

Duane Daines

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the accomplishments of a great Alberta cowboy, Duane Daines. Duane Daines was one of the best cowboys this province has produced. He's competed in nine National Finals Rodeos, won three Canadian all-round championships, won the Canadian saddle bronc championship, and also took home the $50,000 Calgary Stampede title.

But Duane's life changed instantly in 1995, when in his 17th year as a cowboy an accident in the bucking chute left him paralyzed. In 1995 Duane was leading the race for cowboy of the year. His accident occurred with eight events left, and his fellow cowboys didn't want to compete. They wanted to ensure that Duane would win the cowboy of the year title. Duane would have none of it. He told his competitors to keep fighting the title, and they did, but Duane still won. He was far ahead. He was that good.

Mr. Speaker, in November Duane Daines was awarded the Red Carpet award for outstanding ambassador by the Canadian Paraplegic Association for his efforts in helping the disabled lead active and independent lives following an injury. As well, Duane is also a 2003 inductee into the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame.

If this doesn't count as an inspirational, made-in-Alberta success story, I don't know what does. Mr. Speaker, I am proud of Duane's accomplishments, and above all I am proud that I can call this great man a constituent of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I call on the Assembly to give him the recognition and respect his efforts deserve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Glen Huser

Mr. Maskell: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize an accomplished Alberta author who is using his talent to make a difference. Glen Huser of Edmonton won the 2003 Governor General's literary award in children's literature for his novel entitled Stitches. Stitches is a story about two resilient outcasts who struggle to survive being different in a small town. With themes of self-discovery and empowerment and an off-beat sense of humour Glen Huser makes it impossible for readers not to care about the struggles children face when confronted with vicious bullying.

A former teacher/librarian I am proud to have known for many years, Glen is the author of two other novels, Grace Lake and another children's novel called Touch of the Clown. He is also the founder of Magpie, a quarterly magazine that showcases student writing and graphics. He has served on the board of directors of both the Young Alberta Book Society and the Edmonton chapter of the Children's Literature Roundtable, and he is the long-standing children's book reviewer for the Edmonton Journal. Glen currently teaches in the department of elementary education at the University of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all Members of the Legislative Assembly join me in congratulating Glen Huser on receiving the 2003 Governor General's award in children's literature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

World AIDS Day

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, December 1, is World AIDS Day, Red Ribbon Day. I'd like to recognize Bob Mills, HIV Edmonton, and all the others who worked so hard to keep this issue on the front lines.

This is a frightening time for those who contracted AIDS in the '80s and early '90s and were able to survive and even thrive using drug cocktails and other treatments. These same treatments are finally failing, and those who have been living positive are dying. For those of us who lost friends and family and went to too many funerals, that time is coming again. This was brought home to me when Bob Mills died this fall after a 14-year triumph over HIV/AIDS. He was an effective, persistent advocate.

I spoke at an HIV Edmonton event last week, and their theme was Stigma and Discrimination. As I looked around their office at the posters, the pamphlets, the books, I thought: this organization has worked hard to help us understand. That's not easy in Alberta, a province where it is okay, even encouraged by government leaders, to talk about building fences around various programs and legislation as though to extend rights to gays and lesbians takes them from others.

Human rights is not a finite bucket of rights. To allow a stigma to continue is to allow discrimination to continue. So HIV Edmonton and their partner agencies work on. In Alberta there is money, research capability, legislation, medicare. We can do better. We must do better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Edmonton Minor Hockey

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise a week and change after the Heritage Classic. A name comes to mind, and it's Red Hetchler. Mr. Hetchler has been helping Edmonton kids for over 40 years, volunteering in minor hockey. The Member for Edmonton-Glenarry knows all about Red.

Mr. Speaker, he's helped the Hawks and Whitemud West hockey clubs merge and watched over the years as they expanded from three teams to 15. As director of northwest zone midgets God only knows how many hours Red put into each of these teams in addition to watching over 100 hockey games each season.

I'd also like to recognize some coaches, Wayne Gelmich and Ken Neal of Paranych Wind. Mr. Speaker, they work tirelessly every practice night, and they've convinced me to give them a hand, so I've been putting on the skates also.

I'd like to name some of the players on the team starting with Ryer Alyn, Mark Arsenault, Arrol Bernard, Jamie Cavanagh, Scott Christensen, Kendal Da Costa, Ryan Griffiths, Barrett Jack, Logan Key, Frederick Kitts, Daniel Lefebvre, Gavin Masyk, Mitchell McKenzie, Stewart McNabb, Darrel Morin, David Palmer, Jacob Trudel, and Kyle Bernard.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

ISO Certification

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, ISO 9000 is the world's most recognized business process re-engineering methodology. It is a road map to follow which is designed to create maximum consistency of quality and efficiency of process within any organization, and its results in terms of improving customer satisfaction and reducing complaints are truly remarkable. ISO 14000 adds the additional environmental benchmarks, making sure that the product or service being offered is being manufactured in the most environmentally responsible manner possible.

ISO certification is sweeping the world outside of North America and is rapidly becoming a prerequisite for doing any business internationally, although almost no governments at any level have discovered or tried to implement it yet. That's why I am proud to recognize the city of Calgary for their achievement in recently becoming the largest and virtually only city on planet Earth to have achieved independent ISO 14000 certification citywide.

Mr. Speaker, the ISO process truly creates a paradigm shift in governance within any organization, and while it wasn't easy to do, Calgary doesn't have to just claim to be one of the best run cities on the planet anymore; we can now prove it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Council of Alberta University Students and Alberta Colleges and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I congratulate the coalition of the Council of Alberta University Students and the Alberta College and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council. Using a wide range of political action strategies including launching a web site, public demonstrations, personal lobbying, and formal presentations, they worked to make Bill 43 a bill that better reflects student interests.

The changes that the coalition effected with respect to student association government are important, and although they were unsuccessful in challenging those aspects of the bill that deal with tuition, they've been effective in raising and keeping this issue on the public agenda of this province.

Many student leaders were involved in the campaign. At the risk of making a serious omission, the efforts of ACTISEC's Stu Sherry, chair, and Brett Bergie, provincial director, as well as CAUS chair Shirley Barg, vice-chair Chris Samuel, and executive director Melanee Thomas along with Lee Skallerup, president, and Jennifer Pelley, vice-president external of the Graduate Students' Association need to be recognized. They are worthy of the confidence placed in them by over 180,000 postsecondary students in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Kelsey Armstrong

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to recognize in this Assembly a very capable young lady, Kelsey Armstrong, who also happens to be a constituent of mine in Calgary-West. Kelsey was recently granted a Rutherford scholar award, which is a $1,500 scholarship awarded yearly to the top 10 Alexander Rutherford scholarship recipients in Alberta based on their diploma examination marks.

This year 16 awards were granted, with marks ranging from 97.6 percent to 99 percent. Kelsey's average was an amazing 99 percent, which makes her one of the top students in Alberta. Kelsey has attended public schools Olympic Heights elementary, Bishop Pinkham junior high, and Central Memorial high school. She is in business this year at the University of Calgary.

Congratulations, Kelsey. I'm absolutely sure that you and your family are very proud of your outstanding academic achievement.

Thank you.

The Speaker: And congratulations to the Member for Calgary-West for being the only member participating in Recognitions today to follow Standing Order 7(6).

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting a petition signed by 57 Edmontonians petitioning the Legislative Assembly to "urge the Government of Alberta to reinstate paying for repairs to privately owned equipment such as scooters and power wheelchairs."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a petition with 325 signatures calling on the government to "return to a regulated electricity system, reduce power bills, and develop a program to assist Albertans in improving energy efficiency."

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Bill 55

Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 55, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2003, for first reading.

This bill will make changes to the way farm implement dealers and their distributors indemnify their customers and will bring the legislation in line with today's financial realities.

[Motion carried; Bill 55 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 55, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2003, be moved under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter from the general manager of the Bar C Ranch Resort, located northwest of Cochrane. They're very concerned about a logging project that is expected to happen in the region, and they are in negotiations with the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development on this.

The other series of letters I have are all very much opposed to any more commercial development in the Evan-Thomas area, and these letters are from Carolyn Fisher, Steve Arthur, Jeanne Kimber, Colleen Campbell, Kathryn Milne, Stephen Mahaffey, and Peter and Barbara Sherrington. They live throughout Alberta and are very concerned.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

2:50

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would table letters from Denise Gitting, Alan Besecker, Pauline Worsfold in Edmonton-Glenora; Cheryl Mitschke, Candice Howrsh in Calgary-Mountain View; and Katherine Woodcock in Calgary-Cross, all nurses who are distressed with the state of negotiations and are particularly disturbed about the provisions that would see them placed anywhere in the region.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. Earlier today I introduced Roberta and Kevyn, and they along with four other members of their group had met to perform a sacred pagan ceremony in front of the Legislature. They were interrupted by two security officers and asked to cease their behaviour immediately and leave the grounds or they'd be charged with trespassing. They were very concerned about that.

My second tabling is from Gail Pederson. Gail is a nurse and is very concerned over what is being asked of them in the current contract negotiations and the tactics that are being used by the employer in those negotiations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I'm tabling four letters today, copied to me but written to the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, from Lori Deverdenne, Alan Besecker, Linda Brockmann, and Dianne Vinet expressing grave concern over the negotiations between the health regions and registered nurses and especially the impact these may have on patient safety.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've raised this now on several occasions. To table letters written to other members, I have no idea what purpose that serves. I have no idea how that fulfills the criteria we have for tablings. I'm going to repeat what I said before. I'm going to ask the three House leaders to meet over the winter to try to get a handle on this.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have a request from these individuals to table these letters, so I'm following through on that. These are written by Barb Heinz and Lisa Heinz to their MLA for Grande Prairie-Wapiti and Tanice Olson to her MLA for Calgary-Egmont expressing concerns about a lack of full negotiations between the nurses' union and the regional health authorities and concerned about safety for both Albertans and nurses.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of three different reports. The first is an index of abstracts regarding research into 18-methoxycoronaridine. Of particular interest are the studies showing 18-MC's potential to eliminate nicotine addictions.

The second one is an index of lab extracts and publications on ibogaine, as is the third, which is an index of 112 abstracts and reports titled The Ibogaine Bibliography.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. First I'm tabling a letter from a senior, Miss Pauline Knittle of Edmonton, dated November 17, 2003. Miss Knittle is deeply concerned with the erosion of seniors' benefits, increasing poverty among seniors, and the overall continued neglect of seniors by this government. She is asking the government to treat seniors with dignity and respect and reverse those policies which are hurting seniors.

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is a document from Catherine Ripley, dated November 12, 2003. This document was prepared by the Whitemud Coalition of Schools and is asking the government of Alberta to accept the Learning Commission's recommendations and substantially increase education funding.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from Mr. Art Macklin, dated November 18, 2003. He is concerned with the Alberta government's attack on the Canadian Wheat Board and is requesting the Premier and the minister of agriculture to develop a positive proposal on grain marketing that adds value for Alberta producers.

The second tabling is a letter from a senior, Mr. Clarence Huibers. He is worried about the increasing cost of deregulation, resulting in serious financial hardship to seniors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, November 27, I would now move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, November 27, I will now move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, did you want to rise on a point of order? I have some correspondence in my office suggesting that you do, but you have not given me any notice of that.

Mr. Mason: No, I did not give you notice, Mr. Speaker. I do however have a concern about a request for another private member's bill.

The Speaker: Well, why don't you make a very brief statement on a point of order?

Point of Order Private Members' Public Bills

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will then, and I appreciate your asking me to do that. I'm concerned about the request for early consideration for third reading of a bill that has not been dealt with, let alone passed, at committee stage. I guess the concern is twofold. First of all, that would make it very difficult for the private member's bill that I'm sponsoring to even be dealt with before the end of this session of the Legislature, but more importantly I think it sets a precedent which would make it more difficult in the future for all private members' bills to be given equal consideration. That's just the very essence of my point.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to just take a couple of minutes to deal with this matter because it only occurs in the perceived dying days of a session. It does not occur any other time, and it only applies to private members' days. So some time was spent over the weekend, in fact, looking at this and preparing a statement in anticipation of this.

In essence, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul had requested early consideration of Bill 208 in Committee of the Whole in the memorandum to the Speaker tabled in the Assembly on November 19, 2003. On Wednesday, November 26, 2003, the chair tabled another memorandum from the same member requesting that Bill 208 be given early consideration at third reading stage if – and this is the key word: if – it passes Committee of the Whole.

The practice that has been followed is that a member may request early consideration of his or her bill by writing to the chair so that the letter can be tabled at least one sitting day before the bill in question is to be considered. The bill which is the subject of the request will be considered after debate is concluded on the bill then before the Assembly or the committee, assuming that no other bills have reached their due dates under Standing Order 8(5). This was the practice that the chair outlined on November 27, 2001, at pages 1284 and 1285 of Alberta Hansard for that day. In this case there are no other bills that must come up for consideration.

However, the member sponsoring Bill 209 is anxiously awaiting the opportunity to debate the principles of the bill at second reading. The chair would like to indicate that the only direction is found in Standing Order 9(1), which states that private members' public bills shall be taken up in order of precedence. In order to maintain some certainty, the chair finds that Bill 208 will proceed to committee and, if passed, then will proceed to third reading today.

In an effort to ensure that the system is fair and equitable to all members, the chair would welcome suggestions by members and their House leaders over the winter on this issue of early consideration of private members' public bills so that a procedural policy could be put in place for the spring 2004 session, one that would be very clear at the initiation of the session. The chair's view is that a member should not be able to request early consideration of his or her bill at the next stage until it has passed the previous stage. If that were the rule, then the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul would not have been able to request early consideration at Committee of the Whole until his bill had passed second reading.

In closing, the chair wants to note that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta has since 1993 been a leader among Legislatures in allowing for consideration of private members' business. The chair recognizes that improvements can be made and looks forward to receiving suggestions about changes to the process.

In a nutshell, today we will proceed with committee on Bill 208 and, if it's passed, then proceed to third reading of 208, and we'll review this in the future.

3:00head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order. Before we proceed with the bill that is before is, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour for me to introduce three constituents and one constituent from Vegreville-Viking. First of all, I'd like to introduce the constituent from Vegreville-Viking, Mr. Victor Chrapko, and from the constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul Mr. Len Kryszarneski, Tom Melnyk, and Mike Warholik. They're here for a meeting. If I could ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other introductions?

Bill 208

Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to rise in the Assembly this afternoon to bring the discussion and debate during Committee of the Whole for Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003. Today's society is highly contentious and argumentative, with litigation seeming to be commonplace. Private landowners and occupiers must now more than ever concern themselves with the issue of liability. The fear of a potential lawsuit is enough to prevent landowners from permitting recreational users on their property.

As mentioned previously, the purpose of Bill 208 is to reduce the current level of liability that landowners and occupiers owe to visitors on their property. This bill reduces the burden for owners, and as a result recreational users would be treated the same as trespassers regarding legal liability.

Mr. Chairman, it is section 6.1(1) that states:

The liability of an occupier to a person who uses the premises described in subsection (2) or a portion of them for a recreational purpose shall be determined as if the person were a trespasser.

Therefore, owners and occupiers would not be held liable for anything that is common practice except the death or injury to recreational visitors due to the willful and reckless conduct of the landowner or land occupier. Bill 208 would reduce the liability owed to visitors and place the responsibility on recreational users for their actions. I believe that the landowner or occupier cannot assume the risk for visitors on their property, nor should they have to.

I want to point out that Bill 208 pertains to landowners and occupiers that grant permission without a cost or fee. Section 6.1(1)(a) states that if the landowner or occupier "receives payment for the entry or activity of the person" or, in (b), "is providing the person with living accommodation on the premises," the liability will not be the same as that of a trespasser. The reduced liability would not apply if the landowner or occupier charges a fee.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that visitors and recreational users must incur the responsibility for the choices they make and the actions they pursue. They must also be mindful of the consequences that may arise from their choices and actions. For example, if my neighbour asks for his family to cross-country ski across my field and I decide to grant them permission, then I don't feel that I should be held accountable for any accidents. If one of the children or he himself for that matter should break their leg or sprain their ankle, they should not be able to sue or hold me accountable.

It seems logical to me that the choices that recreational users make are their own. The users should assume the risk and not be able to hold a landowner or occupier responsible.

I would like to further clarify that if Bill 208 were enacted, there would remain specific situations where the landowners or land occupiers could be liable. Bill 208 provides a safeguard to landowners where the safeguard is necessary. It is not a blanket measure that completely exempts or absolves individuals from liability. Bill 208 would not provide protection if a person is injured as a result of an occupier's or landowner's reckless or willful conduct. To add some clarification, willful or reckless intent may be inferred when a landowner has knowledge of a highly dangerous situation or intentionally creates a hazardous condition. It is when the landowner fails to remedy a situation or warn against danger, knowing there is potential for people to get hurt.

I want to assure all members of this Assembly that Bill 208 deals with recreational users and visitors. This bill does not protect an employer from liability for injuries suffered by workers in agriculture or in forestry. This legislation will not exempt farmers or ranchers from accidents that may involve a hired man and occur on their premises.

Mr. Chairman, the legislation proposed in Bill 208 is essential. This is not a new issue or a topic that hasn't been studied but, rather, a much-needed initiative. Many provinces have recognized the need to protect landowners and occupiers and have enacted legislation providing that safeguard. British Columbia, Ontario, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and Saskatchewan all have legislation in one form or another that pertains to recreational users and the liability that is owed to them. The provinces that do not currently have legislation are now reviewing and researching the best way to legislate and solve the problems of occupiers' liability. Although each province's legislation differs in form, these provinces have acknowledged and taken action to protect landowners and occupiers.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation is not unique to Canada. Every U.S. state has legislation on its books that addresses the issue of landowner liability, and most offer private landowner protection from liability. These laws are referred to as recreational use statutes. While the statute and the type of protection it offers varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, the protection is still provided, and limits are set to the liability that is owed. This type of liability protection is not a recent trend either. Many American states have had this legislation for over 10 years. In some cases the legislation has been in place since the early 1980s.

Mr. Chairman, Albertans, as do I, view this province as a leader, and we must continue to do so. In 1973 Alberta became the first province to codify an Occupiers' Liability Act. It is now time for Alberta to update its legislation. This bill is not about favouring one group of Albertans over another. It's not about giving preference to farmers and ranchers; rather, it's about updating our laws so they reflect the current situation and provide protection to landowners and occupiers. Bill 208 will ease the threat of liability and aid in guarding against potential lawsuits.

3:10

Mr. Chairman, I look forward to the continued discussion and debate by my hon. colleagues on this legislation. I encourage all members of this House to carefully consider these much-needed initiatives and vote in favour of Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole to private member's Bill 208, Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act. I think this is the third version of occupiers' liability legislation that I've seen in the Assembly in my seven years. This is not my favourite version, I will admit. I felt that an earlier version that was brought forward by the Member for Livingstone-Macleod was, in fact, a better version, but it was hoisted by a government member at the time, and there went that. So this is what we now have in front of us.

On the one hand, the shift in perspective that is brought forward by this bill, I think, is what does not sit comfortably with me. The assumption that the person that can best gauge the difficulty or the lack of safety – the risk, the onus is now put entirely onto the recreational user. I think, in fact, that common sense would tell us that the person who's most likely to understand the risks of using any given piece of land is the owner/occupier. So there has been a shift in the perspective that this bill is taking, and that's what's not sitting as comfortably with me as I would like.

But we have a problem in this province. We have a number of recreational users who cannot get access to trail systems in which they can enjoy their chosen recreation. There are some large national and provincial organizations that have been trying for some time to organize long trail systems that people can hook into and use as recreational users, be they horseback riders or snowmobilers in the winter or hikers or cross-country skiers and, in some cases, motorized vehicles like quads or motocross bikes. We understand that it's a good idea for people to get out and get exercise and to be active and to use these trails recreationally.

Because of the way things have developed in this province and historically how unused land has been allocated, how unused railway lines were sold off when they were no longer needed by the rail companies, that has given us a slightly different approach to this problem than we see in some of the other provinces. Our problem is that we do need to be able to go through private owners' land, land that's privately owned, in order to hook together some of these other trail systems that are available to us. We need to get permission from landowners to do this. That has been very difficult because the law as it stands right now puts the onus almost 100 percent on the owner/occupier of the land, and they simply weren't willing to assume the risk because they had to take all of the risk.

I would have argued that there needed to be a sharing of this, but this bill is coming forward with a flipped perspective, which is that 100 percent of the risk is assumed by the recreational user. Is this risk worth it? Should we be supporting that in this Assembly? It's a tough call. I'm personally struggling with this because I'm on record repeatedly in this Assembly as being supportive of these multi-use trail systems. As a snowmobiler I've often talked about how I take my recreational tourism dollar out of the province because there's not enough interesting, challenging riding on a trail system available in the province.

We do have some provincial organizations. The Alberta Snowmobile Association is one I'm thinking of that has started its own trail system and levies its own user fee on it, but frankly I find the user fee high, and therefore people tend not to engage with that particular association unless they're living right next door to or very close to or have very easy access onto one of the existing trail loops. Then it's worth the money for them. But for someone else that's further away – I mean, it was getting into the range of a couple of hundred dollars a machine for a trail system that didn't exist near you but might some day in the future, maybe, and this is where this bill comes in.

Could that trail system exist? Would we be able to ride at one point from one end of Alberta to another without breaking the law, which is what many people currently do by riding in the ditches of the highways? Can we get that trail system that went from one end of the province to the other? It's not going to be easy here, but I think it could be accomplished if we can do something to encourage owners of private land to come along with us and join in on this. That's why we need occupiers' liability, and that's why we need this act.

I think there's the larger issue of tourism and economic development in this province. We still haven't hit that right. Many of the snowmobilers that I know – my own family and I still load up our machines and go to B.C., where the government invests in the trail system, where they provide support and funding to the local snowmobile clubs. Those trails that I'm thinking of in McBride, in Valemout, in Clearwater, in Tête Jaune Cache, in Revelstoke are groomed. There's someone from the club. They have the grooming equipment. It's good equipment. It's large enough to handle the demand that's placed on it, and somebody is being paid some kind of an honorarium to groom those trails on a regular basis. They often have little chalets and things that are up on the mountain where you can stop and have lunch or warm up or whatever you need. So it makes it very attractive to go and ride there.

Of course, your money stays in town because you're renting a hotel room and you're eating your meals there. You're probably buying some tourism mementoes while you're in the town. So we have a lot of Alberta tourism dollars that are going into B.C. and into Montana and Wyoming that we could be keeping here in Alberta. People would be very happy to be here in Alberta if we had the infrastructure to support it, but we don't, and it's not on the horizon.

So I guess the first step is this bill. If we can get this bill, then we can start to get those negotiations, and I would rather see multi-use trails that are supported more publicly than to have the sort of this is my trail or my particular sport's trail, and you can't come on it. I think that's just going to cause us a whole other series of problems here. I would prefer to support the multi-use trail system that we have with the Canada trail system or with Alberta Trailnet, which is the provincial version of that.

As I say, this is not my favourite version of this. I think there is somewhat of a redeeming feature in it in that it does make clear that if there is a total failure of duty of care, the onus would be on the occupier to make it clear and to take steps to protect people coming onto the land from some known hazard. So if you've got, you know, a gravel pit or something that's not clearly marked, you're in trouble. You need to be doing something to let people know. Or if you've recently dug a pit for a reservoir, you need to mark it so people don't ride into it and have a nasty accident there.

I'll support this bill but very reluctantly. If this is the only way we're going to get it passed, then I guess this is what we have to do, but I sure would have preferred other means of doing it. As I say, I think I've seen three versions of occupier liability come forward, and for whatever reason the government members are not willing to support the other versions. The first one, I think in '97, was hoisted. I can't remember what happened to the second one, that was brought forward by the Member for Medicine Hat, and now we've got the one from Lac La Biche-St. Paul. So if this is the only thing on offer and this will lead us to a multi-use trail system in Alberta, then I'll support it, but I wish it could have been done a bit differently. We've got to get those trail systems developed and put some support into the volunteer organizations that support it if we're going to have a thriving tourism industry and ecotourism industry here in this province. Got to take these steps or our money is just going to keep driving over the border, and that's not helping us at all here, and we've got the potential for it.

So thanks for the opportunity to offer my thoughts on this particular bill.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to rise this afternoon and speak to Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003. I want to indicate right at the beginning that I am prepared at this point, during Committee of the Whole, to support this bill, and that's because it addresses one of the major issues surrounding recreation corridors in our province, for which I have the responsibility.

The Alberta government was asked by numerous stakeholders to address, in fact, the needs, issues, and concerns related to about 17,000 kilometres of existing trails and future recreation corridors in the province, and those stakeholders and the issues that were brought forward represented concerns from adjacent landowners, from agriculturalists, farmers, forestry companies, the trail operators themselves, motorized and nonmotorized trail users, in some cases municipalities, and so on and so on. So, for that reason, I was pleased to initiate a recreation corridors legislative review back in August of 2001 and to appoint an MLA committee, that was chaired by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, from whom we've heard just recently in this House, along with other colleague members from Calgary-Currie and West Yellowhead, with respect to this review.

Now, the hon. member who chaired the review and who has just spoken and his committee, in my view, represented us very well during that entire legislative review process. That particular process took place over several months, in fact longer than a year, and the results have now come in, but during the entire process the chair indicated regular updates regarding concerns that stakeholders had about this very issue of liability and also some possible suggested solutions that were presented to him and the committee and which were subsequently discussed by that very committee. I know that this issue is also referenced in the committee's report – that is to say, in the report of the Recreation Corridors Legislative Review Committee – because they have now submitted that to me, and I am reviewing it as we speak.

Mr. Chairman, the committee has, as I said earlier, done a very, very thorough job in preparing that report, and I'm doing as thorough a job as I can with my staff now in reflecting on it. Those members worked very hard to involve the public in the process, and they consulted with a very wide range of stakeholders, and occupiers' liability related issues were certainly front and centre, so to speak, during many of those meetings. Last year, in fact, the committee proposed that a provincewide public consultation be held to examine the issues regarding recreation corridors and to ensure that Albertans had an opportunity to provide input through that process, including this very important issue of occupiers' liability.

I just want to report to the House during this stage of the debate on this particular bill that during the process of public consultation on this matter of recreation corridors, trail usage, and so on, we received more than 1,000 written responses to that committee using a workbook, and that was of course made available on-line and by mail-out and so on. We also had a number of workshops, other public meetings, a big provincial forum, and in conclusion it was an extremely thorough process.

The feedback, I should say, was also received from over 500 participants who attended various of those workshops and public meetings, and those meetings occurred, Mr. Chairman, throughout the province in places like Strathcona county, Drumheller, Stettler, Edson, Fairview, Slave Lake, Bragg Creek, Lethbridge, and St. Paul, and I think that virtually in every one of those locations and elsewhere, perhaps, the issue of occupiers' liability was raised. That all concluded with a very large provincial forum, and again at the provincial forum this matter of liability was raised, and I should say that over 70 representatives from provincial stakeholder organizations attended that particular forum.

The discussions throughout the public consultation focused on five areas, and the first of these was the issue of liability. The second was safety and policing. The third was operation, maintenance, and accountability, the fourth was privacy and access, and the fifth was environmental stewardship. In the report that the committee has now submitted to me they have provided some very, very insightful and valuable advice and recommendations regarding each of these five areas. I'm taking that report right now through the process, and I sincerely hope to be able to release it to the public once I'm finished that particular process, but we'll just have to wait and see until the process concludes.

However, with respect to the proposed amendments to the existing legislation that have come before the Legislature this year, such as the changes to the Petty Trespass Act, the Line Fence Act – or was it the Line Fence Amendment Act? – it would seem that we are very in tune with the input that the Recreation Corridors Legislative Review Committee also received from Albertans and with the matters that are also referenced here today in Bill 208. Therefore, I think it's very timely to consider the amendments before us to the Occupiers' Liability Act.

I should also point out, as I understand it, that Bill 16, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, will also address the issue of liability of landowners and occupiers at least in part and insofar as it relates to public land with agricultural disposition holders, and once proclaimed, Bill 16 should remove the common duty of care, as it's known, that is owed by owners and occupiers of agricultural dispositions to recreational users who use their lands for recreational purposes.

Now, with the introduction of Bill 208 the common duty of care owed by landowners or occupiers on other land used for recreational purposes will also be addressed and removed. So in the end, Mr. Chairman, under Bill 208 before us at the moment landowners or occupiers would only be held liable should they display any willful or reckless conduct toward a recreational user that results in injury or death. Bill 208 is in line with what the committee heard during the extensive consultation process that I outlined a little earlier and, more specifically, that the responsibility should be placed on the user. At least, that's what I believe they heard.

Alberta landowners and occupiers, however, remain very concerned about trails and about recreation corridors and about individuals entering and using their land for recreational purposes. I've met with numerous individuals and groups myself, and I understand what those concerns are. So if we can address and lessen the potential for serious injury liability concerns, perhaps we might even see a reduction in some of the concerns that have been expressed by landowners and by adjacent landowners and by occupiers and so on and so on. I have indicated, however, that when this whole issue of recreation corridors and trails and so on crosses municipal land, it has to first receive the approval of the local municipality, and I know that they are concerned about this issue as well.

So if we are able to see Bill 208 pass and if it becomes proclaimed and so on, this may actually reduce the insurance requirements for municipalities and trail operators and perhaps encourage safe and responsible participation as part of the commitment that numerous people have to a recreation corridor development, to the operation and maintenance of those trails, and so on.

I do want to say, Mr. Chairman, that recreation trails and corridor development in our province are very important, and there are many benefits associated with responsible recreation corridor and recreation trail usage. In fact, in the 2000 Alberta recreation survey walking, hiking, backpacking, bicycling, and camping rated in the top 10 activities for individual Albertans who were surveyed. Moreover, in our province and elsewhere across the country physical activity on recreation corridors is seen as one way to encourage healthier lifestyles and to reduce health care expenses in the long run.

Recreation corridors also offer some very good potential for tourism and economic development, as the previous speaker just indicated, because they do draw visitors to an area and provide opportunities for small business. But, again, I would stress that it's a question of doing it in a responsible and caring manner that respects the rights and privileges of the landowners, the occupiers, and adjacent landowners and also provides for a safe and clean and healthy lifestyle.

Still, there are those benefits potentially available to local communities. Of a couple of the trails that I've been to and seen, one in particular is up in the Elk Point area, which I believe is represented by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. It's called the Iron Horse Trail and is particularly symbolic of a very successful way to implement this particular issue of recreation trails. We drove, I think, the entire trail, or most of it, last year, and I've been to others as well.

In any case, I am pleased that through the consultation that has been done and by listening to Albertans, we have found some solutions already – one of them is provided for here in Bill 208 – to the complex issue of liability as it is impacted by recreation trails and corridors. That having been said, Mr. Chairman, Albertans are anxious, I think, for some resolution to some of these important issues. The Recreation Corridors Legislative Review Committee has done a very thorough and excellent job, and at this time I want to just say thank you to them for what they've done and to the chair for what he's done with respect to that review and with respect to what he's brought forward here for our consideration under Bill 208.

Of course, members of my staff and others within the department also were very strong contributing members to some of this review process, and I want to say thank you to them. We do recognize that for many, many Albertans who provided input during the legislative review, this is an important issue. Particularly to the committee for their hard work on Bill 208 and addressing what is a very complex and difficult issue that interrelates with so many issues I say thank you for the work that they have done.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take leave and allow others to speak after me. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity today to join debate in Committee of the Whole in regard to Bill 208. In my discussions I'll be focusing on sections 5 and 6 of the act, and more specifically I'll attempt to explain why there's a growing need to amend section 6 of the act.

Alberta is a vast province blessed with natural wealth and beauty. As a result, every year thousands of tourists and outdoor enthusiasts come from all corners of Canada and the world to experience our province in her natural setting. They come here to explore, to see, to learn, to take advantage of all the outdoor activities that our province can offer them. Time and time again our landowners and occupiers have shared their land with those seeking adventures in the backcountry. However, as of late more and more landowners and occupiers have been hesitant to allow tourists and other recreational land users onto their properties. As the owner of 160 acres I, too, was one of those landowners.

An Hon. Member: That's at Sangudo; isn't it?

Mr. Maskell: Sangudo it is.

The reason behind this is that owners and occupiers fear that they will be held liable for any injuries incurred by those who use their lands for recreational purposes. The source of the problem, Mr. Chairman, is the Occupiers' Liability Act and the fact that while it protects the rights of recreational users, it does not protect the rights of owners and occupiers who allow these users onto their properties. Currently under the act recreational land users enjoy the same privileges as visitors.

Specifically, section 5 of the act maintains that a landowner owes his visitor a common duty of care, which means that the owner is responsible for providing the visitor with a reasonably safe environment pertaining to the purpose that he was invited for. At first glance this may sound fair until one realizes that the definition of a reasonably safe environment is so broad that it requires the owner to anticipate and be aware of all the possible ways which could result in an injury to the visitor. Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but the act also requires the owner to assess the magnitude of potential injuries and determine the effectiveness of the measures he has to take in order to minimize the risk to his visitors.

Well, Mr. Chairman, when you consider the fact that this definition of common duty of care also applies to recreational land users, you can clearly see why an owner or an occupier would be hesitant to allow these folks onto his or her property. To illustrate this, in many of the rural areas throughout the province ranchers allow their livestock to wander about their pastures in order to feed. These ranchers are also known to allow snowmobilers and other outdoor enthusiasts to use existing tracks and trails which happen to cross their land.

If for some reason a number of their animals happen to wander off toward a path used by snowmobilers and one of the sleds happens to collide with an animal, under the Occupiers' Liability Act the rancher would be responsible for any injuries incurred by the snowmobiler. Clearly, Mr. Chairman, we cannot expect the owners and occupiers to be liable for such injuries, and we cannot hold them accountable for accidents they cannot foresee.

What's even worse is that under the act the only way that they would not be liable for such accidents would be if they made snowmobilers sign a waiver or document which would absolve liability and specify that recreational users are entering the property at their own risk. However, we cannot expect our owners and occupiers to hold waiver forms in their hands at all times in case someone wants to run a snowmobile across their property. This is simply absurd and impractical, and it is precisely why so many owners are tentative to let tourists or outdoor enthusiasts onto their properties. This is a real shame, Mr. Chairman, because there's no reason why responsible folks should not be allowed to enjoy the experience of Alberta's backcountry and all of the activities associated with it.

I know that our landowners and occupiers would be more than happy to let others onto their property because it is simply not the Alberta way to build fences and block others out. However, if their generosity is paid back in frivolous lawsuits, then I can't blame them for their current stance.

Fortunately, Mr. Chairman, with Bill 208 we can remedy this unfortunate situation. The bill proposes amending the Occupiers' Liability Act to ensure that the burden of liability placed on landowners and occupiers corresponds to the burden of responsibility placed on recreational land users. The bill would accomplish this by adding two new subsections to section 6 of the act, which, in turn, would place the definition of recreational users and visitors in the same category as trespassers. As a result, under the new amendment the owners and occupiers would owe recreational users and visitors the same level of liability as they would to ordinary trespassers.

In other words, while owners and occupiers would still be held accountable for willful or reckless conduct causing death or injury, they would not be liable for accidental injuries suffered by recreational users while present on their land. By placing a burden of responsibility on the recreational user, this amendment will not only add a degree of fairness to the whole liability process, but it will most importantly encourage owners to allow access to their lands for recreational use. This will in turn mean that Alberta's natural wonders can be enjoyed by all.

Furthermore, Bill 208 also serves to remedy a legislative issue that has been lingering for over four years. As you know, Mr. Chairman, in May of 1999 this House passed Bill 31, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, which addressed a wide range of concerns pertaining to ownership and land disposition issues. From the liability standpoint the act proposed that the Occupiers' Liability Act be amended so that owners or occupiers of agricultural dispositions would owe the same duty to recreational landowners as they would to trespassers. In other words, if a user were injured while present on land belonging to an agricultural disposition's owner or occupier, he would enjoy the same rights as a trespasser.

The importance of Bill 31 was that it not only reduced the burden of liability that was being placed on disposition owners and occupiers, but it also encouraged them to allow others to use their property without having to fear that they could potentially face frivolous lawsuits. Just as Bill 208 does, Bill 31 proposed to make recreational users more responsible for their actions. Unfortunately, Bill 31 was never proclaimed. However, a large number of its recommendations were brought forward by Bill 16, which was passed in May of this year. The bill's recommendations also included reducing the liability burden placed upon leaseholders and occupiers.

While bills 31 and 16 address the liability issues specific only to agricultural disposition owners and occupiers, Bill 208 takes a broader look at this problem and addresses it on behalf of all landowners and occupiers and users. I sincerely hope this Assembly will recognize the value of this important piece of legislation.

As I previously mentioned, Alberta is one of the best places in the world for outdoor recreation. I believe that enthusiasts from all parts of Alberta, Canada, and the world should have the opportunity to enjoy all that our province's backcountry has to offer. Our landowners and occupiers have already indicated that they are willing to grant access if they are guaranteed protection from those who act irresponsibly and take advantage of the system. Bill 208 enables us to provide our landowners and occupiers with this security, and as a result, Mr. Chairman, I urge all of my colleagues here today to vote in favour of this legislation.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to join the debate on Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act. First of all, I'd like to thank and commend the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul for his work on this important issue.

I fully support Bill 208 for three main reasons. First, as a rural MLA I've heard many stories of accidents and injury on private property where people have taken legal action and been successful in doing so against landowners who have granted permission for people to go on. In some cases, where landowners even hadn't granted permission, they were still sued successfully for people not taking responsibility for their own actions. Second, I believe it will help to build and restore a core fundamental value of our beautiful province, and that is one of community spirit and co-operation. Third, I'm a strong believer in individual responsibility, and that's where I personally feel that Bill 208 strikes the strongest chord. Just like community spirit and co-operation, individual responsibility is a part of our cultural fabric that sets Alberta apart from many other parts of the country.

A quick look at Bill 208 may lead one to believe that it's an uncomplicated and simple bill to understand. However, a longer and deeper study reveals that this bill is much more than just about legal issues. It's about the intrinsic beliefs that founded this province and made it what it is today.

As a landowner and rural MLA I've heard stories of people asking for permission to access land and either damaging their equipment or being injured and threatening to press charges against the original landowner. Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, these stories are very disheartening. Over the years I've regularly asked my neighbours to access their land when I'm snowmobiling or horseback riding or hiking and taking part in other outdoor activities, and for the vast majority of those requests I'm granted entrance to someone else's land. As a good neighbour and friend I feel compelled to do the same when asked by someone if they can use my land. I only ask that they use respect. However, I can just see one lawsuit close our open and shared communities.

This leads to my next point, that section 6.1 of the bill will take the fear and doubt out of landowners' and occupiers' minds and will restore our community spirit, openness, and co-operation. When Alberta was created in 1905, it was mainly a rural province. The new residents of the province were very community oriented, mainly because it was a matter of survival. Over the years these roots and values of co-operation, sharing, and openness have been instilled into the Alberta culture. It's only a very recent phenomenon that one would hear of a lawsuit by someone who was granted permission to use the land against his neighbour or the occupier of that land, all of this after the community-minded people grant entrance to their land and to the public.

Mr. Chairman, the scary part of this phenomenon is that it only takes a few high-profile cases to occur before they spread like wildfire through the countryside. In a matter of a decade or so we could possibly transform this magnificent province from one of the most open and trusting to one of the most closed and fearful. As legislators we have a unique opportunity to head off the potential turn towards fear and distrust and put Alberta back to a place of co-operation and trust. That is the place that this province is accustomed to, a place of community openness and reciprocal trust.

Section 6.1 of Bill 208 has another important consequence for Albertans. It restores individual responsibility as a cornerstone of our province's ethical and cultural fabric. Mr. Chairman, our government has worked hard and long to place individual responsibility as an integral part of our philosophy. Albertans have accepted and embraced this responsibility to the point now where it's seen as a part of our Albertan philosophy and culture. Alberta is a province that endorses and supports actions of entrepreneurship, free-spiritedness, and risk-taking. However, when these actions are taken, our culture in Alberta reciprocally feels that the onus is on the individual to take full responsibility for his or her actions.

Many of our government's social programs are designed to help Albertans be less dependent and make individuals take responsibility for their lives. Our social programs have been developed to give a hand up, not a handout. The policies and philosophies of this government for a number of years have been that individuals are given the utmost freedom to develop their lives, and with that freedom a duty of responsibility must be taken. Even with all of the attempts made by this government to increase individual responsibility over the past decade, it can be easily argued that in the area of individual law we are losing the battle of creating a consciousness of individual responsibility.

It is for that reason that as elected officials we must move forward to pass Bill 208 as another tool to build a more respectful, independent, and responsible Alberta. Bill 208 is in sync with existing government policy and Alberta culture, and for that reason I encourage all members here today to support it.

I'd like to switch gears a little bit now, Mr. Chairman, and talk about Bill 208 and especially section 6.1 and how it relates to other provinces' legislation. I believe it's important to look at other jurisdictions to see what works and how we can adjust our own legislation. I find it interesting to note that British Columbia, Ontario, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and Saskatchewan all relieve landowners and occupiers of liability for damages incurred by recreational users who are granted permission to use land. All of these provinces still hold landowners responsible for not creating dangerous environments with the intent to do harm to the recreational user or damage to their property. This is a very important part of our own legislation, and I am pleased that it's remaining constant in Bill 208.

From the outside Bill 208, section 6.1, may look like a simple legal amendment. However, a deeper look into Bill 208 touches the very fundamentals of what Alberta was founded on and has now become. Community spirit, openness, and co-operation have been part of this province since it was born. The deep sense of personal responsibility that a majority of Albertans associate themselves with is being undermined by frivolous lawsuits in which people are passing responsibility from themselves to other citizens or to the government.

I'm not suggesting that Bill 208 will solve Alberta's personal responsibility problem. However, like any other problem it must be chipped away at piece by piece. This bill fixes a piece of a much bigger problem which with dedication and hard work will be solved. Therefore, I encourage all members here today to vote in favour of Bill 208 as part of that rebuilding process.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

3:50

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me pleasure to join in this debate on Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003. I have listened with great interest to the previous speakers and their remarks. While it is a bill that on the whole makes a lot of sense, I think it would not be out of place for me to raise a few cautionary flags at this point, specifically with regard to section 6.1 of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard a lot about how Bill 208 will have a variety of benefits for Albertans. If passed, the bill would lead to increased recreational activities among Albertans, which, it can be argued, is good for the body, good for the mind, and good for the soul. Moreover, we have heard that thanks to Bill 208 we might be able to at least partially stem the tide of frivolous legal action clogging up our courts. Those actions are preventing some serious litigation from having its day in court. Lastly, we've also heard about how Bill 208 would strike a blow against those who wish to abdicate personal responsibility and who, instead, are willing victims to whatever trivial or nuisance event that may befall them.

Mr. Chairman, all these are, of course, good and welcome results. There's no need to further expound on these points. I think previous speakers have spoken in both passionate and eloquent terms about these benefits. But I wonder: will all these presumed benefits outweigh any drawbacks that may result from passage of this bill?

This is not necessarily a contentious piece of legislation, I think, but I've grown somewhat concerned about its timing and its fairness. Allow me to elaborate on these two concerns for a few moments. Mr. Chairman, the matter that Bill 208 addresses has been the subject of both private members' bills and government legislation in years past. In 1999 Bill 31, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 1999, received royal assent but remains as yet unproclaimed. Similarly and more recently, Bill 16, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, also made its way through this House and received royal assent on May 16 of this year.

Mr. Chairman, it's my understanding that in many ways this year's Bill 16 is an updated version of the erstwhile Bill 31, and while I realize that there's quite often a delay between the day a bill receives royal assent and the day it is proclaimed into force, I wonder if there is any reason why Bill 31 has yet to be proclaimed. Looking at Bill 31 and the bill before us, Bill 208, we see that the similarities as far as occupier liability is concerned are many. The main difference that I can discern is that whereas Bill 16 limits liability to the recreational user, this change applies to leased land only. Bill 208, on the other hand, extends liability protection to leased as well as private lands.

If we look at section 6.1 of the bill, we see that it extends the liability protection without making any distinction between leased or government land on the one hand and private property on the other. Instead, Mr. Chairman, the bill clearly extends protection from liability to rural premises whether they are used for agricultural purposes or not: wilderness areas, golf courses when not in use, rights of way, and recreation trails. This is quite the enlargement of the scope of the legislation, I think, and particularly so as we have yet to see liability protection extended to leased land as prescribed in Bill 16. One might be tempted to wonder if it wouldn't be prudent to see if the provisions of Bill 16 prove to be useful and helpful in the manner that the legislation intends before we go ahead and pass additional legislation with this bill.

I'm not suggesting that I oppose Bill 208; not at all. Rather, what I wonder is quite simply: if there already exists legislation which as of yet is not in force, perhaps this ought to be interpreted as a sign to not try to make what some may call an end run around the provisions of Bill 16. If I'm not mistaken, Mr. Chairman, some ministries indicated their hesitation to support Bill 208 in part because the full effect of Bill 16 is not yet known.

Mr. Chairman, as indicated at the outset of my remarks today, my other concern with regard to Bill 208 has to do with fairness. At the present time the Occupiers' Liability Act prescribes that landowners are obliged to take such care as in all the circumstances of the case is reasonable to see that the visitor will be reasonably safe in using the premises for the purposes for which [he] is invited or permitted . . . to be there.

If we look at the kinds of situations that this section encompasses, it is not difficult to see a lot of parallel situations wherein a private owner would be liable in the event that a visitor sustained injuries or damages to property. Various privately owned and operated buildings, such as hotels and restaurants, represent one such instance, private modes of transportation, such as commercial airlines, another.

In the event that a visitor were to sustain injuries, whether it was due to a fall or due to spilled hot coffee or even due to turbulence, we know that the private owner is not automatically exempt from liability. No matter how frivolous or outrageous the claim, there have been instances where legal action stemming from situations involving mishaps, such as those above, have been brought forward. Obviously, I don't find anything commendable about such litigation, but the fact is that the right to engage in frivolous litigation does exist.

If, however, Bill 208 were to pass, we could potentially exempt one group of Albertans from becoming the subject of litigation, whereas that same kind of protection would not be afforded to other groups. The restaurant owners and the hotel operators, for instance, would not enjoy the same kind of reduced or even zero liability that the occupiers may very well be granted under Bill 208.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I hasten to add that I do support a resurgence of personal responsibility in our society, and similarly I would also say that I favour initiatives that could contribute to reducing frivolous and vexatious legal action. What I fear, however, is that the way Bill 208 is structured could very well be seen as unfairly protecting some Albertans but not others. Extending or increasing legal protection to this group could very well be viewed as decreasing the protection other groups have.

Having said this, Mr. Chairman, I would conclude my remarks much like I began. Bill 208 makes a lot of sense. I do not disagree with its overall purposes and what the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul would like to accomplish in bringing forth this bill. While I thought it important to make note of a few issues of concern, I do support the bill and will be voting in favour of it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is an honour to rise today and join debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. As we continue debating this piece of legislation and look back at what has been discussed during second reading, there is a predominant subject that continues to arise: liability scenarios. Many members, either by their own experience or by those of their constituents, have a specific scenario or example that supports the need for the legislation outlined in Bill 208. These stories and examples touch all aspects of the bill from liability issues to the types of land affected as well as the exclusion of specific individuals and circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, section 6.1(1) addresses the issue of liability and shifts it from occupiers and owners to recreational users who utilize the property. This results in the recreational user possessing the liability rights of a trespasser while using the type of land outlined in 6.1(2). Land covered in the legislation includes “golf courses when not open for playing,” “utility rights-of-way excluding structures located on them,” and “recreational trails reasonably marked as such.” From the examples and scenarios given in this Assembly by members who support Bill 208, section 6.1 would appear to provide a solution to the unfavourable results of these situations that have been expressed, both hypothetical and actual, along with the threat of the landowner losing their farm and livelihood.

However, Mr. Chairman, there is an aspect of Bill 208 that I believe needs to be discussed further: the exemptions outlined in section 6.1(1)(a) and (b). The proposed legislation states that recreational users shall have the same liability rights as that of a trespasser unless the landowner receives a payment or benefit from the individual or group utilizing his or her land. Landowners are therefore unable to profit from recreational users accessing their land. If landowners are receiving some sort of payment, then they would remain liable for the activities that take place on their property.

Mr. Chairman, an example of such a situation may be a landowner charging individuals to snowmobile on his or her land. Under Bill 208 the recreational user, after having paid to access the land, would no longer have the same liability as a trespasser and would therefore put liability back on the landowner because they accepted payment.

Payments from a government or government agency as well as nonprofit recreation clubs or associations would not be included in section 6.1 of the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003. Therefore, Bill 208 would only apply to individuals or groups that make a payment for using the land and do not fall under any of the aforementioned categories.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 208 includes one other exception when reducing the liability owed to recreational users. Recreational visitors who are provided living accommodations on the premises of the landowner are also excluded from carrying the same liability as a trespasser. For instance, a family friend or relative is spending their vacation with said landowner, who is providing them with accommodation. At one point during their stay they decide to enjoy a snowmobile ride and some type of accident befalls them. Under the proposed legislation the recreational user who is being provided with accommodation by the landowner would not be owed the same liability as that of a trespasser.

Under this circumstance, liability would be the responsibility of the landowner. In this instance, the recreational user is no longer just a visitor or a neighbour using the land. The recreational user has become a guest of the occupier and falls under the care of the landowner because they have provided the guest with living accommodation.

Mr. Chairman, I find that these two examples emphasize the important subject areas of Bill 208. I feel that they should be discussed further as I'm certain that landowners may receive from time to time some type of benefit or payment from individuals using their land. This does not necessarily mean cash. This could be any type of payment or benefit. There is no specification in the legislation that dictates exactly what payment or benefit includes. Landowners, therefore, need to take proper precautions and ensure that they have not mistakenly accepted some form of payment or benefit that could cause the liability to be placed back on the landowner.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation is crucial for the protection of landowners. All-terrain vehicles are getting bigger, faster, and more dangerous. Albertans are becoming more active in the outdoors, looking for picturesque areas to partake in their recreational activities. Rural Alberta provides all of these amenities, and they should be able to be enjoyed by every Albertan. However, accidents are bound to happen, and it should not always be the landowners' or land occupiers' responsibility that the accident took place. Landowners should warn recreational users of situations that may be common practice for the landowner but have the potential to be dangerous for the user.

Furthermore, I believe owners and occupiers need to be responsible if they display willful or reckless conduct towards a recreational user, especially if the end result is injury or death. Having said that, Mr. Chairman, recreational users also need to take responsibility for their choices and their corresponding actions. Bill 208 ensures that. It shifts a greater amount of responsibility to recreational users and balances liability more fairly instead of concentrating liability solely on the owner of the land.

As I have mentioned, rural Alberta is a resource that is just beginning to be tapped by Albertans. As we all try to live healthier lives, we look for activities that provide enjoyment along with the benefits of an active lifestyle. Many of these activities are outdoor pursuits.

As our cities grow and become busier, the escape to rural areas becomes more attractive by every car horn or red light or emergency engine that Albertans hear. Rural Alberta is Alberta's last escape. Without the support of landowners and occupiers we could potentially shut in this great resource. We need these individuals to support the recreational use of their land. The threat of potential lawsuits and bankruptcy has resulted in prohibited land access to recreational visitors.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I encourage all members of the Assembly to vote in favour of Bill 208, if not to give landowners and occupiers peace of mind, then to give Albertans a place to enjoy recreational pursuits and a healthy lifestyle. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise today to support Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003. I'm pleased to join the debate on Bill 208 and would like to commend the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul on bringing it forward.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of Bill 208 is to reduce the legal liability a landowner would face should a recreational user be injured or suffer a loss on his or her land. This would be accomplished by eliminating the common duty of care a landowner or occupier owes an individual under section 5 of the Occupiers' Liability Act when they are invited onto or are granted permission to use the land.

Predominantly we see rural landowners faced with mostly requests to grant access to their land. Simply put, most of the land that has recreational value is found in rural Alberta. Hunters like to use the land in the fall months. Snowmobilers and cross-country skiers like access in winter, while berry pickers, hikers, and off-road seekers seek permission during the summer. Alberta's lands can host a wide variety of different activities on a year-round basis, and rural landowners are constantly questioned for access. Unfortunately, that means that rural property owners also face most of the risk in terms of liability issues. However, I will point out later that Bill 208 is broad enough to protect all types of property owners.

Other provinces have adopted their own ways of dealing with landowner liability issues that surround recreational users. In British Columbia entrants to land willingly accept the risks on their own behalf if they have paid no money or have not been offered accommodation while on the premises. In Ontario trespassers and recreational users are also assumed to willingly accept the risk associated with being on the lands in question. Saskatchewan and Manitoba have added provisions that make some recreational users responsible for their own actions when on someone else's land. These jurisdictions should be commended for taking steps in protecting their respective landowners and occupiers, and Alberta should follow suit.

Mr. Chairman, my remarks today will be based on two different subsections of Bill 208, which would add to the Occupiers' Liability Act. Subsection (1) outlines the responsibility of landowner and visitor when permission to access the land in question is granted while subsection (2) defines what types of land are to be included under the proposed changes. Both subsections are critical in providing clarity as to the responsibilities that occupiers and visitors would take when access is granted to land for recreation.

On my first point, Mr. Chairman, the addition of section 6.1(1) would treat recreational users more along the lines of a trespasser regarding liability. As the current law stands, trespassers assume the risk associated with entering on someone's land without permission. In addition, what Bill 208 proposes is not intended to legislate recreational users. Instead, it simply offers more protection to landowners. Recreational users would assume the risks involved with their respective activity while on the property of another.

It should be pointed out, Mr. Chairman, that this subsection does carry with it some restrictions. Landowners would have increased responsibility if they received "payment for the entry or activity of the person" or if they provided "the person with living accommodation on the premises."

Mr. Chairman, why in the world would a landlord want to let any person on their land for any reason if they could be held liable for a wide range of different incidents which they have no control over? Currently the Occupiers' Liability Act is vague and is open to interpretation. The act does not explain what steps may constitute reasonable care on the part of the occupier nor does it outline when a premise may be considered reasonably safe. When law is open to interpretation, expect to see an increase in litigation. Bill 208 clearly states that recreational users are responsible for their own actions. What could be simpler or make more sense than that?

The reason, Mr. Chairman, that the law was changed in British Columbia was because many private landowners were concerned about the development of the Trans Canada Trail and the liability implications involved when it crossed private lands. In 1998 an amendment was made to reduce the duty of care owed to nonpaying recreationalists on nondeveloped, rural private land. Recreational enthusiasts in British Columbia accept an increased level of responsibility for their own safety. The Trans Canada Trail cuts across Alberta the same as it does in British Columbia. Don't we owe it to our own landowners to protect them in the same way?

Once again, Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that this bill is not meant to take away the rights of the recreational user. I believe that the recreational user may find that this bill will help them in securing permission to use land. With removal of the axe that currently dangles over the necks of landowners that we are asking to share their land, recreational enthusiasts may find more access to private land.

In rural areas occupiers are often approached about granting access to their land for a variety of reasons. Because they are usually asked by members of their own community, they don't want to tell them no. It just isn't neighbourly. But because of liability issues they are forced to tell everyone no. The result is that no one gets to enjoy the land. Mr. Chairman, section 6.1 strengthens the Occupiers' Liability Act by making it clear that recreational users are responsible for themselves while being on someone else's land.

In my eyes the issue of responsibility has gone through many societal changes, and sometimes it feels like nobody is responsible for themselves. We live in an age when parents sue fast-food outlets because their children are overweight and some smokers feel that they need to sue the tobacco companies because after 20 years of smoking, they have lung cancer. People are less willing to take responsibility for themselves, especially when things go wrong. But they should, Mr. Chairman. Bill 208 simply forces recreational users to be more responsible and protects the people that need to be protected in this debate.

I strongly consider Bill 208 to be a commonsense piece of legislation. It is important to remember that this bill is not absolving landowners of all responsibility. They, too, need to take some responsibility for their land. Even if Bill 208 is passed, landowners and occupiers would still be accountable for willful and reckless conduct. That would remain consistent. But when it comes to gopher holes, fallen trees, equipment left in the field, or barbed wire fences, landowners would face fewer risks than they do now.

While I'm on the subject of responsibility of landowners, I would quickly like to make this point: there have been very few incidents where landowners have been sued by recreational users in the past. To me this indicates that most landowners are already fairly responsible when it comes to their land. If someone asked me if they could use my land for recreational activities, I know that I would want to be aware of what activity they planned to undertake, how many people would be participating in it, and how long they would be on my land. I would also make the consideration as to who was asking for permission and what kind of reputation they have. I think most landowners already ask these important questions. I think they understand that they owe some responsibility surrounding the use of their land.

On my second point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to touch on subsection (2), which also would be added to the Occupiers' Liability Act. Subsection (2) lists the types of lands that are included under the change. Like subsection (1), which clearly clarifies the responsibility of the recreational user, subsection (2) clarifies the types of property included in the changes. Again, this is very important as it diminishes the amount of interpretation that can be made in regard to the act.

Under subsection (2) agricultural land, vacant or undeveloped premises, forested or wilderness premises, golf courses during the off-season, utility rights-of-way excluding the structures on them, and reasonably marked recreational trails are included in the provisions laid out in the first subsections. [Mr. Broda's speaking time expired]

Unanimous consent to continue, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Redwater is seeking unanimous consent to be given 10 more minutes.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: I would be glad to give him a couple of minutes of my time. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll go on to page 14 instead of page 1.

It's my pleasure to rise today and support this bill in Committee of the Whole. I think the bill relies on some very obvious principles regarding personal responsibility as well as private property. I think these principles are solid enough and uncontested enough that this bill ought to pass. I believe that second reading debate revealed many solid arguments for Bill 208, but today I wanted to look at the bill itself and provide a few comments and insights relating to the legislation on the ordinary life of an average Albertan.

I think the first thing that strikes me about the bill is its simplicity. It takes a few basic principles and doesn't try to dress them up. Instead, it basically says that unless a person is profiting from a recreational use of their property or unless a person is providing living accommodations to the recreational user, it is a recreational user's responsibility to exercise care and caution when using the land. In most cases it will not be the landowner's fault should the recreational user injure himself.

Section 2 of Bill 208 underscores the difference between the operation of a business and simply being approached for the use of one's land for recreational pursuits. If it's a business, then the user is paying for the use of the land, and the user can and should expect a certain degree of safety when using the land. This seems to be a matter of fair business transaction.

Further, section 2 of Bill 208 speaks to situations in which a landowner is housing a guest or an employee. If the landowner is housing someone or providing accommodation, then it is incumbent upon the landowner to provide safe living arrangements. This doesn't mean that the landowner must bubble wrap everything. What it means, however, is that he must take precautions and provide fair warning to guests if there are any dangerous areas on the property, especially if it's likely that the guest will find himself near or in those areas. In cases where the owner can remedy a hazardous situation or clean up a dangerous area to protect those living on the property, he should do so.

In addition to all this, section 2 of Bill 208 also states something else, something very important. If somebody wants to use an owner's property and that owner simply grants permission, then it's up to the user to take proper precautions regarding using the land. This should, at the very least, involve asking questions about the land, about what to stay away from, and about the appropriateness of certain activities on the land.

Most Alberta landowners are like everyone else. They will do their best to ensure that recreational users have a safe and enjoyable experience on their property. But those Alberta landowners should not be required to take every possible precaution in the expectation that someone might want to use their land. If that's where we want to go, then let's think about what the best precaution is. It's to not let people on the land in the first place, and I don't think we want that.

Mr. Chairman, in relation to that point, section 2 also speaks to the greater use of personal responsibilities within the context of being good neighbours. If a landowner owns a large section of land, chances are that he is going to enjoy recreational pursuits on his own, such as ATVing, hiking, or maybe other things such as horseback riding. Chances are likely that he will not want to deny others the opportunity to enjoy that land as he does.

However, as the current legislation stands, it encourages landowners to say no when they are asked if someone else can use their land for recreational purposes. After all, the landowner is not going to want a recreational user to wreck his ATV or, worse, injure themselves while on his land. Mr. Chairman, you never know how, when, or why someone will end up hurting themselves. It could be a freak accident or a moment of inattention. In most cases where an injury occurs, the landowner isn't sought out by the injured party for some sort of compensation. Most Albertans are honest, hardworking people who will recognize when something is their own fault or when something is an accident.

Most Albertans won't go looking for scapegoats, but some people out there go looking for someone to blame, and there are enough of those people out there too. Remember, it only takes one, and there are many examples to scare others away from letting recreational users on their land. It only takes one case of a landowner unjustly accused of causing a recreational user's injury. This is why Bill 208 is so important.

Section 2 of Bill 208 to a great deal satisfies the concerns of landowners on the following types of land:

- (a) rural premises that are
 - (i) used for agricultural purposes . . .
 - (ii) vacant or undeveloped premises, and
 - (iii) forested or wilderness premises;
- (b) golf courses [during closed seasons]
- (c) utility rights-of-way . . . and
- (d) recreational trails.

This list is fairly comprehensive and thus protects landowners and occupiers of all sorts in the event that the recreational user injures himself for damages his equipment while on a landowner's property.

So we see in section 2 a significant shift from the Occupiers' Liability Act, where it assigns responsibility to the recreational user, in most instances, instead of the owner. Mr. Chairman, this change to the Occupiers' Liability Act certainly rights what looks like a particular wrong in the act.

As I said earlier, the changes held within Bill 208 are changes that are in sync with the general disposition of Albertans when it comes to the issue of personal responsibility and the risk associated with using another person's land for recreational purposes, and I want to emphasize that most Albertans are the sort of people that own up to their actions. This applies to landowners and recreational users, and for the most part Albertans are the sort to help each other out and solve these problems fairly. So this bill corrects what is usually a minor problem but one that can escalate and incorrectly put the blame on landowners and occupiers.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude my comments and ask the members to continue to support Bill 208 through committee and, time willing, third reading debate as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise today and continue debate in committee on Bill 208. I've been very interested in many of the comments that have been made so far, and I look forward to adding my thoughts.

Bill 208 is very solid, and this is being shown today by no amendments being brought forward. In second reading there were very few concerns, if any, that were brought forward in regard to this bill and its effects on liability. The proposed change is something that is definitely needed, and we should very seriously consider endorsing it so that we can offer landowners some protection from unnecessary lawsuits. Of course, we have heard many different stories of how landowners and occupiers can be and have been victimized by lawsuits because the laws in Alberta just do not go far enough to protect these individuals.

Mr. Chairman, landowners are at a bit of a disadvantage when it comes to the recreational use of their land. Under our current laws a person can ask permission, for example, to ride a dirt bike on the land of person X. If permission is granted, that individual is now considered a recreational user, and if the user crashes the dirt bike into a tree, he could sue person X. This scenario has been explained many times in second reading and in many of the comments here in Committee of the Whole.

Now, Bill 208 tries to alleviate this inequity between users and landowners and occupiers by having someone using land for recreational purposes liable, similar to that of a trespasser, as stated in section 2 of the bill, if that user should meet with some disaster while using land for recreational purposes. Treating the user as a trespasser when dealing with liability not only relieves the landowner from being met with frivolous and unnecessary lawsuits, but it also puts some responsibility onto the user of the land, where I think it belongs. I hope this bill will eliminate lawsuits where landowners and occupiers are sued for the stupidity of others.

Of course, in second reading debate we heard all sorts of instances where this bill could have come in handy for many rural Albertans in the past. Unfortunately, the passage of Bill 208 does not do too much for those people now, but at least it will provide some guidelines for recreational users, landowners, and occupiers in the future.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 208 outlines what lands are specifically applied in such cases and who is responsible for the duty of care. The bill lists rural lands, golf courses when not open for playing, utility rights-of-way, and recreational trails reasonably marked as such. These are very specific lands that are specified in the bill. One may ask why golf course lands are included. Well, the reason for this is that there are cases where somebody is out on a leisurely walk through a rural area, which happens a lot out there. On this walk a person decides to cut through a golf course to return to a main path which returns the person to their home, a shortcut, if you will.

Now, before I continue the analogy, let us assume that the leisurely stroll is done after hours and the course doesn't post signs saying that one cannot trespass. They do not have a problem with people walking the course after hours. It's a walk-through, and permission is rarely withheld. Many rural courses give this privilege to their neighbouring community. It's the Alberta way. So we have our walker moving along quite nicely until he begins to cut across the 15th fairway. As he cuts across the fairway, he steps into a sand trap, falls, and subsequently breaks his leg.

Under the current legislation this person could sue the golf course. They can sue because landowners owe a duty of care to all recreational users. Bill 208 reduces the duty of care so that sand trap follies don't happen too often. The golf course is to blame for the blindness of our leisurely walker: is that fair? Golf courses have sand traps. They are there for a reason. They are called hazards. Yet this person can legally sue for his inability to recognize a deep pit of sand. This is why Bill 208 is such a good bill to at least give proper and thoughtful consideration to. If this bill were legislated, our leisurely walker would be owed the same level of liability as a trespasser under our Trespass to Premises Act or our Petty Trespass Act. Mr. Chairman, what this means is that our clumsy leisurely walker would not be able to sue.

Of course, the landowner or land occupier is not allowed to unduly cause harm to the leisurely walker. For instance, the golf course couldn't cover that sand trap with branches and leaves and then not take responsibility for a broken leg if our leisurely walker fell into that covered sandpit. The landowner in that case definitely could be sued. He or she could be sued because he or she had not advised the user that there was an unmarked hazard on the fairway. Of course, you may be thinking that this is silly and that it would never happen. Well, if this were the case, then Bill 208 would not be needed.

Bill 208 tries to level the duty of care owed to visitors and recreational users so that it resembles that of trespassers. What this means according to the Petty Trespass Act and the Trespass to Premises Act is that unless the landowner deliberately creates a danger, i.e. the covered sand trap, then the recreational user is responsible for his own injuries.

Mr. Chairman, it's as easy as that. This is a bill whose time has come. Of course, this may be the point where we say that Alberta will be leading the country in bringing forth this kind of legislation. We were the first province to codify the Occupiers' Liability Act, but sadly we are behind in including recreational users. There are other provinces who have recognized that this issue needed to be addressed, and they promptly stepped up to the plate. Case in point: British Columbia in their legislation clearly makes it so that a person who is using the land for rec purposes will be assuming any risks that are encountered when it is being used.

You see, Mr. Chairman, this bill is the next step in protecting landowners' rights. It is something that we need to seriously think about passing. We should follow the lead of the other provinces across Canada who have taken similar action in protecting landowners and occupiers. We need this bill so that not only landowners will know what their responsibilities are, but as well recreational users of land will know what will happen to them and the responsibility they should hold for their actions if they should fall into a sand trap or crash their dirt bike into a tree.

I urge all members to vote in favour of Bill 208 in committee today and further support this bill throughout the process. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Bill 208
Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users)
Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise in this Assembly this afternoon to move third reading of Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, before I begin my speech, I would like to start by thanking all the hon. members again for their comments and support for this legislation. I understand that this is a subject that affects many members of this Assembly and is a much-needed initiative for Albertans across this province.

As I mentioned at the previous stages of the bill, this legislation would reduce the amount of legal liability that is owed by landowners and occupiers to recreational visitors on their property. Bill 208 will dispel the fear of landowners and ease the burden of allowing recreation users on their premises.

The most common reason given by landowners and land occupiers for denying public access to private property is the issue of liability. This issue of liability may not be an explanation given to the neighbour at the door but undeniably is the reason for reticence in the minds of owners. Unfortunately, litigation is becoming more apparent in our society, and some hold the view that blame should be placed just about anywhere except on the individual or individuals who are truly responsible. Mr. Speaker, I ask: what happened to personal responsibility? Why do people believe they can and should blame others for the choices they make and the actions they take? I believe that the lifestyles and activities Albertans enjoy are being threatened by the increase in litigation and the view that lawsuits are the answer to our problems.

Our province's landscapes have many open spaces and open lands. These lands provide an opportunity for recreation as well as scenic beauty. The lands and the activities contribute to the quality of life of individual Albertans in our communities. In this province there is a surging demand for outdoor recreational activities. The province's vast landscapes allow Albertans to enjoy the great outdoors. However, the opportunities for outdoor recreation are jeopardized by the prohibiting of access to private and public lands by owners and occupiers.

This is not to say that I blame the landowner for not allowing entry to his or her properties. We must keep in mind that the term "recreational user" has a very broad scope. We are not just talking about ATV and snowmobile operators. The definition of a recreational visitor may include anything from walkers, skiers, equestrians, hunters, and fishermen to berry pickers and photographers. Now, one might think: what is the harm in allowing someone access to land if they're only going to pick berries or take pictures? What danger can occur? To some extent, I do believe the chances of something dangerous happening are very remote. However, the problems arise because anyone can sue if they get hurt. A photographer may step on uneven ground and sprain his or her ankle.

Landowners and occupiers do not want to take the risk and, therefore, are hesitant to grant permission even if it is only to allow people to walk across their field.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to shift my focus slightly and address this issue from another perspective. Across the province there are many traditional family farms, ranches, and properties that have been passed down from generation to generation. Neighbours not only have a close relationship with each other, but the families also have a long history. Individuals using land for recreational pursuits and a duty of care that is owing to them have created a challenge to a community's cohesiveness. These lands are no longer an open space where neighbours and friends are granted automatic permission. This has now become a sensitive issue, where landowners contemplate allowing or prohibiting land access.

Mr. Speaker, the liability risk has resulted in a retreat in admitting land entry. This is not because these owners do not want visitors on the property. I know from experience that landowners find it difficult to say no to neighbours and friends. However, it would be even more difficult for these same individuals to watch their friends or neighbours down the road almost lose his or her livelihood because of a lawsuit. The situation leaves the landowner or occupier in a difficult position. Communities no longer have the same closeness or joint policy regarding land entry as they did once before. Recreational opportunities have diminished because landowners and land occupiers want to steer clear of any possible liability threats.

Bill 208 will give individuals the choice or the ability to say yes or no to recreational users pursuing activities on their land. This legislation will provide a safeguard to owners and occupiers, supplying them with the option, without potential risk, of allowing recreational users on their property to enjoy the land and engage in outdoor activities. Bill 208 will not force landowners to open up their land to visitors; instead, it gives them the choice to do so. If given the opportunity without the risk, I believe more owners and occupiers will permit recreational users on the land. I know that I would be more inclined to give my consent to neighbours wanting to enter my property.

With the passage of this legislation more recreational users would be welcome, and landowners and occupiers would have choice without threat to provide outdoor recreational spaces. I urge all my colleagues to once again strongly support this initiative, and I would encourage you to vote in favour of third reading of Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and join debate on Bill 208. I cannot stress to the House how important this bill is to rural Alberta landowners and occupiers. We should seriously consider passing this bill. I am a strong supporter of it, and I hope that those in the House today will do likewise.

As I speak to this bill, a lot of the points that I bring up will have been mentioned already, but I feel they are extremely important and should be reiterated. This bill is important to me because I've had experiences with recreational users of land and the Occupiers' Liability Act. The experiences that I have taken away from those instances have not been positive. The proposed amendments to the act through Bill 208 should have been taken care of a long time ago.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 affects mostly rural landowners and occupiers. The Occupiers' Liability Act as it currently stands does not let landowners and occupiers allow access to their lands for recreational use without the landowner or occupier assuming a large amount of risk. The risk that landowners and occupiers assume is one that they really have no control of. It seems that in today's era of "Oh, I am hurt" or "It's not my fault; who can I sue?" many people in our society are left vulnerable to the silly lawsuits that this kind of attitude brings.

One of the groups that has been left vulnerable to silly lawsuits is landowners and occupiers. I realize that it may be difficult for nonrural members to truly understand how this bill will alter recreational use of land in rural Alberta. In every rural area around the province there are people who enjoy quadding, snowmobiling, even walking across lands that are owned by others. In the past rural Alberta landowners and occupiers have given recreational users free rein over their land as long as they are respectful of that property. Landowners and occupiers used to be extremely generous in allowing recreational users to access their lands, always doing so with a friendly attitude and good intentions. But recently this trend has begun to change. Many landowners and occupiers are slightly worried about giving permission for people to use their land.

There are many reasons for this, but I would like to give the House a personal example of why the attitude in rural Alberta is changing. Throughout the province rural communities are known to hold all kinds of spectacular events. A popular one that used to be done often was poker rallies. In my constituency I was once co-chair of a poker rally that took place at Pine Lake. The rally consisted of snowmobiles that would follow a clearly marked trail across many different fields in a bit of a race to gather playing cards to make a poker hand.

For those of you who are not familiar with snowmobile poker rallies, they are meant for groups of people to get together, ride their snowmobiles, and have fun and enjoyment. Usually there are a couple of different groups or teams, and there are different directions to a secret location or a finishing spot where you can collect prizes or have a party or whatever is at the finish line. Sometimes these rallies are used to raise money for charities, and other times they are for members of clubs to get together to just have fun. Either way, these rallies are great community-building events which entire communities take part in.

As the trail for the rally is designed, organizers have to approach landowners to get permission to have a trail go across their property. In the past landowners or occupiers would not even blink an eye and would grant permission without hesitation. This is what would normally happen for the Pine Lake poker rally. However, one year a participant who was involved in the Pine Lake event decided to leave the clearly marked trail. When he left the trail, he went further into the land of one of the landowners who gave permission for his property to be used for a trail. During this time off the trail, the snowmobiler had a fatal accident, an extremely unfortunate event.

As it turned out, the landowner who had given permission for recreational use of the land was sued for the unfortunate death of the snowmobiler. This landowner had no involvement in the rally other than the fact that he gave permission to use his land, yet he was the one that got sued through no fault of his own. I ask the House: how is that fair? I think that it is completely unacceptable. With the amendment to the Occupiers' Liability Act that is proposed in Bill 208, the duty of care is reduced, and therefore the landowner could deal with the snowmobiler like a trespasser instead of a recreational user. This would have saved the landowner a lot of hardship; instead, an innocent landowner was sued because of his generosity.

So do you think future rallies had an easy time trying to convince landowners to let trails go across their land? Nope. Never again. Why would anyone even think of allowing passage on the land if they felt that they were going to be liable for somebody's misfortune? This is happening across Alberta in many rural areas because of the many frivolous lawsuits that are brought to court as of late. Landowners and occupiers in Alberta are no longer letting people come onto their premises for recreational purposes. This is not because they are unfriendly but because they cannot afford to accept the risk that is involved.

As I mentioned just a few moments ago, Bill 208 lowers the common duty of care of a recreational user to that of a trespasser. I think that this is acceptable because some landowners and occupiers presently allow recreational users onto their property yet advise the user not to tell them when they are there. Sort of like: you can come play, but don't tell me about it. This is in case something happens to the user, and then the landlord will be able to say that the user was trespassing, and therefore they can treat the user as such and avoid costly problems if an accident occurs.

This is what our current Occupiers' Liability Act has reduced rural Albertans to doing, and I don't think that that is proper. The act has allowed people to bring lawsuits forward which should not be coming close to a courtroom. This is why I am in favour of this bill. It is my hope that this amendment to the act will stop people from bringing frivolous lawsuits forward.

But then there may be those of you who think that it is the right of the person who gets injured to be able to sue whoever they please for whatever they want. Well, that may be the case, but I think that this bill takes the onus off the landowner or occupier to prove that it is their negligence that caused the injury. Bill 208 puts the responsibility onto the injured party to prove that it is the user's own fault that caused an accident by reducing the duty of care, as I just alluded to. So the landowner and occupier can still be sued for injuries, but it will be much more difficult for weak arguments to win in court. I think that this will eliminate those lawsuits that are held together by a small piece of thread.

There has been an argument made at one point that this bill might favour one group of Albertans over another, that being landowners and occupiers over normal recreational users. I think this bill brings recreational users and landowners or occupiers onto an even playing field. A recreational user who gets injured under the current legislation really just has to show up in court with a neck brace and will have a good chance of winning because it is up to the landowner to prove that he is not liable. By putting landowners or occupiers and recreational users on an even playing field, I think we will be able to rid our courts of unnecessary lawsuits, which waste a lot of Alberta taxpayers' money.

So on that note I would urge all hon. members to vote in favour of this bill so that rural Alberta can return to the way it once was. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with a great deal of pleasure that I rise today to speak to Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003, a bill that affords Alberta landowners some badly needed protection when it comes to liability issues if they have allowed their land to be used for recreational purposes. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul is to be commended for his attempt to implement change on this very important issue. As a member of the MLA recreational corridor review committee myself I'm also very well aware of the need for legislation such as this and of how concerned many Alberta farmers are about this issue. We certainly heard that message loud and clear as we traveled about the province.

First off, I would like to point out that Alberta's lands, whether owned by individuals, corporations, municipalities, or the provincial or federal government, are varied and vast and are well suited for literally hundreds of recreational uses. When seasons change, new activities are undertaken by many Albertans. Whether it's sledding down a farmer's coulee in the wintertime or picking berries on pastureland in the summer, we are all very fortunate as Albertans to be able to enjoy such a diverse and bountiful landscape.

But there are problems. In our increasingly litigious society the fear of lawyers is dramatically increasing amongst landowners' minds. Access to use their land is therefore being threatened for all. Bill 208 would afford landowners an added level of protection against potential lawsuits dealing with injury or loss that could occur after they granted permission to recreational enthusiasts to use his or her land. Mr. Speaker, this would be achieved by lowering the level of legal redressability to the same level which is afforded to a trespasser. It takes the legal risk off the landowner and puts it onto the user, where it belongs.

Currently under the act trespassers are not afforded the common duty of care that invited visitors are, which is why farmers are so reluctant to give permission to strangers to use their land. They aren't trespassers anymore if they have been given permission first, and people are reluctant to say no, because it isn't neighbourly. People do want to be nice, but if they are nice, then they risk a lawsuit, and this should not be happening. Visitors would become more responsible for risks involved with using another's land for their recreation. Bill 208 removes the liability factor of the occupier except or unless it is really a case of gross willful or reckless conduct.

Mr. Speaker, by adding a new section to the Occupiers' Liability Act, Bill 208 would close the door on unnecessary lawsuits property owners and leaseholders might face when allowing access to their land for recreational purposes. As it currently stands, landowners must afford permitted visitors with a common duty of care. The problem is that the current act does a poor job of defining how this reasonable care is to be achieved. This lack of clarity makes the act open to interpretation and, consequently, open to litigation.

Also, Mr. Speaker, it is unreasonable to hold occupiers, especially in rural areas, absolutely accountable for every hazard that might be on their land. Items such as barbed wire fences, dugouts, and farm equipment are necessary items found on farms and ranches, but they could be considered hazards for snowmobilers or hikers. How much control should individuals be expected to have over items like rocks, fallen trees, and livestock? It is easy to see that the risks are out there when it comes to enjoying recreation in a rural area.

Those who make decisions about their own recreation activities should also be aware and responsible about the risks involved. Unrealistic expectations are currently placed on landowners and occupiers who allow recreational activities on their land. We are asking them to be held accountable for every stone, branch, and gopher hole that someone might trip over on their property, and these are not fair expectations.

Mr. Speaker, this bill implements common sense into the Occupiers' Liability Act. As a recreational user if I approach a landowner about my desire to access his or her land to perform my activity of choice, then why should I expect someone else to be responsible for my decisions if they go awry or result in my hurting myself? There are too many variables that landowners have no control over to hold them responsible for every possibility that could occur on their land. We have heard several hypothetical and some real examples that show why the current act does not work properly and that property owners are being left open to, in my view, unnecessary and unfair liability risks.

One of the main reasons I am supporting Bill 208 is because it brings clarity to the Occupiers' Liability Act. Recreational users and landowners alike will know exactly who is responsible for injury or loss should incidents occur. This clarity will not only eliminate many problems of assigning fault should incidents occur, but relationships between current land occupiers and recreationalists will be strengthened. Mr. Speaker, I believe occupiers would be more apt to allow for recreation to occur on their lands if they were not constantly worried and in fear that they will be held responsible should something unfortunate happen.

Currently banning access to property is the only surefire method occupiers have to make sure that they don't end up being sued for another's mishap. I know several instances, especially in rural Alberta, where occupiers have taken this action to protect themselves. Many farmers and ranchers won't allow anyone on their land. To be fair to all, they have isolated their land because they don't want to deal with the consequences of another's recklessness. It's hard to fault an individual for making a choice based on protecting oneself. Should Bill 208 pass, I believe occupiers will be more likely to allow greater access to their land, and Albertans will be allowed to use more of Alberta's private land for recreational purposes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are those who will argue that under the current act an occupier may not face legal action if a visitor is willing to accept the risk associated with their visit. I know that this all sounds very good in theory. I would like to point out that it would be very difficult for a rancher or farmer to prove that an individual willingly accepted all the possible risks associated with their visit. In addition to that, I don't know many farmers or ranchers who have the time or the resources to draw up waivers for every person that would like to visit their land, and many would be embarrassed to make a relative or a friend or a neighbour enter into a legal signed agreement on a request that seems very innocent at the time.

The right way to solve this problem is to implement legislation that is consistent for all situations. Let's not put the onus on every farmer and rancher to make visitors absolve their common duty of care. Bill 208 puts everyone in the same boat and alleviates occupiers from enduring processes like these to protect themselves just to make their land available.

Mr. Speaker, when dealing with such issues, it is important to look at the big picture. I will attempt to do that now.

Contained in the Alberta government's business plan of 2003 to 2006 are some words I would like to share today. In describing what makes Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit is this passage.

It means maintaining strong and viable rural and urban communities, protecting wildlife and parks, and promoting the diversity and excitement of Alberta's cultural, arts and recreational opportunities.

It means promoting safety and ensuring Albertans' security.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to expand on two points made in that dialogue. First, in regard to maintaining recreational opportunities by reducing the liability risk landowners face when allowing others onto their land, we are promoting and expanding these recreational opportunities for Albertans. We are improving on the vision we have outlined as a government in our business plan and improving on our goal of promoting recreational opportunities in Alberta. Second, in regard to promoting safety and ensuring Albertans' security, we are creating an atmosphere where our citizens are more responsible for their own regard, and we are providing security to occupiers and landowners who share their land with others.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the idealistic words written in this year's government business plan talk directly to the Alberta advantage, and I believe Bill 208 is an opportunity to provide action toward the promises we have made to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, making individuals more responsible for themselves while on land that is not their own is not a foreign concept. With respect to Crown grazing leases similar changes have already been approved through the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. By passing Bill 208, we would end up treating all land in a similar fashion. Why should we differentiate between Crown leases and private land?

Also, many other jurisdictions have recognized that this type of legislation is important as well. British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and Prince Edward Island for a variety of different reasons have all taken steps to give occupiers greater protection from liability issues where recreation is concerned. Mr. Speaker, it is time to afford that same protection to Alberta landowners. There is no reason in my mind why we can't be as progressive as these other provinces have been on this issue.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to point out once again that Bill 208 will provide some clarity to the current Occupiers' Liability Act. It fairly assesses responsibility associated with recreation on other people's land. This clarity will prevent incidents from heading to court as there is less room for interpretation to occur within the act. With expectations clearly laid out in the Occupiers' Liability Act, all parties will have a better understanding of what the liability implications are in case of an incident. This, I believe, will eliminate future litigation processes.

Mr. Speaker, as I have already stated, I believe much good can come from this bill if landowners are further protected. I urge all colleagues to vote for this bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and share my views as well as my support for Bill 208.

A few years ago in the news headlines from the United States we learned of a New Mexico woman and her cup of coffee. After scalding herself with hot coffee that she had purchased from a McDonald's Restaurant, she proceeded with a lawsuit that held the fast-food giant liable for her burning herself. The case proceeded to court, and the woman won substantial recompense for damages.

What does this case have to do with Bill 208? A sentiment that I heard several times about this case was amusement with a hint of disbelief that this could be happening. One of the most popular comments that I heard about this case was: surely this would not happen in Canada. Well, Mr. Speaker, recently an Alberta lady was awarded more than $70,000 for slipping in some doggie doo. Yes, she stepped in it. She wasn't pushed or forced.

So I'm afraid that I have to disagree. These types of lawsuits do happen in Canada on a very regular basis. An individual is hurt and in some cases starts looking for someone to blame, someone to hold responsible for his or her misfortune. This doesn't happen all the time, of course, but it does happen often enough so as to be a general risk for people who may be held responsible. Canada is becoming a litigious society, and lawsuits for damages are becoming an ever more common event.

As the Occupiers' Liability Act stands today, landowners and land occupiers open themselves up to enormous risk if they allow visitors to come onto their property. Under the Occupiers' Liability Act the common duty of care that landowners owe to persons they allow to be on their property places a very large obligation on the landowner. Common duty of care is open to much interpretation, and this leads to some uneasiness on the part of landowners and land occupiers. If a person is injured while on private property and decides to file a lawsuit against the landowner, it will be left to the courts to decide whether the landowner is at fault. This, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps at the core of the purpose of Bill 208. The fact that the court has the power to decide whether or not a landowner was in the wrong may very well make landowners nervous and unwilling to allow visitors onto their properties.

If a visitor is on private property and is injured, he or she has the right to file a lawsuit against the landowner. The individual can claim bodily damages, damages to equipment, and lost wages among other items. These claims may be very substantial and could cause enormous financial burden for the landowner, possibly causing the landowner to lose the very property on which the accident took place.

So, Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 is not proposing to eliminate the responsibility of landowners or land occupiers. However, what this legislation does propose is to reduce the liability owed to recreational users to the same level that is owed to trespassers. This means that recreational users would have to accept the risks that are present when engaging in recreational activities on private property. Landowners and land occupiers would still owe trespassers the level of care for anyone on their properties. Presently, if willful or negligent acts on behalf of the landowner cause an accident to befall a trespasser, the landowner is still responsible for these actions. This same level of responsibility would be applicable to recreational users if the changes proposed by Bill 208 are passed.

The recent passage of Bill 16, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, will change the legislation with regard to leased lands. The passage of Bill 16 shows just how necessary it is for us to pass Bill 208. Bill 208 would amend the current Occupiers' Liability Act to cover a broader spectrum of private property. These properties would include not only agricultural lands but also golf courses that are not open for playing, utility rights-of-way, and recreational trails. Private landowners feel that they need to protect themselves from a possible lawsuit, and this is often why they do not allow visitors on their property. The number of injury lawsuits in Canada and Alberta is on the rise, and landowners see this as a threat to themselves.

Mr. Speaker, in preparing to speak here today, research was conducted into civil lawsuits that concerned occupiers' liability acts across the country. There is an increasing number of cases that are being brought to trial under the umbrella of the occupiers' liability acts in Canada. One that caught my particular attention was a case in British Columbia.

On a June night in 1993 a man climbed a barbed-wire fence and began crossing a pasture. The bull that was grazing in the pasture charged the man, knocked him down, and broke the man's hip. Now, this gentleman lay in the pasture for five days until an employee of the farm found and rescued him. The man who was crossing the pasture laid charges against the farm under the Occupiers' Liability Act of British Columbia . . .

Mr. Lukaszuk: How was the bull?

Rev. Abbott: I think the bull was fine.

. . . stating that it was the fault of the landowner that the bull was not kept under control and that there was no warning of the fierce nature of the bull. Can you believe that, Mr. Speaker? He expected to have a warning sign that this bull may be dangerous. However, in this case, thankfully, the judge ruled that the man was a trespasser, and therefore the landowner was found not to be at fault. Now, that was a good one, and that's no bull.

But there are two points about this case that concern me greatly. First of all, the fact that the man who willingly decides to walk across a pasture that is not his own without the consent of the landowner feels that he has a right to bring charges against the landowner. That's ridiculous. This man is not even a visitor; he's a trespasser. Yet he felt that he was justified in suing the landowner for damages for an action that he freely chose to take. Freely chose.

My second concern with this case is the fact that this issue was decided by the Supreme Court of British Columbia. That's right, Mr. Speaker. As I said, the man trespassed, he was charged by a bull, and under the Occupiers Liability Act of British Columbia they felt that he was justified in suing the owners of the farm. Now, it concerns me greatly that this issue had to be decided in a provincial Supreme Court when this man was clearly a trespasser.

While this example is from British Columbia, a case like this could easily have taken place in Alberta, perhaps even in Drayton Valley, under the current Occupiers' Liability Act. If the judge had decided in favour of the plaintiff and awarded this man damages, the effects on that farm could have been disastrous, devastating. It is possible that the landowners would have been forced to sell their land in order to pay this trespasser the damages. Cases like this are becoming commonplace within Canada's judicial system, and it is time that we enacted legislation to protect landowners and occupiers from lawsuits.

There is one other case that I would like to briefly discuss – you guys will be interested in this – just to show how possible it is that a private landowner could have legal action brought against him. Picture a beautiful day in June 1996. A woman and her friends stop at a provincial park campsite in British Columbia to have a picnic. The lady is walking to the picnic table from her car. She trips over a rock, and she falls and fractures her left hip and elbow.

Now, that's an unfortunate accident – no one will argue that – and it's too bad that she sustained such an injury from such a simple fall. However, this woman did not accept the fact that an accident had happened and that she was responsible for her own actions. She proceeded to file a lawsuit against the government of British Columbia for damages, claiming that the government did not fulfill its duty under the Occupiers Liability Act of B.C.

This woman tripped over a rock, felt that it was anybody's fault but her own, and guess what? This case was decided by the Supreme Court of British Columbia in 1999. Fortunately, the courts found that the government of British Columbia was not at fault, but once again we have a case of a person that is unwilling to accept responsibility for their own actions.

Now, I've chosen these two cases from B.C. because of how amazing they are. However, cases just like these are in the archives of the Alberta Provincial Court as well. Mr. Speaker, there's a growing trend in our society to not accept responsibility for one's own actions. In the two court cases I've highlighted here, the plaintiffs sought to blame anyone but themselves. A person trips and falls. It has to be somebody else's fault; right?

I am not saying that every Albertan is like this. In fact, I would say that there are relatively few people who would act this way in Alberta. However, it is possible that there are some. It's impossible for a private landowner to know who thinks this way and who doesn't. So in this climate a landowner would not be acting responsibly to allow visitors onto their property. The potential for loss is enormous.

This is why Bill 208 must be supported. It will give private landowners and occupiers the protection that they need to allow other people to enjoy the beautiful vistas located on privately owned land in Alberta.

Please support this. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and offer some of my thoughts and comments on Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003, brought forward by my friend and colleague the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. In my remarks today I would like to present a balanced view of Bill 208, focusing on some of the very positive aspects of this piece of legislation while at the same time drawing your attention to some of the concerns that this bill raises.

Bill 208 undoubtedly addresses some of the major liability concerns raised by Alberta's landowners and occupiers and is, in my opinion, a step in the right direction. Over the past several years there have been a number of landowners and occupiers who have raised concerns with regard to the Occupiers' Liability Act. They feel that the act places the burden of responsibility squarely upon their shoulders in instances where recreational users and visitors injure themselves while using their land for recreational purposes. These same owners and occupiers feel that the act forces them to undertake unrealistic and unreasonable measures in order to ensure that the risk of injury to an individual is kept to a minimum.

Mr. Speaker, in essence, what the bill does is remove the common duty of care aspect from the act so that the liability owed to recreational users and visitors is exactly the same as the liability owed to trespassers or those entering lands without permission. With this, the bill hopes to balance the burden of responsibility between owners and occupiers and recreational users and visitors.

Upon reading it for the first time, Mr. Speaker, I had nothing but unqualified support for Bill 208 and the goals it sets out to accomplish. However, after reading it a few more times and getting a grasp of the issue at hand, I have come across a few concerns which I would like to raise. While I completely agree with the premise of this bill, which aims to reduce the burden of liability that the landowners and occupiers owe to recreational users and visitors, I'm not thoroughly convinced that it would be most appropriate to lower this burden of liability to the same level that is owed to ordinary trespassers. My main concerns with regards to this issue are twofold.

Now I realize that under the amendments proposed by Bill 208, users and visitors can still sue landowners for willful or reckless conduct. However, I am concerned that we could be sending a wrong message to landowners by removing the common duty of care from the Occupiers' Liability Act. My fear is that owners may interpret this the wrong way and assume that they no longer owe any liability to those who have asked permission to access their property and could in turn act in a negligent manner. Mr. Speaker, a positive alternative to its removal is to amend the common duty of care clause in order to reduce the burden of liability placed upon the owners and occupiers and keep it in balance with the burden placed upon the recreational users and visitors. This would permit a balanced and fair approach to the issues at hand.

My last concern, Mr. Speaker, with regard to Bill 208 has to do with one of the premises that the bill is based upon. It argues that by shifting the burden of responsibility, the bill would eliminate the potential for landowners and occupiers to be held liable for actions committed by irresponsible and reckless recreational land users. However, after consulting the Alberta Law Reform Institute's report on issues of recreational liability, which was released in the year 2000, I was surprised to see that in court cases dealing with recreational-use injuries in Alberta, occupiers were generally not being found liable for those injuries. This tends to suggest that the problem at hand is not as bad as some may tend to believe.

However, I can still understand the fact that even having to go to a trial in the first place tends to leave a bad taste in one's mouth. I cannot blame the honest and responsible landowners and occupiers for being hesitant to allow others onto their properties after such an ordeal.

As a result, Mr. Speaker, despite some of my concerns, I am willing to support Bill 208 because it is currently the best alternative to solving the land accessibility problems affecting rural Alberta. I'm a firm believer that access should be available for all of those individuals seeking adventure within our province's backcountry, and it's my hope that this bill will ease some of the fears and pressures placed upon our landowners and occupiers.

Mr. Speaker, I would now on behalf of the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul move third reading of Bill 208 and call the question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has moved on behalf of the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul third reading of Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003. Is there anybody else who wishes to speak on this bill?

Mr. Danyluk: I'd just like to close.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul to close debate. I'm concerned that the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo made a statement that he was closing this bill on your behalf, but you may proceed.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I feel that the intentions and the values of this bill have been adequately addressed. While some valid concerns have been raised, I would like to extend my gratitude and thanks to all of the hon. members for their comments and support this afternoon.

As we have all heard this afternoon and during second reading and Committee of the Whole, the purpose of Bill 208 is to reduce the amount of liability landowners and occupiers owe to recreational users. I believe this legislation will ease the fear that many owners and occupiers currently hold and will allow them the comfort of welcoming recreational visitors on their property.

Mr. Speaker, I believe very strongly in the objectives of Bill 208 and the benefits it will bring to Albertans. Landowners and occupiers will now have the option without the immense risks of granting entrance to their property for visitors who are engaged in recreational pursuits.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know if I have to move it again or it has been moved. What are you accepting?

At this time I would like to move third reading of Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003. Thank you.

Bill 209

School (Fees Elimination) Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands I move second reading of Bill 209, School (Fees Elimination) Amendment Act, 2003.

Now, Mr. Speaker, speaking to the bill, the bill addresses two important issues. The first, of course, and the most important is the whole notion of school fees, and the second is the concern about parent fund-raising. I think that part of the problem goes back to 1995, when local school boards could levy taxes to fund schools and to supplement government grants. We're all aware that there were some problems with that because the amount of money that a board could raise was related to the wealth of the community that they served. So we had jurisdictions like Strathcona county, with a rich machinery and equipment tax because of the refineries there, able to raise a great deal with respect to school levies while other jurisdictions, some in the far north, were very limited in the kind of tax base that they could draw upon and the manner in which they could finance their schools. As a consequence, school funding across the province varied very widely. I think it was a problem that at the time was labeled the $30 million problem. Thirty million dollars would have equalized the payments across the province.

Trustees dealt with the problem for years and never were able to resolve it, and the government of the day decided that they would resolve it, and that was by taking taxing authority away from school boards, gathering all the money in and redistributing it on a per pupil basis. The principle behind that was that all the children in the province are of equal value when it comes to spending from the public purse. I think that's a principle that all of us can endorse, Mr. Speaker.

Unfortunately, the equity move was not followed up with an adequacy move, so although we now had students across the province all making the same draw on the public purse without respect to their geography, they were just about all equally poor. Some boards had surpluses that they were able to draw upon for a number of years, others had other provisions that they were able to make for a while, and some under the funding formula had more money than they ever had before. But for the most part they were left cash strapped, particularly the large urban boards.

I think you can trace back the history about the concern for fees and the concern for parent fund-raising to that government policy in 1994. Schools and school boards with no other source of income other than the provincial allocations in the budget were really left cash strapped, so they started looking for ways to supplement the moneys that were being spent in schools. They turned, of course, to school fees, and as any MLA can attest to, each September there are a spate of parent complaints about the number of dollars that they're being asked to contribute in the form of fees to their youngsters' education.

I had a mother call me in September indicating that it was costing her about $600 a student to enroll her students in schools. True enough; some of that was for things that I think can be a legitimate charge on a parent's purse. Much of it was concerned with instruction. Her complaint was not only the amount of money that was being spent but that with the levying of some course fees, students were now being excluded from some courses. Some students wouldn't admit that their parents didn't have the money to pay the fees, and others were just deterred from taking courses because of the fees for a variety of reasons. Fees started to loom as a problem.

One of the things that's changed over that period of time since 1994 is the expectation now that there will be fees, and that's a huge change, Mr. Speaker, from the history of this province not that many years ago. I can remember the point of time when the Edmonton public schools not only did not charge fees but provided, for the primary grades, student supplies. The scribblers and the pens and the paper that students used were provided by the school district. Those were in the days when those boards didn't have a lot of resources. So even in those times when the boards were scrimping, they saw fit to make sure that students were adequately equipped and didn't lose out because of the fees that were going to be charged and the fees that we charge today.

So as I indicated, fees now have become the norm. What this bill does is to ask us to look back at that and revisit the whole notion of fees and what's happened and where we're going with respect to a public education system that's predicated on youngsters being able to attend regardless of the socioeconomic power of their parents. I think that what this bill gets at is that it asks us to revisit our commitment to a publicly funded education system that's open to all regardless of the ability of parents to pay the fees.

The second part of the bill, Mr. Speaker, talks about parent fund-raising. It's been a concern. The government, virtually for years in this Assembly, has had a minister stand up and say: parents are not fund-raising for basics. I think the Learning Commission put a lie to that assertion because they heard from parents that they are in fact fund-raising for basics. In some cases there's a bit of a shell game played in schools so that they can claim that the fund-raising money isn't being used for basics, but in fact parents are being very creative in finding ways of funneling money into schools so that basics can be covered.

The issue that it has raised is the whole issue of: what is basic? The Learning Commission, in one of the latter recommendations, I think a recommendation in the late 90s, near the end of the report, asks that this be rectified and that there be a list of what is considered basic provided for parents to try to bring to an end once and for all the debate about what is basic and what isn't. I think it's going to be a very difficult task for someone to undertake just trying to decide what is basic in what situation, and is it basic in another? Nevertheless, the Learning Commission report has charged us with that.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I'd adjourn debate on Bill 209.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we call it 5:30 p.m. and reconvene at 8 this evening.

Automobile Insurance

512. Mr. MacDonald moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to strike an all-party committee to study the rising premium rates for automobile insurance, insurance companies handpicking clients, and increasing insurance claims in the province.

[Debate adjourned November 24: Dr. Pannu speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to speak today to the motion from the hon. member about forming a committee to study car insurance, and I guess that you have to look at what the result of this committee would be were it to be formed.

We're going to look at the problems. Well, first off, that's pretty simple. We know that we've got some extraordinarily high prices in the insurance business right now. We know that some people are being dropped unexplained. We know that for no apparent reason coverages have disappeared. We know all the problems. We know that the insurance companies probably haven't been as transparent or as forthcoming with their information. Where is the money going, the money that we're paying as the premiums? So, yes, we need to find that out, but we certainly don't need to look very far into what the problem is.

We need to find out, then, is the money that they're paying being properly spent? The government recognized this a year ago or so and started to follow the money, as they say. Where's the problem? So we determined: is it the cost of the vehicles? Certainly, they're worth more money. Certainly, labour is up. Certainly, it costs more to fix them. Is that part of it? Maybe partly. Certainly not the biggest part. Is it the medical bills? Well, medical costs have gone up, but the amount they pay into the system in Alberta hasn't changed radically. So that's not a big part. Is it pain and suffering? Possibly that's their intention. Certainly not some of the lawyers, but these are all some of the issues that they've identified.

So, yes, we have to get to the bottom of where the money goes. Is it covering what they say? We've done these, and we've started the process back now of taking all of these issues and more under consideration and starting to rebuild the insurance industry from the point of transparency and accountability.

Now, the member would like a committee so that we could get more public input, but all the members of this Assembly get public input probably on a daily basis, often more than we want. So I think we're getting public input fairly regularly. Even in a process of government not only the public has input into this, but we have the media input. We have the committees that we sit on. We go through the process of caucus and cabinet, and in all the bills there is Committee of the Whole that's dealt with in here which is the committee where it should be dealt with.

So we have to decide what would be the point of this committee. Quite frankly, I think the opposition have determined what their outcome would be when we study insurance, and that's government insurance. There haven't really been any suggestions about any other options except that if government ran it, then things would be better and cheaper and the sun would shine and then we'd all be done and go home. That's simply why we don't want this committee: because not only is it not true; it's a very simplistic view of an outrageous idea.

Just to back that up, Mr. Speaker, I want to read you a little letter from a fellow in my constituency that lived in B.C. and now resides in mine. He says that he has heard from some MLAs representing an Edmonton area that spoke out in favour of a process similar to those of B.C.'s referring to a study, and he says this.

I lived in British Columbia from 1966 to 1997, during which period of time, of course, the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia was formed, as a government based insurance monopoly. That's how it's done, government.

On the day that we changed from private insurance to government insurance, the premium for the vehicle we were driving at the time exactly doubled. When we left B.C. in 1997, we operated and insured two vehicles. The comparison between the two provinces at that time was that the total for insurance for both vehicles in Alberta was slightly less than . . . one vehicle had been costing . . . in B.C.

Much the same as the Premier of Saskatchewan has touted Saskatchewan insurance as the panacea, and I guess we would have to say to them: if his auto insurance in Saskatchewan even breaks even and his Crown corporations make money, how on earth did he get $12 billion in debt? So there are costs that maybe they don't want to show in some of the programs that they run.

I'm not sure which fellow said about statistics being like a bikini: what they reveal is interesting, and what they conceal is very vital. Well, when you pick statistics from any organization, be it insurance or real estate or any business, you can cherry-pick the statistics you want and put them in the place you are. So if you take a fictitious person and a fictitious rate and put them in a fictitious argument, you can have a lower rate than the real world has.

Mr. Speaker, because I live in Lloydminster bordering Saskatchewan government insurance – and there is no question that many young people in Alberta go across into Lloydminster and buy their insurance. It's cheaper for the young kids, particularly young kids with bad records. There's no question. I'll grant to our fellow opposition people that if you're a bad driver and young, government insurance is the way to go. But if you'd just meet the hundreds of people I meet in Lloydminster on my visits down there, they say: don't ever dream for a minute that government insurance is the way to go. It is a bureaucratic nightmare.

One of the reasons why. One of the only two ways that the insurance companies have of collecting money is premiums and then deductibles, and what they find in these government-run insurance schemes is primarily fault with everybody. There's no reason to blame someone and make them pay the deductible and you're clear. They need all the money. So, as in British Columbia, they've become masters at assessing partial blame in every accident so that they can collect a premium from you and a premium from whoever ran into you, and they're quite happy about that. That's their only other stream of money. So if you want to up the streams of money . . .

In Saskatchewan rather than put the price onto your insurance up front, put it on your driver's licence, so if you get a ticket, your insurance might not go up, but we have many people that come in where a driver's licence cost them $500 or $600 a year. I get faced with outrage regularly in Alberta from drivers' licences that cost $60 for five years.

So there's a cost. There's no magic solution. If you're going to pay out this many dollars, you have to collect this many dollars. The solution lies in determining what's the best way to monitor the industry to ensure that we're paying fair amounts, that the payouts aren't going to the middlemen, be it lawyers or whoever, that it's to people that are hurt, fairly compensated, and get on with it. No more, no less. Fix what's damaged. Put people back the way they were.

Quite frankly, I don't know anything that government runs that I think couldn't be run better. That might just be my opinion, but my 47 or 48 years would dictate that government hasn't really been good at administering hardly anything they do.

I just want to conclude by saying that forming a committee would not only be redundant; it would be a typical Liberal way: if you can't understand it, study it; if you can't get the studying done, get a committee, and if you can't get on the committee, complain.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, that was a most interesting intervention from the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. He started out talking about public input and whether or not we really needed it because, of course, we get so much public input, and of course the example he gave of the public input he got was somebody who was quoting him information based on premium information in the 1970s when the public insurance started up. So it's hardly the most current public input that one could expect.

He went on to talk about the tremendous debt in Saskatchewan. Of course, we all know or we should know that the huge deficits in Saskatchewan were the responsibility of the Devine Conservative government that ran up record deficits, almost bankrupted the province, not to mention that a number of members of that government ended up in jail. Some, I believe, are still there for defrauding the taxpayers. It was the job of the New Democratic Party government of Roy Romanow to try and wrestle the deficit back down and start coming in with balanced budgets. They managed to balance the budget in Saskatchewan before the government here was able to do so and with a lot less money to do it, I might add.

So he goes on to talk about the city of Lloydminster in his constituency, which is, of course, on the boundary between Alberta and Saskatchewan, and talk about how it's only young kids with bad driving records that have a better deal on their insurance than the system here in Alberta with private insurance. I'm sure that his constituents would be very interested to hear that comment from their elected representative, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that the people in Lloydminster are very familiar with the advantage for many categories, most categories I would submit, in terms of rates to the extent that the Consumers' Association of Canada indicated that one could lower their rates by $850 a year just by crossing the street in the city of Lloydminster for many categories of drivers.

I want to indicate that I support the motion that's been made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar notwithstanding the fact that New Democrats have a clear position on what the answer is and we are taking that out to the public. We believe that it would be advantageous for all members of the Assembly to hear the public on the different proposals, hear the response of the public to the government proposal, hear the response of the public to the proposal of the New Democratic Party, and listen to voters rather than try to ram through a quick political fix, which is what, unfortunately, is actually going on. So I think it would be useful.

The difference between getting input from people who can remember the '70s and talk to you in the grocery store and actually sitting down and having some public hearings and allowing people to make formal presentations to their elected representatives is vast, Mr. Speaker. It's a tremendous difference, and one cannot just trivialize or minimize the difference. It's very important, and I believe that it is a useful thing to do and that it is not a contradiction to have a position in mind when you go out and talk to the public because you might learn something. You might be persuaded that your position is not exactly correct.

Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate once again for the record that auto insurance in this province has been regulated by the government since the Lougheed government, since the Lougheed days. That means, of course, that all of the increases that individuals have received in their auto insurance have been approved by the government, and now the government is trying to correct their negligence in respect to their responsibility to adequately regulate this industry.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to conclude that I appreciate the motion that has been made. I think it would be valuable for all members of the Assembly, and I think that the public would like a chance to get some things off their chests with respect to auto insurance, and I think it couldn't help but provide and shed some light on this issue for all members of the Assembly. So I would urge all members to vote in favour of this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise tonight and speak to Motion 512, sponsored by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I would like to offer a few comments to the debate regarding the idea of forming an all-party committee to study the insurance issue, an issue which is clearly very important to many Albertans.

It comes as no surprise that the member opposite is presenting such a motion for debate. After all, this is an issue which has certainly caught Albertans' and especially the media's attention. I would expect that proactive opposition members would want to join the parade in speaking up on this issue, especially if they thought they had some popular and easy-sounding solutions to offer. Of course, all of us, opposition or not, have heard from many of our constituents about how their insurance rates have gone up over the past few years, such that the idea of striking a committee to investigate does seem like a natural and fitting idea. So I congratulate the hon. member opposite for taking a proactive approach in bringing forward this motion to strike a committee.

What the member must not have liked about the current situation, however, is that this government already did strike a committee to study and investigate this issue. The government had already been looking into this issue with our own government committee for a long time, such that this motion appears redundant now, I must say. And that is how our system works. The majority of the people voting in the last election elected us to be the government, so we get to form government committees to develop our policies, and we put those policies forward as being our government's ideas and position.

The opposition then gets to put forward their own ideas, which they are welcome to do anytime, if they have any. There is absolutely nothing stopping them from putting forward their own ideas, and indeed the hon. member opposite may well wish to strike an opposition committee of their own to advance different ideas from what we as the government are advancing, and then we can all debate them in this all-party committee that we call the Legislature.

The Deputy Speaker: Just so we're really clear on this, hon. member, the chair has on occasion risen to inform various members that a private member's public bill is not a government bill. So, too, it's true that these motions are not government motions; they're private member's motions. Does that help to clear that? Thank you.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, it appears that in the last election the citizens of Alberta liked the ideas better on this side of the House, and that's why they voted for us. So it strikes me that this call for an all-party committee is just not necessary because that's what we do here in the Legislature. It's trying to do through the back door that which one couldn't do through the front door; namely, advance policies and ideas different from what we are advancing, which is contrary to what Albertans said when they voted for our ideas and our committee's solutions.

Mr. Speaker, our Finance department has been looking at this problem for more than a year now. We have not been neglecting the problem at all, as some might surmise from such a call to strike a new committee. In fact, we have already been working on solutions to this issue for a long time now, solutions that will benefit all Albertans and not what many might regard as superficial, simple solutions to complex issues, such as the notion of setting up a government-owned insurance monopoly, much as that simple-sounding and somewhat popular but incorrect solution might appeal to some.

To us this is not a 15-second sound bite issue. This is something that has been studied for a long time. Mr. Speaker, it does occur to me that perhaps the only beneficial potential of such a motion would be the opportunity for members on the opposite side of the House to get up to speed on the insurance issue and gain an education on the subject of insurance from experts on our government committee, and that is perhaps even why this motion has been put forward, purely speculating of course. But I am a strong believer in education myself, and perhaps that would be a very laudable goal in and of itself, to educate our opposition in such complex matters. While I don't wish to be unkind here, I might observe that it's an education that appears to be badly needed, but unfortunately I don't think that educating opposition members on such subjects is really a priority of this government nor what Albertans would expect from us.

Moving on, I would just like to remind the House that this government has already been looking at this issue with a government committee for some time, and striking an all-party committee to just study it further really would be a waste of taxpayers' time and money. Opposition parties get to advance their own ideas and get to debate against ours almost anytime they want within and without the Legislature and always in the court of public opinion, where it belongs, and it's up to them to learn about such matters and, if able, to come up with better ideas and arguments of their own.

So, then, what would be the need for an opposition member to call for a formalized all-party committee to do what he can already do, which is to oppose our government's solutions in order to advance an opposition profile and solution instead? I say: why not let Albertans be the judge of who has the better ideas rather than trying these types of backroom strategies designed to thwart our ideas quietly while loudly trumpeting simplistic solutions of their own using our platform to do it from?

We have already had a group that we have confidence in study this issue, and they have recommended solutions to us that we like, solutions that will give us some stability in dealing with this problem, and that is what I feel the problem is with Motion 512. There is no way, in my mind, that an all-party committee will provide any increased stability nor provide anything better than the people who are already investigating this issue have done. Because of the contention and complete ideological division that is likely to occur, such a committee may well come up with much worse solutions. I think that this motion is a poor attempt to fix our insurance problems. The motion is redundant and unneeded at this time. There are problems in the insurance industry as we debate this issue. I readily admit that; however, I don't believe the problems can be fixed through an all-party committee who will just continue to study the problem ad infinitum. I don't think another committee will do anything but create conflict for Albertans.

This government is all about finding meaningful solutions and solid solutions for Albertans. Let us look briefly at what we are doing to help solve this problem already. The government has begun to address this problem by first introducing Bill 33 and now Bill 53. The intention, which I support, is that if a person gets into an accident, they will not lose any income nor lose any assets as a result, but they should also not be able to make a profit from the accident. Of course, profiting from accidents is what has been the big concern of everyone for some time now. We have people who get rear-ended and then wind up suing for hundreds of thousands of dollars for what many would consider questionable injuries. This is something that is proving absolutely disastrous to the industry as payments are becoming larger and larger, and that's driving up premiums, no pun intended.

Many feel that insurance companies are partly to blame as well, and no doubt they are part of the problem. We have also heard that they have not been able to subsidize lower premiums by earning additional revenue from the stock market and now have to charge more as a result, although if that were true, that would hardly be their fault. As we all know, most of their money is in bonds and very conservative investments and is heavily regulated, in any event, and mostly is public information as well, such that maybe that concern has been greatly exaggerated. It might also be true that they have routinely been settling out of court for obscene amounts of money for soft tissue injuries, thus encouraging more lawsuits and even bigger payouts, although we have certainly heard that the opposite may well be true there as well.

Of course, there is the issue of the personal injury lawyers and their obviously lucrative contingency fees in what used to be a relatively stable and professional business but which is now starting to remind us of Hollywood and the United States in terms of advertising and the creation of a litigious society. Then there's the Law Society of Alberta, whose job it is to regulate integrity and ethics amongst lawyers on both sides of this issue, and many other stakeholders who must also accept some part of this problem as well, such as those who did not design very good roads and transportation systems or teach other people how to drive very well when clearly there were good opportunities to improve things in that area.

Most importantly, there are the consumers, our constituents who have been caught in the middle of this mud match and are having to pay through the nose for the privilege. It is a much more complicated issue than many realize, and that is why we've put forward the ideas and bills that we have. Concrete action is needed, but there is no magic nor easy solutions that can be implemented overnight. That is why we do not need the diversion of this motion going forward, Mr. Speaker. It would only distract us from our real work and catch us up in a political spectacle with nothing to show in bottom-line results. Albertans deserve better, so I urge our members to vote this motion down.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on Motion 512.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to start by welcoming the guests we have watching us in the public gallery. I hope they're learning something from their observations here. [interjection] Yes. And I hope they have good auto insurance as well that's not too costly. That's what we're discussing here tonight. What we're actually discussing is a private member's motion brought forward that reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to strike an all-party committee to study the rising premium rates for automobile insurance, insurance companies handpicking clients, and increasing . . . claims in the province.

So it's a motion basically to form an all-party committee to investigate concerns around automobile insurance.

I'm sure every MLA is hearing a great deal from drivers who are fed up with skyrocketing auto insurance premiums. I myself have had a large number of phone calls and letters and conversations. Last night I was at an event and got cornered at intermission by somebody upset about his car insurance. Our information is that in the last year they've increased an average of 59 percent in Alberta. While two years ago the insurance industry briefly was losing money, in fact it's once again returned to real profitability. So rates have gone up, the insurance industry is making a tremendous amount of money, and a lot of people are feeling like they're being taken advantage of by the insurance industry.

So the opposition has proposed that the Legislature urge the government to form an all-party committee. It's an idea that we actually brought forward in a letter addressed to the Premier more than a year ago. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, my colleague in the opposition, first wrote to the Premier more than a year ago raising concerns about the auto insurance industry and asking for an all-party committee to be formed on the issue. Of course, that wasn't done, and it doesn't look like we're going to win this vote tonight either, although you never know. We can keep our fingers crossed.

Instead of forming an all-party committee and having public hearings and so on, the government struck their own committee called the Automobile Insurance Reform Implementation Team, if I've got the right name, and they placed a number of government MLAs on it and some insurance industry representatives and then held a series of closed door debates in – well, I don't know where they meet actually but behind closed doors somewhere with their caucus trying to hammer out what the government's policy was.

Now, the Basque people of Spain have a saying that goes like this – and I like to refer to this once in a while, and you have to listen carefully because it's a bit obtuse – when the shepherds quarrel, the cheese shows it. When the shepherds quarrel, the cheese shows it. I had to think for a long time: what does that mean? The first thing I had to realize was that they're talking about cheese that's made from sheep's milk, and when the shepherds quarrel and are unhappy, the unhappiness and stress and strain is visited on the sheep. The sheep pick it up, and their milk is bad, and as a result the cheese is not good; the cheese is off.

I have a feeling that we could probably adapt this saying to something like: when the government MLAs quarrel, the policy shows it. I have a sense of a policy that's come out of the government that isn't working fully to anybody's satisfaction, a policy that doesn't fully go to a public system like has proven to work in other provinces, say in B.C. or Saskatchewan or Manitoba. It isn't a fully wide-open market, which actually would be a very interesting solution, which would be just to say: let's throw the doors open in Alberta; let the market reign and see what happens when the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia and Saskatchewan Insurance and Manitoba Insurance are brought in. What will happen then? That would have been a pretty interesting solution or even the possibility of just leaving things as they are and seeing if this is a temporary surge in premiums and they'll be corrected. Instead, we've got a real compromise here.

Now, I take to heart, as I always do, the Speaker's advice that this is a private member's motion. It's actually an opposition motion, so I won't dwell too much on government policy. All I was doing there was laying the groundwork for my strong belief that there are times when all-party committees are good ideas and that they are very rarely, if ever, used in this government for policy purposes. There are a handful of standing all-party committees, like the ever interesting Public Accounts Committee, but in terms of policy development the policy committees are entirely occupied by government MLAs, who meet occasionally in public but do most of their discussion behind closed doors.

Bringing the process out into the public, opening it up to all the parties so that a whole range of ideas from the beginning would be brought to the table strikes me as a very good idea. This government right from the beginning has said that it will not entertain public insurance, period. Well, that's ideology in action; isn't it? They're closing the door and their minds and the public's possibilities of really benefiting right off the bat.

So an all-party committee would bring a wider range of ideas, and I'm a big fan of diversity. Let's put all the cards on the table and see which ones are worth playing with, to sort of push my metaphors there. I've got lots of them going here tonight.

I think this is a very good motion. I think it's long overdue. It was first proposed more than a year ago to the government. It's only now that we're getting around to debating it, and it'll have a very short life span, I'm afraid. I would encourage all members of this Assembly to seriously consider it, to support it, and to throw the policymaking windows open and let some fresh air into the process in this province.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat reinforcing the notion that I think this is a good motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Undeniably, there are issues relevant to motor vehicle insurance in this province, and one would have to have been absent from the province as an MLA for the last six months or so not to realize that constituents have concerns throughout the province with the ever increasing rates of motor vehicle insurance. That to me as an MLA and as a member of our society is rather problematic because (a) I want the insurance to be affordable for my constituents and (b) I am concerned with the rising cost of insurance for the very simple reason that if rates go sufficiently high enough, that may encourage some to take the unwise option of driving a vehicle without any insurance at all. That's something that we simply can't allow to happen.

As such, Mr. Speaker, we have taken a look at the issue of insurance, and a committee has been put forward by this government to indeed review the intricacies of what has given rise to the increase in insurance rates. Then having studied and analyzed all the variables . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I'm very sorry. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, but under Standing 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would now invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close debate on Motion 512.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to try to convince all hon. members of this Assembly to support Motion 512, and I must say at the outset that that is perhaps the best speech I've heard from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs in this Assembly.

Now, when we're talking about Motion 512, we cannot forget about who we're trying to protect here, and that's the consumers of this province, Mr. Speaker. We are trying to protect consumers from skyrocketing insurance premiums that have occurred as a result of neglect of the regulatory process by this Conservative government.

When we look at another Conservative government, Mr. Speaker, this time in New Brunswick with Premier Lord, we see that that government wasn't concerned about having opposition members or members of the third party involved. They saw that as a positive thing. It was a huge problem, and it needed to be solved. Now, they struck an all-party committee, and they held public hearings across the province. They heard not only from select captains of the insurance industry; they heard from consumers. They heard from all people who were affected in that province by skyrocketing insurance premiums. They just didn't take the advice of a select few and decide that that is good enough. That is what, unfortunately, occurred in this province when we had this committee that was selected, and they only heard from the industry.

You can't say that reading an e-mail is a consultation process. We have public consultation processes in this province on other matters; for instance, the freedom of information legislation. There was an all-party committee of this Assembly struck, and it reviewed that legislation two summers ago. That committee heard in a public forum from many different Albertans and many different organizations in this province that had an interest in freedom of information and protection of privacy laws. So if it's good enough for one statute, why is it now not good enough for the Insurance Act, which is perhaps one of the most comprehensive, detailed statutes in the cupboards? Here we're going to have this concept. It's grown beyond a concept; it's now a reality. With the exception of the hon. Member for St. Albert, who held a public meeting this summer on this matter, when a government refuses to have a public process or the involvement of the public, it's a symbol of just how out of touch with the citizens they are.

Now, one could only conclude that this government would look at what happened in New Brunswick and say: "No. We are going to have a process that involves everyone. We're just not going to have a process that involves the individuals who are going to profit from the changes to the law, the changes to our tort system, but we're also going to have a process that's going to incorporate the views of those who are forced to pay the high auto insurance premiums."

How much of a crisis have we got here? Well, more and more people are finding auto insurance in this province unaffordable, whether they're young, whether they're middle aged, whether they're old, whether they have a good or bad driving record. For reasons that I don't have time to discuss, Mr. Speaker, they are unfortunately being left out.

Now, I also believe that one of the reasons why this government would not want to have a public hearing, as suggested in Motion 512, is because they do not want to hear about the value that consumers can receive through public insurance.

Thank you.

Financial Assistance Rates for Albertans in Need

513. Mr. Cao moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to implement market-basket measures to determine social assistance rates as well as levels of financial assistance for Albertans who are in need.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort in the minutes remaining.

Mr. Cao: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to begin debate on Motion 513. Tonight I would like to give a brief background for my reasons for this motion. I would like to tell the Assembly how the market-basket measure would solve some of the problems that Albertans living in high-growth areas currently face.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans live in a very prosperous area. Opportunities for business and employment remain very strong. Albertans enjoy low personal income tax, no provincial sales tax, businesses can take advantage of lower corporate taxes and a motivated workforce, and corporate investment in this province is staggering, especially in the resource sector. This formula has made Alberta the best province in Canada in which to live and work.

Based on the obvious benefits of living in Alberta, some may wonder why this government should revisit the funding structure for its social assistance programs. I think one of the biggest reasons is that Alberta's prosperity indirectly creates cost barriers for low-income Albertans to reach their full potential. The fact that many Albertans must still use the food bank in some cases is only one of the symptoms of this problem. Government sets social assistance rates to ensure that families are protected while parents seek employment; however, surviving financially can be a challenge for low-income families living in high-cost, high-growth areas. Market-basket measures should reflect adequate funding for Albertans living in these areas with high-cost living.

Currently the rates of supports for independence, SFI, programs are based on the size of the family, the number of adults, the age of the children, and the recipient's ability to work. The assured income for the severely handicapped program, AISH, a unique program in Canada, provides coverage for the most vulnerable Albertans. AISH currently provides a maximum of $850 per month while also providing coverage for drugs, glasses, dental work, and diabetic supplies. Many Alberta seniors also receive assistance from government programs. They are squeezed between rising costs of living and their fixed incomes. Alberta is the only province that has very good seniors' benefits programs that are based on the levels of incomes and needs and not on universality. Since these programs are based on necessity – that is, the cost of living – the concept of market-basket measures should be applied to assistance rates for seniors.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the market-basket measure is based on the concept of necessity. These necessities include a nutritious diet, clothing for work and school, adequate shelter, and reliable transportation. Other necessary goods and services include personal care, household needs, furniture, and basic needs such as telephone service, reading, recreation, entertainment, and school supplies.

The urgency of Motion 513 has been brought about because of the higher number of low-income families in my area combined with the higher cost of living in Calgary. I represent many residents living in the Calgary-Fort constituency who are hardworking, low-income Albertans. As a result, even when economic times are good like they are right now, many families struggle to find ways to pay their bills, feed their children, and maintain a safe and healthy standard of living.

I also represent many senior residents who have worked hard during their younger days to build this province, this nation and now are living on low fixed incomes. They are constituents of mine, and they are not alone. There are Albertans who struggle in other high-cost areas of the province, and although the number of people in social assistance programs remains low, the problems continue to persist for some vulnerable Albertans.

The market-basket measure is a true reflection of living in the community. The essence of Alberta's success with lowering the number of people on income support programs is through promoting career and employment assistance services rather than a free ride. I don't think that this will change by adjusting rates to match the market-basket measure proposed by Motion 513. A low-income family will still be motivated to regain their independence. Training opportunities, skills development, and job placement services will remain as keys to economic freedom and independence.

What will change by adopting the market-basket measure is that Albertans on social assistance programs will no longer be vulnerable to the cost pressures in high-growth areas. Children will be properly fed and clothed in this area. The elderly who have no savings will be able to live with more dignity. Parents of low-income families can concentrate on earning a better living rather than being concerned about the health and safety of their family. Finally, the severely disabled will be safer in their community.

Some may say that putting those public dollars in the pockets of low-income Albertans will remove the incentive to gain meaningful employment, but I firmly believe that fixing the rate to the market-basket measure will help, not prevent, people to return to work. I agree that adjusting rates as proposed in Motion 513 will likely increase the amount of money low-income Albertans receive right now, but this increase will reflect the real cost pressure that many people feel living in high-growth areas. It will not send a message that the gravy train in Alberta is open for business.

Some may argue that the market-basket measure will cause an alarming increase in funding for financial assistance. As I said before, the government attempts to cover the basic needs while the market-basket measure reflects the real cost of living in specific communities. Over 80 percent of Albertans already live above the market-basket measure. I'm confident that this number will continue to increase as long as our overriding philosophy of providing a hand up, not a handout, remains unchanged.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has concluded.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ombudsman Appointment

27. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly confirm the appointment by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of Mr. G.B. (Gord) Button as Ombudsman and concur in the report, part 2, of the Select Special Ethics Commissioner and Ombudsman Search Committee.

[Government Motion 27 carried]

Adjournment of Session

28. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the fall sitting of the Third Session of the 25th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

The Deputy Speaker: It's my understanding, hon. member, that this is not a debatable motion according to Standing Order 18(3).

[Government Motion 28 carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 54

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2)

The Chair: Are any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to speak regarding Bill 54, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2). We're looking at, again, a significant sum of money for various reasons, and the government through Bill 54 is asking the Legislative Assembly to approve an additional $1.228 billion in supplementary supply for operating expense and equipment and inventory purchases and an additional $21 million for capital investment.

Now, the Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, as I understand it, is going to get over half a million dollars so the commissioner can provide additional services under the Personal Information Protection Act. We are hopefully going to have further clarification on that, but what additional services is the Information and Privacy Commissioner required to provide under the Personal Information Protection Act? I understand that there's going to be an office set up, but detail on these services would certainly be appreciated. I think later on this evening, Mr. Chairman, we will be discussing Bill 44.

When one looks at the schedule of amounts to be voted, and we look first off at Economic Development, now, there is an operating expense here, and whenever people look at their power bills or their utility bills, they'd say: this is something this government is certainly lacking. I'm sure that they would approve this when you consider that there are so many billions of dollars coming in in natural resource revenue.

We look at the policy deficiencies that exist with automobile insurance, with energy deregulation, whether it's natural gas or electricity. One can't forget the confusion and chaos that exists in public health care – and that's been outlined very articulately by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview – and public education as well. There are certainly significant deficiencies in this. So in Economic Development, if someone was to say that the Progressive Conservative government lacks strategic intelligence and through this appropriation bill they're going to get a purchase of this for $3.5 million, well, people who are paying high bills, as I said, probably would accept this, but just exactly how and why and where is this money being spent in Economic Development?

Now, my next question, Mr. Chairman, certainly has to deal with the money, the operating expense as outlined in Human Resources and Employment, and we're looking here at an estimate of $32 million that's been requested. If this isn't proof that energy deregulation has not worked, I don't know what is. I can go into other departments, and I can see where amounts are being made for utility costs, but here we have "$5,000,000 for the Supports for Independence program to fund an exceptional number of utility arrears cases."

Certainly, when we look at last week, we allowed a tax break for cigar smokers and we gave small businesses a tax cut so that they could get their utility bills under control and we gave other corporate tax cuts as well. So to provide this amount of money for Albertans that are on SFI, I think, is not only a good gesture, but it's also an admission that the policies, whether it is the benefit policies that are provided by this government, are inadequate. It also is a strong indication of just how poorly energy deregulation has fared.

Consumers, whether they're earning 10 grand a year or 50 grand a year, are having trouble, and the $5 million that's reflected in this estimate is an admission that that program is not adequately funded. Many people through no fault of their own cannot afford their power or their natural gas bills. Heat and light are a necessity. They are not a luxury.

Further on the same page, Mr. Chairman, we're looking at "$17,000,000 for the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped program owing to additional cases, increased health care costs and increased long-term care accommodation charges." So this is an example of taking money in in one hand – it was the 42 percent increase that came about totally unannounced in the middle of the summer. In one sweeping announcement we increased long-term care accommodation costs in this province by 42 percent, and now there is an admission that people just simply could not afford it, so we have to have additional money. It's money taken from this pocket and placed in another needy pocket. So it's an indication of government programs, government policies that do not benefit those who are in need.

Now, Seniors on page 88. There is $17 million "for the Alberta Seniors Benefit program to assist low-income senior citizens with increases in long-term care accommodation costs." Again, I would encourage the government to take this as a signal that what they consider is necessary for the Alberta seniors' benefit program is in reality not enough. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort mentioned earlier in debate that we cannot forget the contribution that those individuals made to the province's economic foundation, and we cannot abandon them now. We've got to recognize that with a fixed income long-term care accommodation cost increases are going to place an unusually hard financial burden on those individuals.

There's another $11 million for the special-needs assistance program, and that money will also hopefully tell the government that seniors are being left behind as a result, again, of utility costs. Close to $6 million of this money is going to be allocated for utility costs, and that should tell the government that the power bills, the heating bills are high as a result of deregulation, and many people through no fault of their own can no longer afford to pay them.

I don't know what sort of discussion will go on in Treasury Board, but hopefully there will be kind consideration in the next budget to those who have built the economic foundation of this province. Seniors should not, in the first place, have to put their cap in their hand and apply to the special-needs assistance program to ensure that their houses are adequately heated. I think that is wrong, and I think the majority of members of this Assembly would agree with me, particularly the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Now, there are also costs associated here with extraordinary onetime personal expenses, and that would indicate to this member, Mr. Chairman, that some of the programs that we used to have available for seniors perhaps need to be reimplemented. The seniors were promised, as were a lot of other people in this province, that if they worked with the government and sacrificed to get the budget numbers under control, then programs would be restored, but we haven't seen that to date. We're getting closer to the election. Perhaps we'll start to see sugar-daddy politics again, where there'll be unlimited amounts of cash, the government will be very generous, and hopefully if the government is generous, they will not forget the seniors who built the economic foundation that we enjoy presently.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a lot of money involved in Bill 54.

Dr. Taft: How much?

Mr. MacDonald: Well over a billion dollars.

Dr. Taft: How many Tories have spoken on it?

Mr. MacDonald: I don't know how many government members have actually spoken to this bill, and when I cede the floor to another colleague, I'm going to do some research in Hansard and check that out.

I do know that expenses have been quite high. We had after the last election expanded the cabinet. There were about 16 cabinet ministers, and now we've got 24, and of course there are deputy ministers.

Mr. Mason: Two finance ministers.

Mr. MacDonald: We've got the two finance ministers, yes. There are two justice ministers. There's a lot of duplication there. I think that in the interests of running a tight financial ship, the cabinet should be reduced.

There was a movie I was watching on TV, Mr. Chairperson, and it was called, I believe, Honey, I Shrunk the Kids. You know, perhaps the political equivalent of that would be: "Albertans, I've shrunk the size of cabinet. I've saved money, and this is what I'm going to do with the money I have saved."

Perhaps it is this government that needs to go on a diet. We're talking about a supersized cabinet, and we're talking about a supersized caucus, and perhaps if they don't go on a diet, the electorate will do it for them.

In conclusion, at this time I can't say that this is not a good start to a new fiscal framework. Maybe money is coming too easily for this government. We have a golden goose that is losing its lustre. It's not nearly as shiny as it was once because the western Canadian sedimentary basin, Mr. Chairman, is starting to mature. We're going to get less and less oil and natural gas royalties from that western Canadian sedimentary basin, so perhaps it's time for us to make sure that we're spending every dollar as wisely as possible.

Are there ways to cut costs and save money and maybe make the heritage savings trust fund bigger? Maybe we could expand it to $20 billion instead of having it stagnate at between $11 billion and $12 billion. Maybe we could truly make it into a pool of money for future generations in this province. I look at this bill, and I'm not of the opinion that this government is a prudent manager of our financial resources. It's a lucky government, but to say that this government is financially responsible is, I think, to say the least, an urban myth.

Mr. Mason: It's a rural myth too.

Mr. MacDonald: It's a rural myth too; I've been corrected. So it's both an urban and a rural myth that this government has a fiscal framework that is to be copied. It can spend a lot of money, and it is unaccountable, and the whole process of spending this money is not transparent.

So I cannot support this supplementary supply bill without some explanation of how this new spending will contribute to meeting defined outcomes and the performance criteria in the government business plans. Much of this money, that I discussed earlier, is certainly needed by various groups who have been left out and have been penalized by very poor government policy, but when we think of the size of this budget and the size of this government, it's supersized, and perhaps it's time for there to be some consideration of a diet.

Thank you.

9:20

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to rise and to speak somewhat in response to the scrambled message that we have just heard articulated in this Assembly. I want to make the point that supplementary requisitions and estimates are meant most specifically to address the needs that occur as the fiscal year goes on. So this is, indeed, the government's response to those situations and to those people who find themselves in situations wherein the programs are not sufficient to address the needs that are identified and that arise as the year goes on.

I would like to first of all highlight the fact that this is responding responsibly to circumstances. I'd like to say that in the supplementary estimates, indeed, what we are doing as a government is looking at those programs that because of a growing population or because of needs – in particular, the mention was specifically of seniors and those in long-term care facilities. Because they are in long-term care facilities and because the accommodation rates rose in the middle of the fiscal year or shortly after it began, there are a number of residents there for whom the government needs to give assistance. I believe that this is being very responsible and, as I said earlier, responsive not only in the area of seniors but also in the area of delivering programs, whether they be in human resources, whether they be for any number of capital projects that need to be addressed, and because of the rising, unanticipated cost.

So I just wanted to take this brief moment to set the record straight in this House. In spite of the ramblings and in spite of the all-over-the-map description of what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar identified as if he was thinking that we didn't plan to do this in an appropriate fashion, I wanted to let the people of Alberta know that this government is, indeed, responsible, is looking at those programs that do need to be addressed partway through the fiscal year. We are doing that according to the plan and the direction that we have identified.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just in light of the remarks by the previous hon. member, I would like to remind the House that 15 out of the government's 24 ministries are asking for supplementary supply here. They're not all hit with BSE, forest fires, and drought. This government is simply incapable of setting a budget and sticking to it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 54.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 44

Personal Information Protection Act

The Chair: We have in front of us amendment A1, moved on November 25, so we're in discussion on amendment A1. Are there any further comments or questions with respect to this amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on amendment A1.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Amendment A1 to Bill 44, the Personal Information Protection Act, is really a series of amendments, and I would like to get on the record indicating my dismay, my disappointment that we're going to deal with these amendments all in one group. I think that we would have much better legislation if these were dealt with on an individual basis. I don't say that lightly, because I was very pleased to have the opportunity to discuss with the hon. minister's staff these proposed amendments. To describe them as housekeeping amendments, I think, is a little bit too much. These amendments are the result of a consultation process that occurred since this bill was first introduced to the Assembly, and it was left on the Order Paper over the summer for many different groups to make presentations on their concerns regarding Bill 44.

Now, there are significant changes here. If one looks at Hansard from November 25, the hon. Minister of Government Services is introducing these amendments to the Assembly. One can read Hansard on pages 1863 and 1864 in regard to these amendments. In fact, the discussion on them by the hon. minister went on for some time and had to have extra time approved by the chair, as a matter of fact, to discuss these amendments. They're on a wide range of issues, and there's a wide range of changes, everything from definitions to a request of Health and Wellness for the exclusion of health information in section 4(3)(e). That's done hopefully for a good purpose.

When we debate these amendments, we have to recognize just by the volume of changes that it was a good idea that this bill was held over for the summer to allow the stakeholders, as they're called, to point out any deficiencies they may have in this bill. Now, how expensive is the new privacy act going to be to implement? That is yet to be determined.

When we look at these amendments, we see what has been attempted. I think we have to accept the hon. minister and his department's staff at their word, and it would be my opinion that they've done their very best to improve this legislation. The fashion, how we're exercising that before this Assembly, is another matter, and I'm not going to go into any great length or any great detail during debate on Bill 44 on the erosion of democracy in this province.

We need, in our own interests, Bill 44, and Bill 44 is going to be a work in progress. We look at the B.C. legislation that's also going to be implemented at the same time and we look at all the comparisons to the federal legislation. What's going to happen is that the federal legislation's stronger. This legislation is too weak. But the majority of the people contacted certainly want to see this bill passed. When we look at other information acts in this province – we look at FOIP. I would have to say that it's not working. The Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act is supposed to make the government transparent and accountable and all this information easy to access from the government. That's the furthest thing from the truth. Here we have a matter of employers and employees. After we deal with these amendments, Mr. Chairman, I hope to be able to get on the record again. I have some questions for the hon. minister in regard to the bill at committee.

I'm certainly satisfied with the process, and I appreciate the time that the minister and his staff have spent with myself and the Liberal research team on this matter. Certainly I think it is disrespectful of democracy to have this many amendments come forward as A1. Some people may think they're just routine housekeeping; others may not. Hopefully we will have an opportunity in the future to review this bill, and we won't have to wait three years from proclamation to see if it's working or not because only time will tell the costs to businesses and other organizations.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I will cede the floor to another colleague. The jury is out, so to speak, on Bill 44 at this time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a few general comments with respect to the amendment before us, and I was wondering if I might ask some questions and whether the minister is prepared, before we vote on the amendment, to respond to questions. He's nodding in the affirmative.

I want to indicate that the practice of the government omnibus amendment is a problem. I certainly have no intention of singling out this minister at all, but it seems to be a fairly widespread practice in this fall session to be faced with a very, very significant amendment which must be then debated and voted in most cases as a block. That makes it difficult for the opposition to do its job. I will acknowledge particularly this minister's staff for providing a detailed briefing to us on the contents. That's made it considerably easier.

Some ministries have not done that. In fact, the Minister of Environment tabled an omnibus amendment, and we had no notice, and the minister didn't even bother to describe the contents of the amendment. That, frankly, makes it almost impossible for the opposition to do its job because these amendments are so comprehensive that they almost represent a partial rewriting of the whole bill.

Having said that, I had a concern brought to my attention by a constituent, and I guess I'd like to put this to the minister. It's sometimes difficult for legislators and, I'm sure, even more difficult for citizens to understand the complexity and the language of these bills, so the question I have is: how does it work in practice?

Here's a situation. When you go to a retail outlet nowadays even to make a basic purchase, the retail outlet wants to get a bunch of information. It's interesting that all you want to do is buy something – a CD, for example, or a component of a computer or a refrigerator, something like that – and they want to get your personal information. They want to get your name, they want to get your address, and they want to get your phone number. If you're dumb enough to give them your e-mail address, they might want that too, and all this goes in the computer. They might tell you that they are going to send you some information or that it might help with a warranty, but very often they ask for this information even if the product is not warrantied and the warranty process might be quite separate from this. In practice what happens is that they compile this information into large databases, and they sell it. So the question I have is: how does the language of the bill, including the amendment, affect this in practice? Specifically, it's a retail situation.

It's also been brought to my attention, Mr. Chairman, that at least one electronics retail chain that has a large number of outlets in Alberta instructs their staff to lie. When a customer asks what the information that this company collects will be used for, the staff are instructed to say that it will not be sold, that it will be used just for the internal purposes of the company, to keep you up to date on special offers or sort of to track your purchases for the company, when in fact this information is compiled and sold.

The second question, then, I guess, to the minister with respect to this is: what is it in this act that will stop this kind of operation? How do we make sure that staff are not instructed by the management to mislead customers about the uses to which information will be put? If the company for one reason or another doesn't tell the truth about what they're going to use the information for, then what measures are in place to deter this? So that would be the second question.

I think people generally want to know: in a retail setting when they make a purchase, what does the company have to tell you about the information? Can they just say: could I get your name and your address and your phone number and your e-mail address and your social insurance, which is often the case, even though I know that that part is already not permitted? What do they have to tell you? What do they have to say? What authority do they need from you to retail this data about you?

So, Mr. Chairman, in anticipation of the minister's response, I'll take my seat, and I will have some more to say later.

Chair's Ruling Amendments

The Chair: Hon. members, I just wanted to clarify a point. Two members now have referred to an omnibus set of amendments. If they're prepared to accept them as such, that's fine, but the rule for committee is that it has to be by agreement. Otherwise, it's clause by clause. If it's by agreement, that certainly facilitates the work of the House, but that determination is in the hands of the committee. So if you're happy with this arrangement, then let us go forward.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

9:40

Mr. MacDonald: Just for the record, Mr. Chairman, I would certainly in this case be satisfied to let this go forward. I had a consultation process with the minister's staff before the fall session started, and many of the amendments as presented in amendment A1 were included in that discussion.

Thank you.

The Chair: All right. Then we'll proceed. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Debate Continued

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I think this is a really important bill, and I'm glad to have the opportunity to speak to it again while we're in Committee of the Whole. In looking through it, there are a couple of sections that work as a unit to me, and I just want to spend some time discussing the implications of that.

What I'm looking for here as always is consistency and clarity, and hopefully that leads to stability. There is a wonderful set of commercials on television right now plugging some insurance company. Obviously, they're not that great a commercial, or I would remember what the company was. Their point and the joke contained within is around clarity. There's one where there's a rather overblown opera scene and no one understands why everyone's dying, and a fellow in the audience stands up and very clearly says: they're related to one another so they can never marry. And everyone in the audience goes, "Oh," because then they understand. It's clear.

We're all seeking that kind of clarity, and I just want to make sure that I am processing several sections with clarity. In fact, I think that is what this bill needs to be seeking overall. We are putting in place a very important piece of legislation. It works in partnership with the FOIP Act. Certainly my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar has already pointed out that there are some problems as far as the Official Opposition is concerned with how the FOIP Act and the Health Information Act actually work. So we're seeking more clarity with PIPA, the Personal Information Protection Act. I think it's also really important for the people – that being the private sector now that this act is going to cover – that it's also very clear to them and everyone is rowing in the same direction and all those other clichés about understanding and working together.

What I was hoping to see was a consistency with the FOIP Act, in fact, with those sections. In the FOIP Act section 40, "Disclosure of personal information," we're talking in section 40(1)(e): "for the purpose of complying with an enactment of Alberta or Canada or with a treaty, arrangement or agreement made under an enactment of Alberta or Canada." This is around, "A public body may disclose personal information only," and then there's a series of circumstances under which personal information may be disclosed. That's where that section (e) appears. So I was seeking clarity and consistency with this particular section. Do we have a similar section appearing in this PIPA?

When I look at it, I think that what I can see that would go with, that partners with, or is a local version of the FOIP Act 40(1)(e) – and you have to go back and forth. So we end up with section 14, section 15, and section 20. Now, in the original bill we lost the clarity and the consistency. There was not consistency with the FOIP Act section 40. We seem to have regained it here with this amending act. Let me get this one straight. Specifically, what we're looking for is what kind of information can be shared between employers. So when we're talking about what employers should be doing if they're entering into a collective bargaining situation or relationship, what are they supposed to do?

They used to look at FOIP section 40. Is there something in here that gives them some guidance? Yes, there appears to be because section 15 is giving us Collection of Personal Employee Information. Under what circumstances can you be collecting it? What we've got is:

15(1) Notwithstanding anything [else] in this Act other than subsection (2), an organization may collect personal employee information about an individual without the consent of an individual if . . .

Then it gives a series of circumstances.

- (a) the individual is an employee of the organization, or
- (b) the collection of the information is for the purpose of recruiting a potential employee.

It goes on.

(2) An organization shall not collect personal employee information about an individual unless

- (a) the collection is reasonable for the purposes for which it is being collected, and
- (b) the personal employee information includes only personal information that is related to the employment or volunteer work relationship of the individual.

Then section (3) talks about:

An organization may disclose personal employee information about an individual without the consent . . . where that information is being disclosed to an organization that is collecting information under subsection (1), which takes us back to the beginning.

Section (4) in fact has been deleted in the amendment and, I think, clarified because section (4) was talking about recruitment of an employee and if they had to destroy information and all kinds of things.

The new version of section 15 is still talking about collection for reasonable purposes information that's only related to employment or volunteer work. In section (4), "nothing in this section is to be construed so as to restrict or otherwise affect an organization's ability to collect personal information under section 14." So here we go. Here's the reference back to section 14. That section was about collection without consent and, again, a long list of how an organization can collect personal information about an individual without the consent of that individual.

The next part of this puzzle is the disclosure, which appears in section 20, and that's

- (c) the disclosure of the information is in accordance with a provision of a treaty that
 - (i) authorizes or requires its disclosure, and
 - (ii) is made under an enactment of Alberta or Canada.

So when we're looking at whether we've achieved consistency with FOIP, I would say that at this point we have. Is it clear for commercial users that they can collect information and disclose information around a collective bargaining relationship? Yes, it appears that they can. Is that important? Yes, because it helps to manage that relationship between the organization and the individual which is an important one.

9:50

When I look for other messages from experts in this area as to whether it's important, there are two sources here. I'm looking at some information produced by the University of Alberta access to privacy adviser, who is concluding that personal information can be disclosed not simply pursuant to an agreement but so that [an organization] could reasonably meet its statutory obligations as a bargaining agent.

In this case, you know, we have a situation, for example, where an individual phones up a bargaining agent and says: okay; I need something done. Well, the first thing they're going to do is to verify that that individual, in fact, works for Company X. They're going to phone Company X and say: do they work for you? Well, we need the clarity here in this legislation that allows Company X to go: yes, I can tell you this information; they work for us. That's the disclosure that we need, and it, in fact, to my reading is still there. Actually, I appreciate having the minister on the record clarifying that as I work my way through this, I am correct in understanding this.

The second place that I looked was in the courts as to whether that kind of disclosure and sharing of information is appropriate or needed. With the University of Alberta, I was saying, it's a statutory obligation. Again, I think in the court documents that I've looked at, it's saying that information is required to properly administer their employment relationship, and it's reasonable to characterize the provision of the information as being within that purpose.

So that's my tracking through of these three sections and what this all means as I try and seek clarity and make sure that it's consistent with what we already have. I've given the reasons why I think it's important to maintain this. We have court rulings. We have others that have spoken on the importance of it and upholding it. Part of what brought this to mind for me was that I didn't think we wanted to get into a position where we had companies or agents or individuals unnecessarily withholding information. They need to know exactly how they're expected to behave.

One of the things that came to mind with me was when our own FOIP legislation came in and covered the academic sector. We had a few months of confusion, and in fact this was around MLAs sending congratulatory letters to graduates or to prizewinners or academic high achievers in their various schools in their constituencies. Of course, for the schools trying to interpret the new legislation that they were now under, it wasn't clear what they were supposed to be doing. As a result, they politely declined to release the information on the students' names, for example, or whether they'd been the award winners because at that time they weren't clear about whether that would violate disclosure. We all figured that out eventually, and in fact I think there was a clarification that was brought in to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy legislation in Alberta.

So I'm just trying to clarify that here. If I can get the minister on the record that what I've outlined here, in fact, is true and that that kind of disclosure would be allowed, I'd appreciate it because that's partially key to my accepting this amendment. If I'm right, then I'm happy with amendment A1. We need to be very careful with this PIPA legislation. We need to do it right. Personally, I came into this preferring the federal legislation, but if I can be convinced that some of my areas of concern have been dealt with, then I'm willing to switch and support this. This is one of the areas I'd like the minister to respond to me, please.

So that's the issue that I wanted to raise in the time that I have for this go-round. I appreciate the opportunity to raise it, and I'm going to leave that there and let the minister respond to me. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Before we ask the minister or any other members in debate, I wonder if we might have the committee's consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real pleasure for me to rise to introduce some guests that we have here this evening. It's always a pleasure to have guests. We don't often have them this late in the evening. It tends to be a little bit dry, so people don't tend to stay around this long. We are very pleased to see that we have visitors here in the public gallery. It's a group that is actually from all over North America, I understand, on a mission here from the Mennonite church. Anyway, we would like to have you all stand and be recognized by the members of the Assembly.

Bill 44

Personal Information Protection Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I shall keep my comments fairly brief. I must say that it's not the speakers that are dry; it's the legislation that is dry. Indeed, it's positively arid.

Ms Blakeman: It's a living document. Breathe life into it.

An Hon. Member: It's desiccated.

Dr. Taft: Okay. I shall try to breathe life into this desiccated legislation. All right.

Well, I did look through the amendments, and I did have a specific question to the minister, and I'll keep it to that. I'm on page 3 of the package that was circulated. Under amendment (d) under section 4(3), "by adding the following after clause (j):"

(j.1) the collection, use or disclosure of personal information by a registered constituency association or a registered party as defined in the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act;

(j.2) the collection, use or disclosure of personal information by an individual who is a bona fide candidate for public office where the information is being collected, used or disclosed, as the case may be, for the purposes of campaigning for that office and for no other purpose.

Then when I go back to the bill, it looks to me like we are clarifying that these groups are exempt from the legislation.

I would be interested if the minister at some point could provide the rationale for why those specific exemptions are added. In terms of the amendment, for now that's my only comment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have two questions at this time in regard to amendment A1 for the hon. minister, please. The first one is dealing with section 4(3)(b), and this is in regard to the Health Information Act. The hon. minister stated on November 25 in this Assembly that this amendment was a request of Health and Wellness. "This amendment will exclude from Bill 44 all health information "where that information is collected, used, or disclosed by an organization for health care purposes."" Now, in regard to workplace issues what medical information, if any, will an employer be entitled to from an employee, and what may that information be used for? Drug testing, for instance: who will get access to the results? That would be one example. There would be many examples, of course, but that would be just one. How is that going to be affected by this amendment?

Also, in regard to the amendments to the Societies Act, section 36(1), who wanted the amendments to the Societies Act? How were they placed in this amendment A1?

Thank you very much.

10:00

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've appreciated the questions that have come from all of the members opposite, and if I could just take a couple of minutes here before we ask for the vote on this particular amendment A1 to answer as many of those questions as I possibly can.

First of all, the consultation that has taken place on this particular bill, extensively over the summer, with many, many organizations, chambers of commerce, that type of thing, and many businesses, large and small, is the one that has led to the amendments that are before us today. I would like to thank the members opposite for taking the time to meet with members of our staff and even meet with me in a couple of instances to talk about some of the amendments that are in A1.

I think it's important that we do have that kind of consultation, because this is important legislation. This is the protection of personal information, and unlike access to information, this is information that is held by the private sector about every single one of us. It's important that we have the information from the people that this legislation affects and how we can make it effective for everyone. Our staff have worked hard to collect all of the information and to put it together to clarify, to make definitions, and to make sure that this legislation works so that the federal legislation does not prevail in Alberta.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands brought forward a scenario about a retail shop where one may go and purchase something and having to give his or her name and address and telephone number and other information. The part of this particular act is that the information that the retail company collects on you is purpose specific. In other words, if the retail company wants to do something with that information, they have to tell you, and if they don't tell you the right information, if they're just saying to you, "Well, I need it so that we can let you know about promotions that are coming up within our organization so that you can come back and buy again," then that's what they have to use that for. So it's purpose specific. If they change their mind and they sell that information to some other company or organization that has a business like them or a side business or a service business, they can't do that because they did not advise you of that.

So this legislation points out that they cannot sell, trade, barter, or lease any of the information that you give to a company without your consent. If they want to do that, then they have to let you know that they're going to do that, and then you can give consent to have them release that information to someone else. If a business gives that information to another company without your consent and you find out that they've done that, then you can complain to the Privacy Commissioner, and we can do an investigation, and an order can be issued against the particular company for violating the act. It's just that simple. Collecting consent by deception is really not allowed in the act. That's the provision that protects your personal privacy. Anyone caught selling, trading, or bartering this kind of information can be brought up before the Privacy Commissioner.

When it comes to a couple of questions put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, private-sector information or your own personal information is protected and handled within the guidelines and the regulations of the legislation. I know she's made a number of comments with regard to FOIP, but this is privacy legislation; it's not access legislation. This protects the privacy of people's information in the private sector.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre made a couple of comments about section 40, wanting to know about section 40 and how it mirrored or became similar to the FOIP Act. We didn't mirror section 40 of FOIP to ensure that the private-sector organizations couldn't enter into agreements so that they could remove themselves from this act. We wanted to make sure that those agreements could not be put in place. I'll be making a couple more comments about collective bargaining in my general comments about the act after we get the vote on section A1 here.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked about health information and if health information is in the act or if health information has been exempted from the act. We have a Health Information Act under the department of health, so we took any reference to health information in this act out, and that will be the responsibility of the Minister of Health and Wellness to incorporate into the Health Information Act. So this act does not extend to health information at all.

Of course, under the Societies Act the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar mentioned section 36(1). I'll research that and get an answer for you.

Political parties are exempt from the legislation because we thought it was really specific. You're a member of the party, and the information that is collected on you is used for those party purposes and no other, so that's why they are exempt from the act.

So with those responses, Mr. Chairman, I now ask the committee to please vote for amendment A1 to Bill 44.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We're now back on the bill itself.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to Bill 44, which I will ask the pages to distribute.

The Chair: Okay. We'll call that amendment A2. If you would just give us a minute. The pages are reminded to please give it first and foremost to the people who are actually sitting in the chairs, and then you can go back afterwards and give it to everybody.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 44, Personal Information Protection Act, be amended in section 20(c) by adding "arrangement or agreement" after "a treaty."

Mr. Chairman, shall I begin?

The Chair: Please go ahead.

10:10

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've been in touch with a number of labour organizations in our province, and there is a broad concern here that the language in Bill 44 is somewhat different than the language in the FOIP Act.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

If people would like to turn to section 20(c) in Bill 44 and contrast the language here with that found in the FOIP Act, they will find that in the FOIP Act section 40(1)(e) allows for disclosure “for the purpose of complying with an enactment of Alberta or Canada or with a treaty, arrangement or agreement made under an enactment of Alberta or Canada.” Now, what’s the difference? We’ve dropped the words “arrangement” and “agreement” in Bill 44, and what’s the significance of that, Mr. Chairman?

Well, I guess it’s illustrated by a recent case that came before the labour board, and it had to do with the strike of workers at the Shaw convention centre. At that time the employer, being Economic Development Edmonton, withheld from the union the list of members – and this union was seeking its first collective agreement – and they used the FOIP Act as justification for doing so. It’s interesting, Mr. Chairman, that the labour board specifically referenced those clauses that have been deleted in this act as requiring the employer to turn over the list. So what we potentially could have is two sets of standards: one for public-sector unions covered by the FOIP Act and another one covered by Bill 44, or PIPA, for private-sector unions.

So we may have public-sector unions having language that can be used in order to get this information. This information is very critical, Mr. Chairman, for a union seeking its first collective agreement. After it’s organized its members and it seeks a first collective agreement, it doesn’t have any language in the collective agreement because it doesn’t yet have a collective agreement, so it cannot then force the employer to provide the contact information for the members of the union. The union has members, but they don’t necessarily know who they are, and they cannot necessarily get in touch with them. This is a very difficult situation, and I’m sure it’s not an intentional strategy on the part of anyone to deny this information to the union. The different language sets a different standard, and the amendment would correct that and would provide the same level of language that could be used to provide the same level of access for unions of private-sector employers as has been the case with public-sector employers given the labour board’s ruling.

That is the basis for the amendment, Mr. Chairman, and I would certainly encourage all members in the interests of fairness and equity to support this amendment. Thank you very much.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Chairman, I’d just like to speak to the amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands regarding adding the words “arrangement or agreement” in there. You know, if we were to accept this amendment, what it would allow is for businesses to make agreements and arrangements between themselves to share information, and that would be absolutely contrary to the intent and the provisions of why we’re setting up the Personal Information Protection Act.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

With regard to trade unions the hon. member mentioned the ability to organize, et cetera, or how the information could be shared once a union was set up. PIPA actually will permit organizations to continue to comply with collective agreements, including any requirement in an agreement to provide a union with the home contact information for union members. We know that there have been concerns that were raised about how PIPA would affect the ability of unions to organize, but under PIPA a union that is engaged in an organizing drive will be able to use the business contact information of employees to make the initial contact subject to the provisions of the Labour Relations Code, and unions will also be permitted to collect and use home contact information of employees with their consent.

So we believe that that is particularly compliant with the intent of the act. Therefore, this amendment is not needed, and I urge all members of the Assembly to vote against this amendment.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have some additional questions in regard to Bill 44 at this time for the hon. minister. Specifically, before I get to the expressions of caution that were made by the Privacy Commissioner of Canada, I would like to get clarified by the hon. minister exactly how in Bill 44 will information that is collected through the use of video surveillance in a worksite be used? This information is in effect being collected and used as personal information in that the camera could record personal activities even though the purpose of their surveillance may have been to reduce vandalism or in some cases, unfortunately, on-the-job theft by an employee. Now, how will video surveillance be affected on the worksite by Bill 44, and exactly what steps now have been taken?

I know that the Privacy Commissioner of Canada had a lot to say about this legislation, and there were what the Privacy Commissioner of Canada described as serious deficiencies and flaws with the B.C. legislation. What steps have we taken in this province to ensure that this Alberta bill, Bill 44, will do a better job of respecting the privacy of Albertans?

Again, what specific steps has the Ministry of Government Services taken in response to all the concerns that were raised by the Privacy Commissioner of Canada with the Alberta and the B.C. model? Is the minister satisfied that the series of amendments that we have just passed are going to address a lot of the concerns that have been expressed in the Alberta/B.C. model? Those are, namely, the privacy rights of Albertans in the workplace. This all goes back, Mr. Chairman, to my initial question on video surveillance and how that is going to work with this legislation.

At this point I would be very interested in hearing what the hon. minister has to say in regard to those questions, and at some further time I, too, have an amendment that I would like to put on the floor.

Thank you.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has brought forward the issue of what the Privacy Commissioner of Canada says about this legislation, particularly knowing that we have been working with the Privacy Commissioner to make sure that this legislation is substantially similar to the PIPEDA legislation that will be made law on January 1, 2004.

I read Hansard, and I read the hon. member’s comments. I think he was referring to a former Privacy Commissioner that sent a very, very long letter to us, and he was asking whether or not we’ve addressed those kinds of concerns. As the hon. member knows, the former Privacy Commissioner of Canada is no longer there.

I must say that now we have a very good relationship with the new Privacy Commissioner, and the new Privacy Commissioner has come along and said that this legislation that we have put together along with our sister province of British Columbia – bringing these two acts forward in parallel is substantially similar to the federal legislation. The federal Privacy Commissioner has come out successfully and commended us for the job that we have done in making this legislation substantially similar. So I believe that that has been addressed.

The hon. member’s comment about video surveillance at the worksites and what that has to do with personal information. That has everything to do with enforcement and that type of thing, but it has nothing to do with this particular act as it pertains to the personal information that is carried by an individual.

Thank you for the opportunity to respond.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and hon. minister. Now, the minister has stated that there are many similarities between the B.C. and the Alberta legislation and the federal legislation. Could the minister please confirm that the fines are the same in the federal legislation as they are here? In section 59, "in the case of an individual, to a fine of not more than $10 000, and . . . in the case of a person other than an individual, to a fine of not more than $100 000": those fines are the same; correct?

Mr. Coutts: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Thank you.

Now, at this time, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to Bill 44, and it is an amendment to section 64, which is a review of the act. I indicated earlier that there appears to be a need for a review of this legislation sooner than once every three years. This amendment, I believe, has been presented to the table; correct?

The Chair: Yeah. They're now being distributed.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Thank you very much.

For the record, Mr. Chairman, this amendment states that section 64 be amended (a) in subsection (1) by striking out "At least once every 3 years," and substituting "Eighteen months after this Act comes into force and at least once every 3 years thereafter," and (b) by striking out subsection (3).

I'll be brief here, but I would urge all members to support this amendment. We can see the consultation process, Mr. Chairman, that the government has done this summer, when they held the bill over from the spring session and there was a series of 16 amendments presented. Now, with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act there is a review process. But in light of the consultation process with the chambers of commerce, with various enterprises, business organizations across the province, the changes that have been brought about, and the fact that we don't really know what costs are going to be involved in this – and I hope that they are not too much, I hope that they are not high, and I certainly hope that everyone can adhere to this legislation and that it will not be expensive nor a bureaucratic nightmare because there are certainly going to be processes and policies set up.

But in light of the fact that this is new legislation for us in this province, I would think it would be ideal not to wait three years but allow, as someone said earlier, the Privacy Commissioner to get set up and get organized in regard to the enforcement of this act and then do a review, a consultation process to review this legislation to see if it's working and, if there are parts of it that are not working, what we can do to make it work for all parties involved.

I would urge members to support this amendment to Bill 44 at this time. Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. member, I apologize. I don't recall hearing you say: I move this amendment. Perhaps you did, but would you just verify that you did move it?

Mr. MacDonald: That's understandable. Yes. I would move at this time, Mr. Chairman, I believe we would call this amendment A3 to Bill 44.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. minister, did you have a comment on amendment A3?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a very good idea. When we started looking at how we might follow up on the act, the idea of three years once it comes into force seemed like a really good idea, but I think that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has a really good idea here. Eighteen months sounds like a whole lot shorter time frame to see how the act actually does affect businesses and get some consultation in, so I agree with this. I think 18 months is a lot better than the 36 months because if there's something that needs to be changed in the act, that will give us an opportunity to do it.

I urge all my colleagues in the House to, unfortunately, say yes to this amendment.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

[The clauses of Bill 44 as amended agreed to]

The Chair: Shall this bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 50 Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill. The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today to begin debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill 50, the Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003. I'd like to thank the members of this Assembly for their comments and ideas regarding Bill 50 in second reading. In a moment I'll respond to the questions that arose from the hon. members from the opposition during second reading.

Mr. Chairman, as we discussed, the intent of the proposed bill is to make the Wildlife Act more effective, primarily in enforcement and administration. In terms of enforcement Alberta will have more effective ways to deter and respond to wildlife poaching and to better protect and manage wildlife. A substantial increase in penalties will help deter this illegal activity. With the amendments Alberta will have among the highest poaching fines in Canada.

All wildlife offences will fall into one of two penalty ranges: up to $50,000 and/or 12 months in prison or up to $100,000 and/or 24 months in prison. Most offences, such as those involving grizzly bears, will be included in the highest penalty range of $100,000 and/or two years in prison. Increasing the fines for wildlife violations sends a clear message to the public and courts that Alberta will take such violations very seriously. I believe once people know that poaching violations in Alberta lead to significant penalties, this awareness will act as a strong deterrent.

Further to the amendments relating to enforcement, Alberta will have authorization to seize and retain equipment by poachers. Also, the province will establish reciprocal agreements with other jurisdictions to see that those convicted of serious wildlife violations elsewhere won't be able to get a hunting licence in Alberta and vice versa. In addition, people with outstanding fines for angling violations will not be able to buy a hunting licence until angling fines have been taken care of.

Another amendment is aimed at improving the effectiveness of the act when it comes to illegally selling wildlife. Specifically, advertising wildlife for sale will be considered an act of trafficking in wildlife.

Also, one of the key amendments is aimed at reducing wildlife/human encounters. The act gives Alberta the authority to issue cleanup orders for situations where people leave food or garbage that might attract wildlife. Indeed, food and garbage are sources of most human/bear problems. Cleanup orders will help protect bears as well as deer, elk, and other species that come in conflict with humans because of the food sources that lure wildlife to settled areas.

There are a few other proposed administrative amendments to the act regarding traps and certain licences and permits. Alberta is a very large province, and it is impossible to monitor everybody in the wildlife area.

Now, questions were asked during the second reading. Escape of captive animals. This is a cross-ministry responsibility involving staff primarily from Sustainable Resource Development and Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Community Development will also become involved if escaped animals are found in a protected area. Reports of such animals are shared between Sustainable Resource Development and Agriculture, Food and Rural Development as soon as a report has been received. Initial assessment is made to determine if the escaped animals pose any risk to the health of free-ranging wildlife.

Dog training and trialing. Exclusive consultation was undertaken in 2001 with a number of commercial dog trainers and provincial dog training and trial clubs as well as individuals involved in these activities. A number of amendments were passed in 2001 that extensively revised the regulations that applied to dog training and trialing. The amendments in this bill will adjust the act to support the current regulations and enable the subsequent amendments to simplify them. The amendment to the act involving dog training and trialing is strictly administrative. There will be no change to user privileges.

On the question on the removal of traps this amendment was intended to recognize the activities of people who trap animals for food under their constitutional protection rights. The change does not infringe on anybody's rights; rather, it provides better recognition for these rights by requiring trappers to report the removal of traps that they believe have been set illegally to wildlife officers.

Exemptions for employees. The Supreme Court of Canada ruled that agencies that investigate violations of law must not violate the same law unless the legislation specifically authorizes those activities. While the Supreme Court decision is related to police activities, this amendment responds to the ruling by recognizing all duties of Sustainable Resource Development staff. This includes wildlife research, for example capturing wildlife or keeping it captive; management, for example disease control activities; duties that involve hunting, for example destroying injured animals; and enforcement activities, investigation, and undercover operations.

Another question: an inefficient number of fish and wildlife officers and, in addition, severe budget restraints for enforcement activities. Sustainable Resource Development's mission ensures that Albertans continue to benefit from a broad range of resources including forests, public lands, and fish and wildlife. The Alberta government is committed to accomplishing this within its overall fiscal strategy, and there simply isn't an unlimited amount of money available for the department. It's not surprising that many people have different opinions regarding particular resources they feel strongly about. The Wildlife Amendment Act supports officers, very positive legislation, and will support enforcement efforts greatly by increasing fines for poachers. A significant increase in fines is known to have an immediate effect on poacher activities.

The other question on patrols. Like any enforcement agency there are a number of fish and wildlife patrols that go up and down. There has been an increase in patrol activities this fall during hunting season. Enforcement is more than just patrolling. It involves education and communicating with Albertans. Earlier this year priorities were focused on the West Nile surveillance, grizzly bear management, and fishery monitoring.

Undercover operations was another question. In addition to the good work regularly done by uniformed fish and wildlife officers, there has been, certainly, also good work by the undercover operations. Over the last six years undercover operations have resulted in 1,100 charges, about $1.1 million in fines, and about 20 years in prison sentences.

Now, a question was asked on budgets. There are almost 2,000 departmental staff working for Sustainable Resource Development. Sustainable Resource Development has no intention of laying off fish and wildlife officers. The department is proud of the work that they do. I understand that Sustainable Resource Development monitors its budget situation and makes adjustments for priority areas that arise. About $37 million was spent on fish and wildlife this year, up slightly from last year. Enforcement is one part of the budget, and one of the budget items within enforcement includes operation costs.

These should answer most of the questions that were asked, Mr. Chairman, and at this time I'll take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In speaking to Bill 50, the Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003, I can say that I think I'm onside with our caucus in certainly supporting the thrust and intent of this act. I feel that it's very safe to say that Albertans cherish their wilderness and that in many cases hunters and trappers are people who want to respect and protect that wilderness. In fact, there's an old saying that a river without fishermen is a river without friends, and I think it's the same kind of thing: a wilderness without hunters and trappers is a wilderness without friends. Certainly, the hunters and trappers who I know actually respect the laws. They get upset when there's illegal poaching. They will, I think, be happy to see that this legislation goes through and that there are stronger penalties for illegal poaching and hunting activities and trapping activities as well. So it looks to me like a good piece of bill that will resonate well with most Albertans.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I rise just briefly to also offer my comments with respect to the Wildlife Amendment Act before us, and I'm very pleased to support this bill because it represents increased protection for wildlife in our province. It's also an important piece of legislation that supports our parks and protected areas within the mandate of my ministry.

There are elements within our provincial parks and protected areas, such as our natural ecosystems, that help support wildlife. Of course, grizzly bears along with bighorn sheep and moose and cougars and bull trout and long-toed salamanders and a host of other wildlife species have all been part of hundreds of scientific studies in our protected areas, and I just wanted to indicate our support from the management and staff involved in provincial parks and protected areas towards this Wildlife Amendment Act.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Just a few comments that I'd like to get on the record around this bill. I think we're all pleased to hear about the penalties being increased, but I think what's really important with this is that although there's an attempt to put teeth in this legislation, if there isn't adequate funding in the department to provide the wildlife officers to do the monitoring and enforcement, the skull what holds the dentures that hold the teeth, all of this is for naught. You can have as many rules as you want, but if you never catch anyone that is breaking the law and never get them to the point where you are in fact levying one of these fines on them, what's the point? It's incumbent upon the government in moving this bill along to understand the context that it sits in and the support for the department. If we don't have the funding for those wildlife officers, then this is a useless piece of legislation. It just sits on a shelf.

Bill 54
Appropriation (Supplementary
Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2)

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, but under Standing Order 61(4)(iv) I must put the question proposing the approval of the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for consideration by the Committee of the Whole. Does the Committee of the Whole approve the following appropriation bill: Bill 54, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2)?

[Motion carried]

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I think we're continuing on with Bill 50.

The Chair: No. I think that if we read that, it says that the committee shall forthwith rise and report.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I move that we rise and report Bill 54, Bill 44, and progress on Bill 50.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports Bill 54. The committee reports Bill 44 with some amendments. The committee reports progress on Bill 50. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 51
Natural Resources Conservation Board
Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to begin debate on Bill 51, the Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act, 2003. I think I'd go right to addressing the questions that were raised in second reading by the hon. members of the opposition. Basically two concerns: one concern over repealing section 42, which deals with the financial administration of the board, and a concern over adjustment of the board members from five to six.

I'll begin with the amendment regarding the financial administration. Under this amendment the board's budget, once a separate document, will be included as part of the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development's budget.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar claims that government is moving away from transparency and accountability and toward a more secretive environment with this amendment. He also alleges that access to the board's finances will be unavailable under this amendment.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre requested clarification for the reasoning behind the change. She further questioned the independence of the board if its budget was to be included under the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development.

Well, first of all, let me say that the concerns were unfounded. The ministry's budget will contain all the information with respect to the board and its workings. Contrary to the member's claim the board's budget will still be accessible, as it is now. The board will still be required to provide annual reports, which they already provide, and the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development will continue to be responsible for the board and accountable to this House. The board's budget will still receive the same scrutiny. It will still be delivered and approved by the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, and the ministry's budget will be further scrutinized and voted on by this House, as is the case with all other ministries' budgets.

This amendment, in fact, raises the bar for accountability both for the board and for the ministry under which the board's budget will fall. The fact is that the board's responsibility changed significantly when it assumed the jurisdiction over confined feeding operations. These new responsibilities are more consistent with the purview of the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development than previously. Including the board's budget under the ministry's budget is not only very timely; it's very appropriate. It's also consistent with the way that many other similar boards operate. For example, the Environmental Appeal Board operates in a similar manner to that of the NRCB.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre also questioned the independence of the board if its budget was included as part of the ministry's budget. I believe I explained in second reading that this amendment to include the board's budget within the ministry's budget will make the process more accountable. It would in no way impact the board's decision-making ability as well. [interjection] Shake your head or not, that's how it is. Mr. Chairman, let me repeat that this amendment will not give the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development any jurisdiction over the workings of the board. It will not impact the board's functioning, which is independent from that ministry. It will simply include the board's budget as part of the ministry's budget.

The members opposite also expressed concern over board membership, the move from five to six members. Again, I clearly addressed this change during second reading. The board's responsibilities have increased and diversified considerably since it assumed the portfolio of confined feeding operations. In addition to its initial duties, the board now looks after all aspects of confined feeding operations. This includes applications, reviews, hearing dispute resolutions, and compliance. These hearings are held all over the province, and there's travel and all other responsibilities that the board has, and they do it in a timely manner.

CFOs are a strong part of Alberta's economy, and with these operations come the potential for things like groundwater contamination, a very real issue. Health-related issues like this could affect my family or my community, and I don't take that lightly. I want all members to know that. I like to think that the hon. members opposite would recognize the need for adequate resources to manage these kinds of things as well. These very important issues now fall under the jurisdiction of the NRCB. The resources required to deal with these increased responsibilities must still be found within the board. It must be adequately staffed to effectively deal with these issues, which, I'm sure, are important to Albertans, as they are to me, Mr. Chairman.

This brings me to the last inquirer, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. She said that she'd like to see the incorporation of something like a health impact assessment. Mr. Chairman, I can only assume that the hon. member was referring to the potential impacts of the confined feeding operations, and she can be sure, as this House and all Albertans can, that the NRCB regularly works with the regional health authorities when applications of this nature are submitted.

I would like to conclude by again stressing that these amendments have Albertans' best interests at heart, and, as I have said many times already, they'll bring the clarity needed to distinguish the board's diverse and comprehensive duties and enhance the accountability of government.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I listened as carefully as I could to the comments from the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, and I appreciated that he tried to address some of the issues raised by my colleagues in second reading.

I will say right off the bat that I'm still not clear what the rationale is for this bill. I might have missed it there. I'm not sure why we're doing this other than perhaps – well, I'm not sure why we're doing it, to be honest. I do share some of the concerns that have already been raised and, I guess, responded to, to some extent, by the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

But I must put on the record that the independence of boards like the Natural Resources Conservation Board is absolutely vital, and that independence must not just be real. It must be seen to be real. The Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne and all of us here undoubtedly are aware that whoever controls the budget of an organization to a very large extent controls that organization. So when legislation brings the budget under the minister, it does look very much like an increase in the power of the minister in question.

So I guess we'll have to agree to disagree, or perhaps in later comments the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne or some other member of the government can expand on the rationale for this bill so that I maybe can see something that I don't see there right now.

Now, in making comments on this bill, the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne referred to something that's come up, which is the role of the NRCB in overseeing – what are they called now? – ILOs, the intensive livestock operations. I fairly frequently get calls from citizens around the province about these kinds of operations, and I think people are calling me primarily because they're concerned around the health impacts, potential or actual health impacts, of intensive livestock operations. Of course, since the tragedy in Walkerton everybody is much more concerned about risks to water, to surface water, and the dreadful consequences that a mishap can lead to if there is such contamination. There are issues of odour, issues of dust, and, I think, even in the longer term issues of the dietary impact of the meats produced in these kinds of facilities. Earlier today, in fact, I was reading an NRCB ruling, an investigation into an ILO.

So with that sort of background, I have an amendment to propose for Bill 51. I've got the appropriate number of copies here, approved by Parliamentary Counsel, and I'll ask that they be distributed at this time. I'll wait a moment for them to be distributed.

The Chair: Hon. member, when you get around to moving it, it'll be called amendment A1. You have provided the original copy for the chair, so that's good.

Dr. Taft: While it's being distributed, Mr. Chairman, I'll read it into the record. I move that Bill 51, the Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act, 2003, be amended in section 3 by adding the following after the proposed subsection (2):

(3) For any application for approval, registration or authorization for a confined feeding operation under the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, the Board shall ensure that a health impact assessment is performed.

(4) For the purposes of subsection (3), a health impact assessment means an assessment by the regional Medical Officer of Health or designate, on the potential impact to the health of humans from a proposed approval, authorization or registration of a confined feeding operation.

The intent of this amendment is quite clear. It's intended to put into legislation a requirement that the NRCB undertake a health impact assessment when they are investigating applications for confined feeding operations. This is consistent, certainly, with the health policy that the Liberal opposition has brought forward, one aspect of which is calling for health impact assessments to be performed on major government policies. The notion of a health impact assessment is, in effect, parallel to that of an environmental impact assessment, so under a health impact assessment you'd simply be looking at a requirement that the health impacts of a particular decision be weighed, be thought through, and be reported on so that they enter into the debate and a decision-making process.

Now, as the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne pointed out, the NRCB typically does work with regional health authorities in looking at or approving confined feeding operations. This is a way to formalize that requirement. We know that these kinds of issues are of general concern. Even living in an urban constituency, I get calls and letters on these issues frequently. This is an opportunity to begin the process of raising the awareness of health issues on government decisions and government policies and in legislation. In the long term this is one way for us to help contain demands on the health care system. It is a way to shift our whole orientation to approaching health from one of responding after the fact to one of anticipating before the fact: prevention instead of treatment.

So I would urge members of the Assembly to support this. This is not a terribly costly amendment. In fact, as I said earlier, in many ways this is a formalization of existing practice, but it is a formalization that is important symbolically and at some times will be important legally, for if the health impact assessment were not done and if it was in legislation, then there might be grounds for legal action.

If people want to learn more about our notion of a health impact assessment in this context and more broadly, of course, they are always welcome to visit our opposition web site, which is liberalopposition.com. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Independence is vital; I agree with you. Like I said earlier, the health impact assessment I don't think is needed in the form of a bill. As I said earlier, often the regional health boards are brought into the discussion. Albertans and Alberta producers have proven that their products are safe, and Albertans haven't questioned that, as you can see with what's happened in these past six months. I think that the bill addresses in an adequate nature the changes that need to be brought in to clarify the board's administrative function and that it continue to operate in a manner that has been becoming of the NRCB.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to speak to this amendment to Bill 51. This amendment would require applications for the approval of a confined feeding operation – they keep changing the titles of these, hoping to I suppose confuse people about what it is that's going to be constructed just upwind of them.

I just want to indicate that contrary to what the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne said about safety of Alberta agricultural products, I would remind him that one case of BSE, which arose in conditions in which the provincial government had neglected the health and safety of Albertans through cuts to officers regulating the meat industry and then through their misguided attempt to . . .

Mr. VanderBurg: Point of order.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, a point of order has been called by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Point of Order

Clarification

Mr. VanderBurg: There is no way I'm going to listen to that crock.

The Chair: Do you have a citation?

Mr. VanderBurg: That is absolutely untrue. The department of agriculture and the government have taken good care of the agriculture community, and those comments are unfounded.

The Chair: That's basically a clarification, which could be given whenever the hon. member is finished speaking, as opposed to a point of order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. That saves me having to make a point of order about the purported point of order that was just made.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, it is, in fact, the case that there were reductions by this government in the number of inspectors that were available for meat prior to that case being found, and it is also the case that the whole system was plugged up with elk heads. Now, we can get into the history of how we came to have so many elk heads sitting in the freezers in provincial labs. It is well known that the government promoted the elk ranching industry and that lots of people got involved in it, many of them friends of the government, who lost their shirts in the business when it collapsed because of chronic wasting disease and that the minister of agriculture ordered that these animals be given priority for testing, which is part of the reason why that one cow spent three months . . .

11:10

Ms Blakeman: How long?

Mr. Mason: Three months in a freezer before it could be tested, and that this fact contributed to the lack of confidence of the American, Japanese, and other governments in Alberta's testing program, which resulted in massive losses to the cattle industry in this province and the expenditure, I might add, which we just approved tonight, Mr. Chairman, of over $700 million in aid for farmers. The government has got off very, very lightly with respect to its responsibility for that whole mess, which has devastated the agricultural industry this year in our province.

But to come back to the question of ILOs, Mr. Chairman, it is, I think, very prudent to ensure that there be a health impact assessment before ILOs are approved. I would suggest that the move towards ILOs, particularly in the hog industry, is fraught with a number of potential problems. The government has shown a remarkable lack of foresight in anticipating what these problems might be and preparing for them in a way that ensures that people's health and the environment are not seriously compromised.

So the hon. member's proposal here to require health impact assessments and his definition of a health impact assessment seems to me a very valuable addition to Bill 51. I think that in practice it's good because there is a lot of concern. We hear a lot of concern from people who are worried about the confined feeding operations or the intensive livestock operations or factory farms or whatever you want to call them.

It's becoming apparent to us that these groups feel that it is the Natural Resources Conservation Board's mission to impose ILOs on communities irrespective of whether or not the people in those communities want to have them sited there. We have received submissions from individuals and groups who have been trying to make use of the system, so-called, which has been put in place to approve these things, and they are getting nowhere with the Natural Resources Conservation Board. They are facing continued environmental damage from ILOs, which affects both their quality of life and the value of their property. There are many concerns from agricultural communities regarding the sustainable farming practices. So I think that this would give some additional direction to the NRCB, and I think it is welcome.

Community people that have talked to us believe that the NRCB is the government's tool to expand ILOs in the province. The government, they believe, I think correctly, controls the board largely by controlling appointments. If this were passed, the government's goal could be undermined, and I think that's part of the difficulty.

Here are a few things that people have said to us, Mr. Chairman.

The NRCB Act must be stripped of most of its power. People are asking for board reviews on board approved hog barns with proof that the siting of certain CFO's is bad, these people are being refused any board reviews.

Another person says:

Looking at the Review Board themselves, I question why they were selected. Why are there no persons on this board that [have] any regard for the environment? The majority of the members have a keen interest in the expansion of the livestock industry as they have a financial interest in it.

Mr. Chairman, it's clear that many people in this province have no confidence in the NRCB as it's now constituted or in its mandate as it is now constituted. So the hon. member's amendment, which would require the NRCB to do health assessments, would be an important step towards ensuring that this board is actually looking after the interests of the public rather than simply being a tool of the government to force the siting of ILOs over and above the objections of individuals living in rural Alberta.

As such, Mr. Chairman, I urge all members to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on amendment A1.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Just for clarification, this is amendment A1, because I at a later date have amendments to this bill as well. So this is A1.

I first would like to congratulate the Member for Edmonton-Riverview for presenting this amendment to the Legislative Assembly. I would encourage all members to support this amendment. When you think of a health impact assessment and you think of how intensive livestock operations will affect, for instance, air quality and water quality, the concept of a health impact assessment goes far beyond Official Opposition policy.

In fact, I would urge the government not only to adopt this amendment but to adopt the health care policy. The health care policy, for those who are interested and have laptops hooked up here, is at liberalopposition.com. Many different places . . . [interjection] An hon. member mentioned fairy tales. Well, their government's own web site with insurance was nothing but a fairy tale, and it was a short-lived fairy tale, because it didn't live for a day on the internet. The information was wrong, and all of a sudden it was pulled off. Now, that's an Internet fairy tale, not a health care policy.

The Chair: Hon. member, we're on the amendment; aren't we?

Mr. MacDonald: Of course.

The Chair: It seemed that I'd lost you there for a while.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Now, Mr. Chairman, a health impact assessment, not only when one considers air quality and water quality but also the entire approvals process for one of these enterprises in rural Alberta – it would be a lot easier. People downwind, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands stated, could rest a little easier. Also, when you have these intensive livestock operations, or confined feedlot operations, a health impact assessment perhaps would also comfort people, because many people in this province believe that we are getting the pollution and someone else is getting the pork and the profits.

When you consider what will be left behind, Mr. Chairman, long after the ILO, or the confined feedlot operation, is gone, the effect on the surrounding environment and how that could affect, again, the citizens who are in the community, well, it's one more reason why all members of this Assembly should support the health impact assessment.

We go one step further in this process, and we look at the health impact assessment and the role of the regional medical officer of health or a designate. Now, in the case of southeastern Alberta it may be a designate because, unfortunately, I believe the medical officer of health in one regional health authority lost his job as a result of his comments on Kyoto. So it might in the case of this amendment be a designate because the office may not be filled because of a termination because of an alternate or different opinion.

Now, this medical officer of health or the designate could study "the potential impact to the health of humans from a proposed approval, authorization or registration of a confined feeding operation." That would make, again, a thorough study of the entire operation, Mr. Chairman. If we adopt this amendment A1 to Bill 51 this evening, it would be the first use of a health impact assessment in Alberta. It would be historic, and if we want to make history, well, then, let's support the amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. It would be an important first step.

11:20

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would urge all members to put aside their partisan differences and support this amendment. Rural Alberta will sleep more comfortably at night knowing that if a CFO has been approved by the Natural Resources Conservation Board, there will be a health impact assessment done, and we would have a better community and a better province. So I would urge all hon. members at this time to support amendment A1.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Mr. Chairman, in regard to Bill 51, the Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act, I have had quite a look at this bill and have had discussions with a few citizens and have conducted some research. As dejected as I am over the defeat of the health impact assessment amendment, when we consider the membership of the board and the purpose of the board, we have a look at the proposed subsection (2). Now, at this time I have another amendment that I would like to present to the Legislative Assembly for its consideration. It has been submitted to the table, and I believe, yes, it has been circulated.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move amendment A2 to Bill 51, the Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act. I would like to move that Bill 51 be amended in section 3 by adding the following after the proposed subsection (2).

(3) The Board shall develop appropriate environmental standards, in concert with the appropriate experts, that deal with the remains of animals and the buildings or other structures if a confined feeding operation, as defined under the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, is destroyed unintentionally.

(4) The Board shall develop appropriate environmental standards, in concert with the appropriate experts, to deal with the remains of a confined feeding operation, as defined under the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, that has ceased operations.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, is meant to address the concerns which have been expressed by many members of the public. There are some serious concerns about the environmental impacts of intensive livestock operations which may affect human health. We talked about that a little earlier in debate on Bill 51, amendment A1, and certainly there were concerns about water and especially air quality. These concerns remain foremost in the minds of many.

Now, this amendment is designed to address some very specific instances where there have been some identified gaps in Alberta statutes. This summer there was an operation in our province which was the victim of a fire. The structures housing the animals were destroyed, and the animals inside them were killed. The loss to the producer was no doubt significant. It was significant financially and emotionally.

However, in addition to this tragedy there were some serious concerns about the remains, especially the remains of the animals. Yes, the animals. The carcasses sat, so I am told, for 10 to 11 days in the open air. Then they were simply buried, Mr. Chairman. There were no tests to ensure that the remains weren't near a water aquifer, for example. They were just simply buried. This is a serious concern and has the potential, if not in this case in another down the road, to be a hazard to human health.

Not only does this amendment compel the Natural Resources Conservation Board to establish standards to deal with the remains of an intensive livestock operation which has ceased to operate, but it also compels the Natural Resources Conservation Board to develop standards to deal appropriately with situations which I have described. These standards must be in concert with technical experts who understand fully the ramifications of the impact of such instances on the environment and to human health.

In light of what I have just stated, I would urge all hon. members to vote in favour of amendment A2. The health impact assessment was defeated, but this is everyone in this Assembly's second chance to improve Bill 51.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll keep my comments brief in supporting this bill, but I do think that this is worth serious consideration. Some of these confined feeding operations are essentially like midsize cities in terms of the sewage they produce, the water they consume, and the tens and tens of thousands of animals that they house. If one of those, Heaven forbid, is struck by fire, which sooner or later is inevitable or is very likely, it would seem to me, or if there is some kind of catastrophic disease outbreak or if there is some other reason that one of these buildings is destroyed unintentionally or, as has happened more than once in this province, a confined feeding operation goes bankrupt and can't find a new buyer and ceases operation, there are very serious questions around what happens to these very, very significant facilities. This would provide for those situations clearly and in legislation so that we don't see large numbers of animals left to decay or just get randomly buried in a field adjacent to the operation.

So I think that's the kind of measure that the people of this province would expect from their government, the kind of thing that would, as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said, help them sleep easier at night.

I would encourage members to support this amendment. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, December 2, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/12/02

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome.

Let us pray. Our Father, we confidently ask for Your strength and encouragement in our service of You through our service of others. We ask for Your gift of wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 56 grade 6 students and their teachers Miss Colleen Reeder, Ms Campbell, Mr. French and parent helpers Mrs. Krause, Mrs. Marko, Mrs. Daniels, Mrs. Kim, Mrs. Lee, and Mrs. Parish from George P. Nicholson school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're here today to observe and learn with keen interest about our government, and we've had an opportunity to tour our legislative chambers. George P. Nicholson is a new school in the area of Twin Brooks. It's a wonderful new addition to our community. It's a wonderful new addition for our children, and there's only one thing that I would mention, that the Minister of Learning might perhaps provide a few more books for the library. I'd ask the teachers, students, and parent helpers to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's also a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce six fine young people who are committed to safer communities and a more peaceful Canada. Each of them was involved in bringing nearly 400 young people from across Canada to Edmonton for YouCan's youth conference on peace building and conflict resolution. For those of you not familiar with YouCan, it's a national organization that promotes youth-led conflict resolution and violence prevention initiatives. I had the pleasure of speaking at the event, and, as I told them, it was exciting for me to see young Canadians investing their enthusiasm in something as important and as constructive as peaceful problem solving. They even had me dancing to Twisted Sister on Saturday morning. It's my pleasure to introduce Kyle Dubé, Tara Tancred, Rob Heydari, Bryan Conroy, Cortney Garnett, and Cam Malchow. I congratulate them again on the successful event and ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to be able to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislature 56 of the most rambunctious, keenest, and friendliest grade 6 students you could ever meet. They're from Aldergrove school. These bright, eager young people have been touring the Legislature this morning and have also decorated a Christmas tree in the pedway. Accompanying the students are their teachers, Mrs. Christine Steil and Mrs. Sandy Colquhoun. Aldergrove is blessed with a large, very active school council and many, many volunteers. Accompanying the students and their teachers are some of these parent volunteers: Mr. Ed Cox, Mrs. Shelley Cox, Ms Renae Sauer, Mrs. Cindy Alexander, Ms Terry Arndt, Mrs. Tracy Miller, Mrs. Wendy Anderson, and Mrs. Marlan Ballantyne. My Aldergrove guests are seated in the public gallery, and I'm asking that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is, indeed, a pleasure for me to stand on behalf of my colleague the Member for Edmonton-McClung, the Minister of Economic Development, to introduce a constituent of his, Chelsea Mitchell. Chelsea is seated in the members' gallery, and if she would please rise, I would ask that all members give her the warm welcome she deserves.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me today to stand in the House and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature a number of people including a number of chiefs of the First Nations communities from northern Alberta. I'll introduce the chiefs and some of the members of their band, and then I'll ask them to rise: first of all, Chief Jerry Noskey from the Loon River Cree Nation, Chief Bernie Meneen from the Tallcree First Nation, Chief Rose Laboucan from the Driftpile First Nation, Chief Steve Didzena from the Dene Tha' First Nation, Chief Francis Gladue from the Bigstone Cree Nation, Lorraine Muskwa from the Alberta Treaty 8 health authority, and Daniel Nanooch, an elder. I'd ask all of them to rise, as well as the other members of their band that are there, and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first introduction is Karen Farkas and Clyde Hurtig. They are the owners of Heart Smart Foods in Sherwood Park, and they are patrons of the arts and, particularly, supporters of Workshop West. They are my guests today, and they're shadowing me as an MLA. They're keenly interested in the democratic process. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

My second introduction today, Mr. Speaker, is a man I'm very proud of. Brian Deedrick is Lacombe born and bred. He was educated at the University of Alberta, and he apprenticed his craft in Europe and throughout the world. My friend Brian is now the artistic director of the Edmonton Opera and has just opened, very successfully, his first production directed as artistic director, Turandot. He's accompanied today by the woman that makes it all possible, and that is Mary Phillips-Rickey. She's the general manager for the Edmonton Opera, and I know that she does all the heavy lifting. I'm very proud of both of these people. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During question period today there will be some 55 students from Will Sinclair high school in Rocky Mountain House joining us, and they will be accompanied by teachers Mrs. Alanna Cellini, Mr. Nathan Moore, and Mrs. Roxane Melvin, as well as a parent helper, Mrs. Christine Merillis. They will be joining us, as I said, during question period, and they may be leaving before it's over.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take the opportunity today to introduce to you and to members of this Assembly two outstanding individuals from Calgary that I've the opportunity of meeting with, Mr. John Merrifield and Mr. Jim Wolfe from SAP Canada. If they would stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Access to Crown Land

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the Premier said yesterday with regard to Bill 49, "It was a case of the legislation getting out ahead of the consultation process." To the Premier: does your government have time before session ends in a few days to consult all the chiefs of the area to get their buy-in for Bill 49?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know about a buy-in, and certainly the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development met with some, not all, of the chiefs today – as I understand, one chief boycotted the meeting – to try and explain the intention of Bill 49. I would like to point out that Bill 49 is not intended to resolve the long-standing conflict between developers and aboriginal people over access to public lands. There is a separate consultation process that is now under way to resolve this issue, and that process has been led by the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and involves six other ministers.

Bill 49 relates to this issue in only one specific way: it reinforces already existing laws against illegal activities on public lands. The bill reiterates that blockades and the charging or accepting of unauthorized access fees on public lands are illegal. And they are illegal, Mr. Speaker.

I would remind the leader of the Liberal opposition that on February 9 he was quoted as saying that the government doesn't have the courage to do what they have to do: enforce the law. Well, that's exactly what Bill 49 does. Nothing more, nothing less.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, Bill 49 only enforces half the law.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, please. We're now in third reading stage of Bill 49. The purpose of question period is not to debate the bill. If there are policy questions, proceed.

Dr. Nicol: Just clarifying what I said, sir.

It is the aboriginal affairs minister's job to consult with the First Nations. Why were the First Nations not brought in and truly consulted on Bill 49 before it was introduced in the House?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I alluded to that yesterday, and I said that perhaps they should have been involved in those consultations relative to the legislation. It doesn't change the fact that the legislation will go ahead, because it speaks to a matter of the law and the matter of the measures that need to be taken to make sure that the law is upheld. As I explained before, there is a separate consultation process now under way, and that process, as I understand, will continue.

I will have the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development explain more relative to the process.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, the process on consultation, as I've indicated in this House, is to be able to work with the First Nations and deal with a process for us to be able to identify how we can look at potential infringement and what would happen to aboriginal and treaty rights. We need to continue to do that, and that's very important.

On the issue of Bill 49 I'm sure my colleague from Sustainable Resource Development would like to discuss that further in terms of the recommendation that was brought forward.

The Speaker: I'm going to repeat what I just finished saying. We've now dealt with Bill 49 in first reading, second reading, committee, and it's on the Order Paper for third reading. We'll discuss process but not the bill.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, to the minister of aboriginal affairs: given that $6 million was to be spent, can she outline the process that she went through in consulting with the First Nations prior to the development of the bill and the introduction of that bill in this House?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, so many times I've talked about the whole issue of what we're doing on consultation, and obviously there is some misinformation and misunderstanding as to what's happening. The consultation initiative is to be able to deal with the various ministries who would come to the table to be able to develop guidelines and policies relative to how we work with First Nations on the development of this where it could potentially impact the First Nations' aboriginal rights and treaty rights. That's basically what we're doing. That's a separate process. That is dealing with that issue on a larger scale.

In terms of the other process, we are working on the contractor issue and the First Nations. First Nations wanted to get on the page in terms of economic development. We heard their concerns, and we know that we have to be able to deal with that issue and ensure that as we move forward, we continue to work with them on these issues. So, Mr. Speaker, we have some information that'll be coming out later on this afternoon.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, Motion 01-11-28-03, passed by Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta: "To reject Bill 49 in its entirety and further that the Chiefs Committee appointed develop an action plan for Treaty 8 (Alberta) to oppose Bill 49." This was moved by Chief Waquan and seconded by Chief Meneen and carried unanimously by their assembly. To the Premier: is it the policy of the Premier and of government still to pass this bill when he knows that Treaty 8 chiefs are completely opposed to this bill?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister who introduced Bill 49 speak to it, if you'll allow him, but, as I said, that bill is not intended to resolve the long-standing conflict between developers and aboriginal people over access to public lands. It is a bill to ensure that the law is upheld relative to enforcing already existing laws against illegal activity on public lands.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the motion passed by the chiefs, I asked the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development specifically – specifically – what is the problem with the legislation? Once I know – and if one of the chiefs or all of them would write me a note and tell me specifically, absolutely specifically what they object to – then perhaps we can deal with it, but according to the minister there were no specifics.

Dr. Nicol: Then to the Premier: will you pull the bill and meet with the chiefs that are in the gallery in this House today so that they can give you their understanding of what is needed to make this work?

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a constitutional difficulty with that question. The bill is the property of the House. No individual can pull anything. The House must now make a decision on this bill.

Mr. Klein: Well, after your dissertation, Mr. Speaker, I don't know how to answer that question. I'll defer to the hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, in relation to the process and just for clarification here, the bill is the law in general application. We manage over a hundred million acres of public land in Alberta. Five million of that is leased to various users even in the white area. Of course, there's a multi multi amount of users across the province. Therefore, that is why we followed the process we did.

Dr. Nicol: In a process of rebuilding the trust of First Nations, will the Premier meet with the chiefs in the gallery after question period?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I haven't had a formal request, and I'm not considering the request or the demand by the leader of the Liberal opposition to meet with the chiefs as a formal request. If they write me a note, I'll take it under consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that this is not an issue that relates to aboriginal people or First Nations people only. It is an issue, as the hon. minister pointed out, that is provincewide. There are instances, well, near the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition's own riding, where people say: well, you can come onto public land, if it's leased, if you, for instance, rent a cot in my granary or if you pay me to guide you. Well, that is illegal, because the law clearly states that access to public land shall be free access to public land. That is respecting the traditional rights of aboriginal people to hunt and fish on those lands, and we respect that. There are instances in southern Alberta, in central Alberta, and in numerous nonaboriginal areas where this practice is taking place, and all we want to do is introduce legislation to make sure that the law is enforced.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Premier's Trip to the United Kingdom

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is interesting to observe just who exactly this government wants to meet with. The Premier, in discussing his travel plans, announced that he would be meeting with representatives of Centrica, the parent company of Direct Energy. However, yesterday during question period the Premier said: "I didn't meet with Centrica in London. I ran into a representative of the company and exchanged a few words with him." My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier disclose where he just happened to run into the Centrica representative in London and what the full extent of their conversation was?

1:50

Mr. Klein: I'd be very, very happy to, Mr. Speaker. The extent of our conversation was very, very brief indeed. I ran into the representative of Centrica at a joint dinner meeting of the chamber of commerce. Or maybe it was a luncheon meeting. I'm not quite sure. I know that there was food, and I know that it was a joint meeting of the Canada-U.K. Chamber of Commerce. The representative from Centrica was there.

The conversation lasted about 30 seconds to 45 seconds, maybe up to a minute; I don't know for sure. After "Hi. How are you? Centrica? Oh, I know Centrica, yes. You're involved in Alberta.

We look forward to your participation. I understand that you have some matters that are now before the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. I hope that they can be sorted out as quickly as possible," his reply was, "Yes, I do hope that they can be sorted out as soon as possible." That was the end of the conversation.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier: given that yesterday the Premier said that "they're hopeful of having their issue vis-à-vis Direct Energy resolved before the Energy and Utilities Board very shortly," does the Premier not even know when he's being lobbied?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if the gentleman gave me his card or not, but in no way was I being lobbied. In no way whatsoever was I being lobbied. That was the extent of the conversation. If I can track down the gentleman, I will gladly give the hon. member his name so he can ask the person himself if, in fact, that person lobbied me. It simply didn't happen.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: when will this government stop interfering with the decision-making process of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know of any instance where this government has interfered, actually intervened, with the process of the board.

Relative to the Centrica issue, I have never nor will I ever send a letter, make a phone call, discuss this matter with any member or any staff person of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. It would be improper, and I certainly wouldn't do that. I don't know if the member of the opposition would do that, but I wouldn't do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

First Nations Economic Development

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For many years First Nations people have been struggling to obtain independence in economic development, and the government has twiddled its thumbs. The Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development has clearly dropped the ball in terms of consolidation with respect to Treaty 8 people on the legislation which is currently before this House. My question is to the Premier. Why is it, Mr. Premier, that the economic development concerns of First Nations people can sit on the back burner for years and years and the government can move very, very quickly and by stealth to take away their rights through a piece of legislation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I take great exception to that statement. I take exception to that statement because we have in this caucus, in this Assembly, two aboriginal members: the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. [interjection] No. One Métis and one treaty. [interjections] Four Métis and one adopted.

Mr. Speaker, having said that, I'm sure that the ND and the Liberal opposition would agree that no one ought to be able to break the law, whether that person is white or a member of First Nations or of any other descent. No one in Canada should be allowed to break the law, and Bill 49 simply reinforces the right to uphold the law.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the consultation and to speak to the issue that the hon. member raises, first of all, the consultation process quite clearly encourages the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers and other people who do work on aboriginal traditional lands to ensure that its members utilize fair contracting procedures so as to provide a level playing field for aboriginal and nonaboriginal contractors seeking work. That also applies to employment.

We resist suggestions that an attempt be made to influence the manner – and this speaks to the issue that was brought up previously – in which the Energy and Utilities Board deals with First Nations issues but indicate that industry is entitled to contact the board directly with its concerns and that Alberta differentiate between the understandable concerns of contractors related to fees and blockades and the less legitimate complaints about the loss of market share to First Nations. I think that's very important. As a result of rational . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, I think we're getting into a debate on the bill here, on which we've arrived at reading three now. I'm going to repeat that for the third time.

The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The question really is this: why is the government prepared to move very quickly in strengthening the law yet has dragged its feet for years and years in respect to the concerns of the aboriginal people and their economic development?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is not true. That is absolutely untrue. This member should stand up and apologize. There is no government that has done more for aboriginal people than this government. That is so untrue, so false. He should be ashamed of himself. He should apologize to this House and to the people of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why is it, then, that aboriginal people and Treaty 8 people are here? Not to observe what the New Democrat caucus is saying but what your government is doing when your government sells them out.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I just received a note signed by five of the chiefs requesting a meeting as soon as question period is over or immediately after the Assembly is complete for the day. I will meet with the chiefs maybe not today but at some future time in the very near future. I have commitments for the rest of the day, and I'm sure that members of the First Nations have commitments. So I just can't drop everything and have a meeting, but I will pass this on to my appointment secretary. She will contact one of the chiefs, and we will set an appropriate time for a meeting. That's not a problem.

Internet Luring

Mrs. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I'm very troubled by recent reports of two young girls who were lured over the Internet into potentially dangerous and harmful situations. In the case of the young lady from Lacombe, she flew all the way to Toronto on a ticket purchased by a Toronto male. Fortunately, this played out well as there was a great deal of assistance between police forces and officers that led to a successful conclusion. The male in question was apprehended immediately upon the girl's disembarkment at Pearson international airport. Both girls in question were only 15 years old, yet no charges were laid. To the Minister of Justice: can the minister explain what he has done to ensure that Canadian laws protect children in these situations and further explain why charges could not be laid against the males allegedly involved?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General on the first section of the question. The second one is not within the purview of the House.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the House will know, because I've taken every opportunity I can to talk about this issue, we in Alberta have taken a very strong position about the protection of our children and a very strong position with respect to federal laws that need to be changed with respect to protection of children from child pornography and to increase the age of consent. In fact, this House passed a resolution several years ago, unanimously I believe, encouraging the federal government to raise the age of consent.

Currently the age of consent for sexual activity with a person is 14 years of age. It would send a clear and unambiguous message that children are not appropriate sexual partners where significant age discrepancy exists by raising that to 16 years of age. Now, this comes into play with respect to Internet luring because the sections of the code with respect to age and consent for sexual activity are the same sections of the code that are relied on with respect to the Internet luring changes that the federal government is proposing. Strengthening the Internet luring questions will only go so far. We also need to strengthen the law with respect to the age of consent.

With respect to the specific case that the member mentioned, I can't speculate as to what information or evidence the police had with respect to laying a charge, but I can say that it's safe to say that children in chat rooms are being preyed upon by men who would not otherwise have access to them. When a 15 year old shows up at a meeting, consent is not the real issue. The child will be impressed or intimidated into following through with promises made.

So raising the age of consent to 16 would have protected both of the girls in this situation, raising the age to 16 would have put more teeth into the Internet luring provisions, which the federal government is proposing for the Criminal Code, and raising the age of consent would have been essential to allowing a prosecution of this type of offence.

Mrs. Gordon: My next question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Solicitor General. If the police had had timely access to passenger lists, apprehension of one of the young ladies could have taken place before departure at the Edmonton International Airport. Why can't the police intervene earlier by accessing passenger manifests without a court order when time is of the essence and lives could be at stake?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that the passenger in this case, the young person, had a valid ticket, and she had not committed a crime under existing law before boarding the aircraft. That doesn't necessarily mean that the person that lured her hadn't committed a crime. Under federal freedom of information legislation police do not have access to the passenger list. I also understand that in this case in question the police were able to determine through other methods that the young person was aboard the plane and were able to safely apprehend her and return her. Airlines and police work in co-operation during occasions that might be deemed to be an emergency or an urgent situation, as they did in this particular case.

Mr. Speaker, I also understand that the parents in this case were so pleased with the RCMP's quick work that they gave the Edmonton International Airport RCMP detachment a plaque of appreciation. The system worked well in this case, and the police need to be commended for their hard work.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Southeast Calgary Hospital

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, in 1998 the Premier said of southeast Calgary, "Clearly, [it] has been identified as one of the fastest growing areas, and that's where the next hospital should be built." Well, it's five years later, and this government hasn't provided a penny for a new hospital in southeast Calgary. In fact, the Calgary health region is having to turn to private funds to build the hospital. My questions are to the Premier. Why has the Premier broken his word to the people of Calgary by not providing the funds necessary for a new hospital?

Mr. Klein: That is not quite true, Mr. Speaker. Really, we appoint regional health authorities to advise us on the health needs in a particular region. In this particular case, we are waiting for a formal request from the RHA. I have had informal meetings with the president of the RHA, Jack Davis, relative to the approach that they would like to take; that is, that the RHA would like to take vis-à-vis a new hospital in the southeast or the south. Mr. Davis indicates to me that they, being the RHA, would like to pursue the P3 notion relative to the construction of a hospital. There has never, never, never been a formal request for funds to build a new hospital.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the expected $3.4 billion surplus, would the province fund a new southeast Calgary hospital with public funds if they received such a request?

Mr. Klein: That is purely hypothetical, Mr. Speaker. We would have to examine it. It would have to go through the process of Agenda and Priorities, on to the standing policy committee, then to Treasury Board, then to cabinet, then to caucus. It would have to have a thorough vetting. We would have to look at the project in terms of our overall financing requirements. We would have to have discussions with the RHA relative to the scope and the size of the facility.

So there are many, many questions that need to be answered, and only the government can answer those questions. It's not as simple as the opposition would have everyone believe it is by saying: will you now commit, you know, a half billion dollars or so to a hospital? I mean, if that's the way that they propose to conduct government, it's no wonder that they only have seven members.

Dr. Taft: Will the Premier assure Calgarians that the owners and operators of any new southeast Calgary hospital will not be foreign investors?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, that is so hypothetical, so far down the road. We haven't received any proposals of any form. Admittedly, there have been informal discussions relative to the need for a hospital in southeast Calgary, and I agree with assertions that there is a need for the hospital. I'm sure that MLAs who serve that area agree that there is a need for a medical facility, a hospital in that area, but as to the design, who will finance it, whether it's publicly financed or whether it's alternatively financed privately, those details haven't been worked out, and I can't comment on whether or not the RHA would exclude foreign investors.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the member indicated that we hadn't done anything relative to the hospital in south Calgary. The fact is that we have allowed the assembly of the property in order to accommodate this facility, and we are currently in the process of assisting with the scope of the project as it relates to the programs that will be operated out of that hospital. So to ever indicate that, in fact, there's been no response from government is absolutely false.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:10 Diversified Livestock Producers

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents who own and operate diversified livestock operations are very concerned that they were not included when the compensation programs for cattle producers were developed even though diversified livestock operations were also being hurt by the border closure. My question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What kind of compensation was available for diversified livestock producers?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, let me clarify for the hon. member. Diversified livestock operators were eligible for each and every program that was related to BSE slaughter. They were included in the Canada/Alberta slaughter program. They were involved in the fed cattle competitive bid program, and in fact because of the necessity of waiting for slaughter capacity, we extended a slaughter program for those diversified livestock operators. So they have had very equitable treatment since May 20.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental for the same minister is: how does the minister's recent announcement of an Alberta mature animal transition program affect diversified livestock producers?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, because all ruminants were affected by the May 20 BSE discovery in Alberta and all ruminants do not have the same type of operation, we have had to work with each industry, whether it was elk, deer, llama, alpaca, goats, sheep, as well as cattle, to ensure that whatever programs we put in place to support them work for them.

Because bison and cattle have a fairer slaughter market, they will be included under slaughter. Because elk, deer, and some of the others do not have that type of meat market developed, in consultation with them we have developed a feed program or something that suits their activity better. We established very quickly, as well, an other-ruminant roundtable, and each one of these groups has a member on that, and they assess this on a weekly basis and tell us whether it's working or not.

So, Mr. Speaker, we think we're well on the right track with diversified livestock in dealing with BSE.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Homeless Shelters

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the Minister of Seniors proposed charging homeless people a fee of up to a third of their income, if they have one, to stay at homeless shelters to foster responsibility. The proposal suggests that the money would be saved for a client in order to help pay for damage deposits on apartments. My questions today are to the Minister of Seniors. How does the minister see this plan helping people with mental illness or long-term health or addiction problems? Do they magically receive budgeting and coping skills they didn't have before?

Mr. Woloshyn: Well, Mr. Speaker, she raises two very different issues. I was referring to people who have an income who use the shelters as an interim residence, if you will. In the aftermath of the publicity surrounding it, it's very interesting to find that some shelters even currently charge for what I was suggesting. The next step is for these shelters to work with the individuals that are paying to have the transition to more permanent housing by helping with the damage deposit and first month's rent. So that's something that perhaps we'll be continuing to see further with the shelter operators.

With respect to folks with other kinds of problems, there are agencies that work with them, and, yes, they are a concern, and at some point we'll be trying to determine if there are better places for them to lodge and to live permanently. Through our Canada affordable housing program, Mr. Speaker, we've already opened facilities for people who have need for supports across this province, and we'll be opening more of them. So I think it's a matter not without cause that Alberta is being looked upon across the country as a leader in providing housing, a leader in the new program that is going forward with the Canada affordable housing program to the extent that if we choose, we can sign on for an additional four years after this particular four-year period is over.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: can the minister table or show us what studies he consulted that would make a reasonable person believe that charging a homeless person for shelter would create responsibility? What studies did he look at?

Mr. Woloshyn: I would turn the question around and ask the hon. member if she is aware of the different kinds of classifications of people who occupy homeless shelters. My understanding is that there are some folks in there who can stay in a shelter for up to two years. There are other folks who are in there for a shorter period of time. [interjection] A little longer, I'm told from the other side. The people who are in the news the most are the folks who need overnight, shall we say, short-term, emergency kinds of locations.

This year, Mr. Speaker, we have been tracking the use of shelters on a daily basis. I'm very pleased to announce that on a nightly basis the Herb Jamieson shelter in Edmonton has vacancies. We are short of spots for folks who are inebriated, and that's something that we're working on currently with the Hope Mission in Edmonton. In Calgary we have made arrangements with the Calgary Drop-In Centre for an additional possible 200 emergency beds until the end of March, and I'm pleased to say there that about 50 of those beds on the average are not occupied. In addition, the province operates the Sunalta shelter, which has a capacity of 150 emergency beds, 50 of which on the average are not occupied. So currently, if things remain the same, we have the situation very well in hand in both Edmonton and Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: the minister purportedly apologized for making public prematurely this idea of charging the homeless fees, but is this idea still being worked on behind closed doors?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, as the member knows, anytime that she has a question to ask me, I always answer it, and there's nothing going on behind closed doors. The issue came forward when I answered a question posed to me in Calgary at the opening of a shelter, the Ward shelter, and I answered the reporter quite honestly, saying that that was under consideration.

Yes, we will be discussing the viability of it with shelter operators. I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that if any shelter operators do not subscribe to it, it cannot be imposed on them. They are the key to making it work. The government does not get involved directly with their operations. I'm very sure that we'll see as the days go by that the value of this suggestion will be recognized and that we will have some buy-in from the operators across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Grain Marketing

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act was passed into Alberta law. This act allows the minister of agriculture to enter into an agreement with either the Canadian Wheat Board or the federal government to allow a test open market for wheat and barley in Alberta. Many of my constituents were excited by the passage of this law as they feel they deserve the opportunity to sell their wheat and barley to any buyer, including the Canadian Wheat Board. Their excitement is waning, however, as the marketing situation hasn't changed in Alberta over the past year. My question to the Premier: since last fall what has the province done to support and assist Alberta's grain producers in their efforts to convince the Canadian Wheat Board that they deserve to have marketing choice just like farmers in Ontario?

Mr. Klein: We're working on the test market, of course. I don't know the state of our legislation. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View is going to introduce legislation, Mr. Speaker, that probably will be challenged by the federal government, which seems to favour, as the NDs do, monopolies and seems to discount and ignore democracy.

This legislation will say, basically, what the majority of Alberta farmers have been saying, that they want choice. They want choice to market their barley and wheat either through the Canadian Wheat Board or privately contracting that wheat or barley. That's what the legislation will say fundamentally, but we're sure that the federal government will say: "You can't have choice. My gosh; that is democratic. That's un-Canadian. My goodness; don't you realize that this was brought in under the War Measures Act prior to the Second World War? This legislation is needed. My God; we have built a huge bureaucracy to support it."

The Speaker: Once again, I'm not really sure that the purpose of question period is to debate legislation that still has not been introduced.

The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given the debate that has evolved around the issue of choice, how can this government be sure that producers in Alberta want marketing choice?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we had a recent survey that shows that 68 percent of barley growers prefer choice, 64 percent of wheat growers prefer choice, and only 25 percent would support a mandatory marketing system. That's of no surprise to us in Alberta. Producers here believe that they are quite capable of making all of the decisions on the investment in their farm, including marketing.

Mr. Speaker, we hear trumpeted by the Canadian Wheat Board that it is a producer-driven, producer-elected organization. Well, one should examine the boundaries for the electoral districts, and they would find that many of them spread across into Saskatchewan and are not truly representative of Alberta. The second thing that they should note is that many farmers in this province, out of frustration with this monopoly, have quit growing board grains. That is a shame because we grow some of the best-quality wheat and barley in the world right here in this province.

I will tell the hon. member this: this government is elected by Albertans, only Albertans, and we'll fight for Albertans on this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A final question to the same minister: now that the government has a clear mandate, what steps are being taken to establish marketing choice in Alberta?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we would like to take the test market, which was passed in legislation by this government last session, to Ottawa, to the minister responsible, for a final result. We've worked hard to make sure that this is something very simple, very clear that they could clearly respond to with a yes, preferably. However, it seems to be a bit dark in Ottawa right now to deal with this, and I understand that. But I have requested a meeting with Minister Goodale, who is still responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, and have suggested through my staff that I would meet him in Saskatchewan – I'm very close to that – and try and present our case in a way such that they can understand that this is not against the Wheat Board, that this is not about the demise of the Wheat Board, that it is about offering the fundamental choice to Alberta producers that producers in Ontario have today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Old-growth Forests

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The preservation of old-growth forests has limited economic value, but these forests do make Albertans rich, rich in natural heritage and the knowledge that we are preserving a rare and beautiful type of ecosystem. This government's policies reflect only Albertans' interest in these forests' economic value, and this has to change. My question to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why does this minister maintain policies that encourage the destruction of old-growth forests rather than their preservation?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, by the way the question is framed, I don't believe the member would know what an old forest looks like anyway, but that's beside the point. I do live in northern Alberta. As an example, my constituency covers all the way to the Northwest Territories and borders Saskatchewan. It's over 100,000 square kilometres.

Dr. Taylor: How many?

Mr. Cardinal: Over a hundred thousand square kilometres, Mr. Speaker. And it is forested. Sixty percent of our province is forested and very well managed. We have one of the best-managed forest operations in North America. We have lots to be proud about rather than trying to run the system down.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, then when is this minister going to implement the Alberta forest conservation strategy, a progressive forest management vision that was agreed to by industry and environmentalists but which this government simply tossed away?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It's something we're definitely working on. There was one clause in that particular area that I wasn't in agreement with, and that particular clause, I believe, has been changed now. When that happens, we'll go through the process.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, would the minister at least move this province toward natural disturbance model forest harvesting, whereby old-growth forest is maintained rather than decimated?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, we do have our forest management agreements in Alberta, we have our quota systems, we have our commercial timber permits, and then we have our private woodlots, which provide a lot of the wood in Alberta. In relation to old-growth forest – in fact, the other terminology that's used, of course, is the Canadian boreal initiative, which is no doubt part of what the member is questioning in relation to old-growth forests. In our forests, I would say, there are some areas where trees may be a hundred years old, but in general we have a lot of young forests also, which are very, very healthy.

When the FMA holders, for an example, do a plan – it's about a 20-year plan – they have to develop a 10-year plan of how the area is going to be developed. Then they have a five-year operating plan, and then they have an annual operating plan, which they have to take to the public to develop. So anyone that's interested, including this member, could participate in any of the public meetings in relation to how our forests should be planned. This member is welcome to come to northern Alberta and enjoy the scenery there and see how well our forests are managed.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of a number of members to participate, but in the interim might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very old friend of mine – well, he's not that old, actually – well-known local musician Action Jackson, Lee Elwood Mayes. He's seated in the public gallery, and along with him is his much better half, I might add, Jacquie Chastellaine, travel agent extraordinaire. Along with them are Lee's nephew, Dallas James Mayes, and daughter, Raimi Li-Anne Mayes. I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Infrastructure, your guests are now here.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did introduce my guests earlier, but they weren't in the House, so I want to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some 55 students from Will Sinclair high school in Rocky Mountain House. They're accompanied by three teachers and a helper. I would ask them to rise and receive the cordial welcome of the Assembly.

2:30head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

2001 Southern Alberta Water Sharing Group

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in this Assembly today to recognize an outstanding group in my constituency that has been presented with a prestigious award. The Irrigation Association has granted the distinguished national water and energy conservation award to the 2001 Southern Alberta Water Sharing Group. This group includes the St. Mary irrigation district and is also comprised of the Aetna, Taber, Raymond, Magrath, and Leavitt irrigation districts.

These districts were presented with their award at the Irrigation Association's 24th annual international irrigation show in San Diego on November 19. The awards were established in 1982 to honour extraordinary achievements in the conservation of water and energy relating to irrigation procedures, equipment, methods, and techniques.

Mr. Speaker, the 2001 Southern Alberta Water Sharing Group was formed to manage water as effectively and fairly as possible. In the winter, spring, and summer of 2001 southern Alberta experienced abnormally warm and dry weather conditions. Despite the area's intensive irrigation infrastructure the below-normal precipitation from previous years had made the situation critical. By 2001 the water supply had diminished to cover only 60 percent of the rights of its licence holders. With this water shortage the districts and licensees acknowledged that if they shared the water supply, they could remedy the situation and no one party would be severely hurt.

The irrigation districts worked closely with Alberta Environment staff to implement a mutually agreed upon water-sharing contract. This unprecedented co-operation among irrigation districts, farmers, livestock operations, recreational facilities, towns, villages, industry, as well as local and provincial governments resulted in a system that supported the whole community rather than just special interests.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to recognize the Southern Alberta Water Sharing Group, and I would like to extend my sincere congratulations on the granting of their esteemed award.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Education System

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. Fabulous things are happening in Alberta's education system which definitely are worthy of mentioning in this House. Even more so, these developments, I suggest to you, should grace the front pages of Alberta's newspapers as Albertans should share in this news with pride. Namely, Mr. Speaker, as you already know, the Edmonton public school board has been recently highlighted in a book entitled Making Schools Work as the best administered school board with the best educational outcomes in all of North America. That in itself, that achievement, is worth boasting about.

However, Mr. Speaker, the good story does not end here. Mr. Arnold Schwarzenegger, the newly elected governor of the most populous state in the United States, California, has just appointed his Secretary for Education, Mr. Dick Riordan. The ex-mayor of Los Angeles will now be heading California's enormous and complex school system. As one of his first undertakings in office Mr. Riordan will be visiting Edmonton on December 8 of this year to better apprise himself of the excellence of the Edmonton public school board. During his stay in our city Mr. Riordan will meet with Superintendent McBeath and will visit several of our schools, including Jasper Place high school. It is the secretary's intention to import some of this excellence to his home state.

Mr. Speaker, it is too often that we focus on the negative. Obviously, to the outside world our learning system continues to be a shining example of superiority. This distinction is not a product of luck. It is a product of the superintendent's leadership, the school board's vision, the principals' educational and administrative skills, and perhaps most importantly it is a product of professional, skilled, and diligent teachers.

Mr. Mason: What about the Learning minister?

Mr. Lukaszuk: The Member for Edmonton-Highlands is heckling because he does not want to hear good news.

As a result of their combined efforts our little and young Albertans are benefiting from the best learning environment on this continent. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is what I proudly call Alberta's advantage. Also, the Minister of Learning and all of his employees in the department should be credited for this accomplishment.

Now, this recognition would tempt anyone to say, "We did it," but I know that we will not rest on this. With the implementation of the recommendations of the Learning report, Mr. Speaker, the best is yet to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Seniors' Programs

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Seniors feel that they've lost a lot in 10 years with this government, and they have. This government has slashed funding to numerous seniors' programs and cut others altogether: seniors' exemption from health care premiums regardless of income or assets, cut; universal funding for dental care, dentures, and eyeglasses, cut; education property tax exemption up to $1,000, slashed; financial support for building affordable seniors' housing, slashed; financial support for low-income seniors for rent payments, slashed; grants up to $4,000 for home repair and improvement, cut. And that's just to name a few.

But seniors aren't going to take it anymore. They've mobilized through groups like the Coalition of Seniors Advocates, COSA, in Calgary and Seniors United Now, SUN, in Edmonton, and the Canadian Association of Retired Persons, CARP, has opened an Edmonton branch. Seniors want the same benefits they enjoyed before this government started paying down the debt at a record pace using money from their pockets. Middle-income seniors are being impoverished by this government.

The Alberta Liberal opposition believes that seniors make a valuable contribution to the quality of life in Alberta and deserve our respect, and that's why we've developed an alternative to the slashing and cutting of programs that has devastated Alberta seniors. The Alberta Liberal opposition wants to see universal dental and optical benefits for seniors reinstated, health care premiums eliminated for seniors and all Albertans, people in private health care facilities and homes included within the Protection for Persons in Care Act or similar legislation, consistent capital funding provided for seniors' lodges, and a body set up specifically to investigate complaints of elder abuse, among others. We believe in an alternative to the slash-and-cut swordplay this government has brought to seniors' programs.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In October of this year a three-member delegation from Japan visited our province. This delegation is part of a four-year mission to learn about the services and supports for adults with developmental disabilities. Their review began by undertaking an environmental scan of services and supports from around the world. One outcome of this scan was the identification of leading-edge work being done through the ministry with the support and assistance of persons with developmental disabilities provincial and regional boards right here in Alberta.

The delegation came here to learn about new and progressive community inclusion models for adults with disabilities. The delegates commented that Alberta has, and I quote, the most excellent system in the world. They were extremely impressed with the nature of support for rural communities that they saw in north-eastern Alberta, which they considered to be exceptional, superb, and amazing.

The delegation heard a presentation from Daniel Desjardin, a young man with Down's syndrome who is enrolled at Blue Quills College and working in the community. The delegation also heard presentations about postsecondary options, employment, and community living opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, it is very gratifying to know that Alberta is recognized internationally as a leader in the area of supporting individuals with disabilities in their local community and building inclusive communities.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a petition signed by 1,267 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the government of Alberta to "support the establishment of the Chinchaga Wilderness as a legislated protected area."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting a petition signed by 694 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to "return to a regulated electricity system, reduce power bills and develop a program to assist Albertans in improving energy efficiency."

2:40head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 56 Alberta Court of Justice Act

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 56, the Alberta Court of Justice Act.

This bill provides the legislative framework for the creation of a unified family court with jurisdiction over all family law and youth matters in Alberta. The bill is being introduced as a starting point for further discussion on the model and the way the model would be enacted with our stakeholders.

The unified family court created by the legislation would greatly improve family law services to Albertans by providing a single forum for resolving disputes, integrated services, specialized judges, and simplified procedures in a new court structure that fosters informality and helpfulness to self-represented litigants. The new court would also offer greater access for all Albertans, regardless of where they live, and would use existing infrastructure, including the current provincial court locations.

[Motion carried; Bill 56 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 57 Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2)

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also beg leave to introduce Bill 57, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2).

The bill makes minor changes to 12 pieces of provincial legislation: the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act, Builders' Lien Act, Cancer Programs Act, Class Proceedings Act, Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, Forest and Prairie Protection Act, Government Organization Act, Irrigation Districts Act, Judicature Act, Legal Profession Act, Public Sector Pension Plans Act, and Traffic Safety Act.

As is normal with miscellaneous statutes, the contents have been circulated to the two opposition caucuses, and the contents of the bill reflect only those proposed amendments that have been agreed to in advance by all three caucuses.

[Motion carried; Bill 57 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table copies of Environment's 2002-2003 Compliance Assessment & Enforcement Initiatives annual report. This report highlights the positive program activities that Alberta Environment is taking to ensure that Albertans clearly understand the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, how it's implemented and how it's enforced.

This act, Mr. Speaker, is a testament to the proactive people that we have working in Alberta Environment that try and get out there and educate people in regard to the environment and the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act so that they don't have to clean up messes after it's done. We have a number of good staff involved in this, and I want to congratulate the staff.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table today the appropriate number of copies of the 2001 Vital Statistics annual review. This review summarizes all births, deaths, and marriages in Alberta that occurred during 2001.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to table the appropriate number of copies of the 2002-2003 Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy annual report. Since the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act took effect eight years ago, our provincial government bodies have handled almost 14,000 requests for information and responded to 92 percent of them within 60 days.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is the 2002 annual report of the Workers' Compensation Board.

The second is the 2002-2003 annual report of the Consulting Engineers of Alberta.

The third is the 2002-2003 annual report of the College of Alberta Professional Foresters.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, we have the annual report of the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta, APEGGA.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table copies of the 2003 annual report of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. It outlines the activities of the council, including the unveiling of the disability strategy last year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a report listing the new information and resources on the subject of teleworking. It outlines the many benefits to employers, employees, and larger society. The reports are listed on the web site of the Canadian Telework Association and InnoVisions Canada and should be of great interest to many.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from constituent T. Gerling that has to do with the education system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with four tablings. I'd like to start with a petition that wasn't quite in its right form – it missed the part of the public notice – that's from students that wanted to protect the access to advanced education by not having tuition fees quite so high.

My second is a series of 23 letters from a group of students that came up to me after a Remembrance Day service at Wilson middle school in Lethbridge, and they were letters by each of the members of a classroom commenting on their classroom conditions and their wish for a good education.

The third is a letter from Judy Nygaard, an RN who wants to see the nurses have fair access to their negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, the final one is five copies of a program from the Korean Veterans Association. This was a group led by a former member of this House that put on a function in Lethbridge to celebrate the 50th year from the end of the Korean conflict. These veterans were in effect veterans who didn't have a war. It was a police action until it was finally declared a war, and they've had to fight long and hard to get the recognition as veterans that normally comes to members, but in doing so they created a precedent for others who followed in police actions in our military to be recognized. So on behalf of Mr. Gogo, the former member of the House, I'd like to table these.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. The first is the motion from the Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta referred to in the Leader of the Official Opposition's question this afternoon. I have the appropriate number of copies of this tabling.

The second is a letter from Peter and Barbara Sherrington, who are very concerned about Fortress Mountain and the Kananaskis area and development there.

The third is from Richard Soley, who is very concerned about the Ghost-Waiparous region in Alberta and wants to make sure that overuse, abuse, lack of enforcement, and parties are stopped.

The next one is also from Richard Soley with regard to the Ghost-Waiparous becoming a dumping ground.

The next one is from Robert and Priscilla Janes, who are very concerned about the commercial development of the Evan-Thomas area in Kananaskis.

Then we have a letter from the Alberta Fish and Game Association with regard to their concerns about the possible infection of wildlife by chronic wasting disease.

Steve Temchuk sends us a letter on the Evan-Thomas PRA draft management plan, that he does not like.

Doug Engh sends a letter also on the Evan-Thomas area requesting no further development.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

2:50

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of letters from constituents this afternoon. The first is from Beverley Carter, who is concerned about the insurance rates and the capping of the minor accident claims at $4,000.

The second is from Patricia Fraser. She works at the Grey Nuns hospital and is very concerned about the state of negotiations and the possible placement of nurses without their permission.

The third is a letter from Orvis Bambush, who is a constituent but owns property at the Cooking Lake airport. Orvis is very concerned that the Edmonton Regional Airports Authority has raised his rent on his property from $450 to $1,657 a year, and he's going to have to give up his airplane hobby because of that.

The next is from Anne Harris, a registered nurse who is concerned about the state of negotiations and the kind of treatment that they are receiving at the negotiating table.

The last is from a registered nurse, Beryl Scott. She's very concerned about the present climate of negotiations and the effect that that is going to have on nurses in the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have only two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter from Heidi Lawton from the constituency of Ponoka-Rimbey. This letter is in regard to the negotiations between the United Nurses of Alberta and the PHAA.

The second letter that I have is from Vivian McCarthy. She is from the constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose, and she also has concerns about nurses and the UNA/PHAA contract negotiations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the request of Leo De Leon, Carmen Vervoort, and Mecana Tsang I am tabling copies of their letters directed to their MLA. They're raising concerns over the nurses' negotiation, particularly the lack of time spent in negotiation before the request for arbitration, and the curtailment of the democratic process.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of letters written to me. The first is from Elsie Shaw of Lac La Biche expressing concern over contract negotiations between the PHAA and the nurses and asking for a contract that will protect patient care.

The second is from Shelley Dick to me. She lives in Airdrie. She talks about the need for a safe contract that will encourage individuals to go into nursing and stay in nursing.

The last is from Shirley Larochelle-Revoy of Irricana, who says, "I am writing to express my disappointment and concern regarding the current contract negotiations between the (PHAA) and the (UNA)."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter I received from Julia Rowe. Julia is a nurse in Edmonton and lives in Edmonton-Glenarry and is very concerned over what is being asked of them in the current contract negotiations and the tactics that are being used by the employer in those negotiations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three tablings in total, two I'll be tabling on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands and one from myself. The first one is appropriate copies of a letter from Haysboro Seniors Resources Group in Calgary dated October 15, 2003. In this letter the seniors are expressing deep concern regarding the hardship that the 40-plus percent increase for seniors in long-term care is causing. Many seniors are scrambling to find extra money, and in many cases their children are being forced to cash their RRSPs to pay for their parents' nursing home expenses.

The second letter, Mr. Speaker, that I'm tabling is from Dr. Brian Staples, the chair of Seniors' Action and Liaison Team, dated September 25, 2003, addressed to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Dr. Staples is concerned with the increasing costs of nursing home operations and the government policy of supporting private nursing homes instead of not-for-profit nursing homes.

The last letter that we're tabling is a letter from Brian George Fozzard of Calgary dated October 24, 2003, addressed to the Premier. He is concerned with "the continuing abuse being heaped upon people with disabilities" in government care and requests that a public inquiry be held in this matter.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Third Reading

Bill 54
Appropriation (Supplementary
Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 54, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2).

Mr. Speaker, this bill has been introduced in the House to deal with some of the realities that we've faced this fiscal year and to carry us through for the balance of the year. So I'm pleased to move third reading of this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to put a few more of my concerns and questions on the record. When we talked in supplementary supply, I was able to address a few questions, but we ran out of time before I got even close to being through with a number of the ministries that I directly oversee and then some questions I had on those that I have some general interest in. It's disappointing when these bills go through the Assembly so quickly that we can't get questions answered back in time.

Specifically, I asked questions about the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, and those have not been answered, so I would hope that we would see that occur.

Generally speaking, we expect that bills that come in under appropriations are for extraordinary or unusual items that occur during the year. So this year, very legitimately, there were additional fire-fighting costs, and of course there was the situation we had in agriculture with BSE, which turned out to be very harmful to all related industries, and the government rightly intervened in that particular area.

In terms of the moneys asked for in the rest of the ministries, I have some concerns about how their budgeting is done. We heard many of the ministers stand up and say: oh, you know, this is just the 10 percent contingency in my budget. Well, that doesn't actually make sense when they give that as an answer, Mr. Speaker, because if it's a 10 percent contingency that they're building into their budget, then that wiggle room should already be in their budget. They shouldn't have to come back here and ask for more money for that. First of all, most of them couldn't count what 10 percent really was, because the numbers they asked for didn't jibe with 10 percent of what their ministries were. But when they come back and ask for more, that means to me, in terms of what they were saying, that they had built a 10 percent contingency fund into their budgets, went through that, and then also had to come back and ask for more money. So it doesn't seem like good planning on their part.

I never heard any really good reasons from most of these ministries in terms of why they had to come back and get more money and couldn't do the kind of planning that would anticipate the kinds of needs they had or, in fact, the kind of planning that, even though we're not involved in that process, their own caucus members could sit down and say: yes, this is going to be a legitimate cost in the coming year, and we should fund this. How can you measure the success of a program or a minister or a budget if you don't get the full answer when you're sitting down at the budget-planning stage?

For instance, if we go to the Minister of Economic Development, the operating expenses he's asking for are $3.5 million. When you think about that, that's a lot of money for a budget that isn't very big in the first place. Why was it that last fall, when they were making the plans for the budget and it was going through the process of debate and so on, he wouldn't know at that time that he was going to need $3.5 million for what is labeled here as strategic intelligence?

Now, I don't understand how he could have gotten to the last quarter of this year and suddenly just run out of money in this regard. If they're doing their proper planning and processing of the dollars and of their specific benchmarking protocol that they've got in place, he would have known that he was under budget when he first asked for the money. It isn't a way to run a government, a home, or a business. It would be wonderful if I just ran out of money at the end of a quarter and said, "Okay, now I need more to run the house," because suddenly I decided that we needed something else in the house that was big and not formerly planned for. You spend too much money when you do that. You don't meet your overall targets when you do that. You skew the rest of the expenses and revenues in the rest of the government, and you don't always, then, spend the money in the appropriate venues.

Repeatedly people in this province tell us that health and education are their number one priorities. Repeatedly in this Assembly we hear questions being brought forward that address those specific issues, and a lot of them have to do with funding. It isn't always that we need more money for those areas. We need adequate funding in the first place. So what should have been put into the planning stages when budgets were being developed, Mr. Speaker, is a real assessment of what the actual financial needs of the community are, not for just today and tomorrow but in a long-term forecasting perspective, and it's easy to do. I know. It's been done before, maybe not in this Assembly but certainly in other venues, and they can do that.

If we have a properly funded system, then we don't have the same kinds of concerns that we see occurring on a daily basis here. I can't possibly imagine that the $3.5 million for strategic intelligence was something the Minister of Economic Development couldn't live without and had to have specifically for this quarter and couldn't take a look at how he could build it into the next budget year coming up. So it looks like that money was coming from the sustainability fund, another good idea brought forward by the Official Opposition in this province.

I had some other questions with regard to some of the other departments that we saw. We did talk about Sustainable Resource Development, and in fact the minister was able to give me what I thought were pretty good answers in that regard. I still think that we chronically underfund fires in this province. Every year since I've been here, they come back for more money. I know that fires are unpredictable and how they spend the money isn't always known from day to day, but certainly we need to think a little more strategically about how we're funding that particular area.

The minister talked about the helpfulness of additional water fighting planes. I saw the helicopters going for water in the evenings this summer when we were on a holiday. They would go into Lake Windermere and pick up the water in the buckets and dump it in the evening, getting ready for their next day's preparation for fire fighting. The minister didn't talk about needing anything more there, but he did talk about the planes.

Perhaps this is something where he needs to sit down with neighbouring provinces and the federal government and really talk about it. If he could show them a cash flow statement that would indicate that what he was saying was true, that having those planes would save funds both in a real sense in terms of being able to cut back in other expenses and in shortening the life of the fires, then I think that would be something that everybody in this Assembly could support, and I think that's a kind of co-operative discussion that they need to do.

I think that pretty much is the end of the questions that I have on this particular bill. Once again I'll say it like I have been saying it twice a year when these supplementary estimates come in. This is a government that could do a far, far better job in planning their revenues and expenditures and in how they come back with their hand out to their piggy bank twice a year in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn debate on Bill 54.

Bill 52

Health Professions Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate November 27: Mr. Mar]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is one of those bills that has a lot of technical implications to it, addressing as it does how information is collected and shared and particularly electronic information. We are in some ways writing legislation here that sets a direction for the future of a computer system and an information system that we really are only shaping now. So we're dealing with a lot of unknowns.

We have been consulting with various groups on this legislation. Basically what this bill is intended to do is to change how information about health professionals is collected and shared by professional colleges, such as the college of physicians and so on, and the government. The intent of this is to use the information in workforce planning, for policy development, and to develop something brand new called the Alberta provider directory, which will be a database of all regulated health providers in the province. The basic purpose of this directory is to identify practitioners who are authorized to access electronic health records. So you can see that here we are putting in place different components for creating and building an electronic health records system.

One of the questions that I have right away with my own personal reflection on experience with health records and computerizing health records is: what are the costs? The costs could be simply enormous.

The bill in a less important way, I think, probably also makes some professional name and title changes.

Now, the government has been working for quite a while on establishing an electronic health records system. It goes back a couple of years or more, and they've been running pilot projects and developing systems one after another until finally this fall the electronic health records system was unveiled, and it's a big step. It's a step about which, frankly, I have mixed feelings. While there are benefits to having a lot of information on a database, there are also real risks and very, very substantial costs in forms of cash and other costs as well, such as invasion of privacy. So security of information looms large over this whole debate, and it's a theme that I will return to in debate on this bill and in debate on other issues as well.

Now, with the initial rollout of the electronic health records this fall, there are I believe 646 health care providers who are approved to use the system and access those records. By this coming spring that will have jumped to over 5,000, including physicians and pharmacies who will have access to people's individual electronic health records. So this presents all kinds of problems. Exactly who are these people? What qualifications do they have to see the health records on each of us? How do we know that they're actually legitimate healthcare providers?

To address some of those issues and to facilitate the establishment of this whole electronic health records system, the government is establishing through this bill something they're calling the Alberta provider directory, which is a database, as I mentioned a few minutes ago, of all the regulated health providers in Alberta. It is being built and developed in collaboration with the western health information collaborative, a process that was initiated, actually, by the Premiers across western Canada and by their counterpart deputy ministers of health.

One of the questions I would appreciate the minister answering is: what portion of the cost of developing this is being borne by the Alberta taxpayers? Sometimes it's great to lead a parade, and sometimes it's great to let somebody else lead the parade, especially if there's a great big price tag connected with leading the parade, and I'm concerned that in this particular case we may be in Alberta bearing more than our fair share of the costs of developing this system because we're so eager in getting it implemented. So that's some of the background here.

One of our major concerns is that so much of this bill is simply left up to regulation; in other words, we are once again being asked to pass legislation that is really simply a shell for a tremendous number of regulations that we haven't seen, regulations that presumably are in development. Some are in the back rooms of the government or the Department of Health and Wellness, regulations that can be changed with the stroke of a cabinet minister's pen. So when we are dealing with things as fundamental as health information and who has access to it, I for one would like to see actual legislation providing as ironclad security as we possibly can over what's in people's health records and providing ironclad security over who gets to see what's in those health records. Unfortunately, some of that ironclad reassurance is not in this bill. It's going to be in, we hope, regulations. We are being asked: trust us. When a government says, "Don't worry; trust us," we get nervous. So that's, perhaps, the most fundamental concern that I have and that we have here.

Now, maybe a directory is a good idea, and we might find that it does help in fact to make electronic health systems more secure, but we'll have to wait and see how this unfolds. For all of that and for all of those concerns, I don't want to leave the impression that we are unequivocally opposed to an electronic health records system. We are simply raising concerns about how it's going to be implemented and about how it's going to be secured and how much it is going to cost.

So in looking ahead with this piece of legislation, the government is hoping that by next spring, as I said, there will be over 5,000 health care providers with access to health records. So that makes this particular piece of legislation, I guess, of really urgent concern to the government. But we are here dealing with a double-edged sword. This bill will allow identifying information about individual health providers to be shared with other audiences, including the health minister and the health profession colleges. These recipients will be defined largely in regulations; in other words, in addition to these recipients, the bill will allow for information to be shared with other persons who are set out in the regulations and whom the minister wishes to share the information with.

Well, that's placing a huge potential loophole in the regulations, because while the legislation addresses a couple of groups specifically, it also allows the minister enormous leeway to determine who else might get the information collected through electronic health records. It raises questions. What safeguards are there that this information won't be shared with private health providers, for example, or with drug companies or with insurance companies or with employers? There are simply too many questions left unanswered by this legislation. It also leaves open the question: who will monitor the appropriate use of this data?

So I have these concerns, and in raising the issues with other stakeholders, they are expressing concerns about how information is going to be protected and collected. We could certainly look for clearer definitions and clearer constraints on that in this legislation. So it would be terrific if the minister could clearly explain how having this information will better protect the security of Albertans' health information. How are these changes in the public interest, how much are these changes going to cost in dollars and cents, and what benefits can we expect from them, benefits measured to as great a degree as possible in dollars and cents so we can compare the costs and the benefits?

I think that for my opening comments that covers the biggest number of concerns. The government has, to give it credit, worked with a number of groups on developing this legislation, groups ranging from all the professional colleges, I think, under the Health Professions Act and a number of other organizations as well. As useful as this health information system appears that it might become, I am not convinced. I remain a skeptic that the system that we are developing here and the system that is requiring us to debate this legislation is actually the right move for us to take. I am as a taxpayer concerned that tens and tens of millions of dollars, ultimately hundreds of millions of dollars, will be poured into developing an information system that is of relatively limited benefit.

So I have concerns over this bill, and I have concerns over this system that it is meant to serve. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 52 at second reading. This bill seems to address the new conditions that have come into being in the wake of the chronic health records system that the Minister of Health and Wellness and the Premier jointly launched at the Royal Alex hospital some months ago with a great deal of technological glitter and fanfare. Certainly, when I attended that particular event, I couldn't help but get the impression that one of the purposes of that particular launch and its format was to draw attention to the broad-based support from the medical profession that this bill has.

I think the question of whether or not information on individual patients with respect to their medical condition, treatments, history of medical problems and treatments, information on allergies, different kinds of medications that they may be on at a particular time when they go to see a physician and perhaps need new interventions – all of that information would appear to be helpful in avoiding or preventing or limiting mistakes that otherwise can happen in the absence of this kind of information on the records of each patient. So in principle the collection of this information and making this information available on request or on expressed need to Alberta health care providers is something that one can't dispute. It would seem to be an appropriate thing to do.

The questions that I had then and have now in light of what's in this bill and what's not in this bill pertain, of course, to the costs and benefits, the balance between the two, both the sort of costs to launch the health information system, which requires a change in legislation as reflected in this bill, and the operational costs of this and how they're to be shared as between private practitioners such as doctors and others and the taxpayers of this province, and the relative benefits that result from it.

These costs related to electronic information gathering, storage, retrieval, distribution, et cetera, have a tendency to spin out of control because of the rapidly changing nature of technology. The software, hardware, all of those things, change, and those changes are not under the control of the minister, of this government, or this Legislature. Those changes are independent. They take place because of the technological breakthroughs that continue to happen, and therefore to create a huge dependence of a health system on the critical role that the application of the technology plays in the process of providing care opens the doors to finding down the road in a few years that this portion of the costs begins to snowball. Having made this huge commitment to the use of this technology, we really have no control over the increasing costs that may result from the adoption of this particular electronic health records system. So the costs are a huge issue.

The other issue related to it, then, is the question of the security of information, Mr. Speaker. Not only is it the case that information when it's collected can always be either leaked or inadvertently made public; human error is certainly something that electronic systems cannot eliminate completely. So the security of the information and, therefore, the breach of the privacy of individuals the information is about is a massive concern, should remain a primary concern.

Not only is it the case that the information can become public through inadvertent actions, but also the decision could be made by various parties who have access to this information or have the responsibility to make decisions about the variety of uses that information may be put to, which may mean that such a decision could lead to the flow of this information into the hands of pharmaceutical companies and other private health delivery agencies and actors in our changing health care system, particularly in this province, where it's a matter of official policy of this government to involve private health providers in a large way to provide even hospital-based services through private, for-profit activities.

The information would necessarily become available to these providers, and then the inability of the government to dictate to these providers the manner in which this information is used is a matter of concern to me and is a matter of concern to many Albertans. So a health care system that's being privatized bit by bit provides the context in which these concerns arise with respect to the use of the electronic health records system to provide care.

Yes, in theory, as I said, one sees potential benefits to particular physicians or other health care providers who are dealing with a particular patient at the time to have this information on hand. On the other hand, there is the possibility of huge risks that are also there and that must be addressed.

It is because of these concerns that I've expressed with respect to the security of this information that's collected on medical records for individuals and the issues of invasion of privacy that I have concerns about the third part of the bill, which leaves much of the whole range of decisions with respect to how this information is going to be used, who's going to be using it, to whom it may be available, and the silence of this bill with respect to what controls are there in legislation to prevent private hospitals and other private health care providers, through contracts to regional health authorities, from using this information for purposes for which it's not intended.

Regulations, the bill suggests, would take care of these concerns, but I don't have access to the regulations. This Legislature doesn't have access to those regulations. So we can't even talk about the efficacy of the regulations that we put in place in order to address these concerns. Given the absence of information with respect to the regulations and the inability of this House to examine those regulations to assure itself that appropriate mechanisms will be in place to protect privacy and to make security of information watertight, I have those concerns that I would hope the minister would like to address after we have had a chance as a Legislature to express these concerns and make our initial observations on Bill 52 while we are going through it during its current phase of debate, which is second reading.

With these remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would take my seat. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(1)(d) and (2)(a) kicks in here for questions.

Then we'll proceed to the next speaker, should there be one.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The question is called.

[Motion carried; Bill 52 read a second time]

Bill 46

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate November 27: Mr. Boutilier]

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I actually made my comments last week and certainly am prepared to call for the question on this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Just a couple of questions that I had in reading through Bill 46, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2003. While I have the opportunity here – and I'm trying to remember the minister's comments, and I'm afraid they're just not sticking with me, so forgive me if I repeat a question here.

3:30

This bill is actually dealing with sort of odds and sods. It's a sort of licorice allsorts that we're getting with this. We've got a section that's talking about expanding the regulations and control of, well, full-contact sports. It's adding full-contact karate, kick-boxing, and "any other sport that holds contests where opponents strike each other with a hand, foot, knee, elbow or other part of the body." It is contact sports. So it's expanding the commission and what the commission establishes "by bylaw for controlling and regulating," and then there's that list. It's adding those other, I guess we could say, newer contact sports to the more traditional ones of boxing and wrestling.

It's also adding in the officials. Anything they do under the direction of the commission is "not liable for anything." The exception to that is that it's "not a defence if the cause of action is defamation."

So we've got one section that's dealing with adding kick-boxing and things, and then we go on to several sections that are being amended that are around an off-site levy. Section 648(2) says that "an off-site levy may be used only to pay for all or part of the capital cost of any or all of the following." Then it lists a number of facilities for the supplying of water and water treatment, sanitary sewage drainage facilities, and it's adding in "new or expanded roads" that are needed for or "impacted by a subdivision." What we've got is this levy providing "for the imposition and payment of a levy, to be known as an 'off-site levy', in respect of land that is to be developed or subdivided."

So we're moving here into a discussion around water, water treatment, sewage, urban sprawl, and public health and safety. This is where I'm struggling to recall. Is this developed specific to a certain locale? I have Red Deer written down with question marks, and I don't know why I did that. So I'm just checking with the minister: what location is this being developed to address? Or is it in anticipation more globally of continued development outside of our metropolitan cities? I'm presuming some of the other growing cities like Grande Prairie and Lethbridge and Fort McMurray.

An Hon. Member: Calgary.

Ms Blakeman: No. I said "metropolitan." I include Calgary there.

I'm wondering if the larger discussion has been had and what those discussions are around this continued outgrowth from the cities. At the same time, for representatives like myself who are representing the downtown areas, that doughnut is being created where everything is moving out of the centre of the cities and increasingly moving on to arable land as we use up good land on the outside of the cities to do more development rather than looking at that restructuring and revitalization in the centre of some of these cities. Cities like Fort McMurray are certainly large enough to be dealing with something like this.

I know that that's a city planning issue. I personally wish that this city that I live in would spend more time working with that because we have a number of area redevelopment plans that have been put in place and are then ignored. What this bill is anticipating is part of the overall discussion that we're trying to have. How much sprawl are we going to have? How much more good farmland do we take up? And this is exactly anticipating that in that it's trying to supply the sewage and water transmission facilities and pipelines to deal with those ever growing subdivisions.

So when does it stop? How much does this bill facilitate? Forever? I want to know a bit more of the discussion that's already happened around that and what's being anticipated. Of course, water and treated water have particularly now become a public health and safety issue as we hopefully learn what happens when you don't learn the lessons as a result of Walkerton and North Battleford and some of the other places that have dealt with problems around water treatment and one presumes good sewage disposal as well.

The other thing that was being added in here was around timing, about when something has been started and whether they go under the old act or under the amended act. One of the things that struck me is that we're looking at a section where we're adding in that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations . . .

- (b) governing the principles and criteria that must be applied by a municipality when establishing an off-site levy.

Again, the off-site levy is the levy that's put on a subdivision, and that money is used specifically to pay for water treatment and disposal.

So my question here is: what was being used for principles and criteria before if we're now asking that they be developed? What were the municipalities using? Was there some other act that was in place or was there some other guiding principle that is tucked away in some little book of how to be a good municipality? Obviously, there's something being contemplated here. Why is it turning up in legislation in 2003?

Finally, I'm wondering if the minister can go over the sections that are getting the change in timing around them. What's happened is that we had sections 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, and 20 come into force on January 1, 2004, a month from now, just actually less a day. This is now being changed and adjusted. We have "Sections 9, 12 and 18 come into force on January 1," so they must be ready to go. So I'm interested in: what are the ones that are ready to go and what are the ones that aren't ready to go? Those are the ones that are now coming into force on proclamation, so what's the anticipated implementation date of that proclamation? Are you trying to get it in earlier or after and why? And that's sections 10, 11, 13, 16, 17, and 20.

So those are the issues that have come to me as I looked through the bill.

If I could just go back, why is it that the city controls contact sport commissions? It just strikes me that with all these other recreational and professional sporting arrangements, that usually comes under a provincial organization, or they draw funding down through a number of different places, and I'm just interested as to why the control of this sport rests with the municipalities. Is this some sort of historic situation that's still upheld and brought along? It's just a point of interest. It's not going to stop me voting for the bill, but I'm just wondering why it continues to show up under municipalities.

Aside from those questions, I don't see at this point a problem with this bill, but I am interested in getting those questions answered by the minister.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 46.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to close the debate. Hon. minister?

Mr. Boutilier: No, Mr. Speaker. It's closed.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. minister. You'll have to help me. No what? I invited you to close the debate. If you choose not to close the debate, that's fine. The minister wasn't voting against the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 46 read a second time]

3:40

Bill 55 Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to stand here today and move second reading of Bill 55, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2003.

As I said when I introduced the bill, this bill will make changes to the way that farm implement dealers and distributors indemnify their customers, bringing current legislation in line with today's fiscal and financial realities. As of January 1, 2004, a statutory compensation fund will replace the current bond requirement needed for farm implement dealers and distributors to qualify for a licence to operate in Alberta. Now as a condition of licensing dealers and distributors will need to pay annual levies into the compensation fund. Fines for noncompliance will be increased from $25,000 per corporation or $10,000 per individual to $50,000 for either individual or corporation.

Changes to the legislation will benefit farmers if they incur losses due to contractual obligations being unfulfilled or warranties not honoured, for example. Under those circumstances they can make claims to the compensation fund.

A new farm implement board assigned statutory powers and obligations through regulations or by the minister will determine levies paid into and awards paid out of the compensation fund. The new farm implement board will continue to be made up of seven members: four producer members, one of whom is appointed by the minister, one distributor member, one manufacturer member, and a dealer member. Aside from the one appointee, members are elected by their affiliations.

The compensation fund will not be allowed to pay out more than what is in the fund. Further, the compensation fund will be run completely outside of the purview of the provincial government and will have no impact on the government's budget.

The intent of the bill is twofold as it assists producers as well as farm implement dealers and distributors. The bond premiums that dealers and distributors currently have to pay have become prohibitive. Due to world events the insurance industry has tightened qualification requirements for bonds, making it next to impossible for some dealers and distributors to become licensed. This government does not want to be unduly difficult to the businesses here, Mr. Speaker, so we're making the appropriate changes.

With regard to producers this bill will ensure that they have a relatively simple course of action to recoup losses due to problems with farm implements. Producers who receive compensation through this fund will forgo the right for further legal claims against the dealer or distributor for the amount paid on the claim.

Passage of this bill will improve the business climate for farm implement dealers and distributors as well as making sure producers are protected from unnecessary financial loss.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this Legislature to give this bill their full support, and I look forward to other comments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 55, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2003. As we see this bill, the object of it is to establish new provisions for the licensing of farm implement dealers as well as to create a mechanism for compensation to dealers who have incurred a direct loss due to the collapse of a sale or lease agreement. We see the bill redefining the definition of dealer and distributor by clarifying that dealers and distributors also lease farm implements.

This is an industry that has long had a tough time operating and surviving. I remember that my first case course back in the early '70s was dealing with a farm implement company, one of the better known ones in Canada at the time, who had through a variety of reasons not been able to sustain its business. That seems to be the kind of cycle that these farm implement businesses go through. They are particularly disadvantaged at this particular time given some of the changes that have occurred in and around insurance and access to insurance for them.

At first glance, certainly, I'm supporting this bill because it looks like it's moving in the right direction.

The bond system under the current act, where an applicant for a dealer's licence must furnish a bond to the Crown, is abolished effective December 31 of this year. Then the issuer must pay back to the licensee the premium attributable to the unused portion of the bond.

This bill establishes a new fund known as the farm implement compensation fund, and we see the revenues collected from levies and assessments and penalties which will be paid by applicants for certified dealer licences. Producers will apparently be charged about $750 as a levy into the fund. If we could get that confirmed in committee, Mr. Speaker, we'd appreciate it. We also see that the fund is going to be used to pay out awards for compensation to a purchaser, lessee, distributor, or dealer on a loss incurred from the breach of a sale, a lease, or a lease/purchase agreement.

So what this fund does, then, is replace the bond, and it will be established by a new board called the farm implement board. We see seven members going on this one, determined by the regulations of the act. The board is supposed to hold appeals on issues where applicants for licences have been refused or canceled or suspended. We also see that the board is going to be conducting hearings for compensation as laid out previously. The board is responsible for managing the fund, and it's also responsible for setting levies and assessments to gain revenues for the fund. They also have the power to enforce any assessments by filing with the Court of Queen's Bench for recovery of debt.

If we could have some confirmation of this particular bill. If there are any parts of it here that we're not completely correct on or if you have a different interpretation, certainly we're looking forward to having that discussion when the bill gets to committee.

Right now what we see is that dealers and distributors are required to put up a bond in order to get a licence to carry on business. Since September 11 a lot has changed for a lot of industries. Certainly, the case has occurred here that we see insurance companies doing what some may be saying is squeezing them in terms of information and refusing to issue bonds and really trying to take a piece of the market and take control of the market. This becomes a real problem, I think, in terms of fair trading and in terms of businesses' access to markets and ability to do business.

We also see insurance companies refusing to insure distributors and dealers. We certainly don't approve of that. Hopefully, we will see that this bill will start to address that. Our expectation is that the board will operate in a manner that will help these companies and that we will see some positive changes in this particular industry.

Mr. Speaker, I think those are all my comments. I certainly look forward to feedback on those comments when this bill gets into the committee stage. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 55, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2003. I think this bill in its intent probably addresses in one way an issue that has been raised by a number of dealers, farm suppliers across the province.

The thing that we have to look at is that in terms of the process that we're going at, it's very similar to some of the other programs for fund creation in agriculture, where these funds are set up for, basically, risk management in a way that – you know, input risk management as opposed to output risk management. If this, in effect, gets implemented, it will probably clarify both for the dealers and for the farmers the relationships that they're being faced with in terms of dealing with each other right now. There's uncertainty being created because you now have to question and make sure that each of your dealers is licensed, is carrying the appropriate bond tied to that licence, and that some continuity of your dealership is available. You need the servicing on your equipment and you need the parts, not just the year you buy it but for the life of that piece of equipment. To have a secondary process like inability to adequately get bonding and insurance affects that continuity that farm producers and farm implement dealers want in their industry.

So, Mr. Speaker, I hope that as we go through this, we look at this and say that this is good for the industry; it's good for agriculture. If we look at the provisions that are in it in the concept basis, it's going to clarify the process of licensing. Well, that has to be done now that we don't have the bonding tied to it and we have another mechanism for that kind of risk management.

I guess when we look at the establishment of the permanent farm implement board, in a general way this is going to hear appeals both on compensation issues and also from the dealers if they are finding it difficult or if the restrictions being put on their licences are becoming onerous. That, in effect, becomes a good process. Is it going to become bureaucratic? That's only something we can see in time.

The process here has to be expedited. When either a dealer or a producer wants a hearing, there has to be a very timely process in place because we have to make sure that these things come to resolution as quickly as possible. We have to look at what are alternative mechanisms for getting that resolution. We have to deal with it from the point of view of the expertise that will be on the board. I know that the act talks about some of the things, but we have to look at it in terms of: is it broad based enough to give a perspective? With the integration of our economy now, even the agriculture area is crossing over into industrial equipment. Industrial equipment and agricultural equipment are now being sold through the same dealers. That's good. We've got to make sure that we do keep the issues being addressed by the bill focused. So I hope that that understanding and that breadth is included for the people who are going to deal with it.

I guess the final main area of the bill is the farm implement compensation fund. What we're looking at in this whole process, as I said at the outset of my discussion, is a bill that's going to help sustain players in the industry by having this fund in lieu of bond or insurance. What we need to do is make sure that the accounting in that fund is clear, that people are aware of how many dollars are going into it, and what the actuarial needs of that fund size might be, what process is going to be there to back it until it gets built to the appropriate size.

A lot has to deal with: is it going to become a growing fund? Not that there's a relationship between the two of them, but the number of calls we get about the tire fund getting bigger and bigger and bigger, you know – what are the actuarial numbers that, in effect, establish the size and the need for this fund? That would be interesting. I hope that as this moves forward, that kind of information is made public in a way that people can understand the level of the fee that each of them is going to have to pay to buy into it.

I know that the minister is already talking a little bit about what that fee might be in terms of size, and I guess for comfort both for me as the agriculture critic, for me as the Leader of the Opposition but mostly for the farmers out there, we need to know that that fee is appropriate for the level of coverage and the actuarial conditions that will draw from the fund. I'd ask as we move ahead with the implementation of this act that that kind of information be provided for the public and for the individuals involved, because that would give them a sense that there's meaning behind this.

I guess just one final comment that I'd make before we again encourage everyone to support this because the industry needs it is a reflection of the compartmentalization that we're seeing more and more in our processes. This bill came up through Agriculture because of an issue in agriculture, yet it doesn't cross over to the very same issue that's been brought to my office by marketers, dealers in other industries, and by users of products in other industries. They're basically facing the very same crisis in their ability to get appropriate risk management coverage, whether it's bonds or insurance. I guess as we go into this, it would be interesting to get a response from the government as to why this wasn't something that grew from an issue and an initiative taken by the minister of agriculture into something that would meet the needs of all small businesses, all businesses in this province as it relates to risk management.

I think this is a whole issue that we could get into debating: the role of the private sector and the role of the public sector. We're simultaneously going through a debate in this House on another insurance issue where public involvement is shunned. Suddenly now we have legislation that, in effect, creates a public fund, which, as it grows, may have to be backed by public dollars. That needs to be clarified so that we can truly understand how that's going to work.

But I think all those issues aside, I've raised a couple of questions about the board, about the transparency of the fund, and I hope that the government will act on it. In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, this is something that the rural community and the ag community specifically need, and I hope that every member of the House sees fit to make sure that the ag industry continues through the fall and on into the future so that we can have the materials and the equipment and the parts for the producers in Alberta. So, again, let's support this and get it under way, and maybe we can look at the broader context of the needs of all small businesses at a different time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available for five minutes. Is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona proceeding under that provision?

Dr. Pannu: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. Would there be members who would like to proceed under the provisions of Standing Orders?

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to continue the debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make some observations on Bill 55, Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2003, in second reading. I'll be brief. I've been looking through the bill and wondering why these changes are needed. We can attribute all kinds of things to the 9-11 2001 incident, but I think that's not really addressing the real issue here.

I think the changes that are sought in this bill in the form of replacing the current system, where licencing farm implement dealers requires getting bonds and getting insurance for indemnification of risk, is being replaced with a system that from my first reading, a quick reading of the bill, says that in place of the market we are now ready to bring in a more publicly created board and a fund. The market seems to have once again failed in this case, and so the public authority – the government, the state – finds it necessary to step in.

The insurance industry and businesses have really shown a serious weakness over the last few years. We have been talking about the auto insurance sector of the industry and how that has failed drivers and consumers. So all kinds of governments, including the one here in Alberta, are trying to respond to the failure of the insurance industry with respect to the auto insurance area.

But here, again, in the case of farm implements farm dealers and producers are finding it now necessary to seek a new system of risk management and indemnification of risk through public means. I'm not opposing this; all I'm doing is trying to draw attention to how this sort of market madness is giving way, once again, to finding more publicly administered means to provide conditions under which producers, agricultural industry players, implement dealers can operate under conditions that provide some degree of security and satisfactory risk management, which has to be addressed if these players have to stay in the field and work on it.

So having said that the market seems to have failed in this case, we've recognized it. We are now turning to other means to replace what the market provided until now, but the arrangements that are being put in place, I think, merit a close scrutiny by this legislature. The farm implement board and its composition, therefore, comes into focus as something that we should pay close attention to to make sure that it represents the interests and stakeholders whose concerns and interests this board has been created to address and that representation be appropriate and that the board's activities be accountable insofar as the legislation can make them accountable.

Similarly, I noticed that in the section on the farm implements compensation fund in the bill on page 10 under funds there seems to be no provision for start-up funds. I wonder if the levies, assessments, and penalties that are referred to here as a source of this fund will be sufficient to provide for the funds that are needed as a start-up cost of this new arrangement. I would like the minister to address that issue: whether or not public funds, taxpayers' money will in fact be needed to start up this new venture, and if so, what's the magnitude of the taxpayers' dollar commitment to this?

Secondly, the question of the range of levies and fines and the size of those levies and fines that can be levied by this board both to applications for licences or to the producers who will also come before this board with certain requests. That matter is left, by and large, to regulations. I think some indication of the kind of levies that will come into play as soon as this present arrangement expires at the end of this month should have been indicated in the legislation itself, at least to show that these are the kinds of levies and fines that will become the source of this fund. Without that information being here, one is really not in a position to comment in an informed way on whether or not the provisions of this section, section 39 of the bill, are appropriate, are adequate, and are helpful or punitive. So we don't really know at this stage what the regulations will propose, so it would be good if the minister would comment on that question.

The question of the growth of bureaucracy around the activities of this board and the distribution of the funds from this fund and how large a commitment in terms of staff, in terms of bureaucratic structures and arrangements will be needed and whether those personnel will be funded from the funds or levies or whether or not those funds will come from somewhere else is another question.

So the transparency issue, the accountability issue, the actual size of the funds needed, and such are some of the questions that come to mind on my first reading, and I hope that the minister will address these questions as he gets a chance to do so, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Hon. members?

Other speakers? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to close the debate.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the positive comments from some of the members that spoke, and I look forward to committee and answering the questions of all the speakers, both positive and not so positive.

Thank you.

(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, seated in the gallery we have a number of visitors: Mr. John Doyle, assistant to the director for international business studies, is hosting a group of manufacturing managers from China. I'll request them all to please rise and be recognized by this Assembly.

Bill 53

Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2)

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 53 at committee. As you know, the committee stage is where the clause-by-clause analysis of the bill takes place. I listened intently to much of the debate at second reading, and while there were a few specific questions, much of the debate at second reading had to do with the overall philosophy of the bill. Frankly, I didn't hear a lot of time spent dealing with the detail of the bill in it. So I look forward to that as we begin the discussion at committee stage.

I think, Mr. Chairman, just to set the stage for some detailed discussion at committee, I'd like to spend just a little bit more time talking about what is in this bill, what are the clauses of the bill that we will be discussing at committee stage. Also, I have a government amendment that I will be introducing at the conclusion of my comments. Before I do that, I do want to just make some general comments.

Mr. Chairman, there are really three sections in Bill 53. The first section deals with the establishment of a rate-setting board, talks about the composition of the board, how members of the board are appointed, and all of the things related to any kind of a government board. It also talks about the duties of the board and establishes and gives the regulation-making authority to the minister to establish duties of the board.

The second section of the bill deals with the process by which premiums are calculated and establishes the ability to have underwriting guidelines established through regulations. As I think most members are aware, the intent is to put in place a benchmark grid that would establish the maximum premiums that insurers could charge depending upon a myriad of different risk assumptions and calculations. In addition to that, it also would provide for a system of surcharges and discounts, some related to experience of at-fault collisions, some related to the lack or not of convictions.

All of that is again established through regulation. Much of the work related to this bill remains to be done. Even after this House deals with the bill, there will be a considerable amount of work to be done in consultation with all of the relevant stakeholders as we develop the necessary regulations to implement the bill.

The final part of this bill, if we think about it in three sections, has to do with changes to the benefits that are paid as a result of insurance. As all members, I think, are aware, insurance creates a pool. The premiums that all individuals pay go into a pool from which there needs to be an adequate source of funds to provide for damages when individuals find it necessary to claim from insurance. So that pool has to provide the necessary amount of funds to compensate injured individuals, to compensate individuals who have property damage, to compensate and to cover all the costs of delivering the insurance, to pay brokers the fees that are associated with the role that they play in insurance, and also to provide for some return on investment and cover the costs of the insurance company. That overall pool has to be sufficiently large to provide for all of that, but for the purposes of the discussion today the most important part of that pool is to ensure that there are sufficient funds to pay out the benefits.

The bill provides for some changes to the benefits, the first being an increase in benefits under section B, medical benefits, from $10,000 to $50,000. It also provides for regulation-making authority to develop protocol related to how individual injured parties access the treatment and how that treatment, in turn, is paid for and the compensation out of that insurance pool.

The other changes on the benefits side that this bill deals with are the changes that were contemplated in Bill 33. For the information of members Bill 33, while it's still on the Order Paper, is not intended to proceed any further, and the provisions in Bill 33 which apply in Bill 53 have been incorporated into Bill 53.

So in this bill we have a section that deals with changing the compensation to individuals for lost income to net versus gross. As I have explained to members in the past, when someone receives compensation for income replacement through an insurance payment, that payment is not subject to income tax. Therefore, it makes sense that the amount that would be paid would be the net amount, the amount that the individual was actually out of pocket. Had the accident not occurred, the individual would have earned that income through alternative sources that would have been subject to income tax.

The other part of Bill 33 which is incorporated in this bill has to do with collateral payments, when an individual ends up getting paid twice for the same injury. It's referred to colloquially as double-dipping. What the bill does is clearly establish that when an individual has coverage through a disability program of one sort or another, the automobile insurer is responsible only for topping up on income replacement over and above what the individual is receiving from the other insurance company.

The effect is that it should be revenue neutral to the affected party. If I am injured, whether I'm injured in an automobile accident or I'm injured in some other way, a skiing accident or whatever, if I have disability insurance, my disability insurance will pay me to the limits of the disability insurance. Then I'm entitled to recover over and above that full income replacement should I have been injured in an automobile accident, because in that particular case this is a tort action, where someone has caused harm to me, and I'm entitled to recover.

It also provides for all the necessary regulations to implement the limit on pain and suffering for minor injuries. That includes the definition of what is a minor injury. It includes the protocols that will be established so that there is consistent implementation of that definition of minor injury. There will be a consistent protocol for all health providers so that when an individual is being treated, all health providers will be very clear on what the protocol is with respect to a minor injury – any injury, for that matter – related to an automobile accident.

Also, it will provide for a protocol on treatment so that every injured Albertan will be eligible to have the best possible treatment based upon an established protocol that's agreed upon by experts in the field, experts far more knowledgeable than I on this matter but nevertheless experts in the field.

So that is sort of a 10-minute overview of how the detail of Bill 53 rolls out.

Now, I mentioned, Mr. Chairman, that I had a government amendment that I wanted to introduce at this time. I have two amendments. I think what I would like to do is deal with them separately. I'll deal with them one at a time. So at this time, if I could ask for the indulgence of the table to distribute the amendment that refers to section 18.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, just for clarification, you have two amendments, and you want to deal with them separately. Is that correct?

Mr. Renner: Yes, that's correct.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We shall refer to the first one as amendment A1 and the second one as amendment A2. I guess we can distribute both of them.

Mr. Renner: I'd rather just move them one at a time.

The Deputy Chair: Well, we'll deal with the first one, then, as amendment A1.

Mr. Renner: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: You may proceed.

Mr. Renner: As this amendment is being circulated, do you want me to wait until members have a chance to have a look at it?

The Deputy Chair: Yes. Just give a few seconds.

While the amendment is being distributed, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House some very special guests who are in the members' gallery observing proceedings today. I'll ask them to rise, if they would, as I introduce them: Mr. Tim Uppal; Hari Uppal, his father; Satwant Uppal, his mother; Gurdial Gill, grandmother; and two teachers who are visiting us from Punjab, Ravinder Grewal and Gurcharan Grewal. [remarks in Punjabi] May God bless you. Everything belongs to God. May God always be remembered and victorious. [as submitted] Would you please welcome our very special members who are here today from the Sikh community. Thank you very much for coming.

Bill 53

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Medicine Hat, you may proceed now.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This amendment is an amendment to the section of the bill that deals with the requirement that an insurer give notice if they intend to withdraw from the Alberta marketplace. It's designed to give an orderly transition, so if for whatever reason an insurer determines that they are no longer going to be providing insurance in this marketplace, they're required to give 180 days' notice. This is to provide for a smooth transition. It's also to provide for the Superintendent of Insurance to have a good handle on which companies are doing business in Alberta, which companies for whatever reason have an intention to withdraw from the market.

However, while it provides for a provision that requires that 180 days' notice be given, it does not have any converse type of consequence if the insurer, in fact, decides at the end of the 180 days not to cease to do business in the province. This causes concern in a number of ways. It puts a great deal of uncertainty into the marketplace. A company could indicate to the superintendent that they wish to withdraw from the marketplace. A lot of time and energy would be spent in preparing for the departure of that company from the marketplace, and then at the end of the day the company decides: no, we changed our mind and we're staying after all.

We want companies to be very clear and understand what the consequences are of making such a decision to depart from the Alberta marketplace, so what this amendment does is provide for provisions that the company will have to follow should they decide, after giving notice, that they wish to re-enter the marketplace. It gives the superintendent authority to put restrictions and conditions on the return of that company. It also provides for regulation-making power to establish a period of time that contracts could not be issued in the province of Alberta after the notice of termination is given.

So I think that this is a good amendment. It brings, again, some certainty back into the marketplace. The intention of the change of the requirement for notice was to bring certainty, but if insurance companies choose to abuse the six months' notice, rather than bringing certainty, we could in fact be bringing uncertainty into the marketplace. So all this amendment does is make it very clear to insurers that if they are going to give notice of departure from the Alberta marketplace, they should do so and give serious consideration to it and ensure that they actually mean it and are not, for lack of a better term, bringing forward an idle threat to do so.

So at this point I encourage all members to support this amendment, and I look forward to hearing debate from others on this amendment.

4:30

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have some questions at this time for the hon. Member for Medicine Hat in regard to amendment A1 to the Insurance Act. Specifically, I can understand where the hon. member is coming from by changing subsection (6), but again there are other deficiencies in this legislation in regard to public notice to consumers. I'm not going to make reference to those sections at this time because we're simply to talk about the amendment A1 and direct our comments to the proposed section 661.

However, in the unfortunate event that would cause the withdrawal by an insurer from the business of automobile insurance in this province, what notification will there be? Certainly, there are going to be directions by the superintendent, but what notification will there be to consumers of this withdrawal? Consumers have, in my view, a right to know, and also the other members of the insurance industry, the brokers. What role will they have to play in this? How will they become aware of a potential situation?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Actually, to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the amendment before the House now doesn't deal with the requirement for notification. The requirement for notification is in the main bill itself. What this does is add an additional requirement onto the requirement for notification that says that once the notification has been given, there are some terms that the superintendent has at his disposal to ensure that that notification was given seriously and that the superintendent (a) should take appropriate action to prepare for the departure of a company and (b) should that company decide that at the end of the day they do not wish to leave, they have to understand that there are some consequences involved in that and that they shouldn't be making the notice of withdrawal lightly and that it should be a serious notice and not just a threatened notice of departure.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

Mr. Renner: Mr. Chairman, I apologize for the confusion. There have been some ongoing discussions among House leaders. The second amendment that I referred to earlier was actually a suggestion of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I think it merits support by the Assembly, and there has been a back-and-forth discussion about whether it would be introduced as a government amendment or an amendment by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and at this time I would suggest that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar introduce this amendment.

Apparently the amendment is not available for distribution at this time other than in the form of a government amendment, so at this time, Mr. Chairman, I will encourage all members to participate in the debate on the bill itself. If there are any questions on the clauses of the bill, I'll be more than happy to answer those questions, and then when the amendment proposed by Edmonton-Gold Bar arrives, we can ask him to introduce that amendment and have the discussion at that time.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes. At committee at this time I certainly have a few comments in regard to Bill 53, and there are other amendments as well.

Certainly, with the Insurance Amendment Act we are seeing sweeping regulations dealing with a broad range of matters in regard to insurance. When you compare what has happened in this province with skyrocketing insurance rates to what has happened in other provinces, particularly in the western part of Canada, there are some remarkable differences.

But when we look at this bill and we look at the issues around base capital, hopefully there are no problems, but if there are problems, how are consumers to know? We don't deal with any rollbacks of skyrocketing insurance premiums in this bill. We deal with the Automobile Insurance Board. I certainly would like to see more care and concern for plain language in this legislation so consumers can fully understand not only this legislation but also plain language in automobile insurance policies.

The issues around public notice – there is so much in this bill, and I look forward to discussing it and debating it with all hon. members of this Assembly. This is probably, before we get changes, unless this bill is defeated, the only opportunity for public consultation in regard to this matter, and that's why it is very, very important that we have a full exchange of views on auto insurance and its regulations in this province and essentially, Mr. Chairman, who should provide auto insurance as a mandatory financial services product to Alberta consumers.

Now, we can look at the whole issue of skyrocketing insurance premiums for drivers in this province, and we can lay the blame at the foot of anyone, but I don't think we can play the blame game. I don't think it's fair to blame the innocent victims. I don't think it's fair to restrict or limit in any way awards, the reduction of those awards, by the amount of income tax or CPP contributions or employment insurance premiums.

This whole idea of the definition of minor injury being left to regulations. Again, I said that there are sweeping regulations dealing with a broad range of matters in this bill, and I and consumers of this province, Mr. Chairman, would be much more comfortable if those ideas were outlined exactly in the statute, not left to regulation.

However, Mr. Chairman, the freeze of auto insurance premiums that's outlined in this bill I think was a good first start. Now, when that occurred, there were a lot of questions about how that was going to happen. I for one, a consumer in this province, when my renewal notice came due on November 25, saw an increase in my premium, and that was after the Premier made the announcement that there would be a freeze.

An Hon. Member: It's all your speeding tickets.

Mr. MacDonald: No. I have no speeding tickets. I have no speeding tickets to date.

Now, when you look at all the consumers, about 8 percent of consumers or maybe even greater will be eligible for some form of rebate after this freeze. However this is going to work, they will be eligible for a freeze. The freeze is a good start, but we can't just simply allow the run-up of auto insurance premiums for three years and then suddenly say: we're going to have a freeze. There has to be a rollback as well, Mr. Chairman. The Official Opposition back in August asked that there be a freeze and a rollback. The insurance industry had certainly returned to profitability.

4:40

Now, the government members had been at that time deeply divided on the issue of auto insurance, and they were discussing this issue, as I understand it, among themselves for weeks. It was the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East who suggested and urged that there be an immediate rollback and freeze of auto insurance premiums. At that time, before this bill was tabled, we on this side of the House thought it would be appropriate that there would be a rollback to March 2002 levels.

Has the insurance industry returned to profitability? Well, there was a leaked letter from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to the hon. Member for Medicine Hat, who has been doing a very able job, in my opinion, as co-chair of the Automobile Insurance Reform Implementation Team. It's not the public process that I thought we should have, but a guy has to live with it. That letter proves just how deeply divided not only the government caucus is but Albertans are on this whole issue of auto insurance. For some government members to state that the insurance industry has certainly returned to a very profitable level is an indication that there needs to be a much-needed break for drivers.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment. I believe we could call it A2, and if I could have a page, please, to bring this to the table. Shall I continue or wait until all hon. members have it?

The Deputy Chair: Just wait for a few seconds.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A2.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. At this time I would like to move amendment A2 to Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2). Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the House I would like to move that Bill 53, Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), be amended in section 17 in the proposed section 661.1 by adding the following after subsection (1):

- (1.1) Effective January 1, 2004, premiums of an insured are rolled back 15%.
- (1.2) The Lieutenant Governor . . . may make an order respecting the rollback mandated under subsection (1.1).
- (1.3) Subsections (3) to (7) apply to an order made under subsection (1.2).

Now, we certainly need this, and this is an ideal opportunity for all members of this Assembly to once again reconsider and vote for rollbacks for Alberta consumers of a mandatory financial product, which is auto insurance. Drivers have had to pay more, and they have not been given a justification for why they are now paying more.

I know that everyone should get a second chance, and I think that this is an ideal opportunity for this government to recognize that not only is a freeze good enough, but there has to be a rollback as well. When we look at this legislation, this Bill 53, running this bill through the Legislative Assembly as it is only guarantees that Albertans will pay more for insurance in the long run.

Last week the government hastily took down a rate calculator on its insurance web site after consumers alerted the media that insurance premiums would increase under the government's new insurance policy. Surely after that issue and how quickly we removed that web site – some other members may describe that web site as fairytale.com.

An Hon. Member: That one's taken. Somebody already took that one.

Mr. MacDonald: That one is not taken.

The citizens have through that web site discovered the truth about this proposed bill. One way for the government to make amends to the citizens is to vote for a 15 percent rollback.

Now, when we look at how much money could be saved if this government is serious about protecting consumers from high insurance rates, then you will vote along with us in supporting this 15 percent rollback. The rate freeze was just the first step. If we are serious about providing Alberta drivers financial relief from the outrageous insurance premium increases for their automobiles, we have to look at rolling back the rates.

When you look at how much money we're talking about here – there's roughly $1 billion in third-party liability automobile insurance premiums sold in this province. That is a significant sum of money. If we were to roll back for Albertans the third-party liability portion of their auto insurance, it would mean a saving of over $400,000 per day to all Alberta drivers.

That, Mr. Chairman, is what we have to do. I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to consider again amendment A2 and put the interests of Alberta consumers first.

The industry, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder pointed out earlier in the summer, has returned to profitability. There's no doubt that the insurance industry is on sound financial footing, but some consumers in this province are not as a result of their high insurance costs. All drivers need a break.

Dr. Taft: Every car needs brakes too.

Mr. MacDonald: Every car needs brakes. We have to put the brakes on high auto insurance premiums with a freeze, and we have to put the whole process in reverse and roll back premiums by 15 percent.

I urge all members to support this amendment A2. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I mentioned at the conclusion of my comments the last time I was up that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had brought forward an amendment that merited support. Unfortunately, this is not it. There will be one coming from Edmonton-Gold Bar that I am prepared to support and I will encourage members to support, but, hon. members, this is not it.

Let me talk a little bit about the nature of rollbacks. I heard the member say that the industry is making profits, so I guess he thinks that because the industry is making profits, this Assembly should be entitled to, then, unilaterally without consultation arbitrarily just roll back all premiums by 15 percent whether or not those premiums happen to be some that are ridiculously high, the ones that the government bill before us will be dealing with, or whether there are some premiums that, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, are reflective of what a competitive marketplace can do.

There are a significant number of Albertans who have insurance at reasonable rates, and they have insurance at reasonable rates because individuals with a long-term safe driving record, with a good driving record, are the individuals that the insurance companies have been keying in on for the last couple of years and have been very, very competitive. The problem, Mr. Chairman, comes if something goes wrong. When you have a slight loss of concentration that results in a fender bender, that very competitive low rate of insurance that you've been enjoying for the last 20 years is all of a sudden gone overnight. We've seen that repeatedly, and that's what the government is addressing through this legislation.

It's simplistic kinds of solutions like this that get us in trouble. We can't unilaterally just say: you will roll back your premiums by 15 percent. What we can do is say that the way the insurance business is operating in this province right now is unacceptable. It is penalizing many drivers and charging many drivers in this province premiums far in excess of what they should be paying, so we have to put rules in place that will bring some sense back to the insurance industry. Unilateral rollbacks of 15 percent won't do any good. We'll end up with some drivers paying far below what they should be paying, and, Mr. Chairman, if you happen to be one of the drivers that's in the facility program paying $10,000 a year, a 15 percent rollback takes you to $8,500, which is still ridiculously high. So that's why these kinds of simplistic solutions don't work.

I urge all members to defeat this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, with respect, I'm urging all members to support this amendment, and I'd like to thank my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar for introducing this. This is exactly what Albertans have been asking for.

The Member for Medicine Hat keeps calling it simplistic, but I think Albertans would argue that to have the insurance industry get involved in what they called rate shock and raise rates continually over about a 14-month period to the point where everyone was experiencing rate shock on their rates and then to get into such upheaval – I understand this also created great upheaval in the government caucus, to the point where the Premier had to come in and say: that's it; we've got a freeze in place. What should've come with that should've been a rollback.

I know that part of what I believe caused the swifter action on this particular issue was the result of the election in the Maritimes and then the result of the election in Ontario. Certainly, they recognized that what their own citizens were looking for was a rollback, and I think that what should have worked hand in glove with the freeze here in Alberta is exactly this rollback.

I know that my colleague had tried to get a series of amendments approved to negotiate as best we could on behalf of Albertans. You know, if we couldn't get a 15 percent rollback, then we would try for 10 or 5 percent or whatever we could get, because the point was that Albertans are paying far too much money. Now they're frozen into paying far too much money for whatever period of time it takes.

So I think it would have been only fair to have rolled back that 15 percent at the same time you were going to freeze. What we've had done now is that you're frozen at paying the higher rates, and who's getting the benefit of this action? The insurance industry gets the benefit of this action; that's who gets it. You know, every month we're paying that money. Either it's direct withdrawal out of our accounts, or we're writing a cheque to the insurance company. Over and over and over, month after month after month after month we are paying too much money.

So I think this amendment from Edmonton-Gold Bar is saving the government a great deal of embarrassment. This is exactly what should have been done, and I would have thought that they would be grateful that someone stood up and tried to do them a favour by doing what they should have done in the beginning.

Dr. Taft: Their faces are full of gratitude.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Their faces are full of gratitude. I don't think so.

What I would like to do is urge all members to vote in support of this amendment A2, and with that I will call the vote. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak on amendment A2 to Bill 53 as we deal with it at the committee stage of debate on the bill. It's difficult to imagine how a bill which is as flawed as this one, a bill that fails as miserably as this one does in meeting the expectations of Alberta drivers, can be improved by simple amendments such as this one. But since the bill is before the House, the best we can do is see if we can amend it to the best of our ability to address those flaws which are very difficult to address as a whole to really fix the bill.

The reason that this amendment is before the House is because the bill itself fails to acknowledge that we need to return to a more sane regime of premiums in this province, a regime that prevailed to some degree until the rates were allowed to increase on average about 57 percent in 2002, thanks to the approval by the Alberta insurance board for applications that were seeking those increases and thanks to the Minister of Finance, on whose watch these exorbitant increases were allowed to proceed. The freeze that's offered by the government and by this bill starts on October 31 or November 1 of this year. They're frozen at that point.

The point that I made during second reading needs to be reiterated here. That freeze really is a shell game. It, in fact, certifies, puts this legislative stamp of approval on those exorbitant rate increases that were sanctioned in 2002. So to vote for the freeze is really to say that the decision was correct and that, therefore, all we need to do is put a legislative seal of approval on it. I can't, frankly, vote for this bill for that reason alone, because doing so would mean approving or collaborating with the government, which, in the first place, sanctioned those exorbitant, simply unjustifiable increases to the tune of 57 percent last year.

What Albertans are looking for is fairness in the legislation. They don't find it in Bill 53. It is not fair. It still leaves certain parts of the province, such as Edmonton, out on a limb, having to pay higher premiums than other places. There are close to a million Albertans who live in the greater Edmonton area, and they will not receive fairness if this bill is passed.

The second intent of any decent piece of legislation should be to offer Albertans an arrangement which guarantees the lowest cost, the lowest premiums. This bill simply fails to deliver on that expectation. It fails because it has completely overlooked, ignored, rejected, as a matter of fact, the option of public auto insurance, which in the other three western provinces has proven to be the appropriate instrument if the intent is to offer drivers in this province the lowest cost premiums and the highest rate of benefits.

The reason that public auto insurance does that is because it's cheaper to administer that kind of auto insurance plan. With private plans estimates of uninsured motorists range, again, from 10 to 20 percent, and that clearly is unacceptable. This increases the cost to the rest of the drivers, and when a decision is made through legislation to establish compulsory and universal coverage, it follows that there must be an obligation for government to deliver auto insurance at the lowest possible price.

The test of that involves how much of the premium dollar gets back to the motorists in settlement of claims. And on that one, Mr. Chairman, recently published annual financial reports illustrate how the administrative costs of public plans avoid costly administrative duplication and are only one-half as much as those incurred by private insurance companies. Public plans return the maximum of each premium dollar invested by motorists, almost 85 to 90 cents on the dollar, compared to private insurance returns of approximately 70 cents on the dollar. The inclusion of basic compulsory automobile insurance with the licence plate is the most economic and efficient method of delivery.

So we need to do that. We need to have legislation which follows that route and undertakes to implement these measures which will reduce the costs, return the maximum premium dollars back to drivers in the form of coverage and compensation. Supplementary auto insurance is also available, of course, and that can be used.

The point is that the proposal as contained in Bill 53 to allow things as they are to continue in this province will not, cannot deliver premiums that are comparable to the other three provinces. So the question arises: why does Alberta want to be the odd man out? Why does the government of this province want to be the odd government out when the other three provinces, regardless of the kind of government they have, have embraced, have benefited, and are enjoying those benefits over the last so many years because they all have adopted public auto insurance?

That's not the case with Bill 53. It simply denies Albertans the choice of public auto insurance and intends to continue to allow conditions in this province to prevail, which will mean that Albertans will have to pay far higher premiums, enjoy a lot fewer benefits, and allow the insurance companies to drain away the profits that they make from continuing with these private practices out of the province.

So, Mr. Chairman, although 15 percent is not enough to compensate drivers who have been gouged to the tune of 57 percent for the last year or more, it's better than, I suppose, nothing. If Nova Scotia can impose a rollback of 20 percent, if New Brunswick can contemplate taking those actions, why is it that Alberta, where the government must accept the responsibility of having allowed those exorbitant increases to the tune of 57 percent a year ago, can't say: we made a mistake, and we're going to take action and roll back premiums by 15, 20 percent, or whatever, not starting the 1st of November, 2003, but we're going to go back and force insurance companies to return to Albertans the premiums that they gouged them for from the time that those 57 percent increases came into play?

This particular amendment stops short of seeking that kind of redress for all drivers, but it's better than what the bill proposes. So I will, Mr. Chairman, support this amendment for that reason.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this time I would like to continue the debate at committee on Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2). If you don't at first succeed, try again. I have another amendment that I would like at this time to present to the Legislative Assembly. I believe it has already been dropped at the table. If we could circulate it to the members, I would be grateful.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the amendment is being circulated now, and for the record we shall refer to this as amendment A3.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This amendment was previously discussed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat, and certainly it has been a proposal that we have looked at going back to June and to July, when we had first looked at the Automobile Insurance Board. This amendment that I would like to move as it reads is that Bill 53, Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), be amended in section 15 as follows. The proposed section 653 is amended in subsection (1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (a) and adding the following after clause (a):

(a.1) a consumer representative appointed by the Minister, and by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) The consumer representative referred to in subsection (1)(a.1)

- (a) must have expertise and experience in consumer issues in the area of automobile insurance, and
- (b) must not be
 - (i) an adjuster,
 - (ii) a director or officer of a provincial company,
 - (iii) a director or officer of an extra-provincial company,

Now, Mr. Chairman, to all members of the Assembly, what we need in this proposed automobile insurance rate board is a consumer representative, and this is a good start. The four individuals that currently are involved with the Automobile Insurance Board I'm sure are fine individuals, but we need specifically in the future to have a consumer representative, someone that's entirely at a distance from the insurance industry. This is one way of taking a bill and trying to make it better. We have to put the interests, again, of consumers first, and this is a start. If I feel like the repairman from the appliance store that can't get any respect, that's fine, but this is a necessary repair to this bill.

I would urge all hon. members, in the interests of consumer protection and representing the interests of consumers at the proposed automobile insurance rate board, that this amendment be considered by all members. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, are you rising to speak?

Dr. Taft: No. I was stretching. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is, in fact, the amendment that I was referring to earlier. This amendment, frankly, makes some sense. Just for clarification purposes, just in case any members are not aware, in the amendment here when it makes reference to a provincial company or an extraprovincial company, that's in the context of the Insurance Act. So that refers to an insurance company, and it's in the context of the Insurance Act where this amendment will be going. That is the intent.

Given the time, Mr. Chairman, I would move that we adjourn debate on this bill at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Have you called it adjourned?

The Deputy Chair: Well, we had a vote on adjourning debate.

Mr. Hancock: I think we're ready to vote on this amendment, so if you could bring the bill back to the floor.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we will need unanimous consent to bring the matter back to committee and have a vote on the amendment.

[Unanimous consent granted]

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports progress on Bill 53. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

I see the clock very close to striking 5:30. The House stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

Bill 54 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2)

[Adjourned debate December 1: Mr. Hancock]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to make a few comments about the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2). I'd like to focus my comments, if I might, on the Department of Learning's requests for supplementary funding. There are three items where it says that there has been a total lapse of $28,570,000 in the Learning department, and the three amounts listed are $8,770,000 in voted operating expense from support for basic learning programs as noted, $4,800,000 in statutory expense from teachers' pensions liability funding, and $15,000,000 in statutory expense from the provision for future cost of student loans issued.

The financing of Learning in the past year has some people wondering how carefully the planning is being carried out. The Auditor General's identification of the $65 million was certainly a shock to a number of people who had heard throughout the last year or so claims from the government that there is no more money with respect to education. If you couple that with what was going on in the province and what has gone on in the province, the addition of a thousand-plus students and, at the same time, a reduction of close to a thousand teachers, the effect of that on our classrooms is still being felt. It's a major concern for parents and for those who are delivering learning programs in our schools.

There are still questions raised as to why the government's financing of Learning has been so arranged that we would end up with a reduction that large yet still have squirreled away in funds the money that's there. So some consternation about the planning that has gone on with respect to Learning, and rooted, of course, at the base of it is the concern about children and students and the delivery of their programs and what happens when we get this kind of unanticipated cut.

Most of us realize that the arbitrated teachers' settlement, the 14 percent, was a large item that had to be accommodated, and the strategy for forcing boards to cut programs and services to students while there was money that could have been used to alleviate that still has many people perplexed. What was the motive behind allowing that to happen? The recent injection of money into the system, the $60 million, as we've said, I think is really the late payment on an overdue account. That money should have been there for September to allow schools and boards to avoid the kinds of layoffs and cuts that have occurred.

The cuts that we've heard about, of course, are the most obvious ones. There are some other long-term problems that haven't been addressed as a result of underfunding, Mr. Speaker. A report on the state of French education in the province indicates that there's been a decline of French teachers, and there's growing concern about the burnout of those French teachers and the lack of program and administrative support for principals in schools where French programs are being delivered. Those problems are on top of the ones that were already there before the most recent cuts. I look forward to the next report on the state of French language instruction in the country with respect to our French language teaching staff and what's happened to them as a result of last year's cuts. I expect we're going to see a reduction in teachers and also a reduction in the number of students taking those programs, which is, I think, unfortunate at a time when we're trying to encourage and are mandating a second language program for students.

We have the request here for $30 million in onetime operations and maintenance funding for postsecondary institutions. As we know, given the figures we've been supplied with, it's welcome money, but it's not going to go very far with respect to the need.

The $15 million for the access fund to support additional student entry spaces at postsecondary institutions: again, the access fund is welcome, but we also know the problems that accompany that fund with respect to funding the entire cost of programs and the kind of program shifting that has to sometimes go on to take advantage of those government dollars.

I think it also points to the desperate need in the province, Mr. Speaker, for a long-term plan for the financing of our postsecondary schools. I don't think we can go on year after year with ad hoc amounts being added to the system like this with the tuition policy being pressured the way it is. I think that there comes a point where the situation demands that a systematic plan for financing our schools be put in place. It's not just an Alberta problem; it's a problem that faces, I think, every province in the dominion. Such planning has to necessarily involve the federal government. But the time when that planning should have started is long overdue, and again I think that when we see requests like this in front of the Assembly, it points to the need for that kind of planning.

I think that with that, I'll conclude my comments. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise this evening and speak briefly to Bill 54, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2). What we are being asked to do in Bill 54 is approve an additional $1.228 billion in supplementary supply for operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases and an additional $21 million for capital investment.

Now, this bill comes forward at a time when we have just announced somewhere in excess of a $3 billion surplus in this province this year, and it comes forward at a time when other provinces can only dream of being able to have an appropriation bill of this amount. But what this does is further indicate our failure to address the issue of budgeting and budgeting properly. In a province where the provincial government likes to tout itself as a champion of business, in a province where the government likes to portray itself as having some particular kind of insight and sensitivity as to how we're going to handle a budget that is blessed with revenues that we couldn't even have begun to think of having a decade ago, every supplementary supply time we have a process that I think must be embarrassing to this government.

What we still have failed to do in our budgeting process is that we have failed to address four principles that people and institutions and AAMD and C, AUMA, our local school boards, our health authorities have asked for, and that's stable, predictable, sustainable, and equitable funding for their programs. Certainly, this is huge when they look at their budgets, when they look at their business plans, when they try to deal with the pressures that are placed upon them.

One of the things that we still haven't figured out – and it was good to see that we do have a stability fund that is finally established in our budget. Of course, that was a good Liberal idea brought to this Assembly by my predecessor, Laurence Decore, the former MLA for Edmonton-Glengarry and the Liberal leader. Certainly, one of the reasons for that was the fact that it would alleviate this start-and-stop type of programming that we have.

All we have to do is look at southeast Calgary, the issues that are facing that part of the city, where there has been rapid growth, where schools are required, where hospitals are required, how many times they've been announced and how many times those announcements have been deferred or stopped, and still that part of Calgary does not have the necessary infrastructure projects for its people. This is after years of billion dollar surpluses. So we do not have a very good budgeting process when this happens and every year we are coming back to supplementary supply to fill our needs.

Certainly, there were some pressures that were put on our budget this year that we hadn't expected, and one of those, of course, was BSE. But every year in this province we know that we're going to have forest fires. In recent years, when our climate appears to have changed so that we're not getting the rainfall that we once got, then we have to put into the budget those costs of fighting those forest fires. Yet every year it is as an almost after-the-fact type of issue that we deal with this problem.

As well, what is upsetting in this particular set of supplementary supply is that even with the pressures that have been put on this government, there doesn't appear to be that much assistance for those people who are less fortunate than the rest of us. I look at Human Resources and Employment, which is requesting a total of $32 million. Now, then, this is not to increase the allotment to various peoples on AISH. This is because we have $5 million for the supports for independence program "to fund an exceptional number of utility arrears cases." Again, if the price of natural gas rises, if the price of electricity rises, then certainly those things have to be taken into account in the budget. We cannot budget on prices that were in effect five years ago and hope for people to be able to meet the demands on their income at today's high prices.

As I look through this budget, I see, for example, as I've just brought up, that we are looking for $5 million for supports for independence, and this is in utility arrears. If those people are in arrears, what have we done to their lives when they're trying to cope with less? We can't help but think that some of the money that's been allotted that's going to schools is certainly to address a problem that they're having with skyrocketing electricity and natural gas bills. Yet they are facing these high electricity bills because of government policy, because of deregulation.

I notice here, as well, that Seniors is requesting an additional $36.97 million. Again, $17 million of this is for the Alberta seniors' benefit program to assist low-income senior citizens with increases in long-term care accommodation costs. When we do not allow seniors who are on fixed incomes time to react, time to budget, time to work a 42 percent increase into their bills, then certainly we are going to have people in our communities that are going to have great difficulty with this huge increase in such a short period of time.

What people fail to realize is that in many of these instances we have seniors who because of the condition of their health end up living in two different residences, the healthier person living in the home, the other person in some type of assisted living. They certainly cannot cope. Their budgets were stretched to run one home let alone having to keep one person in assisted living while the other one tries to cope with running a home.

As well, we have special-needs assistance of $11 million, which is for onetime personal expenses. It's certainly welcomed by seniors and is something that they need. We have almost $8 million which has been budgeted in here to assist contracted agencies with operations and maintenance costs.

So when we look at supplementary estimates, we know that seniors are just another one of those groups that's having a great deal of difficulty facing their increased costs. Certainly, I would expect to see all of these issues addressed in the upcoming budget. We cannot continue to have to come back to the well in the form of supplementary supply to address issues and to address expenses that we know are going to be faced by our seniors, by people on AISH, by health authorities, by our school boards, by our communities in this province.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments I will take my seat, and I will look forward to hearing the comments of other members of this House when it comes to Bill 54, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003 (No. 2). Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to our supplementary estimates, and I just want to put on the record some concerns in a number of areas. The first one is the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. The supplementary estimates for this department are enormous. There's a million dollars for the department's share of the market recovery strategy, $4 million for the stranded beef export container initiative, $6 million for the farm water program, $564,285,000 for bovine spongiform encephalopathy, or BSE, compensation programs under rural services, another $5 million for cull cow and bull product development, $6 million to support enhancements to transmissible spongiform encephalopathies, TSE, testing and animal health surveillance, and $135,023,000 in provincial funding for the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program resulting from the federal/provincial agriculture policy framework agreement.

While I agree, Mr. Speaker, that these expenditures are necessary, I want to make some comments about the whole BSE issue. I can't help wondering if a very significant portion of these expenditures could have been avoided if the department and the minister were doing their job. I want to indicate that the delay in the testing of the cow that was found to have BSE has been acknowledged to have had an impact on decisions of other governments to ban Alberta beef, to ban Canadian beef, and it's worth taking a look at some of the events leading up to that delay.

Of course, the government's elk farming program is well known, and it was a bit of a fiasco, and a lot of farmers that were enticed into that industry lost a lot of money. One of the main reasons that it failed was because of chronic wasting disease. The result was that priority was given for testing at provincial labs of the heads of elk, and that is the reason why the head of this particular cow was not tested immediately. That's part of the reason. The other part of the reason was significant cuts to the inspections in that part of the department.

Now, the government, as is its practice, has come back and corrected it. The government is very good at rushing to fix very serious problems. The problem with that is, Mr. Speaker, that the problems are almost always of the government's own making, and it costs an awful lot of money to fix it. So I guess I have to ask the question: would this enormous expenditure of over a half billion dollars have been necessary if orders hadn't been given that heads of elk had to be tested as a priority? With respect to that, I think that it's a legitimate question to be raising because it is just an enormous amount of money – an enormous amount of money – that this province has expended for a single case in order to support the beef industry.

Now, I want to turn to the Learning department, and here we see some significant expenditures. The government is proposing these expenditures in order to meet the proposals of the Learning Commission, and the government is again rushing to take a lot of credit for fixing a problem that they created in the first place. The difficulty, Mr. Speaker, is that this funding, while vitally necessary, does not make up for all of the cuts that took place earlier.

We are all aware of the difficulties that arose when the government imposed an arbitration process on the teachers and that arbitration process came up with a settlement and the Minister of Learning insisted that the school boards should fund the settlement out of their existing funds and rejected all assertions made by the opposition in this House that it was going to create a problem. Well, we saw that there were a thousand staff positions that were cut by school boards across Alberta in the last year.

So the money contained here, while important, while helpful, and while responding to the Learning Commission's recommendations in part, does not fully compensate the school boards of this province for the lack of support that they have received for the teachers' settlement in the past. It's a difficult situation, Mr. Speaker, and I really think that the government should start funding education at a level that had been established prior to those settlements plus the additional funding that the Learning Commission recommends, and this falls far short.

So I want to indicate that there is a real difficulty with the spending contained in this. The amount of spending in a global sense is very large. Some of it, as has been said, is not necessarily anticipated – for example, drought and forest fires – but I think we can safely predict that over a long period of time, Mr. Speaker, those costs will rise. They'll vary fairly significantly from year to year, but over a period of years – five, six, 10 years – we know that there's going to be an upward trend, so there's no reason for the government not to set aside money on a longer term basis in order to meet those costs so that we're not always coming back with these massive supplementary estimates. I think we can safely predict that as the climate warms and as the province dries out, both drought and forest fire expenditures are going to steadily increase.

Now, I want to come to another point, Mr. Speaker, and that is the $250,000 for MLA consultation with Albertans on the province's place in Confederation. This is in the Finance estimates. There's not much, I think, that can justify this expenditure. Perhaps the PC Party would like to pay for it, but I don't think the taxpayers should be footing the bill for this kind of expenditure. Most of the information that might have been found is probably available on web sites or from local officials or could be picked up at one of the many parliamentary conferences that MLAs attend. So this particular expenditure is rather useless, in my view, and we ought not to vote it.

Mr. Speaker, that concludes my remarks on the supplementary requisitions, supplementary estimates, and because of the government's mishandling of the BSE issue, we will not be supporting the supplementary estimates.

8:30

The Deputy Speaker: Comments? Questions?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the member has on more than one occasion made some very, very erroneous remarks regarding BSE and the whole process. He lays the blame on the department of agriculture, and this is just totally wrong.

The facts, Mr. Speaker, are that the biggest reason that the animal was not tested immediately was because when the animal was diagnosed by the veterinarian on-site, it was very clear that they thought that the animal had pneumonia. So there wasn't a priority, plus the fact that that animal was taken out of the food chain. It never did get in the food chain, so there was no great big panic to start the testing.

If he's being critical of the process, of course, a lot of it's to do with the federal Food Inspection Agency, but I've got to put in a real plug for them. The fact is that not very long later there was imported hamburger that came into Canada, and it was found to be contaminated with E coli. The federal Food Inspection Agency picked it up, so it didn't get into the marketplace. This BSE cow was picked up and didn't get into the food chain, yet the E coli meat passed through the American system. So for him to now start criticizing that the reason that there has to be this expenditure is because there was a cut in the department of agriculture is complete folly.

So I would like to ask the hon. member – and he made some comments the other night about somehow the whole issue of confined feeding operations being tied into this – the history of this animal from its birth and the type of operations that it went through before it got to the point of being killed, slaughtered, and thrown into the tank because the carcass was deemed unfit for human consumption.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Highlands, do you wish to respond?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. minister that the history is that it was three months waiting to be tested, and one of the reasons that that took place was that there was a big backlog of elk heads that had to be tested because of the bungled program of Alberta Agriculture to encourage farmers to get into game ranching of elk.

The second reason was the shortage of people to do tests, and there were, in fact, cuts to the inspection personnel, which I don't think the minister has denied.

The third piece is, of course, that this delay was referenced by other governments and politicians in the United States as part of their campaign to keep Alberta beef out of the United States. It was seized upon by those representatives of farm states to use as ammunition to put pressure on the administration in the United States to extend the ban. So it contributed very directly to a tremendous loss to our beef producers and contributed directly here to the fabulous expenditure that the government is now seeking from this Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 54 read a third time]

Bill 47

Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue to move.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to move third reading of Bill 47, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2).

I'd just like to point out again to all members here that the key element in this bill, that we've articulated in previous readings, was to lower the threshold. The percentage rate on cigar taxes is one of the key issues in this bill. That is being lowered to 95 percent, still 95 percent as a markup of the suggested retail price. When you talk about B.C. at 77 percent, when you talk about Manitoba at 60 percent of that rate, when you speak of Ontario at 57 percent, the only other province that even comes close to ours is Saskatchewan at the same 95 percent rate. So we still are the highest markup on cigars of any province in this country.

It has followed our high tax policy, literally, on tobacco to dissuade and discourage consumption of tobacco products. In that regard, that still remains the policy. What this adjustment reflects is that the content of tax on cigars is going to more closely approximate that in comparison to cigarettes as a percentage of the total price. About half of it will be tax for both cigarettes and cigars, and it would also make us more in line with the other provinces that didn't raise their cigar rates quite as high as we did originally to help mitigate the problems, be it of smuggling among provinces and those kinds of activities.

The rest of the issues in the act are administrative in orientation, have something to do with collection issues to strengthen our ability to collect taxes appropriately and fairly as necessary.

So thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'm pleased to rise to speak to third reading of this bill. You know, I appreciate the hon. Minister of Revenue's position on this as he introduces a bill to lower taxes on tobacco, and it's interesting sometimes the positions that we get ourselves into in politics. I know that there was a tremendous push, because fine cigars are enjoyed by a certain strata of our society and they were finding the cigars just far too expensive. I know that because when I returned from a vacation last winter, I brought back some cigars, not that I smoke. In fact, they're still in the fridge because we don't know anybody that smokes. Well, I can see some hon. members here are putting up their hands.

I did go and check in a couple of cigar outlets in Old Strathcona to find out the prices, and I was quite surprised how high, in fact, prices were for very good cigars. So I can understand the situation that the minister finds himself in having to lower taxes on tobacco products and taking steps which will no doubt benefit the economy of Cuba, Mr. Speaker.

You know, it's interesting. I'm torn on this bill, honestly, Mr. Speaker, quite torn about it because I've been a strong opponent of smoking all my life, and it's a difficult policy issue for governments, and price mechanism is one of the tools available to the government. I appreciate attempts that are made by the government to deter smoking, but I also understand that the government does not want to be the highest tax region of the country, which it clearly was. I know the government is also interested in low taxes, and the Premier did promise a couple of years ago, or during the last election, I guess, that taxes had no where to go in this province but down, and this is the first example other than the billion dollar corporate tax cut where we've actually seen the taxes going down. Mostly they've gone up since that time.

On balance, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's predicament here, and I just want to indicate that I do feel that it's important that we continue to use all the tools at our disposal to reduce smoking, and I'm sure the Minister of Health and Wellness would agree with me that this is one of the major sources of costs in our health care system. Cigars aren't the big villain compared to cigarettes, I suppose, but there is plenty of evidence to indicate that cigars are, in fact, also very, very harmful and are just as carcinogenic as cigarettes, although good cigars don't have all of the chemicals and so on that they put in cigarettes. So it may be they're somewhat less carcinogenic. I don't really have the background knowledge to comment on that authoritatively.

I do think the basic issue here is to maintain an approach on the part of government which discourages smoking and continues to use the various tools at its disposal. So, in this case, Mr. Speaker, I will not be supporting the bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have one last opportunity to speak to Bill 47. When the minister was speaking, it was sounding to me like he was trying to talk himself into this bill that reduces taxes on smoking, of all things, and adjusting to the thought of losing $8 million a year in revenue. Now, if that isn't a strange combination for this particular minister to have agreed to, I can't think of anything else stranger, but this goes to show what a very effective lobby by a very few people can do and how they can impact government. It's interesting to note that this government can still be overtly subject to doing what their friends want rather than following the policies that they initially laid out with regard to cigar taxes, cigarette taxes, and loose tobacco taxes in general. I wonder if a poor people lobby to reduce the prices of cigarette taxes would have been quite as effective.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments or questions?

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes, a comment, please. It's simply not fair to make this an argument totally about health. If you lived in a border community where half of the small businesses or convenience stations on one side of the border could sell cigars at half the price, you would see how quickly trade areas change. The gasoline sales stop, and it all changes. It's easy to sit here and say: well, it's not about that. It's about fairness, and that's all it's about. It's fairness straight across the board.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments or questions?

Mr. Mason: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. member would comment on whether or not that indicates that perhaps the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster is suggesting that Saskatchewan is a low tax environment.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, you know, I'm reviewing the comments made by the government members themselves and made on behalf or perhaps by the Minister of Revenue and, gee whiz, doesn't it say that they did a study of small businesses and specifically acknowledged that they did not believe that there was any direct impact on businesses, that a part of the campaign had been to state that some businesses would go out of business, and the minister's own copy that came out with regard to that bill would indicate that that was not true.

[Motion carried; Bill 47 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I now call the Committee of the Whole to order. When everyone in the committee is ready, we'll commence.

Bill 53
Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2)

The Chair: Just so we're clear on where we were, we've had a number of amendments. All of them have now been cleared from the table, either passed or defeated, so we're back on the clauses of the bill, as it were.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few general comments to make before we get back into the amendment war that I'm sure is going to occur this evening, and that's with regard to the comments that have been made on this bill where they talk about tort reform lowering insurance rates. We received quite a bit of information indicating that that is not an accurate statement to have made, and I would like to put a few of those quotes and some of that background on the record at this time, if I can.

What we have here before us is a number of cases – this has been an issue in the States – where insurance companies have put themselves on the record saying that tort reform will definitely not lower insurance rates.

The representative of the Ohio health insurance company was testifying before the Wyoming Legislature and specifically said, "Tort reform will not lower rates." That was in 2003.

The Medical Assurance Company of Mississippi said, "Tort reform does not provide a magical 'silver-bullet' that will immediately affect medical malpractice insurance rates." That was in September of 2002.

Patricia Costante, chairman and CEO of the MIIX Group of Insurance Companies, when asked by New Jersey Assemblyman Paul D'Amato whether, if caps are enacted in New Jersey, her insurance company would not raise premiums and would in fact reduce them, said, "No, we're not telling you that." That was at a meeting of the New Jersey Assembly joint committee on Banking and Insurance and Health and Human Services on medical malpractice in June of 2002.

The American Insurance Association said, "The insurance industry never promised that tort reform would achieve specific premium savings." This was an American Insurance Association press release dated March 13, 2002.

Sherman Joyce, president, American Tort Reform Association, stated, "We wouldn't tell you or anyone that the reason to pass tort reform would be to reduce insurance rates." From Liability Week, July 1999.

Victor Schwartz, general counsel, American Tort Reform Association: "Many tort reform advocates do not contend that restricting litigation will lower insurance rates, and 'I've never said that in 30 years.'" This was from Business Insurance, 1999.

Dick Marquardt, Washington insurance commissioner: "It was 'impossible to attribute stable insurance rates to tort-law changes or the damages cap,' since rates also improved in states that did not pass tort reform." From the Seattle Times, May of 1991.

The chairman of Great American West Insurance Company stated: "Tort reform 'will not eliminate the market dynamics that lead to insurance cycles,' and 'we must [never] over-promise – or even imply – that insurance cycles will end when civil justice reform begins.'" Liability Week, January of 1988. Too bad the government didn't take that advice. We have seen a number of overpromises, Mr. Chairman, in this particular legislation and, certainly, many implications that taking the steps they're taking will lower insurance rates.

A Connecticut state lawmaker stated:

The insurance industry now says [tort reform] measures will have no effect on insurance rates. We have been disappointed by the response of the insurance industry. The reforms we passed should have led to rate reductions because we made it more difficult to recover, or set limits on recovery. But this hasn't happened.

That's from UPI, March of 1987.

State Farm Insurance Companies from Kansas said:

We believe the effect of tort reform on our book of business would be small. . . . The loss savings resulting from the non-economic cap will not exceed 1% of our total indemnity losses. . . . In our sample of liability claims, no claim was found that would have been affected by the joint and several restriction."

And also any savings due to alternative payment methods would be "negligible." This is from a letter from the assistant vice-president of the state filings divisions to the Kansas Insurance Department, October, 1986.

Aetna Casualty and Surety Company from Florida. After Florida enacted what Aetna Casualty and Surety Company characterized as "full-fledged tort reform," including a $450,000 cap on noneconomic damages, Aetna did a study of cases it had recently closed and concluded that Florida's tort reforms would not affect Aetna's rates. Aetna explained that "the review of the actual data submitted on these cases indicated no reduction of cost." That came out of a statement made August 8, 1986. That's exactly what this government says they're going to accomplish with this legislation, yet we have company after company, statement after statement saying that it isn't true.

In St. Paul, Florida, St. Paul's found "a total effect of about 1% savings" from Florida's 1986 tort reforms but that even this 1 percent might be inflated. St. Paul concluded that the noneconomic cap of $450,000, joint and several liability on the noneconomic damages, and the mandatory structured settlements on losses above $250,000 will produce little or no savings to the tort system as it pertains to medical malpractice.

This comes from the St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Company, medical and professional liability, state of Florida, 1986.

General Accident Insurance Company, Washington state, says: "Given that liability losses constitute such a low proportion of business owners' losses, GA feels it is prudent to continue with the original proposal of a 10 percent increase in base rates." Well, how do you like that? That's exactly what happened in other provinces in this country, Mr. Chairman: rates went up. That's what happened in the States too. What guarantees do we have from this government that that is not going to happen here?

It goes on. The Times wrote that the highly touted tort-reform legislation enacted by the Legislature early this year is not lowering liability-insurance rates as promised, according to preliminary filings made with the state insurance commissioner.

Allstate Insurance Company, Washington state. In asking for a 22 percent rate increase following passage of tort reform in Washington state, including a cap on all damage awards, the company said, "Our promised rate would not be measurably affected by the tort reform legislation." The Seattle Times, July 1, 1986.

St. Paul, again, Washington state. After enacting the 1986 Washington tort reforms, St. Paul said that the limit on plaintiffs' lawyers fees "probably will have no effect on loss costs" and that "a 'cap' can become a target in smaller dollar cases, thus actually working to increase costs." Well, isn't that an interesting statement, Mr. Chairman? "We do not have the data that would allow us to project the actual probable effect in either direction." This is a letter from the executive vice-president, Saint Paul Fire & Marine Insurance to the insurance commissioner in Washington in 1986.

Great American West Insurance Company in Washington state. After the 1986 Washington tort reforms the Great American West

Insurance Company said that on the basis of its own study it does not appear that the 'tort reform' law will serve to decrease our losses, but instead it potentially could increase our liability. We elect at this point, however, not to make an upward adjustment in the indications to reflect the impact of the 'tort reform' law.

So they are saying at this time that they're not going to increase their rates, Mr. Chairman. Well, we can see what's coming down the road for us in this province.

Basil Badley, chief Washington state lobbyist for the insurance industry: "Legislators and consumers were mistaken from the beginning if they thought tort reform was going to lessen personal liability insurance costs." Seattle Times, 1986.

Iowa municipalities. In 1983 Iowa limited joint and several liability in order to limit the liability of cities and counties. Yet in 1985 41 Iowa counties had their liability insurance canceled within a 30-day period, leading former Iowa Senate Majority Leader Lowell Junkins, who had led the fight for tort reform, to change his position and to urge other legislators not to make the same mistake.

Well, it looks like for the first time in this Assembly I might have something in agreement with the Member for Edmonton-Calder, and I am hoping that he will comment on what we have to say here and the information that has been shared with us.

Pennsylvania municipalities. A blue-ribbon Pennsylvania commission found that the cost of municipal liability insurance rose sharply in the mid-1980s even in those states which had capped damages against municipalities around the mid-1970s insurance crisis. November 1985.

New Mexico municipalities, Mr. Chairman. In 1976 New Mexico capped municipal liability at $500,000 per person, and in 1982 it eliminated joint and several liability, yet premiums rose sharply for New Mexico municipalities during the mid-1980s insurance crisis just as they did in the states without caps.

Vanderbilt University. A regression analysis conducted by Vanderbilt University economics professor Frank Sloan found that caps on economic damages enacted after the mid-1970s insurance crisis had no effect on insurance premiums. That's from 1985.

I'm sure we're going to see the same kind of studies come forward in the years to come from our universities, where they are definitely going to see that the failure of tort reform to cut insurance prices is a fact and that this government has led Albertans down the garden path one more time on an issue that is intensely important to all of us. In this province it is not possible for most of the population to get around without having access to a vehicle, and it particularly significantly disadvantages young people who may be trying to look for jobs where there is no reasonable public transit access.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll take my seat at this time and participate a little later on in the debate.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: It's a pleasure for me to rise this evening to get a few comments on the record on Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2). I want to go on record as supporting the bill, and I want to talk about some of the things that I like in it but also some of the reservations that I have.

First, I did want to chat a little bit about the items that we have on limiting general damage and awards for pain and suffering. I think that it's important that we do have the establishment and health assessment guidelines and best practices to assess whether an injury is in or out of that limit. I think it's also very, very important that we're not limiting anyone's right to court if they disagree with that assessment. They can go to court and see if they can establish that their injury may or may not be outside of the definition that we're going to have. That is also going to the establishment of an independent medical evaluation process to determine if an injury is subject to the limit, and governing those fees as well. So I think those are good things that are in there.

I'm also, Mr. Chair, happy that we were able to come up with a change in the geographic territories such that even though for many, many, many years we have been paying different rates around the province, we're going to over the next few years have that stabilized somewhat so that we have an Edmonton/Calgary rate, if you will, on the maximum on the grid as opposed to a difference, which is what we have today. I'm also pleased that the section B accident benefits are going to be increasing from $10,000 to $50,000 and, as well, with a lot of the other good things in this bill, which are things like the advance payments on future settlements, having a structure that we can do that with, our structured settlements, disclosure of policy limits.

One of the other things that I think is very important in this legislation that we haven't had before, Mr. Chair, goes back to something that was brought to my attention by a constituent the first year that I was elected, where the insurers were not required to give notice to the registrar when insurance was dropped. We do have that in this legislation, and I'm happy to see that. The authorization requires insurers to give notice to the registrar of motor vehicles whenever a contract of insurance is canceled or not renewed, which is another good thing, I think, in there. Consumer complaint resolution is also within this legislation as well as the new risk sharing pool, which I think will benefit a number of drivers.

The things that I have some concerns about – and I'm hoping that the hon. Member for Medicine Hat will be able to help me with them and address them somewhat – are the rate-setting board and the teeth that we're going to give this board to ensure that the rates that are out there are going to be fair and reasonable and equitable to all of the drivers in Alberta, that this rate-setting board is going to have the strength to hold their feet to the fire, if you will, to maintain the competitive advantage in Alberta of the insurance rates. I'm hoping that there will be some teeth in not only the rate-setting board but also in the monitoring of the optional coverage so that we don't have a crossover of costs from one to the other and that we do indeed see some of the benefits of some of the things that we're doing for the majority of the drivers in Alberta.

I would like to see other things that aren't in this legislation. I think we do need to look at things like advertising restrictions for some of the injury legal firms, perhaps even regulation on contingency fees for injury lawyers – I think that's something that we need to look at as a government – and potentially some of the other items that may be related to justice that we might want to look at changing down the road to also help take some of the costs out of the system so that consumers benefit as a whole.

With that, Mr. Chair, I just wanted to make sure that I got those points on record. I do support this legislation. I think that as a long-term solution to the problem we have with insurance in the province today, this is the right track. Staying with the status quo is not an option, and we need to move forward.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), at this time. One of the huge questions and very basic questions that the debate on insurance in the province and in other provinces has centred on is the question of whose interests are being served. I've had, as far as my constituency office is concerned, more calls on this issue than any other issue except the teachers' strike. There is a huge, huge public interest in the legislation that's before us and the action that's proposed through this bill.

One of the difficulties many callers have is trying to understand the freeze and just exactly why the freeze is imposed at a time when rates are at their highest. If you look at those sections of the bill, in section 17, where the freeze is dealt with, a great deal, in fact almost all of the authority for dealing with the freeze rests with the Lieutenant Governor in Council. The powers given to the cabinet under section 17 are very, very extensive. They can decide whether the freeze is going to be retroactive, whether there are going to be some classes of insurers that are exempted from the freeze, whether there will be a class of automobiles that shall be exempt in whole or in part from the application of an order by the cabinet, to exempt in whole or in part a class of insurers, and to "prescribe or otherwise describe the premiums and the levels of premiums to which the order applies." Then it goes on to list a number of things:

- (h) suspend or modify the application or operation of any one or more provisions of this Act . . .
- (i) suspend or modify any decision of the Alberta Automobile Insurance Board.

And I see it goes on.

There is just very extensive and powerful authority given to the cabinet to make decisions with respect to the premium freeze, and I think that if I'm listening to my constituents correctly, it's of major concern. They don't understand, as indicated, why the freeze was put on when rates are at their highest, and they are, as I've heard from a number of them, uncertain as to what happens to the freeze in the future.

Those concerns are apart from the letters I get from specific constituents about their insurance company. I tabled a letter earlier today from a constituent who claims that he just went to have his insurance renewed, and there, in fact, was no freeze, that the insurer has raised his rates. He was somewhat outraged and ends up expressing some real concern as to what's happening. So the freeze, I think, has not been explained to the satisfaction of many Albertans, why it's at the level that it is. Certainly, I think that if Albertans read the provisions and the power given to the cabinet with respect to premium freezes and relate that to their experience with energy rebates, there's real cause for concern.

The question about whose interests are being served still needs to be addressed, and I think this section of the act does little to assure Albertans that the freeze is going to be an open process that's going to be easily understood and that changes to any freeze won't be arbitrarily changed by the cabinet. So a whole set of concerns are addressed around the freeze. There are some suggestions for amendments that will be made at a later time, Mr. Chairman, with respect to those provisions.

As another whole section of the bill that hasn't had a lot of public question raised about it but certainly by those insurance watchdog groups and those that are in the industry, the automobile insurance rate board has generated a lot of discussion, the provisions in the bill that outline the appointment of the automobile insurance rate board. I guess that one of the concerns and a major concern for some people is: will the rate board protect the interests of consumers?

With respect to the appointment of that board, what guarantee will there be that consumers' interests will be paramount and that we won't slip into the situation that we have today where rate proposals seem to automatically be endorsed and put into practice with very rare exception? So questions about that board: the powers that the board has, the appointments, the number of individuals, three but not more than seven members. Again, they're going to be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council and the superintendent, with the notion that this will, again, be done by cabinet. I hope that one of the things that we might see is an attempt to define some criteria that will be used to invite qualified members of the public to serve on the board and that this won't be an opportunity to appoint people on a political rather than a competency base with respect to making decisions about insurance in the province.

There's the listing of the establishment and the duties of the board in terms of exercising their power, how the board will operate if there isn't a quorum or there isn't a full group to make a decision, and a requirement for an annual report. I think that that's a good requirement, that at least annually there'll be a need for the board to answer to the public, at least to the minister, and the minister then has a requirement to lay the report in front of the Assembly. So, again, a number of concerns about the appointments to that board and the role that the cabinet will have in the operation of the board, because the cabinet, as I've indicated before, has extensive powers with respect to this act and to the insurance industry.

The third area – and this one is another one that is really, really a major concern if constituents' letters and e-mails are any reflection, Mr. Chairman – is the provisions that would limit claims for minor injuries. No matter how often the government repeats the notion that this doesn't prevent someone from going to court, there still remain a large number of Albertans who believe that it is wrong to provide any limitations on minor injuries and some real question about the kinds of statistics that are being put forward to justify the need for such limitations and also the assumption that seems to be being promoted of widespread fraud in making those claims. I've had real questions raised about those assumptions and how those ideas seem to have taken hold and pervade many of the discussions on this particular item.

The last section is the matter of Albertans choosing to be covered by one or more insurance companies and not being allowed to claim from both. It seems like a strange provision given the arguments that we've heard in the Legislature about a need for choice and for people to choose to run their own lives and to protect themselves in ways that they see fit. Again, it's an area where although there hasn't been as much discussion, there is still concern that those kinds of limitations are put in place. I've had some argue that it seems to be an effort to chill people who are insured in their efforts to cover themselves with respect to any kind of misfortune with respect to their automobiles.

So I think that with those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I look forward to the amendments that are going to be presented later this evening and an opportunity to look in more detail at some of the specific provisions of the bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and I'm pleased to speak at committee stage to Bill 53. This past weekend we had a very successful convention of the New Democratic Party in Calgary, and whilst I'm sure it was not as large as the PC convention is, neither were there lots of people who attended simply because we were the government and could dispense largesse. Nevertheless, it was a very good convention. It was addressed by any number of excellent speakers, including Jack Layton.

Mr. Magnus: Who?

Mr. Mason: The next Leader of the Opposition of the Parliament of Canada, hon. member.

Mr. Magnus: Brian is taking wagers.

Mr. Mason: Well, we won't get into that, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member wants to make bets on the next federal election, but I think we'll save that for after the House.

One of the speakers that was at the convention, Mr. Chairman, was Howard Pawley, the former Premier of Manitoba and the father of public auto insurance in Canada. My wife and I had the distinct pleasure of having dinner with Howard Pawley and talking about his experiences as minister in the Schreyer government and later as Premier of Manitoba. He gave an excellent speech with respect to public auto insurance, and I'd like to inform members tonight of some of the things that Mr. Pawley had to say about the advantages of public auto insurance.

He asked the question: why do public auto insurance plans win hands down over private auto insurance systems? He starts by saying that with private plans estimates of uninsured motorists range from 10 percent to 20 percent. This is clearly not acceptable. When the decision is made to establish compulsory and universal coverage, says Mr. Pawley, it follows that there must be an obligation for the government to deliver auto insurance at the lowest possible prices. The test of that involves how much of the premium dollar the motorists get back in the settlement of claims.

Recent published annual financial reports illustrate how the administrative costs of public plans avoid costly administrative duplication and are only one-half as much as those incurred by private insurance companies. One-half, Mr. Chairman. Public plans return a maximum amount of each premium dollar invested by the motorists; that is, between 85 and 90 cents on the dollar, and this compares to private insurance returns of approximately 70 cents on the dollar.

The inclusion of basic compulsory automobile insurance with the licence plate is the most economic and efficient method of delivery. Supplementary auto insurance is also available from either government plans or from private auto insurance companies. Also, all public insurance investment earnings, unlike those of the private plans, are returned either by increased benefits or through lower insurance premiums to the motorists themselves rather than to shareholders.

On the other hand, private insurance customers are subsidizing insurers by allowing them to use the premium money interest free. Jobs are kept in the province and jobs and opportunities are created in the insurance industry by public plans. These jobs would not otherwise exist. One main central office operates in the public system within the province rather than maybe 40 or so outside the province, as is the situation with the current system. A single agency requires one computer system versus scores of varied, costly computer systems. One company president and one company vice-president and fewer officials are utilized in contrast to the multitude employed by the private insurers. Advertising, litigation, and adjusting costs are reduced.

So you can see very clearly, Mr. Chairman, that the bureaucracy involved in the private insurance system is drastically reduced. However, we know that the government is only concerned about government bureaucracy and does not really care about bureaucracy in the private system even when the costs of that bureaucracy are carried by people who have to utilize the insurance.

Mr. Pawley goes on to say that the investment company reserves are invested in public institutions. He gives the example of Manitoba, where there is currently $1.6 billion in reserves invested in the province's communities, in their schools, hospitals, and universities. He talks about an integrated claims centre with regional claim centres. There are 23 currently in Manitoba which minimize public inconvenience in insurance claims procedures. It enjoys a decided advantage in reducing per vehicle cost of automobile claims. Moreover, says Mr. Pawley, provincial insurance corporations as the owners of public auto insurance, have every political reason to reduce accidents and claims by insisting on safer driving conditions for their motorists. They pursue traffic safety and loss prevention programs. For example, in British Columbia the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia has financed photoradar, larger red lights at intersections, and so on.

There is no discrimination in public insurance in rates based on age or sex assessed to motorists. Bad drivers are surcharged additional dollars on their driver's permit. That's the fairest way, he said. Now, that is similar to what the government is proposing. However, the overall rate structure charged to all types of drivers, whether good drivers or not, is considerably lower.

There are consistently stable rates under public auto insurance. He compared the annual rate increases in 2003 in other provinces, including Alberta. Manitoba returned $81 million to motorists with a 16.6 percent discount. The Consumers' Association of Canada looked at Lloydminster, skirting the border of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and discovered that motorists on the Alberta side pay on average $900 more.

I noticed that the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster stood up tonight and made an impassioned appeal that Alberta's cigars should be as cheap as Saskatchewan's cigars, and I would expect that he would follow up on that and make a impassioned appeal on behalf of Alberta drivers that their rates are as cheap as drivers on the Saskatchewan side.

The premium rate increases compare well under public auto insurance with the inflationary increases over the same period of time. There's great financial strength, says Mr. Pawley, in public auto insurance. He suggested that in Manitoba a 102 cent return on a $1 premium. Those are figures from the year 2000. Operating costs are less than 50 percent of the industry average. It is mandated to be financially self-sufficient and operate on a break even basis over the long term.

Now, what is Mr. Pawley's conclusion, Mr. Chairman? Well, he says that in Alberta the Conservatives have been saying that the voters shouldn't look to the other three western provinces as examples of the benefit of public auto insurance. He says that our Premier rejects public auto insurance because it flies in the teeth of the official ideology of privatization and smaller government. He mocks the idea of public auto insurance because it actually involves the government running something. He asks: why is Alberta, why is the Premier the odd man out in western Canada? Surely our Premier is not saying that it can't work here because Albertans are failures at public administration and can't be as efficient as Manitoba, British Columbia, or Saskatchewan.

He doesn't think the Premier will listen to him. He thinks the Premier would see him as a left-wing ideologue, a left-wing nut. Mr. Pawley suggests that our Premier should then seek advice on this issue from other right-wing buddies in the west; for example, Gordon Campbell in British Columbia, Elwin Hermanson of the Saskatchewan Party, Tory leader Stuart Murray in Manitoba, or previous conservative-minded Premiers in those provinces; for example, in British Columbia Premier Vander Zalm or Premier Bennett or Premier Devine of Saskatchewan or in Manitoba Premier Filmon or Premier Lyon, all of whom have maintained the public auto insurance systems in their provinces notwithstanding that they were established by NDP governments.

Conservative and Liberal governments that have come along have not dared to touch these systems. Why? Because they work so well. They deliver the lowest possible price in the fairest possible way, and the voters would not tolerate any government, no matter how right wing, dismantling public auto insurance once they've had the opportunity to make use of that system and to experience the advantages.

Well, you know, I want to indicate, Mr. Chairman, that there are lots of good reasons why we should have public auto insurance and why this particular bill fails the key test, and that is whether or not it indicates that there is going to be a public system or not.

Opponents have consistently argued that it should be left to private enterprise since public coverage would remove the enterprise and competition of individuals. If public funds are utilized, political bureaucracy will be rampant and a scheme of individual coverage by the state is socialism. The opponents, Mr. Pawley goes on to say, argue that universal coverage will destroy initiative and ambition and there will thus be a premium for comparative idleness to be taken out of the pockets of the laborious and the conscientious.

Other arguments that he identifies used by those opposed to public auto insurance is that standards would be lowered, that governments should only concern themselves with coverage for the needy and that the creating or sustaining of such coverage for all classes is beyond the province and power of government, that government cannot provide for the necessities of people, that requiring people to pay under universal coverage is dangerous, that and there's no confidence in compulsory equalization. He points out, Mr. Chairman, that in 1830 opponents of tax-supported education for all children made exactly the same arguments in the United States. This has ever been the argument against public advances and progressive changes in society, and it is being used against us again.

Despite all of the difficulties and all of the arguments – and there were some difficulties in setting up some of these programs – they have stood the test of time. They are the kind of program that delivers the goods for people, delivers it consistently and in a fair manner, and wherever it's been implemented in Canada, it has been successful, so successful, indeed, that no subsequent government, no matter how right wing, has been willing to go back to the kind of system that we have in Alberta and which we are going to continue to have even with the so-called reforms that the government is trying to put in place. We are going to continue with all of the disadvantages of a private system, save some more equity in the apportionment of rates.

That's the only change, and it's not enough, Mr. Chairman. It's far from being enough. It falls far short of the mark that has been set in the other three western provinces. So I put to the Assembly the question raised by former Premier Howard Pawley, the father of public auto insurance: why is Alberta remaining the odd man out in western Canada? Why indeed? That's a question that will be asked certainly by many Albertans at the next election.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd certainly like to rise and respond to some of those comments. Quite frankly, to say that Alberta is the odd man out in the western provinces, well, thank heavens we are, and thank heavens we have not gone the route of our neighbouring provinces, following their socialist policies which have resulted in decimated economies. When we talk about our next-door neighbours and that 20 percent of their budget is coming from federal government transfers and we're exactly the opposite, thank heavens we are the odd man out. Compared to what they're doing there, it's frankly extremely disappointing.

I happen to believe, Mr. Chairman, that I understand the socialist policies that we're hearing advocated here. They sound good. They sound appealing to a certain number of people who, unfortunately, have not ever been in business, not ever had to make a payroll with their own money. Yeah, these socialist policies sound kind of appealing to a certain number of people, but quite frankly they're disastrous. They're absolutely disastrous in the long run. When we look at government insurance, people say: oh, it's cheaper; it's better; it's this and that. Well, you start looking at the social engineering that's being applied in the government insurance of our next-door neighbours and you find that, in fact, the good drivers in those provinces are having to subsidize the bad drivers. That's how it works. Right?

So if you happen to be a bad driver, yes, you are probably going to be able to get quoted better insurance rates in our neighbouring provinces, but if you're a good driver, it'll be exactly the opposite case. Do we want that? Do we want to subsidize bad drivers and have good drivers have to pay more? No, I don't think so. That's just the first reason why we don't have government insurance here and don't want government insurance.

Of course, when you really think of it, if government insurance, which we've heard advocated here numerous times – if it is so good to get government involved in private business and get government involved to roll back those prices, well, why stop at insurance? I mean, groceries are too high for some people, too, and the price of a new car and the price of just about everything. So according to the policies being advocated by the opposition here, why stop at insurance? Why not get government everything and order those prices rolled back? If profit is so bad, you know, if you think profits are so terrible, roll them back on everybody. I mean, that's the kind of policy that's being advocated by the opposition here.

Quite frankly, I can never understand why socialists are just so jealous of other people trying to make money. The socialists, you know, are just so opposed to other people making money and so jealous that they'd advocate ganging up on them through government policies to take those profits away from those bad people making those profits. Thank heavens Alberta is the odd man out on this.

The reality, Mr. Chairman, is that these socialist policies of getting the government involved to regulate everything and roll back those prices have been tried before. Unfortunately, when we look at Russia, it just didn't work. The reality is that when the government gets involved and rolls those prices back and regulates everything to be cheap, in very short order there isn't any supply: cheap prices, no supply, nothing on the shelves anymore, nobody supplying insurance anymore. So it just gets worse and worse.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I think it's a good message to all Albertans on what our opposition would be like if, in fact, they ever form the government in this province. This is the message being sent here, that if they were to form the government in this province and started taking over everything with socialist policies, they would scare off every business. There would be the end of the Alberta advantage.

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Chair: Hon. member, now that you've drawn a breath, I just wanted to remind hon. members that we are in committee and that it's not incumbent on each and every one of you to talk at the same time as the person who's been recognized. We would hope that you could converse in a very, very quiet, unobtrusive way.

We'll now hear from the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie and, hopefully, only him.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to continue, the reality is that if you've ever had to run a business yourself, if you've ever had to make a payroll with your own money, if you've ever been in a business where it's your own money at risk, you realize just how much of a coward venture capital is. Venture capital is the world's biggest coward. It runs at the very first sign of socialism. So in this province we have the advantage that we have, we have the economy that we have, and we have the Alberta advantage that we have because we stood up and strongly said: we believe in free enterprise and capitalism, and people who want to invest their money and take those risks are welcome in Alberta. That has not been the message in our neighbouring provinces, and that is why they are the have-not provinces, who have to depend on our money going to Ottawa and coming back to them to keep them afloat.

So for someone to stand in this House and say that we should be following the same disastrous road that they have followed and get into government regulation, government insurance – next thing we'll be in government groceries. We'll be in everything across the board, and it won't be an Alberta advantage. We'll have joined the other provinces as have-not provinces, and then we won't be the odd man out. That's what the opposition would have happen in this province.

Colleagues, I hope that you ignore the opposition's calls here to go down the road of government insurance. I think it would be a huge mistake. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This is what I like: a good, honest, straightforward debate. I appreciate the hon. member's comments, but there are a couple of things that I think I want to set straight. One is that the advantage of public auto insurance comes from charging good drivers higher rates so that they can subsidize bad drivers. This is not the source of the savings that occur in public automobile systems, as I just indicated in the comments that I communicated from the speech of former Premier Howard Pawley. If the hon. member has forgotten already what I actually said, perhaps he can review Hansard and see the itemization of the savings that occur and why those savings occur, because ex Premier Pawley is now teaching at a university, and he is probably one of the most knowledgeable individuals on automobile insurance in the country.

I'd like to just read the report highlights from the auto insurance rate comparison study of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia. This is done by the Consumers' Association of Canada, and they studied 17 cities in four western provinces. Here's what they found.

1. Alberta consumers pay on average about twice as much for auto insurance than consumers in the other three western provinces with public auto insurance systems.
2. A consumer in Lloydminster, Alberta could pay up to $8,980 more annually for auto insurance than if they lived literally across the street in Lloydminster, Saskatchewan.

Apparently the same situation applies to cigars.

3. A driver in Winnipeg could pay up to $9,080 less for auto insurance than if they lived in Edmonton, a comparable sized city with similar prairie-like driving conditions.

4. In Alberta older drivers who drive newer, much more expensive cars, and who have driving convictions, pay up to $2,430 less annually for auto insurance than young drivers with clean driving records. In the three public auto provinces, where rates are based on a driver's record, a young good driver pays less than a bad older driver.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to indicate that these are based on comparisons of actual cases, and I can make the report available for the hon. member, because I'm sure he wouldn't want to misrepresent the advantages of public auto insurance further.

The second point that I want to make, Mr. Chairman, has to do with the Alberta advantage, the economic advantage of Alberta. Government members would like to believe that this is due solely to the enlightened policies of this government, and quite frankly – and I see some of them are applauding already – nothing could be further from the truth. The reason Alberta has the economic advantage it has is because of the oil and the gas in this province that other provinces do not have. This fuels the Alberta economy, and whether or not the government has occasionally done a good thing or two about handling the economy or not is not the decisive question. This government would like to take all the credit for the oil and gas and the tremendous revenues that it has. It's like the government trying to take credit for the enormous surpluses that the Alberta government has every year, $3.4 billion in this year, as if this was somehow a result of the fiscal policies of the Alberta government.

In fact, we have somewhat lower royalties on the oil and gas than, say, Alaska or some European countries that have free enterprise economies and governments as well, so we actually get less revenue than we could have or would have if the New Democrats were the government. But nobody should say that it's the government's excellent management that produces those surpluses because it's not, Mr. Chairman. It is due very, very precisely to royalties from oil and, in particular, natural gas. So you can take credit all you want for the Alberta advantage, but God put that oil and gas under the ground, as we were told 50 years ago, for Social Credit and not for the Progressive Conservatives.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today because I did not think that I came into this Assembly this evening to listen to what the former Premier of Manitoba, Mr. Howard Pawley, had indicated. It seems to me that we are engaged in a debate over whether we should have public or private car insurance. The bill that we have in front of us does not give us that option. The bill presented in front of us deals with private car insurance.

Towards the end of July of this past summer I convened a forum in St. Albert to which I invited constituents. I invited those who wanted to speak on behalf of and whose interest stemmed from their legal interest in injury claims, if you will, or representing injured persons in car accidents, so a number of lawyers attended. I invited a number of car insurance providers, agents, and brokers who are in my community, so they came as well. I also invited a number of constituents, some of whom, indeed, had been victims of a car accident. Some of them, like the majority of my constituents, are required to have car insurance because they do own a car and drive one and, therefore, by our rules must make sure that they properly insure it.

The discussion that evening divided into three topics. First of all, I must say that at that stage of the debate – and we have advanced quite a bit further – in late July a number of the injury lawyers who were present were quite, as I have said before, pre-emptive and presumptive about what we were discussing. They presumed that we were going to do a number of things, and they were pre-emptive in their strike against our proposals. Those who were in the car insurance industry did come, and they did give us their perspective, but it was their perspective on it. A number of my constituents had questions, and a number who were victims of accidents presented their perspective as well: their great desire to be able to take their case to court and to get properly compensated for the injuries that they had suffered.

What I want to address most specifically were the concerns of the majority of my constituents, who pay for car insurance and who are finding that lately – and this is over the past two years, I'm going to say – are not able to afford car insurance. I can tell you about Darren, a young 18 year old in my community who wanted to get a summer job in which he would be required to drive the vehicles of the company who would be employing him. The company would not hire him because the insurance on the vehicles was too expensive.

I can tell you about the senior, a senior who's quite representative of a number of seniors in my community who are 70 years-plus in age who after having driven for years and years with very safe driving records have had a minor accident. These are the people who for some reason their car insurance companies have decided not to renew their policies. So they, too, are finding that it's not accessible. Indeed, if they are asked to go to facility or to go to Kingsway, another provider of high-risk car insurance in our community here, they can't afford it.

So I'm finding, as I have found for a long time, that those who were required to buy car insurance, my family included, are finding that the rates have gone high without any acceptable explanation. They have risen without justification in the minds of the consumers and in my mind too.

I also find that there are those who are finding gross inequity in their ability to receive insurance policies. Many of you remember and sat in this Legislature when I discussed my private member's bill, which was the Insurance (Gender Premium Equity) Amendment Act. I can tell you that unmarried young male drivers under 25 are the ones who have been forced to pay very high car insurance premiums. That is in my estimation an unequal access to car insurance for males, so I am very, very pleased that this piece of legislation addresses that issue. It eliminates that factor of gender.

It also is going to eliminate the factor of age. I can tell you that while two years ago, indeed three years ago most of those constituents who contacted me were young male drivers, I have an equal number of constituents who have approached me on the issue of age because they are seniors. These are seniors who are finding it very, very difficult to get affordable coverage in their car insurance premiums. Why I'm leading to describing this is because we had to do something about the issue.

There are also those who have been accident victims. They are individuals – and we have them in all the constituencies, I'm sure, around this province – who have very specifically endured soft-tissue injury that has affected their lives, their working circumstances, and their ability to participate in a number of activities. So these are the individuals who are finding it very, very difficult to continue in their lifestyle when they have been, through no fault of their own, accident victims.

We have to address this, and we have to address it so that we ourselves have proper coverage should we be involved in an at-fault accident. We have to have the confidence that the other drivers on the road have sufficient coverage so that should we be the victims, they themselves and their insurance companies will be able to cover the issues and to compensate us justly for our victimization, I guess I'm going to say, by virtue of an accident for which we were not at fault.

So what I'm driving at, Mr. Chairman, is to indicate that in our communities we are wrestling with the issue of car insurance that from the provider's point of view, indeed, it has not been very transparent, nor has it been accountable to the individual customer. From the legal profession's point of view all they want is the ability to be able to represent their clients should they be, indeed, victims that have far-reaching needs as a result of being a victim of a car accident.

We also have those who are neither victims nor are they, indeed, individuals who are by virtue of age or circumstance or gender or consideration of the people with whom they share a residence – they are the ones who are finding it very difficult to rationalize why they have to pay the premiums that they pay. This is why we as a government are dealing with a piece of legislation that we trust and hope will put in place regulations that will look after all those factors that I believe we want considered in order to have affordable, accessible, and fair car insurance premiums. Will we have it absolutely correct so that it will be a perfect world where no one will challenge? No, I don't think so. But will we have a better circumstance in the delivery of car insurance than we currently have? Yes, we will.

I have also in my constituency a number of individuals who make a very honest living by working as car insurance brokers and working in the car insurance industry. I have a number of lawyers who very justifiably represent their clients when their needs are such that they as victims of a car accident must make claims in order to look after the circumstances in which they find themselves.

But I also have, shared by both the lawyers and by the insurance companies, individuals who must have insurance on their cars and who must feel that they have a government who is concerned enough about their circumstances to make sure, whatever it takes, to give them the opportunity to afford car insurance, to have car insurance that is accessible to them, and that they are not turned away or sent to another facility or another company that will charge them two and three times and in some cases four times the going rate. I also have constituents, myself included, all the people who live in my community who, I believe, want to make sure that there is fairness in the delivery of this particular aspect of required business that we must be involved in, and that is that we must have car insurance.

So let's deal with all the other circumstances, the traffic vigilance that we must take. We must make sure that people respect the rules of the road. We must do things that will educate drivers not to drive recklessly and put other people's lives in peril when they are on the road. We must make sure that individuals properly represent and make sure that they have the opportunity to state their case before a jury or a judge, if you will, in a court. We have to make sure that all those things happen. We have to make sure that individuals and beginning drivers are at least aware of the fact that they have a responsibility when they are on the road.

But in addition to that, we must also make sure, if we require them to have car insurance, that they can afford it and that they then can reap the benefits of the insurance that they so expensively right now but, we hope, will more equitably pay for under the new system.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak to this. It is an issue that is of grave concern to all my constituents. It's an issue that I don't take lightly. It's something that a number of individuals have contacted me with respect to, and I think we have an obligation to address this and address it in the spirit of fairness, in the spirit of equal access, and in the spirit of affordable coverage.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to spend a little time talking about a particular section of this bill that I'm not happy with and then ultimately bring in an amendment for this section. The one I'm particularly interested in, first of all, is the rate board. It's called the automobile insurance rate board. It starts on page 12 of the bill. This is a board that is going to have a great deal of power under this piece of legislation.

They've got all kinds of rules in this bill about how the board may be established and how the board and the chair are appointed, the remuneration provided, and talks about other staff and persons required by the board and that they can from time to time appoint one or more persons having special technical or other knowledge to inquire into and report to the Board in respect of any matter before the Board or in respect of which the Board considers it necessary to have information for the proper carrying out of its duties.

There has to be a quorum for them to carry on, that an order, direction, approval or other instrument purporting to be signed by the chair, the vice-chair or a member of the Board on behalf of the Board is admissible in evidence in any proceedings as proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary,

- (a) that the order, direction, approval or instrument is the act of the Board or of a quorum of the Board, and
- (b) that the person signing it was authorized to do so without proof of the appointment of the individual signing as a member of the Board, or the individual's designation as chair or vice-chair, as the case may be, or of the individual's signature.

Then it goes on to talk about how the rules governing their procedures are made, and the most important part from my perspective is the powers of the board. They can investigate any matter it thinks fit respecting automobile insurance in Alberta, including rates, benefits and availability of insurance.

It can prohibit

- (i) an insurer from charging any rate for the minimum insurance above a rate filed pursuant to section 655,
- (ii) any change in class of an automobile from the classification of that automobile filed pursuant to [the same section], or
- (iii) any change that would have the effect of increasing a rate for the minimum insurance.

Then a number of other powers available to them.

10:00

Mr. Chairman, what I believe is very important when you have a board that has this kind of power is that what happens in their proceedings is available to public scrutiny, and there is no provision for that in this bill. There are pages and pages of what they can do and how they can do it, but nowhere included anywhere in their powers and duties is there any provision for sharing that information publicly other than their publishing of an annual report. Because of the amount of money involved, because of the impact that this has on people's lives, we don't think that's adequate.

So on behalf of my colleague for Edmonton-Gold Bar I would at this time like to move an amendment to this particular section.

The Chair: To the pages: would you please hand them out to people who are actually sitting here first, and then you can fill in later? That way the benches can get some over here. Then we can start. Amendment A4?

Ms Carlson: Yes, A4.

The Chair: You can move it now, please.

Ms Carlson: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of my colleague for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I'm moving that Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), be amended in section 15 in the proposed section 653 by adding the following after subsection (13).

(13.1) All proceedings of the Board must be open to the public.

(13.2) The Board must ensure that all proceedings of the Board are recorded and made publicly available in either written or electronic media format.

We think this is an excellent addition to this particular bill. We see that likely it was an oversight in the writing of the bill that it wasn't originally included, because all members in this Assembly know how important it is that boards that are making important decisions that directly affect the public, that directly affect money, that have the ability to call expert witnesses, that have the ability to have information provided by their boards used in courts or other judicial areas definitely need to have very tight control over the recordings of the proceedings of those particular meetings.

Now, we're used to having Hansard record what we say in public meetings that are making key decisions and then having a record of those proceedings available to the general public. That's the kind of situation that we're asking for here, that people can come and listen to the proceedings of the boards, that they not be closed, behind-door meetings, and that records are made. This board, particularly in the first few years, is going to be making some significant and important decisions, and we want to make sure that whatever they're doing is in an open kind of format that can be reviewed and can be watched if people wish to actually show up at the meetings and watch them. That's a very important part of how this particular bill will proceed.

The worst thing that could happen is that you bring in this kind of legislation affecting a pocketbook issue for voters and have the decisions made behind closed doors. So we're helping the government out in this particular instance by bringing in the kind of amendment that will make proceedings more open, will make them more available to the public, and will help reduce the amount of concern or suspicion that people have about the decisions and how the decisions are made with this particular board.

Of course, many people will want to be on this board. There will be a lot of scrutiny on how people get appointed and whether they're friends of friends or whether they actually bring some expertise to the table. In particular, what they say, how they say it, and how the decisions are made is going to come under close scrutiny for some time and, I would suggest, some long time, not some short time. So the best way to eliminate concerns and the best way to ensure that good decisions are made is to just make the process open and transparent and the board members accountable.

Now, you'd think that wouldn't be very much to ask for, but in our experience in this province that isn't necessarily the way these kinds of boards tend to operate. So rather than have the government get themselves into a big kerfuffle over this because people are unhappy with the proceedings and us having to come back and amend this act next year or the year after if they hold out for a very long time, we're suggesting that making proceedings transparent be incorporated into the bill at this particular time.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would urge all members in this Assembly to accept this amendment in the good faith in which it is intended, and we can proceed accordingly. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to briefly address this amendment. I want to remind members what the nature of this board is. This is a board that is being struck with a number of responsibilities. The main one is establishing what the benchmark insurance rate is going to be and putting the grid in place.

I think that there is some confusion that this is some kind of a board that is going to operate similarly to the Automobile Insurance Board, that we have now, where individual companies will come and make requests for rate changes. I just want to remind all members that we've reversed that whole mechanism so that insurance companies no longer come to government asking for rate changes. Instead, the rate board that we create through this legislation will be responsible for collecting and collating all of the relevant data, analyzing that data, and then, based upon the analysis of that data, determining what is going to be the rate structure that will be used for the next successive year.

I don't think that that kind of work is the kind of work that lends itself to a series of public meetings. If the board finds it necessary on a specific issue that might come up to hold hearings, then it's well within their authority to hold public hearings, and there's nothing that would preclude them from doing so. But when we ask a board to do technical analysis of sometimes confidential information, we can hardly expect them to do all of their business in public. So I would urge members not to support this proposed amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on amendment A4.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'm pleased to speak to the amendment by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. The hon. Member for Medicine Hat has just described some differences between the board envisaged in Bill 53 and the Alberta Automobile Insurance Board, which has been in existence, as I understand it, since the days of the Lougheed government.

It might help to review just how the Alberta Automobile Insurance Board operated. It approved changes to car insurance rates. It reports currently to the Minister of Finance, and its directors are appointed by the minister. It has an incredibly low public profile, Mr. Chairman. It doesn't even have a web site. It does publish an annual report, but this is not even posted on the government web site, nor are the directors of the AIB. It reviews behind closed doors rate application increases for compulsory coverage, mostly third-party liability insurance. There's no opportunity currently for policyholders to challenge rate increases. Locations and dates of board meetings are not advertised or even made public. Minutes of board meetings are not published or made public.

The AIB appears to largely act as a rubber stamp for the insurance industry. Only two out of 157 rate applications in 2002 were rejected by the AIB. Another 14 were approved with some modification. The balance were accepted as applied for. Clearly, the AIB needs some sort of transformation into a government watchdog rather than an industry lapdog.

Now, let's contrast that with what's envisaged in the present legislation. It will not just rubber-stamp any longer virtually anything brought before it. Instead, the government is moving to a heavily regulated model because they recognize that free enterprise has not worked in automobile insurance rates. They don't want to make it a public system, clearly, so they're going to regulate, and they're going to set the rates. That's a qualitative difference, and I acknowledge that. But they are still going to allow the board to meet privately, and the rates that it sets will be subject to strong lobbying pressure, I'm sure, from the industry either directly or indirectly.

So how do consumers know that this board is going to act always in their interest if they don't know what's going on? It's probably true that there's technical information that the board talks about. Nevertheless, if we don't make it public, if we don't pass this amendment, then just knowing how these things work, it will not be able to represent the consumers first and foremost on a long-term, ongoing basis. So sooner or later the consumer is going to get the shaft unless the consumer has a guarantee of transparency, and it's clear that government doesn't want that. That's what this amendment is about.

Mr. Chairman, I think that if we want to make sure that consumers' interests are protected, we need to cut the consumer in on the deal. They at least need to be able to see what's going on so that if their interests are not being looked after by the new board, then they can contact their MLAs, they can contact the government, and hopefully things will get back on track. So I think that without this in the long run this board will cease operating in the interests of the public and the consumer of automobile insurance if, in fact, it operates in their interests in the first place.

So I urge members to support the amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Speaking in favour of the amendment, I think there are a number of advantages to having board meetings made public. Paramount among them is the possibility for public education. Part of the problem that we face right now is the lack of understanding on behalf of ordinary people in terms of how the system operates and the rationale behind decisions, the reason why rates have risen. There's no clear understanding. With the lack of information to the contrary people make some assumptions, and many of them are probably unwarranted.

So I think a major part of having meetings in public would be the opportunity for a public education program to help all of us better understand the insurance industry and why our automobile rates are set at the levels that they are. That's going to be, as the Member for Medicine Hat has reminded us, the major role of this board, and that's to set those rates.

I can't think of anything more interesting to individuals in the province than the factors that go into those rates being set. Why would they be done behind closed doors and then announced? Asking for them to meet in public I don't think is asking anything more than we already do of many, many bodies. The Member for Medicine Hat indicated that they were to collect, analyze, and then determine a rate, and that's no different than many other bodies that operate and by law have to operate in public.

I can't think of anything more complicated than, say, a budget for the city in terms of the technical detail, the kinds of competing interests that have to be dealt with in setting tax rates for the city. School board budgets. I can think of a variety of boards that are required to do their deliberations in public and to make their decisions in public who deal with all kinds of very, very complicated information. And, true, at those meetings they often have technical experts who bring information to bear and commission and have reports prepared on different aspects of the matters that they're dealing with, but it seems to work successfully.

I think it's not only that the rate setting should be open, but it should appear to be open. I can share with you the frustration, for instance, that those boards that meet in private cause citizens. If you look at the standing policy committees, which hold only part of their meetings in public and then retreat behind closed doors, there's always the suspicion, whether rightly placed or not, that decisions that are not in the public interest are being made behind those closed doors.

After all, this board will be paid from public funds. Taxpayers will be the ones that eventually foot the bill for the operations, and to claim that they should do this in private and then announce their decisions I think is in error. That's why I think the amendment before us makes sense. It's democratic, and I think it's in the interests of citizens.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate on the amendment in regard to making all the proceedings of the proposed auto board open to the public. The board also "must ensure that all proceedings of the Board are recorded and made publicly available in either written or electronic media format." This shouldn't cause anyone any harm, Mr. Chairman.

When we consider other boards in this province, we look at, for instance, the EUB. There's a public process involved in hearings before that board. Let's, for instance, Mr. Chairman, look at gas cost recovery rates. On a monthly basis there would be hearings before the board. We look at the EUB in matters relating to electricity. We look at the EUB in matters relating to oil and gas development. Those hearings are public. They're open to the public. Public consultation, public representation is routine. It's part of the process. So if it's good enough for one sector of the economy, if it's good enough for one regulatory approval process, why is it not good enough for the other?

When we consider how consumers in this province feel about the regulatory process and how they feel about the insurance industry, this amendment is very important. Amendment A4 is very important, Mr. Chairman, because it would do a lot to restore public confidence in the regulatory process for automobile insurance rate applications in this province.

Now, board proceedings in the past have not been public. The majority of consumers who have been faced with double-digit increases are astonished, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands spoke about this earlier. Just in one calendar year I believe 155 or 157 applications were approved. Some of them, granted, were approved with amendments, but this board met nine times in that calendar year, and I think that's about 17 applications per meeting. They've got their work cut out for them, but it's all done behind closed doors.

This is why the public is so suspicious. They are the ones that are forced to dig deeper into their pockets every six months to renew their car insurance premiums. Car insurance premiums have gotten so high that it's become a tradition that there are now monthly payments on your car insurance.

Mr. Mason: You can put them on your credit card.

Mr. MacDonald: You can even put them on your credit card, I am told.

However, when one considers that the insurance payment for the automobile may be more expensive than the monthly car payments, as they would say: Houston, we have a problem.

Another way of fixing this problem is to make the whole process open to the public. We can't simply say that there is proprietary information. It's a competitive market. I'm told our third-party liability automobile insurance market here is competitive. I know that there are between 75 and 80 participants in that market. Some, of course, have a larger market share than other participants, but I don't think they would mind if all proceedings of the board were open to the public.

If someone, let's say a consumer, were interested, Mr. Chairman, in following the proceedings of the board and perhaps wanted to go and see which insurance providers or sellers or companies had appeared before the board recently, what was said, or what rate application was filed, this would allow that consumer, perhaps, an easier time to shop around. If we're going to have this free market, that's what the free market would be all about. Consumers need all the information if they are to make a sound decision, and if they don't have all the information, how do we expect them to make a sound decision?

It's time. It's time again that we put consumers first in this province. It doesn't matter if one looks at another provincial government, Mr. Chairman, or one looks at one of the state regulatory bodies in America. Consumer information and consumer protection seem to be paramount. They seem to be a number one focus of government policy. But not here. Not here in this province. I'm sad to have to say this. I've looked at a lot of different web sites, and it's a shame a person can't have a look at the rate calculator web site of this government, because it was mysteriously pulled. However, we have to reverse that trend, and we can reverse that trend. We can start that with amendment A4.

I'm asking everyone in the Assembly this evening to consider A4 and recognize that we have to make the whole process public. This is an ideal way to start, by amending section 15 in the proposed section 653 by adding the following after subsection (13).

(13.1) All proceedings of the Board must be open to the public.

(13.2) The Board must ensure that all proceedings of the Board are recorded and made publicly available in either written or electronic media format.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, we've got to start to put the consumers first, not the interests of select industry insiders or this group or that group. Consumers. Automobile insurance consumers have taken it on the financial chin for over three years for no reason other than that we have had lax regulatory approval processes for the auto insurance industry in this province. In fact, we could say that we have none.

An Hon. Member: None?

Mr. MacDonald: None. Absolutely.

Optional, comprehensive, collision: there's no approval process for those financial service products. There is for the third-party liability portion only. Hopefully by the time we're done repairing this bill, Bill 53, there will be. There will be a strengthened regulatory approval process. That's one of the roles of government. Government has a role to play. The right-wing ideologues have trouble grasping that, but a government has a responsibility, and this is what amendment A4 is about. I'm going to say that it's about responsible government. We need to further discuss this as Bill 53 proceeds through committee, but a public process is a good process.

Before I cede the floor to another colleague or another member of this Assembly, I would urge all hon. members to please vote for this amendment A4. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

10:30

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to propose an amendment to Bill 53, Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2). I will have one of the pages deliver this to the table and circulate it to members.

The Chair: Hon. member, if you wish to move amendment A5, please do so.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will. I move that Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), be amended in section 15 in the proposed section 654 by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) In addition to the powers and duties of the Board provided for under subsection (1), the Board shall conduct an annual examination of insurance rates in Alberta and other jurisdictions to ensure that Alberta insurance rates remain competitive.

If I may speak to that, Mr. Chairman, I actually hope the government will accept this. One has to retain some sense of optimism in this place, and I still do. I think this gives the government a chance to sort of be really clear with Albertans about what they are trying to achieve through this act.

The Premier has said that the government will establish a regime in Alberta in which the rates are competitive with the other western provinces. Notwithstanding the fact that they have a more efficient and superior system of delivering auto insurance, the Premier has committed the province to matching their rates in a broad sense. What the amendment, then, does is to instruct the board to look at the rates on an annual basis, to look at the rates in Saskatchewan, in Manitoba, in British Columbia, and, I guess, in other jurisdictions – but we particularly have in mind those ones that the Premier has benchmarked – and, in doing so, make sure that as they do their job as set out in the legislation, Alberta insurance rates remain competitive.

I would urge hon. members to support that because that's the object of the exercise. The object of the exercise, as stated by the government, as enunciated by the Premier, is to have rates in Alberta competitive with other jurisdictions in western Canada. To do that in a different way, I suppose, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie earlier talked about Alberta being the odd man out, but as far as the bottom line for Albertans, if we may take the Premier at his word, then Alberta will not be the odd man out because the rates will be competitive according to the commitment made by the Premier.

So I guess we just want to make sure that there are mechanisms in place whereby the board, doing its job, can actually accomplish that goal. If it can, then good on the government, Mr. Chairman, but I would hate to think that we might just have competitive rates in the next year or so or until the election is out of the way and then we'd see the rates creep up again and rise above the rates in our neighbouring provinces. So here's a mechanism to ensure that the board checks those rates and ensures that our rates remain competitive.

What we've done here, Mr. Chairman, is to provide a specific mechanism whereby the board set up in the Insurance Amendment Act can make sure that they're doing what the Premier wants them to do. Surely members of the government cannot be opposed to that. Here we are helping the act meet the political objectives set for it by the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and the Premier of the province.

So I do sincerely hope that members opposite will find favour with this amendment and will decide to support it, and I look forward to the comments of other members with respect to this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just want to comment on the amendment brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. The member quite rightly points out that the Premier and the government have been very clear that one of the objectives of the exercise we're going through right now is that we will end up with a situation where there are rates that are comparable with other western provinces. But I want to point out to the member and to all members that an amendment such as we have before us is not needed because in the provisions in the act that talk about the duties of the board, the act makes it very clear that the board's main duty is to determine and set on an annual basis premiums for basic coverage that the insurers will use as a benchmark for auto insurance.

It also provides for authority for the board to exercise and perform any other powers and duties assigned to it by the minister. So earlier when I was talking about another motion that had been brought forward by the opposition, I talked about the fact that there may be times when it's appropriate that the board be asked to hold hearings of some kind or other. It may also be appropriate that from time to time the minister will direct the board to conduct such a survey and to report its findings back to government, to the minister, through the annual report.

So the nature of this bill is that it is enabling. There are a lot of different things that we will in all likelihood encounter as we move down the road to reformed insurance. I think that this is something that is laudable and may well become one of the responsibilities of the board, but I don't think that it is necessary nor would it be particularly productive to include it in legislation. Heaven forbid that at some point in time we may not be wanting to compare ourselves to other western provinces because we're so far below them that it's no longer a laudable goal to have comparable prices to other western provinces. That's why the bill was designed the way it is. It gives powers to the minister to authorize the board to do certain things, but let's not handcuff the board with responsibilities that may or may not apply five years from now before we even get it started.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on amendment A5.

10:40

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My comments are fairly brief. While I like this amendment in principle, I do have a concern with it. I would even consider an amendment to the amendment, but I don't suppose I'll proceed with that. My concern is with the phrase that reads, "The board shall conduct an annual examination of insurance rates in Alberta and other jurisdictions." It doesn't specify here which jurisdictions we're talking about. Are we meaning other provinces? Are we meaning other countries? It's simply too vague. It's of no value for Alberta to be compared to just any other jurisdiction. It needs to be more specific. So I see an amendment that has the right spirit behind it but is, in my view, a bit flawed in the execution and in the detail.

So those are my only comments on this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. In regard to amendment A5, as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, I would be more than considering supporting this amendment. I certainly would support it, and I would urge all members to support this amendment. Contrary to what the hon. Member for Medicine Hat has just suggested, I don't see this as a handcuff of the board in any way, shape, or form. I think this is increasing the scope of the duties and the powers of the board in a positive fashion.

Again, with the interests of consumers at heart, there are enough sweeping regulations dealing with a broad range of matters in this legislation. This is all about regulations, that the minister may do this or may do that. When one considers that we are contemplating here, Mr. Chairman, that in addition to the powers and duties of the board provided under subsection (1), "the board shall conduct an annual examination of insurance rates in Alberta and other jurisdictions to ensure that [automobile] insurance rates remain competitive," well, we could break that down into two examinations.

The first, of course, is within Alberta. We know what happened, but we don't know the reason why. We know we had four geographic zones at one time in this province. The city of Edmonton was being discriminated against by this government, and now we have, it looks like, three geographic zones. There is, essentially, the north, the rural south, and what we're going to have, the metro area. This amendment would give the board the opportune time and ample time to do an examination of these regions on an annual basis.

Now, when we look at Edmonton, metro Edmonton, as I understand it, will include St. Albert. It will include Sherwood Park. It will include Leduc. Does the same apply to Calgary? Do the bedroom communities of Calgary also fit in? For instance, let's pick the community of Okotoks. Is that classified with rural Alberta? With the acceptance of this amendment this board could examine those issues. We could see if rates are fair. We know that the driving habits and the driving patterns are different in rural areas than in urban areas of this province. I've been told that 20 percent of the drivers are in rural areas, 80 percent of the fatalities. Eighty percent of the drivers in urban areas, 20 percent of the fatalities. There are many, many issues that could be examined here.

The importance of this amendment could also help out businesses. Let's say, Mr. Chairman, that a business has a fleet of vehicles located in Edmonton for oil service work. Insurance costs with these zones – there could be a significant difference. If the entrepreneur moved the fleet to Grande Prairie, would there be substantial savings there? Or moved the fleet to Calgary or to Medicine Hat? What would the costs be there? I hope I can convince members to support this amendment because it certainly is a good one.

Now, there are a lot of pluses to this annual examination of insurance rates within the province of Alberta. A lot of pluses. I would have to ask: is this amendment just for passenger vehicles? Is it also going to be for commercial vehicles, farm vehicles? There is a difference; we all know that.

Now, doing a review of other jurisdictions' insurance rates to ensure that Alberta insurance rates remain competitive. Well, we know right now that they're not competitive. We know that. We know that from studies that have been done by the Consumers' Association of Canada. The most recent study would be in September of 2003. Would that help? Would it help consumers? It might make a government that's bent on continuing with a private delivery of insurance in this province, but consumers might be interested to know. So if there was a competitive examination of insurance rates let's say in the Canadian provinces – we could just, Mr. Chairman, consider Alberta. We have a compulsory minimum third-party liability of $200,000. That is the same in B.C., Manitoba, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, the Territories, Nova Scotia, Ontario, PEI, but again the province of Quebec is different, with a $50,000 compulsory minimum third-party liability which a guy buys with his plate. Saskatchewan and the Yukon also have a $200,000 minimum.

Medical payments. This is where consumers would love to know and would love to have a board that's looking after their interests to examine these issues. Now, for medical payments in Alberta it's $10,000 for chiropractic, $500 a person, a time limit of two years. In B.C. the same medical payment is $150,000. In Manitoba there's no time or amount limit, and that includes rehabilitation costs. These are all comparative costs, and this is something this board could do with this amendment A5, Mr. Chairman. Now, New Brunswick has a $50,000 personal time limit of four years on medical benefits. Newfoundland is different again; it's roughly half of that. The same with the Territories, the same with Nova Scotia. In Ontario medical payments are 10 times what they are in Alberta. In P.E.I. it's $25,000. In Quebec no time or amount limit. Saskatchewan has over half a million dollars, and the Yukon has the same, oddly enough, as Alberta.

Now, funeral expenses vary across the country, Mr. Chairman, from $2,000 in Alberta to $6,000 in Manitoba, in Quebec $3,700, Saskatchewan $5,400, and in some provinces a thousand dollars.

Maximum disability benefits. In Alberta it's $300 a week, 80 percent of gross wages. B.C. is almost the same. In Manitoba it's $61,500 per year. In New Brunswick it's $250 a week. In Newfoundland it's $140 a week as it is in Nova Scotia and P.E.I. In Ontario, for instance, it's 80 percent of net wages to a maximum of $400 a week. So these are all benefits.

Now, do we have the right to sue for pain and suffering? In Alberta if we were to look at an annual examination of insurance rates and what's going on in other jurisdictions, yes, at the moment. At the moment, but if this bill goes through, well, that's going to be restricted. That's going to change. B.C., yes. Manitoba, no. New Brunswick, yes. Newfoundland, yes. The Territories, yes. Nova Scotia, yes. Ontario, yes, with qualifications. I suppose if we were to have Bill 53 become law, it would be, yes, with qualifications, here. I guess that's how you could describe it. The province of Quebec, no. Saskatchewan, no. The territory of the Yukon, yes.

The right to sue for economic loss exceeding no-fault benefits. Currently in Alberta, yes. B.C., yes. Manitoba, no. New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and the Territories, yes. Ontario, again, yes, with qualifications. P.E.I., yes. Saskatchewan, yes; for economic losses that exceed no-fault benefits for loss of income, can only recover gross income losses exceeding $56,855 a year net of income taxes.

So that would be one example of a comparison that could be used. We could look at the review, the 40 Canadian cities and 10 provinces, Mr. Chairman. The Consumers' Association of Canada auto insurance rates study did. To have an insurance board look after the interests of consumers like the Consumers' Association of Canada study is doing would be a real plus for Alberta consumers. It would be a real plus.

I think that this is a very good amendment, and I would encourage all hon. members to support this amendment. So with those remarks in conclusion, I would strongly urge all members to support amendment A5, as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. There's a lot to discuss in this legislation, and every time an Alberta consumer gets a renewal increase in the mail or shops around for insurance and they have price shock – they realize that they don't have enough money for the insurance they want to carry – it will emphasize to all members just how important an issue we're dealing with here.

Whenever one considers that we had an overhaul in this Assembly of the Insurance Act in 1999 and very little of any of this, as I recall, was discussed, I don't think we can spend enough time examining this bill very closely and in detail.

Now, there are many improvements or repairs that can be made to this bill. I would have difficulty, in all conscience, supporting this legislation in its entirety. There are some good ideas in here but not enough to warrant supporting this legislation after one considers the overwhelming research that indicates that public insurance, public no-fault insurance, is the best alternative at this time in this province. We don't have to at this time because all hon. members know whenever you compare Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia what the logical thing to do in this province is, and that is to adopt public insurance.

Now, on the way here tonight I was listening to the debate, and hon. members on this side of the Assembly were accused of being socialists for wanting to promote and encourage this government to adopt public automobile insurance similar to what the Insurance Corporation of B.C. has, ICBC. I was surprised that hon. members on the government side could actually stand and accuse people of being socialists for encouraging them to adopt public insurance when this is the same government that has made no effort to sell off its own bank. This is the only jurisdiction, whether we're looking at the lower 48 states or the other Canadian provinces, that owns its own bank, and we have a lot to answer for for that.

How can we accuse one group of being wrong whenever they want to promote a publicly administered insurance plan, yet we fail to recognize that we own our own bank? And not only do we own our own bank; the government has been very sound and prudent in promoting the use of co-ops to distribute natural gas and electricity to rural Alberta consumers. We can distribute these essential commodities, these essential services, on a cost recovery basis unless there's some sort of plan – and I'm suspicious of that – by this government to eliminate slowly but surely those Alberta traditions that work, the rural gas co-ops and the REAs, which are on a cost recovery basis. Unless there is a plan afoot, Mr. Chairman, to do that, I do not know why someone would be so hostile and so closed minded to the idea of having public auto insurance.

The facts are there. Those organizations exist on a nonprofit basis and a cost-recovery basis only, and they're governed by the local citizens, who have their own interests and the interests of their neighbours at heart. It's a good idea. I don't think it should be attacked by this government, and I think the idea, the whole notion of self-reliance, working together co-operatively is what we need to do with auto insurance as well.

Now, I have some more ideas in regard to improving this bill. I think we're going to be stuck with it for a while. I don't think it's the right policy. I certainly don't think that, Mr. Chairman. We're going to have to work and do our best to improve it. One of the ways I think we can improve this is by proposing another amendment. If I could please have this amendment circulated. I should have had it to the chair earlier, and I apologize.

The Chair: Hon. member, would you like to move amendment A6 now, please?

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move at this time amendment A6. This is an amendment to move that Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), be amended in section 15 in the proposed section 654 by adding the following after subsection (1).

- (1.1) The Board shall ensure that the Board's telephone number, physical address, and world wide web address, if any, are included on every policy.

I would encourage all members to consider this amendment. I know that this government has pulled some of their information off their web site, the rate calculator that they had on there that they were trying to promote this proposed government policy on, but they got real cautious real quick. They got cold feet because the rate calculator proved to Albertans that this policy is not all it's being trumped up to be. It is not reducing auto insurance premiums for Albertans. Now, I don't know who pulled the plug on this web site. I know that we want to pull the plug on electricity deregulation. I don't know what orders were received from whom to shut this web site down, but it was. It has not been reimplemented.

Again, if a consumer – and let's put the consumer first – was dissatisfied with their insurance, how their policy was being processed, how claims, if any, were being processed, if they had any concerns about their rights, well, they could just simply look at their policy and they would know who to phone. Now, surely when this government can promote a consumer advocate for electricity and recognize earlier that there's a role for a consumer advocate in this proposed board, this would give the board an ideal means of communicating directly with the consumers. Any issues that were to come up, like skyrocketing premiums, the handpicking of clients, unfair treatment of consumers, they would know about immediately, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. Snelgrove in the chair]

If a consumer was shopping around, they could go to the worldwide web address – and hopefully there will be one for this board – they could, for instance, find out all about the board. They could find out if there are any public hearings going on, if there are any filings for rate increases, and who is behind the filings. All this could be on the worldwide web address. To strengthen this board should be the top priority of this government.

Now, we look at what's going on. I'm not going to talk too long about the skyrocketing premiums, but let's put the consumers first. With this amendment a consumer will have access to information at their fingertips. We have to look at the issue of fairness here. The consumers won't have to wait to pull this insurance slip from their glove box and fumble around. The information will be there for them. We can with this amendment A6 make sure, Mr. Chairman, that we will put those interests first, and those are the interests of consumers.

Now, I'm sure there are members that are anxious to improve this amendment – and they can if they wish – if there's other information that should be on there, perhaps who is going to be on the board. I think, however, that in the interests of being concise, the telephone number, the address, and the web site address should be sufficient to provide consumers with direct access to the board that is going to be setting their rates and finally starting to regulate the insurance industry in this province, putting the interests of consumers first.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to another member of this Assembly. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to just address this proposed amendment brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I think it falls into a similar status to the last amendment that we dealt with. There already is ample regulation-making authority within the bill. If this type of information should become necessary, then there's nothing that prevents that information from being required on policies elsewhere in the act, not necessarily in the sections we're dealing with under Bill 53. There is regulation-making authority to determine what information and how the information should be presented on insurance policies.

I also want to draw the members' attention to section 661.3. This is a new section that has been added to the act. It authorizes regulations to create a dispute resolution system to handle consumer complaints in the areas of premiums, availability, and fault determination in respect of automobile insurance. So I would suggest to the member that if the new section that's part of this act is going to be effective, it will obviously be necessary that consumers be made aware of it, and I'm sure that there will be ample opportunity for consumers to know what the process is for them to either lodge a complaint or to find out information from this agent.

So, again, I think this is a redundant amendment, and I urge all members not to support the amendment.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will be very brief, but we have been operating to date in this province with a regulatory process for automobile insurance. We have been operating to keep the consumers in the dark. There is nothing the matter with making public the board's term of reference for deciding rate increases through this amendment, requiring board procedures and meeting dates and locations to be made public, and allowing the public access to this information.

This amendment gives the public the ultimate in access if they wish. Through this amendment we can make available to all consumers the full schedule of rates filed with the board, as I said, by the insurers. We can post all auto insurance information for the public on the web site. This amendment will give consumers of automobile insurance products complete access to the board. Let's be open and accountable and transparent here.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have an amendment which I would like to propose, and I'll provide that to the table and to all hon. members.

The Acting Chair: This will be amendment A7.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2), be amended in section 15 by renumbering the proposed section 657 as section 657(1) and adding the following after subsection (1).

(2) Prior to making any regulations respecting discount and surcharge rates, the Lieutenant Governor in Council must seek input through public consultation.

Mr. Chairman, again, the political goals as enumerated by the Premier and the legislation are not in congruence. The legislation doesn't say what the Premier said. I think that it's important that we make sure that there is public consultation built into the act. This is important.

When you have the rate-setting process – the government has said that they are going to have a starting default rate for new drivers and that they're going to allow people to earn discounts through a period of accident-free, offence-free driving, and they also have made it clear that they want to punish bad drivers. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, just as an aside, punishing bad drivers was never the initial intention. I think it's fair to charge bad drivers more, but it's not a section of the Criminal Code, so punishment is maybe not the right term. The government is going to allow drivers to work their way toward lower rates or, alternatively, hit drivers with a bad record with higher rates.

In principle there's nothing wrong with that, Mr. Chairman, but the concern that we have is that certain drivers under the current free enterprise or laissez-faire system – the unregulated free enterprise system that has failed so miserably charges exorbitant rates to certain categories of drivers, that being the elderly and male drivers under 25. The government is quite rightly putting an end to this kind of discrimination. They should put an end to the discrimination against Edmonton as well, but they've chosen instead to phase that out over a period of time, which makes Edmontonians feel bad. They feel bad that they're discriminated against by this government when the government won't even allow discrimination on the basis of age or gender. But I guess that discrimination against Edmonton is not unheard of in the government.

So the question is: who is going to pay if it's not young male drivers and if it's not senior citizens and, eventually, if it's not Edmontonians? Who's going to make it up? Well, by the sounds of it, it's going to be people who've had a couple of fender benders. They're the ones that are going to get hit with the really big rates because, of course, we have to continue to pay a premium to the insurance company so that they can take our money and invest it in the stock market. That's free enterprise, I guess, Mr. Chairman.

I just want to indicate that the problem is that if they just transfer the victim from being young male drivers under 25 to people that have had a couple of fender benders, with no regard as to the actual costs that are necessary to support the system, then it's just gouging but gouging a different group.

So it's important, in our view, that the cabinet should have some public consultation. We know that the government likes to have consultation in different forms. Normally it's in the form of a questionnaire; for example, the one that was referenced yesterday by the hon. Premier about the Wheat Board. It's clear, Mr. Chairman, that in that case there's a distinction between the kind of consultation favoured by the government and the expressed democratic will of Alberta farmers as expressed through their votes for the Wheat Board. So not all consultation is valid, and that's a good example of: if you ask the question in a certain way, you'll get the answer you want. That's why we have the wide range in views between the government's so-called consultation questionnaire and the expressed views of farmers.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

Now, in this case public consultation is not defined, and I'm thinking that maybe we should have defined it a little more tightly, Mr. Chairman, so that we don't have that kind of questionnaire that goes out. But listen; any kind of consultation by this government would be a step forward. This amendment will provide the opportunity for the government to actually ask the public before they set the regulations for discounts for good drivers and surcharges for bad drivers.

So I think it's a good idea, and there's no reason, in our view, at all not to put requirements for public consultation into legislation, because the facts show that when it's not put in the legislation, the government doesn't do it, or they only do it when they've got some other motive, such as undermining the Wheat Board.

Mr. MacDonald: Selective hearing.

Mr. Mason: They could have selective hearing. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has suggested that that could very well be possible.

I know that the government likes to consult when they want to have something changed that they've already kind of decided to do. For example, we've seen consultation on the heritage fund of a sort – questionnaires is what they do – or on the Wheat Board. So why not put it in the legislation and make it mandatory for the setting of our car insurance rates? Clearly, Mr. Chairman, the record of the government on consulting with the public on auto insurance could be improved. I believe it could be improved. It could be somewhat better. Any amount of public consultation on car insurance at all would be an infinite increase in the amount of public consultation.

So I urge members to support this particular amendment so that we make sure it actually occurs, and I'll look forward with interest to the comments of other members to my amendment, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to address the amendment proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Again, I think we're dealing with an amendment that is unnecessary, that has already been committed to by the government. I can remember that at the time the press conference was held with respect to the introduction of this bill, I made it very clear that there was a lot of work to be done on this bill in the development of the regulations, and at each step along the way there was a commitment from the government to inform the public of what the nature of the discussion is and to encourage the public to provide input into that discussion.

I think it's also somewhat mischievous that the member would choose to specifically reference public consultation with respect to discount and surcharge rates when, frankly, I think that there are numerous other areas where I would suggest the public probably would want to be more involved than in this particular area, and I speak in particular of the regulations that are to be developed with respect to protocol for the diagnosis and treatment of injuries. There are a number of regulations that need to be developed to implement this legislation, and I think that it would probably be very short-sighted of this Legislature to consider passing an amendment that would restrict that public consultation only to one particular, very small, very specific area of the regulation development.

So, again, Mr. Chairman, the government is on public record as committing itself to public consultation in the development of the regulations, and as such this amendment is unnecessary.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: The next speaker is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would like to introduce an amendment this evening. Perhaps I'll have it distributed, and I'll speak to the part of the bill that it amends as it's being distributed.

We go to section 655 in the bill, where we talk about the annual report that will be required by the Insurance Amendment Act. It's a little weak in some of the detail provided, Mr. Chairman, and we're taking a look at strengthening the requirements here. I think these amendments proposed will be very beneficial in terms of making the annual report actually effective and helping to make the information there accountable.

As section 655(1) reads now, it talks about the annual report: "the Board must make and submit to the Minister an annual report on the operations of the Board." In our amendment in the first section, in subsection (1), we want to add "not later than March 31 in a given year" after "operations of the Board." This is an amendment that I'm moving on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The Chair: We'll call this amendment A8.

Ms Carlson: Yes. A8.

We think that it's very beneficial to give a time line to when the annual report should be filed. That's a normal requirement for most organizations. They have a year-end, they have a deadline for filing, and there's no reason why this board should be any different than any other organization in that regard. It's just tightening up the accountability and the responsibility. That's what happens here.

Then if you look at 655(2), it says that "the Minister must lay the report before the Legislative Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting." We're adding the following after subsection (2) as subsection (3). It says that "the annual report shall contain information regarding any approved premium rate changes for all classifications of automobile insurance." So that would be similar to adding management notes or other disclosure information in other normal annual statements.

Because the rate issue is the most important issue to consumers, it's certainly going to be one of the most important issues for anybody reading the annual report, and particularly since the government defeated our amendment that talked about having their meetings part of the public record, this is going to be the only opportunity for people to review the actions of this particular board. We feel that it's really important that particularly approved premium rate changes for all classifications be included in the annual report. It can be a footnote; it can be something more substantial than that. We're not specifying that, just that it be included in the report.

So I do urge all members of the Assembly to consider this amendment and support it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Having just had an opportunity to read the amendment, I would like to make a couple of observations and comments. With respect to the annual report it's common practice that any government agency that is required to file an annual report do so in a timely manner. So, again, I don't think that this suggested amendment is necessary. Obviously, if the legislation requires an annual report, then it will also be understood that it will be filed in a timely manner.

As for the second part of the amendment I meant to actually raise the point earlier, but it certainly comes much more into focus when we look at the suggestion that "the annual report contain information regarding any approved premium rate changes." There have been comments made by members of the opposition that indicate that they're still stuck in the mind-set of the old world and they haven't quite comprehended the fact that we're taking a gigantic leap forward and that no longer will this board be a rate approval board.

They talk about making representations to the board for rate changes. I'll remind members once again that the proposal that is before us in Bill 53 establishes a rate-setting board. The board is responsible for gathering relevant information, analyzing that information, and setting rates. There will not be a process for the board to receive application for rate increases. It will be the responsibility of the board to set the rates based upon relevant information that is provided to them under their authority to gather that information, and they will then be responsible for setting rates, not approving rates, and I think all members need to keep that in mind.

Therefore, again, Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment to be unnecessary.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I assume that the board will be providing an annual report, and I presume that it's going to be in a timely fashion. So on those points I don't disagree with the hon. Member for Medicine Hat. But what's going to be in the report, and how do we know that the board is going to be operating in the interests of the public? How are we going to know if it's not specified that it be included in their annual report?

I think there's a real danger with this board. I understand what the hon. Member for Medicine Hat is saying in terms of this board being quite different and being a more proactive board, something that actually scopes out what the rates should be and actually sets them, but we don't know that the board is going to do that efficaciously, whether it's going to do it in the interests of the public. We're not sure how the board is going to make the decisions and whether or not we might get back to the situation where the board will be setting the rates in a way that favours the insurance companies at the expense of the consumers, and this is the big risk as far as I'm concerned. There's nothing in the act that I have seen that guarantees that consumers' interests are going to be predominant.

Every time an amendment is proposed that would have that effect, the hon. Member for Medicine Hat stands up and says that it's not necessary. Well, I beg to differ, Mr. Chairman. I think it is necessary that we put some boundaries around that board that ensures that it acts in a transparent manner or in a transparent manner as possible and that it acts in the interests of consumers rather than insurance companies. So I'm certainly going to support the amendment made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have an additional amendment which I will provide to the table and to members of the Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to move.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 53, Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No.2), be amended in section 13 in the proposed section 650.1 by adding the following after subsection (3): "(3.1) Prior to defining minor injury in the regulations, the Lieutenant Governor in Council must seek input through public consultation."

The Chair: This will be called amendment A9.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is similar to amendment A7, which would have required the Lieutenant Governor in Council to seek input through public consultation when making regulations respecting discount and surcharge rates.

Now, the hon. Member for Medicine Hat said that we shouldn't just do it for this one thing, that there are other areas where we ought to have public consultation, so I just worked really quickly in the last 10 minutes to get this amendment ready. No, that's not true. I had it all along. I just want to indicate that the question of minor injury is critical, and the government has been less than clear about what a minor injury is going to be.

Here's the big rub. We've seen the big battle that's been played out in the newspapers and in the Tory caucus, not between the insurance industry and the public but between the insurance industry and the accident lawyers. This has been tremendous. I've enjoyed it, Mr. Chairman. I've enjoyed seeing the battle of the ads in the papers and so on back and forth between the injury lawyers on the one hand and the big insurance companies on the other. Over $1.1 billion in insurance company profits in Alberta – you know, those little dollar bill things that look like a Lotto 6/49 ad. They've been on the front page of all the papers for weeks.

So here's this battle that's been played out, and what has it been about? It's been about putting caps on personal injury awards. It's of tremendous importance. It's here that the insurance companies hope to pay for any costs that might be incurred by the government regulating their industry, and it's here that the injury lawyers make their money, and their livelihoods are at risk. So it's very important to both of those parties, Mr. Chairman, and therefore it's been a real battle in the Tory caucus too. Which special interest is going to prevail? This is important stuff, but of course the question also affects the public, and that's where the New Democrats come in. So we want to make sure that the public gets consulted because it may well be that the government wants to pay for any cost savings in insurance premiums by limiting what you get in return for those premiums, and that is by putting a cap on personal injury awards.

It's a bit of a shell game, Mr. Chairman. On the one hand, we can give you slightly lower rates, but you're also going to get less for those rates. The public is very concerned that they're going to lose out and that they're going to get a cheaper product but a reduced product as well. I think that's a big issue for the public as well as the special interests. So given that the government has yet to say exactly how they're going to deal with this, it's important that there be public consultation so that people's rights are not taken away in order to finance somewhat lower rates that the government will permit the insurance industry to charge.

In respect of that, Mr. Chairman, this amendment is made, and it would require the cabinet to talk to the public, to consult with the public, before they define a minor injury in the regulations. I thought I heard one of the members – I think it was the hon. Member for Medicine Hat – say that the government would be consulting with Albertans on the regulations, in which case this amendment will not interfere with the government's plans in any way, but it might have the effect of making them keep a promise that they apparently have made. So I urge all hon. members to support this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has actually just pretty much summarized my comments for me. He made reference to comments I made earlier about a commitment that the government has made to seek public input throughout the development of regulations, this being no different than any of the others, and my response would be the same as it was to his previous amendment, that this amendment simply is not necessary. The government is on record as committing to public consultation, public input in the development of all regulations related to Bill 53.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. At this time I would like to rise, Mr. Chairman, and urge all hon. members to support amendment A9. Certainly, selective public consultation by this government has to be changed, and we have to have thorough public consultation like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands states in this amendment.

When we put so much faith in the regulations of this legislation, that “the Lieutenant Governor in Council . . . seek input through public consultation” is a very good, sound idea, and it would promote good public policy. It’s the best that can be done. The hon. member, I believe, is trying to improve the bill, recognizing that so much of this is going to be done through regulation. It’s the best of a very bad situation. There’s absolutely nothing the matter with public consultation. There should have been a public consultation process in the development of this bill. There wasn’t, but it’s not too late to start, and I would urge all hon. members to please support A9. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. As we continue with the debate this evening on Bill 53 in committee, one must have an examination of the potential effect of this bill on consumers and on auto insurance, and we have to be very, very careful when we’re talking about putting a cap on nonmonetary damages, as they say, for minor injuries. We essentially are leaving the definition of minor injuries up to regulation, but in other jurisdictions there have been studies done that indicate that this is not going to work. Now, there are conflicting reports about just exactly how this will work. Are we going to now add a lot of costs to the accident benefits category? If we were to put this cap on, will costs just be transferred to another portion of the policy? As the hon. member states, is it a shell game? Now, I have yet to be convinced that it is not.

In Nova Scotia these reforms, these changes, they think, may actually end up increasing costs. Is that what’s going to happen here? There doesn’t seem to be savings. The same sort of ideas have been attempted in the province of Nova Scotia, and it doesn’t seem to have that much potential for savings.

Now, perhaps we have in this province a study done to show exactly how much is going to be saved. I haven’t seen it yet. I haven’t even seen the KPMG actuarial study that so much of this bill, as I understand it, was based on. I had to use the freedom of information law to try to receive that information, and to date I have been unsuccessful. Hopefully, that will be my Christmas gift from the government: a return of my FOIP request and the KPMG actuarial study on this legislative process.

Mr. Mason: You’re only going to get a lump of coal.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I could get a scuttle of coal, but certainly with electricity deregulation not working as well as planned, that coal could come in real handy, real handy. That could be the best Christmas gift a person ever gets in light of what’s gone on with electricity deregulation.

Mr. Chairman, another matter of great interest and great concern in regards to this bill is the setting of insurance rates by different regions of the province. We had the four, as I said earlier, and gradually it’s going to be reduced to three. The discrimination against the motorists in this city is going to be, as it was described, phased out, and no one has explained to this hon. member or anyone that lives in my neighbourhood why we should pay more. No one has explained that.

At this time I would like to ensure that Edmonton drivers are not discriminated against or subsidizing the auto insurance premiums of other drivers across the province, and I would like to proceed with another amendment to Bill 53, Mr. Chairman.

11:50

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, are you wanting to speak to the amendment, or do you want to move the amendment?

Ms Carlson: I want to speak to the amendment.

The Chair: Okay. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, would you move amendment A10?

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now that we’ve had time to circulate it in the Assembly, I would be pleased to move that Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2) be amended in section 15, (a) in the proposed section 656 by adding the following after subsection (2): “(2.1) Geographic location must not be a factor in determining premiums for basic coverage,” and (b) in the proposed section 660 by adding the following after subsection (2): “(2.1) No insurer may use geographic location as a factor in determining premiums for additional coverage.”

I think this is an amendment that should be supported by all members of this Assembly. We had the discussion earlier. There was no rhyme nor reason why Edmonton drivers should be paying higher premiums than other areas of the province.

People are talking about how unsafe Edmonton drivers are, and one only has to look at the Alberta traffic collision statistics for 2002. There’s no mention of that in here. This document would be from Alberta Transportation, and it was compiled in a building not too far from here. I would think that if there were greater hazards in metro Edmonton, then certainly it would be mentioned in here. This is a comprehensive study on the traffic collisions in this province, the collision occurrence by month, by day of the week, by time period, even by holiday period, and the age of the casualties, unfortunately. But there’s no mention that I see of a significant difference between, let’s say, Edmonton or Calgary. There are differences between urban and rural areas as far as fatalities go, but to simply just discriminate against one area I don’t think is fair.

In the original proposal where we had St. Albert and we had Sherwood Park and Edmonton in one group, in one metro area, certainly there’s going to be a longer commute within that zone. The same did not apply to other areas. I don’t think that’s fair. Edmontonians didn’t think that was fair.

I encourage all hon. members that represent constituencies in this city to stand up and speak out and support this amendment because we do not want to see discrimination by this government toward the city of Edmonton in any way, shape, or form in Bill 53 or, as a matter of fact, in any government policy or any government legislation. We have to lock into this bill the fact that Edmontonians should not be treated unfairly, and this amendment A10 will do that.

So in light of the hour, Mr. Chairman, I would urge all hon. members to consider this amendment and vote for it, please.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to address the amendment that's currently before us. Hon. members are well aware that this issue of geographic risk has been an issue of much public debate of late. I want to emphasize to all members that the bill that's before us is a bill that allows us to transition from a highly statistically based system to a reformed insurance system that strikes a balance, removes some of the statistics and the predictive type of statistics from the rating base, but the nature of the beast is that there are still some predictors that are relevant to keep in mind. Even in the public insurance havens that the opposition members are so fond of, these kinds of geographic distinctions continue to play a role. The government has indicated that it is the intention to phase out the differences between the metropolitan areas of Calgary and Edmonton over a period of time.

But I want to emphasize and the member talked about there not being a statistical difference in the number of accidents. The difference in rating is not based on the number of accidents, but it's based on the cost of settling the claims, the average cost of claims per vehicle insured. So it's very straightforward. There were X number of vehicles insured within this region, the total claims that were paid out were Y, and therefore it's very simple to calculate what the average cost per vehicle was.

That's what has historically been used by the industry, and the government has indicated the intention to over time blend the rates of the metropolitan areas within the province. To blend the rates across metropolitan and nonmetropolitan would be very difficult, to say the least, and still maintain any semblance of having insurance under the new regime cost-effective with respect and comparable to insurance under the existing system. So I cannot recommend that we accept this amendment.

As for the second part of the amendment, that suggested that geographic location should not be used "as a factor in determining premiums for additional coverage," I'm assuming that the member is referring to coverage for optional coverage such as collision. Just to remind the member and all members that it is not the intention of this bill to regulate the rates for optional coverage. However, the bill does provide for what is called a file and use and requires the rate-setting board to monitor the rates for optional coverage and report to the minister if rates for any particular company seem inappropriate given the circumstances.

Again, I urge members not to support this amendment.

12:00

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I strongly support this amendment, and in the event that there's a division on this amendment, under Standing Order 32(2.1) I would ask for unanimous consent from the Assembly to shorten the bells to one-minute intervals.

The Chair: Having heard the motion, all those members who concur with the motion to shorten the bells to one minute, please say aye.

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Chair: Those opposed, please say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Chair: The motion is carried.

The hon. Member for St. Albert, who has tried a number of times to get up.

Mrs. O'Neill: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to make one brief point, and while I don't like the discrimination against the capital region rates that is there, I want to say that a constituent sent me a message to inform me of how traditionally there has been a differential between the rates charged in different regions. One of the reasons that he commented on was the fact that not only as a group are there more accidents that must be addressed, but he also said that the cost of repairs in most instances is higher in this particular area.

So it isn't just that capital region, or Edmonton, drivers are poorer drivers. The fact is that there are a number of factors that contribute to the traditional differential of costs, and while I don't like this, I am pleased that we will transition it so that it will become equal in a rather short time.

Thank you.

The Chair: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, in order to change, we have to have unanimous consent, and in the last vote we did have some noes. So it is in fact not carried but defeated.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to follow up on the comments with regard to the geographic distinction made by the members for Medicine Hat and St. Albert. I, like I'm sure most Albertans, probably was not aware of the fact that a geographic differentiation existed in the first place. The fact that the geographic distinction will be removed over a three-year period and equalized I think is a very elegant resolution of a very sticky problem. As the Member for St. Albert said, when we learned of this, it was not something we were very happy about. It had to be corrected, and it had to be corrected in a way that did not unfairly impact on other geographic areas.

I want to commend the Member for Medicine Hat for bringing this very elegant solution to the table, and I encourage colleagues to defeat this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for sticking up for Edmonton and bringing forward this resolution. I'm glad somebody did it, and I'm looking forward to the rest of my colleagues representing Edmonton constituencies in their support for this.

I urge everyone, not only Edmonton MLAs but all members, to support amendment A10. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think the hon. Member for Medicine Hat eloquently spoke to the reason why it's difficult to take out the geographic discrimination in rates that currently exists in every driver's policy now and the profound attempt that the government will make, in fact the commitment the government has made, to take out that geographic discrimination over three years.

But I really rose, Mr. Chairman, to again seek unanimous consent of the House to shorten the bells if we have a division. I spoke with the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and he raised the concern that he hadn't been consulted on the request. That's an appropriate concern to raise. Sometimes I forget to include the third party in discussions. In this particular case it wasn't my motion, but I think if we ask the question again and all members were interested in the hour, we might get unanimous consent. I'd request you do so.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader has moved that the committee reduce the bell time to one minute.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: Okay. The question has been called. Amendment A10 as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Hon. member, you're standing. I don't know why.

Mr. Mason: Because I wish to speak to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Oh. A little late in the game, sir. The question has been called. When I began into the thing – I try not to rush them – and looked, there was no one standing and no one prompting to stand, so we call. To stand after the call is made is not on. So we'll try it again.

Mr. Mason: Thank you.

The Chair: We are on amendment A10 to Bill 53 as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A10 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 12:07 a.m.]

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. You know, I want to indicate that one of the laudable parts of Bill 53 is the fact that it has eliminated discrimination in the setting of rates based on gender and based on age, and this kind of discrimination has been going on for a long time. It's something that I get asked about by school classes very often in the School at the Legislature. You know, it's a good subject for discussion with the children because they can sort of understand the issue.

You say: well, do you know that boys get charged more for insurance than girls do? The girls love that, and the boys are quite indignant. Then you sort of explain why. It's that as a class young men up to 25 have a much higher accident rate, and young women have a much lower accident rate. Well, you know, the boys are quite indignant about that, Mr. Chairman. Then you say: "Well, it's because boys are, generally, as a group more careless. They speed more, and they take more chances, so they have more accidents." Then they feel a little better, I guess. I don't know why that is exactly.

Then you ask the children the question: is every boy more careless than every girl? Is every boy a bad driver, and is every girl a good driver? You know, it's late, and I'm trying to make it understandable for some of my colleagues opposite. So then they say: well, no, not every boy is going to be a bad driver, and not every girl is going to be a good driver. So then I ask the question: is it fair that every boy should have to pay higher premiums than every girl? It's not universal, but by and large the kids get it. These are kids in grades 5 and 6, by and large. So they're 11 or 12 years old. They have an understanding, then, of how making broad statistical groupings as a basis for insurance policy is wrong, how it's not fair, how it operates against the principle of individual responsibility.

I know that this is an important principle to my Progressive Conservative colleagues and probably to my Liberal colleagues and certainly to me. Personal responsibility. So you shouldn't be charged because others in your class of policyholders statistically have a higher accident rate. That's, I think, where we've all arrived now, Mr. Chairman, on the basis of gender and on the basis of age. The same arguments exactly can be made for our senior citizens. Not all senior citizens have a higher accident rate, so you shouldn't be charged a higher rate.

However, what bothers me about this bill is that it does allow that sort of discrimination based upon geographical location. I know that in the previous discussion and not only in the previous debate on the last amendment but generally with respect to this debate on the bill as a whole, the argument has been made a number of times by government members that it's somehow more difficult to phase out discrimination based on geographical location than it was based on age or gender. Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, that's a load of fertilizer, to put it in parliamentary language. The government could have as easily eliminated discrimination against Edmontonians as they did against senior citizens or as they did against young male drivers, but they chose not to. Why not? That's what I'd like to know, Mr. Chairman.

I hope that all members who represent Edmonton will stand up for Edmonton literally as well as figuratively. You know, when you line up all the Edmonton MLAs to see if they're prepared to stand up for Edmonton, you see a lot of empty space. To their credit the Liberal MLAs stood up for Edmonton. The New Democrat MLAs have stood up for Edmonton. But where are the Tories on this question?

Mr. McClelland: Point of order.

The Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on a point of order. Do you have a citation?

Mr. McClelland: The Member for Edmonton-Highlands well knows, as does everyone in the Chamber, that . . .

The Chair: Do you have a citation, hon. member?

Point of Order
Clarification

Mr. McClelland: Twenty-one. It is not appropriate to refer to either the presence or absence of other members.

The Chair: The hon. member does not have to respond to that. Time allocation is the point of Standing Order 21, and that's hardly relevant in this case, so if the hon. member would continue, we'll take that as an attempt at clarification.

Mr. Mason: Well, I could give a brief speech on closure if you wanted, Mr. Chairman, but I think I'll go back to the issue. You know, I wasn't attempting to draw attention to members' absence in the Chamber, but with a standing vote it will be very apparent who did stand up for Edmonton and who didn't because it'll be recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Chairman, if I can just go back to my comments with respect to this bill. I just think that it's wrong. There are so many things that have happened. Edmonton, of course, lost a seat, and that was a subject of quite a bit of political discussion. Then more recently there was an ATCO application that quickly, within two days, changed in order to increase gas rates in Edmonton so that they didn't jump so much in Calgary, and this was the subject of a question that I raised in this Assembly. The question is, you know: what is it about this government, and why is it okay to consistently not place Edmonton's interests on the same level as Calgary or other parts of the province? It's a repeating pattern, and I want to get it on the record. I'm very, very concerned that not all Edmonton MLAs seem to be fighting as hard as they might for this city and its citizens.

12:20

Now, if I could move on to another issue, Mr. Chairman, it has to do with the question of whether or not consumer interests are properly represented in the dispute resolution mechanism, and there's nothing here in this part of the bill that specifies that consumer representation would be paramount in the deliberations of the board as a whole and particularly not in respect to the question of dispute resolution, and as such I have an amendment which I wish to propose, and I will send it to the table and other members and speak to it in a moment.

Some Hon. Members: Question. Question.

The Chair: There is no question. There's a motion.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, will you move amendment A11, please?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Members will be pleased to know that this is the last amendment that I have this evening. [some applause] I'll do anything for applause. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, I move that Bill 53, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), be amended in section 18 in the proposed section 661.3 by adding the following after subsection (2): "(3) Any dispute resolution mechanism established under this section shall include majority representation from consumer interests and policyholders."

Just to speak to that, Mr. Chairman, I think that one of the biggest differences between what the government is proposing and existing public insurance schemes in the other three western provinces is the fact that they are operated and managed in the interests of the policyholders primarily. There is no other interest there. There is no competing interest other than the policyholders, who all have an interest in low rates, good coverage, and traffic safety, and those things are not contradictory.

But the scheme that the Alberta government is proposing will retain other competing interests besides the policyholders, and the main interest is going to be the insurance industry itself. There's going to be a conflict, there's going to be a struggle between the interests of the insurance industry, that would like to have higher rates so that they can have higher profits, and the policyholders, on the other hand, who would like to have lower rates. Similarly, there's going to be a conflict between the insurance industry and the awards and the payouts that they want to make because they want to minimize those and the policyholders want to maximize those.

So there's a built-in conflict in the system that the Alberta government is proposing which does not exist in public auto insurance, and it's going to be a real problem. I can just see it. It's going to carry on creating conflict and pressure on both the government and on the insurance board, and the question is: how will it be resolved?

Well, the only way to resolve it, in my view, Mr. Chairman, is in the interest of the policyholder and the consumer of insurance. Otherwise, we'll have no advantage. We'll be at a disadvantage relative to public auto insurance because, of course, the insurance industry will want to move rates up and move payments down. We are being quite clear about this. We're not hiding it at all. We want the consumer's interest and the policyholder's interest to predominate, and particularly we want it to predominate in disputes. So the amendment places a dispute resolution mechanism with a majority representation from consumer interests and policyholders, and we hope that that will go a long way towards making the Alberta scheme operate in the interest of the consumers rather than the insurance companies.

Without this, we believe that eventually, once again, notwithstanding all the reforms that the government is proposing, consumer interests will come second to the interests of the insurance industry, and as a result we'll eventually see higher rates than we need to pay and we will see attempts to further limit payouts and awards. So I think all members should look very carefully at this amendment and support it so that we can ensure that the consumer remains king.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to just make a couple of quick comments about the proposed amendment. I find it somewhat surprising that the member would suggest that a dispute mechanism should not be a neutral kind of an organization. It's somewhat like saying: I want to set up a dispute mechanism to resolve disputes in a sporting contest, but I insist that the majority of representatives in that dispute resolution process be from one side and not the other.

The essence of dispute resolutions, Mr. Chairman, is that the process be neutral and not be favouring one side or the other. I think that that applies in this case, and it applies in many other dispute resolution mechanisms. So I think it would be a mistake for this Assembly to insist that a dispute mechanism process be predetermined at the outset and predisposed to making decisions in favour of one side or the other. That would bring into question, I think, the credibility of the organization.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Could I cede the floor to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, who would like to respond to the comments from the hon. Member for Medicine Hat, before I enter debate, please?

The Chair: We normally don't have such a thing as ceding. We're in committee, and you can speak as long as you don't succeed yourself. If you wish to sit down and the next person pops up . . . Edmonton-Highlands. The hon. member may speak.

Mr. Mason: Surprise, surprise, Mr. Chairman. Well, I just wanted to say that given the history of the government appointments to the existing rate-setting/rate approval board, you know, we don't have confidence that there's going to be neutral appointees. Don't forget that 145 out of 147 applications made in private at nine meetings in the year 2002 were approved by this group, so that's not neutral, and those are government appointments. So without some language in the act we have no confidence that the government is actually going to appoint neutral people.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In regard to amendment A11, as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, any form of a dispute resolution mechanism established under this section is, again, in the interest of consumers. How should we improve the efficiency of administration, increase the use of alternative dispute resolutions to resolve matters whether they're between policyholders or consumer interests?

One has to pay heed to the paper that was put out by the Faculty of Management, University of Calgary, in June of this year. Norma Nielson and Anne Kleffner, both with PhD degrees, have made some interesting recommendations to fix Alberta's auto insurance system. I don't know if they were involved in the consultation process around Bill 53. I suspect not, but hopefully I would be proven wrong by members opposite, because certainly some of the ideas that they had presented – and I think this is essentially the spirit of amendment A11, as presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

This amendment would, as we increase the use of alternative dispute resolutions, be appropriate. As outlined in this report that I mentioned, I believe that this would help reduce time and cost.

There would certainly be an increase in consumer satisfaction. I think we could possibly avoid some disputes. Would this help improve efficiency of administration? I think so. I think it would do that as well.

In conclusion on my remarks on amendment A11 I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly before this bill is passed to have a look at the recommended reforms to Alberta's auto insurance system that I talked about earlier that have been presented by the Faculty of Management at the University of Calgary because it certainly is an interesting read.

Thank you.

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Master Corporal Brian Curry, a Canadian air force reservist serving with the Prairie Region Cadet Detachment in Edmonton. He is accompanied today by Captain Grant Cree, public affairs officer.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans were shocked and saddened by the tragic loss of life in the attack on the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001. Using his own initiative and ingenuity, Master Corporal Curry designed and donated a monument dedicated to those who died in the World Trade Center. This monument, a 2.5-metre-high scale model of the trade center with the names of all 2,987 victims on it, is currently on display at the New York port authority near Times Square, where more than 200,000 people pass by each day.

Part of my ministry's mandate, Mr. Speaker, is to promote relations between the U.S. and Alberta. I cannot think of a better way to enhance that relationship than to demonstrate our solidarity during a time of need, as Master Corporal Curry has done with his wonderful monument.

Master Corporal Curry and Captain Cree are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 24 grade 6 students from Earl Buxton elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Mrs. Val Ritter. They're here, obviously, to observe and learn with keen interest about government and about their Legislature Building. They're seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly staff members of the office of the public guardian. The office of the public guardian provides service to dependent Albertans throughout the province by providing appropriate decision-making mechanisms for individuals who are unable to make personal nonfinancial decisions for themselves. The office of the public guardian is celebrating an important milestone as December 2003 marks the 25th anniversary of the enactment of the Dependent Adults Act in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask the following five people to rise as I call their names to introduce them and receive our welcome. I will start with Darrel Koller, who is the public guardian for Red Deer central region – he is the only one who has been in the office since its inception – Brenda Lee Doyle, the newly appointed director of the office of the public guardian; Colin Grant, public guardian for the Calgary region; Barbara Hendry, public guardian for the Edmonton region; and Barbara Martini, public guardian for the north region. I would ask that we extend them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 20 wonderful and, I will add, well-behaved students from Kildare elementary school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Iain Watson, and their student teacher, Mr. Dan Pagnucco. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two very special visitors in the members' gallery: first, my constituency assistant, a very bright and capable person that keeps me well organized in the constituency, Faye MacAskill, and her favourite helper and her favourite grandson, Dylan. Would you please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly visitors from Suzuki charter school in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. Mr. Ian Gray, the teacher with the class, today is accompanied by two parents, Ms Jeannette Smit and Mr. Daniel Cottell, and 15 students from the Suzuki school. Every visit I have to Mr. Gray's classroom is a pleasure. The classroom is well organized, and the students, one can tell, are very well instructed. These guests are in the members' gallery, and I would now ask them please to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of Edmonton-Glengarry, Jennifer Ellefson. Jennifer is the niece of the late Brian King, who was a well-known and widely respected staff member in this building for 10 years. I would ask that Jennifer now please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 65 visitors from St. Albert. These grade 6 students attend J.J. Nearing elementary. The residents of St. Albert value education, and these kids are definitely a reflection of that. They're a great group. The staff and parents are to be commended on the great job they do at J.J. Nearing. The students are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Sonia Reid, Mrs. Christine Sowinski, student teacher Jennifer Windsor, and teacher aide Barb Cannon as well as parent helpers Mrs. Charlene Heavener, Mrs. Margo Brenneis, Mrs. Corinne Van De Walle, Mrs. Kim Opalinsky, Mrs. Beth Purdon. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to introduce three people in the members' gallery today. They are Michael Carten, the president and CEO of Sustainable Energy Technologies – and what's interesting about this group is that they're working with BP Canada on solar energy and are actually going to have a project in northern Alberta with solar energy, so it's very positive that they've got some patented technology – Jeff Henwood, who is the VP of . . . Hmm, I can't read it. He's the VP of something. Sorry, Jeff. And Lanny Westersund. I'm very pleased to have these people here in spite of the fact that I can't read what you're VP and president of. Please stand and enjoy the warm welcome of the House.

Ms Graham: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly a young man, Mr. Tye Bietz, who's seated in the members' gallery. Tye is a first-year honours science student at the U of A and is a fifth generation Albertan and spent many of his early years in the constituency of Calgary-Lougheed, my constituency, and spent many hours on the campaign trail with his mother and I.

Tye at age 19 is an Olympic-class trapshooter and has been both the Albertan and the Canadian champion in his age category since he was 13. Competing on the world stage, he has had many remarkable successes, topped this year at the Pan Am Games when he became the only Canadian male trapshooter to qualify for the 2004 Olympic Games in Athens. Tye's next task, Mr. Speaker, is to convince the Canadian Olympic Committee that as an Albertan and a rising star he should be allowed to compete at this summer's Olympic Games.

I'd ask all of the members of the Assembly to join with me in welcoming Tye and showing our support for him and his bid to represent us in the Olympics.

1:40head: Oral Question Period

Electricity Deregulation

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has said that the Alberta Liberal opposition is opposed to electricity deregulation because it is, and I quote, the right thing to oppose, close quote. I agree with the Premier, and as an MLA I have opposed electricity deregulation since 1995. I continue to oppose deregulation because it has led to the closure of hockey rinks, swimming pools, and community centres and has made electricity unaffordable to many seniors and other Albertans on fixed incomes. To the Premier: given how much electricity deregulation has already hurt Alberta, why do you need, and I quote, a complete and absolute collapse, brownouts all over the place, an atrocious price for no power at all, end quote, before you even consider unplugging deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it stands to reason that if there's a total collapse of the system, we have to rethink it, but that hasn't happened. I take great exception to the assertions by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. I don't know of any hockey rinks that have had to close. I don't know of any community centres and I don't know of any seniors that have been left in the dark and without heat.

Mr. Speaker, I misspoke, perhaps, when I said that the Liberals were right. What I meant to say is that the Liberals always oppose. That's what I meant to say. They always oppose, whether the project is right or wrong or in between. If it's a government program, they oppose, and that is their function in life. Their reason, their justification for being there is to oppose. Some people may say that I'm speaking undemocratically, but that is the simple fact. The fact of life is that they oppose everything the government does because they want to get us fired and they want to be the government and they want us to be on their side, God forbid, to oppose everything that they do. That is the nature of politics. That is the nature of the parliamentary system in Canada and wherever the parliamentary system exists. Their function is to oppose.

Now, relative to deregulation, Mr. Speaker, how can they oppose 3,000 megawatts of new power coming onstream? How could they oppose competition in a system where people are advertising and offering fantastic deals relative to electricity? They can oppose, as we do, sloppy billing practices, and we are taking care of that through the Department of Government Services, and the minister will gladly outline what his department is doing to curb and to make sure that sloppy billing practices are not the practice in the future and that those who carry out sloppy billing practices are brought to task. I can't see how the opposition could oppose that, but because the government is doing it, they will oppose it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties is also opposed to electricity deregulation, will you unplug deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, no, we will not unplug deregulation. We will not unplug a program that has accommodated some 3,000 additional megawatts of power in the province of Alberta. Why would we?

Mr. Speaker, before, under the old system, that's when we were faced with brownouts. The system that the Liberals like, the system that the Liberals promote is the same system that threatened the people of this province with brownouts and blackouts, and they supported that system.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: given that your own Bolger commission pointed to the failure of electricity deregulation, don't you think it's time to unplug deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the Bolger commission did not say that. Relative to the Bolger commission, the report was delivered to the Minister of Energy, and I'll have him respond and maybe clarify for the sake of truth what the Bolger commission actually says.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If one were to go through it as it's posted on web sites and is available, you find that the Bolger commission says: what is the government doing right? They talk about robust competition in the business-to-business market. They talk about the most advanced industrial systems market in North America. They talk about the best competitive generation model in North America.

They say what needs to be fixed: exactly the things that we asked them to look at. That was consumer billing issues, issues where the meter is read by the transmission arm and then it's reported by the retail arm. That needs to be fixed. We don't have that problem in two out of the three networks. We have it in one.

And the Bolger commission said: get to a plan, find the plan, stick to it, and continue forward. That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what the government is doing.

Automobile Insurance

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government still rejects any plan that would deliver real savings on auto insurance. My questions are to the Premier. Why has your government rejected a rollback of 15 percent on auto premiums?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we do what we think is the right thing to do relative to this issue in Alberta, and we deemed that the right thing to do was to freeze auto insurance premiums.

Mr. Mason: They're the highest rates in western Canada.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I heard some yipping from across the way that they are the highest in western Canada. Well, you know, that is not right. What the hon. member says is simply not right. As a matter of fact, I was listening to an ad. I know that the insurance company in question is probably self-serving, but in British Columbia, where it's state owned, the ad went on to say that a person of a particular age and with the same driving record actually pays a lot less in Alberta than he or she would pay in British Columbia. The ad also went on to say that even if you had tickets in Alberta and had the same number of tickets in British Columbia, the amount that you would be paying in Alberta would be a lot less.

Now, if this member who is yipping across the way – and I can't identify him – would like to sue that company for false advertising and if he's calling this company a liar, Mr. Speaker, then I would ask him to stand up and say outside the Chamber that that company is lying.

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday the chair provided some caution with respect to certain questions on bills before the House. At approximately 12:35 or 12:40 this a.m. this Assembly rose after giving Committee of the Whole support to the bill in question. Later today, tomorrow the bill is up for third reading, so we're not going to debate Bill 53 in the House, please, during question period. If they're questions specifically on policy, we'll deal with them, not the bill.

1:50

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. You claim that your plan will save 80 percent for drivers. Your calculator that you've put on the computer does not show that for most of the drivers who call in. Why is it that your calculator doesn't work?

Mr. Klein: I don't know if it's a case of the calculator not working, but I understand that what has been posted on the web site are estimates only. I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance respond.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much. Not to get into the debate on the bill, our focus has been to put in place a structure that provides access to an insurance plan, that provides comparable rates to an insurance plan, and that rewards good drivers and penalizes bad drivers. So the structure that we've put in place and are focusing on this fall is a new structure for Albertans that will deliver an insurance plan that meets the requirements under the law of the province of Alberta that you must carry automobile insurance.

We have put in place on the web site samples of how this grid will work that they are debating and that will be part of the regulations as a result of this bill. We believe that we will accomplish that goal quite easily by following through on providing accessible insurance to all Albertans, affordable insurance to all Albertans, and comparably priced insurance to all Albertans.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier. Given that the government spent $1 million for actuarial studies on insurance rates, isn't it time to give Alberta drivers evidence that they will be able to save money? Can you release the information from that actuarial study?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't see why not, but I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, we have said in the process of doing the evaluation that as we've done the assessments, the actuarial study will be updated, and when the final copy is completed by the actuarial company, it will be made available.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Consultant

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last July this government hired its own electricity blackout expert, Kellan Fluckiger, who was the former energy adviser to the Governor of California, Gray Davis. Gray Davis did not unplug electricity deregulation quickly, and he was terminated. Now, his economic and energy adviser is a former chief operations officer for the California Independent Systems Operator. Mr. Fluckiger was also in charge of California's chaotic electricity system and tried to organize the massive electricity shortage there. My first question is to the Premier. Did this government hire Mr. Fluckiger to manage rolling blackouts in this province considering he's had so much experience at this in the past in California?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the question is a somewhat silly question, with all due respect, because there have been no rolling blackouts. We have no rolling blackouts. As a matter of fact, we have an excess of power.

I will agree with the hon. member of the opposition that the situation in California was indeed chaotic. We are not going down that road. That's why we have taken such a long time – well, it's been over eight years now – to bring about deregulation and, certainly, to learn from the mistakes in other jurisdictions and to learn from the successes in other jurisdictions that have undertaken deregulation. Mr. Speaker, I'll have the Minister of Energy speak to it because I'm not sure of all the details surrounding California, but I do know that it was a bit of a mess, to say the least.

This is not a mess. This is a situation that has brought on 3,000 megawatts of new power. This is a situation that has brought about competition.

By the way, I'll remind the hon. member that when he talks about power rates going up, the majority of customers are still on a regulated system, are still on a regulated rate. They're still on a regulated rate, but they won't tell the public that, because they are afraid to tell the truth. That's the problem.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: why did this government hire Gray Davis' ex energy adviser and put him in charge of negotiating an Alberta connection to the Pacific Northwest power grid, which, everyone knows, will only increase our domestic prices in this province? Why did your government do that?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with the details relative to the hiring of a consultant. That was obviously done through the Department of Energy, and I'll have the appropriate minister respond.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Fluckiger is employed on a contractual basis with the Department of Energy after an extensive search across North America for the appropriate individual to do the appropriate job. Mr. Fluckiger is at term. Actually, it's interesting, because if you read the Liberals' Unplugged method, you'll see that their program actually copies the California program, that would cost taxpayers some 5 billion dollars to recoup their costs and then pay outrageous costs for power for the next 10 years. I don't think anybody in Alberta wants to do that.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: is Mr. Fluckiger working exclusively for the government of Alberta, or is he still representing now the interests of California's electricity industry?

Mr. Klein: I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Smith: Well, I think there's an appropriate person to ask for that, Mr. Speaker. In between the member's blackouts he can refer to Mr. Fluckiger personally to determine what his status is.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Municipal Regulation of Oil and Gas Development

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's municipal governments have absolutely no say on oil and gas developments taking place within their boundaries, not even when they're proposed for heavily populated and environmentally sensitive areas. Total control rests with the provincial Energy and Utilities Board. The EUB's mandate is to facilitate energy development, not to protect local citizens. Strathcona county recently set up a council committee, the first of its kind in Alberta, to try to give municipalities a voice when it comes to the siting of oil and gas developments. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given that municipal approval is required for windmills to generate green power, why then is the same authority denied to local governments when it comes to oil and gas developments proposed for densely populated and environmentally sensitive areas?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. In fact, just the other day the hon. member from the Liberal opposition asked the exact same question, and it had to do with the fact that under provincial regulation that we have today, the EUB is of a provincial nature all across the province. We have 360 municipalities, Mr. Speaker, so we have to look from a planning, from an authority perspective at how we look out for the entire provincial interest.

One thing, though, that's important that the hon. member didn't mention is the fact that the stakeholders, municipal leaders, all have an opportunity to present their case in terms of planning and developing in the long term for the interests of not only their municipality but for the entire province, and that's exactly what has happened.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is this minister and this government allowing the rights of Hastings Lake residents in Strathcona county to be dismissed out of hand by the Energy and Utilities Board while the minister stands idly by and does nothing to support local governments trying to stand up for their citizens?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member has just said is simply not true. I have a lot of faith, contrary to what the hon. member thinks, relative to municipal leaders in terms of their local authority and looking out for the interests of their citizens in Strathcona county. That's what they've been doing. They have in fact been presenting to the hearings that have been held. We look at it from a municipal perspective and also from a provincewide perspective, and again, to the hon. member, that's exactly what has happened. A consultant and stakeholders have spoken to them about the issues, and I'm very pleased to say that municipal leaders have done a very good job in terms of the points they've brought to the EUB.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy to supplement.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, as the leader of the third party fully knows, that decision is open for examination. It was an open process. There were some 87 objections filed by members of the community, and the EUB evaluated each and every one of those objections. They also instructed the applicant to even further his area of interest and contact.

I can say that the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board has a great respect for the people of Sherwood Park, has a great respect for the process that's going on there, and has acted in the interests of the people of Sherwood Park, who of course benefit from oil and gas explorations throughout this great province, but also for each and every individual who is interested in the decision.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. If the minister won't make oil and gas development subject to municipal approval, will the province at least give local governments the authority to use exclusionary zoning to keep oil and gas developments out of heavily populated and environmentally sensitive areas, and if not, why not?

Mr. Boutilier: You know, I'm so pleased that the hon. member had mentioned in terms of what the Municipal Government Act offers to the people of Alberta. The Federation of Canadian Municipalities, which represents over 2,000 municipalities across Canada, said that Alberta's Municipal Government Act is a leader that other provinces should be following. Need I say any more, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Kyoto Accord

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday a senior Kremlin official declared that Russia would not ratify the international treaty known as the Kyoto accord, requiring cuts in the emissions of gases linked to global warming, delivering what many consider a fatal blow to years of diplomatic efforts. My constituents in Red Deer-North and all Albertans remain committed to taking action to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and addressing the issue of climate change. My question is for the Minister of Environment. How does the position of the Russian government affect Albertans and Alberta's plan to reduce emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have to be clear that this recent announcement is not the official position of the Russian government. What we have is the chief scientific adviser and the chief economic adviser to Mr. Putin advising him not to ratify the Kyoto agreement. That's the advice he is being given, and I think it's good advice. It certainly vindicates the Alberta position.

Now, as I've said recently, you know, it's not over till the fat lady sings, and Mr. Putin is going to have to sing at some time, and until Mr. Putin sings, we don't know what the official position of the Russian government is. As we go forward, we wait. This Russian position is very clearly a vindication of the Alberta position, something that we've been arguing for a number of years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Also to the Minister of Environment: why do some people believe that the Kyoto treaty will be severely jeopardized if Russia does not ratify?

Dr. Taylor: Well, hon. member, the Kyoto agreement will fail because it needs 55 percent of the countries with 55 percent of the emissions. Without Russia's ratification the international treaty will fail. They need the Russian ratification for it to come into effect.

Mrs. Jablonski: My final supplemental is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What is the minister doing to follow up on reports that the Russian government will not ratify the Kyoto protocol?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, as has already been mentioned, we have not had an indication that this particular report is substantiated. My department is and has been in contact with the Foreign Affairs ministry on this matter, and at this point in time we do not have an official position on the matter.

However, Mr. Speaker, this is a very important statement, it having been made by a very senior official in the Russian government. We hope that it reflects and comes to reflect the overall position and official position of the Russian government, and therefore we will see the opening for a more constructive and realistic approach to greenhouse gas emissions.

U.K./Calgary Regional Health Authority Consortium

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, reports out of the U.K. today show that the Calgary health region's involvement in a private consortium to provide health services in the U.K. could lead to a loss of badly needed health care staff in Calgary and in other parts of Alberta. These private clinics in the U.K. will not be allowed to recruit staff from British public hospitals. In fact, a representative from the consortium has confirmed that current frontline staff in Alberta will be invited to come over to the U.K. My question is to the Premier. Is the Premier prepared to sit back and watch the Calgary health region poach its own staff away from Alberta to work in private clinics in Britain?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is presenting a worst case scenario, an absolute worst case scenario. This simply will not happen. As I understand it – and I haven't seen the formal agreement or even the preliminary agreement; I don't even know if there is one yet – if a health practitioner from Calgary or the Calgary region goes to the U.K., then an equivalent replacement will have to be put in place. In other words, there will have to be assurances of an equivalent replacement.

Mr. Speaker, in a conversation with Dr. Grant Gall, who's the dean of the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Calgary, he indicates to me that there will be some advantages, because he says that it's not uncommon for nurses and doctors from time to time to take leaves of absence and to seek the opportunity to study or to practise elsewhere. If they choose to practise in the U.K. at this particular hospital, they will not lose their place in line; they will not lose any seniority. So there are some advantages as well. The other advantage, of course, is that this will generate significant revenue for the RHA.

Dr. Taft: Well, back to the Premier again: where are these replacements going to come from? Has the Calgary health region or this consortium presented the government with any plan as to where this private consortium will get the health professionals needed to run these private clinics? Where are these replacements going to come from?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has been on top of this issue, and I'll have him respond.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the details of this arrangement are still being worked out, but I want to repeat what I've said in this House before and assure Albertans that there will be no net loss of physicians from the regional health authority in Calgary. Indeed, there are a great number of possibilities that this will benefit the regional health authority dramatically. There has been a commitment that any revenue that comes to the regional health authority as a result of this arrangement will be directly put into frontline health services in that region.

There has been a commitment, Mr. Speaker, as the Premier indicated, that if people are on a sabbatical and going over to provide services in the U.K., there will be an equivalent health care professional brought in. These individuals can be recruited from all over, but in order to recruit, in order to retain the very best physicians and health care workers from anywhere in the world, we need money to do it. This is why this is a unique opportunity. It is an extraordinary example. Let me say this: only a person who is an ideologue would suggest that this isn't a good idea.

We are open to all kinds of ideas on this side, Mr. Speaker. Look at how we develop policy. We seek to understand the issues. We listen carefully to constituents from around this province to ask them what is of concern to them in the health care system. Here's what is of concern to Albertans. Albertans say that we want access to high-quality services within the public health care system. That is what our focus is on. That is what we have sought to understand. We then look at all of these different ideas. We weigh the pros and cons, we weigh the benefits, we weigh the risks, and we choose wisely with respect to moving forward on these ideas.

Mr. Speaker, in contrast, the opposition's policy is developed in a manner that perhaps a two year old would develop it. I'd say to my two-year-old daughter, "Mackenzie, what do you think of P3s?" She'd say, "No." If I asked her, "What do you think of innovative ways of delivering public services?" she'd say, "No." If I said: what about a new way of . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I have no doubt that the people of Alberta are impressed with the parenting skills of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, but this is question period.

Dr. Taft: Well, the minister is right about one thing. Albertans do want access to services. They shouldn't have to travel to England to get them.

To the Premier: why won't the Premier do the right thing and call on the health region to withdraw from this misguided venture?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it is not a misguided venture. It is innovative. It represents to me thinking outside the box. It will accommodate the development of medical expertise both here and in the U.K. It will generate revenue for the regional health authority, but anything that is good is opposed by the opposition.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I find it very, very interesting. I wasn't going to bring this up, but so obsessed with this situation and with the RHA is this hon. member that I understand he recruited someone in England to report back on the activities of Dr. Jivraj and Dr. Gall. Perhaps he can confirm or deny this. I was told it was a reporter, of all things, from the London Guardian. Now, perhaps the hon. member can confirm or deny that he had an operative in London to follow Dr. Jivraj and Dr. Gall and the rest of the delegation around. If he did, who paid for it? How was this expensed? I would really like to know. Now, if it's false, you know, if it's all a lot of blarney, then the hon. member can stand up and say so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Aboriginal Policy Framework

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First Nations and Métis people in Alberta are expressing a desire to more fully participate in the province's economic opportunities. Given that Alberta's aboriginal policy framework recognizes the importance of socio-economic opportunities for aboriginal people and the potential to benefit from the natural resources sector, my question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. What kinds of efforts are being made by government to create opportunities for aboriginal people?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the year 2000 the government of Alberta actually approved the APF. It's a landmark policy document by a government. In fact, all across Canada my colleagues at the federal/provincial/territorial ministers' meeting that I go to drool over what we've been doing with this government's progress on the aboriginal side.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the aboriginal policy framework has two components to be able to achieve our goals and our objectives. Number one is on the internal side. On the internal side on the aboriginal policy initiative, which is a cross-ministry initiative, we have done a number of things. I think it's really important for me to be able to bring that information forward. In fact, it's available in the first annual report.

We were involved with Alberta Children's Services and Alberta Justice in terms of leading the proposed agreement in principle regarding the establishment of Blood tribe jurisdiction over child welfare matters. We were also involved in initiating involvement of the aboriginal tobacco framework as part of Alberta's tobacco reduction strategy. We also worked with Alberta Learning on the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit education policy framework. We also were involved in a first provincial program in aboriginal studies, including historical and contemporary issues. We also introduced the First Nations training to employment program with Human Resources and Employment. As you know, Mr. Speaker, EnCana Executive Vice-president Randy Eresman called Canada's aboriginal community our largest source of untapped manpower.

These are the kinds of things we're doing internally, Mr. Speaker. I would like to continue on the external side.

The Speaker: Well, I'd invite the hon. minister to take advantage of the section of the Routine that says Ministerial Statements. We'll be here tomorrow afternoon. We'll look forward to such a statement. But now we'll go to questions.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of your guidance I'll just direct one final question to the same minister. Can the minister provide some specific examples of the external partnerships that are strengthening Alberta's economic well-being?

Ms Calahasen: Well, I'm so glad to be able to talk on the external side, because, as I said, all my colleagues across the country drool over what's happening in Alberta. So I want to talk about the external component, Mr. Speaker, and I want to talk about the examples that have been happening. As an example, the St. Mary spillway, which borders the Blood reserve: Alberta public works stipulated in a tender that Blood members be given the opportunity to participate, and over $2.5 million in payroll was actually earned by the band members.

Mr. Speaker, in the energy sector we have been working with Chevron Canada and Aseniwuche Winewak Nation, which was looking at a guiding principles agreement in March of 2001 which sets out the principles in the areas of land stewardship, project consultation, and a number of other things. Sturgeon Lake First Nation and Devon Energy Limited signed a joint venture partnership for the production of oil wells on the reserve and for the provision of oil and gas services from the First Nation to Devon Energy Limited.

On the forestry sector side, Al-Pac. Bigstone Forestry Incorporated is a sustainable wood harvesting company that was created through a partnership between Al-Pac, Weyerhaeuser Canada, Bigstone Cree Nation. [interjections] Oh, Mr. Speaker, I still have some more here.

In fact, Sustainable Resource Development has some success stories. SRD has renewed a memorandum of agreement with the North Central Aboriginal Association to make sure that they can get the coniferous wood in forest management unit S11.

We have Learning successes. We have been working with the Kainai board for the Blood reserve and treaty 6 tribal ventures, which would talk about the Stoney/Nakoda 15, 25, and 35 program being developed by Alberta Learning. Oh, I've got so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. minister. One of the administrative mechanisms is to try and keep the set of questions in the five-minute time frame. We've now arrived at that, so now we'll move on to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Coal Bed Methane

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow in Camrose the Alberta Surface Rights Federation is holding a special meeting to address their concerns regarding the lack of information and regulation surrounding coal bed methane development. To date there are approximately 1,000 coal bed methane wells in Alberta, and the ministries have yet to establish an advisory committee to formulate the regulations. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that coal bed methane production is well under way in Alberta, why has this government once again gotten ahead of itself and allowed production to go ahead prior to developing specific regulations dealing with unconventional gas?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the companies involved in the production of unconventional gas have been around for a long time. Coal bed methane is not new to this province. What is new is the fact that there's new drilling technology, there's new extraction technology, and there's new seismic technology that allows us to be blessed with as much as 500 trillion cubic feet of this resource in this province.

Now, what we've seen through consultation and discussion with stakeholders is a very environmentally responsible approach to development of this product, this resource in Alberta. We're also particularly blessed in that the coal formation, the mid-coal formation of the Horseshoe Canyon, is not subject to water disposal and is, in fact, very dry. The deeper coal bed methane, Mr. Speaker, is in the Mannville zone. That Mannville zone is brackish water. What the companies do is reinject that saline or brackish or salt water back into the reservoir.

So, in fact, we have a very environmentally responsible approach to it. It has worked well with landowners, and the process is covered under the regulations set out by the Department of Energy and the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. If there are any specific issues relating to coal bed methane, those are being covered by a stakeholders committee.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, when will the government decide to establish an advisory committee to formulate the coal bed methane regulations, and which department will be responsible, the Ministry of Environment or the Ministry of Energy?

Mr. Smith: I think that committee is probably about two to three years old now, Mr. Speaker. That program was in response to what we saw happen in the United States as they wrestled with the development of their coal bed methane and, in fact, did a poor job in their early stages. They're now getting much better at it. We haven't run into those controversies. We've got a particularly good approach to coal bed methane development. Regulations, as they're required, will be developed in the full course of time. Of course, not one department in this government does anything solo. It's always done in consultation with the other departments.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: then what actions are the ministries taking to minimize the impacts of coal bed methane extraction to ensure that our province doesn't become an environmental wasteland like the Powder River basin in Colorado and Wyoming?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Powder River basin is not an environmental wasteland, as the member knows; neither is the Appalachian basin or the Warrior basin, where this coal bed methane was originally extracted under the new technologies.

Mr. Speaker, we have inset, because of our experience with natural gases and resources for the last 40 years, some of the best regulations in the world. We're the best regulator in the world. I would say that we have the best Department of Environment and Department of Energy in any oil producing jurisdiction, and I would think that they would continue in that pursuit of excellence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Calgary Transportation Issues

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In rural Alberta we frequently have suffered natural disasters, but in urban Calgary we are under tremendous growth pressure with no less urgency. Indeed, Calgary has grown by leaps and bounds. The population has reached 1 million, and in the last five years we've grown by 100,000 residents. New residents don't come with the proper infrastructure in their suitcases but with their free enterprising spirits and skills. I know that transportation roadways play a vital role in economic development and quality of life for Alberta, particularly in the large industrial park in my riding. My question today is to the Minister of Transportation. What have you done for Calgary during recent years?

The Speaker: I think, hon. minister, there are sections in the Order Paper called Written Questions and Motions for Returns. "Recent years" might elicit a response beyond 30 seconds, but try and stay within 30 seconds if you would, please.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, over the last three years we've certainly dedicated a fair amount of funds to the city of Calgary through the 5 cents a litre and also through other grants. I believe that over the last three years it is in excess of $500 million. We have also assumed the full responsibility for the Deerfoot Trail. We've just recently extended it to highway 2, and that's helped out greatly. We are ongoing studying other, better economical additions to the city's roadways. We're also completing the three interchanges on the Deerfoot Trail. So there is a fair amount of investment going into Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that the city of Calgary council has recently approved $900 million for transportation-related projects out of a $2.5 billion five-year capital budget, how does the minister plan to assist them in these projects?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the funds raised locally by the city will of course go to their priorities. With the additional 5 cents a litre that they will be receiving from the global taxpayer of the province of Alberta, we do have some input in the kind of priorities that the city of Calgary puts forward in terms of their roadways. Overall, over the next three years just on the 5 cents a litre they will be receiving about $212 million. Coupled with the money that they're raising, there'll be a sizable investment to the city of Calgary roadway system.

Again, we're going to do the ongoing completion of the roadways that we are responsible for around the city of Calgary as well. Highway 8 comes to mind. We're doing a functional plan there. We're completing the Stoney Trail part of the ring road. So there is a fair amount of work. I believe the ring road, the Stoney Trail, should be done by about 2007, so there'll be a vast improvement in the roadway system in and around Calgary in the next three years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. The minister mentioned the ring road around Calgary. Could you give us an idea what the status of it is now in terms of the land acquisition for the ring road?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, through the forward, very visionary thinking of the previous administration under Premier Lougheed we actually had purchased all of the land for the ring roads around Edmonton and Calgary – that's the transportation and utility corridor – so the land is in place. Now it's up to us to work on a plan to complete the roadway.

We are of course waiting with bated breath to see what news we will be receiving from the federal government in terms of infrastructure support. We're just waiting for the regime to change and see who we'll be working with in the future. There have been certainly loud musings from Ottawa that there'll be some contribution to growth pressures, population pressures when it comes to transportation. So we're awaiting that.

Given that, we have committed to completing the north/south trade corridor, and part of that north/south trade corridor, of course, is all the roadways within the city of Calgary as well. So that's the most information we have to date.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Unlicensed Day Homes

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Burger flippers at McDonald's earn more than some workers caring for Alberta children. Fewer licensed child care spaces, unmonitored day homes, and declining day care college programs are the direct result of government policy with respect to children. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. What is the government doing to assure Albertans that children placed in unlicensed day homes are safe and well cared for?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there are no issues that we are aware of that relate to unlicensed day homes in Alberta. We have 41,000 spaces for children in regulated day cares. We had 256 withdrawals over this last year, but we actually have 7,000 unused spaces for children in day cares. Part of the reason that we subsidize parents is so that they are involved in the direct choices made for children that they place, so we rely on those parents to work with the community, work with the provider and make sure that the best care possible is there for the children. I will go so far as to say that the reporting has had certain inaccuracies as it relates to Alberta and Alberta's day care community.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that we wouldn't abandon school-age children to unlicensed and unmonitored teachers, why is the government willing to place preschoolers in unlicensed and unmonitored homes?

Ms Evans: Well, the government does not place children in unlicensed and unmonitored homes. People choose to put their children based on their own best interests and on their own perceptions. A lot of grandmothers and aunts and uncles and family members would be disturbed if this government took the position that if there was somebody in their home receiving care, it was an unlicensed, unregulated, and poor placement for the child. Many of these homes are extended family members. We are with the pilot project, in fact, encouraging that. Mr. Speaker, it's a good thing for children to be surrounded by their own family members.

The inconsistencies here in this report, painting black the whole unregulated environment, seem to deem that the government is leaving capacity unfulfilled for these families.

I'll point out one other thing. In the past year's budget we provided $5.6 million for day cares and day homes that seek to raise their qualifications so that they can provide 80 percent of those dollars for the day care workers, therefore having an effect of sustaining very strong and very capable workers, making sure that the staff turnovers are lower, and giving parents the opportunity to see extra developmental capacity built into programs in family day homes and in family day care. Mr. Speaker, we're working on an accreditation program, and we have all of the providers across Alberta bringing us ideas and better practices that we can do in that capacity. I think that rather than moving in a reverse fashion, we've moved forward to provide higher standards of care, and where people make their own individual choices, that is not something that government interferes in.

Where we have had complaints, Mr. Speaker, we have gone in and, to the best of our ability within the constitutional limitations, done an investigation, brought those issues to court, prosecuted those people that are doing things in an untoward fashion, and made sure wherever possible that we guide people to get educated about what the best places are in their community, to go to the Net, www.child.gov.ab.ca. They can find out how to be subsidized, find out what the standards are.

Mr. Speaker, I think we're doing more rather than less.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. To the same minister. In spite of the minister's claims, poorly paid day care workers say that they cannot afford to continue programs. Why? What is the government going to do about it?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I referenced the $5.6 million last year. We are providing for those day care employees to receive additional supports, to receive additional training. Our program at Grant MacEwan has added an even stronger opportunity for day care workers to be informed. We are, as I've said, putting more money into staff development than we had done previously through the accreditation program, providing those dollars to day cares where they have illustrated a willingness to work in elevating their standards and making sure that the staff that are educated there are fully qualified in looking after the children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go to the next order in the Routine, I'm going to call on the Deputy Speaker for a special presentation. The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Page Recognition

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All hon. members, each day of the session we are served by the tireless efforts of our pages. On behalf of all the members of this Assembly we want to give each page a small Christmas gift to say thank you and to wish each and every one a Merry Christmas. I'd ask the Speaker's page, Greg Andrews, to distribute these gifts for us with our Merry Christmas.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to the Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: Well, we have six members who want to participate. We'll call on the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is, indeed, a pleasure for me this afternoon to rise and introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a very special guest that we have with us this afternoon, His Honour Wayne Ayling, the mayor of the city of Grande Prairie. Wayne is accompanied by his wife, Christine; his parents, Mr. Don and Mrs. Elaine Ayling of Stettler; sister Lois from Edmonton; and an aunt, Kay Strain. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. They're seated in the members' gallery.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a playwright, an actor, screenwriter, director, and theatre educator, a graduate of the MFA program in playwriting from the University of Alberta, and now the 2003 Governor General literary award recipient for playwriting for his Einstein's Gift, which received production at the Citadel Theatre last season. He is my constituent and a friend and an honoured writer. I would ask Vern Thiessen to please rise, and would you please give him a warm welcome. Another literary champion for Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do have an introduction, but I would like to make one clarification for the record. The parents of Mayor Ayling, who is one of the award recipients we will be hearing about later, Don and Elaine Ayling, actually live in Calgary-Lougheed. They're my constituents, and I welcome them here today as well.

It is also my pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to introduce to you and other members of the Assembly Mr. Michael O'Reilly, who is seated also in the members' gallery. He is a resident of Calgary-Lougheed as well, and I just had the pleasure of meeting him for the first time today. He tells me that he spends at least half of his time in Edmonton, so he covers all of the bases. I will be telling you more about him during Recognitions. He is one of the two recipients of the Dr. Gary McPherson awards of excellence, which were awarded today at City Hall. So I'd like him to stand.

As well, I'd like to recognize Dr. Gary McPherson, who's also in the members' gallery, for whom these awards have been named.

Let's give them a warm welcome from all of us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my guests who are seated in the public gallery. They have traveled here from the Hastings Lake area to come and watch the proceedings of the House. They are Vic and Marie Newman, owners of the Berry Inn Bed and Breakfast; Carl Hoybak, Hastings Lake Bible Camp; Bill and Greta Voight, Hastings Lake Bible Camp. I will now ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have some guests from the Hastings Lake area – I'm not sure that all of them could stay – who are concerned about the impact of drilling in their neighbourhood. They are Bonnie Riddell, from the Elk Island public school district; a resident, Kelly Rolston; sisters Shirley and Marion McFall and their mother, Betty McFall, from the McFall ranch. I would ask them, if they are here, to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a constituent of mine who is a very strong proponent of public education. Last week I tabled her response to the Learning Commission, and she is here today to watch the proceedings. I would ask my constituent, Mary Dunnigan, to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

2:40 head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

International Volunteer Day

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, December 5 marks International Volunteer Day, a day when communities around the world celebrate and honour those who dedicate their time to improving the lives of others. This week the Alberta government will pay tribute to six outstanding volunteers. I might add that one of those volunteers is Mrs. Evelyn Stahl, from the constituency of Medicine Hat.

The Minister of Community Development, responsible for tourism, will present each of these individuals with stars of the millennium volunteer achievement awards from the Wild Rose Foundation in the category of youth, adult, or senior. They will also be inducted into Alberta's volunteer wall of fame in the Legislature pedway, which was created as a tribute to volunteers in honour of the International Year of Volunteers in 2001.

Every year in every part of our province volunteers are making a difference in our schools, hospitals, youth centres, theatres, and nonprofit organizations. In fact, over 70 percent of adult Albertans offer their time, skills, and talents to benefit others. Please let them know how much their service means and join me in sincerely thanking all of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Wayne Ayling

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize the mayor of Grande Prairie, Wayne Ayling, who was introduced a few minutes ago. He has joined us in the gallery along with Dr. Gary McPherson. Wayne Ayling is one of the first recipients of the Dr. Gary MacPherson award, presented by the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities at a ceremony today at city hall commemorating the International Day of Disabled Persons. Congratulations, Wayne.

As a lawyer, volunteer, culture and sport organizer, alderman, and now mayor, he has contributed to the inclusion of persons with disabilities in Grande Prairie. Last year he created a policy that allows AISH recipients to travel free on the Grande Prairie transit system, the first city in Canada to put in a policy like that. He's also spent a decade as a wheelchair basketball referee and recently received the Queen's Golden Jubilee Medal for his outstanding contributions.

Congratulations, Mayor Ayling. Thank you for helping the disabled community in so many ways, and congratulations as well for doing such a good job of filling the rather large shoes of the previous mayor of Grande Prairie.

Michael O'Reilly

Ms Graham: Well, Mr. Speaker, I too am very pleased to rise today and recognize Michael O'Reilly, the other recipient of the Dr. Gary McPherson award of excellence, which was presented today in conjunction with the International Day of Disabled Persons. Mr. O'Reilly is being recognized for leadership in the area of community inclusion for persons with disabilities.

As president of Thibodeau's Centre for Hearing Health and Communication Mr. O'Reilly uses a holistic approach to help deaf and hard-of-hearing individuals. He believes in the philosophy of social innovation through entrepreneurial activity.

Two recent Thibodeau projects illustrate this social entrepreneurship in action. The first involves a partnership with the University of Alberta and Grant MacEwan Community College to provide hearing aids, education, and training to deaf and hard-of-hearing individuals and their families in Ukraine. The second relates to the Canadian Snowflake Foundation, which is an endowment fund Mr. O'Reilly established and raises money for deaf or hard-of-hearing services and supports.

Congratulations, and thanks for your contributions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Violence against Women

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Saturday, December 6, is the 14th anniversary of the massacre of 14 young women at l'école Polytechnique. These murders were committed for the sole reason that the victims were women. I was executive director of the Alberta Advisory Council on Women's Issues on December 6, 1989, and one year later, with the support of the council and the help of women from many community organizations, I started a commemorative event which was held each year until recently. Those original committee members have stayed connected, and many continue to work on this issue. My thanks for their vigilance.

Fourteen years later the harsh emotions have faded, but the statistics continue to mount. Women under 25 are at highest risk, particularly when leaving an abusive relationship. Aboriginal women die from spousal violence at eight times the rate of nonaboriginal women, and 21 percent of women victims are abused while pregnant. One in two women has been a victim. A hundred of our sisters die each year in Canada. Those are just spousal violence statistics, not sexual assault, not child abuse.

Thank you.

Steven Kesler

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, just recently we had a milestone of sorts in the Marda Loop district of Calgary-Currie when one of our most famous small businesspeople quietly sold his business and went into retirement. A shy, soft-spoken fellow, Steven Kesler hasn't been in the news much since 1985, but he was the biggest news story in Canada that year, garnering front-page headlines for months as the drugstore vigilante, a media circus I well remember, having started his legal defence fund. Tens of thousands across Canada supported Steve, and thankfully many donated money as well, but Steven himself had never sought out and was frankly embarrassed by such attention and was very glad to see it all eventually go away.

There are still many profound questions raised by that incident that to this day remain unanswered, such as: how far can a small businessperson go when, clearly, the system is failing to protect them? But those are questions for another day.

Today I just wanted to recognize this footnote in the history of the Marda Loop and send my congratulations and best wishes to Steve and his wife Mary for having survived long enough in their small business to finally reach retirement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Clarence Peters

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Clarence Peters, who was honoured this past summer by the Calgary Stampede board awarding Clarence the prestigious pioneer of rodeo award.

By the time most men start thinking about chasing girls, Clarence at age 14 was already chasing chuckwagons around the half mile of hell at the Edmonton chuckwagon races. As Clarence became more experienced on the circuit, he was more in demand, often riding every heat, sometimes nine or more in a single evening.

Over the years Clarence won championship buckles, outriding for such chuckwagon greats as Tommy Dorchester, Dale Flett, Hally Walgenbach, Dallas Dorchester, and Bobby Cosgrave. Clarence rode for the chuckwagons from the age of 14 to 35, when he took about four years off only to return for another few years to ride for the Buddy Bensmiller outfit in 1979, when he won his 10th championship buckle.

Clarence has enjoyed a very long time in the sport he loved, a sport that has many risks but provides many thrills and excitement for so many fans.

This past weekend the Huxley community also honoured Clarence for his accomplishments with the presentation of a plaque commemorating his achievements. Congratulations, Clarence, on a very successful career in the sport of chuckwagon racing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Violence against Women

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On December 6, 1989, Marc Lepine entered l'école Polytechnique in Montreal, killing 14 young women because they were women. December 6 is a day to remember that violence against women continues to plague our society. A new report by the Canadian Institute for Health Information found that 8.4 percent of Canadian women report some type of partner violence. The highest rate was in Alberta, at 11.5 percent.

Jack Layton, leader of Canada's NDP, was a founder of the White Ribbon campaign commemorating December 6. The white ribbon is a symbol of men taking responsibility for ending men's violence against women. Today I would like to recognize all men and women who are working to end violence against women and children. We recognize those who work and give of their time and energy in emergency shelters, transition houses, and crisis centres. We salute those who will not give up until the violence stops.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Clerk will go on to the next item of the Routine, but, hon. members, today's seven presentations were outstanding. I wish all the citizens of Alberta could hear this all the time. Congratulations to all of you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by 59 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the provincial government to "establish a provincially subsidized monthly transit pass program for low income Albertans that would apply to all municipalities with a public transit system."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a petition signed by 2,319 Albertans petitioning the Legislature to urge the government of Alberta to establish "the Chinchaga Wilderness as a legislated protected area."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting a petition signed by 277 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to "introduce legislation declaring a moratorium on any future expansion of Confined Feeding Operations, with a view to phasing out existing operations within the next three years."

2:50head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table three documents today. The first is the annual report of the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2002. This is in accordance with the provisions of the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act.

Secondly, the Alberta Grain Commission annual report for 2002-2003. It was their goal to increase communication with the Alberta crop industry.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table the 2003 program for the Alberta Order of Excellence investiture ceremony, which was held on October 16, 2003, at Government House. The Alberta Order of Excellence is the highest honour that the province of Alberta can bestow on a citizen. This year's three respected inductees are the Rt. Hon. Donald F. Mazankowski, Audrey Morrice, James Palmer, and Dr. Leonard Ratzlaff. Each shares a fervent belief in the human spirit and the promotion of education and lifelong learning.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is the 2003 annual report for the Certified General Accountants Association.

Secondly, we have the 2001-2003 annual report of the Appeals Commission; thirdly, the 2003 annual report for the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association; and, lastly, the 2003 annual report for the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with two brief tablings. The first is copies of the special bulletin that I issued today called Albertans recognize International Day of Disabled Persons.

The second is the official program regarding ceremonial proceedings that occurred today at Edmonton city hall in honour of International Day of Disabled Persons. This was a special recognition event which our Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities helped co-organize along with the city of Edmonton's Advisory Board on Services for Persons with Disabilities and with the Alberta Disabilities Forum. I just want to thank our staff, Terry Keyko, and others for their outstanding work in that regard.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Sheila Precoor, Angela Krizan, Laura Smith, Katrina Plamondon, Julie Meilleur, Natasha Willier, and Julie Stephenson, who are all nurses, have asked me to table copies of their letters to their MLA. They are outlining a number of concerns including their ability to provide safe care, the small number of negotiating hours before this was sent to arbitration, and their concern of the possibility of nurses moving away from Alberta because of the current situation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table with permission the appropriate number of copies of letters from Mary-Ellen Wiechnik, Donna Maxwell, D. Woodward, Marilyn Nydakus, Alan Besecker, Margriet Edwards, Diane Lantz, Sherry Stone, Judy White, Pauline Worsfold, and Elayne Tarzwell. These letters express a range of concerns about negotiations between the PHAA and the UNA. They are all personal and heartfelt and represent, as I go through them, well over two centuries of nursing experience across this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings. First I'd like to table letters from the Riverbend Elementary Parent's Society in Calgary, concerned with the cutbacks and the impact that the cutbacks in education have had on the programs that are offered in Riverbend elementary school.

I also have copies of a number of postcards that were sent to the Leader of the Official Opposition asking him to urge the Minister of Learning to reinstate funding so that there could be more teachers, teacher aides, and special-needs programs in public schools.

The last one is again from parents in Riverbend elementary school concerned with the cutbacks and the effect that the cutbacks are having on programs at Riverbend elementary school.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have, with permission, two sets of tablings this afternoon. The first is letters of concern from constituents of the area of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. These letters of concern in regard to the collective bargaining negotiations going on between the Provincial Health Authorities Association and the United Nurses of Alberta are written by Pauline Worsfold, Darlene Graumann, and Linda Slusarenko.

The second series of tablings I have are from Judy Howe, Donna Nelson, Veronica Chan, Joan Porter, and Ronda Paluch. These are also nurses concerned about the collective bargaining agreement and the progress of that collective bargaining process between the UNA and the Provincial Health Authorities Association. These nurses are from the constituency of Westlock-Barrhead.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Actually, it's Barrhead-Westlock.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two sets of tablings today. The first set is letters from three residents of the Hastings Lake area. The first letter is from the Berry Inn Bed & Breakfast, dated November 25, addressed to the EUB, stating their concerns about the adverse effect that gas drilling will have on their business. The second letter is from Shirley McFall, dated November 23, addressed to the EUB, requesting the board to be fair and responsible and protect the public interest, as they're mandated to do. The third letter is from Marion McFall, dated November 30, addressed to the Premier. She is concerned that despite hundreds of letters opposing oil well drilling near her family home at Hastings Lake, drilling continues to go apace.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a document which contains the results of a survey conducted by the Central Alberta Council on Aging. A large majority of respondents are deeply concerned about the 40 percent or more increase in long-term care, and almost 100 percent found the electricity and natural gas prices intolerably high.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 57
Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment
Act, 2003 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to move in the tradition of the House Bill 57, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2), for second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 57 read a second time]

Bill 56
Alberta Court of Justice Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 56, the Alberta Court of Justice Act.

This bill is the third pillar of the government's reform of family law in Alberta. Last year this House passed the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, dealing with nontraditional family relationships. This year the House has been considering and I hope will pass Bill 45, the Family Law Act. The Family Law Act consolidates and modernizes family law as it applies to all families in Alberta. The Alberta Court of Justice Act is the third pillar and proposes to establish a unified family law court to deal with our updated and modernized family law.

The need for a unified family court was strongly stated in the report of the Unified Family Court Task Force that was released in December of 2000. The task force was chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed and included MLAs, members of the judiciary, and members of the legal profession. In speaking to the bill, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to pay tribute to the members of the task force and to quote from their report:

The Task Force considers that all Albertans, wherever they live, have an equal entitlement to the services of the family-law court, judicial and otherwise. This should be recognized as a guiding principle. Where it is not possible to make those services equally available in terms of time and distance, every effort should be made to make them as accessible as possible, and in any event accessible within a reasonable time and distance, and creative and innovative measures should be adopted to give full effect to this guiding principle.

This bill has been based upon those very principles of equal access and the use of creative and innovative measures to do this.

I'd like to discuss four things with members as the House begins its review of the bill: why we need a unified family court, the factors that need to be considered in developing a unified family court, the principles of the bill and why it's a very good approach to developing a unified court, and the process of consultation and discussion that will continue after the introduction of the bill.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, there are two courts in Alberta that provide family law justice and services to Albertans. First, the Court of Queen's Bench sits either through resident judges or circuit judges in 13 centres in Alberta. Second, the specialized judges of the family and youth divisions of the provincial court do most of the provincial jurisdiction family court work in and around Edmonton and Calgary, and the remainder of the provincial court judges provide family law services in 75 centres around the rest of the province.

Some problems or inefficiencies exist because there are two court systems providing family law services. For example, the public can find it confusing as to which level of court they should be in. Similar proceedings can be dealt with in either court in many matters, so litigation may be duplicated. Public resources are expended under two separate systems that often overlap in jurisdiction. Having a single family court would eliminate the confusion, the overlap, the duplication, and the inefficient use of resources. As well, having a single family court would provide the following opportunities.

Justices could specialize in family law matters. Although I want to be clear that we are not critical of judges and justices in the existing system, some justices do specialize or devote a large portion of their time to family law cases, but having a specialized court would attract justices who wish to specialize in family law matters. The government could focus public resources and, particularly, programs and services on one unified system rather than trying to cover two systems. A unified family court would be developed with the average citizen in mind, with easy to understand procedures which would also allow individuals to represent themselves in court where and when it was appropriate to do so.

There are very good reasons to have a unified family court, and as a result I don't believe that there is any opposition to the principle of having a unified family court. The debate and the discussion is really over how that court should appear.

Mr. Speaker, in developing a unified family court, there are several constraints that have to be considered and addressed. The first constraint is the Canadian Constitution. I don't wish to be overly technical, but there are two levels of court doing family law work because of the Constitution.

Section 96 of the Constitution requires that the federal government appoint judges to the Court of Queen's Bench. These judges are often referred to as section 96 judges. This has also been interpreted to mean that a province cannot confer on a body other than a Queen's Bench level court functions or authorities analogous to that of the so-called superior court. So, then, Alberta cannot confer on the provincial court, which is appointed and paid for by the province, functions or authority normally belonging to the Court of Queen's Bench, or section 96 justices.

Given these realities of the Constitution, a unified family court that has complete jurisdiction over family law needs to have section 96 court powers or at least needs to include section 96 court justices. Section 96 court justices are appointed by and paid for by the federal government. No province acting alone can establish a unified family court with section 96 powers. There has to be a partnership with the federal government, and that is the first constraint on the legislation.

The second constraint is judicial independence. Judges sitting today have been appointed by the federal government to sit in the Court of Queen's Bench and by the province to sit in the provincial court. As well as working with the federal government, we need to work with judges and justices at both levels of court to develop a court structure that justices will want to be appointed to.

The third constraint is resources. The percentage of judicial time spent on family law matters is very large. We could not build a new system and leave the existing systems as they are. As the new system is established, we need to be able to transfer resources from the old systems to the new. We cannot just build a new system and operate it alongside the old.

The fourth constraint is the geography of Alberta. We have two large urban centres, a number of regional centres, numerous small towns and rural communities throughout the province. We need to develop a court model that allows equal access for all Albertans to settle their family law disputes within a reasonable distance from their place of residence.

So, Mr. Speaker, then I'd like to turn to the bill itself, and as I explain to the House some of the key features, I believe members will understand how Bill 56 addresses both the opportunities and the challenges of developing a unified court in Alberta. Part 1 of the bill sets out the sections needed to establish the Alberta Court of Justice.

In section 2 the constitution of the court is described. These provisions create a court called the Alberta Court of Justice, having two divisions: a family division, or section 96 court, and a provincial division. Members will appreciate that with these two divisions, the bill establishes the necessary section 96 component of a unified court. The provincial division would continue to handle civil matters under $25,000, residential tenancy matters, adult criminal matters, and traffic matters. The family division would consider all family matters, including youth and criminal justice matters.

Section 3 describes how the court would be composed. The family division – in other words, the section 96 division – would be composed of a federally appointed Chief Justice and a number of federally appointed justices. To the extent that the federal government funds new judicial positions to the family division, new judges would be appointed. We anticipate that three-quarters of the federal appointments will come from the existing provincial court family judges. The other appointments would come from either members of the Court of Queen's Bench or from new appointments.

As only a limited number of new federal judicial positions would be made available, the future of the section 96 family division positions would be filled as Court of Queen's Bench positions became vacant. New judges would be appointed to the Alberta Court of Justice rather than to the Court of Queen's Bench until there was an appropriate balance of judges between the two courts. The fact that new appointments would go to the new court until the balance was reached is an indication that a significant part of the workload of the existing court would be transferred to the new court. This also addresses the problem of trying to resource a new court while continuing to operate the existing courts. Of course, the movement of judicial positions would occur over time until the full complement of the Alberta Court of Justice was reached.

Section 4 of the bill addresses the issue of transitioning from the current system to the new system by providing that each Court of Queen's Bench justice would also be a justice of the Alberta Court of Justice. This way, those justices could continue to deal with family law matters. As well, the Alberta Court of Justice would have provincial judges of the provincial division to sit in the family division. Provincial judges can handle most but not all family matters. As part of the implementation of the new structure we would have a single court administration that would be able to direct matters appropriately. Essentially, matters that needed to go before a section 96 justice would go before that justice. Other matters could be placed before a provincial judge of the family division.

The ability to use provincial judges in this way does a couple of things, Mr. Speaker. First, it allows the new court to be developed while continuing to provide existing court functions. It allows us to manage the transition to a fully resourced unified court. It also allows unified family court coverage of the entire province. Many other provinces have introduced family courts, but they've had to do it on a pilot basis or a geographic-specific basis. By setting up this structure and by providing for this particular type of transition, we see an opportunity to build a family court which could serve the whole province.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about covering the entire province. Referring again to the quotation I read from the Unified Family Court Task Force, it states: "The Task Force considers that all Albertans, wherever they live, have an equal entitlement to the services of the family-law court, judicial and otherwise." In establishing a unified family court, we do not want to have a unified court that's available only to Albertans in Edmonton or Calgary, or both, or only to Albertans in the 13 centres served by the Court of Queen's Bench. We want all Albertans, wherever they live, to have access to the court. Access is not just a matter of appearing before a justice. It means access to all those services, counseling, and precourt processes for dispute resolution. All members of this House will know that family law problems do not stop at the borders of our cities and larger towns. Small-town Albertans and rural Albertans have the same need for these services as their city neighbours, and this bill represents a way of providing all Albertans with equitable access to justice in the family law area.

The other important component of the bill that I'd like to draw members' attention to is the provisions for officers and employees found in section 13 and onwards. The task force was very clear that the judicial component of a unified family court was only one aspect of a successful system. The availability of programs and services is also essential. Our intention is to make a broad spectrum of family law programs and services available to families through the unified court, and these provisions provide us with the framework to do that.

I can't stress this aspect enough, Mr. Speaker. Albertans need more than an efficient and effective forum to resolve their disputes. They need a family justice system that will actually help them, help them to resolve their disputes as easily and as amicably as possible, help them through the trauma of family disputes, and, in particular, help their children to adjust to new family circumstances. Moreover, they need a system that will encourage them to take responsibility for their own disputes and dispute resolution while ensuring that the necessary tools and expertise are available to ensure their success.

You'll note that the act is very large. In addition to setting up the court, the act contains many of the provisions of the existing Provincial Court Act. For example, part 2, called Provincial Division, contains the provisions for the appointment of provincial division judges, provisions for retirement, provisions for reappointment.

Part 3, Family Division, sets out the jurisdiction of the family division and also sets out the powers the court will need in order to consider family matters.

Part 4, entitled Provincial Division, describes the jurisdiction of the provincial division and sets out what are essentially the existing provisions surrounding civil claims.

In part 5, General Judicial Matters, we find the general powers that are necessary for the Alberta Court of Justice to do its work.

Part 6 covers the administration of the court and, more specifically, the council of judges. The council of judges is made up of the chief judges and members of the provincial division and family division. Its role is to review the court's business plans, set general policy on court sittings, look at the operation of the act, its rules, and court officers.

There are also a number of consequential amendments contained in the bill which will do two things. They'll change references in other statutes from provincial court to provincial division and, more importantly, will amend substantive family law to give authority to the family division of the Alberta Court of Justice to hear and consider family law matters.

Other provinces in Canada, Mr. Speaker, have unified family court systems, and different provinces have addressed unified family court issues in different ways. There is no perfect model. The task force looked at models in other provinces and made recommendations about the composition of a unified family court in Alberta. They also did a lot of work finding out what Albertans want in a unified family court. Although this bill adopts the principles of the task force, I want to be clear: it does not adopt their recommendation as far as the court model is concerned. While the task force was concerned with the constitutional constraints and the difficulty of transition and therefore recommended a different model, I believe that the model proposed in the bill does the best job of any model in addressing the issue of equal access to justice for Albertans across the province, and that makes it worth striving for.

I began my remarks by noting some of the constraints that we have to address when developing a unified family court. We also have to act in partnership with the federal government, with the justices of the Court of Queen's Bench, and with the judges of the provincial court. We need to involve lawyers and listen carefully to the advice and experience of the practising family law bar. Most importantly, we have listened to Albertans, and because this has to be a court that works well for Albertans, it can't be a court that only works well for lawyers and judges.

The introduction of this bill is not the end of consultations or discussions about how we should develop a unified family court or what its model should look like. The government does not intend to pass Bill 56 in this sitting of the Legislature or encourage the Legislature to pass it but, rather, wants to table the bill so that the bill can look at a preferred model for a unified family court. We believe that the discussion of a unified family court will be advanced if there's a legislative proposal to debate and upon which to base discussion.

I know that the practice of hon. members of the House is to be constructive in their analysis when family law matters are on the floor for debate. I would like to ask all members to be equally constructive in their discussion of this bill. If this is not a model of the unified family court that would benefit Albertans, then we need to consider an alternative model that is guided by the same principles that have guided this model.

These principles are guided by the result of the task force, the needs of the federal government, and our needs as a provincial government representing Albertans. These include providing a single court with a jurisdiction to hear all family matters, providing access to an array of programs and services, providing specialized judges who are experts in family law, providing a user-friendly environment where procedures are easier to understand, achieving efficiencies by reducing overlap and duplication by using alternative dispute resolution, ensuring that access to services is maintained in terms of the diversity of services offered in the community served, encouraging people to be involved and take responsibility for their own dispute resolution, take responsibility for ensuring that the best interests of the child come first, and having access to the tools and expertise to be successful.

I'm convinced that this bill is a good model and a good approach, but I'm open to the discussion of members and Albertans. As I indicated earlier, it would not be our intention to pursue passage of the bill. We wanted to put it on the table to have a model for people to look at, to open the discussion, and I hope that we'll be able to bring back this or a better model for consideration in the next sitting of the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate at this time so that we can have that full and complete public discussion before we bring the bill or a new form of the bill back for discussion by members in this House.

Bill 48

Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, I just want to thank the various members who spoke at second reading in support of the efforts and work we're trying to do at the Alberta ingenuity fund, more commonly known here as the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research. I don't believe that there are any amendments to be forwarded on this bill, so I would ask that we proceed.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Just a couple of comments about Bill 48, Mr. Chairman. It's a good bill, and we're pleased to have it here and to support it.

It's going to build the international reputation of science and engineering research in this province and has the potential to add to the top-notch research environment that already exists in this area in the province. It's going to attract and train and help us retain the brightest students and researchers in engineering and science, and it will attract funding from public and industry sources to the betterment of research in this area. We'll see in the future that it holds the promise of creating and being the basis for many new enterprises and businesses in our province, so we're delighted to see it here. We're delighted to see the money from the fund being expended.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to make a very few remarks on Bill 48, Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Amendment Act, 2003. This bill is about making the foundation and its work even better than it is now.

I notice that other than making some minor editorial changes which are a response to the changes in designations of ministers and the addition of a new minister, section 8 is repealed and is substituted by provisions which I think are good provisions. They certainly are a considerable improvement over the relatively vague section 8 which it replaces. It specifies the market value, defines it, exactly what's meant by it. It specifies that the foundation can draw 4.5 percent of the market value every year, and if in a given year the foundation requires less than 4.5 percent, then the difference between that which is withdrawn and the 4.5 percent amount can be transferred over to the next year. It can be made available to researchers and institutions that draw on this fund in the following year. So, certainly, that is an improvement, and there's greater clarity and specification with respect to the provisions of the existing act.

With those few remarks, I think it's a good bill. It certainly makes the needed improvements and has the New Democrat opposition's support. Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 48 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 57 and Bill 48. That is my report.

head: Third Reading

Bill 48

Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I again want to thank all members of the Assembly for their support of this bill and the ability of the Alberta ingenuity fund, the trade name under which it operates, to continue and sustain their investment in research in the province of Alberta while at the same time now allowing the fund to grow in value and sustain its value.

Mr. Speaker, while I call for third reading of this bill and move it, I do want to just point Albertans' attention to two things just to illustrate the importance of the Alberta ingenuity fund. One would be the Water for Life strategy, that was unveiled last week by the Minister of Environment. It talks about the importance of science and research in that initiative, and the Alberta ingenuity fund actually has begun to play a role in this already. You can actually read about it on their web site. I would invite members of the Assembly or all Albertans to look up their web site – it's under the worldwide web, albertaingenuity.ca – and read about the good things that this fund is doing.

On October 15, 2003, there was a significant announcement made by the ingenuity research to do with a centre for water research, which is actually a collaborative initiative by three of Alberta's universities, those being the University of Lethbridge, the University of Calgary, and the University of Alberta. This is an excellent first step in addressing some of the scientific and research requirements under the Water for Life strategy, and I'm pleased that the ingenuity fund has taken this on as kind of a flagship initiative that will begin to make its mark for the future of Alberta.

So with those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support this change because it means a more stable and ongoing commitment to the research in this province.

[Motion carried; Bill 48 read a third time]

Bill 51
Natural Resources Conservation Board
Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of the Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act, 2003. First, let me thank the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and his staff and the chairman of the NRCB for educating me with regard to the dealings of this very important board.

The role of the Natural Resources Conservation Board is to provide an impartial process to review projects that could affect Alberta's natural resources. As I mentioned in earlier debate under this act, the board may also give other responsibilities under other acts such as the Agricultural Operation Practices Act. Those responsibilities may include running a regulatory system in addition to the board's quasi-judicial status.

The board's duties have increased significantly since this act was originally established. For the board to function effectively and efficiently, its roles and responsibilities must be clear. For that to happen, some changes are needed. They need to clarify the board's more comprehensive function. They need to ensure adequate resources to meet an increased workload, and they need to keep the financial processes consistent with government practice.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments proposed in the Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act bring the clarity needed to distinguish its diverse and comprehensive duties and enhance its accountability. The changes will also clarify financial controls, membership of the board, and the objective nature of the appeals. They will permit the board to fill its quasi-judicial role in a fair and neutral fashion and still keep its administration businesslike and efficient.

Thank you.

3:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our concerns, certainly my concerns remain what they were, and nothing has been done to address those. Fundamentally my concern is that this bill will have the effect of increasing the power of the minister over the Natural Resources Conservation Board by giving her or him, in effect, complete budget control. So that, of course, as I said earlier, reduces the independence of this board – if it doesn't in actuality, it does in appearance – and for this board to function well, independence is crucial. The public must perceive this board and the processes it administers as above politics and above political interference, beyond the reach of those kinds of interests.

So that fundamental concern remains, and as a result I for one feel compelled to oppose this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to briefly comment on Bill 51, Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act, 2003. Other than outlining the maximum number of members of the board by way of this act and specifying that they'll be appointed for a five-year term and their designation, then, as either full-time or part-time, the most important part of the bill is contained in section 22, which will now be renumbered. The addition to that section 22 in the form of sub (2) is the one that concerns me most. That's the one that would seem to take away whatever independence and autonomy this board has had from the minister in the past.

The renumbering of section 22 and the addition of sub (2) very strongly redefine who has the control, and that's the minister. So the board's ability as a quasi-judicial body, as the Member for Whitecourt-Lac Ste. Anne emphasized, will be compromised further by the change that's sought by way of this act. So it's a step backwards.

If the role and the functions of the board are to be quasi judicial, then its independence must be protected. It's not merely a question of perception here. It's a question of, really, the actual substance of that independence that remains with the board. This bill will very seriously reduce that, so it will make the ability of the Natural Resources Conservation Board even more restricted by making it accountable first and foremost to the minister himself because it won't be in a position to exercise independence from the minister.

So for that reason, the New Democrat opposition remains opposed to Bill 51. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called. The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne to conclude.

Mr. VanderBurg: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 51 read a third time]

Bill 44
Personal Information Protection Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister for Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in the Assembly this afternoon to move third reading of Bill 44, the Personal Information Protection Act.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans value the privacy of their personal information and want to ensure that this information is not being used inappropriately by commercial organizations in the private sector. The Personal Information Protection Act will establish clear, concise, and commonsense rules for commercial organizations in their collection, use, and disclosure of personal information.

The government certainly appreciates and acknowledges the support on both sides of the House for the principles embodied in Bill 44. It is also important to note that this bill is very similar to the act recently passed in British Columbia, which will enable organizations in both provinces to operate under the same rules. It would be very positive if other provinces were to follow our lead.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 44 has improved with the consultations that have occurred since introduction in May. We have heard from many organizations and have responded by making some amendments to the bill. We have heard from our stakeholders that the Personal Information Protection Act is good legislation and will be much easier for businesses to comply with as opposed to the federal privacy legislation that will take effect next year.

I would like to thank the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert for his participation in moving second reading of the bill in my absence. I know, Mr. Speaker, from the debate we have had that the passage of Bill 44 will provide Alberta businesses with the certainty that they will be governed by a provincial act designed for Albertans to meet Albertans' specific needs.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have a number of comments about this act that I feel compelled to put on the record, and perhaps at some date the minister can respond. This act, as the minister said, applies to commercial activities. It's being brought in to avoid the federal legislation taking hold in Alberta, and of course I hope that works out for the best.

But there are some complications. As health critic I think of these complications especially in terms of the Health Information Act and the relationship between that piece of legislation and this particular bill we're discussing today. The fundamental question really is: what is the relationship between the two bills? What is the relationship between the Health Information Act, on the one hand, and the Personal Information Protection Act on the other?

For example, we have many health care professionals who will find themselves caught under both pieces of legislation. A pharmacist, for example, may fill a prescription that comes under the Health Information Act and needs to proceed through that whole system, and then he may have a prescription that's simply under the Personal Information Protection Act. It may not even be clear to that pharmacist which act applies.

For example, if it is a prescription written by a doctor under the public health care system, the legislation that applies is the Health Information Act. If it's a prescription written by a doctor who's working through Workers' Compensation, then it's a commercial activity, and it's under the Personal Information Protection Act. The pharmacist may not know, and this, of course, will create problems for pharmacists.

The same kind of thing could happen to surgeons, for example, who may have one patient who comes in – let's say it's a plastic surgeon – for removal of a suspicious mole on their arm. That is a medical procedure covered for information purposes under the Health Information Act. The next patient may be seeing the plastic surgeon for something entirely private: a facelift, a tummy tuck; who knows? That kind of business is under this bill we're debating today. Again, this is going to cause frustrations, confusion, and extra work and bureaucracy for any number of health professionals. That's an issue that, to the best of my knowledge, has not been sorted out through either legislation or regulations.

If the minister, perhaps another day, wants to respond to those concerns in writing, I'd appreciate that. I would actually suggest that we should consider folding the Health Information Act under this piece of legislation at some point in the future.

I also have to return to my concern about what the costs are going to be to businesses of complying with this piece of legislation. Has the government done any analysis? What is the effect of that going to be? When I go to small, little businesses, as I did a couple of weeks ago – I went to a coffee shop, and the coffee shop owner had his business cards out, and underneath his name and title he had in brackets: chief privacy officer. Well, there probably weren't three employees in his entire business, and they had to have a chief privacy officer.

So I worry. I worry about the kinds of bureaucracy we're putting in place. I understand why it's going in, because I also respect the need for managing privacy, but this is a bill that I think we're going to be revisiting sooner than many of us expect.

What education program is in place as these businesspeople struggle to implement this legislation, as health professionals struggle to implement it? How are they getting trained? I believe the FOIP commissioner has efforts under way here. I just hope that they're adequate.

And, of course, there are some fuzzy areas around the jurisdiction of this bill. We had some discussion around its application to political parties or not and sorted that out. How clear is it now how the bill will apply or won't apply to charities, to professional bodies, to clubs, and on and on? There's a lot of room here for clarification. I'll be looking to the regulations for good guidance on that.

So it's with some reservation that I consider this bill. I guess we do need to move forward. It is presumably more workable than the federal legislation. I just hope we haven't cut too many corners in thinking this through.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make a few comments at third reading of Bill 44, the Personal Information Protection Act. This is an important act for Albertans. The question of personal privacy with respect to your personal information seems to almost daily be in the news because of breaches of that information or falsifying of that information or actually the theft of that information by individuals, so it's become an increasingly important aspect in our lives. I suspect that part of that is due to the rapid advances in technology and the amounts of information that can now be stored and transmitted.

That being said, the act has tried to deal with a number of concerns that would assure Albertans that their personal information is well cared for, yet I don't believe the act has addressed the three major criticisms that were leveled against it by the federal Privacy Commissioner. One of the weaknesses was the power given to the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations. The commissioner pointed out four areas in the bill that concerned him. One was giving consent, that they have powers with respect to giving consent. The powers listed are also procedures that can be used in making and responding to access requests. A third concern was that they would be able to make regulations with respect to the circumstances in which personal information can be collected, used, or disclosed without consent – that was a major concern of the commissioner – and the ability of the cabinet to declare areas of personal information to which the act does not apply. The commissioner identified the regulation power of the cabinet as being a major weakness or flaw in Bill 44.

There were two other concerns. The second one was the business of grandfathering, those provisions in the bill that talk about information collected before and after the coming into effect of the bill, the act stating that information collected prior to the bill was deemed to have been collected pursuant to consent given by that individual. This is a very difficult problem because I think it was pointed out in some letters to us that there are service providers that have massive lists of customers. Were they required to gather consent, it would be a horrendous task for them. Yet that being the case still doesn't detract from the commissioner's concern that information was gathered that indeed may not conform to the provisions of this act and that that is really a concern and that there's no really meaningful protection for that information that's sitting out there with respect to individuals.

The third area that the commissioner mentioned that is still in the act and is still of concern is the permission that the bill gives employers with respect to the rights of employment. The commissioner points out that it's really the workplace where most of us spend our waking lives. For the bill to allow the collection, use, and disclosure of employee personal information without consent really does deprive employees and prospective employees of control over their own personal information.

I'm sure, as my colleague for Edmonton-Riverview indicated, that we are going to be back sooner rather than later with amendments to the act as the act goes into force and we work our way through it. Maybe given the nature of this kind of legislation, that's the only way it could have been done, Mr. Speaker.

So with those few comments, I conclude. Thank you.

3:50

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to again comment briefly on Bill 44, the Personal Information Protection Act, or PIPA. I want to note that the minister did invite us for consultations on the bill and expressed considerable interest in addressing some concerns that we had shared with him, but my understanding is that we weren't able to get the minister's agreement to make some necessary changes in the act in order to narrow the scope of one particular term, agreement, which is used as a blanket category when talking about the effect of this act with respect to protecting privacy on accessing information.

My colleague from Edmonton-Highlands has spoken extensively to our concerns, has communicated those concerns personally to the minister, shared those concerns with him, and had some discussions. Later my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands tried to amend the act with respect to that particular concern so that the collective agreements are exempted from the provisions of the act. That has not happened. We have expressed our opposition to that part of the bill consistently, and we continue to have those concerns.

I guess that the New Democrat opposition will have to now wait to have a look at the regulations that are developed and approved by the minister as the bill is proclaimed. I urge the minister to address that concern that we have specifically expressed with respect to the possible application and use of this act to restrict the ability of labour organizations, employees' representative organizations, to have access to the information of their members or employees that they represent in workplaces where they're represented, especially during organizing drives and after a certificate has been issued but before a first collective agreement is reached.

So there is a potential problem with the bill. We have certainly flagged it. We have drawn the minister's attention to it. We appreciate the fact that he gave some consideration to this. Now we will wait to see whether or not that concern and consideration that he has expressed to this point gets translated into specifically allaying those concerns as the regulations of the bill are developed after its passage in conjunction with its proclamation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 44 read a third time]

Bill 50 Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move third reading of the Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003.

The intent of this bill is to make the Wildlife Act more effective in a number of areas, primarily enforcement and administration. During committee we learned that many of the amendments support the work of the fish and wildlife officers. Increased penalties for poaching: increasing the fine for wildlife violation sends a clear message to the public and to the courts that Alberta takes such violations very seriously. Seizure of equipment used in poaching: authority to seize and retain equipment used by poachers certainly directly supports enforcement efforts. Reciprocal agreements: the capacity to co-operate with other jurisdictions ensures that those convicted of serious wildlife violations elsewhere won't be able to get hunting licenses in Alberta and vice versa.

Access to warrants and authorizations: another enforcement-related amendment that gives fish and wildlife officers access to federal investigation related warrants for more information about wildlife offenders. Outstanding fines for wildlife offences: people who haven't paid fines for wildlife violations won't be able to buy hunting or fishing licences until outstanding fines have been taken of. Trafficking in wildlife: advertising wildlife for sale – they may not be sold – will be deemed as an act of trafficking in wildlife. Reducing wildlife/human conflict: to reduce wildlife/human encounters, Alberta will require the authorization to issue cleanup orders to make people clean up food, resources, or other attractants that draw wildlife to settled areas. Exemptions of employees: another amendment related to duties of fish and wildlife officers, including wildlife research and duties that involve hunting and enforcement activities.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a very big province, and it is impossible to monitor everybody in the wilderness areas. With our rapidly growing population more people are living in rural areas or enjoying recreational activities on public land and where wildlife is more common. Accordingly, the Wildlife Act introduces additional valuable tools to assist our government in protecting and managing wildlife for Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today and talk to Bill 50, the Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003, and, certainly, to thank the hon. member for bringing this particular bill forward because it does address a number of issues and tightens up legislation in regard to our wildlife here in the province. One of the things that we certainly saw in the bill and liked was that there are increasing penalties for certain offences. As well, what would happen with the changes in this bill is that repeat offenders would face higher penalties than first-time offenders. As well, those who are convicted of offences in relation to key species such as grizzly bear would face significantly higher penalties.

We certainly like the section of the act that will provide authority for an officer to order the cleanup of attractants or other actions that would attract certain forms of wildlife to garbage containers. Having grown up in Jasper, I've had many occasions to witness the bears coming into town or at the lodge dump, where the grizzlies would gather on a nightly basis to feed. Certainly, one of the highlights of our evenings was to go out and watch the grizzlies in action.

Dr. Taft: Was it like being here?

Mr. Bonner: Well, no. These guys are tame compared to those grizzlies. There's no fear here. I think that if the opportunity arose today, Mr. Speaker, I'd also have to say that I have too much respect for the grizzly to put myself in that situation again.

We certainly enjoyed the portion of the act that was amended to require trappers to first have grounds or belief that the traps are unlawfully set and report such findings to an officer. This, again, is a very good change in the act.

As well, we like the new class of authorities called guide designations, which are now being used in accordance with various criteria in the regulations. These were formerly called guide licences. Amendments that will be taking place will be more like licences and permits and, therefore, have similar requirements pertaining to them. Provisions would also be made to deal similarly with new documents created in the future by prescribing them in regulation.

So, Mr. Speaker, in summary, certainly many good points with this particular bill and very happy that I've had the opportunity to point out some of the highlights. I would urge all members in the Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 50, Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003, which is sponsored by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. It deals with matters that fall within the purview of the Sustainable Resource Development ministry. Again, my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Highlands has spoken at some length on this bill during previous debate.

The question of increasing penalties for poaching has been addressed by way of this bill, and strengthening the authority of fish and wildlife officers dealing with these offences related to poaching and other related offences is certainly something that on the surface would seem to promise improvement with respect to the ability of this legislation to ensure sustainability of resources and resource development.

But there are concerns, Mr. Speaker. One not only needs the capacity to deter poaching - and that's what I suppose the increase in fines will do - but one also needs to ask questions related to the enforcement of the law. If a law is not enforced properly, it loses credibility and hurts, as a matter of fact, the credibility of legislative measures and actions as such. So enforcement is a key component of any legislative attempt to deter wildlife poaching and related acts.

As a bill I think it certainly expresses well the concern of this government about wildlife poaching, and many of the amendments here relate to improved enforcement. If you look at the record of this ministry with respect to enforcement, one doesn't get any assurance from the evidence that's available that this bill, when passed, will make much of a difference on the issue of deterrence, because deterrence is as much a function of the magnitude and the severity of penalties as it is the probability of enforcement of those penalties.

As the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees has indicated very clearly,

While it is a positive idea to introduce a law raising fines for poachers, the department has cut operating funds to front-line Fish and Wildlife enforcement officers to the point that they are unable to enforce the law as the public [expects and] deserves.

These are the words of the president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, which represents the enforcement staff of the department.

The AUPE statement continues: "Operating budgets for fish and wildlife enforcement districts across Alberta have been slashed from 20 per cent to 50 per cent." So the conclusion by AUPE is that "a commitment to enforcement means we have to pay for enforcement," but the resources are not there.

In the 2000-2001 fiscal year, Mr. Speaker, roughly two and a half years ago, fish and wildlife officers made 230,000 contacts with the public. In 2001-2002 that was down to 116,000. In the current year, which is just about to end within weeks from today - that is, the 2002-2003 fiscal year; well, it has a few more months - it has fallen to 70,000 contacts with the public. So the department's own documentation states that the proactive compliance checks are the best way to identify noncompliance with fisheries, wildlife, and parks' laws. But if that is the case, then what does the rapidly dropping frequency of contacts with the public over the last three years say about the real commitment to increasing proactive compliance checks? Not much.

There can't be these contacts, there can't be these checks unless there are wildlife officers, field officers, out there in the field

- preventing harm to endangered species and other environmental damage,
- protecting citizens and owners of livestock and property from such illegal activities as discharging firearms close to buildings and night hunting,
- helping ensure Alberta's tourism industry remains economically viable.

These are some of the points that are made by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees.

There are other concerns that have resulted from the impact felt by fish and wildlife officers due almost exclusively to a lack of available funding: for example, reduction or elimination of proactive preventative enforcement compliance efforts; district equipment being inoperable and needing repairs or replacement; equipment being unsafe or unreliable to conduct patrols and compliance checks; lack of funding for specialized patrols, operations, or programs such as helicopters or horse patrols, surrogate operations, night flights; unidentified priority fish and wildlife enforcement programs; reduced ability to meet personal and public expectations for an adequate level of service due to vacancies in fish and wildlife offices, district administration, and wildlife and fisheries biologist positions; office closures; district budgetary restrictions; inability to replace older vehicle fleet, thus placing a larger financial burden on district budgets for maintenance costs; a reduction in funding for surveys of fish and wildlife population that's unable to accurately look at resources. I could go on.

Let me just conclude this part, Mr. Speaker, by referring to two other negative impacts of cutbacks in resources: loss of credibility to the public or other agencies, stakeholder groups, and even other divisions within the department; and the feeling on the part of officers that they don't have the support. They feel worthless; they're demoralized. Staff surveys and health and wellness programs do not compensate for officers' dedication and commitment to the protection of Alberta's natural resources.

These are some of the impacts from the point of view of failure to enforce existing laws. So tightening or strengthening the existing laws in terms of the penalties is a halfway measure unless enforcement of this measure is guaranteed, is improved, improved considerably. The only way that that can happen is if more resources are put at the disposal of the enforcement people and their numbers are increased so that they're adequate enough to provide surveillance, spot-checks, or what have you. Poaching is not likely to decrease in this province. Both the Edmonton Journal and the Edmonton Sun have outlined those concerns extensively.

So while the bill is strong on the side of increasing penalties, it certainly falls short and, in fact, is silent on the question of what to do about enforcement. Enforcement is the key, Mr. Speaker, to protect endangered species, to stop poaching, to discourage illegal activity in this area of our province's life. So the bill in that sense doesn't really measure up to or doesn't really address the real outstanding issues that need to be addressed if poaching is to be stopped, if endangered species are to be provided protection, and the fish and wildlife are to be enhanced as an asset, as a resource which all of us can enjoy and on which depends, of course, among other things, the future of the tourism industry in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead to close debate.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to thank all members for their contribution to this bill. I strongly believe, number one, that this is going to give our fish and wildlife officers the extra tools that they need, and I guess I just want to reinforce the aspect that enforcement is not just patrolling. It involves education, communication with all Albertans.

In addition to the good work regularly done by our uniformed fish and wildlife officers, there also has certainly been a lot of good work done by our undercover operations. Just to let the House know, over the last six years undercover operations have resulted in 1,100 charges and about $1.1 million in fines and about 20 years in prison sentences. There are almost 2,000 department staff working for Sustainable Resource Development, and about $37 million is being spent on fish and wildlife. This is up from last year.

So I'd encourage all members to support this very important piece of legislation. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 50 read a third time]

Bill 43 Post-secondary Learning Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is an honour to be able to rise and speak to Bill 43 today and to move Bill 43 at third reading.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has had a very checkered past. It was first introduced in May of this year to sit over for the summer. During the summer we undertook an extensive consultation with all of the stakeholders and came forward with a bill that is not what everyone wanted; however, it is probably the best bill. It does some wonderful things for students. The ability for technical schools or colleges to be able to grant degrees where the quality is there certainly will help our rural students, especially if some of the rural colleges take us up on this.

Mr. Speaker, the whole idea of combining four bills into one truly signifies the importance of our postsecondary institutions working together, retaining their diversity but still working together. That certainly sends a message loud and clear. We have already seen that happening in our postsecondary system.

So I certainly will listen to what everyone has to say. I know that there are some people on our side who wish to speak to the bill. I'd just like to in advance thank everyone who has been part of this bill, including all the colleges, technical schools, and universities, including the students' associations, faculty associations, and anyone else who has had a part in this. It truly is a revolutionary bill, and it's something that is going to benefit students in Alberta for many, many years to come, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the chance to speak in third on Bill 43, which is a bill that I have followed from the beginning, in fact from before it was Bill 43, back to the preparation of the first draft.

My compliments to the minister on bringing it in in May and letting it sit over the summer for public consultation. I appreciate that, and it led to many good amendments, as he said. My compliments to the student leaders in the gallery, who, frankly, set an example for all Albertans on how to effectively respond to a piece of legislation and, I will say bluntly, set an example that I feel their faculty associations would be well advised to follow. In this case, the students should be teaching the faculty on effective democratic activity.

Dr. Oberg: Can we quote you on that, Kevin?

Dr. Taft: You can quote me on that. I'll probably hear from many of my constituents, but I genuinely think that's true.

I represent most of the neighbourhoods that are adjacent to Alberta's largest postsecondary institution, the University of Alberta, and there are a couple of clauses in this bill that will be of great benefit to those neighbourhoods and to the neighbourhoods around other universities in this province. Those are clauses that remove universities' rights to unilaterally expropriate land and subject developments undertaken by the university that are primarily commercial to municipal zoning. Most Albertans haven't realized, unless they've lived close to a university, that until this bill universities could expropriate land at will and then were entirely exempt from municipal zoning. So this is a very good development for constituents in Edmonton-Riverview and I think for Albertans in general, and again I'm grateful to the minister for working those into the legislation.

One of my concerns with Bill 43 is that it doesn't express a clear sense of purpose for postsecondary education in general or for universities in particular. I think that in the long run we may regret that. With something as massive as this bill and something as massive as our postsecondary education system in this province, a clear statement of purpose is an outstanding place to begin, and in my view, at least, the preamble of this bill, nor any other section of bill, doesn't achieve that.

There has been a great deal of debate about tuition fees in this bill, and there are always going to be two sides to that debate, or maybe more than two sides. We in the opposition have been concerned for years, long before I was here, about the upward trend of tuition fees, and they have in real terms gone up very dramatically in the last decade. There was a cap in place. Under the existing legislation Bill 43, depending on whose terminology you use, keeps it in place, removes it, or creates a soft cap. From my perspective, in the long term it's such a soft cap that it is effectively removed.

The reason I say that is that when you combine the allowance for increases in tuition with the other increases – for example, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and I were calculating the other day that an increase of $275 on a $4,500 tuition is about 6 percent. If you add to that the consumer price index of, let's say, 3 percent, there's a 9 percent tuition fee hike, and that can continue. If that trend does continue, we will see a doubling of tuition fees within the decade, and that is a concern for us. Our preference would be that tuition fees go down.

If you listen to the universities, the U of A, for example, is saying that for every dollar in tuition a student paid 10 or 12 years ago, the provincial government would put in $10. Today for every dollar that's put in by students, the province is putting in $2.43. That's tough – that's tough – and it's the wrong direction to be going with education, and unfortunately this bill encourages that direction.

Another issue that we raised as a concern was the issue under section 88 that removes the right to strike from faculty. That section was somewhat amended, imposing, I believe, binding arbitration. In effect, it has many of the same effects, but I will say this: most of the faculty associations in this province willingly walked away from that issue. So they make their bed; they can lie in it. I'm not going to fight their fights if they don't have the courage to do so.

I am concerned about the broader direction of the bill in creating something called Campus Alberta. There's always been a need, at least certainly for 40 years, in this country and in this province for some co-ordination among postsecondary institutions. As multiple universities develop in the country and in Alberta, there needs to be co-ordination. You don't need a school of environmental design in every university, you don't need a school of East European studies in every university, and on and on. There needs to be some co-ordination. that stands to reason. Especially in the last decade there needs to be co-ordination between the colleges and the universities with the colleges providing entry-level programs for universities, transfer programs, whether it's in science or business or nursing or whatever. Clearly, there needs to be co-ordination.

But my concern with the entire spirit of this bill is that we are creating a single system. We are taking the diversity of institutions in this province and we are creating a single system, and in the process we are losing some of the strengths that a diverse system offers. We are taking postsecondary education in this province and creating a single kind of hierarchical structure with the minister very clearly at the top. If you go through the traditions of postsecondary education, especially at universities, that's a complete inversion of how universities historically have functioned. Universities function driven from the very front lines, driven from the research done by the professors and faculty, driven by the work done by the students and their teachers in the classroom, not driven from commanders on top.

I think a huge mistake is being made here philosophically that effectively equates postsecondary education institutions with government departments or major corporations. Government departments are top-down structures. The commander at the top gives the orders, and everybody is expected to follow the policy. The same thing with corporations. Universities, on the other hand, genuinely are bottom-up institutions. We, in fact, don't want all the policies followed from the top in the sense that we don't want a groupthink occurring in our universities. I'm concerned that what we have developing here is, in fact, a top-down command-and-control approach to postsecondary education, which will be bad for everybody.

I mentioned that it reduces diversity. I am also concerned that it increases the risk of major mistakes. When power is centralized to the degree that we are beginning to see in Bill 43, the people at the top will be issuing orders and will have power that is very, very wide ranging. Inevitably, a mistake at the top will get magnified as it reaches out through the entire system. We shall see a system that is slower to respond, and when it chooses to do things, it will do things more clumsily. So this complete turning upside down of the postsecondary system in the province is a real worry for me.

I also am concerned – and it's consistent with what I've just said – with the effect of Bill 43 on student governance and the ability of student associations to govern themselves. This has been hotly debated. There have again been some amendments made there, but fundamentally student associations at postsecondaries are adult organizations. The student executives are there because they are elected by the student bodies, and they should be accountable to those students who vote them into place, full stop. These aren't high school or junior high school councils. These are large institutions with in some cases million dollar budgets run by adults with professional staff, accountable to their elected members. I feel that Bill 43 takes much too paternalistic a view to student associations and student organizations. If the student associations mess up, that's the student associations' problem. They should be allowed to solve it as any other business run by adults should be allowed to solve its problems.

So, Mr. Speaker, I made several points here. I think most fundamentally my biggest concern is around a long-term loss of respect for the fundamental purpose of a university. I am concerned about threats to academic freedom. Certainly, I could trot out any number of examples over the last several years of overt public or covert private pressures being placed on universities to discipline researchers who do work that's not approved of. I don't need to go through that. I've made a number of those examples public before.

Fundamentally, I do like the notion that a university is a kind of Socrates of society. It's in a university where the relentless questioning of everything should be encouraged, including the questioning of the Minister of Learning, the questioning of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the questioning of the Legislature. As uncomfortable as that questioning ought to make us, we should celebrate that because it's through that questioning that we will become a stronger society and a better democracy.

Universities are not fundamentally about preparing people for careers. They're not fundamentally about serving governments or corporations or unions or religious organizations. They're not about economic diversification, although all of those things are wonderful, and universities in the normal course of their activities serve all of those. I would say, instead, that universities are fundamentally about extending knowledge in the service of democracy and a better civilization.

Thank you.

4:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to be part of the debate today on Bill 43, a piece of legislation that responds to the changing realities of our postsecondary education system. I want to first of all thank and compliment the Minister of Learning for bringing forth this very, very important legislation.

The Post-secondary Learning Act acknowledges that our world is changing, the needs of our workforce are changing, and our postsecondary education system is also changing. Alberta's future depends on a skilled and educated workforce, and we know that our postsecondary education system is a key to that future workforce. Our system has worked remarkably well in the past, and we must ensure that it does in the future as well.

In today's global economy innovation, ideas, skills, and knowledge are vital to our success and prosperity, and we have to make sure our system is prepared to meet these demands. As a government we must be forward thinking in our approach and in our direction. I believe that Bill 43 with its amendments gives us the necessary legislation to direct our postsecondary system in the future.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come to make changes. The last time that Alberta conducted a major review of institutional statutes was in 1981. Now, 22 years later, times have changed. Bill 43 addresses today's needs and directs our future. This legislation will allow our postsecondary institutions to move forward in serving all Albertans in a co-ordinated, complementary, Campus Alberta direction.

Our postsecondary institutions have experienced remarkable growth since 1994 as students from across the country and the world flock to our schools. It is worth mentioning that many parts of Canada have seen minimal increases or, even worse, decreases in their enrollments, yet Alberta grows against this trend. Bill 43 will allow institutions to better deal with increasing enrollments.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 43 also addresses an issue that has been foremost in many minds, especially postsecondary students: our tuition policy. Postsecondary education is a significant investment for students, but it is one of the best investments anyone can make, especially in Alberta, where there are great jobs, the cost of living is low, and the standard of living is high. It is a great investment for students, for government, and for society.

Mr. Speaker, the revisions to the tuition policy proposed in Bill 43 allow for growth, provide clarity on what tuition fees should include, and ensure that institutions remain open and accountable to their students. The policy continues to focus on maintaining affordability for postsecondary students.

Students in institutions have been adequately consulted on the revisions to our tuition policy since the spring sitting of this Assembly. In fact, I have done some consulting myself. The result of all the consultations is a policy that balances the need to allow for growth in the system with the need to ensure that postsecondary education is affordable to all.

I realize that many students leave postsecondary schooling with a significant debt load. The average Alberta debt load for students is around $11,000. To me that is not an unreasonable debt to have in this province, where job opportunities are plentiful. My concern about student debt would be much greater if jobs were unavailable upon graduation. Government, therefore, can provide solutions to the student debt problem by ensuring that jobs are available. That, of course, is the challenge to any government, and this government, I believe, is doing a very, very good job in that respect.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a province whose growth is not slowing down. Our workforce is booming, and our postsecondary education system is growing so fast that we can barely keep up. Legislation that worked fine in 1981 will no longer suffice. It is time that we moved forward with our objectives so that we can adjust to the always changing learning needs of the system.

I have found there to be positive support for Bill 43 in my constituency, especially with the amendments made at the previous stage. I support Bill 43 because it addresses the issues that face our postsecondary learning system, and I know that our system is improved because of it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Before we go to the section on comments or questions, I wonder if the Assembly would give consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Ladies and gentlemen, while we're dealing with education, it's truly an honour to have a class visit us from the small village of Clondonald, just north of Vermilion. We have 16 grades 5 and 6 students here today. They are not only very bright and intelligent; they're well mannered. And they're accompanied by adults much the same. They're here with their teacher, Mr. Robert Stachniak, and parents Tammi Etherington and Tracey Snider. I would like them to rise and please accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Third Reading

Bill 43
Post-secondary Learning Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, having been the third speaker, are there any comments or questions? Go on to the next one?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, then. Did you wish to speak?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I'm willing to let this hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments because I think almost everything that can be said about Bill 43 has been said and was said the other evening when we debated it at Committee of the Whole.

I guess I'd remind my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview that it's a poor teacher that can't learn from his or her students. I'm sure that the students have taught many given the actions that they've been engaged in with respect to Bill 43. I'll leave it at that.

One of the hardest parts for the opposition to accept is the tuition provisions in the bill. I say difficult because it's part of a larger problem that faces postsecondary institutions not just in Alberta but across the country.

Statistics Canada has on their web site a document about tuition fees in the country, and they have posted that the average tuition fee in Alberta in 1993-94 was $2,209 and that the average fee in this year, 2003-2004, is now $4,487. They compute that as an increase in the province – this is average university tuition increases – at a rate of 103 percent, one of the highest rates of tuition growth in the country. It's that information that I think should cause us concern with Bill 43 because what we haven't had and what we need so badly is a long-term plan for financing postsecondary schools in the province.

I'd hope that we won't a decade from now, in 2013, be looking back and seeing similar increases. I think that unless we do some planning for that future, some long-term planning that takes the pressure off postsecondary institutions to turn to students for financing of the institutions, we will, and I think that would be regrettable for students in Alberta but more importantly for the future of our province.

[The Speaker in the chair]

So while there's immediate debate about the tuition fees and their caps, I think that they are symptomatic of the much larger problem that has to be addressed and hasn't been addressed, and that's the financing of postsecondary schools. It's not exclusively a provincial concern. This is a federal concern, and as I said, it's a problem that's faced institutions across the dominion.

Tuition aside for just a minute, I'm concerned by the sometimes narrow view that we take of assessing the quality of our institutions, and there's a rather interesting report put out by the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, where they look at a number of measures. They look at equity in terms of who is able to enroll in universities and in our colleges. They have a quality ranking with respect to the class sizes and the number of international students, et cetera, in the institutions. They have an accountability ranking, they have an accessibility ranking, and they have an overall ranking for institutions. If you look at the indicators, I think you can quarrel with them, and some of them are rather different in terms of the conclusions that they make.

In the overall ranking we come out as a province as number seven, and smaller provinces come out with much higher rankings. So I guess one of the things that I hoped might come out of Bill 43 is a broadening of the indicators that we see, for instance, in the department's performance measures in the business plans, because I think that at the current time those measures are still very narrow and are not getting at really the essence and the heart of our postsecondary schools.

Just in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I agree with my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview that the centralization of power in Edmonton with respect to postsecondary schools is something that we should view very, very carefully. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview indicated that top-down models of management reflected government management or business management, and I'm not quite sure that that's true. It seems to me that enlightened businesses and enlightened governments have moved to much more inclusive management models, and there have been great efforts in successful management to move to models that depend more on participation of those involved in the enterprise than they do on orders coming from the top down. There are a number of models around that are not top-down, and in fact in many places top-down models are seen as being very ineffective with respect to the enterprise.

So that concern that there's centralizing of power in Edmonton and with the government I think is one that's – and I do agree with my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview – going to come back and going to present some problems in the future.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I go into detail, I would like to express my appreciation for the students' associations and the faculty associations from U of C, SAIT, Mount Royal College, whose executives have met with me in my office and voiced their concerns. I am also very encouraged by the amendments introduced by the Minister of Learning to Bill 43.

The benefits of higher education to society and individuals are indisputable. The creation and transfer of knowledge will become the comparative advantage in the new global economy. Further education is a number one factor in determining whether an individual can improve their financial, social, and health circumstances. Future social unity and citizenship will depend on the education and training available. Individuals must be able to reflect reasonably, to acquire knowledge, and communicate effectively and be able to utilize the tools of a technology-based society.

Mr. Speaker, these benefits demonstrate clearly that higher education is the key to our future success in society as individuals. It is a tribute to the higher education system that despite fiscal restructuring and a rapid rate of change in the breadth and depth of knowledge, our institutions have massively expanded the number of students gaining a credential, have maintained quality in teaching, and also have highly successful research.

However, we cannot maintain these standards by standing still. Higher education is now at a crossroad. If we get things wrong now, we will pay the price for many years to come. So the system needs to be modernized and reformed. Today access may not be best served by trying only to provide more of the same kinds of programs. Future success means we have to be prepared to offer a multitude of choices and opportunities both in the kinds of educational experience available and the means by which it can be obtained. Bill 43, the Post-secondary Learning Act, is the means by which we can set the course for the future of postsecondary education in this province, and I think the amendments we have discussed today helped cement the Campus Alberta vision that I hold dearly, which we'll pursue through this course.

On the subject of degree granting I would like to begin by speaking on the portion dealing with it because it is a key to change in our system, and it's one that I feel will provide a lot of opportunities for our institutions and for our students. We know that Albertans have a need for increased access to degrees. We also know that university enrollment will continue to climb until at least 2011, according to the research. The labour market and society will continue to demand access to degree programs, and Albertans will not accept anything less than quality degree opportunities. Original consultation with the postsecondary sector and key stakeholders identifies a need to create increased access to undergraduate-level programming.

When this bill was tabled this spring, it established the creation of the Campus Alberta Board of Accreditation and Co-ordination to facilitate a co-ordinated, balanced evolution of the adult learning system. This was a positive legislative change intended to ensure quality degree programs across the province regardless of the types of institutions.

From what I understand, further consultation slightly shifted the role of the board, and this is what is reflected in this proposed new amendment in Bill 43. The focus group included institutions, academic staff, students, and industry, and this group strongly supported the concept of quality assessment while they also felt that the co-ordination role of the postsecondary system needed to stay with the minister. These proposed amendments take this comment into account and fine-tune the focus of the board around quality, including the proposal that will change the name to Campus Alberta Quality Council.

As institutions work to respond to the range of demands they face, we are seeing the blurring of institutional boundaries between universities, colleges, and technical institutes. With this blurring comes a risk of conformity through a drift toward the current definition of academic excellence, the traditional university environment. But the reality is that all students are not the same, and all their needs and all the needs of society are not the same either. We have a responsibility to put in place a vision and public policy that will encourage responsive diversity. We must set the overall strategic direction for postsecondary education and provide a framework that sets the overall mission, roles, and responsibility for institutions.

The Campus Alberta Quality Council answers this. It will review proposals from both private and public institutions wishing to offer degree-granting opportunities and make recommendations based on quality and an organizational review of the institution. The ministry will continue to be involved in the overall system co-ordination role.

I want to also talk now about the student organizations, another section in Bill 43. A student expressed concerns over the deals with student organizations. Over the summer extensive consultations continued with student organizations on this section of the bill, which deals with the powers of student associations, including audits and investigations. I share their concerns. Student organizations were consulted extensively to find out what level of accountability they would find acceptable. Student organizations felt that first and foremost their accountability should be to the students they serve, and I think the amendments reflect this fact.

However, it was felt that some other level of accountability is required due to the large amount of funds entrusted to the student organizations. Rather than being accountable to the board, the student organizations agree that it would be more acceptable to be accountable to the Minister of Learning. In the rare cases where the need for an investigation arises, student organizations asked that the ministry cover these costs. Both these points are covered in the amendments to the bill now.

Students requested a number of other amendments that have been included to update and clarify wording relating to their roles, responsibilities, and communication processes, and the proposed amendments respond to this concern. A student bylaw will be retained in this act. Amendments will clarify that student organizations are the official channel of communication with the board and that the mechanism set out in their constitution be used to manage their own affairs.

Now, another factor in the equation is the academic staff. I would like to speak about what the academic staff expressed to me. During the consultations the faculty associations raised concerns about the harshness of section 88 containing the strike and lockout provision. Originally, this provision was added as a way to formalize what was already in place in most agreements between faculty and the boards while ensuring maximum protection for students in case of an unresolved agreement. The amendments proposed modify this section by clarifying compulsory arbitration as a dispute resolution mechanism while continuing to support existing agreements that have been negotiated in good faith between the boards and associations.

There were a number of other concerns raised by the faculty associations that have been resolved. Academic staff associations requested a change to the nomination of faculty to university boards. They proposed that faculty that are currently nominated by the general faculties council should be nominated through the academic staff association. They contended that this would be more equitable given that student organizations and nonacademic staff associations have representation on the boards. The proposed amendment will allow for a balance where one member of the faculty will be nominated by the academic staff association, one by the general faculties council. This aligns the academic staff association with other bodies that are able to nominate board members.

On the side of the student tuition, I share the concern about rising student tuition, and there's a concern about the fact that it has been removed from the legislation and moved into regulations. I can tell the students that, as I told them in my office, this is a matter of trust, and I think that you can trust the government of Alberta and the minister in this factor, and we have done so well. So the fact is that we have to move it to the regulations because there are some institutions that did so well in managing their costs, and their student tuition is still very low. They're reaching the 30 percent, so we need some way to manage that rather than making it a fixed number in the legislation. So I can guarantee to the students that I support your concern about tuition because I do have students in my family at university.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the option to exercise the question segment or proceed to the debate.

Then proceed, hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 43 in third reading. We have had some debate on the provisions of this bill in this Assembly over the last week or so. I certainly want to acknowledge that the minister did put this bill up for public examination for some time, and that encouraged some discussion, some critical analysis and examination, so I do want to express my appreciation for his decision some months ago to let the bill circulate so that he could get some of the responses and reactions.

I want to acknowledge the student leaders sitting in the members' gallery up there, Mr. Speaker. I applaud their continuing efforts to seek changes in the bill which would satisfy and address their concerns fully. Although they haven't succeeded in getting changes made on all the issues that were a matter of concern to them, they have succeeded in getting the minister to make some changes in response to their efforts, in response to their expression of concern and mobilization of pressure on the minister to do so. I certainly applaud the broad interests that the students have addressed by way of their response and criticism of this piece of legislation.

One thing on which they certainly, I think, have reason to be deeply disappointed is the issue of tuition fees. The issue of tuition fees is one where the bill has failed to in fact move forward to assure young Albertans, young men and women, that postsecondary education in this province will remain affordable for them.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to quickly read from a communication that I've received. A parent from rural Alberta says: my concern with Bill 43 is as follows.

It is unclear to me what the Minister of Learning hopes to accomplish by removing the cap on university tuitions. Post secondary fees are already making it very hard for many families to send their kids to further education. Surely the Minister can see the benefit of universal access to post secondary education. Taking the cap off tuitions endangers access. Also, Bill 43 proposes to limit Student Unions' ability to act politically. I'm not sure what . . .

The name of the minister is mentioned; I won't use his name.

. . . is afraid of. Dissent and public political expression are the cornerstones of democracy. By limiting the students' ability to organize it sends a message to students that the system is against them. Is this the way we wish to encourage political interest and engagement in the democratic process? We already know a large portion of this age bracket does not vote. They feel their input does not matter; they are detached from the process. What better way to confirm their suspicions than to enact something . . .

And these are the words of the writer.

. . . as oppressive as Bill 43.

Then he urges: "I hope you will vote against Bill 43."

The letter obviously was written before any amendments were made. Some of those oppressive provisions of the bill have been softened a bit; nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, the concerns expressed there are generally broadly shared, certainly expressed by students.

This letter touches on one particular aspect of educational institutions which we most often do not get to talk about in this Assembly, and that's the general milieu, the sort of institutional culture that schools and universities are and how they leave an imprint on students who experience that culture. Often among educational scholars that is known as a hidden curriculum. What's in the curriculum that's written up is one thing, but how those curriculum activities and learning activities are organized is equally important and sometimes more important.

It's not a question necessarily of hiding these impacts deliberately. Sometime we can't perceive them. These are unintended conse-
