Alberta Hansard

February 18, 2003 to December 3, 2003
and Index

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, February 18, 2003 3:00 p.m.
 Date: 2003/02/18
The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated February 5, 2003, summoning all Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome.

Let us pray. Almighty God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Your blessings on all here present. We ask Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments for the benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
 True patriot love in all thy sons command.
 With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
 The True North strong and free!
 From far and wide, O Canada,
 We stand on guard for thee.
 God keep our land glorious and free!
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, prior to the arrival of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the Royal Canadian Artillery Band will play a brief musical interlude. They're located above me.

The RCA Band, Canada's oldest regular army band, was formed in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and Halifax. It has seen service in both world wars and in Korea, and it has traveled across Canada and beyond our borders. Reconstituted in Edmonton in 1997, the band today is under the direction of Captain Gerry Heslip, who is in the Speaker's gallery.

The band will play Crown Imperial. The piece was written by the English composer William Walton in 1937.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.
 Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois E. Hole, CM, AOE, her party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

Her Honour: Pray be seated.

I would just like to at this time, if I could, please, thank my staff. If I leave it to the end, I'll forget. A lot of the gunners came from Red Deer to be here, to be with us to make this event so special, and of course the Royal Canadian Artillery Band. They are magnificent. Of course, my Gentleman's Escort. I just would like to say to the city police and the RCMP who escorted me here: I'll tell you; it was wonderful. You know, Mr. Premier, that's the time it's great to take the Queen's place. I have to say to all of you that that was the one thing that my husband just loved. He loved the excitement of the escort. It is beautiful, and it is something very special, so I want to thank them because it was both RCMP and city police.

head: Speech from the Throne

Her Honour: Fellow Albertans, it is my pleasure to welcome you to the Third Session of the 25th Alberta Legislature. It is an honour to deliver the Speech from the Throne as it is an honour to serve the people of this province as Lieutenant Governor.

In this role, I have had countless opportunities to meet Albertans from all walks of life: farmers, public servants, homemakers, oil field workers, doctors, students, volunteers, [gardeners, and many, many people from all over. I will say that it has been very special for me. I will compliment the government on being so good. The plane is always available for me, and I can get around this province so well because of it. So I'd like to thank the government for that because that means I can meet people from all over.] While each individual's experience is unique, they all hold common values that reflect this province and its people most profoundly. Those values include pride, the pride that comes from meeting challenges head-on and doing things the right way, not the easy way. They include a willingness to try new things and take risks. They include a commitment to work hard because nothing worth having comes without effort. Most of all, Albertans value the freedom to manage their own lives balanced by a strong sense of responsibility to family and community.

Ten years ago the people of Alberta and their government charted a course for a new future. That course has brought the province to an era of unmatched growth and prosperity, but Albertans know that these things on their own are merely the foundation that will nurture a living legacy for generations to come. The challenge this government faces is one of keeping things "steady as we grow." Managing the pressures of growth means building a province that is strong today and remains strong into the future. It means ensuring that the advantage Albertans enjoy today grows into the promise of tomorrow, a promise to our children.

A Bright Future for Children

This government's highest priority must be to secure a bright future for children and youth. The government will demonstrate its commitment to that priority by undertaking a range of initiatives to ensure that Alberta's most precious resource, its children, is protected and enabled to develop to its fullest potential.

To ensure that children at risk receive the help they need when they need it, the government will amend the Child Welfare Act. The amendments will emphasize the importance of early intervention and the preservation of the family and will increase the involvement of communities in the care of children. This approach recognizes that creating an environment where children succeed is an endeavour that stretches far beyond the ability of any one family or any government. Education and health systems, the corporate and voluntary sectors, parents, extended families, and caregivers are all part of a vital community network of supports that must be in place for children to thrive.

The first piece of legislation this government will introduce in 2003 will set in motion the creation of such a network. Bill 1, the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act, will enshrine in law this government's commitment to children and youth. Alberta's Promise will mobilize every sector of Alberta to build the character and competence of young people by making and keeping promises that focus on five specific areas of commitment. These are

- giving children a healthy start and a promising future,
- providing safe and healthy communities for our children's growth, education, and development,
- ensuring that every child receives ongoing support, care, and guidance from at least one caring adult in his or her life,
- offering children the chance to make a difference through volunteer activities and opportunities to serve others, and
- seeking out the best tools, models, and examples of other individuals and communities so that Alberta's children may learn, benefit, and succeed.

This initiative will provide funding to the Alberta Centre for Child, Family and Community Research, a private, not-for-profit agency that will be established by stakeholders to explore the issues and challenges faced by children and families. The first priority of the centre will be to conduct research on the prevention of fetal alcohol syndrome. Over time the research agenda will be broadened to address other issues such as early childhood development and youth at risk. By learning more about the best ways to prevent future problems, we will be better able to give children what they need most in life, a good start.

Part of that good start is a good education. Alberta has an excellent learning system with gifted, caring teachers, a strong curriculum, and students who have proven themselves to be national and international leaders. Maintaining the province's high-quality learning system is a top priority for this government.

The Alberta Commission on Learning has been struck to review the issues and challenges facing the education system and develop recommendations on how the system can meet the demands of students both today and tomorrow. While the commission undertakes its review, the government will continue to support and improve student learning. One of the ways government will do this is by dedicating an additional $20 million to help Alberta school boards purchase additional classroom resources that support the curriculum including textbooks and reference books, teaching resources, and computer software.

The most important classroom resource is teachers. Alberta teachers already play an active role in developing curriculum, provincial exams, and learning and teaching resources, but there is still a need for more direct feedback from teachers. This government will explore opportunities to better connect with teachers.

The government will also take steps to strengthen the postsecondary education system to promote lifelong learning. Legislation will be introduced this session to enable the adult learning system to better anticipate and respond to future economic and workforce trends and needs.

A Strong Economy

One of the foundations of the promise to children is a strong economy. Albertans know that economic strength is a means to a better life, not an end in itself. A robust economy generates the prosperity that allows people to realize their dreams. It creates challenging, high-paying jobs. It sustains a thriving arts and cultural sector. Most importantly, a strong economy gives a society the ability to invest in the programs most valued by its citizens.

The government will move forward in a number of areas to ensure that Alberta remains an economic leader in Canada. First among these is a commitment to the province's agricultural producers and rural communities, the backbone of this province's economy. Through good times and bad the province's farmers and ranchers have never let Albertans down. They provide safe, high-quality, affordable food products and support an economic base that extends well beyond rural communities into a global marketplace. In these times of uncertainty marked by persistent drought and rising input costs this government will not turn its back on its producers.

The government will continue to improve safety nets that allow farmers and ranchers to make the best management decisions for their operations. Through the life sciences strategy and the complementary Alberta agricultural research and innovation strategy it will advance research and innovation, which are the keys to long-term industry growth, profitability, and environmental sustainability. It will work with rural communities to identify and resolve barriers to growth, and it will continue to oppose the monopoly of the Canadian Wheat Board and advocate for marketing choice for Alberta wheat and barley producers.

The government will also focus efforts on ensuring the long-term stability of the energy sector. Energy is a major driver of the province's prosperity, creating jobs, stimulating economic growth in numerous other fields, and generating significant revenues for Albertans. Alberta is well established as a producer of conventional oil and natural gas, but the future of energy development is nonconventional resources like the oil sands, which hold the second largest supply of oil reserves in the world. Given the enormous potential of Alberta's resources, this province will continue to be a leader in the energy economy.

The government will focus on adapting the regulatory regime and investing in energy research and technology development to unleash the potential of nonconventional resources such as oil sands and coal bed methane. New technologies such as the use of carbon dioxide in enhanced oil and gas recovery will also play a role in extending the life span of known resource reservoirs and addressing the province's commitment to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

As well, this year the government will accelerate the implementation of the Alberta energy research strategy. This includes exploring new technologies for the cleaner use of Alberta's vast coal resources. Funding will be provided for a clean coal demonstration project to develop better techniques for the use of coal in electricity generation.

Government will also focus on the consumer side of the energy sector, particularly in the area of electricity. While progress has been made on delivering new generation to meet growing consumer demand, there are still issues to be addressed around customer choice and service, particularly in rural areas. The government will introduce legislation that will refine the structure of the electric industry. This will further level the playing field to attract new investors into Alberta's electricity and natural gas markets to increase competition and value for consumers. It will also provide consumers with a new regulated option to purchase power at a rate tied to the competitive wholesale market.

Agriculture and energy are only two examples of areas in which Alberta is a player in a world market. In all sectors prosperity is created by the evolution to a broader, more diverse, knowledge-based, and globally competitive economy. To encourage this transition, the government will create a value-added strategy. This will be a long-term plan focusing on a 20-year horizon. It will encourage increased manufacturing, tourism, exportable services, and the processing of the province's resources here in Alberta rather than simply exporting raw materials along with the jobs and wealth that go with them to other jurisdictions. Key to this strategy will be mobilizing the enormous potential of Alberta's northern economy for the benefit of all Albertans.

A Clean Environment

The government recognizes that economic growth must not occur at the expense of environmental protection. Instead, they go hand in hand. Sustainable economic growth requires clean air, water, and land, and Albertans will accept no less.

This year the government will move ahead with a made-in-Alberta plan to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. It will reintroduce legislation to enshrine Canada's first comprehensive climate change action plan in law. Albertans are committed to doing their fair share to address global warming, and this bill will reinforce the province's pledge to take meaningful action.

Alberta will continue to be a strong national voice on this issue to ensure that any actions taken have environmental benefits and are not simply motivated by political posturing or rhetoric. This government will not allow Ottawa's implementation of the Kyoto protocol to endanger Alberta's economy, its environment, or its way of life. The government will use any and all tools available to assert the province's constitutional right and responsibility to manage its natural resources.

The government is also moving forward to address Albertans' concerns about the future of one of their most valued resources, water. [And I can say quite honestly that I find water very important. Of course, we do have greenhouses. But it is important.] This spring the government will bring forward a water management strategy that will outline short-, medium-, and long-term actions that can be taken collectively and individually to protect the quality and manage the quantity of Alberta's water supply.

A Solid Infrastructure

One of the key supports for a strong economy is a solid infrastructure. As Alberta has grown, so has its need for health facilities, schools, and roads. The province's unprecedented economic growth has surpassed its investment in capital projects, and Albertans aren't willing to wait until tomorrow for the infrastructure they need today. That's why the government will develop a new capital plan to address infrastructure needs. Budget 2003 will call for significant new investment in each of the next three years toward this priority area. This approach will bring predictability and stability to capital spending and end the pattern of deferring sorely needed infrastructure projects when provincial revenues fall unexpectedly.

The capital plan will include a framework for public/private partnerships that will pull together the best resources and skills from both the public and private sectors. An advisory committee of experts will be struck to evaluate proposals over the life of a project to determine whether there is a net benefit to taxpayers. The government recognizes that the partnership approach will not be the right solution for every project, nor will it replace conventional pay-as-you-go capital financing. However, there are some situations where such an approach may work well. The government will carefully consider partnerships and all other options so that Alberta can meet its infrastructure needs at an affordable price.

The government understands that existing infrastructure must be preserved and maintained in order to continue to serve Albertans in the future. Looking after the infrastructure the province already has will continue to be a high priority for this government. So, too, will be working in partnership with municipalities under the Premier's Task Force on Infrastructure to address their infrastructure needs.

A New Fiscal Framework

The new capital plan is part of a larger fiscal framework the government will implement to bring predictability, sustainability, and more discipline to its fiscal management. Just as the new capital plan will eliminate the need for stop-and-go infrastructure spending, a new sustainability fund will be created to do the same thing for operational spending.

Government will add to the sustainability fund when energy revenues are high and rely on the fund when energy revenues are low to ensure that government spending doesn't rise and fall with volatile energy prices. The new fiscal framework will enable the government to address growth pressures while remaining true to its principles of balanced budgets, debt repayment, and accountability.

A Focus on People

A strong economy and a solid infrastructure enable a society to respond to the needs of people, especially those who are most vulnerable. Albertans recognize that they owe a debt of gratitude to seniors and have a responsibility to care for those who are most vulnerable.

The government will increase monthly payments to low-income seniors who live in lodges and receive the Alberta seniors' benefit to ensure that they can obtain the additional services they require to remain independent and healthy for as long as possible.

This government will also work to ensure that low-income seniors and families, individuals with special needs, people in remote communities, and the homeless have access to basic shelter. It will integrate homeless shelter programs to provide a more comprehensive approach to addressing the needs of homeless and near-homeless Albertans. As well, it will facilitate the development of more affordable housing under the Canada/Alberta affordable housing agreement.

The government will continue to implement the reforms recommended by the low-income program review. Legislation will be introduced to create the framework for a new integrated income support program to begin in 2004. The new program will reduce complexities and improve service in the current system of supports for low-income Albertans. The government will also adjust its employment training programs to be more flexible to make it easier for Albertans to gain the skills they need to find and keep jobs.

A Better Health System

A good health system helps all Albertans play a role in the economic, social, and cultural life of the province. Health care and the need for health system reform have led the public agenda in Alberta and across the country for the past year. System reform will continue to be a major focus of the government in 2003-2004. That's because even with one-third of all government spending going to health care, too many people are still waiting too long in emergency and for diagnostics, surgery, long-term care, and other services. Budget 2003 will increase funding for this priority area.

Still, more money is not the only answer. For Albertans who have been disappointed in their access to the health system or the quality of their care, the need for reform is real and personal. The government will continue to reform the health system to improve access and quality. It will set limits on how long Albertans should wait for selected services like consultations with specialists and some major surgical procedures.

But access is not just about hospitals and high-technology diagnostic procedures. It is about getting good advice quickly and easily no matter what the day or the time, and it's about getting continuing support so Albertans stay healthy. Primary health care reform is essential to make the system work for Albertans. Many family doctors are too rushed to provide the type of care wanted. The government will work with caregivers, especially doctors and nurses, to create 24-hour, seven-days-a-week, comprehensive care practices that make better use of all health professionals.

The ultimate goal of any health system must be to help people enjoy a high quality of health that leads to a high quality of life. Staying healthy is the first step toward that goal. The government will set targets for the next 10 years to develop, implement, and evaluate strategies to promote healthy behaviours and prevent injuries and chronic diseases. This work will begin with diabetes and will extend to other ailments.

The number of Albertans living with diabetes is expected to double over the next 15 years. The rate of incidence of diabetes is even higher in aboriginal communities. The government will develop a new diabetes strategy that will focus on preventing the primary risk factors that lead to type 2 diabetes and addressing the needs of those who already have the disease to prevent and reduce serious complications.

Comprehensive health care requires reliable, immediate information sharing among all the people involved in providing care. Alberta will implement electronic health records to provide quicker access to patient records, fewer treatment errors, improved efficiency, and reduced costs.

The government recognizes that the way to reach its goals will be different in rural Alberta than in the cities. It will develop a rural health action plan to determine how best to implement changes to improve access to health services in rural areas. The plan will focus on primary health care and continuing care reform, ambulance services, and getting and keeping skilled health care workers in small-town Alberta.

Government will ensure that the changing needs of Albertans are met. Continuing care service plans will be implemented in each health region. These will involve fully implementing a co-ordinated system to provide one-stop access to information, assessment, and continuing care referrals as recommended in the long-term care review.

Safe Communities

Staying healthy means staying safe. Albertans already enjoy the lowest property and violent crime rates in western Canada despite having the fastest growing population in the country, but further steps can and will be taken to ensure that all Albertans feel safe in their homes and communities.

New legislation will be introduced to improve the province's corrections system by creating a zero tolerance level for illegal drug use, violence, and gang-related activities in provincial prisons. Offenders will be held fully accountable for misbehaviour while in custody and will have to earn remission through good behaviour, not merely time served.

The government will strengthen the province's ability to prepare for, respond to, and recover from major emergencies by providing each municipality in the province with advice and assistance on developing emergency plans and emergency management training.

The government will improve Albertans' access to justice by introducing a new family law act that consolidates and updates provincial family laws and makes them easier to understand. The bill will address many issues that affect Alberta families including spousal support, child maintenance, custody, and access.

The government will also introduce new legislation this session to amend the Young Offenders Act to reflect federal legislative changes. It will continue to work with the federal government in this area of shared responsibility to produce the best results for young people in the justice system and for communities.

A Full Partner in Canada

Albertans are committed Canadians. They hold dear the traditions that have shaped this nation and the ideals for which it stands. Albertans want to be full and equal partners in Canada, but true partnership is only possible when all parties are respected and valued for what they bring to the table. Alberta's ability to be a partner in Canada is compromised by the current federal government, which often does not listen to the people of this province.

This government remains committed to protecting Albertans' interests nationally. It will continue to press the federal government to make a genuine effort to deal with Albertans' concerns and ensure that their priorities are addressed fairly and genuinely. It will do everything in its power to protect Alberta's economy and make certain that provincial jurisdiction is respected.

The government will also continue to press the federal government to live up to its responsibilities for aboriginal peoples, particularly in the areas of health and child welfare.

Conclusion

Fellow Albertans, the government's agenda for 2003 is about keeping steady as we grow. It is a promise to the children of Alberta. Keeping the promise means unleashing innovation, leading in learning, and competing in a global marketplace. It means making Alberta the best place in the world to live, work, and raise a family. Keeping the promise means showing leadership and working in partnership. Keeping the promise means promoting Alberta's interests and securing benefits for Albertans as equal partners in a strong, united Canada. Keeping the promise means all Albertans working together to turn the many advantages we enjoy today into opportunities for those who follow us.

With the help, goodwill, and hard work of all Albertans it is a promise the government can and will keep.

[Before I thank you all, may I just say again to everyone here that it is a pleasure for me to serve you as the Lieutenant Governor. You've all been great to me, every one of you, and I thank you for that. I just have to say that I am very, very pleased to have Harriet Winspear here with me today. May I just say that Harriet is one of the people that I often talk about because she is a person who knows what volunteering is all about. She is great; she sets such a wonderful example for all Albertans, as I know all the rest of you do too.]

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen, and may God bless you all.

head: Oral Question Period

Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise

Dr. Nicol: In its Speech from the Throne yesterday the government failed to deliver a vision for Alberta's children. Its showcase legislation is a bill that promises no money, no concrete action, and only another committee in the form of the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise. To the Premier: can the Premier explain exactly how this new committee will protect children at risk? Isn't that Children's Services' job?

Mr. Klein: Indeed, it is Children's Services' job, Mr. Speaker, and I daresay that the hon. minister does a commendable, wonderful job of protecting children. But there is also a responsibility on the part of society to protect the best interests of children. This involves community leaders. It involves, of course, parents. It involves teachers. Basically, Alberta's promise to children is to bring all of these factors together, all the community factors, along with government to develop programs that serve the best interests of children. Nothing wrong with that at all.

Dr. Nicol: Can the Premier explain how this new committee will improve opportunities for learning? Shouldn't the Minister of Learning be doing that?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, the hon. Minister of Learning does a wonderful job in the administration of his duties to provide education to children and postsecondary students. He does a wonderful job. But, again, the promise to Albertans relative to children is to involve teachers, community leaders, parents – and I included teachers this time – to shape and mold children to become productive citizens in society. I find absolutely nothing wrong with that.

Dr. Nicol: Can the Premier explain what the difference was between this mandate and the mandate of the commissioner for family and children that started off in the early '90s? Why are we doing that all over again? Why don't we just act on the recommendations of that commission?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I find it very strange indeed that the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition would oppose the involvement of community leaders, would oppose the involvement of parents, would oppose the involvement of teachers, would oppose the involvement of various nonprofit organizations that are involved with children, would oppose these people all coming together to co-ordinate efforts in the best interests of children. It's beyond me why he would oppose these things.

Education Funding

Dr. Nicol: Last year a government-appointed arbitrator negotiated a settlement with Alberta's teachers that the government refused to fund. Because of this, Alberta's school boards need at least $142 million for classroom resources. Yesterday we heard that the government is committing $20 million to classroom resources. To the Minister of Learning: if children are a priority, why did the government offer them $20 million for classroom resources instead of the $142 million they actually need?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, yesterday we took the precedent-setting move of announcing in the throne speech that there would be $20 million to purchase textbooks. This represents about 80 percent of the dollars that school districts use during the year to purchase textbooks. We wanted $20 million targeted to what we heard from parents in the time that we were not sitting in the Legislature, that they wanted resources put in the classroom. These $20 million will be resources that are directed directly towards the classroom.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: if children are a priority, why did the government spend $33 million on the horse racing industry this year and you're only putting $20 million into the classroom?

Mr. Klein: This is comparing apples and oranges and grapes and pears. Mr. Speaker, the amount that goes to the horse racing industry comes from funds generated by the horse racing industry and, of course, the lotteries associated with horse racing and gaming generally. I would remind the hon. member that that money goes to improve and to enhance an industry that is vital to the agricultural community in this province. It keeps literally thousands of people employed: trainers and groomers and lots of low-income earners who would otherwise be on welfare. So overall it's a good program. To compare that program to education spending or to the allocation of money to any other area of government endeavour is entirely unfair because we try to identify priorities. We try to split the pie as evenly as we possibly can.

I mean, there are within this caucus a number of areas where people think money ought not to be spent or money should be spent or more money should be spent. The Liberals have their ideas of where money should be spent. As a matter of fact, they have lots of ideas, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, if we were to accede to the requests of the Liberals and the NDs and all the special-interest groups out there as to where money should be spent – in the first six weeks of 2003 the opposition parties and various stakeholders, special-interest groups have requested almost $7 billion in increased provincial funding, and that's just in documented, on-the-record requests. That's in just the last six weeks.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: if children are a priority, why did the government spend $105 million to upgrade VLTs and you're only putting $20 million into classrooms?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, it's comparing apples, oranges, grapes, pears, and elephants, llamas, and everything else. First of all, the upgrading of VLTs is just like maintaining any other kind of property that the government is responsible for. We're responsible for various vehicles, for various kinds of infrastructure. These things become dated, and they have to be maintained. All the money that is used to upgrade these comes from the VLT profits themselves; in other words, from lottery money.

But, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that we do dedicate VLT revenues to various priorities of government. Here are just a few examples of how VLT revenues are helping to address priorities. Last year, 2002-2003, approximately $42 million in VLT revenues went to Learning directly. Approximately $50 million went to Health and Wellness. Another $50 million went to Infrastructure, including schools. So $142 million in one year alone out of VLT revenues went to priority government services.

We're talking about a revamp or a refit program that is about 10 years in the making, Mr. Speaker. So it stands to reason that these things need to be upgraded from time to time if we're to have VLTs.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, on Family Day hundreds of parents rallied on the steps of the Legislature to express their concern and anger over various problems in Alberta's schools. Not one government MLA accepted their invitations to attend. [interjections] I can hear their regrets; I'll pass them on. To the Minister of Learning: given that an arbitrator gave the teachers a 14 percent wage increase over two years and this government has only given school boards 6 percent to cover those wages, leaving an enormous financial shortfall, does the minister feel that there are millions of dollars of fat to be trimmed from the school system?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the arbitration settlement was a two-year arbitration settlement, not a three-year, which detailed 14.09 percent. What the school boards have actually received – and I will use the gross dollar amount – for the salary enhancement, which was the 4 percent and 2 percent, was $118 million. For the grant rate increases, which were 3 percent and 3 and a half percent, they received another $180 million, for a total of $298 million over two years. The arbitration settlement, according to the Alberta School Boards Association figures, will cost $260 million. Two hundred and ninety-eight million minus 260 million: I think the hon. member can do the math.

Dr. Taft: Let's come at it a different way then. Does the minister believe that there are sufficient funds available to schools to properly support the teaching of the curriculum without any parent fund-raising? A yes or no answer will be fine.

Dr. Oberg: Yes.

Dr. Taft: Given that there are schools in my constituency and across this province where the walls are cracked like dry earth, where rain routinely blows through the window frames, and where broken heating systems mean students wear jackets in the classrooms, how does the minister justify spending $2.2 million on renovating his staff's own offices?

Dr. Oberg: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I could not hear the final part of the question.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Given that there are schools in my constituency and across this province where the walls are cracked like dry earth, where the rain blows through the window frames, and where broken heating systems mean children must wear jackets in the classroom, how does the minister justify spending $2.2 million on renovating his staff's offices?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly invite the hon. member to come to my office. What he would see is some place that has not been renovated in quite a considerable while. What happened in the department's office is that they renovated because they joined several buildings together. Those were renovations that were approved and needed to be done, and the $2.2 million was what was needed.

When it comes to actual construction on schools, we have put in in the last three years very close to a billion dollars, and that's just for new school construction and modernization and renovation. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure, who I'm sure would like to speak on this as well, puts in money each year for operations and maintenance that I believe is in excess of $300 million.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Tory government's failure to fund the arbitrated salary settlement with the province's teachers has left a $142 million hole in the school board budgets and created a financial funding crisis. The government caused this crisis. They provoked the strike with the teachers. They imposed an arbitration process. They are now forcing boards to cut core services. Finally, when a board chair speaks up, they respond with bullying and intimidation. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why is this government refusing to accept its obligations to fund the outcome of an arbitration process that it imposed on teachers and instead is forcing school boards to cut core services, increase class sizes, and incur crippling deficits?

An Hon. Member: Why don't you give the same answer, Lyle?

Dr. Oberg: Well, I will. Mr. Speaker, again I'll beg your indulgence here. I will give the same numbers that I just gave: salary enhancement, 4 percent and 2 percent, for a total of $118 million; grant rate increases, 3 and a half percent and 3 percent, for a total of $180 million; for a grand total of $298 million that went to the school boards in the last two years as an increase. The arbitration settlement came in at $260 million, leaving $38 million.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that when it came to the arbitration arrangement that occurred, first of all, the president of the ATA wanted the arbitration. As a matter of fact, in a meeting with the Premier and myself he pointed that out, that he wanted arbitration. We were in a position where there was a strike going on. Obviously, the hon. member wanted the strike to continue so that students could continue not to learn. We put an end to this, so that's what the arbitration did.

The Speaker: I take it, hon. member, that you want to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, proceed.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, my second question to the same minister: how can the minister expect school boards to find $142 million of so-called efficiencies when they have already had to endure 10 years of this government's cutbacks and neglects?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I find that absolutely absurd. Obviously, the hon. member has not looked at the budget that has been tabled in this House for the last 10 years. The last time there was a budget in this House which showed a decrease for education was in 1994-95. Every year since that time, we have seen increases in education, $298 million in the last two years. Education is something that this government takes extremely seriously. Two hundred and ninety-eight million dollars is a huge increase. When you take this relative to anywhere in the country, we are by far the largest increase.

Mr. Speaker, the other point that I will make today, which is a new point but is something that is on the per capita expenditure on education, is something that Stats Canada put out. It put us, believe it or not, in the number one position at $1,970.80. The interesting part is that the next closest is 14 percent below us, and a place like Ontario is a full $900, or close to 90 percent, below us. When it comes to funding in education, this government has gone above and beyond the call of duty.

Dr. Pannu: So is the minister accusing the School Boards Association of misinformation and, worse still, of lying when it says that the government has left a $142 million hole in school board budgets? Will the minister answer that question honestly?

Dr. Oberg: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. There have been some boards that have budgeted deficits, but they have budgeted deficits because they have those dollars in their operating surplus account. They have taken those dollars out. There was roughly $110 million, $115 million around the province in these accounts that have been accumulated over the years, and many of the school boards will be using those.

We have worked with individual school boards who are looking at running a deficit, and, yes, Edmonton public is one of those. We are currently working with them. Mr. Speaker, to date they have achieved significant savings. There was $1.9 million that they have saved in Metro College. They wrote a letter to me yesterday or the day before asking that an amount be transferred from their operating capital account to their operating account, which was money from the sale of the administration building, which is another $1.9 million. They said in the media that they would receive about $3 million in savings. All of a sudden we're down to around a $6 million issue on a $600 million budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Federal Health Care Funding

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The provision of quality health care services is a vital and primary concern of this government. It is certainly paramount in the minds of Albertans and certainly for the citizens of my constituency of St. Albert. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. In yesterday's federal budget the federal government announced upwards of $34 billion for health care to the provinces and territories. Specifically, there is, as I understand it, an immediate injection of $2.5 billion to be provided to the provinces and to the territories. Could the Minister of Health and Wellness explain to us what that translates to for our citizens in this province?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the arrangement that was made among first ministers in Ottawa the week before last I'll try my best to explain in a relatively straightforward way. The first year of the deal has relative clarity, and it is, as the member has reported, $2.5 billion this year coming through on a per capita basis, and Alberta's share – we've been working with our federal counterparts – would be in the magnitude of $248 million coming this year. If at the end of the first year, 2003-2004, there's a federal surplus, then an additional amount of funding will come through in the amount of $2 billion, which, if distributed on a per capita basis, will result in an additional $200 million to the province of Alberta.

Now, the point is, Mr. Speaker, that this is a significant amount of money, but consider that we spend $19 million a day on health care. The $248 million that we are to receive immediately from the federal government would pay for about another 12 or 13 days of health care; not a great deal. So what it means to Albertans is this. This money, while appreciated, will help shore up what we currently do, but Albertans should not be expecting that their access to physicians or wait lists would be diminished overnight or that access to drugs would somehow be improved. Again, it's a significant amount of money but not when you consider the context of the amount of money that we currently spend on health care at this time.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. My question is with respect to the federal targeted money that was mentioned among the breakdown of the billions of dollars. I want to ask the Minister of Health and Wellness if he could explain to Albertans how that targeted money is going to be translated, again, for us, the Albertans, in the health care provision.

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the years after the first year of this deal, which is essentially a cash deal the first year, in the second year and out there is a great lack of clarity, and there's a lack of clarity in a number of areas. How much money will be provided by the federal government? The Prime Minister talked in the House of Commons about a $17.3 billion deal over three years. His federal Treasury officials were briefing the media the next day in Ottawa saying that the amount of new money was really in the magnitude of $10 billion, far short of anything recommended by either Senator Kirby's report or Mr. Romanow's report.

The issue is also muddled by the concerns about what will or will not qualify for these particular areas that were struck in the accord as being priorities, those areas being the issues of home care, diagnostics, catastrophic drug costs, and primary health care reform. As an example, Mr. Speaker, we previously used a federal primary health care reform initiative to fund our Health Link line, that will hook up everybody throughout the entire province by this summer to telephonic health advice, doctor-approved, nurse-delivered, 24 hours a day. That initiative was funded through federal primary health care reform moneys. When I asked federal officials, "If we expanded that Health Link line to an out-call service and not just an in-call service, would that qualify for the new pool of moneys for primary health care reform?" the answer was: we don't know because the definitions have not yet been established.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there's a lack of clarity because we do not know how this money will be distributed. We don't know if it will be distributed on a per capita basis, which, of course, the province of Alberta would support, but if, for example, in the area of diagnostics the money is distributed on a needs basis, that money may end up going to other parts of Canada and might not ever make it west of the province of Ontario.

So it's for those reasons, Mr. Speaker, that the out-years lack clarity. It seems clear, however, that we'll have to wait for the next Prime Minister and the next government to be able to establish a deal for long-term, sustainable health care funding from the federal government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. O'Neill: Yes. Since the primary vehicle by which we receive the money for health from the federal government is through the Canada health and social transfer protocol agreement, my question to the minister here is: do we have any indication of how and when they are going to carve out moneys and specify moneys in that agreement that will be specifically related to the targeted areas?

Mr. Mar: Well, I should say, Mr. Speaker, that I have much time and much respect for the federal Health minister, Anne McLellan, and I will say that she and ministers of health and first ministers, as well, have much heavy lifting to do over the months to come to try to put some flesh on these bones that were established in the health accord. I think that there are some worthwhile things to pursue in the health accord, including setting aside money through a Canada health transfer, not CHST but a CHT. But with respect to the timing and the establishment of such methods of funding, I think we are probably some number of months away. Again, the federal commitment was for $2.5 billion immediately. Our latest advice is that that may still be several months away from now, so we cannot rely on that money immediately.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

2:00 Children's Services Adoption Web Site

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Placing wards of the government in caring, safe, and permanent homes is an objective all Albertans support. Handled properly, the Internet holds the promise of furthering such placements. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. How did the minister respond when cautioned that the Children's Advocate might object to some of the information on this site?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have never been told that the Children's Advocate might object to some of the information on the site. The wonderful part of this site is that it is picking up where Wednesday's Child leaves off, a program that has long duration but in the last five years funded by the Dave Thomas Foundation and initiated by the now Minister of Learning. We've seen a 70 percent success rate of the 30 children that annually were placed there.

Mr. Speaker, I would just identify a couple of things about that site. That site identified on television, coming into your living room, to probably over millions of viewers if you look at all of Alberta, not only the child but the diagnosis, some very descriptive things about the very special needs of the child. At no time did the opposition or, in fact, any other member of the public raise any concern in the years that this program successfully evolved and adoptions were in place that either triggered or set off any alarm bells with people in the department, including the co-ordinator of freedom of information and protection of privacy. Everybody said that this is very much similar to what had been done previously with the video clips that have been provided through the great work of CFRN TV, which is where that program was initiated.

So to the hon. member opposite, although there were extensive reviews conducted departmentally on the features of the web site, making sure that it was absolutely secure in terms of not being interactive and allowing people to access further information, there was nothing – in other words, behind the site – that would give cause for alarm. The site was launched and to the greatest extent has been positive.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why wasn't the web site cleared with the Privacy Commissioner?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my other hon. colleague might want to respond in terms of the structure in government for the organization of the freedom of information and privacy commissioner.

Quite frankly, the FOIP co-ordinator for our department is part of the government's structure under the Human Resources and Employment ministry. That co-ordinator provided us assurance that this site was appropriate, did not raise any concerns – I think that during the process of evolving, the site may have raised some issues – cleared the site, didn't identify that there was anything further. When the commissioner responded again later and said that he was wanting some investigation, we were pleased to comply.

Mr. Speaker, I think the question that we will still be addressing is: on the longer term, contextually, should the minister go further when approval has already been given by the co-ordinator? That's something that I've already been in discussion on with my hon. colleague the Minister of Government Services, and in the future perhaps we will iron out just exactly what level should be accelerated to the commissioner's position, but we were satisfied that we had accomplished our objectives in our discussion with the co-ordinator and his approval.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: was cost saving a consideration in the hasty launch of the site?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, this site was not announced in haste. This site took a long time to prepare, and a lot of work was done by a lot of people to make sure that the site was appropriately done. Cost saving was never once mentioned, not to me, by any of the officials involved or anybody at all.

The one thing that has been stressed over and over and over again is that we've got in Alberta – and this is the true travesty – some 5,000 children who are permanent wards of the province who have not been able to be adopted, who have not been able to receive the benefit of a positive home. The web site, I believe, Mr. Speaker, with already 13 preliminary matches has shown some great success in enabling us to try and find proper homes for children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

School Boards' Amalgamation

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it is a top priority of this government to maintain the province's high-quality learning system. Alberta's students lead the country and much of the world on national and international tests. Our school boards have been an integral part of this success. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Is the Department of Learning going to reduce the number of school boards through amalgamation?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, this was a question that was raised by a colleague of the hon. member as well as my own colleague. It came about from a meeting where we had 11 school boards sitting in one room at a time, 11 school boards of the greater Edmonton region sitting and talking about putting more resources into the classroom, more resources into education in general. I think the obvious question that came out of this was: "Is there any way that we can direct administration costs into the classrooms? Those administration dollars could be spent there." I responded by saying that the Commission on Learning will be looking at this. As a matter of fact, it was one of the questions that was in the paper that was put out, and I expect them to take a very serious look at it.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: will the Commission on Learning include considering the number of school boards that will best serve the interests of the student and best serve the communities as well as looking at the financial considerations?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, when it comes to the number of school boards, we have reduced the number of school boards from roughly 120 down to the existing number of just over 60. I believe that local decision-making, that the grassroots process is very important in the school system.

In direct response to your question, the learning commission will be looking at all different factors. They have an open hand to look at all the factors when it comes to governance, and I would fully expect that they will be looking at the questions that you just asked.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when do you expect to receive the completed report from the learning commission?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, initially the learning commission was due to report back at the end of June. They gave me their interim report at the end of January and at that time felt that they could not have a good, completed report by the end of June. They have subsequently stated that they would prefer to bring it in around the end of August or the first part of September. I told them that I would prefer to have it in in June, but over that preference was the preference to have a good, completed report, a good, thorough report, and that's what they will be doing. So I'm anticipating it towards the end of August or first part of September.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As utility bills go up, this government's credibility goes down. A quick visit to the web site altaliberals.ab.ca will show just how expensive electricity has become as a result of this Conservative government's boondoggle, this $9 billion boondoggle. Now we find out that municipally owned utilities are the next victim of this expensive power play. My first question is to the Premier. How is preventing future growth of the generating capacity of municipally owned utilities going to lower costs for consumers of electricity in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's all part of the general and overall deregulation scenario. If you're looking for easy answers, you need to look no further than the opposition benches. Their answer is always the same. At least I think it's the same, because we really don't know where they stand on this. Is it to reregulate or to spend more money? That might be their way, but it's not the Alberta way.

I'd like to point some things out. The easy answer ignores the fact – and they ignore the fact because it's politically good for us. Naturally they would ignore it. They ignore the fact that the actual cost of power in Alberta is less than half of what it was when deregulation began on January 1, 2001. On January 1, 2001, it was 13.1 cents a kilowatt-hour. Today it is 6.4 cents. That easy answer ignores the fact that with or without deregulation power generated by natural gas, as that price of natural gas is going up, naturally will be more expensive, then, when natural gas prices are high. I mean, it's quite natural that those prices will go up. The easy answer – and this is something they fail to mention; they fail to mention it all the time – ignores the fact that regulation helps hide or subsidize the true cost of power.

But what the opposition doesn't mention is the collective $100 billion – can you understand? One hundred billion dollars – taxpayer-supported debt for electricity generation that Canadian consumers in other provinces will eventually have to pay. They never mention that. They never mention that in Ontario, for example, every person in that province owes $2,875 in an electricity debt. That's $11,500 for a family of four. They never get out there and spread that word. I hope that you do. I hope that you do. We know that public debt is the Liberal way, Mr. Speaker. Public debt is the Liberal way.

Mr. MacDonald: Given that the easy answer for the Premier is a visit to altaliberals.ab.ca to see just exactly how much Alberta consumers can save from your electricity deregulation scheme, why does this government continue to attack local governments' rights to provide utilities to citizens at the lowest possible cost?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we don't. But I would hope, in the interest of honesty, in the interest of political honesty, something the Liberals always strive for, I think, that they would put on their web site so all can see that every person in the province of Ontario owes a $2,875 electricity debt, $11,500 for a family of four. Put that on your web site and smoke it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I'm shocked at the Premier's reaction.

Why must Alberta consumers always take a backseat to this government's big business friends who are doing nothing but promoting electricity deregulation? The ultimate cost is always paid by the consumers of this province through higher bills.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, relative to the question I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is quite right when he says that the debt in Ontario that is supported by taxpayers is $2,875. In fact, in Manitoba, a long-held ND bastion, that debt is $7,200, and in Quebec it's $5,500.

Mr. Speaker, the only people in here who have ever supported big business sit over there in the ND area. We're saying that we have real time, real pricing, transparent – we talked about a Speech from the Throne that talked about the value of our children. This government will not mortgage their future by artificially subsidizing electricity rates.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Nonrenewable Resource Revenue

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents have been phoning, asking questions about rising natural gas and oil prices and how they affect the provincial revenues. To the Minister of Energy: how much money has the Alberta government collected in nonrenewable resource revenue and freehold mineral tax over the last three years, and how has it been spent?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, as much as this could be an extended answer, let me be extremely brief yet salient because it's important, because no other province in this dominion shares such a great wealth. In fact, in the year 1999-2000 our revenues were $4.7 billion. In the bonanza year, where gas ran to over $10 a gigajoule, the revenue for that year was over $10.8 billion. In fact, in 2001-2002 it was $6.5 billion. We estimate that it'll be around that area this year. Unlike the bonanza year, if you will, where it hit $10.8 billion, natural gas has not hit that plus $10 threshold in the last quarter. So that's $22 billion over the last three fiscal years, 32 percent of total government revenue, and that was put into general revenue and was used to provide funding for key services. For example, it runs the health budget on an annual basis.

The Speaker: Okay, hon. minister. We'll probably have a budget debate sometime this session as well.

The hon. member.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will Alberta continue to have such high revenues in nonrenewable resource revenue and freehold mineral tax in the future?

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I think that this year could accurately be described as one of uncertainty given the situation in the Middle East – the Iraqi situation has led to a war premium on oil – as well as the situation in Venezuela. The general strike in Venezuela has reduced shipments and increased the price of heavy oil. Alberta is known for its abundance of heavy oil, and the spread between light and heavy has never been so narrow. So there's ample evidence to show that this year, as a result of those two effects, has shown us some bonus revenue that wouldn't be expected in the future.

However, Mr. Speaker, natural gas continues to be a fuel of choice. We've had wonderful blizzards and great cold weather in the market area in the east. That demand for this product has continued to drive up the price. It's a freely traded commodity. It's a commodity that we use. We get good prices because we don't have pipeline costs to pay, but it's one that we believe, as the business plan states – I would rather be conservative than liberal in our estimates – still will continue to provide good, strong funding sources for this government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition to royalty resource revenue, the government of Alberta has a fuel tax of 9 cents a litre of gasoline. Could the Minister of Transportation please explain where this revenue goes? He can identify Anthony Henday separately.

Mr. Stelmach: Of the 9 cents a litre that the Alberta government collects in fuel tax, every penny is invested in road infrastructure either through capital grants to municipalities or on the provincially owned highway network system. Unfortunately, though, of the 10 cents of federal tax that is collected, I can assure you that none of that comes back to the province, at least at this particular time.

Energy Conservation Initiatives

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, as a result of government bungling, energy prices have skyrocketed, and this province is not one step closer to meeting greenhouse gas emission targets. For five years the Official Opposition has been urging the government to show some environmental leadership by starting a retrofit loan fund. As other provinces have realized, helping consumers make expensive home retrofits with revenue-neutral loan funds is smart and effective. My questions today are to the Minister of Environment. Why doesn't this minister explain to his colleagues that demand-side management like home retrofits save energy and are important initiatives for preserving the environment and reducing Alberta's greenhouse gas emissions?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's exactly why this government has established and funded Climate Change Central, an organization that's at arm's length from government, to look at these issues. In fact, we have further funded an office of energy efficiency. They have a different title for it now; it's just up and running. One of the things they will be investigating is the ways that consumers can actually save energy and what will encourage consumers to save energy. Is there a possibility that this organization may at some stage look at exactly what the member is talking about? That's for the organization to determine, but they will be looking at all options to encourage consumers to save energy.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Speaker, since Climate Change Central has been in operation for five years and has so far accomplished absolutely nothing, will this minister admit to this Assembly and to the province that that was just another committee struck to do nothing, just to try and make this government look good when they refused to take any action?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have to take exception to her comments, and I will get her the annual reports of Climate Change Central for the last several years and all the activities that have been accomplished. For instance, last year they organized at the University of Alberta a conference and a structure for emissions trading. Presently, they're working and talking to organizations about emissions trading, how those structures should be organized. I can go on and on and on with the activities that Climate Change Central has done, but rather than doing that, I'll simply forward to her the annual reports of Climate Change Central.

I think she should actually apologize to Climate Change Central for saying that they have done nothing.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, I'm just expressing the concerns I hear from people from Climate Change Central themselves.

Will this minister just do the right thing and commit to helping move this government out of the Stone Age and forward on an environmental policy by committing today to bring forward a retrofit loan program that will be revenue neutral for you guys that will help consumers move forward on this issue and save them some money?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, once again, I don't think her constituents have talked to her about the ineffectiveness of Climate Change Central. I don't believe it.

In the larger issue, Mr. Speaker, I will say that we have as a government, very clearly, a climate change action plan, an action plan that we will be committing dollars to, I believe, in the upcoming budget – I hope – and we will be doing that as we go forward. Certainly the members of the opposition will see that we do have a commitment. We're presently talking to various industrial sectors about sectorial agreements as to how they can reduce greenhouse gases at an industry level, and we will continue with our planned investment in innovation and technology sectorial agreements, consumer buy-in among other issues.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm currently touring schools in my Edmonton-Highlands riding. What I see are schools like Eastglen high school, that is desperately in need of some upgrades and refurbishing. I see schools like Rundle elementary, where excellent programs to help high-needs students learn are threatened. What I see, what parents and teachers see is an attempt to preserve excellence in the face of a government-created crisis in our schools. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Does the minister agree with his colleague the chair of the Tory Edmonton caucus when he talks about the schools funding crisis as being part of a concerted effort by the school boards and the school industry, including teachers, to make sure that they are at the head of the line for public dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would definitely, definitely not call this an educational funding crisis. As I illustrated earlier in a response, we're talking 1 percent of a budget, that we will go in and attempt to work with the Edmonton public school board to take a look at and find out if there are ways that those dollars can be saved.

Our teachers are very highly valued professionals. Right now our teachers are at the highest level of any teachers in Canada when it comes to payment. The last arbitration settlement put them there. The dollars have flowed to the school boards in order to pay for those settlements. Again, I don't want to have to reiterate for the third time this question period about how many dollars we've put into the education system. We've put more money in the education system than any other province in Canada and, I would hesitate to say, perhaps any state in the U.S. as well.

Mr. Speaker, our results are number one in the world. Our teachers are the highest paid in the country. We spend more money than anywhere else in the country, yet you call this a crisis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we call it a crisis indeed.

What does the minister have to say to parents who are concerned about the crisis in our schools? Or are they also part of the so-called school industry?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, what I would say to those parents who are concerned about their children is: absolutely, I'm concerned about my children every day. I want to ensure that the education system that is there continues to be there. One of those ways that the education system will continue to be there is through fiscal responsibility. It's my job as Minister of Learning to ensure that fiscal accountability. It's my job as Minister of Learning to ensure that we continue to be number one in the world, and that's a challenge that I take very seriously.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister, then, tell parents who are concerned about crumbling schools, ballooning class sizes, and threatened programs caused by 10 years of Tory cuts why sending in the auditors is the answer to the school crisis?

Dr. Oberg: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'll reiterate again – there seems to be a lack of listening in the Assembly today – that there has not been a cut in education since 1994-1995. The education system took the lowest percentage cut of any department when we went through it in 1993. Since that time, education funding has increased dramatically. Since 1995 education funding has increased 46 percent. Over that same time frame we've seen a 6 percent increase in the number of students.

So I guess my message to the parents is that it is not a crisis. The reason we're going in with an audit team is because the Edmonton public school system is such a decentralized system that dollars are being put out to the schools, and realistically we're looking at where those things are spent. We have some schools that are running a large surplus. We have other schools of the 208 schools in Edmonton public that are running deficits. Quite simply, we're going to go in there and work with Edmonton public to find ways that they can achieve the savings so that they can balance their budget.

Strathcona-Tweedsmuir School Avalanche Victims

Mr. Tannas: Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, February 1, 2003, Alberta suffered a great loss when seven grade 10 students from Strathcona-Tweedsmuir school tragically lost their lives in an avalanche. Together with their families, friends, teachers, and classmates we mourn the loss of Ben Albert, Daniel Arato, Scott Broshko, Alex Pattillo, Michael Shaw, Marissa Staddon, and Jeffrey Tricket.

When we think of young people, our first thoughts are of the excitement and enthusiasm that they show each and every day, excitement for life, for learning, for experiencing new challenges. This tragedy has touched all Albertans. Perhaps we may find comfort and encouragement in the words from David Brower's Let the Mountains Talk, Let the River Run: "A ship in harbour is safe, but that is not what ships were built for."

May God bless Ben, Daniel, Scott, Alex, Michael, Marissa, and Jeffrey and all those who suffer their loss.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

World's Longest Hockey Game Cancer Research Fund-raiser

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise to bring recognition and congratulations to a dedicated group of individuals, led by Dr. Brent Saik of Ardrossan, who this past weekend succeeded in breaking the Guinness world record for playing the longest hockey game.

Dr. Saik and his teammates played their game until 4 p.m. on Sunday, ending 80 hours of play, surpassing the previous record by 11 hours. Dr. Saik, the goaltender for the blue team, defeated the white team by a score of 650 to 628. Even more impressive is the amount of money raised by these players for the Cross Cancer pediatric research centre. The initial goal was to raise $50,000. They doubled that, and the money is still coming in.

In addition to the 40 players, also to be commended are the dozens of dedicated volunteers who kept the game going. I ask that all members of the Legislature join me in congratulating Dr. Brent Saik and his teammates and the volunteers for their dedication to the game of hockey and, moreover, their generous donation to the Cross Cancer pediatric research centre.

Thank you.

Barb Tarbox

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, in recent months we've all heard of the campaign of Barb Tarbox to encourage people to quit smoking. Barb, who is dying of cancer caused by her own smoking, has given all of us a new model of courage, and she deserves all the tributes she is receiving.

Today I want to make a point of recognizing the courage and commitment of Barb's husband, Pat, and her daughter, Mackenzie. Pat and Mackenzie are sharing the last days of their wife and mother, the most important person in their lives, with thousands of others. At a point when anyone else would be demanding privacy and time for themselves and their family, Pat and Mackenzie are providing the time and space for Barb to carry out her campaign. They are making a sacrifice that none of us would want to make, and they deserve our gratitude and respect because of it. Barb's campaign will change the lives of many people for the better, and we will long remember her because of it. We must also remember the contribution her husband and daughter are making so that this campaign is possible.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure every member of this Assembly will join me in recognizing the contribution Pat and Mackenzie Tarbox are making to a better world.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Pierre Lueders and Giulio Zardo

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of all Albertans it's my pleasure to congratulate Pierre Lueders and Giulio Zardo, members of the Canada One two-man bobsled team. On Sunday this duo won a silver medal at the world bobsled championships in Lake Placid, New York. Mr. Zardo hails from Quebec, while Mr. Lueders resides in Alberta.

We are extremely proud of this team's accomplishments. Winning a medal is an incredible feat. Overcoming a number of obstacles to achieve this success makes it even more remarkable. This team has been together just for one year, so this medal is a tribute to their hard work over the past 12 months and ability to reach this level of distinction in such a short time. The duo also faced formidable weather during the competition. Temperatures dropped to minus 36 degrees Celsius, and winds reached more than 35 kilometres per hour. While other teams canceled their training runs, this team braved the cold to continue practising. Such commitment to excellence is an example to all of us.

We are extremely fortunate to have Mr. Lueders with us today, and it's my honour to introduce him to the Members of this Legislative Assembly. I invite him to stand and receive the warm welcome and congratulations of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Calvary Community Church

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today myself and my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods would like to recognize the Calvary Community Church in Mill Woods for their outstanding part of the programming that focuses on single parents and their families. As a part of their programming they have Just Me and the Kids single-parent support groups, which include Tuesday night dinners where the whole family can come for $1, parenting courses, programming specifically for the kids. They provide letters to single parents to be able to get their taxes done for free. They have the Care Closet, which is a clothing bank. They provide food to carry families over as required, and they make sure the kids and even the moms have gifts at Christmas and Mother's Day and birthdays. They also provide celebration meals such as Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners.

We would like to thank this church for providing services that are greatly needed and very much appreciated in our community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Bellerose High School Marathon Hockey Game

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize the courageous students from Bellerose composite high school in St. Albert who also took part in a grueling 79 hour and 59 minute hockey marathon. Out of respect for their marathon counterparts in Sherwood Park who were raising money for cancer, the students gracefully declined to go over the 80-hour point to ensure that their counterparts would receive the Guinness book record for the longest hockey game ever played. Not only did the students show class and character by allowing this to happen and the record to be received, but they also gave $2,000 of their own fund-raising for their school to cancer research.

Forty students took part, but I would like to give special recognition to two of the student organizers, Brandon Jansen and Jeff Beaton. There were also two young ladies who took part in this painstaking game, Sue Beaudette, who finished the match, and Venessa Langhorn, who actually got quite ill and could not finish the event.

Once again, I would like to congratulate all the participants and volunteers from Bellerose composite high school in this outstanding display of heart and determination.

Thank you.

Freedom to Read Week

Mr. Vandermeer: Mr. Speaker, today I'm delighted to rise in recognition of the 19th annual Freedom to Read Week, February 23 to March 1, to reaffirm the importance of open access to reading materials. All Canadians have the fundamental right to have access to all expressions of knowledge, creativity, and intellectual activity and to express their thoughts publicly, as embodied in the nation's Bill of Rights and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This basic right is essential to the health and development of our society and democracy itself.

Writers, publishers, librarians contribute to this freedom by making it possible for readers to choose freely what they read. Our librarians mark Freedom to Read Week by setting up displays and holding special events such as public readings and book displays about access to information and freedom of expression. Freedom to read can never be taken for granted. It is part of a precious heritage that allows us to choose what materials we read and take home from our local library.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Community Development and all members of the Assembly I am pleased to support our libraries and Freedom to Read Week.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Clerk: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the Office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Dr. Oberg, Minister of Learning: an excerpt from the Alberta Teachers' Association brief and general argument submission to the arbitration tribunal under the Education Services Settlement Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the Premier to file with the Assembly a letter from Mayor Bill Smith of the city of Edmonton regarding recommendations of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission. The letter notes a motion passed by Edmonton city council that calls on the government to direct the commission to maintain Edmonton's current number of seats in the provincial Legislature. The letter is being tabled at Mayor Smith's request.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table five copies of a petition with over 370 signatures from Highwood and area residents requesting that the government of Alberta allow "Special Constables to enforce provincial statutes on Primary and Secondary Hwy's within the jurisdictional boundaries of our towns and villages."

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to table with the Assembly copies of a letter from our Premier to Dr. Brent Saik, the organizer of the longest hockey game in history and fund-raiser for cancer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of an announcement of a new awards program to recognize individual Albertans for outstanding achievements and contributions to the arts in the province. This announcement was made during the Canadian Conference of the Arts annual awards presentation which was held here in Edmonton in the fall.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table copies of a letter from a seniors couple in my constituency who are living on a fixed income, and they're forwarding a notice from their landlord that says, "We were hoping to stabilize rents and expenses but due to utility deregulation, rents must again increase."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table over 1,500 signatures from Albertans from places like Rochester, Elk Point, Edmonton, Coalhurst, St. Albert, Calgary, Lethbridge, Slave Lake, Rosemary, Wetaskiwin, and Sherwood Park, just to name a few of the locations. These 1,500 Albertans are urging the Legislative Assembly and particularly this government to "reinstate natural-gas rebates immediately," whether it's an election year or not.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. I first table an Alberta School Boards Association publication, Hot News, dated February 7, 2003. The ASBA is concerned with the crisis in our education system. The $142 million hangover from the teachers' arbitration is causing and forcing the school boards to lay off teachers and cut services to students. That's the first one.

The second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of a letter addressed to me by Mr. Richard Grynas of Edmonton. This is dated February 5, and in this one Mr. Grynas expresses grave concern about the crisis in education that's simply been deepened by the government's refusal to pay for the additional costs to school boards that arise from the arbitrated settlements for teachers' salaries.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today a letter from Sheila Greer of Edmonton dated February 7, 2003, and addressed to the Premier. She's asking the Premier to allocate sufficient funding to the province's education system so that the crisis in our schools may be averted. She's also complaining of the behaviour of the Minister of Learning.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of 855 letters that I received from constituents regarding provincial funding for the Calgary Catholic school district. Four copies of the tabled letters have already been deposited with the Clerk's office due to the volume.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act I table with the Assembly the appropriate copies of the Members' Services Order 1/03, being Constituency Services Amendment Order (No. 11).

As well, pursuant to section 63(2) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act I am pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Information and Privacy Commissioner covering the period April 1, 2001 to March 31, 2002.

Pursuant to section 10 of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act I am pleased to table with the Assembly the final report of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission, entitled Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries and Names for Alberta.

Now, hon. members, we have some business to deal with. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Privilege

Misleading the House

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 15(2) a matter of privilege and, further, or in the alternative, contempt of the House. The issue of contempt deals with comments made by the Minister of Learning on November 25, 2002, on page 1483 of Hansard in his response to questions about class size. As Hansard reports, my questions were to the Minister of Learning, and the question was: "Given that class size was a major issue in the teachers' strike, what action is the minister taking to avoid a new budget-driven crisis?" The minister's response was: "Mr. Speaker, the ATA in their submission to the arbitration tribunal said that the awards could be funded by increasing class size and by decreasing the hours of instruction." In his reply the minister stated, as I said, that the ATA would be willing to accept increased class sizes as well as changes to hours of instruction. I have since received a copy of a letter from the president of the ATA indicating that the minister's reply misrepresented the position of the ATA, and it's rather clear. It says:

On December 5, 2002 I wrote to you concerning your frequently repeated statements that the Alberta Teachers' Association had invited boards to increase class sizes and/or hours of instruction in order to fund arbitrated salary settlements. In that letter I advised you that your comments misrepresented the position of Alberta's teachers and provided the actual text of our brief to the arbitration tribunal on this matter. I also reminded you that we had previously advised your deputy minister of our concerns.

The effect that all of this has had is that the minister has misled the House in his reply and for reasons unknown. The minister's response was not a misstatement of a few words, which might be interpreted in different ways. He was commenting directly on the ATA submission to the tribunal, intentionally citing the ATA's position, although apparently inaccurately.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, 22nd edition, defines contempt as any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt.

Marleau and Montpetit, speaking to the issue of contempt in chapter 3 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, state:

Any conduct which offends the authority or dignity of the House, even though no breach of any specific privilege may have been committed, is referred to as a contempt of the House. Contempt may be an act or an omission; it does not have to actually obstruct or impede the House or a Member, it merely has to have the tendency to produce [the same] results.

Further, Mr. Speaker, John Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, 2nd edition, provides the most direct citation in this particular case of contempt. When speaking of the requirements for a prima facie case of contempt, Maingot argues that it must be shown that the Member was obstructed in his work relating to a proceeding in Parliament and not simply while he was performing his representative duties in his constituency or in other myriad areas . . . nor simply in his private [member] capacity.

Mr. Speaker, quite simply and to the point, I was obstructed or at least was the victim of the same results in performing my duties in the House as one of the members, as a member of the Official Opposition and, even more specifically, Her Majesty's Official Opposition critic for Learning. Information was given by the minister which is not factual. There's a copy of the letter from the arbitrator who speaks to the issue, and in that letter the arbitrator says: accordingly, it would be inaccurate to suggest that the ATA advocated increasing instructional hours or class sizes.

Had the minister provided a statement which reflected the actual position of the Alberta Teachers' Association, my line of questioning and the way I performed my duties could have been substantially different. Therefore, the minister's obstruction is apparent. This had nothing to do with my private capacity nor did it have anything to do with performing the representative duties in my constituency. This obstruction occurred directly and unequivocally in performing my House duties.

Mr. Speaker, in an example case suggested in Maingot's work on pages 233 and 234, a prima facie case was apparent because the RCMP misled the minister, who in turn misled the House and a member of the House in question period. In this circumstance the infraction was much more severe. The minister had the correct information at his disposal and did not accurately present the information. In the case mentioned in Maingot at pages 233, 234, it is stated that before the House will be permitted by the Speaker to embark on a debate in such circumstances . . . an admission by someone in authority . . . either that a Member of the House of Commons was intentionally misled or an admission of facts that leads naturally to the conclusion that a Member was intentionally misled, and a direct relationship between the misleading information and a proceeding in Parliament, is necessary.

The work gives examples of an authority, which might include a minister or an instrument of government policy. In this case, Mr. Speaker, the authority is from the president of the organization that gave the minister the information. Given the circumstances and the nature of the question, clearly the person giving the information to the minister is the one who is stating that the minister misrepresented that information, and I already read part of that letter. Further, the proceedings in parliament, specifically question period, are directly linked to the information, as it was part of the minister's operation in that proceeding.

Mr. Speaker, this is clearly a case of contempt of the House and, further, or in the alternative, a matter of privilege. The minister gave me and the House inaccurate information and either directly or indirectly obstructed and interfered in the performance of my work and rights. If we cannot count on accurate information being brought before the House, I believe it is a grave concern for the principles of accountability, democracy, and fairness, which you and I hold as a standard for this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great honour to be able to stand and dispute the claims that have just been put forward on a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, a point of privilege is a very serious matter. Saying that I have infringed upon the rights of any member of this Assembly is something that I take very seriously, and I would ask that you rule on this immediately to put this to an end.

I will refer to what the hon. member has stated in his letter to you of January 30, 2003.

In his reply the Minister stated that the Alberta Teachers' Association advocated that they would be willing to accept increased class sizes as well as changes to hours of instruction.

I will then, Mr. Speaker, quote from page 1483 of Alberta Hansard, which, as the hon. member has correctly quoted from, was in a question about class size, and I believe that this should be quoted again. I answered the question that was posed by the hon. member by stating, "Mr. Speaker, the ATA in their submission to the arbitration tribunal said that the awards could be funded by increasing class size and by decreasing the hours of instruction." I will say that there probably was a typo or I did misspeak in that the comment was: increasing the hours of instruction.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to a document that was tabled on December 3, 2002. It is sessional paper 700 of 2002. I would draw your attention to page 16, which is section 4 of the general submission by the arbitration tribunal on the Edmonton public school board system. I will say in preface to this that this is a very similar document as to the first six cases that were put forward by the arbitration tribunal. Section 4, ATA's General Submissions, says, "This is a summary of the ATA's submissions about the general considerations which the Arbitration Tribunal should take into account."

I will then turn to page 25 and refer you to section (q), which is out of the same section that deals with the ATA's general submission to the arbitration tribunal.

School boards can accommodate higher salaries and benefits by adjusting instructional hours or class sizes – both of which are outside the scope of the Arbitration Tribunal by virtue of section 23 of the Education Services Settlement Act, though both affect the quality of the teaching work place. Some school boards can use surpluses. Accordingly, there can be no argument about their ability to pay for the increases being sought by the ATA.

In summary, the ATA is seeking end rate grid adjustments of between 18% and 20% for the various school districts, spread over the mandatory two-year term of the collective agreements.

Mr. Speaker, I will also refer you to a document that was tabled today, and that document was an actual part of the submission to the ESSA that the Alberta Teachers' Association made. Again, in prefacing this, I will say that this document was not provided to us until the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association made this available to us. This document is from an ATA brief of general argument to the arbitral tribunal. I will quote halfway down the page, which is section (b):

Nevertheless, for most jurisdictions this is not an issue, in reference to the fair and reasonable compensation.

For those few jurisdictions at or near deficits there are a number of potential methods for implementing reasonable awards, which may or may not be carried out:

- Reduce programmes
- Reduce non-teaching services
- Raise teaching hours of instruction
- Seek power to levy local taxes, establish foundations or other schemes to increase revenue
- Close small schools
- Apply to merge jurisdictions

Then I will quote again.

All of these are clearly inferior to what the ATA has always advocated – often in unison with affected school boards – as the only proper solution:

- Seek greater Government assistance for public education.

Mr. Speaker, there were a lot of words that came to mind when I heard that I was being brought up for a point of privilege. Probably the first one was shock, the second one was dismay, and the third one was sadness that this hon. member would bring this forward. It is very clear in what Hansard has stated that I have brought forward what the ATA has put forward in their submission. I in no way said that the ATA advocated it. In fact, in Hansard there is no word that says advocate there. It said that the ATA put it in their submission.

Mr. Speaker, on December 3 of 2002 the arbitration tribunal was tabled before this Assembly and was open for all members to see and read. This afternoon a part of the actual submission to the ATA was also tabled in this Assembly which said exactly the same thing.

I am extremely distressed that this point of privilege could damage my reputation in this Assembly, that this point of privilege is false, that this point of privilege is not indicative, hopefully – I have held the hon. member in esteem. He has always been a very esteemed colleague. I feel that this takes him over the edge. I believe that what was stated in Hansard is a direct response to what was tabled in this Legislative Assembly, and I would also add and urge the Speaker to take immediate action on this point of privilege as for every minute that this false point of privilege hangs out there, it is damaging to me personally. Mr. Speaker, I would urge you to act promptly, and I would urge you to act in the right manner.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair has listened attentively to the arguments made on this purported question of privilege brought by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and is prepared to rule, primarily because the chair has had several weeks to deal with this matter rather than just the last five or six minutes.

In brief, the member alleges that his ability to perform his duties was obstructed by the Minister of Learning's answers to certain questions concerning the Alberta Teachers' Association on November 25 and December 3, 2002. The member alleges that the minister misled the Assembly in these responses, which led to an alleged contempt of the Assembly. The only way that this could be a prima facie question of privilege would be if the chair found that the Minister of Learning had deliberately or intentionally misled the Assembly.

In his January 30, 2003, letter giving notice of his intention, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods does not directly allege that the minister deliberately or intentionally misled him or the Assembly. The parliamentary authorities are quite clear that for there to be a contempt, there must be a finding that there was some intention to mislead the House. Leading parliamentary authorities on this subject were canvassed in the chair's March 20, 2002, ruling.

In this case, before the matter can be dealt with, there must be a finding under Standing Order 15(6) that the purported question of privilege was raised at the earliest opportunity. Leaving aside the question of what circumstances would allow something done in a previous session to be the subject of a question of privilege in the next session, there is a very real issue about the timeliness of this application. In his notice the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods indicates that this was the earliest he could raise the matter "as the Legislature had adjourned before I learned of the information which has caused me to take this action." The information consisted of letters from Mr. Booi, the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association, and from Mr. David Jones, the head of the government-appointed arbitration tribunal under the Education Services Settlement Act.

Of course, the member could not have had this information as the letter from Mr. Jones was dated December 17, 2002. It cannot be overemphasized that Mr. Jones was responding to a December 11, 2002, letter from the Minister of Learning asking for clarification of the ATA's position, which, in turn, was prompted by a December 5, 2002, letter from Mr. Booi questioning the minister's interpretation, which was the day after the fall sitting concluded. How could the minister have deliberately misled the Assembly if he was not advised of the positions of the parties until after he had spoken?

At best, this is a dispute between members as to facts or interpretation of facts. It would not necessarily be a point of order, and I do not find that it gives rise to a prima facie question of privilege.

The chair wants to take this opportunity to remind members that an allegation of deliberately misleading the House is a very serious matter that is hardly ever made out. Members, however, of a certain age may remember the Profumo affair in England in 1963, when a minister was found to have deliberately misled the House, or the Eggleton affair of February 2002 in the Canadian House of Commons, but these are extremely rare instances. The member cited a 1978 ruling from the Canadian House of Commons involving the RCMP and the then Solicitor General, but as Marleau and Monpetit state at page 87 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, there was a finding that the minister had been deliberately misled by officials. There is no such allegation here.

While members have a duty to be vigilant in their questions and answers, occasionally mistakes may occur. The chair is not suggesting that such occurred in this case but wants to remind members that our procedures provide members with an opportunity to provide additional information following Oral Question Period, and certainly the chair would never deprive a member with an opportunity to take the floor to indicate that he or she was wrong.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak to the motion that I put on the record earlier today. I will certainly request your indulgence because I have to convince you and the members of this House that there indeed is a situation again, an emergency, and for that reason we should suspend the regular business of the House to debate my motion. So I certainly ask for your forbearance. I'll be brief. I'll try to strictly use only those arguments and reasons and facts that I think are pertinent to arguing for genuine urgency.

Speaking to urgency, Alberta students are already paying the price for this government's stubborn refusal to fund the arbitrated salary settlements and to restore operations and maintenance grants and grade 10 credits. I urge you, Mr. Speaker, to allow this debate to proceed this afternoon. The government's failure to address this most urgent matter is creating a genuine emergency, an emergency requiring the immediate attention of the members of this House.

Speaking to urgency, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta School Boards Association said, "The $142 million funding gap facing school boards . . . will turn into a chasm that students across the province will fall into, if the government doesn't foot the bill." The ASBA continues, "Every board in this province will hit the wall – and we are talking cuts to teaching staff, ballooning class sizes – and potentially school closures."

In some school districts cuts are already being made. Edmonton public schools have already canceled or postponed various projects and made significant cuts to their purchase of supplies, equipment, and services. Even with these cuts, Edmonton public schools are still anticipating a $13.5 million shortfall in this year's budget.

So returning to the issue of emergency, Mr. Speaker: why do we need to debate this issue this afternoon rather than wait for the budget debate? The reason is that the school funding crisis that we need to debate today has been caused by past government decisions. The single biggest contributor to the schools' funding crisis is the arbitration settlements reached with the province's teachers last June.

Speaking to urgency, past decisions of the Tory government are causing today's crisis in our schools. The government provoked a strike with teachers. The government imposed an arbitration process and are now refusing to assist school boards to fund the salary settlement, leaving a $142 million hole in school board budgets. Instead, school boards are being forced to cut core services. When school boards dare speak up, the government response is bullying and belligerence and sending in the auditors.

The school funding crisis is a genuine emergency, Mr. Speaker. We need to debate the school crisis in this Assembly this afternoon. I urge you to rule in favour of allowing a debate on this Standing Order 30 request to proceed this afternoon.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning on this motion.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I will stay strictly with the urgency of this motion, as I believe that is what is being debated here today. Budget 2002 was passed in this House, in this Legislative Assembly, back in April of 2002. Included in that were increases to the Alberta school boards' budget of, for the fourth time today, $298 million. In June of this year an arbitration settlement came down which awarded teachers 14.09 percent. That enabled our teachers to be the highest paid in Canada. Indeed, it took a four-year education teacher's pay to, at minimum, $42,867 and a six-year education teacher, at maximum level, to $72,893, which is the number one rank in Canada. There are also benefits on top of that. The arbitration award totaled $260 million over the two years. The school boards were given $298 million.

The third time line that I would stress that this is not urgency today is that the school board knew about the settlement. The school board knew how many dollars they were getting as of September 1, 2002. August 31 is their fiscal year-end. September 1 is the first year of their new budget. Mr. Speaker, they knew how many dollars they were getting. They knew what their teachers' costs were, what the arbitration settlement was at that time, back on September 1.

So speaking directly to the urgency, these are the same situations that have been there since September 1. I feel that there's definitely no case for urgency in this Standing Order 30 today.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on this point.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to add three points to the comments made by my hon. colleague with respect to the urgency. The opposition well knows and the leader of the third party well knows that in the session one of the most important pieces of business that we do is to debate supply, and there will be an opportunity at an appropriate time to debate supply, not once but three times.

The hon. member can anticipate the third-quarter results, which have to be published before the end of February, and he knows that the common practice is shortly thereafter to bring in supplementary supply. I can assure him that he will have the opportunity to debate supplementary supply shortly after the third-quarter results are published.

He can also anticipate an opportunity to debate interim supply, which is normal, because we have to provide for supply to be available immediately after the start of the new fiscal year, April 1. So in the event that full supply has not been completed prior to the end of the fiscal year, interim supply must be in place, and the hon. member has been in this House long enough to know that he will have an opportunity to address all issues of funding through the process of the interim supply debate. Then, of course, the House spends a good month debating the full supply, and he'll have that opportunity.

So it seems premature to bring up an issue around funding at a time when we've started a session, most of the time of which will be devoted to discussing the issue of funding.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let me first of all confirm that the leader of the third party did give proper notice of his intention to seek permission to present this motion under Standing Order 30. Notice was received by my office yesterday, by 1 o'clock, so that requirement had been met.

One of the key considerations that has to be made with respect to the urgency arguments is the whole question of whether or not members will have another opportunity to discuss the matter in question. As this is only the second day, well, perhaps even arguably the first day, of this particular session and some suggestions would be that we'll be here till probably September or October, one would think that since considering the Speech from the Throne has been scheduled this afternoon, there would be an opportunity this afternoon to begin discussion of this subject matter if one so chose. The hon. member himself would be given some priority in terms of the speaking order with respect to the Speech from the Throne. That's one of the courtesies provided to the leader of the party in this Assembly. Having done that, then the other alternatives provided and outlined by the hon. Government House Leader, including the estimates themselves, would certainly provide an opportunity.

So I would suspect that there will be ample opportunity, and the chair does not consider this matter a matter of such degree of urgency that warrants the postponing the business of the session this afternoon. Therefore, the request for leave is not in order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on your purported point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Learning is having a tough day, but he's 2 for 0 now. During the question period the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was asking questions to the hon. Minister of Learning, and in his response to that question I heard the hon. minister say that the hon. member wanted the strike to go on, that he wanted the children to continue not learning, or words to that effect. I did step out and look for the Blues and wasn't able to find them, but perhaps they are there and you have them. That's the best of my recollection of the comments.

I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that this violates Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j).

(h) makes allegations against another member.

I think it's clear that the suggestion that the minister made that the hon. member wanted a strike and wanted children not to learn was an allegation.

(i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another member.

Clearly, this is the case. Obviously, the minister's suggestion implies or asserts that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had motives in challenging the minister on his policies which were unavowed, and quite clearly I would assert that they are false.

(j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

Quite frankly, the suggestion that the hon. Member for Strathcona, who has spent his career promoting education as a professor at the University of Alberta in the Faculty of Education, would like children not to learn is insulting in a very profound way. I would suggest that the minister is out of order and should do the honourable thing and apologize.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the past year we have been involved in numerous discussions in this Legislative Assembly about the whole issue of the strike that occurred, and the hon. members opposite have many times stated that this government wanted a strike. As early as today they said that it was the government that imposed the arbitration.

The ultimate outcome of not stopping a strike, of having a strike that goes on, is that students do not learn, that the teachers are not in the classroom. That is the ultimate consequence of continuing a strike. The only way that we could have gotten the teachers back to work was through the arbitration agreement that the Alberta Teachers' Association told the Premier they wanted as well. So if you say that it was a government-imposed arbitration that the strike was to continue, then the next step is that students would not learn.

Mr. Speaker, I do not find in 23(h), (i), and (j) that there was any intention to impute motive. I was quite simply stating a fact, stating a consequence of a continued strike action, stating a consequence of things that would have occurred if there was not an arbitration process. That is quite simply what was stated in this House today.

The Speaker: Well, let's take a look and see what was actually said, which would probably be very helpful. The hon. Minister of Learning, in responding to a question – and we'll skip the first paragraph of his long answer and go to the second paragraph.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that when it came to the arbitration arrangement that occurred, first of all, the president of the ATA wanted the arbitration. As a matter of fact, in a meeting with the Premier and myself he pointed that out that he wanted arbitration. We were in a position where there was a strike going on. Obviously the hon. member wanted the strike to continue so that students could continue not to learn.

Now, a cursory review of section 23 in our Standing Orders would suggest to me that the making of allegations against another member or imputing false or unavowed motives is a no-no and not part of the tradition of this House. Sometimes I suspect that hon. members, particularly ministers, actually listen to the questions that are being put their way, and when they do that, they tend to probably respond to some words. So may I also quote, then, some words issued by the hon. leader of the third party? I quote from the question.

The government caused this crisis. They provoked the strike with the teachers. They imposed an arbitration process. They are now forcing boards to cut core services, and finally, when a board chair speaks up, they respond with bullying and intimidation.

Section 23, hon. members, refers to accusations against hon. members, not accusations against the government. So no matter how inflamed the hon. Minister of Learning might have been in listening to the questions from the hon. leader of the third party, the hon. leader of the third party was providing the nuances that he has the right to provide in his questions. However, the hon. Minister of Learning did cross the line by making a specific accusation against the leader of the third party. So I am now going to invite the hon. Minister of Learning to revisit his remarks and perhaps make comment with respect to his remarks.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak. I will certainly take the best of three in today's actions and apologize to the hon. member and withdraw my comments.

The Speaker: That matter is ended.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Consideration of Her Honour

head: the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Jacobs moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour for me today to rise in the Legislative Assembly and move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne. The speech that was presented by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, Lois Hole, served to open the Third Session of the 25th Legislature, but it was done in a manner consistent with the best traditions of honour and duty that the office of the Lieutenant Governor represents.

To begin with, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express how grateful I am to live in the province of Alberta. It is a land that is blessed with natural beauty, with pristine mountains and crystal-blue, clear water. It has huge tracts of good agricultural land and an abundance of natural resources: oil, gas, coal, timber, to name a few. As I travel this province and see the diversity – the crops, the herds of cattle, and the scenic beauty – I am filled with a sense of pride and gratitude that Alberta is my home.

It is a pleasure to address the Assembly on behalf of the constituents of Cardston-Taber-Warner. I am proud to represent the people of this riding. I have deep roots in this area as I was born in southern Alberta and raised my family in the community. I am committed to my riding and dedicated to bringing my constituents effective and efficient responses to the issues of this province and the challenges that all of us face together. I am also devoted to voicing their concerns, making sure they are heard. These individuals have elected me as a representative, and it is my job to reflect the views of my constituency to the government. I try to do so with humility and respect and in a manner suitable to the people of my constituency. Mr. Speaker, the constituency I serve has experienced steady growth, allowing for the development of flourishing communities that help to enable our province's prosperity. These contributions have assisted in the development and the continuation of our province's favourable economic position and our ability to offer such a high quality of life that makes Alberta the best place in the world to live.

I should note, however, Mr. Speaker, that even though these rural agriculture-based communities have made positive contributions to Alberta's success, they are today experiencing some challenges; for example, the high cost of electricity generation and delivery, the delivery of health care and education, and also the challenge of loss of population due to the challenges of economic sustainability of family farms and small businesses.

Alberta has many natural advantages which have served as the basis of this province's thriving economy, but our natural advantages have been met by our equally innovative resource of people. It is because of their hard work, ingenuity, and independent attitude that this province is a leader and a great place to live. Alberta has maintained an economic agenda that ensures the existence of a viable free enterprise environment and that provides its businesses with the tools necessary to compete in a global market. Our province's economy remains strong. Alberta held its ground during a time of global economic uncertainty last year, and despite this slowdown that continues to some extent today, our province enjoys a leading economic position.

Over the last 10 years Alberta has had the fastest growing economy in Canada. It is projected for 2003 that Alberta will continue to be a leader with a solid economic performance. Alberta consistently rises above other provinces, having the highest investment per capita in the country. Our unemployment rate is anticipated to remain low, while an additional 40,000 new jobs are expected to be created. The province's vibrant economy clearly not only provides for a healthy job market but also translates into new opportunities for Albertans. As growth continues, this province will also be focused on an approach to maintain our sustainability. This disciplined policy will allow the government to put money towards the province's priorities while ensuring that the finances of this province remain on track for Albertans.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, that the challenge we now face is to stay the course and keep things steady as we grow. The government is committed to its sound fiscal principles. As the Premier reinforced in his televised address, the government will stay centred on getting rid of what is left of our provincial debt, and I commend him and thank him for that. Alberta has put into place sustainable fiscal management plans. These plans include both balanced budgets and debt elimination to render certain our province's continued growth and prosperity. I believe balanced budgets, debt elimination, low taxes, and a minimum of regulation are vitally important to this province's continued prosperity. We must continue to create an economic environment where people are free and are rewarded for their efforts.

Mr. Speaker, coming from a primarily rural constituency, I feel it is my duty today to represent the views of many families involved in farming and agriculture. Agriculture is an imperative sector both to our economy and our history. Alberta was built by farmers and ranchers while today agricultural societies continue to play a crucial role in the development of this province. Agriculture is one of the founding elements of our economy. Alberta is the second largest agricultural producer in Canada despite having only 10 percent of the country's population and 22 percent of its farms. Clearly, our producers know no bounds in developing innovation strategies and embarking on cutting-edge research. It is evident that the agriculture sector plays a vital role in our province's leading economic presence.

As Her Honour pointed out, the government has made a commitment to those in the agriculture sector. The Speech from the Throne reaffirmed the province's dedication to this industry and the people who make it thrive. This government recognizes the significance of food producers across the province. The government will also provide assistance to Alberta producers through a comprehensive portfolio of agriculture safety net programs. These programs show the dedication of the government to an industry that affects all Albertans, be they urban or rural.

Farmers and ranchers across the province can feel assured that their government is committed to addressing the concerns and difficulties agriculture producers face during uncontrollable situations. The government is exploring long-term solutions to maintain the vitality of the agriculture industry. The government is modifying and altering assistance programs for farmers and ranchers in order to alleviate the hardships faced when drought strikes. It is looking into crop insurance programs to enhance these measures, making them more responsive to the needs of farmers. Program flexibility will also be increased to accommodate heightened pressure on the livestock industry.

This year the government will focus on innovative strategies and advanced research to help build an even stronger agriculture sector. These directions will aid in the development of accelerated growth, increased prosperity, and environmental preservation throughout the industry. All members should realize by now that agriculture is not an outdated industry. It is a strong, vibrant, innovative sector that will continue to make Albertans proud well into the 21st century.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to shift my focus and speak on an issue that has sparked much controversy and debate, the Kyoto protocol. No one should doubt that citizens across this province are committed to a clean environment and are more than willing to do their part to maintain a healthy Alberta. The state of our environment is an extremely important issue, but we must ensure that it is addressed in the most appropriate manner and does not come at the expense of stunting our economic growth.

Mr. Speaker, the Kyoto protocol is not the answer. While having good intentions to pose a solution for the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions, good intentions are not good enough. It is not the right solution for Alberta or for Canada. Within Kyoto's international approach there are difficulties. We are seeing problems already in the methods and the science of this design. We need a made-in-Alberta strategy to deal with the unique circumstances of our province. We must develop a plan that is suitable for Albertans, recognizing the environmental concerns and embracing the appropriate solutions while not compromising the economic outlook of our province.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to turn my last remarks to addressing the importance of our children and our families. I certainly agree with the Speech from the Throne in that our children are our greatest resource. These individuals are our future. Therefore, it is vital that we give them every opportunity to grow and develop to their greatest potential. I was pleased that in the throne speech a commitment was made by the government to create an environment where children could achieve their divine potential. I believe that all the areas of commitment that were made in the promise are important. However, I also feel that a great effort should be made to strengthen families. The family is the basic unit of society, and I believe that for a province or a nation to be strong, it must have strong families. These should be families that are accountable and responsible for their own welfare and ones that work together to achieve their goals and objectives.

I would like to note that when I speak of families, I refer, for the most part, to the traditional family, consisting of a father, mother, and children, where each member of the family recognizes their role and responsibility and works hard to succeed. These are the kinds of families that created the foundation for what this province is today. Therefore, I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is imperative for the government to find ways to create a climate to encourage families to stay together and work to achieve success. Families also need to be responsible and accountable to solve their own problems.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in the old adage that it takes a village to raise a child. This village includes grandparents, extended family, teachers, educators, and the community at large. I certainly commend teachers and educators for the vital role they play in teaching our children. It is said that in the first five years of a child's life the child learns the moral and social values that last a lifetime. Therefore, I believe that the home is the most important environment for the child and that a good home and strong family is vital to raising children to become honest, hardworking, and responsible adults.

Mr. Speaker, the issues I have focused on are only some of the important issues facing Alberta. The Speech from the Throne outlines a promise to our children and an agenda for our future. This message highlights many crucial areas that the province will continue working on to find the best strategies and solutions to Alberta's ongoing challenges.

The Speech from the Throne is an extremely important message and one that I am proud to move acceptance of. This speech illustrates the government's leadership and commitment. This message also shows that our government will continue to find new and improved ways of doing things. We will not sit back and be complacent but will discover innovative solutions, ensuring that the high quality of life Albertans enjoy today will continue. I am proud to stand in this Assembly and support these directions for our future and our continued growth and prosperity.

I thank you.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it's with extreme pride that I second the motion for consideration of Her Honour's Speech from the Throne.

It is indeed a privilege to rise this afternoon and reply on behalf of the constituents of Whitecourt-St. Anne. My constituency is fortunate enough to enjoy wide economic diversification, and this results in issues and concerns relating to agriculture, energy, sustainable resources, economic development, infrastructure, health care, education, and utility bills. These are very real concerns to the residents of Whitecourt-St. Anne as well as throughout the province.

The Hon. Lois Hole talked about this government's commitment to both agriculture producers and rural communities. I do agree with Her Honour that they are the backbone of this province. As a member of the Standing Policy Committee on Agriculture and Municipal Affairs I am continually impressed with the complexity of important agriculture issues in Alberta. More importantly, my participation in this committee has heightened my awareness of the very real needs of local producers in Whitecourt-St. Anne. I am fortunate to have had the opportunity to bring these agriculture concerns directly to the attention of my colleagues, including the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Mr. Speaker, her commitment to the sustainability of agriculture is commendable, and I'd like to thank the Member for Drumheller-Chinook for her hard work. She is a true champion in the eyes of rural producers.

I also enjoyed Her Honour speaking of ensuring the long-term stability of the energy sector. These industries generate revenue for government programs but, more importantly, stimulate economic growth. In the Whitecourt-Ste. Anne constituency the lack of frost this last fall has delayed exploration in the petrochemical industry, but since the new year the weather has been much more seasonal, so the oil and gas sectors are now back to their normal winter routines. This is great news for the families in the area as well as the economy of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Her Honour also talked about the consumer side of the energy sector, and this refers to customer choice and service in rural areas. Dramatic increases in utility bills are causing very real hardships in my constituency. Whitecourt-Ste. Anne is home to many low-income and fixed-income households. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, these people find it ever more difficult to pay these increasing bills when their sources of income are not increasing accordingly. I can say with confidence that half of the phone calls, faxes, and e-mails received by my constituency office are directly related to these issues. I realize that a great deal of progress has been made on delivering new generation, but a lot more needs to be done to help the people who do not have the finances to pay for the escalating utility bills. I look forward to the debate in this Assembly regarding the proposed legislation that will help to address these issues. I'm confident that this government will find a way to ease the burden on low-income households across the province.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with Her Honour that one of the key supports for a strong economy is a solid infrastructure. This is very true in my constituency, and thankfully some of the work necessary to keep up with Alberta's growth has already begun. Last year I was thrilled to be part of an announcement of $63 million being dedicated to twinning 50 kilometres of highway 43 in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. This highway has been known for years as the Alaska cutoff and is now a large part of the Canamex north/south trade corridor, that runs through Alberta to the United States and Mexico. It also serves as a gateway to Alaska and the Mackenzie highway. The economy is usually the first reason used to invest in highway infrastructure, but twinning this 50-kilometre stretch will improve the road safety by spreading out traffic, improving intersections, and helping the larger trucks and resource-based equipment get to their destinations. I am committed to ensuring that steady progress is made on this project until its completion in four years.

Her Honour pointed out how the government will continue to reform Alberta's health care system to improve access and quality. Mr. Speaker, many constituents in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne are concerned about the state of health care in their area but do not see boundaries or administrative procedures as important issues. The concerns I hear over and over again regard ensuring effective health care that is delivered in a timely manner. By building on the work that has already been done, I'm confident that progress will continue as the government strives to make health care even more efficient.

Her Honour also talked about the value-added strategy to take advantage of the enormous potential of Alberta's economy. Mr. Speaker, I'd like this government to pursue two very important issues in northern Alberta and in my constituency. First of all, the softwood lumber issue remains a very important issue and continues to have dramatic effect on the local economy. The lumber industry is a major economic component of the Whitecourt-Ste. Anne constituency. While it suffers, so do the spin-off businesses, and the overall result becomes negative for all communities. My hope is that all sides will soon come together to finally settle this dispute. This industry needs to have both the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations push hard for a resolution.

The second issue is the issue of economic development of mineral extraction in northern Alberta. I am presently working on a strategy driven by industry to create investment in the precious mines and minerals sector. Alberta has a potential to launch another lucrative resource-based industry. Junior mineral companies can use today's technology coupled with Alberta's rich resources to develop this exciting new industry. I believe that continued exploration combined with the right investment will create mining opportunities in this province within the decade. The possibility of creating substantial revenue for the province and an opportunity for new and stable employment truly does exist. There are several new diamond mines operating in the Northwest Territories. With less than $3 billion of investment, the people of the territories will see a return of $50 billion.

I believe that Alberta could invest substantially less and generate similar revenues because of our existing infrastructure and well-trained workforce. Diamond discovery is not new to Alberta, and I'm sure that most of you know that in 1958 Alberta's first diamond was found in my constituency, around the Evansburg area, by a local farmer. So prospectors living and working in my constituency have told me of the great potential for diamond and gold discovery in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. As we speak, these same prospectors are working on projects in northern Alberta that have huge potential for mineral extraction. I thank both the ministers of Energy and Economic Development for their encouragement to help this industry develop.

Mr. Speaker, this is just a snapshot of some of the many issues on the minds of residents of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. This year I hope to build on the successful meetings that I've had with the mayors, the Reeves, school boards, REAs, gas co-ops, and other authorities representing the people of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. These representatives have a lot of work to do, and I would like to assist them however I can. I do enjoy partnering with them, as we all play a large role to ensure that Alberta remains the best place to live, work, and raise our families.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank my family for their love and support. I'm very fortunate to have a spouse that supports me. We all know how stressful this job can be at times. My staff both in Edmonton and Mayerthorpe take this job as seriously as I do, and I thank them for that. We will all remain very diligent about responding to the concerns of my constituents. I've always said that I'm not interested in bringing government representation to Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, but I'm truly interested in bringing the interests of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne to this government. I would like to thank the people of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne for giving me the honour of speaking on their behalf today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to start by thanking Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the province for delivering the speech yesterday afternoon with her usual grace and humour and thank her for her continuing outstanding service to the people of Alberta. She makes us all proud.

With respect to the substance of the throne speech, I must confess that I found the speech disappointing. This Speech from the Throne finds the Tory government in the middle point of its mandate. What a difference two years make. Two years ago the money to buy votes in the March 2001 election was just flying out the door. This Tory government spent over $4 billion in rebates of all kinds in the lead-up to the last election. Albertans we talk to have no interest in petty jurisdictional squabbles with Ottawa, that the government seems so keen to ignite. The government wants to keep attacking the Canadian Wheat Board, even when all three Alberta districts elected through democratic process pro Wheat Board directors. The government seems to be out of touch but doesn't see it that way. The government wants to keep fighting yesterday's battles over Kyoto despite the fact that the doomsday scenarios that the Tory government used and the millions of public dollars that the provincial Tories used to frighten Albertans with last fall are nowhere in sight. Anything to take the focus off the failings of this government.

Right now there are two issues making our phones ring off the hook more than any other; namely, high utility bills and the funding crisis in our schools. Albertans are currently suffering the double whammy of high utility bills because of this government's bungled deregulation scheme and sky-high home heating bills. On March 25, 1998, the Premier stood up in this Assembly and promised Albertans that electricity deregulation would make electricity cheaper and that their bills would be lower. The Premier has not been able to keep that promise. Far from lower bills, power bills across the province have nearly doubled as a result of deregulation. While jurisdictions like California and Ontario are wisely backing away from electricity deregulation, the Tory government here plunges blindly ahead. The throne speech refers to changes being proposed to electricity deregulation. Just like four years ago, the government is promising to fix the problem the second time around. This time, however, Albertans are likely to not take the government at face value.

Two years ago, at the same time as the last provincial election, it only took a month of high natural gas prices before this government stepped in with rebates. We started out with rebates of $50 per month. This was later tripled to $150 per month. Now the Minister of Energy tells us that natural gas prices will have to stay high for a whole year, for 12 months, before rebates are even considered. Before a provincial election, natural gas prices had to stay high for only a month before rebates kicked in. After an election they have to stay high for a full year. This is cynical politics at its worst, Mr. Speaker. When the Tory government are looking for votes, they suddenly care about the hardship of high heating bills. Two years before an election it's not on their radar screen.

That's why my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands has called on the government to enact a consumers-first gas price, featuring automatic rebates anytime the price of gas rose 20 percent above the five-year rolling average. It is our gas, Mr. Speaker. Why shouldn't Albertans enjoy the benefit of it? We deserve a rebate system that protects consumers from spikes in the prices, that's free from political interference and manipulation and gives our consumers an advantage over the rest of the continent.

Turning to the genuine emergency being created by this government's refusal to adequately fund schools, it's important for Albertans to understand why there is a financial crisis in our schools. It's not – I repeat: it's not – the fault of school boards. The financial crisis is being inflicted by policy changes made by this provincial government, changes made after school boards had finalized their budgets. It wasn't only the arbitrated settlement with teachers. The Tory government also changed the formula for calculating grants for plant operations and maintenance. The government also capped credits for grade 10 students. The combined impact of failing to pony up for the arbitrated salary settlements and the above policy changes have left a multimillion dollar hole in school board budgets.

Unlike senior levels of government, school boards are not allowed to run deficit budgets. This leaves school boards with no alternative but to cut core services, and these cuts will be highly detrimental to our students. We are talking about increasing class sizes, laying off 350 teachers in Edmonton public alone, cuts to the international baccalaureate program, closing schools. The list goes on and on and on. First, the government provoked teachers into going on strike; then they imposed an arbitration process. Now, instead of ponying up to pay for the arbitration award, the government is instead forcing school boards to cut core services. Then when school boards speak out about the resulting financial crisis, the government responds with bullying and intimidation. It is a government that rules by intimidation and fear: if you dare to speak out, we'll send in the auditors, and if you dare to speak out, we'll threaten you in other ways.

The Alberta School Boards Association has calculated the shortfall from the arbitrated salary settlements alone at $142 million across the province. Michele Mulder has this to say about the funding shortfall:

The $142 million funding gap facing school boards on the teacher salary front will turn into a chasm that students across the province will fall into, if the government doesn't foot the bill. Edmonton Public is not alone in facing cuts to teachers and programs . . . Every board in this province will hit the wall – and we are talking cuts to teaching staff, ballooning . . . and potentially school closures.

Students are being made to suffer because of the government's refusal for the past eight months to fund this funding shortfall. This is wrong and must be set right, Mr. Speaker. The government's refusal to pony up for schools brings into serious question its sincerity of the so-called children's agenda.

The throne speech talks about a bright future for children and youth being the government's highest priority. Well, actions speak louder than words. Meaningful action to assist children is more than setting up a council with a nice-sounding name. It is to undertake concrete initiatives to assist children. Yesterday's federal budget contained hundreds of millions of dollars in initiatives for child care and to give children a better start in life, especially children from low-income families. This government must back up the fine rhetoric in the throne speech with concrete actions to help children in similar ways.

Turning to postsecondary education, there's a growing crisis of affordability for postsecondary students. The University of Alberta has just announced a 6.9 percent overall tuition increase for students next year, and the University of Calgary is contemplating a similar increase. On top of this, the differential tuition that has just been introduced will lead to a further doubling of tuition in faculties such as medicine and law. Community colleges like Grant MacEwan have announced a general tuition increase of 10 percent. Postsecondary education is an investment in the future of our young people. It's a public investment worth making, yet it scarcely rated, as I mentioned, in the throne speech, and certainly there were no concrete initiatives to address the crisis of affordability in postsecondary education. Provinces, such as Manitoba, with far fewer fiscal resources have been able to freeze postsecondary tuition fees. The question that Albertans are asking is: why not Alberta?

Despite the fact that health care is the number one priority of Albertans, yesterday's throne speech surprisingly had very little concrete to offer. Albertans should perhaps be grateful that the government seems to be backing away from some of the more negative recommendations of the Mazankowski report. These are the recommendations that involve delisting of services and user-pay medicine through schemes like imposing health care deductibles.

The return to appointed regional health boards is a real step backwards. The scrapping of health boards, that were two-thirds elected, after barely more than a year is a real slap in the face of local democracy in this province. It is clear that the Tory government doesn't want to have to be responsive to concerns at the local level. It wants a free hand to impose its own health reforms. This is extremely disappointing and regrettable. Albertans will be poorly served through the increasing centralization and control over the health system in the ministry of health. Rural Albertans, in particular, had better watch out.

The throne speech contains a vague commitment to reduce waiting time for surgery and to see specialists. Here, too, actions speak louder than words. Since the last election, waiting time for MRIs, for joint replacements, for heart surgery are all going up, not down.

Turning to affordable housing, $67 million of federal affordable housing moneys have been left sitting on the table for almost a year waiting for the province to match them, yet the number of homeless Albertans continues to rise. The number of Albertans who have been forced to live in temporary or substandard accommodation is growing even faster. Yesterday's federal budget contained even more financial support for affordable housing and to fight homelessness. Will those moneys be left on the table by this provincial government as well? I sincerely hope not, but I fear that they will, Mr. Speaker.

This throne speech promises changes to the government's fiscal framework. What exactly is the fiscal bottom line of this government? I'm afraid we won't know the truth until June, long after the spring sitting is over and after it's too late to do anything with the money other than apply it to debt reduction. This government has underestimated the budget surpluses to the tune of well over $20 billion in the last 10 years. Another multibillion dollar surplus is likely in this year's budget while the funding crisis in schools continues to hover over our heads and is nowhere near being addressed. The human deficit continues to grow.

As the spring sitting of the Legislature gets under way, Mr. Speaker, the New Democrat caucus will continue to focus on the real priorities of Albertans, and we look forward to the work of this House as the session unfolds.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in, so we have five minutes under our rules.

That being the case, then I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I was expecting other government members to be speaking, but I'm happy to be granted the opportunity to rise and speak in response to the Speech from the Throne. I'm remembering that last year the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar felt that I hadn't said enough positive things. I think he said that I hadn't said any positive things about the government, so just to aid him this time, I thought I would put the positive things up front so that he would be sure to hear them.

I was very pleased to see the commitment to integrating the homelessness plans. That is very important for, certainly, members of my constituency, but overall I think it is a concern of a number of people that we haven't had a good, comprehensive handle on the programs that we're offering for the homeless. I think there has been confusion, certainly. We've even seen it in this House over what exists or who's responsible or who's funding who or how or how much. So I think that is a very positive step, and I congratulate the government on having done that.

I also note and I approve of heartily the move to commit to more affordable housing and to working with the feds on more affordable housing. I mean, the province is jumping on the federal bandwagon here, but that's okay. That's a good bandwagon to jump on, so I don't blame the province at all for taking advantage of the plans and programs the federal government has put out. I know that there was $67 million that was up as a matching grant. I know that the government still hasn't quite found the money or where all of that's going to go, but I'm looking forward to any future announcements about how that's all going to work. So two really positive moves forward that I have spoken about many times in this Assembly, and I'm glad to see that, in fact, the government is moving forward on it.

Now I have to move into a series of: here's a good idea, but . . . I have to be suspicious here. I think George Orwell would have loved this government because its use of propaganda and spin is a perfect and classic example of the ministry of truth, and I'll just give you a couple of examples of what I'm talking about.

I think I need to get clarification on what the government is intending through the Speech from the Throne because in the past I have a couple of examples of the government saying one thing and in fact doing another; for example, saying environmental controls around Bovar, but in fact what we get is health warnings to pregnant women not to eat the wildlife or the fish because of contaminated groundwater and snow around Bovar. The government has said that they want to look after children, and then we have cuts in prevention programs. The government says that they want to support healthy lifestyles, but then they won't let adult sport organizations have access to casinos which would keep the programs they offer affordable and accessible. So clarification is what we're looking for. The good idea, but – I'd like to see exactly what the government intends by this.

When it's talking about increasing the Alberta seniors' benefits to seniors in lodges and, I'm assuming, nursing homes, although they're not specified, I'm waiting for the other shoe to drop here because I also know that there's a discussion going on behind closed doors about increasing the co-payment in these care facilities. So is this going to be an instance where the government gives seniors living in those facilities an increase in Alberta seniors' benefits and immediately takes it away by increasing the co-payment? I'm looking for a clarification because that I don't think is going to give the seniors what is stated in the throne speech, which is extra services. I think they're going to get exactly the same thing for more money.

I'd like to raise another point about a possible increase to co-payment, something I think we need to keep in mind if, in fact, that's what the government is considering that may well be a way for those facilities that have no other means of raising money. If the government is not going to give them an increased grant, increasing the co-payment is the only way for them to get the additional money they need to pay the higher electricity bills, natural gas bills, food costs, everything else that's rising for them.

One of the circumstances I've run across is that even for someone with a reasonable pension, once they're paying that co-payment, anywhere between $900 and $1,100, that may be leaving this senior's spouse or partner with fairly limited means. So if you had a take-home pay from your pension of $2,000 but one of the couple is, in fact, in a care facility and is paying $900 or a $1,000 or $1,100 towards the co-payment fee, you're leaving the other spouse with $800 or $900 to live on, which is not a lot of money. I don't think we can assume in this day and age that everyone has their mortgage paid off nicely, so we may be creating a difficulty there.

I was very interested to see the discussion of integrated support, and I ask the government to please not leave Albertans hanging on this. There are a number of individuals out there who are very, very worried about these support benefit programs, and my concern is that if we have different levels of support programs that are integrated – we have the widows' pension, we have AISH, we have SFI, and we have seniors, just to name a few. We haven't seen an inclination in the past from the government to raise all boats to match the one floating highest out of the water.

What we've seen is a tendency to lower them all to submarine levels, and I have a concern there about which programs would be reduced, if in fact that's going to happen, and some reassurance to people that we're not going to have the highest level of support program dropped to the lowest level or to some mid range. Has this happened before? Yes. Indeed it has. We had the government cut almost a dozen universally accessible programs for seniors, cut them all, and provide one program in exchange which was limited as to who could access it, and it gives, in fact, less benefits. So there's one very concrete example of what I'm talking about. I'm wondering if perhaps the age-related benefits discussion is taking place around this integration. This is the discussion that the Minister of Seniors didn't seem to know anything about, so perhaps that's where it was all taking place.

One of the areas that really has very little credibility with me – and let me start by saying as I venture into this area that zero tolerance is a lofty ideal and a good one. But in this particular example the government fails to give any examples of a successful zero tolerance program instituted anywhere, in any corrections system anywhere in the world. In my experience – and I'll admit that I haven't investigated every single one but more than most, I think – I haven't found any prison in the United States, for example, that's been successful with a zero tolerance policy on drugs, violence, or gang relations.

My concern particularly around drugs is that I don't want to see this be an excuse for a lack of action on harm reduction strategies. I think we are jeopardizing the health and safety of our own government workers; that is, the people that are working in the prison systems. If the government is not willing to look at harm reduction strategies like a needle exchange program, which is going to help reduce the number of cases of hep C and HIV, for example, you know, when we have inmates who get into fights or we have to have prison staff come and break that up or deal with them in some way, if we continue to have those levels of infection, the people that ultimately get infected are our government employees.

I call upon the government to make sure that those kinds of harm reduction strategies are going into place. Frankly, it may well be a good idea – I'm yet to be convinced – to try and pursue that course wholeheartedly, but they must be balancing it with harm reduction strategies or they really are, I think, running the risk of harming their staff and putting those inmates through more than what they were sentenced for.

I also had a concern about the statement that was made about arts and culture. It's referring back to a robust economy, that somehow that's going to sustain a thriving arts and cultural sector. That is part of it, but I continue to call upon the government and to look to the government to adequately fund arts and culture. That, in fact, has not been happening. There's been no increase in actual real funding from this government for the arts and cultural sector since 1988. None of these groups or organizations or individual artists get to go to Home Depot and say: please sell me the lumber to build my set or whatever at 1988 prices. They don't get that benefit, and we really need to look to that.

I hear people saying: oh, well, you know, there's been no problem; that sector has stepped up to bat every time; it's not affecting them.

Yes, it is. We've lost a number of companies in the last 10 years: Stage Polaris, Nexus, Mile Zero, Phoenix Theatre. We've had a number of large organizations, especially those affiliated with the government's art stabilization fund, suffer serious financial crisis; for example, Alberta Theatre Projects, again Stage Polaris, the Citadel, the opera, the Edmonton Symphony, and the Calgary Philharmonic, all groups that were supposed to have been helped by the government's art stabilization fund, all of which, after they were on this program, suffered severe financial instability. So 10 years of this government has not been good for the arts.

Issues that I didn't see addressed in the throne speech that I was really hoping to see included an increase in the number of sitting days. The reason for that specifically is that I sit on the Public Accounts Committee, and that committee, mostly through the decision of the government members on it, keeps defeating my motions to sit longer and to have more meetings. As a result of that, I think we need to be very alive to the fact that that committee only meets when we're in session. If we have a very narrow sitting time, we are getting through less than 50 percent of the ministries for scrutiny and review, and I think that's a serious problem for Albertans, for people who work for the government, for people that are interested in how the government does business. More than half of the government ministries are not being reviewed or scrutinized, and I think that's a serious problem.

Now, this is easily addressed. We could meet outside of session. We could meet more than once a week in session. There are certainly ways to do that, but the way it stands now, we're sitting for approximately 12 or 13 weeks when we're in the spring session, a couple of weeks when we're in the fall session. You take off the first week and the couple of weeks we spend in meetings with the Auditor General and you're left with between nine and 11 actual ministries and ministers that appear before the committee. I think that's a problem.

We know by looking at other provinces that, in fact, only one other province goes ministry by ministry. We could switch to a system where we identified issues and pursued a different issue each time. I'm more than willing to look at that, but I still think that we need to be able to cover all of the importance of what our financial and public accounts are about.

I am concerned that I'm not seeing a commitment from the government to upholding democratically elected bodies. I think we've had some pretty chilling examples in the last couple of years where the government has a group that doesn't agree with them and that's it; they're gone, be it a school board, a regional health authority. Now I even see that democratically elected directors for the Wheat Board are being talked about in the Speech from the Throne. It looks like the government is out for them on that one. I think that's an issue, and I'm disappointed that the government isn't willing to address it and be more supportive of democratically elected boards.

I'd like to see a follow-through from the province on its promise of having a rebate kick in for the gas prices. That didn't happen. [interjections] Oh, I'm sorry. I've run out of time. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. Any questions?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to once again respond to the Speech from the Throne, delivered by Her Honour the Honourable Lois Hole. Today I'd like to talk about how the important plans talked about in the Speech from the Throne will affect the people living in Calgary-Buffalo.

Over the past two years I've talked about the unbelievable diversity of cultures, ethnic backgrounds, and incomes in downtown Calgary. My constituency office has received dozens of letters and hundreds of phone calls regarding a long list of issues. Her Honour referred to health care, building safe communities, and protecting seniors and children. These concerns reflect the views of my constituents in Calgary-Buffalo.

People want an accessible, seamless, and dependable health system. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that people in my constituency simply want health care reform to happen right now. More money will not solve the problems facing our health care system. I believe that this government needs to continue changing health care delivery in 2003 to meet the increasing needs of Albertans. I was happy to see Her Honour explain that the government will continue to reform the health care system to improve access and quality. I also agree with Her Honour that access includes getting good advice quickly and easily no matter what the day or the time.

Mr. Speaker, I have talked to several seniors who remain concerned about their health care coverage as Alberta revamps its health system. The scope of coverage, including what services are covered and what will be taken from their benefits, remains a major concern. I'm confident that the answers to these questions will become clear as health care reform moves forward.

Many seniors who call my office also have problems paying their power bills. This troubles me a great deal as these people have worked hard throughout their lives. Many have served in the armed forces, and most of them are unable to contribute to the workforce. I agree with Her Honour that we owe seniors a debt of gratitude, but I do not feel that this debt is being paid as long as these people have a problem paying their bill because they are on fixed incomes. Her Honour referred to extending programs for seniors to ensure that they have shelter. There are many people in my riding who feel that they have the ability to find their own way in their lives after retirement, but as long as skyrocketing power bills continue, many residents have to choose between paying their power bill and buying groceries. My hope is that legislation planned for this session will protect low-income households from future increases.

Critics are quick to point out that deregulation alone is responsible for high power bills. Mr. Speaker, this simply is not the case. Albertans would be paying higher power bills under the old regulated system. However, this government has the ability to refine the structure of the current system to attract new investors and increase competition and value for consumers.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe in a Conservative government that is concerned with the safety of children and people who are unable to care for themselves. My constituency office receives many calls from people asking for information about SFI or AISH benefits. Many homeless people rely on drop-in centres for shelter from the elements. I was pleased to hear Her Honour speak of Alberta's commitment to protect children and give them the best possible start.

In 2001 I was given the honour of chairing the review of the Child Welfare Act. The general consensus from 600 written submissions and over 130 meetings is that Alberta's current Child Welfare Act does a good job of laying out a clear, effective framework for protecting children, but there are many areas open for improvement.

One of the goals of the Child Welfare Act review was to find ways to reallocate resources to improve the effectiveness of the current system. One of the most important facts we learned is the importance of early childhood development. The first three years are the most important years of a person's life, and age three to six is the second most important stage. My goal was to find a way to build a legal foundation that protects children and supports families through the child's early years.

The committee's starting point was to have the best interests and well-being of children in mind along with the fundamental responsibility of parents for their children. I traveled around the province and met with hundreds of stakeholders who each expressed their views and opinions about Alberta's child welfare system. I would like to thank each of them for their time and for sharing their experience and their opinions with me. Late last year the committee finished the review process and developed 55 recommendations for improving child care in Alberta.

I was also happy to hear Her Honour talk about meaningful change in the level of safety and well-being of Alberta's children. As we heard in the Speech from the Throne, the first piece of legislation introduced in this Assembly will help establish a community network to preserve this government's commitment to children. The Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act will bring every sector of Alberta to the table to build the Alberta Centre for Child, Family and Community Research to look at issues and challenges faced by children and families to achieve the ultimate goal of giving Alberta children the best possible start. This is a relatively unique approach to bring all concerned parties to the table to look after the best interests of children.

I will be introducing legislation this session that will contribute to the well-being of children and safety of inner-city communities. As I've mentioned in this Assembly before, Calgary-Buffalo is home for people from all economic classes. For example, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of multimillion-dollar condominiums located near areas ravaged by crime. Since my days as a police officer I have known this to be the reality of urban life, but since becoming an MLA, I've had the opportunity to help communities and law enforcement officials increase the safety and well-being in their neighbourhoods.

Soon after the last provincial election, Mr. Speaker, a resident living in my riding told me about a law passed in Manitoba to help communities reduce street prostitution. I'm very excited to introduce similar legislation in the form of a private member's bill later this spring. I will introduce legislation that will reduce crime, save crumbling communities, and help people to feel safe walking around their neighbourhoods.

This government's vision for health care, the protection of children, and maintaining the well-being of vulnerable Albertans continues to be the focus of my role as representing the needs of my constituents. I'm honoured to represent everyone living in Calgary-Buffalo, and I will continue to enjoy working with the members of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: On Standing Order 29, any questions for the hon. member? There being none, the chair will recognize the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak to the Speech from the Throne. I'd also like to thank Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor for her inspiring speech yesterday. The entire speech was moving and thoughtful.

There are a number of areas in the speech that will be seen as crucial to the well-being of my constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. These areas are: a sustainability fund, the Alberta advantage for our children, an information system for health care, improvements to crop insurance, infrastructure, and increased funding for low-income Albertans.

The Lieutenant Governor stated in the New Fiscal Framework

section that “the new capital plan is part of a larger fiscal framework the government will implement to bring predictability, sustainability, and more discipline to its fiscal management.” My constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have expressed concern over the boom-and-bust cycles that we have faced as a province over the decades. The sustainability fund, which will take the peaks and valleys out of government spending, will bring reassurance to my constituents that when government makes promises for services, the money will be there even in tough times.

I commend the hon. Premier for his restraint in spending and the development of a rainy day fund. Rural Albertans understand planning for hard times. It’s something we’ve done for generations. My constituents come to me time and time again and applaud our government for having balanced budgets, paying off debt, and being accountable. I’m reassured that these principles are still first and foremost in the government’s agenda. It takes a strong commitment and will and leadership to remain true to these goals, and I believe our government is up to the task.

The Lieutenant Governor stated that the Alberta advantage should be “a promise to our children.” I believe it’s important that one generation does not reap the benefits of the Alberta advantage alone and leave nothing for future generations. The Alberta advantage is something that must be sustained for all generations for our province to be successful and to continually prosper.

In the Premier’s televised address he mentioned the development of a wait list registry to be up and running by this summer. This commitment was matched in the Speech from the Throne when the Lieutenant Governor stated, “. . . fully implementing a co-ordinated system to provide one-stop access to information, assessment, and continuing care referrals . . .” I strongly support this initiative. It will allow my constituents and all Albertans to monitor their wait list, allow them to plan their surgeries and tests more effectively. I believe this registry will also better enable patients to make more informed and timely decisions about their health. This should also make for shorter waiting lists.

It was also stated by the Lieutenant Governor that the government will set limits on how long Albertans should wait for selected services like consultations with specialists and some major surgical procedures. That’s certainly good news for patients on waiting lists. However, I do offer a word of warning or caution to our Minister of Health and Wellness that any such policies that be drafted, to ensure that those who drive the health care system do not use such policies against taxpayers for their own profits and ultimately drive up the cost of health care.

The government’s commitment to battle diabetes is also an issue that is dear to me and a number of my constituents. It makes me proud to see that this government is taking a leading role in fighting this disease. I also urge the Minister of Health and Wellness to examine the high cost of needles and diabetic strips that type 1 diabetic patients are faced with every day.

My constituents will be happy to know that this government will “continue to improve safety nets that allow farmers and ranchers to make the best management decisions for their operations.” The people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills will also be happy to know that Alberta’s producer-driven crop insurance and safety net changes will provide farmers with the most extensive and comprehensive set of risk management tools available in all of Canada.

I also stand committed with the farmers in my constituency on allowing an alternative marketing system for wheat and barley producers. My constituents support this government in its struggle against the Canadian Wheat Board. The Alberta government wants a Canadian Wheat Board and federal government regulation to stop standing in the way of opportunity for Alberta producers. The province will continue to pursue marketing choices for Alberta producers because the Canadian Wheat Board system is holding back many producers and investors from pursuing value-added opportunities. We’re not advocating the abolishment of the Canadian Wheat Board. Simply, we’re trying to provide marketing choices like those producers in Ontario now enjoy. In a free and democratic society we should settle for no less.

The issue of infrastructure is a hot topic in my constituency. We need new roads, bridges, and more school modernization for us to continue to be a first-class community. I’m encouraged to see that the Minister of Infrastructure will have more resources at his disposal to address these pressures.

The increased stress on low-income earners due to a higher cost of living has not been forgotten by this government either. In her speech the Lieutenant Governor stated:

The government will increase monthly payments to low-income seniors who live in lodges and receive the Alberta seniors’ benefit to ensure that they can obtain the additional services they require to remain independent and healthy for as long as possible.

I commend the rationality and understanding of this government to recognize that these boom times do have a downside of higher inflation and that we are doing the best to offset these increased costs.

Overall, the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills will be delighted in the bold direction that this government is headed. Showing fiscal restraint in boom times is a commendable characteristic. Providing state-of-the-art medical information systems, recognizing farmers as the backbone of this great province, and increasing funding to both infrastructure and low-income earners shows that this government has its priorities clearly set.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I’d like to thank the Lieutenant Governor on another excellent speech.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29, any questions for the hon. member? There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to respond once again to the Speech from the Throne. As always, it was a delightful experience to have the Lieutenant Governor in the Assembly dispensing not only the Speech from the Throne but some generous hugs to those that were here to hear the speech. I don’t think it’s well known that there is more to those hugs that you received from the Lieutenant Governor than just the warm hug. It’s often accompanied by some rather sage advice whispered quickly in your ear or some comments on current issues that I always find more than interesting. So she does just an excellent job of representing the monarch in our province and is a credit to the position she holds.

The Speech from the Throne started with a bright future for children, and I’m delighted that that’s there because I’m one of those people who firmly believe that getting youngsters off to a good start serves us all so well in the future and, more importantly, serves them as individuals. It’s a time in life when their language is being developed, and it’s a time when they’re learning to question their environment. It’s, more importantly, a time when their social development is well under way. The failure to ensure that the best kind of conditions are in place for those things to happen is well documented in research. Youngsters that have been products of deprived situations have great difficulties with language and social development. As I said, it’s well documented. It’s something you can act on with the assurance that what you do will have great positive implications down the road.

We haven't all the details yet, but I look at what's happening in early programming for youngsters elsewhere, and I notice that a number of states, if they're not actually doing it, are considering moving to full-day kindergarten for five year olds and optional half-day kindergarten for four year olds. The last progress that we made in terms of kindergarten programs in the province was the introduction of the half day, and we even lost that for a brief period of time in the mid-90s. So I hope that when we see all of the throne speech translated into program and action, there will be some movement in providing programs for young children, younger than five years of age, and also an extension of the opportunities for five year olds to engage in preschool programs.

I think that there's a problem, and I took the opportunity when the Children's Services minister was kind enough to invite me to her office to talk about upcoming legislation to talk to her about the difficulty of her department trying to work with children and their families when they don't have control over the SFI funding. If the preservation of family is a high, high priority, then it would seem to me that the Children's Services ministry would be in the best position to know what families need and to assess the impact of programs like SFI on families and to make some adjustments when necessary. I hope it's something that might be seriously considered as we look at a bright future for children that they are dealt with under one department, and I think the umbrella that's best, obviously, is the Ministry of Children's Services.

I was interested in Alberta's promise that's in the speech because it's an inviting notion, that you could marshal all the private and the volunteer organizations in the province in the best interests of children and that somehow by creating an organization you could raise money and you could further their efforts. I don't know what the polite word for it is, Mr. Speaker, but I was surprised, frankly, that there wasn't some reference to the source of Alberta's promise. If you go to the web site and you place the term "America's Promise" into the computer, it'll come up with a document that indicates that America's Promise is based on five efforts:

1. Caring Adults.
2. Safe Places.
3. Healthy Start.
4. Marketable Skills.
5. Opportunities to Serve.

Just coincidentally, it's very, very similar to what we have in the throne speech, and I thought that they might at least acknowledge where they got the ideas from. It's one thing to borrow ideas; as an academic I'm still somewhat sensitive in terms of, if you're borrowing people's work, your obligation to credit where it came from.

America's Promise was quite different from what we have before us in one major way, however, and that is that it was a nonpartisan effort. It was former President Carter and the wife of a former President, Nancy Reagan, Bill Clinton, and I think there was a fourth, a Republican, that joined together to create America's Promise. It was deliberately nonpartisan; they wanted the entire country to be mobilized behind the idea.

I thought: what an opportunity lost in the throne speech when you see the attack on the federal government in the latter parts of the speech. What an opportunity this would have been for the government to show some leadership, to enlist the other provinces. In fact, there's an Ontario program that's much similar to this that I understand is faltering. What a wonderful opportunity this would have been for the government to reach out to other provinces and say: now, let's make this a national effort, regardless of the kind of political party you belong to. What kind of a great impact, the potential that has for children all across the country, not just Alberta.

But as I said, I think it was unfortunately an opportunity lost, and the government has at least the obligation to let the public know where the ideas came from in the first place.

Moving on and still under A Bright Future for Children, the $20 million for school resources was most welcome. I think any help that schools can get they welcome. It amounts to about $35 a student, which, if you translate into today's book prices, would be about a textbook per student. I'm not sure that it comes anywhere close to what schools need in terms of resource money, that it makes it possible to buy the kind of computer software, the kind of computers, the other kinds of basic resources that they need.

I would be curious and I'll be curious when the budget comes forward to find out what the figure of $20 million was based on – how did you come up with a number like $20 million? – and that it was a number designated for classroom resources, because for the last few years in this House we've heard that there are adequate resources in the classroom. When asked in question period, we are constantly assured that, yes, there's adequate money for basic classroom resources, that there's no reason for parents to fund-raise because the money is there. Yet, lo and behold, we have a sum of $20 million placed in the throne speech to accommodate those needs. So, again, I'd like to know why. Where did the figure come from? I think that that $20 million raises the whole question and a more basic question in terms of the funding of education in this province, kindergarten through postsecondary, because what we lack is any kind of a rationale for the money that is doled out by the government to those institutions.

Unlike other jurisdictions, a number of American states have developed adequacy formulas that are public – the public can access them – and say: this is the basis on which we provide money for textbooks; this is the basis on which we provide money for teachers to your jurisdictions. There is a clearly laid out rationale for the moneys that schools receive. I'd submit that the time, Mr. Speaker, for that kind of a rationale to be developed in this province is long overdue, that going from year to year and having an increase somehow or other based on the money that was received by boards or by institutions the previous year and not in any way related to the kind of costs they face is not acceptable. It's a poor way to do business.

I look at the adequacy formulas developed elsewhere, and there are different ways of doing it. I know that the state of Oregon uses an expert panel that sits down and looks at an elementary school and says: "Look, if you have an elementary school of 340 children, these are the kinds of things they are going to need. They're going to need a librarian. They're going to need a teacher for every 17 children in K to 3. They're going to need a counselor for every 250 children." So the adequacy formula lays out very carefully what a school will need. They have a similar specification formula for middle schools. They operate a lot of middle schools. They have the same for high schools, and I know that the model that they use is a 1,000-student high school. The advantages of having some standards in place, even if you haven't got the money that year to finance them, is that they at least set some goals. They allow legislators and they now allow the public to know where the government is going and to make some judgments about the adequacy of the funding that's being provided. It's not easy.

The people in Oregon use an expert panel to come up with the adequacy formula, but other states have tried some rather complicated statistical analysis not very satisfactorily. Other states have used exemplary school districts, school districts that do very well on tests and various measures. They use that as the model and try to fund all of the school districts across the state to a similar level, giving them the same resources.

So, again, the need for an adequacy formula has never been more apparent than when you read the Speech from the Throne. The postsecondary institutions in the province, I know, are still trying to recover from the cuts of the mid-90s. They've never really come out of those cuts, and you see now the pressure for differential fees at the two major universities. You see the constant pressure on tuition, and there seems to be no end in sight. Again, I think part of the problem is that there's no rationale for how the money is distributed to those institutions other than on the basis of the previous year's funding.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29, if you have any questions. There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure and honour to rise today and respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered by the Lieutenant Governor, Her Honour Lois Hole, to open the Third Session of the 25th Legislature. It is with great esteem that I support the values and direction delivered in the Speech from the Throne, and I thank the Lieutenant Governor for doing an excellent and gracious job.

The speech is an important message outlining the agenda and standards for the upcoming session. These plans are more than just ideas but, rather, directions and goals of where the government is heading and how we can continue to build the best place in the world to live, in Alberta. This plan also embodies the hopes and dreams of our fellow Albertans and provides the directions for how these ideals become realities.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to stand in this Assembly today representing all my constituents of the riding of Calgary-Fort. I'm committed to working hard with all my colleagues to ensure that individuals who have elected me will have effective representation. I'm dedicated to providing my constituents with efficient and comprehensive responses to Alberta's ongoing concerns.

Over the last year Alberta remained committed to sustaining our province's high quality of life. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to reflect on 2002 and highlight some of the many achievements and accomplishments our province has attained. Alberta's health care system was ranked among the best in the country by the Canadian Institute for Health Information. Alberta became the first province to establish a pharmaceutical information network. This network allows for the exchange of electronic medical information. The government increased education spending to $3.5 billion for 2002-2003, while adult learning increased over $1.3 billion. The government established 165 new scholarships for apprentices. Alberta became the first province to launch widespread immunization to infants for bacterial infections and meningitis. The Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act created scholarships and awards acknowledging exceptional talent in youth in the areas of citizenship and art. The government upgraded current technology to find innovative strategies for the reduction of carbon dioxide emissions by 85 percent in heavy oil extraction. This was achieved through a joint venture with Canadian oil and gas producers in an oil research project.

I would like to note that none of these achievements would have been possible if it were not for the hard work, commitment, and dedication of Albertans across the province. The year 2002 shaped up as a favourable and prosperous year, but it was not without challenges. As the Lieutenant Governor stated, it is our pride that stems from meeting challenges head-on. Our government and its citizens responded efficiently, effectively to the complications and difficulties that this province faced.

Alberta expressed its opposition to the Kyoto protocol and was to the utmost vocal in its resistance, as Her Honour expressed. Albertans are dedicated to doing their role to address global warming. Our province proposed a made-in-Alberta solution to reduce emission of greenhouse gases while not jeopardizing the global competitiveness of the Alberta economy. The Climate Change and Emissions Management Act supports climate change measures but reiterates the ownership of our natural resources. The proposed plan balances the environment's protection with Alberta's economic growth.

The year 2002 saw those in the agricultural industry feel the hardships of difficult drought. Alberta experienced the most horrendous drought conditions this province has faced in 133 years of recorded weather history. Our government responded by providing $324 million in aid to Alberta farmers through the farm income assistance program. The province also suffered the worst grasshopper infestation in 30 years; $10.3 million was given through a cost-sharing program to compensate farmers for their losses. These responsive measures were taken to ease the difficulties of Alberta farmers and the industry that we depend on every single day.

The government and citizens across the province responded to the challenges put before them. These difficulties test our ability and our effective responsiveness to new pressures but aid in making Alberta stronger.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to shift my focus to the Alberta economy. As we face global economic uncertainties, the government has begun developing long-term strategies to sustain the high quality of life Albertans have worked hard to achieve. Despite ambiguities and uncertainties in the world community Alberta's economy remains strong and continues along its pattern of growth. Over the last year the province led the rest of Canada, experiencing the highest growth rate among all the provinces. It is projected that in 2003 Alberta will again be a leader, with a presence among the top provinces, with the highest economic growth. Alberta continues to prosper and meet new highs as the inventory of major Alberta projects reaches a new record, indicating $85.2 billion and 934 projects.

Mr. Lukaszuk: How many?

Mr. Cao: Nine hundred and thirty-four projects.

Our province was also recognized by the Fraser Institute with an award honouring Alberta's fiscal performance. The institute ranked our performance as number one across Canada.

Our province's continued development has helped us to maintain our solid financial position. This growth has not only occurred in sectors that have proven favourable to Alberta but also come from diversifying towards new innovations and strategies, offsetting the volatility of the market in energy. As the Lieutenant Governor alluded to, this new strategy has become crucial in sustaining the long-term growth and prosperity of our province. Through the work of the Financial Management Commission Alberta will once again be the leader in finding innovative ways to pursue our fiscal priorities, and although the government will be developing new ways to manage Alberta's finances, the government remains dedicated to sound fiscal management, balanced budgets, and debt elimination.

As Her Honour Lois Hole expressed, a strong economy allows our society to invest in initiatives supported by its people. Alberta's policy of sustainability permits excess dollars to be transferred into health care, education, social assistance programs while keeping a strong financial record. Alberta has one of the highest median incomes across the nation, but it is important to note that it also maintains one of the lowest poverty rates in the country.

However, despite our province's economic growth, wealth, and success there are Albertans that are in need of assistance across the province, and these citizens may be more vulnerable due to disabilities, special needs, or unique circumstances. Low income and poverty are consequential concerns. They are issues that affect communities throughout Alberta. Despite our low rate of impoverishment not all Albertans are isolated from the hardships of poverty. Our province is devoted to reducing impoverishment by giving these individuals the support and the instruments needed to help them help themselves.

Mr. Speaker, the government remains committed to providing for those that may be most vulnerable. Alberta recognizes the unique situation they face, the importance of supporting these individuals. The government continues to put into place instruments and measures to assist these citizens, utilizing their strengths and encouraging their talents while providing them with opportunities to contribute to the growth and prosperity of our province.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government offers programs and services to children, seniors, and families in need. Housing assistance is provided to low-income families and those that are most vulnerable in society. As Her Honour conveyed, shelter is a basic necessity in which our government will ensure that those in need will have access. The province is addressing housing concerns through rent supplements, social housing, special-purpose housing. Other areas of support for those in need come in forms of income assistance, tax cuts, child care support services, subsidies for child care, health coverage, and job training.

The government is reviewing and modifying its assistance programs, finding new ways to deliver these services efficiently, effectively to those who are vulnerable. The low-income review is mapping the future agenda for the single-income support program. The government is designing this new program to be less complicated and easier to understand while focusing on what is most needed for those with low incomes. Employment training programs will be altered to assist Albertans, giving them confidence and identifying their strengths. These initiatives will provide relief to individuals while giving them the necessary tools to ease difficulties and become independent. Mr. Speaker, the government recognizes the need and remains committed to delivering assistance to alleviate economic pressures while designing programs and providing tools to utilize the strengths and talents of every Albertan.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, Alberta had a busy year in 2002, and stemming from the direction given in the Speech from the Throne, 2003 will shape up to be just as busy. However, the government has mapped out an agenda that ensures our province's continued success. Glancing back, we see Alberta as a great success story. Looking forward, Alberta is leading in many important areas. If we have any issue, it is the issue other jurisdictions would love and wish to have. To me, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's issue is not the lack of public revenues, but it is the challenge of divvying up amongst stakeholder groups. My analogy is that the Alberta pizza has been ever growing in size, but the arguments are in the slicing. I envision a need to find a new, innovative, and daring way to slice the Alberta public pizza. For that reason, I will introduce a private member's bill, the financial summit act, with the intention to open up a new way, a co-operative way for all stakeholders and interested groups to share fairly, equitably, and openly. We have only one pizza on the table. The bigger the slice here means a smaller slice there.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for the opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I am very pleased to support this message as it represents and exemplifies our government's solid record, leadership capability, vision for the future, goals for continued prosperity, and commitment to the people across our province.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in now. There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would like to acknowledge today the Lieutenant Governor, Her Honour Lois E. Hole, for her delightful and insightful delivery of the Speech from the Throne yesterday in this Assembly's Chamber. I would also like to say and recognize the fact that I am very proud and have always been in admiration of this wonderful woman who represents the Queen in our province and, indeed, whom I have the honour of representing since she is a constituent of mine in St. Albert.

Six years ago, Mr. Speaker, I rose in this Assembly and spoke in response to the Speech from the Throne, in 1997, and I indicated that I believed then that the sky is not falling. I spoke figuratively then, and I speak figuratively today to say that I still believe the sky is not falling. As a result of 9-11 I can also say that I believe the sky is not falling, literally, as well in Alberta, and please God, it will not.

Why I say this is because I feel that the theme of yesterday's Speech from the Throne, the message of our government, is that we live in a province that is well blessed, a province that is well governed. The direction that was indicated in the Speech from the Throne yesterday is one of optimism, not only for today, and for the delivery of good governance and the enabling of good services to the people of Alberta during this year and during this term, but also for the whole of the province and this country, because I think it sets an example of what we want to leave for the future, for our children.

In particular, of course, the Speech from the Throne yesterday spoke about a bright future for our children. We do enjoy, as I said, a very high quality of life today. We have, through the work of those who went before us, those in the far distant past and those in the immediate past who have helped to build, a province that is caring, that I do believe is fiscally responsible, that has cleared the deck of debt for us as citizens and looks to the future so that we don't burden our children with that debt that they would have to pay off without providing for the services that growth and the future will demand.

Yesterday's Speech from the Throne spoke about the challenges that we will be facing in the future, and indeed those are challenges that we face in microcosm, I would say, in my constituency. As the speech indicated and as the government direction has articulated in yesterday's message, we spoke about the direction of Alberta's Promise, Bill 1, that will look to of course providing for and acknowledging our responsibility as government, a promise that we must make to our children and to future generations that we will provide them with the opportunity for a healthy lifestyle, for a good education, and for the circumstances under which and within which they can grow and become not only productive but very, very loving, caring, giving, and responsible citizens of both the province and the country.

In particular, I want to speak about the reference to the children and the opportunities. Yesterday's speech spoke, again, of the opportunities of early intervention that we must pay attention to for children who are at risk and for the responsibility of the government to care for those children and supplement their needs if the community at large and the family, of course, does not provide it. But we also indicated in the speech that as a government we have the responsibility to create the circumstances for the family to provide for their children and the children of the broader community as well.

I'd like to take a moment to boast about St. Albert because there are lots of things that I can boast about in St. Albert, not through my efforts but through the efforts of those who work so hard for and within the community to create these educational and caring opportunities.

We have three school districts who govern education in my community. We have the St. Albert Catholic, the St. Albert Protestant, and the Francophone boards, who provide a wide range of programs, from the gifted to those who are indeed special-needs children. They provide it right across the spectrum from nursery school, as we used to call it, or ECS, right through to grade 12, which has enabled my community to send thousands of our residents to postsecondary institutions not only in the greater capital region but also across this province, this country, and this continent.

I'd like to also indicate that certainly in St. Albert our students outperform the Alberta and Canadian averages for academic excellence, which is something that I noted when we got a printout of how our students are doing. We do outnumber the rest of the province both with regard to the number of recipients and to the amount of the awards for Rutherford and Louise McKinney scholarships. That's a feather in our cap but a feather in each of the caps of the individual students who have worked so hard. In other words, it has paid off for them to study hard, and they are putting their brains to work to earn not only a good education but some money for themselves.

The other interesting thing that I want to indicate, because the direction was planted in the speech yesterday, was the fact that our school dropout rate in St. Albert is among the lowest for the province's urban areas, and I attribute that to: the quality of the programs that have been put in place will continue to be put in place and continue to be enabled by virtue of our Department of Learning to be available for the children not only in my constituency but indeed across this province.

I also feel that I want to acknowledge the fact that we are in St. Albert a very well-educated community. Seventy-six percent of our residents and our workforce have a postsecondary education, which is a high percentage. The responsibility for us as a government – again, it was indicated in the speech yesterday – is to continue to ensure that we have the wherewithal for our residents to become an active partner in what we are called: a continuous learning community. We do have the presence of Athabasca University in our community. We have Fairview College in our community as well as those residents who attend NAIT, Grant MacEwan, and even as far south as the University of Lethbridge. A number of our residents attend both the campus courses here in Edmonton as well as by way of residence the University of Lethbridge. They do attend the University of Alberta, of course, as well, which has a strong component of research as well as teaching capabilities and excellence.

Yesterday's speech also indicated that we are challenged as a province with our infrastructure both horizontal and vertical, and my community is no exception. I am pleased to say that because we are within the jurisdiction of the Capital health authority, we have Sturgeon community hospital, which attends to the needs with both day and overnight surgery procedures provided there as well as day programs not only for those who require them on an ongoing basis but for those who also need them in crisis situations.

We also have demonstrated over the years that we are a caring community through our long-term care health facilities, and I am happy to acknowledge the fact that most recently it has been announced that we will have a new P3 project, a long-term care project that will be adjacent to the Sturgeon hospital by the Citadel company, who will be doing it, and a redevelopment of the Youville home, which has quality of care par excellence but has a building that prohibits it and restrains it from providing the most current wherewithal and ambience with which to care for those who have needs of long-term care.

I want to also mention that, of course, with the Speech from the Throne there was mention of the government's plan to develop a new capital plan to address the infrastructure. My constituents have told me over and over and over again that the peaks and valleys roller coaster is something that they can't tolerate much longer. So the indication from the Speech from the Throne, knowing that we as a government are going to address this and level it off and give some predictability as well as sustainability to not only invest properly our revenues, dedicate them, and provide for capital and infrastructure needs, is a very, very hopeful sign and a welcome sign to my constituents in my community.

In yesterday's Speech from the Throne, too, there was mention, of course, that "a strong economy and a solid infrastructure enable a society to respond to the needs of people, especially those who are most vulnerable." That is the responsibility that I know our government takes very, very seriously. We always want to help those to help themselves, but we take seriously our responsibility to help those who cannot help themselves. That is why there is mention in the throne speech of this focus, if you will, toward affordable housing to help people to be not only independent but to be able to afford within their own budgets a decent circumstance under which they can afford their own space and the responsibility for their own space.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I didn't speak about what I consider a very healthy approach to reforming our health care system in light of what we all know is a top priority of this government. We do need to reform it in order for us to implement such strategies as increasing the scope of practice for those who are health care providers. It is key to making the system work efficiently and economically, but it is more key, if I could say that, to making sure that those who are in need of health care services are able to access it with the least amount of hoops to go through, of mountains to climb, of side roads to take and so that they can get service quickly, readily, and appropriately from the appropriate provider.

I do welcome the opportunity that we will be receiving by way of funds from the federal government, but I must say that as a government we take our responsibility seriously to provide health care for the citizens of Alberta, and we are finding ways to do it which are most efficient, most efficacious, and most productive not only for those receiving but for those delivering the skills that they have so appropriately acquired in their respective professions.

I want to conclude by saying that as the Speech from the Throne concluded with our affirmation of our position within the country of Canada and our provincial role, I share the pride of our government in making sure that we and fellow Albertans realize what a role we play, what responsibilities we graciously and generously accept to play our role to make this country strong and to make sure that the environment in which we all live as Albertans and Canadians is one that is economically strong and socially responsible, and that's what I believe is the message the Speech from the Throne delivered yesterday.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the provisions under Standing Order 29(2)(a) now are available. The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky under provision of Standing Order 29.

Mr. Knight: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Knight: Thank you. To the Member for St. Albert. I listened and heard your comments with respect to what was said in the throne speech, and the support of children, of course, is extremely important. I have a question for you with respect to FAS. It was mentioned, of course, in the throne speech, and it's such an important issue, I think, for Alberta's children. My question would be: do you have any idea what might be our initial steps to confront and combat this extremely serious situation for Alberta's children?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for his question. We all know that FAS knows no socioeconomic bounds. It is not limited to a particular segment of our society, so from my perspective – and I must say that that's what our community volunteer centre through our St. Albert Help Society, in co-operation with FCSS and those preventive measures that they're all engaged in, are engaged in: a campaign of education to educate the women who will be carrying these children to make sure that they do not consume alcohol while they are pregnant. It is a preventable disease, and indeed it will only be prevented through awareness, through education, and through the responsible actions of those who carry our future children.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a few brief comments, although the Speech from the Throne could involve many areas that one would like to speak on.

First, I want to add my compliments to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor on her very gracious and very human presentation of our speech. We are indeed fortunate in this province to have this gracious lady as our Lieutenant Governor. Others have commented on the very heartfelt way that Her Honour presented the speech.

I wanted to mostly comment in my few moments, Mr. Speaker, on the promise to children. I feel very strongly about it, this government feels very strongly about it, and I commend the hon. Minister of Children's Services for her efforts in ensuring that all children have an opportunity to reach their potential. Part of that, certainly, is education, and we have talked a lot about that today. It is an important area to all of us, whether it's an urban school who faces many different needs or whether it's a rural school who faces many different challenges.

I'm just going to narrow my comments to a school I'm fairly familiar with, which is a little school in my constituency, the school at New Brigden. I want to talk about the dedication of not just the teachers, because they are dedicated in that area, but of the whole community, that works very hard to ensure that that school, with under 50 students, a school that was built in the 1950s, has a lot of pride. Ministers that have visited it have noted how well it's cared for by our local custodians.

Mostly what I want to comment on is the quality of education that these young students get. It may seem that when you're in a school that has triple grading, that has shortened noon hours and recesses to accommodate busing, there could be some disadvantages. But last spring there was a nationwide scholastic challenge. I apologize; I don't recall the name of it. There were some 50,000 students across Canada who took part in it, and it was for grade 8 students. I was so proud to learn that a young lady, Sheila Pratt, from that small school placed four points below the Canadian champion, who was a young student who was in a gifted program at Queen's University.

So this young lady in grade 8, with a full education in this small school, faced that challenge. But there was even more pride when I realized that the second-place winner – and Sheila, incidentally, was first in Alberta – was also from that school, a young man, Darcy Blair. He would have been first had he been competing in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, or British Columbia. He placed second in our province. This was a competition that was very broad. It was across all of the subjects. It wasn't limited to mathematics or social studies or language arts. It made me realize just how important our commitment is to these students wherever they are and whatever their school makeup is. Every child in this province has the opportunity to reach, to the best of their ability, their potential. I just applaud the teachers, the community, the parents council, who have worked so hard to ensure that excellence occurs in that very small school. So nobody will tell me that there is this distinct disadvantage to living far away from major centres, 210 miles from any of the three that are within distance, and that you can't achieve it and that it doesn't take the whole community to provide a valuable education to our students.

Having said that, I was also very pleased to acknowledge the strong commitment to agriculture. Mr. Speaker, 2002 is a year that I think most of us in that industry would like to wipe off the calendar, didn't feel sad about when we stroked December 31 off and entered into this new year. Of course, we're all encouraged by the increased moisture. I believe the city of Edmonton has more snow now than it has had in the past seven years. I know that it's somewhat of a struggle for snow removal, but I can tell you that it has given our agricultural producers a great lift, particularly east of the city, where they have had four years of drought conditions and at least have now the potential of some runoff and some spring moisture. We will continue to work very hard to improve our safety nets, our risk management tools for producers, and I will have a greater opportunity to speak to that, of course, when we debate agriculture later on in the year.

The health system improvements and reform go on, Mr. Speaker, and must go on. We do have to continue to improve access and quality. Those of us who represent rural ridings understand that maybe even better than most. Whether it's 10 minutes to an ambulance is not our first concern; it's that we have very well-trained people who can manage situations on the spot. I remind people that 99 percent of the resources that drive the economy of this province are produced in the rural areas of this province, and with that comes a great deal of concern for the safety of the individuals who work in somewhat hazardous industries.

The focus on people is evident in this speech, whether it's safe communities, education, health.

Again, I will close by saying that I and, I believe, all of my colleagues in government will continue to keep our promise to the children of this province that they will have the opportunity to realize their dreams and to have a very bright and successful future.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn the debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: I would move that we adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:23 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, February 19, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/02/19

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Consideration of Her Honour

head: the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Jacobs moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 19: Mrs. McClellan]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure this evening to rise and make some comments on the Speech from the Throne.

The Speech from the Throne, as presented this week, makes a lot of promises. It really doesn't do a lot to outline the actual plans that the government intends to use to implement these promises. If we look at and put the Speech from the Throne in context with the list of legislation and the bills that we've already seen introduced, it gives us a sense of really a lot of talk and a lot of promise with little indication of any of the detail that's going to be brought about in terms of how we go about implementing it.

You know, the main focus that we get out of that Speech from the Throne is that the government is going to in a sense address the agenda of children. I guess the first reaction that people would have to that kind of a statement is: shouldn't that just be what government is about? The main focus of a government is to make sure that the young, those that can't help themselves, are the ones that get the major consideration in connection with any particular policy. This is why the government created a Ministry of Children's Services. This, to me, should have focused the idea that a government is committed and should be committed to looking at the impact on children of just about everything we do and what it means to the youth, to the people who will be Alberta in the future.

Yet now all of a sudden they feel that they've got to make a statement that children are important, and how do they do that? They introduce legislation which in effect creates a promise which sounds good when we look at the Speech from the Throne, but when you actually look at Bill 1 and see what it is, Bill 1 isn't really a promise to children. It's basically a bill which sets up another agency, whose mandate extends over all of the things that the ministries that we look across here and see on a daily basis are responsible for doing. Children's Services, Learning, Health, Justice: all of them are, in effect, part of what this agency is supposed to be doing.

If we look at the initial statements in the Speech from the Throne, they say: this is designed to increase the involvement of communities in the care of children. Well, Mr. Speaker, I challenge that that was the mandate of the commission for families and children back when it operated in the early 1990s, from about 1993-94 up through about

'95, when the recommendations were put in place that created the regional authorities for children and the Ministry of Children's Services. I guess I ask: what more of a community input could this province ask for or expect on behalf of their children than a group of people from the community – a group of people who have interest in children, a group of people who are affected, a group of people who have children – coming together and bringing their ideas on what the relationship should be between a child growing up, the family within which that child operates, and the government which legislates on behalf of its citizens?

When we look at Bill 1 in conjunction with what's in the Speech from the Throne, we see a group of people being appointed by the government as opposed to coming out of the community – appointed by the government – to give them an expression of what their interest is in children. I really think, Mr. Speaker, that that raises some real issues about what the accountability of this agency will be. Will they be accountable to the government, or will they truly be accountable back to the community? You know, that commissioner's process really brought into the discussion community people, people who wanted to commit an evening of their time or a number of evenings of their time to in effect describe what they felt should be the community's relationship to the children in that community, and that's what we need to have if we're going to have a true interaction between where we are as a province and where our children should fit into where we are as a province.

The mandate that is outlined in the Speech from the Throne doesn't follow through in Bill 1, you know, because it really doesn't talk about the relationship between the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise and the designated Alberta Centre for Child, Family and Community Research that's outlined in the Speech from the Throne other than when we look at the Speech from the Throne, there's a direct funding partnership or funding connection between the two of them. That, I guess, raises some concerns about: why do we need another agency to in effect look at some of the issues of directing research?

Mr. Speaker, we already have the Alberta heritage fund endowment for medical research that can look at a lot of these issues if we expand the mandate a little bit. We don't need to create another bureaucracy to in effect administer research. I can't imagine a Centre for Child, Family and Community Research as described in this Speech from the Throne document having the expertise to actually conduct research. We need to have critical masses involved when we want to start dealing with research. If we're going to actually conduct primary research into issues like fetal alcohol syndrome, which is the primary area that they're going to start talking about – you know, they conduct research on the prevention of fetal alcohol syndrome. I suggest that that's the kind of thing that should be done in connection with a critical mass of primary researchers.

Had this Speech from the Throne indicated that what they were looking for was a centre that would bring together research, review that research, and make recommendations to government, that may be a reasonable mandate. But when they say "to conduct research," as a scientist my question immediately becomes: how effective is this going to be? In effect, we don't have, unless we're planning on funding this with, you know, hundreds of millions of dollars, which I hope isn't the case, that critical mass that's necessary to actually conduct that research.

So I guess what we really need is more care by this government in effectively describing for Albertans what they intend to do. What kind of a promise is that, you know, when you talk about conducting research under the auspices of an Alberta Centre for Child, Family and Community Research, when you don't describe the parameters of it, when you don't describe enough to let Albertans understand? Will there be a critical mass there? I think the thing that we have to look at, too, is how this relates to a lot of the other things that are going on in the flow of that speech.

We go into a long discussion right after the focus on the Alberta Centre for Child, Family and Community Research, and we talk about education. We talk about the need for an education system that allows every child to reach its potential. Mr. Speaker, every Albertan should say: right on; that's what an education system should be mandated to do. But in the context of this speech, this mandate for the next year by this government, what does it say? Not very much of anything about what they're going to do to make sure that children, especially the children who are in need in this province, children that are having difficulty in the current education system – there's no indication here that we're going to have additional support for them. Twenty million dollars for textbooks? Well, that's probably a half a textbook per student at the high school level. Half a textbook.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I would have felt much more comfortable if I had seen some suggestion in this that there was going to be a review – never mind more actual dollars but a review – to talk about what's critically needed for children that are having trouble in the education system. Why are children falling out of the education system? Why are they being sidelined in the education system? It's one thing for the government to stand up and say: our children are performing exceptionally well. But what happens is that they do a preliminary study with their tests and they design the exam so that a certain percentage of the students will get that percentage. This is the way they work.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. leader, I'm sorry for the manners of one of the ministers.

Hon. minister, I wonder if we could take your turn, and I'll put you down on my list. You're next but not while somebody else is speaking. That's just plain bad manners.

Hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: That's all right, Mr. Speaker. We have to accept the fact that there are some people that don't know how to behave in the province.

As we look at some of the rest of the stuff that goes on in here, there are some questions that also come up when we talk about the idea of the advanced education system and the postsecondary system. No reference in this document to the government's position or what the government intends to do about the issues of differential tuition. You know, is this going to be the future for Alberta students, where they have to look at the cost of the program they want to go into, where they have to look at it from the point of view of if it is reasonable to expect their parents to pay more than their neighbours' or their friends' parents pay for them to help to get an education, to be further in debt at the end of their schooling system? I would have liked to see some reflection in this document about the idea that, in effect, the government has a position and it wants to make a statement that says: advanced education in any field should generally be available to every student in our province.

Mr. Speaker, the next section of the Speech from the Throne goes on to try and relate the economy, a strong economy, and how this ties back to children in our province. I think that once we get by the first couple of statements, we realize that the government doesn't really make that work, and then they go on and talk about some of the other issues that the government is going to look at. If we're really interested in looking at what constitutes a strong economy from a child's point of view in this province, it's opportunity, it's training, it's a belief in a future, but it's also the things that come out when we look at: why is it that some businesses like to come? I know that when I worked at the school of management at the University of Lethbridge, there was a lot of work we did following what made communities or what made countries attractive to businesses.

You know, Mr. Porter from Harvard had done a lot of work evaluating the relative competitiveness of different communities, setting out parameters to look at what constituted competitive communities. One of the things that came down on almost every one of his criteria was the idea that it wasn't just necessarily the financial opportunities and the financial aspects that determine where a company is located. They looked for infrastructure. They looked at education for their employees' kids and, also, education opportunities and upgrade opportunities for their employees. They looked at the environment and recreation opportunities. None of that's talked about in here. None of it is dealt with in the context of what creates a strong economy.

It's interesting that they go on to talk about, especially at the start, the agriculture community. The government has just released a whole new series of opportunities for crop insurance. You know, it provides a little bit more significant coverage, but what it doesn't do is really address the broad-based issue of what should be the risk management decisions being made by farmers and the public as it plays a part in that risk management process. They, in effect, don't try to tie together very many of the programs except to say that there'll be no more ad hoc programs, which I support fully, Mr. Speaker. I hope that they're able to carry through with that, because that only distorts whatever kind of risk management signals a properly designed program would be sending to producers. So let's hope that in the next year or two we actually see that that can be sustained.

The other interesting part that comes up. I think that as we go across the province, I probably run into just as many people saying, "What's the government doing about the Wheat Board?" as saying, "Why aren't they doing something about the Wheat Board?" I raise this again, the same as I did during the debate on the bill last term, in the sense, Mr. Speaker, that this is a process where the producers have a right through a democratic process to express their opinion. They expressed that opinion as recently as last fall in board elections. In effect, the statement made by the farmers through a democratic process was to elect people to that board who supported the single-desk concept. So I guess I have some questions about: what is it that the government is doing trying to second-guess a democratic process that's in place for producers in this province?

The other thing that the government talks about is the energy sector. They're talking about electricity here as well in this Speech from the Throne. I guess what we need is a little more explanation and a little bit more clarity, even when you look at Bill 3, as to the impact of a statement like: "While progress has been made on delivering new generation to meet growing consumer demand, there are still issues to be addressed around [consumer] choice and service, particularly in rural areas." What does that mean to the REAs? What does that mean to the groups that have, in effect, been serving rural Alberta for years providing them with access to reliable electricity? Where do they stand under this new process? We need to see that that's made clear.

They also talk about that they're going to "introduce legislation that will refine the structure of the electric industry" and "provide consumers with a new regulated option to purchase power at a rate tied to the competitive wholesale market.” I guess that a red flag went up when I read that, Mr. Speaker, in the sense of: is this going to be some kind of an adjustment to the five-year regulated rate option? Is it going to be an early cancellation, like some people have asked me, that they’ve heard might happen? I guess that that’s where we need some clarification. If this is a transition program for people who choose to leave a five-year program that the government put in place, that would be useful. If it’s a substitute, why is it that the government can’t carry through on a commitment that they made to people who wanted to see how this shook out over the first five years of a new electricity sector? I always stumble when I have to say deregulated sector, because it’s very obvious that under the new electric industry in Alberta it’s a much more heavily regulated sector than it ever was before. It hasn’t really helped reduce the cost of electricity for Albertans. It’s made, in effect, a really differentiated system where people have to face uncertainty and face higher bills.

Mr. Speaker, I’m going to leave my comments and my debate about electricity and all that until we debate Bill 3, so I won’t burden everybody with it twice. We’ll, in effect, only have to deal with it in one case. I’ll cover my issues about deregulation when Bill 3 comes up.

The other issue that comes up is: what are we going to do about the environment? There’s a very short section in this bill about Alberta’s relationship to its environment, the role of the environment in Alberta, and of course there’s reference made to Kyoto. But the one that really has some concern is the government’s initiative to bring forward a water management strategy. Mr. Speaker, I ask: where are the water management plans that were mandated under the ’95 Water Act? Those have never been forthcoming. Why don’t we use the legislation that’s in place to look at how we should be dealing with our water, how we should be dealing with the process of putting together what the speech talks about as short-, medium-, and long-term actions to deal with water? That should have been done through those water management plans. Why is it the government let those lapse and not really come into being so that there were mechanisms put in place to deal with the issues of water?

As we go through the rest of the speech, there’s a long section that talks about infrastructure. Mr. Speaker, it is a really good idea that they’re really starting to talk about the debt we’ve created in our infrastructure. We have to make sure that a process is put in place to, in effect, replenish our infrastructure and get rid of that debt that we’ve got in our infrastructure.

They talk about a capital plan that’ll include the framework for public/private partnerships. Mr. Speaker, I just want to relay a little conversation I had with a cost accountant who worked for one of the major corporations who were doing a lot of development work here in Alberta. His question to me was: “You know, Ken, why would the government ever consider P3s? Why would they ever consider these private/public partnerships? As a business we would never lease an asset unless it was a temporary, short-term type of arrangement like in a research project.” But our schools, our courthouses, our hospitals are not short-term investments in our province. Those are investments that we will be using for 15 or 20 or 30 or 40 years, well into the future, and if we buy them with our own money, we, in effect, have an option to truly make good use of those dollars as a public.

How do we deal with it if we transfer what, in effect, is a debt obligation on our books into a long-term operating obligation? Mr. Speaker, we still have to pay for those assets. If we do it with our own money as a public, we can do it at a lot less cost than we can do it through allowing someone else to finance it, allowing someone else to incorporate into it a risk premium. Those don’t have to be put into public investments, and I really hope that the government follows through in two different places in here where they talk about these public/private partnerships that will only be used when there’s a net benefit to taxpayers. I hope that here, for all Albertans, they’re talking about a long-run net benefit, not a truncated, one-year or very short-term cash flow kind of an issue. It is part of the process of a government’s obligation to its citizens to look at, as the Minister of Infrastructure just said, a lifetime cycle of those assets. In all of the work that I’ve done in the last couple of months with accountants, with people in the business community since this debate has been quite public, none of them has been able to come up with an example that they feel comfortable with and that I would accept where, in effect, it’s cheaper for us as a public to do it through a partnership. So I challenge the government to make sure that as we look at that on this life cycle structure, we end up with it being truly in the best interests of Alberta taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, the next section of the speech gets into looking at the new fiscal framework. I must say that I’m really pleased to see the government put in place the sustainability fund. This is something that we’ve been asking for for a long time as an opposition. The Financial Review Commission last year, in effect, developed that idea, matured it, made some changes to our suggestions, but it will deal with three out of the four components that I had in our renewed fiscal stability initiatives that I released and that I’ve been talking about since I became the Leader of the Opposition. It’s good to see that three out of the four are being adopted by the government, and let’s hope that they actually make it work in the right way. The infrastructure fund, the smoothing of natural resource revenues, and the stability or sustainability fund – we’ve got one more to go on it, and that we’ll deal with in future debates as we talk about how to deal with budget processes.

The next issue that comes up, Mr. Speaker, is the health care system. This is something that we really have to look at now critically in the context of the new initiatives being taken by the federal government. I’ve had a couple of chats with the minister of health, and it seems that there are some possibilities here now with that new recognition of the federal responsibility. It’s about time that the feds began to accept the fact that this is by agreement and by law a joint issue area and that they’re going to cough up a little bit to cover their obligation.

You know, I think we need to look at the areas of our general health care system. My extended family had a chance to use the health care system this winter, and while I was visiting in the hospital, I ran into a fellow from the U.S. who was there visiting his mother in the next room. He was talking about how he was really impressed with the health care system here and how if his mother had been in the U.S. where he was, there’s no way they could’ve afforded the care she was getting here in Alberta. He said that the kind of care she was getting and the particular regime that she was under would’ve probably only been available to a very select few in the U.S. I think, Mr. Speaker, that what that said to me was that, you know, we’ve got a system here, a public health care program that makes sure every Albertan – every Albertan – has access, has a sense of participation, and can feel that that health care system is there when they need it.

One of the things that we really have to start watching for, Mr. Speaker, is that as we start making changes, as we start reviewing and reformatting the health care system, let’s not jeopardize that young man’s sense that his mother was getting awfully good health care here in Canada, health care that she couldn’t have obtained had she been sick with exactly the same ailment in the United States. As a family even the comprehensive insurance that he carried – and he was employed by a significant U.S. firm – he said wouldn't have been able to give that kind of care. So, you know, this is the kind of thing that we have to be proud of as Albertans and Canadians, and we have to make sure that we really strive to sustain that universality and that access to our health care system.

I think the government's initiative to develop some priorities on healthy behaviour is a good idea. You know, we need to build that into both our education system and our health awareness systems, but we have to look at it from the point of view of: let's make it work. A year ago in the Mazankowski report we had all of these great recommendations about increasing the tax on cigarettes and putting that money into a health prevention fund. It's good to see now that there are some initiatives being made in the health prevention area. Let's see a correlation between the dollars that were coming in from that increase in the tobacco tax and the dollars that are actually spent on these prevention programs because we've got to make sure that we do promote responsibility and responsible use of our health care system and responsible expectations in our health care system.

Just a few more comments, Mr. Speaker, then I'll cede the floor to someone else.

The other concern I've got in the health section of this speech is that they're going to start to improve and implement electronic health records. Please consult with the Privacy Commissioner. We've got to make sure that this is done in a way that Albertans can feel comfortable, can feel that, yes, this system is safe and isn't going to release personal information in an uncontrolled way.

Another area in health that I have just a comment on or a question as much as anything. I think it's really important that we do look at a rural health action plan. The idea of ambulance services: I guess the caution that I would raise there when they start talking about ambulance services is that a lot of communities in Alberta have developed a really strong relationship between their protection services in the community, especially fire services, and their ambulance services. When those things are working really well, we've got to make sure that can be kept up because there are some really good working partnerships there, and we've got to make sure that those kinds of things are not disrupted but that ambulance and standard of ambulance service is available for all Albertans.

The other thing is that when we start looking at that, if we're going to rely more and more on the ambulance services to transport people to, need I call them, distant contact points for the health care system, should we be looking at some kind of different concept of, you know, what is fair costing on it? Should it be the user pay, or should it be the system pay? That's a debate that we need to have. I'm not going to make judgments on it right now or make recommendations on it, but I just think that it's a debate that really needs to come out, and I hope the committee that's dealing with the ambulance review is really looking at that kind of thing as they come forward with their recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, the last section goes on and deals with safe communities. I guess the question comes up especially in the second paragraph, where they're going to "improve the province's corrections system by creating a zero tolerance level for illegal drug use, violence, and gang-related activities." Great. How? You know, this is the kind of thing that supposedly is limited and controlled in our current prison systems. If we come up with a system to make that work in Alberta, we should bottle it and put it on the market. We've probably got a worldwide market that we can sell that in because it'll sure, you know, be something that I think a lot of institutions and governments would be interested in. It seems to be something that we should look at in the context of a lower tolerance for that kind of thing, but zero tolerance – you know, how do you deal with it?

The only other question I have, Mr. Speaker, and then I'll conclude with a couple of general comments. When we look at the new family law act, one of the things that Albertans have addressed with me on a number of occasions with respect to the idea of family law is the burden of cost that it comes with, especially, you know, in family court when there's a separation. It seems that whichever of the family members has access to the largest cash pool, in effect, gets to direct the process a little more, and what we need to do is look at seeing if there isn't some way in this context of the new family law act where some of that financial burden can be removed a little bit. If we could do that, I think it would make a lot of people feel that their legal system really does work much better for them. It probably will help.

The concern that I want to just kind of end with is some of the things that I didn't really see in the Speech from the Throne which in some ways I would've liked to have seen something about. There's only one place in the speech where the relationship of Albertans to the senior citizens of this province was mentioned, and that was in connection with "seniors who live in lodges and" – and I stress the "and" – "receive the Alberta seniors' benefit."

You know, there are a lot of areas where change in government policy has really created hardship for seniors in our province. A number of them retired expecting some kind of a safety net or a support structure being there from the public because it was available at the time they retired. If we wanted to change those programs, especially for seniors with low income, without a lot of flexibility, we should have thought of, in effect, grandfathering or grandmothering them into it. This is the kind of thing where we've really created some hardships.

I guess that when you look at that statement in the Speech from the Throne that talks about dealing with a review of supports for "low-income seniors who live in lodges and receive the Alberta seniors' benefit," I stress the "and" again. Mr. Speaker, I have a number of seniors in my community who are just as financially strapped living in rental properties or in their own homes, and the equity in their homes is in many cases used up. Why are we limiting it in this context to an "and" situation? You have to be on the seniors' benefit and in a lodge. If we truly wanted that seniors' benefit program to be able to earmark support for seniors who are having financial difficulties, we shouldn't be tying it to a residence because all of the conditions that allow them to qualify in effect stipulate that they are in financial difficulty, and that should be the criteria in the context of how you're looking at it in this paragraph as we deal with this review. So I would hope that as the government gets to implementing that review of those payments, they look more flexibly at the conditions that they imply in that statement.

The other area that I've had an awful lot of questions about almost the whole 10 years that I've been serving the people of my community in this Legislature has been: what about the fixed income individuals, the AISH, the SFI? No indication here that they're going to be brought into any kind of a reasonable review of level either on an absolute basis or a geographic basis. I think we need to see some kind of a commitment. All the review that's talked about in there does, if you listen to people in the community, is scare them with the potential rather than encourage them to expect any kind of real, true support. So, you know, those are areas that we need to really look at in the context of something beyond what was written into the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, we've got a lot of time during the rest of the session to debate some of the specific issues, whether it gets into budget debate or whether it gets into some of the specific legislation that we're already aware will be coming. So not to belabour my points on this, I think that we really need to focus on the fact that the main theme of the Speech from the Throne really should have been one of: how do we incorporate into everything we're doing a little bit of compassion? How do we deal with fairness? Yet we tried to focus in a very unique way, a way that I find really hard to comprehend as an elected official, some kind of a realization that children in this province are important. I would have thought that that would have been just fundamental to everything we do. If we can't act on behalf of our children, who are we as parents, whether that's as individuals or as a government? You know, who are we as a government if we can't be true to the children of this province?

So thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated the chance to comment on the Speech from the Throne.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) we've received indications from three hon. members – the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, the hon. Minister of Environment, and the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul – of a desire to ask the hon. Leader of the Opposition questions relative to the speech. Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened attentively to the comments by the hon. the Leader of the Opposition, and the member's obvious, genuine interest in children was paramount in his comments, and I'd like to explore that a little further, if I may.

In Bill 1 under Alberta's Promise, the premise of Alberta's promise is "an initiative to encourage organizations, corporations and individuals to enhance community resources in order to further the well-being of children." In the hon. member's comments the point was made that Alberta already through the government has a number of ministries charged with the responsibility for children. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the key to this initiative, Alberta's Promise, is that it doesn't rely on government agencies. It relies more on the community. As a province and as a society, as a country, perhaps we've got over the years further from the notion that it's the family and community as a first resort of assistance. Why would it not be in the child's interest to pursue the notion of involvement of family, community, and organizations, nongovernmental, in the well-being of children?

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, I explained that. We had the commission for family and children that was a community-based initiative. I guess the question comes up in terms of: as a public, if we're going to make commitments to children, should we be doing it through selectively controlled nonprofits, or should we be doing it through a public agenda that truly has a public initiative and a public interest on behalf of those children?

You know, the member brought up Bill 1: "Alberta's Promise is an initiative"? Give me a break here. Promises have a standard associated with them. Promises are not initiatives. Promises are a commitment to a level of commitment. There's nothing in Bill 1 about a level of commitment. What can children expect from this province? Only what this group of appointed people decides is in those children's interest. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I'm not buying into that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of the Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening to the opposition response to the throne speech all day, so if my question expresses perhaps a polite sense of frustration, I'd ask for your tolerance. My question deals with what I perceive to be misrepresentation of the facts around education. I don't have the Blues in front of me, but I think I heard the member say that Alberta students do well, you know, in the international light. We're one and two in science and math and so on because of the fact that the tests are set by the department of education. Now, if that's the opposition leader's understanding of it, then I certainly would excuse his ignorance, but if he actually knows the truth, that the tests are international standardized tests that are not set by the department of education, then I believe he should get up and apologize to Alberta students, Alberta teachers, and, more importantly, to the Minister of Learning.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, I challenge him to read the Blues. I never made reference to the international exams. I made reference to the exams that are established by the ministry through a process within the ministry. Those were the exams I was talking about. Albertans do well on the international exams because not all of our students take them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Agriculture is a continuously changing environment, and crop insurance is addressing those changes with the input of actual producers. The hon. Leader of the Opposition has major criticisms about the program, which had multiple stakeholder involvement. My question is: what would he do to provide a stable safety net for agriculture?

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, how much time have we got? This is one of the things that I've been talking about for years. What we need to do is collapse all of our safety net programs into a true program which is risk management driven by the farmers and which provides for an insurance that gives them cost recovery protection. It takes out all the other risks, and it becomes a true risk management situation.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members would agree that you've had an opportunity to ask the previous speaker to answer questions, and hopefully you also realize that as brief as his answers were, some of our questions were not quite as brief, so not as many members were able to participate.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the hon. Leader of the Opposition with respect to the situation that I believe I heard him say where there was . . .

Speaker's Ruling Question and Comment Period

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry. I didn't make myself clear enough. The five minutes that's allowed under Standing Order 29 has gone. If you're rising to speak to the Speech from the Throne, well and good. Away you go. But if you're wanting to ask another question, we'd have to have unanimous consent to waive the Standing Orders and make an extension, and I would suggest that the likelihood of that is remote. So if you wish to speak, please do so.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't watching the clock. I didn't realize the five minutes was up. Excuse me, and thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: You're probably suffering from the same problem that I have. I can't hear the machine either, but it did ring, and I have it on reasonable authority that the five minutes are well up.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with interest that I rise this evening to participate in the Speech from the Throne by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor, Lois E. Hole. I've listened to the remarks not only from the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East but certainly from earlier this afternoon in the Assembly. When one thinks back to yesterday, when the Assembly was full of guests and everyone was on their best behaviour, it was a reflection of this province's current fortunate prosperity. There certainly are some initiatives that were discussed in the throne speech that I would not only applaud this government on but encourage them to go further.

I was pleased to hear in my role as Energy critic that the government will focus on adopting a regulatory regime and investing in energy research and technology to perhaps bring onstream amounts of coal bed methane. This is a pleasant development, and I can take from this that the government is waking up to the reality that our resources are slowly diminishing. Conventional crude oil production levels have been in decline for 30 years but now with natural gas as well. So that's a sound idea. It's certainly going to take some planning. There are issues surrounding the production of coal bed methane, and that's that the disposal of the water that is pulled off before production starts has to be addressed. That's certainly something I would like to encourage the government to go further on in developing.

I have some ideas on this, some very good, sound ideas on this, and if they would like to adapt those ideas, then for the betterment of the province I would say: go right ahead, the same way you took the sustainability fund from the Official Opposition. Dr. Nicol, the Member for Lethbridge-East, has been encouraging you to do this for some time, and finally we're seeing some form of it. Certainly, the same would apply also for infrastructure enhancement.

Now, one thing I did not notice in here are – and this is getting back to natural gas – the huge volumes of natural gas that are consumed in the production of synthetic crude oil. Natural gas is a source of hydrogen; it's certainly a fuel gas for the heaters that are there. We need to ensure that that industry, if it is going to prosper and expand, also has a reliable and affordable supply of natural gas.

Now, when we turn the pages in this speech and we look at our health care system, I can't help but think of how we can improve our public health care system. Certainly, there has to be a dialogue and there has to be a partnership developed with the federal government. Many members of this Assembly may not agree with this, but health care is a provincial government responsibility, but it is also a federal government responsibility. The enforcement of the Canada Health Act's principles of accessibility, comprehensiveness, portability, public administration, and universality is determined, of course, by the federal government. Public health care in that way is a joint federal/provincial responsibility.

I was astonished to hear: oh, we're going to have $250 million coming to Alberta, and while perhaps the health minister will not use it, the education minister will solve the many problems that are in the Department of Learning. That is why not only this hon. member but many of the constituents that I'm proud and honoured to represent in this Assembly express concern about the idea of the federal government giving this province in particular money with no strings attached. The constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar are of the opinion that not only should strings be attached to this money, but the strings should be pulled tight.

Now, after the newspaper articles concerning the hon. Minister of Learning and the fact that, oh, well, maybe this is a convenient pool of cash for the problems that were expressed earlier today in this House during question period in regard to public education, I have to caution all members of this Assembly and remind each and every hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that when the current regime – I shall use that word – came to power 10 years ago until Bill 11 was passed in this Legislature, it has been alleged that Alberta violated the Canada Health Act six times. No action was taken publicly by the federal government with the exception of the former minister Diane Marleau, who in November of 1995 imposed fines because this province failed to ban user fees. So that is reason enough that not only should strings be attached, but they should be pulled tight if we are to have a better public health care system in this province, and that is the one word, Mr. Speaker, that's missing in this speech in the part that is describing and discussing health systems. It's the word "public." We have to ensure that we have a good public health care system that helps all Albertans. I can't emphasize that enough, because as we drift down this road to privatization, we only have to look at what happened with electricity deregulation and the frustration and the confusion that's expressed by consumers across this province, and hopefully we will not continue to apply the same logic to public health care as we have to electricity deregulation schemes. Where are the cost-benefit analyses that either scheme will work? There are none.

Now, whenever we talk in this province about P3s, what we should be talking about is a commitment to public health care, a commitment to public education, and a commitment to a public service that works for each and every Albertan in an efficient use of the taxpayers' dollars. I cannot for the life of me see how these P3s are going to work. Perhaps in time I will be proven wrong, and if I'm wrong, I will certainly stand to be corrected.

There is another group of citizens who have long been left out by this government. There have been many promises made to them by this government, but nothing has happened. Those are the Albertans who are clients of SFI and AISH. Where's their money? Now, we look at the increase in natural gas prices and what it has done to heating costs. We look at the increase in electricity prices. We see the combination of both those increases and the effect that they have had on the cost of living in this province. There has been reported an inflation rate greater than 8 percent. These citizens have not received a dime in increase.

I just thought I would go through my files and find the Speech from the Throne from after the March election of 2001, and after I go through this, Mr. Speaker, I can't put very much faith in this document. It's a public relations exercise, and it's worth emphasizing at this time that since this regime has come to power, this Public Affairs Bureau has grown into a $10 million, 300-person outfit, just to spin the message. Two years ago this was the message, and this is what's been left out from Albertans as we hear and discuss another throne speech. This is from roughly two years ago.

Legislation will be introduced this session to put into law a commitment to help protect Albertans from high natural gas prices.

This bill will ensure that Alberta consumers have a competitive natural gas service that maintains the Alberta advantage.

Where's the Alberta advantage now when people have to decide between heat and meat? Where is the Alberta advantage for those citizens who are forced to have a disconnection notice? They can't afford to pay their natural gas bills let alone get the $45 for the reconnection fee. There was a commitment made. We can have this money tree during an election year, but two years after the election we're really tight with the people's money. Now, I can't understand how a government could make such a promise and then break it.

Now, it also states in this throne speech from two years ago that the government will work to reduce and stabilize electricity prices by streamlining the approval process to bring new generation projects onstream. The government will continue to address electricity price concerns and other consumer issues with the advice of the newly created government Advisory Council on Electricity.

How many government advisory councils on electricity have we gone through in two years and at what cost? The government is going to work, it states here, "to reduce and stabilize electricity prices." Electricity prices spike all the time.

I was encouraging the Premier this afternoon to go on the Alberta Liberal web site, altaliberals.ab.ca, and see what savings he could have from our plan. Mr. Speaker, electricity was at 14 cents a kilowatt-hour, 1 o'clock, 1:30 in the afternoon today – 14 cents – not 4 cents, this mythical spot in Alberta where you can get electricity, according to the Premier, for 4 cents. It's 14 cents. It goes anywhere from 99 cents to 2 cents. How can businesses plan their monthly budgets when they do not know what the costs are going to be? This is from two years ago. We still have the same problems. [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] Oh, I'm sorry. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions? No? We're ready for the next speaker?

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to take a few minutes because I thought the Speech from the Throne that we heard from Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor yesterday was exciting. The speech that I heard was one of hope, one of future, one of caring for children and building on a system which will allow each of our children in this province to develop to the best of their potential, and that is more exciting than anything I've heard tonight.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor graced us with her charm and her presence and, I might say, reminded us of the job that she's been doing for all Albertans in breathing life into the office that she serves and bringing to all of Alberta a real appreciation of not only that office but of the role of government itself. So when she spoke the words of the Speech from the Throne and talked about a bright future for our children, it was a message, I think, that all Albertans can take to heart.

Although members of the opposition decry a lack of detail in the Speech from the Throne, it would be normal not to have a great deal of detail in the Speech from the Throne because the throne does speak in concepts and in directions, and the concepts and the directions that are set out here are very strong. It talks about how you provide for the future of our children by having a strong economy, by making sure that people have jobs and have an opportunity to earn an income so they can take care of their children and where the government can be in place to help provide an opportunity for education so that our children can be ready to compete in a knowledge-based economy and can be ready to compete in a global economy and can enjoy those issues of quality of life around the arts and other aspects of life that are so important. So, again, the Speech from the Throne was very uplifting from that perspective.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne talked about the Commission on Learning and the role of learning in our society. It talked about the important role that teachers play as mentors and role models for our children in helping our children succeed. It talked about the steps that we need to take to strengthen the postsecondary education system in promoting lifelong learning. These are all essential underpinnings of a strong and prosperous future for our province and for our children, so again I have to say that for me the Speech from the Throne talked very positively about a strong future for our province.

I don't want to dwell at length. There are a couple of things that I think are very important that were mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. An acknowledgment that we are moving from a commodity-based economy to a knowledge-based economy, not expressed in that language but expressed in the context of the Speech from the Throne. We have to be prepared. We've enjoyed a great history based on a resource-based economy, and we will have a considerable future on that resource-based economy, but we have to build that future based on value-added, on improving the development of those resources rather than exporting them in raw form, on improving our technologies, on delving into the life sciences, on moving into the knowledge-based economy in a very strong way. So talking about our children and their future, talking about education is very important to that structure.

Essential as well is how we move to a knowledge-based economy and how we get the research that underpins that economy into the market and build the base. So we need to spend time over the course of this session, I believe, Mr. Speaker, and certainly as we move forward as a government, talking about how we invest in a knowledge-based economy, not we as government but we as people in the province. How do we get the capital that's necessary to develop that economy, and what role can government play as a leader in that area?

Focusing on people obviously means focusing on health, and we have some strong issues ahead of us in that area as we move to reform the health care system. We need to look particularly at the primary care system, and we need to focus on some of the issues that came out of the Mazankowski report. Health as an economic engine and the research and development side, being very conscious of how we not only deal with the acute care side but how we take care of ourselves so that we live healthy so that the system doesn't have to cost as much as it does in the future. Reforming primary care. Making sure that we have all health care professionals able to act to the level of their training and expertise and that we do not restrict them from acting in that capacity, that we use the full range of their abilities in our system.

But I think the most important thing that I read in the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, was at the conclusion, where it talked about the promise meaning unleashing innovation, leading in learning, competing in a global marketplace, and making Alberta the best place in the world to live, work, and raise a family. Those are very important directions that speak directly to the mission and vision that this government has had. Since this government was elected 10 years ago, there's been a strong focus on the fiscal agenda, a strong focus on getting the fiscal house in order, balancing the budget, and paying down the debt. Those were very, very important strategic objectives, but those strategic objectives were only accomplished for one purpose, and that was to achieve the true vision of this province, which is stated in our government business plan, "a vibrant and prosperous province where Albertans enjoy a superior quality of life and are confident about the future for themselves and their children." That is the vision of government, but it's the vision that the people of this province have told government that they want us to try and work with them to achieve, to develop the human potential of all of our citizens, putting in place opportunities for each of our children to succeed to the best of their potential. I think the Speech from the Throne develops that in a very exciting way, and I'm looking forward to working with this government to achieve that vision as outlined in the Speech from the Throne.

With those words, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, February 20, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/02/20

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O God, life and health are precious. We ask Your blessings upon our Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Lois Hole, as she begins a journey of medical treatment. Let us pray that Her Honour will be back on her feet quickly, meeting and greeting Albertans. Let us reach out with compassion, understanding, and prayer to Her Honour and her family. May God bless them all. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Mr. Ki-ho Chang, ambassador of South Korea to Canada. He is accompanied today by his wife, Mrs. Lee, and several Korean consular officials from Vancouver and Ottawa.

Korea is Alberta's fourth largest trading partner, with annual two-way trade averaging nearly $1 billion over the past five years. Alberta has a productive sister province relationship with the Korean province of Kangwon. This was Alberta's first twinning relationship and will reach the 30-year milestone next year.

We appreciate the ambassador coming to Alberta, and we anticipate a productive and mutually beneficial relationship with him over the coming months and years. I would like to ask our honoured guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly four young students who attend Tempo school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're Logan McColl, Hunter McColl, Aidan McColl, and Kathryn Wood. Tempo school has reading week this week, and these students have taken this opportunity to come and watch question period and learn about our form of government and our Legislature. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to be able to introduce to you and through you to Members of this Legislative Assembly some of Alberta's and Canada's finest firefighters representing seven of nine firefighters' associations in Alberta. I'll ask them to stand as I call their names. They are Gord Colwell, president, Alberta Fire Fighters Association, from Calgary; Ken Block, president, Edmonton Firefighters Service Association; Scott Wilcox, president, Calgary Firefighters Association; Brian Makey, president, Fort McMurray Firefighters Association; Bart Rowland, president, Red Deer Firefighters Association; Kim Smyth, president, St. Albert Fire Fighters Union; Brent Shelton, vice-president, Alberta Fire Fighters Association; Tim Stewart, vice-president, St. Albert; Ron Polutnik, recording secretary, Red Deer; Mark Faires, recording secretary, Calgary; and Mike O'Reilly, treasurer. In addition to that, a gentleman named Paul Wyndham, also a fireman, is here, and he is the first firefighter in Alberta to receive WCB benefits for cancer.

I would ask that all members of this Legislature give these firemen, no pun intended, a very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a recent graduate of Grant MacEwan College's journalism program, Mr. Rob Harris. Rob is here as an intern in my department's communication division, and I would ask him now to rise in the members' gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Legislature a person who has made a great deal of difference in my life over the past two years. The person I speak of is Jo-Ann Briscoe, a former nurse who chose to be a stay-at-home mother, but she was far more than a stay-at-home mother. She was a very active person in her community and was president of the Elmwood Community League for many years. Jo-Ann is the person who manages my constituency office and does a wonderful job in helping me serve the needs of constituents in Edmonton-Meadowlark. Accompanying Jo-Ann today is her son Behn and daughter Bekky. They're not truant from school; they're also students at Tempo who are enjoying this reading week. Jo-Ann, Behn, and Bekky, would you please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Legislature.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 38 students from Red Deer Christian school. I understand that these students are among the smartest and the brightest in Red Deer. With them today are their student teacher, Miss Amy Zesko; their teachers Mr. Jim Driedger and Miss Carolyn Stickland; and parent helpers Mrs. Aletta Cartwright, Mrs. Alleta Loney, Mrs. Joanne Jacobsen, and Mrs. Kim Schreiner. I would ask the students and their teachers and helpers to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Her Honour Lois E. Hole

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I take this opportunity today on behalf of every Member of the Legislative Assembly to extend our sincere best wishes to Her Honour Lieutenant Governor Lois Hole. It's so good to see so many young people in the galleries today, because Lois Hole lives for young people. She lives for children.

Earlier today in a public statement Her Honour advised Albertans that she is currently preparing to undergo cancer treatment. I know that all Albertans join us in extending our thoughts and prayers to her at such a difficult time. As well, our thoughts are with the members of the Hole family, who, I understand, are close by her side.

As all Albertans know, Her Honour is a woman of remarkable strength and energy, and we saw that during the delivery of the throne speech just a few days ago. I am confident that in short order we will have the true pleasure of seeing her back in her office greeting staff and visitors to the Legislature with her warm smile and, of course, her traditional hug.

I know that every Albertan would join with me in sending heartfelt thoughts to this remarkable and beloved lady. In the meantime, let me break from protocol and simply say: "God be with you, Lois. Our prayers are with you."

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, this morning we were very shocked to hear of the medical condition facing our Lieutenant Governor. We in the Official Opposition join everyone in this Legislature and all Albertans in letting her know that our thoughts are with her. Her hugs have brought all Albertans into the reach of the Lieutenant Governor, her office, and the Queen she represents. It's now our turn to reach out and give our Lieutenant Governor a symbolic hug, a hug that wishes her a speedy recovery, a hug that expresses our support for her and her family, and a hug that will carry her through until she returns to her duties as our Lieutenant Governor.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might I ask if the Assembly would give unanimous consent to permit the leader of the third party to participate?

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, want to join with the hon. Premier, the Leader of the Official Opposition, and indeed all members of this House in expressing concern over the news that we heard this morning about the Lieutenant Governor's illness. I along with millions of Albertans am very proud of the fact that we have a model citizen in the person of Lois Hole as the Lieutenant Governor of this province. She represents all that is noble and good and strong about Alberta, and I want to extend my best wishes, along with millions of Albertans who are doing the same, I'm sure, as they hear this news, for a speedy recovery and a return to full work and the provincial duties that she is doing as Lieutenant Governor with such outstanding performance. I also wish her family our sympathies and our hope that Madam Hole will be back to her work and will regain her health in full.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

Electricity Deregulation

Dr. Nicol: Electricity deregulation has failed in Alberta. This government promised lower prices and more competition, but just the opposite occurred. Instead of putting an end to this failed experiment on high electricity prices, this government plans to move even further ahead with deregulation. To the Premier: how come this government is planning to entrench high prices in electricity in Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we're planning on doing anything but. What the whole idea of deregulation is is to provide competition, and to enlighten the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition further, I'll ask the hon. minister to respond.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have seen the Liberal plan at www.altliberals.ab.ca, and in fact if anybody here wants to buy into a plan that spends $3 billion to save $1 billion, I guess you would be a Liberal. That's the foundation of their plan.

The Dominion Bond Rating Service has come out and said that deregulation is working in Alberta, and it's working because the power price is lower than what it was when deregulation started. Secondly, Mr. Speaker, we have seen electricity prices drop on January 1, 2003, and this bill that is now before the House – so I'm reluctant to talk about the details – will bring even further deductions. But let's not forget for a moment that if you lived in Quebec, you would be part of a guaranteed structure that guaranteed $36 billion worth of electricity debt. We are not going to mortgage the future earnings of children to subsidize electricity prices today.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, we talked about a plan that, in effect, costs less than $2 billion to return Albertans a billion dollars a year. That's what he forgets to tell Albertans.

To the Premier: given that retail competition has failed to provide lower electricity prices for Albertans, why is the government continuing to pursue this deregulation just for competition's sake?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's not just for the sake of competition, although that's one of the primary elements. It's also being done to encourage more electricity generation. As a matter of fact, since deregulation – and the Liberals failed to put this on their web site purposely because it's good news – there have been many hundreds of megawatts, perhaps thousands of megawatts of new power developed.

Again, I'll have the hon. minister expand.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the electricity prices that the Leader of the Opposition refers to are those electricity prices that remain as the regulated rate option, and in fact those rates are part of the commitment that this government gave to Albertans to the period 2005. Now, those particular regulated rates were set prior to the introduction of the Electric Utilities Act by the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton behind closed doors in some such manner with which I'm not familiar. Now with this bill those two utilities will be, in fact, setting those rates transparently in front of the public and in hearings that the hon. member can attend himself.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier: are you telling us that you don't want municipality-owned utilities to act in the best interest of their own consumers of electricity in their jurisdiction? Is that what you're telling us?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we do, in fact, want the municipalities to act in the best interests of their constituents whether or not they own utility companies. The simple fact is – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands knows this full well – that these power companies owned by municipalities have expanded far beyond the borders of the municipalities. They are now businesses and big businesses. Enmax is competing in Edmonton. EPCOR is competing in Calgary and throughout the province. They are no longer little municipally owned power companies. They are big companies competing in a very competitive world. If they want to play with the big boys, then they have to be subject to the same regulations and the same regulatory applications as the big boys.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the preregulation price that Albertans paid for electricity was about 4.5 cents a kilowatt-hour, why did the Premier say yesterday that the 6.4 cents that we're currently paying is about half of what it was when deregulation began?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, according to the information that I have, as of January 1, 2001, electricity was selling on average at about 13.1 cents a kilowatt-hour. Today it's selling on average for about 6.4 cents a kilowatt-hour.

Perhaps the hon. Minister of Energy can bring us up to date as to what the rate is today and perhaps what it was on January 2.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, electricity prices are fluctuating in Alberta because they are tied to natural gas. Sixty-five percent of our base load generation is with coal; the balance is with natural gas. As we've seen natural gas come up in price, so has electricity. The price that the Premier has quoted is absolutely correct. The last price I saw was 4.7 cents at the noon hour. There is entirely an abundance of evidence that shows that we are on the track to lower prices. The prices are lower today than they were last year. They will be lower next year than they are this year. Deferral accounts will be paid off. I would direct the member to the ATCO service network, which has the same price as it did prior to deregulation.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: is the 13.1 cents that you quoted not the price that was on January 1, 2001? That was caused by the uncertainty that was associated with the impending deregulation. It had nothing to do with the status of the current presentation of electricity at that time.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have to refresh my memory, but I do recall quite vividly the debate that took place in this Legislature, the questions that were being asked at that particular time as we headed into deregulation. I can tell the hon. member that, yes, deregulation created a certain degree of uncertainty, but that was not the only – the only – cause for electricity prices to increase at that particular time. If I recall correctly, a number of power plants were shut down, at the same time putting a tremendous demand on the requirement for electricity. Gas prices had spiked to an all-time high. The province was in the midst of one of the most extreme albeit positive growth periods of all time, putting a tremendous amount of pressure on electricity. So there were a number of factors that I alluded to at that particular time that contributed to the cost of electricity at that particular time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Premier, will you remind your minister that no matter who holds the mortgage, in the end the utility users of this province have to pay for it. We can borrow money at a less costly rate as a public than you can through the private sector, so the cost of that mortgage is actually less when it's held by the public than it is when it's held by the private sector.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I knew I was going to hear it. It was inevitable that I was going to hear it from the Liberal opposition because the philosophy of the Liberals is to spend, spend, borrow, spend, spend, spend, borrow more, spend. So what they would like to do is to develop a situation that exists in Ontario, for instance, where every man, woman, and child in that province owes $2,875 in an electricity debt.

An Hon. Member: So what?

Mr. Klein: So what? Every family of four is indebted to the tune of over $11,000 to the electric company under a regulated system, Mr. Speaker. Their solution: borrow, borrow, spend, spend, borrow, borrow, and borrow more.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the member brings up an extremely important point on why the private sector that can borrow more expensively must pay income tax. You know, surely they must be more expensive, and that must explain a bit why EPCOR in Edmonton has a 5.825 cent per kilowatt-hour charge and ATCO in the rural area has a 4.78 kilowatt-hour charge.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a new funding wrinkle the Minister of Learning claimed: there's plenty of money for boards to pay teachers; they simply must take the money out of the instructional grants. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. The instructional grant rate increase for two years was $180 million. Why is the minister recommending that $142 million of this be taken directly out of the classroom?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'll reiterate what I said yesterday, and that is that the school boards were supplied with 4 percent and 2 percent for teachers' salaries, for a total of $118 million, and 3.5 percent and 3 percent, for a total of $180 million. When you add those two together, it comes to $298 million.

Mr. Speaker, last budget year was the first time that we had actually put a salary enhancement in for teachers, because quite frankly we thought that they deserved it. Where the negotiations have occurred when it comes to teachers' salaries, it has always been out of the basic grant. For the last hundred years it has always been out of the basic grant. The basic grant increases this year were $180 million. Those are what were expected to be negotiated between the school boards and the teachers. We guaranteed a minimum. We said that the $118 million must go to teachers, but it was up to the school boards and the teachers to negotiate where that other $180 million went.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. My second question to the same minister: does the minister agree with his colleague from St. Albert when that colleague says that there isn't any wiggle room with things the way they are, referring to boards?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the 14.09 percent was certainly a very large salary settlement. It amounted to around $260 million. That's an awful lot of money that has been put into teachers' salaries. When it comes to the amount that they received, it was $298 million, so you have about $38 million worth of wiggle room. That is throughout the whole province. The 14.09 percent was something that the arbitrator put down. It was something that he felt could be afforded, and we are living within that. But I'll leave it up to the Assembly as to whether $38 million is a large amount of wiggle room or a small amount.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why does the minister insist that funding is adequate when documents from his own department indicate that when you accommodate inflation and enrollment, there has been no increase since '93-94?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, all it takes is for the Member of the Legislative Assembly to take a look at what my budget figures have been since 1995. From 1995 on, the amount of dollars put into the basic K to 12 education has increased by 46 percent. Enrollment growth has increased by 6 percent.

I'll again draw attention to the figures that I showed yesterday, which are from Stats Canada. Mr. Speaker, these are not affiliated with our government. They're not affiliated with the federal government. They're supposed to be arm's length from the federal government. It shows that we spend more on education per capita than any other province. As a matter of fact, the next closest to us is New Brunswick, which is 14 percent less. As I said yesterday, for example, we spend about 85 percent more on education than they do in Ontario. We spend more money on education than any other jurisdiction in the country. [interjections] They're saying that they don't believe it, but I guess that what they should do is talk to their leaders in Ottawa who look after Stats Canada and find out what's going on. These are Stats Canada data.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Five years ago the government released what it hoped would be a blockbuster: deregulation of power. They promised lower power prices to Albertans, but the movie was a bomb because power prices have subsequently doubled in this province. Now the government is planning a sequel. [interjections] It's not the background noise. I just need to put on my glasses; that's all. Since power bills for most Albertans have doubled because of deregulation part 1, why should Albertans believe that power rates will fall now that deregulation part 2 is in the theatres?

Mr. Klein: Who's it to?

Mr. Mason: It's to the minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the belief part is solidly grounded in fact, and the fact is that 2,300 new megawatts of generation have come on at no additional cost to the consumer for paying for that generation. Back in the regulated days, Genesee, the last coal-fired plant to be built, took 14 years from permit to first piece of power. If we had waited the 14 years or tried to find a regulated solution, we'd have had blackouts, we'd have had rolling blackouts, and we'd have had spikes much higher than what they are today.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what we do know is that there were deferral accounts levied on both the regulated rate and on the purchaser price for 2000 and 2001. These deferral accounts will fall off at the end of 2003, representing a 20 to 25 percent decline in the price of power alone as well as an open, transparent hearing process, more generation coming on. The Calpine 300-megawatt plant is coming on in Calgary. We're going to be the largest windmill producer of power in Canada by this time next year. I mean, the deregulation story has allowed the private sector to solve a government problem.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is predicting a 25 percent reduction in power rates in this province in the next year or two and given that power prices have doubled already, it doesn't take very much – even the minister of education could do the math and find out that we're still going to pay 75 percent more for power than before deregulation. What does the minister have to say to Albertans?

Mr. Smith: Well, I can say, Mr. Speaker, to Albertans that this is a very good province to invest in, that this is a very good province to live in, that this is a very good province to vote for this government in, as the people proved in 2001. Deregulation is a long-term process, but it's a process that has delivered appropriate generation when it was needed. Yes, there have been some bumps in the road. That's never been denied, but we know – and we know by the refinement of the Electric Utilities Act – that everything we do continues to put downward pressure on prices.

Mr. Speaker, I will just refer the hon. member because I think he was probably part of this rate setting – EPCOR Edmonton has 5.825 cents per kilowatt-hour. EPCOR/Aquila has 6.129 cents and Enmax 5.985 cents. These companies do not pay taxes. These companies also invest, can borrow money at a lower rate.

Now, for the poor beleaguered private operator that is in Alberta by the name of ATCO, it must pay corporate tax at the rate of 50 percent as a publicly traded company, and in fact it also has to borrow money at market rates. Their rate is 4.78 cents per kilowatt-hour, some 25 percent cheaper than the city-owned rates.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is continuing to try and pass off the high prices of Alberta as if they were a temporary measure, will he guarantee under this new deregulation scheme that the government has come up with that prices will go down to where they were before deregulation, and if not, will he resign his seat in this Assembly?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the last government that guaranteed electrical prices in western Canada was the New Democratic Party in British Columbia. Today that hydro corporation is $7.1 billion in taxpayer-guaranteed debt.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Farm Income Support Programs

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Hog producers in our province have gone through another difficult year, and the drought has affected them as it has the rest of the agricultural industry, but hog producers have also been faced with low commodity prices as well as skyrocketing production costs. Many of my producers have told me that the risk-management tools that are in place, including the farm income disaster program, are not meeting their needs. My question today is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Will this government adapt existing programs so they better address the financial crisis that the hog industry is currently facing?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there's no question that the hog industry has faced highs and lows in pricing for some time. By nature it's cyclical, and generally the period of time between high and low is long enough that they're able to maintain their operations. However, in the last four or five years they've had some highs and lows that came pretty close together. We responded first in 1998, I believe it was, to the crisis then in depressed prices by introducing a disaster loan program. Fortunately, we had made a decision as a government about a year ago now to reinstitute or continue that loan program, so we have that available on the short term.

The hog producers are not incorrect when they make the statement to us that the farm income disaster program doesn't meet their needs on a short-term basis. However, I expect they will have a different opinion very shortly because the farm income disaster program is based on your tax year, and of course most producers who are on a calendar year are doing their taxes now. I can assure you that we are expecting and are planning for a fairly high draw on that program because of the big swing in prices.

So we have the loan program in place. It's been very successful. I can tell you that the repayment schedule has been excellent on it, Mr. Speaker, and we have FIDP, that will kick in for producers soon.

Mr. Marz: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: could the minister explain how the current agricultural policy framework negotiations will benefit the hog industry?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we were one of the provinces who signed the agricultural policy framework umbrella document in June of this year. We did it because we felt that it was important to move ahead, especially in the areas of safety nets for our producers, and to be part of that discussion, we felt that we should be signatories. Well, in fact, in order to be part of the discussions and negotiations, we had to be signatories.

We've been negotiating on our producers' behalf, and very recently, about two weeks ago, you saw introduced changes to the crop insurance program, which I think have been very well received by our grain and oilseed producers. Those would not have been possible without a lot of hard work from, I can tell you, members around our caucus and the fact that we signed that. Now the discussion is on NISA.

In the interests of time, Mr. Speaker, I can't go into all of the complexities of the discussions around NISA, but Alberta has not been a part of NISA for some time because of the inadequacies of the program. If – if – we can negotiate a disaster component under the NISA program, if we can respond to the concerns of the beginning and developing farmer, that may very well be the answer for our meat industry on these issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that the recent increased energy costs have been a contributing factor to the greatly increased costs of production, could the minister please tell me what he is prepared to do, if anything, to offset these high costs to the hog sector?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly we recognize the importance of the pork producers in diversifying an important sector of our economy, that being the agricultural economy of Alberta. There are no specific energy rebate programs in place for pork producers, but of course all Albertans have benefited from the electricity return of $40 per month as well as the 3.6 cents per kilowatt-hour on commercial use paid in the year 2001. I know that natural gas is used as a heating source in pork barns, and again in the year 2001, when gas reached $10.28 per gigajoule, there was both a $150 per month rebate and a commercial rebate of $6 per gigajoule.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, as utility bills go up, both natural gas and electricity, the credibility of the Premier and this government goes down. Power deregulation in Alberta is the granddaddy of all Progressive Conservative billion dollar boondoggles. Albertans are reminded of this costly policy mistake every month through higher bills, and when they visit the web site altaliberals.ab.ca, they see just how much of a rip-off electricity deregulation has become. My first question is for the Premier. Is the generation of electricity in this province guided by competitive market forces?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that question was already asked and answered. That's part of the answer, competitive forces, yes. Competition normally results in lower prices, but deregulation was also brought in to encourage more power generation, and that has happened.

You know, I hate to answer the last questioner's question, but there are some unique things going on relative to hog farmers, and one needs to go down to the Oyen area and look at the Highland farms, where they use the manure and the methane off the manure to cogenerate electricity. This can occur under deregulation. You don't have to buy from an established power company. There are all kinds of examples that deregulation has opened up.

I talked to a young fellow just recently, and he said: you know, with deregulation there's going to be a tremendous market for me to joint venture with an Italian company to bring small, six-kilowatt wind generators to individual farm families, you know, small windmills. It would power a house and a barn.

This is what deregulation has brought about: the ability for people to go out and do imaginative things, Mr. Speaker, and also for those people who depend on the major lines and the major electricity companies, for those electricity companies, including a city-owned utility that was represented at one time by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, to go out and generate more power.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: in regard to city-owned utilities why attack Edmontonians again by picking on municipally owned utilities when this government has different roles for TransAlta Utilities, one of the big boys, which was allowed to operate and continues to operate certain hydro projects developed with the assistance of taxpayers on both the Bow and North Saskatchewan river systems?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that TransAlta is also joint venturing with EPCOR to develop coal-powered electricity generation. We are not picking on municipalities. We're saying that if municipalities want to play outside their borders, if they want to be players on the provincial or, as a matter of fact, on the national scene – because I understand EPCOR now is competing in Ontario – if they want to be national and provincial players as opposed to municipal players, then let them be subject to the same rules and regulations as the other private-sector players.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, that development between EPCOR and TransAlta is created because of the uncertainties around electricity deregulation, and you know it.

If competition and choice are so important, why not give other companies the choice to compete for the lucrative operation that TransAlta currently has along the Bow and North Saskatchewan rivers? Why not open that up for competition?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can't recall any new dams being built lately, I'm telling you, to harness water for the generation of power. If it did, then the environmental community missed me altogether, and I'm sure it would not happen.

I suspect that the hon. member is talking about dams that were built many, many, many years ago with private dollars – many years ago, 30 or 40 – and it's not only on the North Saskatchewan River. I don't know if he mentioned the Oldman. There's the Bow River. There's Seebe. There's Bears paw. There's Ghost dam. There's Dickson dam. That was the last dam. I don't even know if that's a power generator; is it? I think that's a water control dam. But, anyway, as far as power generation goes, those dams were built eons ago, even before the hon. member was born.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Disposal of Used Oil

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Environmental protection is vital to Alberta, and the government's priorities on that subject are very high. Recently I received a call from a constituent who operates an automotive shop in Calgary. He called to express a concern about a new service fee he's required to pay to have the used oil from his shop picked up and properly disposed of, and he's concerned also that if the fee becomes so high, then proper disposal would be jeopardized. As the province oversees the regulations related to management of used oil in the province, my question is to the hon. Minister of Environment. Can the minister explain what these new fees are for?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you. The member is quite correct. The disposal of used oil is overseen by the Alberta Used Oil Management Association, effectively known as AUOMA, and that group is certainly recognized around the world as leaders. Saskatchewan has started a program like ours; B.C. has started a program like ours. Certainly Ontario is looking at it, and even the OECD has invited AUOMA to present our program.

In response to the member's specific question, there are no new fees. What he may be referring to is a fee that is charged by a company that picks up the oil from the garage, and that is a result of a company charging a fee. These are not AUOMA fees. They are not government fees.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. So what are the alternatives for Alberta companies in terms of how they can dispose of their used oil?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are about a hundred companies in Alberta that are doing this, so I don't know the specific instance that the individual member is referring to, but certainly AUOMA would be prepared to provide his constituent with a list of companies that are doing this. Some are charging fees, some are not charging fees, and the information that I have indicates that some are even paying the garage owner to pick up the oil, because they then turn and resell it and reprocess it. So, as I say, there are a hundred companies doing this. On a standard four-litre oil change there is an environmental charge of 90 cents. Eighty-six cents of this goes back into the system, back to the people that pick up the oil, the collectors of the oil. Only 4 cents of this, around 4 percent, is used for administration of AUOMA.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. If Alberta consumers are already paying the fee for the oil recycling and the cost does not cover the cost of disposing of the used oil, then where does all that money go?

Dr. Taylor: Well, as I said, Mr. Speaker, there are only 4 cents of 90 cents that go to AUOMA. One of the ways they can do this is because as we use our vehicles, certainly they burn oil, and when you do your oil change, you pay, as I said, on the four-litre oil change about 90 cents. Not all of the four litres goes back into the system, because some of our cars burn a little less; some burn a little more. So they actually have a bit of a surplus based on this, and once again they are using that to invest back into the system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the throne speech this government stated that its highest priority must be children. However, Alberta schools are dealt a $142 million shortfall while the horse racing industry gets $33 million more and there's $105 million to upgrade VLTs. Yesterday the Premier said that this government tries to split the pie evenly. My questions are to the Premier. Is the Premier saying that the government views gambling as equal in priority to education?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, what I did point out is that gambling in this province contributes a lot to education. During my time in this Assembly all we've heard from the Liberals is how bad the education system is. You know, they need to get out from under the dome. They need to travel the province. They need to talk a little bit about the stories . . . [interjection] No. I'll tell you a story though. You know, maybe you should read a little book. It's easy reading. Even you can understand it; that is, the members of the Liberal Party. It's called Syrup Pails and Gopher Tails, stories of a one-room school and the marvelous education system we had, the marvelous education system we have today, because I'm going to tell you a story that took place only a year ago.

A standing ovation greeted Sheila Pratt at the New Brigden school on June 27. Principal Deena Meekins announced that Sheila was the provincial winner in the grade 8 Canadian scholastic challenge. Sheila's score of 79 was only four behind the national champion and within the top 10 in the country. This exceptional score was the highest of the 3,000 in the province of Alberta. In fact, two New Brigden students did exceptionally well. Darcy Blair, second place, received a medal for his mark of 68, well above the national average. Indeed, this score is higher than those scored by the provincial champions of Manitoba and British Columbia. You know, a mark of 50 percent – 50 percent – was considered very good. This year the national average . . .

The Speaker: And I thank you and will look forward to having the document tabled in the Assembly, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: The Premier is a good storyteller, but I'm looking for the answer or the truth.

Perhaps he could explain why Alberta schools are on a 17- to 18-year or longer rotation for repainting but VLTs get replaced in less than 10 years for chipped paint and a few minor dings.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again the Liberals seem to be obsessed with seeking out the negatives. All I'm trying to do is say that there are so many positive things, and I plan to give a story a day about the wonderful things that are happening in our schools. A story a day. You know, there won't be enough time in this legislative session nor the next 10 legislative sessions to tell a story a day about the wonderful, good things that are happening in the education system. I'm going to go on.

This year the national average was 44 questions correct. The grade 8 class at New Brigden school achieved an average of 54 correct, 10 percent above the national average. By the way, the top score in the country was 83, and this was earned by a young man who attends the University of Toronto school for the gifted. This is a story of a small school in rural Alberta, a good story.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. I'll try again. Again to the Premier: why are Alberta schools on a 17- to 18-year or longer rotation for repainting when VLTs get replaced in less than 10 years for a few paint chips and some minor dings? Why does it take so long? Where's the priority?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, our priority, of course, is education, and I just recited a story of what a small rural school can do with dedicated teachers, inspired students to achieve outstanding, remarkable academic results.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Irrigation Farmers' Utilities Billings

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The irrigation sector in Alberta's agriculture industry pumps water from May to September, and they're billed twice a year. Many of these irrigators finally saw their final meter reads, which were taken in November by Aquila, billed to them through EPCOR in January 2003. Some of these were totally inaccurate and grossly wrong, and EPCOR blames Aquila for this frustrating delay in a billing that prevented the irrigation business sector from properly expensing multithousands of dollars on their 2002 income tax return. In January I was made aware of many of these irrigation problems. My question to the Minister of Energy is: can he direct Aquila to correct the inappropriate, inaccurate billings that were sent to the irrigation farmers so that they can be properly compensated for a legitimate business expense, which wasn't properly billed to them in time for the 2002 tax year?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, Aquila commercial operation has publicly stated that it has made errors in delivering meter reading data and billing data to EPCOR. Further, EPCOR made a business decision to delay billing until accurate billing information was made available for irrigation customers. Clearly, a commercial EPCOR/Aquila problem. They have taken steps to resolve the billing problem, and the irrigators are encouraged to contact EPCOR, from whom the bill originates, with their billing concerns.

The irrigators are also free to contact the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board for further corrective action.

With respect to the tax situation, I do not know what specific information either Aquila or EPCOR will give to those irrigators.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you. Again to the minister: what, if any, action can be taken to ensure that Aquila will properly credit overcharges on transmission and distribution charges which resulted from the overestimates and incorrect meter reads taken by Aquila back in November?

Mr. Smith: The most appropriate direction for that, Mr. Speaker, is through the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, which is now working with people who have inappropriate meter reads, where they have billing problems, and we can expect the EUB to direct Aquila because Aquila remains under the regulated part of the transmission structure in Alberta. They are regulated. They have service performance, code of conduct performance standards that must be maintained, and they're subject to the full scrutiny of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. So the direction of redress lies with the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there is a $75 potential credit to an account and that further action through the Energy and Utilities Board may not happen until 2004, could the EUB be directed to manually handle each and every one of the irrigation accounts to ensure total accuracy before these fictitious, horrible bills are mailed out?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member brings up a suggestion that may be entirely appropriately handled by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. I will certainly forward that information to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. Of course, they already are aware of the billing irregularities with respect to irrigation.

Now, with respect to the $75 that the member refers to, this is put in place to ensure that both EPCOR and Aquila were going to undertake making the appropriate corrections to failed and erroneous meter readings that had occurred in their area of service. I can report to the House that as of February 18 the EUB has forwarded 1,287 calls to EPCOR for review. EPCOR, therefore, must examine these bills, determine if they qualify for a credit, and return them to the EUB with a recommendation that is then reviewed by the EUB. So far, to this day, 395 bills have been returned to the EUB from EPCOR for review. Of those 395, Mr. Speaker, 256, or just about 70 percent, will receive a $75 credit. Out of the 350,000-customer service base, that means a total of 1,287 calls or files represents three-tenths of 1 percent of the total response. It shows clearly that the EUB mechanism that regulates what Aquila does is working and is working well. Plus, it demonstrates that there is an area which the member who has difficulties can direct that to that particular body.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Government-appointed Committees

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier announced he is spending $6 million to devise a consultation process to examine the dispute between First Nations and oil-field contractors. Sounds like yet another expensive government committee.

Hollywood had the $6 million man; this government has a $6 million committee. To the Premier: I'm sure Albertans would like to know who is going to be paid this $6 million.

Mr. Klein: Well, you know, the Liberals hang around like hungry wanna-be journalists down in the newsroom, and they pick up on every word. That's why they're holding their scrums prior now to it: so they can listen to the reaction. You talk about media 101 and the need for media advisors: they need it. Having said that, he would make a very, very poor reporter – a very poor reporter – even poorer than the poorest reporter, because his facts are all wrong as reported.

As I said, this is part and parcel of the implementation of the monetary requirements for the aboriginal framework agreement. Now, I also said that as I understand it, the hon. minister had asked for $25 million to fully undertake the consultation process and all that's involved in putting in the aboriginal framework agreement. She didn't get that.

But relative to what she's going to do and how she plans to proceed with respect to the framework agreement and how the money will be spent, I'll have her respond.

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Premier. First of all, I think it's important to recognize that we have to be able to do an adequate consultation process, and that process has to be able to include all the stakeholders, and those are the stakeholders that we'd be working with relative to any kind of consultation we deal with. Most specifically, Mr. Speaker, we want to ensure that the First Nations' issues are addressed as well as industry's concerns so that we can ensure that people can get access to land where the people have permits to be able to do the work that they need to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Six million dollars. Again we'll try the Premier. What's the time frame for this $6 million, and where's the business plan?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, you know, maybe I ought not to have answered the question put to me by one of the reporters and picked up erroneously by the Liberal Member for Edmonton-Riverview, but this is a budget item. It will be coming forward to the Legislature for debate in conjunction with the business plan. All the details will be spelled out at that particular time.

All I said was that the minister had asked for $25 million. The best she can hope to expect – well, this, of course, is contingent on how the vote goes and how the debate goes – is $6 million at this particular time. The business plan will be released along with the budget, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. We'll broaden the question. Does the Premier have any idea of the total amount being spent by his government on all the committees it's created?

Mr. Klein: Do I have any idea? No, but I can get the amounts, I'm sure, including all the money that's being spent on committees that include opposition members and perhaps all the money that's being spent on the opposition as well.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I can say this: the administration of government is a big business. In anticipation, well, the Liberals sat down today at their caucus, came up with I don't know how many different questions covering a wide range of areas. We need to be on top of all of these issues because as the government – as the government – we have the responsibility for the administration of all of those departments. So, yes, there are ministerial committees; there are MLA committees; there are legislative committees. I imagine there are numerous committees within the administration of government. There are deputy ministers' committees. There are ADM committees. There are committees relative to division heads. There are committees in the bowels of all the departments because decisions are made on the basis of consensus, and when you need to achieve consensus, you need to bring people together, and that could be construed as a committee.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed to the next item in the Routine, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier I introduced some firefighters to the members of this Assembly, and there have been a few more that have come in the room, and I would like to include them in the record for the members. I'll ask them to stand as I call their names out. Their names are: Lorne Corbitt from Edmonton; Larry Walsh from Edmonton; Dale McLean, the secretary of the Edmonton Firefighters Union; and Greg Holubowich, vice-president of the Edmonton Firefighters Union. I'd ask that all members give them a very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we have a very special guest in your gallery, a person that many Albertans have recognized for her enormous commitment and leadership and dedication to the health of Alberta's young people. This is a woman of vision who has dedicated herself to the service of others and by doing so has contributed enormously to one of the most enduring values that we as Albertans hold dear and precious: to enjoy a life that is healthy and free of disease. This is someone that I have no doubt members of this Assembly have heard of. I'm speaking of Barb Tarbox. She's here today with her good friend Tracy Mueller. In a few moments the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose will welcome Barb on behalf of the Assembly and all Albertans and speak to her accomplishments. I ask that all members please give this person the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Barb Tarbox

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the honour of thanking a very special person and friend, a woman whose courage is an inspiration to all. Since being diagnosed with terminal lung cancer last September, Barb Tarbox has dedicated the remaining months of her life to talking to as many children and teenagers as she can about the dangers of smoking. Barb is a mother, a wife, and a former model. She started smoking when she was just 11 years old and is now dying because of her tobacco addiction.

With no previous experience in public speaking, Barb started talking to small groups of students in Edmonton classrooms. Her campaign has since truly become a national antismoking crusade. Her original goal was to touch 1,000 students with her message. Soon it became 5,000, then 10,000, and now 50,000 before smoking takes her life. Through the hard work of her teammate and manager, Tracy Mueller, she has now spoken to over 40,000 students and tens of thousands through the means of TV.

As chair of AADAC I would like to thank Barb for her support of the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy and its goal of preventing young Albertans from starting to use tobacco. AADAC has worked with Barb on a series of television and newspaper ads and several speaking engagements.

Barb and her family's willingness to share their painful journey in such an honest way is working and will be her legacy to all of us. She has received thousands of e-mails, letters, and phone calls from children and adults who have been inspired to quit smoking, make a commitment to never start, or encourage a loved one to quit. Local and national media have documented her cross-country campaign, and the National Film Board is working on a documentary and educational video.

Today I am pleased to announce that AADAC will establish an annual award of excellence and scholarship in her name for work in tobacco reduction focusing on children and youth. But most important today, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say: thank you. Thank you, Barb, for your courage, your sacrifices, for your service to the youth of this province and, indeed, to all Albertans.

Thank you. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Women's Cross-country Snowmobile Relay

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Snowmobilers have been in the news recently and not for the best reasons, so today I'd like to recognize a special group of snowmobilers and a snowmobile manufacturer for starting a trek which promotes responsible snowmobiling and raises money for a good cause.

Polaris Industries, in searching for a way to celebrate their 50th anniversary in 2004, wanted to encourage more women to become involved in this recreational activity. The idea of a cross-country relay for women was the result, with funds being raised for breast cancer research. The ride started in St. John's, Newfoundland, on January 11 and arrived in Alberta yesterday, coming from Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan, to Bonnyville.

In each province three VIP riders were chosen to represent their province. The VIP riders in Alberta are Darlene la Trace from Sherwood Park, Lisa-Marie Pelky from Red Deer, and Louise Sherren from Erskine. Other riders can join in on any leg of the relay, and anyone can help out by pledging to sponsor participants for each mile they ride. According to the Polaris web site, over $70,000 in pledges has been raised so far.

I especially want to cheer on the women riding from my old club, the Sherwood Park Snowmobile Club. These women and their support team have taken responsibility for the Swan Hills to Whitecourt segment. They are Mineko Blakeman, Karen Dowhan, Heather Armstrong, Priscilla Heaton, and I think that my old riding buddy Sandy Alton is joining them.

I also want to thank all of the men who are participating in the ride. Thanks, guys.

The riders are helped out by volunteers and guides from the Bonnyville Snowdusters, Smoky Lake Trail Twisters, Athabasca River Runners, Swan Hills Snow Goers, Whitecourt Trailblazers, Northland Sno-Goers, and the Valleyview and Swan City snowmobile clubs.

Thanks to Polaris for promoting women and snowmobiling and raising money for an important cause, and a special tip of the helmet to all the women and their support teams who ride segments across Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Alberta's Firefighters

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to pay tribute to Alberta's firefighters, the toughest, most physically fit group of workers to call this province home. They risk their lives to save our lives every day.

The first thing a firefighter is told when he or she takes the job is that it is inherently unsafe. Firefighters can put on helmets, masks, and protective gear, but they know that every time they walk into a building, they might not walk out, and in a fire their bodies under the best equipment will suffer from smoke and soot exposure. Structures can collapse, things can explode at any moment, and always, in every fire, there are carcinogenics and chemicals burning that have a high likelihood of causing cancer. Firefighters all know that they are more likely to get cancer just by virtue of doing their job.

There are six cancers, Mr. Speaker, which are known as the firefighters' cancers. They are: brain cancer, bladder cancer, kidney cancer, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, leukemia, and colon cancer. Take just two of these cancers: colon cancer and leukemia. Studies show that a firefighter is 68 percent more likely to get colon cancer than anybody else if they have been on the job for 20 years or more. The risk of getting leukemia is doubled after only five years on the job. These figures are staggering, and it brings home the sobering truth that firefighters put their safety on the line to ensure ours, but if they get these cancers, they've got to go through a process with Workers' Compensation, and they are not guaranteed at this date to receive WCB benefits. Can you imagine getting cancer, being worried about your own life and the well-being of those around you, and having to prove to the WCB that, yes, fighting fires for 20 years most probably is the reason you have cancer? It isn't fair, and it's time to do something about it.

In this session I will bring forward a private member's bill that if passed would grant presumptive status to any firefighter who contracts one of the firefighters' cancers. While there will be a years-of-service restriction on this presumptive status, the message will be clear. If a firefighter puts his life on the line protecting Albertans and contracts cancer from doing his job, this government has the obligation to ensure that the firefighters and their families are given proper recognition and compensation for the valuable service that they have undertaken and the suffering it has caused them. It is the right time to do this and the right thing to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Benefits

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One raise in nine years. Many honourable members of this House would quit in protest if they received only one raise in almost a decade. We certainly wouldn't see them for dust if that solitary increase was equivalent to less than half a percent a year. Yet that's what this government expects people with disabilities that prevent them from holding gainful employment to survive on.

The inflation rate in Alberta for the last decade has eroded the purchasing power of AISH clients. In 1999 assured income for the severely handicapped payments were certainly increased, but it was only by $40 a month. By comparison, Alberta MLAs have been receiving annual increases in salary recently. Alberta's Human Resources and Employment minister said last May that he would be looking into the AISH program when the MLA low-income review committee advised him that low-income support rates in this province need to be increased. The minister said that he would look at the AISH program separately from the supports for independence program, a plan that is supposedly under way. Where are his suggestions? Where is the proof for AISH clients of this province that this government is at all interested in their well-being?

Rhetoric won't put food in the mouths of AISH recipients when natural gas bills are so high that they must use their food budget to supplement the high cost of natural gas. Mere words won't keep the lights on when there's no money to pay for increasing electricity bills either. Only a much-needed increase in AISH benefits will bring some measure of comfort to AISH recipients. For shame's sake this government must do something to help these vulnerable members of our province, and now.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Clerk: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Mar, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Occupational Therapy Profession Act, section 5(4), Alberta Association of Registered Occupational Therapists annual report 2001-02; pursuant to the Dental Disciplines Act, section 8(4), Alberta Dental Association and College 2001-02 annual report; pursuant to the Health Facilities Review Committee Act, section 16(2), Alberta Health Facilities Review Committee annual report 2001-02; pursuant to the Regional Health Authorities Act, section 14(3), Health Authority 5 annual report 2001-2002; on behalf of Mr. Cardinal, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, Surface Rights Board and Land Compensation Board annual report 2002.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to file copies of two documents today: the Agrivantage final report and recommendations, Building Tomorrow Together, and Alberta's Agriculture Research and Innovation Strategic Framework. Both of these documents as they are implemented will contribute to the advancement of the agriculture and agri-food industry in Alberta and ensure that the industry remains competitive and respected.

Mr. Speaker, I would just make members aware that copies of both reports are available from my office upon request.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter from the Elder Advocates of Alberta directed towards the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness in which they are asking the government to make mandatory five tenets: to reduce abuse of seniors including not prescribing psychotropic medication and no permanent relegation of residents to bed and allowing nurse's notes and medical files to be available to the resident and maintaining a written protocol.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with the appropriate number of copies of a letter to table urging the Alberta government to keep its promise to protect the Bighorn wildland recreation area. The letter is written by Mr. Paul Otto.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a document from Alberta Learning indicating that funding has changed very little for public education when one factors in inflation and enrolment, and this document includes the fiscal year '93-94 right up until the current time.

The second document that I would like to table for the benefit of not only members of this Assembly but all Albertans is a Did You Know document prepared on behalf of the Alberta Liberal caucus, the Official Opposition, comparing what some of the expenditures of this government are – for VLTs, for horse racing, for extra staff, for expansion of the cabinet – and what that money could be used for in public education.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to make two tablings today. Both are letters, and I'll be tabling them in an appropriate number of copies.

The first letter is from Mrs. Doreen Smith of Edmonton. It's dated February 14, just a few days ago, addressed to the Minister of Seniors. Mrs. Smith is expressing great concern about the sea of hardship that the high gas and power bills are causing to her and thousands of other seniors, many of whom also live in my constituency. That's the first letter.

The second letter, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Mrs. Jean Polasek of Clairmont dated February 17, addressed to her MLA. Mrs. Polasek is a board member of district 1, the Alberta Council on Aging and has written this letter on behalf of many seniors and single mothers in the area who are finding it impossible to pay their gas bills and desperately need an immediate break in the form of rebates if they are to be able to stay warm in this cold weather.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first tabling is a letter from the Marlowe family in Edmonton dated February 7, 2003, addressed to the Premier. They had a shock of disbelief upon opening their utility bill and are seeking help.

The second tabling is a letter from a greenhouse operation in Coronation dated January 25, 2003, also addressed to the Premier. This greenhouse has been in operation for the past 19 years and is now canceling spring orders and laying off staff due to horrendous increases in utility bills.

3:00head: Orders of the Day

head: Consideration of Her Honour

head: the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Jacobs moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 19: Mr. Hancock]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I rise today to add my voice to the response to the Speech from the Throne, my thoughts return to the Lieutenant Governor. I know that my colleagues in the House and myself all feel the same level of appreciation to her for her greatness.

As I think back to just a week ago when I had the opportunity to have dinner with her, I asked her at that time how her husband was doing, and she said to me: you know, he's got to do all the really important things in life. He's had a family, he's been able to see them raised, and he's been able to see them become productive citizens, actually run the business better than we did, she said. She said: he's been able to have grandchildren and see them grow up; all the truly important things he's got to see happen in our family. She said to me that that was the most important thing to her and her husband.

As I reflect now on the Speech from the Throne and I think of how earlier this week she stood in this House knowing of her condition and gave that speech, I am doubly impressed with the nature and the spirit of the woman that is the Lieutenant Governor of this province.

I looked at the title of the speech, and I thought what she must have been thinking as she read A Promise to Our Children as she reflected on her own family and her own family condition, and before I even knew that news, that title really jumped out for me. I've heard some opposition members say: "A Promise to Our Children is too vague. It's not solid enough. There's not enough detail. What does it really show?"

I'd like to kind of look at the cup half full today instead of half empty. When I see the words A Promise to Our Children, those mean a lot to me. I'm the mother of four children, and I know that when I think about my children and I think about the future of this province, it makes me doubly – doubly – determined to make sure that we provide the kind of future that we want for our own children. I want for my children a province that is strong and economically able to manage their families. I want for my children safe communities. I want for my children a lot of the things that are covered in the Speech from the Throne that was given earlier this week, so I was delighted as I read that speech.

I'm not only a mother, but I'm a Member of the Legislative Assembly, and I represent the constituency of Calgary-Shaw. I've always said that it's the greatest constituency. Some of my colleagues have a problem with that, but I stand on that and want to say that since I've been in office, just over two years, I find that this is a good time to reflect and look back over the last two years to see what kinds of promises we have fulfilled and the kinds of promises that we want to fulfill in the future.

Now, I've always said that I come from a large constituency. That constituency is now over 90,000 people, and I'm sure that if I stand next year, I might be saying that it's over a hundred thousand people. It is the largest constituency in the province of Alberta, and it's a very rich constituency, and I know that if they read this speech, they would be very encouraged as they see the action that government is preparing to take. So in my response today I wanted to in particular keep my constituents in mind and express to you some of their hopes and desires and the things that they will be encouraged about as they read this speech.

I quote from the speech on the first page when it talks about the prosperity of Alberta and the course that government has charted for their new future. It said, "That course has brought the province to an era of unmatched growth and prosperity." That is true. That is true. You don't have to live in Calgary-Shaw to know that this province is growing.

I often hear my rural colleagues talk about how long it takes them to drive across their constituencies and how difficult that is for them sometimes. You can drive across my constituency of 90,000 people in under 15 minutes, but I must tell you of my surprise when I drive to communities within my neighbourhood and see whole new subdivisions that have sprung up since the last time I visited them. It is growing rapidly.

As I knock on the doors of those people and visit and talk with them, they tell me where they've come from and why they're here. They've come from Saskatchewan. They've come from British Columbia. They've come from Ontario. They've come from further east. I'm told that Ontario is not the east, that there are more eastern provinces. I always ask them: "Why are you here? Why did you come to the province of Alberta?" They always say to me: I came here because there was a job; there was a job so that I could have a salary to raise and support my family. That's why they come. They're young. They're dynamic. They're bright. Now, I'm not saying that I have the brightest constituents in the whole province, but I think close. [interjection] Others think they do. But I'm always impressed with the nature of the new constituency that is growing around me, and I think: why do they come?

I remember back in the early '80s when my own family was living in a little community down in Riverton, Wyoming, and the oil and gas industry plummeted, and for the very first time in our family we didn't have a job. It's the first time that we'd not had a salary. I quickly learned a lesson: all the other things that we seek in life are really nice, but when you don't have a job, it is very, very difficult on families. I've never forgotten that lesson, and I've always been grateful for my husband being able to be employed and being able to support our family.

Now, as an MLA for the last two years many, many times I've heard the expression: how can a rich province not? In fact, I thought that if I had a nickel for every time I've heard that expression, I probably could solve all the problems in the province of Alberta. I thought back about that, and I thought: you know why the people tell me that they come to Alberta? Not because it's a rich province, but because they can support their families. I think sometimes we lose sight of that in this province, and I think this throne speech points that out. It says that we have a prosperous province. We do. People have jobs. They have a way to support their families. So when I look to A Promise to Our Children, I can think of no greater promise than that.

I like the saying "steady as we grow" because there's no question that we've been able to establish – and I think not just because of oil and gas but because the government was prepared to make tough decisions and to bring this province into a fiscal responsibility mode that allowed it to get where it is today. When we see "steady as we grow" in this speech, I think that that's a reality. Now our task and our job as government is to make sure that we don't, you know, have to go backward, that we can continue to go forward and that the promise can be bright in the future for our children.

I particularly wanted to spend just a moment on A Bright Future for Children, as it was entitled in the speech, and it says that Alberta's most precious resource is its children, that our job is to protect and enable them "to develop to their fullest potential." I don't think of us as not having tried to do this in the past. I think we've gone to great efforts to do this, but what this speech tells me is that we are focusing an even greater attention to this difficulty.

We start with the Child Welfare Act. I'm the chair of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee. Part of my responsibility with my committee is to go and visit those children that are not in ideal circumstances. They live in foster care homes. They live in circumstances other than with their families. It is difficult for me to watch those children. I see people providing, and I see foster care parents who are trying very hard, and I always honour the work that they do. Yet these children are not with their families, and they are not in homes. A religious leader once said that it is not enough simply for parents to provide food, shelter for children and their physical well-being, that there's an equal responsibility for us to provide nourishment, direction to the spirit and the mind and the heart.

When I look at these children and I think of my own four children, who have had all the benefits of parents – now, I'm not saying that I'm the best mother always, but practically always, but my children have always had the benefit of a mother and a father who love them and grandparents who love them. They've had the benefit of living in communities that also care for them. I think of all the coaches that have coached them in basketball over the years. I think of the Scout leaders that have hiked up the hill with them in the middle of the winter and, you know, brought them back home to me even though sometimes they really annoy me and I wonder if they should come back, but they do. I think of those people that have cared and loved my children. I think of the teachers in schools that have invested in my children, worked hard with them to ensure that they got a good education and that their promise was bright.

I realize that it takes many people in order for this to happen, so when I look at this reform of the Child Welfare Act, I think it's appropriate. I think it's the right thing to do. I do not think government should do this alone. In the speech it says:

This approach recognizes that creating an environment where children succeed is an endeavour that stretches beyond the ability of any one family or any government. Education and health systems, the corporate and voluntary sectors, parents, extended families, and caregivers are all part of a vital community network of supports that must be in place for children to thrive.

And I say, "Hear, hear" to that.

The other piece that was covered by the Speech from the Throne that I wanted to respond to was the initiative for the Alberta Centre for Child, Family and Community Research into fetal alcohol syndrome. Myself and the hon. Member for Red Deer-North were able last year to go with the hon. Minister of Children's Services to a conference on fetal alcohol syndrome. I must be frank with you. Before I came into office, I wasn't really aware of fetal alcohol syndrome. I've now seen children that have fetal alcohol syndrome. I've been able to talk to foster care parents and parents who adopted fetal alcohol syndrome children. I've been able to visit with mothers that have had fetal alcohol children. I'm not certain why I wasn't exposed to it. I suppose I feel fairly protected in that way, but as I looked and spent time with these children, I realized that it was a problem that needed to be dealt with, and I've been so impressed with the colleagues that are surrounding me that also feel strongly about this. As I see this in the Speech from the Throne, I feel encouraged because it talks about research on the prevention of fetal alcohol syndrome. Much time and attention has already been spent on identifying fetal alcohol and what it is and defining it, but let's prevent it, and I'm encouraged to see this in the Speech from the Throne.

If you look at the Calgary-Shaw constituency, one of the richest resources that it has, although there are some, I guess, sour gas wells in the vicinity, is children. I have over 25,000 children in my constituency. In fact, I have more children in my constituency probably than some members have constituents, which tells me I have roughly, if you do the math, 50,000 parents of those 25,000 constituents that are children, so it's no surprise to me when issues about education or that primarily affect children come along that I hear and that my phones ring and that my e-mail is filled with the concerns of parents and of children. So when Alberta's Commission on Learning was struck, I was very encouraged. I felt like it was an opportunity for us to take a good long look at what we were doing in education. Could we improve on it? Could we make it better? Where were the challenges? I will be bringing forward a motion later that will talk about the complexity of the classroom this year. I think it's something that we do need to address and something whose day has come. So I'm very encouraged when I see in the Speech from the Throne comment on Alberta's Commission on Learning, and I very much await their results and hope that we will be able to improve an already excellent education system and make it even better.

I was also encouraged to see the $20 million to help Alberta school boards purchase additional classroom resources and textbooks. Often some have said: well, that only buys half a textbook per child. But I would like to point out that there is budget already out there for textbooks, and this will add and enhance that and create more opportunity for textbooks, and I think it's a good-news story. I was very encouraged when I saw that in the Speech from the Throne.

In the few short minutes that I have left I just want to touch briefly on infrastructure. Many of you have heard me talk about infrastructure, and at the beginning of it it talks about a solid infrastructure. "As Alberta has grown, so has its need for health facilities, schools, and roads." Now, what I say to my constituents is: many of you have come to the province because you have jobs, but unfortunately you were not able to drag with you your schools, your roads, and your hospitals. So as I see my constituency continue to grow, we have needs in my constituency for these things. It says in the speech that the "economic growth has surpassed its investment in capital projects, and Albertans aren't willing to wait until tomorrow for the infrastructure they need today." I think that reflects the Calgary-Shaw constituency. They recognize that there's difficulty in this area, and that's why, first of all, they sent me to Edmonton, and that's what they look to us for as government: to not tell them why they can't have it but to come up with the kinds of solutions that will ensure and enable them to have it in the future. So I'm very much encouraged as I look at this government trying to become more flexible in how they look at infrastructure.

Now, perhaps all ideas out there are not the best ideas, and perhaps things have been tried other places that were not effective. That doesn't mean that we can't capitalize on the successes. I think of the Bethany care facility within my constituency, which is a P3 arrangement and working very well. [some applause] Thank you. I also think of Hampton school, which I've seen in the news. All over the news they talk about Hampton school, but I've had opportunity to tour that school and talk to parents and students and teachers, and I can tell you that there are some pretty happy parents and teachers and students in Hampton school today, very grateful that there was a P3 arrangement. Now, could that be improved upon? Absolutely. Are there ways that we as government can help control some of those factors that were negative? Absolutely.

So, again, I'd like to just close today by saying that steady as we grow is the way to go. I think this is a speech of promise and hope, and I think the Calgary-Shaw constituency will enjoy reading this. I thank you again.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments? Questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to speak.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If there are no questions for the hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, that's what I had asked, and that's why I was asking you. Go ahead.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise in this Assembly to speak to the Speech from the Throne. I concur completely with the comments of the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw in expressing her feelings and, I'm sure, the feelings of all of us about the condition of the Lieutenant Governor and the courageous job she did in delivering this speech just a few short days ago, an inspiration for all of us.

There has been much discussion already on the nature of the Speech from the Throne, and the phrase I've heard from any number of us is that it's a matter sometimes of looking at whether the glass is half full or the glass is half empty. I think we may want to say that sometimes some people's glasses are full and some people's glasses are empty, and we need to keep all of that in perspective. It's not a simple issue of: is one single glass half full or half empty? The fact of the matter is that for many of us, probably for all of us who are members of this Assembly in most regards our glasses, our lives are very full and very wealthy and very prosperous. But there are many people in this province whose glasses are by any measure less than half full, and we want to try to remember those people as we go through our daily business in this Assembly.

The Speech from the Throne, of course, is focused on children, A Promise to Our Children, and that's a noble focus for this speech and for this government and for this Assembly. I think we would all concur that looking after children and providing all the resources and supports we can for children from conception right through to the early years of school is crucial and is probably the single most important way to secure the future of this province. So, for example, when amendments to the Child Welfare Act are raised – and I'm told that they will "emphasize the importance of early intervention and the preservation of the family" – I commend that, and I hope that that prevents, for example, the kinds of issues that we were debating a year ago in this Assembly from arising, where we saw reductions to early intervention programs.

I also agree completely with the emphasis on fetal alcohol syndrome. It's a frightening problem for this society. There have been some dramatic crimes, some murders committed in this province by people who suffer from this condition, and they really have no conception of what they're doing. That's just a small and dramatic example of the severity of this disease. I know that it's extremely widespread. The thing is that we already know how to prevent fetal alcohol syndrome. We know what causes it, and we know how to prevent it. So I hope that rather than just pouring research money into this question, we actually take action, as the Minister of Children's Services has, but we need to take more action on preventing fetal alcohol syndrome.

Another tremendous program that as recently as last night I was hearing very discouraging words about the future of is the Alberta initiative for school improvement, AISI, as it's known as in schools. They have had some dramatic results through this program in many schools in Edmonton, including some schools in the most impoverished neighbourhoods.

What's the issue? Well, the issue is that the funding is running out for those programs this year. This is it, and there's a very decided risk that young children, preschoolers in neighbourhoods like Norwood and indeed neighbourhoods across Edmonton and across Alberta will suddenly not have the supports that have made huge differences to their early childhood development. So I hope that that program gets extended as a result of this speech.

The $20 million investment in schools and school resources, frankly, is too small, but it's better than nothing. There are schools in this province, for example, where the maps still show the Soviet Union, and that sort of geography is so far out of date that we're not doing anybody an advantage by that. If schools can use some of this money to improve their resources, great, but we shouldn't have allowed them to get so far behind as it is.

Moving to the section of the speech on a strong economy, the two great emphases in the speech are on agriculture and energy, which we all agree are absolutely fundamental to the prosperity of this province. The agriculture sector is in a very rough spot. I know that we voted in the fall for a substantial increase to support that sector because of the drought and ironically also because of some flooding in southern Alberta, but I'm afraid that the future of this sector is in for long-term problems and that we need long-term solutions. I know that our leader has some very clearly thought-through ideas on that, and I hope the government listens to those.

I am concerned about the commitment of this government to continue to oppose the monopoly of the Canadian Wheat Board. A tremendous number of farmers in this province and across western Canada support the Canadian Wheat Board, and they show that every time members to the board of the Canadian Wheat Board are elected, and they continuously elect members who want the Wheat Board to continue. I'm concerned that this government is actually listening to a very narrow voice on that particular issue.

The energy industry also gets a substantial amount of attention, and let's be honest: it's the energy industry that separates Alberta's economy from the economies of the other provinces in this country. So well they deserve particular attention, but they don't deserve the kind of attention the electricity industry has received in this province in the last few years. We all know that electricity deregulation has brought many problems, and I am concerned when I read that the government is planning to make further changes and hopes that these changes will "increase competition and value for consumers." Frankly, I'm a big fan of competition, but anyone who knows economics knows that there are limits to markets and that competition doesn't always work and that in fact it was because of a breakdown in competition early in the 20th century that we got into regulated electricity in the first place. I am not optimistic that the moves of this government are going to benefit consumers of electricity in Alberta at all.

The economy needs to diversify in this province, and although we trumpet the efforts of diversification, if you take a hard look at their success, proportionately Alberta's economy is still overly dependent on energy and agriculture and especially on energy. Tory governments have been trying for 25 years or more to diversify the economy with very mixed success and some spectacular failures. I'm not sure what new thoughts this government has to put into place as it's suggested here, but we'll be watching them carefully.

P3s have had a fair bit of debate, and they're going to get a fair bit more, I'm sure. They are specifically referred to in the Speech from the Throne. It's curious. The Speech from the Throne says that "Albertans aren't willing to wait until tomorrow for the infrastructure they need today. That's why the government will develop a new capital plan to address infrastructure needs." Well, I'm sure there has been a capital plan in place for many years. I'm not sure why we particularly need a new one. The old one would probably have worked perfectly well if the government had just followed it. Instead, it was on and off and on and off. So some stability, which we've argued for in this party for many years, will be welcomed in the sector. However, turning to P3s is a risky business, and I would encourage – encourage – the Minister of Infrastructure and all members of this government to very, very carefully examine the evidence on P3s. There is, in fact, an extensive body of analysis on P3s, and by and large their usefulness is extremely limited. So let's approach this issue with great caution.

The new fiscal framework that's referred to in the Speech from the Throne is hard to disagree with in any substance because, after all, it is essentially a borrowing of our own party's position. So my congratulations to the government for doing that.

Seniors. While the Member for Calgary-Shaw has a huge number of children in her constituency, I have a huge number of seniors, and if there's something I would have liked to have seen more emphasis on in this speech, it is the plight of seniors, over half of whom are living on incomes of under $15,000 a year. Seniors have borne the brunt of a great number of the government's cuts in the last decade, and it doesn't look from this speech like they're going to get much of that returned. So I would like to see much more careful attention paid to seniors.

And now to health care. Health care will continue to be the top priority of Albertans and of Canadians as it has been for many, many years now. This government from the beginning has wrestled with health care and has in my view and the view of many, many other people not done a particularly good job of it. In fact, health care is one of the areas that this government consistently scores low on in terms of public confidence, and there are many reasons for that.

But at least they're right that still more money is not the only answer for improving health care. I think that we would all agree with that. One way of improving health care is better management, and I am very concerned that we have a health department in which in 10 years there have been eight changes of deputy minister, the revolving door at the top of that department, and as a result there's continuous chaos. So it would have been nice to see a commitment to steady management there.

I would also like to have seen some explicit addressing of conflict of interest issues in the health care system because the system as it is now tolerates conflicts of interest that, for example, would never be tolerated in the legal system. They would never be tolerated in any major corporation, and indeed they wouldn't be tolerated elsewhere in the public sector. It's an issue that needs to be sorted out.

There are also questions of the credibility of the promises of the Speech from the Throne. I mean, after all, I'm reading from the Speech from the Throne of 2001, that says: "The government will provide Albertans with a stronger voice in health system management. This fall Albertans will elect two-thirds of the board members of the 17 regional health authorities." Unfortunately, a mere two Speeches from the Throne later we've seen those elected positions abolished. So it does make me wonder: how much can we rely on the promises that we're seeing in the Speech from the Throne? How much does it mean when we read fine words under the section on the health system here when those promises are so easily and so soon broken? But we can always hope, and we can always work, as we will, to hold the government accountable.

The speech also has drawn some controversy over its comments about Alberta's position in Canada, and I would like to note the curious paradox in which this government very, very tightly ties its funding to school boards. So, for example, the $20 million being provided can't be spent on anything except exactly what this government says. They're very quick to tie funds to school boards, but oh, my goodness, if the federal government ties funds forwarded to the province, the noise, the complaining, the objections are nothing short of remarkable. It's this kind of double standard that rubs many Albertans the wrong way and, frankly, undermines the province's own position. Wouldn't it have been better just to have said: "We'll give the $20 million to the school boards. You guys spend it how you want." That's how we want the federal government to treat us. That's a position that could be respected.

Finally – I see I'm running out of time here – this province wants to do everything to protect Alberta's economy. We agree with that, but I for one have differing views on what actions need to be taken there.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions? Comments?

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to respond to this year's throne speech. This province is truly blessed with the gift of our Lieutenant Governor, and I wish her a speedy recovery as we all keep her in our thoughts and prayers and send her our hugs.

Like Her Honour I share a vision for our children and our youth, a vision where we in the Legislature make a promise to them, a promise of protection, encouragement, and, most of all, prosperity. Themistocles of ancient Athens demonstrated the importance of children to government when he said, "The Athenians govern the Greeks; I govern the Athenians; you, my wife, govern me; your son governs you."

Mr. Speaker, every parent understands exactly what Themistocles meant and, therefore, why the Alberta Promise is so important. This promise is shared by the people of Alberta and by the people of Red Deer. Did you know that there are some people in Red Deer that actually think that Red Deer is the centre of the universe? And then there are some people in Red Deer that know that Red Deer is the centre of the universe.

In response to Her Honour's remarks, I'd like to talk about three very important issues that are at the heart of Alberta's Promise. The first is mentoring and the important difference that having a strong mentor makes in a young life. The second is doing everything we can to prevent fetal alcohol syndrome in Alberta and to do this without any hesitation. The third is ensuring that we take all necessary steps to protect Alberta's prosperity, especially in light of the federal government's ratifying of the potentially dangerous Kyoto protocol.

On my first point, one of the promises Her Honour highlighted is to ensure that "every child receives ongoing support, care, and guidance from at least one caring adult in his or her life." For most Albertan children this support comes from within the family, but we know that many children come from troubled homes or from single-parent homes where that parent works hard to pay the bills and to set a good example for his or her children. In cases where a parent needs a little help from their friends and neighbours, when they need someone else to be there for their child, every Albertan who is ready, willing, and able should take the time to be there as a mentor, as an in-school mentor or as a Big Sister or Big Brother. We already have dedicated and committed mentors in the form of coaches for hockey, soccer, ringette, lacrosse, and every other kind of coach, in the form of leaders for Brownies, Cubs, Guides, Scouts, Pathfinders, and Venturers, and in the form of youth group leaders as well as teachers and tutors. These mentors do a great job, but we need more.

Mr. Speaker, in my role as head of the Youth Secretariat I've seen firsthand the value of mentoring. When I go into schools where Big Sisters and Big Brothers have in-school mentoring programs, I not only see kids who are happier, healthier, and learning more enthusiastically, but I also see mentors who are happy as well. If you talk to anyone who's taken on the role of a mentor, including the in-school mentors, you'll hear stories about the good things that the child is doing and the successes of that child. You'll also hear them talking about how much fun it can be and how rewarding it is to play a significant role in the life of a young person.

If you knew beyond any doubt that by spending an hour a week with a child or a youth, you could make a huge difference in their lives, if you knew that just by being there, you could prevent them from turning to drugs or alcohol or that you could keep them in school and guide them to a successful future, that just by being there, you could prevent them from attempting suicide, would you do it? Would you take the time to be a mentor? My husband has always said that if you take a kid fishing, you'll never have to fish for him or her, or if you take a kid hunting, you'll never have to hunt for him or her. Mr. Speaker, maybe it's time to take a kid fishing or hunting.

The theme of Her Honour's speech is Alberta's Promise. I'd also like to call it Alberta's challenge. I challenge each and every Albertan to call Big Sisters and Big Brothers or the boys and girls clubs and get involved. It will be one of the most rewarding decisions you will ever make.

Mr. Speaker, John F. Kennedy once said, "Ask not what your country can do for you; ask what you can do for your country." Well, you don't have to be a soldier or an astronaut, a brain surgeon or an Olympic athlete to make a difference for your country. You can make a huge difference by being a mentor, somebody's own personal hero.

On my second point, Mr. Speaker, I commend Her Honour's comments with regard to Alberta's efforts to prevent fetal alcohol syndrome. Fetal alcohol syndrome is a brutal affliction, even more sad because of the fact that children are born with it and it is not curable. It is a syndrome that inhibits their development and in such a way that some do not even know they have this problem. Yet the negative social effects of FAS are well known. We know that babies born with FAS don't recover, and often those with FAS become adults who are not financially or socially self-sufficient, and they are more likely to require special education and drop out of school. Some will likely end up in our jails because they do not know how to cope with this affliction. Many children with FAS grow up to be alcohol or substance abusers themselves.

The opportunity for children born with FAS to live a healthy, normal, and successful life is drastically reduced, and for some sufferers that opportunity does not exist at all. It is up to us to make sure that we take steps to rid Alberta of this terrible form of brain damage. I know that many of my colleagues are already fighting the good fight and that all my colleagues will join me in encouraging our government to keep fighting FAS. Red Deer and central Alberta are fortunate to have many caring and well-trained volunteers and outreach workers that are helping families and children to cope with this life sentence.

Finally, to my third point, Mr. Speaker. It will come as no surprise to anybody in this Assembly that my constituents are particularly concerned with the federal government's ratification of the Kyoto protocol. After all, when you're talking about Red Deer, you're talking about the centre of the oil and gas service industry. Not only has the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce and the city council of Red Deer informed the provincial and federal governments of their objections to the Kyoto protocol, but so have numerous businessmen and corporations. Our provincial government has reiterated its intention to fight the Kyoto protocol should it prove to be as onerous as first expected. That's only one part of the equation. The other is the commitment to future generations of Albertans that we will not let any action by the federal government risk the opportunity of these Albertans for success.

Mr. Speaker, it doesn't make me very happy to have to stand here with skepticism about our federal government, but I am nonetheless disheartened by its performance of late. Believe me; coming from Red Deer my constituents have long memories. Folks from Red Deer remember the national energy program, and they remember how it decimated the economy of the province. They remember the daily bankruptcies of businesses that failed because of flawed federal programming. And Red Deer was not the only city that suffered. To this very day I still see tough, mighty oil workers and educated, well-trained professionals shudder at the very sound of that which cannot be named.

So when we see another solution brought in from Ottawa or in this case from a city in Japan that many Albertans had never heard of before, we rightly get suspicious, and when the federal Minister of the Environment tells me that their calculations only show an increase of 20 cents on a barrel of oil, I pray that those calculations weren't made by the same people who calculated the cost of the gun registry. When we see this made-in-Ottawa solution coupled with this wasteful gun registry, the monopolistic Canadian Wheat Board, the too little, too late farm programs, and the new round of federal intrusions into social programs, I start to shudder. This is not how this country is supposed to work.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will be introducing Motion 502 that asks the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to investigate and take steps to strengthen Alberta's position within Confederation. What might have worked 100 years ago does not work today. We need to negotiate a new deal in Confederation for all Albertans. After all, that is part of our promise: to protect our prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, I'm a good Canadian, and I will always remain so. This is also most definitely true of my constituents in Red Deer-North and many other Albertans. It does not seem to me that just because hardworking Albertans have found success, it is the federal government's job to waltz through and squash it. In fact, it should be the other way around; they should be encouraging our success because success for Alberta means success for Canada. In the case that the federal government will not share our success, this government will be there. We'll work so our young people know that this is still the best province in Canada and the best place in the world to live, work, and raise a family. And when the federal government comes calling with a new, punitive program that nobody asked for, we'll work hard to make them take it right back to Ottawa. This is another promise that we can make to our children.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to add that a new fiscal framework to bring predictability, sustainability, and more discipline to fiscal management will be welcomed by the constituents of Red Deer. By eliminating the need for stop-and-go infrastructure spending, all Albertans will benefit.

On the environmental side I am very pleased that this government will provide funding for a clean coal demonstration project to develop techniques for the use of coal in electricity generation. We all know that sustainable economic growth requires clean air, water, and land and that Albertans will accept no less. This is why I am also very pleased about a made-in-Alberta plan to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Mr. Speaker, I've talked about three of the issues underlying Her Honour's promise to Alberta's children and youth. These are three of many. This government is right to put the concerns of our children and youth first and to promote and take action to ensure a prosperous life for them and indeed all Albertans. I, like most Albertans, have confidence in our government to fulfill these promises. I also have confidence in our wonderful citizens to follow our lead.

Mr. Speaker, when I was six years old, I made a promise. I promised to do my best, to do my duty to God, the Queen, and my country, and to help other people every day, especially those at home. Now, my mother might tell you something different, but I've always tried to keep that promise. I also intend to keep Alberta's Promise to ensure that Alberta's most precious resource, its children, are protected and enabled to develop to their fullest potential.

May God bless Alberta, and God bless Canada. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been more than six years since I was first elected MLA for the constituency of Calgary-

West and six years since I first responded to the 1997 Speech from the Throne. I clearly remember describing proudly the distinctive community and geographic areas of Calgary-West and the wide range of ages of my constituents and especially the high standards and expectations they have for themselves and for their political representatives, especially their aldermen, school trustees, and MLA.

Now, six years later, I am of course much wiser, but I know I'm older. Much has happened in Calgary-West. Explosive development in the western half resulted in 70 percent of K to 12 students living in that sector having to leave the area to attend one of the many underutilized schools in the east sector of the constituency. There are traffic challenges also. Movement of constituents to and from work is an increasing frustration these days.

There are, however, many more housing choices for the increasing number of seniors who are choosing to age in place, who have said good-bye to their residential homes with the high-maintenance yards which they have lived in for many, many years. In Calgary-West there are, fortunately, increasing housing choices for all income levels of seniors. I am increasingly concerned, even alarmed, though, that with the years just how much more seniors become frail and thus dependent on others to maintain an acceptable way of life.

Turning to the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, which the Lieutenant Governor delivered so beautifully in her very special style on Tuesday, February 18. She should know that we all embrace her too. I wrote this before I read my memo about her recent health status, but especially now I wanted to say briefly that I extend to her our sincerest prayers for a full recovery.

I was very pleased with the key messages in the theme A Promise to Our Children with a focus on Albertans' common values, their pride in meeting challenges and trying new things, in working hard, in being independent but with a strong sense of responsibility to family and community. I agree with the steady-as-we-go challenge to manage growth pressures today and remain strong into the future.

Mr. Speaker, who can disagree with these goals, unless you have no family or children? Being a mother of two adult children and another two by my second marriage and now a grandmother of nine, I have a huge personal interest in the importance of planning for the next 10, 20, and 30 years. Whether it be access to quality health services, an excellent learning system, a strong economy, stabilizing of the energy sector long term, accelerating research, reducing greenhouse gas emissions, providing solid infrastructure, developing a more sustainable fiscal framework, and responding to the needs of people, especially the most vulnerable, the priorities in the throne speech covered very well all of the areas important to providing young Albertans with a better quality of life today and in the future.

However – and there's always a however, and that's where I'm at right now – economists and planners nationally and worldwide have red flagged demographics and an aging population for many years now. My counterparts in other provinces readily acknowledge that Alberta has the youngest population in Canada, and therefore we have the benefit of more time to prepare for its true impact in 10, 20, 30 years. Seniors are only 10 percent of our population now, so why worry today? The time of 20 to 25 percent seniors is years down the road. But having said that, Mr. Speaker, I have an increasing concern that is reinforced with very credible sources that as a government we are not acutely aware of the increasing numbers and health needs of vulnerable Albertans. By vulnerable I mean those who are too frail physically or mentally to advocate for themselves to government and health authorities and therefore depend on family and caregivers to do so.

The vulnerable include people of all ages, but the majority are older seniors. Think about this. Since 1997, for example, we have all become six years older, with time bringing about physical changes and chronic conditions that we have to live with daily and for the rest of our lives. I'm probably speaking now to the older colleagues who are here in the House. For me I have now got progressive arthritis in my hands, and without medication most days it is very painful. My 90-year-old mother, Mary Sterling, has a walker now, provided by a wonderful provincewide community support program, Alberta Aids to Daily Living. It enables her to stay mobile more safely in her congregate living housing setting, but my mother has increasing osteoporosis in her spine and legs. I see a noticeable increase in her frailty monthly, but her great attitude never waivers. I'm sure most of you today can easily think of someone very close to you with similar progressive health problems. It's not hard to do.

Since 1997 I have visited seniors in many housing settings, and each time I revisit, I see significant changes: many walkers now where there were none and more than just a few wheelchairs. Many seniors no longer live there. They have moved to a long-term care setting, an Alzheimer's care centre, or have passed away. Since the development of the long-term care review report, very few frail seniors are now admitted to acute care hospitals. Bed blockers is pretty much a label of the past.

So I ask, Mr. Speaker: where do these seniors go? We know that seniors are living longer thanks to modern technology, but not all of them are able to spend their last years or months at home in a supportive community setting. One fact in Alberta is that there is an increasing number of older seniors and those with disabilities in the long-term care system who have complex and chronic care needs or, put another way, multiple severe health problems. They are a distinct subgroup of the population. Call it seniors' C3. By seniors' C3 I mean the seniors' chronic, complex care group, and I don't say that in jest, but they are definitely a very important group in our society.

This situation also exists in Ontario and, as in Alberta, the work for hardworking professional staff is heavier and more stressful in care centres now than in an acute care hospital. In Alberta many long-term care facilities are replacing the role of the chronic hospital, providing respirators and tube feeding to residents, for example.

A second reality of this health situation is insufficient funding to the long-term care operators to provide better quality care. The present funding formula, the CMI, or case mix index, is outdated. It's 15 years old, and more dollars are required for medical technology changes, pressures on the system, and increasing costs. Assessments for funding are done in the fall with funding released the following July, which is then out of step with residents' present needs. This government needs to commit to develop a more appropriate funding formula, one which will enable regional health authorities to more adequately fund an enhanced level of long-term care.

A third reality, Mr. Speaker, is the aging population, as I've already noted. A large very well managed long-term care centre administrator in Calgary has quoted to me that there was 80 percent walkers and 20 percent wheelchairs in their centre, and now it's reversed, 20 percent walkers and 80 percent wheelchairs. It is really important to understand that our population is not only aging or growing older. That age group is expanding in size from, as I said earlier, 1 in 10 to 1 in four.

A fourth reality that this government must address is Alberta's current long-term care accommodation rates, which are the lowest in Canada. Alberta's is $32.60 per day, while the national average is $58 per day. The accommodation rates paid by the resident are expected to cover the resident's cost for room and board and not costs associated with direct care, nursing, rehabilitation, and support services, which are covered by the region or the government. In January 2002 this government increased the accommodation rates by 14 percent, or approximately $4 a day, the first increase since 1994. A second anticipated increase by government has been deferred to date. This situation is a disincentive for owners to upgrade facilities or for private providers to enter the market.

The Alberta Long Term Care Association is unique in Canada in that it speaks with a united voice for private, voluntary, and public-sector facilities across Alberta. Its 30 member organizations employ over 15,000 Albertans, and they care for more than 10,000 elderly clients. They have urged government through the Health and Community Living Standing Policy Committee to address these funding problems.

Mr. Speaker, I've also heard many similar messages of urgency from the Alberta Gerontological Nurses' Association both in Calgary and in Edmonton, and in Edmonton it was at a recent presentation to the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta. I've also heard from key administrators in the Calgary health region, from a number of individual owners and operators of long-term care centres, and from many very concerned parent members. The messages are the same and are cause for government attention.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, our health system reform must include addressing the complex and chronic health needs of the subgroup that I have described. If we do not address the funding needs in this area, we will defeat, for example, our goal of retention of gerontology health professionals in the long-term care system. Our target of staying healthy may help prevent a degree of chronic diseases for many of us in the future, but we have a responsibility as a society and as a government to adequately care for those Albertans who are most vulnerable.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions? Comments?

Our next speaker, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Like all of my colleagues here I, too, would like to pass on my best wishes to our Lieutenant Governor in the hopes that she has a speedy recovery. Sadly, it also reminds me of so many of us who over the last few years have all dealt with members of our own families. Our Lieutenant Governor is like part of our family, but on a more personal level I, too, have members of my family that have been dealing with cancer this past year, and it is really a devastating disease.

I would like to say, though, that our health care system, you know, fraught with problems as it is – and there's never enough money or never enough resources to do everything that everybody wants it to – has been there for the people in my life that have had to deal with it, particularly this last year, and I'm very grateful to the dedicated doctors and nurses in both Ponoka and Red Deer that have been dealing with my family. I know how hard they work and how seriously they take their jobs, and I'm very grateful that they're there.

Back to the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker. When we talk about a bright future for our children, there are few things more important than our children, if you can think of anything more important than them. I'm lucky. My sons are now, you know, past the K to 12 stage. One of them has a degree from the University of Calgary. The other is working on a certified program. I can tell you that education throughout the whole time that I've been an MLA has been an ongoing issue. It think it was probably an issue when I was going to school. It'll probably be an issue when my sons' children are going to school. I'm not sure how you ever satisfy the growing expectations or the needs or the wants of everybody, but every government globally has to deal with their economics the best way they can.

We have tried to increase funding for education. Is it enough? Probably not. Will it ever be enough? Probably not. Are there things that we can do? Yes, I think there are. Perhaps the $20 million is a step in the right direction. Maybe we need to be looking at a little bit more on the classroom side as we go toward the budget, and with any luck we can sort some of those issues out as well.

I'm one of the MLAs that's received hundreds of letters, and it really is hundreds. There were over 350 of them in the last four months from the Catholic school system in my area. They've got some serious issues, and they want some serious answers. I try really hard to listen to their concerns and deal with them to the best of my ability. It would be real easy if I could just come up with another $400 million or $500 million for education tomorrow, but probably next year I would find myself in exactly the same position, where once again it's not going to be enough for longer than a day.

As a taxpayer I can tell you that I'm not real keen on paying a lot more in income tax. We are spending as Canadians – forget the Alberta part – $37.6 billion this year on interest on a federal debt, and it does matter, Mr. Speaker. When you put that number out there, $37.6 billion, what does that really mean? Well, I'll put it to you this way. If you took 10 percent of that money, it would be $3.76 billion, which would pay 50 percent of health care in Alberta. So when we sit as Albertans, as Canadians and we yowl and rant and rave about things in Alberta not being quite what they should be – but the deafening silence by our media, in particular, on critical thinking issues on a federal government level absolutely astounds me. Where are they?

We had one of my colleagues over here today talking about MLAs giving themselves a raise every year. Well, let's put that into some kind of perspective when we talk about the fiscal realities of this province. As a committee we decided that it would be easier to address a very tense issue. It's something nobody wants to deal with ever, but we have to deal with it realistically. You can't come along every four or five years and give yourself a 20 or 30 percent raise. There are members of that caucus and that little caucus that are on Members' Services that have agreed to these issues, so if we're doing it wrong, then I guess we need to deal with it in another way. That can be done as well.

When we fund education and you come up with several hundred million dollars to try and help an education budget and the vast majority of it goes to wages, that's normal. That's the biggest expense in a school, but it does make it difficult to try and do the other things that we want to do, which is to try and improve classroom conditions.

I have great, great hopes pinned on that Commission on Learning when they come back with their recommendations. I hope that after 30 years the study that they're doing will encompass all kinds of new and innovative ideas and not just be something that says: well, now you've got to go spend another $4 billion, and oh, by the way, the results won't really change because you're already number one in Canada, you're probably number one in the world on most things, and your teachers are the highest paid in Canada.

So what do we need to fix after that? We need to fix some of the conditions inside the classroom. One of the more difficult issues that people really don't want to deal with or talk about is the full integration side. We know that there are some parents who believe that their children truly benefit from this, but we also know that there are parents who feel that it has created a certain amount of chaos inside classrooms. It's not fair to teachers, and it's not fair to the other children. What's the right balance? I'm not sure, not being an expert on such matters, but I do know that we must not be afraid to deal with it, and I hope that the Commission on Learning is looking at it as well and will come back with some recommendations that we can work with to try and alleviate some of those problems.

On the new fiscal framework side of things, well, setting up a sustainability fund I believe has some merit. Also, for me personally it creates some concerns. When you're looking at it on a global basis, there are a few places where that kind of fiscal sustainability fund has actually worked quite well, and there are other places where it has been an unmitigated disaster. So we need to make sure, when we build this, that we build it in such a way that it creates a positive environment for this province and not just something else that creates more of a problem.

On the economy side, I think probably the highlight for me when the Lieutenant Governor was doing the Speech from the Throne was on the value-added side. I'm a firm believer in value added. As a child growing up in Alberta in the oil patch and later in agriculture – we're a great province for producing wonderful resources and shipping them out. I don't know if there are very many people in here that have actually spent time on a farm, but when you get, you know, 75 cents or 95 cents a pound for a thousand-pound steer or heifer and you go to buy some beef in the grocery store and it's, like, $18 a pound, you think: "Okay. What part did I miss? How did it go from there to there? Somebody cut that thing, and now it's worth 20 times more than it was when I sold it." I probably lost money selling it, because we did that about seven years out of nine when we were raising cattle. The value-added side is where we can make agriculture into a $20 billion industry. When I leave here, if we can achieve something like that, nothing would make me more proud than to have watched an industry such as oil and gas, such as agriculture or the wonderful natural resources we have turn around and make it into good-paying jobs for Albertans, keeping some of the value inside our province and helping to develop and diversify our economy.

You were right: on some of our economic changes we've been a little bit hit and miss. Realistically, 15 years ago in Alberta 40 percent of government revenue came from oil and gas, and now it's about 21 percent. So diversification does work. It is important, and we must continue down that road. What does that mean? Maybe in the future we'll have to look at some of our tax policies because when we look at venture capital, research and development issues we are not competitive with other provinces. As a result of that R and D technological advances are not being done here. They're being done in other provinces, and that's just an enormous loss for us. We do all of the work on the research, we help set up funds to do university research, and then we watch the technology leave the province so that somebody else gets the good-paying jobs. We need to address that.

The last thing I wanted to mention briefly was being a full partner in Canada. As one of the original people on the triple E Senate for Canada I can tell you that I don't believe that Canada can continue the way it is, not just because I'm a proud Albertan and a strong Albertan but because as a Canadian I don't think it's right or acceptable that one part of the country can totally and completely dictate to another part of the country. We want to be an equal partner in Confederation. I don't think that's asking too much. If one way of trying to achieve that is to have a tripe E Senate so that it can be a Senate where you have 10 Senators from each province or two Senators from each province – I don't really care what the number is. It has to be equal, elected, and effective. I think it would be something that a federal government, looking around this country and wondering why one of the major players in this country is unhappy - then they need to start looking at what has made us unhappy. It's because we're not being treated equally or with respect, and it's time for both.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to take my seat and thank you once again for the opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, could I move to adjourn debate on this?

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Second Reading

Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General on behalf of the Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act on behalf of our Premier and on behalf of our Minister of Children's Services, who has championed Alberta's Promise for some time now and, I think, will be delighted to see this particular initiative come into force in Alberta.

Alberta's Promise is a nonprofit entity designed to encourage and recognize co-operation among Albertans to increase resources for programs benefiting our children and youth. The goal of Alberta's Promise is to mobilize the corporate sector and communities to form partnerships with not-for-profit organizations and governments to secure a brighter future for children and youth in Alberta. No money will flow through the Alberta's Promise organization. Partners will simply make a pledge as to how they will increase their contributions toward the well-being of children and then follow through on their promises. Corporations or communities are recognized as Alberta's Promise partners if they increase their investment in supporting children and youth by over 5 percent above current levels.

The five promises that make up Alberta's Promise are: committing to give Alberta's children "a healthy start and a promising future," working with neighbours to provide "safe and healthy communities for our children's growth, education, and development," leading by example and encouraging others to do the same, setting an example that the rewards of volunteering are immeasurable, and "seeking out the best tools, [best] models, and [best] examples of other individuals and communities so that Alberta's children may learn, benefit, and succeed."

The intent of the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act is to establish the initiative, form a council to oversee its operation, and provide for the membership of the council. Providing a legislative base for Alberta's Promise will assist in raising the profile of this community collaboration both provincially and nationally.

The concept itself has been implemented in the United States as America's Promise and in Ontario as Ontario's Promise. Alberta, however, will be the first jurisdiction in Canada to enshrine the initiative in legislation. Establishing the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise will enhance the initiative, and it is expected to assist in attracting high-profile community and corporate leaders to the council.

The Premier will chair the council. Its members and vice-chair will be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council for a maximum term of three years. Council members will have the following duties:

- (a) act in an advisory capacity [to implement] Alberta's Promise,
- (b) promote Alberta's Promise,
- (c) provide leadership in promoting the development of community strategies [that enhance] the well-being of children, [youth, and families],
- (d) raise awareness of the shared responsibility of . . . [all sectors of society for enhancing] the well-being of children, [youth, and families],
- (e) encourage financial and other support for initiatives and research that [enhance] the well-being of children, [youth, and families].

The Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise will outline that the council members will not be paid, but they may be reimbursed for travel and subsistence expenses. The Ministry of Children's Services will provide the administrative funding to assist the council in carrying out its duties. This bill, Mr. Speaker, will also require that the council prepare an annual report outlining its activities and the status of Alberta's Promise.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's Promise, as I've said, is not a new initiative, but it's an initiative which has worked in other areas, as America's Promise and Ontario's Promise, and it's bringing into Alberta yet one more initiative which can encourage members of the community, which can encourage the corporate sector, the business sector, and communities to work together to enhance and improve quality of life for our children. We've heard over the last several days speakers replying to the Speech from the Throne, and the Speech from the Throne itself focused considerably on a bright future for our children. In fact, ensuring that our children have the abilities to succeed, to be the best that they can be, to maximize their potential surely is one of our most important goals.

Bill 1, while in some ways symbolic, as Bill 1 always is, also takes the opportunity not only to state this government's concern, focus, and direction on making sure that children have that opportunity and that promise, but engages all Alberta in the same task as we look forward to make sure that not only do we have an Alberta where our children can live and work and play and grow up in safe communities, can maximize their potential, but that all of our communities, all individuals in the province, and all corporate entities in the province have the opportunity to understand the focus, to participate in the initiative, and to work with us towards that vision, which this province is all about.

So in order to improve the lives of children and youth in Alberta above and beyond those things that government can do by itself, I would ask for all members to support the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act, to join in partnership with businesses and individuals and communities right around this province to help improve the lives of our children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Blakeman: Do we get questions?

The Acting Speaker: No.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to address some of the substance of Bill 1, the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act. I have to say at the outset, first of all, that I'm going to support the bill. I think that any effort that the government undertakes to improve the lot and the potential of children is worthy of our support. It doesn't mean that I don't have some questions about the bill that appears before us, and I'd like to spend a minute or two looking at some of those questions.

Bills in the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, usually reflect public policy or public policy attempts to address a problem. As I read Bill 1, I'm trying to determine exactly what the government thinks the problem is and what Bill 1 does in terms of a solution. Let me give some other examples. For instance, we have Bill 5, the fence disputes. It's intended, I think it's pretty clear, to resolve those issues when they arise between people with property that adjoins each other. Bill 11 is designed to look at how the Auditor General acts in particular situations and to take the office of the Auditor General and to improve, in ways, its operation. Bill 7 talks about the real estate industry and how agents and people working in that industry are to conduct themselves. Those are bills where it's fairly clear what the problem is and how the government through legislation is attempting to come up with a solution.

But in this case of Bill 1 it's not quite so clear. If you look at the preamble, I guess you can ask some questions: does the government feel that children are not our greatest resource? Do they feel that they somehow or other are not being valued? Did children not have the opportunities to reach their potential? Is there not a commitment to children on behalf of all Albertans? So it's rather a curious preamble when you look at it from the perspective of a bill designed to help solve a problem that exists.

I listened to the Government House Leader's comments. I haven't read the Hansard, but it seems that there's a notion that agencies and volunteer groups that are working on behalf of youngsters need to raise their contribution, and I thought I heard the figure, by 5 percent. I guess I'm curious as to where that kind of a number would come from and on what basis the government would decide that 5 percent is the number that's appropriate.

The appointment of the council members. I hope they're going to be drawn as being representative of all Albertans and not just government supporters. I worry about the independence of the council members, and I think with good reason. I look back to the Commission on Learning that was established by the government and how that differs so greatly from the previous commission on education, the Worth commission that reported in '71-72. The Worth commission was made up of people who were not known for their political affiliations. They represented the judiciary. They represented college presidents. There was a real attempt in putting together that commission to draw on members of the public who were at least perceived as being independent of the government. When you contrast that to how the current Commission on Learning is constituted, there is a dramatic difference. We even have a sitting MLA on that commission, and the notion that it somehow is arm's length to the government and will make decisions that the government may not favour is really I think drawn into question when you look at the membership. Even the chair of the committee ran as a candidate for MLA in southwest Edmonton. So I worry about the council members and how they will be drawn.

The Government House Leader indicated that the model is drawn from America's Promise and Ontario's Promise. The America's Promise model, if you go to the web site, is a very independent group of leaders who encompass the entire political spectrum. I think, as I indicated in my reply to the Speech from the Throne yesterday, that it was put together by former President Ford, Nancy Reagan, Jimmy Carter, and Bill Clinton. So there was an attempt to make sure that America's Promise could be seen as nonpartisan and would be open to working with groups of all political stripes in their efforts to improve the lot of children.

We don't have that with the bill as it is in front of us today. Instead, it's called the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act. I can understand why, in some ways. The Premier has the prestige and the resources and the power to promote and to draw leaders from across the province into an enterprise such as this, but again the mere fact that it is a Premier who is associated with a political party I think is going to at least raise questions in the minds of some individuals and I think would also affect the decisions some individuals might make in terms of serving on the council. So unfortunate that it's not set up in a more independent fashion than it is as it appears to us now.

The question, again, of what the council is supposed to do I suspect is going to be worked out. I think working on the fetal alcohol problem is admirable. It's one that we all recognize has a great impact on Alberta and across the country, but there are some other huge issues for children, and I hope that the council isn't going to be confined to a narrow perspective. I look, for instance, at the problem of children living in poverty in this province and the huge amount of effort and how complex it is to try to get help to those youngsters and their families. So I hope that the council is going to address broader concerns and not confine itself to very, very important but necessarily narrow projects. I think that the bill – and I said at the beginning that I'm going to support it – has the potential, and it'll be interesting to see how it actually works when the council is in place and starts to do its work.

I'm reminded that at one point in this province's history we had an independent research council that worked on issues such as this and that that council, in fact, did the research that was used by the Worth commission when it last reviewed education in the province. So we have in our past history had a government-sponsored research council – it was fairly independent – that was designed to look into social issues and to do research much as what we've heard from the government with respect to Bill 1 and Alberta's Promise.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to hearing from other members of the government's side of the house in terms of what they envision the council and its work to be, and again I go back to my basic question: what are the problems that Bill 1 is supposed to solve?

I guess I have to conclude with one concern, and that is that somehow or other the government may use the council to withdraw from its responsibility to children, particularly with respect to the Department of Learning and the Department of Children's Services. I think that if that were the case, if the intent is to use the council to render those two departments less responsible to children, it would be a retrograde step and one that I would hope that this government will guard carefully against happening. It would be unfortunate, indeed, if this were seen as a move to have the volunteer and the private sectors take over more responsibility than they already do. There aren't many in this Assembly, I think, that get through a supper hour every week without someone already calling for help or for money for a volunteer endeavour of some kind. I think this is a bill that could add to that kind of burden on those organizations, and I hope, as I said, that doesn't happen and that wasn't the intent when the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise was designed.

Thank you very much.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I'm happy to rise to speak at second reading of Bill 1, the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act. This bill doesn't make particular sense to me. There are some bills that the government introduces that I agree with and some bills that the government introduces that I don't agree with, but this bill I just don't get. It doesn't seem to be doing or saying anything.

I listened with great interest when the Attorney General/House leader was presenting the bill because he outlined some pretty specific expectations or motivations for the bill. I looked carefully. I actually was flipping very quickly through the entire four pages of this bill looking for where those very concrete suggestions might be actually found in the bill which would give us something to check the performance against or would be a definitive direction, where people could look on the web site and read the bill and know exactly what was supposed to happen from this bill, but none of those things that the Justice minister actually outlined is, in fact, in the bill. Now, he did at one point read through the activities of the council, but all of the earlier sort of descriptive "this is what we mean to do with this" is, in fact, not in the bill. So it's not enforceable. There's nothing to monitor. There's nothing to judge the performance of the council against.

I don't understand what this bill is about. I mean, it seems to be a nice sort of slogan, a nice way to start out the sitting this year, say some sort of fluffy, cotton candy kind of things where everybody will go, "Oh, isn't that nice," and then nothing more will ever come of it. So I don't understand why they did this, or maybe that's the point. Maybe the point of bringing this bill in was so that we can have yet another avoidance of the real issues on behalf of this government as it regards children, because I'm not seeing where the government is stepping up to the plate on its own commitment and responsibility to education or children in care or perhaps funding for handicapped children or maybe foster children or perhaps prevention programs. Oh, that's right. I forgot. Those are the ones that got cut. Oops. All I keep hearing is: everything's great; the Liberals don't say enough positive things, because everything's just great. And now we've got this lovely slogan promise bill which doesn't actually do anything. It doesn't actually charge members of the council to do anything.

You know, that's interesting, because there's been a lot of talk in this Assembly recently about how blessed Alberta is and how fortunate we are, and you're right. We are. We are very blessed in Alberta. But we're blessed in Alberta by an accident of location in that under our feet flows oil, and that has given us most of our prosperity and our ability to get that oil out of the ground. But, you know, the Premier didn't put that oil there. He really didn't. I know that members opposite like to think that, but he didn't. I'm sorry, but the government's not responsible for having created that. I think we have to look back to another set of dinosaurs that, in fact, created that.

So let's look specifically at this act. Now, we have some interesting things that are in the preamble: recognizing "that children are our greatest resource," that the Legislative Assembly "is committed to building a province where children are valued, nurtured and given the opportunity to reach their full potential" – just remember the words "Legislative Assembly"; I'll come back to that – again, the Legislative Assembly recognizing "that achieving these goals for children requires a commitment and effort on the part of all Albertans." So we get three sort of nice little things that are being said about valuing and nurturing, sort of unsubstantive stuff, no action connected with that, just, you know, aren't they nice, and that's in the preamble, which, as we know, is not considered a part of the substantive legislation and therefore is not enforceable. Well, gee, so that blows sort of the first 25 percent of the bill, the preamble, which is unenforceable.

So I'm assuming that this promise is meant to be a program that is subsequent to government action. How do I know that since it isn't really in the bill? Well, you know, gosh, darn, this wasn't an original idea. In fact, it was borrowed heavily – some might use another word – from America's Promise, the Alliance for Youth. Now, that's a totally different approach to it; isn't it? It's talking about an alliance for youth. It has five promises. It starts out:

To mobilize people from every sector of American life to build the character and competence of our nation's youth by fulfilling Five Promises:

1. Caring Adults
2. Safe Places
3. Healthy Start
4. Marketable Skills
5. Opportunities to Serve

Well, where would that be in this bill? Oh, it doesn't seem to be here. Well, I guess we're supposed to just know this, but we don't know it. It's not anything that anyone can ever download from this bill off the web or go and get from Queen's Printer and understand that it's supposed to be in here. It's not. So this is some sort of blank cheque bill, this: well, we'll put a bunch of people together, and they'll do something.

It's interesting because great care is taken in saying that the volunteer members of the council, those appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which, of course, we know is cabinet, won't be paid, but there's also a sector that talks very clearly about employees. I'm wondering if I can get a response from the government as to what the anticipated budget is for this council and how much they expect to be paying their chief officer. I think that could be quite interesting. That certainly indicates whether the government is sort of serious about supporting something or not supporting it. They can sort of strangle it with not very much money, but I'm interested in how much money they're going to pour into something that doesn't have a mandate. So I'm wondering how much a nonmandate is worth. I hope to have a response to that.

When we look at the model from which this was taken, which is this America's Promise, the Alliance for Youth, a couple of things immediately spring out as being quite different. This came from the 1997 Presidents' Summit for America's Future to provide a national call for action. I suspect – I could be wrong here – that this is, in fact, the Bob Stollery memorial bill as the government's attempt to respond to some of the very well-publicized accusations and disappointments that Mr. Stollery made during the Laurel awards luncheon a couple of years ago, which got an awful lot of press and sort of made the government sit up and pay attention. So perhaps this is the Bob Stollery memorial bill.

Now, as I look through the five guarantees or five promises that are available in the American program, it talks about an "ongoing relationship with a caring adult," and they're quite specific. They're talking about a "face-to-face meeting with [a] young person at least once a week" and "structured one-on-one interaction scheduled bi-weekly or weekly." So it's really coming down to very specific instructions on how this is to be followed. Do I find this in our Bill 1? No. I'm disappointed I don't.

Then we talk about "safe places and structures activities." No, I don't find anything mentioning safety or safe places in our bill.

It talks about a healthy start; that's the third promise. Interestingly, they're talking about access. They spell it out: access to "Success by Six" and "Head Start" or other early health interventions. I know that the government felt that they had to cut their early childhood prevention programs, so I'm wondering how they reconcile that. Are they planning to put it back in anticipation of this bill being passed? Maybe their support for Success by Six and Head Start in fact has been enhanced and they're hiding their light under a bushel, but I don't think so. They talk very clearly about health insurance coverage, in particular including eye and dental coverage “served by a primary care physician.” Well, that would mean that they have to have access to primary care physicians, which a number of people in Alberta are kind of struggling with right now. So there’s something else that the government could step up to the plate on. Access to “two square meals a day.” Boy, we’re sure talking poverty when we’re talking about two square meals a day, not even three.

The fourth promise from America’s Promise is “marketable skills through effective education” with “special emphasis on achieving and maintaining grade level in reading and mathematics,” including young people of working age spending one hour per week with after-school jobs or an organized skill program: internship, apprenticeship, and summer jobs.

Finally, the “opportunity to serve,” which is another part of their basic promise kit. As my much gentler and nicer colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods pointed out . . .

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms Blakeman: Well, you know, I tell the truth. I’m honest about it.

This America’s Promise was in fact put together by Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan and Nancy Reagan, George H. Bush, and Bill Clinton. What’s interesting about that is that it’s not nonpartisan; it’s all-party. That’s a major difference with what is happening with this bill. It’s very clearly a partisan endeavour. I mean, it’s headed up by the Premier. The Lieutenant Governor in Council is going to make all of the appointments. Now, I hear whispers that there’ll be some good Liberals on there so that we can’t dare get up and criticize them. Well, then, you’re just smart to take advantage of the good Liberals that are out there, but it’s not going to stop me from saying that there’s nothing in this bill.

I think what this bill should be about is leadership. I once had a corporate leader from Calgary who talked to me about funding for the arts say: you know, Laurie, corporations really look to the government for leadership to sort of set the direction. We were talking specifically about funding for the arts. He said: if the government is not going to show that they approve of what’s happening and support and lead and fund, the corporations aren’t going to follow suit here. I think I can use that same argument here. If we don’t have the government out-front already, showing how they are putting in place funding and support and programs and really committing, then why would any of the corporations or the communities follow suit?

I guess part of what really bothered me when I looked at this – and it was actually exacerbated by what I heard the Justice minister saying – was this concept that somehow the organizations, corporations, and individuals should be taking on more of the load. Given what those sectors have taken on in the last 10 years through off-loading of programs and services, I’d say that they’ve taken and shouldered quite a bit of the load. Now I hear the Justice minister saying that there’s an expectation that they’d better up that by 5 percent. Did I hear that incorrectly, that there was to be an increase in commitment from the corporate and community organizations and individuals by 5 percent? I’m not getting a reaction. I’ll have to check the Blues. Perhaps I’m mistaken, but I thought that’s what I heard. I say: well, if that’s matched by government, fine and dandy.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) now kicks in, so we do have a five-minute question and comment period that is available. The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney-General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m wondering if the hon. member would be interested in advising if she thinks it’s a terrible idea that members of our community, whether they be corporate, individual, or municipal or however they are found in our community, the churches, nonprofit organizations, and each of us as individuals could be encouraged to increase their commitment to our children by 5 percent over what they’re doing. Is that a bad thing? Not required, not forced, but encouraged to participate in a greater way in our community to build a better community for our children.

Ms Blakeman: If the government will show the leadership by increasing their participation and support in every way by 5 percent or better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to clarify and ask a question on America’s Promise, a promise that was made and championed by Colin Powell. In the last state of the union address President Bush committed $450 million from the federal government to sponsor mentoring. That’s how important it is. Ontario made the same promise, and Alberta has made the same promise. That’s why you see the similarities. Then my question is: don’t you think it’s a good thing that if everybody in North America could recognize the promise to all our children, it would be a better place for all of us?

Ms Blakeman: I’m sorry; I haven’t heard of any money being promised by the government.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair is open to additional speakers.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to continue the debate.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Okay. I’ll proceed on the debate on Bill 1, the Premier’s Council on Alberta’s Promise Act. None of us are going to disagree with the intent of this act, I don’t think.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. I do.

Dr. Taft: Well, not many of us will disagree with the intent of this act or the sentiments of the act, perhaps I should say. However, there are a number of questions that arise from it and questions I’d like to raise and, in fact, suggestions I will make to the government and I think we may consider as an opposition caucus proposing as amendments down the road here.

The first thing I thought would be useful to do is to look up the dictionary meaning of a promise. A promise is an assurance that one will do something or that something will happen, an indication that something is likely to occur, potential excellence or making a promise, give good grounds for expecting, or firmly intends. Those are all what we would hope underlie some of our commitments to children. But one of the puzzles for me and I think for others with this act is that it’s not at all clear what is being promised, at least not in the act. If you were just to read this act, I think you would be left wondering: what is it really about?

So I think, as at least one if not both of my colleagues have pointed out, it would be a wonderful thing if we were to amend the act by actually putting the promise right in legislation so that people reading the act knew what the council was actually up to, and the council itself would know clearly in legislation what its mandate was. Merely having the promise spelled out in a speech seems to me a halfhearted commitment. Let's take it that step further. Let's actually put the promise in the bill.

Before I get to some of my specific suggestions, constructive as they will be on how to improve the bill, there are questions that we have. Perhaps, judging from some comments made a few moments ago by government members, they have information that we don't have. We have no sense of the funding level for this council that's created in the act. What is the budget going to be? If the United States committed $450 million to their promise, that would mean that proportionately Alberta might be committing $4.5 million. Is that what we're looking at here? I don't know, and of course those kinds of commitments are important in us determining how seriously the government will take this bill. So it would be great if we had a more complete set of background information for this debate. What's the budget? Who is the staff going to be? How many staff will there be?

One of the things I wonder: what's going to be the relation between this council, in practical terms, and the Children's Advocate? We do actually have a well-established office in the Children's Advocate, and it seems to me that in many ways the fundamental idea of the Children's Advocate could overlap with Alberta's Promise. So what's the relationship going to be between this council and the Children's Advocate? Will this council report directly to this Assembly? What will be the partisan influences on the council, formal and informal? What's the independence of the council? Those are some of the questions that simply are unaddressed and left unanswered in the legislation as it stands, and we'd love to have more information on that.

Then, of course, there's always the question of results. I'm not familiar, and we've only had this bill how long? One day?

Ms Blakeman: Twenty-four hours.

Dr. Taft: Twenty-four hours, so I don't know what the results have been, for example, from America's Promise. Have they actually spent the $450 million? Has it been well spent? Has it had an effect? In Ontario what have they done? What have they achieved? What did they set out to achieve? Did they reach their goals? Exceed them? How cost-effective were they? All those kinds of questions come up, and none of them are even set up to be considered in this bill, much less answered. We don't know what the objectives are. We wouldn't know how to measure the success of this bill if it was a success because it's not in here.

So that sets up some of the thoughts I've had about how to improve this bill. There are precedents for putting real detail, real, measurable standards into legislation. One that this government is very proud of is the Financial Administration Act, which actually puts out a number that forces the government into a particular commitment whether the government wants that commitment or not. Admittedly, it's sometimes an awkward commitment, but if we can do it for our budget, we can do it for our children.

So how can we improve this bill? Here are a few suggestions from me. Let's put the promise in the legislation. Let's walk the walk and not just talk the talk, and I think perhaps we'll make that amendment. Second of all, let's put some real measures of performance in this bill. If we're making a promise to children, what's the promise? Well, I'd suggest, for example, that we make a commitment to improving the high school graduation rate of children entering kindergarten. I learned last night that in the Edmonton public school system fewer than 70 percent of children who enter kindergarten finish grade 12. In other words, more than 30 percent of children in the Edmonton public school system never finish grade 12. That's terrible. Let's put a measure in here. Let's promise that from here on in 80 percent or 90 percent of children who enter kindergarten will finish grade 12. Then we could really commit to something. That would be a promise.

How about addressing children living in poverty? Why don't we put an actual commitment to reducing the number of children living in poverty into legislation in the same way that way we put a commitment in legislation about balancing the budget and managing the surplus and paying down the debt? It's a different kind of debt; isn't it? It's a debt to children. So why don't we put a measure in this bill that says that we will reduce the percentage of children living in poverty? We could establish a certain line, the low-income cutoff that Statistics Canada has or some other generally accepted line, and say that we will reduce that number to 10 percent of children. My understanding, in Edmonton at least, is that about 20 percent of kids live in households that would be by any reasonable measure considered very poor. That would be a promise. Where's the promise, folks?

How about a promise like this: every child in Alberta will get at least one nutritious meal a day. We can measure that. We could figure that out. We know how to deliver it. That would be a promise. There are thousands of children who go to school every day in Edmonton, and undoubtedly in Calgary and undoubtedly in many rural communities, who never have a hot lunch, never have a nutritious meal. So there's a promise. Why don't we make that promise? Why don't we promise that every child in Alberta who needs a nutritious meal will get at least one every day? If we have to pay for that as taxpayers, why not pay for it? Isn't that as good as paying down the debt?

How about this? How about full-day kindergarten? The evidence on full-day kindergarten is enormous. We're seeing this played out yet again through the government's commendable program, the AISI program, Alberta initiative for school improvement. The assessment information on that is spectacular. The results have been spectacular. Where's that program headed? It's headed for history because the funding is going to be cut off. [interjection] The Minister of Justice is suggesting that maybe funding will be extended for that program. We look forward to that. But how about a promise for full-day kindergarten? We know the results from the AISI program and we know from all kinds of other research that full-day kindergarten is a huge benefit to children. It's easy to deliver. It's easy to measure. Why don't we make that promise? Why don't we put that in this legislation?

How about early literacy and numeracy programs for every child in this province? Of course, that could be delivered through full-day kindergarten. That would give our kids a huge start. Again, the evidence on that is tremendous. There's no question that there's fruitfulness to that promise. Let's make it. Let's deliver the goods here.

Day care. Adequate day care. Why not make that promise? Is there a reason not to promise that every child will have some adequate day care or every family will have access to adequate day care in this province? There's a promise we could make for children.

Full prenatal care. There was earlier discussion today, and there has been since the Speech from the Throne, about concerns over fetal alcohol syndrome. Well, the only way to prevent that is to get to mothers from the moment of conception and ensure that they are minimizing or, indeed, completely avoiding alcohol consumption. In some cases that means quite an aggressive prenatal care program. Now, that would be a wonderful promise not just to children but to ourselves, to all of society. So how about a good, aggressive, full prenatal care program in this children's promise?

How about a promise to protect children from abuse? How about a promise to provide shelter to children who need shelter? There are all kinds of things that can be promised here, and do you know what? They don't need to break the bank. They certainly don't need to be anything that's beyond the resources of this province, and indeed in the long run I think we'd find that they'd pay off. We'd be a wealthier society not just in terms of dollars and cents but also in terms of the quality of life and the quality of citizens we have here.

So I'm all in favour of making a promise to our children. This bill is a beginning, but this bill could be dramatically, dramatically improved. Let's put some real teeth in this bill. Let's take our children as seriously as we've taken paying down the financial debt.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those comments, I'll take my seat and look forward to hearing how the government members respond. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in.

Mr. Marz: I have a question for the hon. member. He raised a number of suggestions of what promises could be made specifically, full-day kindergarten, early numeracy. I would wonder, with all these wonderful suggestions he has, if there would be a price tag that he's worked out as to what it would cost Albertans to fulfill all those promises successfully.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to discuss that question. Personally, I find that in debating bills, the time for that sort of back and forth is during the committee, and I'll make a point of being here during committee when that member is here to carry that discussion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional hon. members?

Then recognition goes to the hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in support of Bill 1, Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise. I listened very carefully to previous speakers and appreciate, I believe, their support for the intent of the bill. I appreciated the little lesson through the dictionary of what a promise is, and I like what it says, too: an indication that something is likely to occur. I liked one other one better: firmly intend. That is really the gist of the government desire in this bill.

While I listened to other members from the opposition speak on this, I guess I've kind of realized that maybe in these instances our really philosophical differences become quite apparent. I see legislation as a framework. I see the detail being in the regulation, which is really how the activity occurs, and I see the business plan of the ministries that provide the services that would be provided in this by government maybe being where some of the benchmarking is done.

I'll repeat the five promises that Alberta's Promise is made up of. Committing to give Alberta's children "a healthy start and a promising future," and obviously there are a number of areas that are involved in that. Working with neighbours to provide "safe and healthy communities for our children's growth, education, and development." Again, some room for government involvement through our Solicitor General but certainly maybe even more through our community groups. Leading by example and encouraging others to do the same: I think an important role for government there. Setting an example that the rewards of volunteering are immeasurable: I do want to speak to that further. Maybe the most important part of this is "seeking out the best tools, [the best] models, and [the best] examples of other individuals and communities so that Alberta's children may learn, benefit, and succeed."

Much was talked about by other members about America's Promise. I think that using that as a model but changing it to fit our country, our values, and the way we do things is very appropriate. This isn't the first initiative that we've worked together on with the United States of America. I would talk about the volunteer movement, where we have shared conferences, where we have shared ideas, where they recognized fully that Canada led the world in volunteerism. Certainly Alberta is the leader in Canada, and they were most anxious to learn from us and have us involved and invited us to be very full participants when they were developing some areas in their country. So we can always learn from others. I don't think it's wrong to use a good idea. It doesn't have to be our identification.

But I am concerned that we think we can codify children and their needs and write it all down on a piece of paper, because I can tell you that the needs of the children in my community are different than they probably are in the inner city of Edmonton, and the way that we would approach resolving those needs is very, very different. I think it's important that we recognize that there are differences. Our province is large and vast and is made up of so many communities, whether they are communities of interest, whether it's by nature of — we often talk about the mosaic of the people here. We have people from many countries. I can assure you that people who come here from other countries have quite a different idea of how to raise children and who should be involved in that than I might have. So I don't really think it's for me to say that, but it is for us, all of us in this Legislature, to understand the needs and the differences. And I'm sorry: in my experience you can't just write down a list and expect that all our children will fall in that list. Obviously, their needs will not fall in there. I think the fact that the framework is more an umbrella and general is a very positive thing.

I don't have a disagreement with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's desire for every child to have one nutritious meal a day, but I can tell you that in my community, in my school, that's handled in a different way than it might be here. Again, that's appropriate, but it is the families and the community. Frankly, if I had a disappointment in the opposition's comments on this, it was that the family was left out to a greater extent than I would leave them out. The first thing that we can offer our children is a safe home and environment, and they can be different. There is no question. But the family has to be, in my mind, first, and if families have difficulties in meeting needs, then we look at ways that we ensure that. In many families having a nutritious meal a day is not an issue, in fact in the majority.

Full-day kindergarten. Many communities have that. I can tell you that in my community — and it's easier to speak about your own — it's a private kindergarten run by the parents. I might say that those two outstanding children that were referred to earlier today and yesterday came through that system. It's totally different. Those parents raise money willingly and provide a kindergarten of their choice in their community for their children. They could send them on a bus to a full-day kindergarten, which would have no cost to them except, of course, the bus ride and the kids being out of their lives, but no; their commitment is to have that kindergarten.

So it's different there. The needs of inner-city Edmonton or Calgary or Drayton Valley are probably different again, but that's, I believe, what this bill recognizes, that there are differences. I don't doubt anybody's commitment in this Legislature to children. I may disagree with the approach or the measures that they might suggest to deal with it, but I don't doubt that everyone believes that Bill 1 is a very important bill and should proceed.

I would remind members that this government was maybe the first in Canada that made a determination that it was important that we provide a benefit so that if moms wanted – wanted – to stay home with their children, it was not an economic hardship for them to do it. That came from consultations with mothers, and I was proud to be a part of the early discussions, much earlier in my career, and listened to moms that said that they needed to work a small amount to make it work. But if there was a tax break or a benefit to them, they could stay home and do all of those things for their children that they wanted to do for the difference in the dollars. They were not advocating that no mother should work, nor am I. I think that's a choice. What we want to make sure is that the moms and the dads can make the choice, and those are the things that I think we look at in this.

I believe, as I know many of you do, that the saying that it takes a village to raise a child is a very true saying, and the more we involve our community groups, those who know what the needs of their particular community are and what the best methodology is to address the issues there – it may be a literacy tutorial. It may be that in that community we have several teachers who are not working who have time who would like that interaction with children and would offer that. In others it may be an extra teacher in a classroom, and we have done that. I don't think that with children one size fits all. I've only two children of my own. They're certainly different. They are male and female, so I accept there would be some obvious differences there. But I've got four little grandkids, and I can tell you that they're as individual as they can be, and one size doesn't fit any part of all of them. I mean, they were raised in the same family by the same parents and in the same surroundings, and you'd think you'd get something that was similar, but they're all individuals and so are their needs.

I think the difference that I hear here is more philosophical in that the opposition members would like to see more codified legislation, have more structure in the legislation, whereas I believe that the legislation should be more of a framework document, that the detail be in the regulation so that if with children and our changing society we need to change things, it's much easier to amend, obviously, and change. The important thing for all of us, I think, in this Legislature is that this is Bill 1, that this is putting our children first, and I think we will all support that, whether we support exactly the way we have planned to do it. I want to certainly make a promise as a legislator that I'll support making this province better for our children and that I will do everything I can.

Mr. Speaker, I've been a foster mom of a child in another country for I don't know how many years, and it's always just simply amazed me what advantages those children can gain in a developing or a Third World country for a very, very few dollars a month. It just blows my mind. I don't remember exactly what it is, but it's under $50 a month; I know that. I think it's my third child, because they reach a certain age and they move out of the program. I've never had the opportunity yet to meet one of my children, but I do hope that I will meet the present one I have. It has always humbled me, I think, when I receive a letter, a card from this youngster. I get a sense of what this has meant to him and his family and think of how much we have here, and it renews my belief in the fact that we're pretty fortunate to live here. But we can always do better. Any community that believes in their children and supports them will be successful in the end.

With those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I want to end my part in this stage of the bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have a question for the member. The member is the Deputy Premier and is a very influential member of the government. [interjections] Well, she is. I heard her say quite clearly that she was disappointed in the opposition not talking more about family. She must have been involved in the drafting of this legislation or as it passed through the various committees that government has for legislative review. I'm curious, therefore, why the word "family" does not appear anywhere in the act. It talks about corporations, it talks about community organizations, and it talks about individuals, but it does not talk about families. I'm interested as to why the government made the choice not to have the word "families" appear in this act if it's so important to her.

Mrs. McClellan: I think that we come back to the comment that I made earlier. I don't know whether it's an ideological or a philosophical difference that we may have in how we approach things. I see documents more as a framework for carrying out things, and it seems to me from the comments I heard that there was more of a desire to codify or identify or list in the legislation absolute actions rather than more general. So when I look at this, I see organizations, corporations, individuals, enhanced resources. I see all. What I was commenting on – I was surprised, and I may have missed it – was that I didn't hear that as part of the ideas of how to carry this forward, which is really what I was referring to when I mentioned that.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close the debate.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've had some interesting comments today about the nature and intent of Bill 1 and some comments from the opposition about the need for detail. I think the hon. Deputy Premier has indicated what I think is very true in this House from time to time, that on our side of the House we tend to want to put together framework legislation which encourages, allows, and creates the opportunity for things to happen, and if there needs to be regulation or structure around it, that can be built in regulations.

In this case the legislation that we're talking about today is very much promise legislation. It's very much being brought forward to encourage and to raise a topic for public discussion, to raise the profile of something which is incredibly important to our communities, to our families. It's not so much a piece of legislation that needs to have detail set out as to how and what and how much but is to encourage all of our communities to get involved in something which is very, very intrinsic to the future of our province. I'd encourage all members to support the legislation.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; at 5:15 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Ben Heppner, the MLA for Rosthern, Saskatchewan, and opposition Justice critic in Saskatchewan. Mr. Heppner is also one of the founding members of the Saskatchewan Party. I had the pleasure of meeting with Mr. Heppner earlier today to discuss justice issues. He expressed an interest in our single trial court project, the collaborative law project that's being spearheaded out of Medicine Hat in Alberta, and many other issues that we find in common relative to justice. I'd ask Mr. Heppner to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Vandermeer: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 37 students from John Barnett elementary school. Joining the students' visit to the Legislature are teachers Mr. Tony Kimble and Mrs. Pat Robinson and parents Mrs. Denise Hugman and Ms Aurelia Hough. I ask them to please stand at this time and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very proud today to introduce to you and through you some 30-plus students from Canadian University College, located near Lacombe. As students of sociology they are keenly interested in social sciences, social institutions, and social relationships, so what a good place to be today. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three people who are very interested in Bill 201: Cheryl Bradley of the Alberta Native Plant Council, Tom Cameron of the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation, and Linda Duncan. They're in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Natural Gas Prices

Dr. Nicol: Last week the Alberta Liberals tabled a petition signed by 1,500 Albertans demanding relief from the government for high utility bills. Today we'll be adding another 400 signatures. We'll continue to table petitions, which are available through our web site at ataliberals.ab.ca, until this government provides Albertans with some relief from their high utility bills. Mr. Premier, it's cold out there. A lot of people are trying to make choices between paying their utility bills and buying food and paying their rent. To the Premier: since this government has missed an opportunity to provide Albertans with natural gas rebates at the time when they need them most, what actions will the government take to protect Albertans from the recurring spikes in their heating bills?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, the opposition continues to ask for natural gas rebates. I would like to explain the bill and the regulations attached to that particular piece of legislation. First of all, the government's rebate program is designed to ensure that when prices are high enough for long enough to translate into increased royalty revenues, those royalties would go back to Albertans in the form of rebates.

To ensure that the revenues are there, the government relies on the average reference price over the fiscal year. I would ask the Liberals to look at the regulations. There's no secret to this; it hasn't been hidden from anyone. If the Liberals would look at the regulations under the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, they would say that it states this very clearly. I quote section 2.

The Alberta price is determined by the Minister of Energy based on a forecast of the annual average of the Gas Reference Prices prescribed under section 6(1) of the Natural Gas Royalty Regulation, 1994.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure Albertans that when the money is there and the need is there, the rebates will be there.

Dr. Nicol: The regulations sure don't reflect the debate that went on when the bill was passed.

To the Premier: why are Albertans, who own the resource beneath their feet, paying more for the cost of fuel – and I stress: cost of fuel, not delivery charges – when they pay $7.53 per gigajoule in the south and $7.19 per gigajoule in the north when Torontonians are only paying $6.03?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what Torontonians are paying. I know that we're the only jurisdiction in Canada with a natural gas rebate program, and when the annual average of the gas reference prices prescribed under the section of the legislation and firmly entrenched in regulation reaches $5.50 a gigajoule, then we will convene a cabinet meeting and consider at that time whether a rebate from royalty revenues is warranted.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

Mr. Smith: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition refers to a price of natural gas that is being charged today. He does not go through a 12-month average. In fact, if he would go through a 12-month average, he would find that Toronto prices are in the neighbourhood of 30 to 35 percent higher than those prices charged in Alberta today.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: given that your budget contains no line item indicating a contingency plan for natural gas price spikes, does that mean that you never intended to provide Albertans with relief from high utility bills?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there is no line item, but you will find out later today, when legislation is introduced, that the provincial government will be establishing a stability fund, and perhaps that fund – and I don't know for sure – can be used to provide rebates if and when they are needed. But I'm advised by the Minister of Energy that it probably will be a long time, unless there is a dramatic increase in natural gas prices, before we will reach the average of $5.50 a gigajoule.

Utility Costs for Schools

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier. Given that many school boards are already facing a deficit and unpredictably high utility bills and these high utility bills are making the situation worse, what action will this government take to ensure that spikes in the price of natural gas do not negatively affect the programs and services offered by these schools?

Mr. Klein: Again, I will stress that we are the only province, the only jurisdiction in this country with a legislated program to provide rebates. Mr. Speaker, again, when the average annual price reaches $5.50 a gigajoule, then in accordance with the regulations the minister would ask cabinet to implement a rebate program under the royalties that we receive and that would be returned to Albertans.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, we're the only province that doesn't build risk management into our pricing structure, so that sets us apart as well.

To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that regular maintenance of furnaces in schools helps to keep heating bills down and given that children in an Edmonton area school were sent home last week because there was no heat in their school, why has this government deferred furnace maintenance in some schools, creating a situation that prevents schools from reducing their utility bills?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, each year we provide the school boards with a sum of money, about $40 million, that goes to a program called BQRP, building quality restoration program. That program is administered by the school boards. To make sure that the plants are operating, can operate, and will operate, the money from the BQRP is there for them to use as they see fit in their schools.

Dr. Nicol: And they reduced the amount, Mr. Speaker.

To the Premier. In 2001 you provided schools with funding to offset higher than anticipated heating costs. What action does the government plan to take this year to help schools pay high fuel bills?

Mr. Klein: I would remind the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition that in 2001 gas prices reached an all-time high. Extraordinarily high. If I recall correctly, we were nearing or perhaps even over the $10 a gigajoule mark. We aren't anywhere near that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Enron

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The generosity of this government knows no limits during an election year, but two years later this government is very mean – very, very mean – with the citizens' own natural resources. My first question is to the Premier. What was the grant of three-quarters of a million dollars for given to Enron during the election year? What was that three-quarters of a million dollars to Enron for?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what the hon. member is talking about. I know that I certainly didn't sign a cheque to Enron, and I don't think anyone else did in executive committee or in the government, but perhaps some hon. member can shed some light on the question. I don't know.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the documents from the last Public Accounts that have been tabled in this Assembly indicate that Enron Direct Limited Partnership received three-quarters of a million dollars in a grant from this government, why was the three-quarters of a million dollars given to Enron then in the form of a rebate, I assume, and now, two years later, you have no money from the natural resources of this province for the citizens that need it the most? Heat in this province is not a luxury.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, I have no idea what the hon. member is talking about. If he would be courteous enough to send the information over or to discuss the situation with the hon. Minister of Energy or perhaps the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Revenue, maybe we can get to the bottom of this. But I can tell you that he used the word "grant." We did not give a grant to Enron or any other company, for that particular matter. To do so would be a violation of the Financial Administration Act, and we're not about to violate our own acts of this Legislature.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: did this government audit the grant payment of three-quarters of a million dollars that was given to Enron to make sure that it was accurate and that the taxpayers were not throwing money up in smoke, so to speak?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm advised, sort of indirectly, that the hon. member is the chair of Public Accounts. You know, he should know, but I have no idea. Is there anyone here who can shed any light on this particular situation? I have no idea what he's talking about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Electricity Costs

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy has been telling anyone who will listen that the reason Albertans have to pay the highest power bills in the country is to avoid the large debt load of power companies in regulated jurisdictions. The minister is also claiming, incorrectly as it turns out, that this debt is taxpayer supported. However, what the minister is not saying is that Alberta power companies owe a total of over $10 billion and that Albertans' power bills reflect this fact. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Why is the Minister of Energy suggesting in a February 19 release that Alberta power companies have zero debt or, alternatively, that this debt has no impact on the bills that Albertans have to pay every month?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, there is no debt guaranteed by this government by any power company in this province.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why does the minister continue to claim that the debt in other provinces is the responsibility of taxpayers when he knows full well that it is electricity ratepayers that support this debt, the same as here in Alberta?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, this voodoo NDP accounting clearly indicates – the primary shareholder of a Crown corporation is, in fact, the Crown. Therefore, the governments of those particular jurisdictions where there are Crown hydro companies have a responsibility to honour the debt. In fact, if the member would pursue it further and deeper, he'd find out that when these companies, because of their attachment to the provincial governments, owe hundreds of billions of dollars of taxpayer-guaranteed debt across this country, their bond rating issues are higher.

Mr. Speaker, it's very clear in Alberta that there is a line between what is published in terms of debt by the companies that they're responsible for. This government does not support the tremendous amount of debt for artificially lower electricity prices across Canada that these other jurisdictions have.

Mr. Mason: Very interesting, Mr. Speaker.

So why does the minister, then, continue to tell this Assembly when he knows or should know that billions of dollars of Alberta power company debt was guaranteed to be repaid by power customers when the cabinet approved the power purchase arrangements regulation back in July of 2000?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I continue to put forth what is the truth of the structure of the electrical industry in Alberta.

1:50 Access to Crown Land

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been much media attention given to a dispute involving contractors, the energy industry, and First Nations in northern Alberta. As a northern MLA I am concerned and so are a lot of my constituents about media reports over the past few weeks of extortion, of bribery, and of roadblocks on Alberta's Crown land. My question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Minister, could you tell us exactly what the situation is?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the Premier asked five ministers to come together in order to address this concern, and they are the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, the Minister of Justice, and of course the Solicitor General.

Since that time, Mr. Speaker, we've worked on a premise of consultation versus confrontation, and we've put together a plan. Our number one plan was to ensure that we clarified the position relative to payment of access fees, and we've also clarified the position of the involvement of aboriginal people in the economy. Thirdly, we've also looked at meetings to address this issue with First Nations, with chiefs that are impacted, as well as with the energy companies that are also part of the solution. We've also had my deputy contact a subcontractor group to offer to meet with them to address the situation. As a matter of fact, as of today there is going to be a meeting this week. We've also looked at continuing to ensure that we'll work with the stakeholders and continue to have meetings.

Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General's department has also met with the RCMP, and we are making sure that they understand the government's position. We have also looked at different ways to be able to address this concern that has been asked, which is to make sure that companies with leases and permits have a valid right to work on Crown land without interference. Let me add here that industry should not be paying access fees on Crown lands – that's very important – and, most of all, that any allegations of criminal activity should be reported to the RCMP. That's the proper process to utilize.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll direct my first supplemental question to the Solicitor General. If there are claims of bribery and extortion, why are the RCMP not doing anything?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has brought up a good point, and if anyone is aware of a crime that has been committed, they should contact the RCMP. The RCMP will fully investigate complaints of extortion or threats, as they would any other complaint about any criminal activity. I want to let the hon. member know that we checked this morning and there have been no formal complaints filed. The RCMP have put in place a policy to deal with issues such as blockades to the areas in question, and if a member of the public makes a complaint about a blockade not allowing access, the RCMP will investigate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental. Notwithstanding the formal complaints, we certainly have had in my riding a number of complaints lodged at the office with respect to this issue. I would like to ask the minister relative to consultation. We've had a number of cases to the Supreme Court of Canada, three in particular, that deal with this issue, and the matter of overall consultation with aboriginal people on resource matters . . .

The Speaker: I'm sure there's a question in all of this, hon. member.

Mr. Knight: . . . seems to be going on an awfully long time . . .

The Speaker: I agree.

Mr. Knight: Yes, I agree. . . . without resolution. I'd like to ask the minister . . .

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you, hon. member. First of all, that was a long question. Alberta is certainly committed to a consultation process, and we have to look at a number of things. One, we have to look at what adheres to evolving case law; very important. Secondly, we have to address the concerns of aboriginal people. Thirdly, we must provide certainty for industry in the development on Crown lands. Those are the kinds of things we have to look at.

Court rulings have been saying that the Crown should consult where activities on Crown land may impact treaty or aboriginal rights around traditional land use such as hunting, fishing, and trapping. We're certainly developing a process of meaningful consultation with First Nations, and all parties will have an ability to be able to have input into this process as we move forward, but that's going to be between First Nations and the Alberta government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Children's Services Adoption Web Site

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is now in damage control to rectify the errors in the hasty and ill-conceived adoption web site. It seems that each time the Department of Children's Services gets into trouble, an employee is hung out to dry. My first question is to the Premier. Legal responsibility for the web site rests with the Minister of Children's Services. Why is another public servant now under fire and not the minister?

Mr. Klein: Well, first of all, I'm going to have the hon. minister respond, Mr. Speaker, but as the hon. member knows, the Privacy Commissioner has released his report on the adoption web site. He found that Children's Services is within its authority to disclose the children's personal information for the purposes, the commendable purposes, I might add, of finding adoptive homes.

Relative to the disciplinary action that was taken, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Premier. Mr. Speaker, the situation where a worker was found to have not followed through with the process and protocol of talking with the children and assuring that they had fully understood that they were consenting to be involved, that worker – and that's an internal matter with the director of child welfare – was spoken to by the director or someone acting on his behalf, and a letter was filed.

Relative to whether or not the minister acted within the purview of the ministry, I should quote from the summary of findings of the Privacy Commissioner's report. He states in para 26:

The Public Body is authorized under section 40(1)(c) and section 40(1)(f) of the FOIP Act to disclose the children's personal information on the website, for the purpose of finding homes for children who are available for adoption.

Secondly, in para 27:

The initial descriptions of the children contained more personal information than was necessary. The revised descriptions are in compliance with section 40(4) of the FOIP Act.

Mr. Speaker, that is his ruling.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Children's Services. She's absolutely right, and when will the Child Welfare Act be revised to protect the privacy of children from future blunders by this department?

Mr. Klein: Would you prefer to have those children in foster homes?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, exactly the point. Would we leave these children languishing in the closets and hidden in the homes of foster parents who never release them to provide them an opportunity for loving homes? Let's not retreat to this kind of old-fashioned mentality where we don't use good communication devices.

The Child Welfare Act is up for amendment in this session. I'm sure that the hon. member can bring forward, if he finds it is at fault in any way, his own ideas. But could I point out for this Assembly and for the people of Alberta that not once is there a record that this minister has of this member's address to the Wednesday's Child program, which has been successful in adopting 70 percent of the children on that site annually.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: has this minister just accused foster parents of keeping children in the closet? Is that what I hear?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, no, but I should never be surprised at how low they can go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Lehigh Inland Cement

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently a number of constituents in my area appeared before the Environmental Appeal Board to oppose the decision of Alberta Environment allowing Lehigh Inland Cement to convert from natural gas to coal within its cement kiln. The Alberta Environmental Appeal Board's decision was to allow them to convert to coal; however, they have to implement baghouse technology. I understand that they have recently begun their conversion, and my first question is to the Minister of Environment. Why is Inland Cement allowed to burn coal within its kiln before the baghouse is implemented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recommendation from the EAB, which I concurred with and which I signed off on, says that the Inland Cement plant has up to 20 months to install the technology the gentleman is referring to as baghouse technology. Now, that was when the decision was made. It's now down to 19 months. But if the Inland Cement plant has more than what we call six dusting incidents in a one-year period, then Alberta Environment can arbitrarily reduce that time as it goes down every month – as I said, it's now at 19 months – to make it more immediate, and Inland, in fact, may have it installed before the expiry of their date.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental is to the same minister. If baghouse technology is, in fact, the best available technology, why did Alberta Environment not put that on it as a stipulation before the conversion to coal was allowed to take place?

Dr. Taylor: Well, let me first of all state, Mr. Speaker, that when the existing technology at Inland Cement works, there's not a problem, and that was one of the issues. There were some problems with the number of times that it tripped, as it's called in the industry.

Now, I will say that in making environmental decisions, Alberta Environment does not determine the technology. We don't specify technologies that companies have. What we do is set standards, and we will continue to set standards, and it is then up to the company to determine which technology will meet the standards that Alberta

Environment sets. The problem, of course, is that if Alberta Environment determined technology, you'd be favouring one technology over another technology over another technology, and that's not the position of this government or any government. It's a matter of us setting appropriate standards. So as we go forward, Mr. Speaker, as I've said, if the existing technology doesn't work – they have six or more dusting incidents within the period of one year – then that baghouse will have to go on immediately.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate both of those answers, but I'm curious to know: what is Alberta Environment doing in the interim to ensure that the air quality standards within the Edmonton-Calder constituency are maintained?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you. Well, as part of the approval Inland Cement was required to put more in-stack monitors right in their plants, so as the monitors monitor and as we do spot checks on the monitoring situation that we have there, we'll be able to tell if they're exceeding their limits. The other thing we have as Alberta Environment is what we call ambient air monitors in that particular area out there. So we'll be able to tell as well on our own monitors, the ambient air monitors.

I will say that the air quality in the area of Inland Cement is good. In fact, the air quality in Edmonton is good and improving. Every year it gets better, and Alberta has some of the best air quality and some of the most stringent standards in the country, Mr. Speaker, and we'll continue to monitor the situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Problem Gambling

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1998 eight Alberta communities voted to prohibit VLTs due to the perceived social costs associated with them. However, an injunction has prevented the removal of these machines since that time. Three weeks ago the Supreme Court ruled in the case of Manitoba that if a community voted to remove VLTs due to perceived social costs, they were completely within their rights. My questions are to the Minister of Gaming. Now that we have a Supreme Court decision, when will this government remove VLTs from communities that chose to prohibit them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 1998 there has been an injunction in this province granted by the Queen's Bench of Alberta in an action commenced in this province. That matter is scheduled for trial on April 28 of this year. The matter had been adjourned pending a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada from another jurisdiction, namely Manitoba, because the facts in that case were similar. It has turned out that the facts are indeed very similar and will be of great assistance in ultimately resolving the matter when it proceeds to court on April 28, but I anticipate that this matter will be resolved by the court at that time.

Ms Blakeman: Given that we know that drug addicts will commit crimes to feed their habit, what concrete steps has this government taken to address the issues and costs of gambling addicts committing crimes to feed their addiction?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, this ministry is charged with the control and management of gaming in a socially responsible manner, and accordingly there are a number of things that we are doing in order to address the issue of problem gambling. One example of that would be the funding of AADAC and its services for problem gambling and its education of the public. Some 4.2 million dollars annually is provided to AADAC, and my department works closely with them. I can advise you that a recent survey indicates that 95 percent of Albertans are aware of the problem gambling services that AADAC provides, so from my perspective that is a very good example of one of the ways in which we are addressing that problem.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, to the same minister: why aren't those AADAC programs which deal with the social problems of gambling given a fixed percentage of the gambling revenue? The higher the gambling revenue the higher the problems. Why aren't you connecting them?

Mr. Stevens: The process with respect to funding AADAC, Mr. Speaker, is that AADAC provides a budget through the appropriate ministry, which is, in fact, the Ministry of Health and Wellness. To my knowledge AADAC has requested certain amounts of money in the last several years, and they have been provided with the funds that they have requested to meet the issues. So we look to AADAC, who, in fact, in Alberta are the experts in addiction treatment, to provide us with guidance, and we have followed that to date.

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, lately I've had several calls from my constituents expressing concerns about their gas bill prices. My questions today are for the Minister of Energy. In 2001 the Alberta government implemented the Natural Gas Price Protection Act to protect Albertans from high natural gas prices. As of February 1 ATCO Gas North is charging customers $7.19 a gigajoule and ATCO Gas South is charging consumers $7.54 a gigajoule. My constituents want to know: based on the average price to date, can Albertans expect a rebate at the end of this fiscal year?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, in order for the Natural Gas Price Protection Act to kick in, the price for the balance of this year, from February 24 onwards, would have to increase to about $16.60 per gigajoule and remain there for the balance of February and March in order to reach the $5.50 trigger price.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what makes this year different from the year 2001 is, one, there were abnormally lower gas prices during the first nine months of the fiscal year. In fact, the average of the natural gas at that time was about $3.89. So it would take a real spike, an incredibly high spike, up to the $16 and $17 level, for at least six weeks for this to kick in.

So the way the act is structured, that charge would have to be incurred and then the Alberta reference price would collect the royalties of the amount of gas sold, and that takes place over a two- to three-month period of time. There would then be the amount left in government accounts that would be available for our government rebate.

Mr. Shariff: My supplementary is also to the same minister.

Because our natural gas resource comes from Alberta, why should residential users in Alberta have to pay not the same price but more than the people in Chicago, Toronto, and Kansas City?

Mr. Smith: Well, firstly, Mr. Speaker, let me thank the member for crystalizing the issue in a far better sense than the opposition did earlier. The issue at hand here is that today those people in Toronto or Kansas City or Chicago would indeed be paying less than the rate that they'd be paying in Alberta. That's over a one-day period. Over a 12-month period there is no way that these cities would have a lower gas price than Alberta. However, Albertans have said since 2001 that they want the opportunity to make decisions about buying contract gas, and in fact we want to be able to provide them with that opportunity so that they can pay a level price over the period of 12 or 24 or 36 months.

Government Contracts

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, this government constantly reminds us of the Alberta advantage, how Albertans are more innovative, flexible, and efficient. The Official Opposition says: let's better support the Alberta advantage by making sure Alberta companies get a fair chance at receiving government contracts. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why is it that in some areas such as information technology systems over 90 percent of the money paid in contracts goes to large international corporations while smaller Alberta firms who can provide the same service at comparable prices get next to nothing?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, when we're awarding contracts, they're handled in a variety of manners, but usually if the contract is of any substance and if, in fact, there are a number of companies able to handle it, we will send out a request for proposal. In some cases we simply put out a tender, and the tender would be a situation where the contract is not too complicated, there are a number of companies that are interested, and it could be that it's in a location where there's no need to call for a request for proposal. So those are the various ways they're handled, and if it turns out that it happens to be a large company that gets the contract, well, that's a fair and open competitive marketplace.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: are there any rules for the large corporations that Alberta government contracts out to that state that they must give an equal opportunity to Alberta companies that vie for subcontracts on projects?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of different situations that we can run into. Certainly, when a large firm is winning a contract, we may encourage them, but we have to be careful. When you start talking about directing that they take certain firms on, that then starts to get into a very shady area, and I would resist that in a lot of cases. Furthermore, under a number of agreements we don't have the liberty to direct. As a matter of fact, the interprovincial trade agreement that the hon. minister of intergovernmental affairs has worked on talks to the fact that you have to be open and allow for the competition to work, not direct.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Economic Development: given the minister knows that the best place for Albertans' tax dollars to go is back to Albertans, when is he going to establish a contract-awarding policy whereby, other things being equal, Alberta companies are given preference to others?

Mr. Norris: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly the contract awarding has been described by the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, but I would remind the hon. member opposite that one of the tenets of this government is the free marketplace and competition, and never on this watch are we going to operate by giving contracts that aren't based on total open-market fairness and transparency. So I don't know if the member is suggesting that we should start giving contracts to friends who can't quite do the job as opposed to getting the best dollar for the taxpayer, but we're never going to go down that road.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Natural Gas Rebates

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week and over the weekend just past temperatures dipped to the minus 30 levels and perhaps went even lower as Alberta saw typical winter weather hit us hard. As it happens, ATCO Gas bills also hit the mailboxes last week, and consumers are wincing hard. One bill that I received for a modest home in Edmonton is for $175, and another homeowner with even a smaller home will pay $211. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Why is it that when the last provincial election was imminent, gas prices only had to spike for one month for the government to give rebates, but today, after three months of sky-high bills, the minister stonewalls Alberta consumers?

Mr. Smith: Well, I hate to take up all the time correcting the member's preamble, Mr. Speaker, but the prices have not been high for three months. We have seen an increase in bills; there's no denying that the price of natural gas is increasing. The Minister of Finance will be reporting later on today what happens when we sell 75 percent of that natural gas. We use only 25 percent inside Alberta. In fact, I would say that Albertans receive a natural gas rebate every time they buy something at a store and are not charged provincial sales tax.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it's Albertans who own the resource, why should Albertans have to wait a full year before this minister and this government give rebates to protect them from sky-high home heating costs?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, now we're getting towards cash flow and accounting questions, which, I know, challenges the other 50 percent of the third party opposition. What happens is that we do not have the money available to pay for a rebate until we collect the royalty money on behalf of all Albertans. Now, that is not the rate that they see in their gas bill. It is the Alberta reference price, which is the price that we collect from oil and gas companies who sell their gas not only to Albertans but to all parts of North America.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the minister: will the minister acknowledge that his legislated program is useless in that it leaves consumers hurting and introduce amendments to the existing legislation in this House that relieve Albertans from the burden of high gas bills? Will the minister make the commitment to the people he claims to serve right now?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, as the member knows, there were rebates paid in the year 2001. There was no Natural Gas Price Protection Act. In order to respond to what Albertans asked for, legislation was developed, which these members were a part of and voted on and debated, and then we were able to put that legislation in place. In fact, we are caring about Albertans. We are concerned about what happens with any increase in prices. We also know the great benefits that accrue to Albertans through the sale of their resources called oil and natural gas.

Mr. Speaker, we're always reviewing every piece of legislation. We're always reviewing the price of natural gas, and we're always ensuring that Albertans get top value, top dollar, for the natural gas they produce and they own.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Market Enhancement Recovery Fund

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Alberta has long enjoyed relative labour harmony, a credit to employers, employees, and the unions involved. However, there are a few anomalies that have the effect of skewing the balance so as to be unfair to non-union employers. One such anomaly is the market enhancement recovery fund, referred to as a MERF. This is where unions subsidize union employers to underbid non-union employers, thus creating work for union members. My question: if it is illegal for employers to make direct financial contributions to unions, why is it not also illegal for unions to make direct financial contributions to employers?

Mr. Dunford: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a very good question. On the surface it seems like we're, you know, connecting a couple of dots here as one follows from another, but I think it's necessary to put on the record the context of the items in the question. In the area of labour relations it's extremely important that we have a true reflection of the interests of the parties, so it was deemed necessary in labour legislation – and it probably is all across this country – some time ago, I guess, longer than the hon. member and I have been in politics. You can't have a union recognized by a Labour Relations Code that is dominated by the employer, so there was legislation put in place so that an employer could not provide financial contribution to a union in order then to destroy that separate vested interest that each would have.

Now, when we get into the area of the market enhancement recovery funds, we're not talking about an employer/employee relationship. The Merit Contractors Association, who made a presentation as recently as last week on this particular item to myself and to others, I think are connecting those two particular dots, and I think we have to look into this from that relationship of a competitive bidding operation rather than an employer having influence over its own actual union.

Mr. McClelland: My supplemental is to the same minister. As we continue, then, to connect the dots, since most of Alberta's mega energy projects are union projects, whereby employers are contributing to MERFs through the unions and those funds then are used in smaller institutional projects, are we not indirectly promoting unfair or unreasonable labour practices outside of the megajobs?

Mr. Dunford: Well, certainly the allegation is made that that is actually happening. There is nothing illegal about that in terms of the Labour Relations Code or other acts that I'm responsible for. Let's accept for the purposes today that it is true. If, in fact, this is happening, again, in the current legislation there would be no illegal activity that's been involved. In fact, one of the discussions that is currently ongoing is whether or not MERFing is a labour relations issue under a provincial jurisdiction or whether or not it is some sort of a competitive issue that might come under the federal government. In any event, it follows along the general point, that was made decades ago, that employees should have more say and should have more direct involvement in what their employer is doing. Many companies have tried to provide stock-option purchase plans for employees, and I'm not so sure that this is not another reflection of that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. While it's obvious that the intent of legislation decades ago is not being followed through today as individual union members do not contribute to MERFs – contractors contribute based on hours worked – is this, therefore, not in contradiction to our present labour laws?

The Speaker: I hope hon. members appreciate that it's against the rules to ask for legal opinions.

Hon. minister, proceed very quickly.

Mr. Dunford: Well, very quickly, at a recent presentation on this matter this allegation was, in fact, made. I've asked to see that legal frame of reference, and I await it as we speak.

Calling Lake Fish Stocks

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government clearly doesn't believe in transparency or accountability, as the Calling Lake issue continues to identify. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development opened up a lake, his lake, for fishing. This lake has collapsed and has vulnerable fish populations. For the past few weeks his ministry has denied the existence of a memorandum from senior department biologists that states that the pilot project on Calling Lake may cause the irrecoverable collapse of fish populations there. All of my questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why does his ministry continue to refuse to release this memo?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes. Mr. Speaker, of course, the Liberal way would be to close everything down. That's the Liberal way. We don't operate that way. This is a very innovative project. It's working well. Again, I'd like to stress the fact that it is a five-year project.

An Hon. Member: How long?

Mr. Cardinal: A five-year project. We are monitoring it very closely. It's very well accepted by the department staff, the biologists. It's very well accepted by the public, Mr. Speaker. In fact, this Friday I announced the opening of an additional 16 lakes where you can now catch and keep a fish. That recommendation is coming from the biologists in the department working with us.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, the Liberal way would have been to properly manage fish stocks for the past 10 years in this province.

Given that senior department biologists in the memo say that there is scientific evidence this pilot project is causing irreparable damage to Calling Lake, will the minister just commit to ending this project?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I assume that if the Liberals were to take over, they'd end all the projects in Alberta, but this side of the government will not do that. This project is working very well. The report hasn't been released yet. The report will be coming forward, and I'm not scared to file the report in the House and put an action plan behind that report. What they would do is close the province down.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, given that fish stocks are at this particular point in time and have been for some years collapsing in this province, why does the minister continue to refuse to make his decisions based on scientific evidence rather than the whim in his own neighbourhood?

Mr. Cardinal: No, Mr. Speaker, it's not the whim of the neighbourhood. The issue of sport and commercial fishing is a major issue to Albertans. The commercial fishing industry is about a $5 million industry. The sportfishing industry is about a $350 million industry. There is a challenge to keep the balance between having the commercial fishery viable and also having the stocks that these sports fishermen will utilize in Alberta. It's simple, but it's challenging to manage it. The only way we're going to do it is to be very, very innovative, and it's one of the most innovative projects you've seen.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with Recognitions, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

(reversion)

Mr. Tannas: Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted to introduce three more guests who are interested in Bill 201. They're in the members' gallery: Jay Woosaree, Alberta Research Council; Laura Ferguson; and Louise Perkins. I'd ask these people to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real delight to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to the members of the House a great friend of agriculture in Alberta and one of the wisest fellows I know: he sold his farm and moved into the wonderful constituency of Edmonton-McClung, where he now resides and is a good friend. I'd ask Brian Heidecker to please stand and be recognized in the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's a new face at the Clerk's table today, a visitor from the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba who's here with an exchange program, Mr. Rick Yarish. He's the Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees for the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba. He'll be here with us for the rest of the week taking part in the ambience of this very esteemed parliament.

This evening, as well, hon. members, the Eid Al-Adha ceremony. All hon. members are invited at 5:30 with a reception to follow in the rotunda.

head: Recognitions

Art Smith

Ms Kryczka: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to recognize an amazing native Calgarian, Arthur Ryan Smith, CM, DFC, best known as Art Smith to Calgarians, Albertans, and Canadians. Art recently received the Order of Canada award in recognition of his exceptional record of lifelong public service. He was also inducted into the Alberta Order of Excellence in 1997.

Art Smith is one of a few Canadians to have served as a city alderman, member of the provincial Legislature, and three times elected to the House of Commons. He also represented Canada as the delegate to the United Nations in 1959, 1960, and 1961. Art Smith was founding chairman of the Alberta Economic Development Authority and founding co-chair of the Calgary Economic Development Authority. He was also founding president and CEO of the Calgary Homeless Foundation and remains the only honorary lifetime member.

Art was also an executive member of the organizing committee for the World Energy Congress; chief of protocol for the Calgary Winter Olympics; president of the Calgary Chamber of Commerce; president of the Air Cadet League of Canada; and board member of the Asia Pacific Foundation, the Calgary Airport Authority, and the Alberta Cancer Foundation.

Mr. Speaker, it is most fitting that Art Smith's exemplary public service commitment continues to be honoured.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Collaborative Law

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to take this opportunity to recognize a group of lawyers in Medicine Hat who are continuing to break ground in their promotion and practice of collaborative law. Medicine Hat is leading the nation in the growth rate of cases resolved through collaborative law.

The collaborative process is a client-centred process. The two collaborative lawyers are hired by their clients as settlement counsel to focus on settlement from the beginning of their retainer, to assist their clients in negotiations based on the clients' interests, to provide legal advice to their client to collaborate first and consider court as only a last resort.

Most traditional lawsuits are resolved before trial. The collaborative process is quicker, cheaper, and more amicable. Clients control the result and have a great deal of control over the cost and timing. Doesn't it only make sense that everyone agree not to go to trial in the first place? With constant pressure on the courts to deal with criminal matters, civil and family dispute resolution outside the court system is not only more effective for the client, it has tremendous potential to fundamentally change the way we operate courts in Alberta.

Congratulations to Janis Pritchard, David Carter, and over 30 others who are committed to practicing collaborative law in Medicine Hat.

Lakewood Community League

Dr. Massey: The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and I congratulate Lakewood Community League in Edmonton-Mill Woods as they mark their 25th anniversary. Over the years hundreds of community volunteers have served on the executive and along with others have been involved in providing a rich and wide variety of recreational, educational, and community service programs.

At the annual volunteer appreciation night on February 22 a number of awards were presented. Merit awards for outstanding and dedicated service were presented to Lisa LePage, Mike Bauer, Lyndon Bradshaw, Carrie McIlveen, and Peter Schenk. Merit awards for outstanding service and bingo volunteering were also given to Carol Badin, Wayne Robinson, Kim Hodda, and Neil Shewchuk. Six volunteers, Gwen and Keith LeClerq, Catherine Hunt, Nikki Bradshaw, Lorna Gallant, and June Sauer, were given a special 25th anniversary recognition award for having served five consecutive years as board members. Volunteer of the year was Nikki Bradshaw.

For 25 years Lakewood Community League volunteers have enriched the lives of Edmontonians in this part of the city. They have built and maintained facilities and instituted an enviable tradition of service.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Emerson Drive

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and recognize Grande Prairie's country rock band, Emerson Drive.

About seven years ago in Grande Prairie there was a high school talent show. That show began forming what would become Emerson Drive. Brad Mates, Patrick Allingham, and Chris Hartman played together for the first time. They decided to form a band and started practising in the Mates' family basement. Since that time they've gone on to several awards. They won the Billboard magazine top new country artists award, and from the Canadian Country Music Association they won the rising star award and the group of the year award.

Those who had the opportunity to see them or hear them at last year's Grey Cup will appreciate why the Peace region is so proud of Emerson Drive.

Thank you.

Peace Activism

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, last Friday evening I joined over 300 concerned citizens at the Canadian Islamic Centre, which is situated in the constituency of Edmonton-Glengarry, to listen to Jane MacKay Wright and Louis Schmittroth speak on the topic of Iraq and Palestine: Views from the Ground.

In 2002 these courageous Canadian grandparents traveled to the Middle East to observe the reality on the ground for civilians caught in the tragedies of war and social conflicts. Jane, a former professor of media arts, participated in a delegation to Iraq cosponsored by Christian Peacemaker Teams and Voices in the Wilderness to witness the effects of 12 years of sanctions and bombings on the civilians of this country. Louis, a retired computer science professor, took part in a journey to Palestine organized by the International Solidarity Movement to witness the reality of life in refugee camps and under military occupation.

The theme for both presentations was: in wars it is the civilians that suffer; let us look for alternatives to violence. It is because of their brave and valiant efforts that this important message is being spread and supported.

Thank you.

Scott Tournament of Hearts

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Deb Santos, Alberta's Scott Tournament of Hearts representative, and to Drayton Valley, which hosted this year's Alberta Scott Tournament of Hearts from January 22 to 26, 2003.

Ms Santos won Alberta's tournament in Drayton Valley and ably represented our province at the national finals in Kitchener, Ontario, this past weekend. Against tough competition, Deb ended with a five and six record. The national tournament was won by Nova Scotia's Colleen Jones for the third straight year.

Mr. Speaker, curling is an important part of prairie life. It seems that as the nights grow longer and the days grow colder, the curling rink is where you go to find the spirit of community. In Drayton Valley our curling rink is filled with that spirit, both in the warmth of our volunteers and spectators as well as the camaraderie of competitors. This year's organizers did a first-rate job in ensuring that Alberta's Scott Tournament of Hearts was a success. They deserve a big pat on the back for their tireless efforts.

It's in mentioning events like this that I am truly proud to represent the people of Drayton Valley-Calmar, and so I ask all MLAs to stand up and give our curling volunteers, as well as Ms Santos, the recognition of this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise in my place to present a petition signed by 1,644 firefighters representing about 75 percent of every available full-time urban firefighter in Alberta. The petition asks that the Legislative Assembly amend the Worker's Compensation Board Act to create presumptive status for six cancers that have been conclusively shown to disproportionately affect firefighters as a result of the dangerous conditions in which [they] work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 2 contains amendments necessary to move forward with a new fiscal framework that is designed to bring predictability, sustainability, and continued discipline to the budget planning process.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003.

This is a bill to raise the school leaving age of Alberta students from 16 to 17 years, thereby increasing their educational opportunities to better meet the demands of the 21st century.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Bill 204
Insurance (Accident Insurance Benefits)
Amendment Act, 2003

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Insurance (Accident Insurance Benefits) Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 would amend the Insurance Act to increase the limit on section (b) medical benefits delivered to those who have been in an automobile accident to $25,000 over four years from the current level of $10,000 over two years. As well, Bill 204 would include provisions for a dispute arbitration mechanism between insurance companies and claimants receiving section (b) medical benefits.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week in the House the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie made some unfounded comments about Climate Change Central, so today I'd like to table in the House the appropriate number of copies of a number of Climate Change Central documents. Their actual progress reports and actions accomplished are in here, and I'd encourage the member before she makes those kinds of comments in the future to perhaps look at the information, and she would get more information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of letters supporting Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. These are from the organizations as follows: Sandy Cross Conservation Foundation, Prairie Conservation Forum, Alberta Fish and Game Association, Alberta Native Plant Council, the Lethbridge Naturalists Society, the Alberta Wilderness Association, the Red Deer River Naturalists, Alberta office of the Nature Conservancy of Canada, Southern Alberta Land Trust Society, Vince Petherbridge, Karen De Groot, Shirley-Jean Mascherin, Lois Argue, Laura Ferguson, and the Western Stock Growers' Association.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a letter from an Edmonton-Centre constituent, Janice Hoover, directed toward Dr. Jeffery Anderson, who's the chairman of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. It's referencing the Artstrek program, which is now in its 43rd year, and that it produces the next generation of actors, playwrights, directors, and designers, ensuring that the theatre community remains vibrant and substantial, and urging Dr. Anderson to reconsider the cuts to the funding formula for this program.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have three tablings. The first one is on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition. It's a letter to the Prime Minister with an attachment which is a resolution opposing unilateral military action against Iraq which was passed by the Official Opposition of Alberta.

My second tabling is a letter from Barry Breau with the Alberta Environmental Network talking about forest certification and what a great project it is and how this government needs to pay a little more attention to it.

The third tabling is from Dean McQuay from Edmonton who is very concerned that the Alberta government is not keeping its promise to protect a critically important wilderness area being the Bighorn wildland recreation area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the benefit of all members of the Assembly photocopies of the natural gas petition that reads, "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to reinstate natural-gas rebates immediately." These forms can be found at altaliberals.ab.ca. This group of concerned Albertans is from Round Hill, Edmonton, Spruce Grove, Legal, Acme, Donnelly, Lethbridge, Calgary, Elk Point, Kitscoty, and Riley, just to name a few.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter that I received from a resident of Ponoka who's a proud farmer, and he informed me that his electrical energy costs have increased by over 50 percent between 2000 and 2002. He puts a very tough question to me. He says:

If deregulation and subsequent price increases justified rebates to consumers in 2001, what is the rationale for not providing similar ongoing concessions until the deregulation debacle gets sorted out?

I don't have the answer. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first tabling is a letter from a senior citizen whose electrical bill has more than doubled and fluctuates each month. This letter is addressed to me and states: "I am a pensioner, living in my own home, on a fixed income. How can I budget on such ridiculous fluctuations?"

The second tabling is a letter from a resident of Leduc, dated February 11, 2003, regarding natural gas rates. This letter is also addressed to me and states, "The amount of $727.63 is preposterous for a 2400 sq. ft. house with two (2) new furnaces."

head: Second Reading

Bill 201
Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem)
Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to move second reading of Bill 201, Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003.

Last February the Prairie Conservation Forum approached me to sponsor a private member's public bill to amend the Emblems of Alberta Act to have rough fescue designated as Alberta's provincial grass. I was asked in part because Highwood contains a considerable portion of the remaining rough fescue grassland, which includes both the plains rough fescue and foothills rough fescue. Today I'm asking all hon. members of this Assembly to support the Prairie Conservation Forum and myself in amending the Emblems of Alberta Act to designate rough fescue, Latin name Festuca scabrella, as Alberta's provincial grass.

This rough fescue complex may also be recognized as three varieties or, as some taxonomists would prefer, three separate species, known as plains rough fescue, which is Latin Festuca hallii; foothills rough fescue, which is Festuca campestris; or the third one, northern rough fescue, Festuca altaica. Alberta is the only area that is home to all three members of the rough fescue complex.

Rough fescue is a long-lived, perennial bunch grass with deep fibrous roots which tap soil nutrients and bind soil particles. It is a self-curing, nutritious native grass and a major component of the rough fescue grassland, which makes excellent winter grazing. Its relatively high protein content provides good forage for wildlife as well as livestock, and its deep roots facilitate water penetration and act as a water retention factor in the watershed. A tussock of rough fescue has a life span of over 100 years, and consequently it produces few seeds each year with the occasional heavier seed sets every four or more years.

Range management conscious ranchers practise moderate grazing with their livestock following the 50-50 rule of thumb of leaving 50 percent and permitting 50 percent to be grazed each year. Rough fescue is also a decreaser when the grassland is overgrazed. Overgrazing decreases plant variety; however, zero grazing also results in less varied plant life than that of a moderately grazed grassland. Rough fescue has long been admired by the ranchers and cattlemen of Alberta and has provided a base for horse and cattle raising in Alberta since the 1880s.

You may ask, "Why a provincial grass?" to which I would respond: rough fescue is a very worthy symbol of our prairie heritage of rich grasslands and fertile soil, soil that was the gift of the grasslands to the first homesteaders and remains a gift to our farmers and our ranchers today. The prairie and foothills grasslands sustained the buffalo and Plains Indians for thousands of years before the ranchers and homesteaders arrived.

In the late 1980s a number of naturalists, conservationists, ranchers, government officials, both provincial and federal, agricultural groups, nongovernmental organizations, academics, researchers, and others developed a prairie conservation action plan to mobilize prairiewide efforts to conserve and manage native prairie species' communities and their habitats. As the Prairie Conservation Forum's chair, Cheryl Bradley noted in the 2001-2005 Alberta action plan: in as much as most prairie people today live in urban centres, the challenge is "developing a shared understanding of the prairie ecosystem, including recognizing the opportunities it provides and the limits it places upon us, and learning to care for our prairie home." In this recent action plan it's stated under goal 4, objective 4.1.2:

Implement a process to select a Provincial Grass that will be a symbol of our prairie heritage and convey a sense of prairie as home . . . for many Albertans. Design the selection process to raise awareness among Albertans about the ecology and value of native grasses and native prairie.

In early 2001 the Prairie Conservation Forum sent ballots to interested Albertans asking them to select one of five commonly widespread native grasses, and many MLAs who were here before the last election will remember receiving a letter and a brochure explaining the goal and the process. I had asked earlier for our pages to distribute copies of the Get a Grass ballot. The vote was announced in May of 2001, with the most favoured grass being rough fescue.

The choice of rough fescue as a prairie grass emblem or symbol for Alberta is supported, then, by associations and organizations who are members of the Prairie Conservation Forum, including, but to name a sample of its members, the Alberta Cattle Commission; Alberta Fish and Game Association; Alberta Native Plant Council; Alberta Wilderness Association; Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society; Ducks Unlimited; the Eastern irrigation district; Federation of Alberta Naturalists; the government of Alberta, including the departments of Community Development and Sustainable Resource Development; the Natural Resources Conservation Board; under the government of Canada the Department of National Defence, Canadian Forces Base Suffield; the Canadian Wildlife Service; Nature Conservancy of Canada; Shell Oil; Society of Range Management; and the universities of Alberta, Calgary, and Lethbridge.

Just as biologists, botanists, naturalists, environmentalists, and many others have for some years supported the protection of the tropical rain forests, members of the Prairie Conservation Forum wish to draw attention to the biodiversity of the remaining native grasslands, which have a unique ecosystem of their own. Our native grassland is not well suited to resisting the invasion of weeds and introduced plants when the grassland is plowed or disrupted by roads, canals, pipelines, or other disturbances. Such disturbances in today's remaining native grasslands areas compel us to advocate for increased research on how to repair and regenerate native plants in the disturbed areas.

With today's interest in the evolving Kyoto accord it is worth noting that an expert from the Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada research centre in Lethbridge and many other scientists as well feel that the native prairie grasslands are equal to the tropical rain forests as effective carbon soil sinks. Rough fescue's root mass and constant shedding of its deep rootlets make it an important component of carbon sequencing.

For thousands of years, then, rough fescue lands were the fall and winter mainstay not only of buffalo but of elk, deer, bighorn sheep on Alberta's plains, hills, and mountain valleys. These grasslands were the builders of the soil which sustains Alberta agriculture to this day. I believe that it is fitting to recognize a suitable grass species such as rough fescue to help Albertans understand the importance of native grassland as an ecological unit, unique in its own right, and a grassland which is of major cultural and economic value to our province.

Rough fescue is found today in the southern two-thirds of Alberta: from the Cypress Hills in the south to the Grande Prairie plains in the north and in our foothills and mountain valleys as well as across Alberta's prairie lands. It has provided good winter feed for our native mammals. I mentioned the sheep, deer, elk, and bison, and today cattle and horses would be added to the list of beneficiaries.

No other state or province in North America has designated rough fescue as its official grass, and Alberta today has the largest remaining rough fescue grassland, which, while not endangered, is at risk. Making rough fescue our provincial grass emblem would, I believe, be an appropriate step to help Albertans recognize the importance of native grassland that is worthy of our respect and to preserve it for future generations.

I look forward to your comments and ask for your support on Bill 201.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for this opportunity to speak in support of Bill 201, and I thank my colleagues in the House for accommodating me to speak at this time. First of all, I want to commend the Member for Highwood for introducing this bill to the Legislature and to say at the outset that I consider rough fescue an excellent selection as Alberta's provincial grass and, of course, appreciate the support that the Provincial Museum of Alberta has given this grass as well in determining it most appropriate. I would gather, as the Member for Highwood has indicated, that a majority of Albertans that took the time to fill out the ballot also concur. Certainly, it is the first choice of Albertans.

I wanted to just mention quickly the significance of emblems because I think they are significant. First, I would want to comment on our provincial colours – the blue and the gold represent the sky and the prairies – and our provincial tree, the lodgepole pine, which had a very significant part in this province's history. It was used to make railway ties in the very early years, and it continues to play a very major role in our forest industry in manufacturing poles, posts, pulp, plywood, mine timbers, and other lumber products. So I think rough fescue as a grass would be a great addition to this. I think it clearly indicates the importance of grass and agriculture to the development of the prairies and to the continuance of our province's economy.

This designation when passed – and I'll be the optimist in this – would make Alberta the second province in Canada, I understand, to designate a provincial grass, Saskatchewan being the first one. Maybe because we're prairie provinces we understand quite clearly the importance of grass.

Mr. Speaker, the agricultural history of our province does need to be preserved. It is the foundation of our province, and it will continue to play a vital role, and designation, I believe, will help ensure that our public understands what an integral role grasses play in the ecology and the environmental area of our province.

When the Prairie Conservation Forum set out in 1999 to select a grass emblem, I believe it was the Minister of Community Development that approved the project, and I would want to add my thanks to him. Certainly, one of their goals was to ensure that Albertans had a greater understanding and appreciation of the beautiful native grasses that adorn our Alberta landscape. We're very pleased in Alberta Agriculture with this choice. We believe that of the more than 135 native grasses that could have been considered, rough fescue best meets the criteria of being widespread across Alberta as the hon. member has indicated. It's very easily recognized. It has a very high ecological significance. It's culturally important and economically important to our province.

It was very vital to the survival of the pioneers who first settled this province in the 1870s. It provided the basis for most of the grazing for those homesteaders' livestock when they arrived. It's very hardy and can withstand the coldest of winters, and I thought that with the temperature hovering in the minus 30 degrees in the last couple of days, this would be something members would want to take into consideration. Without the sustainability of grasses like this, certainly agricultural development in our province would have been hampered and maybe just would have been unlikely.

I guess the most important thing to all of us who care a lot – and I believe it is all of us – about our native grasses, our native flowers: it continues to be a very, very important forage in the prairies and parklands of our province. It's still vital for the grazing of cattle, certainly horses, other animals, but it continues to be incredibly important for our wildlife whether it's our bighorn sheep, deer, elk, or bison.

The last thing I wanted to just comment on is that Alberta is the only province with all three species of rough fescue growing within its borders. I think that by recognizing it as our native grass we'll continue to ensure that all of those species continue to thrive and survive. This is an excellent step in preserving the heritage of Alberta and educating our public about the important role that wild grass species have played and will continue to play in our province.

So, again, my thanks and congratulations to the Member for Highwood for the foresight and insight to introduce this bill, and I look forward to hearing and reading other members' comments on it.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, I believe that two other members from the government side will go first.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today and speak in support of Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. I commend the MLA from Highwood for bringing this legislation forward for discussion and debate. It is apparent that this is a valuable bill and one to which I will be offering my support.

Bill 201 would amend the Emblems of Alberta Act to include a provincial grass. Rough fescue would become the official grass of Alberta, representing our prairies' heritage, culture, and tradition. Our provincial emblems symbolize the history, the people, the natural features, and certainly the values that together make what Alberta is. Each emblem embodies an integral component of our province's identity. Grasslands are a part of our history, our character, our economic wealth, and our environmental health. By designating rough fescue as an official emblem, we would acknowledge and celebrate the importance of prairie grasslands. Rough fescue would join other provincial emblems such as the great horned owl, petrified wood, the lodgepole pine, the wild rose, and the colours blue and gold in symbolizing our province's heritage.

Mr. Speaker, with the passage of this bill Alberta would join Saskatchewan and several U.S. states in designating a provincial grass. Other jurisdictions have recognized the importance of having a symbol to reflect their history and culture and thus adopted provincial or state grasses as official emblems.

This province has over 135 different native grasses; however, rough fescue was chosen as the best candidate for a provincial emblem of Alberta. This grass represents our province's natural history, our province's role in agriculture settlement and development and economic importance, cultural significance, and historical heritage. While I recognize that this selected grass grows in only two-thirds of the province, Alberta is the only jurisdiction in North America that is home to all three subspecies of the grass. Designating rough fescue as our provincial grass would produce a very important benefit. It would lead to a heightened awareness of the importance that this native grass and native grassland species have had and continue to have on our province. The prairies are an extremely significant element of Alberta's past and present, and I believe that by officially recognizing rough fescue, we would indeed elevate the collective level of consciousness of Alberta's historical and cultural heritage.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to focus the remainder of my remarks on the importance of native grasslands to the Alberta prairie. The prairie is a fundamental aspect of our province's tradition, ecology, and heritage. The Alberta prairie grasslands as we know them were formed through geological processes in the course of millions of years. The prairie landscape has been and continues to be altered further by fire, flood, drought, wind, erosion, and even grazing. Each of these processes are dynamic and vary greatly in terms of time, space, and intensity. The alteration among these processes is a critical component of prairie biodiversity.

Eventually grass became the dominant vegetation of the prairies. Perennial grasses, various annual grasses, and many forbs thrive on the Alberta landscape. They have played a prominent ecological role in Alberta's past, and they continue to do so in the present. Prairie vegetation once covered over 14 percent of our province. Following the withdrawal of the glaciers, periods of drought caused many survival problems for the postglacial vegetation. The prairie plants grew complex root systems extending deep into the soil to find available water and nutrients. These deep-rooted grasses and drought-resilient plants prevailed to form the native vegetation of the land.

Mr. Speaker, our province is committed to the conservation of prairie grasslands. This government works in conjunction with other agencies to manage and preserve our native vegetation, while the conservation of prairie grasslands in community pastures relies on land managers, farmers, and ranchers who realize the value of and care for our natural prairie. Alberta's rural community has a deep sense of responsibility and stewardship towards the land, and this can be recognized through the passage of Bill 201. Designating rough fescue as the official grass of Alberta would heighten the awareness of our natural ecology. This designation would help to educate individuals about the importance of this grass species to our province. Albertans would develop a greater understanding and appreciation of native grasses. It is hoped that this could strengthen the efforts of conservation, preservation, and management of this vital ecological component of our ecosystem.

Our province's prairie grasslands are an integral part of our ecosystem, whose significance can be seen all the way from vegetation to consumer. Native grasses provide nutrition and sustenance for the livestock and wildlife that graze on the land.

Rough fescue in particular has a high protein and digestible carbohydrate content. Therefore, it is in the interest of the ranching industry to assist in the preservation and management of our natural habitat.

An increased awareness of the values, significance, and importance of the Alberta native grassland and parkland ecosystem may arise from official designation as a provincial emblem. As a direct consequence such a designation could highlight land use management practices and productive strategies that sustain diverse ecosystems across the whole prairie and parkland landscape. Our province has one of the largest terrains of grassland in the world. It is only appropriate for the province to embrace an emblem reflecting this prairie component. Rough fescue symbolizes the natural diversity across the province, spanning from the flat plains to the rolling foothills to the pristine Rocky Mountains. Albertans need to ensure that our native prairie with its wild plants and animals survives in our province and is conserved for its intrinsic values from which this and future generations can benefit.

Mr. Speaker, this provincial emblem would be more than just a grass. Indeed, it would be a symbol by which to acknowledge and reflect on the importance of our prairie heritage, tradition, and ecology. I strongly support this act and encourage all my colleagues to vote in favour of Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2003.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003, which I'm glad to have a chance to speak to this afternoon, is to designate a provincial grass. The species that has emerged as the favoured one is rough fescue.

The selection process for a provincial grass began in the fall of 1999 when the Prairie Conservation Forum took on the mission to get the government to designate a provincial grass. In April 2000 a group composed of individuals with expertise in native plants, range management, soil conservation, communications, and education was formed to spread awareness of and make the case for why Alberta should designate a provincial grass.

Alberta is graced with more than 135 different native grasses. The criteria used to select the five shortlisted species included widespread distribution throughout Alberta, ecological significance, cultural and social importance as well as economic importance. Furthermore, the grasses had to be attractive, easily recognized, and have socially acceptable common names. The five shortlisted provincial grasses, Mr. Speaker, included blue grama, green needlegrass, June grass, rough fescue, and western wheatgrass.

The goal, however, was to find the grass that best symbolized Albertans and our past. With this in mind the council left the final decision up to the people who knew best, Albertans. Over 2,000 Albertans from all over the province voted by mail-in ballot and e-mail from January to April in 2001. Alberta already has six natural emblems: wild rose, great horned owl, bull trout, bighorn sheep, lodgepole pine, and petrified wood. Garnering 37 percent of the vote, rough fescue was obviously the choice of people across the province as the provincial grass.

The rough fescue is described as a characteristic native grass of Alberta's grasslands. Mr. Speaker, all classes of livestock, particularly horses and cattle, as well as bighorn sheep, buffalo, elk, and other wildlife certainly use the rough fescue as a main feeding source through the year. It is grazed in all seasons and retains a considerable amount of nutritive value after maturity. Its high spring protein and digestible carbohydrate content is extremely valuable to many species. During the winter season snow becomes trapped in the large clumps that form at the base of the grass, moistening and softening the foliage, thereby allowing good winter utilization. Rough fescue is the ideal forage for livestock and wildlife during the winter months.

Alberta is the only jurisdiction where all three subspecies of rough fescue can be found. Aside from limited colour differences and flowering characteristics, there is little that sets the three subspecies apart from one another. In terms of geographical distribution, plains rough fescue is prevalent in west-central Alberta, foothills rough fescue can be in the foothills region of Alberta, and northern rough fescue can be located in the Rocky Mountains region. Recently I did a tour through the foothills region of Alberta and got to see some of the wonderful placings of the foothills rough fescue and the importance to the elk as they migrate through the foothills. Alberta has the largest area of rough fescue grasses in North America. Rough fescue has earned the nickname "the queen of grasses."

Mr. Speaker, what I'm giving to you now are some comments from Albertans who had spoken when they were choosing a grass, and one of the quotes was:

In the summer and fall, I have often admired the fragile blooms of [Rough Fescue], but not until this winter while cross-country skiing, did I appreciate the beauty of those heads in winter as well. Because we did not have a heavy snowpack, I happened across a patch of their dried, rusty gold heads, still standing tall and strong, reflecting delicate shadows on the sparkling snow below. Truly a beautiful sight.

Anyone who says that Albertans don't have a poet in them just doesn't know very many good Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, another Albertan mentioned, "We depend on it for late fall and early spring grazing for our cattle." "Rough fescue is a high production palatable forage. Excellent quality winter feed." Upon the arrival of European settlers in the 1870s rough fescue provided sustenance to livestock which in turn provided food and income for the homesteaders. As agriculture and ranching grew in significance to Alberta, rough fescue played a major role in allowing ranchers' herds to survive the harsh winters in the early years. In the early stages of ranching there were no feedlots available at which ranchers could buy feed. Ranchers relied strictly on fattening their herds through open-range grazing from late spring to early fall. Doing so ensured that the herd would survive the harsh temperatures and the lack of grazing opportunities during the winter season.

Rough fescue has had the ability to adapt to the natural fluctuations in our prairie ecosystems. Rough fescue, however, does not have the ability to survive the changes initiated by man. The biggest change to the prairies since the 1880s is the change from native grasslands to cultivated crops, Mr. Speaker. It's well known that about 4 percent of the land, especially in southern Alberta, which is irrigated produces 20 percent of the crops here in Alberta. It's wonderful effectiveness, but at the same time we have lost some of our native grasslands to this. Lush grasslands were changed into crops to support human and livestock consumption. Researchers estimate that only about 20 percent of Alberta's prairie parkland region is in a condition which approaches its native state.

Allowing livestock to overgraze the land causes grass to not grow back as it would have had it been left alone for a sufficient period of time. Also, urban development, oil and gas development, and road construction have all played a part in the decline of our native grasses. New practices in range management are keeping grasslands healthier, however. There is a growing consensus among ranchers, ecologists, and biologists that native grasses are tremendously important for ranching, the environment, and our economy.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 will ensure that rough fescue will remain an integral part of our great prairies and grasslands. Rough fescue is rooted in the land. Its roots can extend from four to six feet into the soil. The high nutritional value of rough fescue is due to its ability to dig deep and find the nutrients and resources and bring them to the surface. Rough fescue is a beautiful grass, tall and sturdy. It survives the winds of southern Alberta and stands ready to provide for another day. The spirit of all Albertans can be seen in rough fescue: strong and resilient, providing for each other through the riches that have been bestowed upon us by the land we live on, proud of our province and its people.

Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to support Bill 201, and we can proudly proclaim that we are as Albertans rooted in this land as well. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise this afternoon and support Bill 201, Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. It's nice anytime in this Assembly when we see issues of the environment and particularly the sustainability of the environment taking the forefront in discussion. Certainly, designating a grass and designating this particular grass gives us a focus on the importance of taking a look at the competing interests we have in this province at this time and recognizing how important the environment can be.

There is quite a bit of pressure on this particular grass, as there is on all regions of this province that are under environmental pressure, to be sustainable in the long run. This particular grass is a very hardy grass and is persistent, but under heavy grazing pressures or other kinds of frequent disturbances it also can become extinct or hard to cultivate. This grass grows on black, fertile soil, and it's, of course, a habitat preferred for cultivation in this province, so it's gone from much of the former range in central Alberta, particularly on the more level areas. Also, because it grows on fertile, black soil, it's under pressure from development, be that residential, urban kinds of developments or commercial developments, because we tend to populate those areas that have been successful in the past as farming areas. That also causes, then, fragmentation of the areas with roads and subdivisions, and it makes it susceptible to invasion by nonnative species.

Having said all of that, this is a perfect time to take a look at protecting this kind of grass, and designating it as one of the emblems of Alberta is a good way to do that. We do have some challenges facing us in terms of being able to keep this grass available and sustainable over the coming generations since we have had more than two-thirds of mixed prairie grassland regions being destroyed by cultivation. So the challenges that we see, really, as Albertans are to be able to commit to sound stewardship of the remaining grasslands so that this can be a living emblem forever in our province and to restore this rough fescue to lands where human-caused disturbances have resulted in the elimination of it or a significant decline. By doing that, we will contribute to the sustainability of ecosystems throughout the province. Grasslands are a basic building block for the sustainability of animals and other kinds of habitat.

So this is a timely time for this bill to come forward. It is a nice kind of legacy for this member to have in terms of all the kinds of good work he's done in this Legislature over the years, and we are very happy to support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to have the opportunity to join my colleagues in support of Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. I believe that this bill is extremely important to our province. Our provincial emblems help us define who we are. They symbolize our past, where we've come from, and allow us to see ourselves as we are today so we can see our path into the future. While Alberta has other natural heritage emblems, none symbolizes the importance of the prairies and agriculture to the province as the provincial grass emblem, and to me the rough fescue is the best grass to symbolize our province.

The gold heads of the rough fescue, standing tall, waving in the wind with roots that are deep, tenacious, and adapted to our prairie climates, reflect the heart and grit, the strength of the province and our people. Rough fescue was vital to the survival of those who settled Alberta, providing the basis for grazing when homesteaders first arrived. When people came to the prairies, it was because the grasslands offered the sustainability that the settlers needed for their livelihood. When my grandfather and before him my great-grandfather homesteaded here, the grassland was the stability of the family. It was essential to the development of the rural landscape.

We would most likely not have been able to sustain agriculture without the existence of rough fescue. It was extremely valuable as pasture grass for cattle and winter forage for wild animals. Due to its high nutritional value year-round, rough fescue has remained the most important forage on the prairies. In the same way, Alberta's and Canada's agriculture and agri-food sectors have been and continue to be key contributors to the high quality of life enjoyed by citizens across our province and country. I believe agriculture is our most important renewable resource and a major contributor to our economy in Alberta. I really believe that the longevity of agriculture on the prairies has a direct correlation to our stewardship of the land and the grasses.

Our challenge as the province continues to grow and prosper is to find a balance between economic growth and environmental protection. In many areas of the province we have changed the landscape and the ecosystems from native grassland to cultivated crops. As well, stop for a moment to consider the volatility of the grasslands in a drought. We have to be exceptionally cognizant of how fragile this resource is and how important it is to nurture it, to protect it, and to look after it for the security of our future as Albertans.

As Dr. MacEwan wrote in 1969, "I believe I am an integral part of the environment and, as a good subject, I must establish an enduring relationship with my surroundings. My dependence upon the land is fundamental." He also said, "I believe the biggest challenge is in being a helper rather than a destroyer of the treasures in nature's storehouse, a conserver, a husbandman, and partner in caring for the Vineyard." As a farmer and a rancher I have been dependent on the land for my livelihood and know firsthand the benefit and the value of living in harmony with the land.

As in so many areas, the successful balance can only be reached with the involvement of all partners: government, business, and the public. New practices in range management are keeping grasslands healthier, and I think that this legislation is an excellent complement to these efforts.

Designating rough fescue as our provincial grass emblem will raise awareness about the importance of Alberta's native grasslands. It will provide opportunities for Albertans to develop a greater understanding of and appreciation for the ecology of native grasses, the grasslands, and their cultural and economic importance. Alberta's grasslands are an important part of our heritage. They are so vital to the survival and existence of our agricultural industry. They are also a source of rejuvenation for our spirit, maintenance of our soul, fulfillment of our hearts, and enhancement of the beauty of our province.

By contributing to our evolving knowledge of the value of our grasslands, Bill 201 will help ensure that this precious natural resource is maintained and enhanced for generations to come. Then and only then will we be able to echo Dr. MacEwan when he wrote, "I am prepared to stand before my Maker, the Ruler of the entire universe, with no other plea than that I have tried to leave things in His Vineyard better than I found them."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased to support Bill 201, Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. The Member for Highwood, who brought the bill forward, along with a number of other speakers has made the case for choosing rough fescue very well. It's interesting because the selection of rough fescue joins a long list of other emblems that this Assembly has adopted in the past, and that includes the bighorn sheep, petrified wood, the bull trout, the wild rose, the great horned owl, the lodgepole pine, along with the tartan and the flag of the province and, of course, the very first emblem, our coat of arms.

The last few selections have gone fairly unchallenged. I note with interest that there was a vote on the choice of this grass, and rough fescue was the choice, but in the past some of the emblems chosen by the government have been challenged. It was right at the beginning, when the province was first instituted, in 1907, when the first Premier, a Liberal Premier, Rutherford, put forward a proposal for our coat of arms. In petitioning the Crown, they described it as "azure [in a] range of snow mountains with blue green coloured foothills, to a lighter green prairie into a golden wheat belt." This was based on a design that Mrs. MacCully from Lacombe had put forward, and it wasn't received very well by the College of Heralds in London. Initially they were quite critical, calling it "of the poorest class of heraldry" and indicating that it was inadmissible.

The road to emblem-naming since then thankfully has been much easier, and we've been able to change the provincial coat of arms over the years without similar interference or concern, as we have our flag. In 1967 the government proclaimed the official flag of Alberta, settling on the arms with a background of royal ultramarine blue, which was said to represent our unpolluted skies. In 1980 the government sought to beef up the coat of arms for the 75th anniversary of the province by adding a pronghorn antelope and some wild roses. They added the pronghorn antelope because Manitoba had already taken the buffalo.

I guess the point I'm making, Mr. Speaker, is that the selection of an emblem, something that stands for our province, is an important piece of work. In the past there's been a lot of time and effort put into choosing and bringing forward proposals, much as there is for this proposal, and I congratulate the individuals and the associations that have been involved in putting forward the proposal we have before us today. As I said, I'm pleased to support the bill that we have in front of us.

I think that with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly pleased today to rise and participate in the debate on Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. I would like to note that as a third-generation rancher in southern Alberta whose grandparents came to that area about 1900, I certainly appreciate the importance of good grass and can tell all hon. members that without grass, ranches do not succeed. I've often tried to visualize in my mind the stories my grandfathers told me as a child, where they rode into that country and all they could see was grass up to their stirrups. That must have been a great sight and something that those of us who live today will never be able to see.

I think it's important, Mr. Speaker, that a society recognize the historical significance of its past. Therefore, I think it's important that we do this remembrance of this important grass to our history and our heritage. So I would like to take a moment and express gratitude and appreciation to the hon. Member for Highwood for all the effort he has put into making rough fescue our province's official grass.

Like all the official symbols of the province of Alberta the recognition of rough fescue as our provincial grass is as Albertan as the wild rose flower, the big horn sheep, or the lodgepole pine. Each of these emblems depicts a significant piece of our heritage and exemplifies our rich diversity and history. Although critics may dismiss the process of choosing rough fescue as the official grass of the province, it was in fact a process that involved the contributions of many, many Albertans. Mr. Speaker, I believe it's important to note that the hon. Member for Highwood facilitated this democratic process of choosing rough fescue through the Prairie Conservation Forum. This process included the participation of all Albertans in choosing rough fescue as a potential addition to our provincial emblems. It truly exhibited the great process of democracy we have come to hold so dear to our hearts in this Assembly.

Provincial emblems represent more than simple mementos for promoting a particular piece of our province. Provincial emblems are a special way of showing both the citizens of Alberta and the visitors to Alberta what our province is about. Nowhere, Mr. Speaker, is this more evident than with the long history of rough fescue and its importance to our agricultural community. Ecologically it would be hard to argue for a better grass to represent Alberta. Rough fescue has a wide geographic range in Alberta, covering the foothills, the montane, and the prairie regions of the province. The grass known as rough fescue consists, as others have said, of three closely related species that have between them adapted to the diverse habitat found in Alberta. Of all the western provinces only Alberta has all three rough fescue species within its boundaries. This is truly an Alberta grass.

Agriculture has been the backbone of our economy for over a century now, dating back to well before our province had its inception. Long before the oil and gas industry ruled the economic landscape here, agriculture was the leader that provided the majority of our families in Alberta with a living. As the dominant grass occurring in many first-settled areas of Alberta, rough fescue played an important role in agricultural development. Not only did it provide critical winter feed for livestock, but it ultimately sustained pioneering farms and families from the hardships incurred during the settling period.

The prairies of southern Alberta were viewed as a barren, hard, and lonely landscape by many settlers who arrived here in the 19th century. To many European immigrants the prairies provided a stark contrast to the seemingly more hospitable environment of their homeland, but the settlers also saw the prairie as a land of opportunity, a wilderness frontier which had to be tamed. These early perceptions of the prairies have significantly influenced the formation of many positive societal attitudes about acceptable human interactions within the prairie landscape and its value to us as Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have long held a strong spiritual and philosophical value toward the prairies and rough fescue as an integral part of these core values, the values of family, community, and deep sense of heritage. The Alberta prairie landscape is a part of our cultural history and a significant aspect of our Canadian identity. Many aboriginal people and farmers and ranchers who live in close contact with the prairies have strong emotional ties to the land and its creatures. They feel a responsibility to be good stewards of the land. People who are highly dependent on the land for their livelihood inevitably come to realize the benefit and value of living in harmony with the land. The prairies are a source of aesthetic pleasure, and certainly rough fescue contributes to that appeal. Some people find beauty and inspiration there. It appeals to their eyes, hearts, minds, and imaginations and inspires writings and works of art. Just knowing that there are still native prairies provides an intangible though powerful source of spiritual refreshment. For people seeking escape from urban life, the prairies provide opportunities for solitude and reflection, a retreat where one can experience the natural world.

Some people believe that prairie species and the prairie ecosystem have an intrinsic right to exist in the same manner as other species and natural communities. Therefore, it is important for the province to recognize rough fescue as one of our provincial emblems and protect this vast prairie resource with extreme care and diligence.

As well, Mr. Speaker, beyond the social and philosophical value of the prairies and the habitat that it supports, the prairies of Alberta also hold a scientific and biological value. As one of the major ecosystems of North America the prairies are rich in biodiversity and genetic resources. Drought, grasshoppers, infestations, prairie fires, floods, and other natural processes have dramatically altered the landscape over a period of many thousands of years. Although it has experienced significant pressure and change, the prairie ecosystem as a whole has survived. Prairie species have at different times either flourished or have had to cope with population declines. Species that were uniquely adapted to the prairies were able to survive and pass on their genetic code to a new generation.

In our recent past human use and development of the prairie has resulted in the decline or demise of several plant and animal species. As a result, many people are concerned about human activities that lead to the extinction of prairie species. Bill 201 speaks to these concerns, Mr. Speaker, and highlights the importance that we place on our prairie resources. Because we know so little about how complex ecosystems work, we don't fully understand the function and value of individual species within the larger prairie ecosystem. We have only recently come to realize that it's wise to conserve as much of the planet's genetic material as is possible both to perpetuate natural systems and to provide future benefits to the human race. This is particularly true in our technologically advanced society, where research in genetic manipulation and the development of new hybrid species have progressed rapidly, leaving many ethical questions unanswered.

A large number of useful hybrid species have been developed from native grasses. Studies have shown how native prairie plants may be more efficient at soil erosion control, nutrient recycling, nitrogen fixation, and keeping insect and weed species under control than tame grasses and other crops. Native rangeland, with its broad diversity of plant life, including rough fescue, may have greater value as cattle feed than hybrid barley, corn, and forage crops, all of which are grown predominantly as a single monoculture crop. Recent studies have shown that cattle which are finished for market on native grass rather than on domestic feeds produce meat with a higher conjugated linolenic acid content. Conjugated linolenic acids are antioxidizing and anticarcinogenic agents which are important to human health.

Mr. Speaker, with the recognition of rough fescue as the official provincial grass, it is in the province's interest to protect its native landscape and one of its provincial emblems from extinction. The economic and social value of the prairie landscape are also significant assets that are an important part of our economy.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you've run out of time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to participate as well in the debate in second reading of Bill 201, Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. After listening to the previous hon. members of this Assembly in their endorsement of this legislation, it is certainly noteworthy. It is noteworthy that this Assembly would consider another symbol for this province with our centennial coming rather quickly, in another two years, that we would initiate an official grass from a field of five.

As I see here, we have an election of the rough fescue grass as our native grass. Also under consideration was the western wheat grass, the blue grama grass – and it's interesting to note that that's already designated in two states of America: Colorado and New Mexico – the green needlegrass, and it was not designated anywhere else. The June grass was overlooked by the electorate in this case, and perhaps the hon. Member for Highwood, who introduced this legislation, could in committee update us on the balloting that occurred at the Prairie Conservation Forum on the second floor of the Provincial Building in Lethbridge. The June grass, interestingly enough, grows all over the province. The rough fescue grows in an area, oddly enough, if you were to look at the map of Alberta, running east and west to as far north, maybe a little further north, as the town of Grassland, maybe Wandering River, maybe a little bit further. That's the range north of the rough fescue, but it is interesting that the June grass would grow all over the province. In the balloting that occurred, I for one would have an interest in just how many ballots were received, and was it the overwhelming choice of those who took the time out to participate to make the rough fescue our latest provincial symbol?

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we think of setting aside a grass like this and if it's going to be a special plant or a special grass, then are we also going to set aside a specific area where future generations can see this? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has suggested that it grows in a lot of different areas. It grows in a lot of places that are already protected, but the hon. member also spoke about special places designations and the fact that we are statistically underrepresented in special places allocations for grasslands. Perhaps at some point in the very near future I will be surprised by this government, particularly in light of the rather loud debate that went on last fall regarding the Kyoto protocol, that this Assembly will entertain the legislative proposal that we will set aside additional grasslands for future generations not only to enjoy but also to study. I think this is very important.

One only has to look at the fact that the Athabasca Glacier in the 100-year time frame that this province has existed has shrunk by two-thirds in volume. So not only would the notion that we would be willing to set aside areas for future generations to enjoy and study be notable, but I think it would be a step in the right direction as far as public policy is concerned. We have to realize that this province is not an isolated island. We are members not only of the North American community but also the world community, and what we do here at a local level as far as conservation impacts everyone. Everyone. Mr. Speaker, we certainly are a member of the global village.

When you look at this bill, I think it's a good idea. We have certainly the rough fescue as it was described earlier in the opening remarks by the hon. Member for Highwood. Yes, there are three different types. There are northern, the foothills, and the plains rough fescue. It needs to be recognized, and it needs to be protected, and I think this is a good first step.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to rise today and speak on behalf of the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. Again I want to start by thanking the hon. Member for Highwood for his efforts to adopt a new emblem that all Albertans can be proud of.

From the members who have spoken before me we have heard of the importance and the qualities of rough fescue in Alberta. I'd like to shift gears a little bit, Mr. Speaker, and talk about the selection process through which rough fescue was selected as the candidate for our provincial grass. Before I tell you about the selection process, a few words about the network that put the selection process together.

The Prairie Conservation Forum, Mr. Speaker, made up of 27 nongovernmental organizations and 20 provincial and federal bodies, played the lead role in setting up the selection process. The forum is a broad voluntary coalition representing agricultural groups, conservation groups, land and resource management organizations, federal and provincial agencies, industry, and academia.

The Prairie Conservation Forum has three broad objectives:

1. develop and implement broad strategies and focused initiatives for conserving native prairie ecosystems;
2. encourage information exchange among member organizations; and
3. raise public awareness about management issues pertaining to prairie landscapes, habitats and species.

The Prairie Conservation Forum typically meets three times a year – January, May/June, and September – in various locations within the prairie and parkland areas of Alberta. A steering committee meets between meetings to review and ensure implementation of actions agreed upon at the previous meetings and to plan the meetings. All forum meetings are open to the public.

Mr. Speaker, the Prairie Conservation Forum plays an integral role in creating awareness and preservation of Alberta's ecology. Its goals and the way it conducts its business are commendable. Some notable accomplishments of the forum include the development, publication, and implementation of two Alberta prairie conservation action plans, 1996-2000 and 2001-2005, which focused on conservation of biological diversity in prairie and parkland Alberta.

The forum also promotes education and awareness in the area of prairie conservation targeted at landholders, decision-makers, industry, and the public using various media, including a web site, brochures, displays, pamphlets, posters, writer kits, conferences, and speaking engagements. The forum has developed a university course, topics on prairie conservation, which has been offered as a senior seminar course by the department of biological sciences at the University of Lethbridge since 1998. The Prairie Conservation Forum has also established a proposed national wildlife area at Canadian Forces Base Suffield that resulted from discussions initiated by the Prairie Conservation Forum.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious by this list of achievements that the Prairie Conservation Forum is dedicated to the preservation of Alberta's natural landscape while acknowledging the economic realities of the 21st century. It is for these reasons that the Prairie Conservation Forum was the perfect organization to conduct the selection process of the provincial grass.

In the fall of 1999 the forum initiated a project to select a provincial grass emblem for Alberta. The purpose of the project was to choose an official symbol of our prairie heritage and of the prairie as home for many Albertans. The process of selecting and officially designating a provincial grass, according to the Prairie Conservation Forum, would help Albertans to better understand and appreciate the ecology of native grasses and grasslands and their cultural and economic importance. The concept was approved in February 2000 by the provincial Minister of Community Development. In April 2000 a provincial grass working group was formed, comprised of several experts in native plants, range management, soil conservation, communications, and education whose organizations were represented on the conservation forum. The work of the provincial grass group was facilitated by the Alberta Native Plant Council's representative on the forum. The Society for Range Management served as the financial administrator, and as of December 2001 over 500 volunteer hours had been devoted to the project. A grant of $5,000 from the Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation helped to cover the costs, and there were generous contributions of photographs and artwork.

Of more than 135 different native grasses in Alberta the prairie members selected five to be shortlisted for consideration as a provincial grass: blue grama grass, green needlegrass, June grass, rough fescue, and western wheat grass. Among the characteristics shared by the shortlisted grasses, we find that they're widespread in Alberta and easy to recognize. Mr. Speaker, all of them are highly ecologically significant, specifically with regard to dominance, wildlife use, or at-risk status. Moreover, the five grasses are culturally significant and have great traditional and horticultural uses. They are also economically important, providing forage and use in reclamation.

An attractive colour brochure was developed profiling the five species and providing information on grasslands in Alberta. Media releases inviting all Albertans to participate in selecting a grass were distributed through the province from January to April 2001. Articles appeared in numerous magazines and newspapers, and several interviews with working group members aired on radio and television. Information on candidate species was posted on the conservation's web site, and over 8,000 brochures were distributed to some 40 Prairie Conservation Forum member organizations, schools, 4-H groups, interpretation centres, relevant academic institutions, MLAs, and the general public upon request and through government offices. Brochures were also made available at several conferences on agriculture, environment, and education.

After this thorough and democratic selection process, Mr. Speaker, an overwhelming choice for our provincial grass was rough fescue. Over 2,000 Albertans from many parts of the province voted by mail-in ballot and e-mail between January and April 2001. Rough fescue received 36 percent of the vote cast, with June grass coming second at 28 percent. Reasons given by Albertans for choosing rough fescue as a provincial grass were that it is an attractive and sturdy grass providing nutritious food for grazing wildlife and livestock in winter and summer and that it is an indicator of well-managed rangeland. Other reasons were that Alberta is the largest area of rough fescue grassland anywhere in North America; rough fescue grasslands are at risk; and, lastly, rough fescue is not designated elsewhere as a provincial or state grass. At the moment

Alberta has six natural emblems: the wild rose, the bighorn sheep, the great horned owl, the lodgepole pine, the bull trout, and petrified wood. And I surely can relate to that in this room. Given that Alberta is a prairie province, I believe it is appropriate that Alberta have an official grass emblem, just as most other Great Plains provinces and states do.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the selection process that brought rough fescue forward as the nominee for a provincial grass emblem was complete, fair, and democratic. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Prairie Conservation Forum for all the hard work and dedication in this matter. Alberta is culturally, ecologically, and economically rooted to the prairies. A provincial grass will reaffirm our prairie heritage to Albertans. For this reason I urge all my colleagues here today to support this bill and help create an emblem that bonds present and future generations of Albertans to our prairie character.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to have an opportunity to rise today and speak to this bill. Interestingly enough, I had originally indicated that while I was supportive of the bill, I told the member that's bringing forward this bill, the Member for Highwood, that I probably would not be available to speak. However, given that there is time and we've had a lot of discussion on this bill, I thought I would take the opportunity given to me to just make a few comments on the bill.

First of all, I think it's appropriate, although I'm a city boy through and through, that I have an opportunity to discuss this bill, given that the area I live in is often referred to as the grasslands area. The city of Medicine Hat is located within shortgrass everything: we have Short Grass Ranches; we have Shortgrass Library System. We have all kinds of reference to our prairie heritage. Mr. Speaker, I live in the city of Medicine Hat with manicured lawns and don't have access to a whole lot of wild grass. On the other hand, I live in an area where many are very much cognizant of the importance of wild grass in our heritage and the tremendous way that the natural grass has contributed to the development of not only southeastern Alberta but, really, all of Alberta. So I'm very pleased that the member has brought forward this bill and proposes to signify one of the grasses of Alberta as a provincial emblem.

Mr. Speaker, let's talk just a little bit about the process. As members of my caucus certainly are aware, I have been critical at times of the private member's bill process. Frankly, I believe that there are times when we have passed bad legislation in this House through private members' bills because there has not been ample opportunity for the member to do sufficient research, there hasn't been ample opportunity for the public to be sufficiently knowledgeable about what is being proposed in a private bill, and I think, probably most importantly, there have not been sufficient resources available to individual members to consider the long-term ramifications that passing a law, that has exactly the same law as every other bill that's introduced in this House, may or may not have on the future of Albertans. In this particular case, I'm very pleased and happy to say that none of the aforementioned concerns apply.

The member has taken a tremendous amount of time and diligence in consulting with various stakeholder groups. The process by which we have selected the grass, the rough fescue grass, has been well documented by others in their debate this afternoon, so I won't get into that, but there has been ample opportunity for the public to have input into this. From a point of view of long-term ramifications, the nature of this bill is such that I don't think that 10 years from now we're going to come to regret dealing with this issue in this House. After all, Mr. Speaker, designating a grass as a provincial emblem is a significant event in this House, but it's probably not a life-changing event for most Albertans. So I have absolutely no difficulty. In fact, I am very pleased to support the bill this afternoon.

Now, some have said that rough fescue, perhaps from the perspective that it is not native and does not grow in all parts of the province, should not have been chosen. However, I'd like to point out to all members that we have an emblem in Canada that all of us hold very near and dear to our hearts, and that's the maple leaf. I'm not sure that I've seen too many maple trees growing in this part of the world either. That doesn't mean that that emblem is not important and is not a significant emblem for our nation, Canada. In much the same way, fescue, for all of the various reasons that others have spoken to this afternoon, makes a very, very logical grass to use as a provincial emblem. We've heard about the longevity of the grass, the fact that the grass has deep, deep roots and can survive droughts and makes the best use of snow in the winter. All of these various factors, I think, speak well of the way that this grass mirrors in many ways the long roots that Albertans have in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I want to also spend just a little bit of time talking about some of the groups that have been involved and acknowledge the fact that, in addition to the Member for Highwood, a number of other groups have been instrumental, I think, in bringing this bill forward and, in fact, staying in touch with the MLAs. I have had contact with a number of groups, and I congratulate them and thank them for being involved in the process, in particular the Prairie Conservation Forum, which was instrumental in the process in dealing with the discussion related to the initiation of a grass emblem and then following through, with the assistance of a number of people and organizations, to eventually choose the winner, which is rough fescue. I think it's a tribute to that organization and to all of the naturalists throughout the province of Alberta that everyone has come together and is working so hard to see this bill come to fruition.

Mr. Speaker, I indicated that I didn't plan on speaking for a long time on this bill, but I am pleased that I have an opportunity to talk about some of the, I think, very valid and good reasons why I, like so many others that I've heard speak this afternoon, will be supporting this bill, and I encourage all others to support it in the same way.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is really, indeed, a pleasure to stand this afternoon and speak to Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. I'm just really delighted to be able to speak to and support this particular bill. I think it's fitting that the hon. Member for Highwood is the individual to bring this particular bill forward, not only in recognition of all the work that he's done for it, but if you happen to know the constituency of Highwood, it has within it one of the first rangelands designated as public land, where cattle were free to roam, and large ranches were settled there. From an historic point of view, it's appropriate that that individual from Highwood brings this particular bill forward.

It's not only that, but Albertans, you know, look towards their environment, and things like fescue grass represent some of the values that have been traditional in our province. As well, you look at the absolute respect that ranchers have for that particular grass, the resiliency of the grass, not only for what it did for the buffalo, but those original ranchers found they could use it for raising the best cattle the world has ever seen. It is a testament to their fortitude.

Also, through our provincially protected areas we ensure that our natural heritage remains vibrant, that it remains strong and protected for today and for future generations. The intent of the designation of a provincial grass emblem is to select an official symbol of our grassland and our prairie heritage. This grass emblem will join the ranks of our other natural heritage provincial emblems. We've heard about them all, but I want to provide just a bit of a different perspective to that today. I will be proud to say that I stood up and supported this particular designation.

Every year when I go to my grade 6 classes, I give them a little quiz: what are the provincial emblems? Hopefully, next year we'll be able to say: yes, the provincial grass. Particularly in our area, with the northern fescue that is there, we'll be able to include that with the wild rose. It's synonymous around the world as our provincial flower. In the Crowsnest Pass area, where the lodgepole pine is predominant, we also will be able to add the grass to that. Of course, we've got the petrified wood down in our area right close to the Burmis tree, and although we don't see many great horned owls in our area, our kids always enjoy the significance of the little pin that we give them. So along with the Rocky Mountain bighorn sheep, that we see in our area, and the bull trout, that graces our wonderful, clean streams throughout the Rocky Mountains, we're adding this grass. I think it's something that my constituents will certainly identify with.

These emblems reflect the province's history, its natural diverse landscape, and its flora and fauna species richness. They represent elements of Alberta that are important to us all because they are symbolic of the wild, natural, and bountiful Alberta, that is home to aboriginal people and that first attracted European settlers to western Canada. Evidence of how important the grass was to the native people in bringing up the buffalo can be seen by visiting Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump. You can see evidence of that grass today at Head-Smashed-In.

Ecologically, it would be hard to argue for a better grass than rough fescue to represent the province of Alberta. Fescue grasslands are symbolic of natural and human-based systems and host a rich range of contrasting elements that do indeed reflect the diversity of the province. From a natural history point of view Alberta is the only place in North America that contains all three species of rough fescue. This grass is fairly widespread in the province and is found in four of the six natural regions in our province, those being the grassland, the parkland, the foothills, and the Rocky Mountains. Rough fescue ecosystems are the mature grasslands in the grassland natural region, and they are as synonymous as the old-growth forest in the boreal forest natural region. Because of the unique way that this grass retains nutrients in the system, it's a critical winter food source for wildlife, including important big game species of the prairies and the foothills.

From a human history perspective it is difficult to see how the parkland, grassland, and foothills regions of the province could have sustained agricultural development without rough fescue. It provided critical winter feed for livestock and sustained pioneering efforts on the prairie. Today it is recognized that an extensive cover of rough fescue is an indicator of a well-managed rangeland. No better evidence of the resiliency of this grass could have occurred than in the famous Granum fire of 1997, where 110 sections of prairie native grassland were burnt. Those ranchers and those farmers, yes, had to take their cattle to other areas because there was no feed for the winter, but the next spring – it was an amazing thing, Mr. Speaker – with the extra rainfall that we had, that grass came back after a really intensive fire going over it. That's a testament to the root system and the depth that the roots go to preserve the vitality of the roots so that it will regenerate itself again next year. Within two years cattle were back on those barren lands, and because of its resiliency those ranchers did survive through a very, very difficult time.

Identifying rough fescue as Alberta's official grass emblem will contribute significantly to the conservation of natural grasslands. Our action to recognize this grass will go a long way to inform Albertans about native grasses and their ecological, cultural, and economic importance to the province and will aid in the efforts to educate the public about the critical importance of wild grass species to both the natural and human history of our province of Alberta. Albertans are proud of their province and will continue to help to protect the natural diversity that is found across this province, and I know that ranchers, who are probably the best stewards of the land, know this probably better than anyone.

This is evident in the success of the special places program, which took place in Alberta and involved the process of nominating, identifying, and establishing new parks and protected areas around the province. Alberta's parks and protected areas network conserves many of the most spectacular natural areas in the world from majestic mountains and wide-open prairies to the mystical badlands and the vast northern forests.

Alberta parks and protected areas are living libraries and laboratories of provincial natural heritage, and I know that the Minister of Community Development, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, is responsible for protected areas. I know him as a former educator, and I believe I can speak on his behalf when I strongly say that in the benefits of life-long learning not only through the formalization of the education system but also as a part of exploration and the discovery of processes in life, education is necessary to ensure the sustainability of the province's natural features and biological treasures. As outdoor classrooms our protected areas offer hands-on exploration and a connection to a variety of natural ecosystems found in Alberta and contribute to our evolving knowledge of Alberta's natural and cultural history.

The Acting Speaker: I regret, hon. member, that your time has run out.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise and be able to address this bill and actually offer support. Many of my colleagues will know how difficult it is for me to actually support a private member's bill, so congratulations to the hon. member. I'd like to thank my colleague the hon. MLA for Highwood for introducing this great idea. As has been mentioned repeatedly in here, Alberta has a number of emblems that represent Alberta's heritage and deep connection with our great outdoors, the Rocky Mountains, and the prairie life. The addition of rough fescue will help represent the importance of ranching and agriculture to the province of Alberta and, therefore, nicely complement the rest of the emblems.

I want to briefly revisit some of our other emblems to show how the proposed addition of rough fescue fits well with the existing provincial symbols. The first and perhaps most easily recognizable Alberta emblem is, of course, our wild rose, and many of us know it as a blossoming pink flower that beautifies the Alberta countryside and adorns the top of our licence plates. It's also something that, for a child growing up in Alberta, was one of the first flowers that was out in the spring, and you just couldn't help but recognize its beautiful scent and just the joy. I think there were many of us as children that would collect them and press them into our textbooks, which was probably not a great idea but hard to resist.

One of our other emblems is the great horned owl, which was selected as the provincial bird by schoolchildren in 1977. This bird is a year-round resident of our province and as a resilient and resourceful bird shares some of the same characteristics that Albertans are famous for.

The next Alberta emblem that I'd like to mention is the official stone, which is petrified wood. Petrified wood and stone seems like a strange combination, but it was selected as our provincial stone largely due to its natural beauty but also because it was created during the same era as Alberta's oil reserves. The semiprecious stone symbolizes the importance of oil and the energy industry to this province.

Another beautiful Alberta emblem is the lodgepole pine, a tree found throughout the Rocky Mountains. The long, straight lodgepole pine was the preferred tree of the First Nations people for teepee poles, from which it gets its name, and it was also widely used in railroad construction and remains important to the lumber industry today. Clearly, as an important part of aboriginal culture and as a part of our railroad history and of the continuing significance of our forestry, lodgepole pine is a very appropriate official tree.

Yet another emblem that we're all familiar with is the Rocky Mountain bighorn sheep, and as the official mammal of Alberta it is a majestic representative of Alberta's inherent closeness to the Rocky Mountains.

In addition to the abovementioned, there is also our wonderful Alberta tartan from my colleague from Calgary here that came up with our dress tartan a couple of years ago. It's absolutely phenomenal.

My colleague from Stony Plain, Minister of Seniors, did the bull trout bill a few years back. You know, there were great pins with that, and, Don, I'm disappointed that there are no pins with the grass. But we had fish pins.

As I mentioned earlier, I wanted to give everyone a brief look back at a number of our Alberta emblems and the reasons that they make such great symbols for our province. Having said that, I believe that a provincial grass would go nicely with the sentiments expressed by the emblems here in Alberta. Bill 201 aims to add rough fescue as a provincial grass to that list, and as many of you know by now, rough fescue has played a very important role in Alberta as the main source of food for grazing animals, that are so important to our agriculture and prairie heritage. Without rough fescue's high nutrient levels it would have been much more difficult if not impossible to sustain agriculture development in our province.

As the provincial grass rough fescue would serve as a wonderful symbol of Alberta's close ties to prairie life, and further it would be a strong symbol of the important role agriculture has played in Alberta during the times of our pioneers to the equally important role that agriculture continues to play today.

I'd like to once again thank my colleague from the Highwood constituency for bringing this idea forward as well as to encourage everyone to support Bill 201 and make rough fescue the official grass for our province.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Members of the Legislature will be pleased to note that the Grande Prairie caucus is unanimous in their support of Bill 201.

It is my pleasure to rise today and to continue the debate on Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the Member for Highwood. There's been much discussion about the validity of designating an official grass as an emblem for Alberta. The grass in question, of course, is rough fescue. We have many emblems in this province, ranging from official colours to official flowers to official birds. I think the member is quite just in his attempt to anoint rough fescue as the official grass of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, where in Alberta we have approximately 135 active grass species and probably two dozen or more introduced species, rough fescue is a very complicated plant which has been studied for years by scientists so that its benefits could be fully realized. Three species of rough fescue are found in Canada and the United States: the plains rough fescue, foothills rough fescue, and northern rough fescue. These three species give rough fescue its character, and they dominate many of Alberta's natural regions and subregions.

Rough fescue is characterized by deep roots, roots which tap into the underlying soils, drawing nutrients and water while binding soil particles, improving water penetration and acting as a stabilizing force in watershed quality. The root system can grow many centimetres into the soil and can alter the carbon content of the soil around it. In fact, rough fescue is a key element in the development of our rich black, our thin black, and our dark brown soils, some of the most prevalent types of soil in Alberta and some of the best anywhere for growing. Mr. Speaker, the way that rough fescue alters carbon content in the soil is an extremely important feature of this grass.

The environmental benefits of rough fescue are immense, and I'd like to speak a few minutes on the positive impact this grass has on our environment. There have been many debates in this House on the validity of the greenhouse effect and discussions on whether the Earth is warming up. After the lengthy debate, we all seem to be in agreement on the fact that there is a change taking place in our climate. Since this is accepted, we must then also accept another fact, that the earth's carbon cycle is also changing, as the two, climate and carbon cycle, are linked together.

The carbon cycle is not that complicated. Carbon moves continuously among air, plants, and soil. Carbon dioxide, or CO₂, in the air is converted to organic forms by photosynthesis in green plants. CO₂, of course, is the dreaded greenhouse gas that everyone is worried about. When plants die, the carbon enters the soil, becoming part of the soil's organic matter. At the same time, organic matter in the soil is being decomposed, which returns the carbon back to the air as CO₂, and the cycle is complete.

Rough fescue is an important part of the global carbon cycle along with all the grasses in the temperate grasslands found in the northern Great Plains. They are important because of their vast area and high soil carbon density. The soils in the area where rough fescue dominates contain more carbon per unit area than most of those in other ecosystems worldwide. For example, Mr. Speaker, the soil of Alberta may contain a one-metre deep layer of up to 200 tonnes of carbon per hectare in the black soil zone under the fescue prairie. This means that carbon under foot may exceed the amount of carbon in all aboveground portions of a temperate forest and a tropical forest even though nearly half the dry weight of plant material is carbon. In fact, according to many studies our prairies, which are littered with rough fescue, take a considerably larger amount of CO₂ out of the atmosphere than do the rainforests.

Mr. Speaker, even though this isn't a science class, I think that a most extraordinary facet of rough fescue must not be overlooked. It takes a significant amount of greenhouse gases out of the atmosphere, gases which are said to be causing climate change, increasing the overall temperature of the Earth. One of the issues we struggle with year in and year out is how to keep our air clean. Well, I think it's quite clear that one of the best ways to do this is to promote the growing of our native grasses, especially rough fescue. Not only does rough fescue sustain life for animals, not only is it extremely important to the global carbon cycle, but it could also be used as a strategy to clean our air. Promoting rough fescue as our official grass could possibly raise its profile and show the world that we have a natural way of battling climate change. It seems funny, but it's true. Our grass can be part of the answer to global climate change. Rough fescue is quite dominant throughout central and southern Alberta. It helps that Alberta has some of the best growing soils in the world.

Bill 201 recognizes that this plant is important to Alberta, and therefore it should be made an emblem of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, rough fescue is extremely important to Alberta's environment. As well, due to its role in the carbon cycle, it's extremely important for agriculture in this province. Because rough fescue holds so much carbon in the soil, this makes the soil around it extremely rich for growing. As mentioned earlier, rough fescue is the main reason for our extremely dark, nutrient-rich soil. The soil is extremely good for growing our wheat and other grains that are so prevalent throughout Alberta. When the pioneers came to Alberta over 100 years ago, they began clearing land to grow crops. What was cleared away was a lot of grassland, including fescue. The pioneers found the land to be rich and excellent for their crops, and this helped establish the unique culture that we know in Alberta today.

Of course, as the fields grew wheat, barley, and oats, the carbon content in the soil began to diminish as the new plants did not store as much carbon as did the native grasslands before them, but as fields were left to fallow and rough fescue began to grow back, the carbon content returned, albeit not to the levels of the past. Nonetheless, the carbon and the good soil returned when rough fescue returned. This is just an example of how the grasslands of Alberta are extremely important to not only the environment but to agriculture and also, one could argue, to the economy of early Alberta. Rough fescue, being a dominant grass in Alberta, is a big part of our history.

Mr. Speaker, rough fescue is an absolutely fascinating grass. Its life cycle, so to speak, is particularly interesting. The plant outlives the working career of those who study it, and this is true even though the species only sets seed periodically. Every few years field workers studying the plant report a good seed set, which still may only include half the population. The seed sets are frequently four or more years apart, yet the plant continues to flourish throughout central and southern Alberta. Rough fescue has a life span of many decades and potentially hundreds of years. This is absolutely remarkable especially considering the benefit the plant has for our environment, our agriculture, our landscape, and our geography.

As I mentioned at the beginning of my time, we have many different emblems in Alberta. Each of them represents something special. Every single emblem has something uniquely Albertan about it. Rough fescue has something uniquely Albertan about it. It represents what Albertans are. Like the fescue, Albertans take root in Alberta, and the roots give life to the province. The rough fescue, in the same way, took root in our province many hundreds and hundreds of years ago and began bringing about a land that is beautiful and important to the sustainability of life in the province and on earth. Our environment benefits from the rough fescue, as do our farmlands which are benefiting from hundreds of years of carbon being stored in our soil, making it extremely advantageous for agriculture. Making the rough fescue an emblem of Alberta is something that Albertans would appreciate especially since no one can argue that without the rough fescue we might not have the province that we have today.

I support Bill 201 and urge all members to vote in favour of this bill as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Mr. Klapstein: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure to join debate on Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the hon. Member for Highwood. I would like to talk about the importance of establishing a provincial grass for Alberta and the benefits of selecting a symbol of Alberta's prairie heritage.

Before I begin, I think that the hon. Member for Highwood should be commended for his hard work in bringing this bill forward. However, I would like to remind this Assembly that Bill 201 would enshrine rough fescue as Alberta's official grass on behalf of dozens of organizations and thousands of Albertans.

The hon. Member for Highwood has already pointed out that the selection process for an official grass was wide open to all Albertans and relied almost entirely on public participation. The Prairie Conservation Forum, a voluntary coalition made up of over 30 private and public organizations, wanted to draw attention to Alberta's rich prairie heritage. In the fall of 1999 the Prairie Conservation Forum began a project to select a provincial grass emblem for Alberta. The members of the forum believed that by selecting and officially designating a provincial grass, Albertans would develop a great appreciation for the ecology of native grasses and grasslands and their cultural and economic importance.

Mr. Speaker, there are more than 135 different native grasses in Alberta. The members decided to select five to be shortlisted for consideration as a provincial grass. The grasses on this short list are recognizable throughout Alberta, and three common characteristics are shared by the five species. First of all, each grass has a high ecological significance in that each is a dominant grass, essential food for wildlife, and is vital to the ecology of the region in which it grows. The members also decided that each grass should have cultural importance through traditional use in various agricultural industries. Finally, each grass had to have an economic impact on the region, such as the use for livestock forage. The Prairie Conservation Forum encouraged Albertans to get involved in the selection process by using various forms of communication including newspaper articles, brochures, and electronic media.

The overwhelming choice for a provincial grass was rough fescue. Over 2,000 Albertans from many parts of the province voted by mail-in ballot and e-mail between January and April of 2001. The selection of rough fescue as the official candidate for a provincial grass was announced on May 25, 2001. Mr. Speaker, I found the selection process to be an inspiring example of democracy at work. The decision to make rough fescue the final candidate as Alberta's official grass was not made inside a boardroom. This process was an example of how democracy is still the best way to make important decisions.

If Bill 201 were to pass, Alberta would not be the first province in Canada to designate an official grass. The idea of campaigning for an official grass began in Saskatchewan with the Native Plant Society. Just like Alberta's Prairie Conservation Forum, the members wanted to highlight the value of a native prairie species and thought that enshrining a specific species would be a good way of drawing attention to the short-grass prairie.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that Saskatchewan's Native Plant Society wanted to nominate rough fescue as a candidate for the official grass. It is a widespread native species associated with Saskatchewan's grasslands, but many people in Saskatchewan also associate rough fescue with Alberta, where the species is more widespread. So the Native Plant Society turned away from rough fescue just in case Alberta attempted to enshrine the species in the future.

The designation of a provincial grass is welcome in that it draws attention to Alberta's remaining native grasslands. Since our birth as a province Alberta has lost a great deal of our native grassland. Mr. Speaker, the remainder must be protected from development, not only from the perspective that dozens of animals depend on it but also because thousands of people depend on it. The use of native grasslands by our ranchers is probably the strongest example we have of sustainable development in this country. Rough fescue is a critical food source for wildlife and big game species of the prairies and foothills. Over the past decade elk and bison ranching have joined the ranks of pork, lamb, and beef as high-quality meat producers.

I have no doubt that there will be people, especially those living in urban areas, who will have no idea what rough fescue is or why we need to enshrine it as an official grass. I also believe that there will be those who will wonder why we need an official grass in the first place. Mr. Speaker, identifying rough fescue as an official Alberta emblem would be a key element in its conservation.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to address another possible concern as it relates to the relevance of a provincial grass. When this Assembly proposes an emblem to be added to Alberta's very distinguished list, it should represent the entire province. Alberta, as we all know, is a very diverse province. Wood Buffalo in the north is one of the world's largest boreal forests. The Canadian Rockies are also world renowned for their scenery and diversity of plant and animal species. It is not possible to find a uniformity of grasses or fauna of any kind across Alberta because our landscape is far too diverse. However, a decision had to be made in order to preserve Alberta's prairie heritage.

Mr. Speaker, the case for naming rough fescue as Alberta's official grass is overwhelming. Alberta is the only jurisdiction in North America that contains all three species of rough fescue. Plains rough fescue, foothills rough fescue, and northern rough fescue can be found throughout most parts of central and southern Alberta. From the perspective of human history and the settlement of Alberta the parkland and foothills regions of the province would most likely not have been able to sustain agriculture development without the existence of rough fescue. It provided critical winter feed for livestock and sustained pioneering efforts on the prairies.

The list of emblems in the Emblems of Alberta Act reflects the diversity and history of this province and its people. Each emblem has been carefully chosen from Alberta's natural habitat and symbolizes a unique characteristic of this province. Alberta's emblems serve a similar purpose to mementos in our homes. Over the years we have all collected trinkets and souvenirs that serve as conversation pieces and remind us of special events or experiences in our lives.

Some people may ask why this Assembly would debate a bill proposing an official grass. I think that an official grass, specifically rough fescue, would help preserve and promote Alberta's fascinating agricultural heritage, including ranching. For decades this grass has been vital for grazing and the ranching industry. Put differently, I believe that an official grass, like any other provincial emblem, symbolizes a unique aspect of living in Alberta, one that deserves official recognition.

The most important lesson learned from our unique history is that Alberta's rugged terrain has played a significant role in making Alberta the most successful province in Canada. Irrigation, grain farming, prospecting, surveying, and, of course, oil and mineral extraction have all played important roles in creating the economic climate we enjoy today. Each of these industries combined working off the land with keen business acumen, which resulted in a more stabilized economy and a better standard of living.

The hardships these men and women faced forging new paths for future generations of Albertans is to be recognized, and while some may scoff at the mention of an official grass, a quick look at the history of Alberta tells us that our success is based on rural development. One of the goals of the Emblems of Alberta Act is to remind Albertans that this province is a wonderful and exciting region. Bill 201 goes a step further by helping Albertans recognize the need to maintain and manage this critical grass species.

Mr. Speaker, designating rough fescue as Alberta's official grass helps achieve this goal. I think it's important that we keep this in mind as we debate Bill 201 through this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to enter the debate on Bill 201 today. This bill would make rough fescue Alberta's provincial grass to stand amongst all the other great emblems which represent Alberta. Rough fescue, as we've come to know from the debate today, is a grass which manifests itself in three forms: the plains, foothills, and northern rough fescue. It's a grass that grows throughout the majority of our province. It's a wiry and sturdy grass and, some would say, stubborn, and that makes it as good a reason as any to call it Alberta's official grass. Today I'd like to state my support for Bill 201 and encourage all members of this Assembly to join me in doing so as well.

In discussing why I am going to support this bill, I want to talk for a short while about the economic significance of rough fescue and how rough fescue played an integral role in helping those who first began farming in our province, and in fact I'll argue that this help still occurs today.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, but under Standing Order 8(5)(a)(i), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Highwood to close debate on Bill 201.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe the merits of rough fescue have been adequately, nobly addressed by the members on both sides of the House, and I want to thank all hon. members for their comments and support this afternoon.

In my concluding remarks to the second reading this afternoon I would like to first of all acknowledge my debt to Cheryl Bradley of the Alberta Native Plant Council, who patiently answered my many questions and always with knowledgeable answers and suggestions that made this bill on this day possible. I also must acknowledge the work of Mr. Frank Ostlinger of the government members' research. I think he's done a tremendous job of researching and really appreciate his work.

I would also wish to thank a number of other individuals for their help and guidance: Ed Nelson of the Society for Range Management, Francis Gardner of the Southern Alberta Land Trust Society, Mac Blades of the Western Stock Growers' Association, Albert Middleton of the federal Range Research Station, Reg Ernst of the Society for Range Management, and Foothills ranchers Jim and Steven Hughes, Gordon Cartwright, and Ken Stiles.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 seeks to bring recognition and awareness of the importance of native grassland and the special role played by the rough fescue complex Festuca scabrella. As the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St Paul noted, our symbols define who we are, and I believe that rough fescue is an ideal symbol for our Alberta prairie heritage.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the question be now put.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 201 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The next matter for consideration this afternoon is Bill 202, which is the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003, which is sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. A number of firefighters from throughout the province have been invited to attend next Monday as they wish to hear the entire debate with respect to this particular bill, and as such, at this time I would move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 o'clock this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:47 p.m.]

Family Employment Tax Credit

501. Mrs. Fritz moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to enhance the Alberta family employment tax credit to include all children in a family in order to bring equality between families with three or more children and families with two or less children.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise and introduce Motion 501. This issue came to my attention on May 30, 2000. Mr. Thomas Lipp, who is a constituent, wrote to me with a serious concern regarding a flaw in the Alberta family employment tax credit program. I'd like to quote from his letter. Mr. Lipp wrote:

There is [an] area of tax law that needs fixing.

The Alberta Family Employment Tax Credit is capped at two children per family. This disadvantages larger families because one parent almost always needs to stay home. The extra tax credit would recognize the extra employment effort of parents with larger families. In my business experience and study of demographics there is an enormous need for well trained young Canadians (i.e. the next generation). They will be the engine of the future tax system and social support network. Let's not discourage ambitious, employed parents with an unnecessary cap of two children per family.

Mr. Speaker, three months later Mr. Lipp wrote again. He said:

The single rate tax system is beautiful in its simplicity and fairness.

Any changes to the AFETC should also be kept simple. Making this credit available to all children in a family is simple and fair.

That is what this motion is about. It is about fairness and equality.

Currently the Alberta family employment tax credit provides a tax credit of a maximum of $500 per child to each qualifying family for the first two children of the family. The Department of Finance is currently reviewing this program and examining options for incorporating additional children into the program. It is my hope that this motion will help the department come to a fair and just decision for the thousands of children that are excluded from the Alberta family employment tax credit.

This motion is extremely important to Albertans for three reasons. First, this is a motion for Alberta's children, and our future generation is depending on us to make the right decision. Second, since the AFETC is a program that acts as a bridge between the welfare system and the labour force, enhancing the program will provide more incentive for parents to leave and stay off social assistance. Finally, bringing equality to the Alberta family employment tax credit program will bring the program into line with other family-friendly programs that are provided by the government.

The AFETC maximum benefit of a thousand dollars for two children is reached at around a net family income of $19,000. After paying for rent, food, transportation, and clothing, a $1,000 tax credit can be what gets some of Alberta's large earning families by in troubling times. However, families with two or more children need bigger apartments to rent, have more food and clothes to buy, so it makes no practical sense that there is a cap of two children for the AFETC when it is more difficult for larger families to make ends meet.

Another hardship large families face is that many times only one parent can work while the other stays at home to raise the children. Removing the AFETC cap would improve these families' ability to provide basic needs for their children and allow parents to stay at home, thereby reinforcing family values in our communities.

Motion 501, I believe, is a step in the right direction. Families of three or more children need the same benefits that families with two or fewer children receive. Enhancing the AFETC will help parents of families of three or more children who are attempting to enter the labour force. Parents currently on social assistance would be reassured that the AFETC would come into effect for all of their children once they earn more than $6,500. Acting as a bridge between social assistance and the workforce, the Alberta family employment tax credit under Motion 501 ensures that working families with three or more children are supported in achieving the Alberta advantage.

It is critical that the government take a proactive step in assisting working families to achieve financial stability. A strong workforce, Mr. Speaker, benefits us all. It is our responsibility to ensure that hardworking Albertans are able to provide a healthy environment for all of their children. Helping families achieve financial independence is one of the goals of this government. Enhancing the AFETC to include all children in a family will help bring this goal to reality.

Because the AFETC only applies to working families, it provides an incentive for working families to continue to work and not rely on government assistance. In this respect, the AFETC can be seen as a capacity-building program that helps shift low-income earners into middle-income earners. The AFETC leads to economic independence for Alberta's low-income families, which in the long term creates a stronger and more viable Alberta. This government has a number of family-friendly programs to help low- and middle-income families meet their needs. The child financial support program, the Alberta child health benefit, and the child care subsidy are all examples of excellent programs that make it obvious that this province is committed to helping working families.

The child financial support program provides medical and financial assistance when parents are unable or unwilling to care for their child and the child is being properly cared for in another home by a responsible adult caregiver. There is no limit to the number of children in a family who are eligible for this compassionate and sensible program.

The Alberta child health benefit is part of Alberta's role in the national child benefit, a series of programs designed to address child poverty across Canada. The ACHB is a premium-free health benefit that provides dental, optical, emergency ambulance, essential diabetic supplies, and prescription drug coverage for children living in families with low incomes. Eligibility for the ACHB is based on family size and the previous year's family net income. For a family of one child the annual net income must be below $22,397, and for each additional child of the family the maximum threshold increases $2,000. There is no limit to the number of children in a family that are eligible for this important benefit.

The child care subsidy program helps low-income families with child care costs. It applies to pre school-age children who are attending licensed day care facilities or approved family day homes. The program is operated by the Ministry of Children's Services and administered by the appropriate child and family services authority. Any number of children in a family that are in the pre school-age category are eligible for the subsidy if the family meets the program requirements. A low-income family of four children all requiring day care would be eligible for the subsidy.

Mr. Speaker, the common theme in all three of the programs that differs from the Alberta family employment tax credit program is that there is no restriction on the number of children eligible for these programs. For this government to continue to be the leading progressive jurisdiction in the country, I believe that the AFETC must be enhanced to bring it in line with all of the other policies and programs that relate to children in our province.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge and thank Mr. Lipp for bringing this matter to our attention so that we can revise the AFETC program to best meet the needs of families with three or more children. In the name of equality I ask and I strongly urge all my colleagues here today to support Motion 501, and I also urge the Finance department to make a sound decision which will benefit and bring equality to all children and families as it relates to the Alberta family employment tax credit program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks very much to the member who has proposed this motion. I know that she works hard on behalf of her constituents, and obviously she's following through on a long-ago commitment to bring forward this issue affecting at least one of her constituents.

It's a very interesting proposal. I listened carefully to what the member said, and some questions have come up in my mind. As with all nongovernment, private member motions and bills, the opposition caucus has a free vote. It's up to each one of us to decide on the bills on their own merit, so I'm looking to having some questions answered before I finalize how I'm going to vote on this.

One of my first questions, in fact, the member referred to just at the very end. It would require an increase in the budget to support this particular program, and I was wondering if there was concurrence from the Finance minister to increase the budget as it would need to be. Somewhere I've read that this program currently deals with about 160,000 families. Now, it's not giving me the information on how many children are in those families, but one presumes seeing that the issue that's being brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Cross is that the program effectively limits families gaining benefit to those families with two children. How many of those 160,000 families have more than two children, and therefore what's the added expense to the program? So there are two questions there. One is: what's the added expense? The second is: is there buy-in from the Finance minister?

One of the other questions that came to mind as I listened to the member is that this program currently almost has no cost administratively because it is tied to or tags along behind the federal child tax benefit program, so the eligibility is tied very clearly to that. If you are eligible under the federal child tax benefit program, you're in on this Alberta family employment tax credit. It strikes me that in changing the way this program operates, it would also necessitate moving away from the essentially free administration that's being offered by following so closely upon the federal child tax benefit program. In other words, in order to create equality between families, the program would either have to have an allowable maximum per child and no family limits would be put on that, or it would have to be calculated in a way that significantly differs from what the federal program is doing now, and therefore the administrative costs would also go up. It makes it more complicated to administer because somehow a formula has got to be developed that deals with this. I think it would be reflected in higher taxes or higher cost anyway for the budget and perhaps have to pull services or benefits away from another sector because I know that this government likes to zero out things. So what will be the effect there?

I think the idea behind this proposal overall is to help lift children out of poverty. Obviously, when you look at the parameters of the program, it's not a higher income or perhaps even a middle-income program. Its lower eligibility program level is $6,500 a year, and I think its upper level is $50,000 a year, so we're not talking families that have a lot of dough here. I'm questioning whether this is the most effective way to help lift those children and their families out of poverty. I'm questioning whether money invested in educational opportunities isn't a more effective way to in fact lift that child forever out of poverty. I understand the good intentions that the Member for Calgary-Cross has brought forward, but I'm not sure that this motion accomplishes that goal. It seems to be working inside of a very narrow parameter.

When I'm looking at what is the most effective way of addressing poverty for children or lifting poor families out of that situation, I was quite concerned recently to hear in the media about the discussions around the differences between inner city schools and suburban schools, between urban schools and rural schools. I think there's an area that we could be looking at to try and equalize things so children have a better opportunity and, in fact, can lift themselves out of poverty. I spoke a little earlier about opportunities for life: if we teach a man to fish, then he can feed himself forever. Well, doesn't that have something to do with . . .

Dr. Taft: Unless he lives on Calling Lake.

Ms Blakeman: Particularly if he lives on Calling Lake.

Dr. Massey: The right half of Calling Lake.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I'm sorry; the correct half of Calling Lake. Exactly.

I would be more concerned with whether there was access or opportunity for a child to take advantage of apprenticeship programs or college or institutes of technology or university rather than having to now, as we're looking into the future, seeing differential fees for certain elite faculties in education. I don't know how that's going to help a poor kid lift themselves and the rest of their family forever out of poverty.

I also question why this government is one of the few that claws back the federal child tax benefit; I think it's almost dollar for dollar. I know that the government has always said: oh, we take the money that we save there and we invest it into other programs. And I guess there are two questions: one, I still don't see how clawing back a federal program against benefits that are being offered in a provincial program helps this family or this individual in the long run; two, exactly what is the direct link? Where is that money that is being so-called, in quotes, saved? What programs exactly is it being redirected into? Is it going into hot lunch programs? Is it being linked directly into the same area that it was pulled from when we're pulling it away from the Alberta-offered programs. That has interested me for some time and I think is closely linked to what is being considered here.

Again speaking about education, if we could look more closely at how we keep kids in school and how we help kids graduate from school and, as I said, go on to some kind of postsecondary endeavour, I think it's a better way of lifting people out of poverty forever.

The last point that I have to make here is that we've just had announced in the federal budget that more money is going into the child tax benefit program, and I'm wondering, just knowing how far in advance private members are required to submit their motions and bills. Obviously, the member didn't have an opportunity to consider the effect of that federal budget on what she's considering here.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, we waited 10 years for it, Laurie. We didn't expect it to happen.

Ms Blakeman: She didn't expect it to happen. [interjection] I'm looking forward to what she has to say when she gets an opportunity to speak.

I mean, there's a $965 million per year increase in this national child benefit spread out across – these things are always spread out across years; you can never tell how much you're actually getting per year. It runs to 2007. So this is bringing a maximum annual benefit for a first child to $324. If that money all gets clawed back, then I don't see how this motion is taking us forward.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, your time has run out.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The chair recognizes the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to have the opportunity to join in the debate on Motion 501. To my way of thinking, bringing forth this motion shows a great sense of priority and deeply felt concerns for our children, and anything that helps Alberta's children lead better, healthier, and happier lives is something that I want to support. To reiterate, Motion 501 urges the government to enhance the Alberta family employment tax credit to include all children in a family in order to bring equality between families with three or more children and families with two or less children.

To use the popular expression, the motion is in other words about leveling the playing field by ending an unfair practice.

Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons why this House should give its support to Motion 501. The foremost of those reasons is perhaps also the most obvious: it is our children. It is unfortunate that there are children among us who live in poverty and children whose parents are unable to properly care and provide for them. Through no fault of their own these children are often forced to begin their lives at a disadvantage. Lifting children out of poverty is a challenge fraught with considerable difficulty. Raising children is primarily a parental responsibility, but having said that, our children and the circumstance of their well-being is a communal responsibility. The idea that the responsibility for our children is shared by all members of society is part of our thinking and our attitude.

Mr. Speaker, we work diligently to see that education is accessible to all children regardless of their parents' income. Where there is need, the government where possible offers various forms of financial assistance to parents whose financial and/or employment situation is such that caring for their children is difficult. These are all aspects of how society at large comes together and offers support to our children. We do this because we recognize that our children are not only among the most vulnerable members of society but also because they are our most precious assets, and they point to our future as we want it to be.

Motion 501 is a timely initiative aimed at rectifying lingering unfairness with regard to how the Alberta family employment tax credit is distributed to low- and middle-income working families in our province. What Motion 501 seeks to accomplish is to enhance the Alberta family employment tax credit by extending the maximum credit to include all children in a family. At the present time the maximum number of children covered under this program is two at a maximum annual amount of $500 per child, or $1,000 together. There are quite a few families in our province where the number of children exceeds two. A cap such as is in place disadvantages Alberta's larger families at a significant rate. Like it or not, the cap runs counter to the policy of this government to not disadvantage one group over another in the province. Families with more than two children have a greater financial burden than families with only one or two. Families with more than two children stand to benefit significantly from the outcome of Motion 501 as larger families are included under this benefit.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 501 is consistent with existing government policies stating that Albertans unable to provide for their basic needs will receive assistance. This is stated clearly in goal 5 of the government business plan 2002-2005. Rising inflation and the increased cost of living make it extremely difficult for larger families in the low- and middle-income brackets to continue to provide well for their basic needs.

Mr. Speaker, in 2001 the AFETC provided $80 million in benefits to 160,000 Alberta families. There can be little doubt that removing the two-child limit would add more families as well as increase the cost of the program. Existing policies such as goal 5 of the government's business plan make expansion of the program imperative.

Alberta is the envy of every other province in the country. Our economy outperforms the economies of all other provinces and also that of Canada as a whole. We lead the country in economic growth, and we have weathered the recent fiscal storms better than any other jurisdiction. In spite of this, there are several other provinces that manage to offer child tax benefit programs where there are no limits on the number of children. As well, the payments exceed those available to low- and middle-income families in Alberta. British Columbia, Newfoundland and Labrador, and Nova Scotia all have implemented child tax benefit programs without caps. My point in mentioning these other provinces is that if other provinces, whose economies have not fared quite as well as our own, can afford to provide broader and more extensive assistance to their low- and middle-income families, there's no reason why we shouldn't do the same.

Our children are both our legacy and our future. We owe it to them to help them as much as possible, particularly where doing so can give a child an opportunity to live a life of possibility. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I will support Motion 501, and I urge all my colleagues to do the same. Simply put, it is the right thing to do.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Motion 501 this evening, urging the government to enhance the Alberta family employment tax credit to include all children in a family in order to bring equality between families with three or more children and families with two or less children.

I agree with the mover of this motion. I think anything that can be done to make life easier for low-income families or families of limited means is worthy of our consideration and worthy of our support. I think it's unfortunate that in a province and in the midst of the great wealth that is being generated in this province, we have families who find themselves in the position of having to look to the tax system for relief to try to make ends meet. As much as I will support the motion because it's an attempt to help those families – and goodness knows they need all the help they can get – I think that it's a motion that should be much broader and should contain a lot more than what we see in front of us this evening.

I think one of the issues that has been before this Assembly for years has been the amounts of money that are made available to families living on SFI. No matter how you manipulate the tax system, what really counts to low-income families and families of limited means is the money in the pay packet on the 15th or the 30th or 31st of each month. That's where those families look for help, and it's really what impacts their life on a daily basis. I think that it's unfortunate that as one of the wealthiest provinces in this dominion we have not seen fit to make sure that those benefits are paid at a level that would make this kind of tax benefit more problematic for families. I think that if we were doing our job, looking after our neighbours, this kind of a tax credit would not be needed.

If you look at the numbers, they're really quite staggering. Each family who participates in the program is entitled to receive $500 per child with a maximum of $1,000 for the calendar year, and the credit is calculated at a rate of 8 percent of family working income over $6,500 and is reduced by 4 percent of family net income over $25,000. If you can think of yourself these days, Mr. Speaker, living on $6,500 or even $25,000 and trying to raise a family, I think you get some idea of how staggering the problem is for families and how badly they need some relief whether it's in the form of a tax credit but preferably in the form of direct aid.

We seem to have two minds in terms of helping people who need some help. On one hand, we'll have motions such as this, that seems to embody great sympathy for those families and the plight they find themselves in, and on the other hand we have programs like the supports for independence where we seem to be afraid to give those families too much, that we might be overdoing it were they to live a comfortable life, the notion that the pressure has to be kept on them at all times to get out and get a job. I think it's the discrepancy between this member's motion and what is done in the province that I find disturbing. I think that if you have lived in poverty, the way in which it degrades you and those around you is devastating and the judgments that are made about you because of your financial situation are for the most part unwarranted.

As I listen, Mr. Speaker, to the families in my constituency that need help, I wonder just how well we are, as I said before, looking after our neighbours. I'm going to support the motion, but I'm also very, very keen that the motion become part of a larger package that looks at the plight of low-income families and families with limited means and does more than tinker with the tax system. This is one thing we can do, but it's minimal in terms of the kind of help and the kind of assistance that these families need.

I think that with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of satisfaction to rise tonight and join in the debate on Motion 501, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross. I'd like to take a moment to acknowledge the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross for bringing forth this initiative. It's a reminder to all of us that family values are and should remain a cornerstone of this government and its policies.

Mr. Speaker, there's no denying that the children represent our future in this great province, and it must be our mission as a society and as a government not to leave a single one out. We owe it to our children to provide them with the best education, health care, and family service support in order to foster an environment for them to grow into future leaders and strong contributors in a vibrant society. It is in Alberta's interest to promote and facilitate strong family units. It is from the family that a young child learns about values, respect, and integrity. These virtues lay the foundation for a productive and responsible human being, one that makes a positive contribution to society. More and more people understand that childhood experiences influence success and happiness later in life. Many things affect these experiences, including parenting, family and community supports, income, and social services.

Families living on low incomes often face particular challenges in meeting the needs of their children. Financial support, social services, and early intervention can help address some of the difficulties that might otherwise lead to a need for costly services later in life. The Alberta government took the initiative in 1999 to divide the family and social services ministry to form, among others, the Children's Services ministry. One of the goals of forming this separate ministry was to devote resources to needs specifically centred on children. The province of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, has taken great strides in creating a family-friendly environment. From the introduction of the Alberta family employment tax credit, AFETC, in 1997 to the Alberta child health benefit, ACHB, to the child financial support program, this province has a strong record of promoting a cohesive family unit.

The Alberta family employment tax credit is a program funded by the Alberta government to help working families provide for their children. The program's main objectives are to support children in low- and middle-income families and provide incentive for the parents of these children to continue to work. Similar to the federal national child benefit the intent of the Alberta family employment tax credit program is to reduce child poverty and to support parental attachment to the labour market. The AFETC provides important support outside of the social assistance system for low-income working families. In 1998 the maximum credit was doubled so that more families could qualify for the benefit. In 2001 the AFETC provided $80 million in benefits to 160,000 Alberta families.

Mr. Speaker, while the AFETC is a very well-respected and effective program for helping families provide for their children, it lacks a level of equality that is so greatly needed. Currently the Alberta family employment tax credit program provides a maximum $500 tax credit per child to each qualifying family for the first two children of each family. Motion 501 would urge the government to remove the two-child limit under the existing AFETC program thereby providing a tax credit for every child in the family. Motion 501 is aimed at providing a level and equal playing field for all families in need of assistance.

The AFETC has several parameters. First, there is the phase-in rate, the phase-out rate, income thresholds, and credit amounts. The phase-in rate of 8 cents for every dollar earned on income over $6,500 ensures that this credit program rewards increasingly a working family's income. It is reduced by 4 percent of family net income over $25,000. This is known as the phase-out stage, and to qualify, family net income for the previous year must have been below $50,000.

The Alberta family employment tax credit program provides an important support outside of the social assistance system for low-income working families. In 1998 the maximum credit was doubled in order that more families could qualify under the benefit. In 2001 the AFETC provided benefits, as I mentioned, to 160,000 Alberta families. Mr. Speaker, these figures go a long way in establishing the profound benefit that the AFETC provides to low-income working families, but it's lacking in one crucial area, and that is equality. Equality amongst the children who are included in this program is essential, and that is one of the premises behind Motion 501.

Another factor behind Motion 501 is the improvement of one of Alberta's family-friendly programs. The province of Alberta should be proud of the emphasis it has placed on its status as a family-friendly jurisdiction. Mr. Speaker, another family-friendly program offered alongside the AFETC is the Alberta child health benefit. The Alberta child health benefit program is part of Alberta's role in the national child benefit, which is a series of programs designed to reduce child poverty across Canada. The Alberta child health benefit, or ACHB, is a premium-free health benefit plan that provides 100 percent coverage on dental, optical, emergency, ambulance, essential diabetic supplies, and prescription drug coverage for children living in families with low incomes. ACHB is for children under the age of 18 who are living in families with low incomes. Eligibility is based on family size and the previous year's family net income, similar to the AFETC program.

The child financial support program, Mr. Speaker, is another program offered here in our family-friendly province. The child financial support program, or CFS, provides medical and financial assistance when parents are unable or unwilling to care for their children and the child is being properly cared for in another home of a responsible adult caregiver. To qualify for this program, a caregiver may be eligible to receive benefits on behalf of a child if the child's parents have provided written consent and the child will be properly cared for in the home of the caregiver or if the child's income does not exceed the financial guidelines of the program. The amount of the monthly benefits received under this program can vary based upon the age of the child, the income of the child, and the relationship of the caregiver to the child. It is important to remember that while receiving benefits from child financial support, children can also receive medical benefits under the Alberta child health benefit program.

Mr. Speaker, I have shown here that Alberta is indeed a family-friendly province with many effective and compassionate programs aimed at improving the lives of so many underprivileged children. Motion 501 goes the next step by bringing an equality factor to the equation, an equality that crosses between families with three or more children and families with two or less children. Programs such as the child financial support program and the Alberta child health benefit offer some very valuable assistance to many Alberta families. It is the goal of Motion 501 to introduce the same type of equality of benefits that these programs offer our families and their children.

As stated, currently the Alberta family employment tax credit program provides a maximum $500 tax credit per child to each qualifying family for the first two children in each family. Motion 501 would move to change the stipulation of the two-child limit thereby providing a tax credit for every child in the family.

I would like to encourage my colleagues, the hon. members here in the Assembly, to vote in favour of Motion 501. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join the debate supporting Motion 501, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross. I'd like to congratulate the Member for Calgary-Cross for raising this very important concern.

Extending the Alberta family employment tax credit to three or more children from the existing maximum of two helps strengthen the pool of resources available for parents. It seems to me that we should be extending some help to the larger families, and as every parent here knows, help is always welcome. Children can bring great joy and fulfillment that cannot be measured in dollars. Nonetheless, raising a child is a costly endeavour, and it costs more every year.

The Alberta family employment tax credit is a program funded by the Alberta government to help working families provide for their children. The program's main objectives are to support children in low- and middle-income families and to provide incentive for the parents of these children to continue to work. To help in the support of children is admirable and important, but it's more admirable to extend the support to all children.

The Alberta family employment tax credit helps support low-income earners re-entering the workforce and provides a bit more incentive for unemployed people to get back to work. Motion 501 simply extends the scope of this successful program to include families with three or more children. Re-entering the workforce is not easy. Extending tax credits would help encourage this. Currently the program operates by providing a tax credit of $500 per child in a family with two children. I think this program works because it gives people incentive to move away from income support programs as a means of providing for their families. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta family employment tax credit operates more like an investment program rather than a support program, and I can't think of anything better to invest in than our children.

Mr. Speaker, the goal of any social program should be to encourage people back into the workforce as soon as possible. I believe that Albertans would prefer to earn their own way rather than rely on government assistance. The Alberta family employment tax credit recognizes the realities of returning to the workforce while trying to raise a family. There are people in Alberta who have a harder time finding and keeping stable employment, but the situation becomes more complicated when children are involved. This tax credit helps build the bridge between unemployment and a solid return to the workforce.

The overriding goal of Alberta's support programs is to give people the best environment possible to be independent. This government decided a long time ago that people should not be living off Alberta's support system if they were able to work. Since the early 1990s Alberta's support programs have been designed to protect people from impoverishment and prevent people from taking free rides at the expense of taxpayers. This tax benefit is an extension of this philosophy by providing increased incentive for people to keep their jobs.

Mr. Speaker, as we heard earlier this evening, there are two primary financial and health benefit programs that complement the Alberta family employment tax credit and protect low-income earners and their families from economic hardship and costs associated with health problems. The reality is that low-income earners often live from paycheque to paycheque. This can pose problems for families when children get sick. First of all, there's the Alberta child health benefit. This program is part of Alberta's role in the national child benefit program designed to address child poverty across Canada. As we heard, the Alberta child health benefit helps families by providing coverage for various services including dental, optical, emergency ambulance, essential diabetic supplies, and prescription drug coverage for children living in families with low incomes. The program is based on family size and the previous year's family net income. The tax credits earned by low-income Albertans don't necessarily have to be used for health-related products because of the coverage provided by the Alberta health benefit.

The second program that helps ensure the safety and health of low-income families is the Alberta adult health benefit, formerly known as the extended health benefit. This provides free health benefits to people and parents who leave supports for independence for work.

Low-income families must be healthy to succeed. I see no reason not to extend the credit program to include families with three or more children. Doing so would encourage more families to consider working rather than relying on income support. Other programs supporting low-income families have no cap on coverage based on the number of children in a family. The Alberta family employment tax credit should be consistent with other programs supporting independent families.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta continues to enjoy a growing, prosperous economy. Each year hundreds of jobs are created in Alberta by a variety of industries, and employers need to fill these positions. The unemployment rate in Edmonton, for example, is currently under 5 percent. This is incredibly low considering the state of the global economy. I mention this fact because there are opportunities for people to do better in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, studies have shown that the first two children born in a family pose a much greater financial hardship than any children born after them. There are a variety of reasons for this as there are many costs related to establishing a home suitable for children. However, three or more children still pose financial challenges for families, and a tax credit could help larger families overcome these pressures.

Motion 501 would be an investment in Alberta families. Support for low-income Albertans will give them incentive to work. The tax credit program will provide families with more income to provide for their families and make them healthier. Studies have shown that healthier children perform better in school. Better grades will open doors for postsecondary education and a better standard of living. I realize that a tax credit is only part of the scenario. I believe that a lot more needs to happen besides raising a tax credit to better the lives of low-income Albertans. Motion 501 is a small step in the right direction.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would once again like to thank the hon. member for introducing Motion 501. If passed, this motion would help many Alberta families adjust to employment and independence. The Alberta family employment tax credit already helps thousands of Albertans and their families. Motion 501 will make it better by expanding the scope to include families with three or more children. In this day and age, with the number of children being reduced in Canadian families, I think that to extend this tax credit would encourage more than 1.5 children in a family. Motion 501 would not be a quick fix, but it would help larger families adjust to living independently. Healthy and happy and successful families are the cornerstones of a happy and successful Alberta.

I will support Motion 501 because it's the right thing to do, and I ask my colleagues to also support Motion 501. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to rise and talk for the minutes that remain on this particular issue. I think it's a great discussion we've been having, and we'll be able to continue later on in debate on Bill 1 the whole discussion about the importance of families and children and income and poverty and so on.

The details of the motion have been reviewed for the record. I don't need to go through those at any great length. I would like, though, to commend the Member for Calgary-Cross for her good intentions, I think, in bringing this forward. I have no doubt that she shares concerns that all of us have for improving the lives of families living with very low incomes and especially the children in those families. So I'm inclined on the basis of the intentions and the idea here to support this motion.

On the other hand – and this is frankly why we have the kinds of debates that we have or try to have here – there are some questions that are left with me that cause me doubts about supporting the motion. While the motion presumably would increase the income level of children in poor families, my concern, like that of both of my colleagues, is: is this enough, or should we be spending that money on ways to provide these families with the skills to move out of poverty? Is there a risk in bringing this particular motion in that we'll actually be sustaining people at a poor level? I don't know, and I'm not sure that the numbers have been worked through one way or the other, the analysis that's been done on that.

Would we be better, for example, taking the costs of this bill and putting it instead into, say, early childhood education programs or nutrition programs? Those are issues that I struggle with on all of these debates. It doesn't mean that I'm opposed to this bill; it means that I'm simply trying to expand the debate. I should say that I'm not opposed to this motion. It's not a bill yet. Maybe someday it will be a bill. But I'm trying to reflect on the broader issues that are touched on or are raised by this particular motion.

The costs of administration have been mentioned here. There's no sense here of the costs of administration of this motion if it ever did become law. What would those be? I'm wondering if the Minister of Finance has any insight into that particular issue.

There's also a question of how this works with the federal child tax benefit, which has been substantially increased and will be, I believe, substantially increased further in the next four years. I guess I would like to have more information on exactly what this proposal would entail: what it would cost, who it would benefit, how many people it would benefit, and how much they would benefit.

So I have a great number of questions about the impact of the motion. I don't question the motives of it. I don't question the importance of improving the lot of people living at very low incomes and especially children.

With those comments – and I see we're just about running out of time for this level of debate this evening – I will take my seat and review Hansard and listen to the closing comments of the sponsor of the motion before I finally make up my mind which way to stand on this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Cross, in the one minute remaining today and four minutes next Monday, your final comments.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In closing, I would like to refer to a letter that was written by the same constituent that I talked to you about earlier, Mr. Tom Lipp, where he wrote:

I would like to recommend the cap of two children per family be removed for the following reasons:

1. This cap disadvantages families with three or more children. Such families already have a greater financial struggle, and would make good use of any extra funds from the AFETC.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member.

Mrs. Fritz: Two, "The removal of this cap would be in keeping with the family friendly policies of the Alberta Government."

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member.

Mrs. Fritz: And: "I appreciate Alberta's leadership's desire to strengthen families."

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I call for the question.

Speaker's Ruling
Speaking Time

The Deputy Speaker: Too late. We've gone over, and I've been standing here for 30 seconds.

One of the problems with this particular set of rules is that we have 60 minutes in which to do a 65-minute debate. That's why the chair admonished you: in the one minute and the four minutes next day. So it'll have to be next day. I'm sorry; those are the rules that we've all agreed to.

Line Fence Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to stand today and move second reading of Bill 5, the Line Fence Amendment Act.

The Line Fence Act was enacted in 1980 to provide rural residents with a cost-sharing and dispute settlement framework that was primarily created to deal with livestock fencing issues. A fence that is mutually beneficial to two landowners of adjacent land occurs quite frequently in rural Alberta. One landowner will erect a fence, and if the fence provides a benefit to the neighbouring landowner, the neighbour will contribute to the cost of the erection, maintenance, and repair of the mutually beneficial fence. This concept is very simple, and it has been effectively applied to a great number of instances where fences benefited two rural neighbours. It is a cost-effective and efficient way to build and maintain a fence. Having neighbours build two overlapping fences to contain each of their respective herds just doesn't make any sense. The Line Fence Act is effective and is accomplishing everything it was intended to do, but there is a need for clarification. The bill being brought forward provides this needed clarity.

Urban residents are increasingly citing the Line Fence Act in instances for which it was not intended. With these citations, municipalities are being faced with the situation of having to share in the cost of a private landowner's fence. Mr. Speaker, municipalities should not be burdened with costs attributable to private fence construction and maintenance bordering on public lands where the legislation being applied was not intended for that situation. This use in an urban setting is completely against the original spirit of the Line Fence Act.

Bill 5 will ensure that the original intention of the Line Fence Act, to provide a cost-sharing and dispute settlement framework primarily for livestock fencing issues, is maintained, Mr. Speaker. The amendment also defines which livestock are contemplated. Under the act it recognizes that different species require different fences.

I urge all members of this Legislature to give this bill their full support. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak in support of Bill 5, the Line Fence Amendment Act. I think this is a minor change, but it is one that's adjusting what's become a bit of a problem and, I'm sure, in some circumstances a major problem.

Essentially, the bill is attempting to restrict the circumstances under which a party to a shared line or a fence can seek to have the costs of that fence shared between them. Under the original bill both urban and rural property owners had a legal right to demand compensation from the person on the other side of the fence, the adjacent property, if they derived any benefit. Really, this was intended to address issues of livestock containment and delineation of property, I think, and having it used or applied under urban sensibilities perverts the original intention of the bill.

Certainly, in urban areas to have one person decide to build a six-foot fence between themselves and their neighbour and then try and ding the neighbour for equal cost of the fence is unrealistic, especially if they're trying to claim that somehow the second neighbour derives some sort of benefit. They may not have wanted a fence, and they certainly may not have had it in their budget to pay for one, so there's an issue here of fairness and of having the bill apply to where it was meant to apply. All that this amending act is doing is just correcting what the movement of history has perverted.

Essentially, it's making the act conform to the goals it was originally meant to achieve and eliminating any unwelcome interference in the urban areas, and I'm happy to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan, then, to sum up, to conclude debate?

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 5 read a second time]

Bill 9
Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move second reading of Bill 9, the Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, in dealing with amendments to this bill, we are specifically dealing with part 8, which deals with seismic or geophysical exploration. This act will amend existing legislation by upgrading terminology to reflect the way the seismic and geophysical exploration is currently done. For instance, it will clarify administrative criteria, streamline existing procedures, enhance enforcement tools, and strengthen various roles already within the act.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments are a result of extensive consultation done for the exploration regulation review. During the process over 2,000 stakeholders were consulted about changes to how our province manages exploration. Since the Mines and Minerals Act also deals with geophysical and seismic exploration, we also need to amend this act.

Now that we are talking in terms of change, I think the easiest way to speak to these amendments is through a few examples. For instance, we want to introduce a unique identification number to the act, Mr. Speaker. This number will identify subcontractors working on an exploration program. Why is this important? Well, let's say that you are a landowner who notices a truck at the far end of your property, but there doesn't seem to be any visual sign or logo on the truck to identify it. As a landowner or community member you just want to know who is around your property for security reasons. With the creation of this unique identification number, you can now phone the department's information line. We will be able to tell you exactly who has approval to be working in the area based on this number.

Another example of how changes to this legislation will better reflect what should be happening in the field is through the stop-order program. The new stop-order amendment will allow our field staff to take immediate action if environmental incidents happen on the site. For instance, under present rules when field staff or an inspector finds a situation like a flowing shot hole causing water to run across a public road, we need to contact the licence or permit holder before any action can be taken. This sometimes takes a number of hours or longer, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, our field staff will always use every avenue to contact the licence or permit holder, but some things can't wait for hours on end. The stop order can be issued immediately to an on-site supervisor, directing that the activity must stop for the protection of the area.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few examples of some of the changes that we are suggesting to update this legislation. After all the communication and consultation we've done on these changes, we are confident that everyone involved with geophysical exploration will see the many positive advantages. Industry will have the benefit of clearly understanding their level of responsibility, and the public will see that this government is willing to provide direction to ensure that this happens.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time it is my pleasure to move to adjourn debate on Bill 9.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 1

Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, I'm pleased to rise to address Bill 1 in what I hope will be a tremendous debate here and an insightful one. I know from the comments earlier this evening as well as just from knowing some of the individuals in this Assembly that the intentions of this bill will be close to the hearts of many of us and especially the notion of undertaking a promise to Alberta's children.

As we discussed at one point earlier, this bill lays out a framework, as the Deputy Premier put it, for addressing some issues, but its shortfall, to me a fundamental shortfall, is that it doesn't say what the framework is about. It refers to Alberta's Promise in the title, Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act, and there's even a section called Alberta's Promise, which reads: "Alberta's Promise is an initiative to encourage organizations, corporations and individuals to enhance community resources in order to further the well-being of children." It doesn't really say what the promise is. What is it that we are promising here? As a result, with that gap in this legislation, I think that first of all we need to debate that, and secondly, we need to look for ways to fill that promise, to make clear what that promise is.

Now, the one place where I have read the promise is in the Speech from the Throne. That is a substantially more clear expression of the promise than what we have in Bill 1 itself, and I think it's probably worth reading into the record here. I'm quoting here from the Speech from the Throne of last week.

Alberta's Promise will mobilize every sector of Alberta to build the character and competence of young people by making and keeping promises that focus on five specific areas of commitment. These are

- giving children a healthy start and a promising future,
- providing safe and healthy communities for our children's growth, education, and development,
- ensuring that every child receives ongoing support, care, and guidance from at least one caring adult in his or her life,
- offering children the chance to make a difference through volunteer activities and opportunities to serve others, and
- seeking out the best tools, models, and examples of other individuals and communities so that Alberta's children may learn, benefit, and succeed.

Now, you note, Mr. Chairman, that that promise has somewhat, in fact substantially, more detail than what's in the bill, and I think that even with that, it falls short of what a real promise ought to be. Without something like this in Bill 1 it's really a pointless bill. Maybe it's not entirely pointless, but it's missing a direction. It talks about a promise, but it never makes one except that it promises to set up a council. Frankly, it's not news and it's not adequate that we simply set up another committee, another council for government. This government is becoming notorious for striking committees and councils.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would like to propose an amendment. We have the sufficient number of copies here, so we will distribute those, and then I'll speak to it in a moment.

The Chair: We require the original here plus four others.

Dr. Taft: Okay. There's the original. It's been approved by Parliamentary Counsel, and there are all the copies you need.

Mr. Chairman, may I continue? Thank you.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.

Dr. Taft: Amendment A1. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Pretty well everybody now has copies of amendment A1, and for the purposes of the record I will make clear what amendment A1 is. It is an amendment to insert the promise as described in the Speech from the Throne into the legislation, and by doing this, it will in fact give some force, some weight, some substance to Bill 1, which otherwise is seriously in danger of looking like nothing more than window dressing.

The amendment reads that Bill 1 be amended in section 1 by renumbering it as section 1(1) and by adding the following after subsection (1):

(2) The Alberta Promise is an initiative that focuses on the following areas of commitment:

- (a) giving children a healthy start and a promising future;
- (b) providing safe and healthy communities for children's growth, education and development;
- (c) ensuring that every child receives ongoing support, care and guidance from at least one caring adult in his or her life; and
- (d) offering children the chance to make a difference through volunteer activities and opportunities to serve others.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the amendment, and the reason for making the amendment is, as I said earlier, to give Bill 1 some substance. I would assume that all members of this Assembly will support this amendment because we are drawing directly from the Speech from the Throne, which to my understanding reflects the commitments of this government. All we are trying to do here is take some of the ideas that this government presented in the Speech from the Throne and put them into legislation. Pretty straightforward, and I would hope that it gets the widespread support of members of this Assembly. I'll be disappointed if it doesn't. I can't imagine why it wouldn't.

We could go through these items one by one. "Giving children a healthy start and a promising future." If that's Alberta's Promise as laid out in the Speech from the Throne, well, let's put it in Bill 1. Who can argue with giving children a healthy start and a promising future? I mean, after all, those are the points upon which a child's life and an adult's life are built. A healthy start and a promising future are exactly what this government should be committing to provide to its children, to our children, to the children of all Albertans. By giving that sort of commitment, we will be building a better future for all Albertans.

The second point, "providing safe and healthy communities for children's growth, education and development." Well, safe and healthy communities: again, good sentiments taken straight from the Speech from the Throne. Why wouldn't we put this into Bill 1? Safe and healthy communities. We all, I'm sure, want to have safe and healthy communities not just for our children but for all of us. If we're making a promise, let's promise this. Frankly, we've left it general enough. We're not saying in this particular amendment that there's any time frame. We're not demanding that there be any particular amount of money spent. We're just saying: if a promise is worth making, then let's really make it.

The third point under the amendment, again taken from the Speech from the Throne: "ensuring that every child receives ongoing support, care and guidance from at least one caring adult in his or her life." The bare minimum we can provide as a compassionate society for our children. Lacking that, children are left entirely on their own, and I can't imagine that anybody in this Assembly or anywhere in this province wants to see children left without any adult guidance at all. So it seems reasonable, taken from the Speech from the Throne. I think all of us in the opposition caucus would like to see this brought into Bill 1.

Finally, to speak to the fourth one a little bit for a moment directly: "offering children the chance to make a difference through volunteer activities and opportunities to serve others." I'm sure the intent behind this in the Speech from the Throne was to recognize that the real gift in life isn't what you get but is what you give and that the people who do best in life, the people who are happiest in life, the people who find life most fulfilling are not those who worry all the time about how much they get and how much they take. They are the ones, instead, who learn how to give and give and give. There's a wonderful paradox. One of the great paradoxes of life in many ways is that the more you give away, the more you end up getting in return automatically: the joy of giving and the joy of service, which is recognized in this particular part of the children's promise.

There's no particular cost involved here. There's no time frame. There's no onerous duty that the government will be saddled with. There's simply the notion of making the promise count. Let's realize what we're standing for as a Legislature. Let's take a stand. Let's take the Speech from the Throne and engrave it in legislation for the sake of our children.

So, Mr. Chairman, with those comments, I look forward to response from any and all MLAs. I hope they will find it in themselves to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A1.

Ms Blakeman: Right. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise in support of my colleague's amendment A1, which is essentially incorporating the detail that was found in the throne speech into Bill 1.

It was interesting. During the second reading debate on this I clearly remember the Deputy Premier talking about how as an ideology – and I hope I'm paraphrasing accurately here – the government prefers to have what she called a framework legislation and acknowledged that the Official Opposition preferred to have more detail. Indeed we do, and a big part of that is that it allows you to have something to measure against to see whether you are in fact accomplishing the goal. If you have too vague a framework, if it's not clearly outlined, then how do you ever establish what you were trying to do and whether you're achieving it in any way, shape, or form, whether you've moved towards achieving that goal?

In fact, I thought long and hard on the words of the Deputy Premier, and I thought: "Well, this seems to contradict some of the other things I see. Where have I heard someone arguing very strongly for clearly set out guidelines and measurements?" In fact, it's on page 3 of the Auditor General's report of 2001-2002, so the current Auditor General's report. Right at the very beginning it says Predominant Theme of Our Findings. I will just sort of skim through it, but essentially government organizations need a systematic approach to manage risk. They need formal processes to explicitly link risks with controls and to ensure effective internal controls.

The government and certain . . . agencies would . . . have avoided weak internal controls if they had used formal risk management. This conclusion is based on the interrelationship of explicit risk [management], cost-effective internal control, and internal auditing.

Well, you can't do an internal audit if you have nothing to measure against, and the point is made by the Auditor General that poor risk management exposes Albertans to unnecessary costs. Good risk management improves the government's ability to reach its goals.

I think that the idea that's presented behind Bill 1 is, in fact, a good idea, and I would like to see the government be able to achieve it, but without anything more specific in the bill I don't know how they can move ahead with the specifics of this or, indeed, for any of us to be able to look at the public accounts in a year or two from now or just look at the legislation and say: yes, this has been achieved. How? There's nothing that we're measuring against here.

So I commend the Member for Edmonton-Riverview for bringing forward a beginning of detail that needs to be in the bill by enshrining those five points found in the throne speech inside the bill. Again, I feel that this could be fleshed out again and further so that there is some detail from which we could gain a performance measurement, but I think this is an excellent start, and I urge the members of the Assembly to support amendment A1.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to address the proposed amendment to Bill 1.

I look, Mr. Chairman, at the similar promises made elsewhere, and of course I raised America's Promise in second reading. If you look at the web site, there's a fairly good description about Ontario's Promise, which is a similar document, and when you look at Ontario's Promise on the web site and you look at our bill, there's a striking difference in terms of clarity. Ontario's Promise has five points, very straightforward. It says that there are five promises at the core of Ontario's promise. Each promise focuses on "the fundamental elements that are essential to the successful development" of children and youth:

1. A healthy start . . .
2. An adult who cares . . .
3. Safe places to learn and grow . . .
4. The tools to succeed . . .
5. A chance to make a difference.

That's very, very clear, Mr. Chairman, and I think it's much more consistent with America's Promise, which was the root document for the Ontario work and Bill 1, Alberta's Promise, that we have before us.

I think what is good about the amendment is that it takes those five ideas and puts them in the body of the bill. It's the kind of detailing of the promise that gives them some legitimacy that having them in the preamble doesn't do. I say that with the full knowledge that I've in the past often been critical of preambles or the lack of preambles in government legislation, but in this case I think that much of what is in the preamble belongs in the body of the bill. Even with our amendment and trying to be true to the bill as it's written, there is still a lack of clarity.

It's very clear.

- (a) giving children a healthy start and a promising future;
- (b) providing safe and healthy communities for children's growth, education and development really incorporates (3) and (4) of what's in existence in Ontario;

- (c) ensuring that every child receives ongoing support, care and guidance from at least one caring adult in his or her life is the second of theirs. They state it more simply and, I think, almost more effectively: "an adult who cares." And (d) in our amendment, "Offering children the chance to make a difference through volunteer activities and opportunities to serve others," they encapsulate in (5), "A chance to make a difference."

So even with these amendments, Mr. Chairman, one could ask that it be made clearer. I think the bill is the kind of bill that could have a great deal of influence on individuals and organizations in the province, and for that reason I think it's important that it be very, very clear. I think it could, as I indicated, be more concise, but I think there should be no doubt about exactly what the promise is that we are making to children.

I think that for even an outsider to look at the bill and to find out that most of the bill about Alberta's Promise consists of items and clauses that refer to the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise – the activities of that council, the membership of the council, the staff of the council, the bylaws and meetings of the council, the annual report of the council, and the expiry of the mandate of the council – it's really quite astounding that that makes up the body on pages 2, 3, and 4 of the legislation, and the actual promises have to be teased out of the preamble.

I believe that the amendment is sensible, it's logical, and I think it gives to the body of the act the kind of substance that those of us who support Bill 1 would find much more in keeping with what we understand to be the intent of the bill. So with those comments, I would encourage the Assembly to adopt the amendment as proposed by our colleague from Edmonton-Riverview.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to make just a couple of comments with respect to the proposed amendment A1.

First of all, I'd like to thank the hon. members opposite for their interest in this and for making suggestions which in their view improve the bill. But in listening carefully to their comments, it seems to me that they have not given full reading of the whereas clauses at the beginning, which set out in general and in clear terms what the purpose of this legislation is. I think it's important to read these words so that it forms part of the record:

Whereas the Legislative Assembly of Alberta recognizes that children are our greatest resource;

Whereas the Legislative Assembly of Alberta is committed to building a province where children are valued, nurtured and given the opportunity to reach their full potential; and

Whereas the Legislative Assembly of Alberta recognizes that achieving these goals for children requires a commitment and effort on the part of all Albertans.

That is the purpose of this legislation. It is very clear. Yes, it is in general terms, but that was intentional. It was intentional that we not drill down into detail but rather in clear and general terms outline what the purpose of this is.

So while I appreciate the efforts of the hon. members and certainly in general terms they would be in accordance with the thrust of what this legislation is, I would urge my colleagues in the Assembly to vote against this particular amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on amendment A1.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I genuinely appreciate the response from the minister. Without bogging down in details, I guess our sense is that normally the preamble would lead to "therefore," and here's the purpose, and the "therefore" that follows in our reading doesn't make a promise. So I think there's a substantive difference there.

Frankly, in the preamble the whereas are honourable. I don't dispute that. I wouldn't dispute that at all. It recognizes that our children are our greatest resource;

Whereas the Legislative Assembly of Alberta is committed to building a province where children are valued, nurtured and given the opportunity to reach their full potential, and so on. Those are wonderful statements, but they are a preamble. They are the whereas that normally would lead up to the promise. Instead, what they lead up to is establishing a council. We were just wanting to follow the lead of the Speech from the Throne and put the promise right into the bill. So that's the intent of this particular amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I, too, will have an amendment that I will speak to later. I will take the opportunity to send it to the table now so that you have it.

Just a couple of points that I wanted to make in general debate while we're in Committee of the Whole on Bill 1. A couple of things are still concerning me in this bill overall. Without getting into the issue of the lack of specificity, which my amendment and a number of other ones are attempting to address, but speaking more generally, when we look at what was intended by the originating promise that came out of the United States and then was picked up in Ontario, the one in the U.S. was an all-party endeavour, not a partisan endeavour at all. This very clearly is a partisan endeavour, and I would like to see that widened up. If truly we are seeking the support of the Legislative Assembly – and I think at one point the legislation actually does even mention that it is seeking that support – I think, then, that it should be more of an attempt to have it be all-party rather than be as partisan as what is spelled out here. So that’s an issue that continues to concern me.

The other issue – and, again, I brought this up during second reading and listened carefully to what members of the government said in refuting my point, and I’m willing to debate this issue further – is that in asking for a council to be put together of leaders of the corporate sector and of the community and the individuals, I think is how it’s actually worded in the legislation, clearly there’s an expectation that there is a fund-raising component to this bill and an expectation that the council would engage in raising funds, which would then be directed towards programs which will help children. My concern in all of this is that it’s a pretty tight fund-raising pool out there in Alberta right now.

We have some very good groups who currently raise money, and they have a great deal of respect behind their names; for example, United Way or Catholic Social Services, who work very, very hard to raise money to fund existing programs for children. This council now gets into competition with those organizations who are already working very hard to raise money in a limited pool. So we’re throwing another really big fish into quite a small pond, and my concern is that this council might be seen to be more prestigious, has the name of the Premier attached to it. If it moves money away from the good work that groups like United Way or Catholic Social Services are already doing and takes some of their money into the fund-raising pot or the coffers associated with this council, I don’t see how we’re further ahead, and I have real concerns about that.

I think at one point – and I’d asked for confirmation – I heard one of the members say that there was a hope, a desire that this Premier’s council would in fact increase the amount that the corporate sector and the individuals were donating by 5 percent. Well, where’s that 5 percent going to come from? I’d be really interested to see whether there’s a belief by government members that this is 5 percent in addition to all of the fund-raising that’s already going on out there for any number of excellent causes which benefit children directly or indirectly.

Through that we’re talking about fund-raising for things like children’s amateur athletics, even fund-raising for day care centres, other kinds of recreational opportunities for children, arts and cultural opportunities for children. I mean, there are already a lot of groups out there that are trying to provide this programming, and I’m not seeing where the additional 5 percent is going to come from without it taking away from the groups that already are out there. I don’t hear a concrete argument as to how this moves the lives of children in Alberta further forward. So I’m interested in hearing a response to that.

I had wanted to raise – and I’m not sure that I did – the issue about the budget and the salaries. I’m interested in hearing what is the budget that will be accorded to the operation of this council. There’s obviously an expectation that there will be staff. I’m interested in what the classification is that the staff would come in under and the commensurate salary level or range that would be attached to that. I’d like to get that answered, and even if you can’t provide me with the total budget numbers – maybe it’s coming when the budget is actually introduced by the Minister of Finance – you can certainly tell me the anticipation of whether this is going to be done by an administration 4 position or whether it’s going to be ranked into management or a deputy minister level. What’s the expectation there?

I think that my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview has already argued my concern that what’s in the preamble, as we all know, is unenforceable. It is considered in advance of the actual legislation. So interesting sentiments that are put forward but not anything that we can actually measure against, because it’s not considered part of the enforceable section of the legislation. But maybe there is a differing opinion on the other side.

Those are a couple of the issues that I have concerns about, and that is around the fund-raising. It is around: what can be measured from what’s being proposed in the legislation? What’s the budget that’s anticipated being associated with it? What’s the level of staffing that’s being anticipated here?

Now, I did send to the table a copy of an amendment that I would like to bring forward. Perhaps it’s possible to have that distributed at this time.

An Hon. Member: It’s done.

Ms Blakeman: It’s done. Oh, great.

The Chair: Okay. This is called amendment A2.

Ms Blakeman: And we’re calling it amendment A2. Thank you very much. That’s extremely expedient.

This amendment is moving that in section 3, which is addressing the activities of the council, a clause be added as (g), which is following the last one: to “develop recommendations that will facilitate the delivery of at least one nutritious meal a day to children through a program available in every school in Alberta.” So, again, this is our attempt to tie a very concrete activity that can in fact be measured and the success of it can be measured as we go through this.

One of the things that I notice in my schools – and all of my schools are classified as inner city, and we certainly know that a lot of these kids are coming from disadvantaged households and households that are working very hard to lift themselves out of that. Certainly we know that children who have an empty stomach don’t learn as well at school. They’re not as attentive. They don’t take in the information as well. We have found over time that it actually is a good idea for society to join together, government and agencies in the community, to in fact provide some nourishment to children because it does help them learn better and retain information and be able to move ahead. I’d like to see that added into this promise because it should allow us to do even more work.

One of the interesting things that’s been pointed out to me was a question that was asked, and that is: what’s the difference between the last day of grade 6 and the first day of grade 7? The answer is: the child is not provided with the same access to those hot lunch programs. So those programs are available from K to 6, in my understanding. Perhaps it’s changed, and I’d love to hear different, but once the youngster is in junior high or high school, the access to those programs is gone. There’s no longer a funding flow-through and an encouragement from government for those programs to exist for those kids. From what I’ve been told, I mean, you’re more likely to have a kid in junior high school that’s in a rapid growth stage or is much more in need of a lot of food than I think could be argued a child who was younger than that. So to cut them off arbitrarily I think can be causing great hardship, and if we’re trying to help these kids be involved in their community, to be taking in and maintaining what they’re being taught in school, then this is a way to do it that we know works.

I'll give you another example of how we know it works from my community, and it's part of that same question, just slightly paraphrased, being the difference between the last day of school and the first day of summer, and the answer is the same. There was no program that was available for those kids that provided them with any nourishment once summer rolled around. So they could be in grade 4 or grade 5 or whatever, and they went down to the park the first day of summer holidays, and that's it. There's nothing available for them. They started a program called Snack in the Shack, and it's been immensely successful, and again it's a partnership. There is some funding from the government, I think through Capital health authority, and the co-operation of a number of the service organizations that work in my community and in other communities. I'm sure that in Edmonton-Norwood or Edmonton-Highlands or Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview or Edmonton-Castle Downs and certainly in Edmonton-Centre there's the need for that.

So I'm urging people to consider adding this. I hear the reluctance from members of government who are not interested in providing any more detail in the bill, but I don't want to see this bill be a slogan bill. I don't want to see it be something that five years from now everybody goes: "Oh, yeah. Right. We had that, but it meant nothing. There was nothing in it. Nothing was ever done, and there was no way to ever call anyone to account, because there was nothing to call people to account for."

If you want to make that promise to children, I think we have to take the promise seriously, and we have to say what we're going to do and mean it, and for that to happen there have to be clearly laid out programs that are expected to happen and some measurements that are to be achieved, targets that go with that. Now, that all doesn't have to be written specifically into the legislation, certainly, but the outline of the specifics of what we're talking about does need to be in the legislation. Otherwise, I think it does become a bill that's simply a slogan or a blank cheque or an empty bill, and I think Alberta children deserve more than that.

So those were the issues that I wanted to bring forward in support of my amendment A2, which is asking to "facilitate the delivery of . . . one nutritious meal a day to children through a program available in every school in Alberta." I know that my colleagues are interested in speaking to this particular issue, so I will clear the way and sit down.

The Chair: No, please don't sit down. We'd like you to move the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I'm sorry. I would like to move the amendment that's known as amendment A2. Thank you.

The Chair: Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to begin the debate on this amendment by reading from a recent book about poverty by one of Edmonton's best known authors. This is an excerpt from that book. I'm quoting the author's account.

One of my first interviews was with the principal of an inner-city school. It was an old three-storey brick building with creaky linoleum floors and small classrooms. My appointment was for noon and I got there just a few minutes early. We sat talking in her tiny second-floor office. Suddenly she got up from her desk and moved to the window. She motioned for me to join her. I pressed my head to the glass as she instructed and down below I could just barely see a little girl hiding under the stairs. Just then the noon bell went off. The little girl leapt to her feet, ran along the side of the building, disappeared into a door, quickly reappeared and motioned across the schoolyard. Immediately, two small children, a boy and a girl, maybe five and four years of age, came running across the yard. All three vanished into the school.

The principal told me that the older girl, who was seven, was sneaking her younger brother and sister into the school's hot-lunch program. She did this several times near the end of each month. One of the new teachers noticed what was happening and, in a non-confrontational way, questioned the girl, who began to cry with shaking shoulders, deep sobs, and tears rolling down her face. There was no father in her family. Their mother had been sick in bed for months. They always ran out of food before the end of the month. The utility bill had to be paid; if it wasn't, child welfare would take the kids away from their mother. There was nothing in the house to eat.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we're going to make a promise to our children, the least we can do is promise to give them a meal a day or at least a meal every school day – one meal, not three, not two, just one nutritious meal a day – and that's why we're making this amendment to Bill 1. If a promise is worth making, it's worth making specifically and it's worth keeping.

We might in this Assembly think that there aren't very many children in this province who go hungry, but the figures don't confirm that. Certainly, the majority of Albertans are well fed, and as the minister of health will agree, too many Albertans are too well fed, but at the other end of the spectrum too many Albertans and especially too many Alberta children are not fed enough, and malnourishment, undernourishment, is too widespread in this wealthy society.

Just to give you a sense of some of the figures on this – and there are, as we all know, many measures of low income. This is a subject of some substantial debate, and I'm just using one particular figure here, and I'll use another in a moment. In Alberta the prevalence of low income as a percent according to Statistics Canada: under 18 years of age from 1991 to the year 2000, year by year, it varied between a low of just over 10 percent to a high of 15.9, almost 16 percent, and translating that into actual numbers, we're talking anywhere from 90,000 to 140,000 Albertans under the age of 18 who are living in poverty. If we look at that by family unit, in two-parent families in the last decade anywhere from 8 and a half to 13 and a half percent of those families are low income. Those are families with children, two-parent families with children. If we go to female lone-parent families, shockingly almost 60 percent of those families are living at low income, and that has varied up and down. It's been as low as 30 percent, and in 2000 it was 38 percent. That's atrocious in this society. Let's see if we can do better. Let's make a promise to these people to do better.

Now, I've done some straightforward calculations and estimates on what this particular proposal would cost in its simplest form, and if there are, as I believe there are, 560,000 students in this province and if we only targeted this program to the half of those students who are in kindergarten to grade 6 – so let's say that's 280,000 students – and if we say that 15 percent of those students are living in conditions where they may not be getting nutritious meals, that's 42,000 children. Let's say that for a simple meal, maybe a container of yogurt and a whole grain sandwich, it's $3. So that's $126,000 to give one meal to each of those 42,000 children, and if we multiply that by the 200 school days, we're at about $25 million for the year, substantially less than we subsidize the horse racing industry, and for that $25 million we could ensure that every hungry child in this province gets at least one nutritious meal a day. What an amazing investment. What an amazing promise to fulfill to our children, and it is so doable. The schools are there. The teachers are there. The children are there. All that's lacking is the political will.

Let's think for a minute about what this would achieve. First of all, we're directly addressing children living in poverty and children going hungry. We're directly giving those kids food in their bellies. What does that do? Well, it helps them pay attention in school. It helps them learn. Perhaps, most importantly it teaches them that school is a hearth, that school is a place to go where you can get help, where you can get somebody who can care for you, somebody who feeds you. It turns school into a wonderful place for these children. At school it gives them a break from the otherwise impoverished conditions they're living in. The long-term benefit of that surely is that these kids instead of being turned off by school are turned on by school. School is a place where you go not only to get nourished in the mind but to get nourished in the stomach.

So it helps with learning. It entices children to love school. It helps them to pay attention. And do you know what? It will also help them to be healthier. These are kids who will have the adequate vitamins and minerals and calories to lead a healthy life. We all know, most of all I think the minister of health, who's here this evening to his full credit, the importance of something as simple as nourishment for a lifetime of better health. There certainly are very few greater threats to a lifetime of good health than poor diet, and here is a way that for $25 million a year we can directly address that for tens of thousands of kids across this province.

Beyond that, what about the issue of justice? I'm not just talking here social and economic justice; I'm talking about the hard nuts and bolts of criminal justice. What happens to kids who when they are 10 or 11 or 12 are going hungry? Where are they going to turn? They're going to turn if they have no other choice to breaking and entering, to theft, to shoplifting, to petty crime. Where's that going to lead? Well, too often we know exactly where that leads. They end up on a path towards a conflict with the justice system, a path towards crime.

So those are some of the benefits that could come from taking this amendment seriously. I know the Member for Red Deer-North and the Member for St. Albert earlier this very evening talked about how much they value children. I hope that they're paying attention now because this is an opportunity to really stand up and be counted.

One of the promises in the promise that's in the Speech from the Throne, Alberta's Promise, is the promise to give children an opportunity to serve. I talked a few minutes ago about how wonderful that promise is because in the long run the happiest people are not those who are always in this world for what they can get but are in this world for what they can give. Well, this is an opportunity for us to give and for this government to give and for this government to be better because it has given.

So I hope – I hope – at least some of the members in the government benches will stand and support this amendment, an amendment of minimal cost, an amendment of substantially less cost than what we routinely provide to the horse racing industry, for example, and an amendment that in the long run, year by year by year, would make Alberta an unquestionably better society, a promise worth keeping.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert on amendment A2.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just want to rise to speak to the amendment and to suggest that the proposed amendment is to micromanage the work of the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise. I will not be supporting the amendment. Although the previous speaker indicated that there are many ways in which we can serve children, provide for children, I do not believe it is being specific in this particular bill by way of the amendment that is proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

I'm not supporting the amendment, simply because the intent and the construct of the act as proposed in Bill 1 specifically do lay down the framework whereby the council can operate. It does not indicate and should not indicate what the specifics are of every detail, the rationale, and how the council should perform in its role as a council attending to Alberta's Promise, which is the promise for our children. So while I believe that certainly one nutritious meal a day to children in our schools, not every school but in many of our schools, would indeed assist a number of children, I do not believe that the place for that kind of direction is to be inserted into Bill 1. Therefore, I will not be supporting it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again I thank the Member for St. Albert for rising and participating in the debate. This is a House of debate. We are in committee. All of you will know that many times I've said that I'm happy to debate these issues in committee.

This amendment in my view is not in any way, shape, or form micromanaging. To say that we should provide one nutritious meal a day to children is not micromanaging. It seems to me to be a bare-bones minimum of a compassionate society. We don't say, for example, in here how the program should be specifically delivered. We don't micromanage it by saying what the menu should be. Micromanaging would be putting the parameters of the program in here in absurd detail. We are simply saying: let's set a standard of ensuring that every school child in this province for 200 days of the year gets a minimum of one nutritious meal. Clearly, the majority of Alberta children don't need this, but equally clearly there are probably 40,000 who do.

What in the world is wrong with setting down a minimum standard? We don't say how it should be delivered. We don't say how much should be spent on it. I did some rough estimates. If this is micromanaging, we'd better chuck out 95 percent of the legislation in this province. I cannot believe that this is micromanaging or that the Member for St. Albert sees this as micromanaging and uses that as a reason to block an amendment that has as its motive, as its sole reason for being giving kids one nutritious meal a day. I just cannot accept that reasoning.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak to the amendment. As members have probably surmised by now, Bill 1 was a topic of debate in our caucus, and in our decision to support it, I guess we looked at the bill and the great possibilities. We thought that the bill opened up in terms of making the lot of children better and in terms of creating conditions in which children could thrive and do better. That discussion both in caucus and informally resulted in a number of ideas coming forward that we hoped would make the bill better. I think as you've listened to the discussion and as you've listened to the amendments, the motives have been to try to make the bill better, to try to put some clothing on a rather bare-bones proposal, and to focus on additions to the bill that would truly make the promises tangible and would give anyone reading this bill and anyone attempting to adopt the ideas in the bill a good idea of what was intended.

The first promise: "giving children a healthy start and a promising future.” I think this amendment speaks directly to that promise that youngsters would have a nutritious meal each day delivered through schools. Mr. Chairman, I think the Member for Edmonton-Riverview made the case quite eloquently and strongly in terms of the importance of nutrition in terms of that healthy start.

It’s also related to the second of the promises, and that’s “providing safe and healthy communities for children’s growth, education and development.” Part of that community in terms of youngsters’ development is one that would take on the responsibility to make sure that they were – not well fed. I mean, the amendment does not leave these youngsters in any way well fed. What it is is a minimum, a bare minimum that would ensure for most youngsters that at least once a day they were well fed. I think we’ve seen from programs that are in operation in some parts of our inner cities the huge difference breakfast programs make to youngsters and their performance. We’re certainly seeing there and have testimonials from teachers and parents in terms of the difference that providing those breakfast programs makes in youngsters’ ability to concentrate and to benefit from their participation in school experiences and instruction.

So it’s not an earthshaking proposal, Mr. Chairman. It’s one, as I said, that takes and extends the promise and puts something very concrete in front of people so that you can turn to this and say: “Yes. The promise is to get youngsters off to a healthy start, and this is the way we do it. One of the ways we do it is to provide a meal a day.”

I know it’s getting late, and our tolerance for amendments at this time of night seems to wane, but this is an important bill. It’s the first bill on the legislative agenda for this session, and it’s the Premier’s bill. We think it’s just got great possibilities, and we’d like to do what we could to make it better.

With those comments, I’ll conclude. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I said a few minutes ago, the tolerance at this time of the evening for amendments grows rather thin. I can’t miss the opportunity to do what I think is the right thing to do, and that’s to fully debate the bill and to put forward those ideas that we think make the bill a better bill. With that in mind, I’d like to propose an amendment to Bill 1, the Premier’s Council on Alberta’s Promise Act. I have the original here.

I’d like to move the amendment if I might, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: This amendment will be called A3.

Dr. Massey: I move that Bill 1 be amended in section 3 by striking out “and” at the end of clause (e) and by adding “and” at the end of clause (f) and by adding the following after clause (f): “(g) develop recommendations to attain an 80% completion rate for students entering primary education to finish secondary education.”

I think the amendment, Mr. Chairman, is straightforward. We want to make a promise to children that we will put forward the effort, the needed resources, and the enthusiasm that it takes to have 80 percent of youngsters who enter school complete high school. It’s a promise that has been worked on elsewhere. A number of jurisdictions now have set completion rates, goals for their learning systems. It’s consistent with, I believe, a motion that’s coming forward fairly quickly in this session that would have youngsters retained in high school to the age of 17 years. I think the intent is consistent with that in that we want youngsters to stay in high school to complete it successfully.

I think that if we look at the statistics, it’s rather disturbing. I know that we raised the issue of completion rates in the House some time back, and the Alberta high school completion rates, if I recall correctly, are some of the lowest in the country if not the lowest. I remember that at the time the Minister of Learning indicated that one of the reasons for that was the booming economy in Alberta, that youngsters were finding it very attractive to leave school and to enter the market because they could get jobs and they didn’t need to have completed high school to pick up a job and in many cases to be well paid. So the explanation for more of our students not completing was an economic one, that times were good. But we all know, Mr. Chairman, that Alberta goes through bust and boom, and even when things are booming, the evidence is abundantly clear that students who complete high school do much better in the long run, throughout their lives, than those who fail to pass that kind of minimum standard. So the amendment would have us set the goal of 80 percent.

I think you can look at subgroups in our population. For instance, if you look at aboriginal students, the completion rates for many of those students are really very abysmal. There are efforts, I know, in Edmonton to create a separate school to attract those students and to try to develop a culture in which they feel comfortable so that they would be encouraged to . . .

The Chair: Hon. members over there, would you please take your party outside and into the Confederation Room and carry on there as loudly as you wish but not in here. Was that message received?

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was just indicating that there has been an attempt by some boards, particularly the Edmonton board, to create a school particularly for aboriginal students, and one of the big concerns that led to the creation of that was the failure of those students to complete high school.

So there are great efforts being put forward by boards to do as best they can to encourage students to complete high school. What better way to aid those boards, what better signal to young people than to have a statistic like this: 80 percent will complete high school in Alberta’s Promise, that’s backed up by the Premier. I think that by making that kind of a statement, we make an important cultural statement, and we start to establish some norms. For many students it’s taken for granted that they will complete high school and go on to some form of postsecondary education, but for other students that’s not the norm. They come from some subcultures and often from backgrounds where completion of high school is just not taken for granted, and I think that this could go some way in terms of, as I said, creating the norm that you must complete high school and that that has the support of the community.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I’d conclude. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I move that we adjourn debate with respect to Bill 1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Stevens: I move that we rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

I would ask Mrs. Marjorie Sande, a former classmate that attended high school and wife of a farm family in the Lomond area, and her sister to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Natural Gas Prices

Dr. Nicol: Yesterday through an application filed with the Alberta

Energy and Utilities Board, ATCO indicated that it would like to charge $8.58 per gigajoule for northern Alberta customers and $9.52 per gigajoule for southern Alberta customers. When compared to this month, that's a 19 percent increase for those in the north and a 26 percent increase for those in the south. This is a full $3 to $4 above the $5.50 trigger price in the price protection act. To the Premier. Yesterday the Premier stated that Alberta was the only province with a Natural Gas Price Protection Act. How will Albertans benefit from being the only province with a price protection act, one that will not trigger when they're faced with an average 24 percent increase in their bills next month?

Mr. Klein: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the application, as the hon. leader of the Liberal Party pointed out, is before the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, and it is up to the board as to whether those rate increases will prevail or will be approved. Secondly, we don't know at this particular time how those increases, if they are approved, will fit into the overall average and whether they will result in the achievement of the trigger price of $5.50 a gigajoule. If it triggers the $5.50 on an annual prorated basis, then I assume that consumers will be eligible for the rebate.

Dr. Nicol: Given that other provinces have natural gas price protection built into their legislation, why not invoke the act and give Albertans the same protection that other provinces get?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy respond, but I don't know of any other jurisdiction that has built-in protection for consumers relative to natural gas prices.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, while we were listening to the Premier's comments, the Leader of the Opposition said, "Long-term contracts," which I guess means the ability to hedge or undertake a contract. In fact, that legislation will be brought before the House at a future date during this session where we will give Albertans the opportunity, as they have expressed, to contract both natural gas and electricity on a short basis, on a long basis, in combination with the two, and perhaps in combination with furnace-cleaning services, with other types of services. So these options will go forward, and they will add to what is already the best and most unique price protection program in Canada today.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. Your minister has just talked about this as a future for Alberta, where they can get these kinds of long-term protections that other provinces have now. Our only protection is your price protection act. Why will you not have your government show some compassion for low-income Albertans and give them price protection right now?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister pointed out, legislation takes time. You just don't snap your fingers or wave in the air and say: it shall be done. It requires legislative changes, and as the hon. minister pointed out, that legislation will be introduced this spring session.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. In fact, if we were to go back to the debate in 2001, we'd see here that the leader of the opposition party says:

We have to make sure that price level we're going to protect is contingent upon and tied to the price we use in the budgeting process for revenue generation and revenue estimation within the province.

That's exactly what we're going to do.

In fact, the critic from the opposition also stood up during that debate and said: "This could wind up costing us billions of dollars. What criteria will determine who gets a rebate? . . . Albertans are going [to have] to pay for this." We have to be very, very careful here, and we are. There is a very good program in place. It's unique in Canada, and it will protect Albertans at a point when it triggers into effect.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, there's a difference between being cautious and careful and being protective.

Utility Costs

Dr. Nicol: Most of us in Alberta are able to make budget changes in order to pay the high cost of utilities caused by deregulation. However, Albertans with low incomes are being forced to choose between heat and food. To the Premier: how is this government going to ensure that citizens don't have to make the choice between heat and food next month?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that's a very insensitive and irresponsible statement to make. First of all, the legislation we have relative to the natural gas rebate program is unique in Canada. No other jurisdiction has that kind of legislation in place. Secondly, the hon. minister will be introducing legislation as it pertains to how gas companies purchase their gas and budget for that gas relative to the consumers.

Mr. Speaker, the cost of food, the cost of electricity, the cost of natural gas: it's an ever increasing thing, and the hon. member knows that. What we try to do through various government programs is to shield low-income Albertans from rising costs, whether those are rising costs in food, rent, gas, electricity, clothing, or any other commodity. That's what we refer to as social safety nets: to help those in society who truly need help.

Dr. Nicol: The safety net doesn't work if you don't trigger it, Mr. Speaker.

To the Minister of Seniors. Some seniors living in subsidized housing are telling us they now have to pay separate bills for utilities that were once included in their rent. Is there any program in place that the minister can use to help them when they now are being faced with increased utility bills in their subsidized housing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The key words in the comments were "subsidized housing." Some of the rents do include utilities; some of them do not. Along with the subsidized housing program, we do have the seniors' benefits program, and although that program does not go directly to utilities, people who are currently receiving cash from the Alberta seniors' benefits program can apply for special needs to help them with onetime expenses of a specific nature. In doing so, that also alleviates some of the problems, and hopefully they can meet their ongoing obligations with a bit of ease. We currently monitor the situation and keep track to ensure that we don't have anybody falling through the cracks, and I would stress to all members here and to people listening that if you know of seniors who are suffering undue hardship, please let the department know or contact my office.

Dr. Nicol: My next question, Mr. Speaker, is to the minister of human resources. Many SFI and AISH recipients, when threatened with utility disconnection notices, must use all available resources before accessing onetime emergency assistance through your department. Does "all available resources" include any kind of a cut into their food budget or their rent, or what other aspects do they have to deal with before they can trigger the support through that utility program in your ministry?

Mr. Dunford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're entering our second year of providing assistance to Albertans when disconnect notices are received. As a matter of fact, the amount of Albertans' money that we used last year in order to do this was $1.6 million. We have no forecast at the present time as to what might be involved this year, but an Albertan that receives a disconnect notice on, really, either a natural gas or electricity utility can come forward, can seek assistance through our department. We, of course, have screening mechanisms, and we have entitlements that must be met, and we'll continue to be as flexible as we can to help as many Albertans as we can.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Foster Care

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A statement of claim has been filed with the courts that alleges that a mother was sexually abused while in foster care and that in January of 2001 her daughter, also in care, suffered burns, broken bones, and lacked proper medical treatment. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that the minister is in a conflict of interest protecting the reputation of the department while also needing to legally represent children who may have suffered while in the care of that department, will the minister follow the advice of successive Children's Advocates and establish an external review panel to investigate and compensate proven victims?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of allegations – allegations – in a statement of claim that has been filed in the court but not yet delivered to me or to any of the other officials that have been identified in the statement of claim, the hon. member has chosen today to give us a release that really, effectively, damns the system, and I find that offensive. I find it offensive on behalf of those families that are involved.

In their release they state that we haven't paid attention to the previous Children's Advocate relative to an external review committee. Almost immediately we acted not with an external review committee but with changes to the CWIS so that immediately if a child is hurt by anybody in any place in any circumstance and they are in care, it is flagged on the CWIS and is immediately directed to the Children's Advocate so that the Children's Advocate has immediate access to absolutely every situation that could result in a thorough investigation of the claim that the child has been hurt in any way. We have made a technological improvement that is extremely positive and is working well.

Mr. Speaker, I think that, further, the hon. member is aware that we've had a John Doe case representing 429 alleged cases that's still not back from the courts with any decision on that. When it is, it may cause us to review it again, but presently this system is working extremely well. The advocate appears satisfied, and we have frequent meetings and regular reportings. More importantly, as soon as a child is hurt, someone is there to follow up and investigate on their behalf.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the minister is willing to place details of children up for adoption on the Internet, has she opened the files of those 400 children in the Calgary lawsuit?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I will not divulge all of the preparation by the government in terms of the cases, but there was a very thorough review done. It was presented in the courts, and we are waiting for the results of that court case.

I think the bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that I have to believe that the hon. member opposite would like the same thing that the government would, and that is children safe and well protected and due diligence on their behalf. We have initiated this past year, this fiscal year, a complete review of the foster care system. We've had phase 1 of that review done. The things they're asking for in their release are a day late and a dollar short.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: does the department follow the national guidelines for foster care in Canada, which includes providing legal representation for children in care?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in the statement filed I noticed some very severe allegations relative to whether or not we act in the best interest of government or in the best interest of the child. The mission of this department is to act in the best interest of the child. In almost every case this government exceeds all of the Canadian standards relative to child protection, child care, and representation for children who are injured.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Growing class sizes, crumbling schools, school board deficits: these are the real-life consequences of the government's education policies. The government's mindless refusal to fund the arbitration settlements, cuts in plant operation and maintenance grants, and the imposition of a cap on grade 10 credits are creating this crisis. More and more school boards are speaking out about the disastrous consequences of the government's shortsighted policies. My questions are to the Premier. How can the government claim that there is no financial crisis in our schools when yet another school board, Red Deer public in this case, is sounding the alarm about deep cuts in programs and staffing?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have the opportunity to travel the province and do that on a number of occasions quite frequently, and nowhere have I seen the kind of situation described by the hon. leader of the third party. We don't see crumbling schools. We don't see kids going without. What we do see are good stories, wonderful stories about what is happening in our education system.

You know, if this hon. member would get out from under the dome, if he would examine what is really happening in the education system, he would see that the eighth annual biology competition was written by 5,300 eligible contestants at 408 schools across Canada in April 2002. Three Alberta schools rated in the top 10 schools in the country. These schools were Old Scona academic school in Edmonton, which took first place, Western Canada high school in Calgary in fourth place, and Ross Sheppard high school in ninth place out of 408 schools across the country. Alberta's Travis Murdoch . . .

1:50

The Speaker: Perhaps, hon. Premier, we can get to chapter 2 a little later.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If everything is as hunky-dory as the Premier claims, why are Elk Island, Red Deer, St. Albert Catholic, Edmonton public, and a growing number of parents, many of them in my own constituency, finding it necessary to speak out about the crisis in their schools, thereby risking punishment from the Premier's government? Is the Premier seriously suggesting . . .

The Speaker: Hon. leader, you can't have four questions in one preamble.

Mr. Klein: To carry on, he named eight schools, and I'll name one school, and that's Alberta's Travis Murdoch of Salisbury composite high school in Sherwood Park. He placed among the top 10 students in this competition, and he tied for seventh place, Mr. Speaker. So, obviously, there's a school that's doing a wonderful job.

We can talk about the almost 6,000 students from across Canada who participated in the seventh Canadian Open Mathematics Challenge in November 2002, and the top contestants in a region are named provincial champions. The gold medal honours for Alberta went to Peter Zhang of Sir Winston Churchill secondary school in Calgary. Obviously, that school is doing a very good job.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How much more do class sizes have to grow, how many teachers have to be laid off before the government takes meaningful action to address the growing financial crisis in our schools?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we obviously have taken action. We are obviously continuing to take action because, for instance, success in mathematics is nothing new to Alberta students. Alberta students consistently achieve at the top levels around the world, and that was demonstrated at the 2002 International Mathematics Competition in Glasgow, where a gold medal was awarded to Alexander Fink of Queen Elizabeth high school in Calgary and a bronze medal went to Robert Barrington Leigh of Old Scona academic high school in Edmonton. These two Alberta members were on the six-member Canadian team. In other words, one-third of the Canadian team came from Alberta. It couldn't be all that bad.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Alberta Supernet

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government's high-speed network project, Supernet, is scheduled to be completed soon. However, it was recently brought to my attention that there is a legal dispute between Bell West and its subcontractor Axia NetMedia Corp. which could cause delays. My constituents are looking forward to having their libraries, schools, and hospitals connected with Supernet but are wondering how the dispute is affecting the project. My questions are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. What is the status of Supernet construction in the province?

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, imagine if you were a student in Rocky Mountain House that wants to take a class in Red Deer and have a live discussion over a distance of 85 kilometres. That's happening right now because of the Supernet connection.

But the hon. member is correct. There are some time lines in place that we have built into the contract to build Supernet. Our business plan calls for some performance targets to be met, and we are currently not meeting those targets precisely, and the 2003 year is going to be a pivotal year in order to complete this construction on time.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister: what assurances can the minister give my constituents that the project will be completed on time and on budget?

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do have a contract in place, and our primary contractor, Bell West, is under contractual obligations to complete the build of the network by the end of the year 2004. We intend to hold Bell West to that contract and are working with them diligently to ensure that this year, 2003, we proceed quickly on the build schedule, connect our libraries, connect our hospitals, our schools so that we can deliver services to Albertans over the network.

Mr. Johnson: My final question to the same minister: what effect, if any, is the lawsuit between Bell West and Axia NetMedia having on the Supernet project?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, there is a commercial dispute between Bell West and Axia currently before the courts, and you know that I can't comment on that dispute. But what I will say is that my responsibility is to the people of Alberta to make sure that the network gets built and, secondly, more importantly, once it's built – because it will be built – to make sure that services are delivered over that network, because that is where the real value of Supernet is going to take place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Enron Natural Gas Rebate

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago during the provincial election this government played loose and fast with the taxpayers' money, and now, two years later, whenever we have another price spike in natural gas, this government is being very, very mean. My first question is to the Premier. Now that the Premier has had 24 hours to look over the public accounts documents, can the Premier please explain to the taxpayers of this province why a grant for three-quarters of a million dollars was given to Enron two years ago?

Mr. Klein: I'd be glad to explain. Mr. Speaker, I'm surprised. No, I'm not surprised, because it's so typical of the Liberals not to tell the whole truth. I'm not saying that they're lying. I'm just saying that they don't tell the whole truth. They issue a one-page document which shows that Enron was the recipient of a gas rebate.

Enron acted as a supplier under the natural gas rebate program. They had one customer, Boardwalk Equities. From Land Link's records it would appear that 13,699 living units were assisted under the rebate program through Enron. In other words, that was through Enron to the company called Land Link to 13,699 either individuals or families living in those units, providing natural gas to Boardwalk Equities and all their customers. This number was submitted early in the program when Land Link was still considering payments per residential unit. Since all of these living units are in commercial buildings, they were then switched to the $6 a gigajoule rate at the end of January. Land Link is not sure of the actual number of living units. It might be higher. The total amount paid to Enron was $1.181 million, not the three-quarters of a million, as a matter of fact more: $756,954 in March 2001, $509,220 in April 2001, and a $10,978 payment based on the final reconciliation in December 2001.

That is all the information I got but perfectly legitimate. Enron was a corporate entity at that particular time representing the interests of over 13,000 Albertans in living units who were deserving of a rebate at that particular time in accordance with the policy set down by the government. If this hon. member has any problems with that, then stand up and tell those 13,000 people that they ought not to have received rebates.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: if it was good enough then for the residents of Boardwalk Equities to receive a rebate, why are you being so mean with them now?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we are not being mean with them. As a result of that rebate program and in order to end the ad hoc-ism relative to rebates, we put in a piece of legislation that says that when the annual average reaches $5.50 a gigajoule, then the rebates will kick in. It was there to provide certainty relative to the protection of consumers.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: what good is giving rebates after the price of natural gas is above $5.50 for perhaps a period of time of up to a year when Albertans can't afford to pay their bills now?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is wrong. That is not true. Albertans can. Everyone in this Legislative Assembly, I'm sure, can pay their bills. Thousands upon thousands upon thousands of Albertans can afford to pay their bills. The bills on average – on average – are lower than in any other jurisdiction in the country. Any other jurisdiction in the country.

I am sick and tired of the Liberals telling Albertans how bad it is here. You know, they talk about, "Oh, well, it's better in Toronto," or "It's better in Montreal." Well, Mr. Speaker, when the opposition compares households in Quebec or Ontario with households in Alberta, the comparison should be fair, but they've never been known for fairness. Never. They've been known for political trickery; that's all. They have never been known to be fair.

Where would you as a taxpayer prefer to live? Edmonton or Montreal? Edmonton or Toronto? Right now monthly electricity bills in Edmonton are about $1 higher than in Toronto. Right now. Today. [interjection] I'm saying that right now they're $1 higher in Edmonton than they are in Toronto, and, yes, they are about $20 higher in Montreal, but Quebecers pay a 7.5 percent sales tax which results in about $1,700 in higher taxes a year for a typical two-child Quebec family. When you factor in higher fuel prices in Quebec – and they are higher – and when you factor in higher property taxes and when you factor in higher income taxes and other higher costs in Montreal, the two-child family in Montreal is paying over $3,500 more a year in taxes and fees than the two-child family in Edmonton, which is 14 times more than the savings they enjoy over Edmonton on electricity bills. So let's be fair about it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Federal Research and Innovation Funding

Ms Graham: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed does have the floor.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions this afternoon are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Last week the federal budget announcements included some $2 billion for innovation and some $3 billion for sustainable development and environmental initiatives across the province. Based on my involvement with the Alberta Research Council and the Alberta Science and Research Authority, I'm interested to know whether the minister has been able to determine if Alberta will be able to utilize any of this new funding for our priority areas of ICT, energy, and life sciences.

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, in September 2001 provincial ministers along with our federal counterpart met and agreed that as a nation we needed to move Canada's research intensity from 15th place in the world to fifth place in the world. Our own throne speech last week continued to reinforce our commitment to our life sciences strategy. It continued to commit our efforts to the Energy Research Institute strategy, including a coal demonstration plant, and the money that has been identified through the federal budget, which, incidentally, came down the same day and, as the member has pointed out, was in the neighbourhood of $2 billion, will be money that we will be able to use to help us achieve our objectives in Alberta.

Ms Graham: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the same minister. It's my understanding that nearly one-quarter of the innovation money, some 500 million dollars, has been designated for the Canada Foundation for Innovation, or CFI, and it is to assist research hospitals with their infrastructure, so I'm wondering if we will be able to use this to help us build those centres for health research that have been on the books for four years both at the U of C and the U of A.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, something that we are very proud about in Alberta is the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, and over the years of its existence we have contributed over $700 million into research in that area. The member correctly points out that both the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta have proposals in to expand what they call the health research innovation centres. The initiative is something that we as a province support, and as money becomes available, we will make these things happen and continue our excellent reputation of research into those areas.

Might I just comment, Mr. Speaker. One project that we are world renowned for is commonly known as the Edmonton protocol, which is research into the islet transplants for the cure of diabetes or the management of diabetes. It is a real breakthrough and something that we are very proud about in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Graham: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question, again to the same minister. The minister has referred to our own throne speech from last week where it was declared that we intend to accelerate our Alberta energy research strategy. So, again, has the minister been able to determine if we can utilize any of the $3 billion to help boost our efforts in this regard?

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all Albertans to actually log on to the Innovation web site and actually read the strategic thrust that we have with our Energy Research Institute. They really cover five main areas: managing carbon dioxide, increasing the value of bitumen, burning clean coal, improving oil and gas recovery, and finding alternative energy sources. Our challenge is going to be to make sure that the contribution that we get from the federal government will in fact go towards the initiatives and the priority areas that we've identified as a province.

Swan Hills Waste Treatment Facility

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, from January 2001 to March 31, 2002, Swan Hills waste treatment plant lost $9.5 million, and at least two-thirds of last year's revenue came from waste trucked in from outside Alberta. Furthermore, this government plans to keep operating and dumping cash into this environmental liability and has confirmed this fact by signing a long-term contract with Earth Tech (Canada). To the Minister of Infrastructure: why does this government even consider negotiating much less signing a contract with a subsidiary of a company that is on shaky financial ground, has settled claims involving Enron-esque accounting practices, and has former officials facing civil fraud charges?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, anybody that cares about the environment will be very pleased with the agreement that we have just signed. It allows that plant, which has done a tremendous job of cleaning up toxic waste in Alberta, to continue to operate and to be in business for at least another 10 years, cleaning up and helping the environment.

But getting directly to the hon. member's question, in fact we checked with the Securities Commission before we went into this agreement. They found no problem with the company. We checked with other people that may be interested in the financial situation and the integrity of the company and found no problem. So as far as the incident with some of the top officials of the parent company in the United States it has no impact on the company in Alberta. As a matter of fact, they have a great presence in Alberta currently and right here in the city of Edmonton. They operate the plant that the city of Edmonton built in conjunction with TransAlta a number of years ago, the plant that processes all of the waste from the city of Edmonton. They're doing a tremendous job, and the city of Edmonton finds it very successful.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why does this government throw good money after bad at an outdated facility like Swan Hills when there is cheaper, safer, and on-site technology for waste disposal available from companies like Eco Logic Inc.?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, it's very obvious that that member and, I believe, that party, because I've had questions on this particular facility from them before, must not be interested in protecting the environment. We on this side of the House are interested in preserving the environment and, in fact, enhancing it. Swan Hills has processed over a hundred thousand tonnes of toxic material from Alberta. They've also processed pretty well all of the PCBs that will be found in Alberta. When you look at that record and consider what would have happened to those toxic materials had Swan Hills not been built, I really wonder who's concerned about the environment. Us or them?

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that Eco Logic Inc. has much newer and better technology than what's available at Swan Hills, when will this government start putting taxpayers ahead of moneymaking opportunities for multinational corporations, and when will they shut down Swan Hills?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's certainly our desire and plan to keep Swan Hills operating, and as long as there's waste generated to be treated and to protect the environment, we hope that we can continue to operate that plant. But the fact is that we just went through a process dealing with multinational companies and one that is a major multinational company in the world looking at toxic waste. They looked at it all over the world. It was very interesting. They came back and said to us that the Swan Hills plant is the best in North America.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I and my constituents in still struggling Edmonton-Norwood continue to be concerned about the amount of crime in our neighbourhoods. It's a problem that seems to be growing with no end in sight. My question is to the Solicitor General. What is the government doing to address the high amount of crime committed in low-income areas such as my constituency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's no question that police and communities are facing a number of challenges with crime in their areas. We're dealing with gangs, we're dealing with violent crime issues, we're dealing with cybercrime, we're dealing with child pornography, right down to vandalism and property crime. The best way to address these problems is working with the police and involving the community in crime prevention at a local level.

One of the things that I've seen that has been very successful is having community leaders get together to meet with the police and discuss their local needs and problems and work on them together. My department does provide support to help police and communities work together on crime prevention. The community mobilization program has supported more than 200 projects in Alberta since 1988, and this year $2 million will be going to community-based projects.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's very encouraging.

To the same minister: has the government ever given any consideration to all areas, including to the taxpayer, initiatives such as possibly a prisoner exchange with jurisdictions such as Russia so the prisoners and lawbreakers would really reconsider breaking the law twice?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, while I understand the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood's frustration, I'm not sure that that's the answer. Alberta's correctional facilities are not Club Feds. Our conditions at our provincial prisons are spartan: we have small, black-and-white TVs; we have no pool tables; we have no access to the Internet. All our inmates must do work to give back to the community. If they are not ill or if they're not enrolled in a program, they're out working. Serving time in Alberta provincial prisons is punishment enough.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These initiatives are very encouraging, and hopefully we can continue to work together.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Protection for Persons in Care Act Review

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. An MLA committee is currently reviewing Alberta's Protection for Persons in Care Act. The act now provides a mechanism to investigate claims of abuse or substandard care for adults in publicly funded care facilities, including hospitals, nursing homes, and lodges. My questions today are to the Minister of Community Development. Can the minister tell us when the report is being publicly released?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is indeed a very important piece of legislation that comes under my charge. I'm happy to tell you that the MLA for Cardston-Taber-Warner with the co-chair from Edmonton-Norwood have consulted and met with a number of individuals, stakeholders, you might say, from across the province. That report is being prepared, and we'll be considering it very shortly.

Ms Blakeman: Could the minister answer why the committee wasn't charged with establishing standards of care?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, when this bill was first brought in, in 1998, by the hon. Member for Highwood, it was understood then that it would be approximately a five-year process to see how it worked out. We are attempting very much here to improve what is already a fairly good bill, but I know that the consultation process yielded some excellent recommendations and suggestions because some of the individuals inputting into that process did contact me directly, and I did meet with a few of them. So the member will just have to be patient a little while longer, and she'll get all the answers in the forthcoming report and the recommendations. I can assure you of that.

Ms Blakeman: The report he still hasn't said is being released.

Given that including failure to provide reasonable care in the definition of abuse may increase complaints, is this government considering the creation of a special court equipped with investigators or an ombudsman to deal with senior abuse issues?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we'll have to wait and see what we can do. I'm equally concerned, as I know the member is and as are all members in this House, about the care for seniors and for all those members who are in a publicly funded, in whole or in part, facility. I can tell you that we receive upwards of 400, 500, 600 complaints of alleged abuse. They're all looked at very thoroughly, very carefully. Our intention here is to try and strengthen those particular preventative circumstances from occurring in the future, and we will do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Natural gas prices have returned to their record highs of two winters ago. In fact, ATCO's March gas rate of $8.58 per gigajoule is only slightly below the January 2001 rate of $8.77 per gigajoule, which precipitated the $150 per month rebates. All told, home heating costs are up 62 percent in just three months. To the Premier: with power bills almost doubling and home heating costs up 62 percent in this the coldest season of the year, how the heck does the Premier expect Albertans, especially seniors and others on fixed incomes, to pay their utility bills this winter?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I've explained so many times in this Legislature that we do have a unique in Canada piece of legislation, that provides consumer protection down to $5.50 a gigajoule when the yearly average reaches that amount. I would also point out to the hon. member that this is more generous than any other jurisdiction in the country, that natural gas prices on average throughout this province are lower than any other jurisdiction in the country. I also pointed out that we do have very generous social safety nets for those people who are facing higher costs relative to food, clothing, shelter, gas, electricity, and any other commodity. This is not a bad province in which to live, especially if you are in the low-income range, with the variety of programs that are available to assist low-income people.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if this rebate program is so generous, can the Premier please explain to people that are paying high gas prices why they're not getting a nickel?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, why they are not getting a nickel is because the average price of gas is below $5.50 a gigajoule. When the yearly average reaches that amount, then that will be the trigger point.

Mr. Speaker, I know that I painted the Liberals as being not entirely truthful in their assertions.

Mr. Mason: But we're worse. [interjections]

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, to repeat what he said, just for the record, he said, "But we're worse." He took the words right out of my mouth.

Mr. Speaker, what they like to do is compare. There was a time not so long ago, when the former rebate program was in place, when indeed some consumers in this country paid absolutely nothing – absolutely nothing – for natural gas. I can tell you that relative to electricity relative to my condo in Edmonton – and I felt quite guilty about it – I paid absolutely nothing for one solid year. So, yes, people are upset when they compare this year's bill to the same bill last year, when they were receiving the benefit of rebates. Then I can see why people would be very upset. You know, I think that if the hon. member is to be honest and is to be reasonable about it all, he would go out and point this out to consumers, but I don't think he will.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The government only offers free gas in election years. Why has it changed its policy from letting easterners freeze in the dark to making Albertans freeze in the dark?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to know of any Albertan who is freezing in the dark. Please, bring that case to my attention, and I will make sure personally that it is looked after and those people are looked after. I want to know.

This hon. member has made a statement, and it is not within the rules of parliamentary procedure to tell lies in the Legislature. He has said or implied that people are freezing in the dark in this province. I want him to back that statement up or stand up and apologize in this Legislature.

Alberta Treasury Branches

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The time has come for Albertans to think seriously about the future of Alberta Treasury Branches. I'd like to talk about why I believe that it's time that our government consulted with Albertans regarding the possibility of privatizing or selling the ATB.

ATB was created in the 1930s by a Social Credit government eager to help Albertans fight the devastating effects of the Great Depression. At that time banks in rural Alberta were shutting down, and the government used ATB to provide financial help to Albertans, especially rural Albertans, who were feeling the effects of a severe depression. For the next 60 years ATB worked hard to serve the financial interests of both rural and urban Albertans.

However, the mandate of our government is much different than that of the Alberta government of the 1930s. Instead of seeking interventionist solutions to business problems, we let the market run its course and intervene only when the well-being of Albertans is affected. Moreover, while it is true that some charter banks are closing branches in rural Alberta, this does not mean that they are nonexistent in these communities. In fact, many charter banks retain local representatives, who work out of their homes or in partnership with other local businesses. As well, loans and other financial services can be accessed over the Internet or by telephone, and banking can be done through local ATM machines. Further, the presence of credit unions is only getting stronger in rural Alberta, so to suggest that rural Albertans will have no place to do their banking if ATB were privatized is just not true.

Today Treasury Branches provide more than half a million Albertans with a broad range of financial services including personal banking, commercial banking, loans, and mutual funds. These services are provided in 144 branches and 130 agencies in both urban and rural Alberta. Simply put, ATB is a full-scale financial services organization that competes with charter banks and credit unions to provide first-rate service to Albertans. On top of all this, ATB is in great financial shape right now. The economy is strong, and ATB is posting impressive numbers.

It is clear to me, Mr. Speaker, that ATB has become much more than a reliable alternative to the charter banks and credit unions. ATB has become a major player in its own right and an attractive asset, that this province could sell for a healthy profit. If this province were to sell ATB, we would reap a great benefit, which could be used to pay down Alberta's debt or to fund health, education, or any other number of services that Albertans desire. In my view, the time to enter this discussion is now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Shane Homes/Ernest Manning High School Learning Partnership

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency of Calgary-West a very unique, successful P3 has developed since 1997. It's a private/public partnership in learning between Shane Homes and Ernest Manning high school. It's not a P3 involving infrastructure or the school building. It engages students and the private sector and the staff in learning inside the building.

For six years students and Shane employees have been working together to design, construct, finish, decorate, landscape, and market several new homes. Students involved in the building construction and drafting and design learn all aspects of the home building industry from Shane's team of professionals. The partnership has created four homes over the years. Griffin Manor 1, 2, 3, and now 4 – Griffin is the school's mascot – are slated to be open in April in the new Calgary-West community of Cougar Ridge.

In addition to giving students a hands-on experience, Ernest Manning has secured more computers equipped with CADD, computer-assisted drafting and design software, a must-have in the industry. Like many students, Shane Wenzel, vice-president of sales and marketing, had a difficult time deciding what career path to follow. The partnership takes some of that pressure away for students by exposing them to a true work environment. The homes created through the partnership are built at cost – and this is where building comes in – with the proceeds from the sale of each going to the Ernest Manning Griffin fund. Shane also pays royalties to the fund every time the student-designed floor plan is used. To date Shane Homes has donated $45,000 to the fund.

This partnership is a fantastic hands-on learning opportunity that enriches the lives of students and encourages joint community effort and funding for school-based activities and programs. Key stakeholders, including planners, politicians, and entrepreneurs, who would readily dismiss the notion of infrastructure P3s would surely benefit from learning about the success of the Shane Homes/Ernest Manning learning partnership. It is a business venture and a win/win for all involved.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

School Councils

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the beginning of public education in this country parents have been closely involved in the school system as parent/teacher associations, through home and school associations, or, more recently, through school councils.

School councils in their current form were given their mandate in the mid-1990s. Alberta Learning has even prepared a school council resource manual, which among many things describes the roles and responsibilities of school councils. Among their roles it says: "The school council may advise the principal on any matter relating to the school . . . It may similarly wish to advise the school board [or] Alberta Education." Among the responsibilities that Alberta Learning recognizes for school councils is to "actively represent the views of the school community and become as influential as possible." Mr. Speaker, I genuinely hope the school councils in Edmonton-Riverview and across this province really do become as influential as possible, for in the past month I've met with 13 school councils, and if they are at all representative of other school councils in Alberta – and I suspect they are – then public education in this province has a powerful, passionate, and determined advocate.

Several things have been impressively consistent across my meetings with school councils. First and foremost, parents are profoundly committed to public education, recognizing that it not only serves their children best, it serves all of society best. They are also deeply concerned about threats they see to public education in Alberta: programs being cut, classroom sizes growing, resources disappearing, and buildings deteriorating. Parents are demanding that school councils lead the way in fighting for public education. To do this, school councils must be able to communicate openly with all parents in their schools and in a nonpartisan manner.

Mr. Speaker, today I am asking school boards and the Minister of Learning to respect school councils' right to communicate and to listen carefully to what they are saying. Above all, I'm here to praise and commend the school council movement across this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Goods and Services Tax

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have been hearing a lot lately about frustrations with Ottawa for a variety of reasons. One of the main causes for this frustration has been the GST. It is easily the most hated tax in the country and is often cited as a reason to separate, but I have always wondered about this. It seems to me that the GST is just about the only tax in this country that's never been raised. That's primarily because it is visible. Who would dare to try and raise such a visible sales tax, a VST? So following this principle, maybe we should make all taxes visible if we really hated taxes and wanted to stop tax increases.

Frankly, we have the opposite case now: a plethora of HSTs, hidden sales taxes, that are being raised all the time because we don't know about it. In fact, this game goes so far in this country that it seems to me that some political movements have based much of their platform largely on opposition to the GST while other political parties seem to be out fleecing the angry by promoting other false solutions to lower taxes such as first demonizing capitalists and then raising business taxes to great fanfare knowing that the people are cheering only because they think their own personal taxes will be lower as a result. It is poppycock, of course. Any tax, levy, or additional burden placed on any business of any kind is really just another hidden sales tax by proxy because that cost is expected to be immediately passed on to the consumer in the higher prices of goods and services. The businessmen get the blame while bureaucrats get the booty, but we pay and pay either way.

Heaven forbid that any government should try to lower business taxes as we have done, which, of course, would just result in lower consumer prices and more economic development. Now, why anyone would be opposed to that, I don't know, but they are.

I think it is high time we start talking in this country not just about how much we are paying in taxes but how we are paying those taxes. For those who hate the GST, I suggest that they carefully examine the downsides of all other forms of taxation first. They will find that the GST is the least of all evils, I think, and at the very least it's certainly not a reason for breaking up the country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Clerk: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the Office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Mar, Minister of Health and Wellness: pursuant to the Regional Health Authorities Act, section 14(3), Capital Health Authority Annual Report 2001-2002.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time for the convenience of all members of the Assembly I would like to table two documents. The first document is a publication from the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, and it's Natural Gas Prices in the North American Market.

The second tabling I have this afternoon is a memo from the Human Resources and Employment minister to the hon. Premier and all hon. government members of this Assembly. It's dated February 4, 2003, and it's a public relations exercise to help them get around the utility disconnect notices that are going to go to AISH and SFI recipients as a result of the dramatically high utility prices in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. Last week in my response to the throne speech I mentioned several arts groups which had shut down, and I've since had an e-mail from one of them announcing that it in fact has resurrected itself. So I'm tabling five copies of their note and a poster announcing their next event, which is Mile Zero Dance, the 2nd Annual Dance Lab Open Forum.

My second tabling – slightly delayed; I apologize – is the five copies of the program for the inaugural gala of the Davis concert organ which took place at the Winspear Centre last September. This organ was partially funded with a generous donation from Dr. Davis in memory of his wife. Excellent, excellent performance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I have two tablings today. The first is the required number of copies of a letter from the Northern Oilfield Contractors Association to the Slave Lake Chamber of Commerce. This is outlining their concerns on the ongoing difficulties that they are having doing their business on Crown land here in the province.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a copy of the program from the north division station grand opening ceremony, a new police station in northeast Edmonton that will serve the constituents of northeast Edmonton for many, many years to come. This took place on January 16, 2003.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a media release issued by Red Deer public schools to table today. The release is about the looming staff reductions and class size increases which will result from a million-dollar shortfall that the school board is facing. The chair of the school board, Ms Jefferies, expresses her frustration by saying, "It's a terrible shame that this province, with all its wealth, cannot seem to find adequate funding for the education of our children."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a letter from Mr. Rolf Lehmann dated February 24, 2003, addressed to the Premier. Mr. Lehmann is very concerned with the tremendous rise in natural gas prices. He draws the Premier's attention to his election promise to shield Albertans from prices rising above $5.50 Canadian and is requesting the Premier to send him his rebate.

The Speaker: Additional tablings?

Hon. members, before calling Orders of the Day, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two individuals in the members' gallery. They are Trish Vandermeer and Samuel, the lovely wife and handsome son of our esteemed colleague from Edmonton-Manning. I would ask that you would join with me to give them the traditional welcome of this Assembly and if they would please rise.

Thank you.

head: Second Reading

Auditor General Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move second reading of Bill 11, the Auditor General Amendment Act, 2003.

The Auditor General Act was originally passed in 1978. Apart from some minor changes it has not been subject to any significant amendments since. Our new Auditor General, Mr. Fred Dunn, has requested these amendments to add clarity to his role. The first proposed amendment, which is on page 1, number 2, of the bill, would provide for a statutory oath of office similar to other officers of the Alberta Legislature. Information in the custody of the Auditor General should not be disclosed outside the provisions of the Auditor General Act. Having a legislated requirement for an oath of office would help ensure that client information obtained by the Auditor General remains confidential.

The second amendment, which is on page 1, number 3, of the act, corrects a drafting error in the original Auditor General Act. Replacing the references to the Lieutenant Governor in Council in section 10(2)(b) with the Executive Council and the President of the Executive Council respectively would make this section consistent with section 17(2), where the Auditor General can perform special duties at the request of the Executive Council.

Next up is a housekeeping amendment that is on page 2, number 4, of the act to replace the reference to Provincial Treasurer with the Minister of Finance and remove some unnecessary wording. There are also a few other places later on where Provincial Treasurer is updated, on pages 9 and 10.

The fourth proposed amendment on page 2, number 5, has several matters dealing with the access to information. Section 14 currently gives the Auditor General needed access to information to complete audits for all organizations where he is appointed Auditor by statute; for example, government departments, regulated funds, and provincial agencies. It is proposed that section 14 be amended to provide this same standard right of access to audit information and duty to co-operate with the auditor for other organizations where the Auditor General is appointed the auditor as permitted under section 11(b) of the Auditor General Act rather than the statutory requirement. In addition, section 14 would also be amended to clarify that the Auditor General has appropriate access to information to fulfill other duties he has under the act, such as section 15, to review the results of a Crown-controlled corporation's audit.

Section 14 should also be amended to ensure that it applies to former public employees, public officials, and personal service contractors. The section would also be amended to ensure that any information provided to the Auditor General during an audit, examination, or special duty should be privileged and not subject to disclosure. Again this ability to maintain control over confidential client information allows the Auditor General to properly consider and vet his recommendations and reports before they are disclosed to the public. The Auditor General should not be compelled to disclose confidential audit information in any court proceeding.

The next amendment on page 3, number 6, of the act would be a proposed section that the Auditor General may compel any individual possessing information relevant to any audit or special duty of the Auditor General to attend before the Auditor General and answer his questions under oath. The Auditor General is the only legislative officer who does not have the power to compel evidence under oath. This amendment would bring us in line with the rest of Canada.

Next, there are amendments to section 17 on page 5, number 7, of the act to clarify the mechanics of how an Auditor General's report on a special duty is to be presented to the Assembly. To date there has not been any problem in tabling these special reports, but the amendment just clarifies the process for the future.

Finally, on page 5, number 8, of the act the amendments clarify how the Auditor General would distribute a report to Members of the Legislative Assembly when the House is not in session. Again, while this has not been a problem in the past, the amendment would add certainty to the process in the future.

This package of amendments will assist the Auditor General in his role and contribute to our commitment to openness and accountability. I urge all Members of the Legislative Assembly to support this bill, the Auditor General Amendment Act, 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to see this bill come before the Assembly, or at least certain parts of it. It's long past time to see it, so I commend the government in having followed through on the recommendation of previous auditors general to in fact make these changes.

Just a couple of questions that I'd like to raise and comments that I'd like to make as we look at this bill in second reading. I heard the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview mention that there was contemplation of having the Auditor General have to sign an oath similar to other legislative offices. My question is: why similar to? Why not exactly? And how many of the other legislative offices are already required to do this, and which ones are not? That's just a small bit of information, and because the government has more resources than I do, they can do the work to find out the information.

I'm wondering what the concern is in asking that the Auditor General not disclose any information received by his office under this or any other act. What's the concern? Is there a concern about speaking to the media? I'm assuming that it's covered that he can report through the Public Accounts Committee. I know that the government puts these things in for a reason, and I'm looking more specifically for the reason behind that particular change.

The second question I had. I'd like to know the history and the context of changing the section in which it talked about special warrants, and what's been omitted is "for the fiscal year in which the special warrant is signed." That's now being omitted from the act, and I'm questioning why that's the case. It doesn't refer to the fiscal year. It simply says that they would be regarded as a supply vote, and I'm curious as to why that has been done.

I'm pleased to see the addition of the Crown-controlled organizations or other organizations. One presumes this is going to include some of the delegated administrative organizations over which the Auditor General is the auditor and see the inclusion of those into the act. Finally. We've been waiting for that one. Also the distinction of having "present or former . . . employees, public officials or personal service contractors" also captured in the net of those who the Auditor General can ask for explanations from. It's also capturing those same former or present employees from the Crown corporations and other DAOs. Again excellent. Really glad to see that.

I think that the most important change that's been proposed in this piece of legislation is the ability of the Auditor General by notice to require any person to come before him to give evidence under oath. This was sadly lacking and much commented upon in the West Edmonton Mall scenario, and certainly the previous Auditor General had made it pretty clear that he felt he needed to be able to do that and was not able to. Along with that is being able to compel the production of written documents, records.

There's quite a bit in here about contempt of court, that it's regarded as a contempt of court if a witness fails to appear or fails to produce the records that are being asked for. Excellent. I think that if we're going to be serious about this, then the legislation has got to have the teeth in it to do it. It does exclude previous auditors general from being called to give evidence relating to any record or other information obtained by them when they were performing the job. So there are some cases, I think, that we're never going to know about.

I was hoping that a couple of other areas might get changed along with this. The Auditor General reports to the Public Accounts Committee, which is, of course, an all-party committee of the Legislative Assembly. My long-standing concern there is that the committee has historically restricted itself to meeting only while the session is sitting, and as we're having fewer and fewer sitting weeks, we have fewer and fewer meetings in which we can meet with the Auditor General and as a committee scrutinize the public accounts of various ministries. So this year I expect we'll get through about 11 out of some 24 ministries, which I think is a concern, and I continue to press for accommodation to be made for, in fact, both the Auditor General to be able to complete his job and for the committee to be able to complete theirs.

The way we have the Public Accounts Committee in Alberta is shared by only one other in Canada. That's where we go through ministry by ministry. All the other provinces and territories work with their Auditor General and members of the opposition and members of the government to choose the issue they want to examine. Then all of the witnesses and the information are culled together, and the committee meets to scrutinize a particular issue or series of issues. We don't do that in Alberta, and we may want to consider being able to do that in certain circumstances.

The other issue that I wanted to raise around the Auditor General and its relationship with the government was my concern over the number of times an Auditor General is having to repeat a recommendation before the government is in fact accepting it. If you look through the Auditor General's report, even the most recent one, 2001-2002, between pages 11 and 18 it lists all of the numbered recommendations that are appearing in this year's Auditor General's report. Now, the numbered recommendations are the most important ones. If you actually read through the document, which I highly recommend, there are additional unnumbered recommendations, which the Auditor General is careful to point out they'd still like to see done, but they're not tracking the performance of whether, in fact, they are reacted to. But they're most clearly wanting the government to both react to and implement the numbered ones.

I am really surprised by how many there are that are reading: we again recommend that the department of so and so; we again recommend timing of approvals. I mean, I haven't counted this, but in each department up to 50 percent of the recommendations have not been implemented by the government. You know, if we're going to go to the effort and the commitment as a Legislative Assembly to put an Auditor General in place and charge them with certain responsibilities, it seems to me that we should follow through on the work that the Auditor General then provides to us. To, I think, waste the time of the individual and the office to have to keep repeating and re-explaining what's desired is not a good use of that set of resources. So if the government is looking for a way to save some money, perhaps if they just implemented some of these recommendations, we wouldn't even need such a large Auditor General staff.

So I'm looking forward to the responses to the questions that I have raised. As I say, I'm, I think, the longest serving member now of the current Public Accounts Committee. I've been on it seven years. [interjection] I know; it is a badge of courage. I am very pleased to see these changes being implemented, particularly the ability to compel witnesses and require records and information to be produced and the inclusion of the Crown corporations and other agencies. Up to now there's been a belief or an understanding or a desire that certain agencies would be looked at, but, in fact, the Auditor General had no way to compel the organization to work with them, so this really is capturing everyone. Now if we could just get consolidated reports, which include things like the universities and the schools and some of the other recommendations the Auditor General has been making to the government for some time, then we'd be in much better shape. But I'm quite pleased to see this legislation, and with the exception of the few questions and concerns I've raised, I am happy to support this bill, which is Bill 11, the Auditor General Amendment Act, 2003, in second reading, and I know that a couple of my colleagues wish to speak to it as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 11, Auditor General Amendment Act, 2003, in second reading. I just want to preface my comments on the bill by simply observing that something like this has been far overdue. I'm glad that some action is being taken to pay attention to some of the recommendations that have come forward from the Auditor General's office in the past.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The record with respect to how the government has responded to the recommendations that come down from the Auditor General has not been encouraging in the past. I just look at the percentage of recommendations that received a positive response and action from the government. Starting in 1994-95, 8 percent of the recommendations received any attention from the government; the following year 11 percent; in 1996-97, again 11 percent. Then things begin to improve a bit. I would like to acknowledge this. In 1997-98 35 percent of the recommendations received some attention – no, not yet implemented. Sorry. I want to correct myself. The record has worsened, actually. In '98-99 44 percent of the recommendations received no attention from the government. In 2001 67 percent of the recommendations received absolutely no attention. In 2001-2002 80 percent of the recommendations had not been implemented by the government. So it's not a very encouraging record. That's the context in which this House is looking at Bill 11.

Bill 11 does take a few steps forward. Therefore, for that reason and for those aspects of the bill which show some movement forward, I will be supporting those sections of the bill. The most important one, of course, is the recognition here that the Auditor General needs to have the powers to compel witnesses to come before the Auditor General to provide information that is deemed appropriate or necessary by the Auditor General.

The ATB/West Edmonton Mall inquiry that the then Auditor General was requested to undertake showed a very glaring difficulty and problem with the existing legislation in that it revealed that the Auditor General had no powers to compel evidence that is of critical importance in sorting out the allegations and the matters of concern to Albertans, to the public, to this Assembly. So the then Auditor General expressed his frustration for not being able to do the job that he was asked to do because of the weaknesses and the gaps in the existing legislation with respect to the powers of the Auditor General. So that one shortcoming of the existing legislation will have been addressed if and when this bill becomes a law and is passed through the Assembly and receives royal assent.

There are some other matters which are quite routine housekeeping types, you know, that have been taken care of because of the changes in the titles of the ministers. The Finance minister is in place of the Treasurer. The changes which have been made are routine. They don't really require any debate. I'm glad that that housekeeping is being done as we speak.

I draw attention to Section 14.2, Noncompellable Witness, I think on page 4 of this bill. That raises some concern in my mind as to the reasons behind excluding from the list the former Auditor General and employees of the office of the Auditor General from being compelled if necessary in the judgment of the current Auditor General to come before the Auditor General and give evidence. I think the public interest would be served best if the Auditor General is in fact given that ability to compel former Auditor Generals or employees of the Auditor General's department to be witnesses. So I need to really hear some sort of explanation and, indeed, a defence for the exclusion of the list of people under section 14.2. I'm not convinced that that's a desirable feature of Bill 11.

The fact that we're making some progress in terms of implementing some recommendations and particularly this critical one, as I said, you know, the ability of the Auditor General to compel witnesses to come before an inquiry held by the Auditor General, is certainly a positive step forward, and I want to congratulate the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for including that in this bill. I will have an opportunity for closer scrutiny of the bill as we move into the study of this bill in committee, and I'll be considering making amendments to address the concerns that I have or may have from a closer reading of the bill at that point.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, I close my remarks for the moment. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a great deal of encouragement and hope when I see the bill the Auditor General Amendment Act, 2003, as introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Now, anything that can be done to improve the scrutiny or the means of scrutiny that the Auditor General would have over the expenditures of this government I think is noteworthy and should be supported by all hon. members of this Assembly.

Now, the idea that the Auditor General must take an oath of office before beginning his or her duties I guess would have merit. It certainly would have merit, but I don't know if it is truly necessary that the Auditor General take an oath. When you look at how much work the Auditor General has to do, I suppose taking a few minutes of his or her time to take an oath is harmless.

When you consider that this is a government that has increased spending – and this is supposed to be a fiscally responsible, prudent government – by 50 percent in just short order, that would be one reason why the Auditor General has his or her work cut out for them. Look at the increase in the cabinet portfolios; we've gone from 16, I believe, to 24. And, you know, with the expansion of the cabinet portfolios you also see the expansion of the deputy ministers, the assistant deputy ministers, this person, that person, so it increases the workload. There's no doubt about it. When you have this combination of increased spending and increase in the size of government, then anything we can do to strengthen the position of the Auditor General must be supported by all members of this House.

Now, sometimes we forget just exactly what the role of the Auditor General is, but from my perspective on the Public Accounts Committee one can see firsthand the important role the Auditor General has in the affairs of this province. We can go through and we can debate a budget, and the money can be spent, and some people forget about the amount of money that's being spent and how it's being spent, but not the Auditor General of Alberta and his staff. They work very hard, and the result of their hard work is, of course, the report that's issued usually in the fall from their office respectively talking about each and every department.

Mr. Speaker, when you look at just precisely what the Auditor General would do – let's have a look at Infrastructure. The Auditor General, of course, will go through every department, but let's specifically look at Infrastructure and Bill 11 here as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. If it could help out the Auditor General in just one small measure in the annual look at how money is being spent in the Department of Infrastructure, then, again, let's support it.

Earlier this afternoon we talked about energy rebate programs and the role of Enron. Enron Direct Limited Partnership received a grant from Infrastructure of $756,000. I was pleased to learn the details of this from the Premier, but the Premier, Mr. Speaker, may have been confused in rolling one fiscal year into the other. Either that or there was a restatement of balance sheets, because from three-quarters of a million dollars the figure was, I believe, $1.6 million or $1.46 million. It was in the din of question period, and it's difficult to hear the other side, but there was a different amount. Certainly, if that's not the correct amount then the Auditor General will check all that out and determine that this money went where it should have gone. One needs to be assured and have the confidence that that energy rebate program went to where it was intended.

The hon. Government House Leader is anxious to participate in the debate here.

When we look at the energy rebate programs and what was said by the Auditor General in his last report, it's quite interesting. Certainly, I appreciate the information as it was given this afternoon by the government. It's one of the very few times that I've had the opportunity of asking a question and I actually got a detailed answer. It's a historic day, Mr. Speaker.

Energy rebate programs. I'm going to quote, Mr. Speaker, from the Auditor General's report.

During 2000-2001, the Ministry introduced the Natural Gas, Propane and Fuel Oil Rebates program as well as the Market Transition Credit Program. The total expenditure for these programs during 2000-2001 was $790 million. Payments in the fiscal year 2001-2002 to the end of July totaled $197 million. The natural gas, propane, and fuel oil rebates were given in respect of the four-month period January to April 2001.

Now, the Auditor General mentions in here that a consulting company was engaged "to administer certain elements of the program," and there was an audit done of the expenditures from the natural gas, propane, and fuel oil rebate program. The Auditor General recognizes here that the program was ending. However, there were some recommendations and observations made. These recommendations "reflect principles of good business practice and should be considered in the design and administration of any new program," and I can only imagine that what must be holding up the natural gas rebates program now is the government trying to get a good handle on this and following the Auditor General's recommendations so that they can make sure that every penny – every penny – goes to those who are in need of it and qualify.

The Auditor General is recommending that "changes to grant criteria be approved in writing by the Minister prior to any grants being paid pursuant to the changed criteria." The Auditor General is also recommending that the ministry "keep minutes of meetings to provide evidence of decisions and prevent loss of knowledge that could be useful in other programs." Now, this report goes on to say – and this is why it's so important that we strengthen the role of the Auditor General in this province, and this is why I'm going to support the hon. member's bill.

The Minister of Infrastructure issued two Ministerial Orders delegating to certain Ministry officials the authority to pay the natural gas, propane and fuel oil rebates according to the criteria attached to those Ministerial Orders. While the Ministry was putting the program into effect, it identified a number of issues that resulted in changes to the criteria. The Minister did not approve these changes in writing until May 16, 2001, when amended Ministerial Orders were issued. Accordingly, any grants made before the change criteria were implemented on May 16, 2001 (when they were officially implemented by the Ministerial Orders) were unauthorized to the extent that they were inconsistent with, or in excess of the limits prescribed by, the criteria in the original orders dated February 12, 2001.

For the hon. Government House Leader to somehow think that my questions earlier regarding Enron were out of order or whatever – I mean, whenever you look at the Auditor General's report, perhaps I'm not diligent enough in my work and perhaps I should have had an opportunity to ask many more questions regarding this rebate program and who got the money. Certainly, the Auditor General is very, very concerned, and we need, each and every one of us, to take this annual report home with us. I can be quite confident that this is on the Minister of Infrastructure's best-seller list and he certainly does read the Auditor General's report page to page, cover to cover. I would encourage not only members of Executive Council but all hon. members of this Assembly to keep a keen eye on what the Auditor General is telling us in the annual report.

Now, the Auditor General also has some comments regarding the monthly reporting process for utility companies. The Auditor General recommends that the Ministry of Infrastructure establish an appropriate monthly reporting process for utility companies to ensure that payments to consumers comply with Ministerial Orders and expenses are properly recorded in the accounts.

The majority of the rebates that occurred before were paid to consumers through monthly billings of utility companies. One only has to look at the public accounts. It's another document that makes for a great read, and I can't wait for the next year of public accounts documents to be tabled in the Assembly by the hon. Minister of Finance. They're very interesting reading, and they're an accurate snapshot of where every tax dollar in this province is going. I don't know how, for instance, the Canadian Taxpayers Federation or the Canadian Federation of Independent Business feels about this, but I think that if they are not, they should read those public accounts in great detail.

When we look at the rebate program again and we realize that the ministry made advance payments to utility companies – the system of internal control did not monitor payments by utility companies – and we find out that the minister is developing an audit process to check the validity of payments made by utility companies, I certainly hope that process is finished and we can look for some sort of price protection for Alberta consumers. I'm sure the department has complied with the Auditor General's recommendations here and we can have a rebate program for those Albertans who are not as fortunate as us in this Assembly, who receive yearly increases in our annual salaries, and particularly those people on fixed incomes can look forward, under the guidance of the Auditor General, to a natural gas rebate program.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, the time has run out.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I listened very intently to the hon. member as he went on about the gas rebate program and how it all evolved and the very important role that the Auditor General played in the auditing and the comments that the Auditor General made, but the hon. member's comments would tend to have one believe that there was something wrong with the payment to Enron and that it somehow didn't fit. Now, I would ask the hon. member if in fact he is indicating that there was some money going to Enron that they were not entitled to and that the homeowners that received that money via Enron were not deserving of those funds, as he seemed to be indicating.

Mr. MacDonald: I guess that commentary was posed as a question, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker: Yes. Under Standing Order 29 we have five minutes.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Certainly, if the hon. minister had been listening carefully to what I had said initially, firstly, in the fiscal plan that has been outlined in the public accounts that ended in March of 2001, Enron received a payment of three-quarters of a million dollars from the Department of Infrastructure. Now, the Premier earlier today in question period indicated that that payment was well over a million dollars, and in the noise that was going on here in question period I could not determine if it was $1.4 million or $1.6 million or whatever the amount was, but the amount was certainly greater than this. I gave the Premier the benefit of the doubt in my remarks because I thought that surely it must have been over two fiscal years because public accounts ends from one year to the next at the end of March. We'll only have to wait and we'll see what occurs next year, and perhaps there will be an additional $750,000 or $600,000 to Enron Direct Limited Partnership in the public accounts. I'm willing to wait. I'm willing to have the patience in that measure.

As far as the whole energy rebate program goes, it's the Auditor General that has questions, and I believe the Auditor General has every right to question and to observe what they audit in a minister's department. The Auditor General is pointing out some very valid concerns. I certainly hope that before the next energy rebate program comes – and I certainly hope it does come – all the wrinkles that were in this first program are ironed out. Surely you've had time since we've seen the price spike in natural gas rebates to do something about it.

Thank you.

Mr. Lund: As a follow-up to my original question I believe the hon. member is the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, and he certainly just indicated that either he is not doing his job as chairman of Public Accounts or their money is being wasted. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that there was more than one cheque to Enron, and anybody that knows anything about the program knows full well that there were a number of payments in the program and then at the end of it there was a reconciliation of all of the accounts done to make sure that in fact the money went to the people that were entitled to the funds. Of course, the comments that the Auditor General made are very valid, and we take their comments very seriously and do rectify any areas that the Auditor General might think are wrong.

So I guess my question to the hon. member would be: does he see any value in continuing this exercise of public accounts?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, I certainly see a validity in public accounts, and I would be willing to share with the hon. minister . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, unfortunately, the only time that we've allocated is five minutes for this Standing Order 29, and that has left us.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close debate.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to thank the opposition for their comments and questions in regard to Bill 11, the Auditor General Amendment Act, 2003. The questions will be answered I guess in Committee of the Whole, and thanks again for your positive comments. I urge all members to vote in favour of this legislation, and I call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

Bill 8

Health Foundations Act Repeal Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister for Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1996 we enacted the Health Foundations Act at the request of health authorities so that they could set up agent of the Crown foundations to help them with fund-raising. These foundations allowed health authorities to take advantage of federal tax incentives for donations to the Crown. Those tax incentives were removed by the federal government in 1997. All of the foundations are now disbanded, and the regulations that established them have already expired. So Bill 8, the Health Foundations Act Repeal Act, removes this obsolete legislation from the books. Bill 8 does not affect other health authority fund-raising bodies. The regional health authorities foundations' regulations are outside of the legislation that is being repealed by this amendment act. Under the regional health authorities' foundation regulation regions will continue to operate their own foundations, and they will continue to operate foundations that the former hospital districts had established under the Hospitals Act. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I ask this House for support for Bill 8 with the confidence that this support will not affect regional fund-raising efforts.

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure now to adjourn debate on this.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 4

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 4, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned at the introduction of this bill, this is a fairly straightforward bill that primarily has to do with housekeeping amendments to the act to bring it into conformity with federal legislation.

Members, if I could just take a few minutes to go through a little bit of information on the act, then I'll be more than happy to answer any questions that arise, if any, during the committee stage of debate.

Hon. members, the proposed amendments do the following: clarify rules for calculating the tax liability of various individuals, clarify that total gifts claimed in Alberta for a year are equal to the amount claimed federally for that year, ensure that Albertans receive the intended amounts for the royalty rebate, and increase the equity of the tax system by ensuring that residents of other provinces are not treated less fairly than nonresidents of Canada.

Section 6 amendments clarify rules for calculating the tax liability of various individuals, including ensuring that nonresidents are only taxed on the taxable income they earn in Canada and simplifying the rules for calculating the tax liability of deceased individuals. A number of amendments are consequential to changes in the federal act and are required as a result of the tax collection agreement. Other amendments, in particular those made to sections 1, 5, 38, and 39, are consequential to the amendments to section 6.

Section 11 amendments clarify that the total gifts in any tax year for provincial purposes are equal to the total gifts that are claimed in that year for federal purposes.

Amendments to section 25 are consequential to amendments that were made to section 48, the minimum tax provisions, in the spring of 2002, and amendments to section 48 resulted in the value of royalty tax rebates for minimum taxpayers being smaller than intended. The amendments to this section will rectify this situation.

We also want to ensure that residents of other Canadian provinces will receive the full political donations credit and royalty rebate. Currently the legislation allows nonresidents to claim the full amounts of these credits but only allows residents of other provinces to claim a prorated amount.

Finally, amendments to section 42 will clarify the order an individual must use when applying for various credits to their tax liability.

I ask members of the Assembly to support Bill 4. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I have two questions, please, for the hon. Member for Medicine Hat, and the first is in light of the comments from the Minister of Infrastructure.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, the provisions of Standing Order 29 don't apply to the mover. I recognized you to speak on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, goodness. I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I was just anxious to ask some questions.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do have a few brief comments here on Bill 4, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2003, and I do thank the hon. Member for Medicine Hat for sponsoring this particular bill. As he has mentioned, the object of this bill introduces amendments to provincial legislation to bring it into harmony with federal personal income tax legislation.

Just by way of background to Bill 4, Mr. Speaker, there was an Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act that was passed as Bill 21 during the session in the spring of 2002. This bill added a subsection (6), dealing with the provision for taxing Canadians who live outside of Alberta a proportion of the taxation year, to section 6, Amount of Tax Payable, of the original act.

Now, then, as well, Mr. Speaker, the majority of amendments being presented in Bill 4 are modifications to the existing act for the purpose of clarifying the language, making this act consistent with the federal act, and making this act consistent with itself. Because of its nature and because it is a housekeeping bill, we certainly will support this bill.

I would also like to note in the discussion here today, Mr. Speaker, that there are only two significant changes found in Bill 4. The first change is that subsection (7) is added to section 6, Amount of Tax Payable, and the additional subsection outlines how the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act should be read in the case of an individual who died during the calendar year. In that case, taxes will be calculated based on income earned during the taxation year.

Now, as well, a second significant change to Bill 4, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2003, is a change to section 39, Business Income in Alberta. This section, Mr. Speaker, falls under division 5, Restrictions on Credits, and Bill 4 removes political contributions and royalty tax rebates from the calculation that determines the maximum amount that can be deducted under various sections in the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. This change will likely impact the amount available for deductions.

Now, then, as well, Mr. Speaker, there are other matters that this particular bill does introduce and does speak about, but these are quite minimal and really should not require an awful lot of debate, and I do look forward when we do get into Committee of the Whole to make some more comments at that time.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll cede the floor to any others that wish to make some comments on Bill 4. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, just for your clarification the five minutes allocated under Standing Order 29 do not apply to the first two speakers. They apply to subsequent speakers.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, are you rising to speak on the bill?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief at this time. I have two questions in regard to Bill 4, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2003, for the hon. member, and if they're answered in committee or in the routine of the debate, that's fine.

Earlier in the hon. member's remarks the member stated that we have to ensure that Albertans receive the intended amounts for the royalty rebate, and I am hopeful that we could get a clarification on this, please. What precisely are we talking about here to ensure Albertans receive the intended amounts for the royalty rebate? If I could get some clarification on that, I would be very grateful. Also, in regard to I believe it's section 39, how will this change, if at all, the way political contributions in this province are dealt with?

Those are my questions, and in the normal course of debate, Mr. Speaker, I certainly will await an answer. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in now.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat to close debate.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've listened to the comments and questions of the members who have spoken on this bill, and while I could probably answer most of the questions today, I think it's probably most appropriate to wait until the bill comes back to the House in the committee stage, and I'll have much more detailed answers prepared.

At this point, then, I would ask that we call the question on Bill 4.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

Bill 9Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate February 24: Mr. Cardinal]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This bill was introduced very briefly last night by the minister responsible. At this point my understanding is that there is support in principle for the bill. It has three purposes: to mandate a unique identifier code to help with the tracking and enforcement of exploration projects, equipment, and companies; to allow inspectors of exploration projects to increase their scope of work. It allows the adoption of codes from other industries into the exploration regulations, and it's also allowing the minister to issue stop orders. So this amendment is really only dealing with the exploration part of the larger Mines and Minerals Act. As I said, we're expecting to support this, although there are a few reservations that have been brought forward.

It does give some good clarification of the act, and it's also giving sharper teeth to the enforcement of the act. If there's one thing that I hear about sort of consistently in this area from my constituents is that they don't understand why something would happen and why no one knew about it, and a big part of that is monitoring and enforcement. I know that when the government looked to lay off a number of government staff to have smaller government, I don't think people recognized that the first people to go would be those frontline staff who provided the monitoring and enforcement work for the department. So I'm pleased to see that there is a stronger enforcement coming back in here with more power going to the inspectors and also allowing the minister to issue stop orders if necessary. It is also mandating, as I said, the unique identifier code, which should benefit again the monitoring and enforcement and the administration of the act.

Where we have issues with the amendment is the automatic adoption of codes from other industries, which we think could be problematic. There are too many references to regulations which are not spelled out. The contents are not known. So we're saying: well, we'll happily accept all of this, but what exactly are we accepting, and what's in the other regulations that are being linked to this or added on or accepted?

There is an additional concern that the minister is empowered to exempt almost anything from the act and its regulations. I would hope that the government wouldn't take this to the extreme, but it has happened before where we have a minister that can exempt virtually anything, then they do, and I think that that rather undermines the purpose of the whole act. So we have to be very careful about how that power is used. I think there's a positive side to what's being proposed here. We just have some reservations about the escape clauses, the ability of the minister to exempt things, and this inclusion of references to regulations from other industries into these exploration codes.

There are a number of sections in the bill that are mostly house-keeping, which is appropriate. I know that the government has been attempting to go back and look over its legislation and try and update it, and that's a very positive thing, I think. Certainly, I've been one to complain in the Assembly before that the legislation is antiquated in some cases because nobody has ever checked it or updated it. So I'm pleased to see that there is some updating here, a bit of house-cleaning and housekeeping going on, things like updating the name and including the name of the former act where it needed to be. That sort of thing needs to come through the Assembly, but I recognize that it is, in fact, just housekeeping.

There are sections here that talk about giving the cabinet consent to reconsider "decisions of the Minister [regarding] this Act, the regulations or an agreement." This is not a major change, but it is an explicit reference to the ability of cabinet to reconsider the decisions as the next logical step after reviewing the decisions. So reviewing the decisions of the minister.

We're also looking at changes that allow the minister to exempt operations being defined as exploration rather than devolving this power to a regulation. So we wonder why any operation would be allowed to be exempted from their rightful definition of exploration, but it's not that big an issue here. I think the real issue is: why is the power being given to the minister rather than to the regulations? Shouldn't these decisions be accountable to cabinet?

We have some tweaking of words in certain sections. I do notice that in one subsection the minister is being allowed to "exempt a person who proposes . . . exploration from the requirement" of operating with an approved exploration program. We're wondering why. I'm looking for justification from the government on this change. Surely, if there is a person who is proposing an exploration, they should be operating within an approved exploration program. Why would they be separated from it or exempted from it? So I'm looking for why this has been brought forward and proposed.

I'm just looking to see if we have any other really explicit concerns, and I'm not seeing that many. As I say, I think it's a good idea to update it, to clarify the language, certainly, to allow for stronger monitoring and enforcement, and I'm particularly pleased to see the stronger enforcement provisions, but I do have concerns whenever we've got a minister that can operate unilaterally, particularly to excuse an individual or a company from the requirements that everybody else is expected to conform to. That becomes a question of equality then, and in understanding the government's constant talking about level playing fields and free market forces and all of that, I think the point is that it's supposed to be an equal opportunity for everyone to compete and thrive. But if you start taking some organizations or individuals off to one side and saying, "You get special treatment because you don't have to conform to this particular regulation," then we've got a problem. It has to be pretty clear why that agency or individual is being allowed not to have to conform. I think it should be public and well publicized if there's a good reason for doing this, but I've yet to hear the explanation from the government as to under what circumstances or situations they would be expecting to make use of that particular provision in the legislation.

Now, I know that our critic is looking forward to making additional comments on this as soon as she is available to do so, but at this point I'm happy to have had the opportunity to speak briefly in second reading on Bill 9, the Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, 2003.

Thank you.

3:50

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One has a quick look at Bill 9, the Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, 2003, and certainly there are questions for the hon. Member for West Yellowhead and the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne. One looks at this, and one has to wonder if these changes are being made to accommodate the further development of the diamond industry in northern Alberta, and perhaps this would even be of some assistance in accommodating potential development of the coal bed methane industry in this province.

Now, I have questions regarding this legislation. When you think that the Minister of Energy is talking in the newspapers about diamonds being his best friend, certainly it's not electricity prices and deregulation. We see the success of the diamond mining industry in the Northwest Territories and some of the potential for development here, the enthusiasm the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne has for that industry to develop north and a little bit east of Whitecourt. I certainly hope that this establishment has not become a victim of globalization, but at the Blue Ridge tavern there are some regulars there who have for 20 years predicted that diamond mining will be a viable industry in this province, Mr. Speaker. I certainly hope that they are right.

Getting back now to coal bed methane, I don't know if this bill is addressing this specifically or not. It is difficult to develop coal bed methane where there are large holdings of private land. If someone on the government side of the House could explain the definition of private lands here and if this definition is an attempt to iron out the difficulties there will be for coal bed methane production.

[The Speaker in the chair]

In southern Alberta there are certain companies doing testing on coal bed methane production. I was hoping at one time to visit one of those test sites, but my hopes were dashed when the public relations person from that company said: "Thanks, but no thanks. We don't want to see you there on our property. You can certainly meet with some of the people or talk to them by telephone."

Ms Blakeman: Did they run you off?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, they didn't exactly run me off; they didn't invite me, in the first place, to run me off.

They were lukewarm to the idea, and I was sort of disappointed because I thought that the more anyone knows about the development and the potential of coal bed methane in this province, the better off all parties would be. Certainly, this was top secret, as far as I was concerned, and I thought: oh, well, if you're going to be that way, I'll just go to the Internet. I did, and I was surprised to learn of some of the success stories of coal bed methane and some of the problems.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if Bill 9 is the legislative route to deal with those problems. Certainly, when you consider what we can do here – and I'm not suggesting for a minute that the Minister of Energy or any other minister in this province, as a matter of fact, would adapt codes that are used for the production of coal bed methane in the Powder River basin by our neighbours to the south. Water is just drawn off those coal bed methane deposits and left on the surface. Now, the hon. Member for West Yellowhead may think that that's a good idea, but I'd bet many of the constituents out there would not, that water just left on the surface. It's not working out in America, and I can't see how it would work here. But there may be a good potential use for that water, and that would be to enhance oil recovery. We've discussed this in this Assembly before.

If we were to simply adopt the code that is occurring in the Powder River basin, I think we would be looking at an environmental nightmare, but perhaps this government has other plans and they've got some sound solutions to the problem of that water just being left on the surface. A large percentage of that water cannot be used for anything, really, because, unfortunately, it has virenum, it has mercury, and it has traces of arsenic in it. So to leave it on the surface is not the answer, even though you can in the short term get this increase in natural gas production through the use of the coal bed methane.

I'm told in estimates debates here last spring that 8 percent of America's lower 48 production is coming from coal bed methane, and it looks like we're going to have the same potential here. With a little bit of research and thought I think we may be able to avoid some of the mistakes that have been made to the south of us as far as the environment is concerned. Now, if the intent of this bill with these amendments to the Mines and Minerals Act is to facilitate the further development of the coal bed methane industry, well, then, certainly that has merit.

Mr. Speaker, when one also considers the diamond industry in this province, and if it's in its infancy, as has been suggested by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, then it is something that we have to foster and encourage but not for one moment at the sake of the environment. I have the same cautions that were echoed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and that is that one would have to keep an eye on the discretionary powers that have been left to the minister. Ministerial power has been known, unfortunately, to be not in the interests of all those concerned.

With those questions regarding the Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, Bill 9, I shall cede the floor to another colleague of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, my understanding, sir, is that you've already spoken. Is this not correct?

Mr. Bonner: To Bill 9? No, I haven't, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: No? Okay. My information is wrong. Please proceed.

Mr. Bonner: This is to speak. If there are questions with respect to . . .

The Speaker: First of all we're going to deal with the questions that would be in order. Are there questions for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak to Bill 9, the Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, 2003. It is a bill that is sponsored by the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, and I think it's a very timely bill, particularly, in fact, for the reasons that were outlined in a letter that I tabled here today by the Northern Oilfield Contractors Association.

We are having these difficulties in northern Alberta right now. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has indicated, with the potential of huge diamond mines in northern Alberta – certainly their geologic exploration has indicated the presence of kimberlite, which of course is the ore from which we mine diamonds. Kimberlite is present in a number of areas in northern Alberta, and certainly for the benefit of all Albertans and particularly the residents of northern Alberta I think it is essential that we do have some type of legislation in place which is going to try to eliminate the problems that we currently are encountering in northern Alberta. I know that all parties that are involved with these difficulties are certainly working hard to come to some sort of a reasonable solution that will benefit all parties.

When we look at Bill 9, the Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, it does have a number of highlights which I think are very proactive, which will certainly give guidelines to the people who are going to be putting in the effort and the companies that are going to be developing sustainable resources in the province. It will be proactive to the point that, hopefully, a lot of difficulties will be eliminated and the development of these resources can continue uninterrupted.

One of the highlights that I was particularly glad to see in this piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, was that this will allow for the mandating of a unique identifier code that will help the monitoring and tracking of exploration projects and equipment. In the sparsity of northern Alberta this would certainly be a great asset.

Now, then, as well, this particular bill will allow inspectors unencumbered access to exploration sites. Certainly, for the benefit of many concerns that we do have surrounding exploration sites, this will give Albertans a knowledge that people are on the scene that will take care of all safety and environmental concerns that they have.

As well, I see that Bill 9, Mr. Speaker, allows the adoption of codes wholesale into regulations, and once again we see that this will allow certainly a pretty tightfisted approach when it comes to the monitoring of what is happening. This bill will also allow the minister to issue a stop order on exploration projects. Once again, I think that this is a very good highlight of the bill. Any time these inspectors do come up with irregularities that they are not in support of, in this particular case it will allow the minister the power to issue a stop order on exploration projects.

Now, then, I see a couple of other highlights here. This bill will delegate much power to unknown regulations, and once again I do have some concerns when we start putting a lot of legislation into regulations. Certainly, at some point many of these should be debated on the floor of this Assembly, and all parties in the province should have knowledge of them. As well, I would like to hear additional debate, Mr. Speaker, and certainly further clarification on the highlight that this particular bill has provisions so that the minister can exempt pretty much any project from regulations. That to me raises a red flag, that we do have to have a situation where we do not have these types of powers in the hands of one particular person.

When the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was going through the bill, she did some analysis, and there were a few points that she was unable to make. I would like to continue where she left off, particularly under section 6(a). We are a little confused as to what is really going on in this particular subsection. Certainly, once we do get into Committee of the Whole, we will have the opportunity to get greater clarification, so I won't go into that too far at this point. There is no easily discernable subject of the sentence, which makes it virtually impossible to interpret. It would appear that cabinet will make regulations "respecting the research, testing, authorization or approval" of products described in the regulations.

Essentially, Mr. Speaker, the government is setting up a program which would have far-reaching powers as to what techniques and encryption can be used for exploration in Alberta. You know, this again gets back to a discussion we had during question period today as to: what do we do when it comes down to technologies? We see, for example, with hazardous wastes that we have old technologies which use incineration, and certainly that is not a state-of-the-art type of procedure for disposing of hazardous wastes. There are newer technologies in incineration, and we would like to see that they would be included in this particular bill and that any minister would not be able to say which technologies are used and which aren't.

As well, in section 6(b) we want to look at whether or not this subsection should allow the government to make regulations regarding the use of UINs. These unique identification numbers, I think, in some ways are definitely a very reasonable provision for the implementation and for their use here in the province.

Now, then, as well, I see that in section 6 there is just some housekeeping in section (d). Under (e) this breaks up section (j) in a manner corresponding to section (c) in the amendment. So there was no substantive change here. Section (f) delegates to cabinet the power to set the powers and duties of a person conducting an investigation or inspection and the responsibilities of those being investigated. This certainly makes sense, and I'm glad to see its inclusion in the bill.

One other point here under section 6 that I would like to discuss is (g). This particular clause repeals the clause that cabinet may make regulations respecting the exemptions of operations from the exploration part.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, I certainly think that Bill 9, the Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, is a proactive bill. I think it is something that all contractors are going to be quite happy to see, and I think that by putting these regulations into effect and these laws into effect at this particular time, it will serve us well as Albertans down the road.

I thank you very much for this opportunity to make some comments on Bill 9.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should there be questions for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on this subject.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

Bill 6

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise to move Bill 6, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

Members will recognize that it's been somewhat customary for us in the last number of years to bring forward modest amendments to a number of justice statutes in one bill, and that's the nature of the Justice Statutes Amendment Act today, which proposes amendments to the Judicature Act, the Petty Trespass Act, the Trespass to Premises Act, and the Young Offenders Act. I'll take a moment to go through and talk about each of those proposed amendments.

The Judicature Act. The definition of judicature in the Oxford dictionary is: the administration of justice or the judiciary. So it's obviously an act which deals with the administration of justice. In any event, Mr. Speaker, the amendments that are provided to that act in Bill 6 relate to two separate areas.

The first is with respect to section 32(a), where the bill proposes to strike out the masters and judges from that section. Now, that section 32(a) deals with the appointment of judges and masters and essentially provides that the Judicial Council may "consider proposed appointments of persons as masters, judges and justices of the peace and report its recommendations to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General."

I'd just report to the House that for the past three years we have had a two-stage process in place with respect to the appointment of Provincial Court judges, and that, of course, came into effect after a report that was done by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, a review of the appointment process and the court process which recommended that there be a committee, which was subsequently established and called the Provincial Court Nominating Committee, to allow for public input into the selection process. So the process, essentially, since the inception of that committee has been a two-stage process.

First of all, applicants who wish to be considered for the provincial bench sent their applications in and were interviewed by the Judicial Council. For the record the Judicial Council as set up in the Judicature Act is comprised of the Chief Justice of Alberta or a designate, the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench or a designate, the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court or a designate, the president of the Law Society of Alberta or a designate, and two members appointed by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Once interviewed by the Judicial Council, recommendations are sent forward as to whether the candidate is recommended, highly recommended, or not recommended, and those that are recommended or highly recommended go on a list. Their application remains open for three years, and they could be appointed from that list.

Well, as I indicated, when the process was changed and the Provincial Court Nominating Committee was established, there became a second stage to the process. The nominating committee essentially consisted of eight members appointed by the minister, and these eight members represented the geographic diversity of the province and brought into the process an opportunity for the public to be involved in interviewing and helping to select candidates for the bench so that the public's interest could be represented in the process. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that in the three years that I've had the honour of serving as Minister of Justice and Attorney General, the process has worked exceedingly well. So why change it?

Well, it is a cumbersome process, and it's a process which is a bit redundant because of the two committees that need to hear from an applicant. So what we're doing and what this rather modest amendment to the Judicature Act allows for is to take the Judicial Council out of the process but in essence merge the same type of membership with the existing Provincial Court Nominating Committee process so that we have both representations on one committee. This will allow us to establish a single Provincial Court nominating body, which will fulfill the functions which are currently carried out by the two bodies.

Although it's not in the act, I can advise members that the new body will consist of up to 11 members, will include a chair appointed by the minister, will include the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench or designate, the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court or designate, the president of the Law Society or designate, and up to seven members to be appointed by the minister. By increasing the number of people on the committee, ensuring that more than 50 percent of the members are added through ministerial appointment, there will be greater public involvement in the new body and will allow for a balance that reflects the demographics and the regions of the province. The authority of the minister to appoint the chair and seven other members ensures that the public interest in the judicial selection process is served.

Mr. Speaker, there's often been comment and discussion about how judges are chosen and whether there ought not to be some public review process. We are regaled from time to time with the opportunity to see a process in the United States where a Senate confirmation committee gets to grill somebody on their background. That whole process was reviewed by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed's committee and, I think, quite rightly came to the determination that while there ought to be a process for public involvement and public knowledge in the selection process, it ought not to be a public process which subjected any potential candidate to that type of public grilling. The compromise I think has worked exceedingly well. The new committee I think will take it one step further and work even better, and I might say with just a nod in the direction of the Member for Calgary-Lougheed that the process we're going to now is the one that she actually recommended at the time. All things in due course.

There are two other minor amendments to the Judicature Act which I'd like to highlight as well. As people may have heard in the media, there have been some security incidents at Alberta courthouses in recent years. Alberta Justice has worked with a committee representing judges and justices in all three levels of the court and officials from the Alberta Solicitor General to deal with courthouse security problems. We believe that it is important that the courts remain open and accessible to all Albertans, and we don't want them to become armed camps. However, we do want to ensure the safety and security of everyone working in or conducting legitimate business at a courthouse. On that review it was found that the definition of courthouse in the act was too restrictive in that it excluded portions of a building not used in connection with the courthouse. It was believed that that narrow definition could possibly inhibit an ability to set up, for example, appropriate perimeter security and to deal with those sorts of issues. In the current act it states that the Minister of Justice "may appoint persons as security officers for the purpose of providing security in a courthouse," so the section will be amended to clarify that the minister may either appoint individuals or an entire "class of persons" as security officers.

So two relatively minor amendments but amendments, I think, with important connotations for Albertans, the first being to expand and continue the public role in helping to select members for the provincial bench and the second to enhance our ability to provide security for the courthouse, for the judiciary, and for all of our employees who work in support of the administration of justice.

The second bill which is being amended by the act is the Young Offenders Act. As all members again will know, after numerous false starts the federal government did pass a new Youth Criminal Justice Act to replace the old Young Offenders Act at the federal level. While many provincial jurisdictions were very concerned about what was in the Youth Criminal Justice Act and how it was being brought forward and the process of consultation – and there was in that case, Mr. Speaker, a very extensive program of consultation – the fact remains that the act has been passed and is coming into effect April 1 of this year. It will bring in a new regime of activity with respect to how young people are dealt with in the criminal court system. Members will know that the federal government is responsible for passing criminal law, so our Young Offenders Act is not a criminal law statute in terms of creating criminal offences but, rather, a statute aimed at the administration of the law and, of course, inclusion of provincial offences into the youth justice process.

The amendments, then, that we are bringing in under Bill 6 are essentially to align our provincial Young Offenders Act by changing its name to the Youth Justice Act and aligning the terminology that we have so that there's a common terminology between the federal act and the provincial act. For example, "disposition" is being replaced with "sentence"; "youth court" will become "youth justice court"; "community service" will become "extra-judicial sanctions." Again this is not our terminology, but that's changing the terminology so it matches the terminology which was passed in the new Youth Criminal Justice Act.

Another important amendment to the legislation is an increase in the maximum fine from $500 to $1,000 for provincial offences committed by young people. Under federal youth criminal law the maximum fine has been $1,000 since 1984, will continue to be $1,000 under the new legislation. The provincial maximum of $500 has never been increased since the inception in Alberta of the Young Offenders Act in 1984, and it was decided that this was an appropriate time to again match our maximum penalty with the federal maximum penalty.

Section 15(5) of the provincial act is also being amended to provide the court with the flexibility to impose combinations of fines, probation, and community service work. Previously under the Young Offenders Act the court could only impose a fine or community service or probation. The change will allow the court to provide meaningful and appropriate dispositions to young offenders based on the nature of the offence, the individual circumstances, and the discretion of the court.

Under current legislation, as well, the young person has the right to consult with legal counsel or a parent or the appropriate adult before giving a statement. The act will be amended to provide reasonable opportunity to consult with counsel and either a parent or an appropriate adult.

So again modest amendments to the Young Offenders Act now to make it called the Youth Justice Act to align it with the federal act, and while we're not in complete sympathy with all of the changes that the federal government made in the Youth Criminal Justice Act, it is our job to administer the justice system in the province, and we have to make it as open and as accessible and as understandable to the people of the province of Alberta as we possibly can, and an alignment is certainly in order to do that.

Two other acts included in Bill 6, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, are the Petty Trespass Act and the Trespass to Premises Act. I would just indicate to the House that a review of those two acts, while modest again, makes some significant changes. The Member for Little Bow brought these to my attention some time ago when he asked about the Petty Trespass Act and the penalties that were available and why the act was not effective in allowing people to deal with intruders to their property, and following that being brought to my attention, I took the opportunity to review the acts and determine that, in fact, there were two significant problems with those acts.

One problem was that the fine was $100 and had been $100 since who knows when and certainly was not a deterrent to most people, but more importantly a charge under the Petty Trespass Act or under the Trespass to Premises Act could only be brought by the landowner. So the landowner had to go through a process of finding a justice of the peace and swearing out information, and it was all too cumbersome a process to make the acts effective.

What we're proposing in the Petty Trespass Act and the Trespass to Premises Act is to simplify the process of laying charges under the two acts as well as to increase the maximum fines so that the penalties can better match the nature of the offence. The maximum fines under the acts would be increased to $2,000 from, as I said before, $100 under the Petty Trespass Act and $1,000 under the Trespass to Premises Act, and now any person who believes on reasonable, probable grounds that an offence has been committed may swear a complaint in front of a commissioner of oaths, and this means that, amongst others, a peace officer can lay charges. So now these acts will operate in the same manner as most other provincial offence acts, and in fact if somebody is trespassing on your property, won't leave, is causing damage or whatever, you could actually ask the police to lay a charge.

We'll also be making amendments to the regulations under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act so that the charge can be in the nature of a ticket which could have a specified penalty, so again to ease the process and make the acts more usable by Albertans. Now, the peace officer may have the alternative, of course, of actually issuing a summons requiring a trespasser to appear in court if the nature of the offence was such that it required it.

So the changes to those two acts are to make the acts usable and to allow members of the public to protect their property from trespassers by invoking the provisions that are set out in those acts and using them.

I might just add that we have two acts. The Petty Trespass Act is essentially an act which would be utilized in a rural area or with respect to bare land, and the Trespass to Premises Act is an act which would be used probably in a more urban area or more particularly with respect to buildings such as shopping centres or those sorts of areas. It's an interesting history as to why we have the two acts rather than one act, but that's perhaps a story for another day. [interjections] No. I think that would be a prudent place to stop.

I'll cede my place, then, and let the hon. member opposite speak.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased we've been able to arrange between the minister and myself to be able to look at second reading of this Justice Statutes Amendment Act this afternoon, which is a slight change in schedule but suits both of us, so that's great.

This is an omnibus bill. It is changing a number of different statutes, and the minister has done quite a good job of sort of walking through what all of those are. We are changing the Judicature Act, the Petty Trespass Act, the Trespass to Premises Act, and the Young Offenders Act. I've had a brief opportunity since the bill was presented and got first reading to go through the bill, but in principle there's only one area that's causing me some hesitation. I think the other areas that are being changed are housekeeping and modernization, particularly where the fines are involved. I think that when we look at the existing fines for trespass, for example, a hundred dollars is not a deterrent. It's the cost of doing business, I think some people would argue. [interjection] It's true that if you've paid your natural gas bill and you have no money left, then that hundred dollars could be very hard to find. I think that for anyone that's up to mischief, the hundred dollars was no deterrent at all, whereas $2,000 is a significant deterrent.

We have those two sort of partner bills. The Petty Trespass Act is really for occupiers of land, and my reading of it is that the Trespass to Premises Act is more about buildings. As the minister mentioned, that could cover things like shopping malls or institutions that the public would frequent, but it does allow for, in the one case, in the Petty Trespass Act increasing the fine from $100 to $2,000 and in the Trespass to Premises Act increasing from $1,000 to $2,000. I think that $2,000 in this day and age is enough to make people sit up and pay a bit more attention, and I think that would be helpful.

I also think it's very helpful that it's allowing peace officers to initiate the action. People can be in a position where they don't want to be seen to be the one making a fuss or bringing a complaint forward. Maybe they're being bullied, or they're just not in a position to be the one that steps forward on an action. Perhaps they just don't have the time or they're busy or they're going away, whatever the reason. Up to now there's been a requirement that the property owner or the landowner appear at the police station and swear out the complaint themselves personally, and that certainly would not be convenient for a number of people that are in rural areas or in a centre that doesn't have a courthouse where they could be doing that. This is setting it up so that the individual landowner or manager of premises or the owner of a home can make the complaint to the police or RCMP and have them proceed with the action, which, I think, in many cases will be more suitable for people. Safety is always a concern, and I'm hoping that this will help make all of our homes and work areas safer.

The one area where I have cause for concern – and this has been raised with me because I did spend some time investigating in the legal communities and other stakeholder groups if they could see any concerns arising out of Bill 6. There was very little comment except that there was some concern around the move to remove the requirement that the Judicial Council consider proposals for appointments for masters or judges. So that's taking away one of the two processes that are available now. The concern that was raised with me was: is there any way, then, that the one process would not be sufficient to guard against any kind of patronage appointment or appointment of an individual who perhaps didn't have as high a qualification as would be wished for that position? I can understand a concern there. I mean, we all want to believe that when we go before a court system, it's completely impartial and, in absolute partnership with that, that the officers of the court are highly skilled. I wouldn't like to think that that would be an issue here in Alberta, but this particular concern was raised with me, and I'm obliged to put it before the Assembly and seek an answer from the minister. He walked through the way it is now, and I'm looking for him to give some reassurance or perhaps spell out what the criteria is for choosing individuals, just to make sure that we're not going to have any kind of patronage appointment of someone who wasn't highly qualified.

The issue around the security in the courthouses is an interesting one, particularly in light of what we're looking at in Calgary with the construction or retrofit or renovation or some such thing of a new courthouse space there and whether it's P3 or not or whatever is happening. From what I'm understanding, this courthouse may well be inside of another building and, I think, partly is now, so there's a need that we have authority for security people to not only be physically in the courtroom but also have access to the areas around it. I think that part of this arose out of the construction of the special courtrooms for the gang trials, which were constructed off-site or close by or something. I think they're called CAPS, although they're going to be renamed to something odd. It wouldn't be SAPS; would it? No, it couldn't be. SOS or something, some other interesting abbreviation. The individual that I spoke to wasn't entirely thrilled with the new acronym and did make a point of mentioning this to me. I just apologize that I can't remember what the new name is going to be. It wouldn't be SAPS; it just couldn't be. They wouldn't do that. Please, please, I hope that's not what's happening.

So on the good side we have the clarification around the security in the courthouses, and I think that will play out and be important as we look at what happens in Calgary. We have the updating of the Petty Trespass Act and the Trespass to Premises Act, and then there are a number of changes with the Young Offenders Act. As the minister stated, this is the administration of the Young Offenders Act or, in our case, the Youth Justice Act, not the sort of Criminal Code component. Again most of it is changing Alberta's language to match the language that's in the federal code. I think that kind of specificity of language is very important.

Instead of an either/or scenario about courts being allowed to impose joint community service or a probation sentence, it's possible to do both of those for provincial offences, which, I think, is obviously desired.

There seems to be a section that is talking about spelling out that if a parent doesn't receive a copy of a probation order, it doesn't affect the validity of the order, which again is just a clarification of what's expected.

There's an increase in the temporary release date from 15 days to 30 days for the purpose of "medical, compassionate or humanitarian reasons." That can also be used for a period of rehabilitation, drug rehabilitation, I'm assuming, or reintegration into the community.

Another section that I think the minister did touch upon was that a young person has to be able to contact legal counsel and a parent or a guardian or someone else that's looking after them. As it is now, that was an "or" situation. They could get in touch with one or the other, but this requirement allows the young offender the ability to contact both responsible adults: their legal counsel and a parent.

The minister did state at some point that this government was not in complete sympathy with all of the federal statutes. I'd be interested in knowing where he's not in complete sympathy. I'm assuming that we're talking about the Young Offenders Act and the Youth Justice Act, so perhaps when we're in Committee of the Whole, he could expand upon that.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I have no problem in supporting the Justice Statutes Amendment Act in principle at second reading. We certainly have time in Committee of the Whole to go through this in more detail, and I do await the responses to the questions that I've posed here today. As I said, I have no problem supporting what's before us, with the one question that I raised about ensuring the integrity of that judicial appointment process now that it's proposed to go to sort of one stage instead of having a check and balance or a two-stage process through which to vet candidates for appointment.

Mr. MacDonald: How exactly is that going to work?

Ms Blakeman: How exactly is it going to work? Well, that's the question that we've put forward, and I think that it's important that that be expanded upon. As I said, that's my one hesitation in what's been put forward here.

So I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this bill in second reading, and I'm happy to support it at this point in principle. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close the debate.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have much more to add, just some examples as to what we might have objected to in the federal Youth Criminal Justice Act. Just as one example and not to delay the process, the Youth Criminal Justice Act federally puts in place some fairly extensive processes and procedures which are going to really complicate the administration of justice rather than assist it. We'll require much more in the way of resources to actually accomplish the goals that were set out. There are other, more substantive reasons why we disagreed with the approaches taken, but all in all I think it was a very positive thing that the Young Offenders Act has now been replaced by the Youth Criminal Justice Act, and with the passage of this bill we will be aligned with that and able to engage the new process as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the good work that we've done this afternoon, I would move that we adjourn until 8 this evening.

Bill 8

Health Foundations Act Repeal Act

[Adjourned debate February 25: Mr. Mar]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 8 is a notable act for its remarkable brevity. The entire operative portion of the act is six words long. I'm not sure if that's a record or not, but it must be getting close. Just to ensure that it's on the record, the entire bill reads: "The Health Foundations Act is repealed." It raises the question: why are we repealing this act, and what is this act about in any case?

The act was passed in 1996, and there was actually some substantial debate about the act at the time. The purpose of the act was the establishment of agent of the Crown foundations for regional health authorities and the provincial health board and the Alberta Cancer Board, and the idea of these foundations was that they would be set up to take advantage of federal tax laws that were in place at the time that would provide these foundations with special tax exemptions above and beyond what normal fund-raising foundations might have. In fact, donations to these foundations were given the same status as if they were donations to the Crown. However, the federal laws that made all of this workable and that provided these tax exemptions were later repealed, so these foundations created under the Health Foundations Act of 1996 no longer enjoyed any preferred status with regard to taxes and as a result no longer have a purpose for existing and, indeed, to my knowledge for practical purposes do not exist. Fair enough. We don't need the act any longer.

One of the controversial aspects of the act was to centralize a fair bit of power in the hands of the minister of health on the reasoning that the minister had the ability to co-ordinate the work of the foundations to maximize their effectiveness and efficiency, but there were, of course, some concerns about this. One was that it de facto put the minister in charge of quite a number of high-profile fund-raising foundations which he could then direct to cover off things that perhaps his department itself ought to be doing, and it also would create competition for all other fund-raising organizations and, indeed, would probably be very serious competition and somewhat of a threat to other health care fund-raising organizations. So I think that in many ways it's just as well that these foundations never really got off the ground.

We in the opposition – I wasn't here at the time, but a couple of my colleagues were – in fact voted against this bill in the first place. I know that may be a surprise, but we did. However, tonight we will vote for the repeal of this, and of course that's consistent. We didn't want these organizations in the first place, and there were various issues raised in the debate by the critic at the time, who was the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. We expressed concern that this was not good public policy that donors could not at all direct their donations. They were effectively giving their money to the minister, who could do with it as she pleased. We were, as I mentioned a few minutes ago, concerned that it would undermine existing charitable foundations.

Now, the counterargument from the minister at the time, who is now the Deputy Premier, was that these foundations would benefit health facilities and programs across entire regions rather than individual facilities – these foundations were not tied to any one hospital or nursing home; they were covering the whole region – and that they would be able to use their special status as agents of the Crown. The government was perfectly clear in some of its intentions. I'm quoting here from comments made by the minister of health at the time.

... the minister has the authority to set definite priorities for the use of foundation funds in general to ensure that the work of the foundations is co-ordinated with the overall goals for the health system and to avoid duplication of effort with other agencies, confirming our concern that this was a highly centralized system.

As we predicted, these organizations never were useful. They never really got established. The legislation is now pointless, and I would in fact commend the government today for cleaning up an unnecessary bill and taking it off the books. So I know that I for one will be supporting Bill 8.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will only take a moment because the bill itself is so brief that it requires a brief comment on it. What I want to say with respect to this bill is that it is obviously necessary because these Crown foundations are no longer serving a useful purpose if, indeed, they did at one time.

However, the reason I do want to comment on it is that we have a number of hospital foundations. I have one in my community that operates very effectively, fund-raises most specifically for truly needed initiatives that they sponsor and support within the hospital, and I would not want to diminish the strength of the efforts of those who work on those foundations and who, indeed, volunteer, I should say, on those foundations in order to enhance the delivery of health care within the hospitals.

I think it is important for clarification reasons if for no other that we identify those eight RHAs that established agent of the Crown foundations under the Health Foundations Act. We know that they are disestablished, but I'd like to read into the record that the eight were the Calgary Health Crown Foundation, the Capital Health Crown Foundation, the Chinook Health Crown Foundation, the Headwaters Health Crown Foundation, Health Region No. 6 Crown Foundation, the Keeweenaw Lakes Crown Foundation, the Northwestern Health Services Crown Foundation, and the Peace Health Crown Foundation.

Just so that we and everyone who is aware of this piece of legislation knows that we are not disestablishing hospital foundations, that are truly effective and very, very helpful in the delivery of health care in our communities and that are working so well, I'd like to take this opportunity to commend them for the work that they do in our communities, for them not to be confused with the ones that we are repealing through this act.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

Bill 7

Real Estate Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 7, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2003.

The Real Estate Council of Alberta, commonly known as RECA, is responsible for the administration of the Real Estate Act. RECA consulted with their stakeholders on the proposed amendments and received their support.

The first amendment to the Real Estate Act is defining appraisers and including them in the licensing and regulating provisions. Appraisers requested that they be licensed and regulated by RECA in order to protect consumers against people performing appraisal services who are not qualified and have no liability insurance.

The act is also amended to allow RECA to take disciplinary action against former industry members within two years after the member leaves the industry. Currently RECA loses jurisdiction over industry members who are involved in disciplinary proceedings if the industry member withdraws their membership licence. When the licence is withdrawn, RECA must stop disciplinary proceedings. This allows former members to avoid responsibility for their actions and prevents RECA from bringing matters to conclusion.

Another amendment deals with the limitation period for prosecution of an offence. This amendment will provide that prosecution can begin up to three years after the date the offence is alleged to have been committed, a change from the current two-year limitation period. The additional one-year period will provide RECA with additional time to investigate cases where jurisdiction may otherwise be lost due to time constraints.

The last main amendment allows RECA to make rules requiring former industry members to retain their records for three years after they cease to be industry members. This provision will ensure that the records exist in case RECA investigates the conduct of former industry members for prosecution purposes.

The remainder of the amendments to the Real Estate Act in this bill are housekeeping in nature, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I would like to move that we close debate on this bill for this evening. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

Dr. Taft: Are we adjourning?

The Deputy Speaker: The chair would invite the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti to clarify whether you're closing debate, whether you are moving that we adjourn debate, or whether the question be called.

Mr. Graydon: Just adjourning debate for this evening.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 1

Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act

The Chair: As you may recall from the previous evening, we were on amendment A3 as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. Are there any further comments to be made with respect to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, indeed, I do have some comments on this. At least speaking for myself, I am excited about Bill 1 and the possibilities that it holds for the children of this province but, as you know, feel quite strongly that it would be a far, far better bill with some more substance in it, and that's the reason why we're moving some amendments, including this particular amendment.

One of the things that I've been working very hard at the last month or so – well, for much longer than that but particularly in the last month – is visiting virtually all the schools in my constituency and meeting with all the school councils. At one of those meetings we were told that in the Edmonton public school system only 68 percent of children who enter kindergarten or grade 1 reach grade 12. In other words, 32 percent of schoolchildren in the Edmonton public school system drop out. I was shocked at that figure. At this state of Alberta's development, at this state of our economy, at all the information we have of this being an information economy, to think that 32 percent of children drop out of school before reaching grade 12 was dismaying. I have also heard anecdotically that Alberta has one of the highest dropout rates in the country. Again that's a surprise to me and a cause of great concern if it's true. This is a terrible reflection on the future of our province, and indeed it's a poor reflection on the current state of our school system and our ability to meet the needs of the great, great majority of children.

There's been some recent research come out of Australia, dramatic economic research on the importance in investing in children. It's so dramatic that in the last decade a lot of core theory on economic development is getting revamped, and it's becoming formally recognized that the traditional notion that the way to develop an economy was to invest in capital is in fact outdated. Investing in factories and machinery and equipment and infrastructure and so on was the traditional model for economic development, but that model is being left behind. It's being left behind because of outstanding research done on what actually drives modern economies, and what drives modern economies turns out to be the level of education of the people.

The lesson from that is that it's much more valuable in the long run to invest in education than it is to invest in factories and machinery and equipment. You get a onetime return on investing in factories or machinery and equipment or infrastructure. It raises you up to that level, and then you stop there. After all, that's all there is at that factory. The machinery and equipment makes what it makes; it doesn't make anything more. But if you invest in education, you get a multiplying return on your investment. The well-educated person continues to learn and learn and learn and develop and develop and, as a result, throughout their entire life contributes more and more and more to the wealth and to the welfare of their society.

I'm sure that all of us can reflect on our own personal experience. I'm 47 years old. I remember slide rules in high school and even in first-year university, and then I remember how amazing it was to see calculators come along and then, of course, computers, desktop computers that today we laugh at but 20 years ago were astonishing. Well, each one of those pieces of equipment is gone. The money that was put into those slide rules is completely gone. The money put into those calculators is gone, and the calculators are gone with it and so on for each generation of computer. But for me and for, I'm sure, all of us here what we acquired in learning to use that equipment serves us over and over and over, and we build on that and grow from that.

That's just a simple illustration of how investing in learning and education and human capacity pays off so much greater than investing in capital. That illustrates also the kind of reasoning behind this proposed amendment to Bill 1. We want the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise to actually have a written commitment, a legislative commitment to develop recommendations to attain an 80 percent completion rate for students entering primary education to finish secondary education.

Now, I think that if anything is weak in this amendment, it's that we're aiming too low. It still means that we are prepared to accept that 20 percent of kids don't even get grade 12. I think that's aiming way too low, although it would be a substantial improvement over what we have today. But if we are to move ahead as a society and as an economy, then we need to commit and we need to commit fully and vigorously to increasing the completion rate of grade 12 and to reducing the dropout rate from school. We'll see better income. We'll see better health. Nothing correlates with health so closely as good education. We'll see a stronger economy, human capital that will go on producing and expanding generation after generation, and ultimately we'll have better citizens.

Mr. Chair, I would very, very much like to see this amendment adopted in Bill 1. I can't imagine why we wouldn't do it. We're not particularly committing the government to any unusual expenditure, we're leaving the recommendation wide open to any time frame, and we're setting a target that is perhaps too low and not too high. There's no reason that I can see not to support this amendment. So I would urge every Member of this Legislative Assembly – every member – to support this amendment and make Alberta's Promise really stand for something.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Speaking to the amendment, I want to just point out that quite from the beginning in the development of Alberta's Promise both industry and the nonprofit organizations, the United Way in Edmonton and Calgary, the Alberta United Way, spoke quite specifically to us to the point that they did not want us to attempt through Alberta's Promise to usurp any other authority of any other body that was performing acts of support for children and youth and families. To that extent, while the intent of this amendment is admirable, it actually would be an amendment that maybe should be more appropriately vested in the School Act or something in which the government provides accountability – and we're accountable to Albertans – and can effect that accountability.

Alberta's Promise and the council that is appointed therein is a wonderful collection of leaders throughout the community that have come together to provide supports and additional supports for their own activities and for the activities of other nongovernment organizations that, in fact, enhance the quality of life in communities for children, youth, and families. In my view, although the intent of the amendment is, as I've said, commendable, it is out of sync in this particular piece of legislation that addresses the rules of conduct for the council and is not prescriptive particularly to any one segment as to how they should conduct or research and provide recommendations.

Now, ultimately, Mr. Chairman, the council, in fact, may do just that: may decide that within their mandate under promoting Alberta's Promise it could be extended to providing guidance for government on the well-being of children or individuals or organizations and raise awareness. They may wish to do that, but that should not be prescribed in the legislation. They should be encouraged to come forward with their own attitudes of what they believe to be possible.

I believe the difficulties encountered in other jurisdictions where they have had Ontario's Promise or some parts of the United States where America's Promise has run into resistance is when there's a top-down dictum as to what should be done rather than a bottom-up generation of what is presented. I think that if you look very carefully at the membership of the council, you will note that people from all parties have been appointed to the council, people with leadership characteristics and qualities not only in the corporate scene but in the nonprofit sector, and these people, I am sure, will be quite capable of generating those initiatives that they believe to be attainable. This is not a working group. The secretariat is funded by the government of Alberta. That has been identified.

So although the hon. member opposite and the amendment that's proposed have very commendable ideals, this piece of legislation is not the place to insert this particular amendment. It's compelling a council that has not yet begun to an order of business that should be quite properly the government's order of business, and they should be looking at what they believe they can do, as I've said, from the grass roots in support.

If I may remind the hon. member of one more thing, I think right from the very first the reaction of the opposition has been: are you using Alberta's Promise as a vehicle to take over responsibility from the government? No, we are not. They are a different part of the village of responsibility and the Alberta community overall, and the government should quite properly still establish standards and maintain those standards in places other than in this particular act, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on amendment A3.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise this evening to speak to the notice of amendment on Bill 1, the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act. I have to say right at the outset that I'm in favour of this proposed amendment, and I'm in favour of it for many, many reasons.

I listened intently as the minister made some comments about the makeup of the council, how this was made up of members from all parties and that these were leaders of various different organizations in the community. Obviously, there must be some names attached with this council, and if the minister, please, could table in the Legislature a copy of the members of that council, I'd be very interested to see who's on that council. Thank you.

Now, then, when we talk about recommendations to attain an 80 percent completion rate for students entering primary education and finishing secondary education, I think that is a very good goal. As the Member for Edmonton-Riverview said, if anything perhaps that goal is set too low. But we have to be consistent, Mr. Chairman, on what we do in this province. We currently have achievement tests for our students in this province. They are administered to all grade 3, grade 6, grade 9, and grade 12 students, and we have acceptable standards. We want 85 percent of students that write those exams to pass those exams. We also set a goal of 15 percent of those students to reach the honours standing. This certainly was a directive that came out of the department of education and probably from the ministerial level down, so this wasn't grass roots when we look at achievement tests in this province. This was a top-down situation, and of course the debate still continues to go on as to whether we are making the best use of the results from those achievement tests. When we look at what was just recently released by the Fraser Institute as to the rankings of schools in this province, the cry from educators across the province was not in support of the findings that the Fraser Institute came up with, and I was happy to see that some school boards did not have that information released so that their schools could be ranked.

Now, then, as well, when we talk about a target of an 80 percent completion rate, I think where we have to gain a lot of encouragement, Mr. Chairman, is from the article written in the Edmonton Journal today by Paula Simons when she was talking about I believe it was North Edmonton school and how they had children with high needs that entered their school at the kindergarten level and how they worked with those students, how over a three-year period they have been able to dramatically increase the reading ability of students in grade 1, how children who write those achievement tests in grade 3 have drastically increased their results, that there is a greater number of students passing those achievement tests and doing quite well. For a high-needs school such as North Edmonton it certainly indicates that when we make that a primary goal, we can attain those goals. If we do that on a provincewide basis, then we will see results, and we will see more and more students remaining in school.

I had the opportunity, as I've mentioned before in this House, to visit parliamentarians in Great Britain last fall, and one of the interviews we had was with a Senator and former Member of Parliament of the Republic of Ireland. One of my questions to him was: what effect did your education policies over the last four decades have on the economic success and the turnaround in Ireland today? He said that, without a doubt, when they had the opportunity to expand their economy, to make their deals with the multinationals and whatever, these multinational companies never would have looked at the Republic of Ireland if they didn't have a very highly educated group of people, a wealth of resource there that they could count on to move Ireland from a have-not to one of the more successful nations in the world. Of course, it wasn't only education, but this certainly was the foundation. This was the basis that they used, and this was what multinational corporations in this world counted on when they moved their industries to Ireland.

I truly believe that level of education is certainly one of the major, major goals of the particular bill, the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act, and it is so important that if we are to make this a goal of the province, we look at the formative years, when these students are first entering our public school system, that we provide them with all the tools and all the resources necessary in order that they get off to a good start. I think that when we have a goal such as an 80 percent completion rate, this is something that's going to ensure that we get students off to a very good start in school. We know that we are investing in the future when we do these types of things, and this would add a lot of teeth to this particular bill.

I would urge, Mr. Chairman, that all members of the Assembly support this amendment.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to propose another amendment to Bill 1. I've got the copies here. It's approved by Parliamentary Counsel, and we shall proceed. I'll just wait a moment while the amendment is distributed.

The Chair: We'd invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to move his amendment, and it will be known as amendment A4.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 1 be amended by striking out section 4(1) and substituting the following:

- 4(1) The Council consists of
 (a) the Premier,

- (b) those members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the nomination of the Premier, and
 (c) an equal number of members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the nomination of the Leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition in consultation with the leaders of the other opposition parties represented in the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Chairman, this motion is clearly intended to remove partisan concerns from the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise. I think we would all agree that when it comes to the welfare of our children and to making a promise to them and to their future and to the future of Alberta, we all need to rise above partisan issues, we need to strike a balance, we need to strive to represent all Albertans, and that's the purpose of this particular amendment. We frankly don't know who's going to be on this council, and undoubtedly they're good people. They may well include some members from all political parties; we have no idea. But the fact of the matter is that the members of this committee need to be nominated through a variety of sources.

I noticed that when it came to discussing the previous amendment, the Minister of Children's Services made a comment that we don't want top-down dictums. Well, the way this bill stands right now and the provisions it has for appointing members feels very much like a top-down dictum. The Premier: you can't get much higher than that in Alberta. The Premier chooses who is going to be on this council. We'd like to end that top-down dictum. We'd like to split up that responsibility and follow a model that's already established in another part of our legislative process, which also, like children, needs to be beyond partisan politics, and that's the commission examining electoral boundaries. In that particular commission, the chairman is appointed by the Premier, and two members are nominated by the Premier, and two members are nominated by the Leader of the Opposition after consulting with other opposition parties. Exactly the same model. And the whole point of that is to get beyond the perception and the reality of partisan politics. That's why we're making this amendment.

We all know to the point of almost a cliché that it takes a village or a community to raise a child, and we want to ensure that all members of that community are represented, so that's the spirit in which we propose this amendment. We hope that it's taken seriously by the government. There are no costs. There are no risks. There are only benefits, the benefits of improved public credibility and the benefits of a broader base of support and membership.

So, Mr. Chairman, I recommend this amendment to all members of this Assembly. Thank you.

Ms Evans: Mr. Chairman, in compliance with comments made previously, we'll certainly be prepared to provide a list of the names of the council. Might I just say one thing? Anybody who wants to bring forward to the council a name that would like to serve on the council is quite able to do so. The criteria for selection has not been one of partisanship or political expertise. It has frequently been those people that lead organizations, lead corporations, leadership with the United Way, leadership with Lakeland College relative to early child development, and in fact we invite people to come forward. To enshrine this type of process would seem to imply specifically that there has been an emphasis on the governing party over any other appointments.

So I just draw to the member's attention, although this has not been formally launched in Alberta, that it's planned for some time later when the Children's Forum is available, while the newly appointed executive director and the vice-chairs do some work with the corporations. Maybe ultimately this would be something that would emanate from that group itself, but quite honestly I think you'll find, Mr. Chairman, that once the names are circulated, this House will be very satisfied that the appointments that have come forward here and the people that have come forward, yes, may be friends of the governing party but, yes, are indeed friends of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. So I don't see the necessity for this particular amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to support the amendment. The minister has made a couple of comments this evening that have put the opposition at a considerable disadvantage, her comments that the names of the council do exist. I think that if we had had those names, then our amendments might have been quite different, but without that and without the second item that the minister just commented upon – and that's the kinds of criteria that will be used in selecting council members – as I said, I think the opposition is operating at a considerable disadvantage. We're trying to make sure that Bill 1, a bill that we support, is the very best that it can be, and given that we don't have those names and that we don't have those criteria, I don't think we have any alternative but to proceed with our amendments.

I think the amendments themselves are sound. I mentioned before in second reading on the bill that if you look at America's Promise, there was great effort undertaken to make sure that the bill was nonpartisan. They had President Carter, Nancy Reagan, Gerald Ford. They had a good mix of council members who spanned the political spectrum in the United States, and I think that that's important, particularly with this council. You know, we've been fairly enthusiastic about the council. We've expressed some reservation that it not take on the legitimate function and responsibility of either Children's Services or the Learning department or any other department of government, that the government fully accept its responsibilities in those areas and that this is an embellishment, if you would, a furthering of the interests of those departments. So I think that with that minor reservation, we have been very, very supportive of what's before us.

If you look at the amendment and the assumptions that it's based on, the membership must be beyond criticism, and I think that that's just a given. If the council is to operate in the way that it's been presented to us, there can be no question as to the goals and the motivations of the council members. I think that's important. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview made a comment about a government committee. Now, I thought I heard him say the learning commission, but I think he was talking about the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

The learning commission that we have today is dramatically different from the learning commission that reported to the government in 1972, and it's different dramatically in terms of the membership and how that membership was arrived at. The 1972 commission on planning in education was made up of members of the community who were known for their success in other fields and known particularly for their independence of government. So we had a president of the University of Lethbridge. We had a vice-president of planning at the university, Wally Worth, as the commissioner. There was someone from the judicial system. The government of the day bent over backwards to make sure that that previous commission was very independent.

That's not so with the present-day learning commission, and it, I think, is unfortunate. I believe that the commission is working very hard. It's going to come up with some good recommendations, but if it doesn't or if the important things that have been relayed to that commission by parents and by Albertans are not included in the report, there's going to be always the suspicion, the nagging thought that somehow or other the commission was playing out the government's mandate and heard what the government would like to hear in its deliberations. I think that's why it's important that this amendment be passed and that the membership, as I said, be beyond criticism.

I think another assumption is that three or four heads are better than one. These are leaders in our province and political life that we've asked to be part of the council member selection, and I think that that's one way of ensuring that the very best Albertans are appointed and that none are overlooked because of a political stance they've taken or some other stance that they've taken that somehow or other may have offended the government.

I think that if you look at whose interests are served by the amendment, it's clearly and foremost children. We're ensuring as much as we can in this process that this is an all-party, nonpartisan endeavour, and I think that's in children's best interests, that there won't be other agendas played out by the council, that the intent as put forward in Bill 1 of getting youngsters off to a good start, making sure that they're safe, providing them with a mentor is really the focus of the council.

So I think that the goals of the Premier's council, the interests, are best served by this amendment. I think that if you look at what the gains are by passing this amendment, the council will take on a new legitimacy that it won't have if the members are appointed solely as they're outlined in the bill right now. Legitimacy for the kind of work that is envisioned for the council, I think, is extremely important. They have to be seen by the public and the corporations and the volunteer groups and the service clubs that they approach and hope to enlist in their projects as a very legitimate council. There are going to be some of those groups who will be very reluctant to put forth effort if in any way there's any perception that they are endorsing a particular political stance or a particular political party. That kind of association with a political party will be enough to prevent some organizations from working with the council as one would hope they might do.

I think that the amendment is a sound one. Maybe when we see the council members, our fears will be allayed. Maybe when we see the criteria that were used in selecting those members, our fears will be allayed. But putting this into the bill assures us that that will happen, and I think it just is sound appointment practice.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on amendment A4.

Dr. Taft: Yes, on amendment A4, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to respond to the minister's comments of a few minutes ago. They illustrated to me exactly why we want this amendment. There was a real sense that everything about this council so far has occurred behind closed doors. She speaks about people who are chosen, people who are nominated, about the processes for nomination. To our knowledge all of that's occurred behind closed doors. There hasn't been a public process that I'm aware of. It hasn't been open to anybody but people presumably in cabinet to discuss, maybe in the backbenches of the government, but beyond that, extremely limited. And that exactly proves the point of why we want this amendment. Let's end the closed-doors construction of these committees.

She referred in her comments to members of this council being leaders of corporations, leaders from the United Way, a college president or something like that. I'm not convinced that those are the people who have any monopoly on how Alberta's Promise should be fulfilled. Maybe there'll be a native elder. Will there be a native elder? I don't know. In fact, I'd like to ask the minister: when will she table the names of the people who are going to be on this council? Will it be tomorrow? Would it be even tonight? Could she go back to her office, get the list, and bring it out here so that we could have a proper debate?

Ms Evans: I'm in the unflattering position of not having it available to me tonight, but I could certainly table it tomorrow. It was not something that I felt was going to be critical to the debate but will certainly provide that list tomorrow. I would really hesitate to try and give it to you from the top of my head because there are over 60 names, Mr. Speaker, but it could be tabled tomorrow.

Dr. Taft: I appreciate that gesture from the minister, and I'll accept it. As you can appreciate, it would have been nice to have had it, say, when the bill was tabled. Anyway, we didn't know the number. If there are 60 members on the council, it's a much larger council than we expected. I hope there will be members on it who are, for example, poverty advocates, maybe people with medical backgrounds, neurodevelopmental specialists, people like that. So we would like once again to bring this whole process out from behind closed doors. As my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods said, that's the only way that this council is going to have public legitimacy.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, just a few comments on amendment A4. I think that if we did see the 60 names, it would certainly alleviate a lot of the apprehension that we have in the formation of this particular council.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview had mentioned, we don't have to have community leaders to know the issues. If we are going to have a council that represents all children in this province, then we certainly need a good mix, and I couldn't help but overhear the Minister of Transportation's comment that we should have a farmer on the committee, and I think that would be ideal. It's certainly someone who would know the issues facing farm children in this province, and they would be a welcome person on this committee. Even after teaching for 27 years I would never want to claim that I know the issues that are faced by farm children. So I think that would help us out as well.

I also must say, Mr. Chairman, that for this being the flagship bill of the Premier, I would hope for a lot more input from government members, and I'm sure that as we move through Committee of the Whole, there will be a lot more participation discussing this particular bill so that Albertans will know what their feelings are, where there is open discussion here in the Assembly, and that those good comments that are made in caucus and in meetings with the ministers could also be brought out. It would certainly allow a lot of credibility to this council.

So, in closing, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that we do have a great diversity of people in this province. We have great diversity of needs for these children, and we also have to have people on here that are going to know and understand the challenges faced particularly by the disadvantaged children of this province and what it means to some student whose parents perhaps are on minimum wage and looking at a $4,000 bill for tuition. We have to have people that understand that and not the presidents of corporations for whom $4,000 for tuition really isn't very much. So I do look forward to seeing the list that is going to be provided by the minister.

I think this is an excellent, excellent amendment, and I would urge all members of the Assembly to support it. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We're talking tonight about the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act. The Premier stood in this Assembly several days ago and talked about the need for the province to look after children. The minister across the way I have known for I hate to say how many years. She and I served together municipally. We worked together through the AUMA when she as a member of the AAMD and C wanted to be part of the AUMA, and she became such. This minister is so committed to children. I don't know how you people can stand up here and say that you want to know the membership on this committee. When I walk into my community, whether it be Lacombe or Stettler, I look at those individuals in my community that are doing good for my community. I don't ask them what political party they belong to. I don't ask them what church they go to. I just know that at the end of the day they give. And they give from the heart.

Now, I can tell you that the Premier of this province, along with his wife, has been committed to children since he began as Premier, and this Minister of Children's Services will pick the people that can give from their heart, and "give" is the operative word. They will be the people that are in the best position to surround themselves with people that can give. I'll tell you something. I don't care whether they belong to your party, whether they belong to that party farther over there, or whether they belong to our party. I don't care what church they belong to, what community they live in. If they can give for the benefit of children, that's what is important.

Your member there from Edmonton-Glengarry said that this is an important piece of legislation. Well, let it be an important piece of legislation. Debate the people that are on the committee after they've had the first meeting, after they've decided what they want to do, after they've gone to the communities they represent, after they've gone to the corporate sponsorship, after they've put the dollars in place and decided what they're going to do for the children of this province. Well, hello? Get a life, get real, and get on with it.

We have in place something that is very important not only to Alberta but to the rest of Canada. Let's be proud of what the Premier has done, let's be proud of what that minister has done, and let's all get behind it and say: yes, this will work.

You know, many, many years ago your former leader – and I respected him greatly – Laurence Decore, when I was mayor of Lacombe, paid me a visit and said: Judy . . .

An Hon. Member: Hon. member.

Mrs. Gordon: . . . hon. member for whatever I was then, why don't you run for our party? I debated. But I'll tell you what, folks. Once in a while it would be nice in this Assembly if you supported something that we stood for. I'll tell you that in the eyes of Albertans and in the communities I represent, this piece of legislation is something you should support, and you should support it heartily because it means that children will be looked after, that children will be considered. In Lacombe I've got community leaders who'll get behind the Premier on this bill. Where the Minister of Transportation comes from, people in business there and community leaders will say: hey, I want to be part of this.

Mrs. Ady: Calgary-Shaw will.

Mrs. Gordon: Calgary-Shaw will. Even if they need schools, they'll still get outside. [interjections] And I know that the Solicitor General's people are always willing to look after and consider the needs of children. So it would be really nice in this Assembly one day if we had a bill that went through without amendment and the entire Assembly said: hey, let's together as Albertans endorse and support this.

You want to know the makeup of the committee. The minister said that she'll give it to you tomorrow. That should be good enough for you. It's good enough for me. And I'll tell you; I'm sure that when she tables that list tomorrow, I'm going to say: gee, I'm not sure what political party that person belongs to. But I'm going to know that they're corporate citizens. I'm going to know that they can encompass this, embrace this particular bill, and at the end of the day we will see results and we will see children better off in this province because of Bill 1, the Premier's commitment, the minister's commitment, and why not this entire Assembly's commitment to looking after the future needs of children.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. [interjections]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, once everybody regains their good manners and allows you to speak.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I certainly respect the views of the Member for Lacombe-Stettler, and I think that the member's record in the Legislature since I've been here is one that has been working in the interests of children. But I would remind her that the opposition has a particular role to play in this Assembly. Part of that role is to oppose when that's appropriate, and part of that role is to try to make things better. We've said that we're going to support the bill. It's in the spirit of making things better that we have presented the amendments that we've had before the House.

The Member for Lacombe-Stettler talked about having worked with the minister. Well, I happen to have worked with the minister too, on the Alberta School Boards Association a long time ago and have great respect for the kinds of things that she wants for children in this province. It doesn't mean that those ideas should be acted upon uncritically. I think, also, that if the Member for Lacombe-Stettler checks the record, she'll find that the opposition has voted with the government 75 percent of the time. It's on the 25 percent, you'll find, that most of the debate is taken up.

So I reject the member's notion that the opposition should accept the bill and blindly vote for it. I think that if it's a good bill, if it can be made better, then that's our job. It's not just the job of the opposition; it's the job of every member of this House.

Just one last comment, I guess, Mr. Chairman. No one in this House has a corner on the market in terms of speaking for the interests of children – I don't believe that for one moment – and no one in this province knows everything there is to know when it comes to appointing councils such as the one that's being proposed here. We have argued for an open, accountable appointment process, and we've argued for some mechanisms to be put into the bill that would make the council more accountable. Those are completely appropriate amendments for the opposition to introduce, and I'm not quite sure what berating the opposition accomplishes.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

9:10

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We took the opportunity earlier today to pass over to the Minister of Children's Services some additional suggestions in terms of what we thought might make Bill 1 a stronger bill. I believe it was a member of our staff that passed those suggestions on to the minister, who has courteously enough agreed to consider them and to judge their appropriateness for incorporation in Bill 1, and we thank her for that and look forward to any suggestions for change that are in concert with the kinds of things that we proposed during debate.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's been an honour to discuss this bill. I appreciate the passionate debate that has arisen from time to time. I wish there was more of that in this Assembly.

We have tried to take this bill and make it better. We've proposed amendments that would have delivered at least one nutritious meal a day to schoolchildren in this province if they needed it. We proposed an amendment that would have committed a promise to increasing the number of children who complete grade 12. We've discussed issues about child poverty here. We have brought amendments forward to try to make this bill better. Unfortunately from our view, those amendments have all been defeated.

I do look forward tomorrow to learning the members of this council, the criteria by which they were chosen. No doubt they were very good, but I would like to point out to the Member for Lacombe-Stettler and all other members here that as my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods said, no one of us has a corner on the market for nominating people who know a lot about children. It is, in fact, with the notion that the legitimacy of this council could be strengthened by having more than one source of nomination for the members that we've brought that amendment forward.

I have no doubt that perhaps to the surprise of the Member for Lacombe-Stettler, we will be supporting this bill. We've said that from the beginning. All we wanted to do was make it better. It looks like none of the changes we've proposed will be accepted. That doesn't mean that our compassion and our commitment to children will diminish one bit.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, also, would like to make some closing comments at this particular time. One of the comments I would like to make is that, certainly, being a resident for many, many years and being associated in one way or another with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, I can assure this Assembly that there is nobody more concerned about the children of this province than this gentleman and nobody that has put more into his life's career and goals to support the children of this province and to try to make education a better place for all students so that each child could be the best that they could be.

I look here at a 2001 public consultation by the Alberta School Boards Association, Shaping Young People into Good Citizens. In doing this, they had extensive public consultation. One of the questions was: who participated? They were very successful in getting feedback from a large number of individuals and organizations. Feedback was gathered through a number of vehicles including: an online survey, an Ipsos Reid omnibus poll, direct contact with elected officials and provincial associations and local consultations at the school and school system level.

There was extensive consultation on what to do with children in this province. Some of the findings, particularly what Albertans agreed were the skills students need in order to become good citizens – and I will just quote a little bit of this, Mr. Chairman.

There was strong agreement among respondents regarding those aspects of citizenship that were the most important for young people to learn. Skills such as: critical thinking skills . . .

So we don't want our children in this province to blindly follow; we want them to question. We are in trouble when people in this Assembly cannot question. For any member to suggest that I should follow – I'm sorry; whether I'm a member of government or a member of opposition, I will question. It is critical.

What are the other skills students need to become good citizens? These, by the way, were responses from many people and extensive consultation in this province. They need problem-solving skills. So how do we solve problems? By taking the word of one person and saying that this is the way it will be? I was never brought up that way, I never taught that way, and I think my students are much better because they were allowed to think for themselves. They were allowed to question. I certainly was not threatened by their questions, and I would hope people in this Assembly aren't threatened when we do question. As well, they should have social skills, and leadership skills were identified as critical for young people to have if they were to become good citizens.

That is what we want for this bill, Mr. Chairman. We want it to be the very best it can be, and for any member to suggest that the people that are in this Assembly as part of the opposition tonight are not true citizens, are not truly concerned about the youth of this province is totally wrong.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, February 26, 2003 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 03/02/26
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, we confidently ask for Your strength and encouragement in our service of You through our service of others. We ask for Your gift of wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Mr. Speaker, we have a number of staff that are here with us today, all involved in the orientation, and I would ask each of them, as I call their names, if they would stand and remain standing. Then we can get a good look at some great employees. I'll begin with Jacqueline Wallis, Mauricio Telleria, Leslie Wei, Tracy Gould, John Mitchell, Donna Bruce, Cindy Ostapovich, Don Tymchuk, Val Jans, and Kevin Inkster. What a fine-looking group. Please welcome them.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce a very good friend and his daughter. He actually lives in the second largest city outside of Newfoundland, and that's Fort McMurray. Brian Hatfield hails from Placentia, Newfoundland, and is here today. His daughter attends Father Mercredi high school, where she was recognized as one of the top female athletes in her grade 12 class. I'd like to ask both Brian and Janet to rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 19 bright and energetic grades 5 and 6 students from the Waskatenau school. These students deserve the best education possible, and I hope that the Aspen View school division makes the right decision in the future of their school. They are seated in the members' gallery and are accompanied by their teacher, Miss Audrey Toews; parent helpers Mrs. Cathy Schesnuk, Mrs. Peggy Zatorski, Mrs. Donna Barrow, Mrs. Sophie Rogoza, Mrs. Kim Ness, Mrs. Linda Dombowsky, Mrs. Becky Mulak, Mr. Zen Gurba. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 16 young people from the Take a Break seniors community group. The seniors in Take a Break like to be kept informed about their provincial government and the programs that we offer. They meet twice a month and invite speakers from government and the business community to keep them informed about the programs which are specifically for them. I know that the Member for Edmonton-

Beverly-Clareview has met with them, and last year in October I had the pleasure of meeting with them.

The group has come to watch today's proceedings and also to tour the Legislature. I will read their names, and perhaps if they are able to, they could stand as I read their names: Dick and Lottie Cook, Mitch Dombrosky, Betty Krol, Martin and Clara Witten, Gerda Debbink, John and Mae Vlieg, Jo Niemantsverdriet, Berend and Gerry Witteveen, Henny Witten, Ann Helder, and John and Ruby Denning. Could we please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 41 English as a Second Language students from NorQuest College. They're in the public gallery, and they're accompanied by their leaders Mrs. Moniz, Mrs. Bergman, Mrs. Walker, Ms Fryzk, Ms Apedaile. I'd ask them to please stand and to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with considerable pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a very hardworking Edmontonian who's seated in the public gallery. His current MLA is the Minister of Economic Development, and the visitor is planning to take that seat away from the minister in the next election. I'm talking about Mr. Lorne Dach, who's vice-chairman of the city of Edmonton nonprofit housing corporation. He's also the recently nominated New Democrat candidate in the Edmonton-McClung constituency. I would ask him to now rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly, including his MLA.

head: Oral Question Period
Natural Gas Rebates

Dr. Nicol: Given that a portion of the $1.8 billion surplus announced today is due to the increased royalty revenues from the high price of natural gas, will the Premier give Albertans the natural gas rebates he promised prior to his election?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the law is quite clear relative to rebates. As the hon. leader of the Liberal Party knows, when the average annual price reaches $5.50 a gigajoule, then the rebate program will kick in.

Mr. Speaker, I find it very, very interesting that the Liberals would be talking about a rebate at this particular time. This is a much different tune than they were singing when the legislation was introduced. The hon. Member for – and I forget his constituency, but he's sitting at the end – Edmonton-Gold Bar, you know, when we were debating the bill, said: "This could wind up costing us billions of dollars. What criteria will determine who gets a rebate? . . . Albertans are going [to have] to pay for this . . . We have to be very, very careful here."

Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we were very, very careful in establishing the guidelines. As a matter of fact, we took the words of the hon. leader of the Liberal Party to heart when we drafted the legislation, because the hon. leader of the Liberal Party said:

We have to make sure that [the] price level we're going to protect is contingent upon and tied to the price we use in the budgeting process for revenue generation and revenue estimation within the province . . . If we go ahead and estimate the price of natural gas for our budgeting process at $7 [a gigajoule], let's just say, and we want to start protecting the price at $5 [a gigajoule], what we've got is a $2 margin there that we basically either have to put into our budget to debate the dollars that are necessary to cover the difference between what we're expecting out of revenues . . . Otherwise we'll end up running a deficit budget, and in Alberta we don't want to do that.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, I stand by those comments today.

The government didn't have an annual average when it pulled the trigger to issue rebates in 2001, so why did the Premier consider it an emergency then, an election year, but it's not an emergency now when people are cold and needing that support?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, natural gas at that particular period of time was about $5.76 a gigajoule on average. It had been, on average, for over six months, I believe. Election or no election, we had to take action, but it was ad hoc action. We took the advice of the hon. leader of the Liberal Party, and we put in a program that would be sustainable. Now, instead of talking about sustainability and programs that are responsible, they're talking about: well, go back to ad hoc-ism. You know, there was a wonderful quote that I heard today from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. He said that today's benefit will be perceived as tomorrow's entitlement. We want to make sure that whatever entitlement is there is there through law and is there on a sustainable basis, and that's why we have the legislation we have today in place.

Dr. Nicol: How does the Premier explain his comments in 2001 when he said: Alberta's natural gas belongs to all Albertans, and they have told our government that in times of high prices such as we're seeing this winter, the revenues from gas should be returned to them.

Mr. Klein: Absolutely true, Mr. Speaker, and that's why we put in place legislation that says to Albertans that once, on average, natural gas prices reach $5.50 a gigajoule, then there will be rebates. That is performing on a sustainable basis rather than on an ad hoc basis. Certainly, the situation in 2000-2001 prompted us to bring in legislation to ensure Albertans that there would be protection in the future rather than doing it on an ad hoc basis, as the Liberals would like us to do.

Natural Gas Prices

Dr. Nicol: Yesterday the Premier stated, "Thousands upon thousands upon thousands of Albertans can afford to pay their [natural gas] bills." However, the Official Opposition has tabled over 2,000 signatures from Albertans who cannot afford to pay their natural gas bills. The mayors of our largest cities are also demanding rebates on behalf of their constituents who can't afford to pay their bills. To the Premier: given that the Premier asked to be informed of any Albertan who is freezing in the dark, will the Premier help this Edmontonian who wrote to us on our web site, altaliberals.ab.ca, to say: it is proven that people are having their gas shut off, and I'm getting threats already to getting my gas shut off; can I get help?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, if that person is in a low-income bracket and is entitled to certain government benefits, then I would ask him to contact the appropriate authorities – not the Liberals but the appropriate authorities within government – to see if there's any way we can rectify the situation. What I said in the Legislature was relative to a comment that was made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, who talked about people freezing in the dark, and I said: give me some examples. Otherwise, it's not true. If that is happening or if it's about to happen, we want to know, and we want to know the circumstances. We'll work with the family or the individual involved to make sure that they don't freeze in the dark. No one freezes in the dark in this province.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Seniors: why do seniors have to wait until they are threatened with a disconnection notice before they're able to access any of your ministry's onetime assistance programs?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, that statement is totally incorrect. The onetime support, the special-needs program, is not directed at utility costs per se, as I indicated in the House. It is directed at onetime, exceptional, unexpected expenses, whether they be repairs to the home – although we don't have a home repair program – whether they be dental work, whether they be stuck for eyeglasses, based on their ability to pay. So it's directed towards the needy.

This year, I do believe, we've helped somewhere in the neighbourhood of about 9,000 people, although I will have to research that number to get you an accurate one. So to say that I am waiting for them to get disconnect notices to pay their bills is totally misleading. I would stand behind that program one hundred percent because it is a very, very good program. It is the only program of its kind in the country, and it is directed at the people who need the assistance the most. I would appreciate it if the hon. Leader of the Opposition would get his research done properly before he poses a question of that nature, because I don't want the people for which I'm responsible to become unduly concerned over irrational statements of that nature.

Dr. Nicol: To the minister of human resources: given that the price of natural gas has just increased for the third month in a row and AISH recipients may only apply for onetime emergency assistance through SFI when they have a shut-off notice, what help does the government have for the AISH recipient who is faced with a second disconnect notice?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you. Thank you for the question, because it allows me, then, to expand on what we talked about yesterday in terms of disconnect notices. While it is true what the opposition leader has indicated about onetime help for AISH, we can make the announcement here today, because I think everyone here in the House is familiar with this or at least should be, that when an AISH client runs into difficulty, we do have the opportunity to move them from the AISH program onto our supports for independence program and then see what kind of assistance we can provide at that time. So we don't want anybody thinking that just because they've been labeled and they have some kind of entitlement, they're stuck there. If there's a need, we try to find a way as best we can, Mr. Speaker, to try to deal with it.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton Mill-Woods.

Foster Care

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People who are bad parents have their children taken from them by the government, but as a growing number of cases show, the government can also be a bad parent. My first question is to the Premier. When the government is a bad parent, who is expected to protect children?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the way that question was posed is subjective, to say the least, because government is a huge entity. You know, there are all of the Members of the Legislative Assembly. Then there are the government members of the Assembly. There are the members of the Official Opposition; although not members of the government, they're still associated. Then there are 20 some odd thousand employees of the government. So what component or what individual or what segment of the government is the hon. member talking about? Who in the government or what body within the government is perceived to be a bad parent? Is he talking about me? Is he talking about the Minister of Finance? Is he talking about the Minister of Children's Services? As far as I know, they're all very good parents. All of those who have children are very good parents. So who is he talking about? Be specific. Name a name. Name an organization. Name a body.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. The Children's Advocate documents hundreds of them each year, Mr. Premier.

My second question is to the Minister of Children's Services. What recourse is there for adults who as children were abused while in government care?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, if the reference point is the alleged situation that was identified in the statement of claim yesterday and the situation alluded to by the hon. member opposite relates to people who have memories of mistreatment, we are hoping that with the process we have in place today, that I identified yesterday, albeit briefly, we will avoid having people who have these kinds of recollections and that nobody intervened. Currently, today, with CWIS, which accesses the child welfare files, we have the capacity for the advocate to act impartially and on behalf of that person the very first instance there's any transgression by anybody. That appears on the file. So if a foster parent abuses a child, it is noted there, and the advocate can immediately intervene.

If, in fact, it's a reference point to what used to be or what used to happen in the past, then obviously in many of those situations those people come back and make their representation through the courts or through some other filing. But, Mr. Speaker, today I think that we are very current with our information and very current, indeed, with our follow-through on behalf of those that claim some abuse at the hands of somebody employed by government or deployed by government to look after children.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why force those people to go to the courts? Why won't the minister establish an independent panel to investigate and provide compensation when the government has proven to be a bad parent?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, allegations, of their own accord, do not constitute proof. We have still got the situation with the John Doe case that has not been adjudicated by the courts. The courts have not come back and given us any recommendation. We're clearly waiting for that. We've got in place something that works for the here and now. If people today as adults have some difficulty that they want to raise, they can certainly approach this government, the Minister of Children's Services, the Minister of Justice. They file those complaints and bring them forward.

Should there be a necessity to bring forward another panel? I'm not sure. I will tell you this. They could clearly write to this minister – and frequently they do – and we will try and investigate whether or not there's something. But I don't get a lot of complaints from people who allege abuse from times past. Usually, if they come forward and write, it's because they may be unsatisfied with the legal representation they've had in bringing that matter forward. So, Mr. Speaker, this external panel review process is not necessary.

Could I identify one more thing? We have the Child Welfare Appeal Panel, that currently works exceptionally well for those people that are unsatisfied today, and last year we had over 230 representations made to that panel. Administrative review solved all but 35 of those.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the provincial government turns a deaf ear to its citizens, Albertans are wondering why they have to pay heating bills that have spiked 60 percent or more this year. Now, some Albertans are a bit luckier, particularly those that live in the city of Medicine Hat, which owns its own gas utility and has shown that gas rates can be set at very reasonable rates right here in Alberta. While ATCO customers are paying over $8.50 a gigajoule, Medicine Hat residents pay a rate of $2.25 a gigajoule. To the Minister of Energy: why is it that the citizens of Medicine Hat get a break on their home heating costs, but this government, which has just announced a $2.7 billion unbudgeted resource windfall, tells Albertans to forget it?

Mr. Smith: You know, Mr. Speaker, if I were to believe in reincarnation, I would come back as a New Democratic politician. I could still stay in the Legislature, and all I have to do is drop reason and accountability.

The city of Medicine Hat owns its own gas. The city of Medicine Hat does not pay royalties to the province of Alberta.* This has long been a city that's had gas used to light streetlamps. Medicine Hat has two wonderful members representing it here in the Legislature today, Mr. Speaker, and in fact they have gone about their business in a cordial way with the province and in an effective way for the city.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, how is it that the government can justify collecting over $6 billion in resource revenue, but it can't afford to pay 5 percent of that for natural gas rebates? I ask that to the minister.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, in the year 2001, when natural gas prices grew – in fact, the government of the day addressed this issue – we came up with the Natural Gas Price Protection Act. We struck a price in which Albertans could qualify for assistance at 5 percent below the price in 2001. So discounting inflation, discounting the increase in prices, we are still at a strike price that's 5 percent below 2001 levels. It was announced that way. It was announced in a 28th of August news release: the forecasted annual reference price in the year's fiscal provincial budget is the way that we'll establish the price; the trigger price has been established at $5.50. We are being more than fair. We're being realistic of the issues of the day, and we're here to provide Albertans assistance with the rebate program as the prices get to the point where it was forecasted and put into law, which these members debated and these members participated in in the session of 2001.

*See p. 188, right col., para. 9, line 4

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the minister thinks that 5 percent below the prices that existed before the last election is good enough, then can he please tell us why, if the government is getting $6 billion a year from resource revenues, most of which is natural gas, the government isn't actively participating in the gouging of homeowners in this province on the price of their natural gas right now?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no New Democrat alive that wouldn't put $27 billion worth of demands into a $20 billion budget.

An Hon. Member: Yes, they would.

Mr. Smith: Yes, they would, and I guess that's what they're asking to do right now.

So, Mr. Speaker, in fact, over $20 billion worth of royalties that have been collected over the last four years have gone into things like health care – and I'm sure the minister may want to talk about the changed budget in health care from 2001 – education, infrastructure, drought relief, forest fire assistance, not to discount the fact that there's been some 1.3 billion dollars in tax cuts delivered to this province since the year 2001.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of the constituents in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne are calling my offices regarding utility concerns. The minister just talked about trigger pricing and this regulation regarding the average prices. It's difficult to explain. How does the minister calculate this average price, and how is a $5.50 gigajoule trigger price calculated?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. The Alberta reference price is the average selling price of all Alberta natural gas sold throughout North America less their transportation cost in a given month. Yes, it is difficult. First, you have a well. People take risks. They drill a well. They find natural gas. The natural gas is then produced, and it gets up into a device called a separator or a treater. It takes water out of it. It adds value to the gas. It puts it into shape to put into a pipeline. Then it's moved to a gas plant, and then its carbon dioxide is removed. If it's enriched, other ethane enrichments are removed for later sale. Then that gas is piped throughout the system down to Empress at the AECO gate, and then it's moved all across North America, where, in fact, if it was put into electricity, it would light up one out of every seven and a half homes in the United States.

Now, this price that has been paid is paid when it hits the gate price, and it is reduced of the transportation cost, and then if you're in that well, there are a number of partners in that well, so then the money is split amongst those partners. So, Mr. Speaker, what happens is the reference price is the price that we sell the gas at, and there's a lag of some 30 to 45 days, in some cases 60, before we can calculate that price and the payments that have accrued to the Crown.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again to the same minister. As you explained, you know, the trigger price is difficult to understand, and we have that trigger price calculated on the fiscal year average. Why not calculate that quarterly or seasonally then?

An Hon. Member: Good question.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question, as one member has just said. In fact – and I think this bears some examination – why couldn't we look at calculating it maybe twice a year when we see prices change? For example, in August of 2002 the price of natural gas was $1.84.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Smith: One dollar and eighty-four cents, Mr. Speaker. In November the price was moving up to that $4 level. So, in fact, that is a reasonable suggestion. One thing we will not be able to do, though, is put two Januaries or two Februaries into a 12-month period.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again to the same minister: you know, due to the fact that competition and customer choice is a real answer to many of my constituents' concerns, will my constituents and will Albertans be better served by Direct Energy coming into Alberta to get into the retail marketplace?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that again the member has hit on the key. Competition, increased supply are certainly key in electricity. The ability for Albertans to choose whether they'd like to integrate gas and electricity prices, to buy on a 12-, 24-, or 36-month basis are all options that they will have at their disposal as the Gas Utilities Act comes forward to the Legislature. In fact, as Albertans make choices, there will still be a Natural Gas Price Protection Act, that will be based on good information, in-depth analyses. There are over 550 people in the Department of Energy that are experts in this business, that work hard and that will continue to deliver clear information on trigger price, forecast price, annual rates of calculation. It is a complex business, but we're going to work hard to make sure every Albertan can understand and benefit from this resource.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Electronic Health Records

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proposed changes to the Health Information Act will allow confidential patient information to be posted on computers without the consent of patients. Their consent will automatically be assumed, as if it were a negative billing. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: if consent for electronic sharing of records was important in 1999, when the Health Information Act was passed, why is it of so little importance today?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I first have to speak to the importance of electronic health records and circumstances as to why this is an important thing to do for the purposes of patient safety and better outcomes in our health care system. If an individual who's a resident of Edmonton is injured in a car accident in Pincher Creek, Alberta, the emergency team that sees that person at the accident site should be able to by wireless communications access that portion of the individual's record that relates to the fact of what their blood type is, whether they're diabetic, whether they're on certain kinds of medications, whether they're allergic to certain kinds of things, and therefore the treatment would be governed accordingly. The consent in such a circumstance, obviously, if the individual is unconscious would not be possible. Now, this is an example of why electronic health records are important.

Another example for the purposes of efficiency is that, say, an individual sees a physician and gets a diagnostic test. Another specialist that the individual has been referred to should be able to access the lab values and the diagnostic tests without having to order them again, so this is for the purposes of efficiency.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is in the best estimation of the people that we rely on, our physicians, our health care providers, that this kind of information is valuable to have.

Let me speak to the specific issue of patient consent. We have run a pilot project on the pharmacy information network. Some 4,200 people in Leduc and Westlock were participants in this particular information-sharing project. We asked for their consent, and out of 4,200 people only about 30-some did not consent to having their information put in the format of an electronic health record. So over 99 percent of people consented when it was explained to them what the value of this was.

So, Mr. Speaker, it's not that individuals cannot refuse consent – they still can – but the onus now shifts from the health care provider to ask for their consent to the individual patient, who still has the right to say: I do not consent to have this information on an electronic health record. They can still do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A pilot project and focus groups are one thing; a full-blown public consultation process is another. Why did the minister not hold public meetings and provide public information sessions on these proposed changes?

Mr. Mar: This is a very important piece to help drive effectiveness and efficiency and, particularly, better patient outcomes in our health care system. That's the reason why we're moving forward on it, Mr. Speaker, and we think that from our example, from this very, very important pilot project – again, when Albertans are explained the reasons why an electronic health record is important, overwhelmingly they would consent to this idea.

Dr. Taft: The reason given by the government in writing is that it was an administrative burden.

Given that many government information systems are contracted out and that there have been any number of thefts of equipment and software, will the minister admit that there are real risks of massive breaches of confidentiality with these systems if, for example, a computer is stolen?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that Albertans do have concerns about inappropriate use of their health information. That is correct. However, the stakeholders that we worked with – physicians, health care policy analysts, health care providers of all sorts – recognize the importance of the confidentiality of this information, and I wish to assure this House and Albertans that every reasonable effort will be made to ensure the protection of confidential patient information. That is absolutely critical.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Calgary Board of Education

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Member for Calgary-Shaw I have over 25,000 constituents that are between the ages of kindergarten and grade 12, so learning and educational issues are always of great importance to me and my constituency. In a third-quarter announcement today it indicated that the Calgary board of education will be receiving a onetime grant payment as a result of the award issued by the arbitration panel. My questions today are to the Minister of Learning. What is this payment to the CBE going to cover?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've been working very closely with the CBE for roughly the last four months on their budget. As the hon. member knows, back in the fall they announced that they were going to have a deficit of around $16.5 million. We have been working with them, and indeed we have that almost down to zero right now. One of the sticking points in the Calgary board of education was a very unique clause in the arbitration settlement that was reached last June. In that unique clause it stated that the benefits for the teachers would be increased from 70 percent to 100 percent. This was the only contract in the province that this occurred to.

So, Mr. Speaker, what we have decided to do and what we did today was put CBE back on a level footing with all other school boards. This $7 million actually was something that no other school boards in the province had to bear the cost of. So today in the third quarter we announced that $7 million would be used on a onetime basis to cover that this year.

The CBE has been doing some very good things in their education system, and I would just like to take a minute to commend the board for their diligence, for making some tough decisions, and for doing what's right for students in Calgary.

Mrs. Ady: To the same minister: wouldn't other boards have received a similar clause in the arbitration process, and if so, are we considering similar payments to them?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the interesting part about the arbitration settlement is that of all the boards in Alberta that had the arbitration settlement, the CBE was the only board that went from 70 percent to 100 percent. The rationale that the arbitrator gave was that because the minutes of instruction, the hours of instruction were taken out of the contract, this was to compensate teachers, but in reality it was an added burden that was placed on Calgary that no other school board in the province of Alberta had, and for that reason we recognized that. Again I will stress that we've been working with Calgary, working very well with Calgary for the last four months, and this is what happened because of that.

Mrs. Ady: My last question is again to the Minister of Learning. For clarification, then, are there no other boards in the province who provide a 100 percent benefit coverage to their teachers?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, in actual fact there are about 12 or 13 other boards that do that, but those were purely negotiated settlements. They negotiated that in contracts gone by, in years gone by, so there are 12 or 13 boards that are at that level, but Calgary is the only one who got it foisted on them because of the arbitration settlement.

Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, as a part of its continuing strategy to sell out the interests of Albertans in protecting parks and protected areas, the Alberta government has unveiled its draft management plan for the Evan-Thomas provincial recreation area in Kananaskis Country. This plan provides a wealth of opportunities to corporations and developers, from expanding ski areas and chalets to new roads and hotels, but unfortunately this will come at the expense of the wildlife and wilderness that Albertans wish to preserve. My questions today are all to the Minister of Community Development. When, according to your own survey, 90 percent of Albertans believed that the highest priority in Kananaskis should be environmental protection even if this means fewer recreational opportunities for people, how can you claim that you are governing in accordance with the wishes of the people of Alberta with this new plan?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's true that there is a draft management plan that's been arrived at after at least two years of consultation with the local community, individuals around that area, plus some environmental groups and others with a stakeholding interest. It's also true that the draft management plan is out there asking for public input and for comments, and the deadline for that passed, I believe, on February 14. All of those particular comments are being reviewed right now, and once they have been amassed and sifted through, I'm sure I'll get some final recommendations for that particular draft management plan.

I should say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that it's very clear that the policy there refers to the possibility, the potential, of small-scale developments perhaps proceeding, not large scale, nothing outlandish. Major proposals for new golf courses or new ski hills or things of that large type of project would be encouraged outside the protected area of Evan-Thomas.

Ms Carlson: It isn't in the plans, and they don't plan to do it, Mr. Speaker.

Given that 87 percent of Albertans said that commercial development should be directed outside Kananaskis Country, how can this minister condone and promote in these plans on behalf of Albertans the creeping commercialism that is occurring in the Evan-Thomas area under his mandate?

Mr. Zwozdesky: You know, Mr. Speaker, that's absolutely not true. There is no creeping commercialization, whatever that might mean to the hon. member.

I can tell you that over 60 percent of Alberta's crown jewel, Kananaskis Country, is under protective status of one type or another. We're very proud of that. In fact, we've had a very aggressive program of protection not only for that area but for other parts of this province as well, and the member is fully aware of that. Should there be any kinds of proposals for small-scale developments, they will be considered, and perhaps they will be granted – perhaps they won't be granted – but it's way too early to make any kind of rampant suggestions, as the hon. member is alluding to.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, why waste taxpayer dollars on surveys when this minister never intended to listen to what Albertans were telling him in the first place? [interjections]

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'm sorry, hon. member. I didn't quite catch the . . .

The Speaker: Well, hon. minister, there seems to be a bit of a buzz. I'm not sure if there's a full moon out tonight or if it's a special holiday I'm not aware of, but why aren't you listening pretty much sums up the question.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I heard the word "survey." They were just heckling a little too much.

It's common practice, as we go through the delicate issue of balancing environmental protection concerns with concerns that the public has for access to its own beautiful parks and recreational areas, to do a lot of consultation. I assure you that there has been a lot of consultation with respect to this draft management plan, as there is with 14 others that are under my consideration or some form of committee consideration at the moment. So this is not a waste of money. This is a very thorough and honourable process that will yield some very specific results, I'm sure, of which we can all be proud and which we can all live with.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Edmonton Public School Board

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result of the 14 percent salary increase to teachers, the Edmonton public school board recently projected a $13.5 million shortfall for the years 2002 and 2003. In response to that, the Minister of Learning announced that his department would conduct an audit of the Edmonton public school board. Today the Edmonton public school board announced that they will be increasing instructional time by some six minutes per day to partially address this issue. My questions today are to the Minister of Learning. What outcomes have you seen from the audit of the Edmonton public school board?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. The formal audit of Edmonton public is not over, but I think we've already seen some good results. One of those results came in a letter from Don Fleming, the chairman of the Edmonton public school board, to myself in asking to move some funds from their capital account, which they received by selling their administration building, and to put it into operating. This amounted to around $2 million. So, Mr. Speaker, through to the hon. member, there are good results coming out. I have not seen the final audit – I would expect it within the next couple of weeks – but I am very optimistic.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Again to the Minister of Learning: Mr. Speaker, will the minister conduct similar audits on other school boards in this province?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't entirely like to use the word "audit." A good example of this is in my previous answer to the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, where I stated that we've been working with Calgary public for about four months, and consequently what happened today was as a result of that. Any school boards that want us to come in, we certainly will. If school boards are in a particularly bad position, we will certainly go in and attempt to help them, and that's what we're doing at the moment with Edmonton public.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, my last supplemental to the same minister. If in the end the money can't reasonably be made up this year by the Edmonton public school board, would the minister consider amortizing the deficit over a number of years to reduce the impact on students and to prevent shutting down programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In a preface to that question I will say that I met this morning with members of Edmonton caucus, and they made an excellent representation on behalf of their parents, on behalf of their students. I think their main concern, obviously, is programs for students. My main concern is programs for students. So what I have told them is that I certainly will look at this following the audit, following taking a look and working with them. I think it's a little premature to say for sure, but I will take a look at it, and I think that the Edmonton caucus did an excellent job in this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Policing Costs

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Solicitor General has been commenting on the level of federal funding for policing in Alberta suggesting that the federal government isn't paying its fair share of policing costs. However, according to an AUMA report on the RCMP contract in Alberta with information from the Canadian Centre for Justice Statistics, the province contributes only 14 percent to policing, where the federal government contributes 37 percent and the municipalities 49 percent. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Why is 14 percent not enough federal funding for health care, yet the province paying a 14 percent share of funding for policing is just fine? Why the double standard?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the hon. member is quite confused. What the Solicitor General was commenting about on the federal funding were initiatives that I met with the federal Solicitor General, Wayne Easter, on, and that's in regards to providing us funding for gang initiatives – that is a serious problem in this province – and other initiatives as far as terrorism and things like that.

On the other issue which she talked about, the funding, it depends on what level the community is. If the community is under 2,500, we pay the shot, and the federal government and our contract is a 70-30 split.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Solicitor General tell us why a third of the communities in Alberta have notified the RCMP that they will not be renewing their contracts? Can you explain that?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member brings up a good point. We have a serious concern in this province in regard to policing. The police are dealing with a variety of crimes, with some very, very serious issues. We've had a committee go out and address some of the issues, and we will be reviewing that and dealing with that shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Solicitor General: what are the priorities of this government when $105 million is spent on VLT upgrades but only $109 million on policing in Alberta?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I think, again, the hon. member is confused. The $109 million that she's referring to comes under my department. Maybe the Minister of Municipal Affairs, also, would like to talk about the funding that comes from his department.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the municipal sponsorship program we have over $95 million to go to communities, and I might say that in the release, for communities under 2,500 – you may be aware that the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler has done a police report. Some of the communities, aside from those under 2,500, are saying: how come those under 2,500 don't pay a cent towards policing? So there is some inequity based on what some over 2,500 pay versus those under. And the good neighbours are saying: hey, we've got to get some equity here. I think it's an important point.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope against hope that the Learning minister is reconsidering his mindless refusal to make up the shortfall caused by the government's failure to fund the arbitration settlement it imposed and the shortfall caused by the cap it imposed on grade 10 credits. These shortfalls are creating genuine emergencies in our schools. By failing to listen to school boards across the province, this Tory government is hurting our school-going children. My questions are to the minister. How does the minister respond to Cindy Jefferies, board chair of Red Deer public schools, who said in a statement tabled yesterday, "It's a terrible shame that this province, with all its wealth, cannot seem to find adequate funding for the education of our children"?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll reiterate what I've said in the Assembly several times, actually, this year already, and that is that there was $298 million over two years that was given to the school boards for an arbitration settlement of $260 million.

Mr. Speaker, you heard today that we had been working with Calgary public over a four-month period to delve into their budget, to find out what the issues were, and we came out with the conclusion that they had received a part of the arbitration settlement that no else had received in Alberta and subsequently did it. You also heard today that with Edmonton public we're looking at it. We think that there are some very positive steps that can be undertaken to make sure that they balance their budget.

Bottom line, Mr. Speaker, there's been a huge amount of dollars put into education in this province. We have by far the highest per capita funding, per capita spending on education of anywhere in Canada. There is a lot of money out there, and what is happening right now, quite frankly, is that taxpayers are demanding accountability for this government in how it spends its money.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how does the minister respond to Michele Mulder, president of the Alberta School Boards Association, who, in reacting to the $142 million shortfall faced by school boards, said in a statement tabled in this House, "The travesty of all this is that Alberta is the richest province in Canada [and] we shouldn't be having conversations about cutting teachers or services to students at all"?

Dr. Oberg: That's funny, Mr. Speaker. Roughly an hour ago I had a conversation with Miss Mulder, and she didn't mention that.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how does the minister respond to the board of trustees of Elk Island public schools, who, in a statement I will table this afternoon, say that the minister is misleading Albertans and just not listening when it comes to the government's refusal to fully fund arbitration settlements with teachers?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, the hon. member seems to have a little problem with his facts. I actually sat down with Elk Island public and the affected MLAs, probably about three or four weeks ago, and at that time they said: yes, it was going to be tight; yes, they were having some issues. But they also guaranteed me that they would have a balanced budget by the end of this year.

There are some tough steps that are going to have to be taken, but let's put this in perspective. Our teachers received a 14 percent pay settlement in the last arbitration agreement. Our teachers are now paid roughly 10 percent more than any teacher across Canada. That is what has caused this. We are working with school boards, as I have said. We've gone in on several school boards and will continue to help them. Elk Island public is one that has assured me that they will have a balanced budget this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've attended a number of school councils and most of the schools in my constituency over the past few weeks. Parents have been very concerned about the program cuts being proposed by Edmonton public schools. My constituents have heard that much-needed teachers are facing layoffs, programs are on the cutting block, and that many of these programs will affect students who are already the highest need, special-needs students and those who are at risk at a critical time in their life. My question is to the Minister of Learning. What is the minister doing to ensure that these and all students are not negatively affected by these proposed budget cuts?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think, first of all, that when it comes to the budget, there will be an increase this year in our business plan. The increase is there. I will say that when it comes to special-needs education, you have seen a 10 percent increase per year over the past two years on special-needs education, and you will see a considerable increase to special-needs funding this year. In talking to people around the country, our special-needs programs are probably the number one programs around the country. Talking to the superintendents, they say that our special-needs programs are going a very long way.

I guess that what I have a problem with in what the hon. member has said is a little bit of the fear mongering that is going on right now. We're attempting to work with Edmonton public, and we will do that over the next period of a few months. I don't think that any taxpayer in this country, let alone this province, would automatically want us to write a blank cheque to school boards purely because they say: we don't have enough money.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Learning. Parents have been handed school budgets and told: these teachers are gone. Are these cuts going to affect the classroom?

Dr. Oberg: Well, that's very interesting, Mr. Speaker. In talking to the superintendent of Edmonton public, I don't believe that they have received their final budget figures, I don't believe that this is occurring, and again I refer to my previous comments about fear mongering.

Mr. Hutton: Mr. Speaker, I'm moving to the Minister of Infrastructure now with regard to the shortfalls in Edmonton public schools. To the Minister of Infrastructure through the Speaker: are you working at all with the Edmonton public school board to make any changes around the school utilization rate to help reduce some of these cost pressures?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, back about three or four years ago when the province was heading into the new century school program, where they were going to spend a billion dollars on schools, there was a decision made by the then minister and the government that, in fact, it would be prudent to look at the utilization and the formulas for calculating it. One of the effects of the changes has been that the operating and maintenance component that is now administered out of the Department of Infrastructure was affected by those changes in the calculation for utilization. Where it had the most negative impact was in areas where there are a lot of old schools, particularly old high schools, but we did exempt the high schools that were built prior to 1990 from the new calculations. Because of the calculations, the Edmonton public board did lose about $1.8 million in operation and maintenance funds. So what we are currently doing is going back and having a look at the calculations. We are asking the department to look at the special circumstances to see if, in fact, there's something that we can do to even this out.

When the formula was applied, there were some jurisdictions that lost money. We didn't have more money, so some lost, some gained. Edmonton was one of those that unfortunately did lose some money.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we move on to the next item on the Routine this afternoon, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Visitors?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to rise today to introduce a very special guest to you and to members of this Legislature. After nearly 30 years in government in the province of British Columbia in posts that included being Deputy Premier and being awarded such honours as the Order of Canada, Grace McCarthy turned her attention to raising funds for research to help very sick children with Crohn's disease and ulcerative colitis and founding a foundation for raising money for such purposes. In seven and a half short years Grace McCarthy almost single-handedly has raised over $5 million and established the first chair in pediatric gastroenterology in Canada, at the University of British Columbia, and all accomplished through volunteer effort. I ask our distinguished guest to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Alberta Special Olympics

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I had the pleasure of representing the Alberta government at the Alberta Special Olympics, held in the city of Wetaskiwin in my constituency. More than 500 athletes from all over Alberta and the Northwest Territories competed at these Special Olympics from February 7 to 9. It was a great event with all of the athletes having, as they said, a hoot and a ton of fun. Amongst the highlights was the closing ceremonies with special guest Lieutenant Governor Lois Hole.

The organizing committee with chair Sheana McDermott, Blain Fuller, and Byron King worked for over a year to oversee every detail of the games, and their efforts were rewarded in the wonderful experiences of all the participants. The community of Wetaskiwin was also a big reason for the success of these Olympics. They opened their hearts to the athletes to ensure that their short stay in Wetaskiwin would be enjoyable.

I would ask that all Members of the Legislative Assembly join me in congratulating the athletes, coaches, trainers, organizers, and the community of Wetaskiwin for the success of this year's Alberta Special Olympics.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Ramsay School

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize Ramsay school in my constituency. Ramsay is a strong community with long historical roots to the early days of Calgary. It's now on a strong growth path as many people now prefer the inner city. The growth of Ramsay and inner-city communities requires schools, and Ramsay school is the answer.

Ramsay school is also going strong because of its robust community partnerships. Partnerships with the Alexandra community health centre, the Talisman sports centre, the YMCA, the Janus Academy for autistic children, and the anticipated partnership with the Stampede board will positively affect the quality of education and the student enrollment.

I believe Ramsay school continues to be a very good and strategic investment for the CBE. It's an important landmark in the community and in the city, providing an excellent and unique learning environment for local children as well as children with special needs. The building is historical, solid and sound, and runs efficiently.

To conclude, I want to recognize the fantastic work of the Ramsay school staff, parents, students, community residents. My heart tells me to continue to support the school. My head tells me how to find ways to help increase the enrollment and the space utilization. Representing my constituency, I have requested the CBE trustees to do the same.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to congratulate today the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America local 1325 on a century of success. The union has overcome adversity since its formation on November 11, 1902, with 18 members in its ranks. Now local 1325 can be proud of each and every one of the trades professionals in its 4,500 strong membership.

The local's purpose has remained the same over the last 100 years, and the union can take pride in having succeeded in improving the employment terms and conditions for its members and their families. Though the working conditions in this province still aren't ideal for everyone, workers can take heart that members of local 1325 continue to advocate for the rights of all Alberta workers.

Carpenters have a long and proud history dating back to before biblical times. Many carpenters and joiners, indeed members of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners local 1325, demonstrated quality work and pride in craftsmanship when they helped build this Legislative Assembly. Members of the united brotherhood have been an integral part of building this province into what it is today.

Again, congratulations to the united brotherhood of carpenters for their first 100 years' participation in the economy of this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Centralized Hospital Pharmacy

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was pleased to attend with the health minister the official opening of Alberta's and Canada's first centralized hospital pharmacy on Friday, February 21, a move that the Calgary health region says will make drug dispensing safer, faster, and cheaper.

The $2.5 million central production pharmacy is expected to save the health region $1 million by having most of its hospital drugs in one highly secured location and a further $2.5 million in nursing time. The pharmacy uses automated packaging systems to prepare medications for acute care patients in Calgary's four hospitals. Hospital staff then have more time to focus on patient care and increase the safety and quality of oral/intravenous medications.

Steve Long, director of pharmacy for the CHR, believes the facility creates the opportunity for their pharmacy technicians, assistants, and aides to work to their full scope of practice. Pharmacists will now be able to spend more time providing medication advice to physicians and nurses to improve patient care. All prescriptions can be tracked, and nurses and other staff will spend less time measuring prescriptions. This initiative is truly an exciting step forward in health care reform.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Ready Engineering

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take a moment today and recognize an exciting company in my constituency for winning Alberta's small business award of distinction. Ready Engineering of Spruce Grove won this year's award. The automation and electrical engineering company which began in 1997 with two employees and one client is an excellent example of ingenuity and determination. Today Ready Engineering employs 19 people and has offices in Houston and Olympia, Washington.

I spoke to Lee today, and Spruce Grove is home not only because of a large client base nearby but also the great lifestyle Spruce Grove offers. I especially wanted to recognize Lee Ready, who founded the company with his wife, Susan, in a 750 square foot office space in Spruce Grove. Mr. and Mrs. Ready are a tribute to the entrepreneurial spirit that this province boasts and supports.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Trevor Brown

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to recognize an outstanding young man from the county of Lethbridge in the constituency of Little Bow, Trevor Brown. Accolades flow from those who closely know and work with Trevor through his personal accomplishments and ongoing involvement.

Trevor was an honours student at Winston Churchill high school. He excelled in math and science, enrolled in the IB program, maintained an 80 to 90 average throughout high school, frequently was selected student of the month, participated in rugby and football, was a team captain last year, and when his coach was diagnosed with cancer, Trevor rallied his teammates and school peers to successfully raise $2,000 for cancer research and the family in less than two weeks. He's also instrumental in many volunteering activities with seniors, and he tutors on a part-time basis as well as holding a full-time job this year where he currently is attending his first year at the University of Lethbridge.

On February 7, Mr. Speaker, I was privileged on behalf of the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta and the Minister of Community Development to present Trevor the inaugural Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal, one of only five young Albertans, all from smaller communities in Alberta.

Trevor, congratulations on your outstanding achievements and accomplishments. Your dad, Laurie; your mom, Betty; your sister Tammy; your grandma Beth Clampitt; and your community are extremely proud of you, and I know that if the Lieutenant Governor would have been there, she would have given you one of her big hugs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Edmonton Coalition against War and Racism

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize a remarkable group of Albertans. The Edmonton Coalition against War and Racism is a committee of concerned individuals from all walks of life and representatives from labour, interfaith, and social justice groups. This group is working to further build the antiwar movement within the greater Edmonton area. They work to raise awareness of how the possible war against Iraq is not only not justified under international law but will make this world an infinitely more dangerous place.

The coalition recently organized two very successful peace marches in this city, the first on a very cold January 15, when 3,000 marched down Whyte Avenue in protest of the war, and the second on February 15, when over 12,000 marched down Jasper Avenue in what I believe is the largest protest march in Alberta history.

I applaud and support this group's hard work to educate Edmontonians and Albertans about the disastrous consequences of a war of aggression against Iraq.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the working poor in Alberta to table a petition signed by 58 Albertans from Calgary, Banff, Strathmore who are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to immediately raise the minimum wage in our province to $8.50 per hour and index it to the cost of living.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the honour and privilege on behalf of the Minister of Children's Services of tabling with this Assembly the requisite number of copies of the membership and biographies of the members of the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise. I believe the hon. minister in comments yesterday in committee indicated that she would provide the names of the people who had been invited to participate and who had volunteered their time and efforts to make Alberta's Promise a very successful venture and make things better for Alberta's children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of signatures of 1,641 names from citizens of Didsbury and area who are requesting that the Didsbury hospital services area become part of the Calgary regional health authority.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a letter from Ms Rachele Nelson of Fort Saskatchewan dated February 21, 2003, and addressed to her MLA. Ms Nelson was shocked to find that her natural gas bill jumped from $153 in December to $270 in January. She points out that as the Premier had promised to protect Albertans from the price of natural gas, why is he not now keeping his promise?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got one tabling today. It's a document that I undertook to table in this House during the question period. It's five copies of a news release from the Elk Island public schools board of trustees dated February 22, 2003, a current document, and it's titled: Government "Just Not Listening."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one document to table for the benefit of the Assembly this afternoon, and it is a letter dated February 12, 2003, from the office of the Minister of Learning, and it is addressed to Mr. Bill Kobluk. It is regarding tuition fees and program access at the University of Alberta, and I would urge all members of this Assembly to please read this document.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Other members on tablings?

Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have received a certain message from the Administrator of the province of Alberta, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Administrator transmits supplementary estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2003, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, prior to moving a number of motions relevant to the supplementary estimates, I wish to advise that this morning I provided the government's 2002-2003 quarterly budget report for the third quarter to all MLAs. We have also made this report public, as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act. I have tabled this quarterly budget report as the amended consolidated fiscal plan. This revised plan is required by section 9 of the same act whenever a subsequent set of estimates is tabled during the fiscal year.

I've also tabled the third-quarter activity report for 2002-2003. This document describes the major achievements of our government during the recent period.

I wish now to table the 2002-03 supplementary estimates, No. 2. These supplementary estimates will provide additional spending authority to 14 departments of the government. When passed, these estimates will authorize an increase of $206,642,000 in operating expense and capital investment.

Mr. Speaker, section 8 of the Government Accountability Act requires that the government table a new and amended consolidated fiscal plan when there is another set of estimates. I have just tabled the amended fiscal plan, the 2002-2003 quarterly budget report for the third quarter, in the Legislative Assembly.

Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to move Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

The proposed amendments are necessary to proceed with a new fiscal framework for Alberta as recommended by the Financial Management Commission. The commission noted this province's enviable position as a fiscal leader, but it also said that we could do better. This new framework is designed to address the impact of volatile energy prices on budget planning, and it addresses capital planning pressures.

In order to proceed, the proposed changes are required to the Fiscal Responsibility Act, the Government Accountability Act, and the Financial Administration Act. Some of the amendments mark some significant changes in the way we conducted business in the past but remain true to our principles of open and accountable government and prudent fiscal management.

It's important that I draw your attention to these key amendments. One amendment to the Fiscal Responsibility Act would result in the budget, quarterly reports, and the annual report continuing to show two bottom lines. You will still see net results of operations and the results for fiscal policy purposes, which we all know is called the economic cushion. Currently there is only one adjustment between these two bottom lines. It relates to the unfunded pension liabilities, which have been relatively small in amount, that have continued to work under the new framework. Since we have a separate long-term legislative plan to address unfunded pension liabilities, this adjustment has been understood and not been an issue in our reporting. Results for fiscal policy purposes will now also account for revenue transfers in and out of the sustainability fund and exclude disaster funding and funding for the capital account.

If you recall, under the new fiscal framework we will be budgeting for natural resource revenue to be set at $3.5 billion. Years in which nonrenewable resource revenue is below $3.5 billion or the costs of emergencies or disasters are significant, you could see an actual consolidated drop or deficit reported by the Auditor. Now, this kind of deficit would be allowed because the actual deficit would have been prefunded by prior years' surpluses and would be covered by the sustainability fund, the capital account, or the retained earnings of the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation and the crop reinsurance fund.

We would also show various adjustments for the draws from the sustainability fund and the capital account to get to the net result for fiscal policy purposes. The net result for fiscal policy purposes will continue to show that we have balanced our books, and I want to make that very clear: this is not a return to deficit budgeting. It's against the law.

We will have a sustainable spending plan in each year's budget based on $3.5 billion of resource revenues. If there's a shortfall in resource revenue, we'll be able to draw on the fund instead of cutting spending in the middle of the year, and disasters and emergencies will be funded even if there isn't a revenue windfall to cover them. This is a consequence of setting up a sustainability fund to stabilize volatile energy revenues. There will be transfers in and out of the fund, but we will have accounted for the transfers out of the fund with previous surpluses put into the fund.

Although I dread getting into accounting details, you should also understand that we're moving closer to the private-sector model for capital. Only amortization will count towards our bottom line rather than the full cost of the new capital that we own. This change brings a number of technical matters on how the cushion is determined. Assets will show up on our balance sheet, a new idea for this province to record its assets. We may also increase our liabilities on the balance sheet if we choose to look at alternative forms of financing of our capital as was recommended by the Financial Management Commission.

Another new initiative that adds flexibility to capital planning is the ability to carry over funding from one year to the next, Mr.

Speaker. I did look very hard to find the rule that says that everything in government has to end March 31 at midnight, and I couldn't find that rule. So we brought some reality in, and we will be allowed to carry capital funding forward from year to year. In other words, if a project can't be completed because of weather conditions, the funding that isn't used on the project that year could be carried over to the next year. It makes common sense to do that. These types of decisions will be laid out in the three-year capital plan that will now be required as part of the budget. The accumulated debt from prior years will still have the same legislated timetable for it to be repaid.

Another significant change is that implementation of the sustainability fund means the old 75-25 percent rule for surpluses will be gone. The contingency reserve for in-year spending will be fixed in the budget as at least 1 percent of revenue, or about $200 million. Disasters and emergencies, net budgeted increases, and payments under the Natural Gas Price Protection Act and the capital account would not be charged to the contingency reserve. Any cash available beyond the $200 million from year-end surpluses, except for that held in funds and agencies, would go to the sustainability fund.

The fund cannot go into debt. If the fund grew to more than $2.5 billion, then we would have a policy decision to make use of the excess on things like debt repayment, adding to the heritage trust fund, or capital investment. It couldn't be used for ongoing operating costs. So any money currently dedicated for debt repayment will continue to be used for that purpose.

Other amendments are primarily technical, Mr. Speaker. This legislation marks a new era for Alberta, one that gets us off the energy roller coaster in favour of a more predictable and sustainable funding over the long term.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to support Bill 2. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with interest and a great deal of pleasure that I rise to speak on Bill 2 this afternoon. We on this side of the House have been very anxious to have this idea enshrined in legislation and accepted by the government side, a better balance between debt repayment and a more balanced approach to deal with the day-to-day routine of budgeting for this province.

Certainly, when we look at the third-quarter fiscal update that the hon. minister mentioned earlier, we recognize the importance and the significance of oil and natural gas royalties, or royalty revenue, to this province. It has been something that members on this side of the House have been saying for a number of years, and there have been legislative initiatives in the past. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East had a bill in 2002, Bill 208, the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act. We can go back to 1999, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie had Bill 228, the Fiscal Stabilization Fund Calculation Act. This is a walk down memory lane, Mr. Speaker. In 1998 the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, who at that time was on this side of the House, who is now Minister of Community Development, had a similar legislative idea, the Fiscal Stabilization Fund Calculation Act, again, Bill 222. There are those that think imitation is a fine form of flattery, and in this case I would have to say that they're absolutely correct. Finally there is going to be some stability to the roller coaster, the ups and downs in revenue that we experience in this province from natural gas and oil resources.

Now, when we look at accumulated debt and net assets and cash available from operations from one year to the next, these are important issues. There's no doubt about that. The whole notion of financial prudence I believe goes back to a former Liberal leader, Mr. Laurence Decore. He would certainly wave his wallet, and he had a machine to tabulate or calculate what the debt was going to be, and finally people took notice.

We could, I suppose, go back to the Premier's famous speech in Leduc – I wasn't there, and I'm told that it's not the last school that the hon. Premier visited – that indicated there would be tightfisted fiscal responsibility in this province. Now, that didn't last too long. In the last few years we have seen an increase of close to 50 percent in program spending.

We even got the supplementary estimates this afternoon. I was looking at a budget document earlier. I believe the total estimated was $19 billion, and then suddenly it shot up to $20.4 billion, so there are changes in the budget. Budgeting has certainly not been a strong suit of this current government. When you look at this increase in spending – in fact, I was at a meeting last night on education, and people asked me: when we spend all this money in this province, where does it go exactly? No one has the answer to that question. It's apparent that no one knows. I can bring in the Auditor General's report and go through it page by page, and certain respectful hon. members from across the aisle get indignant. Now, I don't know why they're so defensive. We bring up public accounts all the time, and the hon. members get defensive about that as well. Everyone has a right to know where the tax dollars are going.

Now, beginning in the next fiscal year, this government is going to start building a nest egg, a stability fund, that this side of the House has been advocating for years and years and years. Saskatchewan used their stability fund, or their nest egg. You've always got to keep the magpies out of the nest – always, always – because they can destroy the eggs in the nest pretty quick, and they can destroy the whole thing. The magpies in this situation would be political magpies, and they want public funds for no rhyme or reason, and I would say that one of those political magpies would be private health promoters. This electricity bill, which we're going to debate a little later on this afternoon, Bill 3: I don't know if there are political magpies there or not, but we will find out. We will study the issue, and we will determine if the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is correct with his cautious suspicions that perhaps there are political magpies there.

But this idea of a nest egg, I'm very pleased that the government has finally decided to do the right thing and adopt a good Liberal policy. Hopefully we won't have to use this stability fund and it'll be able to grow, and perhaps at some time portions of it could be set aside to replenish the heritage savings trust fund. I'm disappointed to see in this third-quarter annual report that the results have not been spectacular. They certainly, Mr. Speaker, have not been spectacular. In fact, it is with sadness that I have to note, and I'm quoting from the third-quarter fiscal update now, investment income.

Total investment income was budgeted at $1.2 billion. It is now forecast at negative $119 million, $1.3 billion below the budget estimate.

The decline in equity markets is expected to result in a $704 million loss in the Heritage Fund and other endowment funds (rather than budgeted net revenue of $635 million). This loss includes a $506 million write-down in assets, where the value is considered permanently impaired, and net realized losses of $198 million.

I guess "permanently impaired" means it's worth very little to nothing. I hope we don't see any more investment losses like this.

I'm sure – and perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry can shed some light on this – there's going to be a review of the investment practices of that heritage savings trust fund. Certainly, in other departments – and this is considering that the budgets there are much more modest, that they're not like a pool of cash with $11 billion in it – there are some pension funds that have been set aside, and I notice that there's been a reduction in the return on those investments, but nothing like this spectacular loss. I'm curious to note if anyone is phoning the administrators of those respective pension funds of the government to seek their advice. It wouldn't be a long-distance call either. I think a 427 number would reach these people and reach them probably quite quickly.

The idea of a nest egg and what this money could be used for if we ran into lower than expected revenues or financial difficulty – it certainly would provide some stability to the schools. Now, the meeting I was at last night, the school was in desperate need of repair. In fact, some students, a class full of them, had been locked inside the school, locked inside a classroom over lunchtime. They got locked in. They were lucky that a member of the staff . . .

Mr. Bonner: The janitor came. They had to take the hinges off.

Mr. MacDonald: The janitor couldn't take the hinges off, but a member of the staff could use a knife and rescue the children. Lucky there was no fire or there wasn't a fire alarm.

That's not the only mechanical deficiency with this school. There are certainly cracks in the cinder block walls. It's been on the books for repair so many times. It's been taken off because of what the minister said earlier: roller-coaster, or up-and-down, funding.

Mr. Bonner: Isn't it a 52-year-old school?

Mr. MacDonald: No, the school is not 52 years old, hon. member. The school would have been built in 1961, so it's a 42-year-old building.

It also has poor windows, other deficiencies. It has a $60,000 heating bill, which a better heating system would certainly reduce. Now, this school has been removed from receiving an upgrade three times that this member is aware of. Hopefully this stabilization fund is going to prevent it from being removed once again, because the repair costs have now escalated. The repair costs have gone from over $2 million to in excess of $4 million because it was put off. It had to be deferred and deferred and deferred. Of course, the condition of the building worsened. That's one thing the nest egg, the stability fund, can be used for.

We can see other uses for this fund. Of course, there will be firm financial commitments for each department. Last year the Infrastructure department had a significant reduction in funding commitments. There were projects pulled all over the place, and there was certainly a cost to that. This stability fund will, as I said, make it more predictable not only for the department officials but also the contractors.

Now, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, when we think of a fiscal framework for the 21st century, I'm pleased to see that the government is adopting an idea that was presented as recently as last year by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. I certainly hope that government members are over their tiredness from their enthusiastic support for the rough fescue grass and will participate in the debate this afternoon not only on Bill 2 but also on Bill 3.

Thank you.

3:10

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise, as well, to speak to Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. I believe that this bill will actually end some of the practices of this government that we in the opposition have been campaigning against for a considerable period of time. One is the misuse of estimates on resource revenue in order to do what we like to call fudge-it budgeting. The government has of course consistently underestimated royalty revenue in their estimates over an extended period of time, billions of dollars in some years and a considerable amount in almost every other year. That's one of the problems that may be partly addressed by this bill because, of course, they'll be creating a fund, a stability fund, in order to try and balance those things out.

The government has made use of fudge-it budgeting for a number of crassly political reasons. One is, of course, that if they're underestimating their resource revenue on a regular basis and by a substantial amount in each budget, they can claim poverty as we go through the year and various crises manifest themselves; for example, the education crisis that we are now seeing in our schools. They can claim poverty. Then at the end of the year, Mr. Speaker, they have this so-called unanticipated surplus of billions of dollars, and they look like they're brilliant financial managers. Well, they're brilliant political tacticians but not brilliant financial managers. So I think that that's one thing that we believe will be partly offset by this.

You know, I know that the Liberal opposition has been campaigning for a stability fund for some years. We were only too happy to steal their idea, and we encouraged the government to steal their idea, and the government has stolen their idea and that's because it's a good idea. No one party has a monopoly on good ideas. I know that the Premier thinks we're much worse than the Liberals, but we also have some very good ideas from time to time. We compete with the Liberals to see who can upset the Premier the most.

Now, I'd like to go on to another point that's covered in this bill which, I think, is something that we're quite prepared to take credit for, and that is the elimination of the ridiculous, outrageous 75-25 split to go to debt reduction, that has bedeviled this government's financial position for many years. When it was combined with fudge-it budgeting and these magical, unanticipated, quote, unquote, surpluses appeared every year, surprise, surprise, 75 percent of it by law had to go against the debt. So the government was engaged in starving important programs by underestimating the revenue, and then, surprise, surprise, they have to put three-quarters of the surplus against the debt. This is going to be gone now, Mr. Speaker, and it can't come soon enough, as far as we're concerned, because we've always called this debt reduction by stealth, and I think that's exactly what it is.

So I think there are a number of points that can be made. I know that the member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about schools in his constituency, and I know that schools in my constituency are badly in need of money. So the addition of additional funds for infrastructure, which is not specifically in this bill but was contained in the update provided by the minister today, is also a bit of welcome news that I think the public has been demanding from the government. Municipalities have been demanding it, hospitals have been demanding it, and school boards have been demanding it. It's a step in the right direction, Mr. Speaker, but given that the government has admitted that there's $8 billion of expenditures required to bring our infrastructure up to date, then somewhere over $900 million is only a small part.

Mr. Speaker, we've always talked about the false economy, of doubling up on your mortgage payments in order to pay down your mortgage more quickly and failing to repair the roof on your house when it needs it. If it rains, the damage can destroy the entire asset that you're hurriedly trying to reduce the mortgage on. So I think that what the government has done is it's shifted its debt from financial debt into physical infrastructure debt, and it's just as real as if it was a note that had to be paid. So I think that that's one point that I'd like to make.

I'd like to go on a bit more about the schools. I've been touring some of my schools, like other MLAs, and I know that the Eastglen high school needs a major overhaul. It's basically a sound building, but it's 50 years old, Mr. Speaker, and so it's reached the end of its design life. It can be preserved for another extended period of time if the government is prepared to put the money in, but the longer it delays, the more it's going to cost in the long run, and the most economic way to approach that is to put the money in now. I believe the school needs approximately $20 million to be completely refurbished, and then it will be good, I'm sure, for another many, many years to come.

I've also toured some of the other schools, and there are some excellent programs at some of the schools in my constituency that help high-needs children learn to read. They no longer categorize them, Mr. Speaker, as just needing help and socialization. They expect a performance from these students. They take some of the students – for example, in mathematics and reading, they give them special help – and they turn those that have lagged behind and start off the farthest behind into the top performers in reading and in mathematics. The school programs there are absolutely outstanding, but again there are continuing threats with programs being shut down or coming under the gun, and many of these excellent programs may not be there next year.

So I think that both on the program side and on the capital side there is a very, very strong need for more adequately funding our schools, and the schools in Edmonton-Highlands do an excellent job in difficult circumstances. The government could certainly do a lot more to make the lives of the students and the teachers a little easier because quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, it's got to be seen as probably the most significant and important investment that this province can make, and that means investing in its young people and their education.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to indicate that generally we think that the government is moving ever so slightly in the right direction with this bill, and both opposition parties have been pressing them in these directions very hard for a number of years. We know that a blue-chip committee was set up by the Minister of Finance to study it, and many of their recommendations are included in this act. The New Democrat opposition did appear before this commission and make proposals, particularly with respect to the ending of the 75-25 mandatory debt reduction requirement that is currently the law. We're pleased to see that the commission took our advice and that the minister took their advice, and hopefully the Legislature will take the minister's advice and therefore be taking our advice, and we'd be very happy with that.

So I'd just like to close by saying that this particular bill I think is a recognition that this is a very wealthy province, and there's a modernization of the financial machinery that's included in this bill. It doesn't take away the capacity of the government to misrepresent potential revenues or to plead poverty when it wants to and have an abundance of riches when that's convenient, but it goes some way towards putting some limitations on those political maneuverings, and I think that it represents a positive step forward for the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Before calling on the next speaker, I just want to remind hon. members that I have at least one person who's asked to make some questions or comments under Standing Order 29.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My friend representing Edmonton-Highlands in his comments indicated that the government consistently underestimated resource revenues, which resulted in a surplus at the end of the year. Now, when the member was making those comments, I was reflecting on a period of time when the government consistently overestimated revenues, and I was wondering whether it would be better to be in a position of being conservative on estimates of revenue so as not to be caught at the end of the day with bad news rather than good news. And since the revenues are very difficult to predict and that we do use as a government the very best objective minds to try to get a handle on it, what does the Member for Edmonton-Highlands recommend that we do rather than the procedure that we're using now, the conservative best methods?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm caught between the rock and a hard place. I have to choose between being conservative and being liberal, and I pick neither of the above. But I think if you really look at some of the estimates that were used and some of the figures – and I don't have them at hand, but I do have them – where prices were estimated for oil and gas in budget after budget, you'll find that they were not reasonable, that they were set too low. So the answer, I think, is not to be too conservative or to be too liberal but to be more honest and use the best available information. I submit that the government has not used the best information because they have wanted to and been motivated to underestimate our royalty revenues.

Rev. Abbott: I wonder if the hon. member opposite could give us an honest forecast of what he thinks the natural gas price will be for our next fiscal budget year? For the record, of course.

Mr. Mason: Not offhand, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: No further questions? Then we will go to the next speaker.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be able to get up and just address this for a few minutes. You know, after listening to my colleagues from across the way, I'm motivated to remind them that 10 years ago in this province we had a $22 billion debt and a $3.5 billion deficit, and we struggled with ways in which to deal with that and try and develop sustainable programs for the province of Alberta and for the people of this province so that they could once again be proud of where they lived and the programs that they wanted. We brought in the Fiscal Responsibility Act, deficit elimination acts. We brought in all kinds of things limiting government's ability to deal anywhere outside a specific parameter when it came to our finances, and it worked. We reduced and eliminated the deficit in the first couple of years, and we managed from there to pay down $17 billion of a $22 billion debt.

I want to remind people of the impact of a $22 billion debt. The impact was $1.5 billion in debt servicing cost, otherwise known as interest. The third largest department of government was interest. It doesn't provide a job, it doesn't provide any services but, my God, is it easy to rack it up. So, yes, we attempted to deal realistically with a very large problem. We set aside 25 years if that was what it was going to take to pay it off.

We have this gift in this province called oil and gas, and every once in awhile the prices spike beyond what anybody has anticipated, whether it's because of a Persian Gulf war, the ongoing problems with Venezuela, the problems in Iraq today, the extra cold and long winter that everybody in the northeastern United States is experiencing where we sell gas, the fact that their reserves are running low, or a thousand other reasons that can drive prices on the spot market up and down. So here we are in Alberta blessed with this resource, one of the few places in North America with these types of resources, and we have one of the lowest taxes anywhere in North America. We have no sales tax, unlike most places in North America, and one of the things that helps to prevent more and more income tax, more and more corporate taxes, more and more sales taxes is the fact that once in a while we get lucky with royalties.

So I'm supposed to sit here and believe that we're dishonest, misrepresenting the position of this government. Well, let's go back. Let's talk about that misrepresentation. We have quarterly updates. Somebody please tell me how many other governments in this country and in the United States actually have quarterly updates. Well, try none. You know, misrepresenting? Every quarterly update if there has been a change in natural gas and oil prices, we reflect it upward. Misrepresentation? It always fascinates me how these comments get made and nobody ever has to say: well, I was just sort of kidding or just being an envious political wank in here. The truth is that we don't misrepresent anything. I have never, ever in 10 years gone and lied to my constituents about anything, and I never will, whether anybody over there likes it or not. If somebody asks me a question, I'm going to answer it.

When we talk about the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the 75-25 split, it was never an easy decision to go 75-25. All we tried to do as a government was to make sure that as quickly as possible with the least problems possible for Albertans, i.e., no tax increases to pay down debt, we went with surpluses when we were lucky enough to get them to remove as much of that debt from Albertans as we possibly could. We're now down to $5 billion, and that's still $5 billion too much, but it's way better than $22 billion with a $3.5 billion deficit, where our cousins, you know, a little bit west of us in British Columbia, have a $3.8 billion deficit this year. How many billions of dollars across this country are being squandered on interest because people have such a difficult time making tough decisions?

Mrs. Nelson: Thirty-six point seven billion.

Ms Haley: Thirty-six point seven billion dollars, just for interest, and of course our wondrous media don't bother talking about that. The fact that if you had $37 billion to spend on health care in this country, that would be $3.7 billion for Alberta, which, oh, by the way, is right around 50 percent of what they should be paying. But that's okay. We're here in Alberta, and, you know, apparently we just lie to Albertans all of the time.

We proceeded with a 75-25 split because that was the correct thing to do, and when we had 25 percent of a fund left for onetime spending, we got chastised and criticized for that too. Truth is we do have some infrastructure deficits in this province, whether it's roads or schools or hospitals. We've spent over a billion dollars in the last three years on schools, but we probably need another one and a half billion in order to solve all of the problems that have built up over decades of overspending or perhaps not spending enough.

The new FMC. You know, how do I say this? I believe that it has great potential. I really do. I think the sustainability fund can solve some problems. I think, however, going from one system to another creates its own pressures, and those are pressures that are going to be difficult for the next six months while everybody sorts out exactly how it works and what it means.

3:30

If we can in fact set aside $900 million in a capital fund or if this allows us the ability to use a capital bond issue at some point for another billion dollars' worth of construction programs, if that's what the right number is, then I think that's wonderful. I would, as a very proud Albertan, be enormously happy to convert my dying mutual funds and my RRSP to, you know, a whole bunch of Alberta bonds even if the interest rate was low. At least I'd know that I was getting something back. I see great potential on that side.

Mr. McClelland: I'm gonna trade my Nortel in for one Alberta.

Ms Haley: You're helping me, Ian. I appreciate it.

As to the changes in the legislation, yeah, I have some difficulty with the whole concept of restricting the amount as it goes into the $3.5 billion. I need to know as an Albertan, as an MLA: is that the right amount? And maybe it'll take us a year to determine if that's the right amount. I worry about it because I'm not sure that we're keeping up with inflation on some of the spending side. Not on health care and education: I think that if we were all being relatively honest, we could look at our population and our inflationary numbers and we would say that health and education have kept up. There are other areas where I think there's room for some concern about whether or not we've created too much pressure by trying to be too fiscally tight.

You know, as my old dad would say: it was a crap shoot. You do your very best; you try hard. To satisfy all of the needs, you try to satisfy some of the wants. But it's never possible to do everything for everybody all of the time, and tough decisions have to be made. I'm very grateful to my caucus for making the tough decisions when they have to because each and every one of us has pressures at home. I have one of the highest growth rate ridings in the province of Alberta which means that no matter what we do, I will never have enough schools built fast enough. And my colleagues from Calgary-Shaw and from Banff-Cochrane – we're all in the same end. This one here too.

Mr. Knight: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Ms Haley: Oh, yeah. Not you. I don't care. Sorry. He can wait.

The truth is that I need more schools. I need portables moved in. I've got some schools that need repairs. I'm competing with cities that sometimes have only 75 percent occupancy, but I may well have 125 percent occupancy. I can't get the schools built fast enough, and I have no inner-city schools to move kids into.

So we're all laying everything on the line trying to get the things that we need for our own ridings, and I'm no different than anybody else. I want my riding to be happy. I want a new overpass for the south end of Airdrie. I'm thinking that my chances are not looking real good at this point, but as a P3 maybe I can get it. I don't know, but you don't quit and go home and pout. You keep working to try and get the things that you need. Do I think it's a panacea? No. But it gives us a flexibility and an opportunity to do some things in a different way, and I'm going to do my best to make sure that it works properly.

The last comment I wanted to make was on rebates for natural gas, Mr. Speaker, and I only want to touch on this because when we talk about money that goes to a capital fund of $900 million, that money is coming from royalties. Yes, Albertans are paying higher prices whether they're filling up their car or for their heater in their home or for their power, and there's no question about that. A lot of people are struggling with that. But in the year 2000 in the United States they did a report on the national energy policy that showed that the average middle-class American family was spending 3.8 percent of their after-tax income on their energy needs. So whether that was heating or cooling or transportation, that's how much it was. With the huge price spikes in the year 2000, with natural gas skyrocketing – their home heating oil is going up; their power bills are ratcheting up, particularly in California – they went to 4.8 percent of their after-tax income.

We need some perspective on this issue. I am not in favour of anybody not being able to heat their homes. That's not what I'm trying to say, but it's easy to be hysterical and find a way to spend $400 million or $500 million here, or we can spend that same $400 million or $500 million on school construction or roads or other things that we need as a province without having to increase taxes, without bringing in a sales tax. These things have to be paid for.

As an Albertan I'm so proud to have grown up in the oil patch, but I know what the oil patch has done for this province. It's built it. It's still building it, and once in a while we need to be grateful and think about that reality because without it our taxes would probably be 300 or 400 percent higher than they are today on the Alberta side. The only way we could do the things that Albertans expect us to do would be to have to tax them to do it. Right now with our royalties we are absolutely blessed to be able to live in a province where we can get a road built, get a new school, and maybe not satisfy everybody's wants, but I'm pretty sure we're meeting the vast majority of their needs.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to congratulate our provincial Finance minister for bringing this forward. I know that it was a tough struggle for her. I happen to be the chairman of a very tough caucus. We take no prisoners. She has had to earn her stripes on this one all the way through, and we probably aren't finished harassing her yet, but we've had a good time so far.

It's a pleasure to be able to speak in here and address this important issue, so thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29. Questions or comments? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member made a statement in her presentation. She said that interest doesn't create a single job. I would think that it might take hundreds of people to look after $1.5 billion in interest payments. My question is: does the hon. member have no compassion for those now unemployed accountants?

Ms Haley: Mr. Speaker, you know, with the greatest respect to my colleague, who'll probably never get to speak in caucus again, the answer would be that that accountant can get a real job.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A question for the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View: who created the $22 billion debt that you referred to in your remarks? What did they spend it on and why? Who created that?

Ms Haley: I'm happy to try and take a shot at that. Albertans have very high demands, and it is very hard to say no. So during the '80s, as I recall this, the price of oil went up. We started to create the heritage savings trust fund. The price of oil went down, dropped to about 45 percent of the revenue that was streaming into the province, and the question of the day back in the mid-80s was: do we slash spending by the same amount, or do we try to ride this out? They made the decision under the leadership of Mr. Don Getty, the Premier of the day, that they would try to ride it out in the hopes that oil and gas would go back up in time to prevent some of the problems that were going to escalate from that. I think that hindsight is a wonderful thing, and I'm not going to go back and try and second-guess them, but I can tell you this: when I ran in 1993, it was to get rid of the deficit and deal with the debt and no more of any more wishful thinking that you can live on tomorrow's dollars on the backs of your children. It's absolutely unacceptable to me.

The Deputy Speaker: We're ready for the next speech. I've got a couple of people who have indicated. One was Edmonton-Glen-garry; another one is Edmonton-Mill Woods. Following Airdrie-Rocky View then we would go to Edmonton-Glen-garry. No?

Mr. Bonner: I will speak, Mr. Speaker, but when I rose earlier, it was to ask a question which was not appropriate at that particular time.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. minister.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to see Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, before the Assembly this afternoon. It's a good idea, and I guess it doesn't really matter where it came from. The fact that it's here and will be of a benefit to all the citizens in this province is good enough.

The fund is a recognition of the cyclical nature of our economy. In 1999-2000 50 percent of the province's income was made up of personal income tax, corporate income tax, oil revenues, natural gas revenues, and the sale of Crown leases. That's a huge amount of the income of the province that is very vulnerable to the kinds of economic conditions that prevail in the province or in the country at any particular time. So I think the bill is a recognition that we do have an economy that has great swings in terms of revenues, and this is an attempt to try to smooth out some of the ups and downs in that revenue stream.

The most important part, of course, and the reason for the bill is that it will allow the government to sustain investments. There were investments in public health care, investments in education and in children's services. I know that there's always great debate in the Legislature about some of those programs, and I hear often a question asked with respect to education, and that's: how much is enough? It seems to me that some people have thrown up their hands and have said: you'll never have enough; no matter how much we put into it, we could always put more. And that's true. I think there are some ways around that, but that is true.

We've made great progress, and we've come to expect that there will be continual progress in areas like health care and education. We can all walk into schools and look at the kinds of conditions that are there and compare them to our own experiences as youngsters and say: things are pretty darn good when you walk in and look at them. And that's true. But the progress that we've made was hard fought for. It was hard earned, and the reductions thus far, for instance, in class sizes, the innovations in terms of technology, the great improvements in terms of the preparation of teachers have all been hard-fought-for improvements, and they've been expensive. So I think what bothers people who are associated in those areas is when they see that progress being lost or they see that progress slipping, and I think that has been a problem the last 10 years.

Hopefully, this bill that's before us now will go some ways to making sure that that doesn't happen in the future, that the gains that have been made, the levels of services that have been established will have some chance of being sustained when there's a downturn in the economy, and it's not a question of if there will be a downturn in oil prices; it's a matter of when. Look back at the history of our province and you can quite readily predict that there is going to be a downturn, and this fund, when that downturn happens, will be a bit of a safety net for programs that we all value but primarily those ones that are concerned with human services.

The volatility of the province is really, as I said, quite wide. As a percent of total expenditures, 70.7 percent of revenues has been the range in terms of that volatility, and that's quite a wide range and can have a huge impact on budgets. I think of the cuts that were instituted – was it last fall or the fall before? – and how devastating they were, and it seems that that kind of scenario will be avoided in the future when the fund is firmly established.

I would like to see some other things done in conjunction with the stability fund, Mr. Speaker, and that's the way, for instance, that education is funded. The history of funding in the province and certainly the way we did business when I was a school trustee was to look at economic conditions and to look at the available money and then to try to make some judgment, some calculation in terms of how much should be put into the budget. I can think of the years on the board where we went everywhere from a zero percent increase in the year's budget to one year I think our increase in the budget was 18 percent. Huge, huge variations, and it makes planning over the long term very, very difficult. Once you have a year of 18 percent and all the growth that comes with that, how do you sustain that the next year if there is a slowdown of the economy and you can't go to the community for additional revenues? It's the kind of budgeting that we have grown up with in the province and still practice to a great extent.

At budget time there's always a quick calculation of how much money has been added in various departments and then judgments made about whether that's enough or not enough. I'm hoping that there can be an attempt at some proposals to go with the stability fund that would bring some stability to the allocating of funds within particular departments.

I look at some of the work that's being done in other jurisdictions with respect to education funding and the whole notion of adequacy funding. I think it's an unfortunate choice of terms, but adequacy funding is really a proposal to make sure that there are adequate funds to educate all children well.

There are, I think, some really promising plans. I've looked in some detail at the Oregon plans, and I've looked briefly at the plan in Wyoming. I think they're the only two that are really in operation, but they have brought great stability to budgeting in those two jurisdictions. What they have done is looked at an elementary school and, in Oregon's case, a middle school and a high school and said: if we have an elementary school, how many teachers should we have? What's the standard for teaching staff and the ratio of teaching staff to students? How many librarians should we have? What kind of counseling service should we have in place? What is a reasonable allocation per student for textbooks and for computers? They have developed fairly extensive lists of the very fundamentals that are needed to provide an adequate education so that all children may be educated well.

It's an interesting exercise that they've gone through. In Oregon they relied primarily on a group of experts to determine what level should be established in each of their schools. Other states have approached it differently. Some have some rather sophisticated economic analyses that, I have to admit, sometimes defy understanding. Others have used exemplary school districts or exemplary schools. They'll go into a very high performance school, one that's doing very well on a number of measures, look at the kinds of resources that they have used to achieve those results, then use that as the standard in terms of financing other schools. I think there's a great advantage to that kind of budgeting.

We're looking at how that might work in Alberta, working with some groups of parents to look at some individual schools to see how that would happen. I guess what I'm arguing for is another form of stability, one that's based on expressed needs in schools. Interestingly enough, they tie the needs to performance objectives, and if I remember right, the Oregon model ties it to youngsters achieving 90 percent in mathematics and 90 percent in reading scores. There's a performance level that they have set for each of these schools that the intended resources are supposed to help them meet.

So I think that this is really a good first step in terms of bringing some stability. I think there could be more done in terms of individual departments so that there would be some predictability. One of the reasons some people refuse to get involved in it is that I think it could be very expensive initially. I looked at the Oregon budget, and they had to increase their education budget by close to a billion dollars to put the plan in place, and I think that would scare anyone off, but if nothing else they have a set of goals to work towards. Some day when they do have the resources they can reach those goals.

Again, as I said, just one more piece of stability. What we have in front of us is an important piece and certainly the base piece that we need. It's a good move on the part of the government, and I'm delighted they've decided that they'll proceed with it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments? Questions?

The next speaker, then, is the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, one of the highlights of my political career was standing on the steps of the Legislature while the Premier and the then Treasurer took great big scissors and chopped through a mock-up of a credit card. I forget whether it was Visa or MasterCard – it doesn't really matter – but it was a symbol of the fact that we had achieved a milestone in Alberta. When some of us arrived here in 1993, there were others perhaps such as yourself who were already here and wanted us to come and join the battle that you were fighting, and that was, first of all, of course, to get rid of deficit but then start doing something about the debt. So the milestone that was achieved and the symbolism that went with that particular ceremony was that net debt had been reduced to zero. If we want to associate a budget of a government as similar to a household budget, basically, then, at that moment in time the Alberta government had cleared up all of its credit card debt and was simply left with liabilities that were covered by an asset. So to use my homespun analogy, then, all we had left was the mortgage.

Now, at that ceremony I kept thinking: won't it be wonderful when we can stand outside on the steps and the Premier and whoever the Treasurer will be at that particular time – and I was hoping it would be the Member for Calgary-Foothills, because that gives you maybe an indication of where I'm going timewise here – will be able to draw up some kind of symbolic mortgage? I don't know what we'd have to do with the fire regulations around the city, but we're good friends of firefighters, so maybe we could have lots of firefighters around and we could burn this mortgage. I'd been really hoping that this would've been done in, you know, 2001, or maybe it would be 2003. I was hopeful for 2005, but as I look at the reasoning for Bill 2, I have to tell you that my feelings are ambivalent because clearly within the context now of Bill 2 we're not going to be able to achieve zero debt by 2005.

I heard an hon. member say: well, maybe. And I haven't given up on the maybe either, but I was very, very hopeful at one time that this was going to be achievable, and now it looks like it's dimming. I want everybody to understand that I understand the reasoning for it. Albertans, just a great bunch of people that we are, that we represent, are enthusiastic, are motivated, but also have expectations that over the years have always been allowed, I think, to be met.

There was a question earlier today from one of the opposition members to one of our members basically asking and, of course, inferring that it was our government that had gotten the province into all of this debt. So if all we were interested in was political labels, then one might be able to say: well, yes, it was a Progressive Conservative government. There's no question about that. But I had asked basically that same question not to a current member of the government but to a past member, and I wondered: how did Conservatives ever get themselves into that kind of a situation? The past MLA that I asked said: go to the Speech from the Throne of 1983. I'm not here to throw stones at anyone, but I heard Premier Getty's name mentioned, and I think he inherited something. I think he inherited a lot of programs that were put into place by the then government, the Premier Lougheed regime of 1983.

Well, I see an hon. member giving me the gears, and maybe he had a family member that was part of that. Who knows? We're not pointing fingers at any one individual, at least I'm not, but I want to draw people's attention to where all of this started. It really comes from a context of when you sense expectation and then try to fill it. Even though your heart is good and maybe even your wallet is full at that particular time, whether or not they'll end up being sustainable is always the question. Clearly we found out that they were not sustainable.

If we remember now the campaign of 1993 – and, again, I made a reference to a past member, that had a debt-o-meter – the debt was huge. Twenty-two billion? Is that what we talked about? Of course, people were ragging then on the government about going into this $22 billion in debt, and as a matter of fact I think everybody that ran in 1993 ran against the government. I know I did. I was the Progressive Conservative candidate, but I wasn't shy about what I was going to do when I got up there. In fact, the Lethbridge Herald throws a quote that I made publicly back in my face every time now that fate has made me, a person who at one time was disrespectful of authority, a person in authority. I mean, I find the irony of it sometimes rather tough to deal with. I never thought I'd be in this kind of a position, but I made the comment: I'm going to go up there and clean up this mess. I mean, can you imagine how naive and unsophisticated a young person – well, I wasn't really young then either, I guess – I was to think that this would be done? But we showed such tremendous gains in those first few years. We got rid of the deficit.

A point I was going to make – but in my digressions I got sidetracked – was the Liberal Party of Alberta going around with their debt-o-meter or whatever it was. I remember they used to talk about boondoggles, and this was always a fascinating thing for me, these boondoggles that the Liberals would come up with. I would add them up. I'd say: like, you know, what are they really talking about here? They would talk about a boondoggle of $400,000 and a boondoggle of $376.42 and a boondoggle of maybe a billion or something like that. I added them all up, and I couldn't quite get to 2 billion. I said: well, okay; let's just exaggerate a little bit. You know, I'm acting like an opposition person as I'm attacking this government that's represented me, but I want to do something different if I can get up there. I said: let's add it up. Well, I think I got to about 2 billion. Well, what was that? That was 10 percent, Mr. Speaker, of what the debt was.

So where? Where? If you want to point fingers now at who caused all of that debt, just everybody, everybody in Alberta needs to go home tonight, and all they have to do is look in the mirror. That's what it was. It was schools; it was hospitals: all the things that we're trying to deal with now. It was seniors' programs. And how many of us have heard: hey, I built this; I built this province. They did. They built it; there's no question about it. But not all of it was built on a cash-only basis. There was debt that was taken up in order for all of these things that all of us have enjoyed to happen. So we – we – are responsible for this debt, and now it's we, of course, that have to get out of it.

I don't know if you would gain any sort of insight from this, but I think that for 25 years now – it might even be 30, Mr. Speaker – I have had a slogan hanging on the bulletin board in my home office, and it's in my handwriting. I don't know where I saw it. I obviously wasn't able to clip it, but I heard it, and I wrote it down. It says: you are the only problem you'll ever have, and hey, baby, you are the only solution. I think that is as good a slogan as any of us could adopt in this Assembly because it's exactly right. We are the only problem that we have, and of course we are the only solution.

So how do we then provide a solution? Well, obviously, one of the things that has happened is Bill 2. I understand, again, the articulation of why we are doing this. I understand the need for it, but it doesn't mean that I have to be happy about it. I wanted to be able to ride off into the sunset before I got too old being able to say: "You know what? I was there when the deficit went to zero. And you know what? I was there when the debt went to zero." I believe I can still make it, but I don't have control over when elections are called. You might have to put up with me for another term here, Mr. Speaker. We had a fellow in the gallery earlier that I thought probably peaked a little early in his campaign, having to peak today, but some of us are just maybe getting started here too.

In any event, there is a situation in Lethbridge-West, in Lethbridge-East, just like there is right across this province, of an infrastructure deficit, and I know that this government has to do something with that. So the mirror that I put in front of my face says that I have to back off to some extent, a small extent, on my mission to get to zero debt and have to understand and recognize that we have a situation here of infrastructure needs. We have a situation, of course, of needs of individual Albertans, and guys like me have to get off the high horse that I've been on for a number of years and have to be more compassionate, more sensitive to what is actually needed within this province.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I want to see that day, and I want to share that day with you and every member here in the Legislature when we can stand out on the front steps of this Legislature and burn that mortgage. Zero debt will have arrived.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments? Questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Please, Mr. Speaker. Yes. To the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. In the remarks that were made in regard to Bill 2, you suggested that the total debt that had been accumulated was as a result of building schools and hospitals and infrastructure in the province. Could you elaborate, and please tell me the role the grand industrial scheme that was employed by previous Progressive Conservative governments had in that accumulation of $22 billion? Like, I'm talking about telephone companies; I'm talking about meat packing companies, steel companies, and such. What role exactly did that grand industrial strategy play, besides the construction of schools and hospitals, in that debt?

Mr. Dunford: Well, I think the hon. member is quite right. I think there was a role that industrial strategy played. I was involved with the Chamber of Commerce in Lethbridge at the particular time when the then government of Alberta was talking about diversifying the economy. They were doing what they could to try to remove us from such a dependency on the oil and gas industry. [interjection] Well, you know, it's a Liberal who asked the question. It was a Liberal that brought in the national energy program. He was a Liberal back in 1980, and he still is. How he can still be in Alberta and still be a Liberal is beyond me. I mean, he was a tradesman here in our country.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you answering the question?

Mr. Dunford: Yeah. I guess so.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice on the questions and comments part.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if I could ask the hon. member, in following up on the question from Edmonton-Gold Bar, if perhaps some of the reasons why there was a debt built up of that nature were because at a time of a previous government doing the things that Albertans wanted them to do, the program spending and capital spending followed the resource revenue and other revenues as they went up, and then the province was found short when the prices dropped rapidly and whether he thinks it's prudent with Bill 2 and the other things that this government has done to protect us from that type of a drop again.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I absolutely do. We've all been aware of the situation on this side of the hall. We've had a number of presentations from economists, from financial advisers, and it's just absolutely amazing to chart the revenues within Alberta and see just how volatile they are but then just trace the patterns of expenditures. It's not a correlation of 1.0, but you can see the movement. When there was money in the coffers, then money was spent.

The one thing that I'm proud of is that I was part of a government, then, elected in 1993 that had some impact on trying to remove or decrease that correlation. We tried to do this, of course, through the pay-down of debt, and we've been tremendously successful. I should have read the actual number here. Let's say that we're now under $5 billion, so there's $17 billion of debt that we've been able to use in terms of expenditure that hasn't led to either enhancing a program or – maybe I should use another “e” word – entrenching a program. Maybe I'll use another “e” word: entrenching and entitlement, which had been characteristic of not only this government, but it's been characteristic of governments right across this country.

And believe me; we are very fortunate to be in Alberta. If you get a chance to attend, like I do, pan-Canadian meetings and listen to the issues and the challenges that are there in other jurisdictions in this country, I mean, you're glad to get on that plane and get your butt back here to Alberta.

4:10

The Speaker: Additional questions? Hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, a question?

Mr. Cao: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. We'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, and certainly I must congratulate the hon. minister for bringing this piece of legislation forward. It's something that the Liberals have supported over the years, and I'm proud to say that the first time it appeared in this Legislature was in 1994, and it was put forward by my predecessor in Edmonton-Glengarry, the Leader of the Official Opposition, Laurence Decore. Certainly, Laurence as mayor of this city had a tremendous record of fiscal responsibility, and we in Edmonton have benefited as ratepayers and as citizens because of his financial policies. So we are glad to see that this piece of legislation is finally in front of us.

The next area that we have to look at – and I know the hon. minister just briefly touched on it a few minutes ago – is revenues, and we certainly have enjoyed incredible revenues over the last few years. Looking back at a chart which was found in Measuring Up, produced by Alberta Finance – and I will table these at the appropriate time, Mr. Speaker – we see that since 1998 we've had revenues that have been increasing. We did have one spike in 2000 where we went up to $25.6 billion in revenues, and then we settled down quite consistently in 2001 and 2002 to $2 billion in revenues.

Now, I see that at that time, as we increased our revenues, we also increased our spending. But the chart on the bottom of this particular graph indicates that, as well, we've been able to put away a minimum – a minimum – of $1 billion per year over those five years for debt reduction. Of course, we did have an abnormal spike in prices and revenues in 2000, and at that time the surplus was $6.6 billion. So, yes, there is money here in this province at this particular time. We've been blessed.

I know that others have made references to our neighbour to the west, and certainly their economy, which is based on mining, which is based on lumber, which is based on fishing, certainly fell into hard times over the collapse of southeast Asia economies, very similar to what we'd experienced back in the '80s under the Getty government, when our revenues and the price of oil fell to $10 a barrel. So we did have our fair share of tough times as well. I think that we have to look at what was occurring in the province at that time. The Getty government was committed to some expenditures that had been put upon them. As well, I must commend the Getty government because at that time we had a social safety net in this province which was top notch. Those were where the last cuts were made at that particular time, and the people of this province, I think, appreciated that. One of the strengths that that government showed was to have the courage to maintain social programs in this province.

Now, then, I have spoken in this Assembly before about how every budget must have flex in it. There must be some flex not only in the revenue sources that we have and how we allocate them, but there also has to be flex in our expenditures. I look at the highlights in the third-quarter fiscal update, and I know that not only I but many Albertans would be, I think, quite shocked to realize that program spending has increased by $1.7 billion from the budget. Almost $1.4 billion of the increase is due to emergency and disaster funding for agriculture, forest fire fighting costs, and flood assistance. Those were certainly unforeseen, so that is one of the reasons that we do have to have flex: in order to deal with situations that are out of our control.

We also have to be able to deal with revenues when prices go down for our oil, for our natural gas, for our lumber, whatever. We also have to be able to deal with roughly a billion dollars in lost taxes due to a flat tax. Certainly, taxes are lower for some members of this province, but for others they are not, and they are marginal for those people that could use these more than the rich. So we do have interruptions in our revenues.

Now, then, as well, one of the things that I had talked about at other times and why we do need a stability fund in this province is because of the way we were allocating our surpluses. To allocate 75 percent of any surpluses to debt reduction and the fact that we could not run a deficit at any particular time certainly put the Minister of Finance into a position where she always had to have a lot of room between her revenues and her expenses just to be able to fulfill the legislation that was in place in this province. It was a situation that we wouldn't have expected any other business in this province to operate in. It was one of those situations where if, for example, we did get less revenues than what we expected, then cuts had to be made. Unfortunately, so many times when these cuts were made, the cuts were made to the programs in our social safety net, and the people that were the most vulnerable felt the effects of those.

We certainly see, as well, that they struggle in a lot of ways. How many people in this Assembly have talked about the recipients of AISH and how they haven't had an increase for many years, yet because of our success in this province we have rising rents, we have rising utility bills, we have rising food costs, and these people are trying to make do without any significant increase over the last 10 years. So I certainly think that when we have more stability in the budget, then we will be able to take care of these most vulnerable people better than what we're doing right now.

We know that in this province, Mr. Speaker, we've always had a boom-and-bust economy, and we've certainly been riding the crest for some time of a healthy revenue stream. I also noticed that roughly a year ago when Saskatchewan was having some problems with their budget, they were able to dip into it to the tune of about a hundred million dollars to maintain programs that they felt were necessary. I think that this is one of the strengths that this program, the establishment of a stability fund, will offer us here in Alberta.

Now, then, as well, we have to look at the infrastructure debt. We have a debt of approximately $8 billion, as has been mentioned earlier in the Assembly here, and it has a huge impact. I look at the constituencies of Edmonton-Glengarry, Edmonton-Castle Downs, and Edmonton-Calder, where we have two school boards. The Edmonton Catholic board has certainly made the construction of a high school in Castle Downs their number one priority, and this is because their other high school in the area, O'Leary, is busting at the seams. It's at max. Now, then, in Edmonton-Glengarry we're also fortunate enough to have a Protestant high school, a public high school, Queen Elizabeth composite high school, that was built in 1959 to the tune of $1.8 million.

This was an extremely well-built school, and on the list of Edmonton public for a refit this school is way down the list. It was built that well. To replace this school today, it would probably be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $15 million to $20 million. It's a great facility, and it certainly indicates what happens when we have long-term budgeting. Here we have a facility that was built in 1959 for $1.8 million that's worth certainly in excess of $15 million today, and we compare an investment of that over the last 40 years and then compare it to the talk of P3s today, where we are going to end up paying more for facilities and have absolutely nothing left at the end of the agreement. So I think that the stability fund will also allow us to do some long-term planning.

Now, then, we had a situation a year ago when the budget was announced where there was going to be a tremendous cut to the construction industry in this province, particularly the road building contractors in this province, and all of a sudden we realized what a great effect hundreds of millions of dollars that would be cut from the budget would have on an industry of this nature. We would have certainly had businesses that would have ceased to function here in the province. We would have had skilled workers leave the province and travel to wherever the work is going on. We would have had any number of smaller businesses that do service work for that industry that would have suffered immensely if not had to close their doors.

When we have stability, when people know that the money is going to be there from year to year to complete projects, then it does add a lot of confidence in our marketplace. It adds a lot of confidence with consumers. So we do get the spending continuing. We have low unemployment, and certainly the stress put on the social safety nets are much, much less when we have people working. It certainly is a situation where we want people working, and it just makes for a healthier population and all.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those comments I will take my seat and listen to other debate on this particular issue. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to speak on Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, that was introduced in the Legislature on February 24 by the hon. Treasurer, the Minister of Finance. This province is blessed with oil and gas reserves that others only dream about. The benefits derived from the nonrenewable resources have made us the envy of other jurisdictions across North America. It has allowed us to aggressively tackle the debt to the point where we now have a triple A credit rating. No other province can make that claim. Alberta continues to lead the country in growth, and Albertans have the lowest tax burden in Canada. Albertans are the direct beneficiaries of the booming economy thanks in large part to the oil and gas sector.

At the same time, longtime Albertans know too well how quickly our fortunes can change. Maybe some of you remember the bumper sticker from the '80s, and I'm paraphrasing here: please, Lord, send us another boom, and this time I won't blow it. I can't help but be reminded of that bumper sticker as this government moves forward in its new fiscal framework.

We recognize that we have no control over volatile oil and gas prices, but we can do something to protect Albertans from in-year spending cuts when prices tumble. We're having a good year, but things could change and change very quickly. Now is the time to move forward with the new fiscal framework that will establish a sustainability fund to cushion Albertans against volatile energy prices. Now is the time to establish a capital account to ensure that critical projects are not put on the back burner when prices slide. They will slide; they always do. Now is the time to move forward with a bold, new fiscal framework that will serve Alberta well now and in the future. It frees us from the ups and downs of energy prices. It will outline a capital plan that will accommodate the pressures that come from being the best province in Canada. It allows for spending that is predictable, but more importantly it allows for spending that is sustainable.

From my technical engineering background, the establishment of a sustainability fund or account is like building a dam, creating a reservoir of water. From this reservoir we can regulate a steady flow of water supply as needed. The needed water supply becomes less dependent on the whims of nature, seasonal fluctuations. The success of this concept has been proven many times over in the practice of irrigation over the millennium. Thanks to the continuously sound and strong fiscal management of the government, Alberta is on strong financial footings. We need to continue this responsible and responsive fiscal management in order to build a strong dam, creating a big reservoir, as in my analogy.

In addition, I would like to emphasize that Alberta does not have the problem of a lack of revenue, like all other jurisdictions. Our challenge is to control the spending. Based on my analogy of building a dam, creating a reservoir is only half of the equation. Once we have established a reservoir, we still need – and, indeed, a much stronger need to have the discipline – an effective way to open and direct the flow to where it is needed the most. Everyone will be thirsty when they see a big water reservoir. We need to find new, innovative, and collaborative ways to direct that flow. I'm confident that our members of the government caucus and the Executive Council will take this challenge and be successful in finding a way.

To conclude, I urge all Members of the Legislative Assembly to support Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 2, which, I think we all agree, is a significant piece of legislation, quite a change of direction, setting off in a new direction, as it were, for this government and one that reflects many years of debate on how to handle the fiscal situation of Alberta. I think most of the members in the Assembly are optimistic that this will serve Albertans well. It will bring some stability to a very volatile fiscal situation. It will allow a longer term time frame to be used for managing things like infrastructure, schools, roads, that kind of thing, and hospitals and generally should improve the efficiency of the government. I think we all recognize that on-again, off-again, on-again, off-again planning and projects and management ultimately is inefficient.

I think this is a good piece of legislation. I don't know what the regulations that go along with it will look like, but in principle it's a good piece of legislation. The opposition has been advocating for this kind of approach to Alberta's fiscal situation for many years. Creating the sustainability fund and creating a capital account together will be like a good ballast in a boat, a good ballast in a ship and help it to stay upright and help it to stay stable. I'm pleased to see the reference in the legislation to the three-year business plans and the three-year capital plans, and let's hope that we can stick with those capital plans so that members of the public, contractors, road builders, school boards, and so on, can enter their plans for roads or heart institutes or high schools in Castle Downs or whatever with a lot of confidence. So all in all it's a good piece of legislation. We're glad to see it come forward. That doesn't mean, of course, that we should stop being alert to where legislation and programs and plans can go off the rails.

As I think about how this is going to be enacted, I realize that all of us must watch for a couple of things. Number one is discipline. We need to remain disciplined. We don't want to get into the kind of fiscal party mode that has arisen from time to time in this province where there's a loss of discipline in how money is managed and spent. [interjection] Yes. Reflect back on the birthday party of Alberta's 75th anniversary in a sense that maybe that was a symbol of times when money flowed awfully loosely, and I think we need to be cautious, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar mentioned, about the 100th birthday coming up. Let's be sensible about how we spend that money. That's a symbol of the necessity for us to remain disciplined and especially in the tempting year or so leading up to an election.

One of my concerns is that we may be creating here a couple of election slush funds, and we're all human beings. The government will be as tempted as anybody else as the election nears to open the floodgates and make promises for new facilities and new programs all over the place and in the process get us into a situation where when the party's over and the election's over, we have our fiscal hangovers. Human nature being what it is, you can count on those temptations being there, and the opposition being what it is, you can count on us trying to keep the powers of discipline strictly in force.

I have been interested to listen to the debate here on debt and the great concern over debt, so I'm going to talk here, raise some issues that might sound like heresy in Alberta, but I'm going to at least float the notion that debt isn't always evil. Debt is not always bad. There are such things as smart debts, and we should not absolutely and forever close our mind to the possibility that debt can be a useful tool if it is used properly. It comes down to an issue of good debt management. But all we need to do is look at the private sector to see how readily they use debt to help advance their businesses, to help build up their organizations, to build their capital base, and to build their human resources. So if it can be used so successfully in corporations, maybe it can be used sometimes successfully and intelligently in government. The same kind of lesson applies from our personal lives. Most of us here, quite possibly every single one of us here, at some point in our lives have entered personal debt, and we've done that for perfectly good and sensible reasons. We need to keep in mind that debt is not always evil. Debt is a tool to be used, a tool to be managed. So that's a caution I put out there.

I would also make the point that historically debts have been used to pull countries out of depression and out of recession. The most dramatic example of that was in the late 1930s, when one of the most severe depressions that this continent has ever experienced took hold and had unemployment rates in parts of the country at 30 percent or more. It was only when a new economic model was brought in that recognized there are times when spending money actually generates money that the country of Canada and the country of the United States began to pull out of depression. Governments began recognizing that, yes, building dams, building roads, investing in public works, and, tragically as it turned out, investing in the military as World War II came along actually put a heck of a lot of people to work. It primed the economic pump. So let's not turn debt into a bogeyman. Unnecessary debt is silly, and too much debt can be tragic. That doesn't mean that debt is always bad.

There's also been some interesting discussion here about industrial programs or some term like that and economic diversification efforts. I was one of many, many Albertans who was pretty quick to condemn any of the diversification efforts of the province through the '80s or, certainly, to express great concerns as we got into, oh, projects like the magnesium plants and the meat packing plants and so on, but I think we also need to keep our minds open on this particular issue.

If we look at some of the largest corporations in Alberta, the very largest corporations in Calgary, for example – Canadian Pacific, EnCana, Syncrude, Petro-Canada. If we looked at a list of the top five corporations in Alberta, those would probably be on that list, right there. Every one of those had its roots in government action. Every one of them was created and subsidized through taxpayer efforts, and over the long run they've all proven to be fruitful examples of what good industrial policy can be. Canadian Pacific started in scandal and controversy under Sir John A. Macdonald, but it's grown into one of the very largest corporations in Alberta and in Canada. EnCana, created last year out the merger of two former public companies, Alberta Energy and Pan-Canadian, which was a spin-off of CP, is one of the great corporate success stories of this country. What are its roots? Direct government intervention in the economy. I'm sure I don't need to explain the roots of Syncrude to anybody here, a huge company with national and international success whose roots are directly in public intervention and the same with Petro-Canada.

So I am simply cautioning all members of this Assembly not to fall into black-and-white positions, where all debt is bad or all debt is good, where all intervention in the economy is good or all intervention in the economy is bad. Let's look at the evidence. Let's see what the evidence says. If the evidence says that sometimes the market works well, let's go with that. If the evidence says that sometimes the market fails and we need public intervention, let's follow that evidence.

I guess everybody agrees with me on that position of debt, judging from the silence here. [interjection] Maybe not. No. Maybe not so sure, I'm told. Good. I like debate. This is a House of debate.

Anyways, with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will wrap up by once again saying: Bill 2, a good piece of legislation. I wish the Member for Lacombe-Stettler were here so she could hear me say that. I agree with the government, as I think we agreed last night with the government, and I will take my seat with those comments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in. The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General on that section?

Mr. Hancock: Yes.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to ask the hon. member whether I heard him correctly that dollars should not be always considered black and white, that when it comes to debt and finances, sometimes things are good and sometimes things are bad. I'm just wondering, if he would deign to answer my question, if he would consider that it's appropriate to consider other policies of government in the same way and to look thoroughly and effectively at all policies of government with that same lens.

Dr. Taft: We're not in committee at this point; are we, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: No. We're not.

Dr. Taft: I would love to answer that. I have a personal policy where I prefer to respond to these questions in committee, so I would make a point of being here in committee to answer that question.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Continuing?

Mr. Hancock: On debate.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wish to speak very briefly to Bill 2 at this point and then move adjournment of debate on this bill. Bill 2 is I think a very important step forward. The Tuer commission, the Financial Management Commission, did some very good work in the context of consultation processes that this government has made a very important part of its mandate: to discuss with Albertans, to consult, to do things thoroughly, and then to come back, have recommendations, whether it's the justice summit or the Future Summit or the Financial Management Commission or in any number of other ways this government has consulted thoroughly. In this case, the Minister of Finance I think has embarked on a great process which took advice and ideas from all Albertans through the Future Summit and through other mechanisms and then consulted with a committee of people who have a lot of expertise in the area but who also talked to Albertans and heard from Albertans and came back with suggestions.

Mr. Speaker, I hope to have more to say on that when we come back to this bill, but at this time I would like to move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 3 Electric Utilities Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act.

Refinements for Alberta's electric industry require a new Electric Utilities Act to replace the old Electric Utilities Act. The Hydro and Electric Energy Act and the Municipal Government Act and the Small Power Research and Development Act will also be amended. This bill puts into place some important changes to Alberta's electric industry. The government is working to establish the best electricity market based on sound market principles and elimination of barriers to competition. All customers will have choice of who provides their electricity.

Alberta's restructured electric industry replaces a system in which customers could only receive service from whichever utility operated in their area. This system did not respond to the changes taking place in domestic or global utility markets. Other jurisdictions and other commodities were developing more responsive, efficient, and flexible consumer service arrangements. Regulatory costs in Alberta were high, and the process itself was failing to meet the needs of industry or consumers. The long and costly hearing process hindered industry's ability to be responsive to market changes including unprecedented population and economic growth in this province.

Starting in 1990, these concerns were the subject of intense discussions involving government, utilities, consumer groups, and industry. This process resulted in the passage of the Electric Utilities Act in 1995 as the first step in transforming Alberta's electric industry. It included the introduction of competition for the benefit of consumers across the province. In the first stages regulatory approval of the need for new generation was removed, and independent power producers were able to plan for and build new generation facilities. The Power Pool of Alberta and the transmission administrator were established. The next step was the passage of the Electric Utilities Amendment Act in 1998, which laid out the transition to move generation built under regulation into the market over a period of 20 years using the power purchase arrangements. This orderly process continued with the development of regulations setting out specific rules, roles, and responsibilities of all the players in the market.

Electric industry restructuring is based on an important principle, that opening the marketplace to competition forces the generation, wholesale energy, and retail sectors to become more efficient, competitive, and innovative. These benefits are then passed on to the consumer through increased competition, effecting long-term downward pressure on electricity costs and rates through new supply. Since the generation market opened, Mr. Speaker, in 1998, over 2,300 megawatts of new generation has come on, contributing to more reliable supply of power for Albertans through competitive pressure encouraging retailers to develop innovative services that customers want and through enabling consumers to make more informed choices about the way they consume electricity and potentially to save money based on their choices.

In addition, industry can purchase electric energy and services at competitive prices, increasing its ability to compete in world markets and create jobs and wealth for Albertans. It is government's role to manage development of the electric marketplace and ensure it evolves in a way that encourages these efficiencies. This is the reason government is proceeding with these changes to the Electric Utilities Act.

There are seven major changes in this new act to discuss today affecting industry structure, how rates are approved, and customer choice. First, this bill establishes an independent system operator. This new market operator, often called an ISO, will bring the functions of the Power Pool and transmission administrator together into one organization and will also include responsibility for load settlement. An important function of the ISO will be to plan future development of Alberta's transmission system to ensure it remains reliable and adequate to meet the needs of consumers as our province continues to grow.

This bill also gives the Balancing Pool independence governed by its own board. As is the practice now, Mr. Speaker, the Balancing Pool will continue to ensure that the unsold power purchase agreements are managed efficiently in the interest of all customers. This bill also gives more independence to the market surveillance administrator to ensure it can fulfill its mandate as the market watchdog for electricity customers. The MSA oversees and monitors electricity market activity to ensure that it is competitive and that the market participants play by the rules. A more independent MSA will give customers greater confidence that the electricity market is operating in a fair, efficient, and openly competitive manner.

Through this bill the Energy and Utilities Board is given a wider role and more responsibility as the regulatory authority that approves distribution and RRO tariffs for the majority of customers. City-owned utilities like EPCOR and Enmax have become large businesses that no longer serve only their city residents. EUB oversight and approval allows for consistent treatment of market participants by ensuring a more even playing field for both investor-owned and municipally owned utilities. The EUB approval process is an open, public, and transparent approval process. This bill also gives the EUB more power to ensure service quality standards.

Some customers have complained about billing, metering, and services from their utilities. The board will ensure utilities live up to their responsibility to deliver satisfactory service to their customers. Where a utility fails its customers, the board can levy fines.

This bill brings Medicine Hat's energy trade with the marketplace under the payment in lieu of taxes directive. PILOT payments will flow into the Balancing Pool, benefiting all customers. This will also contribute to further level the playing field so all market participants compete fairly in the marketplace.

This bill introduces a regulated default option based on the Power Pool of Alberta pool price. This gives eligible customers access to competitive wholesale market prices just as customers now have for natural gas. Small business customers will be eligible for this option starting January 1, 2004, and residential, farm, and irrigation customers on January 1, 2006.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this bill aligns the market structures for electricity and natural gas, allowing companies to market their energy products to customers together, resulting in more options for customers.

Of course, we have not recommended these changes without speaking to those who will be affected. Alberta Energy carried out extensive stakeholder consultation with industry and listened to consumers. Stakeholders were consulted on a series of projects carried out by Alberta Energy in 2001 and '02 to review Alberta's electricity market. The industry structural review reviewed market governance, functions, and responsibilities. The retail market review assessed barriers to retail market development. The level playing field review assessed how municipally and co-operatively owned utilities participate in the restructured electricity market. The liability review examined the future liability policy for Alberta's electric industry.

Through this very detailed policy process we have developed the Electric Utilities Act, 2003. This new statute will further our goals to create a competitive electricity market attractive to investors and benefiting consumers. We have already seen one positive announcement by a new company eager to enter Alberta's electricity market because they are confident that these changes will enhance the marketplace. As the hon. Minister of Energy has said many times: restructuring is a journey, not a destination. Through this bill we continue our journey.

Both industry and customers can be confident this government is working to ensure Alberta's electricity market is based on solid ground and has the customer in sight at all times. By doing this, I am confident Alberta consumers will benefit from active competition in our electricity marketplace. All Albertan consumers – residential, agricultural, industrial, and commercial customers – can benefit from the initiatives included in this new bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and debate Bill 3 at this time. Before I do get into my remarks, however, I would like to publicly express my gratitude to the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for his co-operation and his patience in briefing particularly this member and our research staff in regard to Bill 3.

Now, I certainly cannot support this bill, this high-priced utilities act. The greedy picking on the needy is what this bill is. This high-priced utilities act should be scrapped. The hon. member talked earlier about the regulatory costs and the regulations that we must somehow control. Well, for all hon. members of this Assembly: there are about 12 inches of regulations stacked one on top of the other for the current Electric Utilities Act. We had to use closure in 1998 with this legislation, and I certainly hope we don't have to use closure with Bill 3. The last time we did this, we rammed it through the Assembly. Who finally has picked up the cost? The consumers of this province, and the costs are enormous. They're in the billions and billions of dollars, and, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to get into the costs of this deregulation notion, this scheme, further on.

It's time that we unplug high power bills for Albertans, and this act certainly is not going to do it, this high-priced utilities act. What we need is a low-cost plan for electricity in this province, and this is not it. This is not it. I'm sorry. I know the hon. member means well, but we need to provide low-cost power for Albertans and affordable power for your home.

If hon. members were to go outside in the corridor, they would see this Assembly in one of the original photographs, and the electricity industry – the distribution, generation, and transmission – was in its infancy in this province. How times have changed. When we think that we use electricity every day, it's something that we can't live without. No one wants to choose to buy electricity for their home. We can talk all we want about choice, but right now the choice that Albertans have is: do they have to go to the bank and get a loan before they pay their utility bill? That's the choice that they have been left with as a result of electricity deregulation. Some Albertans on fixed incomes have the choice of whether they have heat, light, or food, and this is certainly not a step in the right direction.

Now, electricity, as I said, is a matter of necessity, and low rates were an Alberta tradition until we let blind ideology get in the way. For many years Albertans enjoyed some of the lowest power rates in North America. Not any longer, not under this government's policy. If we adopt this bill, a continuation of high prices. Hello?

Now, for many years we didn't even need to think about electricity unless the power went out and we were counting the minutes or hours until service was restored. January 10 could have been a very unfortunate historic day in this province because the Power Pool had to go on an emergency alert because there were no more available resources. We can brag all we want about this generation that we've created under deregulation, but it wasn't available on that day. We were at the mercy of British Columbia and the providers of electricity in Saskatchewan. Fortunately, Saskatchewan had over a hundred megawatts extra, or there would have been lights out in some parts of this province. If I'm picking a place for the lights to go out first under electricity deregulation, it's going to be Calgary. It's going to be Calgary, not Edmonton.

An efficient, reliable, affordable system that once served us so well was dismantled by this government with no rhyme or reason. If there is any cost-benefit analysis that will tell us that deregulation is the economic saviour, table it. Table it in this Assembly for everyone to see. Where are the studies that show that there is a benefit for the consumers of this province, whether they're residential, commercial, or industrial, through electricity deregulation? The whole deregulation plan has failed. Not only has it failed; it's failed miserably.

The Alberta government, unfortunately, traded a perfectly functional, customer-friendly system for a complex, confusing, and, worst of all, very expensive, $9 billion mistake. Earlier in debate this afternoon we were talking about Tory boondoggles, and electricity deregulation is the granddaddy of all Tory boondoggles. The great granddaddy. I can't believe that any government in any part of the country could top this. I doubt that it'll happen; I certainly hope it doesn't happen. Now, Albertans are paying the price, and they're going to continue to pay the price for this boondoggle. The government has spent billions of our hard-earned tax dollars trying to fix this costly mistake, and it hasn't worked. Bill 3 is not the answer. The mess will just get worse, unfortunately.

I urge all hon. members of this Assembly to visit altaliberals.ab.ca, regardless of which area of the province you live in, and you can see for yourself. That's altaliberals.ab.ca. If you're an Enmax customer, our low-cost plan will save you 33 percent on your monthly bill if your consumption is around 600 kilowatts a month.

Do Albertans want to shop around for power? Not one Albertan – and there are many from all over the province who phone me on a daily basis complaining about their power bills – wants choice. What they want is affordable power. As if high, confusing bills aren't enough, with this Bill 3 Albertans are now going to be forced to shop around for electricity service. Apparently, there are going to be stages in this flow-through option. I don't have my computer with me, but it's coming up to peak demand in Alberta, and it would be interesting to know what the wholesale price of electricity is trading at at the 1700-hour mark, at this time. I can just look at January 14, for example, and at 6 o'clock it was 24 cents a kilowatt-hour. How is Bill 3 going to affect consumers with this flow-through option?

An Hon. Member: What's the average?

Mr. MacDonald: The average at this time, for the hon. member across the way, would be about 8 cents a kilowatt, and that's without distribution and transmission costs. That is going to be a problem for many Albertans. That is going to be a real problem.

Now, we need to have cheap, reliable power like we used to have, like the old Alberta tradition, and we need not only to consult with the supposed industrial stakeholders, but we should take a walk into the history pages of this province and recognize that a former government, the Social Credit government at the time – I believe it was 1940 – actually held a referendum on what direction the electricity distribution, transmission, and generation system should go in this province. That government listened to the people. This government, unfortunately, on this issue is not listening to the people.

How many people would like the choice of going back to a low-cost system?

Dr. Taft: I would.

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly. Everybody would, and this is not the low-cost system.

Now, power bills should be easy to understand. You shouldn't have to have a forensic auditor standing beside your mailbox when you get your electricity bill, and that's the case now. No one can understand the bills. No one can understand them. With a low-cost plan you would get one rate with no contracts to sign and no complicated calculations to make. That's what we need, and this bill is certainly not, Mr. Speaker, going to provide that. Every Albertan should be able to count on a steady supply of low-cost power for years to come, and nothing like this is guaranteed in Bill 3. There is no consumer choice here.

There is no discussion about exports and what they're going to do to our domestic prices here. Oh, no, we're not going to mention that. Exports are going to increase the domestic price of electricity in this province.

Now, electricity is not a commodity, as was described earlier in the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky's remarks. Electricity is an essential service, and this is where the government has it wrong. It's not a commodity subject to radical price swings. We need to have a centralized, streamlined system that minimizes capital and operating costs, and that is not what Bill 3 is about. Electricity is not a commodity, because it cannot be stored. You can store wheat. You can store oil. You can store gas. You can store gold. You can store any commodity, but you cannot store electricity. The system has to be in a constant state of balance between supply and demand, and that's why we can't treat it as a commodity. It is an essential service.

Deregulation has certainly not worked in this province. We were promised that changes would bring lower power bills. That was an empty promise. Electricity prices have skyrocketed. We only have to look at other jurisdictions; many, many have come to their senses and rejected deregulation. They aren't going one step down the road with another high-priced utilities act. They're coming to their senses and saying: this was a mistake, it doesn't work, and we're going back to a tried-and-true system to deliver electricity to consumers.

California's disastrous experiment with deregulation, which also started with the promises of cheaper power, ended in early 2003. RIP to electricity deregulation in California. This was after eight years of economic misery for consumers. In announcing the decision, the California Public Utilities Commission said that deregulation was the most expensive public policy mistake in the history of California. Can Alberta be very far behind? I don't think so, unfortunately.

I would urge all members to think about the money that we have spent on this costly mistake and think about the future. We look at the comments about natural gas fired generation, about how much of that has come onstream. Well, I don't have today's current supply/demand report from the Power Pool, but I have one from another winter's day. This was January 14, and of all that gas-fired generation that was supposedly created, less than 50 percent was being used at this hour of the day to provide electricity for Alberta consumers. Now, why would that be happening? Everyone was so anxious to build these natural gas fired generators, and then, suddenly, they don't want to operate them. What's going on? How are Albertans going to benefit from a system like that?

Our current system, one that is going to be enhanced in this bill, is going to allow the Power Pool of Alberta to continue to determine bids and offers submitted by market participants. What's interesting about this is that the lowest offer received for the last unit of generation required to meet demand sets the pool price. So everyone is going to be lumped in together, whether they're coal-fired or whether they're natural gas fired, whether it's hydro power. Everybody is lumped into that system.

Now, Bill 3 does nothing to end price manipulation. There have been two recent examples of price manipulation in the Power Pool in Calgary.

Mr. Smith: Tell the truth. Tell the truth.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. The hon. Minister of Energy is talking about the truth. This is the truth. There were reports of price manipulation, and there was no clarification from the minister on how much electricity was involved in this price manipulation, what the cost was, and who was behind it. All this is done behind a veil.

Now, there has been a recent report. I believe it was . . .

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: Yes, hon. member.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a point of order, Standing Order 23, imputing false motives. The member has absolutely no way of determining what information I had or did not have. If he'd stick to his facts, we'd be much obliged.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you have to respond.

Mr. MacDonald: Pardon me?

The Speaker: There's a requirement to respond here.

Mr. MacDonald: The facts are as reported in the Edmonton Journal and in various newspapers. I would be interested to see if the minister has any comments regarding the reported manipulation that occurred on the Power Pool web site dated December 16, 2002.

The Speaker: The point that we have here now, unfortunately, though, is the suggestion made by the hon. Minister of Energy that his personal character has been tarnished by comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and the last comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar do not contribute to the clarification of this issue. Whether or not somebody chooses to comment on something in a newspaper has absolutely nothing to do with the issue. If I understand the Minister of Energy, he cited Standing Order 23, some section in it, and I guess it's on that point that we need clarification, not on the issue itself. That's not the point of the point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, when we're talking about . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please sit down. Hon. member, there's been a point of order raised. It has to do with personal aspersions against another member. The subject, the context of the bill has nothing to do with what we're talking about now. We're talking now about the personal aspersion against another member that has to be clarified. That's what I'd ask you to deal with. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has been recognized to deal with this point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm just looking for clarification on the remarks that were made from the Edmonton Journal in relation to this alleged . . .

The Speaker: Please, hon. member. Please. The rules clearly indicate that no member has to deal with anything printed in a newspaper. That's not the subject matter here. It's the question of personal aspersion against the Minister of Energy that I'd like you to deal with, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I in no way, shape, or form in my remarks intended to cast personal aspersions at the Minister of Energy. The Minister of Energy, I think, is aware of the cases that I am talking about in my remarks regarding price manipulation.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Energy, does that satisfy the point of order?

Mr. Smith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it does, and thank you for the opportunity for the member to clarify the fact that he would in no way know what information I did or did not have in my possession.
Thank you.

The Speaker: Now please continue, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Now, Mr. Speaker, when there is price manipulation at the Power Pool, it is a very, very serious issue. It's a very serious issue. When you think that electricity consumers in Alberta have been victims of this manipulation of this deregulated market, we need to improve that. We need to ensure that there are adequate guidelines here to deal with that, and they are not here. It is simply not in this legislation.

What's going to happen? Is this price manipulation going to continue? I certainly hope not, but unfortunately it has. When one looks at what has happened and the fact that there have been admissions – I find it amazing that when we have admissions that there has been price manipulation, nothing is going to be done about it, not in this bill, not in the past. I for one don't have the confidence that this legislation is going to deal with that.

If we look again at how much this is going to cost, we have to look at the total bill for the rebates. This is money that came from the auction of assets Albertans had previously paid for. That's $2.3 billion. We look at the deferral accounts, the rate riders, and that's in the range of $700 million. This is occurring because the government imposed a price cap, and this was the amount the utilities were forced to postpone collecting from consumers until after the general election, the last election, and now everyone has to pay.

Now, the Balancing Pool deferral. It's going to be interesting when we get into committee on this bill how there's going to be an explanation for the Balancing Pool deferral accounts. In the last report that was made available from the Balancing Pool, they are listed at $345 million. Who, Mr. Speaker, is going to pay for that?

The Balancing Pool is required to take on certain risks in the industry, and they are bankrolled by Albertans.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky stated that fortunately a t e l y the PILOTs, or the payments in lieu of taxes, are going into the Balancing Pool for the benefit of all consumers. Well, this hon. member considers that to be a subsidy to some of the bigger electricity producers.

Thank you.

5:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I noticed that the member opposite claimed . . . Standing Order 29(2)?

The Speaker: Please sit down. Standing Order 29(2)(b) does not kick in to the second speaker, so we're open to people who want to participate. The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter the debate on this bill, but I think that in view of the hour I would move adjournment on the bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 8 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:21 p.m.]

Bill 2 Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate February 26: Mr. Hancock]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did speak briefly and adjourned debate, and I don't want to take too much time on Bill 2. I did want to just add a few words to the debate.

Because one of the members this afternoon in debate encouraged government members to get into debate on this issue and made a comment about the debate on Bill 201, the private member's bill, and how much participation there was on that, I just wanted to make sure that everybody understood for the record that before government bills come to the table, they go through a considerable amount of debate. Government members do have the privilege – and it is a privilege; I acknowledge that – of participating in debate at standing policy committees and at caucus and sometimes at cabinet, so they go through a lot of the discussion on bills before they come to the House. So when it seems like the opposition is afforded most of the privilege of speaking on bills in the House, well, there's a very good reason for that: they haven't had an opportunity to speak to the bill yet. They haven't had an opportunity to add their words of wisdom to the debate, but most of the members on this side of the House have participated fully long before it gets here.

Ms Blakeman: How would we know? It's out of the sight of the public.

Mr. Hancock: How would you know? Well, you know because the quality of the bill that comes to the House is usually superb.

What I wanted to say about Bill 2 is important. There are some significant changes, but one of the most significant changes to the way we do financial matters in the province, as outlined in Bill 2, is the change to the way that we deal with capital. I'm sure the Minister of Infrastructure won't mind if I spend just a minute talking about the way we do capital, particularly P3s, because P3s, public/private partnerships, have been a much misunderstood concept in the public debate in my view and one which really bears some discussion and clearing up.

The opportunity for government to leverage its capital to do more in the near term so that we have capital structures in place for the long term at a time when they're needed because the population has grown, because the economy is strong, because things are happening is a very important concept. In the old method of utilizing capital, it was, of course, pay as you go, and it came off the bottom line. That capital was not expressed in a balance sheet of government. So there was no acknowledgment of the fact that although the money was spent, there was good value obtained for it and there was an asset on the books, because the books didn't reflect those assets. So the change in Bill 2 which allows us to reflect assets on a balance sheet and show that an expenditure that's taken is accompanied by a corollary asset that's achieved and then that asset expended through depreciation over the usable life of the capital project, I think is a very substantial change.

One of the other very substantial changes is the concept which allows us to partner with others to provide public goods, to provide public capital. There are a number of very good ways in which that can be done. One of the projects that is currently being talked about and currently being pursued is a courthouse in Calgary. Now, there is a high demand for capital properties. Health facilities and schools and roads are very important in terms of building and developing the future for our province, but justice in the courts is also extremely important. So how can we find capital to do all of the important projects when there's a limited amount of capital available? In my view, Mr. Speaker, Bill 2 affords us some opportunity to embrace the concept of a public/private partnership where it's appropriate and when it pays dividends for the public.

Now, I've mentioned the public/private partnership concept in a courthouse. I also want to talk very briefly about the concept of public/private partnerships in schools because in recent months there's been some discussion about whether or not they can be effective. Well, whether it's a courthouse or a school or any other public building, if you believe that a public/private partnership is simply having a private developer build a capital structure and then leasing it back to government over its usable life, you haven't got any more than a build/leaseback. That's not what you're talking about in a public/private partnership. It may be one way of building buildings and expressing the capital over the lifetime of the building, but it's not truly a public/private partnership.

A public/private partnership is a situation where you can get the private sector to bring its ingenuity, its ability to do projects perhaps better or faster to the table because of the way they can organize the operation. It's an opportunity to bring innovation to the table. It's an opportunity to reduce, perhaps, the long-term operating risks. But obviously any project of that nature would have to be done in a context where you don't reduce the quality of the building. You don't reduce the quality in order to get the private sector to build, and you don't pay more in order to get the private sector to build unless you're getting something more than you would the other way.

I'll use the school as a concept because in my constituency a lot of people have talked about this question of how you use a public/private partnership for a school. Indeed, the Leader of the Opposition has talked about that in my constituency. There is nothing wrong, in my submission, with having a public/private partnership with a developer in a new subdivision or a new area of a subdivision. I'll use Edmonton-Whitemud as an example. In the southwest portion of my constituency there are probably six new communities being built, and there are probably six developers building those communities. These communities are very good communities; they've got everything they need. They've got roads. They've got parks. They've got all the services you could want. They even have a place set aside to build a corner store. They've got everything they have, but they don't have schools.

Mr. Mason: They don't have a New Democrat MLA.

Mr. Hancock: I said: everything they needed.

What they need is schools, and the schools typically in our subdivisions don't get built until a lot longer down the road, when many of the young children who have grown up in those communities – new communities tend to have younger families – have left before the schools get built. So the system is wrong in terms of the way we develop, but you can't obviously build a new school in every subdivision. The planning process has got to change to recognize that. Probably in southwest Edmonton there's going to be one school in that area, one elementary school, maybe one junior high school.

So the question then is: where does it get built, and how does it get built? Well, obviously, the question of where it gets built and if it gets built still has to be left with the school division, that is going to determine whether it's got need in the area and determine how it fits in its complement of schools and all those sorts of issues. Obviously, that's not a decision you leave to the developer. But there may be seven or eight or even probably 14 different school sites in that area, and any one of them could have a school built on it. Probably half of them are optimal for having schools built on them, and only one is likely going to have a school built on it.

Why don't we get together with the developers in that area and say: "Sharpen your pencils, guys; come to the table. Which of you would like to build a school in your neighbourhood on the land that's been set aside for schools? What we can bring to the partnership is seven or eight other pieces of land that can be put into the partnership, so put that into your mix." But nobody should be thinking about that. [interjection] The Leader of the Opposition is asking me a question. I'd be more than happy to answer it if I'd heard it.

Nobody is talking about letting the developer run rampant and build a school. Nobody is suggesting that the developer should set the quality standards of the school or decide where the school should be. But everybody, I think, would acknowledge that if a school were built in a community, it would enhance the viability of the community and enhance the salability of the community. So the developer obviously has an interest in having a school in their particular part of the community. And as long as there's not going to be one school in every community but there is going to be a school in one of those communities, why wouldn't you go to those developers and say: "Come to the table. What kind of a deal will you make?"

I'll bet you in some areas where there are that many houses going up and that many developers in there, you might get a developer who'll come to the table with a pretty good deal for the public. But they would have to build it to the quality standards. They would have to build it in an area that the school board wanted a school. They would have to meet all the requirements. We're not talking about having them build a school that we would lease for the next 30 years and pay them more than it would cost for the government itself to build the school. That's not the deal. That's no bargain. That's not a partnership. Partnership is when everybody gets something out of the process.

So, Mr. Speaker, what I wanted to add to the discussion today is that when we're talking about P3s, we ought not to confuse public/private partnerships with other forms of financing: build/leasebacks or bond issues or those sorts of things. Those may be relevant and appropriate in certain circumstances, but public/private partnerships are when the public dollar and the private dollar can go into a project, where the public gets something it needs on a timely basis, where the private sector obviously gets something that it needs, perhaps enhancement of their community. It's a win/win situation, and it costs the public less to get more. That's what a public/private partnership is, Mr. Speaker.

I'm very excited about Bill 2 providing some of the framework and structures so that instead of doing everything the same old way, instead of having to write off 100 percent of the dollars in the year that you commit to the project, you might think about capital in a broader perspective: carry capital over from one year to the next, dedicate it to the project you're trying to build rather than the year you're going to build it in, deal with it in an innovative way, have the flexibility to do things appropriately to get the best costs so that you're not always building everything when the costs are highest and building nothing when the costs are lowest. Being able to manage capital in a much more businesslike manner: that's what Bill 2 does for us. It also opens all sorts of opportunities to unleash the innovation that can come from the private sector and allow it to do public good.

Mr. Speaker, I think Bill 2 is a good bill.

The Acting Speaker: All those members who've been sitting on the edges of their chair to ask a question of the hon. Government House Leader, this is your opportunity for the next five minutes.

There being none, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to other members of the Legislature it is my honour and privilege to welcome to our Legislature 15 scouts of the Duggan Scout group. They are accompanied by their leaders: Paul Chell, Guy Germain, and Debbie Schmermund. We would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this House. Welcome.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 2

Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege tonight to stand and speak to Bill 2. I just want to start by welcoming to the Legislature the young Albertans that were just introduced. It's great to see them come in and take an interest in the democratic process, especially tonight while we're talking about some of the things that are really going to affect their future in the context of schools and how we build infrastructure and how we manage money so that they've got a stable province in the future. So, personally, I just want to say thanks for coming in, and I hope you enjoy the evening.

On Bill 2, Mr. Speaker, it's really one of those situations where you stand, and as the Official Opposition, you know, in a British democracy we're supposed to say: this is what's wrong and this is what's wrong and this is what's wrong. But for seven years we've been asking the government to do just what they're doing in this bill, so it's kind of hard for us to say there's much wrong with it. Since I became the Leader of the Official Opposition, I've been asking the government to try and implement four different tools that would improve our financial position and financial management in this province. Directly, three of them are now included in this, so I've got to say: for three-quarters let's say thank you.

It was interesting because the fourth issue, which had to deal with the predictability of budgeting for the arm's-length agencies, the minister talked about today and said that this was all going to be now built into the preparation and a much more predictable business plan adherence. So, in effect, all four of the things I was hoping for are being made possible by this bill. So to the Minister of Finance, thank you. Albertans thank you. It's a great idea that some of these things are finally being put in place.

The Minister of Justice talked a minute ago about the idea of looking at how we deal with our capital assets and investment in infrastructure. That's one of the things that's really being facilitated by this act under the new capital fund that's going to be established. This is a fund that's really going to allow us to, as he explained, spread out in many ways the planning that we do for our infrastructure.

He took that debate and then went off and started talking about P3s. You know, this is one of the issues that you have to look at. If the government had been properly dealing with the needs of our infrastructure over the last 10 years rather than building a debt in our infrastructure – getting behind in building our schools, getting behind in building our highways and health facilities, getting behind in the courthouse that he talked about in Calgary – what we would in effect have is the opportunity to deal with: how is it that we should be planning capital in the long run in a stable, sustainable economy?

You know, with the example that the minister gave about this partnership where everybody gains, we have to recognize that if we were doing that planning appropriately at the start, these multiple communities that he was talking about, only one of which is going to get a school – and he suggested that the best way to do that was to see which developer would give us the best deal in building the school in their community. Well, I guess the reaction that I had to that – and I made a comment about it – is that it shouldn't be the developers that decide where that school is built. It should be the school board of the jurisdiction, in our case the Edmonton school boards, either the public or the separate school board. That's who should be deciding with the community planners, not developers, in terms of who can give the best deal to establish a school in their community. Obviously, they may end up saying: well, if we can put it in our community, we can sell our houses before they can in the other one.

Well, you know, that shouldn't be the criteria because it should be based on the overall community plan. What traffic patterns does the community want? What was built into the subdivision plan? What age distribution? What growth patterns do they want to see in the population base? Where might the next subdivision go? Those are the kinds of things that have to be put in. So I would suggest that letting developers decide where the school goes compromises a community in deciding . . .

Mr. Hancock: Nobody was suggesting that.

Dr. Nicol: Well, the minister says that that's not what he was suggesting, but what I heard him say was that, in effect, he would go to the developers and say: give us your best shot, and let's see what we can get.

The idea is that we've got to make sure that this is done in the community interest, and as a government our mandate is to make sure that the best use of the public dollar is there for the community, for Albertans. We should not be out there trying to make sure the developers make an extra dollar. They're going to do that anyway. What we've got to do is make sure that the public tax dollar is well spent. Private developers get their share of that because they are the people who are contracted to actually build the facility. They can do that. They can do that with the ingenuity and the speed that the minister talked about. So that's kind of what I wanted to talk about just in reaction to the comments that he had brought forward.

In the rest of the act what we're looking at are some real issues about the ability now to really have more flexibility in this long-run plan for our province, you know, the sustainability part of this act, which is going to allow us to have a fund that will provide dollars for unforeseen and unpredicted shortfalls in revenue.

Now, the idea that a certain amount of our natural resource revenues is going to be dedicated to general revenue and the rest will go into the stability fund is great because what it does is give us that predictability that we need. When the stability fund is there, we can draw money back out if that level of natural resource revenue is not achieved. In this model right now and in the current government implementation plan it's going to be about 3 and a half billion dollars of natural resource revenues that go to general revenue. The issue is that when we build the stability fund, or the sustainability fund as the government is calling it, what we need to do is look at what is an appropriate level for it.

I was very pleased this morning when we had a chance to get a briefing from the minister's staff, and I want to thank the Minister of Finance for making that briefing available to us. What they talked about were the conditions under which money can be withdrawn from that stability fund. I guess the only question that came up in connection with it after my staff came back and debriefed me on their briefing was how it is going to relate to current budgeting practices. They talk about the idea that the sustainability fund will be used for emergencies, and they list fires, droughts, floods – you know, the Pine Lake tornado – and that kind of thing, yet when they're starting this fund off, they're only committing $400 million to it this year. This act changes the contingency fund requirements of the general revenue fund from a 3 percent contingency fund down to a 1 percent contingency fund, yet it seems that we're putting more demand on that contingency fund, which is, in effect, the stability fund, or sustainability fund now, by having the flood and emergency components there.

I guess the question that I throw out – and at some point the minister can clarify this for me – is: is this over and above the normal budget amounts? We've always had disaster components built into our regular budget practice. She signals that it's over amounts, so that helps a lot. Thank you. That clarifies one of the concerns that I had. If we were going to put all of those emergency and disaster demands on this fund, then it wouldn't have been big enough, you know, based on some of the experiences we've had in the past few years, but if it is built into the regular budgeting practice and then this is just for over and above the plan, that helps a lot. Thank you. That works out to provide that kind of a better understanding for it.

I guess when we look at it from the point of view of: let's be a little optimistic and think down the road a few years, when the fund hits the cap of the 2 and a half billion dollars – you know, this is a really interesting one that the government gave us in the briefing. They said that once it hits that 2 and a half billion dollars, any additional dollars can be used for four things. They listed debt repayment, capital investment, improving the government's balance sheet, and not operating expenses.

It would be nice to have a fifth one put there which would have an asterisk on it that said: if it looks like we're now entering a new scenario where there's going to be a long-term continuing surplus, how about a tax cut? You know, that might be one of the things we should be looking at as well. If we built that up in a very short period of time, then what we need to do is look at whether or not this is sustainable. If that is a sustainable ongoing surplus, that needs to be one of the options because we sure don't want to make it sound like the only option we've got after that's full is to spend the money. It's Albertans' money. They should have some kind of a say in it as well or some kind of a claim on it. That's the kind of thing that I would like to just add to their list of options when we look at it. It needs to be built in.

The next part that I just want to talk a little bit about is the benefits that we are going to have with the proposed capital planning part that's built into this. You know, if we actually do undertake and commit to those three-year capital plans, what is going to happen is that we're going to get rid of one of the greatest concerns that was expressed to me in the 2000-2001 period, when we had originally planned for a significant, almost $2 billion capital budget, and then we had to cut back when revenues fell. I can tell the minister now that I got a number of calls from the capital construction industry in Alberta, if I want to put a broad base on it. I don't want to just say the highway builders or the school builders or that kind of thing. It was a general concern by the capital building industry in this province, and they said: how can they plan, how can they commit to their bank to buy new equipment to carry out the stuff we need if there's no predictability and no stability in our capital plan?

So this is another one of the things that is a spin-off from this whole stabilization concept that's being built into all of these different funds. I'm not talking about the fund; I'm talking about the concept of stability. It needs to be there from the point of view of not only our planning as policymakers but also planning on behalf of the industry that will be doing things for us or the planners who are, like the school boards, trying to meet needs of service delivery. What it does is that it really is going to create a much better environment for all of the things that we want to do in terms of planning in this province.

If we look at the other components that are in there, they talk about moving to an amortization of capital for the government's bottom line. You know, the amortization of capital is a mechanism to keep track of the capital that we've already put in place. I guess the thing that I would like to ask here in that context is: how do we deal with the backlog, especially over the next couple or three years as we try to catch up in some of the deficit that we have in our infrastructure right now?

You know, the Minister of Infrastructure and the Minister of Transportation and the Premier have all talked about the idea that we do have to in effect catch up. If we're going to talk about a balance sheet, which I've heard the minister talk about on a number of occasions, will that catch-up need or the deficit that we have in our infrastructure be included as part of the balance sheet for our province? You know, as we try to create the sustainability that we have been talking about here, that has to incorporate a degree of commitment to ongoing support for our infrastructure, and if we're behind right now, we need to recognize that and catch up so that in the future we can truly be dealing with sustainability of that infrastructure base.

So when the minister has been talking about this balance sheet for Alberta, I would hope that it includes, you know, some kind of an estimate of where we're at in the context of a deficit in infrastructure. If we're going to truly look at what we have to do as a province in making our decisions, the planners out there need to know where we're at, what's a backlog, if we're going to spend the extra $3 billion a year for the next possibly three years. If the plans of the Premier in his television address work out, then the industry out there needs to know: is that an ongoing thing or is it for three years, that they get the extra billion dollars for three years and then it's gone, that we have to drop back to the approximately a billion that's in the budget on an annual basis? Then they can plan. But if they know that there's still a deficit in infrastructure, they'll expect there still will be possibly some subsequent catch-up in years after that third year. It gives them a chance to decide whether they should invest in new equipment or new training of employees, the whole bit.

So I would hope that that gets built into that infrastructure on that balance sheet basis.

The other aspect that we look at is, I guess, the increased flexibility, and that has to be something that we look at very positively in this piece of legislation because the government now is going to have options at the end of the year. It's going to have an option to look at how they can, in effect, deal with surpluses in the budget rather than having that rigid 25-75 that we had before. You know, I think that we have to look at that giving us as a province a real chance to deal with some of the issues that are being addressed or that arise during a year and look at it from the point of view of what's really in the best interests of the province as a whole. We need to look at that.

The interesting idea that we're going to have an option to, in effect, carry over those capital dollars really helps. The main thing that we're going to have is some stability. You know, Mr. Speaker, it's I think contingent on all of us to talk about this act and say that it gives us a chance to do things much differently than we did in the past. It's going to give us a chance to probably really promote better planning for the province, and I guess that from that perspective I would hope that everybody would help to in some way expedite this through so that we can put it in place.

I'm going to close with that, Mr. Speaker, and I'm going to close with kind of a humorous little incident that happened this afternoon. When the minister announced her third-quarter update at 10 o'clock this morning, the press obviously ran up and said, "Ken, what do you think?" After some discussions I made a comment. I said: "You know, it's really kind of interesting that we're getting this third-quarter update in the framework of the new legislation, which has not yet been passed, so in effect we're doing something that isn't legal. You know, we're reporting this third-quarter update using a framework that the Legislature hasn't given them permission to use yet." So in the Premier's 3 o'clock scrum one of the reporters picked up on it, went to the Premier and said, "Mr. Premier, the opposition is accusing you of breaking the law." He said, "What do you mean?" He said, "Well, you know, you're reporting your financial statements using a thing that isn't legal yet." The Premier looked at it and said: "Well, my gosh. Whip me with a wet noodle; will you?" So I don't want the Premier to have to be whipped with a wet noodle. Let's give him the framework.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I understand Standing Order 29, it's available for question or comment, and I'd only want to make the comment that the hon. Leader of the Opposition, I think, misinterpreted my remarks slightly. I'll give him the benefit of the doubt. There probably was too much noise in the place; he couldn't hear me. I did say that the school boards ought to be the ones who determine where schools go, make that determination. Developers can come to the table and make proposals, but the determination of where a school ought to go ought to be made on the basis of the public interest. That was the gist of my remarks. If I wasn't clear enough, I wanted to clarify.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: I stand corrected.

The Acting Speaker: There being no questions, I'll recognize Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to take this opportunity in second reading to speak to the principle of Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. Well, I've been in this Assembly going into my seventh year now, and I've been hearing about the Liberal plan for a stability fund every one of those years, and now we have it incorporated into legislation by the Conservative government.

Mr. Mason: They're just Liberals in a hurry.

Ms Blakeman: You've got to be just the tiniest bit jealous about this one; don't you? I'm sorry. My remark was directed towards the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

As I looked through the notes, actually, there was a letter from Dr. Percy, who was then the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, first raising the idea, and then in fact the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek had a bill brought forward with exactly that idea. Then, of course, it was brought forward by our own sitting Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and then by our leader in the last year. So I think the Liberals deserve credit for being persistent in bringing this idea before the Assembly enough times that the government finally saw the light and, in fact, incorporated it into what they were doing.

I was interested or perhaps intrigued to listen to some excerpts from the government members talking about this act this afternoon. I heard the intergenerational debt argument being raised again, which I thought was very interesting. That's the one about how the government saved future generations of children from debt and deficit. I'm always fascinated by that argument, and it was used at the time, but it's as though the government members like to think that the debt was created by a meteor or an act of God or a firestorm or something. I mean, the truth is that the debt was created by the very same Conservative government. It took them 20 years to rack up the debt and 10 years to pay it off. This was not created out of thin air. They strut about as though they invented the most marvelous thing. Well, I guess they did. They invented an enormous debt, that all Albertans have had to help them pay off now. But they talk about it like they had no connection to the creation of it.

You know, they didn't dissolve the Conservative Party and start it again under a different name or something. They didn't. It's exactly the same party. If you check under the Societies Act registration, it's a continuous registry there. It's exactly the same party. It's exactly the same people that created the debt, and now they want congratulations for having to work to pay it down. Well, I don't know, Mr. Speaker. It's just one of those strange, twisted little facts of sitting in this Assembly some days.

I heard another member speaking: look in the mirror, and you will see who created the debt; it was Albertans who created this debt; let's blame it on the schools and the parents and the seniors. Excuse me. Those people were not the government. They did not make the choices that put those programs in place. They did not pass those budgets. The Conservative Party as the government did. You guys made those choices. Don't bother blaming that on the seniors. Don't blame it on the parents or on the schools. That's not who made those decisions. The current sitting government made those decisions. So don't blame it on anybody else.

Mr. Mason: The ogre of overspending.

Ms Blakeman: You're just itching to get up on this one again. Yeah; this was created by the choices of this government.

The other thing that I've followed along with, I've thought: wow, I don't think you could write a science fiction novel freakier than this stuff. I mean, is this whole idea that somehow this astonishing, brilliant, economic theory helped this government devise the plan to get rid of the deficit and the debt? Well, no. I mean, the money came from high oil and gas prices, from surpluses that way. Hello? It almost grew on trees, except it didn't. It came out of the ground. Lucky, lucky for the government. It literally opened up before them and came out of the ground. They couldn't have had it any luckier. So as far as brilliant planning and astonishing budget management, no. Sorry, guys. You had oil at, like, 40 bucks a barrel. I mean, anybody could have had a surplus with that.

An Hon. Member: Could it be good karma?

Ms Blakeman: Good karma. I'm asked if it could be good karma. Well, now we're back to this argument about who created the debt. The same people. So maybe the karma was that you'll finally get to pay off your own debt.

So we had cut stupid in that it wasn't planned. They were very quick cuts. The cuts came out of the frontline services. The cuts came out of maintenance, which is costing us a lot of money further down the line, as we know now. We had cut stupid, we had surplus easy, and then we had spend stupid. So I never quite understand why this government is so darned proud of this whole fiscal thing because it just strikes me as bizarre.

Now, let's talk about the intergenerational debt thing: "Oh, my goodness, we have to pay down this debt, or we will transfer debt to our children, to our kids and our grand-kids. Oh, man, we've got to do this right away." I go: what is the one group that has been affected instantly, in less than half of a generation? Which group of people in less than half a generation has borne the brunt of this government's choices? That would be our kids and our grand-kids. Well, how? Well, look at the cost of university tuition and tuition to colleges and institutes of technology. Who is carrying that debt on behalf of this government? Those students are in less than half a generation. So, wow. I mean, wow, you guys are good. It didn't even take a full generation to transfer that debt. You did it in less than 10 years by transferring it directly onto the shoulders of every single Albertan that was attending an educational institution and their parents. Hello? Like, wow.

I mean, we've got university tuition that went from a thousand bucks to 4,000 bucks a year. The debt load that students are walking away from school with now, the last year that I checked, was 25,000-plus dollars as a debt. So there's where the debt went. Right onto their shoulders: 25,000 bucks apiece. There you go. If you're going to be in medical or legal pursuits, you're looking at 40,000-plus dollars as a debt that you're walking out with, and that will soon be higher when they allow differential tuition fees in those faculties. So it's really our kids who took this debt on, but the government likes to take all the credit for it. You know, at least, you guys, admit that you transferred onto the shoulders of your children. Please give credit where credit is due.

Now, let's talk about the Financial Administration Act. This is the other one. It's straight out of George Orwell. It really is.

An Hon. Member: Straight out of George Bush, you mean.

Ms Blakeman: No. George Orwell. You guys must sleep with a copy of Nineteen Eighty-Four underneath your pillows. I mean, wow. It just oozes out of you.

Why – why? – are you so proud of having to pass a law to keep yourself from going over budget, from overspending? Like, who would need to do that? You know, usually you pass laws when you know that there's a tendency to do something and you're trying to curb that tendency. So every time members of this government get up and beat their chests and have ticker tape parades about how gosh darn wonderful they are for having passed an act to keep themselves from overspending – hello? Well, then, what's your tendency? To overspend, and we've seen that: 20 years' worth of debt creation. I mean, I guess it was pretty obvious; wasn't it? You did spend 20 years creating this debt. You did have to hold yourself in line, so you passed a law so that you couldn't go and spend over your budget or create a yearly deficit. Wow. And you want congratulations for that? I guess you do.

The other thing that's happened – and this is a little darker, I think – is that I think it was an easy way for the government to control constituents and certain issue-based constituency groups because you could always use that big stick, that big devil, that bogeyman. That's the word I was looking for. "No, no, you know, we can't go over budget on this. We've got to get rid of the deficit and then get rid of the debt. So no, no, you can't have whatever the heck you're asking for."

I still feel that there were some philosophical or ideological moves that were made under the guise of this economic fiscal restraint. You know, it's in areas like the women's issues program. Now I don't even think it's a desk. It used to be a desk having come down from a branch, but I don't even think the desk is there anymore. There are certainly no programs being offered. Certainly it's in the attitude to poor people in Alberta that, you know, it's their fault somehow. I really didn't approve of that at the time, and I still don't.

We're back to looking at this idea of a stability fund as brought forward by the Liberals repeatedly, and I guess the government finally understood what it was. I was looking back at some of the government reaction in the past when we raised the idea of a stability fund and we explained what it was. I'm looking at Hansard from November 21, 2001, an exchange between the leader and the Provincial Treasurer, which is what I think she was called at the time, in which she goes on with some bombast about – and I think this is the crux of it why it took so long. It was just a total misunderstanding about what the stability fund was, and I guess that once they got their financial management group of buddies from Calgary to explain it through that committee – I can't remember the name of it – then all of a sudden that was okay. That put the kiss of success on it. It's just interesting reading, looking back now.

Here's the quote from the Finance minister.

The situation in the province of Alberta is to manage the realities that face us in the economy.

Sorry. I'm going to jump ahead a bit.

Albertans went into a contract with this government again this year and said: "Stay the course. Keep our taxes low, pay off our debt, and spend wisely." The corrective plan that we have put forward is in response to exactly what Albertans have asked us to do. This hon. member would like us to abrogate that responsibility and move away from it. We're not prepared to do that.

Well, how does she think that responsibility is going to be abrogated? Earlier on it says:

The alternative, which the Liberal leader would want, is to put us in debt, spend beyond our means, raise taxes, and not deal with reality.

That's what she thought the stability fund was. So no wonder it's taken us this long to come to this point.

Do I agree in principle with what's being proposed in this act? Yes. I think it is a way for us to start to achieve or at least have stability in sight. This is a boom-bust economy. This government has not been successful in understanding that and trying to manage it. It's just ridden along with that roller-coaster ride and taken every Albertan along with it. What we're really looking for, I think, in any economic plan is stability and predictability. That's what people want. They want to know what's going to happen. They want to know how they can plan, and they don't want this sort of, "Yes, you're gonna have $82 million for a school," and then four months later: "No. It's all gone. You're not going to have that until we don't know when." So it's all put off again. My goodness. As a parent how do you decide what school your kid is going to go for? I mean, everything is just placed in front of people and then yanked away again in the next possible second.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our friend and colleague from the Liberal Party, representing Edmonton-Centre, spoke to the genesis of the debt, how the debt evolved into the responsibility of the government to ensure that this did not happen again, and a preoccupation, perhaps, of the government to ensure that we didn't ever fall into the debt trap and the spiral that we found ourselves in beginning in the early 1980s, which caused a recession in Alberta that lasted at least a full 10 years and that caused many, many Albertans to lose everything that they had, to lose their life savings, their businesses. As time goes by, it's so easy to forget the national energy program. The national energy program, which was a creature of the federal Liberal government of the day, absolutely decimated the Albertan economy. Many people representing the Liberal Party feel that the national energy program was an intrusive raid on the resources of Alberta and that that was the genesis of Alberta's descent into debt that we had to dig ourselves out of.

So I would ask my colleague representing Edmonton-Centre . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, this time is for brief comments or brief questions.

Mr. McClelland: Okay. Thank you.

. . . to comment on the national energy program. In her estimation was that the appropriate policy for Alberta or was it not?

The Acting Speaker: You don't have to respond.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. I know that.

From the sublime to the ridiculous. You know, truly, the NEP was so long ago. Get over it, you guys. Move on. No wonder you're having so much trouble. It's 20 years ago, honey. We're into a new century. Come on. Move ahead. Good heavens. Every time something is critical towards you, you've got to drag that up. It's old. It's way over, you guys. Move on. If that's the best you can do, it's getting a little tiresome.

Mr. Mason: I would like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre if it is not the case that not only was it this Conservative government that drove up the debt, created the debt and the deficit in the first place, but whether or not it's traditionally governments like, for example, the Thatcher regime or the Reagan regime or now the Bush Jr. regime that actually are the greatest deficit creators in the world and if they don't actually put Pierre Trudeau to absolute shame when it comes to driving up deficits.

Ms Blakeman: Yes.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. There being nobody else wanting to ask a question, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that after so many years of talking about a stability fund from the perspective of the opposition having presented the idea in the bills, it certainly is a real pleasure to be able to talk about the stability fund from the perspective of the government actually introducing a bill that might in fact get passed this session. I would like in my comments to talk about how this fund has come to be and what I like about the way the government has proposed it and what I don't like about it.

First of all, before I get into those comments, Mr. Speaker, I have to make a few comments on what the Government House Leader said in his opening statements. He talked about the lack of necessity for private members on the government side and government members to speak to legislation because they had already talked about the legislation through their various committees and internal caucus processes, but he missed the whole point of being open and transparent and accountable to Albertans. When that debate occurs behind closed doors and is not in fact rehashed in the public on the record, then nobody knows how the government makes their decisions and what kinds of deals they come to. So we would urge them to actually participate in the debate, not just in flippancy questions at the end of our comments but standing up and putting forth the comments and concerns and debate they had within their own internal committees in terms coming to . . .

Rev. Abbott: That's none of your business.

Ms Carlson: Well, there's a smart-aleck answer there, that it's none of my business. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that it has nothing to do with whether or not it's my business. It's the business of Albertans to know how their government operates, and it has been a commitment, an often broken promise by this government that they will be open and transparent and accountable. It is exactly Drayton Valley-Calmor's comment that it's none of our business that is completely disrespectful to Albertans and ignores completely the promises that this Premier has made to people election after election after election. So we would hope that that is not the same opinion that the front bench of this government holds, because it is not the way to govern a province. If you're making decisions on a good and sound basis in the best interests of the people of the province, then to be open and transparent, to have the discussion on the floor of the Assembly, where it properly belongs in a democracy, is the right thing to do.

It certainly speaks to the quality of debate. As the House leader said: the quality of debate is enhanced by them not participating. Well, I have to say that often that is the case, Mr. Speaker, but we would expect that they would get better over time. Being Liberals, we'll give them every chance possible to improve the quality of their debate, and we're looking forward to them at least trying.

The Government House Leader also spoke to the quality of the bills then hitting the Legislature because of the quality of their process, but in fact we have seen in this Legislature time after time after time bills hitting the floor that are severely flawed. They're poorly written. They require amendments, amendments often proposed by us, sometimes taken by the government from the opposition. Often the government has to bring in their own amendments to their own legislation because they didn't think it through in the first place. Sometimes they leave the bills on the Order Paper and never pass them, and sometimes after they're passed, they have to rescind them or bring in amended bills to improve the quality of the legislation.

This brings me to my point of the often-discussed all-party committees. If they would have some input from people who bring different visions of Alberta to the table at the drafting stage, at the general debating stage, we would see an increase in the quality of the bills that hit the floor of this Legislature. The complaint from the government side is that they would have to listen to us debate it in the committee and then again in the Legislature, but any of the government members who have worked with me over the years on a variety of different kinds of committees know that that isn't in fact true. Yes, we will have points of contention that need to be brought forward and we won't agree on, but for the most part we will work out the differences, come to a compromise. What happens is that the government will be complemented on the process in this Legislature, and the bill will go through all stages of the reading in a very timely and supportive fashion.

So what I would suggest is that, in fact, what the Government House Leader said is not always accurate. There are many ways that their processes of bringing bills to the floor of this Legislature could be improved. One, all-party committees at the drafting stage and, secondly, having their members debate the bills and talk about the process the bill went through through their caucus and whatever groups they took the bill out to for information and feedback to be discussed here on the floor of the Legislature. That would actually encourage some openness and accountability, as these have oft been promised by the Premier of this province.

Then I have to comment on a difference in opinion I see this evening between the Government House Leader and the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. During my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Centre's debate she talked about this government, this Conservative government, albeit a few of the players have changed over the past 10 years and more of them over the past 20.

An Hon. Member: Stockwell Day is gone.

Ms Carlson: Yes. Thank goodness for that. That's the good news in this Legislature.

Mr. MacDonald: And forgotten too.

Ms Carlson: Well, perhaps. Perhaps.

In fact, it was a Conservative government who racked up this debt. My colleague from Edmonton-Centre said that it took them 20 years to get there. The Government House Leader said that no, in fact it only took them three years to get there. Then the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford stands up and says: it wasn't this government's fault at all; it all belonged to the NEP, which happened a lot longer than three years ago. So we have a difference of opinion in how we got there, but in fact if you go back – well, let's talk about the NEP for just a minute and who really contributed substantially to the problems that happened. The Conservative Premier of this province at that time decided that he was going to do what this Premier likes to do often, and that's to take on the federal government. Sometimes when you take on that kind of a fight you win, and sometimes you lose, and this time all of Alberta had to pay the price for the ego of the leader of the Conservative Party at that time. So that is where we can start to take a look at what happened with the NEP, but those years were not deficit years for this government.

When did this government actually run up the debt? I would agree with the Government House Leader on this, and in fact it was three years that it took for them to dig themselves into a hole. And the House leader was right; it did take them 10 years to get out of that debt. How did they do it, Mr. Speaker? They did it by introducing huge user fees. They did it by creating a huge infrastructure debt that we have yet to figure out how to get our way out of. They did it by a human deficit, by reducing payments to low-income Albertans and those who don't have the same advantages as the rest of us in this Assembly. They did it by substantially reducing seniors' programs without consulting those very people who helped elect them into office, with the high cost of education, with the kinds of hidden user fees that we have seen, by such things as not just those times when you go to pay for your licence renewal but also things like fishing licences, like the tire tax, like downloading the dollars that they used to spend in research and development. All of these things were how they dug themselves out of the debt that they created.

Through that whole time period, through the whole 10 years that I've been here, we tried to give them good ideas on how to properly manage income streams, properly fund infrastructure, and maintain the kind of funding structure that gives some stability to those people and those organizations that count on provincial government funding. Those are municipalities, those are school boards, those are hospital boards, and those are everyday taxpayers, Mr. Speaker. So we took this issue very seriously because it looked like, when most of us here got elected in 1993, this government couldn't figure it out. They were very lucky. They had windfall oil revenues, but they didn't have a fiscal plan.

We spent some time in a subcommittee in our own caucus starting at the end of 1993 and throughout 1994 and talked about how to develop a debt management and retirement plan and long-term funding proposal that this government could adopt. We introduced that, Mr. Speaker, in January of 1995, and we called it the 2020 vision. It was initially introduced by the then Finance critic sending a letter to the then Provincial Treasurer outlining the highlights of it, and we called it a fiscal stability fund.

Mr. MacDonald: Did we have a bill by that name?

Ms Carlson: Well, I had a bill by that name, but so did many other people in this caucus over the past 10 years.

Mr. MacDonald: Tell me about that bill.

Ms Carlson: I will tell you about that bill, but first of all I wanted to see if I could go back and find the comments that had been made by the then Provincial Treasurer, Jim Dinning.

Mr. Mason: Jim who?

Ms Carlson: Jim Dinning. That's a name from the past; isn't it?

Mr. MacDonald: Does he have his hair dyed, and is he going to be Premier?

Ms Carlson: Well, I don't know. That's a good question. You'll have to ask him.

At that time he was asked whether or not it was a good idea to have a fiscal stability fund, and what he said at that time was quite amazing actually, Mr. Speaker. I'm trying to see if I can find the exact quote. I think I've got it here now. This is page 859 of Hansard, March 28, 1995. He was asked, "To the Treasurer: is the establishment of a stabilization fund . . . consistent with the government's commitment to open and understandable accounting?" Mr. Dinning said, "Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer is absolutely not."

So it's interesting to see how far this government has come since March 28 of 1995 to the date of introduction of this bill, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, where they have renamed our great idea that we have introduced into this Legislature through letters and through not one, not two, but three different private member's bills over the years. [interjection] Yes. Three different bills. We have hammered away on this particular issue year after year, bill after bill and have been told by this government how foolish we were and how we didn't know what we were talking about and that we had no clue what we were doing. Motions, too, Mr. Speaker. Motion 507 in 1999 was brought in. [interjection] That's exactly right.

So the bills came in, introduced by, imagine, the current Minister of Community Development, who happened to sit on our side of the House in 1998. He introduced the bill, the fiscal stabilization fund. I introduced the bill in 1999. Our leader introduced the bill in 2002. Every time we introduced it, we just got booed right out of this Assembly, and they told us how silly it was, and look what happens now. They slightly renamed it – not very original – from stability fund to sustainability fund, so the people can clearly understand that it was our good idea. And what do we find in the bill? That they took information right out of our original 2020 vision plan, which was very detailed and went through how to implement this, because we know that the government is not really quick on the uptake of new ideas and really good ideas. It usually takes them about three years to take our idea and bring it in as a bill and pass it. This time it took a lot longer than that. It took from January of 1995 until now, but, Mr. Speaker, we're happy to say that they actually got it.

What do we find in their bill? Exactly the principles that we had talked about all those times: taking available surpluses and resource revenues over a certain figure and keeping interest earned in the stability fund. All great ideas.

I know my time is just about up, Mr. Speaker, so what I really did want to be able to talk about was what happens to the heritage savings trust fund now with this stability fund and particularly what happens to the interest revenue from there. Once again, for years we have been saying to this government that to properly manage the heritage savings trust fund they need to, in surplus years particularly, inflation-proof that fund and keep that interest revenue in the fund in years when they don't need it. All we need to do is take a look at the fund that Alaska put into place, which started in the same year as our fund, which started with the same amount of money as our fund, which now is over $30 billion in revenue and pays a yearly dividend to each citizen in Alaska as compared to our fund which has significantly depreciated over the past few years.

So my concern is that now that they have developed this sustainability fund, they also take a look at properly managing the heritage savings trust fund, that they inflation-proof it, and that they manage the money in a responsible fashion so that fund, too, can grow. Perhaps finally, Mr. Speaker, this government has got it.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie if she could elaborate somewhat on the sources of the deficit and the mythology that seems to exist among Tory circles with respect to the impact of the national energy program as opposed to the falling world oil prices as the primary cause of Alberta's economic decline at that time.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's really, really a pleasure to have a New Democrat not trash the federal government at any point in time and who actually gets fiscal reality. [interjection] No, no. He gets the fiscal reality in this particular instance. He knows who actually is to blame for the financial situation that occurred over that point in time and, particularly, who is to blame for deficit-running budgets.

You know what? I'll tell an interesting story. I don't think I've ever said this in the Assembly. When I was first elected, in 1993, I was pretty idealistic about what government did. I remember going to my first Public Accounts meeting, and my very first question in that meeting was to the education minister. He was sitting down there with his deputy minister and the assistant deputy ministers and all the rest of the people that came with him, and I thought: I'll just start with a really easy question and sort of set up a frame of reference for where I want to go with my question. I said to the minister: Mr. Minister, can you tell me what your budget was for the year in question in Public Accounts? At that time it would've been 1992. He looked at his deputy minister and they talked a little bit and then to the assistant deputy minister, and then the talking goes all up and down the line, and he comes back to me and he says: Well, we didn't have a budget. I said: "No, no, no, Mr. Minister. You didn't understand my question. I wanted to know how much money you went to ask the Treasury Board for to run the education department on for the year and how you justified that money." And he says to me: "No, no. You didn't understand the answer. When we wanted more money, we just went and asked for it." So there was no budget planning process, and that is exactly how they got into the debt they were in. It has nothing to do with any other forms of government in this country. It has a lot to do with their complete inability to manage.

Mr. McClelland: Mr. Speaker, I move to correct this revision of history as put forth by my friend from the New Democratic Party and echoed by my friend from the Liberal Party. The price of oil did not go down until 1985-86. The national energy program started well before that and was a wellhead tax on the resource taxed as it came out of the ground. It would be similar to, for instance, a tax on the capital activity of the Golden Horseshoe: absolutely inappropriate. It's strangely similar to a carbon tax, which is the Kyoto accord, so they're doing it again.

So my friend from Edmonton-Ellerslie should take the opportunity to look at the dates involved in the national energy program and the decline of the price of oil so that people know that the national energy program did not come off until after the price of oil had come down, not before it came down. After it came down.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford that he is no longer in the opposition at the federal level. He doesn't have to make these kinds of comments and fight this particular fight. I would remind him, as he very well knows, that at the time that occurred, we were facing a worldwide major recession in the oil patch which affected Houston just as much as it affected Alberta. [interjection] Exactly. Worldwide governments were affected by what happened in the '80s. When did we take a look at the problems of this particular government? They started after that point in time, and we didn't see any other causes for that except complete mismanagement.

This member also knows that I'm quite happy to debate Kyoto with him at length at any time because he is wrong, Mr. Speaker, and we are right.

The Acting Speaker: The five minutes that was the allocated time has run out. Any other members wish to speak on the bill?

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 2 read a second time]

Bill 3

Electric Utilities Act

[Adjourned debate February 26: Mrs. McClelland]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure of mine to rise and speak to this bill, which I've been anticipating for some time, and I've certainly been anticipating the opportunity to debate with the Minister of Energy. I would certainly hope that we can have a very productive debate.

I'd like to start with a brief statement, Mr. Speaker, if I may.

Mr. Speaker, history does indeed show that when there is competition, usually that competition exists for the benefit of the consumer, whether that person is buying from a retail store or is buying from an electric power company. Competition equals lower prices.

Now, those are not my words, Mr. Speaker. These were the comments of Premier Ralph Klein on March 25, 1998. "Competition equals lower prices," he said. What a difference five years makes. We now have prices that are anywhere between 40 and 100 percent higher than at the time this Premier made that statement.

Consumers in the Peace country and eastern Alberta pay 40 percent more for power than they did prior to deregulation. Calgarians pay 60 percent more. Edmontonians pay 80 percent more, and consumers in central and southern Alberta in the EPCOR/Aquila area pay fully 100 percent more.

Mr. Speaker, we have released a study from Hydro-Québec looking at the prices for electricity in major cities, and back in May 2000 Edmonton was in the middle of the pack; in fact, slightly below average for the cities surveyed. The cities surveyed on May 1, 2000, were Winnipeg, Montreal, Vancouver, Ottawa, Edmonton, Regina, Toronto, Moncton, Halifax, Charlottetown, and St. John's, Newfoundland. It had Edmonton clearly in the bottom half of power prices. Now, the same cities were surveyed again on May 1, 2002, and guess what? Edmonton has the highest power prices anywhere in this survey.

Mr. Smith: Well, that's because you were there as an alderman.

Mr. Mason: I want to deal with that because the minister said that I was there as an alderman. He's made a number of public statements and otherwise about the role that I personally had played, and the government loves to talk about that instead of the real issue. In actual fact, just to correct the minister, Mr. Speaker, I never was a member of the EPCOR board, rather was, as city council, a shareholder. We had regulatory authority over rates, and those decisions were made in public and in the interests of the citizens. On at least one occasion I was successful in turning down a proposed rate increase by EPCOR on behalf of the citizens of our city. So I just wanted to correct for the record the one additional little piece of misinformation that is being spread by the Minister of Energy.

Now, the minister has also talked at some length about the public debt that exists in regulated jurisdictions, and he's tried to suggest that we have lower prices in regulated jurisdictions because somehow the debt is being subsidized by those jurisdictions in the case of public power companies. That is, of course, not true, Mr. Speaker. This debt is not guaranteed by taxpayers; it's guaranteed by ratepayers. We have shown that major Alberta power companies carry a debt totaling $10 billion. That gives Alberta the third highest per capita debt load in its electricity utilities, and Albertans paid for that debt through their higher prices.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I can give you some ideas of some of the cost. TransAlta has a debt of $2.4 billion; ATCO, $2.6 billion; EPCOR, $1.6 billion; Enmax, because it has not up until this point participated in generation, has a very small debt of $183 million; Aquila's debt is $3.45 billion, for a total of $10.238 billion. The source of this information is the 2001 annual reports of each corporation. That gives Alberta a debt load per capita of $3,441.

Now, the minister can argue, and quite correctly, that this debt is guaranteed in a regulated system and in Alberta it's not guaranteed, except what the minister doesn't point out is that all of the PPAs are guaranteed by legislation. So billions of dollars of the Alberta debt are in fact guaranteed by this government on the backs of the ratepayers of this province exactly the same way as exists in fully regulated jurisdictions.

What about the other debt? What about new generation debt? That, of course, is not guaranteed. Any investor knows that if they have a guaranteed return, they expect a lower rate of return. If it's not guaranteed, as in the case of new generation debt in Alberta, they would expect a higher return, and they won't invest until they're sure they're going to get it. That means that capital is withheld from investment in the market here in Alberta until prices are sufficiently high as to support a higher rate of return to compensate for the higher rate of risk for new generation in this province. Therefore, we have structurally built in a situation where higher rates will exist on a permanent basis in Alberta in order to support the higher risk required by investors in a nonregulated system.

So, Mr. Speaker, the government and the minister are not coming clear with Albertans at all on the impact of this deregulated system. Quite the opposite to what the Premier said five years ago, competition in this case equals higher prices, and there are sound economic reasons for that.

Now, let's take a look at the cost of deregulation so far. Of the $4.2 billion of rebates given by this government previous to the last election, $2 billion was for electricity. So that's the first $2 billion. Not even counting the first year, there's $3 billion in high prices, so the conservative estimate of the cost of deregulation so far to Alberta consumers and to the Alberta government has been $5 billion. There are many calculations that I've seen, that I think are very, very reputable calculations, that show that the cost so far has actually been closer to $10 billion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, do you remember the huge hue and cry when the gun registry came in at a billion dollars? There was a national hue and cry about that billion dollars and rightly so because that was just a complete boondoggle on the part of the federal government. Everybody had every right to be upset. But when this government wastes between $5 billion and $10 billion on electricity deregulation and delivers less competition and delivers doubled prices, there's just not the same level of outcry, and I have to ask why that is. Well, Mr. Speaker, we're going to do our best to make sure that Albertans understand exactly what's gone on in this province.

The minister has also said that when the rate riders come off at the end of this year, power prices will come down. The fact is that they will not come down anywhere near to the original levels that existed before deregulation. One of the things that people don't understand and that we're helping them to understand is just what the rate riders are. As we well know, there was a very significant spike in electricity prices just prior to the last election, and the government capped the prices at that time well below the cost paid by the power companies for that electricity in the first place. When the power companies broke into almost open revolt and talked about it being Alberta's version of the NEP, the government and the minister of the moment – I think it was the current Minister of Sustainable Resource Development; at that time we were having a new one every couple of weeks – told the power companies that they would be able to recover their lost revenue and their lost profit, as a result of capping the prices for electricity before the election, from the consumers after the election was safely out of the way. So we have two rate riders in order to repay the power companies for their lost revenues because the government froze power prices and capped them at well below cost in order to win the last election. So this rate rebate is simply the price that Albertans have to pay for this government's re-election strategy.

The problem we've got, Mr. Speaker – and I should say that it's a problem the government party has got. They've got a big problem that people get reminded of every month in the mail, and it's not going to go away. But this bill is a chance to change that. Unfortunately for government members, the minister has chosen to further entrench deregulation in this act. This will end the phase of phasing in deregulation, and this will be, apparently, the final form that it is going to take. So it is institutionalizing deregulation, and it is institutionalizing high power prices in this province. I would suggest to hon. members opposite that if they have any concern at all about this issue going into the next election, now is the time to act. This is your last chance. This bill should be defeated, because after this, high power prices become a permanent fixture of the Alberta economy and a permanent albatross around the neck of this provincial government, and I think people ought to be aware of that situation.

There's nothing in Bill 3 that suggests that the situation is going to improve. It is being based solely on the notion that it will help to spur badly needed investment in upgrading our transmission system and provide more competition in the marketplace. But I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that if a company like Direct Energy is prepared to enter the market at this time, it's doing so because of the high power prices that exist in the Alberta marketplace, so they can make a significant amount of money. They will not compete in such a way as to force down prices to the previous level before deregulation. That would be contrary to their interests. They will instead compete for a market share at or about approximately the level of pricing we now have, and anybody who believes otherwise is, in my view, extraordinarily naive. So don't depend on assurances from the minister that Direct Energy is going to bring down prices in making your decision to vote for this bill.

There are a number of other factors, Mr. Speaker, that need to be taken into account. EPCOR and Enmax will no longer be allowed to own the distribution system and act as retailers, so they are being forced to unbundle their services. The problem is that where it's already unbundled, which is in the EPCOR/Enmax area, there have been tremendous problems with billing errors as the two companies try to talk to each other. The government seems to be so pleased with this type of system that they are now going to require it as a mandatory feature for the rest of the province. I, quite frankly, cannot understand that at all.

Medicine Hat, which is a model of what I would call a social democratic system for providing for electricity and natural gas and utilities and has been able to provide lower power costs and lower gas costs for its citizens, is now going to have to contribute to payments in lieu of taxes. The whole question of payments in lieu of taxes is something that I'll perhaps deal with, Mr. Speaker, in the session when it goes to committee for amendments, because payments in lieu of taxes is not the same; municipal utilities are designed to provide low prices and a return for taxpayers. They are not intended to provide a return for investors, so they should not be treated the same way.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that rate riders should be canceled and we should return to a reasonable and modernized system of regulation in order to protect consumers in this province, and I urge members to support that.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Going back to a government of Alberta news release on August 24, 2000, this is good news for Albertans. Opening up the electricity market will mean more choice, better access and, ultimately, the most competitive power prices for our homes, farms, municipalities, businesses and industries.

Now, earlier there was talk about how we're going to have to subsidize and this myth that there are going to be subsidies somehow involved in having low-cost power. Could you please explain? Further on in this press release when you were talking about the power purchase arrangements and the fact that for the first auction the sale was $1.1 billion, and the government claimed here that "some critics have suggested the power auction could have raised as much as $4 billion" instead of the $1 billion. "If the auction had raised that much, consumers would have had to pay more in electricity rates to allow the bidders to recover their investments." Do you agree with that statement, or do you think that perhaps it's the consumers that are subsidizing . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Oops. I'm sorry. Through the Speaker of course. Do you think it's the consumers that are winding up subsidizing the bidders?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, brief questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Actually, what the power purchase agreements were for was the accrued value that consumers had paid in the plants as the plants depreciated and were paid off, but the fact of the matter is that the auction failed to raise the money that was necessary, and as a result I think that it's quite contrary to what the government news release said. This contributed to the higher prices for consumers in this province.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. He was talking about the rate riders, and I'd be interested to know his thoughts on my question, which revolves around: in 2002 two companies were making purchasing decisions because the rates had risen to fairly high levels. Both of those decisions were approved by the AEUB, and I don't argue with that. However, I'd like to know if the hon. member agrees with the decision which was made by EPCOR management to lock its customers into a full year's worth of high prices in 2001, which really has caused this huge discrepancy between the rate riders in the EPCOR/Aquila and Edmonton area and the ATCO area.

Mr. Mason: The short answer, Mr. Speaker, is no. I think that EPCOR made a number of serious errors with respect to that particular agreement and in their arrangements with Aquila. But I will point out that what happened was that the company that preceded Aquila, that owned that, sold it in the market set up by the government. EPCOR made the deal to acquire that area and then went to the market after the auctions had already taken place and on the market set up by the government, using the supply that was created under the rules of the government, purchased electricity at a very high price and then passed that on to consumers.

What is supposed to happen is that there's supposed to be some competition so that a company that makes those kinds of decisions goes out of business or loses its market share, and the fact of the matter is that there was no competition in any real sense to EPCOR in that area. So the government, having taken away regulatory protection, failed to provide competition in a way that would protect consumers. So ultimately it comes back, Mr. Speaker, to the bungling of the government in its deregulation effort.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Deregulation has the effect of bringing market discipline to the production, distribution, and consumption of energy, thus driving efficient generation and use of the resource. I wonder if the Member for Edmonton-Highlands can give us an example of a publicly owned, publicly managed, publicly funded entity that could bring the same market discipline to any product.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the member is letting his ideology get in the way of his understanding of how the world really works. In actual fact, public power is always cheaper than private power.

The Acting Speaker: Unfortunately, the time allocated for this section has passed.

The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening to talk about the issues that arise from Bill 3. The attempt that the government is making under Bill 3 to kind of fix what has turned out to be quite a mess in terms of deregulation of electricity probably doesn't do much to really help it a lot. When you look at the structural changes that they've put in place – they keep talking about this concept of competition and how we have to make sure that competition works, but when you look it at from the point of view of this deregulation truly creating what, in effect, is competition, you kind of wonder whether or not it really is going to operate in such a way that consumers have the choice mechanisms that we normally think of in the context of market economics.

Mr. Speaker, we started off in Alberta with a structure in our electricity industry that had us at the bottom end of the cost distribution of electricity in all of the North American marketing jurisdictions for electricity. Some of the statistics I saw in the year 2000 put us about 24th out of 156, 24th from the lowest cost. The only ones that were underneath us were the jurisdictions that relied mainly on hydropower, which by operation is much less costly on a dollar investment basis. When you build in environmental costs, then you have to think twice about whether or not it really is as low cost as it is, but in terms of capitalization and current market reflections that is the lowest cost source.

So we didn't have a lot of hydro, but the way we dealt with our electricity, having private-sector operators mostly but also one major municipal operator who was operating in the same vein with bidding into that generation pool, we had a very, very friendly electricity market system. The idea that we were going to restructure this somehow could have easily been done to give us more competition at the generation level without having to disrupt a system that was working really well. We could have built it in so that, you know, the cogen groups had an option to bid in, to supply power, and still to manage that without disrupting their independence and their business position. But, instead, we chose to try to create a competitive market through the system, and in effect we've ended up with a really disjointed system that has a lot of hoops to jump through, in effect more regulation than we had before, because it was very simple to flow through on a fixed-cost basis, through the monopoly distribution and transmission components, the delivery systems that were run, either through a co-op or a local municipal utility, and end up with a fairly stable cost structure.

You know, this is one of the interesting things that we heard earlier from the Member for I think it's Edmonton-Whitemud, that said that we would get market discipline from deregulation. The kind of deregulation – or reregulation is a better term – that we've experienced, in effect, has given us no market discipline whatsoever. The market discipline that we had through the previous system was much more stable and much more predictable and much more friendly, both to the residential and industrial and commercial users.

So, you know, talking about market discipline that would come from reregulation isn't illustrated in the end result that we've got. What we've got to look at is: why is that? A lot of it is that what we've done is we've created a lot more risk points in our distribution system. Really, the only risk point we used to have was the generation side, where there was uncertainty: was the load going to be needed? So what we had was a reserve commitment from some of those generators that they would come on when their load was needed. When they weren't needed, we paid their depreciation costs, and they operated. They got, in effect, a return on investment for a standby facility. That was really the only area where there was risk associated, and we had to capitalize that and pass it on through our pricing systems.

What we've got now is that we, in effect, have risk at a much greater degree because we've got market risk at the generation level because the pricing structure has to be designed to take into account the fact that they may not be the sufficiently low bid that day. So there's a risk there. We also now have added in a significant number of risk points once we get through the transportation and distribution networks into the market structure because we've added in by law a couple of more steps in the marketing process.

If you look at it from the point of view of this giving us better power, better choice, if we truly wanted to look at market structure and talk about choice, we by law are limiting many of the options that exist in a true market structure situation. The law prohibits consumers getting together and jointly buying. You know, the city or a municipal district cannot buy on behalf of its residents. The REAs are no longer allowed to buy collectively on behalf of their members. They have to open up their membership to other suppliers. Yet if you go out into a regular commodity market, groups can get together and bulk buy. Groups can get together and deal with timeliness. That's not allowed by this act.

So we are intervening and creating a market structure that isn't real life. It isn't the kind of thing that markets develop around. We're in a situation where we are in effect taking away from municipalities a lot of the choices that they should have a right to on behalf of their residents. You know, if they want to have a local municipal utility that provides them with electricity or provides them with natural gas or one of the other utilities, that should be their choice. If they want to buy in bulk so that they can get a good deal, that should be their choice. Yet that's prohibited here. Municipalities, municipal governments are not allowed to participate. This act is going to force a separation between municipal ownership and decision-making and pricing decisions. What about choice? You know, if we truly talk about "Should Albertans be able to organize and get together in a fashion that they see fit?" this prevents them from doing that.

The other thing that's interesting, Mr. Speaker. Over the last year while we've been talking about the results of reregulation and talking to businesses, I've had a chance to talk both to businesses inside the electricity industry and consumers in the electricity industry. It's an interesting split in the sense of when you talk to them and you say: has reregulation worked, or has it not worked? Of the companies that are, in effect, users of electricity, very few of them – I would suggest maybe 1 in 20 – truly feel that they are getting a benefit from the imposed reregulation of our electricity industry. When you talk to the companies that are involved in the system, it's interesting if you pose two questions to them. If you pose the question, "Have you benefited from reregulation?" probably 4 out of 5 of them will say yes. Even some of the ones that are involved in the industry, about 1 out of 5 of them, are saying: "Well, no, not really. We like the other structure, the other regulation system better."

You ask that same group of industries, "What is your perception of what reregulation has done for the consumer in this province; has it benefited them or not?" They'll say: "Now? Today? No. No way." Unanimous. Even the people involved in the industry, if you say to a business, "In the long run will consumers benefit; will they have a better structure, a better pricing system for their electricity?" they'd say no. You know, in effect, what you've got are the people involved in the industry saying that this isn't going to help Alberta consumers of electricity in the long run. So there's a disconnect between what we see showing up in legislation, what we see trying to be put in place here by government and the industry, both of whom are going to be involved in that reregulation, and the consumers saying: it's not going to work.

Mr. Speaker, you know, this goes back to the discussion that we started here when the first electricity bill was passed in 1995, and I suggested that changing the structure of electricity from one which captures the market surplus for consumers to one which transfers the market surplus to producers is not going to benefit consumers in this province. In the end that's shown up to be what's happened. We are not getting a benefit of any of that market surplus being available to the consumer. You really have to wonder what is happening and how it's going to fit together and how it's going to come to any kind of a long-term benefit for the electricity users in our province. It's one of those things where you kind of wonder where the government was going, what they were after, or what they were trying to do. From a conceptual point of view it cannot be proven to be beneficial. From an operational point of view reregulation has obviously not given Albertans lower priced electricity, and we're ending up in a situation where "What next?" is kind of the answer that you come up with.

You look at some of the issues that have to be addressed, and the bill that we're looking at today is going to go through and try and once again reregulate and differently regulate the electricity industry. There are just a couple of specifics that I want to talk about to start with. You know, who knows whether the changes that we're making in the structure of the administration sector are going to really facilitate marketing ease or simplicity or clarity? We're only going to know when we see it work. So to start saying, “Yes, no, yeah, maybe” – we’re going to have look because it hasn’t been working. The structure that we’re proposing here doesn’t seem to address the issues that were experienced in the previous regulated system, so how do we know that this is effectively going to be useful for Albertans?

One of the things that I raise that’s interesting here is the PILOT payments. This is an interesting concept that comes up, and I think it’s a reasonable concept. I’m not going to argue. You know, if we’re going to have markets that have mixed ownership in them, we’ve got to have a base that’s reasonably standard. It’s kind of interesting in the sense that the municipally owned utilities are asked to make a payment in lieu of taxes, and they make that payment into the administrative structure of the industry where the private-sector participants who pay tax pay that tax into general revenue.

So, in effect, what we’re saying is that the municipally owned participants in this structure are asked to direct their taxes into the administration of the system as opposed to those private sectors who don’t contribute their tax to the administration of the system, just a cash flow issue here about, you know, whether the money should be going into the administration pool or the Balancing Pool or whether it should be going into general revenue.

I would suggest that if we’re going to make sure things are always fair for both of them, the tax flow should be to the same fund in the end. So instead of putting those PILOT payments into the Balancing Pool, I would suggest that they go into general revenue because that makes it so the municipally owned participants in the industry are not contributing directly into the administrative support of that industry. They’re being treated exactly the same, and the idea behind the PILOT payments in the first place was: we want to make sure these things are treated fairly, where they operate on somewhat of an equal basis, and we’re not seeing that being a real criteria that comes up with this legislation.

You know, the end result, again, is that we should be looking at a structure of utilities that provides service to the consumer, to Albertans. Part of our responsibility as legislators and, in effect, the framework builders for the regulatory system should be to make sure that we’re looking at the long-run best interests of Albertans. Again I go back to my warning in 1995 in saying that it’s almost impossible to generate a competitive structure in the context of utility delivery when so much of it is subject to monopoly structure. Many of the other jurisdictions in North America that have tried some form of deregulation have failed, even the model that we all talked about as being a potential success story, Pennsylvania. You know, they went into some form of deregulation or reregulation, and it was a success at the start because they had a number of jurisdictions around with surplus power. They’re now finding it a really difficult market structure to operate because the jurisdictions around don’t have the surplus power anymore that they can in effect dump into that Pennsylvania market. So there have been some real issues come up about whether or not that is creating stability for them now.

When full capital cost recovery has to be built into this plus risk, you end up adding costs that you don’t have if you build your cost structure on a fair depreciation schedule, a fair cost recovery schedule, and a return on variable costs. So that’s the kind of thing, you know, that we should be looking at in terms of trying to make sure that the utility industry in Alberta is fair, and I don’t see that coming even with this what is, in effect, a second attempt at reregulation of Alberta’s electricity industry. It’s not giving us the kind of structure that we really need.

One of the things that we’ve really ended up with is some kind of a structure that’s created a lot of confusion, and you have to accept that in any kind of transition when you move from one system to another without proper planning-horizon preparation.

You know, I think that if we’re going to look at this and really be fair to Albertans and consider the idea of what is in their long-run best interests, one of the things that we should be looking at is a review of: is this really going to give Albertans low-cost, stable electricity? Mr. Speaker, I don’t think it will. I think we’ve got to go and look at a cost-based electricity system. That’s the most effective way when we’ve got an upward slope in supply curve. We can get much greater benefits for our consumers of electricity using a pricing system that is based on the average of costs as opposed to the highest price bid being paid by everybody. That doesn’t give us a real effective structure that can encourage the kind of competition that is talked about.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to end with a comment about my own personal situation or experience with deregulation. I hold four accounts on electricity, and for two of them since January 2000 I’ve had fairly regular billings. In fact, they come quite regularly at the appropriate time each month. For one of my other accounts I have not received a bill since March a year ago. The other bill, which is my irrigation account, normally runs $5,000 or $6,000 a year. I received a bill recently for $78. So if anybody complains that deregulation isn’t giving much cost saving, you can tell them my story; you know, 1 percent of my normal bill. I’m afraid that when the other shoe drops, I will really be hit.

While I was chatting with one of the utility companies recently, I relayed this little story about the difficulties. It happened to be one of the groups that’s involved in trying to develop market customers, so it’s on the retail end. I relayed this little story about: “Why should I worry? I’m not having to pay my bills now.” The guy says: “Well, why don’t you sign up with us. We can take all that uncertainty out of your life. We’ll make sure that you get your bill every month.” So you see, Mr. Speaker, we have to look at both the bright side and the humorous side of everything, but until I start getting my bills, I guess I can be pretty satisfied.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, I’d like to adjourn debate on Bill 3.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It being 10 o’clock, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, February 27, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/02/27

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our divine Father, as we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our thanks and ask that we may continue our work under Your guidance. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you today and to the members of the Assembly Minister Monika Hohlmeier, who is the Minister of Education from Bavaria, Germany. With her in the Speaker's gallery is the delegation from Bavaria, which includes Dr. Harald Vorleuter, who is the head of the minister's office. Miss Claudia Piatzer is the spokesperson for the Bavarian state Ministry of Education. Dr. Ingeborg Berggreen-Merkel is the head of the Department for International Affairs, Youth, Adult Education in the state ministry. Also part of the delegation is Mr. Joachim Peter, a journalist from the newspaper Die Welt. Ms Bettina Vogt is their interpreter. Seated with the delegation is also Mr. Friedrich König, who's the honorary consul for Germany in Edmonton; Mr. Karl Suess, a German language consultant to Alberta; and Mr. Waldemar Riemer, a member of our Alberta Learning staff.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity of having dinner with Minister Hohlmeier last night and learned that there are a lot of commonalities between Bavaria and Alberta. Their province, for example, is number one in Germany as our province is number one here, and the thing that dominated our conversation is that they have many issues with their socialist regime and the federal government as well.

So I would ask that all the delegation please rise.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a team of dedicated staff from my department. Earlier today I announced my intention to deliver the budget speech on April 8, and the staff here today are part of the team that has been working very hard to put the budget together. They are here to watch the proceedings of this Assembly today as part of an orientation session to the Legislature. I'll ask them to stand and be recognized as I read their names. We have Chris Sargent, Ed Stafford, Kerstin Bzdel, Justin Halbersma, Liliana Cordeiro. I'd ask them to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand today and to introduce three visitors from Alberta Revenue who are here as part of the public service orientation tour offered to all of the public service employees. We're thrilled to take this opportunity to introduce them to all of the members. Each of these three are just within the past year new employees of Alberta Revenue and of the public service, and we're thrilled to welcome them aboard. I'd have them stand as I introduce them: Randy Proskow, Sheila Biollo, and Joanne Choquette. If they could please have a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of introductions today. My first is to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three girls who are strongly committed to improving public education in Alberta and who have been instrumental in collecting a petition in support of better funding for public education. They attend Belgravia, Vernon Barford, and Ross Sheppard schools in Edmonton. They're in the public gallery, and I would ask them to stand as I call their names: Hayley Grundy, Molly Grundy, Grace Grundy, and their mother, Lorie Grundy. Please give them a warm welcome.

My second introduction is of a group of students from various schools in Edmonton who are also very actively committed to bettering public education in Alberta. These are outstanding students, the future of this province, and we need to ensure that our educational system is there for them to realize their potential. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise as I call their names: Charlotte Dibden, Robin Nobleman, Kathryn Lennon, Jessica Moe, all of Ross Sheppard high school; Sydney Neuman, Roxanne Nesbit, and Rhiannon Klein, all of Victoria high school; Christie Kneteman of Old Scona academic high; and Heather Whyte of Vernon Barford school. Please give them a warm welcome.

My last introductions, Mr. Speaker, also relate to education, this time to postsecondary education. The University of Alberta is in my constituency, as is one campus of Grant MacEwan College, so my constituents are all too familiar with rising tuition fees and other challenges facing postsecondary students. My two guests today are Mike Hudema, president of the University of Alberta Students' Union, and Anand Sharma, chair of the Council of Alberta University Students. Mike and Anand and many other students were instrumental in collecting thousands of names on petitions and letters that I will be presenting later in the Legislature. Please give them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly nine young Albertans, Edmontonians, our future leaders. They are also visiting here today to bring a message to this government to stop underfunding public education. They are aware of the negative consequences of continued underfunding for the quality of education that they are entitled to. They're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise as I call their names: Katrina Beatty, Ava Becker, Jonathon Balazs, Tina Caron, Jennifer Leech, Nancy Lambert, Tony Cyr, Alan Cliff, and Heather Shrimpton. I'll ask now my colleagues in the House to give them a warm, warm welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, you wanted to participate in introductions. Please proceed.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to stand before you today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two young individuals that truly demonstrate the Alberta advantage in education in this great province.

Hailey is an international baccalaureate middle-year student at Westminster junior high school. She has a 91 percent average. She is bilingual, plays piano, bass guitar, drums. She's involved in ballet, Irish dance, skis and swims. She is an artist who has had her art used on the cover of the Edmonton public school board retirement program last June.

Accompanying Hailey is Hillary. She is a constituent with a 90 percent average at Parkview junior high school. She plays volleyball, basketball, participates in the track team. She is bilingual, plays piano, and in her spare time she assists her brother, who has muscular dystrophy, to lead a more independent and fruitful life.

Both are too busy to collect petitions in the constituency. I would ask that Hillary Schell and Hailey Hutton please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Natural Gas Prices

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The signatures just keep coming in. Four hundred more Albertans have visited our web site, altoliberals.ab.ca, to express their outrage over skyrocketing utility bills. This government protects the greedy and ignores the needy. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Will the Minister of Energy finally admit that the natural gas protection act was all about public relations and had nothing to do with consumer protection?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, this member has a tendency to change what he says today as compared to what he used to say when he was here for the debate, when he was here for the passing of the bill, when he saw the bill unfolding, when he saw the process. Some of the comments from the time in the session in 2001: they would agree that this bill is not necessary; what kind of sheltering is necessary?

We look at this: the minister . . . If this bill, this slogan bill, this public relations exercise . . . were to be lining the pockets of the developers . . . at the expense of Alberta consumers, I would be very, very disappointed.

Mr. Speaker, we have a bill that went through an extensive policy process: standing policy committee, approval by cabinet, approval by caucus. Then it went in front of the House. It was Bill 1 in 2001. It was subject to extensive debate. It was 5 percent below the threshold established for the rebates of 2001, and we are putting that policy to the test now. We will evaluate how that meets that test. We have looked at it from a perspective of timing. Could we do it on a different 12-month period? Could we do it on something where it would be different from the budgeting process and the cycle in which we collect money?

Mr. Speaker, we have seen the Natural Gas Price Protection Act in its infancy work in 2001. We struck a good bill. It's good policy, and it's in place today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: then why did this government repeal an act that would give Albertans natural gas rebates only to put in place legislation that ensures that rebates will only occur during an election year?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, as used as we are to scurrilous preamble, I think that kind of takes the cake. It kind of tops out on a Thursday. He's referring to the Natural Gas Rebates Act of 1974. That act was in place. It was repealed in 1987. This government responded to a very real crisis in 2001. It has good policy in place. We're watching what's going on now. The gas price is dropping. It's dropped $2.40 in Henry hub today. I think all members enjoyed the sunshine outside this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, it's good policy, it's effective policy, and most importantly there are other policies put in place by this government that will protect seniors, low-income Albertans, and families in need.

Mr. MacDonald: But it is not an election year.

My next question is to the Minister of Finance. Will the Minister of Finance pry open her blue handbag immediately and let go of a small portion of the $400 million she set aside yesterday for emergencies like skyrocketing natural gas prices and the bills that are reflected because of that high price?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Energy has explained the act and the policy, as has the Premier, every day this week to this hon. member. I don't know what part he does not understand, but obviously we're going to have to give him a briefing so he understands the act that he actually voted for.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton students – and there are some in the gallery today – tell us that there are fewer resources in their classrooms, fewer librarians and resource teachers, and that they are sitting in larger and larger classes. On top of this, their moms and dads are fund-raising for the basic needs of their schools. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Will the minister explain to these students why they are learning in resource-starved classrooms?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very long issue and a very long question. Part of it has to do with the 14.09 percent settlement that was received by the ATA in the last two years. Keeping that in mind, we just recently put $20 million directly in the classroom in the form of textbooks, in the form of computer software, in the form of other resources that these students can now use.

I will take exception to one of the things that the hon. member just stated, and that is the larger class size. Mr. Speaker, we have just finished a survey from around the province which shows that the class size has not grown in Alberta and actually is very similar to what it was last year. Edmonton public, for example, in this present school year had an increase of 300 students and hired 82 new teachers to service those 300 students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why in some schools in this city do four students have to share one outdated textbook from the 1980s?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, that absolutely is not acceptable, and I will take that up immediately with the superintendent of schools. I do not find that situation acceptable at all, and if it's true, I will certainly see it changed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why are school libraries such a low government priority that in some schools all the new books must be purchased through parent fund-raising activities?

Dr. Oberg: They're not, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the last election Edmontonians were told that having a few more seats at the government's banquet table would make sure that this city shared in the feast. Well, two years later all the city is left with are crumbs. The Edmonton Tory caucus has failed to protect the city from losing a constituency and failed to get the same financial help for Edmonton public schools that Calgary public has received. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How was the Calgary Tory caucus able to squeeze an extra $7 million out of the department while the Edmonton Tory caucus got absolutely nothing?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, that line of thinking is something that is absolutely amazing. I don't know how many more times I have to say in this House what I said yesterday, and that was, quite frankly, that in the arbitration settlement there was an extra $7 million weight that was put around Calgary public that was not put around any other school board. Any other school board. I could spell it out too: any other school board in Alberta. What the $7 million did yesterday was level the playing field so that Calgary can be making the same decisions based on the same funding, on the same facts as Edmonton could.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Well, that being the case, then, will the minister give the other school boards in the province who also pay 100 percent of teacher benefits the same break?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the hon. member was here yesterday, but I did explain this yesterday as well. There are approximately another 12 or 13 boards around the province who pay 100 percent benefits. Those boards negotiated that themselves. They negotiated that at the same table where they negotiated salaries, at the same table where they negotiated benefits. That was done prior. The Calgary public school board did not negotiate this. This was an extra clause in the arbitration agreement that they were saddled with that no other school boards were saddled with in their 54 arbitration agreements.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will the minister give the Edmonton public school board the same budget flexibility that he has given Calgary public?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, what I did yesterday was put Calgary public on the same footing as Edmonton public when it came to their budgetary issues. What had happened before then is that the Calgary public school board had a $7 million penalty imposed by the arbitration that Edmonton public did not have. They are now on equal footing. We are working with Edmonton public and will continue to work with Edmonton public to find out how we can help their budget issues. As I said yesterday in a question from the very exceptional Edmonton caucus that we have in this Assembly, I would look at amortizing after the audit that is occurring right as we speak today.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling on the hon. leader of the third party, just to advise the House, there will be a point of order dealt with at the conclusion of question period. It was during the exchange between the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the hon. Minister of Finance.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again the Edmonton Tory caucus shows how ineffective they are at standing up for this city. While the government doles out $7 million for a Calgary school board, the best suggestion Edmonton Tories can make and come up with is to let Edmonton public go into debt. They are literally mortgaging the future of our schools. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How does allowing school boards to rack up debt and pushing funding problems onto future generations of students solve the problem of proper funding for schools?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the nice thing about this Assembly is that I get at least three or four chances to answer a question because it's repeated three or four times. What happened yesterday – and I will repeat what I just said – is that $7 million was given to Calgary public to put them on the same footing as Edmonton public. I don't think that anyone in this Assembly would argue with the fact that we have to look at making everyone – everyone – including anyone in this Assembly, accountable for how our taxpayers' dollars are spent. Quite simply, that's what we are doing with Edmonton public. We are going in and taking a look, finding out how they spend their money. As I've stated already, there are some great inconsistencies; for example, 300 new students with 82 new teachers. Does that make sense, or doesn't that make sense? I can't answer that because we haven't looked into their books and into what their practice is. That is what we are presently doing. We want to help Edmonton public, and we certainly will look at doing what we can.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that every school district is unique and has special challenges, will the minister recognize this and fund the entire arbitration settlements for affected schools, not just the parts that meet his political needs?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's funny because the last time I looked, despite the boundary redistribution Strathmore-Brooks did not extend into Calgary.

We have given $298 million to fund a $260 million settlement that the arbitration people brought forward. Included in that settlement was an extra tax, I will say, on the Calgary public school board for $7 million. Again, quite simply this time – I'll even try to make it simpler if I can, Mr. Speaker – the $7 million levels the playing field between Edmonton and Calgary.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: do students in the Edmonton, Red Deer, Elk Island school boards and elsewhere really deserve to lose hundreds of teachers and valuable services all because their Tory MLAs are asleep at the switch?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I will say categorically that every Tory MLA in this Assembly represents their school boards and represents their people. As you were told yesterday, when it comes to areas like Elk Island, they have assured me that they will not be running a deficit. We've seen some very interesting things in Elk Island, for example, in that they gave their support staff a 14 percent pay increase as well. These are all the types of things that we are looking at. Those are the independent decisions that school boards make right now, and we are confident in working with them. It's going to be tight, absolutely, but we are confident that the school boards will come out of this, that they will be okay, and to the hon. minister from Bavaria, that we, too, will be number one in the world again next year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Crop Insurance

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Crop insurance changes recently announced by the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation have many of my agricultural producers very interested in the new programs. However, they are concerned with getting an appointment to see the AFSC insurance administrator before the deadline of February 28, which is tomorrow. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What is AFSC doing in response to the tremendous uptake for pasture and forage insurance programs?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there's been a remarkable uptake on this program. I think it's a direct response from producers to changes that have been made to the program that make it more responsive to their needs, and that's as it should be because the changes we made were farmer driven.

The deadline is tomorrow. Staff have been working up till 7 o'clock at night and past. The deadline is tomorrow, but if producers call in for an appointment and they cannot be seen, we will go up to March 11 to accommodate those appointments. But, Mr. Speaker, if people do not contact a representative in the many offices we have across the province before the end of the working day on February 28, they will not be accepted in the program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Many of my producers make their rental decisions for the following year in December. Why did the deadline for forage and pasture insurance get moved up three months to December 15, 2003, for next year's crop insurance?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, this is an insurance program. It is meant to be part of the risk management tools that a producer has, and we believe that they would be quite capable of making those decisions by December 15. An insurance program does not work if you wait until the eve of an event to insure. We are expecting that people, if they feel that they need this risk management tool, would make that decision in December.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For my final supplemental, to the same minister. Many of my crop producers are concerned about the new prices for the crop insurance, that haven't been released yet. When will these numbers be available for producers to make the best decisions for their operations?

Mrs. McClellan: Those numbers will be available for producers on March 10. The deadline for that insurance program is April 30, and we're confident that we will be able to accommodate producers in that time frame. Mr. Speaker, I think we do have to recognize that those changes to that program were just made less than a month ago, so I think that for staff to be ready and the numbers to be ready for us and accurate, March 10 is what we could achieve.

The Speaker: Before calling on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, let me advise the House that we will have an additional point of order, this one raised by the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General on an exchange with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. He just didn't rise at the time.

Learning Resources Centre

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, schools that wish to use the $20 million the government has provided for textbooks and resource material must purchase them through the government-owned Learning Resources Centre. Schools must do this despite the fact the Learning Resources Centre charges far above the market price for many items. The government is using the Learning Resources Centre as a company store to claw back funds from cash-starved schools. To the Minister of Learning: given that purchasing 10 dictionaries, 10 spelling books, and 20 atlases will cost a school over $400 more through the Learning Resources Centre than other suppliers, why does the Learning Resources Centre consistently overcharge schools?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I find that question extremely, extremely offensive. The Learning Resources Centre has provided an economy of scale for all our school boards and provides on average around a 25 percent discount to what it can be purchased for elsewhere.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will take the risk of offending the minister more in tabling the information to back up my question.

The Speaker: We'll do the tablings at the appropriate time in the Routine. Please proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that his government has a double standard when it ties the hands of schools in purchasing materials even if it drives costs up, yet it complains so loudly when strings are attached to federal dollars for health?

Mr. Klein: What was the question? Mr. Speaker, what was the question? Are we tying their hands? No.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to repeat it. To the Minister of Learning: will the minister give schools the opportunity to purchase the materials they need from the lowest cost provider?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, there is no obligation for the school boards to purchase their equipment from the Learning Resources Centre. Right now there's approximately $32 million worth of resources that are purchased at the Learning Resources Centre each year. Above the $20 million that was provided now, we also give school boards a credit for $5 million to purchase them at the Learning Resources Centre.

I will table on Monday the evidence that shows the prices for the Learning Resources Centre, and at that time I fully expect an apology from this hon. member for myself and my staff and my department.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Commercial Fishery

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency some residents have fished for many years under commercial fishing licences. Pigeon Lake and Buck Lake fishers have followed the rules, reported their catches, and made use of the renewable commercial fishing resource. It's not uncommon to see three or four generations of fishers on the lake setting nets. People drive from all over Alberta to purchase whitefish right off Buck Lake. The small town turns into a fish marketplace for the day. The community comes to life holding a supper and a breakfast especially for the fishermen. If this is to change, there would be a strong economic impact on the community. In the past year the Department of Sustainable Resource Development has been implementing a plan that would put numerous small operators out of business. So my question is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. [some applause] Thank you. Is there a future for Alberta's commercial fishery, and does it include small operators?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent question by that member. The challenge is to have both a sportfishing and a commercial fishing industry in Alberta. As you mentioned before, the commercial fishing industry in Alberta is about 800 commercial fishermen. They presently access about 34,000 100-yard nets, and it's approximately a $5 million industry. The targeted species, of course, are tullibee and whitefish. On the other hand, the sportfishing industry is over $350 million, and over 350,000 members belong to that industry. So we do have challenges as to how we do the balance as we move forward.

In order to have a viable sportfishing industry and a commercial fishing industry, Mr. Speaker, we intend through a compensation program to reduce the number of commercial fishermen, to start with, down to about 200. Of course, they would also access about 18,000 100-yard nets. The compensation program, I believe, is one that was done jointly with the commercial fisheries association of Alberta, and they're fully supportive of it.

The area of the very small operators the member mentioned, with four total net privileges they can continue fishing until March 31 of 2005, at which time they will no longer be able to license.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you. My only supplemental question for the same minister is: what are the time lines for buyouts, including the deadline for small operators to amalgamate in order to stay in business?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes. Mr. Speaker, a letter went out over a year ago to the commercial fishermen of Alberta advising them that there are time lines. In fact, the opportunity to apply for compensation is February 28, which is, I believe, tomorrow. Anyone who wants to continue commercial fisheries and hasn't bought a licence, this year for open lakes it's March 15. That's important. A transfer for this year is March 15. Eligible small operators – and this is the important one – with fewer than four total net privileges who want to stay in the fisheries and buy out larger operators is March 15 of 2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Human Rights

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several years ago we had a cabinet minister of this government advocating that pedophiles be put in with the general prison population to let the moral prisoners deal with them, and now we have the Member for Edmonton-Norwood scoffing at human rights legislation, musing admiringly about using 50-millimetre machine guns on protesters, and advocating shipping repeat offenders to Russian gulags. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier ask this member of his caucus to apologize and withdraw his statements?

Mr. Masyk: Point of order.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member alluded to has raised a point of order, and I don't know, other than reading the news reports, what exactly he did say. I don't recall reading in the newspaper article the comments or the statements made by the hon. member, but I will do this. I will undertake to discuss the situation with the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. That's satisfactory.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Police Services

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is to the Solicitor General. Urban municipalities over a population and size of 2,500 are required to pay for police services, while rural municipalities and smaller urban municipalities are not required to do so even though they do receive police services and receive the fine revenues collected there. My question is: when will the Solicitor General take steps to correct this inequity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is correct when he says that cities and towns and villages and summer villages with more than 2,500 people are required to pay for police services. This is clearly laid out in the Police Act. I realize that some communities, especially many rural communities where the tax base does not reflect the policing needs, are having a hard time funding their policing. I've met with many communities across the province, and I've listened carefully to their concerns. This is an issue around equity, and we have to look at how we can make the system more fair. Equity is a complex issue. It's a growing concern and one that's been taken very seriously by this government. That's why the government MLA committee was asked to review policing in the province. We are reviewing the recommendations from the committee and the responses we've received, and the next step will be a careful review by our government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that there's a movement started by some smaller urban municipalities over 2,500 to withhold payment for police services until this situation is resolved, can the minister assure Albertans in those municipalities that police service will continue uninterrupted?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I understand that many municipalities in this province are in difficult situations, and I'm disappointed to hear from the hon. member that some municipalities have decided to take that action in their contracts with the federal government. I have not personally been contacted by any municipalities advising me of their plans. Again I'd like to assure the hon. member that we are providing police services in this province and would be willing to discuss his issues with his towns, and I'd be pleased to meet with them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: would she consider immediately allocating all fine revenues collected within the police district to those municipalities who do in fact pay for the service?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, the bulk of the fine revenue from the municipal statutes already goes to the municipalities in which the fine is issued with the exception of a surcharge that goes to the administrative costs and to support victims' programs. It's up to the municipalities to determine how that funding is used.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Natural Gas Rebates

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's generosity has no limits during an election year, but now we find out the truth about the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, and we find out that it is yet another broken election promise. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. What happened to the $396 million that was left over from the energy rebate program in the election year? Where's that money now?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member is the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, and if, in fact, he is really concerned about something that happened over two years ago on the financial side, I would think that he would be able to find that in the public accounts. Either his research – incidentally, they get a large amount of money for their party research – is not working or he's not doing his job on Public Accounts.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, this time to the hon. Minister of Finance. The $125 million that was committed to the Natural Gas Price Protection Act two years ago was not spent. Where is that money now, and why don't you use it to provide emergency relief to Albertans at this moment?

Mr. Smith: Be gentle. It's Thursday.

Mrs. Nelson: I'm reminded it's Thursday, and it's been a long week, but I'm just a little perplexed that this hon. member as the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee doesn't have a handle on what is going on from the years past. That's his job. I'm just really surprised that he's asking these questions.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy. Given that "Bill 1 does exactly that. [It] enables the government to react to gas spikes," why are the words of the Minister of Energy during debate on Bill 1 not the law now? Why do you have this cumbersome formula that does not allow for gas rebates when you said that gas rebates were just going to be for the spikes?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker:

So when you think that this is the flagship piece of legislation from this government, I have to caution the consumers of the province and I have to caution all hon. members of the Assembly: we cannot accept this bill in this form. It is a blank cheque. It is like giving the government a credit card with unlimited spending: here; go for it. Anything could happen here.

Another sentence: "The concept of gas rebate programs is not bad." Did I say that in debate? No. The chairman of Public Accounts, who is supposed to know where the money has gone, said that in the debate in 2001.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This winter Albertans have the dubious privilege of paying the highest home heating costs in the prairie provinces. The natural gas prices that will be paid next month by Saskatchewan residents will be more than $3.40 per gigajoule lower than the price Alberta residents will pay, and residents of Manitoba will pay $2.80 per gigajoule less than we pay in Alberta. We are sitting right on top of the gas. We supposedly own it, yet we're paying more for it than people in other provinces. What's wrong with this picture? My question is to the Minister of Energy. Why can provinces like Saskatchewan and Manitoba deliver natural gas to their citizens at winter rates that are 30 to 40 percent lower than the rates Alberta natural gas consumers have to pay in this province?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely right when he says that he is sitting on top of all the gas.

To compare, on February 24, 2003, the price of gas in Alberta was $12.20 a gigajoule, while the price of gas delivered in Toronto was $25.70 a gigajoule. This member knows full well from his experience with big business in the utility of EPCOR that people can buy in these other provinces contracted rates, and those Crown corporations which support government debt guaranteed by the taxpayer are the same companies, Mr. Speaker, that buy their gas on a 12-month basis.

I would ask him to ask the same question in two or three months' time, and he will find that the price of natural gas will be somewhere between 35 and 70 percent higher in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba than it is in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I appreciate the minister when he's witty but not when he's half witty.

Why should Albertans care that rates are cheaper in the summer when they're being gouged now during the winter at the very time they use the most natural gas?

The Speaker: That's an opinion, hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to be half witty so I could be on the same level.

It's very, very clear that the price of natural gas in Alberta today is sold at a spot rate. If people want to put a contract, they could have bought a contract from EPCOR or Enmax. In the future, Mr. Speaker, there'll always be a flow-through rate if people want to pay spot rate, but there will be opportunities for people to buy contract rate as well. Year on year, in and out, Albertans have been well served by their utilities, by the legislators, and by the great benefits that natural gas produces for this province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I referred earlier to not only is there no sales tax in the province, but we've seen a third-quarter update that reflects how Albertans value and use the oil and gas revenue royalties that accrue to them, and this will continue. We will continue to be vigilant with a program that is unique in Canada and will protect Albertans at the point where the average annual price exceeds $5.50 per gigajoule.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll ask a question. I'm tempted to make a statement.

The Speaker: Well, I'd like you to ask a question because those are the rules that you told me to enforce.

Mr. Mason: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for that.

Given that Medicine Hat has cheaper gas than the rest of Alberta, given that Saskatchewan and Manitoba have cheaper gas than the rest of Alberta, what is it that those jurisdictions know that the Minister of Energy in this province doesn't know?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know that people in Medicine Hat, I know that people in Saskatchewan – I've been there. I went to school at a little place called Notre Dame College, where in fact we didn't have natural gas. We had propane, and they would come and fill our tanks with propane. In fact, when this college ran out of money, we didn't get money for propane. We just sat there without any heat at all, but we didn't complain.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I've worked in Manitoba as well. Manitoba has just converted its only coal-fired electricity generating station, in Selkirk, Manitoba, where I worked at the Selkirk Gordon Hotel slinging beer to try and get through college. That group now uses Alberta gas to fire up their electricity.

We're proud of what we do. We're proud of how we protect seniors. We're proud of how we protect low-income Albertans. We'll continue to be fair.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Regional Health Authority Human Resource Costs

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In large corporations overtime pay as a percentage of total payroll rarely exceeds 1 or 2 percent, and 5 percent would be an item of some concern. We know that human resource costs – in other words, the payroll – are a major concern to health regions. In fact, the highest percentage of health authority costs are related to the human resource component, wages and salaries. I understand that more nurses are listed as working part-time than full-time, which is driving up overtime costs, and that takes money away from other patient needs. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell us what percentage of nurses work full-time and what percentage work part-time in the Calgary health region?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, my inquiry to the Calgary health region has yielded the following information. There are 7,882 registered nurses working for that region. Of those, 1,679 are employed on a regular full-time basis, 3,058 are employed on a regular part-time basis, and the remaining 3,145 nurses are working in temporary positions or on casual contracts.

Provincially there are a total of 21,390 nurses currently working for RHAs. Of those, only 7,059 are working regular full-time, 9,626 are working regular part-time, and 4,706 are working in temporary positions or on casual contracts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: how much of the Calgary health region's total spending on part-time and how much on full-time nurses goes to pay for overtime?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the Calgary regional health authority has an entire budget allocation for nurses' salaries in the amount of $305 million, and of that total, approximately $12 million is paid for nursing overtime costs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question to the same minister: will the government ensure that nursing overtime costs are addressed in the current negotiations between the public health authorities of Alberta and the United Nurses of Alberta?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it is very important to know that the contracts for nurses are between regional health authorities and nurses and not contracts with the government of Alberta. So the responsibility for negotiating new contracts rests with the provincial health authorities of Alberta.

That contract with the UNA, the United Nurses of Alberta, expires on the 31st of March 2003. The Alberta government has no role in negotiating nurses' contracted hours of work or in determining their work schedules.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Licence Plates

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Licence plates on motor vehicles help society catch criminals, stop traffic violators, and recover stolen property. In Alberta, unlike nearly every other province and state on the continent, a plate is required only on the rear of the vehicle. The absence of a front plate hampers the police's ability to catch violators and criminals and locate stolen property. We have heard the story about a vehicle whose occupants were following and harassing children but could not be identified because it was only viewed from the front. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. Given that crime prevention organizations such as police services and Crime Watch in Alberta unanimously agree that front plates will help to curtail crime and increase public safety, when is the minister going to introduce mandatory front plates?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the hon. member will remember the discussion we had in this House some time ago on a motion that was brought forward by the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan with respect to issuing front licence plates. The decision of the House then, if I recall correctly, was to wait until we had to change the numerical sequence of our licence plates, given the reason of population growth, et cetera, and then that's when we would visit and look at the possibility of running a new numerical system for licence plates.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. Mr. Speaker, the minister was quite correct that in the year 2000 we did pass a motion in this House and that many Albertans supported the front licence plate program.

Why will the minister not commit at this time that when this date does arrive, front licence plates will be reintroduced in Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have a motion that was duly passed in this House, and I suspect and believe that it's my responsibility to adhere to the motion that was passed by the majority of these members.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that new plates would only cost a few dollars for each driver, does the minister not agree that this is an insignificant cost for increased public safety?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is very correct in terms of various issues brought forward by numerous groups that have talked about issuing front licence plates. These would be from crime prevention to school bus drivers to others. We are currently assessing a lot of that information that has come forward in terms of school bus safety and crime prevention and are going to be coming forward with some recommendations. It might not all be in the form of a front licence plate but significantly looking at changes to the Traffic Safety Act to ensure that motorists are safe on our provincial highways and also at that time try and reduce significantly some of the crime that occurs.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Calgary-Fort constituency covers a large industrial park in Calgary. A few days ago the manager of a long-established factory in my constituency contacted me expressing his worry about the large increase in gas bills, that affects the viability of his business and the jobs of his employees. He talked about a gas billing increase around a hundred thousand dollars even though his business volume stays the same. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Gas prices have risen over the past few months, and my constituents want to know how the natural gas prices are determined.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans who buy natural gas from ATCO or AltaGas receive a monthly flow-through price based on daily and monthly spot prices. There is no profit component to these prices. The wholesale prices, however, are based on market prices set in an integrated North American marketplace. We export three-quarters of what we produce; we keep 25 percent. Of course, as everybody has seen and everybody has talked about, we have a very cyclical pattern in these prices: cold winter weather, chokes in pipelines, links to the oil price, explosions in Staten Island of gasoline stocks, poor drilling activity, and now it's been ramped up to massive drilling activity. So it is difficult to ascertain a stable price. However, there are people in the marketplace who you can go out and contract through hedging or through a series of financial instruments, as a business, to be able to get specific pricing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in various papers today there were numerous reports that the hottest sector for growth, profit, and money invested will be the oil field energy sector, and that is a function of the quest for natural gas stocks and natural gas reserves in this province. As we see an economy that's going to have economic growth of some 4.9 to 5 percent, that search for natural gas will aid all businesses in Alberta because that is going to bring in a tremendous amount of investment. In fact, an oil and gas exploration company must spend anywhere from 115 to 125 percent of its cash flow in order to stay alive, to stay prosperous. So that money is injected into this economy on a continual basis, which then, of course, raises the taxes, the royalties, and allows us to be the number one province in this dominion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Small commercial businesses in my area, with their limited cash flow, would like to know what natural gas pricing options are available for them.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think this is an area where the provincial government in co-operation with the industry can do more to provide a consumer education program, a program where we actually get more information out to small businesses, the real backbone of today's economy. In fact, there might be a minister here who'll wish to talk about the small business health of the economy given the change in energy prices in this marketplace. But those particular companies can already choose today from Enmax, EPCOR, and other natural gas marketing agencies to find specific contract points that will then allow them to nail down or determine a level of certainty for their business inputs, and we all know that certainty in business inputs is an important component of profit and growth.

Now, it's my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that many of these companies are in fact doing well. Business bankruptcies are at a very manageable level in Alberta, and I know that the hon. Minister of Economic Development will add materially to this question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what can Alberta businesses expect from the government policy if the natural gas price stays or keeps rising?

Mr. Smith: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, businesses in Alberta today can expect the very same treatment that they have received since June 15, 1993, and that is a government that provides an environment that allows the private sector to flourish, a government that will not get involved in the ordinary business dealings of the day, a government that will not lend money and pick favourites over one company or another. This government will continue to provide that appropriate environment that allows business to flourish in this fair province.

Edson Savings & Credit Union

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure today that I rise to recognize the Edson Savings & Credit Union. This past week they celebrated their 60th anniversary of serving the Edson and district residents in the town of Edson. The Edson Savings & Credit Union was incorporated on April 16, 1943. Their first annual meeting was held on January 12, 1944, with five elected directors, three credit committee members, three supervisory committee members. They approved 31 loans ranging from $15 to $30 each. The credit union declared its first dividend in 1945 and joined the Credit Union League of Alberta in 1946. In 1951 the credit union introduced savings insurance. Through the '50s the credit union grew continually. In 1957 the credit union joined Credit Union Central Alberta. By 1960 the credit union had surpassed $100,000 in loan guarantees since its inception.

The economy began to heat up in the '70s, and the credit union experienced phenomenal growth. In 1973 the credit union hired its first full-time manager and opened for full service introducing current accounts. By 1975 the credit union assets surpassed the million-dollar mark.

Mr. Speaker, in 1993 through 1995 the credit union introduced home and auto insurance, registered retirement income funds, Interac payment terminals, and strictly business accounts. Over the next couple of years the credit union entered the technological age with the installation of its first ATM.

Congratulations, Edson Savings & Credit Union, on your 60th anniversary, and thanks for your dedication to the constituents of Edson and district.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is home to some of the most beautiful and diverse ecosystems on earth. Albertans know this and appreciate it, and they are willing to make the sacrifices necessary to preserve it.

Unfortunately, this government does not share the same commitment towards the environment as the people of Alberta. This is abundantly clear from the draft management plan for the Evan-Thomas area submitted last November. In the plan the government outlined how it will allow new commercial development and the expansion of existing commercial interests in this fragile area. This will place in jeopardy the delicate balance between development and protection of this precious natural environment. One of the most distressing aspects of this entire process is how this government has systematically ignored the public input. This, of course, is nothing unusual, but for the Evan-Thomas area the government ignored the results of its own public survey conducted by an expensive private consulting firm.

What did Albertans tell their government in this survey? Ninety percent of Albertans said that the highest priority in Kananaskis should be environmental protection even if it means fewer recreational opportunities for people. Ninety-one percent of Albertans said that Kananaskis is a home for wildlife and that it is our responsibility to protect this area for them. Eighty-seven percent of Albertans said that commercial development should be directed outside Kananaskis Country, in which Evan-Thomas resides. In spite of the sentiments expressed by Albertans, this government has gone ahead with plans that will allow more development and that will inevitably diminish the value of this natural area for wildlife and for people.

I call upon this government to listen to the will of Alberta's people, to listen to their own survey and redraft a management plan for the Evan-Thomas area. This plan should hold the will of Albertans and needs of the environment paramount and relegate the interests of industry to a position of only nominal importance. Albertans demand no less.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Betty and Bud Underwood

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Much has been said directed to the Minister of Children's Services in this Assembly this week. This minister, her staff, and the foster parents in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne have been outstanding.

One outstanding couple in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne is Betty and Bud Underwood, and I'd like to tell you their story. Betty and Bud were foster parents in the Whitecourt area for a 28-year period, from June 1974 until June of last year. They reside on an acreage in rural Whitecourt but were seen in town daily, running errands, meeting with school officials, social workers, and doctors, to name a few. Everyone in town affectionately knew them as granny and granddad. I don't think it was until I was 40 that I knew "Betty." I just knew her as granny. She was always just granny in the town of Whitecourt.

During their time as foster parents Betty and Bud fostered 141 children. [interjections] It's outstanding. They included many long-term placements and some overnight placements. They never turned away any child. They were always willing to take a call from any worker at any hour of the day, including many calls in the middle of the night. They were always willing to give every child a chance and were strong advocates for children, but they also held them accountable. The children's families also found the Underwoods to be supportive and would call on them often during placements and after the children returned home.

Betty and Bud saw many children reach adulthood in their home and to this day maintain ongoing relationships with many of them. They took in children and accepted them as part of their family and continue to be granny and grandad to many sets of next generation children. They worked very well with teenagers and for many years fostered six teens at any given time.

During their many years of tireless commitment to the children and social workers, they seldom took a holiday or were unavailable at a moment's notice. They would carry cell phones and could be counted on quickly to return to town whenever there was a placement in crisis.

The decision for the Underwoods to finally stop fostering was made with much difficulty and was primarily due to health and old Father Time. If they could have, they'd still be fostering today and offering their much-needed unconditional love to many more Alberta children.

The home closed in June of 2002, when the couple chose to retire after seeing many children successfully enter adulthood. A retirement party was held by the Whitecourt office and was attended by many community members, former foster children, and staff.

Thank you to Granny and Grandad Underwood.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the next time the chair recognizes, the time frame will be one minute.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Education Policy

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School boards and parents across the province are raising the alarm about a growing crisis in our schools caused by this Tory government's policies. Albertans know that this crisis was caused not by decisions made locally by school boards or specific schools but the policy decisions unilaterally imposed by this government, policy decisions that increased costs for school boards but that the government is now refusing to pay for.

The first decision that put school boards behind the eight ball was ramming Bill 12 through the Legislature last spring. Bill 12 imposed binding arbitration in a dispute with teachers. Since the arbitrator announced the settlement last June, the government has stubbornly refused to pony up for the arbitration award. As Michele Mulder, president of the Alberta School Boards Association, said on February 6:

Do the math — school boards received six per cent to pay teacher salaries; a third party arbitrator imposed a salary increase of 14.09 per cent — we're looking at a $142 million shortfall for ever and ever.

Another unilateral decision that negatively impacted school board budgets was imposing a funding cap on how many credits grade 10 students can earn. Finally, the government unilaterally changed the formula for calculating school operation and maintenance grants. In the case of Red Deer public schools, for example, this reduced their grant increase to pay for things like skyrocketing utility bills from 3 percent to less than 1 percent.

In summing up the frustration of school boards and parents across the province, the chair of Elk Island school board, Maureen Towns, said of the Minister of Learning, "He's just not listening." She further accused the minister of "misleading" Albertans. Strong words, indeed.

Why isn't the Minister of Learning listening? I'm not sure, but one thing is certain: the minister's mindless refusal to listen is hurting schoolchildren in this province. Class sizes will grow. Programs that allow our children to achieve excellence will be scaled back as will programs and support for children with special needs. That is the real tragedy, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Government Services, the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, I'm pleased to present a petition signed by 26 residents that ask the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to "remove abortion from the list of insured services that will be paid through Alberta Health."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present two petitions. Both are from my constituency. They are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to deinsure abortions.

Thank you. Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present a petition with 40 signatures from Highwood and area residents asking for the Legislature to "remove abortion from the list of insured services that will be paid for through Alberta Health."

2:40head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table further information to a question that I responded to yesterday with respect to Medicine Hat royalties. In fact, the city of Medicine Hat does pay some royalties.* They do not pay royalties on a portion of an agreement created by the Parliament of Canada, the Medicine Hat gas agreement area, which was signed in 1915. When the province of Alberta was granted control over its own resources, a most notable decision worked hard for and obtained by former Premier Brownlee, this part became exempt for Medicine Hat.

There are currently 440 gas wells in the Medicine Hat gas agreement area, and the price benefits to the city over the past decade have been worth approximately $3 million annually. Medicine Hat has been a very co-operative player in this marketplace, and I did want to clear that information up.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of 197 letters to the Minister of Learning from university students. The letters raise concerns over rapidly rising tuition fees, note that Alberta ranks eighth out of 10 provinces in its general operating grants to universities, and notes that tuition fees in Alberta have risen 209 percent in the past decade, reducing access to higher education and jeopardizing the future of this province.

My second set of tablings today concerns education as well. It's the appropriate number of copies of a petition signed by 2,772 Albertans expressing their concern about reductions in teaching staff, larger classroom sizes, and the elimination of various special programs, and urging the government to "increase funding for public education." This petition was launched a mere two weeks ago by three sisters that I introduced earlier today, and it spread so quickly because it reflects the seriousness of these concerns.

My third tabling is a document that apparently has information that offends the Minister of Learning. It's simply a comparison of prices between the Learning Resources Centre, Chapters bookstore, and National Book Service on 13 different items showing that the Learning Resources Centre prices are 10 to 80 percent higher than other suppliers.

*See p. 141, right col., para. 6, line 2

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings this afternoon. The first is from Vicki MacIsaac, who participated in an environmental science class that completed an environmental assessment on the Evan-Thomas Creek area showing vegetation in the area is of unique importance to supporting wildlife populations and would like development stopped in that area. She is from Calgary.

Ron Dagg, who also is very concerned over future commercial development of the Evan-Thomas area in Kananaskis Country, wants it stopped.

Dennis Floate, who is from Calgary, the same thing, is not supportive of any further development in the Evan-Thomas area.

Alix Miller also believes that the Kananaskis Valley needs protection and that we should stop all future development in that area.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table over 400 signatures from Albertans from all over the province who are urging the government to initiate a natural gas rebates program.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with two tablings. First is a copy of the council resolution from the town of Blackfalds whereby they unanimously as a council reject the recommendations of the Electoral Boundaries Commission on the grounds of democratic and social diversity and ask the Legislature to reinstate the town of Blackfalds within the Lacombe-Ponoka constituency.

The second tabling is a letter from the town of Lacombe bearing the mayor's signature wherein they endorse and support the inclusion of the town of Blackfalds within the Lacombe-Ponoka constituency, removing them from Red Deer-North.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got one tabling today, five copies of a letter written by Ms Heather Waldie dated February 17, addressed to the Minister of Learning and copied to me. Ms Waldie is expressing her deep disappointment and sadness with the Minister of Learning's failure to listen to Albertans who are asking him to fund our school boards and our schools appropriately so that our children will get the best education that we can possibly provide them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from the office of the mayor of the city of Edmonton dated February 26, 2003, and addressed to the Premier and the Minister of Energy. The letter contains the motion passed by city council on February 25 asking the government of Alberta to "immediately institute the natural gas price protection rebate program."

The second letter is from Mrs. Margaret Stumborg, a senior from Edmonton, dated February 24, 2003, and addressed to the Premier. She draws the Premier's attention to his broken promise of gas rebates and asks that a rebate be granted immediately.

head: Projected Government Business

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to ask the Government House Leader for the information on next week's projected government business.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

That would appear to cover the week. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, being Thursday and all, we have three points of order to deal with, but prior to that I would like to make a few comments with respect to a memo I sent February 12, 2003, to all Members of the Legislative Assembly, particularly the section dealing with decorum in the House. I'm particularly going to make these comments to the Sergeant-at-Arms, the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, the hon. the whip for the government caucus, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. I write underlined:

Members are reminded that the consumption of food is not permitted in the Chamber. After Orders of the Day are called, Members may consume beverages such as tea, coffee, soft drinks and juice, provided that they are contained in special cups which can be found in the South members' lounge.

Furthermore, the same kind of suggestion should apply to the use of computers until we get Orders of the Day.

We want to be consistent because, after all, this is a result of all the consultation with members of the whole Assembly, and it might in fact encourage us to continue with the Routine in a more prescribed, quicker way if, in fact, we know that we can just do these other things at the conclusion of the Routine.

Now, it really doesn't help very much if the hon. Member for Calgary-East chooses now to inform the House that the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw is in violation as well, but that magnanimous point of view is really quite helpful. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness is actually in two violations: drinking coffee and using his computer.

Okay. Let's try and get through these three points of order with the best harmony that we can possibly deal with in recognition that it is Thursday afternoon.

So number one. Let's see. Do I take it that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has a point of order?

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon under 23(h), which is "makes allegations against another member," and also 23(i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member," in regard to remarks that were made earlier in question period this afternoon by the hon. Minister of Finance.

The hon. member stated in the exchange that this hon. member supported the Natural Gas Price Protection Act and voted for it, and that is simply not true, Mr. Speaker. In fact, if you look at Hansard from that time period, whenever Bill 1, the flagship bill of this government after it was re-elected, was debated, one will see that I could see through the bill and that we tried to amend the bill. At no point in time did I support this bill in votes, and I would ask now that the hon. member apologize and retract that.

Thank you.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, my intention was not to slight the hon. member opposite. In reviewing the Hansard of May 28 of 2001, the time that third reading was given for the bill, the vote was called, and normally when there is opposition to a bill, there's a standing vote recorded by the members opposite. When there was none, I made an assumption that we had swayed the hon. member to agree to the bill. However, if I have made him feel slighted, I do retract that. I don't want you to feel slighted, but I am going only by the lack of a standing vote and the record in Hansard.

The Speaker: Is the matter dealt with?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Finance.

The Speaker: Now, the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a question during question period today the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods had a rather long and unfortunate preamble which offended sections 23(h) and (j) in his question and specifically offended the sensibilities of members by making allegation against another member. Now, I know that normally when using 23(h), "allegations against another member," the member is specifically mentioned. In this case, he mentioned the Edmonton caucus, so I think it's very easy to discern which members the hon. member was slandering.

In his preamble he indicated that members from the Edmonton caucus were not standing up for the city of Edmonton with respect to the boundaries commission and Edmonton losing a seat. I think the hon. member should be admonished that the Electoral Boundaries Commission is an independent commission which is chosen through the processes set out by this House and set out by an act passed by this House in order to allow for an independent drawing of boundaries which does not reflect politics and does not reflect the . . . [interjection] That's right. It was terrible, as you say.

Anytime a boundaries commission report comes in, members of the House object to the contents of it, and rightly so because members of the House are the experts for their own boundaries and ridings. They understand their communities very well. It's a very, very difficult job for a boundaries commission to put a report together, but the boundaries commission made the recommendation that Edmonton lose a seat, not the city of Edmonton MLAs, certainly not the city of Edmonton MLAs from the Progressive Conservative side of the House or the government side of the House.

It is inappropriate for the hon. member to suggest that the boundaries commission is in any way an arm of government or an arm of the Edmonton caucus or in any other way politically motivated or driven. It had two members chosen by the government, two members chosen by the opposition, and if I recall correctly, they chose very badly and had to do it a second time. They're making allegations about members. When we're talking about something that's so sensitive as boundaries, to say that Edmonton members didn't stand up – I'm not sure; I can't say how many of them went to the boundaries commission. I know that I went to the boundaries commission. I know that other members of the government caucus went to the boundaries commission, and I know that now they're advocating the city of Edmonton spend $50,000 of taxpayers' money to ask MLAs to change a boundary report after the fact and open ourselves to accusations of gerrymandering. Totally inappropriate and making slanderous allegations.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader on this point of order.

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Hardly a point of order. More a point of debate or discussion. In fact, the only part he got right about the point of order was that Edmonton-Mill Woods was talking specifically about the Tory caucus when he talked about the Edmonton caucus.

In fact, there have been many references, editorials, concerns by municipal politicians in this entire region that when the Edmonton Tory caucus had an opportunity to make presentations and to lobby hard and effectively, which is what they promised in the last election that they would do for Edmonton, very few of them stood up and nobody stood up very loudly to defend the rights of Edmonton to keep that particular seat in Edmonton.

The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods did not make allegations that government should unduly influence what is, in fact, an independent commission. What he was talking about was every member's right in this Assembly.

Mrs. Nelson: Did you go, Deb?

Ms Carlson: I talked to the commission before they met, and I was a part of the caucus committee and presentation. At the request of the commission I went and made a presentation to them, Mr. Speaker, which is my job as an Edmonton MLA, and I did it. Unfortunately, the same can't be said for other people on the other side. So, in fact, Edmonton-Mill Woods was right on the money in representing not only his view, not only the views of many municipal politicians in this greater region but also many views shared by people who live in this community who now feel disenfranchised.

As an example, the constituents of Edmonton-Ellerslie, by the time the next redistribution comes around, will get only half a vote in this province, and that is not reasonable, and that is not fair. If the opposition . . .

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you very much.

The person in question from whom these remarks came, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, is not here, and it would really be helpful for the chair for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to be participating in this point of order. I sense that where this is going is I'm going to have to recognize every member who represents a seat in Edmonton to get involved in a debate that is not part of a point of order. The fact of the matter is that the Blues clearly say the following, and I quote what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has said:

The Edmonton Tory caucus has failed to protect the city from losing a constituency and failed to get the same financial help for Edmonton public schools that Calgary public has received.

We could spend until 5:30 here this afternoon, I'm afraid, on this point, but I'm not sure that the House wants their time spent that way. So I'm going to delay this until Monday, and I want calm heads to look at this.

The fact of the matter is that the Electoral Boundaries Commission in the province of Alberta is an independent body whose members are appointed by the independently elected chairman of this Assembly, that you all have elected. Names are provided to the Speaker upon recommendation from the government leader and the Leader of the Opposition and are subsequently appointed. If it were to be suggested by any innuendo that an independent Electoral Boundaries Commission, created for a purpose, was in any way influenced by any member of the Assembly, then in essence there would be a great difficulty for everybody. So I want clear heads to think this through for the next several days. I'll return to it on Monday afternoon.

My understanding is that I have tabled in the Assembly the report from the independent commission. The tradition is that the government will then introduce a motion. The members will then have a bill to deal with, subsequently, in time. All members will have an opportunity to participate in the debate in this Assembly, where Hansard will record all of their comments for posterity without edit, and we'll find out. But if we're going to play with innuendo today, I want the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to be participating in this, and I'll return to it on Monday.

Now the third one. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(h). The Member for Edmonton-Centre implied false motives, that I suggested using machine guns on protesters. I ask that the member apologize to me and to the House and withdraw her remarks.

Mr. Speaker, if I offended anybody in the public in any way, shape, or form because of the language of intent or nonintent and different things like that and if it was taken out of context or put into context, I have issued a news release to apologize to the public, and I'd like to give this to the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Just a second. There's an issue here, and I need some help, Opposition House Leader. We've got two points of order. The members to whom the points are directed are not here, and it seems to me that one of the most just things that should prevail, if we're going to have a review of this, is that the hon. member who is coming under question with respect to the point of order should have the courtesy to the Assembly to be here in the Assembly.

Now, having said that, I will listen to what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie says before going further. Please proceed.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I refer to both the member's comments in the Legislature here earlier this week in talking about this point of order and direct quotes that were given in the Edmonton Journal in an article written by Kelly Cryderman, who in fact has the statements of the member under question on a tape recorder.

What was stated there was not what the allegations were from this member when he rises on the point of order. What they talked about here – and I quote from the tape recorder that we heard of the statements made . . .

The Speaker: Please, hon. member. No, no, no. We all know what the rules are with respect to this.

There's a reason to involve yourself, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford?

Mr. McClelland: Mr. Speaker, if I may comment on this. The Speaker has referred to the absence of the member, but I think that for the record, because it will be the record that will be perused independent of any remarks that the Member for Edmonton-Centre may or may not wish to put on record, in the normal give-and-take of political life and political debate members independent of political affiliation conduct themselves in a fashion so as not to discredit each other in a capricious or a malicious manner. To break that convention is to debase the very essence of political discourse, and that's what we're talking about here: the essence of political discourse.

I know that the member representing Edmonton-Centre would not wish to maliciously or accidentally impugn the integrity of another member. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully request that the Member for Edmonton-Centre or the House leader representing the Member for Edmonton-Centre on her behalf withdraw the remarks with regard to the Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

The Speaker: The only thing I'm doing right now: number one, I'm going to make a request that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre be here to participate in this point of order, and I'm going to refer members to page 114 of Hansard dated February 25, 2003, for the actual text of the words given by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood. We all know the traditions of the House, that questions in question period are ruled out if asking for verification of statements made in newspapers and the like, and we're not going to get involved in that.

So we're moving on now, and I'm coming back to those two points Monday afternoon. It's now in Hansard: a public invitation by the Speaker of the Alberta Legislative Assembly to two hon. members to be here.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Supplementary Estimates 2002-03
General Revenue Fund, No. 2

The Chair: Just so the chair has some idea of which way we're going, House leaders of the three parties, do we have any directions, or do we just start with whoever jumps up first? We already have the Minister of Human Resources and Employment doing that. Nothing on that? Then okay.

Human Resources and Employment

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Alberta Human Resources and Employment, as the hon. members would know, has an annual budget of just over $1 billion. Supplementary funds of $25.8 million, representing 2.4 percent of our budget, are being allocated to meet a higher than budgeted demand for skill training this particular year. Now, one of the reasons for this: the labour force has grown significantly, as we're all aware here in Alberta, but the number of workers has grown even faster than the number of available jobs. For an example, there were 55,000 more people in the labour force in January of 2003 than a year earlier, while the number of jobs increased by 41,000, so the unemployment rate has crept up here in Alberta. In 2001 it averaged 4.6, and in 2002 it was 5.3. So these funds are being used to support people who are getting the skills they need to, of course, find and then keep a job, and our commitment is to give Albertans a hand up rather than a handout.

So this supplementary estimate, hon. members, is necessary given the difficulty of budgeting for programs where demand is driven by a number of other issues.

Thank you.

3:10

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate those introductory comments. I have two questions that perhaps the minister could answer initially, and then I have another point to make.

In talking about the numbers of workers increasing in Alberta, we know that that's the case. We know that the population in Alberta is also increasing, so the expectation would be that there would be a natural increase in enrollment. My questions are: why didn't the department budget for this increase over this particular year? Do you have plans in place for next year to ensure that you can accommodate an increase in enrollment, since we would expect supplementary supply not to be an option next year?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As it regards the matter of the budget, we were looking at increases in this particular area, but we were also faced with some concerns that we had around the demographics that were leading into the AISH area. So what we've actually experienced is that we overbudgeted for our costs on the AISH side and underbudgeted on the skills side. So where we had anticipated growth, we were a little bit off in those particular areas.

Of course, next year's budget will be revealed imminently, and then we can see how we've tried to accommodate our forecast for the upcoming year.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. Mr. Minister, we have a difference of opinion of what imminent is, because the end of the first week of April hardly seems imminent for a budget that will likely be $20 billion or more to be presented in the House.

My last question and concern with these dollars, this almost $26 million that we're taking a look at, has to do with recommendations that came from the Auditor General. I'm wondering how the recommendation that came from the AG's office ties into the additional money that you may have needed, and that's in terms of the AG again recommending that your department "improve the procedures to monitor compliance by training providers with the terms of the Skills Development Program." It would seem to me that these training providers are still people providing training with the addition of this new money. The criteria, the AG said, is that "the Department should have a plan, based on a risk assessment of the training providers, to review training providers' compliance with the terms." The findings were that you do "not have adequate assurance that the 302 training providers currently delivering the SDP are meeting the terms of the program," and "without effective monitoring, there is a risk that training providers are not complying with the terms." There's no assurance, therefore, "that students are receiving adequate instruction and training and that training providers are spending the funding appropriately." So does any of this come into play with this additional funding you have, or are any of those people back in retraining because they didn't get the job done the first time?

Mr. Dunford: Well, I don't have the Auditor General's previous comments in front of me as we're speaking here this afternoon, but my recollection is that he talked in terms of risk, recognized, however, some of the control features that we had brought into place, and indicated that we were showing marked improvement in this particular area.

I want to assure the hon. member and other members in the House that we continue with the competitive bid process. We have also memorandums of understanding with many of both the private providers and also the public institutions that do the skills training for us, and a part of it is our performance measures that would indicate that employment is achieved after the completion of these contracts. Now, whether or not there is some recycling of the same person back through the training program, I'm not in a position to answer at this point. I think it's logical to assume that there might be some, but we are not in the business of training for training's sake, so I would think that the numbers would be minimal.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That concludes my questions for your department. Thank you very much for those answers.

I'd just like to make a couple of general comments, and then hopefully we can ask the Minister of Justice to introduce his supplementary estimates in a moment.

We're overall a little concerned about a few things with these supplementary estimates. First of all, 14 departments have asked for more money. I have to say that in my 10 years of being here, this is definitely the biggest supplementary estimates book we've seen. It's the second time that the government has come back and asked for money in this year, which suggests that there are some problems with their budgeting processes and their revenue forecasting ability. So we have concerns about the overall reliance of government on supplementary estimates as a part of that budgeting process, as it really demonstrates a lack of long-term planning.

Certainly, this isn't the kind of budgeting process you could get away with in industry and live to be the head of a department for very long. Often it can cause, I believe, a tendency for ministers to overspend or to certainly not plan for the future in terms of being able to hit their benchmarks and their long-term planning objectives. While "long-term" is a relative term here because it means three years with this government, they still have a really hard problem with meeting those benchmarks, and we see this happen all the time in the departments where what comes out in the business plans in one year isn't even relevant six months later, never mind three years later, when they're supposed to be forecasted for.

So two supplementary supply estimates in one year means that it's a government governing without being able to follow a definite plan. We see that with the third-quarter update that just came out. The surplus for three short months changed from $199 million to $1.8 billion. I mean, surely someone in that government can add and should be able to figure this out before we get into supplementary estimates. So we have some real concerns about that.

It's interesting to note, Mr. Chairman, that this is the last supplementary estimate that the government introduces because of the proposed changes to the fiscal framework that the province operates under. It means that the government will be limited to $3.5 billion a year in operating expenses. I think that most stakeholders in this province will be pleased to see supplementary supply go because it means they're now better able to engage in long-term planning. So on the one side, it's been really bad, I think, in the past, and I have said that repeatedly on the record. Let's hope that the new plan they're going to will be better. It looks like it uses sound fiscal policies, and we hope they will stick to it. We certainly are quite prepared to keep their feet to the fire to ensure that this happens.

I guess that this question goes to the Provincial Treasurer. When we take a look at page 5 of the 2002-2003 supplementary estimates, we see that the adjusted gross amount and dedicated revenue was increased by almost $48 million. Could you tell me why that money is not coming through supplementary supply? I might have missed something on the read through of it. So if you could answer that question for me, or if you could get back to me in writing on why that has occurred.

We would like to, then, move on to the Ministry of Justice.

Mrs. Nelson: On that same page, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member looks, she will see that that is coming from ag and rural development, Government Services, Justice, Transportation, and some from Infrastructure, so in particular she needs to go back into their detailed pages for a further breakdown.

3:20

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now I'm hoping that the Minister of Justice could give us an overview of his department and the requests for additional moneys.

Justice

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I'd love to give an overview of the Department of Justice, but we don't have enough time this afternoon to deal with all the good things that are being done by that department and the good people that we have working in it. However, we have asked for supplementary supply for approximately $2,623,000, and the purposes for that are clearly set out in the supplementary estimates. Eighty-five thousand dollars of that is for the child-centred family justice initiative. That's a flow-through actually. That's money which primarily comes from the federal government as part of their family law initiatives, and we receive it and then apply it to programming. So that's simply just an increase in the amount of money that we've been able to receive in that manner.

The primary amount of the money, quite frankly, is to pay for salary settlements. The salary settlements in the last year or so have been difficult to accommodate within the existing budget particularly because – and I think I explained this last year, as well – there were significant changes in some of the grids and processes. The impact of this salary settlement wasn't the 4 and 5 percent. Rather, it impacted the department by about 11 percent. So there was a significant need for that money to be applied to the budget to deal with those.

We did receive some money at the end of last year to accommodate those pressures, but it was onetime money, and we were expected to try and go back into the budget and try and find the resources to deal with that over the longer term. In doing so, I've been able to make the case to the Treasury Board that we actually needed the extra resources rather than trying to accommodate it within the budget because of the types of services that we're providing and the need for those services.

So those resources, the supplementary appropriation, as the hon. member will see, are spread, quite frankly, right across the department based on an allocation according to the manpower budget, and then the balance of it is with respect to external legal costs relating to the issue around Kyoto, that we all are so painfully aware of from last fall.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Sorry. I missed the part where you talked about onetime money. Could you explain to me exactly why it was onetime money and that you hadn't budgeted for it?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Well, yes, Mr. Chairman. Allocation of scarce resources is, of course, one of the most difficult tasks of governance. Although we had been accommodated on a onetime basis for some of those costs, at the tail end of last year, when the budget was put together for the current year, we were asked to try and rearrange our resources and find ways to meet those costs internally, and I was able to come back and say that that was not the most prudent way to deal with Justice. If at all possible, it was more appropriate to obtain extra resources, and now we've succeeded in doing so. I hope that that will be annualized from here on.

Ms Carlson: So, Mr. Chairman, they were expecting a 5 percent and 4 percent increase and had an 11 percent increase. How many of those dollars were for bonuses and layoffs?

Mr. Hancock: Couldn't break down per se the bonuses and layoffs, but I can say this: we haven't been laying off staff. We have had to go through some rather painful hiring freezes in order to try and manage the budget, and over the course of this year, at one point in time we had a spectre of perhaps having a $7 million deficit in our budget if we couldn't manage it. So we have had to engage hiring freezes and other tasks to try and stay within budget, and for that reason I was able, as I've said before, to come back and say that this is not a good way to do business. We need to have the extra resources. We can't manage the full 11 percent without cutting back in areas that ought not to be cut back and, as I say, were successful in making that case and having the extra resources applied.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My last set of questions on Justice are, of course, around the Kyoto accord. Five hundred thousand dollars is asked for here. There has been no legal challenge. The bill was left on the Order Paper. We would expect that there's going to be an additional requisition for dollars in the coming budget. Can you tell us what you spent the money on?

Mr. Hancock: Legal advice.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I know that lawyers are expensive. I know that the troop of lawyers you would have put on this particular potential fight with the feds would have been enormous, but for a 30-second flash in the pan that the bill was in this House and the lack of legal challenge that was forthcoming, I've got to tell you that $500,000 seems very expensive. How many lawyers? Come on. Albertans deserve some detail on this, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Hancock: I would be delighted to provide some detail if the hon. member can't imagine this. In essence, one of the jobs that the Department of Justice is to do is to provide legal advice to government, and when one has the spectre of such a disastrous policy as the approval of the Kyoto accord and what its implications might be for Alberta, for Albertans, and for the Alberta economy, one has to be totally and fully prepared to provide good legal advice at every and all aspects of the whole discussion.

So throughout the fall, right from the time that the Prime Minister attended in Johannesburg and told the world community first, rather than telling the Canadian community, that Canada was going to sign the Kyoto accord, Alberta and the Department of Justice, as the legal adviser to the government of Alberta, had to gear up for a discussion that we had hoped to have at a political table rather than through legal channels. It was prudent and appropriate for us to review all constitutional aspects. It was prudent and appropriate for us to look at all of our potential opportunities. The amount of $500,000 might seem like a lot of money, Mr. Chairman, and it is a lot of money, but it pales in comparison to the amount of money that the economy of Alberta will lose and the jobs that will be lost in this province and the implications of signing the Kyoto protocol for the province of Alberta.

The hon. member quite rightly indicated that we brought forward a bill as part of our overall plan. The Department of Environment and the Department of Energy worked on the preparation of the legislation, as did the Department of Justice, and of course in doing so, we also had to be very prudent and careful that the things we were proposing to put into legislation were constitutional, appropriate, and advanced the cause of Alberta and Albertans in the whole discussion of Kyoto. This is a difficult task, and when you do a difficult task and you do it quickly and you engage the best and the brightest and the most talented people in that particular area, it costs money. That's what the $500,000 was for.

I'm sorry that the hon. member thinks that one should only spend the money if they eventually go to court. That may yet happen. Who knows? We haven't seen the way the Kyoto policy has been implemented by the federal government. They're only now, as we speak, trying to figure out what it was they signed and what they're going to do with it. But Alberta, I can tell you, through the Department of Justice's efforts and the efforts of the departments of Environment and Energy and the players that have been at the table through the fall and spent a lot of time and energy on this issue to protect Albertans' interests, will make sure that we not only do what's appropriate for the environment and appropriate for Albertans but that we also protect the economic interests of Albertans. We have engaged lawyers, and we have researched a number of different initiatives, and unfortunately because the federal Liberal government was not specific, in fact didn't even have a game plan, we had to explore a wider range of issues and concerns than those that we might have otherwise had to deal with. So it's been a fairly complex file, and $500,000 is a lot of money but necessarily spent.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Chairman, can this minister tell us how many firms those best and brightest that he alluded to belonged to, that are working on this file for $500,000? Did it go to just one law firm? Was it spread out? Do we see some regional representation between northern and southern Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Two law firms, both in Edmonton. This isn't a policy development process where you get regional representation. This is a legal issue where you go to the people who have the expertise. In this case, we were able to find the expertise in Edmonton, and some of my colleagues to my left, only geographical of course, are saying: tsk, tsk, why not Calgary? But we were conscious of cost and expense, and because they were dealing with our department and dealing with us, rather than paying a lot of expenses of flying people back and forth and paying expenses on processes that weren't necessary to getting the results that we needed, we hired two Edmonton law firms, and there have been several lawyers from those law firms engaged.

I must also say while I'm talking about this that we also deployed a considerable amount of the Department of Justice's internal legal resources, and the expertise that we have on constitutional law within the Department of Justice is unparalleled anywhere.

So essentially there were three groups of lawyers, if you will: the Department of Justice lawyers, as I said, unparalleled in their expertise with respect to constitutional law, and then because we needed the added help in doing research and bringing the issues to the table, two Edmonton law firms were also engaged.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I believe that that concludes my particular remarks on Justice, but I know that Edmonton-Highlands has some comments and then perhaps Edmonton-Centre on this same area.

Chair's Ruling Speaking Order

The Chair: Hon. member, the chair has a bit of a problem. I asked all three House leaders if they would tell me what order. Now we have one hon. House leader directing another one to make a comment. Right now it seems that we're on the Minister of Justice's supplementary estimates, and if you're going to speak about that, then go ahead.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I was going to do that. I'd indicated to the House leader for the Official Opposition that if now might be a more convenient time for everyone, I would pop up and address this particular issue because I have considerable concern about it as well.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: I have some other questions for the minister because I have considerable concern. Clearly, the minister is right that there is a large reservoir of expertise on these matters within his department, and I'm sure that he was able to get administrative assistance as well from the minister of intergovernmental affairs. But I seriously would like to know what the results have been for this particular expenditure. I would like to know in some more detail what avenues of research were followed and whether or not any of this research has actually been utilized in the government's campaign against the Kyoto accord.

I would like to also know the minister's view with respect to the usefulness of this. I know that since the accord has been ratified by the Parliament of Canada, the government has now adopted a different position with respect to that ratification and is now claiming that, in fact, it is not necessarily as dire a situation as the government portrayed in the first place. In fact, I think that it's clear that there was a lot of posturing on the part of the provincial government with respect to Kyoto and that the fears that were being expressed no longer seem to be tormenting the government.

So I really have to question this particular expenditure, Mr. Chairman, half a million dollars for legal expenses to fight Kyoto when the government ultimately doesn't feel that it's as damaging as they said it would be. I'd like to know what the taxpayers of Alberta got for their money specifically in this case that could not have been provided by the department's own legal staff.

Mr. Hancock: Well, to answer the last question first – and I don't know whether I got the first question, so if I missed it, I'd ask the member to repeat it. But to answer his last question first – what did we get that we could not have got from our own in-house legal staff? – the answer is nothing. We didn't get anything we couldn't have got internally, but we didn't have the time to do it all internally given the essence of time. If we'd had a much longer period of time, the expertise in the department is there, but because we were in a compressed time frame, we didn't have all of the resources available to do it within that time frame. Therefore, we had to go outside, as we do in those circumstances. The capability is certainly there within the department. As I say, the expertise in our constitutional law department is exemplary, but we did need the additional assistance and also wanted the additional assistance on a number of areas relative to gearing up for any potential challenges.

When one is looking at the Kyoto affair and the protocol and the processes that went through, we had to look on an ongoing basis, on an iterative basis at the steps that were being taken and what might be appropriate: whether or not, for example, we should consider applying for an injunction, whether we should apply for a reference, whether we should take some other court action. It's not only with respect to the ratification of the Kyoto protocol. It doesn't end with the ratification of the Kyoto protocol. It's an ongoing issue because many of the issues actually come up with respect to implementation rather than ratification. So it's a moving target but a very important one.

The hon. member mentions posturing, and of course even he would agree that you can't posture without having a good background, a good understanding of what it is you're talking about. He calls it posturing. We call it advocating on behalf of Albertans in the most strenuous way possible. I think we're talking about the same thing. He just is putting a bit of a different spin on it. The reality is that the Alberta government did act on behalf of Albertans in the strongest way possible, and we needed, in order to do that, to have the best advice possible so that we knew the strength of our position and knew where we were coming from legally as well as politically. I think we have succeeded.

Did Albertans get value for the money? Well, I think Albertans get good value for their money from this government. Did we succeed? Yes, and even his source of facts, the Edmonton Journal, I believe in an editorial, indicated that we did get some significant changes from the federal government in terms of their approach to Kyoto and how it would be implemented.

We've made progress already. We've made some substantive progress. We've worked very strongly with industry in this province and with the public in this province in order to make cases to the federal government as to the damage that they were going to be doing with this protocol if they didn't. They've come out now with a number of iterations of their position, and each one has changed, but each one successively has been more aligned with what Alberta has been talking about in terms of a made-in-Canada approach to greenhouse gases. So, yes, we've made significant inroads on this discussion.

We didn't stop the federal government from signing the protocol, and that was not fatal. It would have been a good place to start if we'd been able to stop the federal government from signing the protocol, get them to understand that that political step was not the best way to deal with greenhouse gases and to deal with that problem, particularly when we have a carbon-based economy and need to be sensitive to that as well as to the sustainable development and as well as to the very important issues relating to the environment.

But we were able to do the legal research that was necessary and provide the legal background that was necessary so that this government had a very strong foundation upon which to make its arguments both publicly and to the federal government. We achieved great movement in what the federal government has been saying it intends to do, but we intend to continue to be extremely vigilant with respect to ongoing implementation of the Kyoto protocol and what damaging effects it might have on Alberta's economy.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, just to supplement the question. It is likely that some slight movement on the federal government's part was achieved through the efforts of the government of Alberta, but there are a number of ways to achieve that. You can achieve that administratively and politically as well as legally, but this half a million dollars is for legal costs, and the part of the question that the minister didn't respond to is: what exactly did we get for this $500,000? Is the government going to be pursuing legal options in connection with Kyoto now that it's been ratified, or is it going to continue an administrative dialogue and a political defence of the province's priorities as the government sees them? This is the question. Will the minister table the legal bills that they've incurred to these external forums in this matter so that the Assembly can see exactly what we paid for?

3:40

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, it's not normal to table legal bills in the House or otherwise make them publicly available, because often they give an indication with respect to the legal advice that's received. Of course, legal advice is a matter of some privilege, legal privilege I'm talking about, which is an important concept. One ought not to be required to disclose legal advice because one might need it some time in the future, so we have to maintain that sense of privilege, and the legal bills are associated with that legal advice and can sometimes give indications. So, no, I will not be tabling the legal bills in the House.

But I can tell the member that we did get legal advice. We got legal advice on a number of aspects both with respect to the ratification of the protocol and with respect to potential methodologies for implementation. We have thoroughly looked at what our legal position might be from time to time, and the process has changed over the course of the six to eight months that we've been on the file, the focus with respect to ratification and then with respect to implementation.

As to whether or not any formal legal action in the courts will be taken, well, that remains to be seen because we haven't seen the full implementation process. We haven't seen in any great sense of detail how the federal government intends to achieve its obligation or its intention now that they've ratified the Kyoto protocol. We do know that if they move ahead to achieve the greenhouse gas reductions that were set out in the Kyoto protocol for Canada, if that becomes a legal requirement, that will be very damaging to our economy without something more than what they've offered so far.

So, yes, we intend to remain on the file. Yes, we intend to remain vigilant. Yes, we intend to work in a practical and pragmatic way to make sure that Alberta industry is not damaged, and, yes, we intend to continue to protect the environment. But we need to have, it's imperative that we have a good understanding of our legal position at every aspect of the way, and I don't apologize for the need to do that or for the need to have that properly resourced. I only wish that we could have done it in-house because we do have such exceptional people in-house to be able to work on these things. We have to continue with the other aspects of government as well, so we can't devote all the resources that we have in-house to one file, and therefore we had to seek and get expert legal advice from outside.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to question the Minister of Justice on his supplementary supply budget. There are just a couple of questions. Well, actually one is a statement.

I understand that the increase in salary that appears here is due to a larger than anticipated salary settlement, and I hear that the minister was willing to apply for more money to cover that settlement. Knowing the quality of people that are working in that department and how underpaid they are in some sections, I'd like to thank him for his support of that salary increase for the staff. I think that's a good idea.

Now, one of the questions that I had was about bonuses, whether there is still room in the budget to pay bonuses to those that have earned it in that department.

The only other question I have here, aside from the overall concerns that I have with supplementary supply budgets, but I won't go into that on this minister's time, is that I notice there is a notation under the department summary that notes that it's including an increase of pretty much $4 million in the allowance for doubtful accounts. I would like to know: what are these doubtful accounts, and what has brought the need for an increase in the amount? Obviously, this is an internal department transfer. Nonetheless, almost $3,944,000 has been put in as an increase into the allowance for doubtful accounts. I'd like an explanation, please, of what the change is, why you're anticipating that extra $4 million, some description of the accounts.

Now, I know that you have to have contingency money there if lawsuits, for instance, go against you, but is that what this money is for? Can you detail what the doubtful accounts are? Sometimes that's what the government has to pay out: they're expecting to lose; who knows what these settlements are. But $4 million is a significant amount of money, and I'm interested in what the explanation for that is.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased that the hon. member recognizes the need for us to deal with the salary issues within the department. She'll know that, for example, court clerks for years suffered under an administrative process that didn't allow for appropriate adjustments and those sorts of things, and we've been able to fix that and to make that change. I think that most people in the department are now quite satisfied with the way that the salary processes have been dealt with, but it did result in, during the course of that five and four settlement in past years, the actual impact on our budget being significantly higher. So I'm pleased that we have the support of the opposition with respect to making that right and embedding in this budget through supplementary supply and hopefully in future budgets the amount of money necessary to cover that.

The second question was?

Ms Blakeman: Bonuses.

Mr. Hancock: Oh, bonuses. Well, of course we won't know about bonuses being payable until after the year-end to see whether we've met targets and those sorts of things, but I would hope that within the management of our operation our managers have been prudent enough to make sure that as we move through this, they will have set aside sufficient money to pay bonuses if they are accrued.

I tend to operate on the policy in the department rather than dealing with the managerial detail. I think my deputy minister and executive staff appreciate that. They get to manage the department. I haven't specifically asked them if there's bonus money set aside, but I would be very surprised if bonuses were provided for this year that there wasn't sufficient money to pay them. However, without this supplementary estimate I think that would have been one of the first things on the chopping block because we were very, very short, in fact had to do hiring freezes and take other steps to make sure that we met budget. So this will help to deal with that issue.

Now, with respect to the final question that the hon. member raised, the $3.944 million allowance for doubtful accounts, the hon. member may recall that some two or three years ago the federal government made a change in the federal criminal law which resulted in the fact that you could not jail people for certain offences for nonpayment of fines. So the collection process became more difficult with respect to some of those fines, and the $3.9 million essentially relates to old, uncollectible fines from years gone by, and it's time to take them off the books. That doesn't mean to say that they will not be collected if they can be collected, but from an accounting perspective, rather than have the Auditor General comment on it, we thought it would be prudent to take them off the books.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. Sorry. I get so inspired by the minister. I came up with two more questions while he was talking.

Can I just confirm that the $85,000 that's appearing under vote 3.0.6, child-centred family justice, is the Zebra centre? Okay. Good. I'll look for an explanation on that.

My second question is around the Public Trustee's office. I've had an issue raised a couple of times. I'm sure the minister is also aware of the same issue, where the Public Trustee's office was not able to follow through on a request that in legislation appears to be doable with administering living wills, I think. What are they called? It was essentially living wills, how an individual wanted to be looked after if they lost their mental faculties and had left written instructions with the Public Trustee and expected the Public Trustee to administer that. There have been some legal opinions, I gather, obtained by that office that said that they couldn't follow through on administering this, but there also seemed to be something said about a lack of staff time to do this. I'm wondering, with this increase that I'm seeing under the Public Trustee's office, if perhaps that would help facilitate what these individuals were looking for, whether this, in fact, is added staff.

The last question is once again on the maintenance enforcement vote, 3.0.5, just confirming that that $128,000 is salary and, if it's not, if I could get an explanation of what it is specifically.

So those three questions: Public Trustee, child-centred family justice, and maintenance enforcement. Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Perhaps, with your indulgence, Mr. Chair, I could just ask the hon. member to repeat the last question, about what was for salary.

Ms Blakeman: Maintenance enforcement: was it salary, or is there something else in that $128,000 that appears under that vote?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, as I've indicated earlier, the supplementary estimates, primarily, here are for salary issues, and the division among the various portions of the department is based strictly on a proportion of the payroll that each of those areas has. So the expectation is that those are salary related. Now, I can't guarantee that each and every dollar goes to salary. That's the intention here, but, you know, as is always the case, we may have already contributed to our salary budget in some area by taking it from some other area temporarily. So what I'm saying is that it may in effect be spent in some other way because we've now replenished the salary budget. The intention here is to meet the salary requirements as a result of the increase.

With respect to the child-centred family justice initiative I don't believe that's specifically the Zebra house, but I can certainly undertake to advise the hon. member if that's going there. This is relating to the family justice initiative. The federal government has provided some money, and this is a flow-through of that money back into our family information centres and those sorts of areas. I will get the detail for her as to what specific area the $85,000 is going into, but I don't believe it's the Zebra centre.

With respect to the third question, it was . . .

Ms Blakeman: The Public Trustee.

Mr. Hancock: Public Trustee. I don't anticipate that the money that we have available as a result of the supplementary estimate will expand the services available from the Public Trustee. They're already fairly stretched in terms of the services that they can provide. In any event, I wouldn't think living wills would come under the Public Trustee because the Public Trustee is a trustee of resources, of dollars, those sorts of things. The Public Guardian is the office which deals with the guardian of the person for most cases.

I'm sort of speculating here, but it wouldn't seem to me that you would want to do a living will and have either the Public Trustee or the Public Guardian be the person who makes the decisions on your behalf. A living will is a very personal document. It ought to be something in which you designated somebody who is very close to you to deal with. In any event, it wouldn't in my view fall within the Public Trustee's purview because, really, the Public Trustee is managing estates, not dealing with the individual, the person.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. I apologize to the minister for not being able to be more clear. I don't have the documentation with me. I'll get it and send it over so that we can satisfy the questions of the constituent on this concern.

Thank you.

Municipal Affairs

The Chair: The hon. minister responsible for Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I am very pleased on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs to request some $11.4 million, $10 million for the orphan underground petroleum storage tank program and another $1.4 million to finish off the 2002 disaster recovery program. I think the notes are self-explanatory. Page 73.

The Chair: Any further comments?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry. Am I understanding that the Minister of Seniors was speaking for the Minister of Municipal Affairs?

Mr. Woloshyn: Yes, I am.

Ms Blakeman: We had asked some questions earlier during, I think, the budget debate, in fact, for this. We did not receive responses for these, so I'll repeat these questions again, and perhaps the minister can have his colleague answer them for us.

This is specific to the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and around these underground petroleum storage tank programs. Could we get the minister to table any studies or reports that his department has about the effects of the 5,200 leaking petroleum storage tanks on Alberta's drinking water supplies? Could the minister release a list of the locations of all of the tanks that have been identified to date and the planned date for mediation? Who receives money from this fund, and what are the specific cleanup plans? I mean, there's $10 million in here to deal with the accepted applications and $1.4 million pursuant to disaster recovery. We're mostly interested in additional information about this $10 million for the underground petroleum storage tank program with those accepted applications and in, I guess, what kind of applications were not successful in applying for some of this money, which also would indicate some of the criteria for those that were successful in being accepted. If those questions could get passed on – and perhaps we can get an answer in writing or through a tabling – I'd appreciate it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. minister, is that what you would like to do?

Mr. Woloshyn: Yes. Thank you. I'll pass on Hansard comments to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and then he will take whatever course is acceptable.

The Chair: The chair would indicate that we have now received notification from the House leaders that they would like to proceed in a slightly different order than haphazard and that we are still on the Department of Justice, as I understand. If that is finished, then we'll move to Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll deal with the supplementary estimate of $39,719,000. This funding is needed to support the increased costs associated with our safety net programs.

I was interested in the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie's concern on our ability to budget, and I know that the ag critic from the Official Opposition supported the dollars that were expended in agriculture in emergency assistance. May not have agreed in total on the way they were distributed but agreed that the need was there, and I think everyone in the House would agree that this was a very unusual year. It was the worst drought in 130 years. I don't think anyone would expect that someone could predict that.

Just to give you an example, last year I believe it was in the range of $288 million that was paid out under Ag Financial Services under crop insurance. I may be wrong within a million or two in that last year, but it was the highest payment made in 40 years' history of that program. Well, this year we have surpassed that fairly significantly, so we've had to cope with that. I think that producers have made use of all of the tools that were available to them to mitigate the impacts of this disastrous drought on their operations.

So the additional $50,858,000 for ag lending assistance – and I'll give you the numbers – is $2,473,000 to support lending assistance programs delivered by Ag Financial Services; $46,137,000 represents the provincial share of the increased cost of delivering the farm income disaster program; and $2,248,000 for additional provincial costs for crop losses caused by waterfowl and wildlife. These are offset by a reallocation of $11,139,000 within the agriculture insurance and lending assistance program.

I should just note that increases in expenditures are substantially offset by a federal contribution of $37.3 million, primarily for the farm income disaster program payments. As a result, the net draw on the general revenue fund is really $1.8 million, but, as you know, because of our accounting system, because of the way we expend and account for those dollars, we have to record them in a supplementary estimate, hence the request for Agriculture for this year.

I think that Agriculture tries very hard to live within its budget. Ag Financial Services has a tremendous record of success in dealing with these issues, but this was an extraordinary year. We don't have to go far for data on that. The encouraging thing, I would say, is that we've all seen some moisture. We're all thankful for that, unless we're driving on some streets and trying to get to and from work during this, but my understanding is that the city of Edmonton, which is one of the driest areas in the province, has more snow now than it has seen in the last five to seven years. We're all encouraged by that, and we hope that that continues on into the summer and mitigates this disastrous drought that covered over 75 percent of our farmland in the province. The drought affects more than just our agricultural communities; it affects our urban communities as well. We were certainly encouraged by our urban centres who put out water management messages encouraging people to conserve that resource, and I would say that the whole province, urban and rural, pulled together to try and mitigate the effects of the drought.

With those comments, Mr. Chair, I'd be happy to try to answer any of the questions directly related to these sup estimates. If there are any that go beyond that, I'd be happy to respond in writing, in the interest of time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. In looking at the areas that funding is being requested for and also looking at the Auditor General's report, I notice that two of these areas for which money is being requested also turn up in the Auditor General's report, and I'm going to question the minister on that.

Now, in fact, it appears – and perhaps the minister could address this briefly – that in the recommendations from the Auditor General from the previous year on the farm income disaster program there was a recommendation that the department “perform annual performance evaluations of [the farm income disaster program] to assess the achievement of the program.” In this particular case, $46,137,000 of additional provincial costs is what we're examining in this supplementary supply. In fact, it appears that the department did successfully implement the recommendation to perform the annual performance evaluations. If I could just get the minister to speak briefly about that.

The second area is around the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, and it, as well, turns up as a recommendation in the Auditor General's report. It is talking about reinsurance programs, and I'm interested because it speaks specifically to weather and reinsurance. I'm just quoting page 43 of the annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta, 2001-2002.

The reinsurance took the form of weather derivatives, which are financial instruments that would pay off if rainfall across the province dipped below average levels. Second, [the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation] reinsured an area substantially larger than its pilot program.

So there's a concern being raised by the Auditor General, and this is specific to the native pasture pilot program. What's caught my attention, of course, is the direct reference to weather and particularly rainfall dipping across the province. So I'm wondering if this recommendation, which came out of the report in September, has been dealt with inside of the additional money that's being expended.

As an overall comment on additional money from the government being put towards farming programs, I continue to have a frustration. Although I represent a downtown riding in an urban centre, it's not that I'm unsympathetic to what's happening to the farmers and, indeed, the entire issue of the family farm, which we have yet to really have a full-fledged discussion on as to how it's most appropriate to support the family farm in Alberta. I wish we would have that discussion, because I think it would help us all make better policy around it. I continue to be frustrated that we have ad hoc support programs, and I see these programs as being biased and, some would say, inflexible. I can't comment on the inflexibility of it. I would continue to question the minister as to why we cannot develop stable and predictable programs that are based on a stable and predictable income. Certainly, you've heard from the Leader of the Official Opposition, who's also our Agriculture critic, that we're looking for a farm income insurance program that's based on lost income rather than on margin or yield or production values, a program that gives farms the freedom to make production decisions mid-season.

My final point here is: what's the difference between the fall sitting and this sitting? It wasn't a big agricultural production time. I'll admit that I represent a downtown riding, and maybe I misunderstood this, but why is there additional money being asked for now as compared to the last set of supplementary estimates that we had in the fall? There was money then. There's money now. I'm saying: well, what kind of farming went on between December 2 and February 27? [interjection] Well, there's a lot of innovation in Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Maybe there's innovation I'm just not up to speed on.

So if I could get the minister to comment on those three issues that I've raised, please.

Mrs. McClellan: Certainly. Hon. member, the agriculture programs are complex. I appreciate your interest, and I invite you, when you have time, to have a good discussion with the ag critic in your caucus, because he has worked very hard over the last year to join in the discussion on how we achieve some of the things that you've talked about. Unfortunately, you've missed the announcement of about three to four weeks ago where we announced a comprehensive set of safety nets, so I'm going to sort of go backwards from your last comments and move back to the first ones to try to assist you and other members in the House to understand why it took this long.

There has been a discussion in Canada on agriculture. It has taken almost two years, I will grant you. I attended my first meeting on the agricultural policy framework in the Yukon two years ago this June, and Minister Vanclief, the federal minister, and the 10 provincial ministers and the territorial ministers came together and agreed on a framework to go ahead with an agricultural policy that would be a national policy. One part of that included a complete review of the safety net program, and when we talk about safety nets, we talk about crop insurance, pasture insurance, hay insurance, and we talk about NISA, the net income stabilization account. Those are considered the safety net portions. There are four other chapters in the agricultural policy framework. They centre around the environment, food safety, renewal. I'm trying to think of what the other one is, but it'll come to me. But the safety net chapter was the one that we really concentrated on at the outset, and we directed our officials to work towards a safety net that would perhaps be one program.

Now, I must admit that in the Yukon I expressed my concern. I did not believe that we would be able to come to one program. It would be great, but crop insurance is different. It's very seasonal, and to deal with a safety net, an insurance program where you have to deal with a tax year that's a year later than the year you're working in, is extraordinarily difficult, but we try, and our officials worked hard on it, came to a conclusion throughout that work that, indeed, we could not. There would have to be two. So what has come about is a comprehensive set of safety nets under crop insurance and an improved NISA program.

Now, if you think back to June in Halifax, where the ministers met together to conclude the umbrella agreement on the ag policy framework, you might recall that Alberta signed that agreement at that time. It is an umbrella agreement, and what happens under that is that each province then negotiates under that set of principles bilateral agreements for their province. Understand that agriculture in Newfoundland and the Yukon is quite different than it is in Alberta or in Ontario or in Quebec, so that's why you have bilateral agreements. Understand also – I should have mentioned this at the outset – that agriculture is a 50-50 shared responsibility constitutionally, one of the very few areas that is a shared jurisdiction.

In June we signed that agreement, which enabled us to begin negotiations immediately with the federal officials – our officials, their officials – on those chapters. I am proud to say that while the negotiating trail sometimes was rocky, we were able to conclude our negotiations and announce to our producers in January a new set of safety nets which are comprehensive, which will eliminate the need for ad hoc programs. You will not look for ad hoc programs in Alberta this year. We have an improved crop insurance program that looks at the weather production, that looks at a spring price option, and that looks at our revenue stream. We have improved our hay and pasture program, and we are able to use under silage barley for proxy. It's very difficult to actually nail down silage, if you know what silaging is. Cutting hay is one thing and grazing pasture is another thing. Silage is another thing. So we've used barley as a proxy, and the reason that we use barley is because it is the indicator of price in feed. As you know, barley is heavily fed in our province.

So we have that in place, and I can tell you that our producers are very happy. I have spent a lot of time in the last weeks with producers, and the reason that they're pleased with the programs is because they designed them. We spent a lot of time in this province doing a crop insurance review. It was begun by the Minister of Infrastructure when he was minister. It concluded last year with focus groups around the province, where we sat down at a table with 15 or 20 or however many farmers, average guys, and said: is this what will work for you to make good risk management decisions? Because it is an insurance program.

It's a tripartite program shared between the federal government, the provincial government, and the producer. So it's not a matter of this government just saying: this is how it will be. We have to negotiate agreement with our partners, which are the producers and the federal government. I'm pleased that the federal government has been very helpful in moving through this process. When I phoned the federal minister and told him that we were ready to announce them, he said, "And?" I said: well, you're going to like some of it, maybe some of it not quite so well, but I hope you're going to help us fund all of it. We have a cordial relationship in the development of these programs. They're very important. So, hon. member, ad hoc programs in that area are gone.

I can tell you that the Premier of this province gave this minister the very clear direction that we were to get there, and we have. We'll make some more changes. If you go back and look at the news release from the announcement that was made in Lacombe, you will see that there are some additional changes that will be made in 2004. One of those is in cushioning. One of the difficulties that you have on an index is that if you have successive years of bad production – weather related, not your fault, not bad management but these anomalies that might run four years or five years – your production index goes down, down, down. Pretty soon your coverage isn't any good for you.

I've often tried to explain this. If you have a $120,000 house and you insure it for $120,000 and it burns down, you get your money, unless you did something like set it yourself, which we wouldn't do. If you rebuild that house, you reinsure it and it burns again, you still can insure your house for that value, and if it happened again, you could do the same thing. You don't lose your protection on your insurance, but your premiums go up; right? That's the way it works. That's what insurance is about, and that's what this is about. So it's important for us to be able to cushion that index so that the program doesn't come to the point where it is of no value to the producer because through no fault of their own they've had some repeated years.

If you look from just west of the city of Edmonton to the Saskatchewan border, which is primarily, of course, what we're interested in, there have been four to five years of significant drought, very significant. If you are not using some indexing or cushioning of that index, your insurance would not be of value to your producers. This year, because of the general drought covering so much of the province, very few indexes will go down. In fact, I would suggest that most indexes will rise because they're all in the same position. So there wasn't the urgency to deal with that this year, but we do intend to deal with it next year.

The other area that we need to do some more work on is in the silage area in that insurance program, and we've made a commitment to producers to do that.

No no ad hoc; we've done that. I've tried to explain the process. We have a national process. Now, I can't speak for other provinces as to whether they've negotiated their bilaterals, but I can tell you that Alberta has. I can also tell you that I'm very pleased with the other four chapters – food safety and environment, renewal, et cetera – because we did have agreement from the federal government that they would recognize what we had already achieved. We have invested so much in food safety and in environment and so on that our costs will be negligible or nil to receive our federal share at the outset, because we are ahead in those programs.

So that's the ag policy framework. You hear a lot about it, some negative and some good, but I have to say this. I've been a legislator for 15-plus years. I was in this portfolio some dozen years ago, and this is the first time that we've had a five-year agreement, and that is very important. The federal minister has negotiated with his Finance minister a block of money. Is it enough? Probably not. Would it ever be? Probably not. But it is what we have. So my opinion is that it's time to get on with it and get the job done for producers, and I think our producers concur.

When you look at the issues around the family farm, we first of all have to say: what are we talking about with the family farm? We hear a lot about corporate farms and all of that. I can tell you that the majority of corporate farms in this province are held by families, and one of the reasons that they are incorporated is for tax purposes and business management purposes. It can be father/son, son/daughter, it can be brother/brother, and they're incorporated, so it looks like we have a large number of corporate farms. Most of those corporate farms, the majority – I can get you the figure. I think there are less than 3 percent that are not held by families. Less than 3 percent. I'm sure I'm right on that, but I'll get you that. So the family farm does exist. Has it changed? Yes. Will it continue to? Yes. For those of us who've been in the industry for a long time, maybe we want it to a little, but the emphasis is still there.

The other thing that's encouraging to us – we're getting just a little bit away, maybe, from these, except the importance of support to the industry in a time of need, and that includes our family farm – is that the age of our farmers is lowering. Yes. That's important to us, because there was a period of time when it was rising. We are seeing more young people come into the industry, and that is really important if you want to sustain agriculture.

The way we do business has changed. The environment has changed us. We're looking at new ways of doing things, continuous cropping. I can tell you that farmers are very environmentally minded.

On the issues of the Auditor General's report, the reinsurance. The very reason that they're called pilots is because they are pilots. When you introduce something using a weather derivative, you're using the very best information you have, but until you put it into absolute practice, you do not know how it's going to work. On the reinsurance side we're very thankful that we do have reinsurance in this province, because the reinsurers picked up a large portion of our loss this year. So it was a good thing to have.

On our native pasture program, the weather derivative and the satellite – we have both, and we have them on pilot – were piloted because we weren't sure. Sure enough, we did find some problems in that area. One of the problems is that in the weather derivative you use weather stations, and we didn't have enough for the anomalies in weather that we had this past year. When you have unusual drought like the worst in 130 years, I guess you could expect that your weather patterns would be quite different than they had been. We've improved that this year. The federal government as part of its drought response has assisted in the development of a further number of weather stations. That was announced here in the city of Edmonton, actually, about a year ago by Minister Vanclief, and we will have more than double the number of weather stations that we had last year. How it works: a producer chooses a weather station that he thinks is most appropriate to his area. What happened last year is that the one that was normally the most appropriate was very abnormal; it may have rained there and not where it used to. So what we can do this year because we have additional stations is have a producer choose three in his area – I've told them: you can't pick one at High Level and one at Manyberries – and use an average. That's a great improvement in that.

We still have some issues on soil testing, moisture testing in soil, but we'll work those out.

I'll give you a written response on the acreage side of your question on reinsurance.

You've already indicated that the Auditor General did indicate his pleasure with our changes in performance measures and evaluations on the farm income disaster program.

I think I covered all you asked and more than you ever wanted to know about farm programs.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. The minister opened the door on this one, and I would just like to add a few comments about it. That is the whole issue of risk management and safety nets. This isn't something that the minister can particularly answer, probably isn't even for her department to answer, but it is an issue that continues to concern me, representing, as I do, a number of small businesspeople in the downtown centre, and it's a question of equity. The minister has worked hard to explain why the money is necessary going to the family farm. It is a question of risk. Farmers know that they're in a risk business, and they try and manage that risk. Nonetheless, there are government programs to assist them here because that, one assumes the overall argument is, helps everyone in Alberta. But I continue to be concerned and want to see more equity across the province. It seems that agriculture gets the safety net; they get the money; they get the help.

I have businesspeople who equally are doing their best to manage their risk, to manage things which can scupper their success, which are equally as uncontrollable as what our farmers or agricultural sector could be dealing with, like weather. You know, we've got the Golddome here in Edmonton. Electricity and gas prices are making it very difficult for that businessperson. No control over that. Small businesspeople trying to import or have a cross-border business can't control the U.S. dollar, and it sure affects their business and certainly affects their ability to manage their risk. Acts of God, political insurrections in a country that produces tin, and we've got somebody that's trying to put Chinese food into tin cans. So there are all kinds of risks that my small businesspeople are doing their best to manage, and there's no assistance for them, but there is a great deal of assistance for the farm. So to me it's a question of equity. I keep raising this, and I've yet to see the government give me any kind of really solid response on that.

Let me be very clear here. I'm not saying that the agricultural sector doesn't deserve every penny they're getting. I'm not saying that, but I am saying that it's a question of equity. There's a lot of assistance for that group of small businesspeople who are trying to manage their risk but no assistance for another group of small businesspeople, that being my downtown small businesspeople, who are trying to manage their risk. So it's a question of equal treatment across Alberta.

Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, I'll try to very briefly answer that. Your small business sector can buy insurance against theft, fire, things like that. The weather is the farmer's fire and theft, and that's what they're protecting. There is no private insurance for agriculture. A farmer buys the same insurance on his house, pays probably more premium because he's away from a water supply, I can tell you that, doesn't have a hydrant in front of his house, pays the same insurance for his liability on his place, faces the same costs when you consider that most of the farm machinery is imported from the U.S. We gain overall as an economy on the export side, granted, but when he buys a John Deere tractor, it comes from the U.S. at a U.S. price. When he buys the parts for it, he does that. We don't insure him against that.

So I appreciate the concern. We support small business. Agriculture is the single largest manufacturing sector in this province. The single largest manufacturing sector. Most of it is small business, and much of it is in the city of Edmonton. The rural community does not have that side of it to a great degree. There are over a hundred companies in the city of Edmonton – I'll just use that because we're here – who value-add agricultural products and ship to over a hundred countries in the world. So it's a huge part of our economy. I mean, we could name some of them. Often we don't think about it, but you look at Cheemo, well known; Saxby Foods, very well known; and the list goes on and on. There are over a hundred companies in this city. Our value added last year went to $9.9 billion – that's doubled in 10 years – $8.9 billion on primary, almost doubled in that same time period of large growth, no question, in cattle. We are the largest cattle producing and processing province. We're the second largest agricultural producing exporter in Canada. I think that when we think about the size of our province, 10 percent of the population, and you consider that we're the second largest agricultural exporter, it speaks well to the business community in this province who develop the value added. We need to continue to have that good primary product for them to work with.

So I appreciate your concern, but we're mixing apples and oranges when we talk about it because the producer has those same risks. What we're talking about here is the weather risk and loss of production because of that, which is like a fire or a flood or something to them. If there was private insurance available, I can tell you the federal government and the provincial government would not be involved in insurance, and we've investigated that over and over again.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to start by complimenting the minister for displaying a very thorough knowledge of matters related to this portfolio. She certainly brings very vast experience as a cabinet minister and also as one who comes from a farming area of the province. So I'm delighted to hear someone talk with some degree of authority based on both firsthand knowledge and knowledge acquired when running a department which handles matters that really mean survival or collapse for lots of farmers and farming families.

As to my own knowledge with respect to Alberta agriculture it's very limited, I must confess, but I do come from a farming background. I grew up in a part of India that's known for its agricultural economy, a vibrant economy. The green revolution transformed it. I just visited there for two weeks last month, and now I know how the green revolution impetus has petered out. Added to that, the WTO-related uncertainties – and WTO has been signed by India – are causing a great deal of grief to family farms and family farmers. In Punjab and in many other parts of India as well farm indebtedness has become an absolutely huge problem.

Farming at the best of times, because of weather, because of markets, because of pestilence, and other problems, is always a risky business, and the kinds of risks involved with it are quite different for the producers and for the owners and for the investors. So there's a need for the kind of programs of both the federal government and the provincial government. Hopefully, many of them in collaboration with each other try to provide relief to not only families but also communities that rely on healthy agricultural production and activity.

In the rural areas of Alberta – and I'm sure we would all agree that we want to make sure the rural areas remain attractive places for Albertans to want to stay, not only aging Albertans but young Albertans – the economic health of small towns is very much dependent on the economic health of farms and farm families. There is symbiosis there: one exists in relation to the other to a large degree.

So I'm generally very impressed with what the minister has said, and I know that she has the best interests of the farming community at heart.

My questions have to do with the supplementary estimates related to the farm income disaster program. I understand that this $46,137,000 of extra money that's being asked for in the supplementary estimates is the result of the farm disasters that occurred from the widespread drought that has been experienced, and particularly this year just past it has been unprecedentedly dry weather that has hit our farmers in parts of Alberta and Saskatchewan and maybe – I don't know – some other parts of the prairies as well.

Now, some of the farmers perhaps have been hurt a lot more by this drought than others because the intensity of the drought has been variable across the province. The minister will add to my information, but my understanding is that areas north of Edmonton, particularly the northeast part of the province, have been most seriously hurt by this and areas south of here less so, but there have been scattered sort of affects of it. There's no uniform, whole region that might have been affected.

So this $46 million, I'm sure, has been channeled in the direction of the farmers who have been affected – farm families, corporations, and others – but my question is: was this money targeted, as this government normally does, to the most needy, to those who were most seriously affected by the disaster caused by drought, and if so, would the minister want to comment on how the targeting was done? What criteria were used? What regions were targeted? The number of family farms that received the assistance because they were most affected.

The second related question arises from the minister's observation that when this farm relief, this disaster relief was being provided, there was a great deal of concern expressed by some members of the Assembly, including perhaps my caucus, that much of this money would end up in the hands of large corporations, so she drew to the attention of the House in her remarks just 10, 15, 20 minutes ago that only 3 percent of the farms are owned by nonfamily corporations. I suppose that's the exact word to use.

Now, it may be the case that only 3 percent of the farms are owned by nonfamily corporations, but my question is: what overall arable area is owned by this 3 percent? We do know – and I think the minister would confirm it or contradict it – that concentration of ownership is a fact of life, and the rate at which the land resources are concentrating in the hands of fewer and fewer families or corporations is growing. The rate is picking up speed. So if she would comment on the percentage of ownership in terms of acreage; you know, whether it's mixed farming land, whether it's ranching, raising horses or beef cattle or whatever else. What percentage of that land is owned by the 3 percent? So if there is a disparity between the percentage of corporations, which is 3 percent, owning farmland and the area that they own, then I suspect that the minister would be able to tell me what portion of $46 million has gone to the 3 percent corporate-owned entities as distinct from the family-owned ones.

The third question that I have is based on my lack of knowledge on this, and I will ask this. Of the $75.5 million or $75.6 million that was originally budgeted for this particular item, farm income disaster program, do any of those funds come from the federal government as well? Will the new allocation, the $46 million supplementary that the minister is asking for, bring some more federal money as a matching fund, and if so, what would that be?

Maybe I can sit down and have the minister address these questions first.

Mrs. McClellan: There are two different programs that I think the hon. member is alluding to. One was a grant program that we did this summer in response to the drought, the $324 million that was distributed on an acreage basis, and it was distributed whether it was a seeded acre of crop or a pasture or a hay. So that was a different program.

FIDP is cost shared. The $324 million was not cost shared by the federal government. That was taken out of an emergency fund, and as you would recall, at the time we were facing a very huge concern about loss of breeding stock. Cattle were coming to the market in quite substantial numbers. I'm pleased to tell you that it would appear that our cattle numbers are down about only 10 percent. It was significant, I believe, and the people in that community tell me that it was significant in stopping the loss of our breeding herds, which is what we wanted to do. We had about 5.4 million cattle. We're about 5.2 million. Those are our figures. So that program was different.

Under those programs there always is a cap, and you cap the amount that an individual can have, and if it's a corporation, there's a limited number for that corporation, a cap on that too. I'll give you a written response explaining that part of the program to you.

Under FDIP. FDIP is triggered based on a significant loss in your income, and it's done on your tax form, so FDIP only responds a year out. So after you've done your tax forms, if you've had a significant loss, if you've dropped below 70 percent, then you can look at requesting a FDIP payment.

The federal government has participated in farm income disaster. They did give notice that they would no longer be involved in that. They announced that in June of this year and set aside some transition money to move to an improved NISA, net income stabilization account program, to eliminate the need for that. We're not quite there yet. We're still working on NISA. We're looking at a federal/provincial meeting later this month to try and conclude that. That net income stabilization account program would have a disaster component so that we could get away from these other programs, but we're not there yet.

Your question: did the federal government contribute? Yes. In fact, $37.3 million would come from the federal government. Because of the way we have to account for our dollars and our expenditures, we show this as a supplementary estimate to agriculture. The net draw on the GRF in this instance would be about $1.8 million, but you understand how we have to do our accounting.

So it is difficult when you have to do these ad hoc programs like we did with the $324 million. We think we distributed as fairly as we could. The administration of delivering that $324 million was around 1 percent, and I think that's fairly significant, and in fact some officials from the federal government commended us on it. They had had some experience and found that it was difficult to keep it under 20 percent when you get the complexity. So keeping it simple helped.

We also did an analysis on the program and found that the bulk of the money went to the most affected area. There was some discussion at the outset – you're right – that some areas that didn't need it got it. Well, you know, the year wasn't over when they got it, and I can tell you that some of the south, which is the very deep south, south of the No. 1 highway – there's an awful lot of Alberta on the other side of that – suffered some real problems with harvest, as did central Alberta. It's very unusual to be combining in December and January. I've been on a farm for 40 years, and I've only experienced it maybe once or twice, the same with spring. The only exception might have been some parts of the Peace River, and even they had some difficulties with harvest and suffered yield losses as well as quality. So I think that overall, while we knew it wasn't perfect and so did the producers, it came out as evenly as you can.

The other thing that was important to producers is that – actually the first farmer did have his cheque in nine days – we were able to distribute that money very quickly. So low administration, get it out fast, let people make a decision on their herds and what they're doing and so on. I think it worked, but it's not the best way. We prefer what we've done now: a good comprehensive safety net program, a good crop insurance program, a good hay and pasture program. We're saying to producers: "Look at these programs. Look at your operation. If you need a risk management tool, which means that you can't self-insure, then you had better take advantage of these because we are out of the business of ad hoc programs."

So good questions. I am going to give you a written answer on acreage because I think you'll want something just a touch more in-depth than acreage. Your corporate entity might be a hog operation; it might be a dairy; it might be a feedlot. So just giving you acreages wouldn't probably give you the answers you need. So I will give you that in writing and probably can even give you an indication of what part of production they represent as well. It's better to have the whole story when you're looking at those.

I was interested in your comments on your area in India because I had the pleasure of meeting with the agriculture representative – I'm not sure they call it minister – when I was at world trade talks, and we had a fair discussion on some of these challenges. It's always amazing how similar our challenges are. Although our farms are quite different, the challenges in these things are the same wherever you are in the world.

I'll respond more fully in writing.

Seniors

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Minister of Seniors next.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Back in June of 2002

the Alberta government and Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation signed the Canada/Alberta affordable housing agreement. The funding requested today, the supplementary appropriation, is for some $17 million. The net payout from the Alberta government is 8 and a half million dollars. The other 8 and a half million dollars are from the federal government. This is to implement the program for this current fiscal year.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of issues that I wanted to raise with the minister around this money. First of all, he and I have had a couple of go-rounds about whether this money was coming. When was it going to happen? Was it going to be new money? Blah, blah, blah. I think it was today actually – yes, there's officially an announcement about this money. It is new money. I'm just double confirming that. Yes, indeed, it is, which is what I thought, which is excellent. It will actually result in some new affordable housing and accommodation for Albertans. I've always believed that the province has got to step up to the plate and put money on the table to encourage this kind of thing, and I'm pleased to see that they are in fact doing it.

Now, the question I have is an accounting question. It may be easily answered by explaining that it has to run through the account. In fact, the government is putting up 8 and a half million dollars. The books are showing $17 million. Perhaps the minister can comment on whether the federal money may well be a reimbursement. Once the province shows that the money has gone out, they will be reimbursed for their share. Otherwise, why is the accounting showing $17 million going out? The minister is quite up front in admitting that, in fact, it's a matching. It's only $8.5 million.

As I always do, I'm checking the Auditor General's report, and the only hesitation there was that the ministry does not present consolidated reports, which would mean presenting the information, the audited statements, from all of the entities that it's responsible for, the revenue and expenses of management bodies, et cetera. That seems to be the only concern, and that's really not reflected in what we're seeing here.

So I'm very pleased, frankly, to see that this money is finally happening. It's certainly something that I've been asking for for some time. My big concern was that it wouldn't be new money, that the province would take the opportunity to say: well, you know, last year or this year we've already spent X amount of money building something else, and let's use that money to qualify. That was the concern that I continued to raise in question period with the minister – and I'm glad I did – and continued to press for. I'm very pleased to see what I'm seeing here.

If he could just answer that question about why it's appearing as $17 million when, in fact, the province is really only putting out $8.5 million. Unless the province pays up front and gets reimbursed by the feds.

Thanks very much.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Yeah. Thank you for your comments and observations. As I indicated to you when you were asking the questions along the way about the program, we entered into an agreement, and the understanding was quite clear, that the program was going to be straightforward, clean, mutual, administered by both the provincial and the federal governments, although it was tailored to meet our needs and the understanding was that it would be new cash. Because of the wrinkles that were going on, that you're well aware of, I felt that it was more prudent to proceed with the announcement when we had the money in hand, which was today. I thank you for your support.

Your observation as to how it works is probably accurate. We have to show it as a program because we're involved in it, but this doesn't show the source of the funding. That's why I made a point of saying that half of it is GRF; half is from the federal government. To be quite frank with you, as to whether the money is going to be through us or directly from them to the projects, I don't know. As you may well be aware, this is project driven, not a grant with no strings. We found this to be very successful in some of the other things that were done with SSHIP and HAPI, going with the project approach. So that's why we've taken that.

With respect to your comments the Auditor General – I do respect his observations – sometimes gets a little bit carried away as to how much should be consolidated. A lot of our management bodies manage one or two bits of property for us and have a considerable amount of their own property. We take very grave care to ensure that anything they manage on our behalf is documented, so it's all up front and we get our fair share and the whole thing. To try to consolidate all the bodies that we deal with, as was indicated there, would be quite unrealistic and would throw a lot of confusion into it. A better way of approaching it, which we do, is to show the net value of our assets regardless of who's managing them. As you know, I guess that virtually all of our projects, all of our inventory of whatever – $1.2 billion – is managed by outside bodies. So I feel very comfortable that we're quite clear on the province's bottom line, and I'll have those discussions once again with the Auditor, I'm sure.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. In speaking, the minister just twigged my mind to something else. The money is to be disbursed. It's project driven rather than just handing it out with no strings attached, as the minister explained. Is there a file folder with projects that have already been proposed that will now be examined for suitability to receive the money? I know that the ministry has worked fairly closely with the Edmonton land trust and, I believe, a similar organization in Calgary. Forgive me; I can't remember their name. Is that how some of the money will be distributed, going through to those two organizational management bodies that will then ensure that the projects are completed, or are there actually, as I say, applications that have already been forwarded to the minister and are awaiting some pot of money that would be available to them?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Yes. A good point. We have more than a sufficient number of projects in the file folder to proceed with distributing this money. A couple of things have to happen. One is that Canada Mortgage and Housing and us have to agree on the specific projects. When that's done, we'll just do it and forward it to whoever is going to be managing the project. There are more than enough to do with this $17 million already.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have just a few questions for the minister. There's a huge need, obviously, for affordable housing or low-income housing in this province, from Fort McMurray to Edmonton to Grande Prairie and other places. We are aware of it. I don't know if $17 million will make a real difference, but it certainly is a start. It's been long overdue, in my view.

The government did have the federal commitment for $67 million over five years, I think, in its hands for over a year now. The delay has been noted and caused concern among those who are looking for an affordable roof over their heads. I don't know if the minister is able to comment on whether or not the projects that will qualify, that are not only eligible but are finally selected for support – is there some sort of formula in terms of percentage of the overall cost of the project? Is there a cap on the amount of money that those projects will receive from this fund? That's my first question.

Second is whether or not these funds are going to be targeted for the communities in most need. I mentioned Fort McMurray. We know, first of all, that the definition of affordability is quite different, I guess, in a place like Fort McMurray than it might be in Red Deer or even here. So is there a plan that the minister has which will help him target these funds where they are most desperately needed and relieve the pressures with respect to affordable housing?

I understood the minister as saying that under this plan, under this supplementary estimate no project has as yet been funded and no project is currently underway. So this is all for the future. The minister will clarify it. He's shaking his head. I obviously didn't interpret what he said clearly.

The point that I have in mind is: is there some sort of time line when these projects must start and how soon they need to be finished? We are more than halfway through this winter, but certainly the next winter is not all that far away, and homeless Albertans, even the working poor who work day and night yet can't afford to really have affordable housing, would be interested in knowing if the minister has a plan which will get some of these projects underway and in process on an urgent basis.

Another question that I have, again in the minister's department: is there some sort of priority in terms of whether or not co-op housing comes first or a private investor willing to invest some money and then create some housing units for rent comes first? Is there some sort of priority list in terms of criteria that will help the minister to guide decisions with respect to priority that can be given to projects depending upon where they come from? Who are the organizations, institutions, or entities seeking to undertake these projects?

I'm unfamiliar with the general programs, so there's a question that the minister should, I guess, answer as information for someone who doesn't know enough about the way these things are done. Are the low-income residents in this affordable housing entitled to buy these spaces, or does it depend upon the individual project, or is there a uniform, standardized sort of policy that the department and the government have to promote certain kinds of affordable housing that would ultimately be available for ownership by those who originally may have moved into them for rent?

So these are some of the questions. The minister may want to seek some clarification on a question or two that I have asked. Really, I'm interested both in targeting the money and in time lines. What are the minister's thoughts on that?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you. The questions were good questions. The preamble was unfortunately very inaccurate. The agreement was signed nine months ago. There has been no delay. When the agreement was signed, I visited with the mayors of seven cities, and I got a consensus as to how the program would be delivered. It's not limited to the seven cities I visited. It's whatever community. There was no delay, quite frankly. It's just a matter now that the funding is in place, and you'll see that the question you could have asked is: how would you distribute it in 30 days, so to speak? Well, it's not a problem because we've been working on this since the agreement was in place.

It is a provincial program. Local people determine in consultation with us the varying levels of what constitutes affordability, because you're absolutely correct: what's affordable in one community is very different in another one. I would suspect that the majority of the units will be directed toward the rental market, although not restricted to the rental market. This will go on a project-by-project basis; however, the units, to qualify for funding, must remain affordable for 20 years, which means that anybody buying it would have some sort of life lease or something on there so that you couldn't use these properties to speculate. They have to remain available for affordable housing. Those kinds of criteria might vary from community to community, depending on who's administering it and what they feel is the best need for it. The maximum amount that would be given is $50,000 per door, per unit, if you will: 25 and 25. That's the maximum. We expect that to lever moneys.

We invite the private sector and the municipalities to participate with us on the same rules as anybody else. So it's wide open, provided the basic criteria are met, and that is that the units must be affordable. There will not be operational subsidies from the government, so they have to have a method in there that these units will be self-sustaining for operations and the provincial priorities are addressed. The focus will be on the areas of highest need provincially, so it's not going to be per capita, say. It's based on need.

There is one project that the particular people, who are municipal people, are involved in and have already started it with the hope that they will get help. They've front ended the moneys, and we'll certainly be looking down to them and treat them appropriately. We will, in effect, become partners in this, and they have chosen to put in their portion. As I indicated, $50,000 doesn't buy a whole unit, period. So they've taken the risk on their own of going ahead with some very appropriate housing in the community. I won't go on to mention it here. I should speak with them first before I say it.

So in answer to your question "Has something started," yes. Have we got others ready to go? Yes. The only thing is we do have to work closely with CMHC on announcements and things like that because they are funding partners with us.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, minister, for addressing almost all of my questions. I've got one additional one. The number of units that the minister thinks can be funded from this current supplementary estimate that he has asked the Assembly to approve: does he have an estimate of what the total number of units are that he might be able to fund from this?

Mr. Woloshyn: I'm getting, I guess, to the point where sometimes I forget numbers, but if you divide 50 into 17 million, that's a minimum number of units because the $50,000 support from the government is a maximum, if you follow me. So if you just divide 50 into 17 million you'll find the minimum number of units this money will buy.

Sustainable Resource Development

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll do my presentation, and if time allows, then no doubt the opposition or whoever may ask questions or make comments, and if time doesn't allow for me to answer the questions, then my staff is here and we'll go through Hansard and do it in writing. As minister responsible for Sustainable Resource Development I'm here today to explain to you the need for supplementary estimates to our budget. These estimates relate to two areas mainly, fire protection and regulation of the confined feeding operations, which was moved to my department just over a year ago.

First of all, I'll touch on the forest fire area. Last year, of course, Alberta had one of the worst wildfire seasons ever, I believe, in 133 years largely due to severe drought and persistence of drought over a number of years. There were over 1,450 fires. In addition to that, it burnt over 496,000 hectares of forest land. The wildfire, in addition, threatened more than seven communities and led to the evacuation of about 2,000 Albertans, mainly in the Fort McMurray area. Our forecasted expenditures to the end of this fiscal year now total $317 million, resulting in an anticipated shortfall of about $18.7 million. So I ask for your support in granting these funds so we can meet our business plan priorities and objectives for protecting our forests.

The second area I want to cover very briefly is the confined feeding operations, and I'll try and do it reasonably quickly, Mr. Chairman. The new responsibility, of course, in this particular area was moved to my department in January of 2002, and it's just a bit over a year ago. At the time we decided not to allocate new dollars. We were being prudent, I guess, and wanted to see what demand existed in the first place, and demand, of course, is very significant. Over the past year the NRCB had received an extremely large volume of applications. So our projection of operating costs to fiscal year-end are now at $4.9 million, which leaves a shortfall of $2 million. The NRCB will use $1.6 million from the cash surplus they had, which leaves an additional funding of $400,000. So I ask for your support in these requests.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll start with the moneys asked for for the feedlots. When you talk about demand, what are you actually talking about there? Is this hearings, public hearings, enforcing the regulations, or so on? Also, then, given what you now know about last year, in next year's budget are you going to project what you think is a fair amount of costs associated with keeping this part of the department running?

On the forest fires I just want to make a few comments. Yes, last year was an exceptionally tough year for fires, and we have always supported the request for dollars for fighting fires in this province, and we'll continue to do so. In fact, we had a unique experience in our family last year. My son went to work at the staging area in Lac La Biche and worked as a roustabout to see what it's like to work in that kind of a situation and had a very enjoyable experience working on the front lines, so to speak, or close to the front lines and working with department officials. So thank you for that.

I think that the fires in general are well handled. I'm a little concerned as we continue to see drought conditions again for the next year, and it looks like large fires in this province aren't going away. So I'm a little concerned that in the long term we create a fiefdom within the department that's for fire suppression, and I think it's really important that we have adequate benchmarks to be able to measure performance, particularly performance related to costs and cost overruns. So I'm hoping that we'll see some of that or have some discussion of that in next year's budget. I think that fire suppression could become a department of its own within the government, and we just want to make sure that we're getting the very best value for our dollars that we can. So far it hasn't seemed to me to be a problem, but I think it's time for a warning flag to go up.

Those are all the questions I have on that area. If we could just take those under advisement, if you don't mind, Mr. Minister, because I really do have a question for the Minister of Economic Development that I would like to put on the record, at least, even if he doesn't have the opportunity to speak to it in the couple of minutes that we have left.

Thank you.

Economic Development

Ms Carlson: It's only $4 million that Economic Development is asking for, Mr. Chairman, but they're asking for it in marketing, so with the kind of explanation we have so far in this department, it looks like a lot of money for beer and pizza. So we're hoping that there are some actual benchmarks and that we can get a description from the minister of where that money is coming. In fact, I would like a little more than a two-minute description, if we can, on why it is that these weren't dollars that were originally asked for within last year's budget and some specifications in terms of where the money is going to be spent and how you're going to judge the value of how that money is spent. So if I could get a short note on that from the minister sometime in the near future, that would be very beneficial. He's nodding in agreement with that.

So I do very much appreciate this minister staying here to share his comments. We've nearly run out of time. Looking forward to the written information and also from Sustainable Resource Development, who has agreed to provide that information in writing to us.

With that, we have only about a minute left, Mr. Chairman, so we'll conclude debate on estimates this afternoon.

Mr. Norris: Well, I would just like to say, Mr. Chairman, that having heard some of the comments, I will be very happy to provide the information to the hon. member, but the reference to beer and pizza I find somewhat offensive. If we're going to spend any kind of money for the taxpayers of Alberta, it certainly wouldn't be on that, and I will provide her with it, but at the outset the money is going to be used to promote one of the greatest industries we have in Alberta, which is the tourism industry. It's going to go, in consultation with the industry, to the places it should, and it's money well spent on behalf of the taxpayers of Alberta.

Vote on Supplementary Estimates 2002-03 General Revenue Fund, No. 2

The Chair: Okay. We don't have to give the comment about pursuant to Standing Order 59(2). We have, then, for our consideration the supplementary estimates, No. 2, for the year 2002-2003. It is now quarter after 5 in the afternoon, so we take the whole estimates in one lump form, although it does refer to the departments that have already been referred to and those that are in the document.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House several bright, young, alert, attentive, and very inquisitive students from one of the best schools in Mill Creek, and that would be Julia Kiniski. I would ask that they rise with their teacher, Mr. Don Douglas, and other helpers to receive the very warm welcome of all members of this Assembly. Thank you for coming.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, want to rise on this beautiful Alberta day and welcome some of the best and brightest in the province of Alberta from the riding of Edmonton-McClung, students from Good Shepherd school. They're accompanied here today by their teacher/group leaders Mrs. Doreen Neuls and Ms Val Newgard, as well as parent helpers Ms Lise Prosser and Mrs. Pat Davidson. I would like them to rise and please receive the warm welcome of the gallery. Welcome to the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of our Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose I would like to introduce 35 students from the Battle River home and school camp and their group leader, Mr. Richard Schultz. At this time I'd like to have them rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 25 energetic students from Sturgeon composite high school. They are accompanied by their teachers Mr. Norman Zweifel and Mr. Ron Haskell. They're seated in both members' and public galleries. I'd please ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly nine visitors from Alberta Revenue who are taking part in a public service orientation tour. This is to acquaint everybody a little more with the operations of the Legislative Assembly. I'll ask them to stand: John Mathias, Warren Regehr, Jennifer Smart, Brandy Stefanyk, Kim Le, Irena Luciw, Tanya Holmes, Doug Stratton, and Justin Chow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you three guests who are seated in the members' gallery. Last Thursday a new Canadian play, Einstein's Gift, premiered on the Citadel's Maclab stage, and my guests are here as a result of the premiere. My first guest is Vern Thiessen, who is artistic associate of dramaturgy, and play development at the Citadel Theatre. He's president of the Playwrights Guild of Canada and a board member of the Edmonton Arts Council. His play Einstein's Gift received its world premiere at the Citadel Theatre. This talented Albertan, a grad of the U of A, has written for stage, radio, and television for over 15 years.

My second guest is Bob Baker, artistic director of the Citadel Theatre, a position he's held since 1999. He's been nominated for and been the recipient of numerous awards including the Sterling and Dora. As a result of his strong leadership, the Citadel Theatre is considered by many Canada's leading theatre.

Finally, my third guest is Sol Rolinger, QC, officer of the Order of St. John, recipient of the Queen's jubilee medal, and known by many in this Assembly. He's a senior partner in the 108-year-old law firm of Duncan & Craig, which counts in its namesake the first Minister of Justice of the province of Alberta in 1905, Charles Cross, and the first mayor of the city of Edmonton in 1904, William Short. Mr. Rolinger has many public faces, including that of a member of the board of governors at the Citadel Theatre.

Gentlemen, would you please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I am really very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly – a moment ago there were two people sitting up there that I was going to introduce, but I will refer to the second person anyway. I would like to say that in Calgary-West we produce only the best. The person who has left momentarily, Gord Olsen, is an outgoing executive director of the southern Alberta office of the Premier, and I suspect he's out maybe already doing work as a consultant. That would be his next career. The person that is left sitting there, very important to us, brings wonderful people and business skills to his new job as executive director of the southern Alberta office of the Premier. I'm sure that everyone he works with, whether politicians or citizens, will feel that they were well heard. Rich Jones, would you please – and you are; see how keen he is – rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege and a pleasure for me today to be able to once again introduce a number of Alberta's finest firefighters who are here from all over the province today to watch us while we negotiate our way through Bill 202. They're in the public gallery. I'll ask them to stand as I call their names. They are: Gord Colwell, president of the Alberta Fire Fighters Association; Scott Wilcox, president of the Calgary Fire Fighters Association; Wayne Johnson, president, Lethbridge Fire Fighters Association; Brent Shelton, vice-president, Lethbridge Fire Fighters Association; Ken Block, president of the Edmonton Fire Fighters Association; Wayne Hudson, president, Grande Prairie Fire Fighters Association; Steve Larsen, vice-president, Grande Prairie Fire Fighters Association; Kim Smyth, president, St. Albert Fire Fighters; Tim Stewart, vice-president, St. Albert Fire Fighters. Then we have Mr. Paul Wyndham, the original firefighter in Alberta to collect benefits from WCB, who is with us today, Greg Holubowich, Dale McLean, Brian Davies, Dan Carmichael, Paul McGonigal, Bill Quinn, Rollie Bullerkist, Fred Hermary, Tim Casavant, Larry Walsh, Lorne Corbett, Greg Tanouye, Steve Spiegelmann, and Ron Polutnik. I see they're all standing. I'd ask that this House give them the warm welcome that we're known for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature in the members' gallery Mr. Ed Campbell, a member of the Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation of Edmonton, who is here representing hundreds of Edmonton volunteers. Mr. Speaker, they literally work day and night to improve the safety and security of communities battling the devastating effects of street prostitution. I'd ask that Ed please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Prices

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government promised during the election to protect Albertans from the skyrocketing costs of natural gas. Albertans already know firsthand the fatal flaws that went into the policy. The only solution this government has is to advise Albertans to turn down the thermostat and put on a sweater. My first question is to the Premier. Does your government practice what it preaches? Have you in your office turned down the thermostat and put on a sweater?

Mr. Klein: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do quite often in my own office. As a matter of fact, in my own home I do it as well. My wife keeps the temperature at about 67 degrees, I think. Notwithstanding my complaints, I have to put up with it because she is very strong on conservation. My wife will attest that, indeed, we take very strict conservation measures. She even makes me turn off the little flashing light on the computer because, apparently, there's a power drain there. She is very, very conscious of electricity bills. So, yes. The answer is yes. Yes, we take all the conservation measures that we possibly can in our house and in my office, and I encourage all Albertans and the hon. member to take whatever conservation measures they can and he can to reduce the cost of electricity and the cost of heat – it only makes sense – and to make a contribution to the Kyoto accord, as flawed as it is, to make an effort at the reduction of greenhouse gases, which we all want to do, but we want to do it in a responsible and reasonable way.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, not only are we requiring people and asking people to take conservation measures, as all people should; we have implemented a special-needs program on a temporary basis to now include rising utility costs for low-income seniors. I would remind the hon. member that as a result of the rebate program that was put in and because we didn't want to continue with ad hoc hocking this particular situation, we introduced legislation that said that if on an annual basis natural gas reaches $5.50 a gigajoule, then rebates would kick in. That is clearly announced in regulations, which were publicized on the government network – what is it? – www.gov.ab.ca.

Mr. MacDonald: My next question is to the Minister of Seniors. How long will it take from the time an Alberta senior applies for the special-needs assistance program to help with their high utility costs before that application is filed and they will receive any money? Will it be July, or will it be August so that they can pay for their air conditioning unit?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, I really resent his tone. It shows how insensitive and ill-informed he is. The special-needs program is directed at seniors who have difficulty balancing their incomes against ongoing expenses, and we have had this program for some time. We've expanded it to include the increase in utility costs as of 11 o'clock this morning. People who have applications in the mail will be getting cheques very quickly, and hopefully we'll be able to stay within our time line of three weeks between the receipt of application and cheques being mailed out. However, I expect a bit of a run on this, so there might be slight delays.

In answer to his rather foolish comments, the program has started now, is effective immediately, and hopefully will reach needy seniors within the week, if you will.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of insensitive and uninformed, my third question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that you promised Albertans that deregulation would bring lower energy prices, why are we now paying some of the highest bills in North America?

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the preamble, of course, is incorrect, which we have to correct. That promise was not made by me that we would have lower energy prices. I have always said that competition will bring new generation, will also bring the competition, and we will have the lowest possible prices that the market will allow us to bring.

Let me also say that, in fact, Albertans have been conserving and Albertans have responded. Today ATCO, the utility for natural gas, Mr. Speaker, has implemented a budget plan where people who have paid, say, for example, $80 a month on their budget plan now will pay about $103, and it can be budgeted over a 12-month period, with the consumption being 60 percent in the short term. Also good news for Albertans is that ATCO has said that conservation has created about a 10 percent reduction in natural gas demand across this province over the last two years, so in fact Albertans are practising what they preach.

Low-income Albertans

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, leaving Albertans to choose between heat and food is only the latest example of this government's lack of concern for low-income earners. There is no Alberta advantage for tens of thousands of Albertans. My first question is the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why does someone making $16,000 a year pay six times more of their salary to health care premiums compared to someone making over $100,000?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'll have to take the information in the member's question under advice. However, I can say that health care premiums provide a significant amount of revenue for the functioning of our health care system. To the best of my recollection about $900 million a year is collected through health care premiums. We use that money to fund a $19 million a day health care system, a total of nearly $7 billion. Albertans understand the value of the health care system. They do contribute to it directly through health care premiums but also through other sources of revenue that accrue to the provincial government, including income taxes. People do acknowledge that this is a valuable system and that they contribute to it, and that is the reason why we have health care premiums.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the Minister of Learning. Why, when parents can't afford extracurricular activities such as field trips, are their children denied an equal opportunity to learn?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we pride ourselves on in Alberta is that all students have opportunities and equal opportunities to learn. One of the reasons why we eliminated the ability for the school boards to tax was so that everyone would have equal opportunity, something we pride our students on, something we pride our system on in this province.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, my third question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Given that MLA salaries are indexed to inflation, why aren't AISH and SFI rates tied to inflation? Those people haven't seen an increase for 10 years.

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, there's an important fundamental here that we all have to be aware of, and that is the fact that the philosophy of this government is that we will provide a hand up and not handouts. The other defining philosophy that we operate under is the fact that people should be better off working than on assistance. So everything that we do is geared toward moving people from temporary assistance, then, through skills training and into the workplace. You will note from our budgets over time that we devote a tremendous amount of our budget toward the skill training areas.

I want to reaffirm today and to make sure that everyone understands that our supports for independence program as it now exists is a program of last resort and it is a temporary resort, and the benefit levels, then, are geared in order to continue to provide the incentive for people to get trained and to get into the workplace.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

1:50 Capital Regional Health Authority Board

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the new Capital health region more than twice as many people live in the city of Edmonton as elsewhere in the region, and every major facility is in Edmonton. Yet on the new region's board, handpicked by this government, the people of Edmonton only have half the per capita representation as people from outlying areas. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: did the Edmonton government caucus make a formal presentation to him on the membership of the Capital region health board, and if so, will he table it in the Legislature?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that, first of all, there are fine facilities that exist in the newly drawn Capital health region that are outside of the city of Edmonton. One example – and the member may have recalled this – is that the Leduc facility was at one time outside the Capital health region, and when it was brought into the Capital health region, hundreds of surgeries were moved from overburdened facilities in the city of Edmonton to a very good facility out in Leduc, that has a good infrastructure and solid staff, surgeons, health care providers out there, and that has helped the people of Edmonton in relieving some of the wait lists that existed in facilities in the city of Edmonton.

On the subject of health board appointments there were previously approximately 189 people on our 17 health boards. Of that, 126 were elected individuals; the balance were appointed. Mr. Speaker, in going to nine regions, we now have 111 members who sit on those regional health authorities. Sixty-five of them were previously elected, and 46 of them were previously appointed. I can assure you that the people who were put on the Edmonton Capital health region board are outstanding people. We recognize that there must be representation from the areas outside the city of Edmonton in order to have a functioning regional health authority that operates like a system as opposed to a mere collection of facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. It seems the minister has confirmed another failure of the Tory government caucus.

To the Premier: how does this government explain to Edmontonians that each of their voices on the Capital health board are now worth only half as much as voices from outlying areas?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you don't explain it that way. You explain it in such a way that a regional health authority is to provide for the health needs of a region and that the region is appropriately represented. Governance is important. Administration of the system is important. But what is important to Martha and Henry is that health care is there for them when they need it. That is what is important, and that's what we stress.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How does he justify eliminating five out of 12 Edmonton members from the Capital health board?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say that the 189 people that I referred to earlier in answering the member's first question, without exception, I found that those people, whether they were previously appointed or previously elected, have been people who have been of character, who've brought passion to health care, who've been constructive. So the first thing that I want to do is thank all of them for having served on our previous 17 regional health boards.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, in moving from 17 health regions to nine health regions and amalgamating a number of regions, in order to do so, clearly we had to reduce the number of overall members serving on regional health authorities. As I indicated, we went from 189 to 111, but if you look at the numbers, 126 were previously elected out of 189, roughly two-thirds. Now we have 65 out of 111 who were previously elected, again roughly two-thirds. We have preserved a balance of bringing in the interests of all people, both in urban areas as well as in rural areas. We've struck a balance with respect to the number of people who are elected and appointed. We've got a more efficient and effective system in nine regions than we had with 17, and it's for that reason that we've made the decisions that we have.

Natural Gas Prices

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, the government's deregulation policies are tailor-made for foreign companies like Direct Energy while shafting Alberta electricity and natural gas consumers. The gang that gave us the highest power prices in Canada is looking for a repeat performance in natural gas. Later today I will table internal government documents showing that the government's proposed rule changes for natural gas utilities will in fact drive up costs to consumers. My question is to the Minister of Energy. After breaking a promise to provide natural gas rebates, why is the government rubbing salt in Albertans' wounds by introducing changes that will drive Martha's and Henry's natural gas bills even higher?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act is a policy that was put in place after 2001. Its threshold price is 5 percent below what was achieved in 2001. The government has taken very active measures to move on protection of seniors, protection of low-income Albertans, protection of families in need. Throughout this debate people have asked for options and choices about how to purchase their natural gas, whether they want to purchase it on a two-year, a three-year, or a five-year basis. The gas utilities amendment act will in fact offer Albertans those choices.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how can the minister claim that the proposed changes to natural gas utilities won't either drive up costs or are a direct response to consumer demand when this is directly contradicted by an internal document dated December 24, 2002, a Christmas Eve lump of coal, that states that costs will in fact go up? In addition, the government has produced no evidence that consumers are demanding choice.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, we will look at the tabled document, and we'll take it under advisement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last question to the same minister: why is the government pursuing changes to natural gas utility policies that both government bureaucrats and the Consumers' Coalition say will both drive up costs and increase the likelihood of billing errors?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, natural gas has been deregulated in this province since 1985. This is, in fact, the last piece of that 17-year process. Throughout that time, people have bought natural gas on the spot rate or they've used the budget plan. This bill will allow people to purchase natural gas on a long-term contract, allow them to integrate it with electricity purchases, allow it to integrate with furnace cleaning services and furnace maintenance, computerized thermostat services. There will be more choices in the marketplace for Albertans.

As to the prospect, Mr. Speaker, of lower prices, prices here are now more expensive than they are in Ontario. People will then be able to exercise their own choice and be able to make their own determination about how they want to buy this commodity called natural gas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

2:00 Regional Health Authorities' Billings

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the release of the Deloitte & Touche review of the Lakeland regional health authority's financial situation, Lakeland and Health and Wellness officials have rerun the numbers and have identified to date nearly $1.6 million in government underfunding. As they reviewed the import/export funding between Lakeland and Capital health, they found that Capital has been overbilling Lakeland on a yearly basis for inpatient and ambulatory services. Some claim that the overbillings could be in the tens of millions of dollars. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is the minister aware of these overbillings, and if so, has he asked the Auditor General to review?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to lay to rest any suggestion that either the Capital health authority or another large health authority, such as the Calgary health region, would intentionally try to overbill any of the regional health authorities outside of those two areas for services that have been provided.

There may be good examples, Mr. Speaker, of why for medical reasons a rural region whose patient has come into one of these larger health regions would be charged more than once for the same patient. For example, for the sake of efficiency a number of different procedures may be done on a single day for a particular patient, and it's for that reason that there may be multiple charges for a single patient visit on a particular day.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having said that, from time to time there can be errors made in the billings, and given the number of patients who travel from rural health authorities to the larger centres, there may be errors. So, for example, in one case in the Capital health region it was disclosed that a number of procedures, some 20 of them – I believe it was for angiograms – had been recorded on a single day as having been done to a single patient. It turned out that those angiograms were in fact done on a number of different days, but they were recorded on a single day, which was clearly in error.

We have completed a review, Mr. Speaker. We find that there has been approximately $1.3 million in total for all 17 health regions and the two provincial health boards, and we will rectify that. Keep in mind, however, that that would be out of a total budget for regional health authorities of some $4 billion. No, we have not asked the Auditor General to investigate this further.

Mr. Ducharme: To the same minister: as the minister has just confirmed that overbilling by Capital health has occurred in all the other rural health authorities, how will the minister reimburse these affected health authorities?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to reply to that. As I said, we did review other regions, and, yes, we did find examples of similar situations. Now, I want to say first and foremost that the errors have been corrected and that funding levels are adjusted accordingly. In addition to this, regions will be compensated for the year currently 2002-2003. In addition, we have implemented corrective procedures, as have all the regions. As an example, the Department of Health and Wellness has implemented stricter guidelines on how services are coded, and the Capital health region also has made changes to its reporting system to avoid exactly these kinds of errors in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: as the overbillings are a very, very serious allegation, will the minister reconsider his decision to not ask the Auditor General to investigate rather than just simply accepting a departmental review?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, this has not strictly been a departmental review. This has been a review that has been done with the health authorities working with us, and while allegations of overbilling are serious, I can assure again the hon. member and members of this House that this is not an intentional effort on the part of any regional health authority but that we should expect errors to occur. We should try our best to minimize those errors from time to time. One point three million dollars in a $4 billion regional health authority budget strikes me as being, while important, relatively modest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Operational Costs for Learning Ministry Committees

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year when Edmonton public schools announced a budget crisis, the Ministry of Learning responded by sending in a team of auditors. When the Official Opposition requested information with respect to the cost of Learning department committees, the minister's response was that such information was not readily available. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why is it so difficult for the minister to keep track of committee costs within his own department?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, what the hon. member from the opposition asked me for were things such as the Alberta Vocational College committee, the committee that was designed back probably nine or 10 years ago to look at the dissolution of the Alberta vocational colleges into the existing Bow Valley College and NorQuest College. So it is not that it is difficult. What it is is very time consuming. It would require a lot of resources from my department. Could we do it? Yeah, we could do it, but quite frankly we would sooner take those moneys and put it into the classroom, put it into kids, where it's needed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how can the minister lead by example with school boards when he can't keep track of costs within his own department?

Dr. Oberg: I'll repeat my first answer, Mr. Speaker. It's quite easy to do. We can do it, but it is going to be very cost intensive. You know, in talking to the hon. member and with some of the questions that have been asked, I'm sure that they would much sooner have dollars spent in the classroom.

Mr. Speaker, the other issue here is that a lot of the work that's done, as much work as possible, is done by members of my own department with their own salaries. They are on salary. It is not included in the cost of the committees. So, again, could we do it? Yeah, we could do it. Is it very expensive? Yes, it's very expensive and very time consuming to do. Do we want to do that? No. We would much sooner put those dollars in the classroom.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: does the minister not think it would be better to put his own fiscal house in order before trying to give school boards budget advice?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, our financial and fiscal house is very much in order, and there is absolutely no doubt about this. Again, as I say, obviously the opposition member wants us to spend money – needless administrative dollars, bureaucratic dollars – that we could put in the classroom.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Softwood Lumber Policy

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The media reported last week on developments in the softwood lumber discussions between Canada and the U.S. Specifically, there's been much talk about a draft policy bulletin being prepared by the U.S. Department of Commerce. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Could the minister please explain what this draft policy bulletin means to Alberta and whether it signals an end to the softwood lumber dispute?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, the draft policy bulletin sets the rules for changed circumstances reviews under U.S. law which the U.S. Department of Commerce would follow. Under the proposed rules provinces that show they have made significant market-oriented changes in their forest management systems would have the countervailing duties against their softwood lumber exports eliminated. Each province would have to study its system to determine what changes might be needed and whether they are prepared to make them. Further, those changes would have to be made and implemented before requesting a changed circumstances review.

It's important to understand that at this point the policy bulletin is still in its draft form. The U.S. still needs to publish the draft policy bulletin for consideration by the public for 30 days before it can be finalized. Until the final bulletin is published, it is too early to say whether this process will provide a basis for any province to request and be successful in a changed circumstances review.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, it is our view that the development of this document, which will be there in black and white, does indicate progress in the overall dispute and holds the potential for, after further discussion, leading to some resolution of the matter.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you. My next question to the same minister. The minister indicated that the policy bulletin could result in a long-term solution, but it may not result in an immediate end to the duties. What are the possibilities of an interim solution in the meantime while we wait for this to happen?

Mr. Jonson: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is an issue here, and that is that there is the possibility of an interim solution if there was agreement from the American negotiating powers that be, number one, that the money they have that has been collected from Canadian producers by the United States government, in the area of $1 billion, would be returned. That's one stipulation that has to be there. Secondly, the proposal is that the Canadian government would be required to collect a tax or a levy on softwood lumber at certain levels here in Canada.

On those two particular points, Mr. Speaker, there has not been agreement thus far, and the matter will have to be revisited. There will have to be some type of bridging mechanism which provides for a reasonable export tax levied by the Canadian government or through the provinces. Lastly, of course, there would have to be the return of that some one billion dollars that has been collected to this point in time during this dispute.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you. My final question this afternoon is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. How open is the government to changing our forest management system so that we have the option of participating in a changed circumstances review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, like I've said before in the House, forestry continues to play a very important role in our economy in the province. We will of course continue to consult with industry as we move forward through the softwood lumber negotiations, and we will study the final proposal put forward by the U.S. Of course, we will not be making any quick decisions, because we feel that we have a very secure tenure system here in Alberta, and that is how we get investment. We have our forest management agreements, which are long term, and we are not willing to put those on the table as far as negotiation because that's what creates the stability in our forest industry here in Alberta. I can say over and over again in this House, like I've said before, that we do have sound management practices in our forests. We have lots to be proud of.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Assisted Care Facility Review

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. A paralyzed 72-year-old man died in an Edmonton extended care centre in December after his ventilator became disconnected and no one responded to multiple alarms. The minister of health was widely quoted at the time saying that the Health Facilities Review Committee would investigate. More recently he stated in a letter to a seniors' group that the Capital health authority would investigate. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness: so which agency is investigating this tragic and preventable death?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, this is a tragic death. I can say that the Mill Woods facility is under the jurisdiction of the Capital health region. The region does have the resources and the expertise to conduct a full and impartial investigation into this matter. Of course, should their review disclose that there was any criminal wrongdoing, the expectation would be that it would be turned over to the appropriate police authorities.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the Capital health authority's first responsibility would be to share the results of their review with the family of the individual who died, and thereafter I would expect the Capital health region to then share the results of their investigation with me. At that time I will determine if there should be any other steps taken in this matter.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. This next question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Given that under section 35(1) of the Fatality Inquiries Act the Justice minister has the power to order an inquiry into a death, will the Minister of Justice commit today to do so for this case?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. The minister of health has outlined a process which ought to be undertaken first before we go to any question of a fatality review inquiry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the minister of health: given that this is the third suffocation death at that facility alone in recent years, what is the health minister going to do about this problem?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I've already outlined the process which will be undertaken in this particular case of the circumstances of the man who died outdoors last year. I should note that the Capital health region has informed me that the family of the patient who did die last year agrees that there was no wrongdoing involved in this particular incident.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Seniors' Utility Costs

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think there is a member in this Assembly that is not concerned about seniors on fixed incomes as it relates to the rising utility costs. The Minister of Seniors has just announced plans to help seniors with rising utility costs. My question is to the Minister of Seniors. Is this a new program? How much assistance will be available, and is it available to all seniors in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The program is the special-needs program. What we've added to it is the ability to look at seniors' expenses by including increasing utility costs. That's the portion that's new. I think that it's very important to remember that it is not a rebate program, and quite frankly, in keeping with our focus on helping the people that are most needy, the program is not universal to all seniors in the province.

Cell Phone Use

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, using a cell phone while operating a motor vehicle is a dangerous exercise. Albertans know this both intuitively and from experiences on their roads and highways. Despite this, on March 11 of last year this government defeated a bill that would have made it illegal to use handheld cell phones while operating a motor vehicle, and five months later Kristen MacDonald was killed by a trucker trying to find his ringing cell phone in his vehicle. To the Minister of Transportation: what specific strategies has the minister's department taken since the legislation was defeated to conduct studies within the province to determine the impact of cell phone use on highway safety?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to make one correction. The legislation that the hon. member is referring to was a private member's bill that was brought forward, and it wasn't government legislation.

With regard to what we are doing in terms of the Ministry of Transportation, we're working with other provinces, looking at the evidence that's coming forward in a number of studies, one that was done in the province of Quebec. There are also a few studies coming from various American states with respect to cell phone use and their relation to distractions on the highway.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, given that scientific studies have determined that people are four times as likely to be involved in a motor vehicle accident if they are using a cell phone and given that up to 6 percent of all motor vehicle accidents are attributable to cell phone-related distractions, when – when? – is this government going to reintroduce legislation to ban cell phone use in motor vehicles?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the government didn't introduce the legislation. So we won't be reintroducing any legislation because it wasn't introduced in the first place.

However, with respect to distractions on highways, there's a list of various distractions that occur, ranging from changing music on a CD to reaching for cigarettes, drinking coffee, eating, pets in the vehicle, as well. So there are a number of distractions. However, with the introduction of the new highway Traffic Safety Act and increased penalties, we will be able to enforce a lot of these distractions much better.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. What will it take for this government to confront this ongoing and critical safety issue?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with the introduction of the new highway Traffic Safety Act, which comes into effect May 20, the act will address significantly increased fines in those areas that have come up as most devastating in terms of fatalities and accidents. There is an area with respect to distractions on the highway. There are also issues that we're going to cover in terms of the number of pedestrians that have been killed on Alberta highways, securement of load, vehicle changes, et cetera, and I believe that with the introduction of the new legislation and proper enforcement, awareness, and also education, we'll be able to reduce the number of incidents.

2:20 Regional Health Authority Boards

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, in October 2001 Albertans elected those they wished to be in charge of running their public health care system. This past Friday these elected representatives were fired without cause halfway through their mandate. The minister has been saying that Albertans don't care whether health boards are elected or appointed. Albertans are outraged about this trashing of local democracy. To the minister: will the minister level with Albertans and admit that elected health boards were scrapped because they stood in the way of the Tory agenda to further health care privatization?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think I've answered this question when asked by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and I wish to reiterate that of the 111 people who will now serve on our nine regional health authorities, 65 were previously elected. I really want to emphasize again that prior to elections we did have all appointed boards. There were examples in the elections of October 2001, referred to by the hon. member, where an entire board was acclaimed, and the people who ran were the very same people who had been previously appointed.

So I wish to say that we have some confidence in the people that we have selected. They have been selected on good criteria, people who were selected for their experience in dealing with large organizations, with their community ties, their ability to speak passionately and effectively and constructively on the issue of health care reform, that understood the needs of local representatives throughout the entire health region.

We should say, Mr. Speaker, that we have the best health care system in all of Canada, and our expectation is that we will continue to do so.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, my next question is also to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How can the government justify giving local Tory MLAs veto power over who is handpicked to serve on appointed regional health boards from the hundreds of elected members who were dismissed in the first place?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the member and all Albertans that political stripe was not a relevant criteria for selection to regional health authorities.

The further point that I wish to make is on the issue of accountability. Mr. Speaker, who do Albertans hold accountable for the health care system? The fact is that they hold us, members of the government, accountable for the health care system. Why is that? It's because we collect the taxes, and we distribute the money that is used by our health care system, so that accountability ultimately rests with government MLAs.

Dr. Pannu: My final supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is to the Deputy Premier. Given the government's callous and arrogant dismissal of local democracy, when does the government plan to replace elected school trustees with Tory appointees, thereby further undermining local democracy?

Mrs. McClellan: We'll let the Minister of Learning answer.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have absolutely no intention of eliminating school trustees. The school trustees do a very good job. What the hon. member seems to forget is that in Alberta we have very close to 2,000 schools as opposed to 100 hospitals. The school trustees do an excellent job at the grass roots, and there's no intention to get rid of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Utility Costs for Low-income Albertans

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans are affected by the rising cost of utilities. However, those who are most affected by it and with the least ability to deal with those changes are individuals on fixed incomes, such as SFI/AISH recipients, and perhaps widows. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Are there currently any programs or policies allowing the department to assist the recipients of those programs with those rising costs?

Mr. Dunford: Yes, there is, Mr. Speaker, and I think we've been able to announce this throughout Alberta. When we have low-income Albertans, people on our client lists receive a disconnect notice from a utility, they can come forward and seek assistance from our department with that notice. Now, I don't have any figures that would be up to date, but for an example, last winter when we did this, I think about $1.6 million was provided then to needy Albertans to help out on their utility bills.

We have to make it clear that we're not here to help somebody that's just upset about a utility cost and then simply refuses to pay their bills. What we're interested in is somebody that is struggling to get by, has been trying to meet their obligations, find themselves in a situation where they're unable to keep up to their costs, and have received this disconnect notice. They come forward to us, we look at the criteria whether they would be eligible for social assistance, and if so, then we would help out.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. My second and last supplemental to the same minister. Mr. Minister, would you consider developing a policy allowing your department to perhaps increase the rates of those benefits over the winter months, when the cost of living is increased as a result of the higher utility costs?

Mr. Dunford: Well, first of all, of course, this government has legislation in place that would look at average costs of utilities over a yearly period. I want to say without trying to raise any expectations, Mr. Speaker, that our department has always tried to listen. We've always tried to help out. The hon. member's suggestion might be something to be looked at, but we'd have to be very, very careful in this. The main criteria we operate from is the fact that we recognize that there are Albertans that need the help of the taxpayers of this province, and as a steward of taxpayers' money, then, I take this situation extremely seriously and try to find the best way that we can in order to help out. It's a balance, and we attempt at all times to strike the right balance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

PCB Release in Edmonton

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On January 24 of this year this government announced that it was laying nine charges against the city of Edmonton relating to the accidental release of a small amount of PCBs at Commonwealth Stadium. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Given that this case sets a harsh precedent for strictness of enforcement and severity of penalty, is this government going to treat all cases from this time onward with such strict interpretation and severe penalties?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act when there is a spill or a release of toxic hazardous materials, then we have a certain procedure we have to follow. What we do is an investigation and then forward the information from the investigation on to the Department of Justice.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, he didn't answer my question, so I'll ask it again. Given that this case sets a harsh precedent for strictness of enforcement and severity of penalty, is this government going to treat all cases from this time onward with such strict interpretation and severe penalties?

2:30

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, to start with, the Department of Environment doesn't decide the penalties. That's a simple fact of life. I will repeat my answer, and hopefully she will listen. The Department of Environment does the investigation. We don't lay charges. We do the investigation and pass our investigative files on to the Department of Justice. We could ask the Minister of Justice to comment on his procedure after that.

Ms Carlson: Why did it take 18 months to bring this case forward? What was the reason for the delay? It was a simple case.

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, it takes a while to do an investigation where people are brought in from the United States to do the investigation to help to determine the seriousness of the situation, and it just took a while to do the investigation. I don't think it's an excessively long period of time at all.

Canada Winter Games

Mr. McFarland: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to recognize the achievements of Team Alberta during the first week of the Canada Winter Games now underway in Campbellton, New Brunswick. This past weekend our Alberta men's hockey team captured the gold medal. Alberta also garnered the gold in men's long-track speed skating and in several other events that include squash, badminton, and cross-country and freestyle skiing. After one week of competition I'm very proud to announce that Team Alberta is holding down third place at the Canada Winter Games with a total of 33 medals: 10 gold, 13 silver, and 10 bronze.

I'm also proud that the government of Alberta through Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife and the Ministry of Community Development have provided the funding that helped prepare athletes for these and other competitions. I hope that everyone will join me and our Minister of Community Development in congratulating all our young Alberta athletes, their coaches, trainers, and parents and in wishing them continued success through to March 8.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Steadward Centre

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure that I stand today and recognize Dr. Robert Steadward, his staff, and all the volunteers involved at the Steadward Centre. Yesterday my colleague the hon. Member for St. Albert and I had the privilege of participating in the 12th annual indoor classic at West Edmonton Mall. There were hundreds of participants from the disabled community. The Steadward Centre provides maximum opportunities for Albertans with disabilities to enhance their physical and mental well-being through individually prescribed and group programs of physical activity, fitness-related medical intervention, and psychological services. Hats off to Dr. Steadward, Sandy Jacobson, the staff, and volunteers for organizing a great, fun event.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Conservation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize the humble sweater, that comfortable yet underappreciated garment that helps Albertans with high utility bills now that the government's deregulation policies have failed. The government would not protect Albertans from high home heating bills. Even the Minister of Energy, upon realizing that his own act contains fatal flaws, has found solace in the dark blue sweater. The sweater, insists the minister, will comfort Albertans because they currently cannot afford their sky-high utility bills. The sweater has picked up right where the government's energy policies have left many Albertans, freezing in the dark.

I would like to say that we are a hardy breed here in Alberta, much like the rough fescue grass, and I think it appropriate to suggest that the humble sweater one day be recognized as Alberta's official garment. The sweater can then be honoured along with the other official emblems: the official arms, the official flag, the official flower, the official dress tartan, the official bird, the official stone, the official tree. I think that the sweater would be in proud company.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Polish Veterans' Society

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday evening the Polish Veterans' Society gathered to celebrate its 65th anniversary. The society was originally formed by a group of 100 veterans from World War I. Later, World War II veterans, their families, and interested members of the general public were able to join the society. I know that the original members would be proud of the society's accomplishments over the past 65 years and that all of them would certainly agree that their optimism and vision has continued.

Approximately 30 years ago the society built a senior citizens' home and a few years later added an attached banquet hall. The building of this complex demonstrates their commitment to their community. Over the years it has provided a comfortable home for many seniors, and through their fund-raising efforts they've been able to assist the residents with subsidized rents.

In the span of 65 years the Polish Veterans' Society has been consistent in its dedication to the Polish community. They have enriched the lives of many by their efforts. Congratulations on your anniversary, and may the next 65 years be as successful as the first.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Cultural Diversity

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize a celebrity event in Calgary. Nowhere else in the world but in our Alberta do we celebrate cultural diversity with gusto. Nowhere else but in Alberta can we visually, acoustically, and linguistically immerse ourselves in many parts of the world within a short evening. Indeed, just a moment after enjoying the rich culture from the subcontinent of India, we crossed the Pacific to the lands of Columbia, El Salvador, and Chile, with their fiesta spirits and colours. Then we crossed the Atlantic to enjoy the colourful, festive traditions of Hungary, Poland, and Switzerland. Then we went to Spain, with its heartfelt rhythm of the flamenco. We are brought back to Calgary with the sound of the Calgary Police Service Pipe Band.

Cultural diversity has enriched our province, our nation. Crossing the ethnic boundaries, sharing the cultures, provides solidarity and understanding among our fellow Albertans. Culturally speaking, this is what we call the Alberta advantage.

I want to thank the hundreds of Albertans who delivered outstanding performances. Please keep growing the flower garden of Alberta's culture.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have today a petition – it's in order – signed by over 1,500 Albertans which says:

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Bill 18

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 18, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

The Mines and Minerals Act and the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Act will be amended by this bill. The amendments will provide legislative clarity for investors as well as ensure the rules are clear and effective if someone drilling a well trespasses onto minerals for which they don't have the rights.

Finally, the bill will allow the government to enhance its tenure and collections practices, thereby ensuring that Alberta continues to have the best land tenure and royalty systems in the world.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 18 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Bill 21

Ombudsman Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 21, the Ombudsman Amendment Act, 2003.

This bill will allow the Ombudsman to more thoroughly investigate complaints and will allow for the expansion of his jurisdiction to include other government agencies not currently covered by legislation.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 21 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Bill 206

Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 will help create safer and healthier city communities for children and families. This bill will reduce sexual assaults committed on those women and children involved in the sex trade industry, supporting the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. Bill 206 provides for a strong deterrent and another tool for police enforcement but also includes a provision allowing for the release of the vehicle if the seizure creates a financial hardship to the offender's family. Bill 206 sends a strong message that this government will not tolerate the victimization of women and children who are trapped in a world of drug and alcohol addiction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Bill 207

Municipal Government (Councillor Disclosure and Protection) Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave to introduce a bill being the Municipal Government (Councillor Disclosure and Protection) Amendment Act, 2003, otherwise known as Bill 207.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today in direct reference to question period on Thursday, when I told the Assembly that I would be tabling the information about the Learning Resources Centre as questioned by the hon. opposition member. I have those as one tabling.

Mr. Speaker, the second tabling is actually a letter of support for the Learning Resources Centre from Avi Habinski, executive director of school and district services of Edmonton public schools, expressing his support for the excellent job and discounts that occur at the Learning Resources Centre.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got five tablings here today. I'll be tabling them in the appropriate numbers required. The first one has confidential proposals for a Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. This is dated October 3, 2002.

The second tabling is Gas Statutes Amendment Act, 2003: Gas Distribution Act. So confidential again.

The third one is a confidential document called Gas Statutes Amendment Act, 2003: Rural Utilities Act.

The fourth document is an overview of the ministry's assessment of the major changes which shows that these changes will drive up costs for consumers. This is with respect to the natural gas amendment act, and this is issued from the acting assistant deputy minister for the department.

The last one, Mr. Speaker, is a letter dated January 17, 2003, from the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta to the Minister of Energy, indicating that the proposed changes to gas legislation will increase costs to consumers and also likely cause confusion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings this afternoon. The first one is a letter that I'm tabling on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition of Alberta. It is dated February 20, 2003, to Mr. Ken Block, president of the Edmonton Fire Fighters' Union. In this letter the hon. leader is indicating that there is a recognition that the essential services that firefighters provide to all Albertans is very important and hopes that Bill 202 will be passed.

The second letter that I have to be tabled this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is dated December 31, 2002, and it is addressed to the chairman of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission. It is from Gary Hanson from West Edmonton Mall, the general manager and chief officer, urging very strongly that Edmonton keep our 19 seats in this Assembly after redistribution.

The third letter is a letter dated February 28, 2003, to the attention of the hon. Premier, and it is regarding unreasonably high gas prices. It is from a troubled citizen who has a disconnection notice after a $1,258 bill that is in arrears.

The last tabling I have is five copies of the petition that over 900 Albertans have accessed from the altaliberals.ab.ca web site urging the government to do as they promised and reinstate natural gas rebates.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the program commemorating the 65th anniversary of the Polish Veterans' Society.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter from a constituent, Michael Denkers, who was denied qualification for AISH because he was $11 over the limit and noting that the AISH Act declares that disability benefits received from CPP are nonexempt, whereas if the same amount was received from a private insurance provider, the first $200 is not considered and the remainder is prorated at 75 percent.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional tablings? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table the required number of copies of letters from urban communities supporting legislation that would allow the seizure of vehicles involved in prostitution-related offences. In addition to the over 100 letters of support from Albertans tabled last fall, including support from Mayor Bill Smith and Edmonton council, these letters are from the following: 11 letters from Distinctive Employment Counseling Services of Alberta, one letter from the executive director of Metis Child and Family Services, six letters from students at King's University College, 11 from social work students at Grant MacEwan College, 10 letters from staff from the Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation of Edmonton, 27 letters from the 124th Street Safe and Caring Community meeting, and 10 letters from women highly concerned about the exploitation of children and vulnerable women.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair has received a letter from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie requesting that the chair provide an explanation to some of the Speaker's rulings of February 27, 2003. Following that, we will deal with the two matters that were left over from Thursday dealing with two purported points of order, and following that we will deal with a point of order from today.

So, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, if there's some clarification you'd like to provide with respect to your letter, please do it now.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Rulings

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the letter stated, the questions regarding your rulings on Thursday have to do with the two points of order that you requested the members for Edmonton-Mill Woods and Edmonton-Centre to respond to today.

I would like you to tell us about two separate issues. The first is your ruling on naming the members absent from this Assembly, which has not been a parliamentary tradition of yours or of the Commonwealth associations. Secondly, if you could explain your ruling on not allowing me as the Opposition House Leader to speak on their behalf on the points of order. In both cases you cut me off while you did allow a second government member, who does not hold a House leader position, to respond. I'll take this information under advisement in terms of proceeding with the point of privilege against yourself from the perspective of impartial rulings of the Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, methinks there was a threat there, which would violate every provision within everything in the Assembly, and methinks that the hon. member doth protest too much. Let me, however, in the best form of parliamentary decorum attempt to respond to the letter.

First of all, there were some interesting words that were used by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie which are factually, I believe, quite incorrect from the perspective of the chair. What the chair did last Thursday was recognize, with the greatest degree of propriety, the civility and the courtesy that would normally be expected in this Assembly on a point of order.

First of all, the Standing Orders clearly indicate that the attendance of members in this Assembly is mandatory and, in fact, do provide, I guess, in the extreme interpretation of everything, for the members having to advise the Speaker when they would be absent. That rule has never been enforced by this chair. There's some degree of civility and decorum provided by the chair with respect to the attendance of those members in the Assembly.

Now and in the past, if a point of order is raised in this Assembly and particularly when innuendo is part of the point of order – in reading the text and listening to the text from last Thursday, clearly statements were made with respect to innuendo with respect to two purported points of order. Who in this Assembly would be so arrogant that they could purport to speak on behalf of another person, knowing exactly what the intent of the original member raising the point would be? Who possibly would stand and say: I know better than what the other person is saying or thinking?

Well, what the chair did last Thursday was afford an opportunity for those members who were absent from this Assembly to in fact be here in this Assembly to participate in the purported point of order. How difficult would it have been if, in fact, the points of order were dealt with last Thursday and a member to whom the point of order was addressed was not here and was found to be out of order without having had a chance to participate in the point of order? Methinks that immediately there would be some member standing up and saying, "How dare you? How can you possibly make a decision?" and the member who was not here coming back the following Monday and saying: how could you have made a decision without offering me an opportunity to participate in the discussion at hand? It would appear to me that that would have been the biggest of all infringements of the privileges and the rights of a member of this Assembly.

I would never do that, hon. members. To have one member stand in this House and say that they can speak on behalf of another member when that member is not here and has not provided any information to the chair providing the authority for that other member to have their proxy would certainly jeopardize the independence of the chair and the civility and the courtesy and the decorum and the traditions of parliamentary government.

So what was done last Thursday? There were no rulings with respect to any purported points of order. The only thing that was done last Thursday was to say that it would be very helpful and that the member should be here.

Secondly, while it is a long-standing tradition not to comment on the absence of a member from this Assembly, from time to time that is done. When it is done by the chair, it is done with obvious reasons, and obvious reasons in this case were for the protection of the two members who were not here. If that is a difficult position for any member to comprehend, understand, realize, or appreciate, well, the chair feels sorry for that person who would come forward with that kind of myopic interpretation of their own.

In terms of cutting anybody off, that is just absolute nonsense. When a point of order is being presented, there is concern given to the point of order. But if it is not a point of order that's being addressed, rather another aspect that's being addressed, then clearly, in terms of the utilization of the time of all members of the Assembly, there is a requirement for the chair to intervene and intervene judiciously, appropriately, and in a timely manner. That doesn't mean that a member will not have an opportunity to participate later if and when they believe that they should have the right to.

Thirdly, as far as one member being more important in this Assembly than another member, for a member to assume that because they, quote, have a certain position, end quote, and then they look at another member who, quote, does not have a certain position, end quote, that they should be denied the right to participate is the greatest of all arrogance in a parliamentary democracy. Every member in this Assembly is an equal in this Assembly. There are no differences. There are no differences among members. All members in this Assembly have one vote, represent a constituency, and will be treated equally. No member has two votes, three votes, four votes, an inside track, an inside approach, a special privilege. That would be tantamount – tantamount – to the greatest chaos that could ever exist in a parliamentary democracy and would be to suggest that, in essence, there are several categories. How would you categorize this? Will one give precedence to the Government House Leader, saying that he's much more important than the Opposition House Leader? Will one say that the Opposition House Leader is a heck of a lot more important than a private member from her own caucus? I think not.

This is a parliament of equals. This is a parliament of people, all who have one vote, all who have the right to participate, and all who should have the right to participate, and as long as I am the Speaker of this Legislative Assembly, duly elected by secret ballot from among all the members, I will be here to protect all members on an equal basis, without bias to any of them. That's the explanation.

Now, it's a few minutes shy of 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and the chair indicated that he would return to two issues from Thursday last. He also said that he asked for some clearer heads to look at these things since Thursday last.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

The Speaker: One point of order was raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood. The hon. member rose. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was not present – I repeat it again: not present – last Thursday for whatever reason, totally immaterial and insignificant to anybody. Members do have the right to leave this House. The chair, in listening to what had been said, listening to the brief statement by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, hearing that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood had issued a particular statement with respect to some comments, might view this matter to be closed. Is that a correct understanding?

Mr. Masyk: Yes.

The Speaker: There is no point of order on that item.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

The Speaker: Now, the second item had to do with a point raised by the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General with respect to certain comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. In reading the views of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, it had to do with some certain phrases and some certain words essentially dealing with – and I quote from Hansard: “The Edmonton Tory caucus has failed to protect the city from losing a constituency.” I stop the quote at that point although the quote does go on.

The chair did indicate the independence of an Electoral Boundaries Commission and the process for the Electoral Boundaries Commission in dealing with a particular issue and the process in there. Part of it was an innuendo that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods essentially had secondary, I guess, objectives from the ones that actually pop out, that the implication and innuendo would be there that members of this Assembly can actually influence the Electoral Boundaries Commission. Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods didn't say that the Edmonton Tory caucus could influence the Electoral Boundaries Commission, but the words led to the intervention, I believe, on the basis of innuendo.

The chair, quite frankly, doesn't want to see the Assembly spend a great deal of time on this matter. If there's a requirement for us to proceed on further discussion with respect to the point of order, the chair will sit down and listen to it. It's also recognized from time to time that this Assembly must accept conflicting views of the same idea or statement. All members know that they cannot influence the Electoral Boundaries Commission. If it were to come to be that a member was in a position to influence the Electoral Boundaries Commission, this House and this parliament would have one heck of an issue. The courts would have one heck of an issue.

So if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods would clarify that the intent was not to have anyone influence the Electoral Boundaries Commission, I do believe we could deal with this matter and wrap it up very, very quickly.

3:00

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was never my intention through innuendo or through the use of my words to imply any impropriety on the part of the government caucus. The root of the question referred to the record of the Edmonton Tory caucus and the kinds of activities that might have been undertaken and I think citizens in the city still are concerned weren't undertaken in terms of bringing the arguments that would clearly show taking a seat away from the city as an undesirable alternative. In the past there were campaigns. For instance, when the Calgary accord was being discussed, there were citywide town halls that were instituted by the government. I think there's a whole host of activities that would have raised citizen awareness, would have encouraged them to take some action that couldn't in any way be construed as doing anything but the kind of public service work that MLAs do on a day-to-day basis. I had no intention of making that kind of inference, as I said, either by word or by the choice of words, and that's it.

The Speaker: So, hon. Government House Leader and Minister of Justice and Attorney General, for fear of the hon. minister coming back to the Speaker and saying that I cut the hon. minister off, the fact of the matter is that I'm terminating this. This is not a point of order. The hon. member has had a chance to respond in the House with respect to this matter, and that's where that matter ends.

Now, the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General on the point of order raised today.

Point of Order

Clarification

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 23(f) with respect to debating any previous vote of the Assembly, and Beauchesne 409(1) – and this perhaps may turn out to be simply a point of clarification. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry indicated in a preamble to a question that the government had defeated a bill on cell phone usage. It's very clear that the bill that the hon. member was talking about was a private member's bill. That was clarified in the response by the Minister of Transportation, but it still behooves me to raise the point of order that I raised at that time to clarify and to make sure that the hon. member understands and withdraws the reference to the concept that the government defeated a bill.

In this Legislature governments can bring forward bills, but the Legislature debates and passes bills. Private members can bring forward bills, and the Legislature debates and passes bills, and while we're used to a considerable amount of leeway in preambles to questions with respect to the factual nature of the preamble, in this case it is an affront to the House to suggest that the government defeated a private member's bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on this point of order.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry he certainly did state that the government defeated the bill to have more clarification, which this really is: a point of clarification, not a point of order. To be defeated in this Assembly, when opposition members vote for a bill, the bill has to have a majority of government members and government private members support it or vote against it, and in this case that is what happened. So we're dealing here with a point of clarification.

The Speaker: Actually, there may very well be a point of order, and it would be Beauchesne 411(4), where members are actually cautioned that questions should "not criticize decisions of the House." There was a decision of the House with respect to this matter, but this was not raised during this purported point of order, so it will not be dealt with.

The chair looked at the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry when the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General rose on the point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry conveyed to me that he didn't think he'd said that government defeated the bill, and that was fair. So that matter is dealt with as a point of clarification.

Speaker's Ruling Role of the Speaker

The Speaker: The last words this afternoon, Standing Order 2 of the Alberta Assembly:

In all contingencies unprovided for, the question shall be decided by the Speaker and, in making a ruling, the Speaker shall base any decision on the usages and precedents of the Assembly and on parliamentary tradition.

Number 13(1), "The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and shall decide questions of order." And I repeat: this Speaker will not be intimidated by any member with a threat, and if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie stands in this Assembly again, she will be challenged immediately to proceed with her point of privilege and the whole process within this Assembly will be dealt with forthwith. Enough of that nonsense.

Bill 202 Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise to support Bill 202, the Worker's Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, has a unique significance. This bill affirms the ability of every member of this House to seek redress when policies and laws don't work, to debate the institutions and processes that deliver services, and to make quick, substantive, positive change to improve the lives of those who need help in times of greatest need.

Years ago anecdotal evidence suggested that firefighters – the fittest, the strongest, the healthiest people in any profession – were getting some types of cancer more often than people in other professions, and that's what prompted scientific research to begin. The evidence was conclusive and decisive and has been since 1992.

There are six cancers that affect firefighters more often than the general population. They are brain cancer, kidney cancer, bladder cancer, leukemia, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, and colon cancer. A surgeon at the Foothills hospital right in Calgary has dubbed these the firefighters' cancers.

Studies from Burnett, Guidotti, Mount Sinai, and the Ontario industrial disease panel, to name a few, all have told the same story: the profession of fire fighting makes firefighters more likely to get these cancers than you and I. Why? Because every time that a firefighter walks into a fire, whether that be in a home, an office, a vehicle, he steps into a toxic soup of soot and gases that are released by the burning materials. The chemicals used to make everything from the furniture we're sitting on to the gas that powers our cars to the clothes we wear are inert and harmless when used normally but become altered, airborne, and deadly when they're burned.

Firefighters do take precautions. They wear masks, but we have all seen firefighters or pictures of firefighters immediately following a fire, and they are black. They are covered from head to foot in soots, gases, and again, those same toxins, and that exposure happens, Mr. Speaker, hundreds and hundreds of times in the career of a professional firefighter, and that for some leads to cancer.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Until the research started coming out, firefighters didn't even ask for compensation when they got one of these cancers because they didn't know that the cancers were likely job related. When the research made the link between the profession and cancer clear, firefighters began asking for compensation, but the WCB, understandably, wasn't built to deal with this kind of a situation. It put the onus on individual firefighters who had cancer to prove that the cancer was work related, to determine the cause of the cancer, to provide records of fires fought, and to pinpoint the fire that was the cause of the cancer. It's not reasonable, Mr. Speaker, and it is not possible. Not only have firefighters traditionally not kept detailed logs of fires, nor do they conduct pollution analysis at every fire, but asking them to determine the cause of their cancer is a bit like asking a smoker to prove which cigarette caused lung cancer. There is simply no need to put the onus of proof on a firefighter with one of these cancers. The research is clear. These cancers are disproportionately work related.

Compensation for a firefighter with one of these cancers should not be left up to the discretion of any body, including the WCB. It should not involve a process of accumulating research, attending hearings, and waiting for months and months and months. Mr.

Speaker, if a firefighter drops an axe on his foot, he gets coverage tomorrow, but if a firefighter gets leukemia from years of being exposed to carcinogens, he could wait as long as a year for a decision. There's enough research now that when a firefighter gets one of these cancers, his or her only fight should be with that cancer, not with an arm's-length government body to determine whether or not they'll provide compensation, and that is why we need to ensure that when a firefighter does get one of these cancers, there's a presumption that the cancer is work related unless otherwise proven. That's what 23 U.S. states and one province, the province of Manitoba, have done, and it's time for Alberta to follow suit. We have the power and the ability to fast-track this process and to give peace of mind, and I think we should do that today.

Some have argued that if we make laws that give presumptive status to firefighters, then we might open a floodgate to other professions asking for the same thing. With respect, the floodgate argument does not hold water. You see, there's a huge difference between firefighters and other professions. If in any other profession workers encounter a dangerous situation, an environmental risk, they can refuse to work under that danger. They can appeal their working conditions, but firefighters cannot. When an oil refinery explodes or a chemical factory catches fire, firefighters are duty bound to enter that environment and work in it. They have no choice, and that, Mr. Speaker, is the difference. Firefighters are different.

There's another reason to support this bill, a more emotional, less tangible reason, and that is that firefighters deserve it. They deserve to know that just as they are there for us whenever we encounter danger and just as they answer any call for help, they can count upon us as legislators and Albertans to back them up in their rare times of need. Firefighters haven't come before the Legislature before, making demands or asking for help. That would be out of character for them, but this matters to them deeply. It matters that we send a signal that we understand the risks they take, the dangers they face, and the duty they accept, a duty that few of us would ever consider.

Mr. Speaker, there's a reason why we hold firefighters in such tremendous regard. These are people for whom heroism is just part of a day's work. There's a reason why every little boy wants to grow up to be a firefighter, and I'm led to believe there are a few little girls. I'm getting that from the other side. In my past career as an air traffic controller I have seen firefighters rush, firsthand, headlong where angels fear to tread. I've watched them go into a burning 737 and, frankly, rescue a very, very good friend of mine who was the last person out of that airplane, into infernos where second-guessing, a moment's hesitation, a wrong decision literally – literally – means life or death.

What we sometimes forget, though, is that firefighters are the point of first response for almost every emergency. During the past few months I've had long conversations with firefighters who have shared their everyday stories of dealing with death and life, from being the first to arrive at a tragic car accident to delivering a baby when EMS couldn't make it to the scene and a mother couldn't make it to the hospital. Everyday miracles, everyday tragedies, everyday danger, and it's part of their job. We hold them in high regard, we honour them when they fall, and we have a chance today to be there for them when they are struck down silently. We have a chance today to support them when they are at their weakest, and today we can tell firefighters that just like them, they are there for us, and we are there for them.

One firefighter told me very, very recently, actually last Friday, that since September 11 getting to work in the morning has been just a little bit tougher. He said he believed that the passage of this bill would send an awesome message of support from this House to every firehouse in this province. He said it would give firefighters a little starch. Today let's come to the aid of firefighters with cancer. Let's give them a little starch because, Mr. Speaker, it's the right thing to do.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Official Opposition in Alberta we are very happy and very proud to support this legislation as it goes forward. Our Human Resources and Employment critic has been advocating for this type of legislation since Manitoba passed similar legislation last May. It really is the right thing to do for firefighters, who risk their health daily to protect the community.

When we were discussing this bill earlier this morning, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview wanted me to remind this Assembly and all Albertans that on 9-11 when everyone was leaving the World Trade Center, who did we see going back in there and risking their lives and in some cases costing their lives but public-sector unionized firefighters. We all owe you a vote of thanks, and I thank you for that.

Mr. Speaker, my son wants to be a firefighter. He is 19 years old now, and he has wanted to do this since he was a very young man. He's putting in a couple of years at college so that he can reach a level where he is going to be acceptable to be accepted as a fireman and is very much looking forward to that day. So when I say that I'm supporting this legislation as a legislator and as an Albertan and a community-minded person, I'm also very much supporting it as a mother of a future firefighter, so thank you very much for what you do on our behalf.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin today by complimenting the mover of Bill 202. I don't think anyone here questions the passion, the concern that has been raised by the Member for Calgary-North Hill in sponsoring this bill, and of course I want to extend my congratulations to him.

Secondly, I want to compliment all the firefighters here in the province. Some of them are here in the gallery today, and I think it's very important that they be here to listen to the debate and to listen to both the compliments that they'll receive and also the concern and some of the issues that one might have, including myself, in terms of the principle of this particular bill.

It must be understood that what we have here today isn't a bill that's suggesting that firefighters ought to be covered for the cancers that they're exposed to within their work conditions. That is accepted. I agree a hundred percent with the mover of this particular bill on the research that's been done and what it should lead to, then, in terms of an application for WCB because of a work-related, in this case, disease rather than injury. So what must be clear, I think, to all members of the House and certainly, then, through Hansard and out to all members within the firefighter occupation but also to all Albertans: again, it's an issue that goes beyond and aside whether or not a firefighter experiences cancer and, once having experienced cancer, whether or not we should do whatever we can to be able to assist that firefighter and their family as they go ahead to seek compensation, to seek medical benefits. There's not one of us in this House today that is going to vote against firefighters and the struggles that they have against cancer.

I want to also compliment, then, Alberta's Workers' Compensation Board, because when the Fire Fighters Association came to me last year with this particular issue – and, of course, in attendance they had, as I recall, a representative from the Manitoba Firefighters Association – they were very articulate about what their concerns were and felt that in the past they had not been receiving perhaps the kind of attention, the kind of sensitivity, that a firefighter ought to from the Workers' Compensation Board. At that particular meeting I think I expressed, certainly in my recollection, some concern and some sensitivity toward the particular issue of cancer and compensation, and I share that today. I have not wavered from that.

In fact, by way of some background, Mr. Speaker, we have worked with the WCB in order to do a number of things. There have been changes since that particular meeting. One of them, of course, is a clearer understanding that in these matters a firefighter does not have to prove which fire they might have been exposed to in order to receive recognition for that cancer. Now, I'm not sure what other jurisdictions have done in the past about this. I'm told by the Alberta WCB that they've had a situation in place now for a reasonable period of time where a firefighter has not had to prove that. [interjection] Well, whether that's a long period of time or not, I am not sure, but I can tell you this: as we are speaking about this issue today, that is no longer in place.

So I believe that the workers' compensation system in Alberta has been trying to move forward, then, on the issue of how to deal, then, when a firefighter comes forward. I believe that they have made it more streamlined. The number of questions now that the applicant has to answer has gone, I think, from 18 to something like seven. More importantly, since a date in June of last year the sensitivity had been raised to: now let's make sure we understand this application, whether it is a firefighter or not. So there's been more focus on what has happened. In fact, in that period of time and regarding the cancers that are part of the bill, it is my understanding that there has not been an application that's been denied.

What I'm speaking against today is the principle of the bill, and again it is important for everyone to understand that the principle of the bill is not talking about a cancer and talking about a firefighter. That is accepted. We all accept that. What the principle of the bill is saying is: where is the onus of proof in attempting to receive compensation?

Now, I think it's important, then, at this particular stage to think about how a parliamentary system such as we have works, and I want to contrast that to a system that is currently in existence in the United States. The mover of the bill talked about 23 states that have accepted the presumptive nature of the cancers, and there shouldn't be any question about that. I think 50 states should be accepting that because the United States was set up under a Napoleonic code rather than a British parliamentary system, and under a Napoleonic code you have built into that whole realm of legislation, of regulation, a presumptiveness. The individual is right until somebody proves that they are wrong. So if somebody wishes to take my words today and help throughout the States, then they're welcome to it, but in Canada, under a parliamentary system, the onus has always been on an individual or a collective that if you are entitled to something, you must show how you meet that entitlement.

So this is the only thing that we're talking about. Bill 202 turns that upside down. The presumptive nature of it is more like a U.S. system than a British/Canadian system, and it would put the WCB in a position of, first of all, guaranteeing the acceptance of the claim until such a period of time that they can prove it or disprove it. That is the essence of the bill, and that is why I want everyone today to know and to understand that we're not in a popularity contest here about firefighters. There is no question about the value of firefighters, and I hope that this Hansard is distributed to firefighters so that I don't get these e-mails that I've been receiving from firefighters that clearly don't understand the position that I'm trying to take. We are not for or against firefighters by whether or not we support or don't support this particular bill.

What we have here, and I think where firefighters should celebrate the fact, is that we have a plan A and we have a plan B. Now, if plan A is the presumptive nature of Bill 202, then that is a way to resolve the issue as far as firefighters are concerned, and they support it, and that is fine. This is a democracy. There's no problem with that. What I'm saying, though, is that there's a plan B that's been in effect for a period of time and remains in effect today, and that is where the government and WCB are working to see how we can reduce any sort of barrier or any sort of bureaucratic hazard that a firefighter might expect. And just for those of you that are so turned off by a WCB system that you would want to do anything that might impact them, this would be a reason to perhaps follow the bill. That was for my friend down at the far end.

It is my oath to uphold legislation and regulations that are duly debated here in this House, and I have a sworn duty to ensure that the policies and procedures support those regulations, and right now in our system if you are applying for a benefit, the onus has to be yours that you show entitlement.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise on behalf of the New Democrat opposition in the Assembly to speak strongly in support of Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003. I also want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for bringing this piece of legislation forward.

I want to express some disappointment at the minister's remarks just made in the House, but it's a democracy. We have a right to disagree with each other and express our opinions on the floor of the House as we please. So I am disappointed somewhat.

I want to also acknowledge a letter that I received from a man that I respect very highly, Ken Block, president of the Edmonton Fire Fighters' Union local 209, who I understand is present in the public gallery here today. Welcome, Ken, to the Assembly as we debate this legislation, and I assure you that your letter of February 3, 2003, was an added impetus to my determination, which was already there, to support any legislation that will provide adequate support and protection to our heroic firefighters, men and women, who provide us protection, give us help when we need it, and in doing so, put their own lives on the line.

Thank you all for the work and the public service that you offer, and hopefully this Assembly will pass this bill and do what's right, which is to proceed with a legislation which has a presumptive status, which puts the onus of proof for injury received at work by firefighters on the shoulders of the employers so that the injured workers – and they're affected in this case by deadly forms of cancer, six different types – won't have to stand in line and fight both their cancers and the WCB in order to receive the coverage that they so duly deserve.

Firefighters make an incalculably important contribution to our society, to our communities. They protect our lives, our homes, and our families. They also bear the price of this contribution all too often with their own lives. My own constituency is host to a memorial statue of firefighters that have served our communities and who are no longer with us.

But the most obvious dangers faced by firefighters – the heat, the building threatening to collapse – are not necessarily the most threatening ones. The most obvious ones are the ones that we know about and people think about. On a daily basis firefighters run the risk of being exposed to a number of toxins such as asbestos, benzene, hydrogen cyanide, nitrogen dioxide, and others. It's no surprise, then, that firefighters face a 30 to 50 percent increase in the likelihood of the risk of prostate cancer and many other cancers. The science on this matter is very clear and solid. We reap the benefits of these men's and women's dedication, but they pay the cost. It's only fair that as a society we do everything we can to mitigate their costs.

Currently, if a firefighter acquires cancer because of their occupation, they must prove to the WCB that the cancer is linked to their work as a firefighter and their repeated exposure to the toxins mentioned earlier. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, being asked to risk your life every time you leave your family and go to work. Imagine that after five, 10, or 20 years of risking your life you are told that you have cancer. What would your priority be? If it were me, I would want to spend time with my family, my friends, and my close colleagues, knowing that I'm suffering from cancer and that it may be terminal. I would want to focus my energy on getting better, on beating this terrible disease. Instead, our current system forces firefighters to waste valuable time convincing the WCB that they deserve compensation.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Workers' Compensation Board tends to greet injuries that have any complexity with a great deal of skepticism. This is part of what Justice Samuel Friedman noted in the review of the WCB appeal systems when he said that the WCB system has an entrenched culture of denial. Injured workers who apply for benefits find themselves to be immediately under suspicion. Injured workers are forced to undergo numerous instances of humiliation. They are disbelieved. They are told that their pain is only in their minds and accused of being lazy, uncooperative, and outright dishonest sometimes.

Several years ago I had the privilege of advocating on behalf of a woman who had been perfectly healthy her entire life. Shortly after being forced to change from one office to another, she became terribly ill because of sick building syndrome. My constituent wanted nothing more than to heal herself and return to work. Rather than be given this opportunity, she spent several years of her life suffering the indignity of the WCB's constant suspicion and the poverty that accompanied the inability to work.

I met recently with another constituent who was injured over 20 years ago and whose battles with the WCB eventually had to be extended to a battle with Health and Wellness. That constituent has found that the longer he has been in the system, the more doors were slammed in his face and the more indignity he suffered.

So is it fair to ask firefighters to risk their lives for many years of their careers and then to force them to battle the WCB's culture of denial should they be unlucky enough to develop one of these six types of cancer linked to their occupation?

I also want to stress, Mr. Speaker, that firefighters are in a nearly unique position in their employment. In most jobs if your employer asks you to perform a dangerous and life-threatening task, the law guarantees you the right to refuse. The very nature of the firefighters' employment means, however, that they must put themselves day in and day out in harm's way for our protection, for providing service to their communities.

Detractors of this legislation will argue that it creates a slippery slope. The other occupations may start to make similar claims. The New Democrats say: let them. If a link can be proven as conclusively as a link between firefighters' occupation and their rate of cancer, then let us implement presumptive legislation in those cases as well.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the men and women of this province, some of whom are in the public gallery today, who have dedicated themselves to protecting, to providing safety and security to us and our families. I would like to encourage all members of this Legislative Assembly to give their clear and strong support to this legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today, as well, and join in debate on Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003. Like others in the Assembly I would like to take this opportunity to express my thank you to my friend and colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for all of the hard work that he's done in order to bring forward such an important piece of legislation.

There have always been and hopefully always will be those who dedicate themselves to saving the lives of others. Those who make it their profession to save lives are very, very special people who are held in the highest regard by our society because in many circumstances they put their own life on the line in order to save the life of someone else. One important group of individuals who perform this noble duty is our province's firefighters, and we are all here today paying tribute to them as well. They are elite professionals who have chosen a career that only a small number of Albertans would be brave enough to choose.

It is imperative to note that Alberta's firefighters are expected to go into potentially deadly environments and then save the lives of their fellow citizens day in and day out. They choose to perform this dangerous profession, which over the past several decades has claimed the lives of many of their brotherhood, and regrettably, Mr. Speaker, there are countless numbers of firefighters across the globe who have lost their lives as a result of work-related injuries such as burns from high-intensity heat, smoke inhalation, or falling debris. However, there is a silent enemy, that we heard of earlier, that is as deadly to a firefighter as any inferno or falling structure, and I am referring to cancer.

Our society is not a stranger to cancer. We hear about it every single day. Many of us have been personally affected by this potentially fatal disease. Many of us have had our loved ones and friends lose their lives to this horrific disease, while others are currently battling this terrible illness. The more we hear about cancer, the more it appears to be an epidemic that will only be stopped through the efforts of the entire world community.

Mr. Speaker, as you heard in this Assembly, firefighters are one group of individuals who have been particularly affected by this terrible disease. Due to their type of work they are highly susceptible to developing six specific types of cancer: bladder, kidney, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, brain, and colon cancer and leukemia. I don't have to remind everyone here today that all of these are potentially fatal.

One of the key reasons why firefighters are so susceptible to contracting these particular cancers is directly related to the types of environments in which they work. Over the past several decades there have been significant changes in the sophistication of many of the materials that are used in construction. More specifically, there has been an increase in chemicals being used in construction to speed up construction time, lower costs, or improve the quality of structures. However, while these chemicals have reaped great benefits for the construction industry, they have proven to be extremely dangerous and potentially deadly to our firefighters. As these chemicals catch fire, they release potent carcinogens, which, if absorbed by human skin, can cause cancer, and currently our firefighters do not possess the equipment which can fully protect them against these deadly agents and are therefore under the constant threat of acquiring the six cancers that were previously mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's Occupational Health and Safety Act gives our province's workforce the option of refusing to do a certain task related to their work if they have reason to believe that such a task is potentially harmful to their health. However, due to the nature of their work firefighters are not permitted this kind of option. Unlike other professionals they have a duty and responsibility to all Albertans, and this duty involves their entering dangerous and life-threatening situations. Unlike other professionals they have no choice but to save life even it means compromising their own. As a result of this, many of our brave firefighters have contracted cancer and are currently suffering from its terrible effects. You would think, Mr. Speaker, that those firefighters who are suffering from any of the six work-related cancers would be receiving automatic compensation from the Workers' Compensation Board. This regrettably is not the case. The current WCB regulations stipulate that the onus is on the individual firefighter to prove that he or she acquired cancer while performing their duty.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we have one of the best WCB systems in this country, a system that I strongly support. With all systems, though, change can be made, and it can be made for the better. Usually, that's brought forward by people that are experiencing the occupational hazards that relate to their type of employment, and that is exactly what has come to the Assembly today. Right now the system implies that we are prepared to put our firefighters through the agonizing process of having to prove their case even though it has been scientifically proven that firefighters are at a greater risk of developing these six cancers.

Putting some of our society's most selfless members through such an arduous process while they are trying to come to terms with such a deadly disease is simply unwarranted, and it must change. We appreciate the self-sacrifice of firefighters and must do everything in our power to help ease the pain of those who contract cancer. One of the best ways toward accomplishing this goal is for this Assembly to amend the Workers' Compensation Act and automatically provide our firefighters with the compensation they deserve.

This has already been accomplished in one other Canadian province and 23 states of the United States. During the spring 2002 session of the Manitoba Legislature a bill was passed which outlined Manitoba's commitment to fair treatment and compensation to its fire-fighting professionals who contracted cancer. Manitoba set the standard for other provinces to follow by passing Bill 5, the Workers Compensation Act, on May 2, 2002. The act established a new set of guidelines which give Manitoba's firefighters automatic compensation status if they were to contract brain cancer, leukemia, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, bladder, or kidney cancer. It is also important to note that Bill 5 not only gave compensation to the firefighters who recently contracted cancer, but the law was also made retroactive to 1992. This meant that firefighters who made their claim to Manitoba's Workers Compensation Board after 1992 received automatic coverage. The road to introducing Bill 5 in Manitoba was one that involved tragic events. Since 1987 17 firefighters have died in Winnipeg from work-related cancers. That is 17 lives lost and 17 families shattered.

The group that was largely responsible for lobbying the Manitoba government to bring forward Bill 5 was the International Association of Fire Fighters. They brought forward numerous studies which outlined the risks and dangers of fire fighting. These studies included sizable amounts of data illustrating the likelihood of firefighters contracting work-related diseases when compared to the rest of the population. The evidence is compelling.

In closing, I would like to thank my hon. colleague from Calgary-North Hill once again for having the resolve to bring forward this important, historic piece of legislation. I congratulate you, hon. member. I would also like to thank our firefighters, many of whom are here today, for bringing this important matter to our attention so that we as legislators can enshrine our policies into legislation. I would urge all of my colleagues to support our province's firefighters by voting in favour of Bill 202.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the Hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise this afternoon in debate on Bill 202 and urge all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly to endorse the proposal, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003, as tabled here by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

I, too, would like to congratulate and thank the hon. member for bringing this legislation forward. I was pleased to see it come forward and pleased to see how it was developing – I heard through the grapevine that it was developing very well – because I was disappointed last June to find that support of an idea that the Official Opposition had in regard to following the legislative initiative from Manitoba was not being received favourably in some quarters in this province. So I'm delighted that the hon. member has worked at this, and I appreciate his work and his efforts. Hopefully, everyone can listen to the debate this afternoon and support Bill 202.

Now, every day or every evening, whenever a firefighter goes on shift, they're willing to put their life on the line for each and every one of us. There are very few jobs where that is one of the requirements. After the hon. member's description of the toxic soup that firefighters must go into in order to do their job, there's no doubt that they are exposed, and unfortunately they can acquire various cancers including bladder, kidney, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, colon cancers, or leukemia as a result of their job. We look at the composition of our modern building materials and the resins and the glues and the inhibitors that are put in these materials to make them more soundproof and, in some cases, even to fireproof them to a certain temperature. The firefighters are exposed to this, and they're exposed to this over a period of years. While our building materials and how they burn have certainly changed in the last 50 years, the laws to protect not only the firefighters but their families have not changed.

When we look at not only residential fires or commercial fires but also large industrial fires, which firefighters are required to fight, it is more important that we pass Bill 202 to recognize just the number of carcinogenic substances that they encounter in their line of duty. Some may say that this is a special treatment. I don't think so when you compare firefighters to other workers in Alberta. Firefighters – and I repeat this – every shift, whether it's afternoon, night, or morning shift, put their lives on the line. If unfortunately – and I hope it never happens, but I'm sure it will – one of the membership is diagnosed with any of those forms of cancer that have been mentioned earlier, they and their families should be able to have at least the comfort of knowing that there are going to be benefits through the workers' compensation system.

I'm not going to speak too long this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. There are many members of this Assembly that, I understand, are very anxious to participate in debate. In conclusion, when you consider what the firefighters put on the line every time they answer a call, it's the least we can do. It will not be an expensive program for the WCB to carry out, as I understand, and certainly we have the occupational disease reserve fund. It's in excess of $200 million. Hopefully – hopefully – the number of firefighters that are going to be diagnosed with cancer from job exposure is going to be in the single digits across the province. But it shouldn't be a matter of money; it should be a matter of priority. It was a clear day in September, a beautiful September day, when the rest of the citizens of New York City were going one way and the firefighters were going another. I know it's outside the jurisdiction of Alberta, but I have no doubt that the firefighters in this province would go the same way the firefighters in New York City went, and that was inside a burning building to save lives. The least we can do is consider this Bill 202 and make it part of the law of this province.

Thank you.

3:50

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to stand with a number of colleagues on both sides of the House in support of Bill 202. I, too, would like to thank my colleague from Calgary-North Hill for raising this issue and bringing it forward. When he first told me about his quest, I was a little overtaken. I couldn't believe that we didn't already have this in place. In fact, I think I said to him: well, that's a no-brainer, so bring it forward, and let's get on with it. I couldn't believe it.

Like many have said, this bill recognizes that there are six cancers that are occupational diseases particular to fire fighting. It also says that we accept a presumptive status for these cancers in the legislation, and it calls for a study to be carried on about the cancer rates for volunteer firefighters. It also does one thing that I think is important. The onus of proof is now shifting a little bit – and this is something that has been a concern and, I know, is changing – from the injured worker to prove the case to WCB proving the case.

So when I think about what we're doing, I think about burning buildings, explosions, bombings, chemical spills, house fires, grass fires, acts of terrorism, all types of disasters and emergencies that are associated with people that care for us, people that call to look after us by simply dialing a number, and they're there. Without hesitation they enter into all of those situations, all of them emergencies, and go in to make things better and to rescue us.

I was reading some articles, Mr. Speaker, and I know that a lot has been said about the different types of things that have happened. I was interested in the article – and it may have been talked about – from Dundas, Ontario, where John Gray's father was a firefighter in Hamilton for 28 years. John talked about building roofs caving in, staircases caving in, his father being trapped in a fire. He never dreamt that his father would have brain cancer. He never dreamt that his father would die that way as a firefighter for 28 years. Now, he was diagnosed, and he did receive compensation in Ontario, but this does happen. One of the things that they said when they were looking at this in Ontario through the Ottawa Professional Firefighters Association was that there had been 10 studies that had linked statistical data between brain cancer and fighting fires, but they weren't too sure what the link was. There was a strong suspicion that exposure to toxic fumes, gases and that released when plastics and synthetic materials burn causes problems and a link to cancer, carcinogens. These things are found in every car and every home, in every office building that we have.

In fact, there's a whole list of them. I was interested to look at some of the dangerous chemicals that are there before our firefighters every day that they are out on the streets for us. Acrilan is probably one of the biggest ones. It's a white and yellow liquid that burns very easily, and it's found in the manufacturing of plastics and perfumes. It's also found in livestock feeds and pesticides, and it can be created by combustion from wood, cotton, carpeting, and upholstery.

Another one is asbestos. Of course, we know the dangers of asbestos and exposure to it, but it's amazing the amount of asbestos that is there in buildings, particularly the older buildings, that burn.

Benzene. Benzene, of course, is found all over in things such as dyes, chemicals, linoleum, oilcloths, varnishes, and lacquers. These are in buildings and businesses and homes when firefighters go in.

Chloroform. Chloroform, again, is something that is found on different organic materials at fires. It's usually found in low quantities but still at sites they go into, and it can cause huge damage to the liver and kidneys.

Diesel exhaust. Diesel exhaust, of course, is a mixture of chemicals including benzene, formaldehyde, and polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons. PAH they call them. When you go into a place where there's diesel exhaust and there's been a fire, this is all inhaled.

Formaldehyde, halons, hydrogen chloride, hydrogen cyanide, nitrogen dioxide, and organic solvents, even vinyl chloride, which is another chemical in bag and bottles and automobile upholsteries and toys and consumer goods: when these things burn, they're inhaled, and the firefighters are exposed to all these chemicals. They can't be doing anything other than hurting our firefighters.

In fact, there was a fire on July 9, 1997, in Hamilton at the Plastimet building, where 400 tons of plastic, most of it polyvinyl chloride along with polyurethane foam and polyethylene, were involved. It took between July 9 and July 12 to put the fire out. There were 204 firefighters who responded to the fire. One hundred and eighty-five were on-site from July 9 to July 12. One hundred and sixteen were involved in the cleanup and the decontamination. Fifty-six percent reported throat irritation, 52 percent eye irritation. One hundred and twenty-eight were exposed to smoke, 97 were exposed to mist, and 60 were exposed to ash and fallout. It goes on and on. Today's firefighter is exposed to more chemicals and more carcinogenics than you can believe.

The difficulty is that we ask our firefighters to do the job for us. A number of studies have already been held in the United States and in Ontario. Why this hasn't been dealt with in our province is beyond me. The time has come to move forward on this. When we all saw the vision of what happened in New York, where the flames were burning away, the debris was all over, the temperatures were high, it was the firefighter's face that went into the flames, in to rescue, in to carry the day, to help people. In an article that was written on it, it said that among the substances that escaped in that fire, there were 1.2 million tonnes of debris at ground zero made up of asbestos, benzene, dioxin, polychlorinated biphenyls, also known as PCBs. These are all linked to cancer. Now, they won't know for probably some 20 years if the impact of that rescue is going to be felt, but already they're having fallout from people who participated at ground zero. But it won't be assessed for 20 years.

In the meantime there's an expectation that firefighters must go in. We depend upon them for our own safety. Now, why we would not put some safety in place for them and for their families so that if something unforeseen such as cancer hits them as a result of this occupational hazard is, in my view, unconscionable. It's a must. It's no different from any other high risk.

Fighting fires has changed dramatically over the last 30 years. We just haven't changed with it. So the time has come, Mr. Speaker, for us to move forward, to protect our firefighters and their families so that they have an opportunity to have a clear conscience when they go into those fires to save our lives, to protect our families, to protect our businesses, to protect our communities.

I would encourage all members in this House to stand behind the colleague from Calgary-North Hill, who has carried this bill, and the other colleagues within this Legislature and put this forward and join the fold of people on the front line that protect the firefighters of this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and it is, indeed, a pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak to Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003. I must also add my thank yous to the Member for Calgary-North Hill, who has sponsored this bill and who has spoken so passionately and strongly for it to be passed here in the Assembly. I would also like to add that I certainly favour this bill, and I will lend my support along with other members in this Assembly to see that it does get a speedy passing.

These brave firefighters encounter any number of difficult and dangerous situations in the course of their employment. They are generally the first on the scene of disasters: fires, accidents, toxic waste spills, drownings, and the list goes on and on. Their dedication to safety in this province is unparalleled. Over the years they have developed measures to deal with the most dangerous of situations. They train constantly to hone their safety skills. They develop strategies to deal with toxic waste. They have developed safety equipment to assist in search and rescue and assist them in the predicaments that they find themselves in. We also find, Mr. Speaker, that many of these procedures, much of this equipment finds its way into the industrial sectors of our society, into the residential parts of our society, and it certainly assists in the safety of us all.

he bill supports compensation for firefighters with six different types of cancer, and these types of cancer are specified as primary site cancers, and it certainly is a very, very good piece of legislation.

If we look at the workers in this province, one of the things that they have to do in order to get WCB benefits is prove causation, and I think that by the comments that have been spoken here in the House this afternoon, where our firefighters are expected to go into any number of different situations and they are exposed to so many different types of toxic materials, this particular bill is an important first step in dealing with that idea of causation. Certainly when we look at injured workers in the province and particularly those who have contentious, long-standing claims, the whole idea of causation is the biggest hurdle that they have to get over. This piece of legislation here today will eliminate for these workers, these people who, when they are called to action, place their lives on the line for Albertans, that first huge hurdle that so many workers in this province have to face. I think, as well, that when the injured workers of this province look at this legislation, they will also be thanking the firefighters because they have addressed a very, very serious flaw in our WCB legislation here in the province.

Now, certainly there is evidence, as has been pointed out here in the Assembly today, that firefighters do have an increased incidence of certain types of cancers, and I think that all of those have been dealt with here in the bill.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank all firefighters in this province, in this country, and around the world for the great work that they do. I would also like to thank their families because these people put their lives on the line for us on too frequent occasions and in many instances because of the stupidity or the lack of attention that the ordinary person has. As well, I would like to urge all members of this Assembly to support this bill, to see that it progresses through the House as quickly as possible so that we can offer this protection to the people that risk their lives for our safety.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today in support of Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003. I would like to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for his dedication to this important matter which holds such incredible human interest for all of us. Bill 202 proposes the presumption of compensation for full-time firefighters who are regularly exposed to fire scene hazards and later contract certain cancers. A firefighter presumption means that certain injuries are presumed to be caused by the occupation of fire fighting unless the contrary is proven.

I am speaking here today in support of Bill 202 because I personally feel firefighters deserve presumptive status, but I'm also here speaking to voice the ideas of my constituents. Mr. Speaker, firefighters, some of whom live and many of whom work in my constituency, have contacted me and voiced their support for Bill 202, and I would like to acknowledge that there are three members in the public gallery today who represent the firefighters of St. Albert. We are very, very proud of you. Thank you.

The only province to have presumptive legislation for firefighters is Manitoba, and believe me; it is not like me to commend legislation that an NDP government has passed. However, it is important to note that the opposition Conservatives in that province were also in favour of the legislation. In all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 is an important piece of legislation that will directly affect the personal lives of firefighters and their families.

As has been acknowledged by all – and I stress “all” – who have spoken on Bill 202 today in the Legislature, firefighters put their lives at risk in their dedication to preserving and protecting the lives and property of Albertans. In the line of duty they encounter obvious perils, the flames and the debris that can cause traumatic injuries like broken bones, sprains, and burns, but they also encounter more insidious dangers: the smoke, gases, and fumes of various burning chemicals, plastics, and other synthetic material. There is no such thing, Mr. Speaker, as a standard fire.

I know that my colleagues here today recognize the complex hazards faced by firefighters and the increased risks these hazards produce. I also know that they, like me, want to ensure that firefighters who contract occupational cancers receive the benefits to which they are fairly entitled. Firefighters have received a great deal of intensive investigation from scientists over the last two decades. This research was prompted by the knowledge that firefighters are exposed through their work to a variety of known carcinogens and toxic agents contained in fire, smoke, gases, and building debris and that they are exposed to them on a regular and recurring basis.

The medical and scientific evidence has come a long way. There is now substantial medical and scientific literature on firefighters and occupational illness. That is why this amendment to the Workers' Compensation Act has been brought forward to identify the presumptive status for firefighters.

In a March 2002 study done by the Manitoba Workers Compensation Board it was concluded that the evidence available since 1994 suggests that it is reasonable, given the available scientific evidence, to adopt a policy of presumption for claims submitted by full-time urban firefighters for primary site brain cancer, bladder cancer, kidney cancer, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma . . . and leukemia.

This study was conducted by Dr. Guidotti, an internationally known epidemiologist. Dr. Guidotti served as professor of occupational and environmental medicine and director of the occupational health program in the department of public health services at the University of Alberta, but since 1999 he has been professor of occupational and environmental medicine at the George Washington University Medical Center in Washington, D.C., and was seconded to work on epidemiology issues after September 11, 2001.

You may have noticed that the study specifically mentioned "full-time urban firefighters." Bill 202's presumptive status is also limited to full-time urban firefighters. However, it should be noted that Bill 202 also calls for a study to be done on rural and volunteer firefighters to determine if a link exists between their occupational hazards and cancer. I feel strongly that this is an important part of Bill 202. The evidence must be strong and clear before we legislate presumptive status, which is the case for full-time urban firefighters.

Mr. Speaker, for a moment I would like to talk about the cancers that Bill 202 gives presumptive status to. The cancers, as I mentioned, are brain cancer, bladder cancer, kidney cancer, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, leukemia, and colon cancer. It should be noted that Bill 202 has gone even further than the Manitoba legislation to include colon cancer because of the scientific evidence linking the disease to the occupation. Full-time urban firefighters are at least twice as likely to die from six firefighter cancers as their non fire fighting counterparts. This statistic is astounding. It is time to implement fair and just legislation for the men and women who risk their lives for us every day.

Bill 202 calls for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to set the minimum time lines that a firefighter must serve in order to receive presumptive status when these six cancers are discovered. The minimum time lines set out in the Manitoba legislation are a good reference point for us to consider. The minimum periods of employment in Manitoba range from five years for leukemia, 10 years for brain cancer, 15 years for bladder cancer, and 20 years for non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and kidney cancer. I believe these minimum time lines are important because they are based on medical evidence. They are not random estimates that the Manitoba government selected nor are they estimates that we here in this Legislature should presume to identify solely without the medical verification.

So, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would again utter my appreciation, as others have done, for the fine work and the great confidence that the firefighters in my community and theirs give to us who are residents living under their care, if you will, in their jurisdiction, and I would strongly urge my colleagues here today to look at the evidence and to support this important piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am also very pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 202. My constituency volunteer firefighters support the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill on his initiative to bring this bill forward. Voluntary firefighters from my constituency also agree with the intent of the bill but would like to see the bill extend its coverage to rural voluntary firefighters.

Firefighters in rural Alberta have a lot of similarities with their urban counterparts. Voluntary firefighters have exposure to the same conditions that full-time firefighters do. I would encourage the support of subsection (6)(b), page 2, for the WCB to investigate and prepare a report on the status of the research and submit it to the minister.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Automatic coverage and approval of benefits and coverage for cancer-related health concerns to voluntary as well as full-time employees should be mandatory. Toxic fumes and smoke are present at all fires whether the location is urban or rural. Exposure to these fumes is no different if you are a voluntary firefighter or a full-time firefighter.

Voluntary firefighters respond to a large number of fires. For example, in the town of St. Paul last year voluntary firefighters had 120 responses. They included bush fires, oil patch related fires, vehicle fires, major structure fires, and low-profile fires. It is worth it to mention that we cannot always view unexpected negative potentials. It is important to note that low-profile fires can have major health dangers and the potential of long-lasting ramifications. Vehicle and dumpster fires are probably some of the most dangerous as firefighters cannot anticipate their contents or their toxins. Also, there is a major concern when the flames are extinguished and firefighters relax their guard and may inhale smoke of a smouldering fire without knowledge of the content.

There are some differences in urban and rural departments. Education seminars are usually done on free time for voluntary firefighters, so they are less likely to happen in a timely fashion. They have full-time jobs that take time when courses are traditionally held. Sometimes toxic exposure information and training about these fires are not relayed to voluntary fire departments in a timely manner. Professional protection equipment is more likely to be substandard in voluntary departments than it is in a full-time department. A lot of equipment upgrades are purchased by voluntary fund-raising and may not necessarily happen when needed.

I would like to close by saying that volunteer firefighters have no pensions to fall back on, and their participation is usually their commitment to the support and protection of their communities. There are long-term firefighters in small rural departments. Many have volunteered for 20 to 30 years. To have negative contact with fumes and toxins does not necessarily need to be over a long period of time but can occur during short exposure. I would ask that rural voluntary firefighters have the same opportunity of support as their urban counterparts. Mr. Speaker, it is imperative for the WCB to have an industry report of the toxic implications to rural firefighters along with their urban neighbours.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to express the support of the voluntary firefighters in my constituency for Bill 202. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words in support of Bill 202 this afternoon. Much has been said about the bill. The bill is one that requires the WCB to presume that all firefighters filing for benefits due to brain, bladder, kidney, non-Hodgkin's, lymphatic, or colon cancers, or leukemia had their illnesses caused by the job. It asks that firefighters are to receive presumptive status in accordance with the years of service time restrictions. It's retroactive to 1993. It requires a three-year WCB study, and in order not to give benefits, the WCB must prove employment as a firefighter didn't cause the disease. So these are the provisions of the bill.

I guess one of the things I'm having a problem with is that a bill like this is necessary before the Assembly. It's really a very, very clumsy way of dealing with an issue that faces firefighters, and that has been well established by the medical community. The study cited by the Member for St. Albert from the University of Alberta, Guidotti and Goldsmith, says:

The evidence available since 1994 suggests that it is reasonable, given the available scientific evidence, to adopt a policy of presumption for claims submitted by full-time urban firefighters for primary-site . . . cancer, and it goes on to list them. It seems that when there is this kind of evidence available, Mr. Speaker, the WCB itself would see the need to act and to prevent or at least to make unnecessary the kind of hard work that has gone into preparing this bill and getting the bill before the Legislature to deal with a problem that is well recognized by the medical community. Unfortunately, it's a reflection on the problems that those of us that deal with the WCB often have.

I recently gave the executive assistant in our office who deals with WCB cases a bonus because of the very fact that she has to spend so much of her time working with clients to gain from WCB the legitimate compensation that is legitimately theirs. So I'm glad the bill is here, I'm glad it has the support, and I hope that it does pass the Assembly.

I think we should also warn ourselves that there may be others. These are the ones at the present time, as a result of firefighting, that can be directly attributable to the occupation, but there may be others, and hopefully we won't find ourselves back here with another bill trying to add those to the list, that the WCB will see the wisdom of acting on solid medical evidence and provide the kind of compensation that is rightfully deserved by firefighters.

With those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to, as I said, support the bill and hope it passes through the House quickly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity to speak to this bill, and I commend the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for bringing forth this initiative.

Imagine if you will a fire in a residential neighbourhood. It spreads quickly, engulfing first one home then another and another. Not only is much of the neighbourhood if not all of it at a risk but so are lives, belongings, and property, not to mention memories. In a situation like this, the first thing anyone would do is dial 911 and ask for the fire department. Likewise, Mr. Speaker, when a fire breaks out in an office building or a warehouse, we call the fire department. Indeed, in many cases we don't even have to do that. As soon as the fire erupts, sensors detect it, triggering the alarms at the nearest fire stations. All we have to worry about is getting out. Yes; all we have to worry about is getting out alive so that firefighters can get in and do their job.

If you stop and think about that for a minute, Mr. Speaker, this is what is at the heart of this issue: the very idea that amongst us we have a few dedicated men and women who as part of their daily routines willingly risk their lives to save ours. To say that they are brave is an understatement. To say that they are courageous gets us closer, for what they do on a daily basis requires courage, empathy, and caring for their fellow men and women. It takes a very special person to do that day after day. As far as I know, firefighters are the only professionals who cannot refuse unsafe workplace conditions:

fires, smoke, collapsing buildings. By its very nature the job of a firefighter is unsafe. Firefighters go where the rest of us don't want to go, be it due to fright or inability. When on the job their lives are in constant peril as they stand ready to save our lives even at the expense of their own.

Mr. Speaker, at a very young age children begin forming dreams and aspirations about what they will do when they grow up. Obviously most children who dream of becoming firefighters do not realize their childhood dream. As they grow older, the interest wanes and even disappears, or they take stock of themselves and their options and realize that their temperament, physique, or some other factor makes them less than well suited to the rigours of being a firefighter. But for those who do keep the dream alive, for those who decide that being a firefighter is more than just a childhood dream, and for those who risk their lives each and every day for the benefit of the rest of us, what is it that drives them? What is the attraction? What is it that makes them commit to a job that's often more a mission than anything else and where dangers abound? I suppose that the answers to those questions will be as plentiful as there are firefighters. The exact reasons why someone would choose to be a firefighter will depend on the person.

There is, perhaps, a tendency in contemporary society to portray firefighters as heroes. While I don't want to belittle this view in any way, I get the feeling that most if not all firefighters are uncomfortable when described that way. The way they view themselves and what they do is that they are professionals who are merely doing their job. To them what they do is their duty. Their duty, then, is to be the first defenders at the scene of a fire, and in that capacity they take educated risks in order to minimize the loss of life and property. Taking risks, confronting danger, sometimes staring danger in the eyes. There are times when danger blinks first, other times not. With some regularity we read in the papers or hear on the news that a firefighter perished in the course of trying to gain control of a fire or that a building on fire collapsed, sending firefighters to an early death. Situations like these, where firefighters die violent deaths, make for powerful and attention-grabbing headlines. They remind us that there are members of society who are willing to risk their lives so that the rest of us can live.

Not all dangers have instantaneous results, however. Far from the headlines firefighters fight dangers whose impact are felt just as strongly but which are played out over long periods of time. Mr. Speaker, firefighters are regularly exposed to numerous and highly carcinogenic substances that are released during common indoor fires. As building materials have changed over the years, the number of chemicals used in the manufacturing of these materials has increased. When there are fires, therefore, their exposure hazards are greater now than in past years. As the hot, thick smoke develops and surrounds the firefighters, hazardous chemicals are absorbed through the skin. Protective gear notwithstanding, the chemicals also have the ability to permeate the materials of which the protective clothing is made.

Studies over the past decade have demonstrated increased occurrences of six types of cancer among firefighters: brain cancer, bladder and kidney cancer, lymphatic cancer, leukemia, hemotopoietic cancer, and colon cancer. The evidence is mounting that firefighters run two and even three times as great a risk as the general population does contracting these six different types of cancer. It does not, therefore, require a leap of faith to presume that there exists a cause and effect relationship between prolonged, repeated exposure to certain kinds of carcinogens and increased occurrences of the types of cancer I just mentioned.

It would seem reasonable to grant presumptive status to claims for firefighters involving any of these types of cancer. At the present time, however, Alberta firefighters who are diagnosed with any of these types of cancer do not have such a presumptive status. The situation they face is anything but streamlined. When a firefighter is diagnosed with cancer, the onus lies on the firefighter to prove that the cancer was caused by his or her occupation in order for him or her to be able to make a claim for assistance from the WCB. In Alberta no cancer has presumptive status for any fireman wishing to receive workers' compensation benefits due to the contraction of these cancers.

Bill 202 would require that in cases where a firefighter files for WCB benefits due to these cancers, the WCB presumes that these injuries are occupational cancers, the dominant cause of which is employment as a firefighter. The firefighter would receive presumptive status regardless of how long he has worked as a firefighter as long as cancer was not detected at the time of his or her initial physical exam. This is where an already difficult situation is made worse: but for very large fires fire departments in Alberta do not keep track of every fire that erupts, let alone perform a rigorous analysis to determine the chemical makeup of each and every fire. However, this is just what the WCB requires. These are the kinds of details that the WCB expects the firefighters to produce in order to substantiate their claims.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is how an already onerous adjudication process becomes bogged down in an information-gathering process. Why? Is it really necessary that when those who stand prepared to sacrifice their lives for the rest of us but are no longer able to do so because of illnesses they contracted as a result of doing their job, we make them jump through hoops? I don't think so. This, however, is exactly what ill and sometimes dying firefighters are forced to do. After years of serving this society, they now have to not only suffer the consequences of exposure to toxins but also suffer through needlessly long waiting periods while WCB assigns caseworkers and investigates their claims. Is this the way to treat people who are so prone to being called heroes?

Last year, Mr. Speaker, our colleagues in the Manitoba Legislature passed Bill 5, which gives presumptive status to firefighters with WCB claims involving brain, bladder, or kidney cancers as well as non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and leukemia. The act allowed the Lieutenant Governor in Council to set a period of service thresholds for firefighters who made claims related to each cancer. In the United States 23 states have enacted presumptive legislation that goes further than would Bill 202, were it passed into law.

Mr. Speaker, I understand there are concerns that granting presumptive status to firefighters' cancers will lead to calls for similar measures to be extended to other groups. Let me reiterate my earlier point. Firefighters are the only group of professionals in society that do not have the right to refuse unsafe working conditions. If Bill 202 can be construed as a special and unfair benefit to a small group of people, we need only remind ourselves and others of the work they do on our behalf day in and day out.

Another concern is that all of a sudden there will be an outpouring of claims for WCB benefits. Let's face it. No one wants to have cancer. Cancer claims aren't going to appear mysteriously out of nowhere if Bill 202 is passed. Current statistics bear this out. Each year 1.8 of every 1,000 firefighters are diagnosed with cancer. In Alberta there are roughly 2,300 firefighters. Using simple math, then, it can reasonably be assumed that four cancer cases involving firefighters would be brought to the WCB's attention in Alberta each year.

I believe that Bill 202 is right for Alberta. I support it wholeheartedly and ask all of my colleagues to do the same. We owe it to our firefighters to pass Bill 202. I've worked with firefighters for the past 24 years in my career as an inspector and member of the Calgary Police Service, and I truly appreciate them being here today and truly do honour and respect the job they do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise today to speak on Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003. Firefighters provide safety to our communities. They cannot refuse the tasks in their jobs. It is a selfless job with numerous risks. These individuals put themselves in danger to save lives and ensure the public's safety. Firefighters go well beyond the call of duty, oftentimes putting their lives in jeopardy without possibly knowing the severity of the situation. This danger extends apart from the immediate risk. The unknown hazards are even more alarming, long term, and can be more destructive to the human body. I commend the MLA for Calgary-North Hill for bringing this legislation forward for discussion and debate.

Mr. Speaker, there have been several major industrial fires in my riding. During the years I have made many visits to the Calgary fire stations and the Calgary Firefighters Association headquarters in my riding. The most recent public poll in Canada indicates that 96 percent of the public are saying that among 20 professions firefighters are the most trusted. I share the public's feeling, the appreciation for the firefighter.

Through its awarding of presumptive status, Bill 202 will aid in providing a compensation process to firefighters, balancing their dedication and commitment to public safety at the very high risk of their own life. Mr. Speaker, my head tells me to ask the Member for Calgary-North Hill, who introduced the bill, to continue to work out the issues of different categories of firefighters, the definition of illness coverage as it relates to other professions. My heart tells me to support this bill. I encourage all my colleagues to vote in favour of the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, let me go into a bit of detail for my reasoning. Bill 202 would provide presumptive status to firefighters who choose to receive workers' compensation benefits upon developing brain cancer, bladder or kidney cancer, lymphatic cancer, leukemia, hemotopoietic, and colon cancer. Bill 202 would grant firefighters with just compensation for their dedication and devotion to the safety of our community.

I would like to address today two main issues concerning firefighters. First, I would like to speak about their work environment, and second, I would like to highlight the diseases and the medical concerns stemming from the working conditions firefighters face. Mr. Speaker, fire fighting is an extremely dangerous occupation which involves exposure to toxic chemicals and physical agents in concentrations that are unparalleled when compared to other work environments. Firefighters, while upholding public safety, are exposed to a vast variety of dangerous chemicals. This list of substances includes polyvinyl chloride, benzene, formaldehyde, pesticides, polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons, asbestos, and the complex mixture of carcinogenic substances that emerge from the combustion of synthetic and plastic materials. All of these materials are commonly found in a variety of different fire sites.

Current fire circumstances are far more complicated than those of the last 50 years or even more so of those in the last 20 years. The reason for this change is due to the introduction of more than 70,000 synthetic chemicals to the marketplace. However, what is alarming is that the majority of these materials have never been tested for possible toxic effects, while the long-term effects of the materials that have been tested are still not defined. In fact, a study by the U.S.A. National Academy of Sciences found that no data was available for the carcinogenicity and toxicity of 80 percent of the chemical substances in industrial use today.

Mr. Speaker, the lack of toxicity information on chemicals in commercial use signifies that firefighters are subject to chemicals with unknown outcomes. Firefighters in our communities are not only exposed to carcinogens, but these individuals put themselves in surroundings with materials whose disease potential is yet to be identified. Practically every emergency situation faced occupationally by a firefighter has the potential for the exposure to carcinogenic agents. This exposure occurs most typically through inhalation; however, some of this material can penetrate the skin.

Changes in the nature of fire fighting have altered due to the development of plastic materials. Firefighters in our province can expect to encounter plastics in every fire they fight. Just pause for a moment and think about the plastics in a typical room, let alone in an entire house or a building. The problem occurs when the plastics are exposed to heat. These materials become dangerous as decomposition begins, releasing a myriad of hazardous materials. Aldehyde, cyanide, acid gas, carbon monoxide are just some of the toxins that are released. These fumes are generally invisible and, in the case of carbon monoxide, odorless, thus appearing harmless.

Mr. Speaker, firefighters know very little about the identity of the material they are exposed to or the possible hazards that exist with it. Nevertheless, firefighters across the province continue to respond to the scene to save lives and reduce property damage with no regard to their own potential risk in the process. A firefighter's work environment is unique in that it is unlike any other. A fire has no workplace control or occupational safety and health standards to follow. It is an uncontrollable environment that firefighters confront day after day. These community heroes not only have to deal with great personal danger and inherent urgency entering hazardous situations from which others are fleeing and have no ability to schedule work or minimize stress, but they also put themselves at risk of developing chronic fatal diseases.

Bill 202 would guarantee the benefits to firefighters who contract one of the highlighted cancers. The bill would eliminate inconveniences and complications of cancer claims to the Workers' Compensation Board. Firefighters would receive adequate compensation while bypassing the troublesome process. Alberta is a province that values each of its citizens. Firefighters provide a special service to our province. They enhance the public safety of our communities. These individuals play a special role in the well-being of our families, friends, and neighbours.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to shift my focus and address the diseases associated with firefighters and their work environment. It is evident that the full extent of occupational cancer risks for firefighters is not known. It is likely that in the years to come and research to follow, more cancers will be found prevalent to firefighters. Nevertheless, despite the gap in scientific information available, it is apparent that firefighters have a considerable risk of contracting occupational cancer. Each of the cancers outlined in Bill 202 has been linked biologically with the carcinogenic chemical exposures encountered by firefighters in their work environment. Cancer is characterized by unrestrained growth and chaotic multiplication of cells in human bodies.

I recommend that our hon. members vote for the bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be here today and rise to speak on Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003 sponsored by the Member for Calgary-North Hill. I'd also like to add my welcome to all the members from the various departments from around the province. It's good to see you all here today.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is one which I feel will be talked about immensely over the coming weeks and months. It's an important issue, one that must be discussed at great length. Those of us who are voting on this issue must do so with both knowledge and sound judgment, and to make the right decision, we need to hear all of the arguments involved. I appreciate all the previous comments of the speakers before me and particularly those of the Minister of Human Resources and Employment for providing his perspective on this issue.

Our decisions, like all those we make, must be just to all Albertans. Bill 202 would amend the Workers' Compensation Act to ensure that brain, bladder, kidney, lymphatic leukemia, hemotopoietic, and colon cancer have presumptive status for any firefighter wishing to receive workers' compensation benefits due to the contraction of these cancers.

Mr. Speaker, firefighters are here within our society. They put themselves at risk every single day and in most cases in disregard for their own safety. They ensure that the public is safe, and they think nothing of charging into a burning building to ensure that there's no one in harm's way. Firefighters put others first when it comes to their line of work. They routinely think nothing of sacrificing themselves for the benefit of others, and in their line of work dangers are always lurking. Whether those dangers are flaming buildings or collapsing structures or the diseases that are associated with the job, firefighters think nothing of it when they put the public safety in the forefront of their minds.

This bill, as I have mentioned, would change the way that WCB deals with firefighters who have cancer. Currently those cancers which I listed earlier – and I don't want to have to repeat them again – do not have presumptive status, meaning that if a firefighter is found to have cancer, they have to prove that they contracted it from their line of work. A firefighter can receive WCB benefits, but the onus is on the firefighter to prove that the job caused the cancer. Bill 202 would put the onus on the WCB to prove that the firefighter did not contract the cancer from fighting fires.

Mr. Speaker, there have been many studies over the past decade that have linked cancer and the occupation of fire fighting. Firefighters are regularly exposed to numerous highly carcinogenic substances that are released during very common indoor fires. These are the sorts of fires which firefighters deal with every single day. One such study which looked at this very issue was conducted in Ontario by the industrial disease standards panel, whose report detailed the connection between cancers and heart disease and the occupation of fire fighting. In 1999 the Harris government accepted portions of that 1994 report, which in part recognized that brain and lymphatic cancers should be afforded presumptive status within the Ontario workers' compensation legislation. The Ontario government, however, did not agree with that portion of the panel's findings. In Ontario the unions representing Ontario firefighters came to the panel because they believed that there was scientific evidence available to establish that fire fighting contributes to heart and lung disease. As part of its investigation the panel did a study of mortality among Toronto area firefighters between 1950 and 1989, and the study revealed that there were significant increases in brain cancer. It also found that a variety of other cancers were increased in firefighters.

The study discovered that firefighters are exposed to a wide variety of cancer-causing chemicals. Chemicals in fires are extremely varied as they depend upon the type of fire and local physical conditions. For instance, synthetic materials such as polyethylene and polyvinyl chloride have been widely used since the early 1950s in furniture and building construction. Mr. Speaker, these substances are often more dangerous when they are smouldering than in high heat.

One must note that firefighters wear self-contained breathing apparatuses when they are fighting these initial stages of a fire, but they take this apparatus off when the main work is done. As they can fight a fire when it is smouldering, the breathing apparatus is removed because they are cumbersome and slow the work down. This means that firefighters are exposed to very dangerous yet common chemicals when they are battling a fire in its final stages, the smouldering stage. Synthetic materials cause a number of hazardous chemicals, such as hydrogen cyanide and hydrochloric acid, that are released during this stage. These chemicals are prevalent at fire sites. As well, concrete retains heat and gases like a sponge, then releases toxic fumes as the cooling takes place and for long periods of time after the fire has been extinguished.

Mr. Speaker, the panel found that firefighters are constantly exposed to hazardous chemicals, chemicals which pose a significant threat to their health. The panel also detailed how firefighters are exposed to chemicals that are particularly dangerous, ones that are known to cause cancers, which Bill 202 seeks to give presumptive status to. One of the most dangerous chemicals is polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbon, or PAH. PAHs are found disbursed in nature, and they are formed during the combustion of many organic materials and high temperature processing of crude oil, coal, and coke. They also occur in tobacco smoke and grill smoke and fried foods. Links have been made to suggest that PAH exposure can cause leukemia and cancers of the bladder and kidney. The scary part is that these hydrocarbons are found in something that all firefighters are exposed to in high amounts almost every single day. Polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons are found in soot, and all fires create soot. There is no doubt in my mind that firefighters are exposed to a high level of PAHs, and these chemicals can cause cancer.

The statistics show also that there is a significant excess in mortality in firefighters from esophageal and liver cancer and leukemia. The link was made from another source. It was found that chimney sweeps who are exposed to very high levels of soot have higher levels of leukemia and esophageal and liver cancer. What the panel ultimately found was that there was evidence that many of the chemicals that firefighters are exposed to are known to cause cancer in humans. The statistics of the panel showed that mortality rates in firefighters are higher, and many die from diseases that are caused by chemicals that they are exposed to.

There are many different studies that show that the chemicals firefighters are exposed to are cancer-causing agents. Of course, it's very difficult for anything to be proven beyond a shadow of a doubt. This being the case, it remains difficult for firefighters to prove that the cancer they have was contracted through their line of work, so, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that the onus should be put on a firefighter to prove that his or her cancer was caused by their line of work, even though there seems to be ample evidence to support their claim. If a firefighter gets cancer, he should not have to worry about dealing with the Workers' Compensation Board and getting their benefits. They have other more important things to deal with, like treatment and family. Let the WCB take care of finding the statistics and the evidence to prove that the firefighter's cancer was caused by another source.

I think Bill 202 is an important step for our firefighters. They work extremely hard to protect our society and our loved ones from death and destruction. As I said from the outset, we should not be in a rush to pass judgment on this bill without looking over the facts. This being said, however, there seem to be ample statistics out there that show clearly that the work firefighters do can cause them to get sick, and if firefighters are getting sick from that job that they do, then they should receive WC benefits for it. I do realize that this can be very expensive and cost employers as well as the WCB large amounts of money, but the stats do show a link. I think the onus should be put on the WCB to prove that the firefighter's cancer was caused by some other source rather than the job. I urge all members to vote in favour of this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to join the debate on Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

It is difficult to properly and completely articulate the importance firefighters have made in preserving the safety and value of Alberta communities. As we all know, they are usually the first to arrive at an emergency scene and are capable of performing many basic medical procedures as well as fighting fires. I believe that every reasonable attempt must be made to preserve the well-being of Alberta's firefighters. However, the presumptive status proposed in Bill 202 sets a dubious precedent for future policy directions for the WCB. It is also a matter of WCB policy and not legislation.

The firefighter would receive presumptive status as long as cancer was not detected at the time of his initial physical exam. If Bill 202 were to pass, developing cancer would become an occupational injury. Mr. Speaker, I am a little mystified by this assumption. There is an incredible amount of research related to the causes of cancer and cancer treatment.

For the sake of time of this Assembly I would like to focus on the causes of six cancers that some researchers link to firefighters. The only established environmental risk factor for brain cancer is radiation. Other environmental factors have been suggested as risk factors only, yet no conclusive evidence exists that clearly implicates these factors.

People with weaker immune systems have an increased risk of developing lymphomas, which are cancers that develop in the cells of the immune system. However, researchers have been unable to determine why this is the case.

Workers exposed to certain chemicals or electromagnetic fields over a long period of time are more likely to develop leukemia. Again, Mr. Speaker, this research is open to interpretation and not yet fully conclusive.

Researchers have also found that people with a mother, father, brother, or sister with kidney cancer also have a higher risk of developing the disease themselves. There is also a link to manipulation in the genetic structure of the body's cells that passes from generation to generation.

There are also instances where certain groups are likely to develop cancer, but doctors aren't sure why. For example, tall people have a higher risk of developing colon cancer. On the other hand, people who maintain a healthy weight have a lower risk of colon cancer as well as kidney cancer. Again, researchers are still trying to find out why this is the case.

Workers in the rubber, chemical, and leather industries are at risk of developing bladder cancer. So are hairdressers, machinists, metal workers, printers, painters, textile workers, and truck drivers. If Bill 202 were to pass, this Assembly would have to address the specific concerns of these industries as well.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, how would the presumptive status proposed by Bill 202 apply to firefighters who use tobacco products? People smoking cigarettes have a higher risk of kidney cancer. When they inhale, chemicals filter into their urine, and those chemicals cause cells in the kidney to become cancerous. The chance of getting bladder cancer also increases for people who use tobacco products.

In no way am I trivializing the horrible process these people must go through as they battle various forms of cancer. However, I cannot find any proposals in Bill 202 that are designed to prevent cancer from happening to more firefighters in the future. It seems to me that Bill 202 is more reactive than proactive.

Currently firefighters, like any other persons contributing to the Workers' Compensation Board, can make a claim that their cancer is related to their occupation and can receive WCB benefits. However, the onus lies on him or her to make a claim for assistance from the Workers' Compensation Board. Such claims are being accepted now. The Workers' Compensation Board assesses compensation claims on a case-by-case evidentiary basis. The Alberta WCB accepts disease claims from firefighters, as it does with all claims, on an evidentiary, not a presumptive, basis. Perhaps there may be a way to alter policies to make the claim acceptance procedure faster and more user friendly for firefighters without passage of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, some groups have made a strong case that there may indeed be a probable association between certain types of cancer and the work firefighters do. The list of high-probability or probable association includes brain, bladder, kidney, and colon cancers.

Some provinces, such as Manitoba, have embraced presumptive status for firefighters and enacted legislation similar to Bill 202. That does not mean that we should follow, but rather, perhaps, we should lead in Alberta. Bill 202 dramatically conflicts with the policy directions of this government and the WCB. There has not been any legislation passed which grants presumptive status to any occupational group such as that proposed in Bill 202. Although there are provincial governments who have moved towards presumptive status for firefighters, there remains the danger of doing too much without proper information. Alberta is taking a different route. This government has heard the concerns of Alberta firefighters regarding the amount of detail required by WCB for its settlement. I believe that firefighters would be better served working with WCB to improve and standardize the adjudication process of their claims. It is also important to note that the WCB has also heard the concerns of firefighters and continues to communicate with the firefighters' representatives. Progress is occurring in making assessments more quick and effective. To date all claims have been accepted.

Mr. Speaker, my concerns do not simply lie with the increased costs to compensate firemen battling cancer. I worry about the impact this would have on the WCB as a whole, its independence from political interference, and other industries around the province which contribute to WCB premiums and don't have presumptive status. Cost should never be a concern when just compensation is considered.

There are other questions that need to be addressed that are not covered in Bill 202. For example, not only should we be asking what, exactly, causes the cancers; we should also find ways to prevent it from happening in the future. Finding effective ways to help firefighters avoid developing these cancers should be this government's and WCB's number one concern. Further, the presumptive status proposed by Bill 202 fails to appreciate the effect this policy shift would have on other industries and tradespeople contributing to WCB.

The first example I can think of is the oil industry. There is a long list of toxins and chemicals that people work with every day. If another research study revealed cancer in these industries, legislators would be compelled to give people in the oil industry presumptive status because the precedent would have already been set with firefighters. As I mentioned before, the National Cancer Institute in the United States has made a link between bladder cancer and working in the rubber, chemical, leather, printing, and painting industries. Legislators would be compelled to extend presumptive status to these hardworking Albertans as well.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this bill conflicts with the Workers' Compensation Act in that the act does not give presumptive status to any other occupation. Bill 202 is unfair to all members of the WCB due to the fact that it does not address the claims of other occupational groups whose members work around chemicals or environments deemed to be cancerous. I am sure that every member in this Assembly would agree that firefighters are remarkable people and play a large role in preserving our communities, but I do not believe that they should be exempt from the overall policy framework of the Workers' Compensation Act. To do so would set a dangerous legislative precedent for other industries contributing to the WCB. Changing WCB policy is the proper method to address the firefighters' issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, the time has expired.

I'd now invite the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill to close debate on Bill 202.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been a number of questions that have been raised within this portion of the bill, which is second reading, and to the principle of the bill. I guess I've been listening to some of the debate and the argument, and I have to question some of the comments that came out.

When we're talking about the principle of presumption and to shift the onus now onto the WCB to in fact prove that a firefighter did get his cancer somewhere else – I'm told that that isn't necessary by a number of the speakers, but we have had a period of time now where we've had presumptive association within the WCB itself. What that presumptive association was supposed to do was, in fact, allow firefighters who get cancer on the job to lessen their burden of proof, if you will. I guess that my problem when we start talking about that is quite straightforward in that that onus, which is currently on the firefighter – it's almost like an individual fighting the great big body that is the WCB, and I have difficulty with that. When we get into the discussion about the floodgate argument, where it's going to make all kinds of other professions come into the WCB and request compensation, well, you know, it strikes me that if you're a worker in Alberta or anywhere in this country and you get sick from your workplace, is it not what the WCB was originally intended to do and originally set up for, to pay those people who, in fact, got sick in their workplace?

The third point that I would like to address has to do with the volunteer firefighters. You'll note that the last paragraph in the bill asks for a study. Now, this is the same study that is within the Manitoba legislation, and it's not my intent to have the WCB go out and do an entirely similar study. However, I would like the study done in conjunction with their WCB so that we get, in fact, the best study that it's possible to get. That study, of course, within the bill asks that the board come back in three years' time to this Legislature with a report, and I'm sure there will be a number of members that are looking forward to that.

Mr. Speaker, firefighters are unique and special. I think it's been mentioned a number of times how firefighters don't have a choice. If you're in any other profession in Alberta and your employer asks you to go into an unsafe working condition, quite simply put, they are turned in, in fact, to the government of Alberta through the labour minister to go forward and tell that employer: you cannot make your employees work in unsafe conditions. Firefighters are the only profession in this land where, in point of fact, everything that they do is unsafe.

I've heard a number of comments about breathing in the smoke. It's not just the breathing in of the smoke, or you'd probably have lung cancer involved in that list of six, and it would probably be a list of seven. If you've ever seen a firefighter coming out of a fire, even with the breathing apparatus, with the best equipment a firefighter can wear today, their whole body is covered with soot for not one, not two, but three days. It can go that long, Mr. Speaker, and that soot is, of course, laden with carcinogens and toxins.

When I've met over the last period of time, actually probably the last year and a half or so, with firefighters, like many of us here I've developed a huge respect for them. I think that they are the most solid, upstanding individuals, collectively and individually, that I've ever met in my life, and while I would like to thank many of them today, my five minutes is winding down. I'll do my thank yous at third reading, assuming we get that far, of course, Mr. Speaker.

I'd like to point out that some of these very, very special individuals have spent a lot of time over the last couple of months, frankly, going to funerals. On Friday in Winnipeg a memorial was held for the first firefighter that was ever paid benefits by the WCB in Manitoba. His name was Captain Rick Stoyko, and a number of our firefighters, of course, from Alberta went, a number of the people that I can call friends today.

Their job is difficult at the best of times, impossible at the worst of times. I won't mention, of course, that date in September, but for anybody that had an opportunity – and I think everybody in this room, everybody in the world had an opportunity – to see some of those pictures, in particular a picture of a fireman sitting on a curb with his face absolutely blackened by the soot, the toxins, and the chemicals from that horrendous fire, you would understand where they're coming from. This is an accumulated exposure. It's not something that is a onetime event.

I would like to thank all the members here for sitting very patiently through what has been two hours of very, very illuminating discussion. As I say, I'll thank my firefighters and the people that have helped on this bill as we go along. I'd like to call the question, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 203

School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to rise and sponsor and participate in the discussion for Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003.

The purpose of this bill is to amend the existing School Act in order to accomplish three objectives. First, it would raise the mandatory school attendance age from 16 years to 17 years old. Second, the bill would apply this age requirement universally and consistently. As it currently stands, the School Act allows the school board or in some cases the Minister of Learning discretion to excuse mandatory attendance before age 16 for sufficient cause. Third, Bill 203 would eliminate the use of attendance boards. Currently attendance boards offer school authorities a method to resolve attendance disputes without immediate use of court action. Eliminating these boards would make school boards more accountable for ensuring student attendance. Let me stress, Mr. Speaker, that it should be the goal of every parent or guardian to see that their child graduates from high school and, hopefully, pursues some type of postsecondary education.

Mr. Speaker, we've had a long afternoon. I have a longer speech than I have time left, and I would at this time like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 203 until 8 o'clock tonight, and I look forward to continuing my speech later on.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:24 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 3, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/03

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, before I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly members of my family and a friend. Sitting in the members' gallery is my baby girl, Krystin, and she's the mom of my granddaughter Taiya Jablonski. With them is Ian Moon, a friend of the family. They are here to hear the debate tonight on Motion 502. Would you please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Family Employment Tax Credit

501. Mrs. Fritz moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to enhance the Alberta family employment tax credit to include all children in a family in order to bring equality between families with three or more children and families with two or less children.

[Debate adjourned February 24: Mrs. Fritz speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In closing debate on Motion 501, as I only have about three and a half minutes left, I would like to refer to the Speech from the Throne delivered by Her Honour the Honourable Lois Hole, Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, on February 18 of this year. On page 2 it is written:

This government's highest priority must be to secure a bright future for children and youth. The government will demonstrate its commitment to that priority by undertaking a range of initiatives to ensure that Alberta's most precious resource, its children, is protected and enabled to develop to its fullest potential.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Tom Lipp, who is a constituent of Calgary-Cross I referred to in earlier debate, stated in a letter dated August 1, 2001, the reasons why the structure of the Alberta family employment tax credit must be changed.

I would like to recommend that the cap of 2 children per family be removed for the following reasons:

1. This cap disadvantages families with three or more children. Such families already have a greater financial struggle, and would make good use of any extra funds from the [Alberta family employment tax credit].
2. The removal of this cap would be in keeping with the family friendly policies of the Alberta Government.
3. The removal of this cap would be a minor contribution to strengthening Alberta's future workforce.
4. The associated implementation of such a change would be relatively simple . . .

I appreciate Alberta's leadership's desire to strengthen families.

Mr. Speaker, I now call for the question.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 carried]

Constitutional Reform

502. Mrs. Jablonski moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to investigate and implement steps to strengthen Alberta's position within Confederation.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to introduce Motion 502 to the Assembly today. Motion 502 is designed to be a conduit through which we in the Legislature can bring some of the concerns that we've been hearing from my constituents in Red Deer-North and all of our constituents to public debate.

In the throne speech delivered by our beloved Lieutenant Governor, Her Honour the Honourable Lois Hole, we heard:

Albertans want to be full and equal partners in Canada, but true partnership is only possible when all parties are respected and valued for what they bring to the table. Alberta's ability to be a partner in Canada is compromised by the current federal government, which . . . does not listen to the people of this province.

The response from the federal government to these comments in our throne speech was a very inappropriate, condescending letter from the federal Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. His letter was, in fact, proof positive since it completely missed the point made in the throne speech that the current federal government not only does not listen to the people of this province but is clearly incapable of hearing them.

Mr. Speaker, you know as well as I do what some of these other concerns are. The Kyoto protocol continues to be of great concern to Alberta. The federal government has ratified Kyoto without meaningful consultation with the provinces. We know that Alberta will continue to do everything in its power to protect the economy and make sure that provincial control over our resources and the environment is respected before it is too late.

Another major concern is the continued bungling of the gun registry. Gun laws in Canada were among the strictest in the world. Proud gun owners registered their handguns, carried permits where needed, locked up all their guns and ammunition in separate areas, and used trigger locks. They obeyed strict regulations about semiautomatics and agreed with the laws that did not permit ownership of automatic weapons. But when Ottawa demanded the registration of every gun in Canada, including the old flintlock that hasn't fired in 50 years and hangs over your fireplace, westerners protested in large numbers. Even a challenge at the highest level could not make a difference, and now, when it was first estimated to cost around a million and a half dollars for the registry, we are facing over $1.4 billion in costs. When my husband and I were in Miramichi, New Brunswick, this summer, home of the federal gun registry, my husband was tempted to give the same salute that Prime Minister Trudeau gave to western Canadians.

Let me put the cost of $1.4 billion in perspective for you if you find it hard to imagine what $1.4 billion really means. The entire Canadian armed forces budget is $1.2 billion. One point four billion dollars for a useless gun registry and $1.2 billion for the armed forces. Imagine what $1.4 billion could do for our ill-equipped, understaffed, and underfunded armed forces. They might even be able to afford to replace the aging Sea King helicopters with something as nice as the two new jets that the Prime Minister bought for himself.

Another concern is the Canadian Wheat Board. I was born and raised in Ontario, and like most good Canadians in Ontario I had no idea what Albertans were complaining about until one day I was in the hockey arena. Thank God for hockey, because I can't think of anything else that bonds Canadians together more than our hockey teams. I know that the majority of Canadians were glued to their television sets a year ago watching our two great Canadian teams, the men's and the women's, win gold medals in the 2002 Winter Olympics. It was a moment in time when all Canadians felt the same. Thank God for hockey, loonies, and Trent Evans.

But getting back to that day when I was in the Innisfail arena watching my boy play hockey, I stood next to a farmer. I mentioned that I was originally from Ontario, and we got to talking. He told me that things weren't really fair for western farmers. When I asked him why, he told me that he could sell a bushel of wheat cheaper to a farmer in Ontario than he could to his own neighbour. Well, I found that hard to believe, but it's true. In fact, it's so true that a western farmer will even get arrested and thrown into jail if he takes a bushel of wheat across the border and donates it to a 4-H club. So, Mr. Speaker, can anyone here please explain to me why western Canadian farmers have to sell their wheat to the Canadian Wheat Board but farmers in Ontario and Quebec don't?

Well, Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of the concerns that Albertans have been worried about. I don't know how many of our good, law-abiding citizens became federal criminals on January 1 simply because their guns didn't get registered. I wonder: how many guns did the Hell's Angels register?

Mr. Speaker, we haven't mentioned other major concerns like health care or Senate reform. Alberta has two elected Senators-in-waiting, Bert Brown and Ted Morton. These are the elected choices of Albertans, yet neither has been appointed to the Senate. In health care the Mazankowski report for the province of Alberta offers practical measures for the delivery of health care while the federal Romanow report has recommendations that are based on what Romanow thinks Canadians want.

On September 1, 2005, Alberta will celebrate its 100th anniversary in Confederation. We will be singing and dancing in the streets as we proclaim our Canadian citizenship, which makes us all proud. Just what does Confederation mean? In a confederation states retain their original sovereignty while delegating a limited number of powers to the new central power, which is a creation of the states. It sounds like we need to take a good look at just what has happened in the last 100 years. Maybe it's time to negotiate a new deal. What applied 100 years ago does not necessarily apply today. Our province and our country have evolved, and it's time to make this province and all provinces stronger within our country of Canada.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, if we want to avoid separation, then we had better find a way to achieve ownership of what is rightfully ours. Not only is it important for Alberta to strengthen its position in Confederation, but it's important for all western and Atlantic provinces as well. If Albertans chose to quit fighting and accept the Prime Minister's plan of doing nothing, the final outcome is inconceivable.

The outcome for the west in the 21st century has already happened to the Atlantic provinces in the last century. When they entered Canada, they were vibrant, growing societies. The Maritimes were British North America's industrial heartland. They boasted a strong, world-class trading economy, including a dynamic and growing financial sector. The Maritimes needed trade with England to keep their economy running, but after Confederation they had trade walls built around them, and central Canada became their only major market. Their industry was bought up by corporations from Upper Canada, and when it was time to reinvest, they built factories in Upper Canada, where the population was. The Maritimes have now become so dependent upon federal infusions of cash that they have no choice but to sustain the existing system. This is what will happen to the west if we do not act immediately. If you doubt this, just think about Saskatchewan's position today. People are leaving the province every day. Most of them are headed for Alberta. Its agricultural industry is already forgotten by Ottawa and trying not to be too alarmed by the mismanagement by Ottawa of native concerns in British Columbia.

Before it's too late, Alberta must take steps to strengthen its position within Confederation. We must be able to control our own destiny, and by taking the necessary steps, we can lead the way for other provinces. A union of strong provincial governments taking care of their legitimate jurisdictions under the Constitution of Canada will only make Canada stronger. This is a position that Quebec has argued for years. In its position paper released in January 2001, the Quebec Liberal Party stated:

The autonomy of the two orders of government constitutes the very essence of federalism. That autonomy is essential to the survival of our federation. [It] is the only thing that can help maintain it in the long run.

It's time for Alberta to take control of areas that are fully within its existing constitutional authority, areas that we have unwisely allowed Ottawa to run in whole or in part. We should, like Ontario and Quebec, consider running our own police force, with one provincial police academy of excellence. We should control our own pension plan and our own taxation system. We should force Senate reform back on the national agenda. Until we take control of our rightful constitutional powers, we will never be able to limit the extent to which an aggressive and taxation-hungry Ottawa ignores our interests. Mr. Speaker, there will be a cost to setting up the operation of a police force or a pension plan or the collection of our own taxes. Will this price be a price that Albertans want to pay, and if Albertans want to move in this direction, would they be willing to use the heritage savings trust fund to pay the cost?

There are Albertans who are talking about separation. I want those Albertans to work with us to build a strong Alberta inside the Canada that our Fathers of Confederation meant it to be. I respectfully request, for the sake of all Albertans and for all Canadians, that members of this Legislature support Motion 502 urging this government to take steps to strengthen Alberta's position in Confederation. I know that the majority of Albertans share a strong belief in Canadian unity and would do nothing to compromise it, but, Mr. Speaker, to do nothing is to compromise Canadian unity. Please support Motion 502.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I like the Member for Red Deer-North, so I have to say that I'm very surprised that this is the position she came out with in a motion that I thought had very honourable intent. I expected her to act in the role of mediator or to say: "Just a second. We have to think about how we strengthen Alberta's position within Confederation by working co-operatively and resolving differences." What do I get? I get the same rant from her as we get from the front bench of this government. I thought that what we were going to see here this evening was a private member on the government side who would be looking for ways to strengthen Alberta's position in a positive fashion.

Dr. Taylor: You were wrong as usual, Debby.

Ms Carlson: Well, you know what? It's interesting that the Minister of Environment would like to heckle across the floor but isn't interested in getting involved in debate. I challenge him to stand up and put his concerns and comments on the record for a change.

Mr. Speaker, when I listen to what Albertans have to say, I have to tell you that I was as surprised as the rest of Alberta with the kind of rant that the Premier recently came up with, and we saw that various media outlets had a really tough time finding people who even knew what the heck he was talking about. When I listen to Albertans, here's what I hear from them. I hear them saying that they believe they are Albertans first but foremost patriotic Canadians, that there is always a way to . . .

Dr. Taylor: Come to my constituency.

Ms Carlson: Well, you know what? There goes the Minister of Environment again, and let me tell you that I have been recently in his constituency, and I found a lot of people there who support being Canadian.

Dr. Taylor: You met with the two Liberals; that's why.

Ms Carlson: No, no. I met with a lot more than the number of Liberals that are in that area because I tell you: not too many Liberals down there. But there are a lot of people who supported this member last time who aren't too happy with the actions of his government this time. So we're seeing that as a lot more fertile ground than what it has been in the past, and don't worry; we'll be there next time.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Where are you going to borrow the money from to get there?

Ms Carlson: Don't worry about that, Mr. Speaker. We got another one who thinks he's . . . Didn't you learn your lesson this afternoon? You're going to pay a high cost for that particular speech. Perhaps you'd like to get on the record again this evening.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, it would really help if the person who has been recognized to speak would speak through the chair, and that would prevent dialogue or debate that's going across the floor here.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's because they are so provoking and so wrong that I'm challenged to debate across the floor with them.

What Albertans tell us, Mr. Speaker, is that they believe that Albertans desire to protect the unique benefits they enjoy as Albertans and that to do so, they want to maintain a strong provincial government but within a federal umbrella. As I was listening to the Member for Red Deer-North with her extraordinary comments, I listened to her say that we should have our own provincial pension plan, and the thought that ran through my mind was: oh, yeah; these guys would sell off the heritage savings trust fund to fund it, and then they would mismanage it just like they did with the electricity deregulation, which has only cost us $9 billion out of our own pocket so far. And what does she say next? That, yes, maybe Albertans would like to use the heritage savings trust fund to pay for the cost. Well, that's an interesting statement.

I also have to comment on the concept of a provincial police force. [some applause] Well, once again the Minister of Environment supports something without getting on the record, so I'll put it on the record for him. There are a lot of Albertans who like the RCMP doing the work they do within the province and believe that they do a very credible job and that they raise the standard of policing to a level that is the envy of many jurisdictions globally. I'm a little concerned that this province would think that they could duplicate the training and the resources and the kind of infrastructure that's already existing within the RCMP and is, in fact, a part of the heritage of this country for a provincial police force. I'm sure that would be an interesting debate in this Legislature, and I look forward to seeing that at some point, but I certainly won't support that particular motion, nor would I support selling off the heritage savings trust fund.

You know, Mr. Speaker, if we take a look at the record of Alaska and Alberta in terms of funds like that, the Alaska fund and the Alberta fund got started in the very same year. They got started with the very same amount of money, and what has happened subsequent to that is that Alaska has annually been able to pay a dividend out to the people who are resident in Alaska. At the same time, they have been building the fund to an incredible amount of money now. It's well over $20 billion. What's happened to our fund? Through the mismanagement practices and the lack of inflation-proofing, we see that fund dropping steadily. It hit a high of $12 billion. Now it's dropping, and did you ever see a red cent from that fund? I certainly haven't seen one.

Mr. Herard: Well, where have you been?

Ms Carlson: Where have I been? I've been watching the money slip through our fingers by doing a lot of things that weren't viable for a provincial government to be in over the years such as funding friends in different companies. That is not a good use of money.

An Hon. Member: How many years ago?

Ms Carlson: Well, it was while a lot of this particular front bench was still elected, and certainly the Premier was at the cabinet table, making those decisions at that particular time. So it isn't a new government we see here; it's the old government dusted off and shaken up a little bit. The good news is that . . .

Dr. Taylor: Ty is not that old, Debby.

Ms Carlson: Let him speak for himself, Minister of Environment. Maybe he needs dusting off too. Are you speaking for yourself as well? No. You only came in in '93, so you just got the tail end of those decisions.

There have been some good decisions made on the heritage savings trust fund recently, and that is to have it independently managed, and I certainly support that. I hope to see that fund grow. I do not hope to see a reversal of what has become a more positive trend with regard to the fund by these kinds of concepts that come forward be they from private members or on a government members' day.

We feel, Mr. Speaker, and the majority of Albertans when polled, regardless of who polls them – whether it's the government or whether it's media stations or whether it's think tanks – think that talk of separation is a poor signal to the rest of Canada and to the citizens of Alberta. They don't support it. This government has a tendency to fan the flames of separation when they want to divert attention from some of the real issues that we're dealing with in the province, and it's very disappointing to me to see this motion here in front of us presented in the fashion that it is.

So I reverse my earlier decision when I came into here thinking that I would be voting for this motion. I certainly will not be.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's only Monday, and we've become an unruly mob. I'm looking forward to talking about this. I think that if you go back to read the title of the motion, it says: strengthen Alberta's independence within Confederation. Yet separation seems to be what the topic's become, and quite honestly in many parts of Alberta that's what it has become because we haven't had the courage to talk about Alberta as a strong province within Confederation. In fact, we haven't had the courage to talk about all the provinces positioned in a country, equal partners, strong, moving responsibility for things that are best left to local issues to them.

I can use the example of a family that raises a child or several children. You bring them up as good as you can. You get them an education. Hopefully they can get a job, and they move out on their own. They become an independent family in your community or in a neighbouring community, equal to you, still working together maybe for the health of the grandparents or sharing a cottage at the lake, but they become independent, and with the independence comes responsibility for the issues that surround a family. Well, we're just about a hundred years old, Mr. Speaker, and I think it's time that the federal colonial attitude started to reflect that we've become a mature province and we can handle issues in a Confederation best left to the lowest level of government we can.

I think the hon. member was right when she said that we have to keep the idea that there's only one taxpayer, there's only one country. Alberta, by an example, is starting the process of showing that local government is probably the best, most reflective level of government there is. The closer to the taxpayer, to the person providing the service, you can be, normally the more bang for the buck you get, and the better chance of solving whatever particular crisis or situation you're in happens to be municipal government.

Now, we can't sit here and stamp our feet and blame Ottawa for all our troubles because they're down there and not understanding that the cities and the growing communities in Alberta are faced with the same thing. They've got growth problems. In the same 40-mile radius you can have a community that can't afford to grow and one that is shrinking so bad they can't afford to keep their services running. So we're faced with a multitude of different situations, and from Edmonton I don't think we understand how to deal with it. I know we don't, and Ottawa certainly doesn't understand how to deal with different matters in different provinces. Taking a huge portion of our money to the back rooms there and collectively dividing it up into areas that they feel somehow expert on certainly doesn't work.

One of the things we say is: well, how come people don't complain? I don't think the average Albertan knows that their share of our Canada pension plan is about $6 billion worth of equity and $57 billion worth of debt, and we're concerned about a provincial debt that's $4 billion or $5 billion, and one of the biggest concerns Albertans have: get that paid off. Don't worry about your pension. A good story and a letter in the mail will look after it. We're sitting here saying: we could do better. We could do better if the people knew how to manage their money or got to watch it. You know, when you get that far away, sometimes maybe responsibility or accountability loses a little bit of – it's just gone.

Now, we can bring up the specific issues about policing or about collection of taxes. Those are all kind of incidental to the big picture. Do we believe that a dictator in Ottawa can handle people's lives better than a government closer to home? That's the crux of the question. Who best can deliver? I don't doubt and I believe very strongly that we need a strong federal government to do the things that a strong federal government should, like a strong armed forces for defence of our country. We need to have a country that can guarantee justice and equality for everybody in Canada, but we don't need a government that says: we don't think that stealing a car is too serious, so two weeks in jail is fine. If the people have issues with crime or issues with punishment that we want to deal with locally, that's fine. We may have different priorities, not wrong, not right, but different, and I think that's how it should be dealt with.

We have an Edmonton police force, Calgary police force, absolutely world class, top-notch police forces. We can do that in Alberta. We've got as many professionals in the different occupations and professions as anywhere in the world. We would probably be as a province the place to move to. Where else would you want to go? All we're saying is that as a province by ourselves we really would have nothing but a strong province with British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and the rest of them, all understanding their responsibilities. It's like at home, Mr. Speaker. If you tell four kids to take out the garbage, it probably won't get done, but if there's one who knows that's his responsibility and he's accountable for it, it probably will.

Well, in this country we have people that are federally responsible, or irresponsible, for the environment. We have a provincial government that's responsible for environmental issues. What good does the overlap do the average taxpayer? There's one taxpayer, Mr. Speaker. What good does it do to duplicate the entire health administration? It does none. It doesn't put a doctor in a hospital. It doesn't put a bed under a patient. It does nothing except create egos out of people that spend other people's money in a way that might make them feel good.

So having the discussion about: what do you do best, what do we do best? Maybe all the provinces aren't as far along the line of evolution. There may be a province that says: "You know, quite honestly, we don't feel that we're responsible for our environmental concerns. We really appreciate the federal government being here. Please look after forests." That's fine. That's a cost benefit. That's a results analysis you can do, and that's your business as a province. But the opportunity to set out the environmental standards and situations your people live in should be put as close to the people there as possible. We may have a province like Alberta that feels that it's very important to have strict environmental standards, probably some of the toughest in North America. That's our decision to make.

Dr. Taylor: The toughest.

Mr. Snelgrove: The toughest. Especially if you happen to leak a little bit of PCB out on someone at a stadium. Man, I'll tell you; I wouldn't want to be building the jails to look after those people.

We have to talk a little bit, too, about the condescending attitude of the federal system now, how they deal with the less fortunate people. They deal with them by raising the RRSP limits for the wealthy. Now, that makes no sense. At least as a province of Alberta we've raised the basic exemption up to a level that's probably still below what it should be, and what happens in a federal system? "No, no. Let's give everybody making $60,000, $70,000, $80,000 a little bigger break. Let's keep as many programs as we can to keep the people in poverty in poverty so our bureaucrats have a job and keep the basic level low." It makes no sense to take money off the top and keep the poor people – $6,800 exemption? Honestly, give them a break. Let's start to reflect what the actual need is out there.

We have programs the federal government uses for sponsoring students. Then why do we? If we're responsible for it, let's be responsible for it. Let's decide who's going to pay what bill, and then let's have only one level of government do it. The fuel tax. In Alberta it's a very good idea to determine how much you'll spend on transportation. If we had all of the fuel tax collected in Alberta, our transportation system would not be any problem at all. Ten cents goes to Ottawa; 3 cents comes back. Or build the roads. If you're going to tax, build the roads. They don't do either. It would be a wonderful position to be in.

8:30

Dr. Taylor: Tell us where the 7 cents goes.

Mr. Snelgrove: The Minister of Transportation hides it on his farm in Vegreville.

Why do we have two layers of tax and a GST on fuel for a road tax? It makes no sense. As long as they don't have to be here and watch what goes on, they can take it. It basically boils down to this. In our area here with 83 people we're probably within a few hours and in many cases a few minutes of the people we represent. Many town councillors are in the same situation or even closer. How often are we able to meet or see our federal representatives? If you're from where I'm from, the fellow has an area about the size of Prince Edward Island to cover. It isn't physically possible for them to get to the communities, to see the concerns the communities have, yet so much of their lives is controlled in Ottawa.

There's really no need for it. Move the responsibility back to where the people are paying the bills, where they're aware of what their needs are. I think that can be done by having a province that's on an equal and fair footing with all the other provinces in Canada. It's not that you need special favours. I think Quebec went about this in, I guess, for them a very good way, but quite frankly out here I think we get very sick of the 'never-endums.' They have them down there until they get their way. Well, we don't need that. We want to have the discussion about Alberta within Canada.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. It's with a great deal of interest that I join the debate this evening on Motion 502, Alberta's position within Confederation. The remarks from the hon. Member for Red Deer-North are curious, certainly, to say the least. I understand that later this month the Progressive Conservative Party is having their convention in Red Deer. I don't know whether this is some sort of advance idea or not, Mr. Speaker, but certainly there are going to be lots of people there, and one of the main topics of discussion will be, from what I understand, the threat from the right, from the Alberta Alliance. I see this motion as nothing more than . . .

Mr. Ouellette: There is no threat.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake said that the Alberta Alliance is no threat. Certainly, from what I'm hearing, they're working very hard, and they're organizing at the grassroots level in constituencies such as the one that the hon. member represents. I think they may be a threat. The more people that are involved in the political process, I say, the merrier.

Certainly, when we think of what was written recently in Insight into Government by Mr. Rich Vivone and, particularly, the latest edition from last week and the talk in the corridors – now, this is a very interesting news magazine. It's put out on a weekly basis, of course, and the highlight, really, of my Friday is getting a chance to have a review of this. There has been much comment, certainly, about the comments of the separatist element in Alberta from the throne speech. Now, Insight into Government asks the following question, Mr. Speaker: "Why did [the throne speech] give profile to the tiny separatist element?"

It follows that with another question: "Is it because Alberta's role in Canada will be discussed at the Conservative convention in March?" This is a political motion, if I ever heard one in this Assembly. Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm quoting again from Insight into Government: "Is it because the Alberta Alliance is now officially a political party and have a leader – Randy Thorsteinson of Red Deer?" Now these events could be related.

They ask another question: is this idea of separatism just "another windy attack on Ottawa?" When you consider Alberta's position in Confederation and when you consider the unfortunate drought as a result of climate change that occurred in this province in the last number of years, the severity of that drought reached its zenith last summer, and farmers from all over Canada pitched in and tried their best to help. I can imagine what they would think – it was around Ottawa where the majority of this feed, this hay, came from for Alberta farmers – about the hon. Member for Red Deer-North's speech. I for one, Mr. Speaker, follow the views of Mr. Peter Lougheed, and that is that I am first a Canadian and I am second an Albertan. I think we need to follow the example that has been set by Mr. Lougheed.

Now, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North talked about how desperately we needed Senate reform, that we had to have an elected Senate, and this is not a week after this government dismantled the regional health authority boards, dismantled them. Well, essentially they were fired. These were democratically elected people, and not all of them could make the cut. The reason given, Mr. Speaker, was: oh, there was so little interest in those elections, there was such a low voter turnout rate, and it was too expensive to maintain.

Now, if I were the hon. Member for Peace River or the hon. Member for Fort McMurray, well, I might get a little nervous if this government is apt to take a notion after they look at the election results and the voter turnout rates in the last election: oh my goodness, there's less than a 40 percent turnout in those two constituencies. This is way too expensive to maintain.

So if we're talking about democracy and we're talking about Senate reform and we're talking about an elected Senate, why does it not apply in our own backyard here in this province, to maintaining elected regional health authorities, which are perhaps spending as much as one-third of the total provincial budget of this government? That to me is a real double standard, Mr. Speaker.

Now, getting back to the original premise, I think, that's behind this motion – that is, to strengthen the support of the right wing for the government – I have to explain the contrast between the Member for Red Deer-North's comments and those from the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Early in February of this year the hon. member suggested that Alberta needed independence. Now, the hon. member is talking about the influence of the west on the federal political scene, and the hon. member states that the two sides of the conservative coin, the Alliance and the PC parties, need to find the middle ground. Well, that's fine and dandy, but it is my view from the remarks earlier that the hon. Member for Red Deer-North wants to push them right off that ground altogether. There's no room for people that are sympathetic to the Alberta Alliance in her political ideology.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we're talking about the need to share the wealth of this province. We're talking about needing to share the wealth of this country, and each region at one time or other historically gets their time. I would like to ask – and perhaps this can be answered in debate in the next half-hour. How much did all Canadian taxpayers pay, if anything, if anything at all, to subsidize the construction of the Husky upgrader in Lloydminster, which has made an enormous economic difference to the region around Lloydminster, not only on the Saskatchewan side of the border but on the Alberta side of the border as well. How much did all Canadians subsidize the construction of that facility?

Thank you.

8:40

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe that Motion 502, which is entitled strengthening Alberta's position within Confederation . . .

Mr. Strang: Say that again.

Mrs. O'Neill: It says, "strengthening Alberta's position within Confederation."

It speaks to the strength of our province as we are Canadians and in the context of our great nation of Canada. Those who assume that this motion says anything about separation, I think, are making very, very dangerous assumptions, just as those who assumed that the comments about our strength within Confederation as articulated in the throne speech ever suggested any thought of separation were wrongly misguided by their own thoughts rather than by what was actually in the speech.

I think that this particular motion challenges us in Alberta to work to make sure that our federal government recognizes what a fine partner we are in this great nation. At the beginning of the 20th century Alberta assumed its place in Confederation while on the frontier edges of the nation. I believe that Motion 502 sets out how we are to position Alberta on the leading edge of a new era of Confederation, and I think we should acknowledge our strengths while we speak to Motion 502.

I would like specifically to identify in our minds and certainly in our consciences the fact that we here in Alberta have recognized through our wonderful wealth of historic sites the wonderful role that the First Nations have played in building this entire country. We have – and I would iterate it very specifically – a very large Franco-phone community in Alberta, which creates a strong tie to our eastern neighbours and to that province which was once called Lower Canada in the initial four provinces' Confederation Assembly. We also have, thanks to the efforts, I believe, of the people of Alberta, those who broke the land and who built this province, very diversified cultures represented, and we have a strong component of multiculturalism. We do in Alberta, I believe, form a wonderful part of the mosaic of Canada both by virtue of our multiculturalism and by virtue of those of us who are here to assist each other in making sure that we have one common purpose.

As for the military that was mentioned earlier and the military strength of our country, my constituency borders on the base at Namao, which is a very large base of military strength and training. A number of those men and women who work at the base, who are strong and proud members of our Canadian military, live in my community, and I would like to say that I think that this motion calls on us to make sure that the rest of the country understands the role that we all want to play in defending our great nation. We have the training; we have the personnel. We just need a little bit more money in order to encourage and strengthen that. Having said that, Albertans recognize the fact that we have and our people have a role to play in making sure that the defence of this country is indeed strengthened from within and, I say, from a large contribution of Albertans.

I would be remiss, I think, when speaking about strengthening our place within Confederation, if I didn't speak about how strong we have been in our call for the reduction of CO₂ emissions. In spite of what all the rhetoric surrounding the Kyoto protocol would suggest to others around the country and around the world, in Alberta our position has always been that we will play our part and we will play it in spades to contribute to the quality of the environment not only in our province but in whatever we can do to improve the environment and to be good custodians of the environment right across this country.

It is a known fact that Albertans pay more in equalization payments than any other jurisdictions. Perhaps close to Ontario, but certainly we are at the top of equalization payments. I think this is a very tangible contribution that we as Albertans make to the strength of this country. It is a reaching out to the other provinces and our fellow Canadians who reside in other provinces that we are here to assist them in ways in which we can, and we facilitate it through our agreement of not only cohabitation in this country with our other provincial and territorial cousins, but we certainly facilitate it also because we believe that we are all contributing to a strong nation and to a strong Canada.

The cost-sharing for the responsibility of certain nationwide health care initiatives is a concern, and I think that's why Motion 502 is important. We all want to strengthen not only Alberta's position within Confederation or within the delivery of health care, but certainly we want to strengthen the awareness of the nation in what we are doing that is so leading edge with respect to health care delivery. The same can be said, of course, with education. These are two jurisdictions and two areas of responsibility that primarily reside with the provincial government. We feel that we are leaders in both of these areas, and we really do, though, lack the recognition from the rest of Canada for the leadership roles that we have assumed in both of those areas.

We have much work to do, and as I understand this motion, it's a rally call for all of us who reside in Alberta to respond further, to communicate better, and to identify more clearly to the rest of Canada how strong we are, how willing we are to contribute to the national good, and how important it is that our voice be heard, our voice be heard as an equal voice, as an equal partner, and as a very proven partner for all that we have done.

I want to pay special tribute this evening to the leadership that our government has shown, particularly through the Premier and the Premier's office and in particular as well through the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations because we are a player on the national scene. We are a credible player, we are an articulate player, and we are a risk-taking player, something that a number of the other provinces are not only afraid to do but they are unable to do. That's why I think we have a challenge in front of us. We have a responsibility before us.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion that I really and truly do believe that our position is strong, but we have the challenge to make it even stronger and even louder within Confederation. With that I would just say, "O Canada."

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

8:50

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Red Deer-North for bringing forth Motion 502. This motion, as the previous speaker stated, calls for our government to "strengthen Alberta's position within Confederation." That certainly does not speak at all of separation, as some previous speakers have suggested.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is too often brushed aside in the federal political game. Our views and our opinions are more often than not relegated to being second class. I find this absolutely unacceptable since I believe that Alberta is the one province that keeps this country together through our never-ending support and our leadership. Yet on almost every major federal/provincial issue that negatively affects this province, we find that our interests as Albertans are brushed aside time and time again.

In fact, there's an abundance of examples throughout history. One could look back to an Alberta that came into being in 1905. The federal government was going against the wishes of those that lived in the large territory that wished to become a province. The feds saw this as a threat and divided the territory up into what is today's present boundaries in the hopes that the west wouldn't be very strong, and it seems to have worked so far.

Of course, that may seem like a tiny issue, but let's move throughout history. Alberta's not yet a hundred years old, yet we have got more problems with our federal government than what most teenagers have with their parents. Let's look at the boondoggle of the 1980s – I got that expression from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar; he likes to use that term – when the federal government, in fact our current Prime Minister, forced the national energy program on us. I think everybody remembers that one. The NEP proved one thing, and that was that when the feds want our money, they'll try to get it at every turn. The NEP was nothing more than a glorified cash grab even though Alberta, with the backing of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, told the federal government that this would bring devastation to our economy. Did they listen? No. There are estimates that show that the NEP cost us roughly $50 billion. Think of where this province would be right now if we'd been able to continue growing at the healthy rate we were at that time.

Of course, some argue that the NEP was good for Canada. I guess that depends on who's doing the assessment. How could a disastrous policy that is so detrimental to the province be considered so good? There wasn't even an agreement between the provinces for the NEP, yet it was pushed forward. Yet when this province puts an issue forward, we face an immovable brick wall. For instance, when our Justice minister lobbied to raise the age of sexual consent from 14 to 16, we were met with nothing but closed ears. The reason that was given to us was that there was no provincial consensus on this issue; therefore, it wouldn't happen. Yet when it benefits the federal government and knocks Alberta down a peg or two, provincial consensus doesn't seem to matter. Mr. Speaker, I've had quite enough of that sort of behaviour from our wasteful federal government. We should no longer stand for the attitude of disrespect, and we should now solidify this province into this country.

Mr. Speaker, this motion urges the government to think about policy innovation that will strengthen this province in Confederation. We can no longer sit back and let the federal government stick their fingers in our jurisdictions. For instance, implementing the Mazankowski report is a policy to strengthen this province, and having more innovative policies that challenge the status quo will ensure that we continue to lead this nation. Canada is a great country, and I believe that it could be even greater. We should be head and shoulders above many other countries in the world, but sadly we're not. We're not because the policy adopted by the federal government in Ottawa looks favourably only on a select few in this country. This should not surprise us, especially after seeing the disregard the federal government has for the majority of the provinces.

For example, a month or two ago we were told by the federal government that we would not be given health money that was owed to us, money that our health system desperately needs. They said that if we wanted the money, we must do as they say. Eventually they gave us the money but not in the form of a formal agreement. Mr. Speaker, health is a provincial responsibility, and we handle it quite well. Some would argue that the health outcomes in this province are the best in Canada. For our federal government to sit back and tell us how to run our province with money already owed to us is simply unacceptable. How much longer will we allow ourselves to be treated as unequals in this country?

Motion 502 will continue Alberta's process of changing that. The Alberta government wants to change the face of politics in this country by showing Canada and the world how to spend taxpayers' dollars responsibly. Many other provinces followed our lead to make themselves accountable to the electorate, but the federal government doesn't seem to follow that precedent. They spend outside of their means, and this is all going to put an insurmountable pressure on our future generations. I draw the House's attention to the many, many wasteful policies of the federal government, the first being the forever-cursed gun registry. We're told it would only cost $2 million. However, reports from the Auditor General show that a possible $998 million later we were told the truth. There have been a billion dollars lost elsewhere in the federal human resources department, millions wasted on studies with misplaced reports, and possibly billions more on implementing Kyoto. I guess we'll have to wait to see that.

Mr. Speaker, the underlying similarity of all these examples is that Alberta said to us and to the federal government: no more wasting. We listened. The feds did not. The feds continue to put policies forward that bring Canada down. From our laughable military funding to the crash and burn of our loonie, Alberta's interests and westerners' interests as a whole are just not being met.

Therefore, it's time we start taking care of ourselves while trying very hard to lead the rest of the provinces to rebuild this country. It's time to assert what are provincial responsibilities and strengthen our position in Canada. This government must begin by adopting policies that not only strengthen Alberta within Confederation but strengthen Canada as a Confederation. We must assert ourselves within this country, and I believe Motion 502 is a step in the right direction, and I would hope everyone in this Assembly would support this motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to rise today and enter the debate on Motion 502, the strengthening of Alberta's independence within Confederation. Motion 502 undoubtedly strikes a chord with many Albertans and western Canadians who feel that Alberta and the west have long been ignored or even plundered by the various federal governments that have sat on Parliament Hill. It's easy to reach this point of view, especially if all we do is read the many western Canadian newspaper headlines that we are all so familiar with. We have all been indoctrinated about these grievances since we were all little kids, and no doubt we will hear more of them in the future. I'm glad that this motion does not call for separation, as we heard earlier, because I couldn't support that, Mr. Speaker, but I can support the idea that in certain areas we could use a little more independence, at least from the current government in Ottawa, particularly when it comes to their socialist and anti-American and anti small business sentiments and their pro government monopoly preferences.

However, in wondering what value I might be able to add to tonight's debate and what I might say that might be helpful in improving Alberta's position within Confederation in coming years, I decided to suggest a very different approach to the issue tonight, one that isn't often heard. It isn't often heard because it isn't popular, and it won't make me popular, I don't expect, but I am reminded of a quote by U.S. President Abraham Lincoln that he serves his party best who serves his country first.

I think that in terms of strategy of how to win friends and influence people in Ottawa to see things our way, there are some things that need to be said about our past strategies, and in my admittedly 20/20 hindsight opinion they haven't always been the best. I'm going to ask us all to look in the mirror for a little bit over the next while. I'm going to ask us all to question whether or not we might be the authors of our own misfortunes, at least to some degree. I'm going to ask us to make sure that our historic grievances as a province actually stand up to unbiased independent scrutiny, that we aren't just looking at our side of the media story. It appears to me that some of the main grievances we all know about, such as the national energy policy, which I lived through, too, and the GST and so on, clearly have a very different other side to the story to them that we haven't heard much about, and they do get blamed for a lot of things that they didn't actually do.

The facts are that when we are very angry about something, we tend to be easy prey for those who see opportunity in fleecing the angry, manipulating us and pressing our hot buttons in order to suck us into following their plan of action with our money and our votes.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, but the time allocated for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 2

Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We've had a little bit of time now to have Bill 2 out in the community, to start to get some feedback on it and find out what people think of it, and it's been interesting to hear what people have had to say. We've had some people who were very interested in different aspects of the bill and some who weren't all that pleased with it, some who figured that this was just another way for this government to talk about ways to build slush funds. I would be very interested to hear what the government has to say about this, because in fact that could be a very real problem. If there are not the proper parameters put around the bill and if there isn't enough targeting for benchmarks that remain consistent from year to year in this particular bill, we could see ourselves back in the situation where we were with the heritage savings trust fund some 10 years ago, when the government and government committees decided how they would spend that in manners that are reminiscent of some of the kinds of spending we see today.

This government has a long-standing tradition of really developing their plans from election to election. The first year they talk about how great they are. The second year they slough through all the stuff that they don't want to see become campaign issues. The third year they start the money giveaway, and the fourth year, when we're in an election year, bang. There it is, right in everybody's grubby little hand so that they can think about: "Well, maybe this government wasn't all that great in the past, but when I've got money in my paw right now, that's going to be a real advantage. Perhaps they'll be better in the future." So they vote for them again. It's an excellent election strategy, and it's an excellent way to stay in power for 30 years, but it isn't very good for the longevity of the province.

We have what is the most outstanding province in Confederation – there's no doubt about it – and we are blessed with an abundance of riches. Unfortunately, this government has had a long-standing tradition of being able to squander those riches. With what we have had, we should have had a heritage savings trust fund built up to the point in time where we had so much interest revenue coming off that money and other kinds of earned income that we would have all kinds of options today: options like completely eliminating personal income tax, options like eliminating corporate tax, options like eliminating health care fees, options like ensuring that people who are low-income families could actually live with some kind of dignity. So those are the choices that could have been made. Those weren't the choices that were made, and people are a little concerned that with this bill we may be back to the same old game. I hope not, Mr. Chairman. I hope that doesn't turn out to be the case, but we will be following the progress quite closely.

The framework that was given for the bill and the detailed plan that we had in our 2020 Vision was excellent and did lay out a roadmap that I think even this government could follow. Let's hope that they do. [interjection] Well, you've cherry-picked some of the best ideas so far, so keep on trucking, and we could all be in pretty good shape down the road. So far those kinds of things haven't happened.

I have a few concerns when I take a look at the overall flow of what this government has talked about doing with this money so far. They say things like, "Energy rebates will come out of this fund," which already, right off the bat, makes it a slush fund. I just want to talk a little about energy rebates, Mr. Chairman. We know that they are only a short-term management problem-solving tack that this government can use. Should they do it in the short term? Absolutely. Why should they do it? Because with the bungling of electrical deregulation and the way gas prices are going, we have many, many families in this province who really are making the choice between paying their electrical bills and being able to buy food and even in terms of the quality of the food that they're able to put on the table. So those are the real choices that people are having to make right now.

To people in this Assembly an increase in your bill of $100 a month isn't going to break the bank, but there are certainly people who are living in low-income situations, the working poor, particularly, I'm talking about, those who don't qualify for day care subsidies or for subsidized housing, to whom $100 makes all the difference in the world. It significantly makes a difference between what they can eat. Where else can they cut back on their budgets? They can't cut back on transportation. We have such a lousy public transportation system throughout this province that it's impossible to get the kids ready, get the little ones to day care, get the school-age ones to school, and then get yourself to work on time. Even if you could find a bus schedule that would actually do that, you'd have to leave at 4 o'clock in the morning, and then you'd have to expect that the buses are running on time, which, as we know, particularly in this city, doesn't happen to be the case. So it isn't like they can stop running their car.

So if you think about people's disposable income, rent or mortgage payments are fixed. Utilities are skyrocketing. They have to maintain some sort of a transportation program. The discretionary income comes on things like food and clothing. Now, who is going to say in this province that we should deny our children things like coats on their backs and boots on their feet and mitts on their hands? Nobody. But by the same token, should they have to live on Kraft Dinner for a whole month all because the government didn't plan deregulation properly? I don't think so.

So our concern is that this government started talking about deregulation a decade ago. From 1995 on, for sure, we told them repeatedly that they have to put the plan in place, that they have to tell people how the plan is going to roll out, that they have to put some certainty in the marketplace so that companies can start to build, so that we won't face situations where prices skyrocket and we're looking at brownouts and things of that nature, where there's a stable, competitive environment for businesses to thrive in. This government didn't listen. They didn't put the plan in place. They didn't do any of those things that they were supposed to do. What happened? They forced deregulation through, prices skyrocketed, and they did it on the backs of the taxpayers to the tune of what amount so far? Just additional fees for people to pay their energy bills so far for deregulation total $9 billion. That isn't what Albertans have paid in totality for their fees for energy costs. That's just the extra cost of deregulation so far, all on the backs of people.

Now, it's a little easier for people in our income bracket or people who make more money than us to be able to foot that kind of bill, but for people who clear $800, $1,200, $1,400, $1,600 a month and are trying to raise families, that burden is enormous. It isn't like we spread the risk or the cost out, where those who can least afford to pay pay the least and those who can afford to pay a bigger share take that burden with them. That's not what happens in this province, Mr. Chairman. People pay the same amount of money, so the disproportionate weight of carrying this government's mismanagement on issues falls on the backs of the working poor. That's a real mistake, and we hope that this government has learned something from that and will have a better planning model in the future. So far there is no evidence of that. We don't see five-year, 10-year, 15-year, 20-year, how about 50-year forecasts coming out of this government in terms of sustainable development and economic planning in the future. We see three-year rolling business plans that roll right off the page every year, and we see a new set of plans come in. That isn't a very good management strategy. We hope that in the future they will improve that. So that's one cautionary note about this bill as it moves forward.

We're still hearing about P3s, Mr. Chairman, not just from people throughout the province but certainly from the government's own plan within this bill. They say that this is the kind of place where the funding for P3s, for what they see as their share of a private/public partnership, comes from. In a P3 as described by the government, the government's share is just going to be the ongoing lease payments. So tell me what sense that makes.

First of all, let's talk about the whole concept of P3s and how absolutely senseless it is from an economic standpoint to venture into them. Let's forget for a second all the evidence out there about how these P3s haven't worked in other jurisdictions or even, in fact, in this jurisdiction. Let's forget that developers are in to make a buck and that they will provide the least quality possible given the price tag that they've won the bid at and that they will retrieve as much money as they can from governments in lease payments over time. So, on the one hand, we get a product that meets the minimum standards, doesn't exceed them, and on the other hand we're paying the best premium price that a company can negotiate with the government for the lease of these premises. Let's forget that argument for a second, which in itself doesn't make good economic sense.

Let's talk about the cost of money and what it means for governments to be able to borrow, if governments are in a position where they have to borrow, which this government isn't. With this kind of a fund that they're going to be funding their P3s out of, the money is there in a pot. They can build the structure and pay for the ongoing maintenance costs of it, and that cost over time, over the life of the building, be it 10 or 15 or 20 or, more likely, 30 or 40 years – because what we've seen is that many of the schools that are still functional have lasted for decades and decades and decades. If you amortize the original construction costs over that length of time, including the ongoing maintenance costs, the actual present value of the building is very, very low. Even if the government has to borrow, especially a government like Alberta, who's got a triple A rating, governments can always borrow money at a lesser cost than companies can. So their cost of borrowing is going to be lower. That means that their building costs are also going to be lower. So if the government has to borrow the money and then you amortize the life of that building and the cost of borrowing and the cost of construction over time, you're going to see that that cost also is a great deal less than what any kind of lease payments that they could negotiate could ever be.

It's like all of these car companies out there now pushing you to lease the vehicle rather than buy it. Why do they do that? Because people buy a newer and more costly vehicle, and the company makes more money. It isn't because it's cheaper to you as the consumer. I have never yet seen a loan agreement for a car that over a five-year time period is not cheaper than the lease payments over the five-year time period. And guess what? At the end of the day not only do you have a paid-off car, which is an asset for which you reap the benefit for however many extra years you keep that vehicle in having no capital cost outlay. You've paid less money over time than what you do over the term, which is usually a five-year term. You pay less money over that time when you include the balloon payment at the end if you want to buy the vehicle. What they really want you to do is just keep on leasing forever and ever and ever and paying them forever and ever and ever. Well, that doesn't make good economic sense. Good economic sense means you spend the least amount of capital possible to purchase the item and then you reap the benefits over the life of that item.

So what's wrong with P3s is they're just going to cost more money, not to this particular administration, because they'll be long gone by that time, but to the people of Alberta. So that means we are putting this economic burden on the backs of our children and our grandchildren. Mr. Chairman, that is just flat out a wrong way to do business. So I was very disappointed to see in this bill that this government could possibly talk about funding P3s out of this particular legislation.

What do we need them to spend the money on that they're going to accumulate in this fund? What we do need them to spend the money on is flattening out the revenue streams when we have a boom-and-bust economy. If Peter Lougheed had done what he originally said he was going to do more than 30 years ago – and that was successfully diversify the economy beyond the kind of single-based economy we had – then we wouldn't need this leveling out now that we've got. It's because we still depend on raw oil and gas prices. It's because we still depend on trees that we simply lop the branches off and ship out elsewhere. It's for those kinds of reasons that we have such a volatile economy. Had they done more tertiary development in the early days, spent a greater amount of time and energy on that kind of development, we would have a flatter revenue stream now and we wouldn't be facing these volatile years that we have.

They are starting now to do it on the technology side, on the medical technology side in particular, and on the agrifood side in some cases, and that's a good move, but it's still just a very small piece of our revenue stream. In the meantime, we go through these boom-and-bust cycles about every five to 10 years, and if we happen to have a government in place on the day of the bust cycles, we get ourselves into huge financial problems. They don't know how to manage their way out of them. They don't know how to cut back on costs or economize in the right areas. They just lop money off the top. How this government operates the budget is like a sponge. They take all the water and squeeze it out in the dry years, but they don't really shrink the size of the sponge, and in the boom years it puffs back out to the same size and even sometimes bigger than it was before. So we don't see any economies at all, and that's a really bad thing.

So, in the meantime, until we can get a government in place that knows truly how to manage budgets and how to forecast for the future and how to provide those basic necessities that governments should be responsible for – like universal health care, like a universal education program, like good, solid infrastructure programs – then we have to have some sort of relief from the bust times, something to level out the income so that we don't see the kind of chopping and dashing that we've had here in the past 10 years in some of the core services of government. So for that, we have been advocating for a long time for a stability fund, and now we see it come forward under another name and with a couple of add-on items that look like they could be contentious in the future but, nonetheless, addressing one of the core issues that we've been talking about for a number of years.

As I hear people out in the community talking about this particular bill and what it means for us in the future, Mr. Chairman, we've seen a fairly mixed reaction. A lot of people are very suspicious. A lot of people think that this government has spent over 30 years not being able to manage the finances of this province and won't be able to do so in the future. However, there are a few people who reserve judgment in some areas and think that if this is going to be a start in leveling out the boom-and-bust cycles, then it might not be a bad plan. At this point, I think I have to reserve judgment because we'll have to see it in action.

So far this government has done nothing over the past years to inspire confidence in me, but you never know. They may be on to a good thing here, and if they just keep that Alberta Liberal 2020 Vision right beside them on the desk as they're making decisions and in the middle of the cabinet table and use it as a blueprint, then in fact, Mr. Chairman, we might not be in too bad of a position. But we'll know better once this legislation has passed and we see it works its way into the budgeting process, and they may be able to work out the wrinkles. It doesn't look like it's going to be a real problem for the next year or two the way oil and gas prices are going. It looks like we're not even at the peak of the cycle of booming at this stage, which is probably a good thing for this government. It gives them some time to figure it out, some time, I hope, to do some real long-range planning, planning that will take them beyond the next election and take Albertans into a future that could be fiscally sound, we hope.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I believe I'll take my seat and see if anyone else wants to enter into debate.

Dr. Taylor: No. Keep going.

Ms Carlson: You know, the Minister of Environment is so mouthy tonight, but he refuses to stand up and enter into debate, and we really wish that he would put his comments about this bill on the record because he hasn't done so yet, and that is part of the problem.

Dr. Taylor: The whip won't let me.

Ms Carlson: You know, the government talks all the time about the possibilities of free votes and how they are their own people and they represent their constituents, and what we hear the Minister of Environment talk about now is that the whip won't allow him to enter into debate on this particular bill. Well, I have a secret for the Minister of Environment: the whip isn't here. So he could at this point in time just stand in his place and put a few . . .

An Hon. Member: The deputy whip is here.

Ms Carlson: I don't think the deputy whip is quite as tough as the whip, Mr. Chairman, so I think that probably he could take his place this evening and share a few of his comments with us. Maybe he could share his comments with regard to how the lightbulb came on on the front bench in terms of the Alberta Liberals having a really good idea that they needed to steal. We'd like to know what year that actually happened and how long it took them to be able to put the plan in place.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to follow the comments of my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie and take a few minutes to raise some questions and put some thoughts on the record about Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act. As has been widely noted, this act draws on ideas that originated with the Alberta Liberal caucus. The good ideas that they are, the government is welcome to share them, to use them, but we ask them to use them wisely. I know that's asking a lot, but we ask it anyways.

As I go through this piece of legislation in some detail and look at the different clauses, various questions arise, questions that relate to, well, different issues, some of it relating to the generalities of the bill, the lack of detail, the lack of regulations, and so on, and sometimes relating to other issues. I'm noticing here, for example, under section 1 – I'm on page 21 of the bill as I've got the copy in my hand. It's amendments to the Fiscal Responsibility Act. Let's see; it'd be 2(2)(a)(ii). In any case, it says:

The total outstanding borrowings of the Alberta Social Housing Corporation pursuant to section 25(3) of the Alberta Housing Act, excluding any borrowings for the purpose of financing capital investment on or after April 1, 2003.

Now, this is excluding it from the definition of accumulated debt. So accumulated debt under Bill 2 will come to mean various aggregated amounts, but it will exclude "any borrowings for the purpose of financing capital investment on or after April 1, 2003."

Clearly what the government is doing here is letting itself off the hook. It's leaving itself a very large loophole. At least that's the way I read it. If I'm incorrect, any of the government members are welcome to correct me on this, but the way I read it, there's a great big loophole that will allow borrowing for the purpose of financing capital investment after April 1, 2003, to be exempt from the definition of accumulated debt, which seems like potentially an enormous loophole.

Mr. Herard: What about the asset? Where do you put that?

Dr. Taft: Well, one of the members from the government is asking where the asset goes, and I don't know. If you know the answer to that, I'd be happy for the explanation.

Likewise, the following section excludes "any debentures issued for the purpose of financing capital spending by school boards on or after April 1" from the definition of accumulated debt. Again it raises the same questions about: are we leaving ourselves a large loophole here? As one member suggested, will there be provisions here for calculating the assets? If all of that is excluded from the aggregated amounts that form the accumulated debt, then, as I say, are we looking at a substantial loophole here? I don't know, but it makes me concerned that there is that loophole here.

I'm also noticing that in the definition proposed for accumulated debt, there's no mention here or anywhere else in the bill, I think, of what's come to be called the infrastructure debt. It would be interesting to see some reference to that. I see the Minister of Infrastructure is in here today, and he might want to comment on why there's no reference to that issue in this bill. Maybe it will be handled some other way, and maybe it's not of immediate concern for the government. I know the government and many others have questioned the whole concept of infrastructure debt, but I do think the Premier has come to accept its legitimacy. It would seem that we can, on one hand, not have any cash debt, but if our roads and public facilities and so on are in serious disrepair, then we have a different kind of a debt, and it might be nice to consider handling some measure of that in this legislation or some other legislation so that we had a full and complete accounting. Referring back to one member's comments about the assets, there might be the opportunity here, in accounting for the assets and depreciation and so on, to account for infrastructure debt.

Anyways, on page 24 of the bill, under Alberta Sustainability Fund, which is one of the major, major components of this bill, section 2.1(1) reads . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Is it a stabilization fund or a sustainability fund?

Dr. Taft: One of the members, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, is asking if it's a stabilization fund or a sustainability fund. Well, here they're calling it a sustainability fund. [interjection] We'll see how it's run, and that actually goes to the heart of my questions for the government. I'm wondering: how is this sustainability fund going to be managed? What are the details on how it will be managed? There are some ideas here, references here. As it says, "If for a fiscal year actual non-renewable resource revenue exceeds non-renewable resource revenue for fiscal policy purposes, the difference must be allocated to the Alberta Sustainability Fund." That's pretty clear, and that makes sense. I think that works for all of us, and that has a stabilizing effect. When Alberta is in a gold rush, as it were, of nonrenewable resource revenues, then that money will be set aside in the sustainability fund, and presumably in years when nonrenewable resource revenues are low, we can draw on that fund to support general revenues or other things, but that still doesn't indicate to me how it will be managed. Are we going to see an office set up under the Minister of Finance, for example, that will be managing this? Maybe it'll be privatized out. Maybe it'll be handed out for some kind of short-term fund management company to handle. Will it be put into short-term deposits? How is this going to be managed? I'd be curious to have any thoughts from any government members on that particular issue.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you nervous about the next election and how that might be used?

9:30

Dr. Taft: Well, yes, I know that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie raised questions about this being used as a slush fund, and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar raised that issue, and I've heard that concern myself. I know that we've talked about it in our caucus, and it is a legitimate concern. It's curious that this legislation is being set up at this moment after all the years that we've argued for it and would just happen to be coming into full force in the lead-up to the next election. Certainly, our concern is that it will be used as a fund to give out election goodies. We'll have to wait and see. [interjections] Well, we'll see how they're done. I'm getting comments from government members challenging some of my thoughts, and they're welcome to stand up and put them on the record.

The same kind of questions about the Alberta sustainability fund can be asked about the capital account. I'm now on page 25 of the bill, which refers to the capital account, section 2.2(1): "The Capital Account is established as an account within the General Revenue Fund." Well, again, the same sort of questions, very practical questions. How is this going to be managed? Are we going to have a director of the capital account who, again, maybe invests in short-term investments? Will there be any parameters on what those investments can be? Are we going to see, perhaps, an ethical investment policy to ensure that none of the money in this account is even briefly invested in something like Talisman Energy or other energy companies or tobacco companies or whoever might have ethical track records that don't meet everybody's approval? I don't know. Is the government going to have policies on that for this account or not?

I've wondered, as well, what will happen if there are surpluses in this account. I do notice a good clause in here about deficit. It says under subsection (3), "The net assets of the Capital Account may not be reduced to an amount less than zero." In other words, the capital account can never be run as a deficit. Fine. That's wise. But what happens if at the end of the year there's a surplus? Can this capital account get larger and larger and larger? I'm not sure that that's clear in here. I don't see that it's spelled out here, but perhaps somebody can correct me if I'm wrong.

So there are questions I have there about the capital account. How is it going to be managed? Who's going to manage it? Will it be all done in-house? Will it be farmed out to a management and investment firm? What policies for investments might they have for the money that's in there, or are we just going to leave it in extremely low interest bearing savings account sorts of rates while we use the money?

Another change I notice in this particular bill has to do with the debt elimination schedule. Now, it says here on page 26 and page 27 of the bill under the debt elimination schedule, section 5, that "the accumulated debt must be no greater than the following," and then it lists five different time benchmarks and amounts of money to be the maximum amount in accumulated debt in each of those benchmarks. Those benchmarks stretch out right until the year 2024-25, until that fiscal year, which is still 23 years in the future. By then, it says that the accumulated debt, which, if I've read this bill correctly, does not include school board debt and won't include debt under the Housing Act – but I guess it'll include everything else. The entire thing will have to reach zero by the end of the 2024-25 fiscal year. Given the times we're in right now, that's a very modest target to set, but at least it's a target, and it's in black and white. I've lost track now. Maybe one member or another here can tell me what the current debt figure is for the province, but I think we are so far ahead of schedule that we could easily have eliminated the debt entirely within the next few years, which could make this piece of legislation more or less redundant. But I do note the very modest sorts of objectives that are set under this part of the legislation.

Turning ahead a few more pages in the bill, I'm now on page 29, which refers to the consolidated capital plan, and it says here that "the Minister of Finance must prepare a consolidated capital plan for the Government as part of the consolidated fiscal plan for a fiscal year." It makes no reference here whatsoever to the Minister of Infrastructure, and I'm wondering what the Minister of Infrastructure's plans will look like and how they will fit into this activity by the Minister of Finance, especially when it goes on to say under subsection (2) that "a consolidated capital plan must be for a period that includes the fiscal year and at least the 2 subsequent fiscal years." So we're looking here at a three-year capital plan, which I would have thought would have been the primary responsibility of the Minister of Infrastructure. There's no reference at all to that minister in here, but I do hope that the Treasurer, the Minister of Finance, is actively consulted on this. Otherwise, either his work or the work of the Minister of Finance will be completely irrelevant.

So, Mr. Chair, there's no end of comments that could be made under this piece of legislation. Fundamentally, as we've said, a good idea, but like all legislation pretty much, the devil is in the details. I hope that somebody in the government will pay attention to my comments, maybe even answer some of the issues.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Bill 17 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The chair recognizes the hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move Bill 17 on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This bill asks the government for over $206 million extra dollars in order to defray some of the additional expenses that the government has incurred this year. [interjections] Certainly one of them has not been altaliberals.ab.ca, which is a web site that will show how much money Albertans can save. There has to be an accounting at some time of all the money that has been spent on electricity deregulation in this province, but Bill 17 is not the time to be discussing that.

Now, the government is requesting that there be funds made available in this bill, Bill 17, for 17 different departments. Transportation has requested the most money, $41 million, and the majority of these dollars will go towards costs incurred as a result of the provincial government having taken over responsibility for the secondary highway system. For the second appropriation act in a row the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has required funds, $2 million less than Transportation, $39 million this time around for agricultural assistance programs.

When we look at Bill 17, we see that it is the second appropriation act to be brought before the Assembly this year. The first, Bill 36, was of course brought forward during the fall sitting of the Legislature. Bill 36 called for $822 million to be spent in five different departments. I have attached, Mr. Speaker, the Bill 36 final briefing for further information on the first appropriation act of this fiscal year.

The $206 million has $3.3 million set aside for the Department of Energy. I don't know what the Department of Energy is going to use this money for. Perhaps it's going to be to study rebates or perhaps it's going to be a public relations campaign to try to convince Albertans one last time that energy deregulation will work. When the government tries that, I would urge all Albertans to visit our web site, altaliberals.ab.ca, and if you're a customer in Aquila/EPCOR or EPCOR or Enmax or ATCO, you can see the savings that you can make by following our low-cost energy plan and unplugging electricity deregulation. Perhaps if the citizens would have a look at that web site, then the $3.3 million requested by the Department of Energy would not be necessary. Certainly, I hope this is not a public relations campaign like the one we had on Kyoto or the one that we had in Bill 11, any of those campaigns where we tried to swing public opinion in our favour with tax dollars.

Now, this government has relied, Mr. Speaker, on supplementary supply as opposed to good budgeting techniques to finance programs throughout the fiscal year. In fact, during most years the government requires two appropriation acts to see them through the year. This reliance on in-year spending is indicative of a government that has difficulty developing a fiscal plan and then sticking to it.

The constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar, whenever they assemble at Kenilworth school, always ask the question: we know there's so much more money being spent on programs; is it true that it's close to a 50 percent increase in program spending in the last five years? And, yes, I admit that it's true, and they say: well, where's all this money going? That's a question that I'm going to have to be diligent in pursuing.

Many hon. members, Mr. Speaker, will say: well, you're the chairman of Public Accounts; you should know where every dime goes. And I'm afraid I don't. That's a hard job, to find out where this government spends money. Certainly spending has increased, but where the money goes is the question that's on the minds of public school parents in Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Now, the government stakeholders, of course, include school boards, regional health authorities, and construction firms, and all these stakeholders are incapable of long-term planning because of the stop-and-start funding that they receive. An example of that would be one public school in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar that has been on the list for reconstruction twice. It has been denied twice because of this stop/start spending, and in the process and in the time period between the first denial and the second denial the cost of the reconstruction and retrofit of the school has increased by well over a million dollars.

Dr. Taft: Is that a waste?

Mr. MacDonald: That is poor planning.

Dr. Taft: It's a complete and utter waste.

Mr. MacDonald: It's a complete and utter waste; I would agree. That is one example.

Another example is, unfortunately, a senior high school. The gymnasium ceiling had tiles falling off, so the school board had hired a scaffolding company to construct this scaffolding to remove them because it was an issue of public safety and student safety.

Dr. Taft: Was there asbestos?

Mr. MacDonald: There was not any asbestos that this member is aware of, but the school board, unfortunately, only had enough money to remove the tiles. They didn't have any money to replace them, and on a night like tonight, when the temperature is so cold, there is reduced insulating value in the gymnasium of that high school, and because of the budget cuts, the stop/start spending, after the ceiling tiles had been removed, the scaffolding was disassembled. The school year started again, and what's going to happen? The school board has to hire the scaffolding company twice instead of once because they only had the budget to remove the tiles, not to purchase new ones and replace them while the scaffolding was in the school last summer.

This is a desperate waste of money, and I want to see this stopped. Long-term planning not only applies to electricity generation, transmission, and distribution in this province. Long-term planning also applies to regional health authorities and to school boards, and their hands are tied because they don't know where the next dollar is going to come from.

Now, the government, the province had requested this year well over a billion dollars for in-year spending, and this illustrates a lack of solid budget management. Last year the government requested slightly more, $1.4 billion. The government of Alberta continues governing and spending without any definite plan. As I illustrated earlier with the examples of the two public schools in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, the lack of a plan ultimately costs Alberta taxpayers more as they have to pay for the stopping and starting of projects year after year after year.

Next year, Mr. Speaker, this government hopefully is going to have to change their tune. After almost a decade of Liberal calls for more stability in this province the government is going to finally adopt the Alberta Liberal plan for fiscal stability with Bill 2. Speaking of Bill 2, there are two hon. members of this Assembly within view of this member who sponsored a similar bill. We have to always remember that we're talking about stability, not sustainability. Sustainability may be a public relations exercise for the government and for the folks over at the Public Affairs Bureau, but everybody knows that it's a stability fund to stabilize funding with the ups and downs of the oil and gas prices.

Now, Bill 2 will limit the government to only $3.5 billion a year for operating expenses that are there no matter what – right? – but it will be interesting to see how this government reacts when they are forced to make a change in their spending habits. This government has never been constrained in the amount that they can spend, and we hope that they do not face constraints this time.

Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, as a result of strong energy markets we'll be able to work ourselves into a sound fiscal future. We're going to end, hopefully, the three-month budgeting plans and, I hope, the three-year budgeting. We talk about quarterly reports and business plans from one year to the next. I would urge this government to go beyond the Liberal plan and have a close look at what the state of Alaska has: 10-year plans. I know that it would be challenging for this government, but I think they should try. It would be interesting to see them go from a three-year plan to a 10-year plan and just see what happens.

Should one support this appropriation bill until the government comes forward? Should it be supported, or should we wait until they provide some explanation as to how the additional expenditures will help the government meet its performance measures?

Ms Carlson: Let's wait.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is urging not only this member but other members of the House to wait. Let's see what happens here.

The performance measures and the goals of the various departments should direct department spending. The fact that this government spends outside of these guidelines means that this government is governing without a plan. We simply cannot support the fact that this government is governing without a plan. A government that is committed to measuring performance should be taking the business plans to heart rather than having them gather dust on some government shelf. If they're not gathering dust and they're going to be an embarrassment, well, we'll just change them so that there is a different meaning.

More different departments are requesting additional money through Bill 17, Mr. Speaker, than in past years. This would seem to indicate that the government is having a more difficult job managing their finances. The fiscal roller-coaster ride in Alberta is unacceptable, and disallowing the government use of supplementary supply is one way to slow down the fiscal roller-coaster ride that we're now on. If Albertans want to see a roller coaster, they'll go to West Edmonton Mall. They don't need to have a look at this government's up and down and up and down and the stopping and starting.

Now, if this government expects to limit its expenses to the $3.5 billion a year in the future, it had better start to practise now. What better way to practise than by voting against the appropriation act this year. Additionally, the government promises to limit the size of its economic cushion down from 3.5 percent to just 1 percent. In this fiscal year that amounts to only $200 million. The government has requested nearly $207 million in this bill, Bill 17, alone.

Now, when we look at the various sections, Mr. Speaker, and the various departments, Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is requesting $1.4 million to provide for Alberta's initiative on aboriginal consultation. I certainly, in light of what's been going on in northern Alberta, would like to know how this money is going to be spent. The money requested falls under the land and legal settlements line item. What would be the total cost of this program?

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, as I said earlier, is requesting close to $40 million, and the Official Opposition believes that farmers need stable and predictable income, not ad hoc support programs. Furthermore, the ad hoc support programs are biased and inflexible. The Official Opposition would like a firm income insurance program based on farmers' lost income, not on margin, yield, or production value. The program would give farmers the freedom to make production decisions midseason.

Economic Development has requested $4 million more to provide additional funding for tourism and marketing services. This money, as I understand it, is going to be split up across various line items under the tourism marketing section. Now, why couldn't this department wait for the next budget to ask for an increase given that there are no items in tourism where there could be an immediate demand for this money within the industry? One would have to ask: what specifically will these funds be used for? Are they going to be used for travel, promotion, or are they going to be used for developing the tourist industry into something that will provide long-term economic benefits for future generations of Albertans? Tourism, in the view of this member, will certainly be a very large industry in the next 50 to 60 years in this province. Why weren't the original allocations enough in the Economic Development portfolio? Did certain programs return over budget? What will the return on this additional 4 million dollars' worth of investment be given that the tourism industry is supposed to bring a return on its investment?

Now, Mr. Speaker, we talked about energy a little earlier, and if many Albertans and many government members would take the time and visit altaliberals.ab.ca, they would see for themselves the savings that could be had with our low-cost energy plan, and perhaps this money in Alberta's Department of Energy would be unnecessary.

The Environment department is requesting $2 million "to accelerate grant payments to local authorities under the Alberta Waste Management Assistance program." What type of emergencies in waste disposal have arrived such that the budgeting amount was not sufficient? Why do the payments need to be accelerated, Mr. Speaker? Will there be a reduction in next year's budget to compensate for the increase in this year's budget?

Government Services is the next department on the long list here that's going to get some extra cash. The department is requesting 4 and a half million dollars to provide funding for the initial phase of a driver's licence upgrade program. Now, that's noteworthy in itself. I don't know how many times in the last year there have been questions about drivers' licences and the validity of them in this province. The system does not seem to be working. Any time a driver's licence program is altered, there is a chance that personal information, of course, may be released. The last time there was information released from that department, one of the Edmonton newspaper reporters found them fluttering in the summer breeze.

Dr. Taft: No kidding. How did that happen?

Mr. MacDonald: I have no idea how that happened, but it was definitely a breach of security. Definitely.

Mr. Speaker, what upgrades are going to be made in this initial phase with Government Services, and again how are the future phases of this program going to be funded? [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] That's disappointing because there are many departments left.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's very difficult to follow in the footsteps of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and his eloquent words on this bill, which is an important bill for the government to get, Bill 17, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act. I just have a handful of comments.

I am struck by the nature of this bill, and I have concerns about the budget process in general. We'll be coming up, I guess, in a month or so to the third budget since I became an MLA, and it's not even going to be tabled, I don't think, until we're actually into the next fiscal year, which will be the second out of three budgets, at least, that are that late. This particular bill is part of the budget process, and the fact that we're into our second supplementary supply bill in three months tells me that the budget process is a bit out of whack and needs to be improved. Budgets are late. Business plans are extremely late. I know that in the regional health authorities many of their business plans weren't approved until the second and, in some cases, the third quarter of the year. So there are some really serious problems with the budget process.

There's an ancient Chinese proverb that says: govern a great nation as you would cook a small fish. Some members might like me to repeat that: govern a great nation as you would cook a small fish. Now, I have pondered the meaning of that proverb, and I think what it means is that no matter how big the issue, you need to pay careful attention to the details. You need to be very delicate, very precise, and pay great attention to details. We all know that if we were cooking a small fish, a minute or two too much and it'll be overcooked. In the same way, I want to pay careful attention to the budget. I mean, it's a $20 billion bill, a $20 billion piece of expenditure, but every dollar counts. I'll just raise a handful of issues about this great budget, and hopefully it will help the government cook it like a small fish.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has already referred to a couple of the departments that I had questions about, and I won't repeat his oratory. I do have a particular question around the Justice department, and I bet the Environment minister might have some comments here too. I see that the Justice department is requesting $2.6 million, and of this $500,000 is for external legal costs related to Kyoto, $500,000 to a law firm to study Kyoto.

Ms Carlson: Two law firms.

Dr. Taft: Well, in fact, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is saying, "Two law firms." The truth is that I don't know how many law firms are involved. There could be a whole number of them.

I would be most interested to see some more details on where this half million dollars is going. What are the billable rates? What work is being done here? Will we ever see in the public or in this Assembly the results of that $500,000 in legal fees? In fact, there's so much contracted out by this government to legal firms; it's astonishing. So that's one particular area that certainly caught my attention.

I do note also as the health critic that in this bill there are no requests for supplemental spending for health. Hats off to the Minister of Health and Wellness for that if this is any indication that he's managing to finish out the fiscal year without needing any supplementary supply bills. So good for him. Good on him.

Otherwise, I would simply be repeating some of the comments of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I won't bother doing that. So with those comments, I'll take my seat.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance to close the debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a second time]

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think it's been an excellent day of progress with some very enlightened debate, and as a result, I would move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:07 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 4, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 03/03/04

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Our Father, keep us mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work give us strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly representatives of a delegation from Russia. This is the second time in less than a week that a delegation from around the world has been here to look at the Alberta education system, the Alberta Learning system. This afternoon they are going to visit a school to see what a typical Alberta school is like and learn about one of the many innovative AC projects. I'd like to welcome Mr. Alexey Mayorov, who's the deputy head of the Department of Strategic Development with the Russian Federation; Ms Galina Chernova, Minister of Education for the Chuvash Republic; Ms Viktoria Prudnikova, head of the general education division of the Science and Education department for the Samara Oblast; Mr. Mikhail Gruzdev, deputy head of the Education department for the Yaroslavl Oblast; Svitlana Semenko, an interpreter for the group; and Mr. Waldemar Riemer, a member of our Alberta Learning staff. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly His Worship Mayor Richard Plain, who is seated in your gallery. He is, as you know, the mayor of our wonderful city of St. Albert and a recent recipient of the Queen's golden jubilee medal. He met today with the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and myself, and I'm honoured that he's here. I would ask everyone in the Assembly to please give him the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 84 visitors from Gibbons school. They are grade 6 students. They are accompanied by their teachers Mr. Don McIntyre, Mrs. Rhonda Hruschak, Mrs. Colleen Baillie, Ms Sheligne Connolly and parent helpers Mrs. Pam Yakymchuk, Mrs. Donna McDonnell, Mr. Dennis Gauchier, Heather McWhirter, and Mrs. Jennifer Hamstra. I look forward to visiting their school in the next couple of weeks to speak to the students. They're seated in both the public and members' galleries, and I wish them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I stand today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two committees that have been working diligently on some of our new children's legislation, the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. Members of the committee are just walking into the members' gallery at this point in time. I'd like to introduce them, and as I introduce them, if they could please stand: Mr. Bruce Uditsky, Dr. Wheeler, Sharon Holtman – I think we're ahead of them right now – Kathleen Waxer, Linda Stainton, David Jardine, Ed Riediger, Doug Endres; and staff that have been working with them, John Mould, Roxanne Gerbrandt, Judith Dyck, David Oman; and staff that have been working with this committee as well, Sharon Harewood, Susan Rankin, Deborah McElrath, Kathleen Freese, Sandra Klashinsky, and Karen Ferguson. Mr. Speaker, they've been working very hard on our behalf. I would like to ask them all to rise to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you today two representatives of one of the finest postsecondary institutions in the province, the University of Calgary. Presently we have with us the president of the University of Calgary, Dr. Harvey Weingarten, and his special assistant, Donna Mastel. I would ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly Maureen Fisher, the chair of the Wild Rose school division, which covers Rocky Mountain House, Drayton Valley, and an area around them. She is standing in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that you give her the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislative Assembly 22 of the north's brightest and greatest students. We have 22 students from Roland Michener secondary school, and they are accompanied by Ms Susan Giesbrecht and Mrs. Sheri Smears, and they are seated in the public and the members' galleries. They drove from Slave Lake this morning despite the cold and made it here just to see the action of the House, so I'd appreciate it if the Members of the Legislative Assembly would welcome them as they stand.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of social work students from Grant MacEwan College. Some of us in this Assembly are extremely fortunate to have these students serve their practicum in our constituency offices. My constituency of Edmonton-Highlands and my colleague's constituency office of Edmonton-Strathcona each reap the benefits of having two students assisting us and our constituency assistants with casework that comes in on a daily basis, and we certainly appreciate their assistance.

They are accompanied by their instructor, Mrs. Kathleen Quinn. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head:

Oral Question Period

Seniors' Utility Costs

Dr. Nicol: Confusion, frustration, and exasperation: this is the effect of the government's bungled attempt to offer Albertans some relief from the skyrocketing costs of heating our homes this winter. Government programs are not a success unless the people who need help get help when they need it. To the Premier: why must some seniors be forced to go begging for assistance when you already promised all Albertans a rebate?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, seniors are not going begging. There is a program in place that has been put in place on a temporary basis to accommodate low-income seniors in particular. There is a web site. They can go on the web site, or they can phone the toll-free number to seek assistance. As to a promise of a rebate, that was a promise that was fulfilled, because after the last rebate program, which was introduced on an ad hoc basis, we introduced legislation to bring in a gas rebate program based on the yearly average of $5.50 a gigajoule. As I understand it, we aren't up to that amount right now. Currently that price is averaging about $4.41 a gigajoule. When it reaches $5.50 a gigajoule, then the rebate program, as promised, will kick in.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: where's the help for schools, churches, greenhouses, the severely disabled, the working poor? Where's the help for those other Albertans who need some support?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. leader of the Liberal Party that we don't produce the gas, we don't distribute the gas, we don't sell the gas, but we have been generous enough to put in a rebate program based on an average price. Relative to greenhouses and schools and municipalities and health care institutions and postsecondary institutions, the rebate will kick in when it kicks in for all Albertans, and that's when the average price reaches $5.50 a gigajoule.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Seniors: what help is there for a senior who does not qualify for assistance under the Alberta seniors' benefits program and is faced with a disconnection notice this month?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all members of this Legislature have the courtesy, if they have seniors who are in dire straits, regardless of whether they qualify for a program or not, to forward their needs either to the Seniors ministry in the Standard Life Building or to my office.

As was stated in this Legislature on many occasions, we will not let people fall through the cracks. To bring forward one general statement of one person with a disconnect notice and ask me to say what will be done in that instance is quite simply, Mr. Speaker, impossible. We have to know the circumstances around it. If somebody has been negligent and refuses to pay their bills, that's one scenario. If somebody has hit unforeseen, undue hardships, that may be another scenario. So unless we look at it on a case-by-case basis, I'm afraid I can't give you an answer on what will be done on that particular one because I don't know the details.

What I will say is that this is an extension of our special-needs assistance program, and, yes, in order to qualify, you should be on the Alberta seniors' benefit program. However, if in any instance there is an extreme special circumstance, as we've done in the past, we will look at it, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Nicol: To follow up with the Seniors minister: what is the minister doing for seniors who want to apply for assistance under the Alberta seniors' benefit program but get a constant busy signal when they call your 1-800 number?

Mr. Woloshyn: Well, if those seniors are in your constituency, I would hope that you have the application forms, that you could give to them directly, and I would like to say the same to all other members. They can come in person. They can get it on the web site. Yes, the number is being plugged, and, yes, some of the calls are going to my office.

I also might point out very clearly that the deadline for applications, I believe, is May 31. There's a reason for that, and I do ask that the seniors have patience, because they do have to do a submission. We will be looking after them. There's not a panic mode in place here, and for those folks who have a busy signal, have a bit of patience. Go to your MLA's office, go to the Seniors' information offices and pick up the special-needs application forms.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: given that the Minister of Energy required EPCOR to take immediate action last summer to reduce the amount of time consumers spent on hold, why doesn't the same standard apply to the Ministry of Seniors?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. minister indicated that if there is a problem, he would look into it. I don't know what is causing the phone lines to be tied up. The hon. minister has indicated that if there is a problem, he will look into the problem and see if it can be rectified. There is no way that this government wants to deny any senior in need of special needs, whether it's for electricity or food or any other commodity. We don't want to see those seniors denied an opportunity to get the help that is due them.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Seniors: if seniors can't get through on the 1-800 line, can they call your office directly?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, I'll repeat. We have seniors' offices in Calgary, Edmonton, Red Deer, Grande Prairie, Lethbridge, and other communities. Information booklets are available there. Every MLA's office, both sides of the House, if they don't have the application forms, can certainly get them through the Seniors ministry. They can get them from the MLA offices. We have also the 1-800 line, which this weekend had a backlog of some 2,500 calls, 700 of which were relative to utility bills. Also, we have a web site – I think it's www.seniors.gov.ab.ca – where they can get the application form mailed to them.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health Care Labour Legislation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the province faces severe shortages of health care workers, this government works in secret to strip away the democratic rights of those workers and drive even more of them out of the province to find employment. My first question is to the Premier. Why is the powerful cabinet committee secretly making drastic changes to labour laws when there is already a committee of government backbenchers getting paid by the taxpayers to examine the same issue? Are they not doing a good enough job?

Mr. Klein: Well, if it were a committee of private members, then the accusation would probably hold. If I know the Liberals, being true to form, they would accuse the private members of meeting in secret.

Mr. Speaker, this government, not the opposition, has the right to proceed to develop policy, to develop legislation, to develop regulations, to develop programs in any way, shape, or form that it sees fit. That's why the people elected a government.

It was decided that a special committee under the chairmanship of the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science would be struck to study ways in which labour negotiations take place and to make sure that the process for negotiation was a streamlined process. The committee brought in some recommendations relative to a specific case. This case relates to the redefining of the regional health authority boundaries and a process to speed up negotiations.

Nobody is being stripped of their democratic rights, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, I think the union should welcome this as a way to expedite negotiations. After all, I would think that the union leadership would want to seek and do what is in the best interests of their members and do it in the most expedient manner. I would think they would want to do that.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: why is the government continuing to antagonize health care workers by shutting them out of the process and treating them as part of the problem and not the solution?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess the hon. member can interpret this any way he wants and, being the Liberal that he is, will interpret it, obviously, in a negative fashion. But changes are needed, quite simply, to enable health care reforms to proceed, and the end objective is better patient care and, hopefully, a more expedient way to negotiate settlements, which in turn lead to more care and more concern for the patient.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is nothing that is sinister. This is something to really bring some expediency to the whole negotiation process, and I think we all want that.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, who also sits on the powerful secret cabinet committee: after the government has stripped health care workers of their democratic rights, are public school teachers next?

Mr. Dunford: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps just to clarify some of the member's preamble to the first suggestion: at times we'll have government committees made up of government members out looking at whether things should be reviewed under the Labour Relations Code, and quite often events will simply overtake the situation. As the Premier has noted, there is a reform coming to the regional health authorities that now has come into play. We're looking at something like 400 collective agreements and that sort of thing as to whether or not that's an efficient and an effective way in which to have health reform proceed. So we have a very specific situation that we're looking at with some very specific goals in mind.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, the government is planning yet another assault on collective bargaining rights of health care workers. Health care will suffer if the government proceeds with its plan to deny health care workers their internationally recognized human rights, including the right to strike. Already the community care sector has severe shortages among LPNs, registered nurses, occupational therapists, and many others. These employees are moving to greener pastures, places where their work is appreciated and rights are respected. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How will this government plan, cooked up by this secret cabinet committee, affect a workforce that's already demoralized, short-staffed, and overworked?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are, as the Premier indicated, some 400 collective agreements in the province, and I can give the hon. member somewhat of a history lesson in this matter. He may recall that at one time there were some 200 hospital boards that existed in this province, each one of them with collective agreements with various health care workers, and what's happened is that over time those collective agreements have been continued. So now that we have nine regional health authorities, it makes perfectly good sense from the purpose of streamlining our ability to negotiate with employee unions that we should be able to streamline the number of collective agreements that we deal with.

There's no sinister purpose in any of this, Mr. Speaker, and I would point out that some 93 percent of health care workers already do not have the right to strike, so we're not making any kind of a dramatic change in this regard. But I will say that we have a great deal of respect for the people who work in our health care system. We have what is measurably and objectively one of the best health care systems in Canada, if not the best, and the strength of it is in the very people that we've attracted from other places and the people that we train right here in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish that the minister would respect their rights, not just respect them.

Given this government's blatant hostility towards them, how does the minister plan to reduce staff shortages among LPNs, registered nurses, and occupational, physical, and speech therapists in the community care sector?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm reminded by the Deputy Premier that a 22 percent increase in the last nurses' agreement was a pretty good start. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Mar: We have dramatically increased the number of people that we have trained in health professions in this province. To the best of my recollection, about three years ago we had some 3,700 people training in health care professions; this year we have about 5,000. We have dramatically increased the number of admissions to medical schools, to nurses. We're working hard at training other health care professionals, technicians, and technologists as well. So we have made every reasonable effort for short-term purposes to recruit people from other jurisdictions, but in the long term, ultimately, training people right here in Alberta will be a better medium- and long-term solution. So we have taken all responsible steps to do exactly that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary to the same minister: why doesn't the government put its energy into improving frontline health care delivery instead of scapegoating hardworking health care workers to cover up its own failures?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's assertion is patently absurd. We have, as I indicated, expressed our appreciation for people who work delivering services to Albertans when they need it in this province. Measurably and objectively we do have a good health care system in this province. We have invested in the human resources, recognizing that health workforce issues are a critical concern not just in Alberta but across Canada as well. I think if the hon. member would spend time in other parts of Canada, he would find that our health workforce initiatives are superior to many other jurisdictions, if not all of them, that we have as a percentage recruited more people than any other jurisdiction, that we have increased our training of people in this province dramatically, that we have increased our health care spending in this province consistent with the kind of priority Albertans place on a health care system that they value a great deal.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

University of Calgary

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Calgary has been experiencing an unprecedented rate of growth in the last few years. I'm glad to have been able to contribute to that growth. This growth is causing pressures in so many different areas. There has been a lot of talk surrounding the increased demand to attend the University of Calgary, and the institution struggles to deal with this growing demand with their existing spaces and resources. My question is to the hon. Minister of Learning. Could the minister explain to the thousands of students who are turned away every year from the University of Calgary what the government is doing to help the U of C address these very important concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I will say that back in '99-2000 the enrollment at the University of Calgary was roughly 21,000. It's now gone up to around 23 and a half thousand, an increase of about 11.4 percent. Over that same time frame the funding for the University of Calgary has increased 28.1 percent.

The other point that I will say, which is probably the most significant point, is that we as a government support postsecondary education very strongly and want more and more and more and more students to attend our postsecondary institutions. We are working with all our postsecondary institutions, not just in Calgary but also in Edmonton and the rest of the province as well, to ensure that there is more access, to ensure that there are more student spaces, Mr. Speaker, things such as the student loan program. All of these things add in to accessibility to the universities. Our universities are very good for bringing on students, but it is something that we have to continually move towards, we have to continually put more spaces in, and we have to continually ensure that there is a better postsecondary system for our students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: could the minister explain what the government is doing to ensure that the University of Calgary has the resources it needs to be on a level playing field with other postsecondary institutions, such as the U of A?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, when we give out the dollars, it is done on a formula that takes into account size of the institution. It takes into account location of the institution. It takes into account programs that are being run at the institution. This is done on an allocation that was actually studied by an MLA committee as early as the year 2000. So a couple of years ago it was taken a look at. We attempt to make sure that the dollars go out in a fair fashion to all our institutions, but I think you have to recognize that there are some particular courses that one university or the other college may well put forward in their curriculum that other universities or colleges don't. The cost of these can be significantly different. We have put forward a lot of money through the access fund, and the access fund targets specific university and college curriculum and courses, so there is a difference in the amount of resources that are needed for each one.

I can only answer this by saying that we constantly work with the universities to ensure that they have funding, that postsecondary education is of primary importance to us and will always continue to be of primary importance to this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Learning Resources Centre

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've done due diligence on information from the Minister of Learning that his department's Learning Resources Centre has lower prices on books than private providers. I received information this morning from a book distributor showing that their prices often beat the Learning Resources Centre's. But the key point here is not who is right or wrong. The key point is getting the best value for schoolchildren and for taxpayers and respecting the autonomy of school boards. To the Minister of Learning: will he free school boards so that they can spend the $20 million in additional funding through providers of their choice?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the $20 million will be used for the Learning Resources Centre to purchase resources for the classroom.

With regard to the hon. member's preamble, we presented and we tabled in this House yesterday a list of the various prices of the books that were put forward. There was one book, for example, that was available through the Learning Resources Centre for $8.37; it was available at Chapters for $7.83. A key component to this is that last year in the province of Alberta there were three books bought. Any one that you have that has a considerable number of books shows a decrease, a 20 to 30 percent decrease. We have testimonies from school boards saying that this is the best way to purchase the books.

Mr. Speaker, I wasn't going to reiterate this, but now that the hon. member has the floor, I will demand an apology for my staff and my department for comments that that hon. member has made against the Learning Resources Centre.

Dr. Taft: I'll be happy to table the information contradicting the minister.

The key point goes, then, to the Premier. I don't see what the problem is here. Why won't this government allow schools to buy books from the lowest cost providers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I haven't spoken to the Learning minister about this, but I don't know if there is anything that prevents a school district or a school board or a school from buying books from the vendor of their choice. I don't know. I'm receiving a nod in the affirmative from the hon. minister. The Learning Resources Centre is there so that school districts, school boards can buy in volume and at a reasonable price. It's a government service that is offered, but it's entirely up to the schools as to whether they wish to take advantage of it. I have to believe what the hon. minister says, that by and large and overall the resource centre offers a good service and good value for the school boards.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Dr. Oberg: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just add that with regard to the school boards purchasing their supplies elsewhere, there is nothing prohibiting them from purchasing their school textbooks or their school resources elsewhere. This is a $20 million credit that they have towards the Learning Resources Centre. If they feel that those dollars should not be spent elsewhere, then they all have that ability.

Mr. Speaker, I'll go through some of the books, and I'll just . . .

The Speaker: No. I think we've spent enough time right now.
The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the minister, then, since he's so confident: is the minister prepared to invite the Auditor General to review the operations of the Learning Resources Centre to see how its efficiencies compare to private-sector companies?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, I will be appearing with the Auditor General tomorrow morning at Public Accounts, and I'd be more than happy to have the Auditor General address this issue. More importantly, we presently have the province of British Columbia coming to the Learning Resources Centre in order to purchase the books from us. As a general rule we're around 30 percent lower than anything on the market. [interjections] They're saying, "Nonsense," but again I will demand – I will demand – an apology to our members of the Learning Resources Centre because of the excellent work that they do. This is completely against the people in my department, and I will not tolerate that and I will not stand for it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

West Nile Virus

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quite a large number of my constituents are involved in the horse industry, and many more are recreational horse owners, and they've been following with some interest reports of the West Nile virus. My question today is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. With the number of West Nile virus cases occurring across Canada and the United States this past year and increasing this year, what is her department doing to alert and prepare the horse industry in this province for this disease that might affect their animals?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the West Nile virus was first revealed in New York state in 1999. In early 2002 we put together a committee consisting of human health and animal health officials. That's in addition to tracking this since the disease came out. One of the parts of the plan is to share information on the spread of this disease or protective measures that can be taken against this disease with our Alberta horse associations, with our Alberta veterinarians. We've asked our veterinarians to facilitate laboratory testing of horses that might have a disease that looks like West Nile. I would say that West Nile virus did not show up in our horse population last year, but it could well cross our borders this year, so we are being vigilant.

Mr. Marz: To the same minister: could the minister explain how horses become infected with West Nile virus and what precautions owners can take to prevent that?

The Speaker: Well, if this is a matter of government policy . . .

Mrs. McClellan: No. Not really.

The Speaker: Third question, hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Okay. Could the minister explain what symptoms horse owners can watch for to guard against this?

The Speaker: Bring it into government policy, hon. minister.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that our department has tried very hard to manage in this whole thing is the information that is there for our horse owners and, in fact, all of our livestock owners because there are many myths and, of course, rumours and unknown quantities. We can say, from our veterinarians in Alberta Health and the research that's been done, that the West Nile virus is certainly spread by mosquitoes. It is not spread from horse to horse. It is not spread from horse to cattle or people, although people can get the West Nile virus but not in that way. There is a vaccination that horse owners can use to protect their horses because it can be fatal in the population.

The other thing I would just add, Mr. Speaker, in closing is that under the minister of sustainable development we have a wildlife disease program, and this is, I think, very important. It's one of the best in North America. In that program we are gathering birds submitted by the public and monitoring all of those birds. I think that's an important part of tracking this disease. I can say that out of the 245-odd birds that were received by that department last year, there was no West Nile virus detected.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Postsecondary institutions have never recovered from the 20 percent funding cut that they took in the mid-1990s. At the University of Calgary higher tuition, larger classes, and more classes taught by sessional instructors are the legacy. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. What will be the impact of the University of Calgary cutting another $30 million from its budget next year?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very apropos, actually, with the president of the University of Calgary sitting in the audience today, that this question is asked. The University of Calgary is working on how to redistribute their budget. They're looking at putting money in some areas, taking it away from other areas, and I really commend them for doing that.

The other thing that I will add, obviously, is that there will be money in this year's budget. There are increases again in this year's budget. As I mentioned in my previous answer, the amount of increase to the University of Calgary is 28.1 percent over the last three years.

2:10

Again I will say: are the universities stretched? Yeah, they are stretched. Mr. Speaker, they are stretched. They're trying to deal with an increase in population of around 4 to 5 percent that is coming into their institutions these days. They're looking at how they can do that, and we're working with the University of Calgary and all our postsecondary institutions in the province of Alberta to ensure that they have the resources to meet the students that are coming in.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that the average size of junior courses has increased from 65 students to 77 students at the University of Calgary, does the minister consider that acceptable?

Dr. Oberg: Well, one of the hon. members here just said that they are not in kindergarten, and that's very accurate in this particular case, Mr. Speaker. When I went to university, there were large classes. There were some classes, not that I was particularly in, that had 250 to 500 students.

An Hon. Member: What are you doing here?

Dr. Oberg: Yeah. Exactly. What are you doing here?

Mr. Speaker, this is the type of situation that we are working with the universities on, that we're looking at.

To answer the question that was tossed across, what happened is that I went to medical school and passed from medical school.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will there be enough funding to prevent the University of Calgary from moving towards differential fees next year?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, it is up to the University of Calgary's board of governors as to whether or not they move to differential fees. It is completely within the legislation that was passed in this particular House to do, and it is up to them as to whether or not they have differential fees.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Long-term Care Facilities

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With our aging population we already have many more older seniors living in long-term care, and their health care needs are increasingly chronic and complex. That is placing greater demands on hardworking health care staff and facilities to meet residents' needs. I would stress that these seniors are unable to lobby government for themselves, so it must be done by MLAs, family caregivers, and friends, and I have heard from many of them. My main question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister explain why increased accommodation rates in Alberta's long-term care facilities, which are among the lowest rates in Canada, are necessary to regenerate those facilities and to provide the necessary level of care to ensure that our seniors live in dignity?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we did take the results of the long-term care review very seriously. There were 50 recommendations that were made to the Alberta Department of Health and Wellness, and from those 50 recommendations we took in nine strategic directions and future actions based on those recommendations, that included the following: the promotion of healthy aging, the regeneration of long-term care facilities, the development of an Alzheimer's initiative and initiatives that allow seniors to age in place in the communities that they're familiar with. Now, we are continuing to implement those initiatives and review our progress, and many colleagues will know that our hon. colleague from Redwater recently toured facilities throughout the province to see firsthand how our progress was taking place.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on the narrower point of additional revenue that may be required to meet the needs and requests of an aging population, we recognize that government does need to make a change with respect to its approach in caring for seniors. We've already seen some of those changes take place. For example, in 2000-2001 we provided $37.5 million to help regions enhance home care and keep seniors in their community. Since 1999 we've built 413 new supportive living spaces, and since September of 2002 we've provided new spaces in care for 6,310 seniors.

Ms Kryczka: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is to the same minister. As owners and operators of long-term care facilities tell me, the current outdated funding formula and the accommodation rates are insufficient to provide the level of care that is necessary for the complex health needs of long-term care. What is the minister doing to stop the overall underfunding of our facilities?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we do continue to work with the industry and do recognize the legitimate concerns of owners and operators of long-term care centres. We do need to work on strategies to increase revenue to ensure that the best service is available for our seniors. The findings of the long-term care review told us that some facilities are out of date for the needs of seniors that are living there today, so we are aware that new revenue streams are required in order to update long-term care facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Blairmore-Bellevue Water Pipeline

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall I questioned the Minister of Municipal Affairs with regard to the situation with the Blairmore-Bellevue water pipeline. At that time the minister had indicated that he had not met with the municipality with regard to this particular issue. To the minister: has the minister had the opportunity to meet with the municipality?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, in actual fact, after the question by the hon. member my staff, my deputy minister met with the municipality that the member mentioned and had a very good meeting. I must admit that the meeting went well, and the deputy minister reported back to me that they had a complete understanding of the situation regarding their municipality's authority.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the minister going to conduct an inspection under the provisions allowed in the Municipal Government Act?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, what was communicated to the municipality is that, no, there will not be an inspection under the authority of the Municipal Government Act.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: has the minister met with representatives of the Crowsnest Pass Ratepayer's Association with regard to their concerns over this issue?

Mr. Boutilier: We've been directly, Mr. Speaker, in communication with the municipality, and of course the ratepayer's association works with the municipality. That's what we've been endeavouring to do, work directly under the Municipal Government Act with the municipal leaders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Gas Industry Deregulation

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. First the unbundling of the distribution and retailing functions of the electricity industry led to massive billing errors and higher costs to consumers. Now the government is poised to further duplicate its electricity mistakes in the gas market and further drive up costs, create confusion, and create billing errors. This is a deliberate, consciously planned restructuring of the industry, which this government knows will lead to even higher home heating prices. To the minister: why is the minister ignoring warnings from his own officials that further deregulation of the gas industry will lead to higher home heating costs?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no such evidence that indicates that prices will in fact increase. I think the member is referring to the allegedly secret documentation that was tabled yesterday by his colleague, that in fact was surreptitiously obtained from our web site, that is published for everyone. In fact, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is included on our distribution list for consultation as an interested party.

So all the stakeholder consultation, all the discussion about the act that is soon to be introduced in this House has in effect been done openly and with debate and discussion. Throughout previous questions the member has asked: why have Albertans been paying more than people in Ontario or in Saskatchewan? In fact, at any given time by utilizing the provisions in this bill, Albertans will be able to take advantage of a cost that they feel is appropriate for them.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the question to the minister is this: given that his own officials are warning that further restructuring of the gas industry will lead to higher natural gas prices, which are already sky high, why is the minister proceeding in this direction?

Mr. Smith: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, we would have to see concrete evidence of the allegations put forward by the member. We do know that through the provisions of this bill there will be a billing cost added to the flow-through rate in the bill. That is the only change.

We also know that there will be a different way of using gas storage. Gas storage was formerly inside the regulated system, and in fact now, Mr. Speaker, people are going to be able to take advantage of gas storage for their own price savings, where gas can be purchased at a lower price during the summer and then put into storage, and then that mechanism, that product, can be offered to consumers. In fact, I would expect that with the increased competition, the ability to take storage out of the regulated rate system and then have the regulated rate system reduced by that much, overall we're going to see Albertans get the very, very best value they can get for natural gas compared to any other place in Canada.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has repeatedly alleged that electricity deregulation would bring down the price of electricity, why should Albertans have any confidence whatsoever in the minister's assertion that further deregulation of the gas industry is going to get us anything but higher prices?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the member talks about the wonderful ability of Crown corporations to provide cheap and low-priced electricity and the fact that the debt doesn't matter at all and the fact that if you fix wholesale prices, then electricity prices won't climb. Well, I'm sure he has a very good explanation for the blackouts and the rolling brownouts that occurred in Ontario, a regulated market, this weekend.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Water Use by Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As our lakes, creeks, and sloughs dry up by and large due to the prolonged drought, there are also questions around the use of fresh water by oil drilling companies, which they pump into deep wells to increase their oil recovery. Estimates on the amount of fresh water used by oil companies are that in one year they will use the equivalent of what the cities of Edmonton and Calgary combined use in one year or the amount of water contained in Pine Lake, which is located east of Red Deer. That's a lot of water in a province that doesn't have much fresh water to begin with. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Are the estimates, by way of example of water used by oil companies, that I quoted correct?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, appropriately, the member has brought to the House the question of conservation of water, and just as conservation is important with any resource or any commodity, it's also important with water. Now, in fact, there does seem to be continuing discussion and some confusion regarding allocation of the use by the oil and gas industry. Department data indicates that the actual volume of fresh water used by the oil and gas industry for oil field injection purposes is approximately one-sixth, or six times smaller than the estimates of the allocation just quoted by the member. In fact, only 3 percent of all water in this province is allocated for use in oil field injection and surface mining and oil sands projection. The industry only uses 33 percent of the total allocation, so that's roughly 1 percent of total water allocation.

Mr. Yankowsky: Again to the same minister: why are oil companies using Alberta's freshwater instead of so-called brackish water or CO₂ for their recovery purposes?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue of using potable water in injections is not a new one. In fact, the former Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, Mr. Wayne Jacques, brought this up some eight years ago. The industry continues to be a licensed and a responsible user of water, and in fact I think you can see that we're starting to see in the industry moves toward recycling the water, moves toward reducing the amount of freshwater, and moves toward using salt and brackish water, or saline water, where it can be obtained. In fact, I believe that that's some of the substitute water that's been used in the Cold Lake project. So we also start to look for other options that can be used in enhanced oil recovery.

Now, there are two benefits. One, Mr. Speaker, there is estimated to be as much as 60 percent of produced, conventional oil reserves remaining in reservoirs that need to be recovered through enhanced technologies. Now, these enhanced technologies have used freshwater injection before. They're moving now towards brackish water, saline, but in fact we're also experimenting with nitrogen, other forms of vapours, and if nitrogen can be effective, then it's possible that we can use carbon dioxide. Carbon dioxide used in enhanced oil recovery has multiple benefits. One, we can use it as a driver in place of freshwater, and, secondly, we can reduce the amount of CO₂ in the atmosphere today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question is to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister tell this Assembly what he as the Minister of Environment is prepared to do about the depletion of our freshwater by oil companies?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the member raises a good question. Last year we started a process in which we're developing a water strategy for the province. I think this is going to be one of the most significant strategies that this government will release over the next several years, but we are in the process. We're hoping that the draft of the strategy will be on the web site at the end of this month, and then we'll be able to have consumer and stakeholder response to it. But in that strategy we recognize that all consumers – municipalities, commercial enterprises including oil companies – have to be more effective in their utilization of water, particularly freshwater.

So conservation is going to have to be a big part of what we do in Alberta. If I might give you an example of that, the city of Calgary municipality has half its city metered, half unmetered, and the unmetered section, of course, uses twice the amount of water that the metered section does. So it's not just the oil industry that has to conserve. The oil industry, quite frankly, is going to have to change its practices, and you will see in the water strategy, as we move forward, suggestions to the oil industry as to how they may change their water utilization practices. I think it's important for them to realize that and do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Water Strategy

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're happy to hear that the water strategy is finally going to be available to the general public, since the consultations happened last June. Can the Minister of Environment please tell us when this water strategy will see its way into a bill that we can debate in this Legislature?

Dr. Taylor: Well, it's a good question. As I said, we're going to have the strategy, hopefully, on our web site by the end of the month. We hope to be able to have a final strategy available by the end of September or later in the summer, and from there we will need to make the necessary legislative changes and budget changes to put the strategy into effect.

Ms Carlson: What is the water strategy going to say about water transfers, interbasin transfers, in this province?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, quite clearly we heard at the forum that we held last June in Red Deer that we should take a look at interbasin transfers, in one sense, in that the smaller interbasin transfers are not so much of a concern. The legislation we passed last spring, you may remember, which is essentially a small interbasin transfer, you know, that's an issue that should be able to go forward. But the other issue, if she's referring to these large interbasin transfers from the north to the south, there was little support for that, and you will see some discussion of that in the water strategy. But there was little support for the large interbasin transfers.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, will the water strategy address issues of how to manage the projected drought conditions that are going to exist again in regions of this province?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, although we've had drought in central Alberta the last several years, if you look historically, the droughts have occurred really to the major extent in southern Alberta. One of the issues in southern Alberta, quite frankly, is water storage. For instance, two years ago the irrigation districts didn't have enough water. So as we move forward, I believe that we need to look at water storage, particularly off-stream storage, that could be effective in increasing water availability in areas that, you know, have endemic droughts. Even in central Alberta there may be some projects that we need to look at for water storage and water movement across the province.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling on the first of several hon. members to participate, might we all extend happy birthday wishes to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View?

Canada/U.S. Relations

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, recently we have heard some very negative and hurtful comments about Americans, implying that they are illegitimate and so on. I think this is very unfortunate, and it isn't the first time. In fact, I am disappointed that the feds haven't yet declared this a new national crisis, started a royal commission to investigate, hired some social workers, and dispensed some federal funding grants to all concerned. It certainly is what they would do if any other identifiable group was made the target of all this high-level hatred.

Mr. Speaker, I agree that some Americans do talk funny, but that's no reason to hate them. The reality is that we should recognize that they are our very best customers. In fact, I think the Americans are very good friends of ours, especially here in Alberta. While I don't think they invested their money in Alberta to develop our oil industry entirely out of the goodness of their hearts, they did help quite a bit. When Mr. Trudeau insisted that they couldn't take the $60 billion or so home with them and made them send it east to pay Liberal salaries instead of south, well, the Americans did end up with a pretty raw deal, eventually having to sell many of their assets to us at fire sale prices. So now we're making tons of money from what used to be their assets. You could understand why they might be upset with us, but here we are calling them names, in effect suing them to buy even more of our products.

I have observed that any person who continually insults their best customers and their best friends soon has neither. It's too bad that we have people running this country who have never run a small business; otherwise they would have known better.

So I'd like to send my little thank you to the Americans and tell them that we really do appreciate them and their business and their continuing fight for freedom. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Teachers

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over recent weeks I've had occasion to speak with many teachers and parents as a result of comments that I made that were reported in the local media. Those discussions have underscored the reality that the unintended consequences of words are sometimes more damaging than the thoughts expressed.

In the normal give-and-take of public policy debate in the public arena we sometimes forget that behind the debate there are real people with real hopes, real dreams, real sensitivities, and real feelings. Teachers and the teaching profession are an integral, valued, and respected segment of our civil society. We entrust to teachers and the school system represented by trustees our most valued resource: our children, our future.

To the extent that I contributed to the sense of teachers feeling undervalued by society for their individual and collective contribution, I offer my sincere apology. We are in this together: students, parents, teachers, trustees, and political representatives. The least we owe each other is a frank, open, and honest debate leading to the resolution of problems and mutual respect.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My school has lost three teachers, three teacher's aides, and $300,000 of funding: it's part of the message I recently received from the school principal. The story is the same in many schools. Even with these reductions many school districts across the province will be forced into deficits this coming year.

Clearly, school financing in our province needs a major overhaul. The changes instituted in the 1990s are not working. Equity was achieved by taking taxing powers away from local boards, centralizing the funds, and returning the dollars to boards on a per pupil basis. However, underfunding of education has meant that schools' only claim to equity is that they are all equally poor. Class sizes are growing, learning resources are scarce, and support staff is dwindling. When pressed on the funding issue, the Premier's response is: how much is enough? The question deserves an answer.

What services are needed to enable all children to achieve at high levels? To answer the question, two models have been developed. With the professional judgment model a panel of experts determines the resources needed by schools at elementary, middle, and high school levels to reach a particular level of achievement. How many children should be in a class, what level of library services should be available, and similar questions are addressed. With the successful schools model an analysis is made of the resources used by successful schools to reach particular achievement levels. This, then, becomes the basis for determining the funding levels for all schools. Only the professional judgment model has been put into wide-scale practice. The states of Oregon and Wyoming have structured their state funding schemes based on this mode. The impetus for change in the United States was a series of law suits launched by parents who claimed funding was inadequate. The courts agreed.

In Alberta we would be wise to act before we face the agonies and costs of court battles launched by parents making claims of inadequacy. The time to deal with the question of funding adequacy is now.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary-West.

School Utilization in Calgary-West

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A harsh reality in Alberta is the existence of the equivalent of 150 underutilized public system elementary schools, and the challenge of this government as manager of taxpayer dollars and the respective school boards is to significantly decrease this number. The enormous conflict is between good management practised by administration bodies and the emotions felt by communities who value traditions and resist change. I have experienced firsthand the trauma of the process to close underutilized schools.

Calgary-West is in a sector that includes equally many underutilized schools on the one hand but also an adjacent high-growth area that needs new schools and services. So I ask: how does an MLA fairly represent these two conflicting situations? You can't get on a school board's new school list unless underutilized schools are closed. I have already been accused by my constituents of deserting one to advocate for the other. So what a squeeze I'm in.

My personal response to this challenge is to continually work to resolve each of these two situations. I'm very pleased today to describe how Glendale elementary school in Calgary-West is truly a model of the typical underutilized school that's struggled in the past with many challenges, but since 2001 these have been resolved by merging with a second underutilized school in the same area, Glen Meadows elementary. For the students of both schools it had been a win/win situation, and I say students very strongly. Mostly the principals, teachers, parents, and students have been able to move forward and have developed wonderful, enriched, unique programs that have served in healing the wounds of 2001 and have increased the sense of pride and achievement in all they do. They absolutely thrive on success and recognition.

Glendale elementary school is truly the heart of the Glendale community, and it's still only 275 students. The journey was not an easy one, but the outcomes have proven, in my opinion, that it was the right decision. I would predict that other amalgamations of schools in Calgary-West will be occurring and can occur with similar success but, for me, not fast enough.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On appropriate notice being provided to your office and the office of the Government House Leader, I now rise to inform the House that I plan to rise in this Assembly later today, at the end of the daily Routine, to request the opportunity to make a brief statement on why a media briefing on Bill 19 that took place yesterday morning breached the rights of this Assembly and my rights as a member of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 19

Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

The changes proposed in the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment

Act will refine the structure of the Alberta retail natural gas marketplace to provide greater opportunities for customer choice. Through this proposed act introduced as Bill 19 today, government will improve the ability of about 900,000 natural gas consumers served by major utility companies to buy natural gas from the supplier of their choice.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

2:40

Bill 20
Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation
Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 20, the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2003.

The proposed amendments are designed to give the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation greater operating flexibility.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Bill 22
Child and Family Services Authorities
Amendment Act, 2003

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with huge pleasure to introduce the first of three bills being presented by Children's Services this afternoon, Bill 22. It is the Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2003.

It will remove the maximum currently within that piece of legislation to allow us to expand the membership on the boards, thereby accounting for the reduction of the children's authorities from 18 to 10, and accommodate better and more fairly community representation.

I now ask that this be read for a first time.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a first time]

Bill 23
Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to request leave to introduce to the Legislature Bill 23, the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act.

Bill 23 will provide separate and distinct legislation to cover services for children with disabilities. The intent of the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act is to provide a spectrum of proactive family-centred services to empower families of children with disabilities, preserve and strengthen these families, and prevent them from going into crisis. This proposed legislation is based on what was heard from Albertans during the review of the Child Welfare Act. I move first reading of Bill 23.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 23 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Bill 24
Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce to the Legislature Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003.

Bill 24 deals with an amendment to Alberta's child welfare legislation. The proposed legislation is based on what was heard from Albertans during the Child Welfare Act review that was launched in the spring of 2001. While there have been some specific amendments to the Child Welfare Act through the years, the direction and guiding philosophy behind Alberta's child protection services hasn't been reviewed for over 17 years. The Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act places an emphasis on the safety and well-being of children, increased involvement of families in decision-making processes, parental responsibility, seeking permanent homes for children in government care, the areas of adoption, services for aboriginal children and families, expanding the role of the Children's Advocate, supporting youth as they are transitioning to adulthood, and increased accountability for services being delivered to children and families.

I move first reading of Bill 24.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 24 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Bill 205
Citizens' Empowerment Act

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce Bill 205, the Citizens' Empowerment Act.

This bill consists of two major elements. The first will allow people of Alberta to initiate a petition in referendum to prevent a bill from coming into force. The second part allows voters to petition the Legislative Assembly to introduce a bill that they feel is important.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Clerk: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Mar, Minister of Health and Wellness: pursuant to the Public Health Act the Public Health Appeal Board annual report 2002.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today, with the requisite number of copies. The first two are letters from the mayor and council of the town of Turner Valley. My first tabling is a letter dated October 22, 2002, to the Electoral Boundaries Commission stating the town's wish to remain within the electoral division of Highwood and includes a copy of the town council minutes.

My second tabling is also a letter, dated February 26, 2003, addressed to the Highwood MLA to draw to the attention of this Assembly that the town of Turner Valley wishes to remain in the Highwood constituency.

My third tabling, also a letter, this one dated February 28, 2003, was sent to me by the mayor and council of the town of Black Diamond requesting that the town of Black Diamond be retained within the boundaries of the Highwood riding.

Mr. Broda: Mr. Speaker, on your behalf I rise today to table five copies of a document signed by 24 members of the Westlock Outreach Committee and Westlock United Church congregation. These citizens are requesting that the government implement changes to our health care system in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter that I received from a constituent of my mine, Dave Fryett, chairman of the South Fish Creek Transportation Action Committee, asking that funding be restored to the south Deerfoot Trail extension in particular and two overpasses currently on deferral.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of 30 letters from constituents, three of which are from the town of Carstairs, the town of Didsbury, and the county of Mountain View, all asking that the Didsbury hospital become part of the Calgary health region.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a brochure produced by the Alberta Liberal caucus called High Power Bills Unplugged: Low-Cost Power for Alberta. It notes on the back: find out how you could save with the low-cost power plan; check out the calculator at www.altaliberals.ab.ca.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is the appropriate copies of a media advisory issued by Alberta Energy dated February 28, 2003. It's called Media Briefing on Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act 2003.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of a letter that I wrote this morning to the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake informing him why New Democrats will not be attending the briefing today, scheduled for 11:45 a.m., related to Bill 19.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It is a letter from Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson of Edmonton dated February 26, 2003, and addressed to the Minister of Seniors. They are very displeased with the Premier's leadership on gas and electricity deregulation and write: "It has been a fiasco. There is real fear in the minds of seniors when they see just how much [they are] being gouged in the guise of service to the public."

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would table five copies of a submission by Anna Pellatt and the Alberta Civil Liberties Research Centre to the Child Welfare Act review, 2002. The submission and the advice contained in the submission will be useful as we debate Bill 24, introduced just moments ago in the Assembly.

The Speaker: Additional tablings?

Hon. members, I'm tabling today the appropriate copies of a document entitled Report to the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of the Investigation by the Ethics Commissioner into Allegations Involving the Member for Leduc, dated March 4, 2003.

Mr. Knight: I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies, Mr. Speaker, of a letter from the municipal district of Greenview with the support documentation with respect to the issue surrounding access to highway 43. They're asking that "Alberta Transportation consider local input when designing accesses."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I believe, hon. leader of the third party, that your point with respect to Standing Order 15(2) would now be appropriate.

Privilege Contempt of the Assembly

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 15(2), that you just referred to, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege will argue that as a result of the actions of the government, the rights of the Assembly and my rights as a member of this Assembly have been breached.

The factual background to this question of privilege is as follows. Last Thursday, February 27, notice was given on the Order Paper of the Legislative Assembly for leave to introduce Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. The following Monday, March 3 – that was yesterday – the Alberta Department of Energy held a media briefing. This was pursuant to the issuing of their media advisory on February 28 that such a briefing will be held for the media.

The media advisory said, and I briefly quote:

Department of Alberta Energy officials will be on hand for a technical briefing, media only [underlined in brackets], at 11:00 a.m. on Monday, March 3, 2003.

The briefing will be held in Room 213 of the Alberta Legislature Building.

Officials will answer background questions on the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act 2003, which will be introduced into the [Legislature] Monday as Bill 19.

In my view, these events constitute a contempt of this Legislature thereby bringing the authority and dignity of the House into question.

Erskine May, 22nd edition, on page 108, Mr. Speaker, describes contempt.

Any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

The briefing that I object to was for media only, in fact literally underlined in the media advisory itself from Alberta Energy. Earlier today I tabled a copy of the media advisory in the House. Moreover, I ask you to consider, Mr. Speaker, that nowhere on the media advisory is it stated explicitly that the information provided would be subject to embargo.

Section 115 of Beauchesne requires that a question of privilege be brought to the attention of the House at the first possible opportunity. With your permission I want to address this matter just briefly. In that respect I will explain why I'm raising this question of privilege today rather than yesterday. The fact that the media had received a briefing on the contents of a government bill prior to members of this House receiving any such information was already a serious matter, even had Bill 19 been introduced yesterday. This serious matter was made worse by the government's decision to not introduce Bill 19 in the House yesterday despite notice having been provided on the Order Paper.

In other words, members of the media received a detailed technical briefing on the contents of Bill 19 some 25 hours before any member of this House received the same information and some 28 hours prior to the bill being placed before this House. Opposition members did receive an invitation from the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to attend a briefing at 11:45 a.m. today. I instructed my staff to decline this invitation because, in my judgment, such briefing constituted contempt of the Assembly, Mr. Speaker. I earlier tabled in the House the letter that I sent to the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

The failure to place Bill 19 before the Assembly before its contents were shared with the media interfered with my rights as a member in a very serious and real way. Yesterday at noon I made myself available to the news media. At that availability I was asked by a news reporter to respond to specific information that could only have come from the earlier media briefing on Bill 19. I ask you, Mr. Speaker: how can I respond to information that the news media has but that I have been denied access to? This clearly interfered with my rights as a member of this House by placing me at a severe disadvantage vis-à-vis the reporters who attended the Bill 19 briefing.

I want to make it clear that I find no fault with the news media in this matter. Their job is to report the news. To ask the news media to embargo information not provided to members of this House for over one full day places the media in an untenable position in the same way that I was placed in an untenable position myself.

Two years ago this month an incident occurred in the federal Parliament whose circumstances bear a direct parallel to the events which occurred here yesterday. On March 14, 2001, Vic Toews, MP for Provencher, raised a question of privilege in the House regarding a Department of Justice briefing on a bill prior to its introduction in Parliament to the House of Commons and the exclusion of Members of Parliament and their staff from that briefing. On March 19, 2001, the Speaker of the House of Commons delivered his ruling on the question of privilege. The Speaker concluded that the provision of information concerning legislation to members of the media while denying such information to members of the House of Commons and without any effective measures to secure the rights of the House constituted a prima facie contempt of the House.

To guide the Speaker of this Assembly – that is, you, Mr. Speaker – in your deliberation as to whether a prima facie breach of privilege occurred, the House of Commons Speaker's ruling is very relevant. I seek your indulgence to quote at some length from Speaker Peter Milliken's ruling, as I believe it outlines with great clarity the reasons and arguments as to why my rights and the rights of other members of this House were interfered with.

The federal Speaker ruled:

The House recognizes that when complex or technical documents are to be presented in this Chamber, media briefings are highly useful. They ensure that the public receives information that is both timely and accurate concerning business before the House.

In preparing legislation, the government may wish to hold extensive consultations and such consultations may be held entirely at the government's discretion. However, with respect to material to be placed before parliament, the House must take precedence. Once a bill has been placed on notice, whether it has been presented in a different form to a different session of parliament has no bearing and the bill is considered a new matter. The convention of the confidentiality of bills on notice is necessary, not only so that members themselves may be well informed, but also because of the pre-eminent role which the House plays and must play in the legislative affairs of the nation.

Mr. Speaker, Speaker Milliken of the House of Commons continues:

Thus, the issue of denying to members information that they need to do their work has been the key consideration for the Chair in reviewing this particular question of privilege. To deny to members information concerning business that is about to come before the House, while at the same time providing such information to media that will likely be questioning members about that business, is a situation that the Chair cannot condone.

The House of Commons Speaker continues:

Even if no documents were given out at the briefing, as the hon. government House leader has assured the House, it is undisputed that confidential information about the bill was provided. While it may have been the intention to embargo that information as an essential safeguard of the rights of this House, the evidence would indicate that no effective embargo occurred.

In this case it is clear that information concerning legislation, although denied to members, was given to members of the media without any effective measures to secure the rights of the House.

I have concluded that this constitutes a prima facie contempt of the House and I invite the hon. member for Provencher to move a motion.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you to carefully review the facts of this case and compare them to the facts of the case that occurred two years ago in the House of Commons. I hope that you will conclude that the facts in this case are even more compelling. In the federal Parliament there was only a delay of a few hours before the time that a media briefing occurred and when the bill was introduced. In this case, there has been a delay of over one full day.

For all of the above reasons, Mr. Speaker, I urge you to rule that a prima facie breach of privilege has occurred. Should you so rule, pursuant to Beauchesne 114(2) I would be prepared to move the necessary motion setting out a course of action for the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, are you prepared to make a comment with respect to this today?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd be prepared to make a comment now and, if it is your pleasure, to make written comment on this subject. It's obviously a very serious matter anytime a question of privilege or breach of the privileges or contempt of the House is raised. In this circumstance I would suggest to yourself and to members of the House that no question of privilege has been made out on a prima facie basis at all, but, as I say, should you wish to have further argument on it, I'd be happy to do that.

The question is one around: what's appropriate briefing to provide to any member of the public or other members of the House prior to a bill being introduced in the House? I think it is a common practice in this Assembly and I certainly have assured opposition members since I've been House leader that I encourage my colleagues to speak with their opposition critics with respect to any bill that they're going to introduce into the House, to give them information prior to the bill being introduced into the House as to what the nature and contents of the proposed legislation will be. That is done often, and members of both opposition parties have certainly attended in my office to be briefed on bills that are being introduced from our perspective.

Now, obviously, at that stage, it's not a matter of providing a copy of the bill, which we would not do, because the bill ought to be the property of the House, but we do provide specific and sufficient detail so they can understand the nature and direction, which is only appropriate in a modern parliamentary context where discussion of public policy ought to be done thoroughly, frankly, and in the public interest.

The question of discussing with the public and the media. Again, as the hon. member has alluded to, it has been the practice of this government, certainly since I've been here and since long before that, to have full, frank, open consultation with the public, and in the nature of the particular bill in question, Bill 19, there has been a discussion with stakeholders on an ongoing basis for at least the last year, as I understand it. The minister is present today and can supplement any remarks that I might make with respect to the process, but as I understand it, the discussion of the Gas Utilities Act has been ongoing for the better part of the last year. Discussions with stakeholders have happened. Drafts of legislation have been discussed. In fact, the hon. member who's raised the question of privilege tabled some early drafts of the bill in the House yesterday, so obviously he had them and was aware of their contents. But the process that we've followed has always been that the actual bill itself is not shared with anybody prior to it being tabled in the House. That's the gist of it.

One would hope that there would not be any ruling of this House – and I would certainly ask you, Mr. Speaker, to carefully consider any ruling that you might make – which would stop a good, full, open, frank discussion with the public, including briefing the media, with respect to legislation that's going to come before the House so that people can have a good understanding of the contents of legislation. What we need to make sure of, of course, is that the final draft of a bill, the bill that's actually going to come before the House, is the property of the House and is not released.

I'm given to understand – and no suggestion has been made otherwise – that the bill itself was not provided during the media briefing, that the legislation was not released prior to it being tabled in the House, that the briefing involved a discussion with the media of some of the technical aspects of what was going to be proposed, but that would be simply an extension of the discussion that's been had over the last six months and longer with the public, with the stakeholders, and with everybody else that was interested with respect to the bill.

Indeed, the opposition and the member raising the question of privilege this afternoon has indicated to the House that he, too, was invited to be briefed and turned that opportunity for briefing down, but I can assure the House that on other similar occasions the opportunity for briefing has not been turned down, that they've participated in briefings prior to bills being entered into the House, and this circumstance was no different.

It's important that the media is briefed fairly early on, fairly close to the time of introduction of a bill, because that's when they pay attention to the legislation that's being brought forward. That's when they're interested in it. Again I'm given to believe – and nothing has been suggested otherwise in the House – that there was no information shared with the media that was not part of a consultation process, part of an ongoing public discussion, part of the process building up to and preparing for the legislation to be written and the legislation to be entered into the House.

Nothing that the opposition member has said has indicated that anything that is particular to the bill itself was shared with anybody inappropriately prior to being entered into the House. All the hon. member has complained about is that there was a briefing, and as I've tried to outline for you, Mr. Speaker, and for members of this House, briefing the opposition, briefing the public, briefing the media, having open consultation processes is a hallmark of this government.

The Speaker: Would anyone from the Official Opposition choose to participate in this point?

Now, the bill in question was introduced under the name of the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Is there anything further that the hon. member would like to add to this matter?

I believe that the bill was then made and became a government bill. Is there anything the hon. Minister of Energy would like to add to this matter?

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you have something of a concrete nature to add to this matter?

Mr. Mason: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Mason: I wish to deal with two points raised by the hon. Government House Leader. First of all, consultation that has taken place in advance of the bill, including the distribution of draft bills. Mr. Speaker, there is a very distinct difference and a very important one between draft legislation and actual legislation, and I would submit that once the bill is finalized and is prepared to be put before the House, it is something that needs to be introduced first of all to the House and all members to have an opportunity to see that before the media does.

I will refer to the government news release dated February 28, 2003, and it indicates that media only is to be present and that the "officials will answer background questions on the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act 2003, which will be introduced into the Legislation" – that's a typo on their part: legislation – "Monday as Bill 19." This is not referring to any draft bill. This is not consultation. This is specifically dealing with a briefing on legislation that has already entered its final form before being introduced to the House.

The second point – it's a smaller one, Mr. Speaker – that I'd like to respond to the hon. Government House Leader on is that the briefing which the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona declined was one day after the briefing which was provided to the media.

So I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in accordance with the precedent which has been set in the federal House, this is clearly a prima facie case of privilege.

The Speaker: I want to get all the input we can possibly get because I am prepared to deal with this matter by tomorrow afternoon. If there's anything further – I've recognized two members from the third party. Does the hon. Deputy Government House Leader or the Government House Leader have anything further to respond to? There was a challenge. You don't have to.

Well, the chair has anticipated such a situation for going on two years now so finds it rather interesting that we've arrived on this day of March of 2003 with this kind of parliamentary dilemma before us, and it is one. Prior to tomorrow I would encourage a number of members to read the Journals dated Tuesday, March 7, 2000, at which point in time we had a similar situation arise in our House. A similar matter was dealt with. A ruling was provided at that time with respect to an almost similar kind of situation as the one we're talking about here today. Now, words were given. Caution was provided. Advice was provided.

Then, rather interestingly, since that time – and I'm just absolutely delighted, and I must congratulate the hon. leader of the third party for the impeccable research. The hon. member quotes from a ruling of March 19, 2001, in the Canadian House of Commons, which was almost one year after the one in the Alberta Legislative Assembly, a ruling provided by Speaker Milliken in which he did provide a conclusion that did set in motion a certain process.

So I will deal with this matter today and tomorrow and, hopefully, be in a position to come back and provide a ruling on this, but if any hon. member wants to convey any further information to me, the deadline for receiving such would be 10 o'clock tomorrow morning so that there would be ample opportunity for us to deal with this matter and have a ruling prepared by hopefully tomorrow afternoon at the conclusion of the question period. So I repeat: if there's additional information that needs to be provided to the chair with respect to this particular matter, please provide it no later than 10 a.m. tomorrow. Ample opportunity has been given, and ample invitations have been given to all hon. members today who chose to want to participate in this or add something of a parliamentary nature, and I think that concludes that.

So let us now proceed.

Second Reading
Bill 7
Real Estate Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate February 25: Mr. Graydon]

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, the debate was adjourned in the second reading of Bill 7 by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, and the chair hears nothing but calls for the question.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are happy to see this bill come before the Assembly. It's one that we are going to be supporting. It's definitely a bill that allows the authority of the Real Estate Council of Alberta to keep pace with developments in the real estate industry. It isn't really a very big bill. It isn't all that significant, but the changes that we see here are important. It brings appraisers under the act's licensing and regulating provisions, which we think is a very good idea. It extends the length of time the Real Estate Council of Alberta can take disciplinary action against former industry members to two years, which is also a good increase and is in line with the timing of their investigations, and it allows the council to require members to retain records for three years after they have left the industry, not as long as the tax department requires them to keep the records but certainly important for investigations done within this particular mandate. So we will be supporting this bill in principle.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

Bill 13

Government Organization Amendment Act, 2003

Ms DeLong: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 13, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2003.

Alberta Registries currently issues identification cards to Albertans 14 years of age and older who do not drive so that they are able to have government-issued photo identification. The production and issuance of identification cards will mirror those of drivers' licences. The identification card program is completely voluntary, and in the year 2001 there were 37,000 identification cards issued.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Express legislative authority is required to continue operating the current identification card program. The basic authority is being set out in schedule 12 of the act, and most of the details will be in ministerial regulation.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, this is a bill that's relatively minor in nature, although it does raise for me a couple of important issues. The first is the issue of providing identification for people who don't have a driver's licence. We think everybody has got a driver's licence, but in fact that isn't true. Many people who have medical conditions do not qualify and need some form of ID in many cases, and some people choose not to drive, and those that are 14 or younger haven't actually put in the hours or the training to qualify for a licence and also need some kind of identification.

I recall when my father had a stroke and could no longer drive, and the worst part of the rehabilitation during that time period was the fact that he was going to lose his driver's licence. There was quite a bit of significance for him attached to that. Having talked to people who work in the health care field and the rehabilitation field, they say that that is a common occurrence, that losing the ability to drive is a big deal, but losing the ability to have some kind of ID is even a greater threat to their independence, and they see that as quite a significant event in their life. So for those reasons it is important that we have access to some kind of identification card for people in that kind of a circumstance.

But we have a real issue about security, Mr. Speaker, and I'm not sure that we see that this bill identifies any of those concerns. There have been recent events of thefts in the offices where these ID cards are going to be available. When we talk about issues of national and international security and we talk about issues of personal identification for people, it's something that needs to be considered, and I'm hoping that in committee the member who introduced this bill will address those issues for us.

There's some talk that the fingerprint or other proof of identification that's being suggested for new drivers' licences also be used in this case. I would like to see that happen. There was not that long ago in Mill Woods an instance where a false ID was made up to take a girl across a border, and that's a pretty significant event. We need to ensure that we have enough security around these kinds of ID cards that those kinds of occurrences cannot and will not happen in the future.

So before I actually decide to support this bill or not, I would like to have the security issues identified, and let's talk a little bit about how we're going to ensure that security is maintained in these instances and that there will be the same kind of security around them as we see around other pieces of identification that are important from a legal responsibility.

With those comments, I'll take my seat.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in second reading of Bill 13, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2003. Specifically, as the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has noted, this is about capturing in legislation the ability of Alberta Government Services to continue to issue photo identification cards to Albertans who request them.

Now, I'm assuming that this can happen even if they do actually have a driver's licence, but primarily people, certainly the constituents that I have dealt with, that need to be able to get this kind of card are those who – I can think of two examples. One was an issue of poverty where the individual had experienced dramatically reduced circumstances and no longer had a vehicle to drive and hadn't for some period of time, and the driver's licence lapsed, and then they couldn't get any other form of identification. The photo ID, that is part and parcel of the driver's licence, is the number one requested piece of identification to start any other process, whether you're talking about a passport or anything else. So it's really critical that there be an alternative to a driver's licence and that if people cannot get a driver's licence or do not wish to have a driver's licence, this is available to them and needs to continue to be available to them.

The other circumstance that I've dealt with in my constituency with constituents who needed to get access to this card was those who had an illness that would preclude them from being able to drive or were taking medication that would prevent that. Again, we're in an age where everybody wants identification. As a matter of fact, we're moving towards more information being captured on the identification cards.

I know that the minister for this same department sponsoring this bill through the Member for Calgary-Bow is – I've totally lost my train of thought.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Ms Blakeman: No. You don't get to call the question just because I lost my train of thought.

The additional information that he's proposing come out in some kind of smart card, which I continue to think of as a snoopy card because it may well be capturing far more information than they really need to on a driver's licence – I think we need to be watching that. If there is an enhanced card being offered on one side with additional information – and I have to state that I'm very cautious about giving my support to that – we have to make sure that if that does happen, there is an equivalency through this particular kind of identification as well. We can't have a second-class form of identification just because people choose or are unable to or can't afford to keep up a driver's licence.

We are increasingly requiring that identification be produced in all kinds of circumstances now that didn't used to be the case. For this one fellow that came to me, I actually had to write up some documentation to say that I knew who he was and that I'd known him for a long period of time and that he was who he said he was so that he could actually go and get this identification card so that he had at least one piece of ID. He couldn't even get a bank account opened because he had absolutely no picture ID or identification that institutions would accept.

On the one hand, I'm glad to see that it's being solidified into legislation, but I think there are a number of other concerns that we need to look at. If I could look forward to having the questions that I've raised be answered, then I'm willing to speak to it again in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow to close debate.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will in Committee of the Whole go into more detail in terms of security issues, but to give some immediate comfort in terms of the security: the security for this card will be identical to the security for a driver's licence. As you are aware, we are moving forward in terms of increasing the security on the driver's licence cards.

To the Member for Edmonton-Centre in terms of whether or not this will be like a second-class card: this card will be handled exactly the same way as the driver's licence card. In fact, one of the things that I really like about it is that we are not setting up any sort of separate administration, no separate computer system, nothing. This is all handled exactly the same way as a driver's licence.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

Bill 10

Health Information Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Across Canada electronic health records are becoming the standard in health care for efficiency and, more importantly, to improve the results of patient care and the reduction of medical errors. Developing electronic health records is a key initiative in the Premier's Advisory Council on Health report. It is our blueprint for health reform.

To realize the benefits of electronic health records, care providers need access to information. Often family members and close friends need information that helps them understand what has happened when a patient dies. Yet at the same time we must protect patients' privacy and the confidentiality of their information. Bill 10, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2003, achieves this balance between access to information and privacy and confidentiality protection.

Section 60 of the current act already requires reasonable steps to protect the security and confidentiality of health information including information in an electronic record. Bill 10 will strengthen this protection by adding a provision specifically to protect the confidentiality and security of electronic health records. With enhanced security and with the support of all major stakeholders, Bill 10 then removes the requirement to get patient consent before information can be shared through electronic health records if that health information can identify an individual.

The pharmaceutical information network project shows that 99 percent of people consented to have their records shared by electronic means. The people who keep and manage electronic health records have told us that getting consent is an administrative burden that takes away time for patient care. All provinces and territories agree that consent should not be required in a health care setting if the information is used for treatment and care. When we ask for consent under the current act, the implicit message to patients is: the risk is yours, and you accept it. With the proposed changes we change the message to: the risk and duty is ours, and we will meet it.

Mr. Speaker, in the sad event of a death the family and friends of the deceased need access to health information to understand what has happened. The current act does not permit this information to be disclosed for reasons other than the administration of the estate. In the case of a child there may be no estate, but the parents still need to understand and work through their grief. Bill 10 addresses these issues with amendments recommended by the Information and Privacy Commissioner. Bill 10 authorizes discretionary disclosure of health information that relates to circumstances surrounding death or health services the person received before death. Where disclosure is not contrary to the express request of the deceased, this balances privacy with the surviving family's need to know. Under the current act only the personal representative of someone who is 18 or older at the time of death may exercise rights on behalf of the deceased. Because access to information may be needed to administer an estate of a child, Bill 10 removes the age restriction, as recommended by the Privacy Commissioner.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, in fairness to the professionals and families who need access to health information, in the interests of patients whose caregivers will be able to make better decisions, and to increase confidentiality protection for patients whose information is used to provide better care, I ask this House for support for Bill 10, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2003.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is, as always, a pleasure to rise and speak in this Assembly. I was listening to the minister's comments and find myself frequently agreeing with him, so I thought I'd start off with that volley and, in fact, say that we're very pleased in particular about the component of Bill 10 that addresses the sharing of information on the death of a child. It's an issue that was brought to our attention in the fall. I think it was brought to the minister's attention as well. I'm glad to see that the minister has brought forward legislation to address that particular concern. It had led to a handful of very sad and completely unnecessary dilemmas. So there's wholehearted support certainly from me and, I'm sure, from the opposition caucus for that particular part of this legislation. We may want to discuss that angle at greater length in committee, but it's pretty straightforward.

The larger aspect of this bill and the one that is more difficult is the part that addresses the issue of consent around health information, and it's a genuine dilemma. It's one for which there is no perfect solution. In principle and in general I can say that I am uneasy with trends towards more and more personal information being kept on computers, and I say this as somebody who has no particular history to be sensitive about.

An Hon. Member: Well, how do we know?

Dr. Taft: Well, you might find out sometime.

Nonetheless, there's a trend in society in which a tremendous amount of information is collected on each and every one of us and installed in computer databases. Every time we use a credit card, every time we make any significant or even sometimes tiny purchase, every time we rent a video, every time we respond to a consumer survey, and on and on and on, information is collected on us. Indeed, every time members of this Assembly enter their offices and use their security cards, information is collected on us.

While all of this information is distributed in many smaller databases so that there isn't one, single, Big Brother system out there, one of the most dramatic trends in computer technology is the networking of databases. Certainly, I know I have and I bet many of us have had the experience where you're making a purchase – I can remember a few years ago purchasing a refrigerator. Part of the deal was that it was an interest-free purchase, so I applied to have this interest-free arrangement, and the clerk said: well, I'll just pass this information on to our central office through phone. In about two minutes the clerk and whoever he was talking to on the other end of the phone had completely reviewed my financial records and decided that, yes, indeed, I was creditworthy. That was done through a sales clerk at an appliance store. Certainly, I assume that there was some kind of safeguard on that information, but it was easily penetrated by a clerk at an appliance store.

That's just one example. I know there have been other times. I went a couple of years ago to rent a video at a store that I regularly went to, and I showed my membership card as I had to, and the clerk popped up and said: oh, sir, your Visa card is about to expire. I'd never used my Visa card at this shop. I'd always paid cash, as we probably all do for something as cheap as a video rental, but the databases were linked, and this person knew my credit card was coming up.

I tell these stories because they illustrate how much personal information is readily available. I know these issues are well known to the minister, to the department, and to the people who have worked on developing the electronic information systems. Nonetheless, I am uneasy about this trend in our society, and I think one of the principal safeguards for individual privacy and, ultimately, individual freedom is our right to have the minimal amount of information necessary collected on us without our consent.

So the thrust of part of this bill, which is, as I understand it, to prevent or to stop requiring active consent from people for some of their information to be placed on computerized systems and to assume that that consent is given and to not collect the information only if they actively object, is to me a very major step. I must say that it's not just that way for me. I've heard from legal people, civil liberties people, and from health people who share these concerns. That is going to be, I imagine, the most contentious part of this legislation.

While I expect, as is typically the case in this Assembly as it's structured, this legislation to go through, I'm concerned, then, that down the road we may run into problems with implementing the legislation, or we may run into something of a public backlash when people who didn't realize that their private information was being computerized learn about it and say: "Hey, what's going on here? I didn't expect this. I didn't want this." So I do think that this is in that regard a very significant piece of legislation with profound potential implications.

The questions I raised today do not mean that we are opposed to electronic records on health care. I have listened for many years to physicians who have wished they could have had better information on a particular patient. There are many examples, I think the most dramatic coming out of emergency wards, where somebody turns up unconscious or without an informed friend to help them and the doctors aren't sure what medications they're on, they aren't sure what allergies they have, they aren't sure what blood types they are, and they need to act instantly. In those situations doctors are presented with a difficult and dangerous situation that they wish they could address, and presumably this kind of information system will help them address those problems.

For every one of those problems I find myself wondering: are we taking a huge and expensive step to address what is, frankly, a fairly small number of problems? Is this one of those things that from society's perspective overall it would be nice to have but except in a few dramatic cases is not necessary to have? How much is this going to cost in hardware and in software and in human effort and human time to implement? What are the benefits of that really going to be to the health care system? How many patients are really going to be treated significantly differently because of this information? I don't know the answer to that, but I think it's a question that perhaps needs to be asked more.

I am concerned, and this is a concern that goes back many, many years, to days in the 1980s when I worked in the provincial civil service. There was an initiative there, that the Minister of Children's Services has occasionally referred to as CWIS, the child welfare information system. That computer system cost millions of dollars to develop and caused incredible disruption and grief to all kinds of people as it was being developed. I began to wonder then if the real driving force behind it wasn't largely the computer companies and the software companies and the computer enthusiasts who had in their minds some kind of ideal, but when that ideal was being turned into reality or the attempt was made to turn that ideal into reality, it just didn't work very well. It was very, very costly and in many regards didn't work as well as the old paper system. Now, I assume – I hope – that CWIS has come a tremendously long way. I imagine it has, but it gave me an insight into how painful and how costly and how slow and disruptive developing these information systems can be. I do have a sense that this provincial government is actually spending hundreds of millions of dollars annually on developing new computerized systems that I'm not sure are, in fact, worth that cost.

So that's another reason I'm skeptical of this whole direction. Is this a nice-to-have, or is it really a need-to-have? What's the cost, and what's the benefit? Is the benefit really as great for society as people who sell computers and software would like us to believe? I remember back – I'm sure we all remember – to the promises of a paperless office. The computer was going to bring the paperless office. Well, I probably got 500 pages of paper delivered to my office today alone, so a lot of these promises haven't materialized.

I'm also concerned that there are times when it's better to be second or third or fifth or tenth in developing an innovation than trying to develop it yourself. It's not always the best to be the first one to challenge a problem because all of the expensive lessons are learned at your cost and all the expensive mistakes you made at the cost of your government or your citizens. So I can't help wondering if we wouldn't be better off letting another province iron out all the enormous bugs we're going to have with this system and then learn from their difficult experiences.

An Hon. Member: Why not let the feds do it?

Dr. Taft: Well, maybe we could learn a lesson from the federal government – you're not kidding – on how not to do something.

So I'm hoping for some interesting comments from the government members on the issues of personal privacy and individual freedom and on the issue of intrusion of government into people's private lives without their active consent. I assume that's a significant issue for all members of government, especially the Member for St. Albert, who is making a variety of comments on this.

Ms Blakeman: But not on the record.

Dr. Taft: But not on the record. No.

So I look forward to the discussion that's going to be here, Mr. Speaker, and I'm happy to see how the debate unfolds. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to join in the debate in second reading on Bill 10, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2003. This is a proposal that always seems to have two sides or two parts to it, because off the bat the bill has what I think is quite a good, positive movement, that I'm not going to challenge, and then I think there's another side of it that is worth challenging.

Obviously, the section of the bill that's dealing with allowing for the discretionary release of health information around an individual's death is a positive move. I think a number of us can remember the episode that led to this. As a matter of fact, I know that in the Official Opposition we in particular pushed for this amendment, even calling on the Minister of Health and Wellness to implement it back in November.

The second part of it, though, is this sort of negative billing idea, of giving or not giving permission, and there's a good and a bad side to that one as well in a couple of different ways. I think that we can look at it and say: okay; well, this does allow for health professionals to share accurate information quickly and easily. It would stop some duplication of testing and diagnosis.

I remember when I was in the hospital, I couldn't believe that every single health professional that came at me had to run the same dang tests, and they were particularly uncomfortable. I kept saying: don't you keep this information somewhere centrally where you can all look at it; why do you have to keep doing this to me? It was kept centrally. It was supposed to be, you know, the clipboard that used to hang on the end of patients' beds. But even by that time that wasn't necessarily happening, and I felt at the time that there was a lot of duplication of service and staff time that didn't need to be happening if they'd just managed to share the information and the results of various diagnostic tests with each other.

All of that would certainly be addressed if we had this sort of instant access from the health professionals to a shared database of information on a computer. So we're trying to balance here expediency and delivery of high-quality health care against an individual's privacy.

I think what always comes to me is the removal of choice in this situation, that what we have now is that the choice is there and has to be offered to the individual. They have to be told, you know: you must release this or sign a consent form so health professionals can get at this. The person is offered the choice. They can take it or not take it. But what we're talking about with this bill is eliminating that section. So they're no longer offered the choice; it just happens.

This government seems to be very keen on taking away people's ability to protect their personal privacy. I mean, we had an MLA police review that talked about having unmanned drones going out in the country and spying on people and collecting video tapes of folks, you know. I think you have to draw a line – and that may well be an ethical line; it could be a moral line – where you say: no, we're not going to take away people's ability to stop that.

I'll give you a sort of minor example of that. A lot of us, when we go to the stores now, are offered these customer loyalty cards, and with it usually comes an incentive, like you'll be able to take advantage of sales that only those people with these cards will get. True, but you also are giving over an awful lot of information about you and your choices in life. Of course, all of those are recorded, and that will lead to your being lobbied to purchase other kinds of similar merchandise, but you still have the choice. You may not like the choice particularly – that is, I don't want the customer loyalty card, and therefore I won't be able to take advantage of your sales – but at least that choice is still there rather than having to say to everyone: sorry; we're going to record every single thing that you're going to buy whether you like it or not, and you're going to get lobbied by other marketing firms whether you like it or not. I still maintain that we need to hold onto that personal integrity and that personal choice about that.

I heard someone over here heckling about: oh, the sky is falling; the sky is falling. I don't think the sky is falling here, but I think that there are a number of very clear, conscious choices that we need to make about how we as legislators deal with people's personal information.

Now, we have a number of examples in front of us. This is a question of trust. If that personal information is collected in whatever form, can we trust that it will be reliably held, that the people who get access to it will be restricted, that it will be only those people that absolutely have to be able to get access to it? I would argue that the examples we have before us do not give us a lot of faith in that. We're still getting stories of medical records found in boxes in people's backyards, of hard drives of computers being sold before they were wiped off.

You still also have to deal with not human error here but, I guess, human corruption. What comes to mind is the story in Quebec where the Hells Angels were able to bribe an employee who was working in a private registry to look up the licence plate number of the journalist and was able to provide that. Of course, then they waited in the parking lot by the car with that licence plate number and were able to shoot at the journalist.

So that is a matter of human corruption. That person had access to very personal information, and there was no way to control them. I mean, no, they're not supposed to do it, but they did it. That's the issue here. No, they're not supposed to do it. No, other people are not supposed to be looking at this information, but I don't see the safeguards that assure me that that's not going to happen. I don't see that there's enough protection there that's going to make me trust that this system is going to work. I mean, it seems every month, every couple of months there's another story of how a bunch of personal information on a computer, on paper, on whatever that was collected by government on its citizens is found in a place that it shouldn't be, or people that shouldn't be having access to it indeed have access to it. I think until we can have, let's say, a demonstrated period of time where the government manages to keep all of this personal information on people indeed secure, I'm not able to extend my trust in government that they will do that.

Again, I think it is wrong to take away the choice of people to say yes or no. As I gave an example with the customer loyalty cards, they do make that choice understanding what the limitations are, yes: I won't give you that personal health information, and I understand that that might mean I don't get an immediate diagnosis if I am in a car accident because you will not have access to my health care records. Maybe it's a two-hour wait or a four-hour wait or an eight-hour wait, but, you know, frankly you could be sitting that long in emergency waiting to get checked in anyway until your family members, whoever else has that information, show up. So at this point I don't see the urgency there.

I don't see that there are enough safeguards being put in place that protect how the information is collected, where it's stored, who has access to it, and how it's disposed of eventually. What do you do with old information? How is it archived, and, again, who has access to it? So I see too many reasons still out there to not trust that this system can be put in place in a way that satisfies my need on behalf of constituents to protect their privacy and to protect their choice.

It may well be that the minister has stupendous statistics that he's able to bring forward of where the system works and what he's willing to see put in place to offer these safeguards that I'm looking for, and I look forward to hearing more from the minister and to further debate in Committee of the Whole. I have real hesitation in supporting this bill as it stands now.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, are you rising to ask a question?

Mr. Mason: Yes, I am. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre if she has concerns about the number of people who have access to this information and whether or not individuals should have access to their own information?

Ms Blakeman: That's interesting. Yes to the second part. I think that individuals always need to be guaranteed access to the information that's kept on them. We, I think, have lots of examples where in fact information is incorrect, yet an individual looking at their own files could instantly say, "Oh, that's the wrong information; here is the correct information," or supply them with documentation of it corrected. It's just fundamentally wrong to keep personal information on someone and not let them see it. Now, there can be a process in place to allow them to gain access to this information – that's fine – but they have to be allowed to see the information that is being kept on them. So I answered the second part of your question first.

The first question. Part of what I was talking about is the concern about how many people get to have access to this information. Where does the buck stop? Where does the access code end? I remember I had an alarm system once that you could sort of graduate employees on when they were able to enter the office space and who was allowed to come in after hours or on weekends and how many times they could come in and out in a given period of time. I don't see any attempt to have that kind of coding or security in there. So where does this end? Maybe the minister can lay this out for us. Who all does get to see this? Doctors? Okay. Pharmacists? Well, possibly. The orderly? The nursing aide? The personal care attendant? Who? Who all gets to see it? What is that list, and what's the security clearance, if you want to call it that, of the people that get to see it?

So I think there is a real concern about that, and thanks for the question.

The Acting Speaker: There being no questions, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am happy to be able to rise today and speak to Bill 10, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2003, as introduced by the Minister of Health and Wellness. It's interesting to have seen the evolution of this bill or some variation of this bill over the 10 years that I've been in this Legislature. We've seen trial balloons raised by a variety of health ministers and sometimes government private members on issues around smart cards and gathering information on people and some form of information transfer that makes the information readily accessible to whoever is out there that might want it.

Interestingly, also in this bill we see the government resorting to one of their usual tactics, Mr. Speaker, and that is that they put a little piece in the bill that is motherhood and apple pie, that is very difficult to not support, that in fact everybody in the world would support. In this case, that is the piece that talks about allowing custodians to provide access to and disclosure of health records/information of deceased individuals. No one wants to vote against something like that. It's a very supportable part of the legislation, and we have seen recently, as discussed by several of my colleagues, instances where that's very important to occur, but it's a small piece of this bill.

The major piece of this bill talks about what is in fact an example of a kind of negative billing. Where we all will understand what this legislation does in this Assembly because it's been discussed, most Albertans won't know that this goes into place, so they won't know that their health information is out there electronically, able to be transferred to those people that somebody else deems to be appropriate.

So when we talk about this legislation, the fundamental questions for me are: do I trust the government to get the information correct in the first place? The answer to that, fundamentally, is no. We have seen too many examples of this government not processing information accurately, sometimes through no fault of their own, but something happens in the translation of the data where there is incorrect information. When someone from my family or myself or anyone I know has health information that can be transferred from here to there that I don't know is happening or where I don't know that this entity has access to transfer it there, how am I going to know, one, that I want it to go and, two, that it's accurate? In a case where you have to give consent first, there is an understanding of what's occurring, and there is an ability for the individual to check the accuracy and to actually convey the message of whether or not they want the information transferred. That won't happen with this bill. We are going to see lots of people come back to the government and to their doctors and to the hospitals and say, "Why did you do this?" and then, "If you did it, why didn't you get it right?"

So it's very interesting that this is a government who talks all the time about reducing regulation, about reducing information, about increasing individual rights and freedoms, but what we see, slowly, year after year, is more legislation coming in that does exactly the reverse of that, actually quite different than what their philosophical bent is. It's interesting to see the increase in control that they have taken on people's information and how they want to be able to do that now without getting anybody's consent. That deals with the issue of whether or not I think they can get it right and whether or not they should have the access to that.

It really comes down to an argument over values, Mr. Speaker. We as Liberals certainly value the individual and the individual's rights, and we think that health information is probably the most important, the most vital, the most sensitive information there is out there about us that can be shared and that Albertans need to be consulted in a very widespread manner to decide whether or not this should happen. This is, in fact, a very good referendum question, and that is: do you trust the government to keep this information and share it without you being able to give consent and then, in fact, verify and know who the information is going to? As it stands here, you won't always know who's getting the information, which was the Member for Edmonton-Highlands' question.

So I think that for those reasons I can't support this bill, certainly, in principle, and I think that perhaps on this bill, Mr. Speaker, we should have a standing vote at second reading, because it is a vote in principle on whether or not we trust this government to handle personal health information correctly and whether or not it should be able to be transferred without consent having been given. So I leave that out there for discussion and debate. I hope that we'll get some feedback from government members or government private members on this particular issue, because this is a big issue for people in this province. I know that they expect and hope to pass this very quickly, without too much discussion, but I'm not sure that's going to happen.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29, any questions?

Speaker's Ruling

Question and Comment Period

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, this chair failed to recognize one hon. member who had a question not directed to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie but to the Member for Edmonton-Centre. For the record, the chair will provide an opportunity to the hon. Minister of Justice to enter the question in the record, and if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre chooses to respond for one minute, the chair will also provide her a response time.

The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but I can raise the point in speaking directly to debate.

The Acting Speaker: Wonderful. Thank you.

Debate Continued

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 10, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2003. I just want to indicate that I think that there are tremendous increases in efficiency and effectiveness that can be found through electronic means of records of any sort, and I think there are particularly great advantages to be found in the area of health records and permitting the sharing of health information amongst the people who need it and who have received the permission of the patient, either at the time or previously, to access that information.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I also have reservations about the lack of safeguards around this information. The question of who can have the information is one. Clearly, doctors should have it. Other health care professionals who may be dealing directly with a patient should have it. However, can the information be accessed by people who shouldn't have it? Can, for example, officials of the Ministry of Health and Wellness access the information? I think the minister should respond to this, and I'm sure that he'll respond that, no, there's no such intention, but I would ask then: what is the safeguard?

Secondly, is the information going to be made available for medical research? Can it be used by researchers in some way? There are many good arguments that would be put forward for that type of thing – the advancement of science, seeking breakthroughs against disease – many, many arguments that, I think, have a lot of validity, but the question comes back to consent and the ethics of proceeding with research without the informed consent of the people who are supplying data. So I'd like that addressed, not just in terms of whether in principle the government is for it or against it but concretely how they would ensure that people's information is not accessed without their consent for purposes for which they did not give the information.

Then, I guess, there's the question of how people are being deemed to have provided their consent. There was a case a few years ago, Mr. Speaker, when cable companies in this province and across the country as well provided new packages of service to their regular customers and raised the bill for them and informed them that if they didn't want the extra package of channels and didn't want to pay the extra money, it was their obligation to contact the cable companies and inform them of that fact. Otherwise, they would receive the extra channels, and they would be charged. This became known as negative option billing, and it got a lot of people very angry in this country and in Alberta, and the government, in fact, introduced changes to its consumer legislation to outlaw the practice. That was a positive step, but the question is: how does it get applied?

I raised in this Assembly about a year ago a question of one publication that was engaged in the practice of negative option billing. The minister took it under advisement and acknowledged that it was, in fact, negative option billing, and the government's response was to send people who received this publication without their consent and who were having their credit cards charged for something they didn't request another letter, to which they had to respond to the publication. The government's response under its own legislation, when negative option billing was clearly banned, legally banned, was illegal in the province – their remedy in a case was to engage in the same practice again of forcing people to respond if they didn't want it.

I don't know where we're further ahead, but it leads me to the question of whether or not the government can be trusted in this kind of case, and the government is clearly operating with respect to consent to medical information in the same fashion; that is to say, it is a negative option approach. If any citizen does not want their health information to be recorded electronically and available to whoever can access it, they must take the initiative and ask that their information not be included. It's precisely the same situation that the government banned when it came to consumer information, even though they haven't enforced it properly, that is being suggested here by the government in terms of how people will have an opportunity to make sure that their information is only there with their consent. So the consents that are envisaged by the government are negative option consents, and that is a serious problem.

Mr. Speaker, I started by saying that I thought there was tremendous opportunity, particularly in the health care field, for electronic information to be a tremendous benefit to medical professionals and to patients, but it's a new area, a complex area, and one which we have seen is wide open to abuse. There is no lack of stories about hackers or misuse of information, about the lack of safeguards for electronic information in the world. It is incumbent on the government, in my view, to clearly demonstrate that they have found and anticipated various elements of potential abuse to which this information could be subject and that they have provided remedies against it.

If you look at Bill 10 and its grand total of five clauses – there's a fifth clause striking out one sentence, so I guess it has five sections, a very, very short bill – it clearly doesn't fit the bill in terms of providing adequate safeguards on the use of the information, on the requirements of permission for people, and who may or may not access it. As a result, Mr. Speaker, the New Democrat opposition will not support Bill 10 as it is a clearly flawed approach to an important frontier in medical science.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29.

There being none, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to take a brief opportunity to speak to Bill 10, because I think it is not only an important piece of legislation in and of itself but symbolizes a very important process of government. Speaking to the process of government, the Health Information Act was brought in some two years ago, I believe, and it was the subject of a considerable amount of debate around the issues of the privacy of information in respect to the rights of the individual and those issues. There was a debate around those issues at the time and a thorough airing of those concepts including a lot of concerns being raised, sometimes, I think, inappropriately, with respect to access to information by members of cabinet, for example, and who they could share that with.

All of that amounted to somewhat a scaring of the public with respect to an issue which is of supreme importance to us, and when I say scaring of the public, I say that advisedly, because it's patently obvious from the bill itself, now the Health Information Act, that there were severe penalties put in place, $50,000 under section 107 of the act, if people misused information or utilized information in an inappropriate manner.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre was speaking this afternoon, was talking about the need to be careful about collecting information – and I hope I'm not paraphrasing her inappropriately – because somebody somewhere once sold information from a registry fraudulently and inappropriately. Well, surely the fact that sometimes people do bad things – and hopefully get caught and are sanctioned for it – should not stop us from moving forward on processes which are exceedingly important for the good of the community.

What I wanted to point out in debate is that when we look at Bill 10, we have to look at Bill 10 in the context of the Health Information Act. The severe penalties and the strictures in the Health Information Act do protect the public with respect to their information and the inappropriate sharing of their information, provide heavy sanctions for those people who use information inappropriately or share it inappropriately but allow us to move forward to gather information in health records in an electronic manner so that they can be used for the benefit of the individuals no matter where they access health care professionals.

If we are to engage in true health care reform which allows health care professionals, whether they are doctors or nurses or pharmacists or other health care professionals, to practise their profession to the extent of their training and expertise and to provide full value to the community by providing their services at the highest level they can, then we have to have the ability for them to access information appropriately. Really, what the Health Information Act is about is providing for electronic health records so that health care professionals, wherever located, can in appropriate circumstances access appropriate records for the good of the individual involved.

Now, in order to make that effective, there needs to be an appropriate database maintained and there needs to be appropriate information put on that database and there needs to be appropriate safeguards built around that database so that there's protection for the public and for individuals from misuse. It's quite astonishing to hear the Liberals get up and say that they're the protectors of the rights of the individual when that is classically what the Conservatives do. Again, what we're doing at this stage with the Health Information Act is providing for the proper use of public resources in a publicly funded health care system to ensure that individual Albertans can have access to their records through their appropriate health care provider in appropriate circumstances and appropriate places.

Will there ever be a release of information inappropriately? Mr. Speaker, you can't guard against all eventualities, but what you can do is build a system that's the strongest and best system possible and then put severe sanctions in place for those that misuse the system, and that is what is in place under the Health Information Act as it stands, even without Bill 10.

What Bill 10 does – and it's the second part of the remarks I wanted to make – is indicate a process whereby the government is flexible enough to be able to look at a piece of legislation that was put in place, and as we move through this system of health care reform and as we move through the process of introducing technology to improve the quality of health care that's available to individual Albertans, we're prepared to make appropriate amendments at appropriate times in order to make the system work better and, indeed, protect the public even more. So I would encourage people to support Bill 10.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I listened carefully to the minister's attempt to defend the bill, but nowhere did I hear him attempt any justification of the removal of choice that currently resides with the individual as to whether or not they wish to give consent for access to their personal health records. Can the minister attempt to justify that removal of choice from the individuals that is encapsulated in this act?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, choice is still there. It's just a question of how it's exercised. In this case, the change in the act is to allow a person to choose not to have their records put into the system.

But I would indicate to the hon. member that right now, as people go to see their health care provider, a record is made and put in the file and put on a shelf. Everybody in that office has access to that record, and anybody who wants to break into that office has access to that record. Their health care record is no safer in that office, I would suggest, than it is hanging on the end of the bed at the hospital, where, when you go to visit somebody in the room, you can read the records of the other three people.

This is a significant improvement, I would suggest, under the Health Information Act, to the protection of health care records, not a denigration of it. People still do have the choice to take themselves out of the system, but the system doesn't work if you add too many burdens to it, and therefore the change of the process of choice is necessary.

Mr. Mason: Just a comment, Mr. Speaker, on the minister's response. It's clear that the minister doesn't understand the difference between a locked filing cabinet and a modern, networked electronic data system. There's a quantum leap in accessibility to records which are stored electronically, and anyone who has the right code can access the information. So that's why you need to design modern electronic techniques to protect the information, which is much, much different than just a sanction in case you happen to get caught, because nine times out of 10 you won't get caught.

Mr. Hancock: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, bigger filing cabinets need bigger locks, and when you're designing an electronic system, you have to design locks that work on an electronic system. When you have a filing cabinet, you use the key approach. But we're moving into a modern era. We're in the 21st century. We're going to be using technology. We're going to be using it to the advantage of the public, and, yes, security needs to be designed in.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question has three parts. Could the minister table information for us laying out that this will be a strong and secure system? We haven't seen any documentation so far. The second part is: can he tell us what the cost is going to be of enforcement and monitoring and what that plan is? And, more generally, we would like a cost-benefit analysis of moving forward on this position.

Mr. Hancock: It appears, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberals would like to know exactly what has happened in 1950 before they get into 1980 or, indeed, 2003. The only way you can actually have the absolute details of everything that's happened is if you go to public accounts.

Mr. Speaker, when you design systems, you don't design all the details before you pass the legislation. You pass, as she so rightly pointed out in her remarks, the framework of the legislation, and then under the framework of the legislation, which sets out the principles of what you're trying to accomplish, you put in the details and regulation with respect to the regulatory process, and then you get the experts to design the system. Yes, most Albertans do have faith in their government and do trust that the public servants that they hire to take care of those details will do those jobs to the best of their ability and in the public interest.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview? Any other questions? Anybody else who wants to speak on the bill?

Mrs. O'Neill: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a comment with respect to the bill and the discussion that we've just had and the choice that has been put before us and been questioned by members of the two opposition parties. They have used in their speeches references to credit cards. They have used references to smart buyer cards. They have used references to, probably, the Safeway purchasing card. They've said that it has a choice.

Well, I'd like to talk about another choice that impacts more specifically and, I think, less frivolously on the discussion at hand, and that is with respect to the driver's licence that we have, that gives us the opportunity to choose whether we wish to donate our organs should we die in an accident. It is a choice, and it's a choice that we are able to make and sign and have verified by those whom we love, and it's a choice that I think should rightfully reside there. However, let's consider just for a moment the fact that since it is not a given, there are many opportunities that happen where individuals who die could have, should they have known, been able to donate their organs and save someone else's life.

So while I respect that that whole process should be by choice, I would say that if we're still talking in the arena of health care delivery, by knowing what can happen with our record, just by virtue of allowing and trusting our information to go into the system, we are going to allow a number of people to get the best care they possibly can and the immediate attention that they need and the appropriate one.

So we have two different scenarios. Don't misunderstand me. I'm not trying to say that we should just automatically be able to give our organs, but I do want to say that in many cases it's a question of life and death. It's a case of health care, and I think that, in this instance, it does indeed mean that we will be able to provide better health care, faster health care, more accessible health care, and ultimately the most appropriate health care to those people when they need it.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, I don't think the member was all that clear in her remarks. Is she suggesting that all people should now be, without their consent, automatically organ donors unless they opt out?

Mrs. O'Neill: No. I was not suggesting, and if the member had listened, she would have heard me say: make no mistake about it; I am not suggesting that these should be similar.

Ms Carlson: Then, Mr. Speaker, exactly what was her correlation between the organ donor story and the story about not having any consent with medical records?

Mrs. O'Neill: I wasn't making a correlation, and I indicated that I wasn't making a correlation. I was making a reference to the delivery of health care and what records or what consent or the requirement of consent in the case of the organ donor or, in this case, the assumption of the consent of sharing that information, and I was saying not a correlation but a fact that both instances with different entry points and consents do provide for better health care.

The Acting Speaker: Any other member who wishes to speak on the bill?

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to close debate.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I've listened carefully to comments made by hon. members on both sides of the House. I note that there are some concerns that are being expressed that, I think, are legitimate ones but are properly dealt with, as the Minister of Justice correctly stated, as we develop the system once we've passed the framework as set out in Bill 10. Accordingly, I move second reading of same.

Bill 14 Securities Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to stand today and move second reading of Bill 14, the Securities Amendment Act, 2003.

This bill will make several changes to legislation governing capital markets in the province. The proposed amendments will provide greater protection for investors, allow Alberta businesses improved access to capital markets, and make the current regulatory environment more efficient. Mr. Speaker, this legislation marks the first time securities law has taken steps to address corporate governance and protect investors. This bill also lays the foundation for improved securities laws when national laws are made down the road. As securities are constitutionally a provincial jurisdiction, provincial ministers are taking this responsibility seriously, including our own Minister of Revenue, who is taking personal leadership in this matter.

I urge all members of this Legislature to give Bill 14 their full support. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 15 Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 15, Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2003.

First of all, I would like to address the amendments being made regarding this act, which are necessary to meet today's challenges in wildfire management. These changes are part of a continuing process to seek new and improved ways to manage wildfires for the benefit and protection of all Albertans. As we have seen in the last couple of years, Mr. Speaker, fires are a huge reality in the forest areas of our province. We have seen fires move close to and even into communities. We need to make certain that our legislation and practices in dealing with wildfire are envisioned with how we protect Albertans and their valuables.

These changes will bring the act in line with Sustainable Resource Development's business practices by upgrading wording, clarifying jurisdictions in interpretation of the act, and strengthening the department's ability to determine the cause and the responsible parties in wildfire investigations. The amendment will allow the minister to move more effectively to administer fire bans. As well, these amendments will strengthen Sustainable Resource Development's enforcement ability with the intent to reduce the number and severity of human-caused fires. The amendment will clarify that the forest protection area does not apply to land within the boundaries of the summer villages.

Sustainable Resource Development has consulted extensively with other ministries, municipal governments, and other stakeholders in preparing these amendments. Thank you for your support of this important piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have this opportunity to talk to Bill 15, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2003. I would like to thank the Member for West Yellowhead for the work he's done on this bill and for his attempts to try and get ahold of me, prior to this bill being introduced, to discuss it in a little more detail. Unfortunately, given the tight time constraints we had, that was impossible, but I certainly do appreciate the effort on his behalf and his staff's behalf to get in touch and go over some of the issues.

We don't have too many problems with this bill, Mr. Speaker. The highlights of it really are that there is a lot of housekeeping and clarification in the bill over what was existing before, and that's all good news. It gives forest officers and fire guardians more powers, which we see as a positive move forward in this regard, and we'll support that.

It repeals the limit on the liability of an offending party against the act for reimbursement to the minister. That's an interesting part of the act. We don't have a real issue with that, but I think that that's the part of this act that is going to be the most open for discussion and debate, and that comes in section 4 where it talks about who in the act will be liable for reimbursing "the Minister or any other person for the costs and expenses of fighting the fire." These are going to include:

- (a) the person who caused the fire,
- (b) the person who directed the lighting of the fire,
- (c) the person who was otherwise responsible for the fire,
- (d) the person who owned the land on which the fire began and does not establish that the fire ignited or was lit without that person's consent, express or implied, and
- (e) the person who was in control of the land on which the fire began and does not establish that the fire ignited or was lit without that person's consent, express or implied.

So there are some issues around this. While it's excellent that people are being held liable for fires they cause and there should be a more just method than we've seen, perhaps, in the past of the determination of who should be held liable, there are some concerns around this.

First of all, dealing with the first three – the person who caused it, who directed the lighting, and who was otherwise responsible – if it's an underage adult, who's then responsible financially for having the fire lit? If your teenagers head out and have a bush fire and cause a forest fire to occur, who pays? The kids, the parents, or as we go down to (d), what may potentially be the person on whose land they were having the party? In many instances in that case they're not there with the permission of the landowner. So I'm hoping that when we get to committee, the Member for West Yellowhead can explain that part of the bill in a little bit more detail.

There is some concern about assumed innocence within that principle, and maybe we want to talk about the plaintiff in such a case, which in this case would be the government, having to establish the guilt of the defendant. What's the process that we'll go through in that regard? I think that that takes a little thinking through. It isn't spelled out here. Traditionally, the devil is in the details. In this case, the details come in regulations, and we would just like to have a little more information on how this is going to be processed.

The fines, Mr. Speaker, have been substantially increased. If I'm correct, I believe they're up to and including the cost of fighting the fire, which we know is millions and millions of dollars. So that'll be interesting to see how the first kinds of fines are placed and how high those fines will be.

I guess my questions around that, too, are the old enforcement and monitoring questions. Fighting fires comes under Sustainable Resource Development. They've taken some pretty heavy hits in the past years in terms of employee cutbacks. They don't have enough people for monitoring and enforcement now. What is the expectation with regard to the forestry side of this in investigating the fires, in determining who's to blame? Who is then ultimately going to decide what the penalties are going to be for this?

So, generally, in principle, Mr. Speaker, we do support this particular bill, and I'll go through it section by section when we get to the committee stage, and at that point we might have an amendment or two. If we do, then we'll share them with the member prior to introducing them into the House to see if we can get some consensus on them. Other than that, I'm quite happy to support this legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: I'll defer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to provide a few comments on Bill 15, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2003. There is currently some confusion regarding the role of summer villages as they are not specifically identified in the act. The amendments clarify that the Forest and Prairie Protection Act does not apply to the land within the boundaries of summer villages. Similar to a town, a city, or a village, a summer village will continue to be responsible for controlling wildfire activities within their area. This is consistent with current application and definition under the Interpretation Act, where a summer village is considered a village. As in the past Sustainable Resource Development will offer assistance if required, just like they do with a city or town or any other village. These changes will help us to clarify the status of summer villages.

Thank you.

4:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to second reading of Bill 15, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2003. Generally, I think the act is of a housekeeping nature. It takes the existing legislation and develops it further, and it looks to us like it makes a positive contribution to the management of fires on prairie land and in forests.

It's clear, Mr. Speaker, that as a result most likely of the changing climate in Alberta, this is going to become an issue that needs more and more attention and more and more resources of the government. We've seen in recent years a very dramatic increase in the size and intensity of some forest fires. As we all know, notwithstanding the best efforts of some forestry companies, a very significant portion of Alberta is forested. It is our third industry, as I understand it, a critical piece of Alberta's economy and a critical piece of Alberta's natural environment.

As the forest appears to be drying out, more fires, larger fires, more damaging fires are going to be a problem that needs to be dealt with, so costs of fighting these fires, Mr. Speaker, are going to be a significant issue as well. The act does deal, I think, well with this problem by indicating that people who cause the fire or who directed the lighting of the fire or would otherwise be responsible for the fire are responsible or liable to reimburse the government for the costs and expenses of fighting the fire. The act goes on a little further and establishes that if you own the land on which the fire started or if you have control over the land on which the fire started, it is your responsibility to show that it was caused without your consent. So I'm assuming that if you can show that there was a lightning strike on your land and the forest fire started, you would be off the hook, so to speak, as far as the liability is concerned. What, I guess, is of concern here is placing the onus on the person who owns or controls the land to show, if a fire was caused, that they did not consent to it. That may be tricky. It's certainly a contradiction of the principle that you need to be found to be responsible for the fire. So that may be cause for some concern, but I'd certainly be prepared to listen to the minister's or the hon. Member for West Yellowhead's explanation of how that would work exactly.

I think it's certainly very positive to ensure that the minister can go into agreements for fire control, and that's a continuation of what previously existed in the act, but it's a more general statement rather than the listing of various things that the act presently has. It presently lists timber, forests, mining, drilling, and so on, and I think that having a more generic catchall is a good thing.

Now, I have a question about the municipal districts and urban municipalities. It really says that the minister, first of all, can "enter into an agreement" with them, and that's good. Then it says that the minister can go in and "fight a fire within a municipal district" if he thinks that the municipality is not acting expeditiously enough in order to control the fire and extinguish it, and that strikes me as a bit of a failure.

I would prefer to have the act be more directive as far as the Crown is concerned, that plans to control and to prevent forest fires and to respond to them when they occur ought to be a mandatory obligation of the minister, rather than saying that "the Minister [might], with a view . . . enter into [it]," as if it were something that could be just left to the whim of the minister. I think the legislation could be considerably more directive here and take positive, active steps and require the government to take positive and active steps in order to have these plans in place wherever there's a significant potential risk of either a prairie fire or a forest fire. So I think that would be much preferable to having the minister sort of intervene and say: "You're not doing a good job. We're taking over. We're going to come in. The province is here, and the fire's going to be put out." As we know, it's easier said than done once a fire gets out of control. Some sort of positive preventative direction for the minister and the government would be very much a way of strengthening the legislation.

I see that the legislation also talks about railway rights-of-way. The existing legislation talks about 100 metres either side of the railway right-of-way as being the responsibility of the railway. The new legislation will allow this number to be established by regulation. So I'm curious as to why this is. Is the 100 metres not enough or too much? What really ought to be the responsibility of the railways? Very often railways can be a source of fires, not as much as in the days of steam, I'm sure, but there still are chemicals used. There still is friction. There still are things that can go wrong, even cigarettes thrown off a moving train, I suppose. Trains often in the areas of forest fires are the only human corridor through these areas, and I think that that implies or requires a greater level of responsibility on the part of the railways. If there's a forest fire and it's a quarter of a kilometre off the railway right-of-way but the railway is passing through, they are in the best position to report and deal with the fire at its early stages. It seems to me that we should have some more certainty with respect to railway responsibility just outside the bounds of their right-of-way.

5:00

Now, the changes to closure of forest areas are interesting, but they limit who can close the forest area in the event of a fire, and I think that that's something that needs to be taken into account as well. Generally, Mr. Speaker, there are some changes a bit later where it talks about the responsibility of urban municipalities in or bordering a forest to "take all necessary precautions that the Minister orders to prevent and suppress fires on land within its boundaries or under its control." This goes back to the comment that I was making earlier with respect to the responsibility of the minister to enter into fire control agreements. It's wonderful that the legislation is directive in this matter, but it could again go further and require the minister to have some consultations and to have a plan rather than just to issue orders to urban municipalities. I think that there's a joint responsibility and that joint planning is the way to go rather than just issuing orders to these municipalities.

It does give entry and inspection powers, and this is an interesting thing. This is essentially a continuation of the existing legislation which allows that a forest officer or fire guardian may without a warrant, at any reasonable time, enter on and inspect any land and premises, except a private dwelling house, for the purpose of exercising powers or performing duties under this Act or [under the legislation].

I think that is useful, but the act goes on and talks about some of the things that the forest officer or fire guardian can do, which include the production of documents relating to "the purpose for which the officer is exercising any such power." Now, that is a concern, Mr. Speaker, because you have the officer coming in. It's a circular argument, essentially, which is that you can require anybody to produce any documents related to any reason why you've shown up on their property in the first place. It should, I think, specify what exactly the documents are that can be taken by the officer.

It goes on. It can:

(d) take samples of any substance or thing;

What does that mean?

(e) conduct tests or take measurements;

Again it's completely undefined.

(f) record or copy any information by any method;

(g) reproduce any record from data in the form of a printout or other intelligible output;

(h) take photographs or audio-video records;

(i) make reasonable inquiries of any person orally or in writing.

So there's a real lack here, Mr. Speaker, of specificity, and I believe that it should be limited much more tightly than it is.

It goes on to say that "a forest officer may, without a warrant, seize anything that is produced to that officer or that is in plain view during an inspection." That means that, I guess, the officer can't look under - well, I was going to say under the bed, but private homes are excluded. So it would have to be in the stable, or it would have to be something like that. Obviously, this is a really interesting approach. You can just sort of come without a warrant, seize anything that you can see. You can't lift anything up to look, but if you can see it, you can take it. Then you can "remove the thing seized or may detain it in the place where it is seized and shall deal with it in the same manner as if it were seized under the authority of a warrant." What is this, Mr. Speaker? These are broad powers without any explanation or definition whatsoever. I really don't understand why this section on seizure is so ill-defined yet so sweeping, and that's a significant concern that I have about this.

Now, it goes on that the forest officer can "stop and inspect any vehicle, rolling stock, aircraft or vessel that the officer reasonably believes is or has been used in the commission of an offence." That's reasonable, Mr. Speaker, I would have to say.

The Speaker: Thank you. Standing Order 29(2)(a) now kicks in. The chair will recognize an additional speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

Bill 3 Electric Utilities Act

[Adjourned debate February 26: Dr. Nicol]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to enter debate on Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act, in its second reading. This is an interesting bill. That's the best way I guess I can describe it. It's a bill that I think restates this government's intention to continue down the disastrous road of deregulation for the electricity industry and production and transmission and distribution and the retailing of it that it's been doing for some time. I think Albertans need to be worried even more now with this bill before us, and I'm sure it will be going through this Legislature but, in my view, with a speed that's unhealthy. I think we need to hold some public hearings on issues like this before we go through a sort of mechanical debate on this, given the balance of numbers in this House.

Bills as important as Bill 3 need to receive more public attention and public input into the debate rather than just going through the normal procedure, but that not being the case, I have to say that the underlying principles and objectives of Bill 3 are fundamentally flawed, Mr. Speaker. I was looking at the purposes of the act and its rhetoric of competition and choice and markets, which shows to me that there is an unwillingness on the part of this government and the minister who is in charge of this particular area to learn from experience, to have sort of pragmatic common sense come into play. There's reluctance to let it happen.

Bill 3 seeks, in my view, to more deeply entrench and extend electricity deregulation by establishing an even more dysfunctional legislative framework than we currently have. Electricity deregulation has demonstrably failed everywhere, including Alberta. However, while other jurisdictions like California and Ontario have wisely chosen to throw in the towel on deregulation, this province, this government, the Tory government, has chosen to more deeply entrench it, and that's unfortunate. This is more than a rearranging of the deck chairs on the Titanic, Mr. Speaker. This is reckless and irresponsible. It is turning directly into the path of a coming iceberg as opposed to turning to avoid it.

In discussing the deeply flawed objectives of Bill 3, I want to briefly reflect on a meeting I held last week with representatives from a company called Direct Energy. Interestingly enough, this British-owned company is being held up as a shining example of how competition will increase should Bill 3 be approved by this Assembly. At this meeting, Mr. Speaker, we were told by the representative of Direct Energy that their purchase of the retail businesses of ATCO Gas and ATCO Electric was conditional on the Legislature passing Bill 3 and a separate bill yet to come establishing similar rules for natural gas utilities. So maybe to be more transparent, this bill's title should have been the direct energy act.

I find it instructive that members of this Assembly are being asked to change rules to benefit foreign-owned multinational corporations while hurting Alberta-grown, very successful institutions including municipalities and the power corporation that they own, rural electrification associations, and rural gas co-ops. It's like turning our backs on our own winners, on our own entrepreneurs, on our own institutions, and that's regrettable.

My colleague the Member for Edmonton-Highlands recently attended the annual meeting of the provincial Federation of REAs. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, the really normal Albertans who attended this meeting were scathing in their criticism of the government's failed electricity deregulation scheme.

Getting back to my meeting with the representatives of Direct Energy, in sitting down with the representatives of this British-owned company, I suddenly experienced a real sense of déjà vu. Five years ago through Bill 27 legislation was passed to set up the legal framework for the first go-around of electricity deregulation. At that time, there was another foreign-owned company that was promising the moon should electricity deregulation be put in place. The name of that company was Enron. We shudder to hear that name, Mr. Speaker, today. Back in 1998 Enron was this government's poster child for the first round of electricity deregulation. I think we all know the government's poster child and what's happened to it: it's long gone. Enron was brought down by one of the largest corporate fraud and accounting scandals in history.

While I'm talking about Direct Energy, I'm in no way even suggesting that Direct Energy has a record that's comparable to Enron, that we need to worry about its integrity. All I am doing is urging members not to place all their hopes on a corporate white knight to bail out the government's deregulation scheme. Let's not forget that the only reason these foreign companies want to play in the deregulated electricity sector is so that they can make a buck. They are not doing it for our health.

There are so many fallacious premises on which Bill 3 is based that I don't really know where to begin. The first false premise is that municipally owned utilities like EPCOR and Enmax have somehow been competing unfairly. Nothing could be further from the truth. EPCOR and Enmax followed all the rules established by this government. The fact that the Tory government has been unable to either attract or retain other companies who are willing to play in the troubled waters of Alberta's so-called electricity deregulation market, the fact that other companies refuse to get involved in what can only be called a dysfunctional marketplace, is not the fault of EPCOR or Enmax.

Quite frankly, the Minister of Energy and his government colleagues should be getting on their knees and thanking their lucky stars that EPCOR and Enmax have continued to serve smaller Alberta customers. Without EPCOR and Enmax the Tory government's fatally flawed electricity deregulation scheme would have been an even bigger disaster than it already has been and is. Current rules require municipally owned corporations to make payments to the Balancing Pool in lieu of the federal and provincial corporate income tax called PILOT on those portions of their operations that are deregulated. This would include their generation and retail functions but not distribution or transmission.

Under the changed rules of Bill 3 cabinet is empowered to make municipally owned utilities subject to PILOT on all of their operations, including those such as distribution, that continue to be regulated. Every additional dollar that EPCOR and Enmax pay to the Balancing Pool is one less dollar of dividends and payments for municipal governments.

In Bill 3 the City of Medicine Hat will be subject to PILOT, a payment in lieu of taxes, as far as energy trades with the rest of the interconnected system. It currently is not subject to PILOT at all. In fact, the government allowed an exception to Medicine Hat's case last time around to get all MLAs to support the then bill which has created the current mess. So the undertaking that the government gave to the citizens and residents of Medicine Hat at the time will be taken away if this bill is passed, and that will be an act of bad faith. In other words, dollars will be taken out of the pockets of citizens of Medicine Hat and put into the provincially controlled Balancing Pool.

I submit that the entire premise behind PILOT for municipally owned power companies is flawed. EPCOR, Enmax, and other municipally owned utilities do not exist to create wealth and profits for private shareholders. These utilities exist to generate revenues to support municipal services. PILOT is therefore tantamount to a provincial tax on municipalities. It's essentially a monitored transfer from Edmonton, Calgary, Medicine Hat, and other municipalities to the province. Every dollar paid into the Balancing Pool through PILOT is a dollar that cannot be used by the city for policing, firefighting, and other things.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think this flawed bill needs to be put on the back burner for a while, and I have a reasoned amendment to move at this point, which I'm willing to distribute. If you want me to read this into the record as it's being distributed, I would be happy to do that. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act, be amended by deleting all words after the word "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act, be not now read a second time because the Legislative Assembly believes that it will cause inefficiency and confusion in the electricity production and delivery system and increase costs for Alberta consumers.

That is my motion.

I believe I have already given fairly good rationale, reasons why we need to not proceed any further with this bill at this stage and should, in fact, engage in systematic consultations with Albertans by way of striking an all-party committee of this Legislature that will go around the province and hold hearings. It's too important a service, utilities. It's not a commodity; it's a utility. It's too important a utility to be left to the mercy of the market forces. It's not something that we should play around with.

We've already created considerable problems for Albertans, who are consumers of this utility 24 hours of the day every day of the month and every month of the year. Our small businesses, medium-sized businesses, and households are all hurting as a result of the crisis that the deregulation of electricity has already caused in this province. So it's time for us to heed the concerns of Albertans, and they're coming to us from across the province.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would urge members to support this amendment that I have just circulated to my colleagues in the House and urge them to consider supporting it. I would like to see my colleagues now have the chance to rise and speak to this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are now on the amendment. I'd refer hon. members to Beauchesne, pages 200, 201, and 202, particularly sections 670, 671, and 672 with respect to "Reasoned Amendments." The debate now narrows.

On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm pleased to rise to speak to this amendment proposed by the thoughtful and wise leader of the third party in the Assembly, the leader of the New Democrat opposition. I am going to support this amendment because I do believe that this is the right course. This is an opportunity to apply the brakes to this misguided and expensive – an emphasis on expensive – ruinous, in fact, experiment with electricity deregulation that this government seems to be heck-bent on pursuing.

I think that we have seen that other jurisdictions have got into significant trouble with electricity deregulation, notably California. California was the poster child for electricity deregulation, and we have seen the dramatic problems that have existed in that state in the United States. Finally, although it took a change of party to implement that.

Dr. Taylor: Democrat to Republican.

Mr. Mason: I think it was the opposite way, hon. minister. It was Republican to Democrat. The governor there now has led the reversal of the disastrous deregulation that existed in California, and it's expensive and it's complicated and it creates a lot of problems, but it clearly doesn't cause as much problem as continuing down this ruinous path. They've finally had to recognize that in California.

Now, if California, with a population equal to the entire country of Canada, cannot make electricity markets work with the massive amount that's generated and consumed in California, what makes the government think that we can make them work here in Alberta, with a tiny fraction of the population of California? What makes them think that it's going to work here if they can't even get it to work in California?

The other place that I wanted to refer briefly to, Mr. Speaker, is the province of Ontario, and they were proceeding in this direction as well. Unlike California, which was far ahead of Alberta, they were far behind Alberta, and with electricity prices rising and with an election coming, they did what good Tories always do at election time, and that is to change direction and shift gears, perhaps only temporarily. They have plenty of inspiration right here for that, but I think that Alberta could find some inspiration in the regime of the Conservatives in Ontario in this particular case and take a look at changing direction here.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear. The record is clear. In three years of deregulation in Alberta, power prices for average consumers, including farmers, including small businesses, including homeowners, including much of the nonprofit and public sector, including hospitals and schools and universities and so on, has doubled. It's gone up between 40 and 100 percent, and it's going to go up even more. We've seen what's happened. We've seen what's happened when different companies try to participate in the market.

The government has taken away regulatory protection from consumers through deregulation, and they have not provided market mechanisms to keep prices in check and to ensure that providers give good service. Quite the contrary has happened. Anyone that thinks that when Direct Energy gets involved in this market here – whatever concessions the government is prepared to give them on the gas side, they are not going to do so with the objective of driving down power prices in this province. They will compete on a different basis. They will compete for market share, but they will not have an objective of driving down prices to where they were before deregulation kicked in.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that it's clear that this act, as it's presently constituted, offers no solution for Albertans. In fact, only the motion . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're on the amendment, not the act.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you.

Only this amendment offered by the wise leader of the New Democrat Party in our province offers Albertans what they need and what they deserve, which is a way to get out of this mess, a way to get cheaper power, a way to get simpler bills that people can understand. You know, you could certainly find that on www.newdemocrats.ab.ca.

Mr. Speaker, it is an opportunity here for this House at this time to put an end to this foolish and expensive and harebrained scheme of electricity deregulation and get back to producing power for the interests of the public and for industry in this province at low prices and see it for what it is. It's the lifeblood of the economy of this province. It's an essential element required by everybody for daily living. It is not a commodity to be traded and driven up by monopolies imported from offshore, which is what the government wants to see by passing the act as it now stands. This amendment, quite frankly, is the only hope, the last hope of the Tory party before the next election to change this ruinous policy that is going to haunt them from riding to riding.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would urge . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, the House stands adjourned until 8 o'clock.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 4, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/04

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 2

Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Acting Government House Leader.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance, I move third reading of Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak in third reading of Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act. While this has been an interesting time, following the debate of this act, I'm sure the members opposite have heard many times how pleased the Official Opposition is to see the government take up the excellent Liberal idea that we've been proposing for almost 10 years, I think. In fact, I think it is 10 years; '94 might have been the first time that it was brought up. But the key is that we do have a rock-and-roll, boom-and-bust, roller-coaster revenue base that's connected to the resource industry and how well or how much that sector is struggling, and it does make for instability.

Certainly, one of the major tenets that government is providing is to attempt to achieve some kind of stability for its citizenry, and that should allow for budgeting, for example, in all departments that's reasonable, that takes into consideration things like regular, scheduled maintenance of infrastructure and computer systems and inventory. This is not allowed to happen if we have: "Well, we've got a whole bunch of money. Oops, sorry; no, we don't, and we're going to make you cut some of it mid-year."

I think a number of the issues that the Liberal opposition continues to raise through the fall sitting and now into the spring sitting have come about because that boom and bust has happened. I appreciate that the financial commission that was put together by the Premier was able to recommend this and that it's now coming before us.

In third reading we're speaking to the anticipated effect of the bill, and I'm hoping that the anticipated effect of this bill will be more stability, a couple of concerns that have been raised and not addressed. When we were looking at the amount of money that would be set aside and put into this stability fund – I think actually the government has got a slightly different name so they can pretend they came up with the idea; they're calling it a sustainability fund – it was getting the sort of average amount that had been produced or was available from the resource sector of $350 million I think was the figure that I had heard. Yet if that's the average, then that's hardly enough, I think, to build that cushion. I just wondered if in fact that is going to be enough to carry us through and to build that cushion appropriately. Part of the effect of it is to kind of smooth out those peaks and valleys and that roller-coaster ride. That is something that I'm still anticipating, that that may not be enough money to be putting into that as a commitment to actually get this up to speed and useful the next time we're looking at a down year.

I'm also looking to having the budgeting process made a bit more believable from this government, and that's an additional effect that I expect from the bill. In other words, we keep having these budgets that come forward – and one is expected to budget low on revenue and high on expenses, but this government is so wildly out of line with what actually happens. I mean, it's not a matter of being out by 100 percent or 200 percent; we're, like, 4,000 percent out. I think once for fun a colleague of mine looked at the previous Treasurer's track record, and it was abysmal. He was out, like, 400 times or something. I do expect that an effect of this legislation is to put the government into a position where its budgeting will be more based in reality, and we'll have something that closer approximates the actual revenues or the actual expenses instead of having such inflated numbers happening on either side.

I would hope that we would be able to see an appropriate dedication to ongoing maintenance, an overused word but I'll use it again because the government didn't seem to get it the first bunch of times. You're expected to keep your car in regular maintenance on an annual basis, and you shouldn't be surprised, if you never take that car in for an oil change or any kind of a check up and after driving the heck out of it for 10 years, that it just comes to a slow, grinding, and noisy halt on the side of the highway. Well, yeah, if you haven't done anything to keep it in good repair, that is going to happen to you, and it's going to cost you an awful lot of money to do the major repairs, when you could have spent a consistent amount of money to keep it in reasonable running order. So there is the question of the maintenance that I would like to see.

I understand that the government doesn't want to commit itself to funds that it would then have to find over and over and over again on a yearly basis. They don't want to make a commitment to be funding something that they then find they can't keep up the payments for, but there are a couple of areas, in particular, where I feel the government is so far behind that they're almost catching themselves on the next lap, and that is around the use of the lottery funds to the traditional lottery-based foundations, that being the Alberta Foundation for the Arts; Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation; Wild Rose; and the human rights, citizenship and multiculturalism education fund. Now, the very last one was a more recent creation, and amalgamations are downgrading a number of things. It's stuck at a $1 million budget. But the other ones that I mentioned have not had increases, not even inflationary increases, or COLA, if you like, for a dozen years or more, since the late '80s. And these are showpieces. These are the things that the government loves to take pictures of and put in their brochures to show everybody what fun we all have here in Alberta and how great it is. You can only put so many pictures of oil wells or drainage ditches in your brochures and on your web sites. Eventually and very quickly the government turns to pictures of tens of thousands of people at the folk festival or at the Fringe or at the Citadel Theatre.

We had introductions of some of the artistic personnel and board members from the Citadel Theatre in here yesterday. The funding to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts has been stagnant for so long; I can't believe it. I keep hearing: well, you know, everybody's coping; everybody's keeping up with it. No, they're not. We have lost companies. We've gone from a five-play season in most theatres to a four-play season, to a three-play season, one of which is a co-pro and is being brought in or bought or shared with somebody else. So, in fact, it's two plays or two plays and a bit in a season. That community has coped and tightened its belt far better than I ever thought it would, but there is an end to this.

I think that also holds true in the recreation and sports sector. For amateur sports we're talking about trying to turn our population towards a more health and fitness lifestyle. Certainly, it starts when you're young, and it starts with that kind of promotion and opportunity. That is much tougher to get, again, because those lottery-based foundations have not had an increase. Well, why not? Good question because in fact the amount of money in the lottery fund has increased staggeringly, yet certainly as a percentage of the total funding the amount of money going into those foundations has not increased. It's actually reversed itself. In the beginning it was 80 percent of what was in the lottery fund that went to those foundations, 20 percent to other things. With the advent of the VLTs and the slots that income has just gone up and up and up. We're now over a billion of revenue that the government takes home, so to speak, from those gambling activities and not one penny more to those organizations.

There's definitely a movement from the government side to curtail the grants and the resources that are available to arts groups and sports and recreation groups down to sort of one outlet or one possible grant. Well, the reason that all those other different grants and project grants and CFEP and CIP and the lottery boards and all those other things came into being was because their operating grants were frozen and weren't increasing and they had to try and access all these other areas to keep going with. So you can't have it both ways. Either increase the operating funds that they've got or continue to give them access to project grants and other ways of providing those services and programs and cultural opportunities.

As part of this stability fund and looking towards the government to provide a more stable financial basis, I think we need to have a discussion about the place of gambling in our finances in Alberta, and I'm hoping that the passage of this act will then lead to that discussion about gambling revenues. It's where a significant portion of the revenue that drives this province comes from. Is it appropriate? Is it appropriate to have the government as an addict to gambling revenues and, in doing so, make every Albertan an addict to gambling revenues? There are additional issues that have come up around that, around restrictions and licensing, to which kind of groups get access to casino and bingo funds. I'm straying off the discussion about this actual Financial Statutes Amendment Act, but it is all part of the financial picture that this government presents to its public and how it manages its own resources.

One of the things that I think does need to happen is that we need to have some sort of measurement device in place so that we understand whether this stability fund is working. The government is not good about that. They're not good about tracking forgone revenue and by forgoing a certain amount of revenue through whatever mechanism whether in fact that advanced whatever the purpose of it was and how we measure that. Programs tend to get put in place and left there without ever going back and looking at them to see if, in fact, it achieved the purpose that it was set up to do. We have to be better at doing that. Now, part of that is, indeed, setting targets, and it's being able to understand all the different ways that you can offer incentives and record and track, monitor and evaluate, that sort of thing. The Auditor General and his staff are always available to assist us with that, and I think we need to pay more attention to what they're trying to tell us. Certainly, they've repeatedly said things like: we've got to have consolidated statements; we need to adhere more closely to the financial reporting schedules and common practices, which we don't do. They're certainly putting an emphasis in the Auditor General's report that's currently out on risk management and understanding how we do that.

So in third reading of Bill 2 I'm glad to see that the government did take the Liberal idea of a stability fund and has instituted it. I do look to the government to now follow through on the other opportunities that this should open up for it and to provide us with more stability, with more realistic budgeting, and with better monitoring and evaluation and measurement mechanisms against what it's actually doing with the money, to move from a strict accounting basis to one of value for money, which is where I think we need to go.

This government has been quite ahead of its time in some of the financial ideas it put in place and then never followed through on them. So we have the beginning of a great system that was never really implemented and put into place.

Thanks for the opportunity to speak in third reading on this, and I look forward to the rest of the discussion around this bill. Thank you.

Mrs. Ady: I'm honoured also to rise and speak to Bill 2 tonight, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, that was introduced in the Legislature on February 24. I have to disagree with my colleague. I do not think that we're behind, I do not think we've renamed it, and I don't think of it as their idea. I think that we're ahead of our time.

An Hon. Member: Have you got your shoes on?

Mrs. Ady: No.

I think we are ahead of our time. I think that this government has spent a lot of time and a lot of energy bringing their financial house under control, that perhaps there was not the opportunity for this before as we had to get spending under control, we had a deficit, and we had a debt that needed to be taken care of. Because we were able to do those things and because we had the discipline to bring them into being, we're in the position today to now take the next step which is the stability fund.

This province is blessed with oil and gas reserves that others only dream about. The profits derived from these nonrenewable resources have made us the envy of other jurisdictions across North America. It has allowed us to aggressively tackle the debt, as I said before, to the point where we now have a triple A credit rating. Now, in my book that's an advantage, one that we should be using as a province. No other province can make that claim. Alberta continues to lead the country in growth, and Albertans have the lowest tax burden in Canada. I've said many times in this House that Calgary-Shaw is a good example of the Alberta advantage. When I moved to the area of the city that I lived in some 15 or 16 years ago, we weren't that large. I now am the MLA for 17 subdivisions in Calgary. It's big; it's big. It's truly a reflection . . .

An Hon. Member: You can still walk across it in one day.

Mrs. Ady: My colleagues are saying that I could walk across it in one day, and they're right about that. But in that time period I would cross 90,000 people, and I think that that is the story. The reason that it's the story . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but too many of your colleagues are offering you help. It's really hard to receive help from all these hon. members, so if we all could just let the hon. member speak for herself. As she does say, she represents more constituents than any of the members here. Let her speak.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sure my colleagues are all well-meaning and just being completely supportive, and I thank them.

Debate Continued

Mrs. Ady: The reason that I say it is a success is because it shows how many people have moved to Alberta because of the Alberta advantage, because, as I've stated before in this House, they have jobs. So they come here to this province because they can support their families and they think it's a great place to live, and I would agree with them.

At the same time, long-term Albertans know something too, that these kinds of fortunes can quickly change. We recognize that we have no control over volatile oil and gas prices, but we can do something to protect Albertans from the in-year spending cuts when prices tumble. We're having a good year, but things could change and change quickly. I am remembering the very first year that I was in this House and September 11 came, and it was a horrible time. I remember just being in shock after that incident and thinking of what a horrible time it was, and it had a direct effect along with other things on oil and gas prices. In one day from Calgary-Shaw we had on deferral a high school, three overpasses, and a DATS centre. That's what it caused in the Calgary-Shaw constituency alone. So when people tell me things can change quickly, I'm a believer. I've seen them change very quickly. I'm happy to say that we've been able to manage and been able to put money back into some of those projects, and they're moving forward today, but it was disappointing to have it and then have the price of oil and gas tumble so rapidly and have it reverse our fortunes. So when I say that things can change quickly, I know that they can.

But we can do something to protect Albertans from in-year spending cuts. Now is the time to move forward with a new fiscal framework that we will establish, and it's a sustainability fund to cushion Albertans against these volatile energy prices. Now is the time to establish a capital account to ensure critical projects are not put on the back burner when prices slide. And they will slide; they always do.

So when I look at this act, I'm very encouraged. I've followed its progress very carefully since the time that the Financial Management Commission was formed and the recommendations came back, and I saw within it hope, hope for the future and the opportunity that we now had afforded to us as Albertans to be able to take that next step. It frees us up from the ups and downs of energy prices, and it will outline a capital plan that will accommodate the pressures that come from being the best province in Canada. It allows for spending that is predictable, but more importantly it allows for spending that is sustainable. I think it is a good news story to be able to tell our municipalities and our school boards and those people that are dependent upon government what they can count on because we have a fund that will protect us from the rise and the fall.

I'm particularly encouraged to see that we're planning – and I've heard others mention it – to put a lot of tools in the toolbox. I'm really a believer that we should be considering all options with caution. The last thing that we want to do is undo the good work that has been done in this House previously in getting spending under control, but we also don't want to inhibit the ability to manage our finances differently in the future and perhaps fund infrastructure a bit differently than we have in the past. My constituents have always said to me: how could we ever afford a ring road around Calgary in one given year or even in a three-year period? It's one of those kinds of projects that needs predictable and sound planning and funding. So I'm very encouraged when I look at the Financial Management Commission, and I think that the constituents of Calgary-Shaw are very encouraged to see government moving in this direction.

I just want to close, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I urge all Members of the Legislative Assembly to support Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Before we continue, may we have consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege this evening to introduce to you two friends of mine, one that I've known for some time and the other that I've just met. The person I've known for a long time is Bryan McIver. How I met Brian was that he had the audacity, actually, one time to send a letter to the Premier's office requesting him to come to his social 30 class and make a presentation. Of all the letters that were written to the Premier, that one was accepted and acted upon, and in fact that is the first opportunity that I had to meet this young man. Subsequent to that, he worked in my office in Red Deer for a summer, and we've kept in contact over the years, and I'm pleased that he's visiting with us tonight.

Accompanying him is a lady by the name of Lisa Wuerfel. I sure hope I pronounced that name correctly, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce her and Brian to members of the Assembly, and just so they know that I actually know what's going on in the House, we are currently debating Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, which is a very important act in the governance of our financial affairs into the future. If I could ask Brian and Lisa to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly, that'd be great.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Like others in the Assembly I welcome the opportunity to rise this evening to speak to Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, and like other members that have spoken this evening, I must commend the government for finally seeing the light and the reason that we do need a stability fund in this province. Of course, as I mentioned in previous readings on this particular bill, it was the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry who preceded me, the late Laurence Decore, that first introduced this concept to the House in 1994. It was just as important at that particular time as it is today because, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw had just mentioned, we had not only a huge debt in this province; we also were running deficits. Certainly, this was one of the planks that the late Laurence Decore, who became leader of the Official Opposition, had proposed in the election of 1993. So it does have a reasonably long history in the House before we actually got around to passing this.

Certainly, the whole idea of this particular fund is to give some sense of stability in our budgeting practices in this province. We do have a roller-coaster economy in this province, and quite thankfully we've been able to maintain a very, very good revenue source over the last few years. I see that in 1998 we had revenues of $16.8 billion. In 1999 we had revenues of $20.17 billion. We had quite a peak in the year 2000, $25.6 billion. In 2001 we had $22 billion, and again in 2002 we had revenues of $22 billion. So, yes, we have been very, very fortunate in the fact that we are at a peak, that we are at the top of the roller coaster, and it has been a blessing in most regards.

But along with this, Mr. Speaker, what we haven't had is the flex in the budget, and certainly part of that was because we have this law in this province that says that we can't run a deficit. What happens is that we have to leave that room particularly at the end of the budget year to ensure that we're going to have revenues to cover our expenses, so it does put a tremendous amount of strain on the budget process. It also limits the amount of flex we have in a budget, and we certainly need flex. We need flex in a budget, as the previous speaker had said, so that if we do have events such as 9-11 where the price of oil and natural gas dropped drastically and dropped rapidly, we certainly have to be able to cover those things off in a budget. Likewise, during the past year where we had enormous droughts and had to fight a number of forest fires in this province and we had to have unexpected spending of $1.2 billion, then we also have to have flex in that direction. That is a very, very critical part of any budgetary process.

The whole idea of a budget is that it adds stability. It adds stability to the businesses in this particular province and to the people who are so reliant on the social programs and the funding of those social programs. So this is definitely a step in the right direction.

Now, then, as well, this will allow organizations such as the AUMA and the AAMD and C certainly more stability in their budgeting processes. Of course, this here, at that particular level, is the level of government that has the most contact with the people, and it is critical when they are so reliant on the provincial government for their finances and for their funds that they have stability at that process. Certainly, none of them wants to get to the point where we were a few years ago, I believe just one or two years ago, where we announced our budget and then we had to make serious cutbacks in the amount of funding that was going to go to those particular organizations. When that happens, it puts a tremendous stress on everybody down the line. At that time, we had people with AUMA that were saying: how can this government expect us to set budgets and stick to our goals when we set those plans for three to five years and we have a budgetary process in this province that doesn't last three to five days? So to have a stability fund, to have that source of revenue which will cover when we do get a tremendous drop in our revenues or we get, as we've seen this past year, a great increase in our expenses is a welcome sight.

I look at Saskatchewan. Now, Saskatchewan in the year 2001 only had revenues of $6.8 billion. In 2002 they were experiencing some of the problems that we've experienced when our revenues weren't quite as great as what we had expected. So rather than them having to cancel programs, rather than them having to defer projects in their province, they were able to draw on $100 million from their stability fund to keep programs running, and what a welcome thing this was, particularly to those people who required that stability in their lives. Those are the disadvantaged people who rely on things such as AISH, supports for independence, who are so reliant on this government. Even our programs such as health care, such as education require steady funding and increased funding because we do have things like inflation pouring into the situation. This would certainly allow those programs to continue in a fashion that they had set their goals.

Now, then, I also heard how Alberta is probably one of the few provinces and probably is the only province that has a triple A credit rating. Of course, when you have a triple A credit rating, this allows you to borrow money at a very, very low rate of interest. So when we are talking particularly of a province that had revenues in excess of $20 billion for the last four years and we have revenues of that type and nature, we have a triple A credit rating, yet in this province, this province of haves, we have an infrastructure deficit of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $8 billion. I could stand to be corrected if I'm out of line here, Mr. Minister, so please feel free to jump in at any point. But to have in a province that has revenues of this nature an $8.1 billion infrastructure deficit means that we have not been very good at budgeting, but this will certainly I think add to the stability that we wish in our economy.

As well, I look at the situation in this province, Mr. Speaker, where we've been toying with the idea of these P3s, and P3s to me just aren't the answer. I look at a situation that we have presently in the constituency of Edmonton-Glengarry. We have a high school that was built in 1959 for $1.8 million. I don't think that high school could be replaced today for under $15 million. When we see how it is ranked as far as requiring maintenance and repair against other schools in Edmonton – even though the school is over 40 years old, because it was built very, very well, the school is ranked way down. Now, that was quite an investment in 1959, to spend $1.8 million on a school, yet that school today, 40 years later, has appreciated in value. It has served us much longer than I think people would have expected it to. So it's been a great investment for the people of Alberta and particularly for the people in the constituency of Edmonton-Glengarry who had the opportunity to send their children to that school for many, many years. As I look around this Assembly, there are probably many members in this Assembly that wish they could have a school built in their constituency and probably do require schools to be built in their constituency. So certainly with a triple A credit rating, with a stability fund these would be wise, wise investments and certainly would assist us in, you know, more stability.

It would also help us not create such an infrastructure deficit as $8 billion, and it would be a welcome sight to many parents in this province who desperately want schools in their neighbourhood for their children, who moved to neighbourhoods because there was almost a promise that they were given, not necessarily by the government but by developers, that land had been set aside for schools and that schools would be built there. Here they are. Their children have moved on through elementary school, they've moved through junior high school, yet they still don't have a school in their neighbourhood.

Now, as well, this stability fund would assist us in not having to cancel and defer projects. When huge cuts were made to the construction of highways in this province a few years ago – and that funding was reinstated very quickly – we saw a huge cry by the road builders of Alberta and quite rightfully so. Many of them had made long-term commitments to purchase very expensive equipment, and if that equipment is sitting there and not working, then it eats up their profits very quickly and in a lot of cases would put some of the smaller businesses and even some of the bigger ones out of business. It also means that the staff that they have been able to gather over the years and provide employment for are going to be laid off, and when those people are laid off, Mr. Speaker, they go where the work is. They are sought and their skills are certainly valued, so we would lose them out of this province if we didn't have work here for them. So, again, a stability fund will allow us to make certain that the goals and the projects that we plan for, the contracts that we let could be completed without interruption.

Now, as well, when we look at the infrastructure debt, we also have to look at another debt, you know, and this is the debt on our highways. Our highways in this province do require regular maintenance and upkeep, and because of our budgetary practices over the last few years the regular maintenance that is required on all the highways in this province has been less than what is required. Unfortunately, when we get this situation, evidence seems to point to this not being a linear function. As we let the highways deteriorate because of lack of maintenance, those costs of fixing them down the road actually increase much quicker. Again, we do have a tremendous amount of roadwork going on in this province. We are blessed with many great highways in this province, and certainly we want to see those maintained.

One other area that I think we should talk briefly about . . . [Mr. Bonner's speaking time expired] I will do it some other time.

Thank you for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions? Comments?

Edmonton-Highlands to speak at third reading?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and it's my pleasure to speak at third reading of Bill 2. I want to, I guess, begin by thanking the government for getting around to adopting a principle that's been in place for a long time, and that is the fiscal stabilization fund.

Now, I know that our Liberal colleagues are very pleased to take full and complete credit for this idea, and it's true that for some time they've been putting it forward, and it's a commonsense proposal. When you have wildly fluctuating revenues, it only makes sense to invest surpluses and then draw on them when you have a below-average take. The city does that, for example, with its snowfall clearing budget. You have very, very widely fluctuating amounts of snowfall, and it costs about $3 million to clear the city completely of snow after a major snowfall. You may have to do it six or seven times in a year and in other years not at all, so it's clearly a financial type of arrangement that lends itself to this stabilization fund act.

But the Liberal opposition is not the first to implement this idea, nor is the government. On April 1, 2000, the government of Saskatchewan brought in its Fiscal Stabilization Fund Act. I'd like to stop there, Mr. Speaker, but actually if you go further back and in the interest of fairness, the Filmon government in December of 1989 brought in their Fiscal Stabilization Fund Act. So it has a long history. It's not an original idea, but it is a good one, and we support that part.

Mr. Speaker, we have to talk a little bit about why the government has become overly dependent on these very unstable sources of revenue, and they have. It forms a greater proportion of their revenue now than it did a few years ago. Why is that? Well, it's because the government, like lots of other Conservative governments around the world, is overly fond of tax cuts for rich people. They have given away $400 million in corporate taxes already, and this schedule will continue until the corporate tax cut equals a billion dollars of lost revenue per year. A hundred and eighty million dollars is expected to be in the next budget, whenever that is, and that will be a further reduction. The government, of course, under the previous Provincial Treasurer, Stockwell Day . . .

An Hon. Member: Who?

Mr. Mason: Stockwell Day. Remember him?

. . . brought in the flat tax, which cost the government another several hundred million dollars.

If there were a fair taxation policy, then the government would not be so reliant on resource revenue and we wouldn't see the situation we saw a year ago when the minister was terrified because all of a sudden oil and gas prices went down. There was less revenue, and she was afraid that if she ran a deficit, she was going to go to jail, which is almost what the government's legislation would require her to do. So we saw sudden cuts to badly needed programs, including for at-risk youth, for aboriginal youth, and so on, in order to prevent an accidental deficit.

One of the other criticisms that we have had of the government's policy is the deliberate underestimation of resource revenues on an ongoing basis in the billions of dollars every year. Of course, that allows the government to plead poverty when there are demands placed upon it for program spending and then look like financial geniuses at the end of the year when, surprise, surprise, they have a multi billion dollar surplus, 75 percent of which, until this legislation, had to go to debt reduction. So the government was able by stealth to rapidly accelerate the debt reduction program that existed. Now, fortunately, that piece is also coming out in this act, and that's a second bit in its favour, that it eliminates the 75/25 split for unanticipated surpluses being applied to the debt. That's a good thing, and we support that, and we've in fact advocated that for a number of years.

But this act will not require what we call truth in budgeting. In other words, it won't require the government to predict revenues from oil and gas on a reasonable basis at all. They can continue to hide the surpluses in the way they have been doing. So we're concerned, then, that if money in excess of the 3 and a half billion dollar cutoff could be spent if the fund was fully topped up, then that money would be leftover for spending on what's called priorities, which is really political spending, politicized priorities, and that won't be prevented in all cases at all.

Now, the Minister of Justice and Government House Leader has talked about how this act sets the stage for P3s, public/private partnerships, and he spoke at some length about that. There's no doubt in our minds that P3s are simply a way to transfer funds from the public purse that is paid by the taxpayer into the hands of corporations to do the work that the government can already do more cheaply and better. The government can do this because they have the expertise that they need. We all know the old saying about hiring the consultant who borrows your watch to tell you the time, and that is certainly the case when it comes to the construction of specialized government facilities such as courthouses and other government facilities. It is the expertise resident in the government departments that needs to be accessed, usually free of charge to contractors, in order to plan, construct, build, and indeed operate, if that's the case, these public facilities.

Of course, we know that the government doesn't need a profit, and we also know that the government has access to cheaper money than the private sector. In that respect, Mr. Speaker, all the advantages are on the side of government provided that it is well run and efficiently run, which is the responsibility of the government. If it's not well run and efficiently run, then that's a problem with the government rather than with something intrinsic to the public sector. If the government is planning to make use of this act in order to have private investors build schools, courthouses, and all sorts of other public facilities, then they're going to be producing higher costs in the long run and possibly a lower quality of facility.

Now, I've got some interesting things. Of course, under Margaret Thatcher, the patron saint of Conservatives everywhere, the first 18 P3 hospital projects in Britain cost 53 million pounds, which in real money is $110 million Canadian, for consultants alone.

P3s in Britain have led to a 30% reduction in hospital beds and a 25 percent reduction in clinical staff budgets.

In the first British P3 hospital in Cumberland, short-cuts in facility construction and design have created a shocking host of problems:

- two ceilings collapsed because of cheap plastic joints in piping and other plumbing faults – one joint narrowly missed patients in the maternity unit
- the sewage system could not cope with the number of users and flooded the operating theatre with sewage.

Wow.

- clerical and laundry staff cannot work in their offices because they are too small
- a transparent roof design flaw and no air conditioning mean that on a sunny day the temperature inside the infirmary reaches over 33 degrees celsius.

8:50

Now a little closer to home.

In Nova Scotia P3 school deals exempt the for-profit owners and builders from any legal liability for shoddy construction and faulty wiring and plumbing.

I don't know if the government is planning to do that or not, but I wouldn't be too surprised.

The Halifax P3 school's well water was contaminated by arsenic. The for-profit owners denied responsibility and students and staff were forced to use bottled water for over 12 months. In [the year] 2000, all future P3 schools in Nova Scotia were canceled in a flurry of scandal and public outrage. By then the thirty Nova Scotia P3 schools, with contracts as long as 35 years, were slated to cost the public $32 million more than if they had been built in the traditional manner.

Now, maybe that's just an isolated example, but in Prince Edward Island "the government pulled out of its P3 hospital project after it discovered that it would cost more than if the hospital were kept public."

Here's a quote from Bruce Davidson of the concerned Walkerton citizens. He says:

The privatization of water testing meant an inexperienced firm oversaw the safety of our drinking water. When lethal levels of e. coli were found, all they did was send a fax. They ignored provincial guidelines that suggest notification of the Ministry of Labour and the Ministry of Health. In fact, they said they had never read these guidelines. It is unacceptable that such behaviour won't lead to criminal charges – in fact, their actions were adequate according to ministry officials. All on the promise of saving a few dollars? Don't mess with our lives like that – keep the profit motive out of our public services.

Here's another one.

While P3s may be a useful means of bringing the innovation of the private sector to bear, they are not without their critics. In many cases, governments find P3s attractive because the private sector company assumes the heavy capital costs of a project and governments are only required to pay "rental fees" over the longer term. Unfortunately, while P3s may cost governments and taxpayers less in the short term, these arrangements often cost more in the longer term . . . The rental costs charged to governments must be high enough to allow the private sector partner to recoup its costs and make a profit for its shareholders. The cost of borrowing is often higher for the private sector than for governments. And P3s often have higher administration costs. Critics also suggest that the quality of private for-profit run facilities can be lower than publicly run facilities and that, in some cases, these arrangements have resulted in beds being closed and staff being reduced . . . This is not to say that P3s are without a place (for example in the case of health information systems), but they are no panacea and their use and value need to be carefully considered.

The source of this quote was the final report of the Romanow commission on the future of health care.

Having quoted from a number of sources, I would caution the government, in its zeal to find new ways to get the private sector involved in government, that in the long run the costs are bound to be higher and the quality of the workmanship and the operation of services and facilities is liable to be considerably less. There are going to be very serious cases, I think, in the future if the government persists in this direction. The experience of other places shows that P3s are an idea whose time has come and gone. Other places have tried them and have abandoned them, and this government should as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mrs. Ady: I'd just like to ask the hon. member – he made reference to the fact that there were problems in construction with P3s, and having been in construction myself, if it can go wrong, sometimes it does go wrong. I think of Fish Creek elementary, that had the same difficulty, not built as a P3 but built as a typical construction project. Is your suggestion that these things only go wrong in P3s, or do they go wrong in construction projects?

Mr. Mason: They can go wrong with construction projects when those projects are not adequately supervised. The problem is that in order to increase the profit margin in a P3 situation, the contractor is more likely to try and find ways to cut corners. This is not as serious a concern as when the profit motive is absent and the public interest is placed as the highest priority. That is when the government does it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding his latest comments totally putting down in the most grievous way honest contractors that work hard to build our buildings and build our structures across this province, I wanted to ask the hon. member whether or not in his swipe against the tax policies of the government where we instituted two rate systems, 0 and 10 percent – and he talked about the loss of revenue to government – he perhaps overlooked the fact that the government raised the personal exemption for low-income Albertans significantly so that it's significantly higher than any other Canadians enjoy before taxes kick in. That's one of the reasons the revenue went down but put money in the pockets of low-income Albertans.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I will admit that I neglected to point that out. It's a good thing that the government has done that because low-income Albertans certainly need the tax room in order to pay their utility bills.

The Deputy Speaker: No further questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and have one final look at Bill 2, and certainly there are some aspects of Bill 2, which I expressed earlier in debate, that one has to consider a step in the right direction. Now, there are some other aspects of this bill that I do have some reservations about, and hopefully in the limited time that is available at third reading, perhaps some of my questions could be answered.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands was absolutely right to express some concern earlier in private conversation to this member, some concern and caution in regard to the changes that are going to occur with Bill 2 in the Government Accountability Act, some of the consequential amendments. This, I believe, Mr. Speaker, is just one of them. The changes that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands pointed out – and I did a little bit of research while the hon. member was speaking – I believe are noteworthy, and I think it is appropriate that they're brought to the attention of the entire Assembly.

Now, if we look at Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, we see where it is proposed that we are going to strike out section 19 of the Auditor General Act and substitute it with section 18. When one looks at that, of course, Mr. Speaker, the first thing that comes to mind is: what is the difference between section 19 and section 18 of the Auditor General Act? On first glance you would think, well, there's not much, but whenever you have a chance to look at this and look at this in detail while the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is involved in debate, one notices that there are significant changes here.

Section 18 of the Auditor General Act is regarding an annual report on financial statements.

18(1) After the end of each fiscal year of the Crown, the Auditor General shall report to the Assembly on the financial statements of the Crown for that fiscal year.

Well, that's fair enough, but

- (2) a report of the Auditor General under subsection (1) shall
 - (a) include a statement as to whether, in the Auditor General's opinion, the financial statements present fairly the financial position, results of operations and changes in financial position of the Crown in accordance with the disclosed accounting principles,
 - (b) when the report contains a reservation of opinion by the Auditor General, state the Auditor General's reasons for that reservation and indicate the effect of any deficiency on the financial statements, and

lastly, Mr. Speaker,

- (c) include any other comments related to the Auditor General's audit of the financial statements that the Auditor General considers appropriate.

Now, that's what we're getting in this new act, and that's fine, but it's sort of like an artist's work in progress or a painting in progress.

What we're giving up here is section 19, which is the annual report of the Auditor General. Now, what would be the difference between the annual report of the Auditor General and the annual report on the financial statements? Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a significant difference here.

- (2) A report of the Auditor General under [section 19(1)] shall include the results of the Auditor General's examinations of the organizations of which the Auditor General is the auditor, giving details of any reservation of opinion made in an audit report, and shall call attention and this is very important.

to every case in which the Auditor General has observed that

- (a) collections of public money
 - (i) have not been effected as required under the various Acts and regulations, directives or orders under those Acts,
 - (ii) have not been fully accounted for, or
 - (iii) have not been properly reflected in the accounts.

We go on to talk here further in section 19(b) of the disbursements of public money:

- (i) have not been made in accordance with the authority of a supply vote or relevant Act,
- (ii) have not complied with regulations, directives or orders applicable to those disbursements, or
- (iii) have not been properly reflected in the accounts,
- (c) assets acquired, administered or otherwise held have not been adequately safeguarded or accounted for.

It goes on here further:

- (d) accounting systems and management control systems, including those systems designed to ensure economy and efficiency, that relate to revenue, disbursements, the preservation or use of assets or the determination of liabilities were not in existence, were inadequate or had not been complied with.

Now, we're giving this up for just the annual report on the financial statements. I would love to know what the Auditor General's opinion on this is. With this amendment has the Auditor General, his office, or his staff been consulted whenever we strike out section 19 and substitute 18 for it?

Now, Mr. Speaker, section 19 is quite extensive. It goes on to say that the Auditor General may

- (a) comment on the financial statements of the Crown, Provincial agencies, Crown-controlled organizations or any other organization or body of which the Auditor General is the auditor on any matter contained in them and on
 - (i) the accounting policies employed, and
 - (ii) whether the substance of any significant underlying financial matter that has come to the Auditor General's attention is adequately disclosed.

This goes on, and it is very interesting.

Now, I at this time would like an explanation, please, from government members across on why this is happening. Is it perhaps because the Auditor General's report is not ready in a timely fashion? I don't think so, but perhaps that's the reason. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is absolutely correct to be concerned about this. I'm concerned about this, and now after discovering this, unless I can get some answers from across the way, I believe I'm going to have to support this bill with a great deal of reluctance. I think the Auditor General should be able to get at the operations of this government in a fashion that gives the Auditor General the widest scope in which to conduct a study of how and where and on what the tax dollars are being spent.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will cede the floor to another hon. colleague. I am very anxious as to why section 18 replaced section 19, and I await an answer from the members across the way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions? You have a comment or question?

Mr. Mason: Yes, I do.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I certainly hope that the government will also respond to that, but while we're waiting, I wonder if you could express your view as chairman of Public Accounts on how you feel that this might affect the work of that committee.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm certain that it will affect Public Accounts. I hope it doesn't slow down the work of that committee whenever the Minister of Finance has to report not only to the Assembly but also to the Auditor General and the taxpayers, certainly whenever you consider that the contents of public accounts for a fiscal year shall include the following in this bill:

- (a) the consolidated annual report prepared under section 10,
- (b) the ministry annual reports prepared under section 14, including the reports or statements pursuant to sections 23, 25(3), 28(5), 28.1(4), 30, 56(2), 66(2) and 75 of the Financial Administration Act, and
- (c) any supplementary schedules, statements, explanations and financial statements that the Minister of Finance may require.

Now, I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre would be delighted to receive any extra supplementary schedules, statements or explanations, and financial statements from the Minister of Finance so that that hon. member could pursue and continue to ask the diligent questions that she does ask in Public Accounts because this would certainly help her out.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Since we're still waiting for the government to respond to this, does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar believe that this will mean that the Public Accounts Committee will no longer be able to ask the Auditor General questions or review his report?

9:10

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope not. The annual report is a snapshot. It's a reflection on all government spending. I would be very disappointed if that were the case, and I hope that as long as I am sitting on the Public Accounts Committee the Auditor General continues to provide observations and remarks not only to the committee but also questions and observations to the various ministries that appear from time to time before the Public Accounts Committee.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a third time]

Bill 1

Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise and express strong support for and, in fact, move Bill 1, the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act, for third reading.

Much has been said with respect to the nature of the bill and the purpose of the bill, so I won't expand on that, as I've spoken in earlier debate, but I would commend it to the House and ask that we get strong support for this important initiative for Alberta's children.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in third reading on Bill 1, the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act. This was an interesting opportunity to watch the quintessential differences, I think, between the two opposite sides of this House or at least two out of the three.

My colleagues and I felt very strongly that there was a great potential with this promise to actually detail what the promise was and to set out some targets and some clear measurements of what was expected to be achieved. In fact, none of that is in this bill, and the government members continue to talk about a framework. Well, I don't know how anything is to be filled in with this promise when all we ever have is the scaffolding for it, but we never get any siding on it, no flooring, no doors and windows, nothing. I mean, this is – and I don't want to say empty promise because it just sounds like I'm throwing rhetoric around, but honest to goodness what's in this bill? It is so loose it does become a slogan bill. There's nothing that can be measured. There are no achievements that are targeted here to be worked toward.

You know, the opposition could have said: "Yeah, yeah, Bill 1. It's a slogan bill. Let it go. Let them have their say, and let it go." But we didn't. We tried to bring to the attention of the government members some improvements that could be done. We spent time here bringing forward amendments and trying to improve it as we felt it would improve the bill. All of the amendments were defeated and then some, I think. But we were doing things like actually incorporating the promise that exists in the other programs in the world, where this kind of plan or program has been put in place before, to actually put that in the bill. The only listing of clear "the Council shall" activities – it's listed under Activities – is administrative, you know, that it would sit "in an advisory capacity," that it'll "promote Alberta's Promise." What does that mean? We don't know what the promise is? "Provide leadership in promoting the development of community strategies." Who? So somebody else is supposed to do this, but the government just stands around and promotes it. And then – oh, one of my favorites, yup – "raise awareness of the shared responsibility of organizations, corporations and individuals for furthering the well-being of children." If that isn't a download statement, I've never seen one.

So what exactly was the government going to do in this bill? Nothing. We don't know what the promise actually was except for references to the ones that were started in the States and elsewhere in Canada. There were some members that stood up and said: oh, well, you know, really it's all in the preamble. Well, we know that the preamble is not enforceable, and it's not considered part of the bill, so if you really felt that strongly about it, put it in the bill.

This was a very frustrating episode as far as I'm concerned. I mean, we couldn't even convince the government to be as concrete as accepting an amendment that would develop recommendations to facilitate the delivery of at least one nutritious meal a day to children through a program available in every school in Alberta. No. Government wouldn't buy that. That's not part of their promise to children in Alberta. So in the end this was a very frustrating exercise.

I still don't know what the government really intends to do about it. I know that they're going to appoint a bunch of high-profile Albertans, lots of people from the corporate and nonprofit sectors to sit on a committee somewhere. They're going to have some kind of a budget. They're going to pay a CEO, who I'm sure is a good friend, probably a significant amount of money. I asked that question twice. I never got an answer to it. I asked for the budget. I asked for what the CEO's salary would be or even what human resources category it would be from. You know, this has got the Premier's name on it; I've got to presume that there's some money behind this. I didn't get any answers at all about it. I guess we have to remember to bring that up and try and dig that information out during the actual budget debate.

So I don't know what the effect of this bill is going to be. I'm afraid the effect of it's going to be zip, that it will be a slogan that will be referred to . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Like the Natural Gas Price Protection Act.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, it might be like the Natural Gas Price Protection Act.

It will get referred to, you know, in warm fuzzy terms, but it actually doesn't do anything or mean anything, and nothing concrete is ever done that helps Albertans. You know, such potential here, such potential to really deliver a concrete program for Alberta's children, and such a void that is left, an absolute yawning chasm of nothingness that actually came through the bill. So a very disappointing experience.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I guess I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 1. Well, actually I am pleased to speak to it. I'm certainly not pleased with the bill. This bill is an empty piece of legislation. It's something that the government can put in its campaign leaflets at the next election to suggest that they've actually done something about this. If it has any real content at all, that content is to off-load responsibilities for children onto the so-called community.

Now, it's one thing for the community to be involved. If the government is there to support the community, if there are adequate programs, if there's stable funding, then I think the community can be a tremendous resource, and I would not say otherwise. But where the government is simply seeking to cover up its own inadequacies by reaching out or appearing to reach out to the community in order to help children, it's quite disgusting.

I want to continue with that a little bit further. I believe that this is an attempt to try and paper over the appalling gaps in this government's approach to children's welfare. It's an attempt as well to extend the myth that the government is not responsible for citizens' welfare. So instead of adequately funding early intervention programs, instead of providing adequate support to families living in poverty, and instead of investing in education, the Premier's council will examine ways in which the community can fill those gaps. Children will be the last to benefit. This also provides a potential Good Samaritan volunteer opportunity for well-connected Tories to enhance their public image.

Mr. Speaker, I've been involved in community organizations and at city council and have represented some of the areas of Edmonton which are amongst the poorest in Canada. I know that the federal riding which overlaps Edmonton-Highlands is, of all the federal ridings, the second poorest in Canada. There's one in Montreal that is poorer than Edmonton Centre-East. I represented that area for 11 years on city council and for two years now part of that area as MLA for Edmonton-Highlands. It has always amazed me how well-heeled individuals will come down to the poor part of town in their Lexus and talk about their wish to give back to the community, yet they support politically a government that has been relentless in its cuts to programs that benefit people in those areas and is singularly responsible for the extension of poverty in this province.

If we're talking about child poverty, according to the Canadian Council on Social Development, which drew its data from income trends in Canada by Statistics Canada between 1980 and 2000, 15.2 percent of the children in this province live at or below the poverty line.

Ms Blakeman: How much?

Mr. Mason: Fifteen point two percent. The number is 112,000 children, so of course you can extend that two or three times to get a clear indication of the total number of people in families, because these children are mostly all in families who live in poverty.

Now, if you look at the government's approach to the minimum wage, if you look at its cuts to social welfare and its refusal to revise those things, its refusal to assist those people with high utility costs, for example, you'll see that the government has contributed to the maintenance of this poverty which affects these children in the cuts to programs. The last time the price of oil and gas went down, we saw how programs for children at risk were cut by this government. We have now a situation where SFI rates have not been raised since 1993. As well, Alberta has the lowest minimum wage in Canada. Poor families, Mr. Speaker, equal poor children. We've seen the approach to children as adopted by this Ministry of Children's Services where we have the highest rate of apprehensions of children in the country. The reason we do so is because we also provide one of the lowest levels of support for families in need. So the government has a large number of children, then, in custody.

So what's the government's approach? It's not to put in place preventative programs and allow families to stay together. No. It's an eBay-style adoption of children, where children are marketed on the Internet. We have Sleep Country ads to try and help children, kids kept in motel rooms, a million dollar cut, which I referred to already, last year to early intervention programs for children.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there is the question of education. There is a continual underfunding of education. The Minister of Learning is always pleased to talk about how much we fund education in this province, but at the forum tonight a representative of the public school board provided some statistics. This was carried live on CBC radio. If you take into account inflation over the past 10 years or so, the increase in funding for education in this province has been less than 1 percent. We have ballooning classroom sizes, ongoing fights with teachers. A government survey, which was released last year, found that the average class size for grades 1 to 3 is 23 students per class, well above the ideal of 17 students per class. The same survey found that approximately 41 percent of classes in all of Alberta have 25 or more students. Further, 71 percent of classes have an average of four students with special needs. The question is: how can those students receive the attention they need when they're being packed into classrooms?

Of course, children grow up, and they finish public school. They want to go on to postsecondary education. Here the government has allowed the tripling of tuition fees in Alberta in the last 10 years. We have pointed out in the past that a tuition freeze would only cost $40 million for the government, yet the government is giving away $180 million in corporate tax cuts.

So we come back to the bill, having dealt a little bit with the government's actual record when it comes to children, and what's notable is the complete absence of tangible goals for the council. Now, without such goals, Mr. Speaker, the council can only be used as a PR tool of convenience, with success stories coming according to the Tories' time line and not the children's time line. There is no mention of the membership of the council.

All in all this is nothing more than a charade and an attempt to say in words what the Tories have consistently failed to deliver in deeds, when they have been in this government for as long as they have been and they have financial resources at their disposal which are the envy of any other provincial government in this country. Yet the record with respect to children is, frankly, shocking, Mr. Speaker, and to place such a bill before this Assembly is a slap in the face of every poor child in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments or questions? Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and join debate in third reading of the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act. Frankly, as I was listening to the last hon. speaker, my hon. colleague . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry. We're on Standing Order 29, and that's comments or questions with regard to the last speech. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort is asking a question or making comments, and then we'll have you give your speech.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. You juxtaposed two things: one is student tuition fees, and the other one is tax breaks to the corporation. I just want to venture a question to you. I wonder where the parents get the money to pay for the students to live and to study. Also, where will the student work after graduation if there are no companies or businesses around?

Thank you.

9:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, dramatically increasing tuition fees increases the burden on parents and on families and on students, but I think the hon. member is suggesting that without these tax cuts we wouldn't have free enterprise, we wouldn't have corporations, we wouldn't have jobs. I absolutely don't agree with that. Long before these tax cuts came along, Alberta already had a very, very favourable tax regime for private business, and there were plenty of jobs. So I think the suggestion that without these tax cuts private investors would abandon this rich province is simply not the case.

The Deputy Speaker: Further questions and comments?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry indicated that he wanted to speak earlier.

Mr. Bonner: Do you want to speak?

Mrs. Ady: Yes.

I just want to speak very shortly, Mr. Speaker, and finish my remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. As I said before, I'm proud to be able to stand today and speak on third reading of the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act. As I was saying earlier, when hearing the remarks of the previous speaker, I suppose that if you looked at my family, where there were six kids and my father did not make a very large income and my mother did not work, we would have been considered poor, although I didn't ever know we were poor because I was raised in a very loving family with parents who cared and taught us well. We were able to all go out and get an education and were able to proceed forward and become productive adults. So I do not think that poverty is necessarily an indicator in all cases. I think a lot of times it has to do with family and the support that family has for you. So I'd like to object to that.

I'd just like to say that I have a substantial number of youth in my constituency. More importantly, as a mother I understand the importance and the need to ensure the well-being of children and youth. I've also had the opportunity to travel the province and see the children that we have in care. They're very well cared for, and I very much object to the idea that we are not caring for children in this province, because we are. I think we're doing a very good job under difficult circumstances for these children, and I think this bill gives promise to those children and gives them some additional resources and help as we proceed forward.

Mr. Speaker, this government can make all the promises in the world, but they won't make a difference unless that promise is kept. I offer my most sincere heartfelt congratulations in support of Bill 1. However, I recognize that promises are just that, promises. I implore all members and all Albertans to make this promise real and help make the dreams of Alberta's children come true.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise this evening and speak to Bill 1, the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act. Like a number of people in this Assembly I've been blessed and had the opportunity to work with children for most of my life, something that I certainly enjoyed and certainly something that I take a lot of pride in. When I was teaching, it was said that it takes a community to raise a child. That statement has never been more true than it is today.

When we look at the situation here in Edmonton and that two years ago we had 130 children under the age of 15 that were homeless, then we do have a serious problem. I do not have the statistics at hand as to how many homeless children we had under the age of 15 in the last count, but all indications were that this number was going to grow, and certainly it has. Society's responsibility is to provide full social and economic participation to all Albertans, but unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a systematic failure on the part of governments to perform this basic function. So we do have to re-examine what we've been doing and where we're going. So the bill here, the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act, should be focusing on more than just children. It should be focusing and setting targets on how we can provide children with full social and economic participation in this great province.

Now, then, when we have a bill in this Legislature it is to fix some problems, but we don't have any stated here, as we've mentioned earlier. This occurs, Mr. Speaker, at a time in this province when families are under greater financial stress than they've ever been before, and we do have departments in government which have been given the mandate to assist our children and assist parents in raising those children. We look at, for example, the Department of Learning, and we look at what has happened in our schools just recently, where we had an arbitrated settlement which was out of the scope, out of the responsibility of our locally elected school boards, yet we did not put funding in. We did not give funding to those school boards so that they could meet those new salary demands. Hopefully, in this budget that we expect to come down in the next three to four weeks, that funding will be restored so that we aren't looking at laying off teachers, we are not asking parents to go out and fund-raise, we are not having schools, such as I have in Edmonton-Glengarry, which have food banks in the school, another school which sets food out daily on a regular basis for hungry children to get food, another school where they have clothes that are donated for children that don't have clothes. These are situations, these are problems that I would have liked to have seen this bill address in our education system alone.

We also have in this province, Mr. Speaker, the lowest minimum wage of any province in Canada, and we are seeing in this province, a have province, that businesses cannot budget for their workers that extra dollar-an-hour raise or whatever it takes. Perhaps those businesses should not be in business if this cannot happen. We see people in this province who are on AISH, supports for independence. Those benefits have not been raised for 10 years. We want to have a flagship bill that is going to take care of children, that is going to provide all those great opportunities that every parent wishes for their child, yet we will not help the poorest of the poor. In listening to Senator Doug Roche last year, he had just a fabulous quote, and it went something like this: there are those in this society that think a rising tide raises all ships; however, it is only raising the yachts. So the most vulnerable people in our society are going to look at a bill like this and say: how is this going to help me?

In the debate the other night the Minister of Children's Services was asked to provide a list of the names on the council, those Albertans who have been nominated to this council and have accepted a position on the council, and I read through that with interest. There were quite a number of names that I could pick out, and I must say so that there is absolutely no confusion that I was impressed by the list of people that had been put on that council. Again, what is the mandate for those people? What resources do they have in order to fulfill the conditions that we wish every child in this province could be raised under?

Just to review those quickly, Mr. Speaker: "giving children a healthy start and a promising future." Well, I would like to know how we can have a situation in this province where in the formative years, the years when we require the greatest number of resources to be put into the education of children – and that's at the primary grades, in elementary school – increasing the size of those classrooms and having resources from those classrooms reduced is going to fulfill this particular point of "giving children a healthy start and a promising future." It doesn't add up. No matter how good those people are on that council, without the resources put into our schools this goal is unachievable.

I think what we have to look at is the situation that was reported in a north Edmonton school, where those resources were put into those children who were identified as requiring more assistance. Certainly, over the last three years they had targets that they wanted improved, targets such as every child being able to read at a grade 1 level when they completed grade 1, and they did it. They did it. In a lot of schools in this province where we think that those same targets should be achieved, they are not. So, yes, we can do amazing things, but we have to have commitment. It sounds good, what we have here. There is nobody in this Assembly that wishes more than I do that we could provide that for every child in this province, but so far we have not done a very good job.

I look at the second point, "providing safe and healthy communities for our children's growth, education, and development." Well, we are working towards that, yet I see that the city of Edmonton has the same number of officers on the streets today as they had in 1983, and again it is a funding issue. They cannot afford to have more, and like any other organization in our society their costs have gone up immensely too. Certainly, there are a lot more sophisticated equipment and crimes to deal with, but we do have to provide those types of services if we wish safe and healthy communities.

We also see where families have to pay more for health care premiums. Again, for some people, as I've already indicated, this is stretching those family budgets even thinner. We have to look at how we can provide the absolute best health for children.

I look, as well, to another point, "ensuring that every child receives ongoing support, care, and guidance from at least one caring adult in his or her life." Certainly, that is a goal that we wish for every child. Every child has to grow up in a situation, as the hon. member has mentioned, in a loving family where that support will take place. That means, Mr. Speaker, that we have to create a society where parents and families do have the opportunity to get together.

There is so much potential in this bill, Mr. Speaker, that I do get excited when I read it. I do get excited when I see the quality of people that are sitting on that council. I do get excited that we can make a difference in the lives of so many children, that we can certainly increase the opportunities for so many children in Alberta, because if we can't do it in this rich province, then I don't know how it can be done.

So, again, I will be voting for this bill. I certainly hope that the council will be able to come up with strategies that will fulfill these five points and that the big winner in all this will be the children of Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments? Questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry's positive comments in regard to this bill, and as with other members I appreciate the fact that the opposition's role and function is to oppose. Sometimes being in opposition is much more difficult than others, and I think that with this bill this is one such occasion because in principle it would appear to me that the opposition, and particularly the member representing Edmonton-Glengarry, is in accord with the overall principle of the bill, and who couldn't be? The premise is "Alberta's Promise is an initiative to encourage organizations, corporations and individuals to enhance community resources in order to further the well-being of children."

Well, the question, Mr. Speaker, is: how does one oppose such a premise? Is this not something that we as a Legislature representing all of the parties and all of the people in our province should subscribe to wholeheartedly and without reservation?

Mr. Bonner: I think if the hon. member had been paying close attention, Mr. Speaker, he would have heard me say that I certainly do support this bill, and I will be voting for it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, a question or comment?

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: It's questions or comments.

Ms DeLong: Or comments? Actually, neither. I wish to just speak on the bill on debate.

Speaker's Ruling Question and Comment Period

The Deputy Speaker: If the time is up, then we can have you speak on the bill, but before doing so, I think I'll just make a comment.

There was at least one comment, if not two or three comments, when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was making his comments as to a question. They must think it's question period, and the rules and regulations – but if they read Standing Order 29, they will see that you can ask a question or make a comment. So the encouragement is ill taken.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make a few comments on Bill 1, specifically under Activities, 3(e), “encourage financial and other support for initiatives and research that further the well-being of children.” I believe that we just assume we know what’s good for children, and in actual fact we really do need to do more research in terms of what’s good for children. When I was a child I never went hungry, but by today’s standards I lived in what might be considered abject poverty. I remember that there was one winter when we were living in a little cabin where there was one bedroom for our parents, but there wasn’t a bedroom for the three kids, so my father put plywood around the outside of the porch. In the wintertime it was literally freezing out there, and the outhouse was quite a ways away, but we were a very happy family. One of the things that I have heard recently is that the number one indicator in terms of how successful children are is a loving mother and father. That is certainly something that I had in my life, a loving mother and a loving father involved in my life.

There is recent research that has been out there that says that the number one thing – it isn’t education; it isn’t the health care system; it isn’t the level of poverty – that indicates whether or not a child is going to be successful is the involvement of their parents in their life, not just their mother but also their father. I’m very encouraged by this bill, especially part 3(e) referring to the research. I’m hoping that we are going to make some real progress in this area in actually determining what does make for successful children.

Thank you very much Mr. Speaker.

9:50

The Deputy Speaker: Comments? Questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to reply to the hon. member that just spoke, our bill has been, I think, modeled in some respects after the Ontario’s Promise and after the America’s Promise. Now, then, I would suspect that both of those jurisdictions, again, have put as much effort into researching what the needs of children are as we have done here. It’s amazing how similar these are.

Now, the five promises from Ontario were: a healthy start, an adult who cares, safe places to learn and grow, tools to succeed, a chance to make a difference. The America’s Promise: ongoing relationships with caring adults in their lives, parents, mentors, tutors, or coaches; safe places with structured activities during nonschool hours; healthy start and future; marketable skills through effective education; and opportunities to give back through community service. I think we do have a very good handle, Mr. Speaker, on what it is that children require. I think that what we have in Bill 1 certainly parallels what we find in the Ontario’s Promise and in the America’s Promise.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I’ll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 17

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. I appreciate the time to discuss Bill 17, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003, in detail at this time, and I would like to bring to the attention of all hon. members of the Assembly the expenditure that is devoted to Government Services: $4.5 million. Now, I know that the Member for Edmonton-Centre is very surprised that the Government Services ministry would need an additional $4.5 million. I for one am surprised at some of the problems that are going on at Government Services, certainly with the registries and with the increase in what’s apparent to me: the information technologies service contracts that are being contracted out.

Perhaps the reason that they would need this money is because of the reduction in revenue generated from motor vehicle licences. Now, we all know that licensing fees went up, and if you go back to the third-quarter fiscal update from Budget 2002 – and all this relates to Government Services – I see that there are premiums, fees, and licences, which are really taxes. The government is going to have a very, very hard job now, Mr. Chairman, getting around not calling these items taxes because, of course, they’re forcing the municipally owned utilities under another bill before the scrutiny of this House to place right on the bills any extra charges as taxes. So for any extra charges here, in my view, if the government is going to be above reproach, they’re going to have to call these taxes as well.

But, Mr. Chairman, we see the main reasons for the change from the budget for motor vehicle licensing. There’s a $14 million deficiency here because of lower commercial vehicle registrations. Am I to assume that because of the tax increases . . .

Chair’s Ruling Proximity to the Microphone

The Chair: Hon. member, you go on and off the air for those like the chair that are a little hard of hearing. Whenever you turn around with your back to the microphone, it’s inaudible. That may be a comfort to some people, but it’s not to the chair. I wonder if you could hopefully spend as much of your speech time addressing it to the chair or to the microphone, which was designed to hear you speak into it, not with your back to it.

Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, Mr. Chairman. I apologize to all members of this Assembly.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: Now, the lower commercial vehicle registrations. I need the answer from the government if this is why we need at this time an additional $4.5 million, Mr. Chairman. As we increase the registrations, have commercial enterprises fled this province for other jurisdictions where registration for commercial vehicles, large fleets, is much cheaper? If this question could be answered in the course of debate, I would certainly welcome that.

This wouldn’t be the first time this has happened. Unfortunately, many enterprises are contemplating leaving this province because of our high utility costs with electricity deregulation. Manitoba is a very attractive place now to do business because of the low cost of electricity.

Mr. Mason: And the good government.

Mr. MacDonald: I hear from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, "and the good government" as well.

We need to be very careful. Now, whether this $4.5 million is the result of large commercial fleets abandoning this province because of high costs and going elsewhere to register all their vehicles or not, I'm very anxious to hear from the Government Services department in regard to this because I'm told that they're requesting this $4.5 million to provide funding for an initial phase of a driver's licence upgrade program, but perhaps there are other budget deficiencies as a result of the huge, skyrocketing increases in premiums for vehicle registrations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, also, at any time a driver's licence program is altered, there's the chance that personal information may be released. I would like to know what precautions have been taken to ensure that no personal information is going to be released. What upgrades are going to be made in this initial phase of this alteration, and how many future phases of this program are going to be funded?

I understand also that it was last July, July 2002, that the fees associated with drivers' licences went up as well. What is that money going towards, and why does the Government Services department need additional funding now?

Now, the human resources and enjoyment portfolio. Human Resources is requesting $25.8 million here, Mr. Chairman. This is to provide additional funding for skills development programs. It astonishes me that we're going this way at this time. I'm hearing reports – and I certainly hope they're not true – that some of our facilities that provide training to apprentices, whether it's in Calgary or whether it's in Grande Prairie or whether it's in Edmonton, have a shortage of money. There have been some significant cutbacks. I hope this is not true. If it were true, is some of this money going to be going to NAIT and SAIT? We're talking about a skills shortage, a huge skills shortage across this province in tradespersons. At the time this shortage is growing – it's certainly in some sectors causing anxiety for the planners – how could we cancel or reduce funding for those institutions when we need to be training more young Albertans, not less? Is some of this money going to those institutions, or where exactly is this skills development program going? I'm always puzzled by this. I've been puzzled by this Canada/Alberta labour market agreement since it was initiated, I believe going back to 1998. [interjections] Pardon me? I'd better direct my comments through the chairman.

Now, the skills development program, this co-operation between Canada and Alberta, puzzles me, and one of the reasons why it puzzles me is it's apparent to me that we're paying this money up front to the providers. It doesn't seem to be pursuant to the student finishing the course or attending the course in a timely and regular fashion, but if they're there on the first day of classes, well, then, this school, whether it's a private school or a public school, gets the money. Last summer we had the unfortunate case of a bankruptcy with one of these outfits. They were getting money from the Canada/Alberta labour market agreement, and I couldn't believe that the contracts were worded in such a loose fashion, where taxpayers were losing the money and the students, of course, were losing a placement. Their courses were up in the air. Here I see that we're getting another $26 million to provide additional funding, and if this hon. member had more time, it certainly would be devoted to a little bit of digging around that Canada/Alberta labour market agreement. If I wasn't so busy with Public Accounts and I had a place to spend my time, Mr. Chairman, that's where it would be. Yes.

Now, the population of Alberta is growing, so one would naturally expect that each year there would be an increase in enrollment in these various programs. If that's the case, why didn't this department budget for an increase in enrollment? Another question that I would have: does the department have plans in place for next year to ensure that we can accommodate an increase in enrollment and that supplementary supply will not be an option?

Infrastructure is the next department that got some money, and they got a significant amount of money. Now, as I understand it, Infrastructure is requesting money to fund land acquisition costs, Mr. Chairman, and I would like to know what land the department is acquiring. The fact that Infrastructure is acquiring land that they did not budget for illustrates the lack, again, of long-term planning by this department, and one would have to question that this is yet another case of the lack of long-term planning meaning additional costs for taxpayers in Alberta.

Mr. Bonner: It's certainly at a time when land costs are high.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, we are buying at the top end of the market. We are, yes, buying at the top end of the market, and that's a very good point. Why couldn't this department wait to acquire this land next year so that these costs could be included in the budget?

Alberta Justice. Now, as I understand it, Alberta Justice is going to be requesting $2.6 million. The money is broken down for staff salary settlements, and I think that some of this money would be going to increase the compensation levels for some, if not all, the Crown prosecutors in Alberta. The Crown prosecutors were, I believe, underpaid. They certainly are not undervalued – we appreciate the work they do – but they were underpaid. I commend, in this case, the department's and the minister's concern, and the concern turned into a modest increase in compensation for those individuals. The court reporters are also included in this group. They work very hard also, and that is to be noted.

Now, the external legal costs relating to Kyoto. I would assume that this is completely separate from the communications plan that we all saw on television and heard on the radio and certainly saw in newspapers. I wonder if it really was necessary. Was this half a million dollars to discuss a constitutional challenge, not knowing that air sheds are like Canada geese, that they do not respect boundaries?

Mr. Chairman, at the same time, I believe that this department needs to fully explain its request for over $2 million for staff settlements. Some of this is understandable, but are there any unbudgeted staff cuts? Also, whenever there were staff cuts, did other people get bonuses?

Now, Alberta Learning is a department that is in the news these days. Here we learn that Alberta Learning requested $33.5 million. Certainly, the Calgary board of education is getting $7 million, $1 million for the government service payments for teachers' pensions, and $25 million to the teachers' pension plan. There's no doubt that the $7 million is certainly needed in Calgary, but we need double that in Edmonton. We need $13 million, $14 million right at the start, and that's only for the public board, Mr. Chairman. It is unusual that one city would get an amount of money like this $7 million. I know that the circumstances, as explained by the hon. minister, are different in both cities, but both cities are facing a crisis in public education.

Well, the public school boards are caught. They're caught between parents on the one hand and the government on the other hand, and they have no autonomy. They need autonomy, and that is recognized on this side of the House. They have so many limitations from which to make decisions. One, of course, would be the inflexible school utilization rate. One only has to leave this Assembly and hear a news report where here in Edmonton the separate board is, unfortunately, having to look at organizing a series of public meetings to determine whether it's necessary to close three schools. This is the most unfortunate of circumstances. Every neighbourhood needs to have a school. The school is a focal point of any neighbourhood or any community, and I think we can work around and solve these problems without having to close these schools, Mr. Chairman.

It is quite interesting whenever one considers the circumstances in Calgary and the generosity of the government. How could Edmonton be overlooked? Now, certainly, this may change when we hear next month from the hon. Minister of Finance with the budget, but I'm disappointed at that. I've heard over the years of the difference between Edmonton and Calgary, and I don't think that in this case there is any difference. Both of them need money and the commitment from this government. Both cities need the commitment from this government to adequately fund public education. It is an investment; it is not a cost. I look forward, when the budget comes around, to there being an effort put forward to alleviate all the concerns, or most of the concerns anyway, of the elected public school trustees in both respective cities.

Now, in conclusion on the Learning issue, Mr. Chairman, we have to make sure that all school boards across the province that are short of funds due to the arbitrated settlement are considered, not just one district. People from this city ask me all the time: why does Calgary get $7 million more than anyone else?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: To ask a question of the hon. member.

The Chair: We're in committee, hon. member, and that doesn't obtain in committee because in committee we're able to go back and forth and ask questions. No, that doesn't obtain in committee. It's not part of the format.

Mr. Mason: That's okay.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 17, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003.

You'll have to excuse my confusion, but this is the second supplementary supply bill that we've had in this fiscal year. So when earlier in the evening I was talking about my frustration about the instability of the government's budgeting process, this is a perfect example of why. That's not to say that there isn't some understandable need occasionally to come before the Assembly to ask for additional funds to be added to a department's budget for something unforeseen. This is now not only routine from this government but regular and repeated approaches to the Assembly for additional funds. As I say, in some instances it's understandable and certainly supportable, but in others I just have to say: why didn't you know this in the first place and ask for the funds? Otherwise, you'd better be able to justify why you're coming before the Assembly and asking for this money now.

Essentially, we're at the very beginning of March. This money has to be spent by the end of the month. So, one, if you've already spent the money or started the program for which you assumed you were going to get the money, well, shame on you, because it hasn't been passed by this Assembly, and if you are planning to spend it in the next 30 days, my goodness, what a rush to spend money. I certainly hope all the regular controls are in place for that.

In Committee of Supply I wasn't able to scrutinize every department that I wished to. I was trying to concentrate on the ones for which I'm appointed critic and then got into quite an exchange with the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. I'd like to come back on some of that exchange because it was not satisfactory to me. So a couple of additional questions come up that I wasn't able to query earlier.

Under Economic Development we're looking at $4 million, extra tourism. I say: well, why didn't you know about this before? What's such a goldarn-all emergency that you have to get this money? There's a request to provide additional funding for tourism, marketing, and services. What's happened that we need to get this additional marketing and services that is either going to be performed in the next thirty days or, shame on you, you've already done it and assumed that the Assembly was going to pass the supplementary supply request?

That is indeed what's happening. We're looking at a supplementary appropriation of $35,000 into the Travel Alberta Secretariat operating expense, $250,000 into the in-Alberta regional marketing operating expense, $325,000 into the international marketing operating expense. Oh, here we go: tourism destination regions, $3.3 million operating expense. Then under Tourism Services, Alberta image promotion, $55,000; visitor support services, $35,000. Well what in the Sam Hill is going on here? I never got a good clear explanation about that, and I'm not willing to support it until I do.

I think the Energy estimates have already been covered.

Supplementary estimates of $2 million – and we do have the Minister of Environment here tonight, so maybe I can get a response – is requested “to accelerate grant payments to local authorities under the Alberta Waste Management Assistance Program.” Why do you need to accelerate these grant payments? Now, I'll tell you why I'm asking this. I am increasingly suspicious that there is a humdinger of a surplus out there, and the government is desperate to spend the money so that they don't have to go before Albertans and once again admit that they shortchanged services all year long so they could have this honkin-big surplus, which should have been wisely invested in these programs all the way along. Now they're in a big hurry to siphon off some of that money so that that surplus doesn't look quite so bad when they have to fess up to it at year-end.

One of the things that's really interesting to me about all of this is that we have a request for $206,642,000 in this appropriation, but at the second quarter the government was forecasting a surplus of $199 million. Now in the third quarter they are forecasting a surplus of $1.8 billion, so that's a pretty staggering increase in what they're expecting for a surplus. I just found it really interesting that we've got an appropriation bill that's looking for $206 million and that here at the second quarter we had $199 million, which was what the budget was. So the close connection of those two figures sure makes me think that they're looking to dump money like crazy into these different departments. When I read something about accelerating grant programs, I say: why? Why are you putting more into this? Was there a demand? Did we miss a target? Have we overshot a target? What kind of information can be given by the government at this point that justifies accelerating a program like this? I'm not hearing it.

I have some questions, actually, for the Minister of Government Services. We have: "$4,565,000 is requested to provide funding for an initial phase of a drivers license upgrade program." Again, if this was planned for this year, then there should have been sufficient funds in the budget to do it. If it wasn't planned for in this year, why are you now deciding to do it at the very end of the year? You've now got – this is the 4th of March – three and a half weeks to spend this money. How do you prudently spend this money in three and a half weeks for this program? So what since fall has happened that is so dramatic, so urgent that this extra money is needed to do this program? Or is it simply a matter of the department going: "Well, we could do this now. So if we take some of that money away from the surplus and put it in here, then we'll look like we were really anticipating things, and the surplus won't be quite so large?"

My other concern around this department in particular doing things in a hurry is a history of a sort of sloppiness, and I am particularly looking for reassurance that any computer or hardware that would be included in this program for $4.565 million is going to be compatible with existing programs. What exactly is being anticipated here? Is this a contract that is going out to someone else? No. Indeed, when I look at it, we've got $1.8 million. So $1,846,000 is operating expense for private agent services/general registry, and we've got $2,719,000 under capital investment. So, in fact, there is some expectation of capital investment. Was there a tender process for this? Is the minister able to talk to us about what was in the criteria for the tender process and whether we've got successful bidders? Obviously, if the money is going to be spent by the end of March, you must have already had this tender process happen and have your successful bidder that's going to implement it; right? Or, in fact, you were playing fast and loose and had already done this before you had permission to do it. Is this a contract that's going out to a private registry? That's where it's showing up, under vote 2.0.2. So I'm interested if some private registry got a windfall of a $4.5 million contract just at year's end. What kind of contract do they have? What are the performance measurements that are in place? What are the targets that are in place?

I'm looking at Human Resources and Employment next. In the appropriation bill there's a request for $25,800,000 to provide additional funding for the Skills Development Program as a result of an increase in the number of students enrolled in basic education and short-term training courses leading to sustainable employment.

Now, that skills development program – you're going to excuse me because I have just seen that. If I look in the Auditor General's report, I know that I am going to find something in there about the skills development program, and it's not going to be something happy if it was turning up in the Auditor General's report. Have the concerns about the skills development program been addressed before we plow – how much? – 25 million bucks into it? There we have it, recommendation 27.

We again recommend that [the] Department of Human Resources and Employment improve the procedures to monitor compliance by training providers with the terms of the Skills Development Program.

It's noted that in 2001 this was recommendation 22. Now, I'm finding this in the Annual Report of the Auditor General of Alberta 2001-2002, page 151.

How does the minister respond to this recommendation, which has been made multiple times to his department, that there is a problem with the skills development program? Do I see something happening here? No. I see another $25 million being dropped into this very program that has been identified as having compliance problems. So I think we need to have the minister answer for that one, and I would like to hear him answer that before I'm required to vote on this appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole.

I have two additional questions about this skills development program. One of my frustrations for an extended period of time, back to when I was with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues, is that there's money put into skills development to help people retrain or to upgrade their training or to train into markets where there's a skill shortage, but we never quite commit to it. I'm just trying to think of an appropriate analogy, but I don't think I want to go there. Essentially, one of my complaints then was, you know, that people always seem to be able to get skill development money to retrain as a hairdresser, and my thought was: well, how many hairdressers do we need in Alberta? At that time, my interest was in women and what was happening, and they tended to be channeled into things like what used to be called secretarial college but would now be called administrative support and into hairdressing.

Well, I mean, my goodness. How many administrative support and hairdressers do you need? Why weren't we using that money to encourage women into skills development programs that would've actually lifted them out of the pink-collar ghetto and help them get into something that was really going to be a good income for them? Why weren't we looking at encouraging them into apprenticeship programs like welding or steam fitting? There are all kinds of things that could've been happening here.

So I have real questions about how effective these programs are. I think we tend to train people into what appears to be quick and easy access routes, but in fact they don't sustain people for a lifetime of employment. So in that are we really getting value for money? Are we really getting value for money when we keep spending money to train people to be hairdressers? No, I don't think we are. Not that we don't need hairdressers – and this is not a slam against hairdressers in Alberta in any way, shape, or form – but really is this directing people into the skill markets that we need and giving them enough of an education that they're actually going to be successful? I've had people from programs like this. They get six months of computer training. They come and you say: okay; turn on the computer. Well, their skill level is so narrow that they're actually not very skilled in this, and you end up not being able to keep them on staff because they're really not conversant with, you know, the programs that you need them to be conversant with and the operating systems that you need them to really know. So I don't know that we're very successful here, and I'd like to hear the minister defend that.

Now, I'm going to leave Infrastructure alone. I've already talked about Justice.

One of the other places that really jumped out at me was Municipal Affairs. We've got $10 million for the underground petroleum storage tank program to deal with accepted applications. So does this mean that the ministry was not on the ball in the first place to know what kind of money they were going to need for the year if they'd already accepted these applications? Why were they accepting the applications throughout the year if they didn't have the money in the budget to do it? Or is the minister going to tell me: "No. This is the process they always use"? They approve them all, and then they wait until they get the money. Maybe that's how it's done. [interjection] Well, the Attorney General and Justice minister has somewhat answered my earlier concern that because we have surpluses, we're taking money and putting it into programs. But I will let him get up and respond on the record to me.

Now, we also have $1.4 million in there for disaster recovery programs. You know, I don't have a problem with that, and that's exactly the kind of thing I do expect to see in an appropriation supplementary supply vote. I do not expect to see things like plowing funding into programs that already exist because you want to accelerate them or because it's a program on the books that you haven't been funding for a couple of years, but, heck, you've got this 'gi-normous' surplus coming and you're trying to hive off some of that money so it doesn't look quite so bad and you don't look like you, in fact, starved schools and health care systems and infrastructure yet again all year so that you could come out and go: "Oh, aren't we wonderful? We can pay down more on the debt." But, really, who paid that debt? That would be the children and the people that needed the health care system and our students in the postsecondary institutions.

The final point I want to talk about is to go back to the conversation that I was having with the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development around what I saw as the inequity of payments that were being made to the farmers but no equivalent program for small businesspeople, for example, in the cities. The minister said: well, we have this, and the government pays for it because there's no insurance program that's available; in the cities the businesses can, in fact, get fire insurance or theft insurance. True, but we're really talking about risk here. We're talking about the farmers dealing with the risk that they have with the weather. But my point is: I have small businesspeople in downtown Edmonton that are also dealing with risk. They're dealing with risk like the American dollar or with government instability for countries that they wish to trade with or who buy their product in some way, shape, or form. They also are affected by weather. I talked earlier about the Golfdome. It's certainly affected by weather as a business risk. They're not able to forecast in any way or have any reliable way of knowing. So I disagree with the agriculture minister, and I challenge her on that one.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would also like to make a few comments on Bill 17, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003. In the Legislature this evening we debated Bill 2 in third reading, regarding the establishment of a stability fund here in the province. It was certainly a good Liberal idea brought to the Legislature in 1994 by Laurence Decore. It was a step forward in dealing with the peaks and valleys of our revenues. It is a welcome bit of stability in our boom-and-bust economy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it took nine years for the government to see the value of such legislation, but now I think it is time that we look at another proposal brought forward by Laurence Decore, particularly in a province where the provincial government likes to tout itself as a champion of business, in a province where the government likes to portray itself as having some particular kind of insight and sensitivity as to how we are going to handle a budget that is blessed with revenues that were only dreamed of a decade ago, but at every supplementary supply time we have a process that I think must be quite embarrassing to the government. One of the things that Mr. Decore had proposed was to develop a much stronger kind of budget scrutiny, a much stronger budget review process. Instead of having the government decide what goes in what column, the proposal of Mr. Decore would be to open that up and not start in March, when the estimates are brought in, but in fact start far, far earlier.

The Ontario budget model, in fact, picks up many of the elements of what I call the Decore proposal. You have a powerful all-party committee that picks up a number of departments each year. They meet with the ministers of those specified departments long in advance. In Alberta that process may start with meetings in the summer because we know that is when the government starts pulling together all the pieces that are then merged into some form of a budget process.

Other provinces have said that there is a better way to do a budget. Hopefully, Alberta will choose to take the next step and improve their budget process so we don't have this embarrassing situation of supplementary supply. The kind of numbers being put forward before us today is a clear indicator that there must be a much better way to do business. We need a process, Mr. Chairman, whereby we have all-party scrutiny of the budget, which will reflect the priorities and the needs of Albertans. The fact that year after year we see billion dollar plus supplementary estimates tells us that something is not working right.

Now, I don't know in this particular case, Mr. Chairman, if the reason that we are seeing such a large amount, $206 million extra, is because of the desire to reduce the size of the surplus. I'm sure that this is welcome spending in some areas, but again it does point out the very weak and poor budgetary practices that we do have in this province, where we continually come back to this Assembly throughout the year asking for more and more money.

The Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is looking for an operating expense of $1.4 million. In looking at this request for $1.4 million, the supplementary estimate is requested "to provide funding for Alberta's initiative on Aboriginal consultation." Now, then, earlier this year I had the opportunity to travel to Slave Lake, Mr. Chairman, and take part in a forum that was sponsored by the Northern Oilfield Contractors Association. Certainly, the issues that were raised were looking at the situation in northern Alberta, where we have an unfortunate situation where the First Nations councils and the Northern Oilfield Contractors Association have been at loggerheads with each other over issues on Crown land. In looking at that, certainly one of the issues that I think is common to both sides is the fact that there certainly has to be a much better consultation process between these two groups. There also has to be a very consistent set of guidelines put forward by which both parties will be able to continue in an agreed-upon process that will certainly eliminate this conflict situation.

What is required here is some resolution to this problem. The problem is having a major impact on our northern communities because if the contractors in those communities cannot secure contracts, if they cannot go to work, if when they go to work, they cannot make a living at this particular line of work, then the impact flows back to the communities in northern Alberta. It takes away much-needed revenues from other businesses and certainly has a huge impact on their children and their families.

So my question to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development this evening would be: how much of this $1.4 million that is being put forward in supplementary estimates is going to go towards solving this issue between the Northern Oilfield Contractors Association and the First Nations councils?

At this particular time, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to other members of the Assembly who wish to ask further questions on the supplementary estimates. Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 5, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/05

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, grant us a daily awareness of the precious gift of life which You have given us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and of our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Robert Helfenstein, the consul general of Switzerland, on his first official visit to Alberta. He is accompanied today by the honorary consul for Switzerland here in Edmonton, Mr. Dobler. Alberta and Switzerland have a strong trade and investment relationship totaling tens of millions of dollars a year and covering a range of areas including technology and pharmaceuticals. Switzerland is the sixth largest source of investment in Canada, a significant amount of which impacts our province. Tourism is also an important part of this relationship with thousands of Swiss tourists coming to Alberta each year and many Albertans visiting Switzerland as well. There are more than 17,000 Albertans of Swiss origin, and we appreciate how much they have contributed and continue to contribute to the building of this province. I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if my guests have arrived. Oh, they are here. Good. Now I can introduce them. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of individuals who participated in a fund-raising auction held this past December in support of the Edmonton Christmas Bureau. The Edmonton Sun's Hicks on Six successful phone-in auction raised a record $65,750, and my office was happy to help out with a donation of a lunch with me and a visit to the Legislative Assembly. The Christmas Bureau is a most generous organization that helps many Edmontonians to enjoy the Christmas season. Visiting the Assembly are Todd Bish, Michelle Sigurdson, and Vivian Manasc, who couldn't join us today because she had to conduct a seminar. But Todd and Michelle are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Legislative Assembly some special guests that we have seated in your gallery this afternoon. I would like to introduce Mr. Barry Penner, who is the MLA for Chilliwack-Kent in the British Columbia Legislature and president of PNWER, the Pacific Northwest Economic Region. Accompanying him today is the executive director of PNWER out of the Seattle office, Mr. Matt Morrison, and also the director of U.S./Mexico relations from International and Intergovernmental Relations in Alberta, Mr. Marvin Schneider.

As you know, PNWER is a significant organization, that the province of Alberta is proud to participate in, dealing with regional cross-government and cross-border initiatives. It's a public/private partnership, and as such these gentlemen are in the city with us today to meet with legislators, government officials, and representatives of the private sector in anticipation of and making final plans for a conference that Alberta will be hosting in Calgary this July. I would ask these gentlemen to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: I'm sorry, sir. Because of the roads today my kids had to cancel.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you 52 visitors from Lacombe upper elementary school in the constituency of Lacombe-Stettler. These are enthusiastic grade 6 students who asked me a number of great questions. With them are teachers Mr. Derek Rankin and Miss Heather Mackay; as well, parent helpers Mrs. Hendrika Derks, Mrs. Colette Burnham, Mrs. Rochelle Bos, Mr. Garry Evernden, and Mrs. Barbara Westwood, who went to school in Lacombe with our very own David Gillies. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very special guest and a very conservative kind of guy. We have with us today the Alberta director of the Nature Conservancy of Canada, a group which works to conserve working landscapes all across the country and which has been instrumental in helping to conserve an amount of land across our province which is almost comparable in size to the city of Calgary. It's a wonderful win/win environmental success story in this province. I would ask Mr. Larry Simpson, seated behind me, to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly a young political science student who is attending Grant MacEwan College. He is a resident of Calmar in my constituency. In a couple of weeks he will be heading to Ottawa as a foreign affairs youth delegate representing Alberta. I would ask Kris Palmer to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly members of the United Nurses of Alberta negotiating committee. The United Nurses of Alberta represent thousands of registered nurses, registered psychiatric nurses, student nurses, and mental health workers. These are caring professionals who work long hours in sometimes very difficult conditions. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask each of them to rise as I call their name: Nicole Bownes, a home care nurse in Edmonton; Judy Brandley, a public health nurse from the Chinook health region; Arlene Moreside, a public health nurse from Peace River; Linda Currie, a staff nurse from the Brooks health centre; Ken Ewanchuk, an emergency room nurse at the Foothills medical centre; Bridget Faherty from the Queen Elizabeth hospital in Grande Prairie; Phyllis Footz, a community health nurse from Tofield; Ruth Jeannotte, a long-term care nurse from Lethbridge; Sandi Johnson, a public health nurse from Calgary; Sandra McLean, a registered psychiatric nurse in Camrose; Heather Smith, president of the UNA since 1988; Pauline Worsfold, a recovery room nurse at the U of A hospital; David Harrigan, the UNA director of labour relations and chief negotiator; and Mark Cowan, the labour relations officer with the United Nurses of Alberta. Please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you a friend and constituent, Major Jack Ashford, and his son Marc. Jack is a member of the armed forces at Edmonton Garrison. He's also a town councillor for the town of Gibbons. Today he brings his son Marc to visit the Legislature. Marc wasn't able to visit the Assembly here last year because of a strike and is very interested in the Legislature itself. He also had the opportunity of visiting our own Sergeant-at-Arms, Mr. Brian Hodgson, this morning. They're both seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, today it is with great pleasure that I rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four members of the Samson Cree Nation administration who are seated in the members' gallery. I'm pleased to introduce Pat Buffalo, Glenda Swampy, Rose Saddleback, and Roy Louis. Roy Louis, I think, is perhaps not there. They were here for meetings in the Legislature today with the Minister of Gaming, and it is great to have them here at the Legislature, particularly considering they are some former students of mine going back a number of years. So please join me in welcoming them to the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Health Care Labour Legislation

Dr. Nicol: Changes to our public health care system are now proceeding via government committees, backroom deals, even shutting out government MLAs. Revelations of a secret cabinet committee set to infringe upon workers' democratic rights is only the latest example of this government's bungled attempts to manage one of our most precious resources, our health care professionals. To the Premier: why did the government jeopardize fair and balanced negotiations by establishing cabinet committees and shutting health care professional workers out altogether?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I explained yesterday, it's the responsibility, indeed the duty, of the government to establish policy. It's not uncommon to strike committees, either committees of MLAs, other government members, or cabinet committees, to study specific problems. This is not unusual indeed. I think that there are about 60 or 70 committees now doing work in various aspects of government services to develop policies, programs, consider changes to regulations, legislation, and so on. So it's not unusual, unfortunately, or fortunately, I guess, for Albertans, that the Liberals will never have the opportunity to understand and to experience how government carries out its business and develops policy.

The point is this: the committee chaired by the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science looked at ways to simplify and clarify labour relations in the health care sector as well as other sectors of the public service. The committee is considering – and I have to be careful, Mr. Speaker, because the legislation, I think, is either before or about to come before us – changes that will streamline labour relations and ensure that all workers are treated fairly and consistently and, most importantly, result in better integrated health services for Albertans.

That's what it's really all about. It's about patient care. It's about care for the patient, care for the sick and injured, Mr. Speaker. We have to remember also that 90 percent – I think the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness pointed out yesterday – of health care workers already don't have the ability to strike because they are deemed to be essential. So we're not proposing a major change, and RHAs of course have asked the government to update their labour relations rules because they haven't kept up with changes in the health care system.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: how will antagonizing and pre-empting thousands of frontline health care staff lead to that better health care delivery that you just spoke about?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what he's talking about: pre-empting. Basically, it was a policy and it is a policy of this government to reduce the regions from 17 to nine. As we reduced the various health authorities from over 200 to 17, now we're going down to nine. Quite simply, we want to streamline and bring labour relations activities associated with the regionalization in line with that regionalization to achieve some expediency.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why is this government jeopardizing patient care by pushing more frontline staff out of the province and into other countries? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier has very completely outlined the purpose of what we are doing with respect to our labour legislation, keeping in mind that the regional health authorities are looking for this kind of change so that changes that will help streamline the bargaining process with our unions will actually match the kind of efficiencies that we've achieved in the health care system.

We have made dramatic changes, moving from 200 hospital boards in this province to 17 regional health authorities, now down to nine. As an example, Mr. Speaker, there are dozens of collective bargaining units with the Calgary health region. I believe that in the David Thompson health care region there are something like close to 90 collective bargaining units. So the idea that a regional health authority should have to administer in the case of Calgary some 16 or 17 collective agreements is a great waste of time. Our bargaining process should reflect the kinds of changes that we've made in the health care system.

Water Use by Oil and Gas Industry

Dr. Nicol: Yesterday the Premier, the Minister of Environment, and the Minister of Energy gave the green light to the energy industry to continue to deplete freshwater, which is a scarce resource in Alberta. My question to the Premier: why is the energy industry being treated differently than communities, agriculture, and other industrial producers in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there isn't. When the media asked me in the scrum, which was attended by the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, a reporter accused or said that the hon. Minister of Energy said in this House, I guess, that water was to be free for oil companies, when, in fact – and I read from Hansard – in answer to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's question the hon. minister said:

Mr. Speaker, appropriately, the member has brought to the House the question of conservation of water, and just as conservation is important with any resource or any commodity, it's also important with water. Now, in fact, there does seem to be continuing discussion and some confusion regarding allocation of the use [of water] by the oil and gas industry. Department data indicates that the actual volume of freshwater used by the oil and gas industry for oil field injection purposes is approximately one-sixth, or six times smaller than the estimates of the allocation just quoted by the member. In fact, only 3 percent of all water in this province is allocated for use in oil field injection and surface mining and oil sands projection.

I quote that because nowhere in that answer or in subsequent answers, Mr. Speaker, did the hon. minister allude to water being free. As a matter of fact, there isn't any plan to put in a water pricing system at this time, but that's not to say that we won't be looking at the idea in the future. The province's new water strategy contains a draft recommendation to look at water policy, water pricing, and polluter charges as incentives to stimulate changes in water use, and we'll be asking Albertans what they think of that strategy this spring. That's all there is to it.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, they also spoke about suggestions and changes that were going to be put to the oil industry.

To the Premier: by creating different expectations for different industries, are you not picking winners and losers, something you promised Albertans you wouldn't do?

1:50

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the question may be fair, but it's still dumb.

You know, what I said is that one has to consider the tremendous costs incurred by oil and gas companies when they set to explore and to produce oil and gas and the tremendous risks that they take in terms of hitting nothing but a dry hole. So, Mr. Speaker, there's a tremendous cost to an industry that really drives or is the engine of our economy, and we've got to be fair. But relative to water pricing and water policies, as I indicated earlier, that will be a matter for public discussion and public consultation this spring.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Voluntary compliance hasn't worked. Why isn't the government encouraging the energy sector to adopt other alternatives instead of using freshwater?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, if you go back to Hansard – and I think I'm allowed to quote from Hansard – the question asked by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was:

Again to the same minister: why are oil companies using Alberta's freshwater instead of so-called brackish water or CO₂ for their recovery purposes?

The answer by the hon. minister was as follows:

Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue of using potable water in injections is not a new one. In fact, the former Member for Grande Prairie-

Wapiti, Mr. Wayne Jacques, brought this up some eight years ago. The industry continues to be a licensed and a responsible user of water, and in fact I think you can see that we're starting to see in the industry moves toward recycling the water, moves toward reducing the amount of freshwater, and moves toward using salt and brackish water, or saline water, where it can be obtained.

Nothing could be clearer than that.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Instead of talking about water pricing, let's talk about the lack of water conservation in this province because lack of freshwater will end the Alberta advantage. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Will he tell this House how many billions – that's how many billions – of litres of water the energy industry uses in this province every year with the blessing of his government's policy?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's an important question, which we're going to work very hard to work on an answer. I guess the fingertip statistics that I have are that the oil and gas industry drives 30 percent of a $150 billion economy. That's about $45 billion. Last year the oil and gas industry was the number one capital investment vehicle in Alberta and has remained so for many years. The oil and gas industry continues to employ some 25 to 30 percent of all Albertans. This industry since Leduc and, in fact, in budget projections in the last three fiscal years will deliver some 20-plus billion dollars in oil and gas royalties to this government for the use of the people of Alberta. Those are the figures I have in my statistics.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: Mr. Minister, isn't it true that while you don't monitor how much they use, the industry itself says that under the policies of this government the energy industry is accessing 30 percent of all Alberta's groundwater resources?

Mr. Smith: If I can refer to an answer that I gave yesterday that's already been quoted today in the House, Mr. Speaker, it does talk about the utilization of water in the industry. Reading from my answer of yesterday:

Government data indicates that the actual [amount] of freshwater used by the oil and gas industry for oil field injection purposes is approximately one-sixth, or six times smaller than the estimates of the allocation just quoted by the member. In fact, only 3 percent of all water in this province is allocated for use in oil field injection and surface mining and oil sands projection. The industry only uses 33 percent of the total allocation.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, at the appropriate time I will table the industry release that says 30 percent of groundwater.

To the same minister: given that more than 170 billion litres of water each year from this province used to recover oil will not be available to the ecosystem or for human use for tens of thousands of years and given that this province is already facing drought and water shortages, why is this government going to exempt the oil industry from mandatory water conservation and efficiency measures?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the two givens that are the preamble to the question make it impossible to answer the question because it imposes a hypothetical and, in fact, impossible situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Energy Prices

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy's answer to those who can't afford sky-high home heating bills . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands does have the floor.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy's answer to those who can't afford sky-high home heating bills is: turn down the thermostat, and put on a sweater. There may be a run on knitting needles and yarn, but Albertans know that this is an attempt to trivialize their difficult situation. Will the minister admit that his home heating strategy involves nothing more than two knitting needles and a ball of wool?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the member's question. In fact, if I were actually to refer to strategies that are on web sites by the utility companies that supply natural gas in Alberta, you would find that they talk about turning down thermostats. You'll find that they talk about being able to lower the temperature in a home. This valuable information on reducing consumption, a strong conservation message for the natural gas that's used in Alberta, can save Alberta homeowners and renters upwards of a hundred dollars in a heating season. There are tremendous new technologies and new innovations in that. In fact, some of that includes computer-controlled thermostats. Some of that concerns putting information with respect to home heating in the homes. Also, insulation is a very important piece.

So I think that each and every one of us has a responsibility for our own conservation in our own home as well as in our place of work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Why are Albertans being forced to start up web sites for cold people such as www.coldpeople.com in a desperate attempt to get the message through to this government that sky-high home heating bills are really hurting people?

Mr. Smith: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, when I pick up the phone and answer the phone, I get some discussion of different and various ways to help Albertans cope with increasing commodity prices. In fact, here's one that says:

Personally I looked ahead 2 years ago at what was happening and replaced all windows, purchased an automatic thermostat, insulated my attic to above standard, and refinished my basement with lots of insulation along with a high efficient furnace. Thankfully Karen and I are able to afford this unlike many other Albertans. The price I think will only go higher so money well spent and I get my own personal rebates every day.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, perhaps the minister can respond to the citizen who indicated that she only burns one bulb at a time, wears long underwear, sets the thermostat at 15 degrees, takes sponge baths instead of showers and baths, does the laundry in the sink, and has cut back on cooking as a result of high energy prices. Can the minister respond to that citizen?

2:00

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, the last time I saw somebody knitting beside an important event, it takes me back to the French revolution. That person sat there and knitted and cackled and laughed while people died. So, in fact, instead of doing that in this House, we have taken steps. We have a Natural Gas Price Protection Act to serve people. We have a seniors' program that protects seniors. We have a low-income program that protects people in need. This government understands the importance of this industry to this province, it understands how critical it is to assist people in their time of need, and it also helps Albertans plan for the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Aboriginal Economic Development

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I continue to receive questions from constituents with respect to First Nations involvement in resource projects. I would like to pursue another, more positive side of this story today. The aboriginal policy framework outlines a commitment to work with aboriginal people to ensure that they're involved in the economy. There is still a great deal of unemployment on reserves in northern Alberta, in fact in some cases up to 90 percent. Can the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development tell us what is being done to ensure that aboriginal people can be part of the economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the hon. member is correct. There is still a great deal of unemployment on reserves, in fact even off reserves. Economic development is the cornerstone of the aboriginal policy framework. It is really important to make sure that we continue to do that. Certainly, getting a job is one sure way of dealing with unemployment on or off reserve.

We're making great progress, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, on a national scale via the federal, provincial, territorial, and aboriginal ministerial forum it's a priority. In fact, we've recently had business summits in Toronto, as a matter of fact on February 19 and 20, showcasing business partnerships and encouraging the partnerships to occur. We've also seen on a western basis that there'll be a western business summit, as well, in Saskatoon from March 24 to 26 to ensure that we continue to highlight business partnerships, to encourage all sorts of different jobs that'll be available.

Mr. Speaker, on the provincial side we're ensuring that educational and skill development occurs in preparation for jobs, which is a cornerstone of whatever happens, and encouraging industry to do joint ventures and partnerships with First Nations and Métis. That's something that we have to continue to do and make sure that we do a good job of it.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given the fact that there is aboriginal economic development occurring, can the minister tell us what types of partnerships exist today in Alberta?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, over 50 partnerships have been developed so far, and more and more are coming. As an example, I just want to read some of the examples that I have. In the oil and gas industry Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation and Aqua Jeters & Aqua Sonics business venture uses a new ultrasonic wave method to remove bitumen. Aseniwuche Winewak Nation signed a guiding principles agreement in March 2001 with Chevron Canada and Burlington Resources setting out guiding principles in the areas of land stewardship, project consultation, education and training, employment and business opportunities. In fact, in the member's own constituency Sturgeon Lake First Nation and Devon Energy signed a joint venture partnership for the production of oil wells on the reserve and for the provision of oil and gas services from the First Nation to Devon Energy.

On the forest industry side, Mr. Speaker, Weyerhaeuser Canada Ltd. has relationships with Little Red River Cree, Horse Lake First Nation, and Sunchild/O'Chiese for various forestry contracts, an agreement to promote business, employment, training, education, and communication. Tolko Industries has relationships with Whitefish Lake First Nation and Driftpile First Nation for fibre supply agreements and harvesting contracts.

Mr. Speaker, on the energy side, very important . . .

The Speaker: That's fine, hon. minister. Perhaps you'd be kind enough to table in the Assembly the document from which you are quoting or take advantage of the opportunity for a ministerial statement.

The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for the answer. I wasn't aware of the depth.

My final question. To the Minister of Economic Development, Mr. Speaker: are there any further plans to encourage aboriginal people to get involved in the Alberta advantage?

Mr. Norris: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. At the outset I'll try and be a little more brief in my answer to my hon. colleague, although brevity is not a skill Irish people are famed for.

Mr. Speaker, we are partnering with the hon. minister's department on a number of different issues. One of the more important ones is the tourism framework. We're looking at aboriginal tourism as an initiative. We are also encouraging aboriginal groups to join our regional alliances, of which there are now nine throughout the province of Alberta. I believe that the member is a member of the Grizzly Economic Alliance, and those alliances are set up to develop regional economies. We are also looking at funding to the Métis associations for economic development. Finally, we're looking at a program specific to aboriginal business through the Business Link, which is funded by our department. It operates out of Edmonton. There's a similar operation in Calgary as well.

I would like to comment and commend my colleague the Member for Lesser Slave Lake for doing such a good job on such a vitally important file, and we're honoured to work with her on it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Natural Gas Rebates

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over 600 Redwater residents have added their names to the long list of frustrated Albertans over this government's broken election promise. Two years ago during the election the Premier said:

High oil and gas prices are both a blessing and a challenge . . .

Thanks to oil and gas royalties, Alberta is the only province that can help its citizens. We are returning gas royalties to [our citizens] through our rebate program.

My first question is to the Premier. Why was this government so eager to give substantial natural gas rebates to farmers, homeowners, and businesses during the election year, but now, two years later, you continue to break your promise?

Mr. Klein: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, we're not breaking our promise. Secondly, I can't understand, for the life of me, why the hon. member is so upset that we're not doing that now, because they were highly critical of the program at that particular time. Now they're saying: bring it in; bring it in. They want it, you know. There's the old adage about sucking and blowing, that you can't do both at the same time, and they seem to be able to do it.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of that program, that was brought in because of extraordinarily high natural gas prices, prices that reached over, I believe, $10 a gigajoule at that time and an average price that far exceeded the average Alberta bench price of $5.50 a gigajoule – we had to do something, but we also said that in the future we can't ad hoc this. Therefore, legislation was brought in to provide a sustainable protection program, and that protection program, as has been explained in this Legislative Assembly many times before, is based on a yearly average reaching $5.50 a gigajoule. When that yearly average reaches $5.50 a gigajoule, then the rebate program will kick in.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest also that a little politics is being played here, and it's associated with the weather. You know, when the weather is warm, the politics will stop. You just wait and see.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. These are your election promises made two years ago. When will this government keep the promise they made during the election year – and the promise was this: “to monitor prices and respond forcefully and appropriately” – and assist Albertans sitting in the cold with a sweater worrying about their high utility bills? When are you going to keep this promise?

Mr. Klein: Promises made, promises kept, Mr. Speaker. We said that we would bring in legislation, that we would bring in protection programs, and those promises are being kept as we speak today. We said at that time that we can't continue to deal with this on an ad hoc basis, that we have to bring in a program that is going to be sustainable. Therefore, the rebate program was brought in, and for these people to try to tell the Alberta public that they didn't know about it is not being truthful. I can't say that they're telling lies; it's unparliamentary. But it is being dishonest, because the regulations relative to the gas rebate program were published in a news release and put on the Internet in August of last year. So they knew full well that the legislation was in place, and the regulations were well publicized.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that Albertans do not have a positive future, can you explain to us your goal, which was expressed in the election, that you're going to have available and affordable energy for all Albertans? Why have you broken your promise?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, available and affordable energy for all Albertans. Absolutely. Absolutely. That's what we have strived to do through our natural gas rebate protection program. Certainly, that's what we're striving to do, and that's what we're striving to do through deregulation.

I'd be glad to table this letter. It's a copy of a letter that was sent to me by Hunter Hunt of Hunt Power, LP. He says:

In closing, Hunt Power has experienced deregulation in the United States, the United Kingdom and now Alberta. We have seen deregulated markets that work and others that are fundamentally flawed. Alberta is on the right track. I encourage you to maintain your course to a fully developed competitive generation market. Finally, I would like to commend the Honourable Murray Smith for his dedication to Alberta's energy sector. Please feel free to contact me directly should you have any questions or comments regarding Hunt Power and its involvement in Alberta.

By the way, because of deregulation here is a company that is proposing a 345-megawatt Crossfield energy station, Mr. Speaker, and he clearly points out that it's because of deregulation that they have entered the market to provide more power for Albertans and a bright future for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

International Offices

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have been receiving a number of calls from constituents about the government opening international offices. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. The Alberta government has a number of international offices in locations throughout the globe. Why has the government established these offices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I address that, that document looks so comfortable in the hon. member's hands that maybe he should come on over and join us. It just fits. It looks so good. Such bright, good colours.

Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. member's question is that, quite simply, we have a remarkable story to tell here in Alberta. Because of the vision of the government that is currently in power, Alberta is one of the best investment vehicles in all the world. Those international offices are set up to spread the word about what goes on here: the Alberta advantage, the friendly business climate, the low tax regime, the understanding that business drives the economy. We want to increase trade from those jurisdictions to Alberta and let them know about the great place that Alberta is to invest in.

The Speaker: The hon. member.
