Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. What is he using to gauge that these offices are meeting the needs of Alberta businesses?

Mr. Norris: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not only a good question. It's a vital question, because we wouldn't operate these offices without some really serious checks and balances on behalf of the taxpayers of Alberta and the businesses of Alberta. What we have is a document that's tabled yearly called the AIMS document, which is the Alberta international marketing strategy, and in that we go out and consult with businesses throughout Alberta to ask them if the services we're providing are up to date and accurate, if the use of these offices is getting out there. To date I'm proud to report that of the people of Alberta who have used the offices, 87 percent respond that they have had either a good or a very good experience with the offices. But we can always make it better, because the Alberta story is just that great to sell.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Education System

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Commission on Learning heard the voices of many Alberta parents who are seriously concerned about the state of our province's schools. One of those parents was Rhonda Ozckowski, who has some questions that she would like answered. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Rhonda wants to know how many ways this minister needs to hear that her daughter's school, like every other school in this province, needs smaller class sizes before action is taken.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a very interesting question. First of all, I'd like to say at the outset that I'm glad that the lady that the hon. member has spoken about has sent her letter to the commission. The commission has received about 15,000 submissions to this point, and they're currently in the process of tabulating them.

With regard to the class size issue, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that this hon. member knows and I would hope that he realizes that there are many papers or many documents that say that class size is very positive when it's smaller; there are other people that say that class size is not as positive when it's smaller. There are people that say that class size should be this particular number; there are others that say that class size should be that particular number. One of the challenges of the Learning Commission is going to be to sift through all of the research that is out there and try and dispel some of the myths that are out there. I anticipate having the response from the Commission on Learning back around the end of August, and it should be very interesting. I'm looking quite forward to what they have to say.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: Rhonda wants to know how many ways the minister needs to hear that her daughter's school, like every other school in this province, needs more teachers.

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that her daughter's education is as simple as having more teachers in the classroom, as simple as putting more teachers in their school. However, I'd be more than happy to look at her particular situation if the hon. member would just give me the name of the school and the school jurisdiction.

The Speaker: The hon. member

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: Rhonda wants to know how many ways the minister needs to hear that her daughter's school, like every other school in this province, needs to stop fund-raising for basics.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, that's a very interesting question. I had a conversation with the chairman of the Edmonton public school board two days ago. He came and said that the only money that he received for teachers' salaries was the 4 percent and 2 percent. So the next question that I asked him was the obvious one: well, what did you do with the 3 percent and 3 and a half percent that you received? It must be for classroom conditions, and he said: yes, we put it into classroom conditions. Well, the next question, then, obviously is: if you had $35 million, why on earth are you fund-raising for textbooks, if indeed you are? Those are the kinds of questions that we're looking at. Those are the kinds of questions that we're asking the Edmonton public school board as we go in with their audit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Calgary Ring Road

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Calgary, along with many other communities in Alberta, is under a great deal of stress to accommodate the population growth due to our strong economy, and in my riding of Calgary-Lougheed, in southwest Calgary, the need for adequate roads is of critical concern to my constituents. One of the major problems is that my riding straddles Fish Creek provincial park and is bounded on the west by a two-lane road with a one-lane bridge, which is the only real main thoroughfare to get from south of Fish Creek park north to downtown Calgary. I see the Member for Highwood also indicating that his constituents need this improved road. Anyway, we understand that the city has now approved a widening of that one-lane bridge and of the road from south of Fish Creek park to Anderson Road, but this is a road that goes nowhere. So my question today is to the Minister of Transportation. We read in the papers that the city and the Tsuu T'ina nation are negotiating a ring road that would join Glenmore Trail to highway 22X, south of Fish Creek park. Is the province involved in this negotiation, and if not, why not?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the chief of the Tsuu T'ina nation, Chief Sanford Big Plume, and also the mayor of the city of Calgary, Dave Bronconnier, had sent a letter to the Premier requesting representation from the province of Alberta in the negotiations between the two, and the Premier has replied, sent a letter back, and has delegated the Ministry of Transportation to participate in the negotiations.

Ms Graham: Mr. Speaker, given that the province will be participating, then, in this negotiation, does this mean that the road is a provincial highway, or will it be a city road, or do we know?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our interest, of course, is to complete the Calgary ring road, and in order for it to be a ring road it has to have a multilane freeway status. If these negotiations produce fruitful and we do have the necessary right-of-way for an expressway, then I assume that the province will be involved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Graham: Mr. Speaker, thank you. If this is a ring road, then will this be benefiting from the $150 million that Allan Rock announced would be coming Calgary's way for a ring road?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises actually a good question, because so far, to date, we've only received confirmation by way of a fax of $150 million for the completion of ring roads for both Edmonton and Calgary. The comment was made that the federal government would pay for the ring roads around both of the cities. Well, the total cost of the ring roads is about $2.6 billion, and if you read the last budget from the federal government, it had $3 billion for infrastructure over 10 years. Our share of that would be about $30 million, so I would think that at that rate it will probably take 86 years to complete.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Injured Workers' Allegations

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Justice:

when letters from injured workers alleging criminal wrongdoing in their cases with the WCB are forwarded to the Justice department by MLAs, what procedures does the ministry follow?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't paying attention, and I do apologize.

The Speaker: An answer was provided. Question two.

Mr. Bonner: To the Solicitor General: when a letter alleging bribery involving the WCB is forwarded to the Solicitor General, what procedure does her department follow?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this question, and that is a very good question. If there are accusations about bribery, we will forward that letter and have the police investigate.

Mr. Hancock: If I could supplement that answer, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to assume that a similar question was asked of myself, and the proper process, of course, would be the same: to refer it to the police for investigation.

Mr. Bonner: To the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker: given that the WCB is an arm's-length organization from the government, why did the Solicitor General's department choose not to send a letter to the police but, instead, sent the letter of investigation to the WCB to have them explain it away?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, I appreciate what the hon. member is saying. I really don't know what he's talking about. If he'd be kind enough to send me the information, I'll certainly look into it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Health Care Labour Legislation

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For over a year the Labour Relations Board has been spearheading a comprehensive review of health care bargaining units. This has been a multistakeholder process involving government, health care employers, and health care unions. The LRB is examining both the number of bargaining units and their geographic scope and looking at the impact of changes in regional health authority boundaries. I'll be tabling the latest update from the LRB later on. The first two questions are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Why is the minister casting aside more than a year's work by the Labour Relations Board in favour of ham-fisted unilateralism to change the rules through legislation, changes cooked up by a secret cabinet committee?

Mr. Dunford: Well, first of all, I want to thank the Labour Relations Board for all their diligent work over the past year. They obviously haven't been just sitting around knitting.

The situation is quite clear, Mr. Speaker. We had a situation just recently where we had a change in the boundaries, a change in the number of regional health authorities, and it is this government's wish and desire to remove any sort of long-term reconfiguration, then, that's going to take place. We're going to do it through legislation, and we'll do it quickly, and it'll allow all the parties then to be able to adjust very, very quickly instead of having to extend over years and years and years of hearings.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary to the same minister: why should Alberta's registered nurses continue bargaining with the provincial health authorities when the rug under negotiations has literally been pulled away as a result of the cabinet's secret plan to unilaterally change the rules?

Mr. Dunford: Again we have another yarn. He talks about some kind of secret situation. I mean, what does he think we in government do if we meet constantly? We'd like to have a way in which sometimes we could get rid of some of those meetings actually, Mr. Speaker. And if you think that we would do anything ad hoc . . . Are you listening or what? [interjections] He's not listening.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Premier. Why has the government through a secret cabinet committee chosen the path of confrontation that involves a unilateral imposition of an unjust law that will surely provoke civil disobedience, following the Premier's shining example that he has set, while driving health care providers out of the province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this really has not been the path of confrontation. Actually, it has been the path of intelligence. But needless to say, the NDs can't understand that. Any path of intelligence is something that would be strange and unusual to them. They would rather sit around doing their knitting. You know, I don't know how much mental stimulation that provides, but perhaps the NDs would be interested in some numbers. They're very simple, and it would put their claims to shame, to say the least.

He talks about legislation that's driving health care workers out of the province. You know, contrary to what they say, the numbers show a steady increase in the number of health care workers in Alberta. This is fact. This is absolute fact. The number of fully licensed physicians has increased by 626 over the last three years. The number of registered nurses has increased by 1,517 during the last few years. The number of licensed practical nurses has increased by 741 in the last few years. The number of postsecondary seats in health care has increased by 2,116 in the last four years. I know the NDs will never ever have the opportunity of participating in a Premiers' conference or a ministerial meeting involving colleagues from across the country, but I can tell you that at Premiers' conferences that I've attended, other provinces and other Premiers have frequently expressed concerns that Alberta, because of our progressive policies, because of our good policies, is luring away their health workers because of our nation-leading standards and salaries and working conditions and other conditions that prevail here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Education Spending

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Greater St. Albert Catholic school board distributed a letter to parents on February 28 – and I will table the letter later today – indicating that the arbitration award of 14 percent has not been matched by grant increases, which have amounted to 6 percent. Members of my constituency have raised questions about the amount of government funding, and listening to the minister's response to a question earlier today, it is my understanding that the amount of funding was more than the 6 percent salary bonus, if you will. The letter also indicates that the school board is saying that they must take action. To the Minister of Learning: are there any outcomes from the Edmonton public school board's audit that might help the other boards as well, particularly St. Albert?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In direct response to the question, it's still too early to see what is happening with the Edmonton public school board audit. I'm anticipating that that will be done by the end of this month, and we hope to have results at that time. I will say that in the first week that we have been in there we have found some very encouraging results. We have found some issues, but we're also working closely with them. I will say, as well, that I sent a letter to the chairman of Edmonton public saying that they could move $1.9 million into their operating from their administration. So that has moved down already.

Mr. Speaker, the point that I'll make about Greater St. Albert, though, is that they did have the 4 percent and 2 percent, but they also received 3 percent and 3 and a half percent. So today I am sending Mr. Dave Caron, who is the board chairman, a simple letter, and it is quite simply saying, more or less: what did you do with the other 3 percent and 3 and a half percent? We're asking them to determine where those dollars were spent. They say that they only have 4 percent and 2 percent for teachers' salaries, so we want to know where the other dollars went.

The other point that I will make, Mr. Speaker, is that – you know, it's funny that when we actually ask for accountability on where taxpayer dollars are spent, we hear guffaws from the other side – Greater St. Albert, as well, their accumulated operating surplus on August 31, '02, was roughly $1.547 million. Their projected accumulated operating surplus as of August 31 of '03 is $492,000 to the plus. To the hon. member: to the plus.

So I find it a little difficult with this letter. We will be asking them to show us where they spent the money. I understand that there is also a decline in enrollment in their region, but we will be straightening this out.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to ask the minister that if he was requested and working with the board, if the minister's department would be prepared to assist Greater St. Albert with an audit similar to the one of Edmonton public.

Dr. Oberg: We certainly would be. Greater St. Albert is not one of our highest priorities because, as you see, they are sitting in a positive situation with around $492,000 accumulated operating surplus anticipated at the end of this year. Mr. Speaker, if they want help in budgeting, if they want help in divvying out their taxpayers' dollars, we'd be more than happy to do that, and we certainly would at their request. I will be expecting, though, their answer as to where the 3 percent and 3 and a half percent went. If it didn't go to teachers' salaries, then I want to know where the dollars went to. So hopefully we will have that soon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's all.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Canadian Interuniversity Sport Volleyball Championship

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize an outstanding group of young athletes who represented the U of A with grace and glory at the recent 2003 Canadian Interuniversity Sport's volleyball championships. The men's national championship was hosted by the University of Alberta. About 2,000 volleyball fans filled the stands to cheer on their Golden Bears defending their national title in the gold medal match. Congratulations to the Bears on winning the silver medal in this match.

The U of A Pandas traveled to Quebec City to compete in the women's national volleyball championship and earned a bronze medal by defeating their southern rivals, the University of Calgary. This is the Pandas' first CIS championship medal since their remarkable run of six straight national titles from 1995 to 2000. Congratulations.

On behalf of all of the members of this Assembly I congratulate all these young athletes and their coaches, Laurie Eisler and Richard Schick, on their outstanding achievements and on making Edmonton again the city of champions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Citizenship Awards

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to recognize the five recipients of the first annual Queen Elizabeth II golden jubilee citizenship medals, which, I might add, are sponsored by Alberta Community Development and Alberta Learning. These medals honour the accession of Queen Elizabeth II to the throne and her service to the Commonwealth over the past 50 years. Every year one student from each high school is first nominated to receive the Premier's citizenship award. From this group of worthy candidates the five most outstanding will receive the medal and a $5,000 cash award for their education or personal development needs. They will also receive a congratulatory letter from Her Honour, the Hon. Lois Hole, Lieutenant Governor of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the inaugural recipients of this new scholarship and medal program are James Boldt of Pincher Creek, Trevor Brown of Lethbridge, Sophia Di Castri of St. Albert, Michelle Durocher of Fishing Lake, and – I'm very proud to say – Kelsey MacMillan, one of my constituents, from Irma. Please join me in congratulating these exceptional young Albertans on their outstanding achievements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Kananaskis Country

Mrs. Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to recognize the 25th anniversary of Kananaskis Country. Encompassing more than 4,000 square kilometres of diverse landscapes, from glacier-capped mountains to rolling foothills, Kananaskis Country is the jewel of our province. This multiple-use area provides a variety of year-round recreational opportunities for Albertans and visitors to our province.

With more than 2 million visitors a year Kananaskis is also a major contributor to the prosperity of our province. We have discovered much about the area wildlife and landscape through research conducted over the past 25 years, and Kananaskis programs have been recognized with top awards from Interpretation Canada for nearly 10 years. Kananaskis Country is well protected, with over 60 percent of its land designated as provincial parks, wildland parks, an ecological reserve, and a wildlife sanctuary.

Please join me in saluting this anniversary milestone and in recognizing the value of Kananaskis Country and its importance in maintaining the quality of life that makes Alberta such a great place to live and visit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

University of Alberta Sports Teams

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The University of Alberta, which I am proud to say is in my constituency of Edmonton-Riverview, is a dominating force in Canadian university sports. Whether it is in volleyball, basketball, track and field, hockey, wrestling, football, soccer, or any number of other sports, the Golden Bears men's teams and the Pandas women's teams do themselves, their university, and their province proud with their performances. The athletes, coaches, and staff of these teams put in long and grueling hours, and they do it for the best of reasons: the challenge of improving personal performances, the thrill of competing, the fun of playing, the pleasure of fitness, and the fulfillment of teamwork. And let's not forget the joy of victory, which the Pandas and Golden Bears are able to celebrate more often than any university in Canada and, frankly, more often than most people can count.

Gold, silver, and bronze championships are won by the U of A every few weeks. Just this past weekend silver and bronze medals were won in men's and women's volleyball and in track, and there are great chances that later this month there will be more national victories in hockey and basketball. So to the University of Alberta and its sports teams: congratulations. We're proud of you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Jean Paré

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and recognize a truly outstanding Albertan. You may have heard of Mrs. Jean Paré, the author of Company's Coming cookbooks, which, incidentally, recently passed the 20 million mark in copies sold. Along with her son Grant and her daughter Gail, Jean remains very active in all aspects of the business. The company is a great example of Alberta's success on an international scale.

However, there is another side to Mrs. Paré that you may not be familiar with. Jean's concern and care for others, her unassuming personality with no desire for recognition are what make her an exceptional humanitarian. She is a committed foster parent, a dedicated member of the IODE, is active in her church, and sings with the ladies' auxiliary choir. The local food banks and women's shelters are constant beneficiaries of her unselfish generosity. In spite of her many commitments she is a dedicated friend and a wonderful neighbour.

Through all of this Jean has been supported by her husband, Larry. Together they are indeed a couple that all Albertans can be proud of. It was my honour to present Mrs. Paré with the Queen's golden jubilee medal in Vermilion recently. Her business success along with her commitment to community values make her a worthy recipient and an Albertan we can all be proud of.

Pharmacist Awareness Week

Mrs. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, for generations the local pharmacist has been a trusted source of practical advice. After a minimum of five years of university, four of them in pharmacy and pharmaceutical sciences, no one is more able to take on the responsibility of providing advice in dispensing drugs that do so much good, but if taken incorrectly or wrongly, the combination can cost a life.

While pharmacists are experts in medication, they do so much more. We rely on their counsel to manage our diseases and conditions, even how to prevent disease. Many pharmacies sponsor cholesterol and blood glucose monitoring services and counseling on how to best quit smoking. Some pharmacies offer advanced education on diseases and conditions like asthma, diabetes, osteoporosis, or MS.

Pharmacist Awareness Week runs this week, from March 3 to 9. This is our opportunity to thank Alberta's 3,000 pharmacists, the majority of whom work in 800 community pharmacies across this province plus the many in alternative related jobs in hospitals, universities, labs, et cetera.

Thank you to my favourite pharmacist, Bob Bailey.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Arthur Mano Bollo-Kamara

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize and honour an extremely gifted and extraordinary Albertan. Dr. Arthur Mano Bollo-Kamara was born in 1950 in West Africa and passed away in Sherwood Park on October 27, 2002.

Dr. Bollo-Kamara dedicated his life to scholarly pursuits as well as to the pursuit of the arts by way of his musical talents. He served with such professional organizations as the Association of the Chemical Profession of Alberta, the Western Environmental Agricultural Laboratory Association, and the Standards Council of Canada.

As founder and performer of the Wajjo drummers and member of the successful Alberta group called Juba, his music gave us food for our souls. He also shared his love of music by serving on the board of the Edmonton folk festival.

Mr. Speaker, a research scientist with the spirit and soul of a poet. I am honoured to pay tribute to this great Albertan, and we miss him among us today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just a couple of additional recognitions. On this day 62 years ago the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose entered the world, and on this day 11 years ago the electorate of Little Bow delivered to this Assembly the current member.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present a petition with 40 signatures from Highwood and area residents asking for the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to "reinstatement natural-gas rebates immediately."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present to the Assembly a petition organized by Ms Joanne Black of Calgary, and it reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to implement the income recommendations of the 2001 MLA Committee Low Income Programs . . . (low-income Albertans with disabilities or other barriers that prevent them from working will receive adequate and assured income support).

This is signed by over 40 Calgarians.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a letter to Mr. Dave Caron to be tabled that I alluded to in response to a question I was asked today in question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table five copies of a petition with 507 signatures from residents of the town of Nanton requesting that the government give priority to "enforcing a regulated cost for utilities that would be affordable to all residents of Alberta."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Community Action Project I'd like to table 755 letters and signatures from residents living in Edmonton's inner-city communities supporting Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. Because of the volume I have provided the Clerk's office with the required number of copies. These people agree that Bill 206 will help improve their communities, making them healthier and safer, deterring sex trade offenders from entering their neighbourhoods.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first tabling is signatures. There are 605 signatures on this petition urging the residents of Alberta to petition the Legislative Assembly to "urge the Government to re-instate natural-gas rebates immediately." This petition comes from citizens of Redwater, Gibbons, Radway, Edmonton, Egremont, Bon Accord, all over that part of Alberta.

My second petition is five copies of a graph that I worked on with some other able-bodied people, and it's entitled Deregulation, Unplugged. It is a graph that demonstrates how electricity can be an inexpensive essential service under the Liberal caucus's low-cost plan, and anyone can access this graph, that is not available in the Assembly this afternoon, at altaliberals.ab.ca.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter from a constituent, Sharon Babish. Mrs. Babish is a widow and is trying to make the point to the government that it's very difficult for low-income seniors to be able to stay in their homes and pay increased prices on power and gas. She notes the increase on user fees for things like licence plates, increased property taxes, telephone, cable, et cetera. She's asking for help for all the seniors in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon, and with your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies. The first is a letter from an injured worker in the province to an MLA.

The second is the required number of copies of the WCB benefit payments listing showing that this injured worker got compensation for $114,000, medical aid for $40,000, and a pension of $155,199.06, for a total of $309,847.70, but in this particular case this injured worker has not received one penny of this pension.

Finally, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from the public security division of the Solicitor General to the fraud investigations at the Workers' Compensation Board. This clearly indicates that the allegations put forward by that injured worker were not forwarded to the police but to the WCB, who was supposed to be the investigator for this complaint, and the last line reads, "Can you please review and advise me what information should be provided from the Solicitor General to [the injured worker]." So this clearly indicates that the information received . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. A tabling?

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. First, I table five copies of the House of Commons report regarding the question of privilege raised by Vic Toews, MP.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is appropriate copies of a letter from Mark Asbell, chair of Alberta Labour Relations Board, dated January 21, 2003, which gives an update on the Labour Relations Board review of standard bargaining units in health care.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a letter from a woman in Calgary in response to the Energy minister's solution to cope with the rising utility costs. She writes that since December 2002 she has set the thermostat at 15 degrees, worn tights under jeans, wool socks and heavy slippers, two sweaters and a jacket, one bulb burning at a time, sponge baths, using a sink for laundry, and restricting eating. It has not worked.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a copy of a letter, which I alluded to today, from the Greater St. Albert Catholic schools which was distributed to all parents in their area.

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday afternoon in the Assembly when we were dealing with a matter before the Assembly, I indicated that I would receive submissions from any hon. member that wanted to make them to me as of 10 o'clock this morning, and I'll file the documents that I had received by 10 o'clock this morning for complete transparency in this matter. I'll refer to them later, in a moment or two.

Additional tablings?

Privilege

Contempt of the Assembly

The Speaker: Well, we do have a matter arising out of the business of the Assembly yesterday. After offering all hon. members an opportunity to make a submission yesterday afternoon and then further indicating that I would receive any pertinent information that members thought would be pertinent in any way to this matter of privilege by 10 o'clock this morning, I'm now prepared to rule on the purported question of privilege that was raised by the leader of the third party yesterday.

I would like to note that in addition to the submissions that were put forward on this matter yesterday in the House, both the leader of the third party and the Government House Leader have taken advantage of my invitation and submitted supplementary material to my office prior to 10 this morning. In addition, the Department of Energy submitted some information to my office about what transpired at the briefing, all of which I have tabled now for the benefit of members.

As a preliminary matter the chair notes that the leader of the third party provided written notice of his question of privilege to my office yesterday at 10:25 a.m., thereby fulfilling the two-hour notice requirement under Standing Order 15(2). There was no dispute by the Government House Leader yesterday about this question being raised at the earliest possible opportunity.

The leader of the third party has submitted that there has been a contempt of this Assembly. The chair would like to remind members that breaches of privilege and contempts of the Assembly are treated in the same manner, and therefore the process outlined in Standing Order 15 applies.

The chair quotes from page 108 of the 22nd edition of Erskine May:

Generally speaking, any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

The chair has carefully reviewed the discussion in yesterday's Hansard and the material provided this morning. The material facts in this matter are as follows. There was a media briefing on Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, that took place in this building on Monday, March 3, at 11 a.m. The media advisory for this briefing confirms that only media were invited and that department officials were available to provide information and answer questions regarding Bill 19. The material provided to my office this morning from the government indicates that there were no documents distributed to the media at the briefing, but information about the contents of the bill was provided. Bill 19 appeared on notice for the first time on the Order Paper for Thursday, February 27. This bill was introduced and received first reading yesterday, March 4. The chair notes that the sponsor of this bill is the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. However, this bill is clearly a government bill, and it was moved to Government Bills and Orders on the Order Paper by resolution of this Assembly yesterday during the Routine. Moreover, the February 26 direction to the Clerk's office to place this bill on notice on the Order Paper came from an official at Executive Council, not a private member. The leader of the third party advised this House yesterday that on Monday at noon the media questioned him on information relating to Bill 19. To summarize his argument, the leader of the third party asserts that his rights as a member of this Assembly were interfered with in a serious way as he was not privy to the same information as the members of the media who had attended the briefing.

Hon. members, it is the Speaker's role to find whether a case brought by a member constitutes a prima facie question of privilege. This is a threshold role. The Speaker does not determine whether there is actually a breach of privilege or contempt as that is up to the Assembly. As Joseph Maingot states at page 221 in his work Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, second edition:

While the Speaker may find that a prima facie case of privilege exists and give the matter precedence in debate, it is the House alone that decides whether a breach of privilege or a contempt has occurred, for only the House has the power to commit or punish for contempt.

In his presentation yesterday the leader of the third party referred extensively to the March 19, 2001, ruling by Speaker Milliken of the Canadian House of Commons at pages 1840 and 1841 of Commons Debates for that day, that there had been a prima facie contempt of the House when the federal Minister of Justice provided a technical briefing to the media about a bill that was on notice and introduced following the meeting. That case is very, very similar to the case presented by the hon. third party leader yesterday. The only difference seems to be that in the House of Commons case, the briefing was the same day as the bill was introduced, and in the Bill 19 situation the briefing was the day before introduction and the bill here was introduced by a private member rather than a minister.

In essence, Speaker Milliken found that once a bill is on notice, media briefings are not allowed. To quote briefly from his ruling:

The convention of the confidentiality of bills on notice is necessary, not only so that members themselves may be well informed, but also because of the pre-eminent role which the House plays and must play in the legislative affairs of the nation.

Following his ruling a motion was passed referring the matter to the House Standing Committee on Procedure and House Affairs, which found that there had been a contempt of the House. The matter was effectively resolved in the committee when the minister apologized and indicated that she had instructed the department not to provide advance copies of bills, other materials, or technical briefings until after a bill is introduced.

As the chair indicated yesterday and as the Government House Leader pointed out in his written submission this morning, there is a March 7, 2000, ruling by this Speaker where a similar issue was raised about a media briefing on what was then Bill 11 prior to the introduction of the bill. Based on the precedents that existed at that time, the chair found that there was not a prima facie question of privilege.

Of course, since that time there is the ruling by Speaker Milliken of the Canadian House of Commons. The chair wants to make it very, very clear that the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta is not bound by decisions from the Canadian House of Commons or any other Assembly in Canada. This would be contrary to the nature of Canada's federal system. However, how could this chair hold that the Canadian House of Commons and its members are to be accorded greater respect and dignity than the members of this Assembly? The role of the chair cannot be to lessen the dignity and the respect of this Assembly or its members. The chair agrees entirely with Speaker Milliken when he states:

To deny to members information concerning business that is about to come before the House, while at the same time providing such information to media that will likely be questioning members about that business, is a situation that the Chair cannot condone.

The chair would also like to cite from the final paragraph of the House of Commons standing committee report where it states:

The rights of the House and its Members in this role are central to our constitutional and democratic government. This case should serve as a warning that our House will insist on the full recognition of its constitutional function and historic privileges across the full spectrum of government.

Accordingly, the department briefing provided to the media concerning Bill 19 when the bill was on notice but before it was introduced constitutes a prima facie case of privilege as it offends the dignity and the authority of this Assembly. As the chair has noted on many previous occasions, the principle of ministerial responsibility holds that ministers are responsible for the actions of their officials and, in turn, are responsible to the Assembly for those acts. Strictly speaking, this constitutes a prima facie contempt of the Assembly, although it is treated in the same way as a breach of privilege.

The chair would also like to briefly comment on the next steps in this process and make some comments about what this ruling does not say. First, the chair is not ruling that consultations on proposed legislation are out of order. This is not in any way the intention of the chair's ruling nor the House of Commons' ruling nor of the committee that reported to the House of Commons. The Standing Committee on Procedure and House Affairs stated at page 4 of its report that there are often extensive consultations at the policy development and legislative drafting stages of bills which are exclusively within the purview of the government. The committee found that the House's interest arises when the notice of intention to introduce the bill is given to the appropriate House officer. Furthermore, the committee found that the conventions concerning lockups for the budget or the Auditor General's report were not affected.

Yesterday the Government House Leader referred to a practice of the sharing of bills with opposition members before introduction. The committee addressed that issue too by saying that the adoption of a policy on briefings should not prevent the provision of courtesy copies of government bills on a confidential basis to opposition critics shortly before their introduction. Of course, these are matters that can be considered by a committee of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta if the appropriate motion is moved and passed by the Assembly. I would expect that the leader of the third party would put on notice a motion to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing.

Regardless of the disposition of that motion, the chair wants to strongly encourage members to find a mechanism to address the broader issue of how consultation in this technological age can be accomplished without violating the ancient privileges and rights of the Assembly. Hon. members should be aware that as parliamentarians we have a duty to keep our practices and procedures in step with the developments in society. Committee consideration would provide members with an opportunity to consider these issues. Some years ago there was a Select Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform to consider certain issues of procedure such as the sub judice rule. Perhaps that committee could be reconstituted or the matter referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing. The chair wishes to stress that this is a matter of concern to all members, not just one caucus.

I would now refer the leader of the third party to Standing Order 15(6), which provides for the next step in this process; namely, that a member "may give notice not later than at the conclusion of [tomorrow's sitting] of a motion to deal with the matter further."

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona I give notice that tomorrow under section 15(6) of our Standing Orders I will move that the matter of the question of privilege raised on March 4, 2003, by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona regarding the Energy ministry media briefing on Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, prior to it being introduced in the Legislature be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing to review the procedure to be followed in such cases in light of the Speaker's ruling of March 7, 2000, and the ruling of Speaker Milliken of the House of Commons of March 19, 2001, and the subsequent report of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Procedure and House Affairs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm prepared to take direction. If you would prefer to deal with this motion today, we're prepared to do so. Otherwise, I'm providing notice for tomorrow.

The Speaker: Well, with the notice of motion, that's entirely up to the wish of the members. I can be guided here with respect to if the members want to let this stay over for a day – notice was given – or to deal with it today. That's entirely the wish of the members.

Hon. Government House Leader, I don't know if you're in a position to say anything.

Mr. Hancock: Well, with respect to the motion itself, Mr. Speaker, I would prefer that we deal with it tomorrow. With respect to any other business arising from this question of privilege, if it was to be dealt with today, that wouldn't be a problem. But I think we ought to consider your ruling before we act upon it.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to comment on this issue. In fact, since I have assumed elected office, there is no entity that I've held with greater respect or with greater dignity than the proceedings not only of this House but of the members that are involved in this House and the proceedings that go on inside this Assembly.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, it is my duty as the Minister of Energy to apologize to the leader of the third party, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and to say that there was absolutely no intent to obstruct or to impede the work of this Assembly or his work. If there has been, it is my deep and profound regret. I will continue to hold this House in the highest respect, the highest esteem for the work that it does for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it's been an important piece. It's been an important piece of learning. It is, as you have commented in your ruling, a way that we try to cope with the fast pace of technology, courtesy, and the ability for all Albertans to know the important dealings that go on in this House.

So let me finish, Mr. Speaker, by offering my profound apology, profound regrets, and to ensure that as long as I am minister in this portfolio, it will not happen again.

The Speaker: Let me say thank you to the Minister of Energy. Thank you.

Hon. leader of the third party, we will await the motion until tomorrow. Did you want to accept this?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I just want to rise and thank the minister for his very clear and strong statement not only extending an apology to me personally but to note that the integrity of the House, its dignity and its respect and its ability to perform the appropriate role in our government system, is as important to him as to every other member. So I want to thank him and await our discussion on the motion that's before the House tomorrow.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this can be a place of great honour, and we've just seen that, so I appreciate that.

The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Mr. Hancock: I think that in light of our discussion on a rather profound matter, the point of order that I intended to raise today could be skipped.

Speaker's Ruling Exhibits

The Speaker: Okay. The chair will make a comment, though, not knowing what the point of order was.

There was a situation today where two hon. members were sitting with knitting needles in their context. The chair did not note that for a number of seconds and could not understand what the response was from the Assembly with respect to this matter. I don't know if that would have been ruled out as a prop or not, because I don't know what it would have signified as a prop. Surely, some members will look at certain pieces of paper and some books and some documents, and I suspect that members need to bring their domestic chores into the Assembly. There's nothing that I can understand that would preclude that.

In the other one the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did have a certain piece of paper that had certain colours on it, which was a publication of a certain political party, and that could not be construed as a prop either. Members stand up in this Assembly with documents in their hands. So clarification of that.

Point of Order

Tabling a Cited Document

Mr. Hancock: I'm sorry. I should have probably, then, put it in context. I wasn't going to complain about the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona sticking to his knitting but was going to suggest that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar ought to table the document that he referred to extensively regardless of its colour.

The Speaker: And that probably would have been in order as there were other ministers who were encouraged today and other members who were encouraged today, but the member may choose to do that tomorrow or not.

Mr. MacDonald: I certainly will do that tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

head: Government Bills and Orders

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to move third reading of Bill 17, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few final comments at third reading on Bill 17. I think it has to be noted that this bill asks for $206.642 million in extra funding to defray some additional expenses that the government has incurred this year. I think we all understand that there are things that happen during a budget year that could not be anticipated when the budget was drawn up and that would cause the government to have to make some adjustments. Those adjustments, when they come before us, are hard for the opposition if they aren't linked to particular parts of the business plan so that we can understand why the changes are made and where they sit in the government's overall scheme of things. But, as I said, we understand that those occasions arise. We also understand that a number of the items that are included in Bill 17 are things that Albertans need and that the money is needed for them now.

I think, though, that it wouldn't be fair not to comment on what's asked for in a couple of instances, and one is the Learning requisition, where I think the total is $35 million that is being asked for. A large piece of that is for the situation that arose out of the strike with the teachers last year. There's money in here that came out of that dispute. I guess the point that I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that the government is able to come back to the Assembly when it is faced with an outcome and ask for money to cover an agreement that has been reached during a particular situation. Unfortunately, school boards don't have that same privilege, and I think it's unfortunate. In fact, I was looking forward with some anticipation to there being some sums in the Learning department to help boards meet the obligation imposed upon them by the arbitrator. As I said, I'm disappointed that there isn't a sum in the Learning department's estimates for boards.

I think that the sum that boards have indicated they need, that would help them make up the difference, was $142 million province-wide as a result of the arbitrated settlement. It's a huge sum of money. I've heard the minister explain how he thinks boards should be making up that arbitrated settlement. He indicates that, yes, there were the 4 percent and the 2 percent in the budget for wages, but then he also goes on to indicate that the 3.5 percent for classrooms should also have allowed boards to make up the arbitrated settlement. Well, 4 and 2 and 3.5 don't make up 14, Mr. Speaker. It also ignores the fact that that 3.5 percent was dedicated in the budget for classrooms. That 3.5 percent was dedicated to cover all of the expenses: inflation, increased enrollment, all the kinds of things that happen to school boards.

So I think it's really distressing to hear the minister try to pass off and take no responsibility for the position that the school boards find themselves in as a result of an arbitrated settlement that this government put into place. It would have relieved so many school boards, it would have relieved the pressure on so many schools across this province if the sums that are needed could have been included.

There was a forum last evening. I've heard from parents across the province distressed at what's happening, the proposals for September 2003 that boards are having to come up with as a result of the underfunding and the box that they find themselves in as a result of those arbitrated settlements.

So I look at the sums here, particularly in Learning, and I won't be supporting Bill 17 for a number of reasons but in large part for what isn't there and what should be there in terms of the Learning budget.

I think we also have to note that every time we have something requisitioned, such as those that are before us now, it really is a fault in the budgeting process. Hopefully, the stability fund, the funds that are being created, will help in the future. I'm not quite sure how they might be applied, but I think there's the possibility for the government not having to budget in this way and at the same time to respond to emergencies and rapidly changing conditions.

I guess if there's another area that I'd just like to touch on briefly, it's the fact that we don't see in the budget any relief for Albertans with respect to utilities, and that's, as I said, very unfortunate. We had an 80-year-old senior get herself to our constituency office in order to tell us how badly she is suffering as a result of the high utility costs and to plead with us to try to do something for her. This would have been an opportunity, a place in the budgeting process, in the supplementary appropriations that are before us, for those individuals and, in fact, all Albertans to be looked after, and again I think it's with regret that that has not happened.

I think with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 3 Electric Utilities Act

Dr. Pannu moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act, be not now read a second time because the Legislative Assembly believes that it will cause inefficiency and confusion in the electricity production and delivery system and increase costs for Alberta consumers.

[Debate adjourned March 4: Mr. Mason speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Could you indicate to me, please, how much time I have left?

The Acting Speaker: Seven minutes left.

Mr. Mason: Seven minutes. Okay. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

Just to conclude my remarks from the other evening, I do believe that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's amendment is a wise one, and I think it merits consideration by all members of this Assembly. We have seen the great experiment with deregulation in Alberta in action for some three years now, and we've seen a number of assertions by the government and different ministers at different times as this experiment has unfolded. We saw at the beginning of my comments that the Premier had said that competition in the marketplace would result in lower costs for consumers of electricity than existed previously; that is to say, under the regulated system that had served Alberta for many years before. We've seen that the contrary has come to pass. We now have power prices in this province between 40 and 100 percent higher for consumers than before deregulation was implemented. We have seen that that pattern exists in other jurisdictions where this experiment in some form or another has been undertaken. So we can see clearly the logic of the hon. member's motion, that it will increase costs for Alberta consumers.

Going back to the auctions, the PPAs, the government indicated before those auctions that they would expect that several billion dollars would be returned in order to pay for the production of electricity by the depreciated generation assets of the system, but we saw that the auction and the auction after that fell billions of dollars short of what the government had set as a benchmark for the success of this auction. So we already knew at that time, Mr. Speaker, that the process was not unfolding as the government had predicted and that the entire experiment was in serious trouble.

Unfortunately, the government decided to forge ahead with electricity deregulation even in the face of these facts, and as electricity prices began to mount, especially just before the election, the government was forced to act and froze electricity prices. It capped them. In other words, it stepped into the marketplace and regulated them after companies, for example, Enmax and EPCOR, had purchased electricity on the spot market at very, very high prices to serve new customers outside the cities. This, of course, put these utilities into a financial crisis because they were forced to sell electricity at prices well below the prices they paid for that power in the first place.

So the government promised them that if the prices were frozen at that point – and this point was just before the last provincial election, Mr. Speaker. This is a familiar theme, I know, but it's a very true one. The government froze them but promised these companies that they could recoup their lost revenues by adding rate riders to the subsequent year's power bills after the election was out of the way. So the rate riders, that have given so much grief to so many people and which so many people in this province don't understand, are simply paying back the power companies for having to sell power at below cost before the election.

This was a political move; it couldn't be anything else, Mr. Speaker. It was a deliberate effort on the part of government to force power companies to provide cheap power before the election, yet the ratepayers have to pay back the power companies once the election is safely out of the way. So you see how this system of deregulation has developed.

Now the government is going even further. They're committing themselves even more deeply. They're diving headfirst into the quicksand, Mr. Speaker, not letting it suck them down reluctantly at all but are actually diving headfirst into this, and this act will result in permanent high prices. I'll tell you why. Any company that comes into this market and doesn't get a regulated rate of return takes a higher risk in Alberta's market, and in order to get a higher risk, they will expect a higher rate of return. Before they will invest, they will expect higher power prices in order to support that investment and that higher rate of return.

There's a structural flaw in deregulation, and that is that by forcing people to risk half-billion dollar generating assets and transmission assets, it guarantees that the rate of return has to be higher, and therefore the price of electricity has to be higher. This is something that I think most people who invest – and many people do today – will understand. If you want to invest in bonds, you get a lower rate of return. If you invest in equities and you take your chances, you expect a higher rate of return because there's high risk. The same thing applies here.

So this is, I think, the last chance for the Assembly to stop this reckless direction, to ask the minister and to ask the government to consider whether or not it really, really does want to go down this path, because once committed to this path, Mr. Speaker, the consequences for Albertans will be grave. So I urge members to support this motion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I am rising to speak to what we commonly call a hoist amendment, which is requesting that Bill 3, Electric Utilities Act, be not now read a second time because the Legislative Assembly believes that it will cause inefficiency and confusion in the electricity production and delivery system and increase costs for Alberta consumers.

I'm facing a dilemma as I rise to speak to this motion. In bringing forward a hoist motion at this point, it in effect has ceased debate in second reading of this bill, which is a frustration for those of us who wish to speak in second. We have now lost that opportunity through the choices made by the mover of the hoist.

On the other hand, I am extremely frustrated by the situation around electricity and the result of what's left after the government's mucking about and deregulating and re-regulating and deregulating the electricity market. I don't really want to see a delay of any kind. We need some improvement in the situation and some stability now. There's often a time limit set in a hoist where it says: not now be read a second time but be read in six months or so. That's not in this motion, so it's just saying that it never be read again. I think there's definitely a need for change in this system. Is this bill, Bill 3, the change that is needed? Not from what I've seen of it.

So you can see my dilemma, Mr. Speaker. I'm somewhat frustrated at the hoist being brought in now, which precluded my colleagues being able to speak in second on this particular bill, but on the other hand I think the bill is not very good. I'm trying to choose kind words here this afternoon. I think it's a terrible bill, and it doesn't address any of the problems that we've seen with the deregulation of the electrical market. We need stability in that market now, and we need the change that's going to bring that stability now.

What does that mean for the constituents of Edmonton-Centre? What it's not doing is it's not improving the situation of the many people who live in condominiums in Edmonton-Centre and are trying to work with their condominium boards, the number of calls I get from treasurers of associations like that that are trying to figure out how they set the budget for the condominium association for the upcoming year when the prices seem to go nowhere but up. But how far up? How much do they have to increase their condo fees to cover the costs of this? Then, of course, I have the people who actually own the condos who are calling me and saying: "What am I supposed to do? I bought into this condo at $56,000. My condo fees when I moved in were, you know, a reasonable $200 a month. Now they're talking a thousand dollars a month. They're going to have to go to $1,200 a month, and besides all of that I'm supposed to come up with the money for the sinking fund, that we're all required to have now. I can't afford to stay in my own condominium. What am I supposed to do?" You know, I can't give them an answer for that. I've consulted with the banks to find out what advice they could offer someone, and I'm certainly willing to and do indeed pass that information on to people, but it is a real concern. I'm disappointed that members from the government side would feel that this would be a laughing matter or that somehow they wouldn't be believing that this is in fact happening to people. Perhaps if they got out from underneath the dome a bit more often and actually answered the phones in their offices and listened to what people were saying, they would understand that this is what's being faced by people.

An Hon. Member: Thousand dollar condo fees?

Ms Blakeman: Thousand dollar condo fees? Oh yeah, easily. Oh, yeah. What do you think? I'm making this stuff up? Of course these people tell me this.

An Hon. Member: You're absolutely making it up.

Ms Blakeman: No. No, I'm not.

An Hon. Member: You're reading it off your web site.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, that's baloney. Honest to goodness. Get out from underneath the dome, you guys. Listen to your constituents. [interjection] A thousand is what I said. Get out from under the dome. Talk to people.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has the floor.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. One of the original issues that came up around this is around the rebates that were offered for the electrical deregulation, just before the last election actually. What happened was that there was an offer of a $40 rebate directly on the bills of individual homeowners, but what that turned out to be was that it would go directly onto the bill of detached single-family dwellings or directly onto the bill of anyone that had a direct meter to their apartment. Some of the quite elderly in those three-floor walk-ups had their own meters, so they were getting the rebate directly onto their bills. Some of the very high-end condominiums also had their own meters, so they were getting the rebate directly on their bills.

But for any of those that were living especially in the high-rise apartment buildings or condominiums, there was one meter for the building. There was one bill that was received, either administered by a management company or by a condominium board or by the owners of an apartment building, for example. There was huge confusion because what happened there was that those buildings were deemed to be commercial and were offered the commercial rebate rate, and I'm trying to remember what that was now. I think it might have been 6 cents a kilowatt-hour, but I'm happy to be corrected on that. I don't remember. But it turned out to be far different and less money than the $40 that was being credited to people's single-family home bills each month. This is what I was told by people. When they calculated it, they found that it was less than that $40.

So here it was. The government was saying, "We're taking care of people in their homes," but it really depended on what kind of a home you had. If you had a single-family detached dwelling, yeah, you got the $40 directly on your bill. If you had a high-end condominium or one that was in a very small building, you probably got it as well. Everybody else was faced with this situation where they got less of a rebate, and it went directly to the management company, the condominium association, or the owners who were the ones that were receiving the one and only bill for the one and only meter in the building, and it was less of a rebate.

This caused huge confusion with people who kept calling, saying, "My rent is going up, and I'm not seeing the rebate. When do we get the rebate?" and trying to explain that they'd had it. It had gone to whoever gets the bill for the electricity in their building, and one presumes they had, as a result, not had their rent go up as much or had their condominium fee go up as much as it might have had that rebate not been applied against it. So huge confusion about that, people out there who still think that they're owed this rebate, and of course they've had it, although it never passed through their hands. The way that whole system was handled I said at the time was unfair. I still maintain that it was unfair because it did treat people differently, depending on what kind of lodging they had, whether they were in a high-rise apartment building or condo or a low-rise one or a single-family dwelling.

This is the kind of confusion that we get out of this government's program, and I'm not seeing those kinds of issues being addressed when I look at Bill 3. So am I willing to be supportive of a hoist motion that would take the entire bill away and trash it and, one presumes, say, "Start over again; we need a different one"? Yes. I'd prefer that we started over because I don't think Bill 3 is really going to address the problems that we've already seen as a result of electrical deregulation, but on the other hand what kind of delay are we looking at? Maybe it's possible to make something out of Bill 3. Maybe there are amendments that we could be bringing in, perhaps working with government, perhaps not, trying to improve what we've got. If you throw it out, you're looking at another six months for sure before there could be another bill coming, and that's not likely to get to this Legislature in time. So, in fact, we're looking at next spring, and that would mean people having to go through another summer – air-conditioning costs are on your electricity bill – and back around through another winter, and I don't think people can handle the uncertainty of all of that.

You know, when I talked about the budget and some of the other bills that the government's got up in front, I talked about instability and that people are trying to find some stability, and in this case they're trying to find some certainty. Once again this has been sort of a boomerang or ping-pong experience with electrical deregulation. People didn't understand it. It's incredibly complex. It didn't work. We ended up with these rate riders. We've got the rebates. And people still don't understand what the rate riders are.

It was two things that went on. After the election and after the rebates then we had, as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands quite clearly articulated – and I would refer people back to his arguments there of how, when the regulated rate option was brought in by the government or put in place, in fact the energy companies had a right to then recoup the difference between the regulated rate option and what they were actually purchasing the electricity at. Now, that's sitting on their bill as one extra price that they're paying every month, and on my bill I think that's around $12 or something every month. Then there was – I'm not going to remember the right name – the 2000. That was a rate rider, and the other one is the difference in the regulated rate option. There was a rate rider that was approved by the EUB in 2000 but, in fact, I think, never levied, and the companies were allowed to recoup that cost as well, and that was another $10 or something that's on my bill every month. So already you have $22 that will miraculously disappear just before the next election is called, so people can expect their electricity bill to go down.

An Hon. Member: Cynic.

Ms Blakeman: I'm being accused of being a cynic here, and, yes, I'm afraid I am, having been in this Assembly for six years now. Yeah, I'm a cynic about how these things always seem to get manipulated.

I'm undecided about whether to support this hoist or not because it doesn't put in place anything else that's going to help us deal with this or help our constituents deal with this.

Earlier today I tabled a letter from a senior who was saying: "Please understand. Give us a break. I mean, we're not getting significantly more money, yet all the user fees that we have to pay along with everyone else continue to rise." She used as an example car registration, which was now going from $52 to $68, and the $52, in fact, is an increase from a year or two ago. It seems to me that it wasn't that long ago that I was paying 34 bucks a year. Now we're looking at it being up to $68 a year. For someone on a fixed income that's a pretty significant increase over a relatively short period of time, and we're talking, I think, over three years or so.

So, certainly, for seniors and many people on a fixed income it is a real difficulty to deal with the increases in user fees – and, boy, is this government ever keen on them – plus dealing with the increases in utility costs, both electricity and gas utility costs. We know that there have been a number of increases over the past few years in residential telephone line rentals, and that will continue to go up as well. We're not even dealing there with inflationary increases in things like food and clothing. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] I'll have to thank you for the opportunity.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take the opportunity to speak to the reasoned amendment that's before us. The effect of passing this amendment is that there would be no order for second reading on some future day in the Assembly. So should this amendment pass, it would have the effect of killing the bill and making sure that it would not come back to the House for consideration at some future date.

The wording of the amendment I think is quite clear, that Bill 3, Electric Utilities Act, be not now read a second time because the Legislative Assembly believes that it will cause inefficiency and confusion in the electricity production and delivery system and increase costs for [Albertans].

Mr. Speaker, I think there are a large number of Albertans who believe that deregulation has not worked for electricity customers in Alberta, and I think there's very little reason to believe that the changes that we find in Bill 3 before us are going to make electricity deregulation any better. Electricity deregulation has failed, and I think it's time that the government admits it and returns to a system that will benefit customers.

The bill allows the Minister of Energy to pursue competition for competition's sake. Competition of itself is not going to bring prices back down to the kinds of historic levels that Albertans had grown accustomed to, and the bill really caters to big business in a way that I think has an adverse effect on customers. We expected, Mr. Speaker, a bill that would put customers and consumers in Alberta first, and that's certainly not what this bill is. Alberta is a rich province, and Albertans should benefit from those resources. The goal has to be to provide electricity to Albertans at the lowest possible cost and not to provide an open market for electricity retailers.

Pursing competition at any cost is not in the best interests of Alberta electricity consumers. The way the act is worded, the advantage that we have had as Albertans I think will continue to be eroded. I think the act, like many of the government acts that we've seen before us in the Legislature, leaves too many details to be determined by regulations, and it's impossible to predict what the final market will look like should this bill be passed, and that's the same kind of difficulty we've had with the previous bills with respect to the deregulated electricity industry. For instance, no one knew that we were going to end up auctioning off our assets through the power purchase agreements. That happened through regulation. This bill moves a lot of regulations into the bill but also then opens the door for a whole host of other regulations that we have grown, with good cause, I think, Mr. Speaker, to suspect. The government has failed to deregulate the electricity industry once. I guess the question is raised: why should there be any trust put in the government through this act to make this situation any better?

I think that even the Premier has admitted that this bill will not bring lower prices to consumers. There are no guarantees that more retailers are going to move into the Alberta market once this legislation has passed. Again, the word from the industry is that the market is actually too small to entice the kind of competition that's needed to actually lower the prices.

I think, Mr. Speaker, those are my major concerns and the reason why I'll support the reasoned amendment that's before us. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 3 lost]

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

4:00head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 4
Alberta Personal Income Tax
Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to have an opportunity to address the members at the committee stage of Bill 4. There were a couple of questions that were asked by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar during the debate at second reading, and I intend to address those questions as well as any other questions that other members may bring forward at committee.

Before I do that, Mr. Chairman, I want to relate a very quick story to you and to all members of the House. I hate to admit it, but about 25 years ago I was in university. I was taking an accounting course. It was an income tax accounting course, and the first day of class the instructor said: there are no textbooks for this class, and you can bring the tax act in with you when you write the final exam.

Mr. Amery: And you still remember that?

Mr. Renner: I do remember that, hon. member.

That final exam was the implementation into me of some very strong life lessons. Lesson 1: if you don't work hard, you don't pass. Hon. member, I must point out that I failed that exam miserably. Number 2: if you think that the tax act is simple and you can find solutions in it, you're kidding yourself. Number 3: the tax act is complex, to say the least, and I can understand, when we are dealing with changes to the tax act, why we have to come back from time to time and deal with consequential changes because they were overlooked the first time.

Hon. members, I'm here to tell you that the tax act is extremely complex. It's complex because over many, many years Assemblies such as this have constantly come up with great new ideas on how to change the tax rules, and some very highly motivated and intelligent folks have found numerous ways to use the rules to their benefit, and then Legislatures are forced to come back and close so-called loopholes. So over the years the tax act has become extremely complex, and I would hate to think, 25 years later, what the poor students in that same accounting class are faced with now. The tax act that I had was about that thick and extremely complex, and we've had 25 years of, quote, improvements to the act in the ensuing time.

So with that said, hon. members, I want to explain as best I can in terms that I hope everyone can understand – and I recognize that this is complex – the answers to the questions that Edmonton-Gold Bar presented, and also I will try and deal with as many answers to questions that members may pose later on today.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked two questions, one specifically related to the reference in my comments to the corrections that are here to deal with the royalty rebates. I'm going to read the answer, and then if members still don't understand, I'll explain further if necessary.

When we calculate the tax rebate for the Alberta royalty tax credit, it's based upon the tax rate times the amount of royalties that are paid, but then we have something that's called a minimum tax. So that's the point at which I'm going to start reading from prepared text here, because it does get quite complex.

When the alternative minimum tax applies, the royalties are multiplied by a different rate based upon an alternative calculation of both tax and income. The amendment to the royalty rebate is consequential to amendments that were made to the minimum tax in the spring of 2002. Under these previous amendments the minimum tax in Alberta was changed from being a separate tax calculation to being a top-up to the basic amount of tax an individual would normally have to pay. The result is that under the current legislation the tax rate used to calculate the royalty rebate may be based only on this top-up and not on the entire tax the individual pays. This makes the tax rate used to calculate the royalty rebate smaller than intended, resulting in the royalty rebate being smaller and the taxes, consequently, higher than intended. I told you it was complex.

The gist of it is that we changed the rules in this Legislature on how we deal with minimum tax, and we forgot that there needed to be consequential changes on the reference to minimum tax so that we had an equal and level playing field when we calculate royalty tax rebates. So that's how we came to where we are today.

The second question had to deal with political donations. Again this has to do with consequential changes. Let me take a moment to read the response that I have, and then I'll put it into a little plainer language. The act currently provides the full political donations credit to individuals who have business income in Alberta but are not residents of Alberta but prorates this amount to individuals who have business income in Alberta but are residents of another Canadian province. This amendment simply corrects the inequity by allowing other Canadian residents the full amount of the credit just like nonresidents of Canada.

So it's pretty straightforward. If you have business income in Alberta but are not an Alberta resident, you are entitled to a credit. Unless we deal with this amendment and pass this amendment that's proposed, the same thing will not apply to you. If you have business interests in Alberta and make political contributions in Alberta, a nonresident but a resident of Canada, then there was a proration. All we're doing is making it equal so that all nonresidents have exactly the same opportunity to those credits.

So with that, hon. members, I'll take my seat. That answers the two questions that came up in second reading. If any other questions come forward, I'll do my best to answer them at committee.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you to the member for the responses to questions posed by my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar. He doesn't have to convince me that the tax act is difficult. I've tried to wend through some sections of it, and it is a horrendous task in terms of trying to understand what is intended. I guess if ever a document cried out for plain language legislation, that is one. It really is a document that is obscure to most Canadians.

I think the overall reaction to Bill 4 is, as the member has indicated, that this is really a housekeeping bill, and it's a bill that results in a number of changes that have to catch up with changes that were made previously. Given, as I said, the complexity of the act, we can understand how the necessity arises. Most of the changes are editorial in nature, and I think the opposition accepts them as such.

The notion of clarifying rules in terms of tax liability is welcomed. As the member just indicated, the clarity surrounding gifts is one that was needed, and making sure that Albertans receive the intended royalty rate is an important change, as are the ones that make sure that there is equal treatment of Canadians with respect to where they happen to reside in the country.

I think with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude, and I'm ready to pass Bill 4 to third reading. Thank you.

Line Fence Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased for this opportunity at committee to again address Bill 5, the Line Fence Amendment Act, 2003. During second reading of this bill there was really not a single objection to be heard. This gives me great confidence in the fact that this amendment is providing the clarification that is necessary to prevent the act from being used in instances for which it was not intended.

As I had mentioned during second reading, the Line Fence Act was enacted in 1980 to provide rural residents with a cost-sharing and disputes settlement framework to deal specifically with livestock fencing issues. I thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for speaking to this issue during second reading.

The changes to this bill are very minor, but they do have far-reaching effects. Without this clarification to the act municipalities across the province could potentially be burdened with costs in the hundreds of thousands of dollars, and these costs would be directly attributable to an oversight in the creation of the Line Fence Act that occurred more than 20 years ago. The correction of this oversight will ensure that this piece of legislation will only be cited in rural situations.

With those comments, Mr. Chair, I will conclude. I am confident that all members of this Assembly will support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise and make a few comments on Bill 5, the Line Fence Amendment Act, 2003. I would like to congratulate the member for bringing this piece of legislation forward and to certainly add my support to this piece of legislation, because as trivial as it seems, it will certainly go a long way in clarifying the situation that neighbours find, particularly in urban areas, as to who is going to pay the cost of a fence between their properties. So Bill 5 does, by way of clarification, make very small changes to the existing act, restricting the circumstances under which parties to a shared fence may seek to have the costs of the said fence shared between the parties.

The object of this bill, Mr. Chairman, is that under the original bill both urban and rural property owners had a legal right to demand just compensation from an owner of an adjacent property who derived any benefit from a fence shared by the two property owners. The new bill restricts this right to only when the fence in question is designed to keep livestock out of the adjoining land of another owner. In essence, this restricts the bill to the rural and agricultural use, which alleviates the complexities inherent in the application of the bill in urban settings.

Certainly, we see why this particular bill is required. It has a lot to do with urban sprawl, whereby our development and expansion in communities is moving in and infringing upon the rural areas around our urban centres. So it is a good piece of legislation in that it definitely clarifies the position that residents find, whether they be in an urban setting or whether they be in a rural setting, and it certainly will go a long way to reducing any friction between landowners, whether they be rural or urban.

With those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat and certainly urge all members of the Assembly to pass this piece of legislation. I notice this afternoon that we also have the Member for Lacombe-Stettler present, so I'd like her to note, as well, that I am voting for this piece of legislation and that I think it's an excellent piece. I will be on your side for this, hon. member.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Real Estate Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There was very little debate at second reading. No questions were brought forward, and we did have support from the Official Opposition on this at second reading. It is a bill that is supported by the industry, brought forward by them with full consultation, and I anticipate smooth passage through committee.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 7, Real Estate Amendment Act, 2003. I missed my opportunity to speak in second, although I do understand that there is support from my colleagues in the Official Opposition for the bill. It looks to me as though the changes that are being suggested are fairly minor, and it does appear as well, from the notes that I have, that it is supported by people working in the sector.

So what we really have is a bill that is bringing appraisers under the act's licensing and regulating provisions. It's extending the length of time that the Real Estate Council of Alberta can take disciplinary action against former industry members. It's extending it to two years, and that's actually becoming a sort of industry standard now, I think, not only in this sector but in any sector, that if you haven't brought forward your complaint or commenced the action before two years have passed, then it's going to move on. You've lost your opportunity. So everybody seems to be settling on about that two-year mark. The one exception to that, of course, is regained memories of childhood assault or sexual assault or abuse or that kind of thing for adults.

Also, the act is allowing the council to require members to retain records for three years after they leave the industry. That gets more important but also more difficult as we move into a computer age. Although it was supposed to give us a paperless society, all it does is that we now have computer disks or tapes and we have paper. In particular, with the information that's stored on the computer disks or tapes, in some cases, or CDs now, you have to have a copy of the original program that wrote the information in order to be able to read it or to stay with the same program. I am very conscious that with records that I created or documents that I created even five years ago, even within the time span of this job, I'm two or three versions of the creating program further on. When I do open that document, I usually get a prompt saying: "You need to update this document. Do you want the program to do it?" You say yes. You know, who'd heard of Microsoft 15 years ago? That wasn't the primary company. It may well be that in another 10 years from now we're all working on a different document system and won't even have the programs that will open and be able to read the computerized, digitalized versions of things.

So requiring real estate members to retain records for three years after they leave the industry is a prudent move, but this sort of provision is going to become far more interesting as we move into this electronic age and start changing programs around and finding out that even with a document that's a year old, you may not be able to read it anymore because everybody has moved on to a different system. I think that probably why we end up putting so much paper out is just so that we have some sort of record.

But more to the point is being able to follow through on transactions to see if there's a problem and to be able to ask people who are leaving the industry to hang on to their documentation and their records of the work that they did, because in many cases it does take a while to figure out that there's a problem. Or perhaps there's a good thing that happened, and you want to follow it through and find out what made it good or what made it possible so that others can repeat it. So that's a very prudent and helpful thing to have in the legislation.

I think this has been brought forward to the government, actually, by the Real Estate Council of Alberta and is allowing them to keep pace with developments in the industry. The Real Estate Council of Alberta is an independent agency. It's responsible for regulating the real estate industry in areas of consumer protection and provision of services to improve the industry for its members. The Minister of Government Services does oversee this association. It looks like this Real Estate Act was last amended in 1995, so eight years ago.

The first section, "the Alberta Association of the Appraisal Institute of Canada, the Alberta Assessors Association, the Canadian National Association of Real Estate Appraisers," are all added into the original groups that were listed, which were the Alberta Real Estate Association, the Alberta Mortgage Brokers' Association, the Building Owners and Managers Association of Edmonton, the Building Owners and Managers Association of Calgary. Good heavens. This is a long list. I don't need to read this all out. Essentially, it's adding in the others that are active in this sector. Well, that's interesting; I'm not seeing the auctioneers one. I wonder how the industry is planning on dealing with this new idea of auctioning off houses. There was one of those that took place here in Edmonton, and I think everyone reserved opinion on whether it was successful or not, although it is my memory that the owners were happy enough with the price they got.

A number of the other clauses that are in here are, in fact, strictly administrative, and then there are sections which talk about the ability of different groups; adding in the appraisal institute, the Assessors Association, and the National Association of Real Estate Appraisers; appointing members to the council and that the member must be, in fact, a real estate appraiser. It changes around who is allowed to appoint whom to what and, I'm assuming, tries to update that. The rest of the bill is, essentially, housekeeping.

I've certainly heard the Official Opposition accused of unduly holding up bills in the Assembly, but, you know, if there's nothing wrong with a bill, if it's been looped back through the stakeholder groups and they're supportive of it, particularly if it came from the community which was asking for changes in how they regulated themselves, we're not going to have a problem with that as long as the public in the end is well served. That's our job here: to make sure as legislators that Albertans are going to come out ahead in whatever kind of legislation we make.

As I have outlined here, this is a straightforward bill. It's minor housekeeping changes plus those changes that were requested by the members of the real estate sector. I'm happy on behalf of my colleagues to speak in favour of this bill in Committee of the Whole, and I'm glad I got the opportunity to just go through it and look a bit more in depth at the various sections that are being proposed here as I didn't get the chance to do that when we were in second reading on the bill.

So thanks for the opportunity, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments about the act before us right now, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2003, Bill 7. I think what the act does is speak to the growing maturity of the industry and that maturity in seeking the changes before us which will give the industry more say over the actions and activities of its members. It draws the appraisers under the act's licensing and regulating provisions and, as has been noted, extends the length of time that the association will be able to take action against a member, should that be necessary, and also action against former members. So it really is, I think, a mark of a profession that is maturing and wants to take on more responsibility for the activities within the industry and have some control over the activities of members.

We've seen a number of acts before us in the last number of years in this Assembly that were put forward by professions who want some of the same kinds of controls that are before us today, and I think that we have been very supportive of those professions and associations realizing that self-discipline is preferable to discipline from the outside. It's much more effective when those people who are fundamentally affected by the activities of industry members have some say in how those members behave and particularly if that behaviour is inappropriate and in any way detracts from the reputation of the industry. As I said, we've been very supportive.

I think that what it shows is the obligation not just that the industry is willing to undertake in terms of protecting the consumers but also other members. It's important, if you're part of a profession, that you know there is a shared obligation by all of the members of your profession to behave in ways that are appropriate and that bring honour and bring credit to the profession or to the industry in which you're working.

So it's a good piece of legislation, and I think the provisions are most reasonable, and hopefully it will have the outcomes that the mover and the industry itself intend. I'm sure, Mr. Chairman, that it will, so I'm delighted to support it and look forward to the speedy passage and proclamation.

Thank you.

Bill 8 Health Foundations Act Repeal Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 8, the Health Foundations Act Repeal Act. I know that my colleague the opposition critic on Health and Wellness spoke to this in second reading, and essentially what the act is doing is repealing the Health Foundations Act, which established foundations which were agents of the Crown. I think that originally this was done as a way of facilitating corporate fund-raising, but let me just check my notes here. It turns out that the act is being repealed because there are currently no foundations which exist that are, in fact, covered by the legislation. The legislation was originally passed in 1996 as agent of the Crown foundations for the RHAs, provincial board of health, probably the Alberta Cancer Board. These were set up to take advantage of federal tax laws that were in place in '96 that would allow these foundations to operate with certain tax exemptions.

The donations to the foundations were treated as if they were donations that had been given to the Crown, and if my memory is right, there was a better percentage of tax credit that you got. I mean, currently, for example, the one I'm familiar with is charitable donations to arts foundations. That's really 17 percent, so if you donated a hundred dollars to your favourite local theatre group, when you actually came to do your income tax and you had the tax receipt back from the theatre – it was a charitable tax receipt recognized by Revenue Canada – you were really only excused from paying tax on $17 out of that hundred dollars that you donated. Now, interestingly enough, when you look at that as a comparison and to demonstrate that there are different percentages depending on what you're looking at, if you look at charitable donations to political parties, in Alberta anyway, up to your first $150, I think, 75 percent of it is deductible off your income tax. So a much better rate than 17 percent.

This was trying to take advantage of the laws that were in place at the time federally about donations, and it got a much better rate. I'm pressed to remember what the rate was, but you did get a much better rate donating to a Crown corporation, probably closer to what the political parties' one was. I'm just trying to remember now. I know that there was an arts donation that was targeted to a certain organization, I think, but it was donated through what then would have been Alberta Culture or the Alberta Foundation for the Arts to take advantage of a better tax rate. So that was the raison d'être for having this act passed in 1996. Then the federal laws repealed the tax exemptions that were available here. Therefore, the foundations didn't enjoy a preferred status and didn't need to use it and, I'm assuming, moved off. I know that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora was, I think, a member of the Glenrose board or perhaps the Glenrose Foundation. Maybe he can add to this.

At the time, this was brought forward as Bill 14, the Health Foundations Act, by the then minister of health, who's now the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, and in fact this was to allow for "the establishment of foundations to receive private donations for the benefit of regional health authorities and provincial health boards." I'm quoting out of Hansard, page 622, March 18, 1996. The minister went to some lengths to talk about how the new foundations would not interfere with the mandate of the existing foundations and would differ only in that the money would benefit health facilities and programs that were across the entire regional health authority rather than targeted to individual facilities.

"Gifts to agent of the Crown foundations are unconditional. Donors may indicate a preference for the way their gifts are used, but the foundation would not be bound to follow that preference." This is quoting from page 623. Still from the sponsoring minister's remarks in presenting the bill: "This is necessary in order to comply with federal tax legislation." Then the minister continues:

On the other hand, the minister has the authority to set definite priorities for the use of foundation funds in general to ensure that the work of foundations is co-ordinated with the overall goals for the health system and to avoid duplication of effort with other agencies. This authority is similar to other foundations such as the Wild Rose Foundation and Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife.

So we know why we had it. It did serve a purpose, but when the tax status changed, it was no longer viable, and in fact I think the foundations, if they ever existed, were shut down.

This is needed to clean up obsolete legislation, and actually I'm pleased to see that, because I have complained in the past that this government has not been good at reviewing and updating its legislation. With the newer legislation that the government has brought forward, it has been careful to put in usually a five-year review date, and I always prefer to have the actual date in the legislation, because then nobody is guessing or trying to go backwards and find out when the proclamation date was so they can go forward and figure out when the five-year mark is. They've been good about putting it in the legislation they've passed but not good about going back and cleaning up some of the archaic language and essentially obsolete and unusable sections in legislation that just, you know, aren't useful anymore or are totally obsolete or, as I said, using archaic language which isn't readily recognized by people today.

What was the example I was thinking of? There was a justice bill, I think, last year, and it was referring to – remember? – people having to advertise in the paper and say: I, so-and-so, say that I'm no longer responsible for the debts of my ex-spouse or my spouse, blah, blah, blah, formerly known of such-and-such an address. I mean, nobody ever did that anymore, yet the law was still on the books and the requirement, strictly speaking, was still on the books. It does show you how law is a living thing and legislation is a living thing and needs to be updated and reviewed and brought out into the fresh air every now and then to make sure that it's still relevant to the lives that people are living. So I'm glad to see that the government has managed to dig this one out. Now, this legislation is not all that old – '96: it's seven years old – but we've got to start somewhere, so I'm certainly willing to support the government in starting on this one.

I should note, however, that at the time the original bill was passed, the Official Opposition members voted against the originating act, the Health Foundations Act, and did raise a number of concerns particularly because it was centralizing power in the minister's office. That, frankly, is a theme that we've continued to see from the government since 1996, where we get to kind of framework bills or shell bills where everything is referred to the minister and the minister may decide to make recommendations or do something. But it's always centralized back to the minister, who may decide to do something or not to do something. They have a total say in it, and I'm frustrated with that because I don't think it serves Albertans.

You see, it does lead to the kind of confusion we've got right now over the energy bills, where there was a lot of talk from the government at the time that would make people believe, correctly or incorrectly, that they would get energy rebates if the price per gigajoule went over $5.50. Of course, as soon as it got even near to that, people started going, "Okay; when are the rebates coming?" and not a word was said. Then it passed over that amount, and still not a word was said, and people started to say, "There was a promise here, and you've broken your promise," including members of the Official Opposition, rightly so, saying: you promised. Well, no. Then the real, exact language of the bill was trotted out, and it's:

“No, no, no. This is a yearly average, and we have to go through the full 12-month period before we can determine what that annual average is. No, people won’t be seeing any of this until sometime much later, probably in the summer.” So that is the kind of frustration that people experience when we have that kind of centralization of power into the minister’s office. I don’t think it serves Albertans well.

The second concern that we had at the time was that the new foundations would compete with the existing foundations for charitable dollars, and we continue to have that as an issue everywhere in the charitable sector as more and more programs and services are either abandoned by government and picked up by that sector or there’s an arrangement made or a contract signed, in some cases, to transfer government programs and services to be delivered by the nonprofit sector, and somehow the money never exactly goes along and matches it. So if the program was a hundred thousand dollar program but, you know, you also had to consider the cost of the secretary that answered the phone and the photocopy person and the cost of the desk and the extra telephone line and the extra paper this person would use, et cetera, et cetera, it was going to be more than the cash amount of $100,000. That extra amount, that administrative support amount of money, never seems to come along with that original grant, and slowly but surely the charitable sector ends up fund-raising to pay for the entire cost of a program that’s essentially a government program. Therefore, they need to be able to be accessing those charitable dollars, and the competition is pretty fierce. Here we were raising the concern that the foundations would be competing with existing foundations for that ever scarce charitable dollar.

The final issue that was of concern to us was that donors could not direct their donations. Now, I did earlier refer to and quote the minister’s opening remarks at the time back into the record in which it was clear that the minister could direct that but the donors could not. Once their money was given to agents of the Crown, it was disbursed as the foundation – which you need to read as “the minister” – saw fit, and it was to be disbursed throughout the regional health authority, not just to a particular facility. So, in fact, I think that at that point you would have to go directly to probably the original foundation or the friends-of group associated with a facility and donate through them, but, back to where we started, you would then be receiving less of a charitable tax receipt for it at whatever lower rate it was pegged for. You would not be able to take advantage of the higher rate that was available if you donated through the Crown corporation.

So that was the trade-off people had. You could donate through the Crown corporation and get a higher tax receipt, but you weren’t able to direct where your donation went, or you could go directly to a facility or friends-of organization, give them the money and direct it specifically to a program – children’s services or pediatric services, whatever you wanted – but you would get a much smaller tax receipt. It would be worth less.

So it’s interesting to read back before I was elected and see what my colleagues were doing at the time and that, in fact, reading it now, I agree with a number of the issues that they raised, because those issues continue to be of concern to me and, I think, to Albertans some seven years later.

So in not approving of the bill being brought forward in the first place, I’m certainly willing to stand and support the bill being repealed at this time. Thanks for the opportunity to raise these issues, particularly the ones around the charitable sector, and to underline again how important any assistance we can give the charitable sector is. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the bill in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few comments. I think the committee were supposed to examine the clauses of the bill, and there is only one clause in this bill to look at, and it’s the essence of the bill. I think the minister made it abundantly clear when he introduced it that this was to repeal the provision that allowed Crown foundations to be formed that would be able to take advantage of the unique tax incentives that Crown foundations enjoy and that no one had taken up the challenge and actually formed one of these foundations.

I suspect that one of the things that will have to be made abundantly clear – and the minister did make the remarks when he introduced the bill – is that this in no way affects all those foundations that are already in place in the health care system. The foundations that had been established and operated under the former hospital districts and those that were established under the Hospitals Act are still viable foundations. They’re still going to be appealing for money and support.

As I say, I think the choice of language was unfortunate when this act, the Health Foundations Act, was introduced in 1996. It may have been wiser, in retrospect, to choose a descriptor that wouldn’t cause the kind of confusion that is possible now where people hearing of this legislation may assume that all foundations are no longer viable. I think that would be unfortunate in the extreme because those foundations do extremely good work for the community on the projects that they undertake with respect to providing services and support for the public health care system, and if in any way their efforts should be somehow or other affected by the repeal of this act, I think it would indeed be, as I said, unfortunate.

The act is very straightforward, and I assume that because no one actually created one of these Crown foundations, the effect of passing this bill will be minimal. Whether there were any plans in the works to establish them, we haven’t been told. We’ve heard nothing from any such individuals or groups, so one can only assume that it was a piece of legislation that was seen to be superfluous. Even with the attraction of the credits that were available to Crown foundations, that still wasn’t deemed incentive enough for groups or individuals to go out and create new foundations or to take the foundations that they were already part of and to re-create them under Crown foundations so that they could actually benefit from the tax benefits of Crown foundations.

I think that with those few comments, Mr. Chair, I’d conclude. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would also like to make a few comments today on Bill 8, the Health Foundations Act Repeal Act, and welcome the opportunity to do so. I see that this bill was sponsored by the Minister of Health and Wellness, the Member for Calgary-Nose Creek.

Certainly, I think it is a bill that is required. I can say quite honestly that in all my time in the Legislative Assembly it is without a doubt the shortest bill. There are some very important points that must be raised when we are looking at this particular bill. So when I was preparing my comments on Bill 8, the Health Foundations Act Repeal Act, I first of all looked at the bill and decided after a lot of scrutiny that this was a good bill, that this is a bill that I can certainly support.

Some of the rationales as to why I came to these conclusions are that there are no foundations which currently exist which are covered under this legislation and that foundations are currently covered under the RHA foundations regulations. I also found out that no foundation or RHA currently existing will be affected by the removal of this legislation. I found out in discussions with the Capital health authority that they indicated that repealing this act would have no effect on their foundations or assets. I think that was critical in that we know that certainly in the area of health in this province all RHAs are certainly under very fine, fine lines when it comes to their finances, so we wouldn't want to see anything that would impact their ability to raise funds or anything that would affect their assets.

Now, then, as well, by way of a little history I found out that in 1996 the Liberal caucus voted against the Health Foundations Act and raised several concerns. One of the concerns that we had at that particular time and one of the reasons that we did vote against this particular bill was that it would centralize power in the minister's office. This was an issue that we felt very strongly about, that we could not support legislation of this nature when it had centralized power in the minister's office.

Another reason that this caucus voted against this particular bill in 1996 was the fact that new foundations would compete with existing foundations for charitable dollars. Certainly, since 1996 I think all of us have experienced that there has been just a huge, huge demand in all sectors of society for charitable dollars. I know that in my particular constituency I would say that we get at least two or three requests for some type of charitable dollars or donations to various groups. So with the expansion of new foundations and the number of foundations in this province we certainly were concerned about the competition for charitable dollars. We have seen, particularly over the last few years, a great development in the types of lotteries that different organizations will have and, as well, the creativity that is involved in these fund-raising efforts. Those can be for luxurious cars, for exotic holidays. We have seen fund-raising attempts which will have a number of beautiful homes up for raffle. So, certainly, we were quite concerned at that time and would be again today as to the scope and the nature of foundations competing with one another for those much-needed and dear charitable dollars.

Another concern we had in 1996, Mr. Chairman, was the fact that donors in this province could not direct their donations. What would have happened in 1996 was that money given to agents of the Crown would be disbursed as a foundation, which may be directed by the minister as the minister sees fit. Again it gets back to that central question as to the centralization of power in the minister's office. In fact, this was such an issue that the then MLA for Edmonton-Glenora introduced an amendment that Bill 14, the Health Foundations Act, not be read a third time. To quote that member on April 29, 1996, he goes on to say:

So, Mr. Chairman, Bill 14, [the Health Foundations Act] is not good public policy. Bill 14 should not become law in this province. Consequently, at this time I would like to move the following amendment. The amendment reads that everything after the word "that" be substituted with the following:

Bill 14, the Health Foundations Act, not be read a third time because the government has not proven to Albertans that agent of the Crown health foundations will not unduly compete with and impede the ability of existing health-related foundations to raise funds and carry on their charitable activities.

Now, these were the wise words of the then member sitting for Edmonton-Glenora, and these were presented to the House on April 12, 1996. So we had concerns as far back as then about this particular bill.

You know, we did have the opportunity and we do now have the opportunity to point out that the government was warned that this act was bad policy, and they should have heeded the advice of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition at that time and not passed the Health Foundations Act to begin with. We also note that the government will claim that they are not repealing this legislation because it is bad policy but, rather, because changes were made to the federal tax laws that these foundations were set up to take advantage of.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I certainly have to say that there are many, many things that could be said about Bill 8 even though it is such a short bill, but at this time I would like to conclude my remarks on Bill 8 and certainly listen to the exciting debate of other members on this particular piece of legislation. I thank you for this opportunity to speak to it.

Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I listened when the minister introduced Bill 9 and spoke of the extensive consultation that had been undertaken. I think that at the time he indicated that over 2,000 stakeholders had been contacted about the changes that appear in the bill before us, and that's a lot of consultation. I think it's the kind of homework that leads to the easy passage of bills through the Legislature when we can be assured that all of those people who are going to be affected by a particular piece of legislation have actually been contacted and know what's going to be included in the legislation, not only know that but have had some part in the drafting and agree that the legislation is in their best interests.

So I'm pleased that the minister has done that kind of consultation, and the intent of the bill, I think the objects of the bill are clear. It gets over a huge problem for the industry, and that's the tracking and the enforcement of exploration projects and the equipment and companies that are operating in an area. In the past this has proven to be a problem. Having no universal system for clearly identifying who was doing what in an area has led to a number of problems with landowners; for instance, not knowing who is operating in their area and having no common way of identifying from the activity exactly who the operators are. That's one of the major changes that the bill allows. It introduces a common marking system that will be used throughout the province so you can readily identify the operator in an area and the kinds of things that are going on.

Additionally, it allows greater powers for inspectors of exploration projects, and that, I think, is going to be welcomed by landowners. It also allows for the adoption of codes from other industries into the regular exploration regulations, and that will be useful. I think one of the other powers that it gives is the power of the minister to issue stop orders. Again, given the exploration activities and the extent of those activities across the province, that's a provision that I think will prove useful in some instances. What that really allows is the field staff to stop and take immediate action if there is potential damage to the environment.

That's a critical power, Mr. Chairman, to have: allowing immediate action to be taken and then allowing for a more reasoned and a more problem-solving approach to the issue than the kinds of processes that are in place at the present time. This act will allow activity to be halted immediately and then for the problem to be looked at and some decisions made. I think that that again will be welcomed by landowners and those people who are concerned particularly with environmental damages and things that may happen because of exploration that may put them at a disadvantage or may somehow or other affect the environment negatively.

So I think we've been through the bill, Mr. Chairman. We're pleased that it's here. A good number of the items in the act are simply housekeeping provisions that had to be made, but I think that the major thrusts of the bill, putting in place an identification system and also the powers for the minister to stop action, are two very important provisions. I'm pleased to support the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Auditor General Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to move Bill 11, the Auditor General Amendment Act, 2003, in committee. We had three opposition members speak to the bill in second reading, and I have read through Hansard and pulled out all the questions that they had asked, and I would like to answer those questions at this time. The three members that spoke were Edmonton-Centre, Edmonton-Strathcona, and Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The first question was from Edmonton-Centre, and it was also followed up by Edmonton-Gold Bar, and it had to do with legislated oath of office. The question was, specifically: why will the oath be only similar to oaths of other offices but not exactly the same? I would like to answer that. Essentially, the oath would be the same as the oaths required of the Information and Privacy Commissioner and the Ethics Commissioner. So I just can't see that there's going to be any great amount of difference except in name, but we will have to wait and see till that is published.

The second question that Edmonton-Centre had was: what's the concern in asking that the Auditor General not disclose any information? I would like to answer that in some detail. Information in the custody or under the control of the Auditor General should not be disclosed outside the provisions of the Auditor General Act. The ability to maintain strict control over confidential client information allows the Auditor General to properly consider and vet his recommendations and reports before they are disclosed to the public.

Recently, attempts have been made under the Alberta Rules of Court and the federal Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act by private parties to gain access to confidential information held by the Auditor General. In one case the Court of Queen's Bench has ruled against disclosure; however, this decision may be appealed. Future cases are anticipated, so these applications underscore a need to make it clear that the Auditor General maintains strict confidence over client information obtained during audits and special duties subject to the Auditor General's duty to report to the Assembly under the Auditor General Act. The Auditor General should not be compelled to disclose confidential audit information in any court proceeding. Information supplied to the Auditor General in confidence should be privileged similar to information obtained by the Ombudsman under section 25 of the Ombudsman Act.

Another question that was asked by Edmonton-Centre was in regard to: does Bill 11 restrict the Auditor General's power or duty to provide information to the Public Accounts Committee? I would have to answer: no. Bill 11 does not restrict the Auditor General's power or duty to provide information to the Public Accounts Committee. Section 26 of the Auditor General Act ensures that the Auditor General will continue to provide information to the Public Accounts Committee.

Another question by Edmonton-Centre was: why are the warrants for the fiscal year in which the special warrant is signed to be deleted from section 12(5) of the Auditor General Act? Well, currently a special warrant can be issued for the office of the Auditor General only after the beginning of the fiscal year to which a special warrant relates. In some cases after an election special warrants for government departments may be issued for interim supply a few days before the beginning of a fiscal year. This is a technical amendment that will harmonize the office of the Auditor General with government departments.

Another question from Edmonton-Centre. It was more of a comment, but I did pull a question out of there I think. It had to do with: does the amendment to section 14 of the act give the Auditor General additional access to information held by a Crown controlled organization or a delegated administrative organization? Section 14 ensures that the Auditor General has access to audit information held by all organizations of which he is auditor whether he is appointed auditor by statute or by other means as permitted under the act. These organizations currently include regional health authorities and several other organizations closely associated with RHAs or public postsecondary institutions. This could include other Crown controlled organizations and delegated administrative organizations if the Auditor General was appointed as their auditor, but that is not presently the situation.

The second-last question from Edmonton-Centre, and again it was more of a comment than a question, but I think there was a question in there: does the proposed section 14(2) exclude previous Auditors General or employees of the office of the Auditor General from giving audit evidence to the current Auditor General? Important evidence from these individuals is likely already in the Auditor General's possession but, yes, the amendment will allow the current Auditor General to consent to the examination under oath of a former Auditor General or employee of the office of the Auditor General. As I mentioned earlier, the main purpose of the proposed section is to prevent the disclosure of confidential audit information to others when it would be inappropriate to do so; for example, a private, civil litigation trying to get information from a former Auditor General or staff member.

Another question from Edmonton-Centre: does Bill 11 make the Auditor General auditor of more Crown corporations? I would have to say: no. The Auditor General would continue as the auditor for ministries, departments, regulated funds, provincial agencies, and other organizations as permitted under the act. These amendments do not change the organizations which are audited by the Auditor General.

We had a question from Edmonton-Strathcona in regard to noncompellable witnesses and, more specifically, the reason behind the proposed section 14(2) in regard to noncompellable witnesses. In 1999 and 2000 private parties attempted to gain access to confidential audit information held by the Auditor General. In one case the courts ruled against disclosure. In the other case issues were resolved without disclosure by the Auditor General. The proposed amendment would ensure that the Auditor General maintains strict confidentiality over client information obtained during audits and special duties subject to the Auditor General's duty to report to the Legislative Assembly under the Auditor General Act.

So I want to thank the opposition for their comments, their questions, and I hope that I have answered them sufficiently.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to express gratitude to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for his clarification on the questions not only from myself but also from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I appreciate it.

Certainly, when we look at this bill section by section and the fact that in section 2 we're establishing that the Auditor General must take an oath of office which is administered by the Speaker of the Assembly or in the absence of the Speaker, I believe, the Clerk, one can certainly live with that. The Auditors General, whether it's the present one or previous Auditors Generals or an Auditor General yet to be named at some point in the future, are all bound by a professional code of ethics, and certainly I think that is necessary, but if this Assembly feels that an oath of office would make everyone more comfortable, then fine.

Now, section 3 is clarification of language, as I understand it, and we are removing the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and we're replacing that directly with the Executive Council and the president of the Executive Council. That is our hon. Premier, the Member for Calgary-Elbow. So, you know, there doesn't seem to be much of a change there, Mr. Chairman, but some of the other changes that have been made: I think one should go on the record and talk about them at this time and see if there are any other questions from anyone.

Before there are questions from anyone, I should say, Mr. Chairman, particularly in dealing with section 7 . . . This section adds new reporting provisions. Now, the Auditor General in performing special duties as required by the Assembly is required to give the report to the chair of the committee, who must lay the report before the Assembly immediately if it is in sitting or within 15 days after the session starts. The president of the Executive Council also gets the report and on three days notice to the Speaker will give all members a copy of the report. When distributed to the members, the report is then made public.

There are similar provisions, I believe, in the Ethics Commissioner's governing legislation. I would like to know if this has been followed letter for letter. Are these the same steps that the Ethics Commissioner would make in a report, or is there something different? What would be the reason that we need this, because certainly in section 20 of the current Auditor General Act the Auditor General may prepare a special report to the Assembly on any matter of importance or urgency that, in the Auditor General's opinion, should not be deferred until the presentation of the Auditor General's annual report under section 19.

Also, section 20 here, Special Reports, subsection (2):

A report under this section must be presented by the Auditor General to the chair of the Select Standing Committee who shall lay the report . . . forthwith if it is then sitting or, if it is not sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Now, this has to be an addition or a strengthening of the current section 20, as I'm reading this. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview nodding his head, and that is quite interesting, and I believe it is noteworthy.

There are certainly already provisions in the act for the establishment of audit committees, the meeting of audit committees, the scope and the results of an audit, and the Auditor General in this province certainly has a lot of work to do with the increase in spending that has gone on, Mr. Chairman. It is noteworthy that we have seen a 50 percent increase in spending in this province. We've seen the cabinet expand from 16 to 24. It wouldn't surprise me to open the Edmonton Journal or any other paper – the Edmonton Sun, as a matter of fact – on a Saturday morning and see where the Auditor General is looking for more staff because there is going to be a lot of work to do. [a computer sounded] I believe that computer agrees with that last statement, by the noise it's making at least.

The office of the Auditor General is perhaps, Mr. Chairman, one of the most important offices, and when we look at the role the Auditor General can play in ensuring that every tax dollar is spent wisely, it not only applies to other governments in other jurisdictions but this government in this jurisdiction as well. The Auditor General has to be, certainly, independent, but the Auditor General's office has to have respect from all citizens of this province, and I think this bill as proposed will enhance that respect even further. We have to ensure that there is accountability to the taxpayers.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the Auditor General is no different than the former president of the United States of America, Harry S. Truman. The buck always stops on the desk of the Auditor General, and I think that through the efforts and the initiative put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, the Auditor General will have an easier job of making the buck stop at his or her desk.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

8:20

Government Organization Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: We should ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow to speak to the questions that were asked in second reading. I think that is the usual.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. There was a request during second reading for more information on the security of the identification cards, so I have some information here for the House. The current identification card is identical to the current driver's licence and has the same security features. The only difference is in the title of the card and the colour of the background. To obtain an identification card today, a person must prove their identity by producing one primary and one secondary piece of identification. If a person does not have primary identification, then two pieces of secondary identification will be required. Examples of primary identification are a passport, government identification card – provincial, territorial, or federal – and citizenship certificate. Examples of secondary identification are birth certificate, credit card, social insurance card, work visa, or marriage certificate.

Registry agents who suspect that fraudulent identification is being presented will not provide services and may notify the police. A person cannot have multiple identification cards nor can they have an identification card if they hold a subsisting driver's licence. This way, there is control over the number of cards in circulation, making it difficult for anyone to create multiple identities. Law enforcement supports this security precaution.

Hopefully, this will answer some of the questions that were raised during second reading. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments about Bill 13 at the committee stage. The whole notion of identity cards has drawn a lot of attention the last number of months from a number of different aspects.

One, there was the problem of high school students being able to secure identity cards and in some cases even drivers' licences through false means and to use those cards to enter bars, primarily, and I wonder if the mover of the bill feels that the security surrounding the issues of the cards is stringent enough to prevent that kind of fraud from happening. It's an issue with respect to, as I said, high school students and the kinds of activities that they use those cards for.

A second issue surrounds the whole business of the registries and how secure their operations are. We had the example in Edmonton of a registry being broken into twice within weeks of each other and the machinery and equipment for producing cards being stolen, and again it seemed to point to some weakness in the security system surrounding the issuance of those cards at the registries. So I have a question about the security with respect to that.

One of the clauses that, again, I wouldn't mind some comment on is the Crown absolving itself from any liability or loss or damage arising from card issuance. I would appreciate some comment on that and the relationship between the government and the issuing of the cards. It seems to me that with the amendment the government washes its hands of any responsibility for what might happen, and I wonder if that's really an appropriate action for the government to take with respect to the issuing of photo identification cards to Albertans who don't drive. I know that the government can't possibly be held responsible for the misuse of the cards, but I think they can and should be held responsible for making sure that in the first instance the cards are not produced and not issued to individuals that inappropriately try to obtain such an identification card. So those are a couple of issues that were raised as I looked through the bill.

I guess one of the other things that would have been interesting to see is the kinds of regulations that are being put in place around the bill, and again it's I think unfortunate that the committee on law and regulations no longer exists in this Assembly, as it does in many others across the land, where there would be an opportunity for those regulations to be presented to the committee and examined. As I said, the whole notion of identity cards has come into the spotlight since September 11 of last year, and I think there are more and more questions being raised about the possible abuses of those cards.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a few observations I would like to get on the record in regard to Bill 13, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2003, but at this time I would like to express my thanks to the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow and her staff for taking the time the other day to bring myself and the research staff up to speed in regard to the purpose of this bill, to allow Alberta Government Services to continue issuing photo identification cards to Albertans who don't drive. Certainly, Alberta Government Services is having a little bit of difficulty with providing that service to those who do drive. I hope this goes without any wrinkles because in my view there are problems that need to be addressed. I think the hon. minister is working very hard to address them, but I do have my concerns about some of the money and how it's being spent and whether or not we're going to have a tamper-proof driver's licence whenever all this is said and done.

At this point in time I think that whenever we consider having photo ID cards for people who don't drive, we think of students or we think of – one group that we do not think of is seniors, and some seniors have for whatever reason never had a driver's licence. Certainly, if this ID is going to be sufficient, then I think this is necessary. I had some concerns – and they have been addressed – regarding the sale of bogus IDs. If we can be selling bogus drivers' licences, there's no reason why these cards, for instance, couldn't be sold at some point with alterations to underage drinkers, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow and the staff have assured me that they have programs and regulations that will take care of my concerns. If people are caught once at this, I think the entire licence of the registry office should be just simply pulled if this sort of action is going to be going on. That was one concern I had. One cannot be, I think, too zealous in protecting personal information.

Governments at all levels, certainly, may have the best interests of the citizens at heart, to protect the citizens from terrorist attacks, but to gather large amounts of private, personal information on individuals under the guise of protection from international terrorism, we have to observe this very closely. I would caution any government, whether it's the current provincial government or the federal government, to be very, very careful about this and not be tempted because a person's personal information – and that includes health information – is their business and no one else's. A computer hacker or anyone else, it doesn't – that's the hon. minister's business and not mine. I certainly am at this point, after the explanation I've had, confident that this photo ID system will not be abused, that it will not be abused in any way. I certainly hope that time will prove me right in this because it's apparent to me that the staff have done their work on this one.

With those remarks at committee, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to another hon. member of this Assembly. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Regarding a few of the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods – you had questions about whether or not there would be sufficient security. This is always, you know, a question that people are struggling with, and it is something that we really do pay an awful lot of attention to. Unfortunately, it's true that registries have been burglarized just as banks have been burglarized. There are bad people out there, and all we can do is make sure that our security is as good as possible.

In terms of liability this is an optional card. It's not something that anyone has to get. It is very much just an optional card. It is very much a government card in that it's just an ID card. It's not something that we are sort of putting out there in the marketplace at all, so that's why we're limiting the liability on it.

Oh, in terms of the regulation, the regulation will be very similar to a driver's licence card, essentially all of the same regulations in terms of the identification that's required to be able to get it. It will be pretty well exactly the same as a driver's licence card.

I think that's about it. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[The clauses of Bill 13 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 3
Electric Utilities Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this act? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This my first opportunity to rise to address Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act. Among the many bills that have been introduced so far in the Legislature, this is one of the biggest and most important, and it's one that will be getting a lot of attention, I think, from us and from the general public, so we might as well hunker down and get into the details here.

I suppose we should start the debate with a bit of perspective on the situation we're in now because Bill 3 is an attempt to get us out of a problem. It's too bad that we're in the problem in the first place, but we need to know how we got into the situation so that we can reflect on whether Bill 3 will actually help us get out of the situation.

Electricity, as all of us will see tonight as we look around the legislative Chamber and our offices and go to our homes and condominiums, where the heat is flowing and the light is on, keeps the modern world going. Without electricity there's no modern life. There are no computers; there's no electric light; there's no modern commerce: there's nothing like that. So we're dealing with something here that is of fundamental importance. We're also dealing with something that is unique. Electricity is a fantastically complicated thing, a fantastically complicated form of energy, and for us to manage it in the way that we do as a society is actually a great achievement for all of us.

The electrical grid in North America has been called the world's largest machine. We are linked across this country, across the continent, throughout Canada and the United States and into parts of Mexico, on one enormous grid that's divided into particular zones, but it is all interlinked one way or another, and the linkages and flows through that system are both enormous and extraordinarily sensitive. They're enormous enough so that they power huge factories. They draw from enormous power plants – coal-fired power plants, hydro dams, and so on – and they pour this electricity out across the continent through an incredibly complex grid system. That system, as large as it is, is very, very sensitive too, so when a factory, for example, gears up its equipment, drawing on the electrical grid, that draw can be sensed on the grid thousands of miles away.

The trick and the great achievement of the modern electrical industry is to keep that grid in balance. We all know that if we get too much power going onto a circuit, we can blow the circuit and it can all shut down. It's also the case that if there's too little power on a circuit, it will collapse as well, and of course a collapse, especially on a night like this when the temperatures are terribly cold, I think, right across Canada, could be catastrophic.

So we're dealing with something here that is essential. It has to be managed moment to moment. It's not at all like things that we consider typical commodities, whether that be grain or natural gas or coal or cotton or coffee or oil. Those things can be stored. We can build up supplies during the low season, draw them down during the high season. They can be shipped from one location to another. In many cases their forms can be changed. Electricity is not like that at all. We can't store it; the use of it has to be balanced exactly with the generation of it. So there's no possibility, for example, for us to generate a whole lot of electricity, say, in the fall or spring, when demand is lowest, and then draw that down in the winter. It just doesn't work that way.

So we have a product that's not a commodity. It's essential to modern life. Do you know what else? There's no substitute for it. We can't power our microwave with gasoline. We can't plug our refrigerator into the propane tank.

An Hon. Member: Yes, you can.

Dr. Taft: Well, okay; poor example. You can get a propane refrigerator, but you can't plug your television into a propane tank. You can't run your computer or your cash register in a business on anything except electricity. In fact, if you think about it, if you are running a business, whether it's an autobody shop or a dental office or a retail centre like a Wal-Mart, perhaps the one thing you could do without the least – in other words, the one thing that is most necessary – is electricity. If your phone system goes out, whether you're repairing cars or drilling teeth or selling ladies' wear, you can continue to function, but if the power goes out, the whole thing shuts down: your equipment shuts down, your security shuts down, your cash registers shut down. There is no substitute for electricity.

So for those reasons and others this is not a product that ought to be handled in the way that other commodities are handled. This is not a product that lends itself to market forces. In fact, there is a very good reason that we ended up with a regulated market in electricity. When electricity first was being used in North America, it was a free-for-all. Anything went. Anybody could start their own power company, run their own power lines, and as a result there was nothing short of a mess. It was extraordinarily inefficient. There were no standards. There were safety issues. There were supply problems. Prices were unstable; supplies were unstable. And while people recognized that this was an astonishingly useful form of energy, that usefulness was being profoundly compromised because it was just left open to the free market. So there was a public and business demand a hundred years ago to create a regulated electricity market.

You know what? We did a heck of a good job on this continent and especially in this province of developing a very effective, economical, and profitable regulated electricity system, and for decades and decades Canada in general and Alberta in particular enjoyed very fine electrical services. Consumers had low prices, safe services, and high reliability, and the electricity companies were profitable. It was win/win/win.

Alberta had some of the least expensive and most reliable electricity in the industrial world for decades even though our hydro sources are very limited. This was a great benefit for us. This was seen as a pillar of our economic development strategy. It was a policy that was supported actively by the government and by regulators and by consumers and business, and it was trumpeted. I know I read a lot of economic development material from this province which said that one of the great attractions to moving your business to Alberta is reliable, cheap electricity. So it was a building block of the economy of this province. Unfortunately, we've seen that building block pulled out from the foundation of Alberta.

One of the cornerstones of the electricity industry in Alberta was and actually continues to be the municipally owned power companies, especially EPCOR, which historically was one of the big three power companies in Alberta, along with TransAlta and ATCO. To a lesser extent, Enmax, the Calgary-owned utility, was a very significant player. It didn't own generation like EPCOR did, but it did service a large customer base very effectively.

So those companies have a long track record of effectively managing power, in EPCOR's case generating it very well. I don't know how many people are aware here of the farsightedness of EPCOR and of its predecessor, Edmonton Power. It was in the late 1950s that Edmonton city council actually bought the rights to the coal in the Genesee area even though they knew that that coal and the generating stations they wanted to build there weren't going to be needed for more than two decades. They got ahold of the rights to that coal in the late 1950s and hung on to that through two decades before serious efforts were made to build the Genesee power plant. Thank goodness that city council in the 1950s was so farsighted and that city council in Edmonton in the 1980s was so farsighted to get those coal beds and to build Genesee. So these are companies with fantastic track records. These are companies that are well managed.

Before I became an MLA, I did a number of reviews of EPCOR, and it is – at least it was at the time; I have no reason to believe it's different – fundamentally a very well managed company. One of my concerns with Bill 3 is that these companies are going to be constrained, that these companies are going to be limited. The strength of these companies, which frankly have helped carry Alberta's two largest cities through decades and decades of growth and prosperity, is going to be diminished. I for one think we need to stand up and defend strongly the right of municipally owned power companies. So that's one of my concerns with Bill 3.

I gave a bit of history there, Mr. Chairman. I think we now need to look at the whole issue of what's often called deregulation, although I think that's a bit of a misnomer. The idea of deregulation is in some ways to take electricity back to the economics that existed when power companies were first developed and the whole notion of electrical power was first developed; in other words, back to the time when it was something of a free-for-all for power companies. Now, we all recognize that that's a bad idea, so there are enormous regulations under the so-called deregulated system. What this government has tried to do is take a product that is not a commodity and is not well suited to the marketplace and has tried to create an artificial marketplace, as it were. There are what economists call natural monopolies, and one of those, certainly, typically is considered to be electricity.

Well, we've taken a natural monopoly, and we're trying to create an artificial market out of that. We take something that should be handled as a monopoly – all its characteristics suggest that it's best handled as a monopoly – and out of, I guess, ideological commitment we say: "No. It's got to be handled as a market, so let's put in all kinds of laws and regulations to turn this into a marketplace." Ironically, we go from a regulated system in which there are a few hundred pages of regulations to a so-called deregulated system in which the number of regulations is about four times that amount. It's a mistake. It's a fantastic increase in the complication and inefficiency of the electricity industry.

Now, we could have and should have looked at experience in other jurisdictions when we got into the electricity deregulation business or the business of deregulating electricity. Let's look at what happened in some other jurisdictions when electricity was deregulated. Everybody here will certainly know of the experience in California, but California was actually nowhere near the first jurisdiction to get into electricity deregulation. Electricity deregulation actually began in its current form under Margaret Thatcher in the late 1980s and early 1990s in Britain. Britain had certainly a more expensive power system than Canada did at the time. Britain relied very heavily on coal. One of the problems with the coal industry in Britain is that because of the political power of the coal miners, all kinds of steps were taken to artificially keep high the price of coal and keep high the demand for coal so that thousands and thousands of coal miners and hundreds of mines could be kept employed. This put an artificial floor under the price of fuel for power plants and, as a result, kept the price of power high.

One of the things that was done in Britain – and I certainly remember the showdown between the coal unions and the Thatcher government. The Thatcher government actually set out to break the coal unions in Britain, and the effect of that was to help lower the price of electricity. But at the same time that that was happening, the electricity industry in Britain was being deregulated. A lot of people think that the price drops, which were pretty modest frankly, in British electricity were the result of deregulation. In fact, there's some very good evidence to suggest that they were the result of the drop in the cost of coal because of the opening up of the coal industry or the removal of the artificial supports for the coal industry.

When Britain deregulated, it faced much of the same controversy that Alberta faced several years ago and in fact is living through right now. Many industrial consumers of electricity were extremely, extremely unhappy with what happened with electricity deregulation in Britain. One of the problems they had was that there were wild swings in price. Well, that sure sounds familiar here; doesn't it? So, for example, it wasn't uncommon in Britain for power prices to swing upwards or downwards by 400 percent in 24 hours. We see swings far greater than that in Alberta these days. In fact, there were swings up and down of thousands of percent in just a few days, which led to stunning electrical bills in Britain, to industrial shutdowns, and in fact to bankruptcies. We could have learned that lesson here, and I'm afraid we didn't. I wish we had, because we should have stayed with the system that was in place up until the mid-1990s.

There was also very, very little consumer interest in shopping around for an electricity provider. Research has shown over and over in Britain and in the United States – and it's supported by experience here in Alberta – that people don't really want a whole lot of choice in electricity. What they want is cheap, reliable electricity. There weren't people protesting on the streets or writing letters to the editor under the old electrical system saying: gee, I wish I could buy my power from a different power company. People had excellent service. They were happy with it. It was not an issue. The only people or organizations – and I'll give them their due – who really wanted greater choice in power were the major industrial consumers. If there was one segment of society that has benefited from electricity deregulation, it may be – I say: may be – the really large industrial consumers. I would have liked to consider a different content for Bill 3, perhaps looking at, at least exploring the notion of a deregulated power system for the really major industrial consumers and a regulated system for the residential and small business consumers.

Anyway, the experience in Britain provided the swings, the instability. People didn't want choice. They found it fantastically complex. People didn't want salesmen coming door to door offering them power.

I'll take my seat, I guess, Mr. Chairman, and carry on later. Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton Mill-Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to take the opportunity at committee to look in some detail at the particular sections of the act, starting with part 1, Interpretation, Application and Purpose. Part 1, of course, lays out the relevant terminology that is used throughout the act. On the whole, they remain similar to what we had before, with a few additions and some deletions.

But there are some important changes, Mr. Chairman, in this section. One of them is that the definition of an electric utility has been broadened to allow for the convergence of the natural gas and electricity retail markets, and that's important because it would allow one retailer to sell both products, which is quite a change. The definition of farm transmission costs, which deals with supplying electricity to rural electrification authorities, has been removed, and the definition of municipality has been expanded to include any Métis settlements established under the Metis Settlements Act. In addition, the definition of a power purchase arrangement has been added to the act, and the inclusion of this article now justifies the claim that we had no idea that Alberta's electricity-generating assets were going to be sold off when the government began its deregulation process back in 1998.

One further change of some import in this section is that the definition of retailer has been modified by removing the phrase "directly to customers" from the end of the definition, and what this means is that the definition of retailer is broadened by considering firms that provide any electricity services, even if those services aren't provided directly to customers as retailers. This change, Mr. Chairman, could potentially allow the government to artificially increase the count that they have of the number of retailers in Alberta, allowing them to claim that the new legislation is a success even though that in actuality may not be the case. So it's a clause that allows the government to do some fudging, should they wish to do so, in terms of the number of retailers that are or are not in operation in the province at a particular time.

Section 1(2) defines the different terms created by the Electric Utilities Act and where their meaning is derived. Section 1(3), subsidiary corporation, simply states that the Electric Utilities Act determines if a corporation is a subsidiary according to the Business Corporations Act. So a matter of definition.

An important section is section 1(4). This is where the Medicine Hat service area is defined. It lays out very clearly what is meant by the phrase: Medicine Hat service area. The definition of this area is really quite important to the remainder of the act because the area is often exempted or treated differently when it comes to various regulations. So when you read the act and you see the Medicine Hat service area, that has a very particular meaning with respect to the act. Furthermore, later parts of this act prevent the service area of Medicine Hat from growing any further. So that's an important point when you read the act, to see how the Medicine Hat service area is defined, the limits placed upon it, and the kinds of capabilities and constraints that are placed upon that area.

Sections 2(1) and 2(3) lay out the exemptions from the act. Alberta's deregulated electricity industry is really a unique industry in that it includes a number of city-owned utility companies, and thus far the municipally owned utilities have created a problem within the government's deregulation scheme because they have certain rights and privileges that others do not have. So you have EPCOR and Enmax with laws that govern their operations that other retailers don't have, and this section of the act guarantees these utilities certain privileges, and it also denies them others. I think it has to be noted that the only municipally owned utility that is completely exempt from this act is in Medicine Hat. So you look at the treatment of municipally owned utilities and they are treated differently depending on where in the act you find yourself.

Section 3 deals with the effect of the act, and the clauses contained under this section reflect the current policy of the government. It's important to note that this act clarifies that it is not necessary for market participants to divest assets as a result of any other clauses that are present within the act. So some exceptions there that are important as we look through the act.

If you look at section 4, immunity for the Crown, no lawsuit can be brought before the Crown as a result of the changes to the electricity industry that are going to be made because of this act. This is a similar clause to the one that was found in the 1998 version of the act.

Section 5, the purposes of the act, lays out eight purposes of the act, including providing Alberta with an efficient electric industry structure, providing Alberta with a competitive power pool, providing Alberta with rules that would allow an efficient market to develop, allowing a flexible framework so that the market can guide decisions made about this industry, providing a range of choices for electricity customers, ensuring that the benefits and costs associated with the Balancing Pool continue to be shared, continuing with the power purchase arrangements, and providing a framework that allows for the efficient regulation of the electricity industry.

It was interesting in the briefing for the act, an outline for electrical restructuring that is similar to the vision that was outlined in the last act – and this vision remained the same or somewhat relevant. However, there's no mention about protecting the interests of customers or about providing consumers with the lowest possible cost of electricity.

This, Mr. Chairman, was a point that was important to us when we supported the reasoned amendment earlier in the day in discussion and debate, that the focus of the act seems to be on fostering competition for competition's sake and that the interests of consumers appear to be secondary in the act. That is what we found most unacceptable and still find unacceptable and the major reason why we won't be supporting Bill 3, that the absence of consumer interests is glaring in the information that we have before us. It's one of the things that I think the government has an opportunity to rectify before the bill actually is passed and becomes law, and it's something that we hope they will seriously address and propose some changes to make the interests of consumers more evident and more paramount in the bill.

Continuing with the section analysis, Mr. Chairman, section 6 lays out the expectations of the market participants, and it explains how they're to behave in the electricity industry in the province.

Part 2 of the act, Mr. Chairman, deals with the independent system operator and transmission and explains what it is and the duties and how the independent system operator and transmission are to work. First of all, division 1 establishes the corporate organization. It establishes a corporation to be known as the independent system operator. It makes it clear that this is not an agent of the Crown and that this independent system operator is supposed to be a corporation that is completely independent of government and will operate and manage the power pool system. Now, whether or not it is, I think, is open to question, and there are some other parts of the act that raise the independence of the ISO and some questions about, as I said, that independence.

Section 8 deals with the appointment of ISO members, and it's going to be the minister again who appoints nine members to sit on the ISO, who will oversee the business of the independent system operator. Of course, the question that immediately comes to mind is: how can this be an arm's-length corporation of the government when the minister is appointing the members? There seems to be a basic conflict. How independent can you be when you're appointed at the pleasure of the minister? It certainly sets up the case where the minister has the potential to exert undue power and influence over the board. I know that this is a practice that's taken for granted throughout the province, but it doesn't make it right. It's a method of controlling, and it seems to contradict the other elements that we see in the act talking about the independence and even the very name: independent system operator and transmission.

Section 9 represents the standard sort of protocol in terms of giving natural person powers to the corporation. The intent of this, of course, is to allow the corporation to operate independently of the government. Yet, as I said, there's a serious caveat against that given that the minister is actually the one who appoints the members to the ISO.

Section 10 outlines the ability of the ISO to make bylaws to govern its own business and its affairs. They cover a wide range of topics that are fairly common in terms of corporations, areas such as the code of conduct of members, what constitutes a quorum, what the remuneration will be. I think that it's a section that the public is interested in having public and open to scrutiny.

Section 11 allows for the appointment of the chief executive officer. Again, in the appointment of the CEO it's important to remember that the board is composed of members appointed by the minister, and thus the CEO is ultimately going to be someone that the government in general and the minister in particular hold in favour. It doesn't say where the CEO comes from, so it's likely that that individual will be appointed after a list of recommended candidates is put forward by the ministry. That would seem to be the most likely scenario in terms of the appointment of the CEO.

Section 12 is fairly straightforward. It indicates that the ISO "must appoint an independent auditor."

Section 13 deals with the ISO and the kinds of committees that it must establish to consult with the market participants. The Power Pool currently has such a committee, and this section really just indicates that the ISO would take over these duties.

Section 14 talks about the budget and that the ISO is responsible for preparation of its own budget, including both the costs and the kind of expenses that it's going to be involved in. It's also important to note that the ISO is intended to be a nonprofit corporation.

Section 15 has the details of the ways in which the ISO does its reporting, and there are some questions about the stipulations that are outlined in this part of the act. The ISO has to prepare an annual report within 120 days of the end of its fiscal year, and there's no specification of exactly what the fiscal year is. What fiscal year will the ISO be following? We assume that that's left up to the bylaws.

The filing of the annual report is designed to ensure the accountability of the ISO, and I guess it's that accountability that we're concerned about, because section 15 indicates that the annual report will not be made public until it has been provided to the Minister of Energy. Of course, that allows the Minister of Energy, just as many other ministers have in terms of receiving reports early, to put an interpretation on that report before it's released to the public. We've seen that time after time in the government, Mr. Chairman, starting with the report of the Children's Advocate and some of the reports out of Alberta Learning, where the report is issued and there is a long and detailed press release that puts a particular spin on the information that suits government purposes. When we have those kinds of provisions, it doesn't look like this is really the arm's-length organization that the government claims it is or certain parts of the act pretend it really is.

It also leads to some questions, I think, in terms of: how is the ISO going to be treated under the terms of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act? Again, I think there has to be, hopefully before the act is passed, some clarification. The ISO is going to be a body that has all the information about the Power Pool and, therefore, how prices are set, so I think it's important that the public have as much access to this information as possible without interfering with the operation of the market.

I think that before I move on and look at division 2, which is the second part . . . [Dr. Massey's speaking time expired] Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and speak to Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act. Certainly, this is one part of the two-pronged plan by this government to go down the deregulation road even further, when other jurisdictions are coming to their senses and realizing that this is costing the consumers enormous sums of money and they are going back to a plan that will provide electricity to the consumers at the lowest possible cost. The two-pronged receptacle is history for safety reasons, and this two-pronged approach with the further deregulation of electricity and natural gas by this province should also be history.

Now, there are many examples that can be used to illustrate how poorly electricity deregulation has worked and will work in the future, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member needs his laptop back, so this will be brief. If all hon. members of this Assembly check powerpool.ab.ca and see how high the cost of electricity is and then go to altaliberals.ab.ca and see our low-cost power plan, they will see the difference between the plan that we are proposing and the plan that is going to become the reality of this bill in the Power Pool.

In question period this afternoon at 2 o'clock the actual posted pool price for electricity was 35 cents a kilowatt-hour. Thirty-five cents a kilowatt-hour. At 1 o'clock, when we were preparing for question period, it was 13 cents a kilowatt-hour. At 2 o'clock this afternoon, when this government was trying to defend their deregulation policies, electricity was trading at the wholesale level of 35 cents a kilowatt-hour. The hour previous to that it was 13 cents, and at noontime it was 9.8 cents a kilowatt-hour. This notion that you can find electricity for 4 cents a kilowatt-hour in this province is simply that: it's a notion. If people continue to say that, it's going to grow from a notion to an urban myth. Electricity is now an expensive commodity in this province. We go further on in the afternoon, Mr. Chairman, and there's no relief for the consumer in sight.

Now, there are dramatic fluctuations in price. At 9 o'clock tonight – and this is after peak demand, and there is a reduction in the consumption of power – usually on a cold, extreme night like tonight, it will be about 8,300 megawatts. We are told that we should not worry about this because there has been so much generation coming onstream. The generation that has come onstream, Mr. Chairman, is generation that is expensive because the majority of it is powered by natural gas. It's fine and dandy to brag about this natural gas power generation capacity that has been built in the last number of years. According to the Power Pool, there is at this time close to 4,600 megawatts of gas-fired generation, and there is about 2,300 of it that is total net generation at this time.

So if we have this power that is trading at 9 cents a kilowatt-hour or a little better than that, then where is this generation that was built? Why is it not coming into the system? Surely people would like to make the argument that, well, there are exports, there are imports of electricity into our system. That is correct, but in the last number of weeks – and any hon. member of this Assembly is certainly encouraged to enter into debate – there was a notice on this web site indicating a disruption in California somewhere, and the disruption resulted in 1,700 megawatts of power being lost.

Mr. Rathgeber: How many disruptions have there been in Alberta?

Mr. MacDonald: There have certainly been lots of disruptions in Alberta, and if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldor would like to look at this web site, it would show that January 10 there was a disruption, there have been a couple of recent disruptions with lines in the Calgary area, and disruptions are occurring here.

The disruption in California should not affect our domestic price, Mr. Chairman, but it is my view that it is. If we pass this legislation, it is going to further affect our price. In the past there would be lots and lots of imports into this province from B.C., but where are they on a cold night like tonight? For some reason we're not reeling in a lot of power on the southern tie-line. We should not be developing a power system that is going to be influenced by American interests. We are setting up in this bill formal arrangements with the Regional Transmission Organization West, and that is not in our interest.

Now, I could go through each sector of generating capacity that we have in this province, whether it's coal, gas, hydro, or others like wind – right now we just have wind power – but we need to look after our own interests first, and our own interests, in my view, include the consumers. The consumers should be given the lowest possible price that we can deliver electricity for. Let's put the consumers at the top of this pyramid, not at the bottom, where Bill 3 is going to put them.

Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time that this province has participated in this debate about private versus public or turning over the whole generation system to private enterprise because they can run it more effectively. This political debate follows the history of this province, and I'm disappointed that in this legislation the municipally owned utilities are being singled out. They are being singled out, and I think they're being singled out unfairly. The municipally owned utilities have had a proud history in this province, and the notion that they do not pay taxes is just totally wrong. It is totally wrong. Last year, for instance, EPCOR paid significant taxes. Not only did they pay significant taxes, but they also paid $40 million in payment in lieu of taxes into the Balancing Pool. Customers of EPCOR and customers of Enmax are subsidizing the rest of the system, and they're going to continue to subsidize the rest of the system through these payments in lieu of taxes to the Balancing Pool.

Perhaps we would be better off putting that money into the general revenue fund of this government if we're going to call it a tax, which this bill wants to do. It's going to force them to call it a tax. I can't understand for the life of me – and this is such a fine city – why this government continues to pick on the city of Edmonton. Yes, it's picking on the city of Edmonton. The mayor and the city council should not have to go cap-in-hand to the Minister of Energy whenever they want to do something in regard to EPCOR, and that is what I'm afraid is going to happen here. Now, if we look at the past history, Mr. Chairman . . .

Mr. Smith: Point of order.

The Chair: The hon. member has a point of order or a question?

Point of Order Questioning a Member

Mr. Smith: Beauchesne 333. I wonder if the hon. member would entertain a question.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar only needs to say yes or no.

Mr. MacDonald: No.

The Chair: Then you may continue.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I welcome the minister's response. He can enter into debate just like everyone else.

Now, we look at the Alliance Power Company. This is a walk down memory lane. The ownership of utilities was a hotly debated topic, just as it is tonight in this Assembly, in the early decades of the 20th century in this province. Many thought that public utilities should be privatized while others were opposed to the idea, and this is very similar to what's going on here with Bill 3, Mr. Chairman.

Now, Edmonton Light and Power did not escape scrutiny, just like EPCOR and Enmax are not escaping scrutiny with this bill. The city council of the day had received numerous proposals from private businesses that wanted to participate in the electrical industry. Does this sound familiar? When the question was put to the public in a referendum – this is not the first referendum we have had in this province. This in 1916 would have been the first referendum. There was another referendum in 1948. I say to this government: why not put this bill to a referendum? Why not put your whole electricity deregulation policy to a referendum? Previous governments certainly were willing to do that.

However, Mr. Chairman, when the question was put to the public in a referendum, voters agreed that this would be a positive step forward to allow the privateers to operate with electricity. Now, consequently, proposals were called for, and between 1916 and 1919 the Alliance Power Company took over the power plant. It sold power in bulk just the same way this power pool is operating today, and under this proposal it's going to continue to operate in the future. It sold power in bulk to the electric, light, and power department of the city of Edmonton. This arrangement came to an end due to financial difficulties. Well, I'll be. I don't want to sound like an alarmist, but I certainly hope that doesn't happen now because the consequences of this would be enormous. So much of our life centres around electricity and not only electricity but affordable electricity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to at this time share this with the Legislative Assembly, and this is a quote.

I have been in business 12 years, and never before have I been without power for such a long time. It is certainly fortunate that no one was being treated by our permanent wave machine when the power went off.

This is from the Edmonton Journal, and this is not about West Edmonton Mall in 2003; it's about Madam Day's beauty parlour on the impact of a power outage on May 27, 1936. Now, if we're not careful with this legislation, Mr. Chairman, we are going to be looking at power outages. Power outages could occur under this current system that's being developed.

Mr. Smith: Like the outages in Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: The outages in Ontario. There we've got another Progressive Conservative government tinkering with a perfectly good electrical distribution, transmission, and generation system, and, yes, there are power outages because of the Progressive Conservative government in Ontario.

I hope for the sake of Albertans, because they're fine citizens, that they're not going to be burdened with power outages. But if they do come, it is my knowledge of the power system that Calgary will be affected before Edmonton, and that's a sad, sad event. That's just how the distribution system is arranged, unfortunately, Mr. Chairman. Calgary is more vulnerable to electricity deregulation failure than Edmonton.

It is interesting also to note that in 1971, of course, Peter Lougheed became Premier of Alberta, but the province of Alberta passed an act that stipulated that the Energy Resources Conservation Board must approve all changes to Alberta's electrical system. Now, it's sort of been downhill ever since. [interjection]

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, when each of the hon. members has finished their talk, I've looked over this way and you haven't stood up. Now somebody is standing up, and in this House the tradition is that the person who was recognized by the Speaker or the Chair in this case is the one that's speaking. If you wish to speak following this gentleman's speech, we'll have you speak. Until then, perhaps we'll just have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar speak.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Now, this bill is going to take a lot of work to improve, and I'm willing to attempt that. I have never in my time in this Assembly seen legislation that needed so much work to improve. I don't know how to describe this bill without going through it at this time in committee except section by section. When we look at how we've been held hostage by high electricity prices in this province, we've got to fix the problem. We have to. It's almost going to be an emergency.

It was explained earlier by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview that before all this happened, we had some of the lowest costs in North America. Now we have costs that bounce all over the place, and one only has to look at the Power Pool web site to confirm that. This is what consumers will be facing with the flow-through option that will be part of this legislation. We have to have a serious look at how to improve this.

I know that there has been a consultation process. A lot of people have been contacted, and a lot of people have discussed these amendments, but I don't know if consumers, if Martha and Henry have been consulted on this. I don't know what Martha and Henry are paying for electricity and who their provider is these days, but I'll bet Martha and Henry are not happy. In fact, I'm going to have to keep an eye out for Martha's and Henry's names on the natural gas rebate petitions that are just coming in because I'm certain that they have an opinion on that.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 11 and Bill 13. The committee reports progress on Bill 3.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:39 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 6, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/06

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, we thank You for Your abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask You to ensure to us Your guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise once again and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House some very special guests who are here today, six representatives from Chrysalis. Yes, indeed, Chrysalis is one of our very special Alberta societies for persons with disabilities. Representatives who are here today include Mr. Stan Fisher, the president and CEO; Trevor Crick, the vice-president for Edmonton; Linda Pinney, vice-president for Calgary; Laurie Balfour, the controller; and Isabelita Wheeler, the executive assistant. As with many members in this House we've all had the pleasure of seeing some of the tremendous work these individuals do on behalf of some of the most needy people across this province. I've been to many of their events, and I know how hard they work and the sincerity that they bring to that work. So it is with great, great pride that I ask them all to stand now and receive the very warm welcome of all members of this House. Please rise.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a number of people who are visiting the Legislature from the Department of Finance. For many of them this is their first time since they were in grade school that they've been back into this actual Assembly. So we do welcome them today. They are Peter Blandy, Bradley Geddes, Felix Choo, Gerald Beaudry, Sophie Baran, Tara Dahl, Linda Sinclair, Lorna Smith, and Dave Mulyk. They are in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them all to rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. The first one: it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you Janice Schmidt, who is a first-year student at NAIT in the office and records administration program. Today she is job shadowing with Tanya Cliff, who works in my office and is a graduate of the same program. I would ask that both Janice and Tanya stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The second set of introductions is two people that have journeyed from Brooks to meet with the Minister of Seniors and receive some excellent news today, I understand, about things that will happen in Brooks. They are Barry Morishita and Diane Murray. I would ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Allan Jobson, one of my Calgary-Fort constituents. He has in-depth knowledge of WCB matters, has written many documents to suggest improvement in WCB legislation, policies, and regulation. He currently volunteers in my office advising injured workers regarding their WCB claims. He is here in Edmonton to help organize the injured workers groups provincewide. The new umbrella organization helps to inform injured workers of their rights, including the right to be informed of all benefits, entitlements, administrative procedures, and appeals, and also their doctor's right to assist them with their medical treatment and rehabilitation. This organization, sir, hopes with the help of government and training institutions to devise a way for injured workers to take charge of their rehab. Also, in Allan's words: we also want to dismiss the continued myth . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, there is part of the Routine known as Members' Statements. Perhaps the member might look at that and just get on with the introduction now.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask Allan to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With us today in the gallery are three fine employees of ATCO company, a company that has just donated brand-new computers to schools in Castle Downs, and they are Mr. Bart West, director of corporate affairs; Ms Aleksandra Nowacka, senior analyst; and Mr. Bob Baer, regulatory manager. I would like them to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce three special ladies to you and to all of my colleagues: first, my mom, Kitty; my baby sister, Pat; and my lovely bride for 27 years, Liz.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly some very important people. The first is the person who's known me longer than anyone else, and that's my father, Bob Mason, as well as my stepmother, Kay Guthrie. With them today are my cousins who are visiting from Britain, Stewart Wallace and Annalisa Wallace. They're going to take some time touring the province. They've spent some time with my sister in Calgary, and they're going to be seeing a Flames and Oilers game. They're going to be doing a little bit of skiing, and they're going to be seeing many of the fine things that Alberta has to offer. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Energy Prices

Dr. Nicol: Albertans gripped by the chill of soaring natural gas prices must brace for another icy blast when they open up their next power bill. This government has broken one promise after another: first, no natural gas rebates, and now higher, not lower, power bills due to this government's botched deregulation scheme. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that thanks to deregulation, where the price of power is determined by the highest bidder, that system causes power prices to spike along with natural gas prices?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I guess it's a matter of the market prevailing. Quite simply, through deregulation we firmly believe that competition will bring the price down. That is happening. You know, there are some tremendous deals out there. Just listening to the radio – and this is a city-owned utility, Enmax, and if I recall, a city of Calgary owned utility. I know that he's familiar with the city of Edmonton owned utility because they set the rates. At least when he was on the board of EPCOR, they set the rates. But I heard an ad just the other day saying that if you sign a contract for gas and electricity through Enmax, you get two months free of both electricity and natural gas. Now, that seems to me to be a deal. I don't know the intricacies of how long the contract is, but this is an example of how competition works. This is a company that's out there competing in the retail market and offering deals. It's just like any other commodity, any other retailer. We see it all the time with automobiles. We see it with groceries. We see it with furniture. We see it with real estate, and now we're seeing it with power. So there are deals to be had.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: given that it is impossible for a school board to put on a sweater and the Catholic school board needs an additional $2.2 million to pay their utility bills, will this government help schools pay their utility bills, just like they did before the last election?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there is a program in place. I've repeated the answer I think about 17 or 18 or maybe 27 or 30 times, but I'll say it once more just so the hon. leader of the Liberal Party understands and he won't have to ask the question ever, ever again.

The answer is that we put in a legislated rebate program that kicks in when the price of natural gas reaches $5.50 a gigajoule, and this government plans to do absolutely nothing beyond abiding by the rules and regulations associated with that protective legislation.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Premier, then why didn't you put together the regulations on that particular piece of legislation the way you promised Albertans you would during the election and the way you promised them you would during the debate on that legislation? You talked about onetime support, not this year-long average. Is that not true?

Mr. Klein: I'll tell you what is true, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Liberals didn't follow me to all my campaign stops. They should have. Perhaps they would have been more successful. I don't think they would have been, but I say that facetiously. I can tell you that what I said during the campaign at every campaign stop was: folks, after dealing with this emergency situation on an ad hoc basis, we will consider a program very similar to the interest-shielding program that was introduced by then Premier Peter Lougheed, where interest rates were shielded down to 12 percent. Once the price dropped below 12 percent, the shielding came off. I said that we would introduce a program similar to that relative to natural gas, and we were true to our promise. We did precisely that.

Energy Marketing

Dr. Nicol: This government is good at making promises but short on delivery. They promised natural gas rebates we will never get. They promised low electricity prices that will never arrive. Now it's unleashing energy retailers on consumers who don't know what a kilowatt is from a gigajoule. Mr first question to the Minister of Government Services: how will the government ensure that Albertans are not taken advantage of by retailers who seem to come calling just when energy prices spike?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, under the legislation that we have in Government Services, as it pertains to natural gas and electricity marketing, marketers that go out there have a code of conduct that they must follow. As well, they must present themselves, identify themselves, the company they're representing, and they must come forward with a contract to present to the person that they're trying to sell to, and they must properly represent themselves and their company and the product that they're trying to sell before that prospective customer. That legislation is in place, and we adhere to that legislation. When we get complaints, as was indicated here last fall, we will take the proper procedures to investigate those complaints and take the appropriate action under the legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to help the Leader of the Opposition out as much as I can. A megawatt-hour is the amount of energy used to heat one home for a year, and in fact a gigawatt-hour is equal to 1 million kilowatt-hours or 1,000 megawatt-hours. So anytime the member needs further information on how to measure electricity either by its consumption or by its sale, I would direct him to www.energy.gov.ab.ca.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: why didn't the government bring in the consumer education plan that was suggested at the time deregulation was brought in?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the question may be a good one, or it may not be a good one – I really don't know – but I'll have the hon. Minister of Government Services answer it.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, in terms of energy pricing either on the natural gas side or on the electrical side, that comes under the EUB, and the Minister of Energy for the province of Alberta has explained that whole process many, many, many times in this House. I have just explained what Government Services does in terms of consumer protection when people are asked to sign a contract. That legislation is in place and we abide by it and we will investigate when we get complaints.

Dr. Nicol: To the minister of consumer affairs. Do you not think that education of the consumer is an important part of consumer protection? Why haven't you implemented that education plan that you promised?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member opposite has been. We have had consumer tip sheets out on electrical marketers, on natural gas marketers, on conservation, on energy conservation. We have had that out there for many, many, many years. It's available on the web. I'm sorry; unlike others in the Assembly I don't happen to know the www dot numbers, but I'll get it for you. That information is available on tip sheets. It's also available from the people in the industry. You've got EPCOR. You've got Enmax. You've got all of the companies that give out these kinds of tip sheets on energy savers for their homes.

Energy Efficiency Retrofit Assistance

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, with energy costs skyrocketing, everyone is paying more, and while this government wallows in royalty cash, schools, hospitals, and municipalities must take valuable dollars from vital areas like classrooms and emergency wards to be able to keep the temperature in their buildings at a reasonable level. My questions are to the Premier. Given that every American state and many Canadian provinces have already accepted and developed energy efficiency retrofit assistance and incentive programs, when is the Premier going to introduce one in Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, a very, very interesting question. I had a briefing note on exactly what we have done, and the list is very impressive. I'm looking for it. I would be very happy to provide the hon. member with the steps that have been taken to conserve energy. The steps have been very significant indeed.

Yesterday – I haven't discussed this with the Minister of Infrastructure yet – I had the opportunity of introducing two individuals in the Legislature, both involved in architecture and retrofits and designing buildings in a way that is energy efficient. One of the participants, who couldn't be here, was about to conduct a seminar with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, but she's also on the board of governors of an organization called LEED. I don't know exactly what the acronym stands for, but it is an American organization that really sets standards for the construction of institutional buildings: hospitals, schools, other government buildings. I've asked that individual to send me as much information as she possibly can as to how we can participate in that program, and I'll be having that discussion with the hon. minister and members of my caucus.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Speaker, here's another good idea for the Premier: now that the government has adopted two of the Alberta Liberals' great ideas, the sustainability fund and infrastructure fund, will he not adopt the retrofit fund for the benefit of all Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to get into the establishment of funds or anything else until we decide exactly what we're going to do. As I said, we've already done a tremendous amount. I'll have the hon. Minister of Infrastructure supplement relative to what we have done, and we will do more.

After we decide what we're going to do as a matter of policy, then we will assign the appropriate amount of money to that particular project. Whether it's in a special fund or not, I don't know at this particular time. I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, in all of our modernization plans and whenever we build anything new, we do put in all the necessary things to make the building the most efficient that it can be, whether it be added insulation, the most efficient types of lighting, those types of things. But I think it's also important to recognize what the government itself has done over time. Back in about '95-96 we started the energy efficient retrofit program, which saw us do some 200 projects where we put in efficient lights, did things with the insulation, did things with the heating, and that whole program has shown the reduction in our consumption in the electrical and the energy side by a very large percentage. So we would encourage people to look at something along that line because, in fact, there are many things that you can do in your own home or in your own business that will have a payback within three years or five years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given that we've heard this minister brag about their own energy efficiency initiatives, which are good, when is this government going to help schools, hospitals, and municipalities attain the same level of energy efficiency, which would also be good, and seriously put more money in the hands of these organizations for operating costs?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, according to this expert – and I will take my advice from experts. This individual from yesterday – I believe her name was Ms Manasc – devotes her architectural life to designing and retrofitting buildings to make them energy efficient, and she is a recognized spokesperson on this particular issue, so she is an expert.

Once we decide what we're going to do as a matter of policy, that policy will then extend to school boards and hospital boards, hospital districts, and so on.

But the point I want to make, because I asked her precisely this question, is that the Liberals say: you need more money to do this. And she says no. She says that the construction costs are about the same, and the operating costs are far, far less, so they should be asking for less money.

The Speaker: We've already spent nearly six minutes on this set.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. A survey by Manitoba Hydro, released by the New Democrat opposition this morning, shows that Albertans in every community from Taber to Grande Prairie are paying more than other Canadians for their electricity, and as the wholesale price of electricity keeps going up, this government's credibility drops like a stone. The one exception to this is the shining example of Medicine Hat, where publicly owned utilities lead the way with the cheapest nonhydro power in Canada. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Now that this government has the distinction of being the administration that squandered the best energy advantage in the entire country, will the minister stop trying to convince Albertans that bills are going to go down and, instead, admit that, in fact, almost every part of this province, with the exception of Medicine Hat, pays more for electricity than the rest of the country?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, because we do not own our own generation facilities – and, in fact, unlike the other parts of Canada, where there is at least 100 billion Canadian dollars of debt stacked up against these artificially low electricity prices, we don't keep track of the prices we have because we aren't responsible for them. The marketplace is. I do have in my possession information that indicates that of the people that are offering electricity in the province, ATCO is competitive with other jurisdictions across Canada.

Now, with respect to the policy, there may be others who wish to add. Thank you.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't help but supplement because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is leaving the wrong impression. You know, it's true that electricity prices are higher than normal right now, and it's probably true that they're higher than in Manitoba, but you have to understand that Manitoba and Quebec, the two supporters of the Kyoto protocol, co-incidentally, have huge, vast amounts of water – huge amounts of water – and they're able to build these huge, massive dams to generate hydro power.

Dr. Pannu: What about Medicine Hat?

Mr. Klein: Medicine Hat, as Rudyard Kipling says, has all hell for a basement. Name me one other city.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the Premier's effort to help out his minister.

I do want to ask the minister another question. Since he is so insistent on meddling with utilities and rearranging the deck chairs on the Titanic, will he at least look at the Medicine Hat model, which still delivers the cheapest nonhydro power costs in the country?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, you know, one of the good fortunes this government has is that it has two representatives in this government from the city of Medicine Hat, unlike the zero representatives that come from the ND for Medicine Hat. I have information from the Member for Medicine Hat, who says: "The prices in Medicine Hat have gone up dramatically over the past two years. As old gas reserves are depleted and new gas is used, the price rises even more, until it reaches the same level as anyplace else." Fundamental market supply and demand.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let's just talk about the Manitoba example for one second.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, please. We've now gone five minutes in this exchange. There are a whole series of members that want to participate.

The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Finance. Since the Minister of Energy has proven himself unable or unwilling to deal with high power prices, will the Minister of Finance tell us if she has any plan to combat the high inflation in this province, caused in large part due to rising energy prices, other than dealing with the person three places to her right?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no secret to the fact that Alberta is leading the way in economic growth in this country once again, and I can tell you that we believe that that will continue. I believe that someone wants to supplement my answer, but there's no secret to that kind of arrangement. I don't know why the opposition is so surprised with the growth and success that's occurring in this province, that is not found anywhere else.

Centennial Programs

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's centennial year, 2005, is rapidly approaching. Many communities, municipalities, and other organizations throughout our province are becoming very anxious to know how the plans announced a few years ago by our government are proceeding. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development, who is responsible for Alberta's centennial program. Can the minister apprise this Assembly of the status of this important program that Albertans are counting on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to do that. In fact, we've had tremendous interest in the Alberta centennial programs. We have dozens of municipalities and community-based organizations who are right now undertaking and finalizing some of their plans for special arts festivals, special cultural events, sports days, contests, competitions, reunions, homecomings, and so on.

From the government of Alberta's perspective we're also working on our medals program, coins, flags, banners, and of course the important celebration day itself, September 1. Our MLA for Calgary-Fort is chairing the official Alberta song competition, which will be unveiled very soon. That's drawn a lot of interest as well.

Finally, I would just say that our provincial government, myself specifically, has been working with the federal government on some larger initiatives, and those details will flow out as we come closer to the event itself.

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is again to the same minister. What is the status of the request for financial assistance from community-based projects?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, members of this House will recall that we had an application deadline for phase 2 of community-based centennial programs looking for financial assistance. That deadline was March 1, and unfortunately just prior to our being able to announce them, we experienced the tragedy of September 11, and the centennial program was deferred. The bottom line is that we had about 150 applications that came in, requesting hundreds of millions of dollars, which was beyond our official capacity anyway, but that centennial program for community-based projects still remains officially deferred.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that we were happy to fund approximately 12 projects to the tune of about $56 million from Olds to St. Paul to Grande Prairie to Calgary to Edmonton, and I'd be happy to provide that list at some point if members of the House would wish to have it.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Labour Legislation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Health care workers are very concerned that their democratic rights will be eroded even further by this government. Unions in a wide variety of professions, from teachers to tradespersons, fear that they will also be on that list and that that list will lead directly to right-to-work legislation. My first question is to the minister of human resources. Is it the ultimate goal of this government to bring in right-to-work legislation for teachers and other unionized workers in this province?

Mr. Dunford: The answer is no. We recognize the ability of people to bargain collectively. What we have here, of course, though, is the situation where the importance that has been portrayed to the government and portrayed by this government is that health care is the most important issue we have in front of us. There are reforms that need to go forward, and we think – and we think that many Albertans will agree with us – it is very important, then, to find a way to streamline and make more effective and more efficient the labour relations that take place within the health care sector.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how many professions is this government prepared to deem an essential service in order to abolish unions in this province?

Mr. Dunford: Well, one of the interesting things about Alberta, Mr. Speaker, is that we generally enjoy very good relationships with the union movement despite the fact that we're a Progressive Conservative government. Now, there are all kinds of Liberals and there are all kinds of NDP people that try to find ways to wiggle in between there and wedge us apart, but when you look at the record in Alberta, you find that we have an incredibly successful way in which we handle the disputes that arise at times between employers and employees.

One of the areas of measurement of a minister within this portfolio, of course, is the number of negotiations where job action is the end result. You know, we're the lowest in Canada. We think that's very important, and we think that's a sign of a healthy relationship between the government and its union movement.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that the Premier was quoted in 1999 stating that this government has always resisted right-to-work legislation because there is a good balance between the right to work and the right of unions to organize, if this is true, why set up a secret, powerful cabinet committee to study right-to-work legislation, that is going to do nothing but destabilize labour relations in this province for the next five to six years?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I am so happy that the hon. member asked that question and, as part of his preamble, alluded to this so-called secret committee. I take the hon. member back to Hansard, Thursday, November 21, 2002. Please excuse me for not using the hon. member's constituency, because I am quoting directly from Hansard.

Ms Carlson: To the Premier: then how does the government answer the charge that this new policy they are floating is a socialist policy, not free market based? Mr. Premier, you look like Pierre Elliott Trudeau on wage and price controls.

Mr. Speaker, here's the answer:

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again the Liberals are conducting their research in the Edmonton Journal and the Calgary Herald. Clearly, public-sector salaries account for about $10.8 billion of the government's budget, and each increase in public-sector salaries costs the province about $108 million, and since government funds the public sector, we have to ensure that salary settlements are sustainable over the long term. We need to do that so we can budget and budget properly. So we do have a group of government members looking at strategies to deal with the impact of public-sector salary increases on the provincial budget . . .

Mr. Speaker, that so-called secret committee was announced almost six months ago.

. . . but I can tell the hon. member that no concrete proposals have been brought forward to cabinet or caucus or Treasury Board [at this time].

Mr. Speaker, this nonsense that they spout about a secret committee is nothing more than that: absolute nonsense. They are misleading the people, because they knew – they knew – at that particular time. They are not telling the truth, and that is a shame.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that electricity is a vital part of Albertans' businesses and a key component in Albertans' quality of living and that this winter has been the coldest in a number of years, because of news they are hearing about blackouts in other provinces, my constituents are concerned. My question is to the hon. Minister of Energy. How does Alberta's restructured electricity market work to prevent blackouts and ensure adequate supply?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, in many ways, and it does it in such a way that it brings power to the marketplace so that there aren't blackouts.

But in terms of comparing provinces, I think that maybe the Premier may wish to supplement on some of the discussions that go on about people leaving one province and coming to another. Is it for the power? What reasons is it for?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, indeed, I do appreciate very much this opportunity to supplement, because while the opposition NDs are out telling Albertans how bad it is in this particular province – and they are. I don't know how they provide policy direction to their communications director, if indeed he is their communications director still, but I do quote Lou Arab. Now, I don't know if Lou Arab is still with the NDs, but Lou Arab cut $240,000 off his mortgage when he left Vancouver in April [of last year] for a job in Edmonton that paid him less money, but left him further ahead financially with less stress.

"We lived in this great neighbourhood (yet) we were one car accident or roof repair away from financial ruin," said Arab, communications officer for the tiny New Democrat caucus in the Alberta legislature.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you rose on a point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yes, I did, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. We'll deal with it later.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Energy. Talking about the concern for blackouts and ensuring an adequate supply of energy, I would like to ask the minister: how does this new generation restructuring benefit Albertans?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's restructured market does not hide the true price of power. In fact, some 2,500 new megawatts of generation came on without causing the ratepayer additional expense. Now, it's so difficult these days to compare apples and apples in the power business. Ontario, which reverted to the Crown model and to the price-fixing model, is now being subject to rolling blackouts. That has not happened in Alberta. Manitoba, which allegedly has some low power rate – also, what is not being mentioned by the New Democrat Member for Edmonton-Highlands is that that New Democratic government put Manitoba in the highest personal tax rate in Canada. Is that the price you pay?

Mr. Cao: My last supplemental question is to the same minister. Thinking about the Alberta situation here, what electricity choices do Albertans now have?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, this marketplace still remains regulated. There is the regulated rate option, that is tabled on an annual basis. The EPCOR/Aquila service network tables with the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. The ATCO service network tables with the Energy and Utilities Board. After, I'm hoping, through the successful guidance of the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, that in fact EPCOR and Enmax RROs will be approved for the year 2004-2005. During that time there are other options outside of the regulated envelope that customers can avail themselves of, and I strongly advocate that they contact their utility companies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Preschool Programs

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each Thursday Alberta Liberals will ask a specific question that members of the public have asked us to pose. Today's questions raise the concerns of Helena Beca, who is an Edmonton playschool teacher and also vice-president of the Edmonton Preschool Association. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. If children are such a high priority for this government, what will be done for Edmonton playschools that cannot afford the recently announced 500 percent rent increases?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I, too, read the Edmonton Journal this morning and saw this. It looks like what is occurring is that the playschools have had very much a subsidized rent from the Edmonton public school board. Playschools are outside of the basic mandate of the School Act, and they have decided to take the money and subsidize a playschool program. The average amount of dollars that goes on operations and maintenance for schools is around $55 per square metre, and even at that point the school boards are saying that it's quite tight.

My understanding is – and again I must only say that I read this in the paper – that they were paying approximately $8 per square metre. What Edmonton public school board is looking to do is bring their rate up to be very comparable with Edmonton Catholic over the next five years. I agree with Edmonton public that they should not do that immediately, that it has to be done slowly to allow the parents to be able to come to grips with that. My understanding is that they are bringing it up to the same level as the Edmonton Catholic school board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: was jacking up leases on preschool and out-of-school care programs a suggestion of the minister's audit team?

Dr. Oberg: No.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. My third question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Will your department take any responsibility for helping to keep these Edmonton preschool and out-of-school care programs open?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, through family and community support services in this province we fund $57 million to the municipalities of Alberta, 266 of which take advantage of that program. The city of Edmonton gets approximately $15 million and, with local family and community services boards, can assign priorities, does assign priorities, and spends dollars in support of programs that support the community. We do not directly manage how those priorities are established except to fund on an 80-20 basis, 80 cents from the province and 20 cents locally, those municipalities that make that identification.

With the Minister of Human Resources and Employment over the last three years there have been times, for before- and after-school child care, when we have directly assisted the city of Edmonton at their request for very special needs for those children that are in that category. Mr. Speaker, it would not be appropriate for us to pick either their priorities or influence that. No doubt those parents can go back and talk to family and community support services and say: are there assignments of dollars that can be made to this program? But I do believe that, fundamentally, parents through their local municipal government have the right to set those priorities.

I should point out further, Mr. Speaker, that this past year, when we added $15 million more to that program, we made it fully funded, as per the request of municipalities for social programs that they wanted to influence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Crystal Methamphetamine

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we may be facing an epidemic of crystal methamphetamine use in Alberta. Crystal meth is an illegal drug that can be produced from raw materials found on store shelves and is sold on our streets, usually to students. Crystal meth creates a feeling of euphoria for six to eight hours. Use it twice and you're addicted. This drug is considered to be the worst drug that ever hit the streets of the United States, and there is an alarming increase in its manufacture and use in Alberta. Our children are being targeted, and there is a high risk of aggressive and violent behaviour, paranoia, and brain damage. Our youth, our parents, and our teachers need to be well informed of this highly dangerous drug. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is this government doing to deal with the rapid increase in methamphetamine use in the province?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, this drug is highly addictive, and as has been suggested by the hon. member, it's easy to manufacture with ingredients that are relatively easy to obtain. In this province AADAC is the Alberta government's lead organization in providing information, prevention, and treatment services for alcohol and drugs. AADAC is well aware of the concerns and the problem associated with the increase in the use of crystal meth, or speed, as it's referred to. The drug is more technically known as methamphetamine.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to address crystal meth use in Alberta, AADAC has been working with community organizations throughout the province including the police, schools, and workplaces as well. Their focus has been to increase the awareness of the risks associated with the use of crystal meth. AADAC is also reviewing its treatment protocols around this particular drug to ensure that it continues to follow best practices. AADAC does offer information and treatment assistance for crystal meth use, and anybody needing help should contact AADAC.

Mrs. Jablonski: My second question is to the Solicitor General. Given that the synthetic drug has an extremely high potential for abuse, dependence, and brain damage, what are our police services in Alberta doing about the crystal meth labs and crystal meth dealers, that are on the increase in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right. The increase of meth use and the production of meth is well known to the law enforcement agencies in this province. The RCMP K

Division drug awareness, service, and chemical diversion program is working on a number of strategies to address this very serious issue. A drug-endangered children's seminar was presented in Edmonton in January. More than 800 police members, prosecutors, and children's service workers attended. Also, the conference was well attended in Calgary. The hon. Minister of Children's Services and I both attended. At the seminar a U.S. team of experts spoke on an innovative approach to dealing with the issues of meth and children. Under the program in the U.S. parallel drug and child abuse investigations are used to deal with home meth labs and the dangers children are exposed to.

The Minister of Children's Services and I have requested more information about the program. I have discussed it with the chiefs of police across the province, and I'm meeting with the RCMP in the next couple of weeks to discuss a drug-endangered children's protocol and how to address meth labs.

Injured Workers' Allegations

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I tabled documents in this House that clearly illustrate the violation of the right to natural justice of an injured worker. In the tabled letter from the Solicitor General's public security department to the fraud investigation department of the Workers' Compensation Board, the public security department asked, "Can you please review and advise me what information should be provided from the Solicitor General to [the injured worker]." To the Solicitor General: why, given the Solicitor General's and the Minister of Justice's comments yesterday, was there no police investigation after allegations concerning bribery were forwarded to the Solicitor General?

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we're at a question that was asked yesterday, and I had gone back to my office immediately after the questions and forwarded a letter to the hon. member asking him to provide documentation. I still haven't received that, but I have been doing some investigation, and I have some tablings that I'd like to present in regard to the injured worker he's talking about.

I'd like to quote from my letter that I wrote to the person he is referring to.

In regards to the allegations of bribery within the Workers' Compensation Board, I would encourage you to forward this information, in writing, to the Calgary Police Service. My department does not have investigative authority to address this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: since this injured worker cannot trust the Solicitor General for a fair and unbiased review of his complaint, who in the province should he turn to?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, you know, you wonder how low they'll go. Through all of this information and all of this stuff I have to tell you that I got a call from someone, and they said: don't get off the horse to fight the pigs, Heather.

I would like to mention again that I have directed the person who is inquiring about this particular issue: "In regards to the allegations of bribery within the Workers' Compensation Board, I would encourage you to forward this information, in writing, to the Calgary Police Service." This has nothing to do with my department. I have told him to refer it to the Calgary Police Service.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that tabled WC benefits payment documents indicated that the injured worker received a pension of $155,199.06, of which he has not received to this day 1 cent, will the Solicitor General commit to conducting an investigation into this matter?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, again the hon. member has asked me a question – this is a dispute that this particular person has with the WCB and obviously some payments that he feels he's due. He can contact the Minister of Human Resources, and certainly they'll try and do something.

Mr. Dunford: What's happening here isn't right. The hon. member in the opposition is trying to cast aspersions on an hon. member that's trying to do her job.

Now, he knows very well that I'm the minister responsible for the legislation, and if he's got something like this, then it should be showing up on my desk. Let's start directing the responsibility where it is. He knows very well that I'll take up this case.

Don't you go start picking on some other ministers. It's here where the responsibility is, and you know that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Water Use by Oil and Gas Industry

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One year after a very serious drought in this province Albertans are more aware than ever that we live in a province with an abundance of oil and gas and a growing shortage of water. Almost all Albertans agree that too much freshwater is being used by the energy industry to produce and replace oil, thus taking that water out of the ecosystem and reducing our ability to engage in sustainable farming, to produce food, or to provide safe drinking water to Alberta communities. Unless the government takes action now, these simple, basic, everyday necessities and activities will be beyond the reach of future generations of Albertans. My questions are to the minister of environmental protection. What concrete action is the government taking in support of the phased reduction and eventual elimination of the use of freshwater by the energy industry?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's an interesting question, and it's been answered several times before in the House. Perhaps his staff should write different questions for him, but by the same token I will repeat my answers.

We have a water strategy that will be on our web site at roughly the end of March. At that stage it's a draft strategy; every Albertan will be able to respond to it. Very clearly, one of the issues is the utilization of freshwater, potable water we should call it, by the oil industry. But conservation is not just about the oil industry. Conservation is about all Albertans; the agricultural industry, for instance. I spoke at an irrigation conference just two weeks, three weeks ago and talked to irrigators about their need to conserve water. I spoke yesterday at an AUMA conference. To them I talked of the need of the municipalities to conserve water and the consumers to conserve water. So it's not about picking on one industry. It's about making all our industries more efficient in their utilization of water.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister outline a time frame with specific benchmarks for the phased reduction and eventual elimination of the use of freshwater by the oil and gas industry?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I've already outlined the time frame. I've told this House before that at the end of March we'll have our strategy out there for people to comment on. Part of the discussion will be on all industries' utilization and consumer utilization of water, including, you know, his own use of water. For instance, consumers can save water.

I was in Australia just recently on a private visit, and I happened to notice that they have interesting toilets there. They have a toilet there that you can use a half a flush or a full flush. I would suggest that he get one of these toilets in his place because he needs to use the full flush quite often.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, my last question to this minister, who's managing to be a little humorous today. I'm glad to see that. Will this minister give an undertaking to this House and through this House to all Albertans that any policies that he brings forward for conservation of water will not mean that this basic human need will be turned into a market commodity to be available only to those who can pay the highest price?

Dr. Taylor: We have no plans at present of putting a price on water, but I will be honest with you, Mr. Speaker, and the member. In the discussion strategy that you are going to see, you're going to see some discussion and a statement about whether or not there should be some kind of price for water. Now, that doesn't mean that it's our policy. This is a draft document that's coming out, and where we got this from was the stakeholder conference that we had last June in Red Deer and the thousands of responses that we got from Albertans saying that this is one issue that we should consider. So it will be part of the draft discussion document.

The Speaker: Hon. members, prior to recognizing the first of several hon. members to participate in Members' Statements today, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly a group of ladies and gentlemen representing the Métis Mothers of Alberta. They are here to witness the tabling of a petition by my colleague the MLA for Calgary-Cross. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to stand as I introduce them. I understand that some of the guests may not have arrived yet, but I will introduce all of them. Maryann Stepien; Gayle McKenzie; Muriel Stanley Venne; Audrey Poitras, the president of the Métis Nation of Alberta; Bertha Clark Jones; Deborah Coulter; Mr. Bob Coulter; Barb Budenheim; Melanie Omeniho; Mr. Jerry Letendre; Carol Carafelle-Brzezicki; and Mr. Trevor Gladue. I'd ask all members to please join me in extending them a warm, traditional welcome.

Lois Hole Library Legacy Program

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's libraries are among Canada's finest, and they play a vital role in the lives of each generation and in the future growth and prosperity of our province.

Yesterday I had the opportunity to attend the official and proud launch of the Lois Hole library legacy program at our St. Albert public library. This program is truly the brainchild of Her Honour, after whom the program is named. The Lois Hole library legacy program began as an idea formed when our Lieutenant Governor gave a rousing speech to the library community at a library conference. On this occasion, as is her wont Her Honour departed from her prepared text and told the tale of Grandma Hole and her drawer full of sweaters. Apparently Her Honour discovered one Christmas that her mother-in-law had been graciously accepting the gifts of her children and relatives, often sweaters, and putting them into a drawer, where they were never worn. Her Honour noted: would it not have been better for everyone, including Grandma Hole, if the gifts had been to a library, honouring Grandma Hole in the process? Her Honour concluded by commenting that Grandma Hole certainly didn't need another sweater but the local library could certainly use another book.

So it is that the Lois Hole library legacy program invites friends to help build the collections in Alberta's libraries. Donations may be more than simply a personal gift to your library and community. The legacy program allows for a donation in the donor's own name or to honour a friend, family member, or organization. In recognition of Her Honour's special link to our St. Albert community through her contribution to libraries as both author and advocate and by virtue of Her Honour's longstanding utilization of our libraries, I am honoured to speak about this wonderful program in our Legislature today. I encourage everyone to consider participating in the Lois Hole library legacy program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

International Women's Day

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would venture to say that many, perhaps most, people would say that women have achieved it all. You've come a long way, baby, and all of that rhetoric. Certainly, there are success stories: federal pay equity legislation, recognition of Alberta's Famous Five as nation builders, women in elected office in every level from school trustee through to MP and Senator, almost limitless career choices for our daughters from stay-at-home mom to CEO. I know that some will feel it's churlish of me to observe that we continue to have a gender gap in wages, that female lawyers and doctors continue to flee from an antifamily corporate culture, that choices in reproductive health are there on the books but not in reality. Just when will the minister of health have studied coverage and accessibility to midwifery services enough?

Well, gee whiz, Laurie, can't you just be content with how far women have come and sit down and be quiet? [interjections] Well, I wish I could, and that exchange of interjections is exactly why I stay up. It's no fun being a feminist in Alberta, I'll tell you, but those Alberta women who haven't achieved pay equity still look to me.

Sexual and workplace harassment toward women is still high on the hit parade of complaints to the Human Rights Commission. Poverty is still a women's area of expertise. Elderly women are still more likely to be staggeringly poor. Poor single-parent families are still more likely to be headed by women, and poor kids come from poor families. Talk about your intergenerational debt. Women's shelters still ask me about their funding, and, yes, they did get an increase for staff salaries – rightly so, as they'd fallen behind their government counterparts – but shelters still do not get enough funding for most of the programs and outreach they offer.

So women have come a long way, far enough to celebrate but, for me, not far enough to sit back and be quiet. Happy International Women's Day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

International Women's Day

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise today to celebrate and acknowledge International Women's Day, which will be celebrated around the world this Saturday, on March 8. In 1977 the United Nations established International Women's Day as an opportunity to reflect on the many issues that affect women. These include reviewing the progress made to advance women's equality, assessing the challenges that are unique to women in a contemporary society, and considering future steps to enhance the status of women and acknowledging the gains made in each of these important areas.

This year, Mr. Speaker, the theme is Worldwide Women, WWW: Surfing the Digital Revolution. This theme encourages us all to take a closer look at the impact of information and communications technologies, in particular Internet applications, as they affect women and use these technologies to help advance women's issues and to promote greater equality.

The hon. Minister of Community Development, who is responsible for women's issues, recently met with his federal/provincial/territorial counterparts to address a number of issues which are of particular importance to women. These issues included the prevention of violence against women, promoting and pursuing women's health issues, and encouraging greater economic equality for women.

Mr. Speaker, International Women's Day is an important time to focus our attention on these and many other issues affecting our women in our province and elsewhere. Therefore, I would ask all members of this Assembly and all Albertans to consider these issues as we reflect on the many significant contributions that women have made and continue to make to our society.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Electronic Health Records

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Nothing is more personal than someone's health information. It can reveal what medical conditions you've had, what medication you're on, whether you suffer from an embarrassing or a socially unacceptable illness, and what treatment you're receiving. Every day health professionals collect and document these details to assist in diagnosis and treatment, but few health professionals or patients really have any idea where that information goes, who has access to it and under what circumstances. Nor do they know of the many secondary purposes this information may be used for.

Until now the Health Information Act gave Albertans a direct measure of control over these files. It required health professionals to get permission from Albertans before their identifiable health information was shared over electronic systems with other custodians. Now the Alberta government is taking part of that measure of control away.

The issue of control revolves around ownership. In Alberta this government has gone to great lengths to avoid even suggesting that Albertans own their own health information, because ownership implies rights, and ultimately it is the rights of individual Albertans that are being forgotten in this debate over health information. We are not opposed to electronic health records or to sharing of those records for medical purposes among health professionals. We are not opposed to streamlining the process to improve patient care, but this should not be done in haste, trampling patient rights in the process.

Roy Romanow, in his recent report on the future of medicare, recommended that individual Canadians have ownership over their personal health information. We agree with his recommendation. As Liberals we value the individual and the individual's rights. Health information is probably the most sensitive information that can be shared. Albertans should have some measure of control over how that information is shared.

Thank you.

2:40head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Bill 12 Financial Sector Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave today to introduce a bill being Bill 12, Financial Sector Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

Bill 12 includes amendments to the Alberta Treasury Branches Act, the Credit Union Act, the Insurance Act, the Loan and Trust Corporations Act, and the Public Sector Pension Plans Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 12 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Bill 25 Class Proceedings Act

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today and request leave to introduce Bill 25, the Class Proceedings Act.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will help ensure that Alberta's civil justice system operates in a manner that is fair [inaudible] in promoting class action matters. This legislation sets out specific procedures that the parties must follow when pursuing a class action while bringing our legislation in line with the majority of other provinces.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 25 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter that I received from Karen Ferrari, who attended the education forum on Tuesday evening, a letter addressed to me asking me to continue to speak to the issue of education and its funding.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a document to table today listing prices on materials from the Learning Resources Centre of the Department of Learning and comparing them to prices from a private wholesaler. In some cases the Learning Resources Centre price is lower, but in many cases the private wholesaler is lower.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first two are on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition, the first being from David MacBain, who is very concerned about freezing in the dark because of heating bills.

The second is from Al Yarmoloy, who is requesting that the Premier call an election, because he would like more money to offset his energy costs.

The third is the much awaited, for some strange reason, CAPP's, Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers', own paper entitled Water Use. I referred in my question yesterday to where they say, "Concern has been expressed that Alberta's oil and gas industry uses a large percentage (up to 30%) of Alberta's licensed ground water," and then state, "This is true," and, of course, then we get the "but."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I table five copies of an e-mail from Lyn Palindat, secretary of the Kate Chegwin school council, addressed to the Minister of Learning asking why the minister declined an invitation to be a panel member at the forum on public education hosted by Kate Chegwin school council.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a press release dated February 14, 2003, from the Alberta Liberal caucus, the Official Opposition, and it's in regard to high heating bills and a reminder of yet another Tory broken promise.

The second tabling I have this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is copies of a petition urging the government to reinstate natural gas rebates. There are 152 signatures on this petition, and they are from Albertans from Smoky Lake, Waskatenau, Coleman, Bellevue, Castor, Innisfail, and Calgary.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a document which comes from this House's own Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing. It's dated November 25, 1987, and the title of this document is Report in Response to Government Motion No. 9 in Relation to Matters Dealing with Order and Privileges of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a letter from Jacqueline Powell addressed to the Premier and dated March 3, 2003. She is extremely disturbed that her combined gas and electric bill now surpasses her monthly mortgage payment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I rise today to table a report authored by Mr. Allan Jobson and a letter to him from the president of WCB. Mr. Jobson's report, a cross-examination of WCB annual reports, contains questions and suggestions hoping to lower workplace injury rates and claim costs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In honour of Métis women I am pleased and proud to table in the Assembly today four copies of an historical petition of over a thousand names on behalf of all Métis mothers, who are deeply concerned and who are working hard to ensure that the Métis children taken into care in our province are identified in the child welfare legislation. This petition demonstrates a strong commitment to the culture and desire of Métis mothers, some of whom are with us here in the gallery today, to properly nurture their very precious children. Congratulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a point of order.

Point of Order

Referring to Nonmembers

Tabling a Cited Document

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order with respect to the comments made by the Premier in response to a question from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. The Premier read some document with which I am unfamiliar about a staff person of the Alberta New Democrat caucus. He read at some length and made suggestions that he didn't know if this person was still in our employ or whether he should remain in our employ. I don't have the Blues, but these are certainly my recollections of what the Premier said. He talked at some length, quoting personal information of this individual, and quite frankly it was nothing but a deliberate drive-by smear of the employee of our caucus, and I take very, very strong exception to it.

I have a number of citations, Mr. Speaker, with respect to this. Standing Order 37 deals with the tabling of documents, and it is well established in this House that when you are referring to a document, it should be tabled in the Assembly. Also, Standing Order 23(j) talks about use of language which is intended to create disorder.

I would like to also draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to Beauchesne 77, which says:

Freedom of speech does not mean that Members have an unlimited or unrestrained right to speak on every issue. The rules of the House impose limits on the participation of Members and it is the duty of the Speaker to restrain those who abuse the rules.

That leads to Beauchesne 493(4), which I will quote briefly.

The Speaker has cautioned Members to exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply.

This is also a subject of Marleau and Montpetit on page 524 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, under Reference by Name to Members of the Public.

Members are discouraged from referring by name to persons who are not Members of Parliament and who do not enjoy parliamentary immunity, except in extraordinary circumstances when the national interest calls for the naming of an individual. The Speaker has ruled that Members have a responsibility to protect the innocent, not only from outright slander but from any slur directly or indirectly implied, and has stressed that Members should avoid as much as possible mentioning by name people from outside the House who are unable to reply and defend themselves against innuendo.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier's deliberate and premeditated attempt, in response to a question that did not even come from a member of the New Democrat opposition caucus, on a staff person who we highly value and who, obviously, the Premier fears is completely unacceptable. We take great offence to it. It's a violation of the rules of the House, the standards of the House, and I believe that the Premier should stand in his place and apologize to this House for that despicable slur upon our staff person.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you have ruled in the past that you wish the people who are the subjects of the points of order to be present at the time when you deal with them, so we would be happy to wait until Monday for the Premier to be present in order for this matter to be further dealt with.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no point of order raised in anything that the hon. member has just said. With respect to tabling of documents, he may have a point, and I would be happy on the Premier's behalf to table the requisite number of copies of a newspaper article, which normally doesn't get tabled in the House, a matter of public record from the Edmonton Journal, December 11, 2002, which is available to all members. So it needn't be made part of the sessional record. It's available to all members and anybody else on the Internet.

It's a newspaper article that the Premier was referring to, the reference of which was that the individual involved clearly submitted himself to the interview for the purposes of the article. It was an article, quite frankly, about how good it is to be in Alberta. A number of individuals were quoted in that article about why they've moved from B.C. to Alberta and how they have a better life in Alberta as a result of that. One of the people quoted in that article happened to be the individual mentioned by the Premier, and the information which he read at that time came directly from the article and referred to the individual, information that that individual obviously provided to the newspaper for the newspaper's publication about his role as a communications officer with the New Democrats.

I believe that I heard the Premier say – and I was sitting right beside him – that he didn't know whether the person was still working with the New Democrats. He didn't want to suggest for a moment that the situation that applied at the time the article was printed was still extant today, and I think that was an appropriate clarification on his behalf, but in no way did he cast any aspersions as to whether or not the individual should be working for the New Democrats. He only used the reference of the newspaper article to indicate that people are moving to Alberta because Alberta is a wonderful place to live, even New Democrats, obviously, or people who work for them. One shouldn't assume that they have memberships.

With respect to the issue about tabling, I'd be more than happy, if it's appropriate, to table the newspaper article, more than happy to do so on behalf of the Premier.

With respect to whether it creates disorder, I should hope that it wouldn't create disorder in this House to refer to people who, of their own accord, tell the media what a good opportunity there is in Alberta and what a good life you can have in Alberta if you choose to move here. I wouldn't think that that would be creating disorder.

With respect to Beauchesne 77, that "freedom of speech does not mean that [you] have an unlimited or unrestrained right," no, but during question period there's certainly a lot of latitude to be able to speak to issues that are raised. Again, at a time when you're talking about, as I remember the question, the comparison of energy prices and the cost of living, the remarks of the Premier were absolutely bang on point with respect to the privilege and benefit of those of us who have the opportunity to live in this great province.

With respect to the reference to Beauchesne 493(4), cautioning the members to "exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply," I think that is a very, very important rule that all members should keep in mind at all times. Many members should be admonished with respect to that, sometimes with respect to letters or questions they raise and naming individuals' names. They ought to make sure that they have the permission of that member and that they don't refer to members. But, in this case, the rule does not apply because it was a newspaper article which that individual, obviously, submitted to the interview, gave his quotes, and it was published and is in the public domain for everybody to read both in back copies of the newspaper and on the Internet.

Mr. Speaker, there is no point of order.

The Speaker: Additional comments from members on this point?

Would the hon. Minister of Economic Development get to his place? The chair is going to stand up. Otherwise, he wants to stay there for 10 minutes. Well, hon. members, it's Thursday afternoon, so why not?

First of all, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is certainly within his right to rise on a purported point of order. I'm going to make one statement though. Swords tend to be sharp on both sides, and sometimes people may not necessarily want what they ask for. In the context of the comments that were made by both parliamentarians here this afternoon, should one accept all the arguments and enforce all the rules that were being demanded to be enforced, I daresay that question period would change very, very dramatically. So let me just deal with some of these things very, very quickly.

A comment was made with respect to Beauchesne 77 at the time, on freedom of speech, that members have an unlimited right to speak on every issue. Well, the fact of the matter is that in the exchange between the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort and the minister in question – and then there was an interjection by the Premier – that whole exchange for that set of questions took less than four and a half minutes. Now, that compares to the first set of the Leader of the Official Opposition, five; the second, four and a half; the third, five and a half; the third party question, the fourth question, was five and a half; the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the minister of health's session was six minutes plus. So in terms of time it fits right within the norm. There was not anything inordinate, out of order with respect to that.

Secondly, in terms of what was actually said – and I'm going to quote from the Blues – this is what the Premier of the province of Alberta said:

Well, Mr. Speaker, indeed I do appreciate very much this opportunity to supplement because while the opposition NDs are out telling Albertans how bad it is in this particular province – and they are. I don't know how they provide policy direction to their communications director, if indeed he is their communications director still, but I do quote Lou Arab. Now, I don't know if Lou Arab is still with the NDs, but Lou Arab cut $240,000 off his mortgage when he left Vancouver in April of last year for a job in Edmonton that paid him less money.

It goes on for some additional sentences. There's nothing in there that to my knowledge is scurrilous or meets the test of being scurrilous or disparaging or anything else, so I don't know. As far as I know, this was a quote that came from a newspaper. At least, the Government House Leader basically verifies that it is. He will table the document so that it'd be to the benefit of all members. If this is something that came right out of a newspaper, well, members tend to do this quite frequently.

Now, the business of naming names. There's caution here that should be applied to this, because let me tell you that today was a good example of a lot of individuals standing up and saying that they want to name names. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands says: well, don't ever mention somebody's name. This is a name that came out of a newspaper, which is quite different. We also heard the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods saying that each week he would bring to the attention of the Assembly a personal issue from somebody and raise the name of the person. No interjection was given at that time. We all saw another question and answer with respect to some purported legal dispute, so one has to be careful with respect to this.

On the point of order the closest point of order that I could ever find with respect to this whole thing might be the fact that a document might have been tabled at that point, but it was a quote that came out. It was a short quote. Generally, our rule is that if you're going to have a long quote, table the document. You can quote a line or two or three out of something and you can generally get away with it. But I don't find any slur, directly or indirectly, with respect to this, hon. member, so I think we'll just pass on this one.

Now, before I say the next number of words, there is the question of when one deals in the Routine with a motion arising out of a ruling that basically caused a prima facie case of privilege. So we looked back as best we could and found that on May 12, 1994, there was a situation in terms of a ruling, and the Speaker of the day basically said that he would deal with it after Orders of the Day. So I'm now going to call Orders of the Day, sit down and get up, and we're going to deal with this question.

Motion under Standing Order 15(6)

The Speaker: Hon. members, before recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and a debate, if there is to be a debate, on a motion, if there is to be a motion . . . I'm couching my words because until we have the motion actually moved – I don't know if there's going to be a motion, but let's assume that there's going to be one. The chair would like to review some procedural issues surrounding this motion.

First, this motion is unique as it does not appear as a government motion or a private member's motion. It has its own category on the Order Paper as matters of privilege are extremely important matters to the life of a Legislature. The last privilege motion the chair recalls being debated in this Assembly was moved on May 12, 1994, and hon. members should know that the chair has firsthand knowledge with respect to that particular motion because at that time the chair ruled that the current Speaker, who was then the Deputy Premier, had a point that was in favour of the then Deputy Premier. So it was this chair, then, who could actually go that step. So there is firsthand knowledge with respect to this.

But since then, the time limits of debate have changed by changes to the Standing Orders. Now under Standing Order 29(1) there is one set of speaking times for government bills and motions and another set of time limits given for debate on private members' motions and bills under Standing Order 29(3). As this is a hybrid motion for which there is no existing provision, the chair must make a decision as provided for in Standing Order 2. Accordingly, the chair finds that each member speaking on the motion will be limited to 10 minutes. In reaching this decision, the chair was influenced by the provisions for debating a matter of urgent public importance under Standing Order 30, where every member is limited to 10 minutes. Like here, the Assembly is setting aside the ordinary business to debate something of significance. For greater clarity there will be no question-and-comment period after a member speaks.

As a follow-up to the many questions from members since yesterday's ruling let me reiterate that there is nothing in the ruling that precludes consultations prior to a bill going on notice. Putting a bill on notice presumes that the bill is in its final form. At that point, it is the members of the House who are to have first knowledge of the contents of the bill. This occurs at first reading.

Now, a ruling was given with respect to this matter. A decision was arrived at. An hon. member rose in the Assembly, apologized to the Assembly, and we moved on. But as a consequence of the House's Standing Orders, Standing Order 15(6), the Assembly has a motion before it, and if moved, then the House has to deal with it and dispose of it.

So at this point the chair will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, if he chooses to be recognized.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will begin by putting the motion on record. I move that the matter of the question of privilege raised on March 4, 2003, by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona regarding the Energy ministry media briefing on Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, prior to it being introduced in the Legislature be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing to review the procedure to be followed in such cases in light of the Speaker's ruling of March 7, 2000, and the ruling of Speaker Milliken of the House of Commons of March 19, 2001, and the subsequent report of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Procedure and House Affairs and, in addition, Mr. Speaker, in light of the ruling made by yourself yesterday.

I want to begin by acknowledging the apology of the Minister of Energy on behalf of the government in the Assembly yesterday. The minister's apology is full and complete. I accepted the minister's apology and consider that particular aspect of the matter closed.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the motion before us today does not deal with an apology for past actions. The motion before us today does not involve past actions at all but, rather, actions that need to be taken by this House in the future to ensure that these past mistakes are not repeated.

In this respect, it's important to note that the House of Commons voted in favour of a motion to refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Procedure and House Affairs. While there does not appear to have been a recorded vote on the motion brought forward by Alliance MP Vic Toews, it would not have been approved without the support of the government members, I think.

Mr. Speaker, as you noted yesterday in your ruling, what we are dealing with in the motion is a very narrow window of time, the time between when an item is put on notice and the time it is introduced into the Assembly. In most cases this time frame is only perhaps one full day or, at most, a few days.

As you noted in your ruling yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the matter that's before us in this motion should in no way impede the executive branch in its consultations and briefing on government legislation prior to and after a bill being placed on notice. I'm fully supportive of the consultations, whether it be news media, the public, or the opposition caucuses, prior to a bill being placed on notice. In fact, we on this side of the House encourage it and appreciate the opportunities for consultation with the government side. However, that's not the subject matter of this motion.

I note that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing is chaired by the Member for Leduc and the deputy chair is the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. I have had the pleasure of working with both of these members in other capacities and know them to be persons of the highest integrity. The fact that this standing committee rarely meets is not a valid argument for why it should or should not meet to consider the particular motion. In fact, I remind this House that the government members themselves have voted in favour of referring a prima facie breach of privilege to the standing committee on privileges and elections on at least one previous occasion. The fact that the standing committee on privileges and elections has rarely met is also reflective of the rarity with which the Speaker has actually ruled that a prima facie breach of privilege exists.

In fact, in the research on this that we have been able to do thus far, there have only been very few occasions in the past 20 years in which the Speaker had ruled that a prima facie breach had occurred. It's a very rare event in the life of a Legislature, Mr. Speaker. One occasion involved a former Member for Athabasca-Lac La Biche and the right to use the French language in the Assembly. In that case, the Assembly voted in favour of a motion referring the matter to the standing committee on privileges and elections. The standing committee deliberated on that matter and issued a report with the recommendations that were tabled earlier today.

On another occasion, April 1993, that you have already referred to, the prima facie breach of privilege involved an allegation by a former Member for Calgary-Buffalo against a former Attorney General. On April 29, 1993, this House approved a motion to refer it to the standing committee, which involved allegations made by the then Member for Calgary-Buffalo against the then Attorney General. The Member for Barrhead on behalf of the government made the motion to refer. The motion was subsequently debated and approved by this House, though there is no record that the standing committee was ever called to consider the motion.

It is important to note that the matter that led to the breach in the case before this Assembly today did not involve any wrongdoing on the part of any individual member but, rather, imperfections and gaps in the process whereby this House deals with its own business and affairs.

In support of approving this motion, I also wish to refer this House to a memo from the Government House Leader to the Speaker dated March 5, 2003, and tabled yesterday in this Assembly. In this letter the Government House Leader makes the argument that this serious matter is best dealt with by way of an all-party committee. The House leader says:

Thus, I argue . . . there is no prima facie case of privilege; however with the able assistance of the Speaker, perhaps we can find some all party mechanism to once and for all establish some all party agreed-to process that eliminates this constant privilege issue and its nebulous relatives, and guides the honest efforts of people to consult with stakeholders.

Mr. Speaker, I couldn't agree more with the Government House Leader. The motion that is before this House today would do exactly what the House leader recommends be done in the submission yesterday to the Speaker.

In light of the Government House Leader's submission to the Speaker yesterday, I look forward to his support of this motion today. I'm certain that should the Assembly see fit to approve this motion, the standing committee of this Legislature, like the standing committee of the House of Commons, can work effectively to develop protocols that safeguard the rights of members while ensuring that information is provided in a timely manner to the news media and the public. Should the Assembly approve this motion, I'm prepared to commit that my colleague and I are prepared to work constructively to develop protocols and rules that achieve all of these ends. For all the above reasons I urge members on all sides of the House to support this important motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to this issue, and I want to start by indicating to the hon. member who moved the motion that, unfortunately, I cannot support his motion. I'll try and outline to the House why I cannot support his motion, but the gist of it is that the motion is tainted with a breach of privilege. A motion to refer a matter to the committee to deal with the issue of how briefings should be dealt with or when the House owns a bill and those sorts of things might be quite another matter, but this motion is on the floor today because you, Mr. Speaker, ruled yesterday on a prima facie case of a breach of privilege, and thus this motion is about privilege. This motion is about referring a breach of privilege to the standing committee.

With respect, Mr. Speaker, I would have to argue that not only was there not a breach of privilege yesterday in the House with respect to the matter that was raised, although you found that there was a prima facie case. As you so eloquently pointed out yesterday, the test that you face is a threshold test. It's for the House to determine whether or not there was, in fact, a breach of privilege. But even if there was a breach of privilege, that breach of privilege has been fully and completely purged by the actions of the Minister of Energy on behalf of and taking responsibility for his department, making a full and complete and abject apology to the House for the actions of the department in providing the briefing to the media before the bill was before the House.

Of course, it was evident in the evidence that was before you that the bill itself was not shared with anyone. It was a media briefing on the technical aspects of the bill and information relating to the bill, which is, of course, the stuff and substance of all briefings. But no paper was shared, and the bill itself was not shared, so there was not, in my view, a breach of privilege, and if there was a breach of privilege, the question is moot because the full and complete apology is the most that one could expect, I would argue, in terms of any disciplinary action.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has indicated that because of the apology he is not looking for any further sanction but looking for a process, but unfortunately what we're vested with is a motion which is referring the breach of privilege to the standing committee, and I cannot ask members in this House to support that. In fact, the record would show, if that motion was passed, that this House passed a motion based on the breach of privilege, and that is inappropriate as a method, in my submission, to get a resolution to the issue, which we would all like to get a resolution to.

So what we have, I would submit, Mr. Speaker, is a situation where the rules of this House were actually followed to the extreme. You made a ruling on March 7 of 2000, relative to a similar situation, and at that time it was clear in your ruling that in keeping with the role of the Assembly and the respect that it should be accorded that bills in their final form should first be reviewed by the Assembly after first reading. In the chair's experience this is the accepted practice in Alberta, and the chair would expect it to continue.

Indeed, that was honoured in this case.

I will go on.

Even in the federal Parliament, where the Speakers of the Commons and the Senate exercise control over the entire building, it has been held that restricting attendance at a media lockup does not constitute a question of privilege.

Again, by having a technical briefing for media and not including other members or allowing other members to attend it or inviting them to attend, it is specifically not a breach of privilege in accordance with that ruling.

Allowing or not allowing a member to attend a media briefing does not constitute an impediment or an obstruction to the member performing his or her parliamentary duties.

So that is clear in terms of the rules of our House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you were placed on the horns of a dilemma because since that ruling there's been a subsequent ruling from the Speaker of the federal House. The Speaker of the federal House, the House of Commons of Canada, did in fact rule that once a notice is placed on the Order Paper, it becomes the purview of the House and that doing a briefing between that time and the time it's introduced for first reading is a breach of a member's privilege. So I think it was fully within your purview to indicate that now, having the opportunity to revisit the issue, you take into account the ruling of the federal Speaker.

However, you also took great care to indicate that we were not bound by the decisions of the federal Speaker, and therefore I believe that the advice that I as House leader have been giving to my colleagues throughout with respect to briefing opposition and briefing media was in accordance with the rules of the House as we understood them to be. We will now, of course, have to deal with the rules of the House as they now are, which is a different thing, as we go forward, and we will certainly be doing that. I for one as Government House Leader will certainly be encouraging members to follow the rules as we now know them to be until such time as we can visit those processes and procedures in an appropriate manner.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would argue to members of the House that they should not pass this motion because the motion is tainted with the aspect of a breach of privilege. By passing this motion, it would suggest that we wish to refer a breach of privilege to the standing committee. Although the motion does go on to talk about the processes, it cannot divorce itself from the reason why it's on the Order Paper in the first place, which is the question of breach of privilege. As I've said a number of times, first of all, because the actions that were taken were fully consistent with the March 7 ruling, I would argue that there was not a breach of privilege. Secondly, if there was a breach of privilege and even in the absence of it, the Minister of Energy did the right thing and apologized for what really is the gist of this issue, and that is that the hon. member was not afforded a timely briefing so that he could have been in a position to respond to media questions, which, again, was the subject that the federal Speaker was ruling on as well.

So without this question of privilege having been raised, the matter which really ought to have been dealt with would have been a complaint, I would suggest, from the hon. member perhaps to the House leader or perhaps to the Minister of Energy indicating that he ought to have been briefed in a timely manner, consistent with the media, so that he would be able to respond to media questions.

As we move forward, it's in the interests of all members that we have good, solid public policy discussion and, in the interests of all members, that the public understand the issues that are going to be before the House and that are before the House and that all members have the opportunity to understand them to their fullest extent, and sometimes that requires a technical briefing.

So we do need, Mr. Speaker, to move on to a manner of resolving this in an appropriate way at some point. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona mentioned my submission to you on this, and I believe it to be something that we need to do. We need to get together, perhaps with the Speaker and all parties, to talk about what the rules of the House should be.

As House leader I encourage us to put bills on notice at the earliest possible opportunity so that all members of the House can know as soon as possible when a bill is going to come before the House. Prior to the House meeting we issue a news release to indicate, to the extent that we are able, that the bills that are ready or are close to being ready have gone through all the approval processes that will be brought before the House. I meet with House leaders and outline in some detail what our legislative agenda is going to be, provide a great deal of material and want to continue to do that, and then when bills are ready in their final form or close to their final form, we put the bills on notice on the Order Paper so that people can know in advance, even if they don't have the detailed content, what items might be coming up. Then I encourage colleagues to provide in-depth briefings to opposition members, and obviously they will also want to provide in-depth briefings to the media.

So now we're in a position where, by putting the bill on notice, we are no longer able to brief the media, although in your ruling, Mr. Speaker, you did indicate that we could still share, on a courtesy basis, information with members of the opposition and perhaps, if I read it correctly, even a copy of the bill, which is something which we have not done under the earlier rules. We do need to resolve those issues, because in the absence of resolving those issues, what we have is a blackout period, in essence, from the time the bill goes on notice to the time that it comes into the House, and that's not, in my view, in anybody's interest.

However, I'll make a commitment to work with opposition House leaders and with the Speaker's office to try and find an appropriate resolution and recommendations to bring back to the House, but, Mr. Speaker, I have to ask members of this House not to support this motion, because the motion is tainted with the question of privilege. Although it purports to be a motion to send it to the standing committee for the purpose of dealing with the process, it's a privilege motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We agree with your ruling that there was a breach of privilege in this case. We accept the Minister of Energy's apology for that, and that has been the practice of this House in previous situations, and we find that that is acceptable in this case.

With regard to the motion we see before us, we agree, certainly, with the intent of the motion. This whole situation has brought to light a procedural issue in terms of dealing with a large number of bills coming right at the very beginning of session and the briefing processes around them. While we support the intent of the motion where it talks about reviewing the procedures to be followed with each case, we have very grave concerns that if this motion goes to the committee, it won't be dealt with in a serious fashion. We know the committee structure, we know generally how those votes go in those kinds of committee structures, and this is an important issue that needs to be dealt with.

It would be my hope and suggestion that first of all we could do what the Government House Leader has outlined, and that is to get the House leaders together to develop a more formal structure in terms of briefing on substantive bills and the timing of that briefing in terms of how soon before or after the bill gets introduced in the House. The Government House Leader has attempted to get his ministers to brief the Official Opposition and the ND opposition party in a timely fashion. In some cases it has worked very well and in some cases not so well. For example, in this session on Bill 3, which is a substantive bill, also from the Minister of Energy, offers were made early on, prior to the bill being introduced, for substantive briefings. We would like to see that kind of a process more formalized so that situations like we saw happen this week don't happen again in the future.

I think it's in the best interest of all members of the House if we try that approach on an informal basis first and have House leaders go back to their caucuses and see if we can find a framework, a set of procedures, to move forward on that will be agreeable to all parties, because the intent here, really, is to give us good information in a timely fashion. That's what we need to debate these substantive bills. There are other issues with other bills in terms of people getting briefed well after they've been introduced. In fact, my colleague for Edmonton-Centre is right now at the briefing for a bill that was supposed to be up for second reading this afternoon. Of course, it's impossible for us to raise substantive issues and questions on a bill that we haven't seen or had explanations of.

So we would ask first that all members in the Assembly agree to move forward and try to find a framework for resolution to this. If that doesn't work, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the option is open to us to bring forward this kind of a motion in the future that would be unrelated to any situations of privilege brought against members, and that's what we would support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, to say that I'm disappointed with the comments of the Government House Leader and the Official Opposition House Leader is an understatement.

Dealing first of all with the comments of the Government House Leader. You, Mr. Speaker, did not find that a breach of privilege had occurred. Rather, you found that a prima facie case for breach of privilege had been found, and this is a distinction which should be clear to the Government House Leader as he is a lawyer by profession. That means that the issue needs to be resolved, and I think that in terms of any pursuit of that, it is largely the procedures of this Assembly that this motion should be put. In fact, the rules call for such a motion or anticipate it at least.

The minister has gone on to argue the case here in his debate on this motion as to whether or not a case of privilege actually exists, and this is not the forum for that, Mr. Speaker. This is a motion on whether or not to refer your finding that there was a prima facie case of privilege to the appropriate body within our rules in order that it can be dealt with there.

Now, we have said – and we're sincere in this – that in terms of any sanction that might be applied for this offence, it has already been dealt with by the minister's apology, which we completely accept. I'd like to refer hon. members to the recent case with respect to the House of Commons when the Minister of Health did a very similar thing, and she issued her apology prior to the motion being debated. Nevertheless, the House of Commons voted to refer this to their committee not in order that the minister be punished but that some sort of resolution could be found. This is, in fact, exactly what the Government House Leader anticipated in his brief to you, Mr. Speaker, prior to your ruling that there should be some all-party attempt to deal with this. This is precisely where the matter ought to be dealt with, and it is the body where the rules indicate these cases should go.

I want to correct, I think, the Government House Leader on one other important point, and that is that at no point in your ruling yesterday, Mr. Speaker, did you say that the government is now in a position where it cannot share briefings on legislation with members of the media. In fact, my recollection is that you went out of your way in that ruling to indicate that that was not the case. What needs to happen, as we interpret the ruling and as we interpret the report of the committee of the House of Commons that dealt with a similar case there, is that if a briefing on legislation is going to be provided to the media, it must be provided to members of the Assembly first. So there is no limitation or prohibition on briefing the media as far as we are concerned and as far as we interpret both your ruling and the report of the committee of the House of Commons, and I would suggest that any attempt to persuade people that the government can no longer share with the media or any policy adopted by the government to limit briefings to the media in light of your ruling yesterday is not in accordance with what has been said.

Now, I thought that the response of the Official Opposition House

Leader was disappointing, but it really is a sad commentary on the state of the democratic institutions of this Assembly when the opposition feels that reference to a standing committee of the Assembly will not produce a serious result, and that's not the Official Opposition's fault, Mr. Speaker. I think it speaks to the fact that we have a number of standing committees of this Assembly that, if they've ever met at all, certainly haven't met in the recollection of many of us in this Assembly. Nevertheless, we believe that this is the appropriate place to refer the matter.

Mr. Speaker, we've said and we want to reiterate that in terms of any sanction that might be applied in this case, we believe it's already been met by the minister's apology. But we also believe that there is a great opportunity, which was anticipated in your ruling yesterday, that we can resolve some of these questions about what constitutes a case of privilege, what the rights of the members of the Assembly are with respect to getting information, and so on.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I am very disappointed that the government is going to use its majority to block the course of parliamentary justice in this case. It is a bit akin to after someone being indicted for an offence, the police would decide that the person was not guilty, and it wouldn't be going to trial. Of course, these institutions are the parallel within this Assembly to the court system that exists outside it. We've got the Government House Leader now standing up and saying that essentially nobody's guilty even though the person in question has – effectively it's been found that there is a prima facie case, and there will be no trial because the government can use its majority to prevent it. This is not the trial; this is the motion to refer it for consideration. I just want to reiterate that what's on trial here is not the Minister of Energy, who's apologized, but what is on trial here are the procedures that have sometimes been used by the government, and what we want to do is find an effective way to correct those so that the rights of members are respected in the future and we do not have to spend time in this Assembly on matters like this.

So with that I will conclude my remarks and suggest that the members ought to protect the rights of the Assembly, uphold the suggestions made by yourself in your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and vote in favour of this motion.

Mrs. McClellan: I'd just like to make a couple of comments regarding the motion and through those comments urge members not to support the motion. I've read very carefully and listened to your ruling on the procedures that occurred. I listened very carefully to, I think, a very profound apology from the minister. Mr. Speaker, I've not as long a time in this Legislature as yourself or maybe one or two other hon. members, but I have been here quite some time and have had the opportunity to act in several ministerial capacities, and I have to say that I have experienced, I think, three Speakers, two Premiers, and, of course, an assorted number of colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, the practice of briefing, if you wish, or talking with the opposition members is not a common practice, and it is not a requirement. It has been a courtesy, and I think it has been done with the best interests of the amount of information that can come and for the best interests of developing the best legislation. I have had the privilege of having information that I have shared with my critics – often critics because sometimes it doesn't work that everyone is able or wants to avail themselves of that – and I would feel very badly if I felt that I could no longer do that. Again, I was disappointed that this occurred. I think it has been a good practice.

I'm going to use an example. After this I'm a little bit afraid to use anything, but I'm going to use an example. On a piece of legislation that would be coming into the House on an agricultural matter, Mr. Speaker, the bill is due to come in and is put on notice, and it is discovered by one of my colleagues, the opposition members, somebody, that the people affected by this bill have some very serious concerns with a clause. If we were to proceed this way, I couldn't sit down with that group and, indeed, try to identify the concern and repair to make the appropriate change if that bill had been put on notice. This is a very real example because it could've happened in this session but just by chance did not. I think that's really unfortunate. I know debate tends at times to be a bit confrontational, but it really isn't. The idea of debate on a bill – I try to accept the comments of the opposition in that way, that they are trying to improve the legislation that we are putting forward. I think the briefing, anything that we can do to improve the legislation prior to bringing it in, solves some of those issues, lessens the amendments, makes the House flow better and probably better legislation.

So I just wanted to make those very brief comments as a person who has been here for a period of time in different House rules. I find that these things work well for us, and I would not want to see them discouraged or stopped. It is a courtesy. It is not a requirement, although I understand from Mr. Speaker's ruling very clearly what the issue was in this particular case, and as I say, the minister has, I think, very eloquently and very profoundly apologized for the infraction. I think we all understand it better, and I do not want to see us go to something that might change something that has worked effectively in these last short years that it's been in place, the courtesy of briefing with our opposition members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to clarify something and particularly in the comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands that somehow this vote is a matter of upholding your ruling. I would hope that I misunderstood him, but just so that it is clear to all hon. members what the role of the Speaker and the duties of the Speaker are, I refer to Beauchesne 117 on page 29 on the role of the Speaker.

Once the claim of a breach of privilege has been made, it is the duty of the Speaker to decide if a prima facie case can be established.

Further down at (2):

It has often been laid down that the Speaker's function in ruling on a claim of breach of privilege is limited to deciding the formal question . . . and does not extend to deciding the question of substance.

I think that's what we're really looking at today.

Further to that, Beauchesne again, 172(2) under the procedural duties of the Speaker:

It has often been laid down that the Speaker's function in ruling on a claim of breach of privilege does not extend to deciding the question of substance whether a breach of privilege has in fact been committed – a question which can only be decided by the House itself.

Then when we go to the motion as recorded in our Votes and Proceedings that we all received today, it says that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona "gave oral notice of his intention to move that the matter of the question of privilege raised on March 4, 2003 by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona regarding the Energy Ministry media briefing . . ." That is what the substance of the motion is, and I would think that the apology as everyone has accepted it would do, and I concur with the remarks of the Government House Leader and the House leader of the Official Opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I just want to make it very clear. No other member wants to participate?

Then proceed, please. Close the debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, a very brief clarification because the Member for Highwood has drawn the attention of the House to this matter. I want to quote from your ruling so that the matter is clear to every one of us once and for all. I just want to quote from the last few lines of your statement in one paragraph. You said:

Perhaps that committee . . .

That is, the Select Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform.

. . . could be reconstituted or the matter referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing. The Chair wishes to stress that this is a matter of concern to all members, not just one caucus.

I just want to first of all express my disappointment with the position that the Government House Leader has taken in opposing this motion before the House, a motion that is principally intended to refer this whole matter and the matter of your ruling yesterday to the committee that would work collaboratively and co-operatively, involving members from all sides of the House, to resolve these matters in a way that becomes a public record. We are certainly willing to engage in backdoor negotiations prior to that. There's no reason why the three House leaders cannot meet in preparation for that, but this is a matter that is of public concern.

This is a matter that the all-party committee of the House of Commons, an all-party committee represented by five different parties: the Canadian Alliance Party; the Liberal Party, the ruling party; the Conservative Party; the new Quebec forum or whatever it's called; and the NDP . . . All five parties are represented on this committee of the House of Commons, and this committee, Mr. Speaker, says what you quoted here yesterday, and I want to requote that. It's important for everyone to pay attention to it for our own good to make sure that the work of this House, the reputation of this House is maintained and done in the best possible way. This is the quotation:

The rights of the House and its Members in this role . . .

That is, the role as elected representatives.

. . . are central to our constitutional and democratic government.

This case should serve as a warning that our House will insist on the full recognition of its constitutional function and historic privileges across the full spectrum of government.

So, Mr. Speaker, really, what's at issue here is the obligation of the House to define clearly the boundaries between the powers of the executive branch of the government of Alberta and the legislative branch of the government of Alberta, which is this Assembly. I really find it difficult to understand why the Government House Leader and the Deputy Premier resist the opportunity that this House has to draw these lines clearly in the interest of the health of democratic government and constitutional government in this province. This is what I find very difficult to understand.

It is true that the minister was contrite when he stood up yesterday in this House in the best possible way, and that particular matter has been resolved, but the matter that has not been resolved, Mr. Speaker, the matter that led me in the first place to rise on a point of privilege and contempt of the Legislature, is the inappropriateness in constitutional and legislative terms of the practices and procedures that have been used in this particular instance that call into question the rightful role of this Assembly in debating the legislation, in receiving the legislation and the information. So it is those practices that will not be examined publicly by an all-party committee. It will not become a record of this House.

In essence, what the Government House Leader has argued, what the Deputy Premier has argued, is that there is nothing with that particular practice that your ruling has put into question, that I have certainly raised questions about. So if this House votes against this motion, it in fact then votes to get a message to the government to continue with the kind of practice that is challenging this House. That's the issue, Mr. Speaker.

We need a public record of this House speaking in one voice that it does see that there is something wrong with those procedures and practices. Then this House, as a House, as a collective, is willing to take on this challenge and collaboratively and co-operatively address those issues. That's why I call on the members of this House to vote for this motion that's before it in my name.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 16
Agricultural Dispositions Statutes
Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to move second reading of Bill 16, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of the bill is to promote co-operation and respect between disposition holders and other users of public leased land for grazing. In particular, it addresses recreational users and industry that may want access to the land for exploration. The legislation sets clear rules that encourage better communication.

We provide these leases because we recognize the importance of grazing to the sustainability of these public lands. Over the years the farmers and ranchers with leases have provided excellent stewardship, taking care to ensure that these lands are kept in good condition. At the same time we recognize that other Albertans, such as hikers, hunters, and anglers, want access to these lands also.

There are about 10 million acres of agricultural public land, also known as the white area, and about 5 million of those are currently leased. We work with about 5,700 grazing leaseholders to manage these lands, Mr. Speaker. For background, we have almost 100 million acres of public land in the province of Alberta, of which 86 million acres are in a green area. Less than 1 percent of the green area is under agricultural lease that would restrict access.

The department will continue to use a commonsense approach to this legislation.

An Hon. Member: That'll be new.

Mr. Cardinal: That'll be new, but we'll do that.

Right now legislation and regulations do not specifically address the rights of either these recreational users or the leaseholders, Mr. Speaker. This can lead sometimes to confusion. If there is a conflict now, the only solution is the courts, which can be lengthy and very costly. The new legislation and regulations clearly state the rights and responsibilities of the leaseholder and the recreational user.

These leaseholders are the stewards of this land and need to be aware of who is using it, Mr. Speaker. Recreationists also want to access these lands. Most people who go hunting or hiking want to know where they are, whether it is on public land or private land. This is something recreationists have asked for since the early 1990s. This legislation balances these needs. For example, leaseholders will be required to provide contact information to the department and allow access for defined recreation purposes unless there are extenuating circumstances; for example, in some cases when there is a fire danger or when users want access to fenced pasture where livestock are present. On the other hand, recreational users will be required to contact the specific agricultural disposition holder prior to entering the land for recreational purposes and follow the duties outlined in the regulations, such as packing out all litter, not lighting fires without consent, and closing gates where possible.

The legislation will be accompanied by better information than was available before: a brochure including general information, public lands' office phone numbers, toll-free telephone lines, and the web site; a train-the-trainer program to help our staff provide local information sessions; and continued use of our Use Respect signage to encourage more use in potentially high traffic areas. The web site will allow leaseholders to be contacted but will contain safeguards to protect the privacy of leaseholders. As well, under legislation the leaseholder will have reduced liability for the recreational user.

This legislation also provides an appeals process for the resource companies who want to access the lands for exploration purposes. In the past once a leaseholder refused access for exploration, the company had no right to appeal the process. All the current processes of negotiation and a review will continue to occur until the leaseholder ultimately rejects the exploration request. Under the proposed legislation, Mr. Speaker, if a leaseholder refuses entry, a new dispute resolution process can be used. The final step is that the company can go to the Surface Rights Board and apply for a right-of-way entry in order to explore on a grazing lease or a farm development lease. In this way the explorer's activity is dealt with the same way as oil and gas development accesses.

Mr. Speaker, this bill rescinds the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act that was passed by government in 1999 but not proclaimed. The intent of this new bill is similar: good stewards of our public lands. With regard to compensation the original legislation only dealt with part of this issue; that is, the compensation payments. We will continue to study the issue of surface compensation as well as rental rates and assignment fees as a package over the next year or so. The key stakeholders in this government are confident that we can develop a better solution on these issues than contained in the former act, a solution that is workable for leaseholders and all Albertans. One other change from the former act is the continued payment of taxes directly by the leaseholder to the municipality. This is an efficient process that we want to continue.

Our legislation builds on extensive public consultation that occurred in 1997 and reflects recent discussions with the stakeholders. We believe our new legislation accomplishes a balanced approach. It considers the varying needs of users and provides secure access for our resources.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have this opportunity to speak to Bill 16, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. Well, the one thing we know for sure is that as long as there are grazing leases in Alberta, there is going to be controversy about a variety of the issues surrounding grazing leases, and this is certainly no exception.

This bill is a case where we did get a briefing by the department prior to the bill being put on notice – I don't think even the final drafting was done – and it's good information to have, certainly, to go over what the highlights of the bill are going to be, what both sides think are controversial issues. In some cases we can decide to agree on some aspects of the bill and disagree on other aspects of the bill and move forward from that point. It's more helpful to get a briefing on the bill when we can see more information, more detail of what's going to be in the bill, so I was quite pleased by the part of the Speaker's ruling that talked about the potential for us seeing bills ahead of time on an embargoed kind of basis or any other kind of basis. So I look forward to those kinds of discussions and debates being held and new rules being put in place around that.

What we see before us with Bill 16 is the result of a bill that was talked about back in 1999. There are about 5 million acres of public land leased for the purpose of grazing with about 5,700 grazing leaseholders, and those 5 million acres account for approximately 3 percent of Alberta's total geographic land. It happens to be land, Mr. Speaker, that is used for multiple purposes, not the least of which is recreation, and that seems to be where the most amount of conflict comes between existing leaseholders, recreational users, and then oil and gas who want access to the land for a variety of reasons.

When we saw Bill 31 come forward in 1999 and subsequently being passed, what we also saw after the passing of that legislation was some really quite strenuous discussion and objection from a variety of stakeholders but most especially grazing leaseholders, Mr. Speaker. Bill 31 at that time was intended to establish dispute resolution processes for industrial and recreational land access disputes and to clarify the rights and responsibilities of leaseholders and other persons in respect to the access of public land. These changes actually never attracted too much attention during the actual debate of Bill 31. What made it so controversial was that the government planned to change the terms of all the leases held to public lands so that the lessees would no longer receive compensation from resource companies who were using the same land. This was very controversial in part because lessees paid out approximately $3 million in fees for the rights to their leases but received over $40 million in compensation from resource companies.

The other controversial issue at the time was that the government was going to see changes in terms of the lease, which is a contract, unilaterally so that lessees received no compensation for the land they had paid to use but lost to resource operations. We saw that at the time as a breach of contract law and that there should have been some compensation.

Most of the debate happened after the bill was passed. At the time of passing, the Premier talked about taking some time before they would proclaim it, pending further consultation with those affected. He said that they would make a change to the bill, saying that the amendment will empower the agriculture minister to make regulations and that it would probably take about six months for that bill to be proclaimed. So that was in May of 1999. Here we are in March of 2003, and we see a new bill in place, and those controversial sections are out of this bill so that, hopefully, they can get this part of it passed, which deals with the least controversial portions of the old Bill 31.

The minister talks about those more controversial parts being brought in later on, and I'm sure there will be a lot of debate. Sometimes it's easier to get controversial legislation passed in the first part of the Legislature, when people don't seem to be paying as much attention as they do when the weather warms up and we get towards the end of it. He might have brought these bills in in the wrong order, Mr. Speaker, but that remains to be seen, and I guess we'll see it during the debate.

For the most part, we don't have too many concerns with this bill as it stands. It clarifies the rights and responsibilities for recreational and exploration access to public land used for agricultural purposes, and that's a good thing. The dispute resolution mechanisms are created, and to have those resolutions is also a good thing, Mr. Speaker. We have some concerns around those, which I'll get into. In principle they're very supportable, but in a practical application they may not be as useful as other forms might be, so we're looking at that now in terms of potentially bringing an amendment when we get to committee stage.

We, as always with these bills, have a concern about the regulations. Once again we see in this bill that a lot of the power is going to be designated to regulations, and some of those decisions, Mr. Speaker, are quite substantive and should in fact, we think, take place on the floor of this Assembly so that the reasons for putting them in place are talked about, the reasons why some parties may not like them to be put in place are talked about, and that is public information that people can review and look at later on to make comments on and understand the process of how it happened. [interjection] Yeah, we may be looking at that too.

The biggest concern we hear from groups at this stage is that the new fees that are talked about here could be substantial and may create some issues for groups. They're taking a look at it now. So for the most part it's not too bad, but we do have some concerns with a few parts of it.

Really, the stakeholders who were unhappy with this particular bill were those who are primarily recreational users, and I think they have some legitimate concerns. The minister talked about the process for people notifying leaseholders that they want access to the land, and in theory that sounds like a really good idea, but it's a little harder in practical application when you get out on those 5 million acres and decide where it is you want to go and how you're going to plan your trip. What this means now is that recreational users have to put in a great deal of planning and thought to where they're going to go, when they're going to be on the land, and how they're going to access it. So the spontaneity of being out on some of these slopes and deciding to change your route for whatever reasons – there could be a multitude of reasons why you would want to do that – is going to be lost because you're going to have to notify leaseholders now that you want to cross their land. So if you're out there and you want to go somewhere, you hope, first of all, that it's well posted, that you're notified that you're going to be going onto grazing leases. That should be obvious in most cases because there'll be fences, but then there has to be some sort of notification process, I think, posted on those fences so that if people are there and want access, they can.

The way the process is set up now, it seems to me – unless I've misunderstood it – that they've got to take a look at a map and they've got to notify local offices on the web site or by phone or, I'm sure, by fax and find out what the access number is to get permission from the leaseholder and then wait for that leaseholder to respond back to them. We hope all that happens in a timely fashion, but we don't know how long that process is going to take, and I think those are legitimate questions to ask. What are we looking at for a turnaround time here in order for people to get permission? This is not the kind of province where people plan their hikes out in that kind of detail far, far in advance. I'm a hiker, and certainly I know that often when we get out there on the slopes, we'll change our mind about where we want to go, and it doesn't look like that's going to be a viable option if it's a grazing leaseholder's land that we want to go on to.

I understand the leaseholders' concerns, and I think some of the rules being put in place are very good. We should always, when we're in the countryside, pack out our litter. There is no doubt about that. I'm not a supporter of having open fires at any time because of the high potential for fire damage. There are many ways that heat and cooking materials can be provided for other than open fires, so I think that's a good regulation. Definitely, any responsible hiker will be very careful about things such as closing gates, and certainly, in our case, staying out of fields that have herds on them unless you're some distance from them. You can be disruptive to the herd, and of course the herd can be quite disruptive to you if they choose to do so. So just an issue of safety on both sides. That part is good, but we do see, certainly, a cramping of style and access for recreational users. I talk about hikers, but this applies to other recreational users, too, including snowmobilers and horse riders and ATVs. So I think that that's a part of the bill that's going to be under some discussion in the future and needs to be talked about.

The dispute resolution is another part that might be of issue. The law previously was very unclear as to whether recreational access had to be allowed by the disposition holders. For exploration access the lessee had total discretion to accept or reject access proposals with no appeal for the company, and these areas needed to be clarified and changed respectively, and a dispute resolution process needed to be implemented. So this bill does accomplish those goals.

I see in the very near future that we will have, I believe, increased controversy between resource companies and leaseholders as we see water become an even greater scarce resource than it is right now. We have these rules now where resource companies can use freshwater in a nonrecoverable kind of manner. We've seen already resolutions being passed by municipalities and different agricultural associations to say that they are urging the government not to let resource companies use clean water for injection purposes. As that fight heats up, I believe we can see more issues arise in terms of land access. So definitely it's very timely to have a dispute resolution process in place.

The dispute resolution process, if I recall correctly, is having a designated person in a region be the person who makes the decisions. Of course, when there's only one person in charge of that process, there are always going to be some issues. Some people will say that one person is better than a panel because they're easier to find and the dispute is resolved quicker, and I think both of those statements are true. However, you don't have the kind of balancing or mitigating aspect if there is an issue between personalities or if the person making the application believes there was any unfairness or bias in the decision. There's no balancing effect there, so that's, I think, an issue. In addition to that, we don't know what the appeal process is if someone doesn't like the decision. So if we could get that clarified in committee, that would be helpful.

So it's mostly good. I think I'd like the minister to address those issues that I've talked about there and see where they go.

Public access to public land, of course, is a long-standing argument in this province. Stakeholders such as some environmental groups certainly believe that the public should have foot access to all public lands at all times, and Bill 16 now requires any person who wishes to enter leased land for recreational purposes to contact the leaseholder, who is required to allow reasonable access. So this provision will certainly be disruptive to recreational use, but it seems to be at least a move towards some kind of a balance in terms of safeguarding the rights and privileges of the person who's paying for access to the land. But I think it is a big issue, and I think it's one that we need more explanation on, or I do believe we will be bringing an amendment forward in this regard. The regulations are always a problem.

I really do want the minister to tell us why so much of the detail will be left with the devils behind close doors. [interjection] The minister says: only angels. Well, Mr. Speaker, that may be his interpretation, but in my 10 years here I'm not sure that that's how I would define it. I think that the way I did define it was far more accurate. While some of the regulations are of the quality that the members have talked about, some of the other regulations are not of such a high grade and are not quite so explainable.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks at this time. We're looking forward to hearing the debate on this particular bill and certainly looking forward to hearing a little more from stakeholders than we have so far. It certainly seems a lot quieter than the last time we talked about this bill in this Assembly, but perhaps the days are early yet.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise and join the debate on Bill 16, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Sustainable Resource Development manages about 90 million to 100 million acres of public land. Our programs and services are designed to ensure sustainable and integrated use of this public land, achieving the greatest benefits – environmental, social, and economic – for Alberta. To reach this goal, all users need to be aware of their responsibilities and to be good stewards.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans such as hunters and hikers are unsure of their rights and responsibilities on public land that are leased for grazing. Bill 16 provides direction to clarify any uncertainty surrounding this issue. Occasionally, leaseholders of public land may have differing and firmly held views of their rights. By promoting improved communication and co-operation between recreational users and leaseholders, we will be keeping the access of public land open to the public with consent of the leaseholder. Bill 16 promotes increased and improved communication as well as co-operation between recreational users and leaseholders.

Under Bill 16 the leaseholder must provide reasonable recreation access to the public lease land. Although an agricultural disposition holder must provide reasonable recreation access to the land, the regulations recognize that there are times when the disposition holder can say no or put conditions on access. Examples of such incidents include the presence of livestock or a high fire hazard, such as we experienced this past year. Mr. Speaker, these are examples of a leaseholder's business and livelihood being seriously impacted by members of the public who do not understand livestock behaviour or the risks livestock pose. This is why there needs to be an open line of communication between the leaseholder and the public user. Respect for the land and each other by both parties will ensure that public land is being used to its fullest potential.

Bill 16 will legislate that the recreational user will have to contact the leaseholder prior to coming onto the land. The majority of recreationists already take this step and recognize that the leaseholder needs to know when someone is on their land. This also provides the leaseholder the opportunity to provide information, including any hazards that they should watch out for.

The Department of Sustainable Resource Development is constructing a web site that will provide easy access to the necessary contact information, thus making it easier for recreational users to get in touch with the leaseholder of the public land they may wish to use. Stakeholders have tested the site, and the consensus is that the site will prove to be extremely useful and will be an important tool for promoting communication and co-operation. Mr. Speaker, with Bill 16 government will initially focus on providing information about the new rules. It is expected that stakeholders and Albertans will co-operate fully and provide a good start to opening the provincial doors of communication and co-operation.

The Department of Sustainable Resource Development has to monitor how the new laws and regulations are working, especially during the early stages, when people are just learning about the new rules. As well, there's an information dispute resolution process available to both leaseholders and recreational users where there is a conflict.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 16 also provides a legal mechanism under the Public Lands Act to deal with recreational users and agricultural disposition holders who abuse their rights. This legislation allows the minister to impose a penalty where either the recreational user or the agricultural leaseholder contravenes the legislation. In other cases, if court action is taken and the person is convicted, the court can impose a fine of up to $2,000. This is consistent with other laws in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, public land is just that: land for public usage. At the same time, if that land is being leased, there needs to be respect and consideration for the leaseholder when it comes to public use of the rented land. Bill 16 will improve communication and co-operation between the recreational users and the leaseholders. This will keep access to public land open to recreational users while still respecting the rights and obligations of the leaseholder.

We are all aware of the important role that oil and gas exploration plays in the economic prosperity of Alberta. Bill 16 will allow seismic exploration to be undertaken for conventional oil and gas on public land, which will ensure that future generations can enjoy the same economic prosperity through Alberta's natural resources as we have.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members to vote in favour of Bill 16 and vote in favour of keeping access to public land open to recreational users. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 16, Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. This bill, it looks like, supersedes Bill 31, that this House spent a great deal of time four years ago debating. If my memory serves me right, I think it went to third reading, and it has since been waiting to be proclaimed. Now we know that it will never be proclaimed. We've got this new bill now, which at least suggests to me that it really shows that the government has succumbed to the enormous pressure that it was under from some special interests in this province, primarily the leaseholders and especially big ones and rich ones among them.

Mr. Speaker, it really is a sad commentary on the commitment of this government to protect public interest, when based on its own news release, which the government released, I guess, on May 18, 1999, it gives very interesting information on the amount of public revenue that will come to the public Treasury. If Bill 31 had been proclaimed in '99, its own figures indicate and show, according to this government release of May 18, 1999, that while the leaseholders pay about $3.5 million annually in lease payments to the public Treasury, they collect over $40 million annually.

My guess is that even if the government had proceeded with the proclamation of Bill 31 and the government had been able to negotiate at least $20 million annually to be paid by leaseholders from the income that they received from the surface compensation they get from oil and gas companies, the Treasury of this province would have been at least $20 million richer annually. I'm using approximate figures. It could be more; it could be less. So by today we would have been as a province richer by at least a hundred million dollars, money that we could well spend either on improving children's services or on education or on seniors' services; you name it. But that was not to be. This government, as I said, sold out public interest in order to placate a few of its powerful supporters, who are the big leaseholders.

The government's own numbers indicate that – here are a few cases that the government itself provides – on one existing land operation it is estimated that a grazing leaseholder pays less than $30,000 per year in rental and taxes and receives a value of $400,000 in surface compensation annually. Another figure that's given here: another leaseholder pays less than $650 per year in rentals and taxes and receives approximately $75,000 per year in surface compensation.

I can go on using the government's own data to draw attention to the rationale that the government used to justify bringing forward Bill 31 during the debate, but Bill 31 was destined to be frozen in its tracks, as it were, because these powerful special interests were able to twist the arm of the government, either of the current minister or of the minister who was in charge then or of the Deputy Premier of this province, to get their way. So it's very disappointing, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill 16 abandons the government's own commitments which were reflected in Bill 31. If they had been respected, if those commitments had been adhered to by this government, the public interest would have been well served.

It's a sense of déjà vu. Time and again this government betrays its own commitments to the people of Alberta and sells out to special interests because they happen to be powerful, and since they are powerful, their interests come before the common good and the public interest. It's a crass example of the determination of this government to continue with both corporate welfare and cowboy welfare. This is exactly a clear illustration, Mr. Speaker, of the government's real commitment to powerful special interests in this province at the cost of serving the common good and the cost of the public interest, that ought to be its first and foremost responsibility to serve and protect.

In addition to the giveaway in terms of revenues to both the powerful stakeholders, who happen to be big ranchers, and also in facilitating further access by oil and gas companies when they seek rights to enter these lands, which are public lands but on lease to private leaseholders, thereby easing the entry of these companies onto those lands while at the same time restricting, in effect, by way of the changes that are made here to public access to those lands, this government has really shown its real colours, which is that it will not stop short of depriving Albertans of their fundamental rights of public access to public lands so long as it sees that it has to address first and foremost, put as its first priority, the concerns of a small minority of Albertans whose support it seeks and in whose interests it acts all the time when it has to make choices between the rights of average, ordinary, severely normal Albertans on one hand and the privileged and powerful few on the other.

Mr. Speaker, we received communication from the Alberta Wilderness Association and the recreational association of Alberta, and these nongovernment organizations are very concerned about the way their rights have been put at risk, right of access to public lands, just so that the government can protect the privileges of its good friends both in the oil and gas industry and in the ranching industry.

The next point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is the sort of lack of respect for the work of this House that this government shows time and again. Bill 31, a government bill brought before this House in 1999, debated here through all the necessary stages, received the approval and support of this House, and then the government decides to completely ignore it and make sure that it dies. That speaks to the general sort of attitude of dismissal which amounts to contempt of the work that this House does here. It's very sad to see this government violate its own commitments made previously in so blatant a fashion and not to respect the decision of this Assembly, that it is supposed to do. The executive branch of the government rules supreme in this province. In its operations it undermines the value of the work of this House, its constitutional authority, and its constitutional role in the process of developing its laws.

So this bill, Mr. Speaker, is something that I must speak against. It's regrettable that it replaces a much better bill, that the government had brought before this House in 1999 and asked this House to seriously debate, improve through debate, and vote on. We all voted on it. All those votes, all that debate, all those hundreds of minutes, hours and hours of work that we did on the bill now are nullified. They're of no avail. What we get in its place is a bill that's seriously flawed for the reasons that I have stated. So myself and my colleague, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, will have an opportunity to speak on this bill later on in the remaining stages of the debate on this bill.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my comments.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments or questions?

Further speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do enjoy this opportunity to speak this afternoon to Bill 16, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, and I must commend the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development for bringing this bill forward because the use of Crown land, certainly the use of leased land in this province is forever changing. I do realize that this bill is a wise attempt to try and improve previous legislation that was passed in this House, and I think that it is a wise move anytime that we have legislation which does pass in this House that members of this House obviously have reservations about that we do delay implementing it, particularly if we do have a better piece of legislation which does come forward. In my estimation, from what I've read so far, I do think that Bill 16 is an improvement on Bill 31.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I still think that there are some issues with Bill 16 that have to be clarified, some issues that I know the minister will be commenting on as we move into Committee of the Whole, and I look forward to further debate on this particular bill.

The primary objectives of Bill 16 are threefold, the first being that there is a dispute resolution process for exploration access disputes on leased lands. This is certainly critical because many people in this province that have had leased land or have had leases on land for some time have certainly put a lot of effort into those and are reliant on the income from some of those lands, whether it be through leases with oil companies, whether it be for their grazing practices, or whatever. The last thing we need, certainly, is full-blown disputes on leased land.

I look at the situation we have in northern Alberta right now where we have the Northern Oilfield Contractors Association and the First Nations councils which are striving very hard between both groups to settle the disputes arising over access to Crown land, and I think when I look at Bill 16, that this is certainly the first step, an initial step, towards looking at some of those issues between the First Nations and the Northern Oilfield Contractors Association. This will prove beneficial to all parties in settling those disputes, and I know it is the goal of all members that we get those disputes settled so that our northern communities that rely heavily on the Northern Oilfield Contractors Association and all the spin-off industries that happen to take place as a result of this will stay strong, that the rights of Treaty 8 for the First Nations will not be violated, and that all parties will participate in a win/win situation.

Now, then, the second objective of Bill 16 is a dispute resolution for recreational access disputes on leased lands. Again, this is an ever evolving issue in this province where we certainly have vehicles that give us much more access and much more range when we do leave the beaten path and get off our highways and secondary roads. So, again, this will offer the leaseholders some type of resolution as to how to deal with these problems. Unfortunately, when we do get into not only the rural areas but the wilderness areas of this province, then it is critical, when we don't have fences and we don't have signs posted and whatever, that these things can be worked out.

The third primary objective of Bill 16 is that there is a clarification of rights and procedures for recreational access on leased lands. Again, this will alleviate the confrontational type of activities that we could have between the leaseholders and those wishing to use that land for recreational purposes. So I see from these three primary objectives that this will certainly lessen the opportunity for conflict.

Now, then, as well, with Bill 16, Mr. Speaker, there are other changes that must be noted. Of course, some of these other changes include that the minister can issue overlapping leases without the lessees' consents. As well, another change that must be included is that it allows maximum penalties for contravention of the Public Lands Act. Again, this is welcomed because it does provide for Albertans some type of protection for their public lands.

By way of history, Mr. Speaker, there are in the neighbourhood of 5 million acres of public lands that are leased for the purpose of grazing to about 5,700 leaseholders. That is quite substantial when you think of it, yet these 5 million acres account for only approximately 3 percent of Alberta's total geographic land. So this is in some areas, I guess, not that much, as well, if we're only talking 3 percent of the land but, again, vital that we do have legislation that will cover these lands.

Now, then, unlike the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who spoke previously, I feel that Bill 31, which was the predecessor of Bill 16, even though it was debated and passed in this House, what was realized was that this was inadequate legislation for what we had. Certainly, if there's one body in this province that should be able to say that we've got a better idea, we've got legislation which will serve our needs, we've got legislation that will address potential problems, we can do it better, then certainly this is the body that should be able to say: we are going to hold back on legislation because there is a better way.

So, yes, we did spend a lot of time, but it wasn't wasted time. I think that in their own way many of the discussions that we held and that occurred here for various hours throughout the session on Bill 31 were extremely valuable because all members in this House had an opportunity for input into that bill. Certainly, that is one of the reasons we do have debate and more important than any bill that we pass in this House. That this House stands for the symbol of free speech is more important than anything else we do. So I agree with the holding back of Bill 31.

Now, then, as well, when I look at Bill 16, one of the things that I do like is the dispute resolution. Previously the law was unclear as to whether recreational access had to be allowed by disposition holders. For exploration access the lessee had total discretion to accept or reject access proposals with no appeal for the company. These areas needed to be clarified and changed respectively, and a dispute resolution process needed to be implemented. This bill, certainly, Mr. Speaker, will accomplish that goal.

As well, when we look at this new piece of legislation, stakeholders such as the Alberta Wilderness Association believe that the public should have foot access to all public lands. Now, then, Bill 16 requires any person who wishes to enter public leased land for recreational purposes to contact the leaseholder, who is required to allow reasonable access. This provision will certainly be disruptive to recreational use, but it seems to be a reasonable balance, seeing as the lessee paid for access to the land and, therefore, should have priority in terms of safeguarding rights and privileges. I certainly think that we do have to have the permission of the leaseholder to enter those lands. This is wise and particularly if it is people using that land who would be unfamiliar with the land. The leaseholder would be the most qualified person to know where the dangerous areas of the land are, if there are any, and certainly could inform those people of any situations where public safety would not be able to be maintained if they were not familiar with what was happening.

I know that we did, in our discussions earlier, talk about the regulations. In Bill 16 there are many sections that delegate power to regulations. Again, I have a caution here. The caution is that because in Bill 31 we had legislation that was not adequate, it was never put into force. When we rely on regulations, Mr. Speaker, we certainly don't have the opportunity for full debate in this Legislature on those regulations. I think that in many cases our legislation would even be improved to a greater extent if we did have more debate on these issues rather than leaving them to regulations, particularly when many of these are important considerations that could have and should have been included in the bill. This is a major issue with much legislation, and certainly these issues should be addressed in debate.

Now, one of the things that Bill 16 does is offer important clarification of rights and responsibilities, and it implements needed dispute resolution processes. It is certainly a much better bill than Bill 31, and it addresses all issues that have come up since 1999, so it will be much better legislation than what we have now.

So, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 16 this afternoon, and I certainly await Committee of the Whole to hear further comments from the minister and have him address some of the concerns that we do have with the bill. Overall, certainly it is a bill that I support, that my colleagues support, and I would encourage all members in the Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise and join in the debate on Bill 16. The hon. member of the third party probably moved me to get up and speak by some of his comments. I hope he'll take the time to review some of the comments that are made by other members, such as the member who just spoke, Edmonton-Glengarry, and understand a little bit better what public lands are all about and that there are a variety of types of public lands in our province and that we manage them in a variety of ways.

Essentially, we're talking about lands that are under an agricultural disposition that may be also utilized for energy or gravel or some other type of activity on that land. We have public lands that the public has the right to utilize. They are provincial parks. They are federal parks. They are reserves. But, you know, few people really understand that even in those parks there is restricted access. I'll give you an example: Dinosaur provincial park, one of the real gems of our province. It is, you know, a national heritage site. There is fully 50 percent of that park that you as the public may not visit unless you are accompanied by a paleontologist on a dig. That's a restriction, and I'll tell you that it is one stiff restriction. The rest of the park has access, but again it is limited. You can't ride a horse in Dinosaur provincial park.

Yet we somehow have this idea that when a rancher or a farmer leases some land under an agricultural disposition, which he pays a rental and a fee for, the rental being based on a formula that is based on the productivity or the productive value of that – it's a formula that's devised for that purpose – somehow that land is open season. I've tried to explain this to people and say: you know, if the government owned a public building that we leased to a private individual for their purposes of business, would you expect to be able to go in and utilize that building, perhaps use the bathroom, the copier, have coffee in the coffee room? No. Could you pitch a tent on the grass in front of it? Well, I would expect that in the city of Edmonton there would be a little car with blue and white flashing lights come up and tell you to leave. Yet somehow, when it's under an agricultural disposition, it takes on a whole new connotation.

You know, living in a rural area – and I can tell you that I'm not a holder of public lands at this point in my life but certainly have had some association with it – we live in great harmony with the people who are hunters, people who want to snowmobile. Very, very rarely is there ever an incident. When there is, it's not too pleasant, but rarely. Generally, producers or people who hold these dispositions do not mind if the public want to access that land for snowmobiling or something. However, when they have all of their investment in their best purebred herd of cattle or horses on that land, they obviously want to know what the public might be doing there. We generally don't like to have our very best cattle and horses out in hunting season because there seems to be a bit of a difficulty at times in determining which are deer and which are cattle and horses. So it's a matter of: use respect, ask permission. That program has worked tremendously well in the province. We've had hunters that have come back to our land, private land, year after year after year. They become friends, and it isn't an issue.

I think we have to understand that there are a variety of public lands in this province and that the producer rents the surface of that land for an agricultural purpose, no different than the land, I think, that I hold as a private individual under title. So when somebody wants to have another activity – and it could be oil and gas; I can say, again, a lot of that activity in our province – generally, absolutely not a problem. Generally. We only hear about the incidents.

But we do have a formula, and really there isn't a lot of negotiation. It is set, whether it's nuisance, loss of use, disturbance, all of those things. It's calculated and determined. For example, if it were on our land, if we were growing mustard on that quarter, if they were going to take out X number of acres, they count how much mustard you would produce on that, they multiple it by the market price, and that determines the loss of productivity, whether they have to put a road in to have access to it and the problems that it can cause the producer himself for access. These things are all determined. The Surface Rights Board has served this province well for many, many, many years. I had the honour of being minister responsible for the Surface Rights Board for almost four years, and I can tell you that they do an exemplary job of dealing with those times when issues do come up, and they settle them quite well.

I wanted to say that I think it's a responsibility for all of us to try and understand the differences of where we live in this province. It's a vast province, and the issues that we face in different parts of it, obviously, differ greatly. I've tried very hard to understand the urban issues that my colleagues face in the urban areas and have spent some time trying to do that. The longer I spend here and the more time I spend here, I wonder sometimes if I'm an urban resident or a rural resident anymore, but I think that is what we need to do.

I believe that the amendments that have been made in this bill, which have been brought forward by all of the players, are the ones that we should really concentrate on, and to suggest, as I thought I heard the hon. leader of the third party say, that there was a lack of respect for the House – and I'm going to review the Blues. I don't understand exactly what that means because this Bill 31 was passed and not enacted. If that's what I heard, it's an interesting concept, but, you know, I think I would prefer the way we're doing it now. If you pass a bill and a problem arises and it's identified to you, doesn't it behoove you to fix it? Or do you just say: well, we did this and we agreed to this and we're – I don't know what the expression is. I probably can't use it in the House. But we'll go full blast ahead.

I think this is the right way. A great deal of time was spent by some of my colleagues in this Legislature talking to people who wanted to use this land for recreational purposes, who have a concern about the environmental stewardship of the land, who want to use this land for an economic benefit, whether it is for the agriculture disposition that it's been leased by or the company that may want to drill for oil or gas on it or extract gravel from it. When these people take the time to sit down with us and say, "We have some issues; we'd like to try and clarify them," I think it behooves us to listen. Maybe Bill 31 wasn't perfect. Maybe it was a perfectly good start. Maybe this one won't be perfect, but it's probably better than what we had, and that is our objective: to ensure that all of the users of our land, especially our public land in this province, have the opportunity to access it in the best way.

Much of the land that we talked about in this is very fragile land, and it is incredibly important that we have good land management practices. In my constituency I have 5 million, 6 million acres of land that is in a place called the special areas. Some of my colleagues that live far north have some people who moved from that area in the '30s, when we had a drought and the land virtually blew away, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm proud to say that even in these drought years that we've experienced in the last two to four years, there was very little land moving in the special areas because of very sound, very strict land management practices. So I say that because it is important that we recognize that much of this land is fragile, and it's important we keep it.

My colleague from Highwood brought forward the bill for the emblem of Alberta, identifying rough fescue as our grass. Do you know that Alberta has more of that grass left than any of the other prairie provinces? We have more of it left in our province. In fact, I think we're the only province that has all four varieties of this, and I have to believe it's because very good land management practices have been established in this province.

Mr. Speaker, in my view all Albertans' interests are important. None takes precedence over the other. But in my experience good-thinking people can sit down, resolve the issues. Yes, some have to give a little here and a little there, but you can reach something very manageable. I think that has been achieved, and I applaud the people who worked on the first round of solving some of the outstanding issues on this, what is now what I call the second round, and we have Bill 16. I'm certainly listening to input that I hear from people in my constituency as to how they see it and making sure it does address the problems that were perceived to be in the original bill.

I think that we can move forward, make the best use of this land for agricultural purposes, for other economic purposes, for recreational users, and maybe most of all and most importantly to us is to ensure that we have good environmental stewardship of this land. I think this bill will allow us to do all of that, and I commend my colleague for bringing it forward and for all of the hard work that has gone into bringing this bill to this point today.

The Member for Edmonton-Glengarry talked about the importance of a dispute resolution mechanism. Incredibly important. We don't have to have differences between people who have the same objectives, and that's a strong, healthy province and a good utilization of our public land that we hold in trust for the people of the province. That's in here. I think it will deal with it.

As the province progresses – and we will; we are. Albertans are a dynamic people. They're not ever going to sit still. We may find that at some point we have to do another amendment. I think that if we do, it will be because of progress, not regress.

So, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a few comments at this point in the bill, talk about the principles of the bill, and encourage members to support passage of it.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I would adjourn debate on Bill 16.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed been a very interesting afternoon and lots of progress as I reflect on the week, and therefore I would now move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until Monday at 1:30.

[Motion carried; at 5:03 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise this afternoon and introduce to you and through you two fine gentlemen from the province of Nova Scotia, who, it should be noted, had one of the teams in the recent Brier finals. I would like to introduce, firstly, Mr. Jim DeWolfe, who was elected to represent the people of Pictou East in the province of Nova Scotia in March 1998. Mr. DeWolfe is the chairman of the Standing Committee on Resources as well as the vice-chair of Public Accounts. With Mr. DeWolfe is Mr. Dale Madill, a representative from Nova Scotia's Department of Energy. They are seated in your gallery. I would ask them to rise, please, and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Sergei Darkin, governor of Primorskii region in Russia. He is accompanied today by several members of his government and the Canadian honorary consul to Russia. Alberta has much in common with the Primorskii region, which is in the Russian far east. Many Alberta companies are already active in Russia and are interested in exploring new partnerships in a variety of areas. The governor's visit is a good opportunity to discuss areas of co-operation. I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Professor Gerald Gall, who is a professor of law at the University of Alberta and who teaches constitutional law and civil liberties. He's the author of The Canadian Legal System, in its fourth edition. He is seated in your gallery with his wife, Karen. He has recently, in 2002, been appointed an officer of the Order of Canada, and he is currently the president of the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights. I would ask Professor Gall and his wife, Karen, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Premier I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly nine members of the Public Affairs Bureau who are in the building today on their public service orientation tour. I'll ask them to stand as I call their names so you can all recognize these valuable employees. With us today are Cathy Ducharme, Craig Hutscal, Lisa Gano, Rob Hicks, Donna McClelland, Jim Stuart, Marlo Shinyei, Michelle Lennie, and Gwen Vanderdeen-Paschke. Would you please give them a very, very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute delight to rise on this beautiful Alberta day and introduce through you and to you in the House 33 of the best and brightest that Edmonton-McClung has to offer. The students of Good Shepherd school are here with their teacher, Mr. Rob Madunicky. I'd ask them to rise and please receive the very warm welcome of this House. Welcome to the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 27 grade 6 students from the village of Boyle in the constituency of Athabasca-Wabasca. They are accompanied by seven adults, and they're either seated in the members' gallery or the public gallery or both. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. The first one: I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly Dan MacLennan, president of AUPE, and union representative Steve Nimchuk. They have with them Terry Luhoway from NAIT; Jerry Nolan from Athabasca University in Athabasca; Bonnie Nahornick from Athabasca University in Calgary; Ron Whan from Lethbridge Community College; Lisa Daniels from the Alberta Vocational Centre, Lac La Biche; Nancy Ritchie from the University of Calgary; Dan Tilleman from the University of Calgary; Rod Feland from NAIT. They represent the education sector subcommittee within AUPE, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is someone who is no stranger to many of the people in this Assembly. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly Doug MacRae, who is the new executive director of the Alberta Association of Colleges and Technical Institutes, and I would add that he is doing an excellent job in bringing the colleges and technical institutes together. I would ask you to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two constituents of Lac La Biche-St. Paul. Wayne and Karon Hanson moved to Elk Point in 1980 when Wayne accepted a transfer with the Alberta Treasury Branches to open and manage the new branch. Karon was employed with Elk Point Gas, Ltd. in the administration department. Wayne worked for the Treasury Branches at locations throughout the province for 20 years. They are both happily enjoying retirement and are the proud parents of Danny, who is a researcher for the government caucus.

Wayne and Karon are visiting the Legislature for the first time today, Mr. Speaker, and are seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me today to stand and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very special Edmontonians, Joan and Cam Tait. Cam Tait is a nationally renowned journalist, whom I will recognize after question period. With Cam is his lovely wife, Joan, who is a longtime resident of Edmonton and a champion of many worthy causes. This is her first visit to the Assembly, and I would ask Joan to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 36 students from Tipaskan school in Edmonton-Mill Woods and their teachers/leaders Mrs. Norma Nay and Mrs. Gerry O'Riordan. I had the pleasure of reading to these youngsters during Read-in Week. They're excellent listeners, particularly if you scare the daylight out of them with master authors like Edgar Allan Poe. They're in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Energy Prices

Dr. Nicol: My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Since this government won't offer Albertans natural gas rebates, will this minister consider the Alberta Liberal plan for a revolving fund that would provide consumers with low-interest loans to make their homes more efficient as a means to reduce heating costs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From our perspective and from my perspective it is not a government's position to be involving loans to anybody, revolving loans or not, by providing loans. In fact, I believe that would go against the Financial Administration Act. The Minister of Finance could comment on that. But I would like to say that we are working and we have funded an energy efficiency office called Energy Solutions at Climate Change Central.

They will have their own board of directors, and one of the things their board of directors will be discussing is programs that they could do like that in partnership with the private sector.

Dr. Nicol: My second question is to the minister of human resources. Since this government won't offer Albertans natural gas rebates, will this minister increase AISH and SFI rates in the winter months to cover the additional cost of living caused by high home heating bills?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I think that our ministry has been trying to respond as best we can to some of the issues that some Albertans are faced with. We're open, we're accountable, and we stand ready to try to do the best that we can.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Energy: since this government won't offer Albertans natural gas rebates, will this government adopt the Alberta Liberal plan for low-cost power to ensure that power bills don't spike when home heating bills spike?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, this government does have in place the natural gas price protection plan, that will kick in when the average annual price reaches $5.50 a gigajoule. That price is 5 percent lower than what it was in 2001 when rebates were issued, and in fact it was appropriate at the time, in 2001. Policy was made; a law was struck. We're obligated to stick to that law, and we are holding to the letter of the law. It is important to note that there continue to be programs available to seniors and those families in need that do need them when they do need them.

As to the question would we implement the Liberal program to spend $3 billion to effect $1 billion worth of savings, the mathematics would tell me no.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a billion dollars a year, for the minister's information.

My second question. Many Albertans can no longer afford to pay their skyrocketing home heating bills. Charities, schools, low-income Albertans, severely disabled Albertans, and seniors are just a few of the groups that are struggling to make ends meet when faced with high utility bills, yet the assistance offered by this government targets only a fraction of those groups. To the Premier: where can the thousands upon thousands of Albertans who cannot afford to pay their high utility bills and aren't eligible for the government's onetime assistance program get the help for high utility bills, as this government promised them in the last election?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition knows full well, we have a rebate program. To say that we refuse to give rebates is absolutely false. The rebate program kicks in when the average price over one year reaches $5.50 a gigajoule. That is the rebate program. That was well publicized last August. There was a press release, there was information put on the Internet, and Albertans certainly were given the opportunity to know about the rebate program and the regulations attached to that program.

There are programs in place, as the hon. member noted, to help low-income Albertans and to help seniors. When the rebate program kicks in, or if it kicks in, then all Albertans regardless of their financial situation will be eligible for rebates.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier: where can Edmonton's Food Bank get the help to cover the $3,000 increase in their February utility bill so that they don't have to cut back on the food they make available to low-income Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it is tough. It is tough, indeed, and this has been an extraordinarily cold March. The demand for gas certainly throughout North America and probably worldwide is at an all-time high although not as high as it was two years ago. What I would say to the Food Bank is that when the rebate program kicks in, they will be entitled to a rebate.

I'd like to point out – and I know that misery does not enjoy company and it's hard on everyone – that the fact is that this is one of the only jurisdictions that I know of in North America with a rebate program of any kind. People living in the northern part of North America are all going through the same thing. People are paying extraordinarily high gas prices in all the provinces of Canada and in all the northern states of the United States, Mr. Speaker, and insofar as I know, this is the only jurisdiction that has put in place a rebate protection program. All the other jurisdictions have to deal with it with no hope of any rebates whatsoever.

Dr. Nicol: It's only good if you use it, Mr. Speaker.

Where can the tenants across the province who are facing rent increases to cover their high utility costs find the help that this government promised them in the last election?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, what we promised during the last election was exactly what we have delivered, and that is a sustainable rebate program based on an average price. It is not an ad hoc program; that's what we wanted to get away from. Indeed, that's what the Liberals suggested at that particular time, that we get rid of ad hocism and establish a program that would provide some certainty, and that's exactly what we did.

As I said previously, it's hard on everyone; I know. It's an extremely cold March. As I pointed out previously, this is the only jurisdiction that I know of that has any kind of a rebate program whatsoever. So food banks and charitable organizations and institutions in other jurisdictions have to deal with the problem the same as Albertans have to deal with the problem, but in those other jurisdictions there is no hope of a rebate program.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Marketing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's cold answer to high energy prices and low temperatures is to turn down the thermostat and put on a sweater. In fact, I suspect that the next time there is an annual television address, the Premier will look quite a bit like Perry Como. My first question is to the Minister of Government Services. Are all natural gas and electricity marketers who advertise for business in Alberta required to have a licence?

Mr. Coutts: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. To the Minister of Energy: since Direct Energy is not listed as a registered retailer, according to the Department of Energy's web site, why is Direct Energy allowed to advertise that they are open for business when they do not have a licence?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, if you were to look at Direct Energy's web site, there's actually quite a humorous ad on there, and it depicts a gentleman with nose hairs torn out of his nose. In the right-hand column is a picture of a nose hair clipper, and under it it says: "Have you rushed in to make a foolish purchase? Just wait. Direct Energy is coming."

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again, my final question is to the Minister of Government Services. Why is this government allowing Direct Energy to operate outside the law when retailers' licences are designed to protect consumers? Where is the consumer protection in this?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, I am very confident, our department having had discussions with Direct Energy, that they know the rules, and when the deal is done between them purchasing the retail sales of ATCO, they will definitely be licensed marketers in this province. We'll be there to make sure. But you know what? We're not going to presuppose anything here, because we have to make sure that the deal is done between ATCO and Direct. That's how responsible we act on this side of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Thursday at 7 p.m. at the downtown campus of Grant MacEwan College the New Democrat caucus is hosting a town hall meeting on the crisis in public education. This crisis is a direct result of this government's refusal to properly fund schools. More information on our town hall meeting is available at www.newdemocrats.ab.ca. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Will the minister encourage the Edmonton Tory caucus on behalf of this government to attend this meeting to hear firsthand the concerns of parents, teachers, and school boards about the funding crisis in our schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for giving me this opportunity to speak about the tremendous job that the Edmonton caucus has done in going out to numerous panel discussions, in going out and talking to the public. I understand that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs about two weeks ago went to the Alberta Teachers' Association convention. The hon. Member for St. Albert had a panel discussion on CBC, which I really, really commend her for. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek just yesterday went to a panel discussion. So I think that the Edmonton caucus is going above and beyond the call of duty to hear what the public is saying. I'll leave it up to them. If any of them want to attend a New Democrat meeting, it's up to them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the same minister: would the minister himself care to come and attend this forum and listen to the concerns of parents, teachers, and school boards about the crisis that his own policies have created in their schools?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that back in university the very first time that I voted I voted for the NDs. In all fairness, I saw the light after that, and since that time I have not joined the ND Party, and I will not be voting for them.

Dr. Pannu: My second supplementary to the Minister of Learning, Mr. Speaker: why does the minister refuse to meet face-to-face with education stakeholders in a public town hall meeting to defend his government's education funding policies? What is he afraid of?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, to let the hon. member know, this morning I met with the Edmonton Catholic school board, where we heard a lot of very good issues about what was going on in education. It was an excellent meeting with the Edmonton caucus of this government; it was exceptional. I meet all the time in public. I believe the last time I met in public was with Chinook's Edge school district, which was a week ago Friday. So each and every day I meet with groups of people, and I will continue to meet with groups of people, hear what their ideas are, hear what is going on in education from their point of view.

On Thursday night, Mr. Speaker, I was attending a mentoring program for the Calgary Educational Partnership Foundation, and that evening I spent probably two, two and a half hours speaking to a principal from Banff as well as a person who was in the Calgary board of education. So I am absolutely hearing what is going on out there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Police Services

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Solicitor General's office is responsible for adequate and appropriate policing in Alberta. Municipalities inject more than half a billion dollars a year into policing in Alberta with the Solicitor General providing approximately $110 million for rural contract policing. The town of Coaldale and the Coaldale Police Service are presently examining the opportunity to integrate services with the Lethbridge Police Service into a regional model, which could eliminate the rural RCMP contract. The town of Sundre and other municipalities are also exploring alternative solutions. My question is to the Solicitor General. If two or three municipalities decide to amalgamate or integrate police services, like many municipalities have amalgamated in Alberta, would the Solicitor General's department transfer funding to municipalities when the rural RCMP, whom the Solicitor General presently provides funding for, would not be required?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the Alberta Police Act municipalities with 2,500 or more people are required to provide their own policing. These policing options are outlined in the Police Act, and they include establishing a municipal police service, contracting with Alberta, contracting with Canada, entering into an agreement with a council or another municipality, or establishing a regional police service. The money that may be freed up under the provincial policing agreement is reallocated to other communities served by the provincial policing agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is also to the Solicitor General. Will the Solicitor General's department assist or meet with Coaldale and Lethbridge in their discussions, as the rural RCMP contracts geographically located between Coaldale and Lethbridge may not be required, and would that funding from her office be provided to those municipalities?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that I and officials from my ministry have been in discussions with Coaldale and Lethbridge. Coaldale currently has its own police force, but the town is reviewing this to see whether this is the best option for them or whether another option, as I mentioned in my earlier response, would be better. At this point Coaldale has not made a decision about which option it wants to pursue. Whatever option they choose, they have the responsibility under the Police Act to ensure that adequate and effective policing is provided. I'm waiting to hear from the municipalities about what direction they choose to go.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Do you and your department encourage or discourage municipalities to look at regionalized municipal services sharing infrastructure between themselves?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The short answer is an unequivocal yes. Any time we're able to take a dollar, have regional partnerships with neighbouring municipalities, and stretch it into a dollar fifty for tax value, I think that's very important. This past year in terms of restructuring and regional partnerships we spent over $4 million helping municipalities if that was what local municipalities were looking for based on their municipal leadership. I want to say that they're coming together, that they're working together and, basically, taking a regional partnership and stretching that dollar into perhaps $2. That's good, I think, in any municipality within Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Asbestos in the Foothills Hospital

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to government documents, about 30 Albertans die of asbestos-related diseases every year, making it the number one cause of occupation-related fatal diseases accepted by the WCB. For years there have been concerns regarding asbestos exposure at the Foothills hospital in Calgary, with no satisfactory response from this government. This is the second serious issue of asbestos contamination at a health facility in the Calgary health region to be made public in recent months. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: given that Alberta Environment is taking the city of Edmonton to court over the release of just a few drops of PCBs, is occupational health and safety considering charges against the Calgary health region for years of asbestos problems at the Foothills?

Mr. Dunford: Well, I'm not sure at this point, Mr. Speaker. I'll have to check on that. My understanding of the situation is that they've found that the Calgary health region is in compliance, that the asbestos in the particular facility that we're talking about here is in place, and as such there is no health hazard that I've been made aware of at this point.

Dr. Taft: Interesting response, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the Calgary health region is publicly claiming that there is no risk to staff or patients, and so is the minister, then why did his own department find it necessary to recently issue a compliance order concerning asbestos against the Calgary health region?

Mr. Dunford: There might be a number of issues that are related here, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Or unrelated.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. That's true: or unrelated.

As I indicated in my first answer, I think – perhaps he wasn't listening – you know, certainly I'd get a briefing from the department, and then we can perhaps get further through this particular situation.

Dr. Taft: I'd have thought that he'd have been briefed since it's been all over the media.

To the same minister: why were incidents of asbestos exposure allowed to continually occur at the Foothills hospital for years and years and possibly decades without proper action?

Mr. Dunford: Well, I think he's done pretty well for a question today. He's managed to stretch it into, you know, three issues in an attempt to get me to respond to basically the same question, and the answer remains the same.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Food Establishment Permit Fees

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall the food regulation was amended to allow regional health authorities to collect fees for food establishment permits. Since then, in Whitecourt-St. Anne the RHAs have abused this privilege, and it impacts my hotel/motel industry, retail establishments, and many other businesses. For example, my liquor store owners are being ordered by the authorities to pay a $100 levy because they sell pop or chips at their businesses. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why would you allow the RHAs to go ahead with this cash grab?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the issue of being able to generate funds on the part of a regional health authority was actually a recommendation set out in the Premier's Advisory Council on Health. It was one of the recommendations that we did accept.

I should say that with respect to the regulation surrounding food permits, the regulation was requested by the regional health authorities in order to help generate revenue. The principle of that regulation makes perfectly good sense, and that is that there should be some ability to recover the costs associated with food safety programs, which regional health authorities are responsible for. Of course, the food industry is growing rapidly, and there needed to be some way of collecting some of the costs associated with that program.

I should say, Mr. Speaker, that one of the things that is contained in the regulations is that regional health authorities do have the ability to waive the fees in circumstances where they see that it is appropriate, so I would expect that in circumstances where it would make sense, perhaps with a not-for-profit agency, regional health authorities do have and should use in some circumstances the ability to waive those fees.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister. I understand the answer, but we do have small businesses that need protecting. What will you do to protect these small businesses from paying this permit fee, and when can I expect you to act on this?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have heard . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Mar: We have heard some concerns expressed by Albertans regarding the way that the regulations are being applied by the regional health authorities, so the Department of Health and Wellness is currently conducting a review of this regulation in consultation with all stakeholders, including the regional health authorities themselves.

We are proposing some modifications, Mr. Speaker. For example, as I indicated, charitable and not-for-profit organizations, stores that are selling prepackaged food such as chips and gum will not need to pay for a permit. Licensed liquor stores and nonfood establishments that perhaps have coffee and doughnuts available for their customers likewise would not require a food permit.

Mr. Speaker, this consultation process is under way right now. My expectation is that it will be completed with a response to the consultation by this fall.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Mr. VanderBurg: I'm satisfied. Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Wainwright.

Legal Representation for Children in Care

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Providing protection and legal representation for children who have been abused while in custody of the province is a requirement of Canada's national guidelines on foster care. The Alberta government often fails to meet these guidelines. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Why do ministry lawyers openly admit that no one in the government will provide legal representation for children who have been abused while they're in care?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is not true. We have provided legal representation for children who have been abused while in care, and I'd just draw to the Assembly's attention that about a week and a half or two weeks ago the hon. member opposite made this same suggestion in his question, that there were Canadian guidelines, some Canadian standards that we were not following in Alberta. In fact, what he is citing now on the foster parents is something that we, in actual fact, do. We represent foster families. We represent children in care. I'm not sure if there's a particular detail that we can follow up on his behalf, but we, quite clearly, provide representation and safety and protection to children in care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why has the policy allowing the Children's Advocate to investigate children's complaints of abuse while in care been abolished?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, it hasn't. As a matter of fact, again to the same hon. member I responded that we're even better than we ever were by having CWIS adjusted technologically so that the minute there is an allegation of abuse or children are in any way in any difficulty, the advocate receives that report. The advocate follows up on that report.

Mr. Speaker, the mandate of the Children's Advocate has in fact expanded within this last year to include his work developing mentorship programs for people who could be natural advocates both in First Nations communities and in other communities. So rather than narrowing the mandate, I would suggest that we've expanded the mandate, and we have looked at his capacity to assist with administrative reviews. On special case reviews the advocate has been involved and has been absolutely beneficial to both the process and the outcomes for children.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: if the Children's Advocate can't investigate and government lawyers won't provide legal representation, where do children go for help?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in the first two responses I've said that we do provide legal support. I provided the answer that the advocate is involved. I think that the third question is built on an assumption that we do neither of the above, and I have said quite unequivocally that we do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Agricultural Subsidies

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertan and Canadian grain producers continue to be bothered, even harassed by American trade complaints. Last week a preliminary U.S. ruling found that Canadian exports of hard red spring wheat and durum are being subsidized to the tune of 3.94 percent. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Is it true that the Alberta government ownership of railcars contributed to the subsidy rate calculated by the U.S.?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, let us be very clear that of the 3.94 percent levy, if you wish, that has been suggested or actually implemented by the Department of Commerce, only .35 percent of that is railway cars, and of that .35 percent, Alberta cars make up a portion. There are also cars from the government of Saskatchewan and the government of Canada, the federal government. I'd like to make one other thing very clear. There is no subsidy associated with these cars, because the railways pay what is considered to be a reasonable rental or fee for the use of those cars.

So, Mr. Speaker, this case is far from over. Certainly, our government will be putting forward our position and making it very clear that the cars that are owned by the government of Alberta and, if you wish, leased for that use are not a subsidy. It is interesting that the U.S. government, who put out about $190 billion in farm subsidies in their latest farm bill, would be challenging our farmers, because our subsidies are nowhere near that. They will be the first to tell you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question, then, is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What will this government do to defend Alberta's interests?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to understand that the only specific government practice from the Alberta side that the U.S. is looking into in this investigation is the alleged subsidization of grain cars, and that is certainly an area that we will be responding to, but it's the federal government and other provincial governments who are responsible for defending many of the activities and programs that come under attack from this United States industry initiative. For example, the federal government is responsible for defending the activities of the Canadian Wheat Board. Alberta will review the U.S. Department of Commerce preliminary determination in detail, and we will be, certainly, alert to any activities or developments in that particular area.

Mr. Speaker, because the federal government is involved in this particular case, the Alberta government will continue to co-operate with the federal government and other provincial governments on the legal issues that are involved here, and we will be strongly urging the federal government to make every effort to defend Canadian farmers, Canadian wheat growers against this particular set of allegations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, then, is back to the Minister of Agriculture, Food, and Rural Development. What factors have led to Canadian agricultural trade policies and practices being a continual target for U.S. trade challenges?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly Canada and Alberta, in particular, are proud to be the producer of some of the highest quality milling wheat there is in North America, and that means that our wheat is in very high demand in the U.S. We export a great deal, some $98 million worth, of high-quality wheat to the U.S. However, as our Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations has indicated, the Canadian Wheat Board practices have been under investigation. I think that nine investigations have been held, and Canada has not been found to be outside of international trade rules. We're going to continue to work with our industry, as the minister indicated, the federal government, and other departments of our government, but we're even willing to help one bit more. We're encouraging very much the federal government to make the Canadian Wheat Board a voluntary marketing option for western Canadian farmers, in particular, and perhaps get this issue off our plate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents with disabilities are being refused AISH medical benefits simply because of the source of their income. Albertans receiving money from a private disability insurance or employment have their eligible income calculated differently and can receive AISH medical benefits, but people receiving Canada pension plan disability are subject to different terms. My questions are all to the minister of human resources. Why does this government discriminate against the recipient of CPP disability compared to a person receiving the same amount from wages or private disability insurance?

Mr. Dunford: Actually, Mr. Speaker, the CPP and wages and benefits that come through disability are all part of what we look at under AISH. The decision by this government for a long period of time as it relates to AISH was that the income from Canada pension plan, being another government plan, would be deducted dollar for dollar. It's been the policy, and it's been in place for some time.

Ms Blakeman: Nonetheless, you're discriminating.

My next question: given that this government's discrimination against CPP disability recipients trying to access AISH can and has been overturned upon appeal, will the minister now change the policy?

Mr. Dunford: I think it's regretful that the opposition uses terms like "discrimination" in this particular case. There is no discrimination. All AISH members are dealt with the same way as it relates to Canada pension benefits or any of the other types of income that they might receive.

Ms Blakeman: To the same minister: given that the people who receive CPP disability income are also discriminated against by this government's emergency assistance for utility cutoff, why is this government leaving those Albertans in the cold?

Mr. Dunford: She seems to want to persist in the use of the term. I think we deal with everyone the same way under the AISH program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In addition to the funding shortfalls in our schools, which are caused by the government's decision to unilaterally reduce operation maintenance grants, to cap grade 10 credits, then the arbitration settlements, now skyrocketing utility bills have combined to give school board budgets more holes than a field in a gopher farm. School utilities this winter could easily be double what they were last winter. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Does the government acknowledge that school board budgets are already overstretched, and if so, does the government acknowledge that they will then require top-up funding to cover skyrocketing utility bills?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I will transfer the question to the minister responsible for operations and maintenance, which is the hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Just prior to that what I will say is that in Alberta we spend more per capita, by at least 16 percent, than any other jurisdiction in the country. Over the past three or four years we have increased the amount dramatically. Since 1995 it has increased 46 percent, over which time we've seen a 6 percent enrollment. So it has gone up.

But in direct response to the energy issue, I'll ask the hon. Minister of Infrastructure to respond to that.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we recognize that some school boards are having some difficulty making ends meet relative to the utilities, but I also know that pretty well all of them did have a term contract as far as the electricity is concerned, and that's at a fixed rate, so it is just on the gas side that there is some problem. We are conscious of it. We are monitoring it and meeting with school boards to get a feel for just how serious this whole situation is.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister once had some common sense when he was in his youth, as he told us today, when he voted for the New Democrats, I have some hope that he will actually answer the question, which is: what exactly are school boards supposed to cut by way of programs or staff or maintenance in order to meet the increased obligations due to skyrocketing utility bills?

Dr. Oberg: Again, Mr. Speaker, we are one of the few jurisdictions in Canada that has the obvious opportunity of increasing the amount of funding that school boards receive. In the province to the west of us they have had a zero percent increase and will continue to have a zero percent increase for the next two years. The amount of dollars that we have put into education makes every other province in Canada pale by comparison. There is a tremendous amount of money that is going into education.

Again I will ask the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, whose responsibility it is, to respond to this issue.

The Speaker: It would have been really helpful to have the hon. minister respond originally. We still have four additional members who would like to participate. Let's move on.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I would like to ask the Minister of Learning, who is responsible overall for school programs: what exactly are schools supposed to cut by way of programs, which he is responsible for, in order to pay for this increase in utility costs, that is unbudgeted?

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Infrastructure, if you wish.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate the opportunity to comment on this particular question because, in fact, the hon. member is talking about the operation and maintenance of schools. This year we transferred some $323 million to school jurisdictions within the province for operating and maintenance. While I know that some are tight – and we are monitoring them – when you take it in the whole scheme of things, the increase in three months out of a total year, we hope that they'll be able to handle that kind of increase.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The average rent of a one-bedroom apartment in Edmonton is about $650 and about $750 in Calgary and about $1,200 in Fort McMurray; that is, if you can find a place. The cost of heating and lighting a house is skyrocketing. That is in addition to other expenses like driving a car or taking the public transportation system. All expenses have gone up over the last few years. The only thing that hasn't moved is the minimum wage of this province. My question is to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. How does the minister expect those people earning minimum wage to make ends meet?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, if there was a substantial number of Albertans that were working at the minimum wage, then I think there would be cause for great concern. However, the information that I have is that 1.2 percent of the working force is actually at the minimum wage, and it's my understanding that three-quarters or something of that number are actually students working in jobs where tips are also available. So it's a situation that we continue to monitor, and whether or not we will have to increase that in the near future I think is a question that's really debatable at this particular point.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since we live in the most prosperous province in the country and we have the lowest minimum wage in the country, would the minister consider looking into this very important matter immediately?

Mr. Dunford: Actually, the interesting thing and what makes debates around minimum wage so incredible is whether or not the minimum wage has any impact on anything. Really, what tends to drive the wages that an employee . . .

Mr. Mason: Not here. Most kids get more from an allowance than you pay them.

The Speaker: The hon. minister, please.

Mr. Dunford: You know, in a socialist situation, of course, you have to put these things in place, but in Alberta what you've got is a market that's operating. There's a huge demand for labour, and like anything else, when the demand is high and the supply is low, then of course wages in this particular case will tend to rise. So there are very, very few people that are actually working at minimum wage in this province.

The one thing that I think we must keep in mind is that the overriding concern that we as a government should have is that people are able to get into the workplace, because when they get into the workplace, they start gaining experience, they start learning new skills or enhancing skills that they already have, and of course they start advancing within a wage and salary administration plan and start to gain seniority. So I think we should be concerned more about the number of people that are getting into the workforce rather than concerning ourselves particularly with a socialist technique such as a minimum wage.

Allegations of Fraud in the WCB

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, on March 5, 2003, the Solicitor General in response to my questions regarding the WCB said, "If there are [any] accusations about bribery, we will forward that letter and have the police investigate." But on the same day I tabled documents showing that the Solicitor General's office didn't forward the letter to the police but, instead, forwarded it to the accused organization, the WCB, requesting that the WCB tell the Solicitor General's office what to tell the injured worker. To the Solicitor General: given that the Solicitor General's policy is to forward allegations to the police, why was the issue not forwarded to the police but to the WCB?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that when the matter was forwarded to WCB, it was about a clarification; it wasn't about the bribery issue. WCB had responded and said that there was information that they could not provide to our department. We since then, if I may be so bold, have written the particular individual that he's referring to two letters, one that was addressed on January 14 and another letter on February 27, thanking him for his letter of February 7, in which I wanted to clarify regarding his concerns to the WCB, and I appreciate the information that he's forwarded to me.

Concerns involving the WCB do not fall within my mandate, and I said, as I outlined in my previous conversations, "I understand that you are forwarding your allegation of fraud within the [WCB] to the Calgary Police Service," and I again reiterate that "the Calgary Police Service has the authority to investigate such issues." I also noted in my letter to him on the date of the 27th of February that I have forwarded his concerns to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: was the suggested response from the WCB the same response that the minister forwarded to the injured worker?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, again I want to reiterate that the fact is that the person that is alleging allegations in regard to bribery to the WCB has a process in place. That process that's in place is to contact the Calgary Police Service if he's got allegations of bribery. If after he has forwarded it to the Calgary Police Service he does not like the answer that the chief of police gives him, he has the ability to forward his concern and appeal to the Law Enforcement Review Board. The process is in place for this poor, injured worker, and all he has to do is follow it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Yes, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of human resources: given your intervention on Thursday, when did your ministry become responsible for fraud and bribery in this province?

Mr. Dunford: That is so typical of this member in this particular file. If we want to see how low anybody can go, we just have to use him as a perfect example. We'll just let the Hansard record—people can read, and they can read where he's coming from.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the capital region caucus met with the Edmonton Catholic school board. Some of the issues raised, which are not different from issues raised with me by some of the parents in Edmonton-Castle Downs, included unpredictable funding to children who receive PUF grants and later enter grade 1 and unpredictable funding for infrastructure to the school boards. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. What support is available to students who have been in receipt of program unit funding, PUF funding, who enter grade 1?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, I'll outline to the Legislative Assembly that PUF funding is funding that we use for early intervention. It's the moneys that are out there for any child over two and a half up until six years of age that allow them to get prepared for school. We feel in this government that it is extremely important to prepare students for school, especially those with severe special needs. As soon as these students get into the school system, they also receive the severe special-needs funding, and that is transferred to the school board.

Just to give you context of how many dollars are spent, presently in the grade 1 to grade 12 system there is $336 million per year spent on special-needs funding. But I will say one other thing, and that is that in our business plan we monitor the parent satisfaction of those children with severe special needs, and 84 percent of the parents who have severe special-needs kids are satisfied.

An Hon. Member: How many? How much?

Dr. Oberg: Eight-four percent, Mr. Speaker.

We fully recognize that the special-needs students need funding. We have increased the rates around 10 percent per year over the past several years. We have increased it quite dramatically. So in response to the hon. member's question, when they get PUF funding, they can move right into the severe special-needs funding if they qualify for it.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, my only supplemental. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what is the ministry doing right now to provide the school boards throughout Alberta and particularly the school boards in Edmonton with more predictable funding for their infrastructure and ongoing expenses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The financial management review committee made a number of recommendations, and we of course as government accepted those recommendations. As a consequence there is going to be a stabilization fund established. Also, as the Premier announced some time back, we are going to establish a capital fund, and I believe that between the capital fund and the stabilization fund and the opportunity to use alternate ways of financing, we will be able to accomplish a great deal as far as sustainability in the whole capital field in schools, hospitals, postsecondary institutions. Also, I would plan that we will not get into a situation where we start projects and then have to pull them back because of lack of funding. We are looking at a five-year business plan where we would see the finances being there to continue with our construction over a longer period of time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, thank you very much. Because of the brevity associated with questions and answers, for the most part, we had 14 sets of questions accommodated today. That's appreciated. Only one member is still on the list.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly eight representatives from the Alberta Restaurant & Foodservices Association who are here today to celebrate an important milestone for their industry, which I will be talking about a little later. I hope they're all here. I'll introduce them anyway. I would ask our guests, who are seated in the public gallery, to rise and remain standing as

I read their names. We have with us today Lindy Rollingson, CPM, CAE, president and CEO of the Alberta Restaurant & Foodservices Association; Mark Medland, treasurer and chair, government services committee, vice-president of Maclab Hotels & Resorts organization; Carmelo Rago, representing the very popular and very successful Sorrentinos restaurant chain, which is now expanding across the province; Paul Tsang, an old friend of 27 years, responsible for a number of Edmonton's finest restaurants including the huge, new, private-function restaurant and nightclub facility called Dante's; Lyle Beaugard of the very popular Blue Iguana; I'd ask him to rise along with Normand Campbell, owner and proprietor of Normand's restaurant; from the Sheraton Grande Hotel we also have Grant McCurdy; and, finally, Simon Smotkowicz, executive chef of the Shaw Conference Centre and president of ICE 2005.

Mr. Speaker, these people have made a career of quality service to others, and I ask that they now receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

head: Recognitions

Restaurant and Food Services Industry

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted to rise again today in recognition of this important milestone for the restaurant and food services industry across Canada. We have verification that the industry now employs 1 million Canadians from coast to coast, including 116,400 just in this province. This makes the food services industry across Canada one of our very largest employers, employing directly or indirectly more Canadians than the entire agricultural, banking, forestry, pulp and paper, petroleum production, motor vehicles and parts manufacturing industries combined and contributing $42 billion annually to our GDP. It is the largest single employer of young people in our nation.

In fact, I myself began in this industry, Mr. Speaker, first as a dishwasher, then as a French service waiter, chef, bartender, and owner as well, and I am very proud of my time there. The skills that I acquired later proved invaluable to me, as I am sure they have for many. Congratulations to the restaurant and food services industry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Randy Ferby, Dave Nedohin Scott Pfeifer, Marcel Rocque Nokia Brier Champions

Mr. McClelland: "Hi, Mom. Kids, I'll be at home at 2 tomorrow." With the Nokia Brier tankard stretched high over his head, Alberta's Randy Ferbey signaled to everyone his success as a person and as the skip of an incredible rink. And what a rink it is. The steady, dependable first rocks of the pride of St. Paul, Marcel Rocque, were followed by the confident play of second, Scott Pfeifer. You just knew he would make his shots. By now the house was full of rocks. Skip Randy Ferbey was called upon to make both the right strategic decision and to make the difficult shots again and again. Finally, Dave Nedohin time and again making incredible shots, that had to break the hearts of Nova Scotia's hometown rink and crowd, to win a record-setting third consecutive Brier, an incredible accomplishment of this wonderful team, including their coach and alternate, curling out of the Avonair Curling Club in Edmonton, the pride of St. Paul, Sherwood Park, and of all Alberta.

Congratulations to the Ferbey rink; Nokia, prime sponsor of the Brier; the organizing committee; the fans and citizens of Halifax; and especially all the competing rinks, who make this uniquely Canadian event such a memorable success. Well done, all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mill Woods Community Patrol

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and I would like to recognize the Mill Woods Community Patrol. This patrol is a community-based volunteer initiative in co-operation with the Edmonton Police Service, which trains its volunteers to patrol Mill Woods area streets to observe what goes on in their community and report any suspicious activity to the police.

The patrol existed in prior times but was disbanded a number of years ago. The idea to re-form this group became a focus due to the number of serious and high profile events that occurred in Mill Woods. The Mill Woods President's Council made inquiries with the EPS, as did the EPS with them, to see what could be done to help create a safer and stronger relationship with the police and within the communities themselves.

The Edmonton Police Foundation was approached to assist with start-up costs such as radios and airtime. They agreed with the initiative and thereby donated the money required to purchase the radios and up to two years of airtime. To date the Edmonton Police Foundation has donated $12,000. With this the community patrol was reborn in the summer of 2001 with the first patrols taking place in November 2001 after initial training.

Good work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

2:40 University of Alberta Pandas Hockey Team

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise today to recognize the University of Alberta Pandas hockey team. The Pandas captured a second straight national title by defeating the University of Toronto Varsity Blues in a dramatic 4-3 overtime win. This accomplishment was made all the more exceptional by the fact that the Pandas entered the championship game with an astonishing record of 33 wins and – guess what? – zero losses and only one tie.

It takes a great deal of skill and dedication to win a championship banner, and the Pandas hockey team is to be congratulated for continuing a rich tradition of athletic excellence at the U of A. This latest achievement builds on the university's reputation for good sportsmanship and excellence in athletics. Another exciting and successful year for the U of A varsity sports team. I know all members of this Assembly join me in extending their best wishes and congratulations to the head coach, Howie Draper, and all members of the University of Alberta Pandas hockey team.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Professor Gerald Gall

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I introduced to this Assembly Professor Gerald Gall, who was appointed as an officer of the Order of Canada in late 2002. At the ceremony in Halifax in which Professor Gall received his medal from Her Excellency, Governor General Adrienne Clarkson, the following citation was read:

[Gerald Gall] is a defender and a promoter of freedom and justice. An authority on Human Rights and Professor of Law at the University of Alberta, he is a founding member of the Board of Directors and now President of the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights. He has provided leadership to countless professional, social action and religious organizations, as well as to governments at the provincial, federal and international levels. One of the key organizers of the 1998 International Conference on Universal Rights and Human Values, he is recognized and respected as a man of action who champions with great passion these issues of world concern.

I would ask everybody in this Assembly to join me in congratulating this wonderful St. Albertan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Monica Hughes

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the Legislature today to recognize and celebrate the life and work of Monica Hughes. Monica, who died last week in Edmonton after living most of her life here, was a wonderfully successful author of books for children and young teenagers. Her work won many awards, including two Governor General's awards and the Order of Canada. She won the Canada Council children's literature prize for a story about a boy with leukemia and the Phoenix award for her famous Isis science fiction trilogy.

One of her greatest accomplishments was getting so many children excited about reading, an accomplishment that will live on for years. I've spoken to teacher/librarians who marvel at how children love to read her stories. Many of these stories are set in Alberta, including one at the Provincial Museum, so children relate them to their own lives, and teachers can use them as part of the curriculum. My own children have read her books, and I remember how excited we were when we learned that such a famous author lived right here in Edmonton. She proved it was possible for internationally acclaimed writers to stay in and write about our province.

Monica Hughes was a modest, compassionate woman with a clear sense of social justice who always wanted to leave children with a sense of hope. I think the best tribute to her simply might be this: she made the world a better place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Cam Tait

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I recognize Cam Tait, a renowned public speaker and writer and a true champion of the disabled community, including my nephew who has muscular dystrophy. Cam is one of his heroes.

Cam is a journalist with the Edmonton Journal and has done general news reporting and children's columns and feature writing. Cam now writes three columns a week, two columns on community investment and one on volunteers. He is also a columnist for the web site charityvillage.com. Cam was also a winner of Yuk Yuk's search for Canada's funniest new comic in Toronto in 1995. In 1996 Cam became a Paul Harris Fellow with the Edmonton downtown Rotary Club. Cam was given the honorary diploma of communications technology at NAIT. Most recently Cam received the Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal for outstanding service as a volunteer in Canada.

The most important thing to Cam is his family: his wife, Joan, stepson Darren, and his parents. It gives me great pleasure to recognize my friend Cam Tait.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Mr. Tait is also a very mean putter at many celebrity fund-raising golf tournaments, where he raises money on behalf of many worthy causes in this province.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I beg leave to present the following petitions that have been received for private bills under Standing Order 93(2):

- (1) the petition of Sister Theresa Carmel Slavik for the Sisters of St. Joseph of the Province of Alberta Statutes Repeal Act, and
- (2) the petition of Reverend Thanh K. Nguyen for the Forest Lawn Bible College Act.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I am presenting on behalf of the working poor in Alberta a petition signed by 65 individuals from Fort McMurray. These Albertans are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to immediately raise the minimum wage to $8.50 per hour and index it to the cost of living, much as MLA salaries are.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Friedel: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to table the requisite number of copies of the 2001-02 annual report of the Northern Alberta Development Council.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter signed by the residents and their families of Chateau Mission Court in St. Albert requesting that the Alberta government realistically fund and financially support the seniors' housing industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two tablings. The first is a tabling requested last Thursday, information put out by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, where there was some debate whether or not promises made were, in fact, promises kept.

The second set of tablings is the appropriate number of copies of the program from the first annual Spring Wilderness Celebration, held here in Alberta, of the Alberta Wilderness Association, where they collected money and funds enabling them to support their development of causes in northern Alberta, particularly in outreach work and wilderness protection.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of excerpts from Occupational Health & Safety Magazine, a publication of Alberta Human Resources and Employment. These excerpts are taken from four different issues of the magazine, and they show that from November 2000 to January 2002, a 14-month period, 32 fatalities resulting from asbestos exposure were accepted for compensation by the WCB.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings for the information of the Assembly this afternoon. The first is the scandalous price of electricity on March 9, 2003. The price in the Power Pool bounced around from as little as much less than 2 cents to over 66 cents a kilowatt at 8 o'clock last night.

Now, the second tabling is a presentation that was made in December to the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission by John Patrick Day, a well-known Edmontonian and resident of Edmonton-Norwood.

The third tabling I have this afternoon is more of the petitions from Albertans urging the government "to reinstate natural-gas rebates immediately." There are 310 names on this petition. They're from Holden, Banff, Raymond, Lethbridge, Coleman, and Calgary, just to name a few of the many centres expressing outrage at natural gas prices.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter signed by a parent whose children go to McKernan elementary and junior high school, a school that's the pride of the communities surrounding it, communities such as Belgravia, McKernan, Windsor Park. My own daughter went to that school a few years ago. The writer of the letter expresses deep concern about the shortfall in funding which may lead to this school losing as many as three teachers, about 10 percent of the staff. Forty other parents have signed a similar letter, and these letters have gone to the Premier of the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, earlier today I had placed on your desks a message from Her Majesty the Queen, head of the Commonwealth, for Commonwealth Day.

I'm going to table in the House this afternoon copies of a new pamphlet from the Legislative Assembly entitled Alberta's Famous 5. Because of the efforts of Alberta's Famous Five—Emily Murphy, Nellie McClung, Henrietta Muir Edwards, Irene Parlby, and Louise McKinney—women are recognized as persons in Canadian law. This pamphlet will enhance the Legislature tour of the Famous Five portraits.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 6, it is now my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 1, 2, 4, and 7.

[Motion carried]

Human Resources and Employment Underexpenditures

Q1. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

How much of the $25.5 million underexpenditure from income support to individuals and families, $621,000 underexpenditure from the widows' pension program, and $8.8 million underexpenditure from the assured income for the severely handicapped program outlined in the 2001-02 Alberta Human Resources and Employment annual report was spent on homeless shelters, additional system development costs, and salary increases respectively?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief, but I would express my disappointment. I feel that this information would be of great interest not only to the taxpayers but certainly to individuals who are receiving AISH and the individuals receiving family and social services, and I at this time would like to see this information forthwith.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond on behalf of the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment, who has indicated his willingness to accept Written Question 1 as phrased.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate?

Untendered Contracts

Q2. Mr. Bonner moved that the following question be accepted. What is the total amount of money the Department of Infrastructure has spent on untendered contracts between January 1, 2001, and December 31, 2002, what are the names of the individuals and companies who have received these untendered contracts, and what is the amount they each received as part of their contract?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would recommend that the Assembly reject this question because of the huge costs. It's a total waste of taxpayers' dollars to go through and find all of these contracts and to list them. When you look at our normal business in Alberta Infrastructure, we have contracts for consulting services, for property management, for facility lease, and many others, and many of these are extremely small. If the hon. member has, really, something that he wants to find, I wish he would be more specific so that we could in fact accept this. But this would be a total waste of taxpayers' dollars to ever spend those many hours by staff going through to find those, so I would urge the Assembly to reject this one.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker. I would have to disagree with the minister. One of the complaints that we see year in and year out in the Auditor General's report is the fact that there is not enough accountability in regard to these untendered contracts. Certainly, this is one issue, where literally hundreds of millions of Alberta taxpayers' dollars are spent in the Department of Infrastructure, and there is a considerable amount that is spent on untendered contracts. Certainly, Albertans have every right to know where their tax dollars are being spent, what they are being used for, and which contractors are getting this work.

So I think it is a very valid question, Mr. Speaker, and I would urge all members in the Assembly for open and accountable government to support this question. Thank you.

[Written Question 2 lost]

Federal/Provincial Affordable Housing Agreement

Q4. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

What is the breakdown of the money that will be used by the government to match the federal government's $67 million contribution to the affordable housing agreement signed in June 2002?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to advise the House on behalf of the hon. Minister of Seniors that he is willing to accept Written Question 4 as phrased.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, particularly in light of the fact of housing for the homeless and the fact that it was almost one year ago that the federal government put forward $67 million as a matching sum by the province for the construction of affordable housing, I welcome and thank the hon. minister for accepting this particular question.

Thank you.

[Written Question 4 carried]

Maintenance Enforcement Computer Systems

Q7. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

What is the current status of all integration of the maintenance enforcement case officers' computer systems, and what is the plan for completing the integration?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice I'm pleased to indicate that he is willing to accept this question as phrased.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre I thank the minister for taking these considerations.

[Written Question 7 carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 6, it is my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 1, 4, 5, 9, and 11.

[Motion carried]

Driver Licensing System

M1. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all studies and reports prepared by or for the Ministry of Government Services between September 12, 2001, and January 14, 2003, regarding the establishment of a new system for issuing drivers' licences in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's fairly self-explanatory.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you Mr. Speaker. Drivers' licences are the most acceptable form of identification by law enforcement agencies as well as retailers and financial institutions. Airlines are included in that and employers and many other entities in both the private and public sectors. The importance of this security document creates a need to make sure that the security of the card and the issuance process and the card design are of the highest quality possible. So releasing any studies or any reports regarding this system would breach the security of that system, and for these reasons I would like to move that we reject this Motion for a Return 1.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to close the debate.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I certainly don't accept the argument. We haven't asked for privacy to be breached. We've asked for the reports, and the practice has been that those reports are provided. The privacy act is respected with respect to individuals, and I fail to see why the reports that are asked for cannot be so modified to provide the essence of what the reports are about without breaching anyone's privacy or in any way compromising the system.

[Motion for a Return 1 lost]

Correctional Services MLA Review Committee Report

M4. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the final report from the Correctional Services MLA Review Committee to the Solicitor General.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are rejecting this motion for a return. I received the report in December 2002, and officials from my department and I are taking some time to go over it very carefully. As well, the recommendations in the report will need to be carefully considered by the government before the report will be made public, and it would be inappropriate to release the report before a thorough assessment has been completed. I move that Motion for a Return 4 be rejected.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again I would urge all members of the House to not reject Motion for a Return 4. As the minister has indicated, this work was completed last fall. The report has been in their hands since December. We feel that it is especially important for members of the opposition to have a copy of this report because there is legislation forthcoming on material in this report, and if we are to have a full and open and responsible debate on this piece of legislation and, certainly, the opportunity to provide Albertans with the best possible legislation, then we feel that it is vital that this report be released.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 4 lost]

Calling Lake Fish Populations

M5. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all reports respecting the fish populations, including the populations of walleye and pike, and the general environmental health of Calling Lake prior to and after the April 1, 2002, start of the pilot project which allows approximately two-thirds of Calling Lake to be opened for the harvest of walleye and pike.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the motion is fairly clear, and as much as we respect the minister and his long experience in the area and his expertise as a fisher, we do have the odd doubt and would like his wisdom balanced by the work of some of the members of his department.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that Motion for a Return 5 be accepted.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to conclude the debate.

Dr. Massey: We thank the minister for his wisdom, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 5 carried]

Infrastructure Contract Management Process

M9. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the Department of Infrastructure policy on its contract management process.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, this particular motion for a return asks for a copy of the Department of Infrastructure's policy on its contract management process. I would be only too happy to file with the Assembly key documents that detail the contract approval process within the ministry.

In response to recommendations made by the Auditor General in his last annual report, the ministry has commenced an extensive review of its processes and documents that detail our contract management process. The first document is the interim mandate of the recently restructured Contracts Review Committee in response to the Auditor General's recommendations, where we really find the mandate of this committee such that the members play a more active role in the evaluation of all contracts and tenders. Previously this committee provided support for both infrastructure and transportation contracts, and the first phase of our initiative was to split the committee so that it can now focus on contracts under the mandate of Alberta Infrastructure. The second phase of our review will include a more detailed review of the approval levels within the organization.

In addition, we have developed a consultation and selection policy, which is currently in draft. We have consulted stakeholder organizations and private industry, such as the architecture and engineering professions, to ensure that our proposed changes respect a fair, equitable, transparent, and appropriate way of doing business with their member firms and have developed a policy that will clearly communicate the department's process for consultant selection and contract awards.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that these documents will provide this Assembly with the information on the importance of Alberta Infrastructure ensuring a fair and open contract management process. So we will be accepting this motion and be only too happy to table those documents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the minister for his commitment to table those documents in the House and also for the brief explanation on the processes and procedures that they have instituted to try and deal with this situation. So thank you, Mr. Minister.

[Motion for a Return 9 carried]

Transportation Contract Management Process

M11. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the Department of Transportation policy on its contract management process.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to undertake this motion and accept it on behalf of the hon. Minister of Transportation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to conclude debate.

Mr. Bonner: I'd like to take this opportunity to thank the minister for accepting this motion for a return.

[Motion for a Return 11 carried]

Bill 201 Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. At committee stage I have no amendments to offer, but I would like to answer some questions which were asked in second reading. Now, when I was reviewing Hansard, I only determined that one member, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, had a few questions on June grass, respecting its distribution, selection, and the balloting process. I'll perhaps spare everyone too much of the reading of the questions, but it just said that perhaps the June grass was overlooked by the electorate in this case and wanted to know who introduced the legislation and the committee update on the balloting and that kind of thing. I'll endeavour to do that.

Just as a reminder, rough fescue is also found in Peace River and Grande Prairie, because there was a comment that it only went as far as Grassland.

Now, to try to explain why the Prairie Conservation Forum balloting process arrived at rough fescue, which is found in approximately two-thirds of Alberta, and, as the hon. Member for Edmonton Gold-Bar observed, the June grass is found throughout Alberta. So if one first looks at the process for choosing the five grasses that were on the ballot – and all the members are familiar with that ballot. It was distributed here in the House when we had second reading and also was distributed to many members several years ago when it was distributed to the MLAs. A list of grasses was compiled, which in Alberta is well over a hundred species, approximately 138 species, and an evaluation matrix was developed by the Prairie Conservation Forum. Seven members of the Prairie Conservation Forum's provincial grass committee, including Cheryl Bradley, Tom Cameron, Cheryl Dash, Reg Ernst, Vern McNeely, Ed Nelson, and Liz Saunders, everything from grass specialists to ranchers and so on, drew up a list of 41 grasses which are relatively common and widespread in Alberta. That is to say that those species were reasonably well known and their range covered at least 25 percent or more of the province.

In May this list of 41 grass species was sent to all members of the Prairie Conservation Forum asking them to select the five grasses that they felt should be on a shortlist. From that shortlist they came up with a shortlist of 41 out of approximately 140. They came up with the following: western wheat grass and northern wheat grass were deemed to be almost the same, but between the two of them there were 21 choices; blue grama grass, 14; rough fescue, 28. So it had most of all of the 41. June grass was 16, and needle and thread grass was 18. So that information for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Then comments were made on this process as to why they made their choice or why they didn't make a choice. Just a few of them are:

- Choose a grass representative of the Fescue Grassland as Saskatchewan's emblem represents the Mixed Grass Prairie and Manitoba may well choose one representative of the Tall Grass Prairie.

So that was advice from one of the members of the Prairie Conservation Forum.

- Needle and Thread is probably the most common in Alberta and has a neat sounding name. Rough fescue may be found in a larger geographical area in Alberta. Sweet Grass sounds neat and is used by native people.
- Only choice is Rough Fescue. The crème de la crème.

Another one said:

- I am honoured that a "dirt" person is allowed to have a vote on such matters!

I presume that's one of the agricultural fellows. Finally, there's another comment.

- There is only one candidate and that is Rough Fescue. It is widespread, unique, and vital to the future of both the cattlemen and wildlife. Put [myself] down five times [for that].

So those are just some of the comments in that process.

Again, rough fescue was the first choice, and then on the basis of that, they were able to pick the five grasses that you saw on the ballot. This was sent to several thousand interested Albertans but not only just sent out to them. Advertising was placed in many newspapers and magazines and on the Net and other means, then, for Albertans to vote on this issue of a provincial grass emblem or symbol for Alberta, and there were some rural schools that participated in it. The balloting resulted in 2,021 ballots, with rough fescue receiving 738 and therefore being the largest, with a majority of 36 percent. June grass was 556, blue grass was 305, western wheat grass was 226, and green needle was 196. So they ranged, then, from 36 percent down to 10 percent.

I'd like to add to this by referring to A Guide to Using Native Plants on Disturbed Lands, and we could go through that and spend the next hour looking at all of the ones, but if you look at the various types of grasslands like submesic grassland, upper slope positions, Parry oat grass is the largest, and rough fescue is in there as well at 15 percent of the canopy cover. Go to mesic grassland, lower slope locations: rough fescue is 32 percent, and the others all fall below that as a species with the canopy cover. It goes on through grassy upland sites. Again, plains rough fescue is the largest, and it goes on from there.

Before I conclude, I would add a few more thoughts on the appropriateness of rough fescue even though it doesn't grow throughout the province. Some of the reasons are that if we look at Alberta's emblems, like the wild rose and the great horned owl, those are pretty widespread throughout the province, but the bighorn sheep is found primarily in the Rocky Mountains on our western border. The lodgepole pine is widespread in western Alberta but not found very far east of the Rocky Mountains. Bull trout is found in Alberta's glacial waters. So the fact that rough fescue is only found in two-thirds of the province of Alberta as opposed to a hundred percent of Alberta is, perhaps, not as crucial as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar might have thought. The current roster of emblems reflects different cultural, historical, and ecological aspects of Alberta's diversity. There is, however, no emblem which signifies Alberta's prairie heritage, and that's one of the selling points of rough fescue.

The Provincial Museum of Alberta has made some comments that I think are worthy to note. They have written:

The Prairie Conservation Forum (PCF) appears to have done an excellent job in selecting rough fescue as the candidate grass species for inclusion in the Emblems of Alberta Act as the official grass of Alberta. It is clear that the PCF devoted considerable effort into making the selection of this grass a democratic, scientific and educational process.

Educating the public about the ecological qualities of a focus group of critical grass species and then allowing them to vote on their preferred species was an act of informed empowerment.

They go on to say:

Ecologically, it would be hard to argue for a better grass to represent the Province of Alberta. This grass is symbolic of natural and human based systems on a number of fronts and presents a diversity of contrasting elements that do indeed reflect the diversity of the Province.

The Provincial Museum of Alberta said:

In summary, The PCF has done an excellent job selecting rough fescue as the candidate grass for Alberta's official emblem. They have involved the public in the selection process, they provided educational material to promote awareness of all grass species, and they worked with a wide range of stakeholders. The final selection was based on sound ecological principles.

In concluding my remarks at this point in the committee stage, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I look forward to any further comments or questions that anyone may offer.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to our Member for Highwood for bringing this important bill forward for debate at this time. I just want to rise briefly and indicate my support for this both as an individual and as minister responsible for parks and protected areas. I think it reflects well on some of the values that we as Albertans hold with respect to our environment in general.

Through our protected areas program, Mr. Chair, we try to ensure that our natural heritage remains vibrant, strong, and protected for today and available for the future. The intent of the designation of a provincial grass emblem, I believe, is to select an official symbol that reflects that our grassland areas and our prairie heritage are equally important.

I know that the fescue grass emblem will join numerous other natural provincial emblems, which have been alluded to: the wild rose, the lodgepole pine, the petrified wood, the great horned owl, the Rocky Mountain bighorn sheep, the bull trout, and so on. These emblems are all important to our history in one way or another, and they represent the basic elements of Alberta that are so important to all of us because they are symbolic of the wild, the natural, and the bountiful aspects of our province, of which we are so proud. It was some of these very first elements, of course, that were very appealing to our aboriginal people and that, in turn, helped attract the first European settlers to western Canada.

Fescue grasslands, in particular, are symbolic of natural and human-based systems, and they do host a very rich range of contrasting elements, which I'm sure many members here are aware of, and as such they do reflect the broad diversity of our province. So from a natural history point of view, Alberta is the only place in North America that actually contains all three of these species of rough fescue, which perhaps other members have referenced. This particular grass is fairly widespread in our province, Mr. Chair, and it is in fact found in four of the six natural regions, those being the grassland, parkland, foothills, and Rocky Mountains.

The rough fescue ecosystems that are the subject of debate today are also important in that they provide a critical food source group for the winter, in particular for wildlife, including many of our big game species of the prairies and of the foothills. But from a human history perspective it's difficult to understand how the parkland, grassland, and foothills regions of the province would have been properly sustained from an agricultural point of view without the rough fescue presence. I'm told and I've read some stories where rough fescue indeed provided critical winter feed for livestock and helped sustain pioneering efforts on the prairies in the early days. So extensive cover of rough fescue is an important indicator of a well-managed rangeland.

I think that in identifying rough fescue as Alberta's official grass emblem, we will contribute significantly to the conservation of our natural grasslands and help focus attention on the human history and the ecological history of our province. Albertans, I know, are very proud of not only our province but also of what we are doing to help protect the natural diversity of the tremendous charms that our province has to offer. Obviously, Mr. Chair, that is evidenced by the success of our special places program, in which Albertans were involved extensively in the process of nominating, identifying, and establishing new parks and protected areas across our province, and that extensive network has been the recipient of many accolades over the past year and a half or so.

Mr. Chair, as I begin to wrap up here, I just want to address a few areas of the province that are very specifically involved in one form or another and/or that touch on this important bill. Some of the areas that we have protected through our special program alluded to earlier, where different types of natural prairie grass could be found, would include the Rumsey heritage rangeland, which is adjacent to the Rumsey ecological reserve, and it protects the largest remaining tract of aspen parkland in Canada, spanning the transition from the northern fescue grassland to the central parkland. Another area is the Milk River natural area, which contains some of the most diverse and least disturbed grasslands in the country. Another area is the Hand Hills ecological reserve, which is part of the largest remaining fescue grassland in the world. The Tolman Badlands heritage rangeland preserves the northern fescue grasslands north of Drumheller. Finally, the Kleskun Hill natural area protects some of the largest remnant pieces of native grassland in the Grande Prairie area.

These successes, Mr. Chair, are indeed a result of very special partnerships that our government has with businesses and with Alberta communities provincewide. Volunteer efforts need to be recognized in this respect because they, too, are a very important component of building on our success. Over 240 individual stewards and 71 steward organizations are currently involved in the parks and protected areas volunteer steward program. As an example, the Peace Parkland Naturalists assist parks and protected areas in Grande Prairie with the promotion and management of the Kleskun Hill natural area. Of equal importance are the conservation efforts of private landowners, which complement the provincial protected areas and contribute to the overall conservation of the grassland and the parkland natural regions in Alberta.

So this is a very timely bill, it's a very important bill, and credit for it obviously goes to the member bringing it forward, but credit must also go to other initiatives such as Operation Grassland Community, which is a stewardship, education, and partnership program that works directly with landowners, youth, and the general public toward conservation of native prairie habitat.

Mr. Chair, in closing, the Prairie Conservation Forum has done an excellent job in helping select rough fescue as the candidate grass for Alberta's official emblem status. They have worked hard to involve the public in this selection process, they've provided educational material to promote awareness of all grass species, and they've worked with a wide range of stakeholders in bringing this recommendation forward.

I want to quickly acknowledge the contribution of our Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation and, as the Member for Highwood indicated, the Provincial Museum of Alberta and its staff, who are within my ministry, for their sincere efforts as members of the Prairie Conservation Forum, who also assisted in the selection of rough fescue as the official grass and for their support in this recommendation.

Mr. Chair, my final sentence is simply to recognize that many Albertans and the Prairie Conservation Forum need to be sincerely thanked for their very hard work and their exceptional recommendation. One way we can do that is by approving rough fescue for designation as the official provincial grass emblem.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise in debate this afternoon and participate in the discussion on Bill 201, Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. I appreciate the hon. Member for Highwood's answers to some of the questions that I had and certainly from the previous speaker, the hon. Minister of Community Development. In that case, one could only say that, well, perhaps the grass is greener on that side of the fence for a change.

When I look at this bill and I hear all hon. members of the Assembly speak in favour of it, I certainly see no harm in adopting this. I'm surprised at the attention it's getting. When I'm listening to the arguments as they're presented, it astonishes me to look around this Assembly and see so many members interested in participating in this debate, yet we only, Mr. Chairman, have one plant in the entire Assembly, on the Clerk's table. I've had the honour and the pleasure of visiting a few Legislative Assemblies in Canada, and certainly some of them have a lot more vegetation than just that.

I would encourage, in light of the overwhelming support this bill is getting from government members, that perhaps it's time that – and this could be done in conjunction with the centennial year. It could be a modest, inexpensive recognition of our centennial year. I don't want centennial years to be getting out of hand, Mr. Chairman, with a lot of monuments and stuff being built. I would rather schools and hospitals be constructed, but what we could do perhaps is at some point for visiting schoolchildren whenever they come to the Assembly – it doesn't necessarily have to be in here – we could have an aquarium with a few bull trout in it so that the children could see firsthand, up close our provincial fish.

Now, we could also do something similar with a little patch of this rough fescue grass. I'm not saying that it should be in front of the Mace or anything like this, but certainly there could be a place. Or perhaps we should make a couple of square metres of rough fescue sod or grass in the vicinity of one of the entrances to this Assembly so that Albertans could see for themselves our grass emblem, so to speak.

I'll be brief, Mr. Chairman. In conclusion, I would urge that perhaps we should look at a few more plants in this Assembly. We've got one, and I think we could have a lot more. There's certainly room for them. Perhaps it would make the Assembly that much more of a pleasant place, and with that I would conclude my remarks.

It would be a good, symbolic way to mark our first 100 years as a province to perhaps have a few representations. I'm not saying to have, for instance, a stuffed owl in this Assembly or anything of that nature; don't get me wrong. The public is apt to come in and get confused and have a great deal distinguishing which constituency that stuffed owl would be representing. It certainly wouldn't be an opposition constituency.

Those are some of the things that I think we should do that would be modest and inexpensive, and we could recognize not only this rough fescue grass but other emblems in this province. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for the good suggestions. Actually, some of them were anticipated, and there are now some examples of rough fescue growing in the gardens of the Legislature, and about 20 feet from where my car is on warmer occasions parked there is a rough fescue plant. Now it's well buried by the snow.

There are suggestions, as well, that maybe we might have, in addition to that plant, some of the native plants. Of course, one of the problems with native plants is that they have as part of the cycle that there has to be a dormant period and a cold period as well as a warm period, but the Native Plant Council is going to follow up on those suggestions.

Thank you.

head: Second Reading

Bill 203
School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate March 3: Mr. McFarland]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I began debate on March 3, I indicated that the principles of Bill 203 were to raise the legal leaving age from school from 16 to 17, universally and consistently, and at the same time Bill 203 would eliminate the use of attendance boards. If I could carry on from that point, Mr. Speaker, I also wanted to reiterate that I think it should be the goal of every parent or guardian to see that their child graduates from high school and, hopefully, pursues some type of postsecondary training. There is no denying the fact that staying in school increases a young person's opportunities in this world far beyond those of a high school dropout.

Let me start by addressing the first point: raising the mandatory school age from 16 to 17 years old. Opponents to this bill will argue that children who do not want to be in school should not be forced to attend school. Let me ask you this, Mr. Speaker: how many 16 year olds are mature enough at that age to fully realize the consequences of leaving school early? The notion that a child who is 16 years old who does not desire to be in the classroom will be mature and responsible enough to be a productive member of the workforce is a little bit far-reaching in its assumption.

Another small stretch of the imagination, Mr. Speaker, is to assume that all children who drop out before graduating will eventually see the error of their ways or the decision that they've made and return to school to earn their graduate equivalency diploma or even to attend a vocational institution. These students were not interested in attending when the tuition was being paid for. How could we really believe that they'll suddenly be interested in educating themselves when the tuition is coming directly out of their back pocket? In the meantime, they're destined for a life of minimum wage positions and near poverty.

Bill 203 is a move in the right direction, Mr. Speaker, and passing it into legislation is the right thing to do. It also ties in with the goals of this government, the future welfare of our children, and our children's promise act, that was introduced this year.

Mr. Speaker, dropout and graduation rates have long been used as indicators of success in preparing students for their future careers or postsecondary education. These rates have a long-term impact on such conditions as unemployment, earning power, average income, and quality of life. I believe it's important to point out that even young people who are only interested in agricultural pursuits require some type of formal education. Having some experience in the business of farming myself and recognizing how technology and information is changing, I can speak to the need for training in this industry.

For those young people interested in expanding their knowledge and background in agriculture, Olds College, for instance, offers a two-year agricultural production and management diploma. In this program at Olds College the requirement is, at very minimum, Mr. Speaker, a high school diploma, 55 percent in math 20 or 23, 55 percent or better in science 30. This immediately excludes the individual who thought they were so smart and had to quit school when they were 16.

Another example, one that may not be as rural but certainly applies to many of the younger people from urban Alberta, would be those who want to work with children who may have experienced difficulties in their lives. Lethbridge Community College, as another example, offers an excellent program in child and youth care. Applicants to this program are required to have an Alberta high school diploma or an equivalent including a minimum of 60 percent in each of social studies 30, English 30, and one other 30-level subject. A young person with these honourable goals of working with underprivileged children will immediately feel the impact of the decision they made to quit school at the age of 16. They simply won't be accepted.

Recent studies by the National Centre for Education Statistics reported that high school dropouts were three times more likely to receive public assistance than high school graduates who did not go to college. Three times more likely, Mr. Speaker, to receive public assistance. This is a very telling tale. It speaks not only to the lost economic activity to the province as well as to a lifetime of minimum wage, public assistance but also to the increased cost to individual taxpayers. Producing a well-educated, diverse workforce is integral to Alberta's economic success. Keeping children in school until at least 17 years old and increasing graduation rates will help add to Alberta's comparative economic advantage.

The response from the Department of Learning paints such a different picture in terms of costs. While Stats Canada figures point to lost productivity, the Learning department has focused their arguments on a small increase in administrative costs. According to their data, historically the proportion of 16-year-old students who stay in school for the next school year is between 75 and 80 percent. Given this enrollment trend for 17-year-old students, the introduction of a mandatory age requirement of 17 years would create an overall basic learning cost pressure of approximately $43 million for basic instructional grant funding and system administration. How can one even begin to put a price tag on the value of an education? It is the cost of, and I'll quote, not, unquote, providing a high level of education for our children that's truly more measurable.

New Brunswick is the only province in Canada, Mr. Speaker, for those interested, who has raised the minimum mandatory school age above 16. On July 1, 1999, New Brunswick through their Education Act required children to stay in school until they graduate or turn 18 years old, and the results have been very encouraging. In 2000-2001 their dropout rate had fallen by 25 percent since 1993, when it stood at 3.8 percent. This indicates that this type of legislation will keep children in school. Studies have continually shown that keeping children in school for longer periods increases their likelihood of continuing to a postsecondary institution.

I'd like now to turn my attention to addressing the second point of Bill 203: applying the age requirement universally and consistently. Section 13(5) of the School Act prescribes who can be excused from mandatory attendance and for what reasons. Bill 203 proposes to strike section 13(5) from the School Act. Under Bill 203 reasonable exceptions to attendance rules will remain unchanged. These exceptions include absences for sickness, recognized holidays, suspensions, expulsion, even those students who've graduated from school prior to the age of 17, those students who some call gifted.

The third issue I'd like to address regarding Bill 203 involves the elimination of the attendance boards. Currently under 15(1) of the School Act attendance boards represent the ultimate authority in resolving truancy issues. Attendance boards were established to provide an alternative to the immediate use of the courts for enforcement of the compulsory attendance.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I encourage your support.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak in support of Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. If we go back and look at the history of compulsory attendance laws in our country and across the continent, the purpose has been pretty clear, and that's to prepare youth to be productive members of our society and, more importantly, maybe in some instances, to create an informed citizenry, a citizenry that can take part and can guide our democracy. So those two goals, to make them productive members and to create an informed citizenry, I think have been valid goals in the past, and they're certainly valid goals for this bill.

I think for me the important thing about the bill is that it helps to establish the social norm that you finish high school, and there's been some research that would support the notion that the context within which a law like this operates is very important, and the message that it gives youth in our province is that high school graduation is a minimum requirement. We'll hear the arguments, I'm sure, opposing this bill, Mr. Speaker, that talk about the difficulties of keeping youngsters who don't want to be in school there, but I think that that's a whole different argument and needs to be addressed by itself, apart from the compulsory attendance law. I think that it is really important that we pass this law, but even more important is what is done in schools based on the knowledge we already have to prevent the problem from occurring in the first place. What can we do in schools so that the times that the compulsory attendance law has to be invoked are minimized?

I think that if you look at some of the research on, for instance, who stays in school, there's some good evidence that dropout rates in small schools are lower than those in large schools. If you attend a small high school, there's a pressure on you to be part of the culture of that small school. You're forced to take part in the photography club and be on the schoolbook council, a number of activities – you have to be on the basketball team; you have to be on the football team – if those settings are going to work in a high school. So there's great pressure on students in small high schools to take part in school life, and it's that engagement that we know is one of the factors, a contributing factor, in keeping youngsters in school and having them complete high school. We have to work to try to get that balance so that the pressure to leave school is balanced overwhelmingly in favour of the pressures to stay in school, and I think that that's an important aspect of the whole problem.

We know that it's informed parents whose youngsters are more likely to stay in school. By informed parents I mean parents who are engaged with the school, the purposes of the school, who work at home to affect their youngster's attitude towards school and school performance, and it doesn't mean that they have to sit down and do the math 30 homework for youngsters. All they have to do as a minimum is to ask what's going on, to question youngsters about what's happening in school. "How's your progress in this area? What kinds of things are you engaged in?" It's that kind of activity that leads to youngsters staying in school along with the kind of emotional support that parents can provide.

We know that parental educational attainment has something to do with whether youngsters stay in school. If your parents completed to 10th grade, then the chances are there won't be as much pressure on you to complete high school as children in families where parents are high school graduates. An important aspect of this bill is that it does make it, as I said before, the norm that you complete high school.

Youngsters that are positively engaged in extracurricular activities are more likely to stay in school than those who aren't. You know, if we're really serious about the problem of dropouts, then we have to look at what's happening in schools and what kinds of opportunities are there provided for extracurricular activities and to make sure that when there are pressures on school funding those extracurricular programs are not sacrificed in the name of saving money. They have an important role in helping youngsters avoid being at risk for dropping out. Those activities create a network that draws youngsters in and helps to keep them in school. We know that youngsters living with both biological parents are more likely to complete high school. If you have a higher family income, you're more likely to stay in school. If your parents are employed, you're more likely to stay in school. So there are a number of family factors where I think schools, by the programs that they have in place, can help youngsters stay in school.

We know that social bonding, educational engagement, achievement that pays off eventually in employment are important factors for youngsters that stay in schools, and we also know that schools that provide a haven for youngsters from home problems and a place for vocational training programs, opportunities to build relationships – those are the youngsters that stay in school.

So we have some pretty good notions of the characteristics of youngsters that do stay in school, and it's those characteristics that I think we have to build on. This law will cause schools to look maybe more seriously at those programs. Those characteristics I think are important in building programs that will help youngsters stay in school and again, as I said, build that very important norm, that the minimum in our province is staying for the completion of high school.

We can start things very, very early, Mr. Speaker. We know, for example, that you can predict even as early as kindergarten who's going to drop out. We know that youngsters that are engaged in disruptive behaviour is one indicator that youngsters might possibly drop out of school. Youngsters who exhibit aggressive behaviour that goes unrestrained in the early years of school is another possible predictor of someone who may want to leave school before they complete high school, and we get caught up in condemning social promotion as being something very bad, but it's also one of the surest predictors that someone will drop out of school if they have been retained by at least one grade. So by holding youngsters back, we make the probability of them dropping out of high school higher. There's the whole notion of poor attitudes to school, whether that comes from the home or it's allowed to be fostered with the school itself. That leads to youngsters opting to leave school earlier or trying to.

There are a number of youngsters who are not mature enough to make the connection between high school completion, finishing school, and better economic opportunities down the road. The previous speaker mentioned some of the costs that we all pay for those youngsters not being able to make that connection, and I think it's good to question the ability of 16 year olds to make that connection.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and speak at second reading to Bill 203, School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003, which is an act to amend the School Act and is sponsored by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Speaker, education is an absolute necessity in this part of the 21st century. It's very difficult for children in today's world to get employment and, better yet, to be able to remain employed without at the very least a high school diploma. This being the case, there are still far too many children in Alberta who are not completing their high school education. I wonder whether this is due in part to the fact that our laws are, I guess you could say, lenient on those who wish to drop out of school. Currently any child in Alberta who is of the age of 16 is able to drop out of school uncontested by the truancy officials that we may have here, and I think that's probably in today's world quite unacceptable.

Worse than that though, Mr. Speaker and hon. members, is the fact that many are able to leave school on their 15th birthday. It takes two or three months, if we are considering it, following the 15th birthday when they don't show up to school before they appear on the truancy list. By the time the truancy officer gives the parents proper registered letter notice, authorized notice, if the proper address can be located, to present their child at the school that he or she is supposed to be in, two, three, four months can pass, and finally the truancy officer sees that this is not bearing any fruit and takes the case to court. That may take two or three or more months to get a date for the court. By the time the case comes to court, in this circumstance the child may be well past their 16th birthday, in which case the matter has to be dropped. But let us say, by chance, that if the case gets to the court before the 16th birthday, the court may rule that there are only six weeks, five weeks, four weeks, seven weeks left and it's not worth while for that child, who has missed all of the school since their 15th birthday. If there's only this limited period of time in the school year, it's not worth while issuing a court order to force that child to return to the classroom. Having been in the education system for 27 years and being a school administrator for a considerable period of that time, I know that truancy officers for those kinds of individuals that I've just described are loath to try and do anything about it, because by the time it gets to court, it's not worth their while.

So, Mr. Speaker, as dropout rates continue to be high in our learning system in Alberta, we must look for ways to encourage children from even considering the option to drop out. Bill 203 is a small step in fighting the dropout battle. Its main value is that it will raise the legal dropout age from 16 to 17 and the de facto rate to 16 from 15. I'm not sure that this bill really goes far enough, as I personally would support 18 years, but it's a small step in the right direction. I don't think that a 17 year old is all that much further along in the maturity scale to make the decision to stay or not stay in school than a 16 year old, but there are some statistics to say that this age is a better choice than 16.

The most important thing that we must realize is that a student who is 17 is one year closer to graduation than a student who might be 16, and this could go an extremely long way in a teenager's decision-making process. If they are thinking about dropping out, they may ultimately decide against it if they feel they are too close to graduating to quit. They may only have six or eight months left until graduation when they turn 17, so they continue on. Or as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods suggested, the sports programs often keep people in for a considerable period of time, and that is a bonus.

As we debate the merits of the bill, I'd like to turn to some success stories in other provinces and states that have had a higher legal dropout age. Granted we will not be able to keep every single child in school, but if our legislation keeps one more child in high school until they have completed, then that will have served some purpose.

In Canada, Mr. Speaker, there's only one province – it's been mentioned by the hon. Member for Little Bow – that has a legal dropout age that is higher than 16, that being, of course, New Brunswick. The province of New Brunswick has a record of a steady decline in dropout rates since 1993 and even more so since their legislation, a dropout rate that is somewhere around 2.8 percent for Anglophone students and 3.1 percent for Francophone. This is a remarkably small number of students dropping out when trying to find Alberta's dropout rate to compare the two.

I found many different and conflicting numbers for our province. Some pegged the rate at 18 percent, some pegged it a little lower at 8 percent, and the general statistic that is found is that the dropout rate is around 13 percent. Whatever rate, it's much higher than New Brunswick's, and I find that embarrassing, and it must be embarrassing for the other eight provinces as well. We must ask ourselves, then: is our average rate higher because the legal dropout age is lower? If this is the case, then we would be seriously considering the importance and the implications of this bill, Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003.

Another state is Kansas. A child can leave high school before they graduate and before they turn 18 if and only if they are at least 16 years of age and have written consent from their parents, guardian, or the court for their withdrawal, and that has proven to close the dropout rate down to less than 3 percent. Apparently in the last year for which we have statistics, it's fallen to 2 percent in Kansas, and that, of course, is an incredibly low figure, Mr. Speaker.

The state of Maine has a very low dropout rate. In fact, it has stayed below the 5 percent mark since 1985 in both the public and the private systems, and in 2001 the dropout rate was 3.07 percent, a far cry, then, from that found in most provinces now in Canada, including, of course, Alberta.

So I think, Mr. Speaker, statistics show that the higher the mandatory school age for children, the more likely they will stay in school and complete their diplomas, and this, I would suggest, should be our goal. It may seem trivial to switch the legal dropout age from 16 to 17, but I believe the positives far outweigh any negatives that might be offered. As I mentioned, I would support the age of 18 were that to be proposed.

If we pass Bill 203 – and I feel we should – I think we would see the benefits within the next five years. I imagine a province where our dropout rate is lower than 5 percent and students choose to stay in school because they know they want to and, of course, are required to do so. Bill 203 will help keep students in school until they are close enough to graduation, and therefore if they have any thoughts of dropping out, they may well change their minds and refuse to quit school because they are so close to the end. That is the difference between a 16 year old and a 17 year old: the latter is so much closer to finishing. I know that most children will make the proper decision if given the chance and the direction.

I fully endorse Bill 203 and ask all of my colleagues to vote in favour of this important bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003, and I would like to compliment the Member for Little Bow for bringing this forward. It is a bill that I think is long overdue, and it is a bill that many people in this province welcome, particularly those parents in the province who happen to have those children who at the age of 15 or 16 have certainly lost interest in school. It's very difficult for those parents – and in a number of cases it can be single parents – to get these children motivated to go to school. So I think that from that very standpoint, if we as a province make this a priority that we want children in school for that extra year, certainly we will see the effects of this type of legislation over time.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Most of it, Mr. Speaker, is certainly just a change in attitude. We have seen a number of bills in this Legislature that have been passed where initially we did not see the effect. I think of bills, whether they be the wearing of seat belts in automobiles, where at one time we did not have many that wore their seat belts to a point now where we have quite a few people that wear seat belts and, I think, probably in ever increasing numbers that do. Just recently, we passed legislation in this House which would require young people under the age of 18 to wear bike helmets and, of course, without doing a scientific study, I would have to say that when I drive the streets in the summer, I certainly see a greater percentage of young people wearing helmets. So I think that through legislation this is a start. This is a start. I don't think that students will stay in school just because we have legislation, but they do have to. Legislation will give us a tool from which to start.

A place to start, first of all, is to look at why students drop out of school. When we look at students dropping out of school, truancy is usually the first step towards a lifetime of problems, and this is certainly backed up by a study that was done at Florida State University. They have identified many, many factors associated with dropouts. The other findings that the study has found: the average annual income of dropouts was less than one-half of high school graduates and half of welfare families were headed by dropouts and half of the prison population were from these families. So, certainly, we look at dropout rates in high school. We compare those to the rates of unemployment. We also look at the low status and low-paying jobs that these types of people end up with, and, Mr. Speaker, this would lead to the disenfranchisement from society of these people, and that is a key, key factor when we look at why students don't want to stay in school.

When we look at studies that are done even in this province, Mr. Speaker, I look at a study called Shaping Young People into Good Citizens. It is a study conducted in 2001 by the Alberta School Boards Association, and what they did for this particular study was they toured the province and they interviewed many, many people and they had many other people who certainly provided feedback. They had used any number of vehicles to gather feedback, including an on-line survey, an Ipsos-Reid omnibus poll, direct contact with elected officials and provincial associations, and local consultation at the school and school system level. One of the things that they found out was that Albertans agree on the skills students need in order to become good citizens. There were skills such as thinking skills, problem-solving skills, social skills, and leadership skills that were identified as critical for young people to have if they are to become good citizens. Again, to become good citizens, I think one of the things we have to do is start that involvement with the community at a very early age.

Now, as well, we have programs in this province, early-start programs, which deal with high-risk students. We look, for example, at the recent studies and recent activities at North Edmonton school. We see that in programs that identify students who are going to have difficulty along the way, programs that are initiated at the primary level in elementary education, these students have improved immensely over previous classes in the school. So, certainly, by giving these students success at an early age, we raise their self-image. We raise the level of confidence in those young individuals and with the success the probability that those students will remain in school increases.

As well, we look at other areas where we can help students, and this is certainly in a variety of ways. One of those in the school setting is that we offer academic achievement classes. We certainly have the means and the tests now so that we can identify students who are having difficulty and in what areas they are having difficulty. If we can provide those programs in a timely manner at the first possible opportunity, then the chances of those students not slipping through the cracks and not being left behind are much, much greater.

Now, then, we also have heard it said many, many times that it takes a community to raise a child. I think it is also critical, Mr. Speaker, when we are looking at keeping children in school, that, you know, we have those opportunities and those activities in the community that give students the opportunity to take part. It gives them the opportunity to feel wanted, and it certainly provides a safe environment, which I think is something that we want to ensure in our schools.

We've been relatively lucky, I think, in Canada with the safe environment that most of our students do experience when they attend school, and I think this is critical. I look at the city of Edmonton, where they have just brought in legislation on bullying because this is certainly something that they want to eliminate. It is something that they've identified as a potential problem, and it is a problem in some areas, and they want to make a safe environment for students. I think that if we do provide a safe environment for students in school, then their desire to stay in school, their desire to achieve in school certainly grows. Without a doubt, Mr. Speaker, the biggest payoff that we get for our investments in this province is with our students. Students that stay in school, students that learn, students that see learning as a lifelong goal and something that's to be enjoyed, not to be endured, are commendable. It is certainly an investment that will pay the greatest dividends down the road.

Now, then, in this same study that I mentioned earlier from Florida State University, they found that there is no single approach that works for everyone. [Mr. Bonner's speaking time expired]

I thank the Legislature very much for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, and I would hope that everybody in this Legislature would support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a pleasure to rise today in support of Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the very honourable Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the purpose of Bill 203 is to increase the mandatory school attendance age from 16 to 17 years old, and I'd like to point out that regardless of some members' opinions, this bill will not apply to me as I am of voting age.

Mr. Horner: You won't have to resign?

Mr. Griffiths: No. I won't have to resign.

I'd like to stress to this Assembly that I firmly believe that Bill 203 is a step in the right direction, and I encourage this Assembly to view Bill 203 as a step towards a bright and successful future, Mr. Speaker. The point as I see it is to ensure that Alberta's children are provided with the necessary options and opportunities to be successful. Bill 203 is about the success of Albertans, their children and grandchildren, and the success of this province.

The commitment to children is clearly evident in this province. For instance, Alberta's Promise is directed to creating an environment that will allow children, youth, and students to succeed. Mr. Speaker, the commitment that has been made includes concern for the health and safety of Alberta's children and youth at home and in the community. Our commitment also includes the promise that every child receives an education and has support, care, and guidance from at least one caring adult as well as open doors so that they can make a difference and serve others. This overall commitment is expressed partly through our education system. I believe that Bill 203, like other policies, is directed towards the success of our children and the students of this province. They are our most precious resource, and it is our responsibility to help in developing that resource to its fullest potential.

One of the government's highest priorities is to secure a bright and successful future for all children and youth. Success can be viewed in many different ways, and I'm certain that if you were to ask each and every member in this Assembly today what success meant to them, you would not get the same answer twice. I'm willing to guarantee that more often than not the root of any one person's definition of success is: self-development, self-improvement, knowledge, and education.

If I may, I'd like to share with the Assembly a passage that I once read: that man is a success who thinks his own thoughts, who sets his own course, who lives by his own standards and creates his own destiny. I firmly believe in what I just read, Mr. Speaker. However, I also firmly believe that society, government, and, most importantly, family play a large role in preparing children, youth, and students for the roads they will travel. It is the responsibility of mentors, teachers, and family to prepare today's youth for what lies ahead, guiding them in making good life choices and decisions. By doing this, we ensure that they will succeed on their own, being their own person, thinking their own thoughts, and creating their own destiny.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's learning system is outstanding. Our teachers are caring and kind. Our students have excelled at national and international levels. Our curriculum is one of a kind and improving every day. Our education system should not be taken for granted. We have a responsibility to ensure that students don't lightly defer the opportunities and options that are provided for them by our education system. In 1981 only 60 percent of all 19 year olds in Alberta completed high school, which is compared to 65 percent of all 19 year olds across Canada. Five years later, in 1986, Alberta's high school completion rate for 19 year olds had risen to 64 percent but Canada's average for the same group was 68 percent. Ten years later, in 1996, 68 percent of Albertans aged 19 years had completed high school while Canada's average of 72 percent for the same age group was again higher.

Alberta is the financial envy of our country. Our balanced budget and debt-free future is something we are all proud of and can pass on to our children. It is time to strive for excellence in other areas as well. I commend Alberta Learning's 2002-2005 business plan, which has set a target for improving high school completion rates for 19 year olds from 72 percent to 75 percent. I'd also like to recognize the efforts that have been made in providing opportunities for mature students who may have left school before they obtained a diploma or want to upgrade their classes to enter a postsecondary institution. For whatever reason, I commend the work that they have done to ensure that all Albertans have access to the education they deserve.

Mr. Speaker, times are changing. The technology advancements that have occurred in the past 20 years are amazing, to say the least. These advancements have also drastically changed the world in which we live. Thirty years ago things were a lot simpler. Your father taught you how to farm, just as his father had taught him. You could fix your own car from what you'd learned in shop class or from working on your dad's car, though lots of us got in trouble for it.

I believe that the success of any person is dependent on their knowledge, and when it comes to knowledge, the more you have, the better off you will be. Alberta's market is competitive on a global scale, and if this province is going to succeed, Albertans have to succeed. A high school education will give today's youth the option to continue their studies at a postsecondary institution. They may not decide to follow that path right away after graduation, but they will have that option. To be competitive in a global marketplace, the products that Alberta produces need to be of the highest quality. Those high-quality products come from research and passing that information on to producers, whether it's a mechanic, a farmer, a construction worker, a nurse, a doctor, an engineer, or any other trade or occupation. The market is continually changing, and to stay competitive, we have to change with it, which means learning the most you can of the newest material you can all the time.

Mr. Speaker, we live in a time when the phrase "lifelong learners" is common. As a teacher I heard that quite often. We don't just teach our students about facts and figures and numbers; we teach our students how to learn and that they must continually learn to evolve to keep pace with today's society.

Bill 203 ensures that Alberta's youth will have the option to stay competitive. The statistics show that the longer a student stays in school, the more likely they are to complete high school and the more likely they are to appreciate learning throughout their lives. Let Bill 203 be the first step in providing the opportunity of success for all Alberta students.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to join the debate in support of Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the hon. Member for Little

Bow. I cannot think of any reason why a teenager should not be in school. The fact is that some high school students think mandatory attendance isn't such a big deal. Bill 203 makes it a big deal by amending the School Act to make it harder to avoid penalty for deliberately leaving school early.

I understand that there are various social and economic pressures on teenagers and that there have always been instances where students have had to leave school before graduation to attend to other matters. Whatever the reason, it is an undeniable fact that the best place for young people is in the classroom. I don't think young people are aware of the lifelong negative consequences of terminating their education early. Mr. Speaker, I struggled with this temptation when I was in school, but I chose to stay in high school and completed a degree in education.

As an educator I have seen the dramatic consequences when students failed to complete their basic education. My experience as a teacher and the studies done on the undereducated have revealed two unmistakable facts. First, there are clear connections between low education and low income, and there are also connections between low education and poor overall health. Alberta's teachers, school administrators, trustees, and the Alberta government have worked very hard to build one of the most successful and dynamic education systems in the world. All of the hard work, careful planning, and dedication means nothing if students aren't in the classroom.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 may be viewed by some as simply sweating the small stuff. After all, forcing teenagers to stay in school does not guarantee that they will actually embrace their education opportunities. But raising the mandatory attendance age to 17 sends a clear message, urging students to stay within their studies. Students who ignore mandatory attendance and any parent that allows this to happen must realize that there are dozens of learning opportunities in the Alberta education system. As we all know, students have always been able to choose from a variety of options in addition to their required courses. Optional courses are designed to provide opportunities for students to explore other areas of interest and possible career opportunities. The range of optional courses offered in Alberta varies from school to school, depending on such factors as student and parent preferences, appropriate facilities, and adequate staffing. For example, Alberta provides 22 career and technology studies programs, ranging from agriculture and forestry to community health or legal studies. The fine art programs, comprised of art, drama, and music, encourage and develop personal expression through artistic activities. Students have the opportunity to explore visual expression and establish the groundwork for artistic skills.

Aboriginal courses provide students with a framework to understand diverse aboriginal cultures within their region, their country, and the world. Amiskwaciy Academy is the best example of the Alberta government's commitment to educating aboriginal youth. The academy is open to any student with an interest in understanding the values and traditions of aboriginal culture. The unique mix of programming options and activities and events and personal guidance is designed to give students an opportunity to understand and appreciate Alberta's rich aboriginal history while preparing them for the challenges in the future.

The registered apprenticeship program, Mr. Speaker, sends students into the world of work, where students spend part of their time in school and part of their time in industry as registered apprentices in one of Alberta's 50 designated trades. The RAP program continues to be an incredible success in Alberta because students apply concepts learned in school to their career as an apprentice.

The green certificate, Mr. Speaker, for senior high school students allows students in grades 10, 11, and 12 to participate in agriculture-related apprenticeships, earn credits, and complete a technical level of a green certificate in any of the seven specializations. Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and Alberta Learning jointly administer the green certificate program. Many senior high schools organize special career development activities such as mentoring, job shadowing portfolios, and other career fairs.

Mr. Speaker, I could spend all afternoon listing possible education options for Alberta's high school students, but for the sake of time and patience of my colleagues I would like to briefly touch on the most important reason that young people should stay in school: the integration of technology. Children are learning to use many forms of technology from a very early age. By the time a student reaches high school, they are expected to perform complex research and explain the advantages and disadvantages of using different forms of information accessed through various forms of electronic media. High school students learn to assess the authority, reliability, and validity of electronically accessed information. As Albertans become more dependent on technology, young people must have the critical thinking skills necessary to sort through information in order to make proper decisions. I would also like to remind this Assembly that the Alberta Supernet will soon be operational in all provincial buildings. Supernet will open its doors for education that is simply not possible to do anywhere else in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, technology is here to stay. In fact, it will continue to play a much larger role in the future. Students learn the basics in high school, and without a basic understanding of technology young people will be lost. Thankfully, Alberta Learning has designed a curriculum that helps students to part the waters of the sea of information. But all of the work teachers put into lesson plans becomes meaningless if students aren't encouraged to stay in school. Alberta's teachers are hardworking, passionate, and dedicated men and women committed to the best interests of their students, but teachers can only do so much. I believe that parents must also share this commitment to youth. Changing the legal age of mandatory attendance from 16 to 17 may not seem like a significant adjustment at first; however, raising the age of mandatory attendance and raising the expectations of local boards should also raise the expectations of parents to encourage their children to stay in school. Schools are not meant to be holding areas for young people until they reach the age. Albertans must realize that people need to achieve the highest level of education possible. Failing to do so results in an underskilled workforce and an underachieving province.

I would like to thank the hon. Member for Little Bow for bringing Bill 203 forward. I realize that raising the mandatory attendance age from 16 to 17 will not guarantee a hundred percent high school completion rate in Alberta, but this bill does not operate in isolation. There are many learning options for students that accompany the scores of classes. Keeping students in school for one more year will help the overall goal of developing well-prepared learners for lifelong learning, the world of work, and citizenship.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I believe that every opportunity must be made to ensure that young adults reach their full potential. Bill 203 amends the School Act and sends a clear message that Alberta needs young people to succeed in school. Alberta's future begins in the classroom. I think that every reasonable attempt must be made to ensure that young people realize their full potential. I urge all colleagues in this Assembly to vote in support of this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today and speak in support of Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. I would like to commend the MLA for Little Bow for bringing this legislation forward for discussion and debate. It is an important topic that affects not only Alberta's youth, but it has far-reaching consequences that encompass the rest of our province.

With the passage of this bill the mandatory attendance age would increase from 16 to 17 years old. This policy would extend its application across the province, enforcing attendance requirements with limited provisions for exceptions. This bill would also abolish the use of attendance boards, placing the authority and jurisdiction with the local school board to ensure student attendance. The overall goal of the bill is to raise the number of Alberta youth who complete secondary education.

Mr. Speaker, let me put some strategic thinking on the matter. Indeed, we are living in a global, competitive economy. Our quality of living depends on our abilities and competitiveness. As Canadians and Albertans we have been enjoying an advantage of being ahead. However, others are catching up. The gap is reducing fast. Our muscles cannot compete with the low costs of the multitudes in other parts of the world. We need to push ahead, literally, with our heads. It has become evident that the individuals who do not complete high school have a harder time securing decent-paying jobs. The gap in opportunities between students who drop out and those who graduate is widening, and we are finding that more entry-level, trade-specific jobs require a minimum of high school graduation.

We are living in an increasingly knowledge-based economy in our society. The skills required to work and live are changing rapidly. These alterations and modifications have extensive implications on equitable participation and social cohesion. As a society we are experiencing a shift in the skill structure and employment requirements taking place across our province, throughout the country, and even around the world.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to frequent unemployment or low-level employment, students who do not complete high school are at risk to experience a plethora of personal and social problems. It is apparent that young people who do not complete high school face many more problems later in life than those who graduate. Moreover, in many instances students that drop out of high school ultimately end up causing the community many longer term problems. Numerous studies and research establish that the earlier the grade from which a student drops out from high school, the less likely the student will ever graduate. The closer the student is to completion, the greater the chance of receiving that diploma. Students that go back to complete secondary school often discover that it's more difficult and usually more costly. Students find it tougher to get back into the routine of school once they have been away from the education environment. In turn, individuals that go back usually attend colleges which are for high school courses for students to upgrade and attain the diploma. However, these courses are offered for a considerable fee. Bill 203 aims to keep more students in school, thus increasing the chances of successful secondary graduation.

Mr. Speaker, youths dropping out of school are not basing their decisions primarily on grades. Granted, some students leaving secondary education have poor or failing marks, but this only makes up 10 percent of those dropping out. Many students have excellent and superior grades. Thirty percent of high school dropouts in Alberta hold A or B averages. Therefore, it is apparent that the individuals leaving school are not doing so because they are struggling with their marks.

Students may decide to drop out of school for any number of reasons. These reasons may include helping their families or starting families of their own, which usually appears to make sense at the time. Decisions are also supported by the people closest to them. Therefore, individuals feel that leaving school is a favourable choice. However, the consequences of not graduating are vast and can be severe. More often than not most 15 and 16 year olds do not realize or comprehend the outcomes stemming from their actions. These individuals truly believe they know what is best for them. Adolescents need guidance. They do not have the grasp of what lies ahead. Our youth need to be prepared as best as possible in an ever changing economy with no guarantees.

Mr. Speaker, the gap between dropouts and more educated individuals is expanding as opportunities increase for higher skilled workers, thus disappearing for the less skilled. The labour market appears dismal for young people that do not complete secondary education. According to a study by Human Resources Development Canada, dropouts, when compared to graduates, encounter unemployment, low incomes, increased dependencies on unemployment insurance, social insurance, and family allowances. Without a high school diploma most dropouts will end up in either dead-end jobs or relying on public supports. Once the individual makes the choice of leaving school, it may be difficult to escape from the economic and educational circumstances. Dropouts are restricted in their choices of job opportunities; thus, it becomes imperative for students to graduate. Increasing the mandatory attendance age would raise the likelihood of more students obtaining their diploma.

One issue that needs to be addressed when looking at Alberta's young people and secondary education is the noncompletion rate or, inversely, the number of individuals graduating from high school in Alberta. The noncompletion rate is 25 percent. Nationally 18 percent of young adults are leaving high school without graduating. These are not numbers that our province or our country should be proud of. Noncompletion rates have been decreasing across the province and the country; however, these numbers are still too high.

Several jurisdictions in the United States have increased their mandatory age requirements to 17 and 18 years old to augment the completion success of secondary education. New Brunswick remains the only province with a mandatory attendance of over 16 years. Students are required to attend until they graduate or until they turn 18. These initiatives have proven effective in the New Brunswick education system. The province has experienced a decline in dropout rates and an increase in student graduation rates.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's education system ranks over other provinces as having the best performers. Charts of national test results and aptitude scores place Alberta above the other provinces. However, we need to address the issue of our province's high school noncompletion rate. Alberta has one of the highest dropout rates when compared to other provinces in the country. It will not matter that our education system is the best in the world if one-quarter of our youth are not able to reap the reward from it.

I encourage my colleagues to vote for the bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our colleague from Little Bow, when he brought this bill to the Legislature, I think, touched on a very important nerve, and that is the importance of education to the citizens of Alberta and in a larger sense the importance of education to the citizens of Canada. Particularly, it gave those of us in the government an opportunity to speak to the notion of education in general and of our commitment to education and of the acknowledgment of the importance of education in a civil society. So Bill 203 is in my estimation a very important piece of legislation that goes far beyond the notion of merely keeping youngsters in school one additional year, although that one additional year is very, very important and does reflect the difference that a year makes over perhaps 40 years as our economy and as our culture has evolved, particularly in recent times.

Now, we often speak anecdotally about Alberta or the future being a knowledge-based economy and of the importance of investment in a knowledge-based economy for the future of our province. We're going to have to make the investment in a knowledge-based economy if we're to profit from it, and that investment is going to have to be at two levels. One is the investment at an educational infrastructure level and an investment in the dollars that go to fund education, both students and teachers, and the other is the investment in the idea that knowledge is a driver of the economy. In Alberta in the next generation we're going to be coming to grips with the fact that our economy has evolved from a resource-based economy to a knowledge-based economy, and it will be the application of knowledge in a knowledge-based economy which will be the driver of the economy in the next generation.

I see members opposite waving in encouragement and saying: right on; glad you finally touched that nerve. This is where we need to have this debate in our province. Are we going to make the investment in postsecondary education so as to be able to benefit down the road from the innovation and eureka science that comes out of the investment in education, and where is that going to come from?

Well, Mr. Speaker, we in Canada are a branch plant economy. There are very few head offices in our country as compared to any other country in the world. Alberta relative to the rest of Canada has a very few head offices. Investment in research, particularly at a postsecondary education level, does not come from corporations, by and large, in Canada and specifically not in Alberta. So there is only one place for that investment to come from, and that's from the public purse. That's why we must as a government and as a people make an investment in postsecondary and education as a whole.

Now, this specific piece of legislation says that we are going to encourage youngsters to stay in school, and previous speakers from both sides of the House have very clearly made the economic argument about how important it is for youngsters to stay in school. Members opposite and members on the same side of the House have quoted statistics that have clearly indicated that with every year of school achieved, the increase in income rises exponentially. It's incredible to see statistics that tell us that every year in school will raise the income opportunity of an individual by something in the order of 8 percent. What better investment can be made?

Now, we know that staying in school, particularly for some families and some individuals, is difficult. As was the case made by members on the other side of the aisle, economic opportunity and economic advantage has some statistical evidence to do with whether or not youngsters will stay in school. The best indicator of whether or not a child will go to university or will graduate from university is not the amount of money that's available in terms of student loans or the tuition that's required; the best indicator of whether or not a child will go to university is whether or not their parents have gone to university. That's the kind of world we live in. We're a mentoring society.

This legislation, then, says that we as a society place value, economic and human value, on the notion that our young people should stay in school and be prepared for a life based on a knowledge-based economy. We also see in this the notion that not everyone is going to go or should necessarily go to university. Our society needs people that bring a diverse host of talents to the table, so we should not, in my opinion, feel that those who don't go to university are somehow failing either themselves or their family. There are all kinds of education opportunities that don't require university but do require application, and that's what this bill is all about. It's to say: look; if you find yourself in a difficult situation either in your economic circumstance or in your home life and the circumstance that you find yourself in is perhaps knocking around without the parental support that many children are able to take for granted, then the benefit of staying in school, no matter how it's achieved and no matter what struggle a youngster has to make to achieve it, is going to pay dividends in the long run. We all know how difficult it is for someone 16 or 17 years of age to understand and see beyond the horizon that, gosh, it's a worthwhile investment to stay in school, to complete it, to complete that grade, especially when their friends or contemporaries are perhaps no longer in school or pursuing other interests and the peer pressure is very strong to leave, or perhaps the parental guidance is not there and there isn't a mentor and there isn't someone to say: stay in school; it's worth it.

Friends opposite are indicating that they have experienced that very thing in their homes with their children, trying to keep their children in school. Haven't we all? What parent has not had their child come home and say: "I've had it. I want to quit. I want to move on"? But those children who benefit from the mentoring and the guidance of parents or loved ones that will see them through will benefit tremendously down the road. The question is: how do we reach the people? As was indicated by others who have spoken to this very important bill, how do we reach them to ensure that they understand the importance of graduation and of pursuing their educational foundation?

So this bill has as its core at least two distinct and separate and worthwhile objectives. The first is the human objective of the potential to realize the best that each of us as human beings can bring to the table, to realize our full potential, and there may be many young people who will need our collective help to achieve it. Then the other dimension is the economic benefit that we as a society gain from having a high mean, average, level of education. As others have said, there is a direct relation between achievement, economic and social, and education.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a pleasure to rise today to support Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the hon. Member for Little Bow. As we all know, the purpose of Bill 203 is to increase the mandatory school attendance age from 16 to 17 years old.

I would like to stress to the Assembly that I firmly believe that Bill 203 is a step – and I encourage this Assembly to view Bill 203 merely as a step – a step towards a bright and successful future for our children. There are other steps that will also need to be taken before we can succeed, but a journey of a thousand miles always begins with a single step, and maybe this is it. The point, as I see it, is to ensure that Alberta's children are provided with the necessary options and opportunities and the desire and ambition to succeed in life. Bill 203 is about the success of Albertans, their children and grandchildren and, therefore, the very success of this province.

Mr. Speaker, students leave school early for numerous reasons: the perception that education is irrelevant or for other mental, physical, or social reasons. More often than not the student that leaves school early is dealing with one or more of the many problems that adolescents face these days. The issues that Alberta students face are real problems, and they deserve to be taken seriously, but allowing our children to leave school, to leave the process that will supply them with the skills and knowledge to be successful in life is not the answer. By allowing students to leave school early, we are telling our children that it is acceptable to quit, acceptable to run away from their problems rather than tough it out and solve them. We should be teaching our young people how to cope with their difficulties and excel in spite of them and to learn that success in life depends on perseverance and facing up to the issues. After all, nothing comes without effort. You do not get large trophies for a nickel's worth of effort, and we want our kids to win large trophies in whatever endeavour in life they choose.

The commitment to children is clearly evident in this province. For instance, Alberta's Promise is directed at creating an environment that will allow children, youth, and students to succeed. The commitment that has been made includes concern for the health and safety of Alberta's children and youth at home and in the community. Our commitment also includes the promise that every child receives an education and has the support, care, and guidance from at least one caring adult as well as opening doors so that they can make a difference and serve others. Mr. Speaker, this overall commitment is expressed partly through our education system.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 203 like other policies is directed towards the success of our children and students in this province. It is our responsibility to help in developing that resource to its fullest potential. One of the government's highest priorities, in fact, is to secure a bright and successful future for all children and youth. I firmly believe that. Successes can be viewed in many different ways. I am certain that if you were to ask each and every member of this Assembly what success means to them, you would not get the same answer twice, but I am willing to guarantee that more often than not the root of any one person's definition of success is grounded in self-development, self-improvement, knowledge and education, and continuing that throughout life.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, I'd like to share with the Assembly a passage I once read: that man is a success who thinks his own thoughts, who sets his own course, who lives by his own standards and creates his own destiny. Of course, that applies to both men and women. I firmly believe what I just read, Mr. Speaker. However, I also firmly believe that society, government, and, most importantly, family play a large role in preparing children, youth, and students for the roads that they will travel in their lives. It is the responsibility of mentors, teachers, and family to prepare today's youth for what lies ahead, guiding them in making good life choices and decisions. By doing this, we will ensure that they can and will succeed on their own and be their own person, thinking their own thoughts and creating their own destinies.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's learning system is outstanding. Our teachers are caring and kind. Our students have excelled at national and international levels. Our curriculum is one of a kind and improving every day. Our education system should not be taken for granted. We have a responsibility to ensure that students don't lightly refuse the opportunities and the options that we are able to provide for them and which so many in the world do not have.

Mr. Speaker, in 1981 only 60 percent of all 19 year olds in Alberta completed high school, which compared to 65 percent of all 19 year olds across Canada. We were quite a bit lower than across Canada. Five years later, in 1986, Alberta's high school completion rate for 19 year olds had risen to 64 percent. Canada's average for the same age group was 68 percent. Ten years later, in 1996, 68 percent of Albertans aged 19 years had completed high school, but Canada's average was 72 percent for the same age group, and it's still the same degree higher.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is the financial envy of the country. Our balanced budget and debt-free future is something I'm sure we are all very proud of. It is time to strive for excellence in all other areas as well. I commend Alberta Learning's 2002 to 2005 business plan, which has set a target for improving high school completion by 19 year olds from 72 percent to 75 percent. I would also like to recognize the efforts they have made in providing opportunities for mature students who may have left school before they had obtained a diploma or want to upgrade their classes or enter a postsecondary institution. Whatever the reason I commend the work that they have done to ensure that all Albertans have access to the education they deserve.

Times are changing. The technology advancements that have occurred in the past 20 years are truly amazing. These advancements have also drastically changed the world in which we live. Thirty years ago things were a lot simpler. Your father taught you how to farm, just as his father had taught him. You could fix your own car from what you had learned in shop class or just from messing around at home.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the success of any person is dependent on their knowledge, and when it comes to knowledge, the more the better without limit. Alberta's market is competitive on a global scale, but if this province is going to succeed, Albertans have to succeed in the new world. A high school education will give today's youth the option to continue their studies at a postsecondary institution. They may not decide to follow that path immediately after graduation, but at least we should have that option available to them.

To be competitive in the global marketplace, the products that Alberta produces, what we manufacture here, need to be of the highest quality. Those high-quality products, the goods and services, come from research and passing that information on to producers who will ultimately manufacture it. Whether it's a mechanic, a farmer, a nurse, a doctor, an engineer, or any other trade or occupation, the market is continuously changing, and we must stay competitive and have lifelong learning if we're going to change with it.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 ensures that Alberta's youth will have the option to stay competitive. The statistics show that the longer a student stays in school, the more likely they are to complete high school. Let Bill 203 be the first step, the first of many necessary steps in providing the opportunity of success for all Alberta students. I call on members of the Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's indeed an interesting discussion we've had today on Bill 203, and I certainly understand and applaud the hon. Member for Little Bow's initiative in bringing this bill forward. However, I can't support it because I think it takes a very simplistic view of what might be wrong with the education system.

I think the question we need to ask ourselves when we're dealing with an issue like this is: why aren't the kids staying in school? I guess maybe I'm from the old school. I think you can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink. I really don't know what will be accomplished by legislating someone who doesn't want to be in school, who shows very little interest, who contributes nothing to the classroom or to his own education. I fail to see how passing legislation that requires them to be there moves the education system along our lofty goals. I think we have to look at it from the point of view of: why would someone who is 17 not want to be in school? Either it is because he's got more serious troubles in his life than we possibly know or the school program isn't teaching him something that attracts his interest or provides him with any type of challenge.

5:00

Mr. Lund: How about her?

Mr. Snelgrove: Or her. You bet.

So I think we have to look at what we are doing with our high school education now that forces some of the kids to make a choice at that stage of life and say: there's nothing there for me; it's better out there. I think it brings around the whole discussion about the development of career training and of trades and stuff taught in co-operation or in conjunction with high school curriculum. Maybe we have to rethink the thought that a successful high school graduate has five or six of the 30 subjects or whatever Alberta Learning has at this point. It was five 30 subjects when I graduated, but that's a little while ago.

I think that for a high school graduate now, if he were to have his second year of mechanics or his second year of electrical with a base knowledge of fundamental learning in math and the other appropriate sciences, maybe from the point of view of some students that's more appropriate, and I would think it is. I know many of the people that started school with me that left early and entered the trades, particularly at that time mechanics, or people that may have left and joined the oil patch. Right now many of these are extremely successful people with very good, solid families and actually have become pillars of their community without the grade 12 diploma.

So I have to really wonder about legislating someone to stay in school longer without looking at the root cause of why they're not wanting to stay there. I don't disagree with any of the hon. members who have said how critical an education is, and I don't think that is connected to a bill legislating people to stay in school longer. If, in fact, it were the case and it were better, why wouldn't we have it legislated right till 18? You know, is grade 10 that much better off than grade 9? I don't know. I mean, if education is something that you can legislate people to attend and do well in or at least learn something, then why are we quitting one grade higher and not two? Pretty well all the kids in my children's grades are going to be at least 18 or 19 before they complete grade 12, so I'm not sure why we would say: well, let's just go one more year.

Mr. VanderBurg: Because I was married when I was 18. That's why.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, we do make mistakes, George, that we have to live with.

I think there are other incentives you can throw at the system. With a child who's not attending school, I don't believe the family should be eligible for family allowance. I don't think he should be eligible for the tax deduction. I think that if you're not in school, then you should be working. I think that that in itself is more of a way for the family to stay in touch with a child or at least recognize, you know, that we do pay in this world for successes and not attendance. I mean, if you want to work on them, let's work on the low-income assistance withdrawal or the loss of your dependent tax deduction or through some form where there's a direct relationship to the dollars involved instead of simply stating: well, we're going to make him stay in school. He can be a little troublemaker for another year and cost the taxpayers another $4,000 or $5,000, but we'll feel better because he made 17 before he dropped out. I just don't think that's what we need to do.

I think we need to relook at what schools provide students. I think we need to get current. I mean, they say now that you may trade your occupation two or three times in a lifetime, so coming out of school may prepare you for what university skills are now, but is that preparing our next generation for what's needed next? I don't know. I think that the thing it tells us is that some kids aren't getting what they need in school, and I don't think legislating them to stay there does one bit of good.

With that compelling argument in front of you now, Mr. Speaker, I would take this opportunity to ask the question of the House as to whether I've convinced all the clear thinkers or not.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow to close debate.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that everyone wants to vote on the matter. I just want to take a few minutes to thank each and every one of you who contributed to the debate.

I have, maybe, one point that I'd like to bring to everyone's attention. With the exception of the Member for Wainwright, most all of us that are currently here today probably were considered pretty fortunate if we got through grade 12 and took some sort of postsecondary. The youngest of the MLAs here is also a university graduate and understands the importance, as all of us do, of education. But when thinking about this bill, I thought back to 1969.

Mr. Norris: That was a good year.

Mr. McFarland: Yeah, it was. And you liked the roadrunner and lots of other things. That would be the Minister of Economic Development.

Anyway, back in 1969 Dr. Christiaan Barnard was experimenting with putting a heart into a monkey, and it wasn't too long after that that we put a man on the moon. All through these years the legal age to leave school, Mr. Speaker, never changed at all. We're now in the 21st century. They say that education and knowledge is doubling every 17 to 36 months, depending on who you talk to. I think it is of utmost importance for any student anywhere, regardless of cultural, religious, societal, economic, financial considerations, to realize that it is so important to be in the 21st century, to take the opportunity to avail yourself of as much education as possible, and that instead of looking at 16 or 17 as the year that you quit learning more, you look at your lifetime as being a total learning experience.

Thanks to everyone for their participation in the debate, and I would call the question. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a second time]

Insurance (Accident Insurance Benefits) Amendment Act, 2003

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce Bill 204, the Insurance (Accident Insurance Benefits) Amendment Act, 2003, to the Assembly this afternoon. There has been over the last while quite a bit of debate over the workings of the insurance industry as well as litigation surrounding insurance claims. It is my hope that this bill can once and for all protect the granting of section B benefits from the often contentious battles that insurance companies and injury lawyers get into over benefits that a client ought to receive.

Mr. Speaker, before I get into the nuts and bolts of my remarks, I'd like to outline my points briefly. First, I'll explain Bill 204 and what it would do to the Insurance Act as well as the effect it would have on the ground. Second, I'll make the claim that Bill 204, most importantly, puts claimants back at the centre of insurance disputes. It says clearly that claimants who pay for the insurance matter most, not their lawyers and not their insurance companies. Finally, I'll make a few remarks about the importance of independent medical examinations. I'll argue forcefully that it's time we made sure that the insurance world treats claimants fairly instead of as pawns to be moved about a chessboard by injury lawyers and insurance companies.

On my first point, the purpose of Bill 204 is to amend the Insurance Act to increase the limit on section B medical benefits delivered to those who have been in an automobile accident to $25,000 over four years from the current level of $10,000 over two years. Bill 204 also includes provisions for a dispute arbitration mechanism between insurance companies and claimants receiving section B medical benefits. Mr. Speaker, section B benefits are medical benefits that must be delivered by insurance companies to any person who has been in an automobile accident. It does not matter if the person is responsible for the accident; these benefits must be delivered. Currently the Insurance Act requires insurance companies to pay up to $10,000 in medical costs and $500 in chiropractic costs over a two-year period to any person who accesses his or her section B benefits. Only the Yukon, which requires insurance companies to pay $10,000 and zero in chiropractic services, ranks lower than Alberta in delivering these medical benefits.

An Hon. Member: How can that be?

Rev. Abbott: I know. It's a shame.

Five provinces and territories – Newfoundland, Nunavut, Northwest Territories, Nova Scotia, and PEI – require insurance companies to pay up to $25,000 in medical costs over a four-year period. All other jurisdictions are higher, ranging from $50,000 over four years to unlimited benefits over an unlimited time period. The provinces with the higher limits are all running no-fault insurance systems or systems that are closer to no-fault, whereas Alberta is, of course, closer to the tort system, Mr. Speaker.

Given that Alberta's system retains elements of a tort system for settling insurance disputes, it's time that Alberta joined at least the minimum set of provinces and introduced section B benefits like those asked for in Bill 204. This is only fair, Mr. Speaker, and it leads to my second point.

Bill 204 seeks to start a process that would put consumers at the centre of the insurance industry once again. Mr. Speaker, this bill speaks to the nature of a contract. From the point of view of an insurance consumer you are buying insurance to make sure that if you are injured, you are taken care of medically, and if you cause an injury to another person, the company will pay for it. What sort of message does it send for an insurance company to not pay for medical expenses, especially considering that section B benefits are mandatory and must be bought by consumers? Now, this is not to suggest that insurance companies should be left wide open to anybody who can fake an injury. It is, however, to suggest that when a legitimate claim for medical expenses is presented, insurance companies should be there for their consumers to provide them with the adequate services needed to have their medical problems solved. We do not want this to fall back onto the taxpayers of Alberta or onto the individual clients having to pay out of pocket once they have purchased insurance to do that for them. This was the logic behind raising section B rates from $5,000 to $10,000 only five years ago, and it's also the logic behind this bill today.

Now, Mr. Speaker, an objection that may be raised here is that the average section B payout is something like $3,700. Given this, members might be tempted to ask why we should be raising section B benefits to $25,000. Well, I'll respond by saying that the $3,700 is an average, and we all know what can happen with averages: most people end up low while others end up high, and taken together, we get that average.

Well, to take an extreme example, when I got in an automobile accident, I went to a couple of physiotherapy sessions. I soon figured out that I had no need to be there, and I stopped going. I then sent in a very, very small section B claim to my insurance company – I think it was about $80, Mr. Speaker – and I was done with the process. On the other hand, someone could get into an accident, really crank their neck or break some limbs or ligaments and have to send in a massive claim, well over the $10,000 limit. So, yes, the average claim does come out to something like $3,700 in those cases, but that disregards the massive claims of some consumers like the example I just suggested. So we see that this raise is designed primarily for those people who are really injured and cannot pay.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me to my third point. Regarding independent medical examiners, it is this section of Bill 204 that I believe really puts consumers back at the heart of insurance concerns. As it stands currently, any insurance company wishing to stop paying medical benefits to claimants can send claimants to a doctor of the company's choice . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, but under Standing Order 19(1)(c) I must now put the question on the following motion for consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech.

head: Consideration of Her Honour

head: the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Jacobs moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 19: Ms Haley]

Constitutional Reform

502. Mrs. Jablonski moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to investigate and implement steps to strengthen Alberta's position within Confederation.

[Debate adjourned March 3: Mr. Lord speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we foolishly make decisions in anger, we usually end up jumping from the frying pan into the fire, so it's very important to calmly look into a mirror first to see if there is anything more that we should or could be doing in order to strengthen Alberta's position within Confederation. Otherwise, we might not find ourselves occupying the high moral ground that we thought we were and which will be needed to win our case. Rather, we might end up being portrayed as a bunch of greedy, ill-informed whiners complaining all the way to the bank, which would only make everyone even angrier. The facts are plain: Alberta on average is doing exceptionally well right now compared to the rest of the world despite all our complaints about Ottawa, so much so that one might want to question what is reality and what is merely perception. Why are things going so well for us if everything is so bad?

It's also abundantly clear that Quebec, which many people point to as a province whose strategy we should be emulating, is not doing so well on average at all, largely a result of investor uncertainty caused, in my mind, largely by the constant raising of the extortionist threat of separation. I know as a former stockbroker that that has not only led to what is probably the largest drain of investment capital in Canadian history and, further, stifled untold billions more from being invested there in the first place, but it has also led to the largest brain drain of human talent in Canadian history out of that province as well. Whatever little bit of extra federal welfare they get in return, in my mind, comes at a very high price and is a drop in the bucket of what they would now need to turn things around. I suggest that we learn from their mistakes and recognize their colossal blunder for what it is and not emulate it at all just because it gets them a little more welfare than what we get. It's cutting off your nose to spite your face in my view and not something a proud people do.

Mr. Speaker, a nation's assets are not measured in dollars and cents alone, and wealth transfers, in fact, are not measured in dollars and cents alone either. The fact is that a well-educated, hardworking population is a nation's greatest asset. So when we look at how many of Canada's best and brightest people are moving to Alberta, you have to realize that when we look beyond dollars and cents to this transfer of people, we are witnessing one of the largest wealth transfers in Canadian history into Alberta. At the same time, we have seen one of the largest wealth transfers in Canadian history out of Quebec.

How big is this transfer? Well, I estimate that if you add up the contributions to Alberta's GDP of just the people who have moved to Alberta in the last 20 years, over their 30-year career average it might be as much as $350 billion. That's $350 billion of new wealth Alberta wouldn't likely have otherwise. Think of the annual taxes we are now collecting as a result of all these new people moving here because of uncertainty, bad government, and lack of opportunity elsewhere. This is only in estimated dollars and cents. Think of all the other important contributions that these new Albertans will make to Alberta as well in coming years. Raising the separatist threat in an extortionary manner, Mr. Speaker, in my mind, is one of the very few things that might actually derail the Alberta economy, and I am very concerned that we do not follow any false prophets and go down that garden path.

So what should we do to improve Alberta's position within Confederation? Well, there are a lot of things I'd like to get into, but I am out of time today with only four minutes. I do like the idea of tackling this problem of improving Alberta's position within Confederation. In fact, I envision Alberta maybe even helping to save Canada by continuing to demonstrate the benefits of capitalism. So I thank the Member for Red Deer-North for having brought up an opportunity to begin discussions on this very important issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Someone has called the question. It's unnecessary to do that, but apparently they felt compelled to do so.

We permit at the end of the allotted time – the hon. member spoke to within about two seconds of it – the mover, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, to close debate.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In closing debate on Motion 502, urging the government "to investigate and implement steps to strengthen Alberta's position within Confederation," I would like to address the importance of this motion.

Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents of Red Deer-North have day-to-day concerns about raising their families, paying their utility bills, the cost of gas at the pumps, and getting good health care. The majority of my constituents in Red Deer-North are very loyal Canadians, and most don't really care about strengthening Alberta's position within Confederation. Most don't care what level of government looks after health care or education as long as they have employment, good health care, and good educational opportunities. Many of my constituents won't care about strengthening Alberta's position in Confederation until the economy and their jobs are affected. When the federal government in central Canada imposes legislation that seriously affects the economy of Alberta and jobs are lost, companies go bankrupt, and families are destroyed, then Albertans will demand to know what the provincial government of Alberta did to protect their rights.

In the past year Albertans have opposed Ottawa on several key constitutional issues. The most prominent of these is our government's disagreement over the Kyoto protocol. Several other issues that Albertans have expressed concern over are the Canadian Wheat Board's continued monopoly, the federal gun registry, and the attempts of the federal government to attach conditions to further health care funding. These issues are further complicated by the fact that Alberta is currently paying $9 billion per year more into federal equalization and transfer programs than the province receives in return from these programs.

Generally, there are five prominent recommendations for change that would strengthen Alberta's position within Canada. These five ideas include an Alberta pension plan, an Alberta provincial income tax collection agency, an Alberta police force, the resumption of provincial responsibility for health care, and forcing Senate reform back on the national agenda. Motion 502 does not necessarily endorse these suggestions but asks the government to research and investigate these possibilities as well as other means through which the position of this province in Confederation can be strengthened. These are all constitutionally valid ways through which Alberta can protect itself against federal encroachment.

Alberta would not be the first province to implement some of these recommendations. Quebec is already way ahead of Alberta in strengthening their position in Confederation. Alberta has, however, always been a leader in developing policies and strategies that continue to build on our success and strength while identifying common areas for interprovincial co-operation and provincial/federal co-operation within Confederation. Alberta has a well-deserved reputation for honestly facing problems, developing workable solutions that meet the needs of all parties concerned, and above all defending the interests of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said before, to those Albertans who are talking about separation, I challenge them to work with us to build a strong Alberta inside the Canada that our Fathers of Confederation wanted it to be. For the sake of those in the federal government and Alberta's opposition parties that find it difficult to understand the intent of this motion, it is not a motion about separating. It is a motion that requests action to strengthen this great province and thereby strengthen this great country of Canada. By having stronger voices, we have a stronger nation – stronger provinces, a stronger nation – for to do nothing and to accept the status quo is to weaken Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all members to support Motion 502 so that Albertans will always be assured that federal government policies will only affect their jobs and their economy in a positive way.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 502 carried]

Incentives for First-time Home Buyers

503. Mr. Shariff moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to establish a financial incentive program to encourage first-time home ownership.

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I've great pleasure in rising today to sponsor debate on Motion 503. Over the past 10 years the province of Alberta has experienced a tremendous expansion in growth. Due to the hard work of all citizens of Alberta we have created an environment that is the envy of the rest of Canada. This expansion, however, has come at a cost to Alberta, a cost in terms of unaffordable housing and accommodation. The purpose of introducing Motion 503 for debate in this Legislative Assembly is to urge the government to establish a financial incentive program to aid first-time home buyers. These are potential home buyers who through the regular channels of borrowing might not otherwise be able to afford reasonable and adequate accommodation.

Mr. Speaker, with our phenomenal population growth the province of Alberta has also experienced a dramatic rise in the value of real estate. It is a simple example of supply and demand. For example, the average price of a home in Calgary and Edmonton is over $200,000. For those Albertans who are desperately attempting to save towards that first home purchase, the timing and environment could not be any worse. Interest rates are at an historical low, unemployment levels have maintained their low levels, and the Alberta economy is continuing to lead the country in growth, yet many working families do not have the means to be able to afford purchasing reasonable housing. Most families today are two-income households struggling to pay a high rent and bills for day-to-day living. Most are unable to even consider putting money aside for a down payment. Those who are able to save a little find themselves unable to qualify for a mortgage because of high debt ratio.

Mr. Speaker, as I look around the country, there are many models of programs encouraging home ownership. For example, the federal government through the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation offers what they call a home buyer's plan, which allows first-time home buyers to use up to $20,000 of money in the RRSP program towards a down payment for the purchase of a home. This program is great for those who have the resources to put aside money for retirement and invest those savings into home ownership.

However, there are many young Albertans that are struggling to meet the heavy debt load they carry after graduation. According to Alberta Learning, as of March 31, 2002, the average debt load for a university undergraduate today is $18,871. For a graduate student that figure rises to $28,824. In my office I have seen young couples who have $60,000 to $70,000 of student finance debt. Many of us who have children currently in postsecondary programs know that the cost of education has risen dramatically. Many parents who previously were able to help fund some of their children's education costs are now unable to do so. Therefore, young people are being burdened more and more with carrying higher and higher education debt loads.

Mr. Speaker, the point here is that attempting to secure that first job to pay off these burdensome debts makes it financially impossible for many young people to put enough money away for a house purchase. As well, with the pressures of contributing to an individual pension fund, knowing that the Canada pension plan as it currently stands will not be around for any length of time, with paying down student loans, with the increasing cost of living in many urban centres where the jobs are located, and with real estate prices in those centres rising beyond the budget of many, it is less likely that many young adults will be able to afford the purchase of a first home.

Some of you may recall that in 1976 the Alberta government, through an entity known as the Alberta Home Mortgage Corporation, offered the starter home ownership program. This program was offered to assist low- to middle-income families purchase their first homes. This program lasted until 1984, when it was disbanded. One of the problems with this program, Mr. Speaker, was that it was structured inefficiently and created a burgeoning bureaucracy rather than helping those it was intended to aid.

A proposal that includes tax credit incentives for first-time home buyers has been an effective program in other Canadian jurisdictions as well as in the United States. The stimulation of home ownership through the mortgage interest deduction and capital gains exemption is sound economic policy. The economic stimulus of tax benefits is multiplied by the equity growth created through home appreciation. Various provincial jurisdictions offer programs that aid their constituents with the purchase of a home through tax incentives and benefits.

The Ontario government offers the Ontario home ownership savings plan, which provides a refundable tax credit to help lower income individuals and couples save towards the purchase of a first home. Persons with a net income of less than $40,000 and couples with a combined net income of less than $80,000 can benefit from this program. When an individual or couple files an annual federal income tax return, a claim for an Ontario home ownership savings program tax credit of up to $500 per person or $1,000 per couple may be made. This tax credit is based on net income for the year and the amount deposited into the plan during that year.

Mr. Speaker, British Columbia offers a property transfer tax exemption for first-time home buyers. The property transfer tax credit is calculated at a rate of 1 percent on the first $200,000 of the fair market value and 2 percent on any value over $200,000. For example, in a $250,000 house in Victoria a first-time home buyer would have a property transfer tax exemption of $3,000.

The previous two examples given from British Columbia and Ontario demonstrate those governments' commitment to providing their citizens with an incentive for home ownership. With the rising costs facing many of our younger Albertans, it is vital that we help create an environment that promotes home ownership. Motion 503 speaks to that goal, and I urge my colleagues to support this motion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to see that the backbench likes to be a tax-and-spend kind of organization. They're sounding very Liberal, which is not the first time today that we heard private members who support this government sounding very Liberal. I have to say: that pleases me to no end.

The one program that the member forgot to talk about is the one that was in the mid-60s that was also available – and I believe that would have been with the Social Credit government – where homeowners could receive a grant. Of course, houses were a lot less then, and I think the average grant was about $500.

Mr. McClelland: Five hundred dollars. You could buy a house. I was there.

Ms Carlson: Five hundred dollars. You see? There's another tax-and-spend member that would like to participate in debate and tell us how this government can help people at the ground level, which we've been saying for a long time. I tell you: this is shaping up to be a pretty fun week. I can hardly wait to see what else they talk about. We may see them actually enter into debate on substantive bills, and wouldn't that be a change, Mr. Speaker?

Anyway, I have to say that I'm completely in support of what this member has to say. Now I know that nobody will vote for it – and I'm sorry for that – because we can see the moaning and groaning. You guys can just pretend to be tightfisted with your money in helping out people. Just for once close your eyes and tax and spend away openly instead of behind closed doors and by regulations, which is how it usually happens.

I urge everyone in this Assembly to support this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion 503 calls on the government to establish a financial incentive program that aids first-time home buyers in the purchase of their first home. The Member for Calgary-McCall has introduced this motion, and I feel that we should all support it because it is not something that will tax others but will give an incentive for first-time home buyers to enable them to get into the market of being homeowners.

Alberta has experienced phenomenal growth over the past decade. With this growth, the province has also experienced a dramatic rise in real estate values, with prices of homes escalating each year. While prosperity and economic growth is good for the overall health of the province, it has created a problem for first-time home buyers trying to find an affordable residence. I'd like to just draw on my experience. Just prior to being elected to the Legislature, I did sell residential real estate, and I can tell you that the greatest desire among young couples, young people is to be able to purchase their own home so that they can stop putting money into rent that is not going to build equity for them. But many of them are in circumstances where they have to pay rent, and at the same time there isn't additional help from us, who could give it without it being a drain on other parts of our economy and our resources. They just could do that in order to establish themselves and in order to enhance the economic growth of this province.

This motion will lay the groundwork for strengthening community development across the province. It has been shown that home ownership increases the wealth and the stability of the family unit, thereby decreasing dependence on government programs such as welfare, pension plans, and various other social services.

The Alberta government has long been a proponent of lowering personal income taxes. That we have talked about, and that we have done. This motion sets in place the groundwork for using interest payments paid against a mortgage as a tax credit for the homeowner. As the mover of the motion has indicated, there are certain programs, one in Ontario and one in British Columbia, that really do assist first-time home buyers, and I think this is an excellent opportunity for us to join that.

Motion 503 complements the mandate of the government to make Alberta the lowest tax province in the country. The rising costs of home ownership in the province exclude many potential home buyers immediately from buying a home, and then they find themselves, I know, in circumstances where they are paying out rent so they can't put aside the money or can't get a tax credit in order to save money to buy their first home. It's a very difficult treadmill, perhaps I'd call it, to be on.

Albertans as well as all Canadians interested in purchasing their first home benefit under the provisions of CMHC, a program that is nationwide albeit a program that does require $2,000-plus in order to purchase the insurance on it. Again, that's a bit of a setback whereas the proposal that is here in Motion 503 suggests perhaps a tax incentive or another way that wouldn't require more money up-front. By adding another financial incentive to the CMHC first-time home buyer program such as tax credits against interest paid on a home mortgage, Albertans could see the added economic and social benefits to purchasing their first home.

There should be minimal negative impact to any segment of the population with the proposed motion, and that's what is so I'll say nice about this motion, that it doesn't rob Peter to benefit Paul. In that sense, it would have minimal impact. In fact, I think it would be one of those what I call enablers of the economy, particularly for the segment of first-time home buyers as is stated in the motion.

With the huge influx of in-migration to the province of Alberta rental properties are unable to keep pace with the burgeoning population. That's true, I know, in the capital city of Edmonton. It's certainly and absolutely true in my community of St. Albert and, I understand, in the city of Calgary, and I know of other parts of the province. Housing starts have been at a record pace. For example, Calgary's single-family starts are 25 percent higher than in 2001. But many lower income families are still unable to afford reasonable accommodation, particularly that kind of accommodation which means an investment, their own investment in their own property.

With the benefit of a financial incentive such as tax credits added to the CMHC program, Alberta could see an even larger personal investment in real estate, and I'd like to stress the word "investment" because this is indeed an investment not only for the family, but it is a strengthening for the province's economy as well. It's also an opportunity for individuals to feel that they are building their future as they build the province's future. With the economic boom over the past decade and the cost of living in many parts of Alberta having risen quite dramatically, particularly in the sector of real estate, residential housing, as I mentioned, Motion 503 could provide relief to many of those who are unable to afford housing in their current situation.

In closing, I would just like to comment on the fact, too, that in many, many instances when people look to invest, they look to invest in order for them to create some more security in their lives and more stability in their lives. That, I believe, is the strength of this particular motion. It speaks to the opportunity, the enabling by us in this Legislature to pass a motion to encourage us to put in a tax incentive that indeed is truly saving money in order to invest in family, life, and the future.

So I would encourage everybody in this Assembly to vote in support of Motion 503. It makes sense. It makes sense for the first-time home buyer, it makes sense for the economy, and I think it makes sense in responding to what families and young people want, and that is stability and investment in their lives. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join in this debate on Motion 503, sponsored by the Member for Calgary-McCall. A financial incentive program that aids first-time homeowners seems like a good idea, at least at first glance, but I think the reality is that people can successfully qualify for home ownership after moving through that home-buying process without direct intervention from this government. As we all know, Alberta's economy is very heated currently. It's driven up the cost of housing. Another government program could help more Albertans move out of rented units and into homes of their own, but I think there are some problems with Motion 503 that seem to go against the policies of this government and perhaps even work against some people wishing to buy a home.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the market should establish eligibility for home ownership and not a government program. I also wonder if any consideration has been given to the possibility of house prices increasing due to the increased demand for homes brought on by this Motion 503. The financial incentive created by this government would likely increase the price of homes. A dramatic increase in the number of customers surely would create more demand for homes, and following supply and demand we know that would lead to higher prices. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, Motion 503 could actually backfire and create an artificial additional upward pressure in Alberta's housing market. I don't believe this is appropriate.

I realize there are federal/provincial partnerships that provide housing for low-income and special-needs people. There's already some good work being done between the federal and provincial governments to help low-income and special-needs people afford homes. Mr. Speaker, I believe that there should be no extra funding to expand these programs, and Motion 503 goes a little bit further and may upset the market forces that drive real estate.

As the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall pointed out, establishing a financial incentive program for people looking to buy a home is not a new idea in Alberta. There have been several instances where the government of the day believed government intervention was necessary to provide opportunities for people to buy homes, Mr. Speaker, but none of these programs is operating anymore, and the reason is that real estate issues need to be settled in the real estate market. We've heard a great deal about the federal government's Mortgage and Housing Corporation financing and how the public program has assisted thousands of families. We must remember that real estate, though, is a private industry driven by competition. Banks, real estate agents, and most potential homeowners know that they must ask very important questions before they get too far into the home-buying process. The most important issue they must address is to ensure that they're able to handle the responsibility of the finances of owning a home.

I'd agree that there are many barriers that prevent families from buying a home. Mortgage payments are often more expensive than renting. Owners must also assume responsibility for maintenance and upgrading appliances or any renovations that may occur. Houses often appreciate slowly in value, and the benefits of home ownership only occur usually after several years, once a substantial amount of equity has been accumulated. My point is that the decision for buying a home should be left up to the individual, and a financial incentive provided by this government may encourage people to buy homes when they aren't prepared to qualify. There could then be a resulting increase in the number of personal bankruptcies and defaulted mortgages.

The Alberta government used to be involved in helping families buy affordable housing, but that was quite a while ago, and priorities have shifted substantially since the '70s and '80s. Right now Albertans are concerned about health care reform, rising expectations for education, and financing new capital projects. The funding needed for any proposed financial incentive must come from other key areas of this government. I can't justify taking funding away from other government goals when there is not a significant crisis in the housing market.

Mr. Speaker, I'd assume that the members in this Assembly are aware, as are all Albertans, that Albertans are experiencing a housing boom. That boom means that things are going well. I see no reason for the government to meddle in the affairs of the housing market. I haven't heard any public outcry in my area regarding this issue. There have been no indications that there's a housing shortage or lack of buyers that could be rectified by this kind of program. This Assembly should therefore focus on the allocation of public funds to areas that need improving.

The housing market may be concerned if Albertans weren't buying homes because the labour market was shaky, the economy was unstable, or perhaps interest rates were too high. Alberta's labour market is the best in the country. The economic activity is the envy of the rest of Canada, and the interest rates are relatively affordable. These are some of the conditions that have created a successful housing market in Alberta. A housing boom contributes substantially to the economic health of the middle class of the province. An accumulation of a substantial net worth through a lifetime of home ownership means retirees are less dependent on social security and retirement programs as a source of income in their retirement years. But neither of these actions justifies the need for another financial incentive program for potential home buyers. People should consider buying a home only when they've achieved reasonable employment and financial stability. I think the role of this government is to set up a framework that encourages economic growth, and that in turn raises the standard of living for all Albertans.

Motion 503, I think, artificially inflates the number of potential home buyers. The housing market continues to flourish in Alberta without direct intervention from this government. Potential homeowners can access affordable mortgages through the federal government and the private sector, and I think the situation should stay that way.

Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that government intervention, which may take resources away from other programs, is an appropriate way to go, and therefore I cannot support Motion 503. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to speak in support of Motion 503, the first-time home buyers program. I would like to take the opportunity to commend the MLA for Calgary-McCall for bringing this issue to the foreground for discussion and debate. It is a valuable motion, one that has many benefits not just for the home buyer but also for the entire community and, therefore, a motion that I support.

The purpose of Motion 503 is to introduce a financial incentive program to encourage and assist first-time home buyers in purchasing a home. Mr. Speaker, shelter is a basic need that should be accessible to citizens across the province. Furthermore, the dream of home ownership is a fundamental premise and goal that Albertans strive to achieve. However, the rising cost of home ownership in our province may now exclude many potential home buyers from purchasing their first home. The establishment of this incentive program attempts to offset the complications and difficulties of buying a home while compensating for the uncertainties in the housing sector in Alberta.

Housing conditions in our province have changed dramatically. Alberta has experienced incredible growth – incredible growth – over the last 10 years. Our province has seen an influx of individuals moving to Alberta not only from across the nation but from international destinations as well. There are more individuals moving here than to any other province in Canada. In fact, Alberta received a net gain of just under 120,000 people between 1996 and 2001.

An Hon. Member: How many?

Rev. Abbott: One hundred and twenty thousand. This increase was more than double Ontario's, the second place province.

Mr. Speaker, with this migration of people to Alberta our province is also experiencing a boom in the construction sector. Over the past six to seven years there has been a steady increase in the construction of housing. This boom, of course, is being fed by a heightened demand for housing. This demand is predicted to increase 61 percent between 1998 and 2028.

Mr. Speaker, with the demand for housing so high our province is currently experiencing a rise in real estate value. Over 2001 the cost percentage increase per home varied from 5 to 13 percent across the province. An average-priced home in Fort McMurray, for example, will cost Albertans just under $250,000. Calgarians can expect to pay over $200,000 for a modest home while it will cost Edmontonians just under $200,000 for their home. Now, I acknowledge that housing costs in Alberta are reasonable when compared to other urban centres across the country, but the alarming fact is that the steady rate of increase in costs is not expected to level off anytime in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to shift my focus and spend some time highlighting the financial rewards that arise from home ownership. Buying a home is a major life decision that is a dream for many Alberta families. Purchasing a house is also the biggest financial investment that most people make in their lifetime. So buying right and having the ability to purchase is important to home buyers. Now, there are many financial benefits from home ownership. These range from the tax breaks that accrue from the increased value in your investment – in other words, there's no tax charged on the capital gains if you were to sell your home as long as you buy another one.

Home ownership is a first-rate investment, and it should be encouraged. The current rise in housing prices makes home ownership an attractive way to invest money. Real estate values have been steadily rising as the stock markets have been declining. If Albertans purchase a home today for $200,000 and housing prices rise 10 percent over the next year, then that house will have a new value of $220,000. The initial investment has built up $20,000 of tax-free home equity.

Now, buying a house can also stop inflation. Albertans purchasing a home today will freeze the rising costs of construction tomorrow. It also increases your savings. Mortgage payments help contribute to an individual's net worth. A portion of the money an individual pays goes toward building equity. It's not just all going out to rent, as the hon. Member for St. Albert mentioned.

Purchasing a home is a solid investment. Incentives and assistance should be made available to Albertans wanting to buy a home. Now, these programs could ease the difficulties, making the process less complicated and more affordable. Owning a home is considered a sign of success, and it does provide great emotional rewards for many homeowners. It allows the opportunity to improve an investment by upgrading the home. Encouraging and increasing home ownership will let Albertans obtain a return on the money they invest as well as money borrowed.

So, Mr. Speaker, I strongly support this initiative because of the possible financial rewards. Therefore, I encourage all of my colleagues, even my colleague from Vermillion-Lloydminster, to vote in favour of Motion 503 and a potential first-time home buyers program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening to participate in the debate in support of Motion 503, the first-time home buyer program. Indeed, this incentive program will not only affect possible first-time home buyers, but it will have a far-reaching implication for communities across the province. Granted, I acknowledge that there are already programs in place to assist those purchasing a home. However, with increasing housing costs across Alberta, this incentive program would provide another benefit to encourage first-time home buyers.

I would like to spend some time addressing the benefits that stem from home ownership. Owning a home can bring a personal satisfaction that comes from having roots and a sense of belonging in the community. Owning a home brings many benefits along with some new responsibilities. Fostering home ownership or providing incentives to purchase a home would aid in reinforcing community development. Motion 503 would provide the foundation for strengthening communities across our province. A homeowner has a feeling of belonging in the community as well as a sense of personal security. Owning a home provides a peaceful sense of assurance. Possessing and taking care of a home gives a family the feeling of roots, stability, Mr. Speaker, and security. With every flower bulb planted and every coat of paint on the wall, the home becomes more valuable and individual, and it is an investment.

Home ownership contributes to social harmony and family stability as well. Several studies suggest that home ownership is positively linked to the stability of the family, residential satisfaction, and neighbourhood security. Almost half of homeowners stay put for eight or more years. "How long?" you may ask. Eight or more years. By living in one place for an extended period of time, children are more likely to be raised in a stable environment. Advantages of this consistency include a constant educational experience, the ability to form long-term relationships, and the child's overall emotional security.

Owning a home brings great pride to Albertans. A home is more than just walls and a roof. It is a reflection of character. It is filled with memories and traditions that get built over time. Take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to think about the houses on your street or the neighbouring farm or acreage. These are more than just houses. They are a representation of the hard work and dedication that individuals put into them. They portray pride and honour.

The government needs to extend its commitment to citizens regarding affordable housing. The first-time home buyer program, Mr. Speaker, is a step in the right direction. The long-term benefit of home ownership will profit all communities across the province by instilling stability and security. Many lower income families are still unable to afford reasonable housing. With the assistance of tax incentives, taken with the existing federal programs, these individuals may be able to buy a home and receive personal investment in their real estate. Expanding home ownership to lower income families is seen as a way to contribute to community improvement as well as an individual's satisfaction. The first-time buyer program would allow home ownership to be more accessible to these individuals.

Motion 503, Mr. Speaker, could lead to an even larger personal investment in real estate in Alberta. Even when individuals rent, they pay a mortgage, their landlord's mortgage. It makes sense for individuals to contribute to their own mortgage instead of throwing money away in rent. However, individuals have to be able to overcome the initial hurdles in order to invest in a new home.

Alberta has been experiencing accelerated growth. While this prosperity and economic growth is favourable for the overall health of the province, it has a dramatic impact on the housing sector.

Mr. Speaker, any first-time home buyers program could provide relief to those who are unable to afford housing. This growth in home ownership would enhance community development and decrease the dependency of families. A home is a symbol of independence, both spiritual and physical. An Albertan's pride and joy is their home, and these provide the joy that underpins pride in our communities, our cities, and our province. In order to maintain a high level of home ownership in Alberta, sustaining housing affordability is crucial. The challenge for the government is to ensure that affordable, reasonable housing is within the reach of the citizens of this province.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 503 hopes to encourage homeowners with an incentive program for first-time buyers. This program would provide assistance, making it possible for Albertans to purchase a home who may have otherwise abandoned home ownership. With this incentive come many benefits not only for the individual homeowner but for the surrounding community as well.

I commend the MLA for Calgary-McCall for bringing this issue forward. I support this initiative, and I urge all colleagues to vote in favour of Motion 503 and a possible first-time home buyer program. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I wipe a sentimental tear from my eye and try and think about all the wonderful things that come with home ownership, I'll tell you that what can come with home ownership is a debt that you can't afford, taxes that you can't afford, a job that disappears, and a mortgage you can't afford. What a wonderful spot we'd be in if we've talked these wonderful, young, impressionable people into a home they can't afford. If you could go back in history and find one good thing that government does by helping people do things they shouldn't do, I'd be curious to know.

So we want to go down this path of going back into business, because, as the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan said, buying a house, borrowing money is a business. It's a business, as simple as that. It's wonderful to suggest that somehow some department of government could come up with a plan that would recognize the need, then, and pick the winners and losers again to decide who should get a new house and who shouldn't. Not a concern about: will they have a job five years down the road, will their job move to McMurray, and what'll they do with their house? Well, let's sell it. Then be a first home buyer in Fort McMurray again? No.

Now, we get these good ideas in government, and what we should do is carefully sit down and think about it. Who is the best to decide when you buy a house? Hopefully, if you're in a family situation, you may rent for a while. You'll prove you can save a little money, put it in the bank, let it build, determine what you can afford to do and determine what would happen if you do lose a job. So you build a little bit of history into your credit. After a while, when you have a little bit of money to put down and you've got a history of employment that a bank would accept, then you go in and borrow the money in a straight-up market situation with no government incentive or offer at all. That's how it should be. For us to suggest that somehow we could help these people out by giving them a tax break or giving them a little break on interest just gets us back down a road that we should never think of going down.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I would like just to encourage people to think very carefully about starting once again to get in business, pick winners and losers, spend taxpayers' money on helping people to buy a house. Quite honestly, it's a very noble idea, and I commend the hon. member who brought it in for having a wish. But a wish is all it is, and once upon a time shouldn't be in the bills in this House.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise tonight to speak in favour of Motion 503. I recognize that my hon. colleague opposite has brought up some very good points; however, I do think on balance that . . .

An Hon. Member: He's not opposite. He's on your side.

Mr. Lord: Yes. I realize that, but I do disagree with him on a few points here.

I do think that this motion, on balance, has more benefits than not. Mr. Speaker, the motion calls, really, for the government to establish a financial incentive program that will aid home buyers in the purchase of their first home, and of course we all can think back and remember what position we were in when we first bought our very first home. I don't know about everyone in the Assembly, but I can certainly say that in my case it was a very big purchase. In fact, I had to borrow money on my credit cards at a very high rate of interest in order to come up with the full down payment, and it was years of struggle to pay those high interest rates and to get that house. However, it turned into a great investment for me and helped me much later in life in a number of other ways, and I would not have had that advantage of the increase in real estate value if I had not been able to come up with the down payment. As a matter of fact, I used that technique several times to acquire houses and in fact made quite a bit of money from it that I wouldn't have made otherwise if I had not been able to buy a house with very little money down.

I wasn't sure when I first bought the house whether or not I would like being a homeowner. I was thinking, you know, that it would be hard. You have to mow the lawn and all sorts of things, but in fact it turned out that I enjoyed that. In fact, most people who buy their house and now are owners of the home instead of being renters in an apartment suddenly take a great interest in their property. In fact, you start doing the little things to fix the house up and make it nicer, and in aggregate, when a lot of people are doing this in a community, frankly, it adds a lot to the stability of every community. Every community, in fact, would benefit from having more home owners than just renters. Nothing against renters, but it's just that there is more incentive to take care of your property, fix it up, and so on. So it creates more stable communities.

There are just so many benefits of more stable communities that I don't think we even have time to get into them all tonight, Mr. Speaker. In terms of less policing, more stable communities result in everyone knowing everyone else, increase what they call social capital within a community, which is just as important as developing economic capital. Social capital refers to trust and relationships with your neighbours and with other people. Frankly, with strong social capital, economic capital is generated much faster because you don't have to worry so much about, you know, having to have lawyers and everything else because you trust people. So stable communities not only improve quality of life dramatically; they lead to less crime, less policing, greater growth of economic capital. There's just numerous, numerous benefits to encouraging home ownership.

Of course, in this day and age we're hearing a lot about struggling students at university with high loans and payments that they may take years and years to have to pay off. Well, it's very discouraging for those people to even think about trying to own a home in their 20s, and in fact many of them probably will not even be able to own a home in their 30s, and that's the age when many of them have young families and so on. So when you start thinking about the difficulties there for these people, clearly it would be beneficial to encourage particularly people with young families to be living in a home in stable communities. So those are just a few of the points that I could raise on that point, Mr. Speaker.

Now, the motion also sets in place groundwork for using interest payments paid and deducting mortgage interest against your taxes. Well, this is quite common, actually, in many parts of the world. It's my understanding that it's allowed in the United States, and if you look at the productivity and the economic growth and capital in the United States - in fact, it's been listed as one of the major factors in the United States, that people can deduct their mortgage interest payments from their taxes, which Canadians have never been able to enjoy. If it sets in place the groundwork to look at that, basically it would encourage people to invest in their homes, to save money in their homes and build up equity as opposed to just staying in rental apartments and never having that advantage.

So we'd be encouraging our populace, in fact, to start building equity, which is going to be very important as they get older and in their old age. We have RRSPs and whatnot, but really when you compare the savings rates of Canadians to many other people in the world, we as a nation do not save a lot of money, and there is a very big concern that we are not saving enough money in our nation for all of us to get by in our old age. So home ownership is for most people one of their greatest investments of their lifetime and the source of much of their equity which will be needed in their older age.

Mr. Speaker, of course, we've heard from many of my colleagues this evening about the rising costs of home ownership and how much trouble this is causing for homeowners in Alberta. In fact, I am pleased to be working with one of my colleagues on a secondary suite housing committee concept right now which is going to go out and consult with Albertans. We have looked at the idea of encouraging secondary suite development in new subdivisions and new houses specifically to help young people who are maybe buying a new house and can't quite afford the mortgage payments to consider taking in a tenant, perhaps in the basement in a rental suite, which would then help them with their mortgages, help them to afford this new house and create a supply of affordable housing at the same time. So if you have a situation like that, that would also create an incentive program to aid first-time home buyers and at the same time would create another important stock of affordable housing, which we desperately need in this province right now.

I do not see, Mr. Speaker, that there are any major negative impacts that the proposed motion would foster. I don't see any negative impacts at all really to the idea of encouraging people to buy houses. The more houses that people buy, the more houses that developers can sell, and in fact that creates jobs for carpenters, plumbers, electricians - you name it - right across the board. So a lot of economic development, job creation, and all those people pay taxes. In fact, they'd be paying taxes on income they would not have had had it not been for all this new supply of houses being sold to these young people through a program like this. It would be my guess, because I haven't done such a study, that if you added up all those extra taxes generated, it really begs the question of whether or not this would be a net negative or a net plus in fact to the taxpayer.

In fact, when you get into the multiplier effects of that additional money being generated in the economy and start going through all the multiplier effects and so on, my guess is it would be a huge economic generator in this province to make a small investment in helping people buy new houses that otherwise would not be buying those houses. So I suspect that far from being something we should fear about the government getting into the business of business again, I guess I would believe that it's more likely that we'd create tremendous economic benefits right across the province from doing this, and the net effect to the taxpayer would be, in fact, that the government would have lots more taxes and could maybe even look at lowering taxes as opposed to having to raise them.

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, this evening I talked about the influx of immigration to the province of Alberta and how all those people, of course, coming to Alberta is impacting housing. We would attract younger people to come to Alberta earlier in their careers. Never mind all the other wonderful impacts that has in terms of the talent they bring with them and the creativity and everything else; these people moving to Alberta earlier in their careers because they could afford a house in Alberta with a lower down payment as opposed to what it might cost them in other provinces where they aren't earning as much money and the down payment would be higher - well, when you add up the longer career of these people moving to Alberta, the taxes they would generate in Alberta instead of some other province, the GDP that they would be increasing as a result of their entire careers and their entire wages being paid in Alberta instead of some other province, I think the effects of that could be absolutely astronomical.

I did talk about $350 billion earlier as being a number that I had estimated the value of people moving to Alberta would contribute. [Mr. Lord's speaking time expired] Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has concluded.

Ombudsman Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise this evening to speak to Bill 21, the Ombudsman Amendment Act, 2003. Alberta has had an Ombudsman since 1967, and the Alberta office of the Ombudsman was the first of its kind in Canada. As many members know, the role of Alberta's Ombudsman is to act as a kind of watchdog over the workings of the government administration. He is completely independent of the government and the Legislative Assembly and has broad powers to investigate complaints about administrative actions, decisions, policies, and procedures. As an independent officer of the Legislature the Ombudsman makes sure that the administrative practices and services of public bodies are fair, reasonable, appropriate, and equitable.

In addition to his investigative powers, the Ombudsman can make recommendations about how to improve the way government works. He provides annual reports to the Legislative Assembly, and in certain circumstances he can also issue other reports if it is in the public interest to do so. These powers ensure that Albertans have yet another way to subject government departments and agencies to public scrutiny and review.

I'll now take a moment to go through some of the amendments included in Bill 21. First, you may notice, Mr. Speaker, that a number of the changes are purely housekeeping amendments. For instance, over the years some practical problems have arisen when three different acts dealing with professions each amended the same sections of the Ombudsman Act. Because those acts weren't proclaimed in the order that was expected, the amendments didn't work properly, and certain sections of the Ombudsman Act did not read the way they were intended to read. Bill 21 fixes those problems. Similarly, the bill clarifies some definitions and cleans up some of the drafting language. These housekeeping changes do not change the intent or meaning of the provisions of the act as they are now.

The bill also includes a technical amendment that deals with financing of the Ombudsman's operations. This amendment addresses a timing issue and allows a special warrant to be signed to provide funds to the Ombudsman's office for a fiscal year before that fiscal year actually begins. This is the current practice for government departments. Without this amendment the special warrant for the office of the Ombudsman can't be signed until the first day of the fiscal year, and this causes unnecessary administrative delays in funding.

Another amendment will clear up an oversight in the act so that the Ombudsman will be able to consult with the heads of agencies in the same way he can currently consult with government departments.

Finally, Bill 21 adds a provision to the act that clarifies that the Ombudsman when conducting an investigation under the act is not subject to the provisions of the Health Information Act. This will allow the Ombudsman to access all of the information he needs to do his job without restriction. It should be noted, though, that in no way does this mean that the Ombudsman can interfere in the health commissioner's role and duties as legislated in the Health Information Act.

Mr. Speaker, I'll now move on to the more substantive amendments included in Bill 21. The term "agency" has been amended by this bill. This amendment could ultimately result in the broadening of the Ombudsman's jurisdiction. Generally speaking, the Ombudsman investigates the administrative decisions, recommendations, actions, and omissions of governmental departments and agencies. Right now the definition of "agency" is limited to bodies listed by name in the act itself. Amending this definition will allow it to be updated so that the Ombudsman can be given jurisdiction over provincial agencies that perform responsibilities delegated to them by the government as those agencies are created. By allowing the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman to keep pace with the changing face of government, this amendment will ensure that the Ombudsman remains an effective watchdog of administrative fairness in government.

Bill 21 will also expand the Ombudsman's jurisdiction in another way. Under this amendment the Ombudsman will be able to review the concerns resolution processes put in place by regional health authorities, the Alberta Cancer Board, and the Alberta Mental Health Board. Once these concerns resolution processes are formally established, Albertans will be able to engage the services of the Ombudsman if they feel that the processes were not properly administered.

Mr. Speaker, when a complaint is brought forward, it is essential that the Ombudsman be able to review the matter thoroughly and without unnecessary limitation. This is the reason behind the next couple of amendments I'd like to discuss.

The first is a procedural amendment that allows the Ombudsman to treat a written complaint that he receives from an Albertan as consent to release that Albertan's information for the purposes of the Ombudsman's investigation. Basically, this amendment does away with the need for the Ombudsman to get two written documents from the complainant: first, the initial complaint and then a subsequent consent to release. This will save time and allow the Ombudsman to initiate his investigation as soon as he receives a complaint.

Another closely related amendment allows the Ombudsman to access all information relating to the complaint he is investigating. Right now some legislation restricts his ability to access information such that he can only obtain information that specifically contains the name of the complainant in it. With the amendments in Bill 21, however, the Ombudsman's ability to access information will not be fettered. The end result will be that the Ombudsman will have the legislative authority to acquire all the information he needs in order to fully investigate complaints.

The last amendment that I want to address, Mr. Speaker, is one that deals with the implementation of the Ombudsman's recommendations. The office of the Ombudsman is a complaint mechanism of last resort. This means that the Ombudsman cannot become involved until all formal and informal appeals have been completed by the individual who has a complaint. For instance, many Alberta government departments, boards, agencies, and commissions have internal appeal processes available to resolve complaints. If an individual has completed all available appeals and remains dissatisfied with either the fairness of the process or the outcome, the individual can then turn to the Ombudsman. Right now if the Ombudsman finds that a person was not treated fairly, he can recommend that the matter be reheard.

However, in some circumstances a department, tribunal, or agency is prevented by its own legislation from implementing the Ombudsman's recommendation even if it wants to. Bill 21 solves this problem by allowing a department, tribunal, or agency to accept the Ombudsman's recommendation and implement it. This means that they can reconsider or rehear a matter if they choose to do so. Given that the Ombudsman's review is really a test of whether a body has acted fairly and with due process, it is logical that upon a recommendation by the Ombudsman that body should have the ability to implement the recommendation if it chooses to do so.

Through the powers vested in him by the act, the Ombudsman is able to provide government bodies and agencies with an independent review of their administrative practices and procedures. This kind of scrutiny ultimately benefits all Albertans by building public confidence and trust in the workings of government. I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that these amendments to the Ombudsman Act will go a long way to help Albertans maintain confidence in the way their government is administered. I, therefore, urge all the members in this Assembly to support Bill 21.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to speak to Bill 21, the Ombudsman Amendment Act, 2003. We appreciate the briefing that we got on this bill, and it looks like we will be supporting it, but we do have some questions.

It updates the Ombudsman Act to include certain recommendations that have been continually advocated by the Ombudsman. Of course, that's good. It also includes more organizations, some professional organizations, which is also good, we think – but we've got a few questions – and then some authority to investigate the complaints with the RHAs. So, of course, some questions around that too.

I'd like to put the questions on the record at second reading so that, hopefully, they get addressed when we're in committee, which will give us a better framework for deciding whether we need to bring in any amendments.

A big question for us is how the Health Facilities Review Committee fits into all of what's talked about here with the RHAs. We need to know what the chain of events will be in terms of that committee. Will the Ombudsman be involved at all in matters that are sent to the committee? So if we could have that question answered.

Also, then, we get down to one of the later sections where they're deleting the idea that a complainant must provide written consent before information which is secret or confidential can be used by the Ombudsman. We understand that when a person files a complaint with the Ombudsman, it makes little sense to get a second authorization. It looks like that's going to be okay with us. But then when we go to the one where you make a recommendation after the investigation to have the appropriate authority rehear or reconsider the matter he was investigating, we don't understand exactly what that means. Could we get some definition on that? We need it clarified and some examples as to what giving the Ombudsman such powers will entail.

Just down a little further, in section 9, our concerns are that it gives the department, agency, or the organization the power to reconsider a matter but also gives them the power to "quash, confirm or vary that decision or recommendation" that the Ombudsman makes. Now, this concerns us quite a bit. It seems to make the section quite ineffective if the body is given the option to comply or not comply with the recommendation. So the justification for doing that would be, I think, our concern there.

Then when we talk about section 14, it adds a new section in the act which allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council to "make regulations designating boards, commissions, corporations, offices or other bodies as agencies" that will fall into this act. Now, I think this is our biggest concern here. As we see in other pieces of legislation, it shows that the government wants to move issues out of the Legislative Assembly and into the backdoor regulation process of government, which, of course, we complain loudly about every chance we get and hope that ultimately at some point in time someone will listen and make sure that that manner of dealing with issues stops.

Other than that, section 15, where the minister has the ability to make regulations regarding patient concerns resolution processes that the Cancer Board provides, gives the minister some power over approving the process. Our question there is: will this be used to bring a more universal approach to the general process?

So if we could get those questions answered, it looks like we'll be able to approve this when we get into committee. We might have one amendment coming out of it in terms of the regulations, but other than that, it looks good to us.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close debate.

Mr. Ducharme: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a second time]

Bill 16 Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate March 6: Mrs. McClellan]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm compelled to speak tonight on Bill 16, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, primarily because of the intervention last day by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. If you read the speech, you'll see that much of it is premised on what is not in the bill, and as someone who represents a significant number of leaseholders in the Highwood constituency, many of whom are third-, fourth-, even fifth- generation ranchers, who've been good stewards of the land, I feel that I need to straighten out the record a little bit.

First and foremost is that Bill 16 does not deal with the issue of compensation, as to whether or not the ranchers receive too much or too little or pay too much or too little on their leases. That will be dealt with in a subsequent bill. So, then, what is Bill 16, and why am I supporting it? There are about five main issues here. The first one: that it continues to recognize the stewardship role of ranchers. It ensures contact by recreational users, people who would use the grazing leased land; reduced liability; new mechanisms for resolving conflict; and new legal remedies.

The first one, then, Mr. Speaker. The government provides these leases – this is recognizing the stewardship role – because grazing is important to the grassland ecosystem of the foothills and Porcupine Hills in my constituency and the sustainability of these public lands. You say: well, gee whiz, they've got a sweetheart deal. Well, maybe they do, but they are obliged to graze no more than 50 percent of the grass that grows there because this is an important watershed area.

They are continuously monitored by rangeland managers from the Department of Sustainable Resource Development who look at that and do not want to have those lands overgrazed in any way or trails made on them that lead to erosion and, therefore, depletion of the importance of the watershed of those areas. These areas in Highwood and in other parts of the province provide excellent water retention. So part of the deal that the rancher has is the expectation that he/she/they will look after the watershed and look after the resource of the native grass.

Over the years, Mr. Speaker, the farmers and ranchers of those leases have provided excellent stewardship. Some years ago we had the declaration of the Whaleback, part of which is in the constituency of Highwood and most of which is in the constituency of Livingstone-MacLeod. The Wilderness Association said that this was pristine land and should be really protected. How interesting. It's the oldest agricultural disposition in the province. It goes back to the late '70s, early '80s that that has been continuously ranched but ranched in a stewardship way that is recognized as being the right way to make sure that that watershed is protected and the native grass there is protected.

The livelihood of agricultural leaseholders is based on their continued access to the land for grazing as well as the long-term protection of the land. Although an agricultural disposition holder must provide reasonable recreation access to the land, the regulations in Bill 16 recognize that there are times when the disposition owner can say no or put conditions on access. That's one of the provisions that I particularly like. It ensures contact by recreation owners to the holder of the disposition, to the rancher, if they want to utilize that grazing land.

The conditions, though, that the rancher may put on are that if it's a fire danger – and if you've got very dry grassland, in the fall and even in the winter when there's no snow, it's a high fire hazard, and vehicles can't go in there, and campfires can't be utilized. Also, when livestock are in some of these areas, you can't have people out there hunting. Some of the ranchers that I know practise a deal whereby they only allow a certain number of hunters on at a time or, if they don't practice that, they advise them and say: "Well, in these two sections there are 15 hunters on this day in that area. The chances of you shooting a deer are slight, but the chances of you shooting another human being are pretty good." Then it might be that the rancher is looked upon as a gatekeeper, but it's a responsible gatekeeper that they would be. If the rancher is not, then the provision of Bill 16 says that there is a process by which that "no, you cannot come on this leased land" can be appealed, and that certainly appeals to me.

The only thing in here is that there's nothing to take into account what it's like to be a rancher in the fall and early winter. It's nothing for them to receive 10, 15, 20 phone calls before 7 o'clock in the morning, and that isn't always the most welcome thing and not only that but to be awakened by the noise of trucks in your yard because there are 10 trucks with their horse trailers and the whole bit all ready to go hunting on the area that you're responsible for. So it ensures contact by recreation users.

The person who wants to walk across the land usually isn't much of a bother. It's the ones that want to use their quads. I know, Mr. Speaker, that you wouldn't allow us to show exhibits in here, but I have a wonderful set of photographs that show you the damage that those quads and four-wheel drives can do on a wet day on rangeland. Of course, those people seem to get some joy out of going up a hill straight up and in lowest gear so that the grass is chewed up, and that's the irresponsible recreation user. So if you have to make a contact with the rancher, then there's a chance for that rancher and that recreation user to come to some agreement of what conditions they can utilize the leased land on.

Reduced liability is also a feature of Bill 16. This legislation reduces the liability of the leaseholder for the safety of recreation users. If a rancher says, "Yes; on these conditions you can go on my land," and the person somehow is injured because there was a ditch or any kind of impediment to their going over the land, they can sue the leaseholder, and there are some unfortunate situations that have occurred when a plain yes is given. As a result, Bill 16 is addressing an important consideration that goes on with the access. It'll provide clarity and assurance to leaseholders who previously had no clear direction in this area, and that will lead to greater co-operation between the leaseholder and those members of the public who might like to access the land for recreational reasons.

Bill 16 also contains a new mechanism for resolving conflicts. The legislation then makes a dispute resolution process available to both leaseholder and recreational users where there might be a conflict. That is very much an improvement, and it's certainly a great improvement, as some of these others are, over the former Bill 31. It certainly seems to me to be a wonderful step forward.

Bill 16 also provides a new legal remedy. Prior to this legislation, Mr. Speaker, the rights and duties of all users were somewhat unclear. There was no legal way to deal with recreation users who did not respect the environment, and now a leaseholder will be able to ask a peace officer to intervene, and court action may be taken for those who abuse the land. If court action is taken and a person is convicted, the court can impose a fine of up to $2,000.

The legislation also allows, Mr. Speaker, the minister to impose a penalty where either the recreation user or the agricultural leaseholder contravenes the legislation, so it's a two-way street. The leaseholders have a good history of stewardship on our land. Under the current legislation the minister has the discretion to cancel a lease if the conditions are not maintained, and this direction continues under Bill 16.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would support Bill 16 and believe that it's a great improvement over some of the provisions of Bill 31. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29 or to continue debate?

Dr. Taft: To speak. I'm to speak to the bill if there are no questions.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate very much the comments from the Member for Highwood on this particular bill. Generally, I think I tend to agree with him on what he said. As the member described, there are actually three or four purposes to the bill: dispute resolution process for exploration access disputes on leased lands, clarification of the rights and procedures for recreational access on leased lands, some procedures for conflict management, and clarification for access to the land.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, it's interesting. The land that we're discussing here is some of the most beautiful country in Alberta and some of the most beautiful country, I would argue, in the world, the portions of it that I've driven through, the Whaleback region that the Member for Highwood mentioned and the ranch land south of there. I understand there's a total of about 5 million acres of public land leased for grazing to about 5,700 leaseholders, and 5 million acres sounds like a tremendous amount of land. It's about 3 percent of the total land area of Alberta.

This bill has some controversial history to it in the form of other bills, and I think the government has split some of the issues into two or more pieces of legislation. We'll have to wait and see. This is probably relatively uncontroversial compared to what some of the others might be holding or might present in the future.

I think we would all acknowledge the contribution of the ranchers of the lands involved here to the agricultural development and, indeed, to the cultural development of this province. The lands that they are responsible for, that they are stewards for, are trademarks, almost, of this province. I think "stewardship" is in many ways the best word to be used here. These people are very conscious that the lands that they are occupying under these leaseholds are lands that they are stewards for for future generations. Indeed, the fact is that I believe the leases here are relatively long-term leases. I think they're 20-year leases or something like that and that they do encourage people to take a long-term view of the land and to conserve the land that is there. This stewardship helps to keep the grassland ecology in balance. It helps to both sustain the grass and to keep other forms of vegetation from moving into the grasslands. It keeps the bush and potentially the forest from spreading out into the grassland and keeps that interstitial territory between the prairie and the mountains in beautiful condition.

One of my concerns with this bill is the requirements and the potential controls on foot access. Now, I can imagine that access issues are an enormous headache for the leaseholders of these lands, and, as the Member for Highwood described, in the fall when hunters are calling maybe by the dozen early, early in the morning to request permission and when you have to deal with the sometimes genuinely destructive and offensive activities of motorized vehicle operators, quads, and other off-road vehicles, I can see that that's frustrating, irritating, and sometimes exasperating work for these leaseholders. So I think it's probably very wise for us to be looking at ways of controlling access for many people to these lands, but I am concerned about the limits potentially placed on walkers and hikers, people who will do a minimum of damage and undoubtedly are on these lands to celebrate the beauty of the land rather than to rip it up with off-road activities on quads.

I found myself thinking back to the U.K. model for access to lands, which is a very ancient model. The U.K., as people here will know, has a population of over 50 million people in a total area significantly smaller than Alberta. So it's very, very crowded land, and the issues of access to lands are very difficult, but they've been thought through very carefully, and there's a very long historic tradition. I learned about this tradition living in Britain and going on hikes with classes from my sons' schools. We'd go out for rambles through the English countryside, and I discovered soon that walkers in Britain have guaranteed access to the trails in the British lands. It doesn't matter where the trail goes. If it goes through somebody's backyard, across the middle of a field, through a farmyard, or wherever it goes, people have guaranteed access to that trail as long as they stay on the trail.

This leads, of course, sometimes to conflict because farmers, in particular, may not like and appreciate the fact that walkers have guaranteed access to their land. So sometimes you'll have a farmer placing a couple of fairly aggressive bulls in a field and doing things like that to discourage walkers. But the walkers are equally determined and have actually organized themselves so that every trail in Britain that has this common law heritage of access is walked every five years at least once, and doing that and recording the fact that that trail has been walked guarantees that the rights of access continue for at least another five years. These rights go back many, many, many centuries, in fact in some cases prehistorically.

Now, in Canada we take a much different approach. In some ways it's the mirror image. For in Britain, while there are guaranteed access rights to land, the access to rivers is a completely different thing and the access to streams is a completely different thing. In fact, landowners can for practical purposes prohibit people from using the flowing water, the streams and rivers that go over their property, but they can't prohibit people from going on the land. Here we have it in some ways the other way around. In Canada you can actually canoe down a river or across a lake and you have guaranteed access to that public water, but if you get out of your canoe and walk very far inland, suddenly you're on private property and you're not supposed to trespass. So they're kind of mirror images, reverse images in the two countries.

I can't help wondering in this case or in cases like we're discussing under this bill, Bill 16, if there isn't a way for guaranteeing access to walkers to trails through these lands as long as they stay on the trail and providing them that access without having to go to the leaseholder for permission. Now, perhaps through the course of debate on this bill that issue will be clarified for me and explained to me, but I think we can put walkers in a separate category for regulations and legal issues than, say, people on motorized vehicles or people on horseback, or I suppose these days we even have to worry about people on mountain bikes. But walkers, I think, could be guaranteed access to these lands on trails, and I'd like to consider that, whether that's addressed in regulations perhaps or the legislation. I'll be looking for some discussion and maybe some better information for my sake on that issue as we go through this bill.

Beyond that particular issue this bill at least seems to strike a reasonable set of positions. There are some questions we have around what appear to be some extraordinary powers granted to the minister, if we're understanding this bill properly, to potentially create multiple leases on the same land, something to that effect, so we will need to have some clarification on that as we go through this bill. But as long as the extraordinary powers of the minister to act potentially in unusual or destructive ways, in manners that perhaps contravene the interests of the leaseholders or the various parties to the leases, are contained, I at least will probably support this bill and I imagine that our caucus will also.

So with those comments I'll take my seat and look for other debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly agree with the hon. member as he was describing the stewardship that leaseholders have exhibited. As we were setting up the special places, it was quite interesting. The folks that seemed to have some problem with letting agriculture have access to this land still nominated areas for special places and acknowledged that the leaseholders for some long period of time had been operating on that land and that it was in just as good shape if not better than they originally found it.

In his comments he commented about the leases being 20 years and seemed to indicate that it was important that it be a long-term lease in order that that management continue, and I'm wondering if the hon. member would be suggesting that the leases be longer than 20 years or that perhaps we have some type of rolling 20 years. That means that at the end of 10 years there'd be an assessment, and if everything is up to snuff, you'd get another 20 years. So you would have that kind of management ahead of you as you go forward.

Dr. Taft: I don't make it a practice of answering questions in this situation – I'm happy to do that in committee – but I'm open to those ideas. I don't have a solution here, but I think we need to stay away from really short-term leases, which encourage people just to squeeze everything out of the land in two or three years and be gone.

The Deputy Speaker: Further questions or comments? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just wondering if the hon. member would answer a question with regard to his travels in Britain and the fact that when he was wandering from one farm to the other farm if at that time they were concerned about the spread of mad cow disease or various other pesticides or those sorts of things.

Dr. Taft: I shouldn't have answered even one question. I'm happy to debate that in committee. I think the proper place for these kinds of questions back and forth is committee.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Further questions? Further comments?

The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to conclude debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a second time]

Bill 22
Child and Family Services Authorities
Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe this is very self-explanatory. It's striking out "not more than 11" and substituting "the," the effect of which will enable us to provide sufficient board members to be appropriate for governance of the larger expanded territories of the child and family services authorities.

Moved a second time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few brief comments as we look at Bill 22. It's true that it's designed to eliminate the limits on the number of children's authority board members, but I think what it does is raise some questions about the direction we're going in terms of the children's authorities.

We've seen the map of the new boundaries. One of the strengths when the authorities were created was laid out I think fairly clearly by the government. The intention as I understand it from the remarks of the minister and the government publications was to make sure that the services that were delivered were relevant to the community and that they have a strong local flavour, that they could respond to local needs, and it seems to me that as we progressed and, for instance, now that the regions have been changed, I wonder how much of that local authority and input and the creation of situations that meet the particular needs of an area are being eroded. If you look at the map of the authorities, in region 8 I wonder how much the people in Fort Vermilion have in common with people in Grande Prairie. Huge, huge differences in those communities, the kinds of populations that they serve. Similarly, you could ask, for instance, in region 7: how much in common do people in Hinton have with Athabasca? And you could go on through the regions. The northern ones are particularly large, Mr. Speaker.

So I think that we should take a serious look at what's happening to that goal of delivering programs that are really responsive to local needs and whether that is still a legitimate goal or whether the government has with the experience with the regions decided that that goal shouldn't play as large a role in the delivery of services as was first envisioned when the regions were created. It's not particular to this bill, although it does allow for the appointment of more members that seemingly could represent more communities. You could make the argument that the change has the possibility of helping local representation, but as we've watched the changes in local communities, it's a worry that their role is being downplayed and that more and more of the decisions are going to be made centrally and then fanned out to local communities.

With that, I would adjourn debate on Bill 22, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 23
Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to speak to second reading of Bill 23, the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. Through the Child Welfare Act review conducted by my very competent colleague from Calgary-Buffalo, Children's Services heard from Albertans that supports for children with disabilities need to be addressed separately from child protection, that supports for children with disabilities should be family focused, and that improved access to information and an integrated service system across government is vital. The Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act will provide separate and distinct legislation to cover services for children with disabilities.

Currently supports for families who have disabled children are provided under the Child Welfare Act. The intent of the current resources for children with disabilities program is to provide support to assist families with some of the extraordinary demands that result directly from their child's disability and to enable families to maintain the child in the family home. The current resources for children with disabilities program is currently perceived and in many ways delivered as a financial benefits program.

In December Children's Services established a ministerial advisory committee and an expert advisory committee to provide recommendations regarding the development of the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. Bill 23 reflects recommendations from both of these committees.

The new Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act will change the resources for children with disabilities program. The intent of Bill 23 is to provide a spectrum of proactive, family-centred supports and services to empower families of children with disabilities, preserve and strengthen families as well as prevent these families from experiencing crisis which could potentially result in child protection needs.

The new legislation will clarify eligibility for the resources for children with disabilities program, require service plans to reflect the complex needs of children, refocus programs for children with disabilities on early intervention and family supports as well as promote better service co-ordination across government ministries.

There are three types of service areas identified in the new legislation: first, information services and service co-ordination; second, family support services focused on the needs of the family; and, third, therapeutic services focused on the needs of the child based on the child's medical diagnosis and assessment of the child's functional needs.

The nature and level of family support services and therapeutic services will be clarified as regulations are developed in consultation with stakeholders. The regulations will also set out expectations for parental cost sharing, taking into consideration the parents' ability to pay to ensure that families aren't put into financial hardship.

Families will continue to have the right to access a formal appeal process. The appeal panel's decisions will be guided by the parameters of legislation. An option for mediation has been included as an alternative dispute resolution mechanism and a less adversarial way to resolve a conflict as an alternative to an appeal.

I support this bill because I know it is based on the principle that a respectful partnership exists for family support services and that this partnership supports parents in meeting their child's needs. Bill 23 is intended to preserve and strengthen the family's capacity to promote their child's healthy growth and development.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 23.
Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make some comments about Bill 23, Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. It's coincidental that Bill 23 bears the same number as article 23 of the Charter of the United Nations, the rights of the child. It was to article 23, which deals with handicapped youngsters, that I turned in terms of looking for principles that might underlie a handicapped children's bill such Bill 23.

I think it's worth just visiting what article 23 of the human rights of the child says. It says:

1. States Parties recognize that a mentally or physically disabled child should enjoy a full and decent life, in conditions which ensure dignity, promote self-reliance and facilitate the child's active participation in the community.
2. States Parties recognize the right of the disabled child to special care and shall encourage and ensure the extension, subject to available resources, to the eligible child and those responsible for his or her care, of assistance for which application is made and which is appropriate to the child's condition and to the circumstances of the parents or others caring for the child.
3. Recognizing the . . . needs of a disabled child, assistance extended in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article shall be provided free of charge, whenever possible, taking into account the financial resources of the parents or others caring for the child, and shall be designed to ensure that the disabled child has effective access to and receives education, training, health care services, rehabilitation services, preparation for employment and recreation opportunities in a manner conducive to the child's achieving the fullest possible social integration and individual development, including his or her cultural and spiritual development.

I think that article is sort of the measure that I used and that I'll continue to use in judging what we have before us in Bill 23.

I have some questions about Bill 23, Mr. Speaker. I would like and, I guess, appreciate some information in terms of the consultation that the ministry undertook with community agencies and municipalities in terms of the family support services. It's a matter of information that I would appreciate being enlightened on.

I think there are some serious flaws in the legislation. The very first one is that it seems to medicalize disabilities, and it goes back to the era and re-establishes the medical model for dealing with disabilities. I think that putting medical doctors in charge of the diagnosis is a mistake. Certainly, they're one of the professionals that are qualified to do some of the diagnosis, but what is really required is an appropriate, regulated professional, and that's a wide range of professionals, not just medical professionals, Mr. Speaker. I think that if you look at the definition of disabilities, it's extremely narrow, and I think there could be some questions raised as to whether it's compatible with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It might be worth looking up that definition and comparing it to the one that we have in the act.

The act makes a provision for income testing, and as such it is a major departure from the HCS program established by the Lougheed government, and it's diametrically opposed to the philosophy of the government because the aim of the program then was to cover the cost of raising a child with a disability that was above the cost of raising a normal child. I think the separation of family support services and therapeutic services is a step that deserves a second look before we proceed with the passing of the bill. I think there are some serious reservations. We've heard from some stakeholders who are alarmed with what we have before us and, I think, raised some legitimate questions that deserve answers as we go through second reading and move into committee with Bill 23.

With that I would adjourn debate on Bill 23.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 24

Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to second reading of Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003. Alberta's Child Welfare Act is a key piece of legislation that provides the foundation for child protective services, adoption services, and services to children with disabilities. It has a profound and direct impact on the lives of thousands of Alberta's children and families. In May of 2001 Alberta Children's Services announced a review of its Child Welfare Act. It had been over 17 years since the legislation underwent a major review and overhaul, so there were many issues that needed to be addressed. I was very honoured when the Minister of Children's Services asked me to lead this review and subsequently introduce this bill in the Legislature.

The Child Welfare Act review team, including myself as chair, consisted of a number of representatives from across the province. Our work began with child welfare research being done provincially, across Canada, and internationally. A discussion guide was created, and in December of 2001 public consultations began and information was requested from Albertans. The process was structured to provide all Albertans with opportunities to share their perspectives and contribute to the production of a balanced piece of legislation. In the past year we traveled across Alberta holding over 140 meetings with stakeholders across the province. Mr. Speaker, we had the opportunity to meet with a wide cross section of people to gain a full perspective on the issues of child welfare. We spoke with youth, parents, frontline workers, aboriginal elders, First Nation communities, Métis and Inuit representatives, foster parents and agencies, child and family service authorities, other ministries, and the general public.

Mr. Speaker, throughout the process both the review team and myself learned a lot about the child welfare system and heard the concerns of Albertans. We received a spectrum of responses and feedback in over 600 submissions. These submissions reflected the values, principles, and areas of concern for Albertans. Based on the research that was completed internationally and across Canada as well as the submissions and information provided from Albertans, recommendations for legislative changes were developed and presented to the hon. minister in the form of the Strengthening Families, Children and Youth report. This report concluded the Child Welfare Act review process. The minister accepted the report for further review in developing the legislation, and the report was publicly released in December 2002. Recommendations for legislative changes have placed greater emphasis on and accountability for the safety and well-being of children, permanent placements for children, the involvement of children and families in decision-making, the importance of respecting all cultures, ethnic backgrounds, and religions, and finally the importance of supporting youth who are in transition to adulthood.

With these areas in mind, I'd like to highlight some of the key legislative changes in Bill 24. In responding to children in need of protective services, it's recommended that families receive services through a new approach called differential response. This approach would make it possible to refer and co-ordinate access to community services for low-risk families and allow high-risk families to continue to receive support through the mandated protective services.

The legislation supports new court processes and time lines that will focus on earlier resolution of problems by further involving families in the decision-making process. This will also involve the development of a concurrent planning process that obtains permanent homes for children at the earliest opportunity. Concurrent planning is the practice of developing two plans for the family at the same time. The first is the preferred plan and focuses on reunification with the child's family, and the second is an alternate permanency plan for the child if the parents do not follow through with their responsibilities.

The proposed legislation will emphasize permanency for children in government care and recognize their developmental needs and how these needs change over time. Specifically, the maximum time a child can remain in government care will be reduced from three years to 15 or 18 months, depending on the age of the child, with an increased focus on children under the age of six years old. Another area involves increasing permanency for children by further supporting families to provide homes through private guardianship for high-needs children who are permanently in government care. The ability to provide supports to these families is an extension of the current service delivery system for families who adopt special-needs children who are in government care.

It's proposed that "secure treatment" be renamed "secure services" to reflect the importance of a continuum of services being provided to youth who are in danger of harming themselves or others, including confinement for a maximum of 30 days in order for them to be stabilized.

New provisions address situations where a child under the guardianship of the director of child welfare refuses essential medical treatment. The new provisions establish a process whereby the director may apply to the court for authorization to provide treatment to the child, thereby respecting the views of the child and allowing the child to express those views to the court.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, it's recommended that an increased focus be placed on the following: the use of a mediator or alternate dispute resolution process to resolve issues with the family, ensuring that children are informed of their procedural rights, further development of the role of the child and youth advocate with an increased reporting requirement to ensure that issues affecting children and families are addressed, legislating the administrative review process, and updating and clarifying the role of the appeal panel.

The legislation also emphasizes the involvement of First Nations bands in decision-making and the uniqueness of aboriginal culture, heritage, spirituality, and traditions, including Métis and Inuit. There will be an increased emphasis through the court system on holding parents responsible for the parenting of their children.

The area of adoption includes a number of recommended changes as well. These changes include supporting families in adopting children through an easier and less expensive process, further assistance for families in adopting children from another country, and a continued move by Alberta toward open adoption records. For adoption orders granted after proclamation of the new legislation, adult adoptees and birth parents would have full access to their adoption information. Either party may file a no-contact preference that would indicate whether or not the person involved wants to be contacted. For adoption orders that were granted prior to proclamation, adult adoptees and birth parents would have access to identifying information about one another, unless a veto was filed. A veto would prevent the release of any identifying information. Any vetoes that have currently been filed would remain in place.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, there are a number of recommendations that include increasing accountability for services being delivered to children and families, revising the principles that guide decisions affecting children and families, the clarification of some of the definitions relating to the grounds for child protection involvement, aligning the confidentiality and disclosure provisions with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, changing the name of the act from the Child Welfare Act to the child, youth, and family enhancement act, increasing jail time and fines for persons wilfully abusing a child.

The proposed new legislation we are discussing today could not have been possible without the input that the Child Welfare Act review team received from Albertans.

I am pleased to support this bill because I am confident it will amend Alberta's child welfare legislation to better the lives of children, youth, and families. It will also strengthen the way Alberta Children's Services is able to support our most precious and vulnerable citizens. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I move second reading of Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003, and to adjourn debate for this evening.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would now move that we stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:02 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 11, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/11

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O God, grant that we the members of our province's Legislature may fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all our people. Guide our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Mr. Wade Armstrong, high commissioner for New Zealand. This is the high commissioner's last official visit to the province as he will soon be leaving his post for a new assignment. During his three years in Ottawa he always demonstrated strong support for Alberta's relationship with New Zealand. Alberta and New Zealand have much in common, particularly a shared emphasis on free trade. Several Alberta companies are active in New Zealand, and there are valuable educational links between the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, and postsecondary institutions in New Zealand. We appreciate the high commissioner's hard work, and we wish him all the best in his new endeavours. I would ask that our honoured guest please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly employees from Alberta Justice court services. He is accompanied by Doug Noble from Sparks & Associates. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The other two are Geoff Wright and his wife, Linda. Geoff is with Economic Development Services of Chatham-Kent, Ontario, but he's also a native of Pincher Creek. I'd ask them both to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very special guests who are seated in the public gallery. Michael Spencer-Davis is a very fine Canadian actor who trained here at the University of Alberta BFA program and lived and worked in Edmonton for many years. He has returned here to star in the Citadel Theatre's production of Einstein's Gift, written by Edmontonian Vern Thiessen. I'm especially pleased to welcome his son, Jack Davis, to this Assembly. The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, if further proof that the labour movement is alive and well in Alberta was needed, here it is. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a number of other labour leaders from our province. From the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, Elisabeth Ballermann, – and I'd ask people to rise when I call their name – Doug Meggison; from CUPE, Yvonne Fast, Dianne Wyntjes, Pam Beattie, and Ron Pilling; from the United Steelworkers of America, Duane McEwan; from the Canadian Labour Congress, Mike Desautels; and from the Operating Engineers, Lionel Laverdiere, Bruce Moffat, and Bruce Cryliuk. 1:40head: Oral Question Period

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, 2,300 seniors have called the seniors information line hoping to get some relief from their high power and gas bills. Staff returning those calls have been told not to tell seniors over the phone whether or not they qualify for the government's onetime assistance program. As a result, seniors are being lulled into thinking that they'll get help when many won't. This is a cruel form of deception carried out by the government on seniors at a most vulnerable time. To the Premier: why did you not send all seniors an application and guidelines, like you did other groups who have received financial support from the government?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there are different processes for different things, and we've decided to go this particular way.

The Liberals say that the government is misleading seniors about their eligibility for special-needs assistance from high utility bills by refusing to provide any program details over the phone and simply sending out complex application forms. First of all, the forms are not complex. They're very simple; even the Liberals can understand them. And I don't know how anyone can call this program "cruel." There is no other province in Canada that has a program like this to address emergency needs faced by low-income seniors. No other jurisdiction in this country. What is cruel is the campaign of misinformation and fear being spread by the Liberals. That is cruel.

The Minister of Seniors has made a commitment that low-income seniors who need the help will find it under this program. Basically, a senior phones, an application form is sent out, a thorough evaluation is done on those applications, and seniors who qualify get the rebates.

Dr. Nicol: Wouldn't the staff's time be better spent telling the seniors the criteria rather than going through this public relations exercise, sifting through application forms from people who don't have a hope of getting any help?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, a lot of seniors have hope of getting help – that's what the program is all about – especially those who need it the most. I will have the hon. Minister of Seniors supplement.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The negative reference to staff is totally unwarranted and certainly, if you will, one of the most despicable ways that you can take to offend people.

We have answered 11,000 phone calls. I have 23 staff working on this. They've worked overtime every day; they work Saturday. When somebody phones in, there's a very simple question put forward: are you on the seniors' benefit program? If the answer to that is yes: "Then you should fill out the form, and we will assess it to see if, in fact, your income level and your expenditure level warrant some cash support."

We have done a couple of other things. If seniors have expended their $5,000 limit for the year on other onetime expenses, they are not precluded from applying for this unforeseen, if you will, extra additional cost. That's taken into consideration. It would be a waste of time for the telephone answerers to discuss a senior's situation without having the facts before them. Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, I think we've also gone to the point of accepting applications, not guaranteeing something – they have to show that the hardship is there – but we are sending out applications to people whose incomes are above the $18,000 for singles, which is the normal level for the cash supplement, all the way up to $23,000. For couples I do believe it goes up to $37,000.

We mail out the application, you fill out the application, you apply for it, and if you qualify, you will get it. The application forms are available to anybody who asks for them regardless of age. They're available in our storefront centre in the Standard Life building, through MLA offices, through the Seniors offices, and phone calls to my office.

Mr. Speaker, any further kinds of comments with derogatory reference to staff behaviour I think is unfair to the clientele that we're trying to serve.

Dr. Nicol: Back to the Minister of Seniors then. Why is it that the line staff will not discuss the criteria with people who haven't prequalified so that they'll give to those individuals who are calling in a sense of whether or not they will qualify in the end?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how to get the message through. Very clearly, if you are on the seniors' benefits program receiving cash or even if you are on the seniors' benefits program only receiving a premium supplement – we'll even look at that – you fill in the application the same as you would for any other onetime special need. We've just expanded the criteria to look at the increase in the utility bills to ensure that seniors who are pressed for cash and whose problem has been caused largely by these bills will be looked at in a positive fashion. Some seniors who don't pay utility bills will not even be considered under this program.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Seniors: what programs will you be sacrificing in order to fund the overtime and the additional staff to answer these phone lines?

Mr. Woloshyn: One more irrelevant, irresponsible question. The answer to that is none. We provide a service to seniors; we'll continue to provide the service. And, no, I don't know what the budget number is because we haven't processed the application forms. Some time after May 31, when the program is hopefully fully finished, I'll be coming back to the Treasury Board and to this House for supplementary requisitions.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Seniors. The minister has said that some cheques will be mailed out for this program as early as today. How could one possibly get through on the phone line, fill out the applications, and have them approved in that short period of time?

Mr. Woloshyn: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am so pleased he has posed that, because the answer to that is: yes, some cheques did go out today. I have a very diligent, efficient staff that looks at special-needs applications. As of last Monday any applications that were in the hopper, whether they be for teeth, for appliances, whatever they were, the staff were instructed to have a look at them, and if these people were also paying utility bills, without consultation, without delay we added $400 to a homeowner and $200 to a renter. The cheques may not have gone out today, but the paperwork is in, and they will be going out no later than Thursday. So if you applied for special needs and you had a utility problem, we took care of it for you partially. These people, just for the next question, are not restricted from applying again if the support was insufficient.

Dr. Nicol: Back to the Premier. Why doesn't this government just amend the Natural Gas Price Protection Act and help all Albertans who are in trouble?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, all Albertans will be helped once the average price reaches $5.50 a gigajoule. I don't know of any other jurisdiction in the country or in North America, for that matter, especially in the cold parts of North America, that has a program like that. I don't know if the hon. leader of the Liberal Party has been to other parts of Canada to find out what is going on or whether he wants to tell the Alberta people the comparison kinds of programs or the lack of programs in other provinces to deal with high natural gas prices. [interjection] They can have contracts here, and there is nothing wrong with contracts, but I'm talking about the price at the wellhead, the delivery costs, and so on, and what people are paying in other jurisdictions. It's astronomical not only for natural gas but for gasoline at the pumps. No, the Liberals don't like to tell those stories because that's the good side of it.

You know, I would hate to be in the opposition – I really would – because they live in a negative world. Everything is negative. To them the province is the worst possible place in which to live. I don't know why they stay here; I really don't.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Marketing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Energy described an ad from a web site address. The ad from Direct Energy asks: have you rushed in to make a foolish purchase? All Albertans know that the most foolish purchase that has been made in the history of this province has been the billion dollar mistake, which is energy deregulation. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why is Direct Energy allowed to advertise that they are open for business when they do not have to date a licence to operate in Alberta from the Department of Energy or Alberta Government Services?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that Hansard will reflect the answer from yesterday, and if the Minister of Government Services wishes to supplement, he certainly may.

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps to the Minister of Government Services then. Could the minister please explain how yesterday he could tell Albertans that, yes, all energy marketers have to have a licence to conduct business in Alberta and that there is no problem with Direct Energy advertising in Alberta without a licence?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is the same as it was yesterday. Anybody marketing electricity in the province does have to have a licence, but it's not against the law to advertise.

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps it is better with a sweater.

Now to the Premier: will the Premier please provide Albertans with some form of consumer protection and have Direct Energy pull its ads from local newspapers until such time as they have become a licensed marketer?

Mr. Klein: You know, let me get this straight. Let me fully understand. This hon. member is trying to curtail free speech – right? – one of the fundamental principles of Canadian democracy. He wants to say: muzzle them; prevent them from saying: we're coming, and we have a good product. That's what he wants to do. He wants to muzzle them. You know why? Because it might be a good story, and they aren't used to good stories. They don't like to tell good stories. They like to go around and tell everyone what is bad about this province. Mr. Speaker, I'm not about to curtail free speech, certainly not in a democracy. We'll let the Liberals do that.

Health Care Workers' Collective Bargaining

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, last Halloween the Premier stood on the steps of the Lethbridge courthouse, surrounded by national media, TV cameras and all, to support a few Alberta farmers engaged in civil disobedience against the federal grain marketing law. Present today in the galleries are nurses and other health care providers who strongly believe that a law removing their internationally recognized right to strike and unilaterally ripping up their collective agreements would similarly be unjust. My questions are to the Premier. Do all laws need to be obeyed, even unjust ones, or only the laws the Premier likes and supports?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'll set the record straight. We did not support them breaking the law. We said quite emphatically, as a matter of fact: if you break the law, you have to pay the penalty. This government, not the opposition, not that socialist opposition, is on record as saying that the Canadian Wheat Board is highly discriminatory. The act governing the Canadian Wheat Board is highly discriminatory because it takes away the right of choice for Alberta, the northeastern part of British Columbia, a small part of southwestern Ontario, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. It is a matter of taking away the right of choice and having a monopoly on an individual's right to raise a crop and market that crop as he or she sees fit. They don't like that. They support that law. They support taking private property – and that's what a crop is; it's private property – and having to sell it through the government because to them the government is everything.

Dr. Pannu: To the Premier again: why does the government believe it's okay for a person to break federal laws, like those that govern wheat marketing, but not provincial laws that gut collective agreements and take away internationally recognized rights from health care workers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, perhaps he should open his ears and close his mouth, because he obviously is not listening. I said that we did not condone – we did not say it was right to break the law. We're saying that the law is a bad law, and those farmers either paid fines or went to jail. They served their time. They paid the price.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the government's support of a handful of farmers who break federal laws, will the Premier similarly endorse the right of health care workers to break an unjust provincial law, or is the government just being a hypocrite?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the law is the law is the law. Although some people may not like the law – and we don't like the law, and those farmers didn't like the law, but they broke the law, and they paid the price – if we pass a law, and people break the law, whether they like it or don't like it, they will pay the price. It's as simple as that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Asbestos Abatement at the Foothills Hospital

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand that there have been complaints, including in the news media, about exposure of workers to asbestos in the Foothills medical centre in Calgary. What type of work is being conducted at the centre that would involve asbestos?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are renovations that are under way at the Foothills medical centre, and this construction and renovation work has been going on now for a period of time. Most of the renovation work that involves asbestos – and this is around the issue that has been raised in the media in Calgary and, of course, came to the House yesterday – is in the ceiling spaces and some of the mechanical rooms. Now, the asbestos insulation is applied to beams, piping, and boilers, and the Foothills medical centre does in fact have a management plan in place to address any uncontrolled release of asbestos at the facility.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. First supplemental to the same minister: could the minister tell us what involvement his ministry has had with the Foothills medical centre?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, we've actually had quite an involvement since 1999, and I think it's fair to say that the use of our resources in this particular matter have been perhaps more than the ordinary. I think that's justifiable in the sense that when we hear the word "asbestos," everyone gets sensitive, as they should because this is, of course, one of the identified areas that we have to be very careful about. To provide the member and members here in the House some basic information, there have been 139 asbestos project notifications that we've received since 1999, 30 asbestos abatement projects have been inspected, and of course we've been involved in preproject meetings over this situation.

Now, as referenced and as a matter of public information because our orders are posted, we've actually submitted 22 orders, and they were in fact issued to asbestos abatement contractors where deficiencies were noticed. I want to inform the members of this House that compliance with the orders was achieved within the specified time and that the remaining 109 asbestos project notifications have been reviewed for proper safe work procedures.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. Are you satisfied that the work being conducted now at the centre poses no threat to workers or to the public?

2:00

Mr. Dunford: Under our legislation, Mr. Speaker, we have the ability to shut projects down if there's any imminent or immediate danger to workers or, you know, to the public. In this particular situation, we have not had to do that. When we've issued orders, the employer, the contractors in this particular case, have complied. It might be noted that in January of 2003 the Calgary health region has now put on permanent staff an industrial hygiene/construction safety specialist. Their duties, of course, are to oversee occupational health and safety concerns in regard to this particular construction that's going on at this facility and then, of course, also because of the presence of asbestos at that site.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Legal Representation for Children in Care

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Children's Services claimed that her department provides legal representation for children who have been abused in care. However, court records indicate that in some cases the right to representation may be denied or suspended until the child reaches the age of 18. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Will the minister confirm that there are cases where the government refuses to act on behalf of children who have been abused in care?

Ms Evans: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the fundamental thing that Children's Services must do when a child is abused in care is take care of the child, protect the child, and assure the safety of the child. I think that when we've been talking over the last couple of days about the subject, I should make it eminently clear that the first thing that the child welfare director and the caseworker must do is assure that the child is removed from the scene, if that's the case, or ensure, at least, that the child is protected.

Now, while a child is in care, Mr. Speaker, under the current terms of the Limitations Act there's no legal obligation on a parent or guardian to commence civil action on behalf of a child. The Limitations Act recognizes – and I want to be very clear about this in this House – that by suspending the limitation period for the commencement of civil action while a child is a minor, it gives the right for the child when the child has matured, and it preserves that child's right to commence an action at such time as the child reaches adulthood and is able to make his or her own decision and determination about whether litigation is in his or her best interest.

Let's be clear with one other part of this, Mr. Speaker. When a child is abused in care, it may be because some birth parent, some member of the extended family, some sibling, or some friend has abused the child in care. This is no deviation from what I cited yesterday, because we do provide legal representation for children while they're in care. In the case that's currently before the courts, the 439 John Does as represented in Calgary and which has not been judged yet, the allegation, I'm assuming, that's coming across the floor is that those children have not been represented while they're in care. I think we can come back and look at that case when the judgment is finally rendered about the merits of the case and the other details, but currently I think it's important to provide that response.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: on what basis does the government pick and choose which abused children they will follow up on with court action?

Ms Evans: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, it would appear to me that the hon. member, who has represented, again, the allegations that have come from litigation that's been launched against our department, has been very selective in citing that as a premise for this question. It depends on what's in the best interest of the child. That is the underpinning of the Child Welfare Act. That is the underpinning of every part of the practice of social work and everything that we do. More than that I cannot say, but I would invite the hon. member and all in this Assembly to review my answer yesterday in the context of, overall, what we do when a child is abused or has not been protected or has been injured in any way while they're in the care of the government of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. To the same minister: on what basis did the government decide not to represent the 439 children who are subject to that lawsuit in Calgary before the lawsuit was launched?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I believe that when the judgment comes out, we will be able to defend ourselves on this, and I think it's more appropriate there, but at the time I cited that there were perhaps less than 60 cases where substantiated abuse was actually confirmed to be an issue for the government of Alberta. So the overall shot in the dark which, I think, has been taken here, that all 439 might somehow have been abused while in the care of the government and while in the government's direct administration of care, is something that has not yet been substantiated by the court. I find it offensive that repeatedly the hon. member of the opposition continues to harbor allegations which have yet to be proven in a court of law.

I'd invite the Minister of Justice to add to my response.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Fish Management Plan

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After this long, hard, cold winter many of my constituents will be looking forward to the spring so that they can get out with their fishing rods and enjoy the beautiful Alberta outdoors. Many Albertans have become accustomed to the catch-and-release policy on many of the lakes in Alberta and are concerned about conservation, but there's still the hope that some lakes will be suitable for some harvest. Just recently the Department of Sustainable Resource Development announced that some lakes will be opening up for walleye fishing. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Considering the challenges facing Alberta's fisheries, can the minister tell this House why the decision was made to open up these fisheries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't have cabins on those lakes, to start with.

As part of our overall plan to improve the Alberta fisheries, my department came forward, of course, with a balanced harvest and monitoring plan, that included 16 new lakes in the province. Most of these lakes are stocked, of course, and they are found across the province. A map was circulated to all government members. Lately, Mr. Speaker, of course, there continues to be a great interest in easing the catch-and-release restrictions with walleye in Alberta. We continue to hear from anglers, groups like the Alberta Fish and Game Association, who support conservation and who support a balanced approach in achieving well-stocked walleye.

Dr. Taylor: How many lakes, Mike?

Mr. Cardinal: Sixteen new lakes. These lakes, Mr. Speaker, were selected by the staff. They felt that additional harvest without jeopardizing recovery was in support of our walleye management plan. Some of these lakes include Vincent Lake, Long Lake, that only have a limited, three fish per week harvest, whereas some lakes can sustain more. Further details of the plan, of course, are in this booklet which was released. Page 6 shows a nice message, and I encourage people to read that.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, my final question to the same minister: given that the Western Walleye Council strongly recommends continuous stocking of select lakes to ease the fishing pressure on lakes with natural recruitment, will the ministry consider developing an effective and efficient stocking program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I feel very confident that my department has taken a balanced approach in selecting these lakes, and I believe these are the most suitable lakes at this time for walleye fisheries. It is important to note that these lakes will get, also, additional monitoring on an ongoing basis. We are, of course, making some minor adjustments in some of our lakes, with pike fisheries for an example, and are in fact reducing some walleye harvest in some lakes and also reducing some perch catch in other lakes. So we are going to continue monitoring the situation.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, it's clear, based on extensive documentation and on many eyewitness reports, that there have been serious breaches of proper asbestos removal at the Foothills hospital in Calgary. The health and lives of workers and possibly of patients and the public have been placed in jeopardy. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: can the minister confirm that requests by workers and contractors to have asbestos properly removed from the Foothills were denied by the Calgary health region management because it was not covered in the budget?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of such an allegation.

Dr. Taft: Go and look it up.

To the Minister of Health and Wellness again: can the minister explain why the Calgary health region just this week denied that there has been any risk to staff or patients from asbestos exposure at the Foothills, when the government's own documents show that this is patently untrue?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I believe that if the hon. member will refer to Hansard, the minister responsible for human resources answered that question earlier today.

Dr. Taft: I'll try again. All right. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: given that asbestos exposure is the largest occupational cause of death and disease, will the minister bring a Crown prosecutor into this case to consider charges under the Occupational Health and Safety Act?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, we bring in Crown prosecutors in matters where there are violations of orders, violations of the particular act. The normal process is that we send inspectors to the work site to inspect the work, and they write orders. Of course, if there's noncompliance within a specified time on these orders, then we have the option of whether or not we wish to take further action. As I mentioned in a previous question earlier today, we actually have issued 22 orders on asbestos abatement contractors where deficiencies were noted. In every case the contractor, or the employer, has applied and has lived by those orders within the specified time.

Now, the hon. member is persisting in a certain line here. If he has information that we've not had provided to us through the employer, through our investigation, he's certainly welcome to place it on my desk, and we'd be glad to have a look at it.

The thing we have to understand, though, is that asbestos just in and of itself is not the hazard. Asbestos in place, of course, was a normal building component. The thing about it is that when we're removing asbestos, then we have to be very, very careful because this is when it can be harmful: when it gets into the air and when it is inhaled. It's not on the skin, anything like that. It has to be inhaled, and that's what our inspectors are out there looking for. We have the legal mandate to protect workers in these kinds of situations, Mr. Speaker, and we are doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Seniors' Housing

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For quite some time now the ministries of Municipal Affairs and Seniors have been floating the idea of removing private, nonprofit seniors' housing from receiving grants in place of municipal taxes. It has been suggested that this change will in fact take place this year. Many seniors in my constituency are concerned, noting that in some cases this could result in rent increases of up to 20 percent. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Could you explain the reasoning behind removing nonprofit seniors' housing from the list of facilities who receive grants in place of taxes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very good question. In 1995 the Municipal Government Act was amended, which basically allowed municipalities to tax nonsubsidized and not-for-profit seniors' organizations, but our government, actually, since 1995 paid a grant to the municipalities to cover their taxes. We're still doing that. The regulation has just lapsed. We've been hearing from seniors relative to the situation, and I'm very proud to say that based on support from my colleagues and our government, we will be continuing for the next few years with this program.

Mr. Rathgeber: That is, indeed, very good news.

My supplemental question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Is this idea of phasing out nonprofit seniors' housing grants in place of taxes simply being delayed, or is it off the table altogether?

Mr. Boutilier: Of course, we never say never. I think it's always worthy of review, but I can say that for the fiscal year 2002, the fiscal year 2003, and subsequent years out in regulation we will be providing the grant to assist seniors because that's our commitment as a government. There are 47 seniors' facilities that are unsubsidized that are not for profit, and we're, again, listening to what seniors have said and the hon. member who has brought this to my attention, and we're going to continue to help them for the years out.

Mr. Rathgeber: My second supplemental is to the Minister of Seniors. Given that many seniors are having difficult times making ends meet, what is his ministry doing to help low-income seniors who are having economic hardships due to high rents?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to point out that the seniors' benefits program is directed at low-income seniors, and our highest level of support under the seniors' benefits program is towards renters. In addition, the special-needs assistance program, which does have a $5,000 maximum, is also directed at the lower income seniors. We have a very good lodge program within the province, where the ones that are run by the foundations in association with the government must leave in the senior's pocket $265 regardless of the rent. So that is taken into consideration.

The ones that you just referred to in your previous questioning, the low-income ones, do have a look at being fair with the rents. Yes, it is a concern, and we'll be looking at the matter not only as it pertains to the very bottom end but looking at the threshold levels too, because in fact that is becoming a greater concern as we're going along, but we don't have a specific program directed at renters per se at the moment.

Water Strategy

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, an innocent bystander could be excused for thinking that this government doesn't care about one of Alberta's most precious resources: its water. For all of its posturing and the lip service it pays, this government has done remarkably little to ensure that Albertans have safe access and plentiful supplies of water. To the Minister of Environment: why is there no water consumption monitoring program in this province?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are certainly in the cities that are metered water consumption monitoring programs, because the meters in the cities monitor. With the oil industry as well, if that's what she's referring to, although she was a bit indirect, they are given a licence, and they are required to report how much water they use.

Now, does that mean that we cannot do better? Of course not. We can do better, and one of the issues that you're going to see, as we come forward, in our water strategy, which we will put on our web site, hopefully, at the end of the month, is ways to actually monitor more effectively, not that we're not doing it – I said more effectively – the appropriate amount of water that's being utilized in this province, because as we go forward, we have a very serious issue with water utilization in the 10- to 15-year time frame. So we need to have better methodologies of monitoring the water utilization.

Ms Carlson: When will the Minister of Environment launch a provincial water inventory project so that fact-based decisions can be made?

Dr. Taylor: Once again, Mr. Speaker, one of the things you will see in the water strategy as it comes forward – and, you know, we kind of wanted it to be a bit of a surprise, but we seem to be leaking this information out slowly, but it is water. As we go forward, for instance, groundwater is an issue. We do not have good maps of groundwater in terms of the amount or the quality of the groundwater, and that's one of the issues that we need to deal with.

Ms Carlson: They've been talking about this as an issue to deal with for as long as this minister has been in this House. When are they going to do it? When are they going to develop the maps, develop an inventory, and start monitoring water in this province? It's not that hard to do.

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I was minister for about six months or less when we started this process, so I don't think that's that long. We started last June with a water forum in Red Deer that stakeholders attended and discussed issues. We put some information out on our web site, in a document in MLAs' offices, and we had a huge number of responses. The draft water strategy that we're going to put out at the end of the month will be mailed to 1,300 stakeholders.

An Hon. Member: How many?

Dr. Taylor: To 1,300 stakeholders and also to the people that were involved in the water forum.

All of those people, Mr. Speaker, are going to monitor this program as we go forward, and we will have a final water strategy available in the fall. That will be just a little over two years since I was made minister. We are acting. It's an important issue, and we will continue forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Natural Gas Prices

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Soaring gas prices are causing widespread misery among tens of thousands of Albertans. Those who are on a limited income are suffering severely. Before the last election the government promised gas rebates to protect Albertans from spikes in gas prices. To the Minister of Energy: why has the government broken its promise to Albertans to protect them from spikes in natural gas prices?

Mr. Smith: The government has not broken its promise, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister has repeatedly said that the legislation under the gas protection act was the reason that they couldn't give relief to Albertans now that they need it, will he admit that all it takes is a simple cabinet decision to change the rules and give Albertans the protection they need from natural gas prices?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Natural Gas Price Protection Act is a matter of record. It was thoroughly debated in the House in the period of 2001 in the spring session. The member was here. We've got excerpts from his debate. We've got excerpts from the opposition debate. There was not a standing vote on it, so we can only assume that they approved it, as well, and support the decision. In fact, it was all done in an open, transparent manner, and we were absolutely critical about ensuring that we had a program in place that would protect Albertans from a period of these price increases.

Now, what the member neglects to add is that, in fact, the threshold price for the natural gas protection act is 5 percent-plus lower than what it was in 2001, and we have not reached those numbers yet. In fact, for the balance of March, to obey the legislation that that member voted for as well as other members of the House, the price of natural gas would have to reach $19 per gigajoule.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that we now have a rebate program with no rebates, why won't the minister admit that a cabinet decision could change the threshold, that could give immediate relief to Albertans who need it now? Why won't he bring it forward at the next cabinet meeting?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's probably the same individual who accuses us of doing things in secret and behind closed doors at cabinet meetings. We don't do that. We bring forward legislation that is debated in this House in a transparent fashion, and all the folks over there that are now talking about this bill and what it should be and what it shouldn't be were all here for this debate. In fact, if I look back, I can think of things from Mr. Mason, who said, "It was in fact through natural gas rebates that the present government [is] where it is today."

Well, we have delivered on a promise that is consistent and is available for all Albertans. It has a threshold price. It's lower than what it was in 2001. We have reached out to seniors, we have reached out to families in need, and we are monitoring the situation on a daily basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Education System

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the high scholastic achievement of Alberta students, despite the level of remuneration to teachers, despite the high statistical level of provincial funding dedicated to education in Canada, there remains a consistent charge that education, particularly kindergarten to 12, is underfunded and not a priority of this government. There are many anecdotal incidents that do little to promote the improvement of our learning system. My question – and I have only one question, no supplements – is to the Minister of Learning. What is the government doing to restore a nonconfrontational relationship with parents, teachers, school boards, and most importantly, students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just will reiterate what the hon. member has said. First of all, we have the highest paid teachers in the country by about 8 to 10 percent. Secondly, our students do the best in the country, as a matter of fact the best in the world when it comes to any international assessments or national assessments. Thirdly, in the province of Alberta we spend more on education per capita than any other province in the country by a significant amount.

With regard to the member's actual question about the nonconfrontational relationship, it is my belief and it is my will that we do not have a nonconfrontational relationship, Mr. Speaker. We don't want to have a confrontational relationship, and it is something, as the hon. member has said, that we monitor constantly. I meet with school boards. As a matter of fact, to this date I have met with about 15 school boards since the 1st of January. We have had some very constructive meetings, and I have given the School Boards Association an undertaking to meet with all 64 school boards by the end of June, so that is something that I'm certainly working towards.

With regard to the teachers, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, in the throne speech we have committed to getting more grassroots input from the teachers, to talking to teachers. The exact mechanism of that is yet to be worked out, but we hopefully will be talking to some grassroots teachers around the province.

Mr. Speaker, with students, for example, last Friday with Chinook's Edge in Innisfail I had the opportunity of touring a school and reading to students for probably a good half-hour. It was very interesting. It was good. Last Friday I had the opportunity of mentoring students at the Calgary Educational Partnership Foundation, which again was very fulfilling. I didn't see any opposition politicians there. It was minus 30, but we went out and took 250 kids who are at risk of not staying in school out onto the ski slopes and mentored them.

So, Mr. Speaker, we're doing a lot.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Bingo Licensing Review

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In January of this year it was announced that stakeholders were to be consulted with regard to changes to bingo terms and conditions. Since that time I've received dozens of letters from organizations who have concerns over some of the proposed suggestions. Many of these nonprofit and charitable groups are volunteer based, meeting weekends and evenings, and require several months to meet, form committees, prepare a response, and report back to their board for approval. My questions are all to the Minister of Gaming. Given that the first deadline extension to April 30 is not enough for these groups, will the minister extend the deadline to June 2003, to allow them enough time to prepare responses?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the background with respect to this matter goes back to 2001 when this government considered the licensing policy review recommendations, which included 13 recommendations regarding bingo. At that point in time we accepted it and have been working on implementation of some of them. Others, ultimately, as a result of consultation with the bingo industry, made their way into a draft terms and conditions document, that went out this past January. As the hon. member has indicated, one request for an extension from the end of February, which was the original deadline, to the end of April has been received and accepted. At this point in time it would appear that that is adequate.

I can tell you, sir, that the AGLC, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, who is responsible for this, is meeting with each and every one of the bingo associations; there are some 50-odd throughout the province. So there will be a direct contact, all of which, I believe, will be by the end of this month. That leaves a full month after that face-to-face consultation has occurred for additional written material to be provided.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm curious as to why the government only provided partial documents of the bingo terms and conditions to these groups when the government supposedly wants informed feedback. Why were only partial documents provided?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the draft terms and conditions relative to bingo in full are contained on the web site of the AGLC. Candidly, without detail I wouldn't be able to provide further particulars. If the hon. member wishes to tell me in what fashion she understands there to be a deficiency regarding the material, I'd be happy to consider it.

Ms Blakeman: Sure. I'll supply that.

Final question to the same minister: given that under the proposed terms and conditions a facility which uses electronic bingo, not the handheld, must provide for a bar or a lounge, why is the government creating such an unpalatable choice for many charities? Is the new policy no bingo without booze?

Mr. Stevens: The draft terms and conditions provide particulars with respect to three aspects of electronic gaming, one of which is handheld bingo, another which is POG bingo, machine bingo, and I believe that that is the one that the hon. member is referring to. The draft terms and conditions do draw a connection to the service of alcohol. The fact is that with respect to the introduction of electronic gaming into bingo halls, it's adults-only or 18-only access.

The fact is that these are draft terms and conditions. We have indicated to the bingo associations that by virtue of being draft, we're interested in hearing from them as to what they would like to see, and the AGLC is receiving those alternatives. In meeting with some representatives of the bingo associations, I have indicated that on that particular point the liquor provision should be an option, that it shouldn't be a mandatory condition, and I anticipate that that probably is something that will make its way into the final terms and conditions.

Sixth Anniversary of Election to Legislature

The Speaker: Hon. members, six years ago today, on March 11, 1997, 21 members received the right to attend this particular institution, so let me congratulate today the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, the hon. Minister of Gaming, the hon. Minister of Children's Services, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, the hon. Minister of Revenue, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, the hon. Member for Redwater, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, the hon. Member for Leduc, the hon. Member for Calgary-West, the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the hon. Member for St. Albert, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, and the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane on their sixth anniversary.

Before I call on the first hon. member, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests(reversion)The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to be associated with the health care system that we enjoy in this province, which is measurably one of the best systems in Canada. There are many people who should take responsibility for that. We have outstanding health workers – nurses, technologists, technicians, physicians, and surgeons – but we also have outstanding administrators. In your gallery today are representatives, being chairs and CEOs, of the newly drawn nine-boundary regional health authority model. I would ask that these individuals please stand and be recognized by this House in the traditional manner: Mr. Len Mitzel, chair, region 2; Tom Siemens, CEO, region 2; Jack Davis, chief executive officer of health region 3; Jean Graham and John Vogelzang, chair and CEO of health region 4; Mr. Steve Petz, CEO of region 5; Sheila Weatherill, chief executive officer of health region 6; Robert Jackson and Bob Cable, chair and CEO of region 7; Mr. Dalton Russell, chief executive officer of health region 8; and Patricia Pelton, chief executive officer of health region 9.

head: Members' Statements*The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.head: Oral Question Period Policies

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A question in Oral Question Period is out of order if, among other things, it is long and rambling, is an inquiry about a matter for federal jurisdiction, is hypothetical or seeks the hypothetical, seeks information on a bill scheduled for discussion today, seeks information from a minister whose estimates are up for consideration today, seeks opinions, seeks legal opinions, asks about something before the courts, asks a minister to speculate, asks the minister to comment on something outside the minister's sphere of competence, is unrelated to government policy, seeks comment on a newspaper article, accuses someone of lying, is guilty of naming a member by proper name rather than constituency name or executive office.

Although my question is more of a federal jurisdiction thing and kind of hypothetical and although the bill and budget issue I want to talk about is on the Order Paper under projected government business for consideration this evening prior to the scheduled consideration of the minister's estimates, could the minister give us his opinion or legal advice as it affects matters currently before the courts on what the bill's impact will be 10 years down the road, especially if the minister could speculate, though it is outside the sphere of the minister's competency and doesn't really have a lot to do with government policy? Regardless of that, could the minister speculate regarding a recent newspaper article claiming that a member of the opposition is deliberately lying to the Premier, Ralph Klein, about a bill? Obviously, the sky hasn't fallen, as the opposition predicted.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, I just broke all 14 principles. I trust this bad example provided by Mr. Gillies and me will assist members, researchers, and communications officers in the future. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Canada Winter Games Team Alberta

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to recognize Team Alberta's 342 members, consisting of athletes, coaches, managers, artists, and mission staff, who recently participated in the 10th Canada Winter Games in New Brunswick, which our Minister of Community Development also briefly attended.

Since 1967 the Canada Winter Games have provided a cultural and athletic experience for young athletes and cultural delegates from across Canada. I am proud to report that this year it was mission accomplished. Team Alberta has had its best showing ever and finished third overall with a total of 91 medals: 28 gold, 36 silver, and 27 bronze. They impressed all of Canada and Alberta with their skills, talents, abilities, and their spirit of healthy competition. In doing so, they continued a rich legacy of young Albertans who personify hard work, commitment, and determination.

I was honoured to have been the mayor of the host city of the 1995 Canada Winter Games in Grande Prairie. Athletes and good citizens are made through hard work, commitment, strong families, and the opportunity for competition and growth. Our growing participation and success in regional, provincial, national, and international sports are proof positive that sports are a wise investment in our future. I am proud that Alberta Community Development through its Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation has helped to prepare our athletes for these and similar competitions. Many go on to represent our province and our country at international events.

In recognition of their achievements I ask all members of this Assembly to join me in congratulating the athletes, coaches, volunteers, artists, staff, parents, and family members who took part and participated in the 10th Canada Winter Games. Thank you.

International Women's Day

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, last Saturday, March 8, was International Women's Day. This is the day celebrated around the world to mark the struggle of women everywhere for equality, justice, peace, and development. I salute the women who braved the bone-chilling temperatures by gathering in various communities across the province to celebrate International Women's Day, including two dozen Edmonton women who endured minus 40-degree wind chills to rally in front of city hall. I salute the 350 Edmontonians who in conjunction with these events attended a benefit event that raised over $10,000 for Alberta women's shelters.

Many International Women's Day activities across Canada and around the world this year focused on the imminent invasion and occupation of Iraq. Women know this will not only be a war against Iraq but also in a very real sense a war against Iraqi women and children. Throughout history women often led the struggle opposing war. This year, in 2003, as some nations once again gear up for war, many International Women's Day events included readings of Aristophanes classic play Lysistrata. Lysistrata organized women to withhold certain private relationships from men until they agreed to put an end to a foolish and unnecessary war in ancient Greece. Last Saturday reading Lysistrata was part of International Women's Day events held in Calgary and Medicine Hat. There are similar readings in dozens of communities across Canada and over 1,000 readings in 59 countries around the world. If enough of us raise our voices for peace, we can once again avoid or discourage yet another disastrous war in the Middle East, a region that has in recent decades endured too many wars already.

My colleague from Edmonton-Highlands and I will be joining thousands of Albertans at a major peace rally on Saturday, March 22. I invite the members of this House to join us at that rally. The rally will begin at 1 p.m. at Churchill square in downtown Edmonton.

Similar rallies are being organized in other Alberta communities. Together, Mr. Speaker, we can win the peace.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 94 the Standing Committee on Private Bills has received the petitions presented Monday, March 10, 2003, and can advise the House that the petitions comply with Standing Orders 85 to 89.

Mr. Speaker, this is my report.

The Speaker: Would all hon. members in favour of the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Opposed, please say no. The report is carried.

head: Presenting Petitions

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have at this time a petition urging that there be an increase in AISH rates across this province, and this is organized by Joanne Black in Calgary and signed by many Calgarians.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Bill 27
Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003.

I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that it is an unusual title for a bill, but it is a means, then, to send a message to all Albertans that a special situation has developed within health care in terms of restructuring, and it needs a response in terms of labour relations by this government.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table the response to Written Question 7, accepted by this House yesterday. I would advise the House that copies of the response have been delivered to the Member for Edmonton-Centre, who raised the question, as well as to the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of the third party.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the required number of copies of 50 letters supporting Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. The letters tabled today are from people living in Calgary, Strathmore, and De Winton and are an indication that many Albertans are concerned about the effects that street prostitution has on Alberta's urban communities.

Thank you.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table the Alberta Disability Strategy, prepared by the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, and present it to the government for consideration. Viewers can obtain copies by phoning 422-1095 or toll free 1-800-272-8841.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a court excerpt indicating that the government may or may not represent children who have been abused in care, a practice which some of us in this Legislature find reprehensible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a New Democrat opposition news release dated October 30, 2002, regarding the Premier's visit to Lethbridge in support of the farmers who had broken the law.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a letter from Dianne Strilaeff dated February 25, 2003, and addressed to the Minister of Energy. Mrs. Strilaeff is concerned with the rising cost of natural gas and power and is seeking help to pay her bills.

The Speaker: Additional tablings?

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, did you rise on a point of order?

Mr. Mason: I did indeed, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please proceed then.

Point of Order

Referring to a Member by Name

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, during the answer to my question the Minister of Energy referred to me by name rather than by my constituency. Under Beauchesne 484 it is the custom in the House that no Member should refer to another by name. Members should be referred to in the third person as the "the Honourable Member for . . ."

and so on.

That concludes my point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it was clear that the hon. minister was using a quote from Hansard, in which members' names are printed. That may in fact be a breach of the spirit of the rule but not of the letter of the rule. In any event, if it was a breach of the rule, it was a rather modest one, and I think the House could be just advised of the rule again and advised not to use members' names in the House. Perhaps the Speaker could clear up the question as to whether, in quoting Hansard, one should insert the name of the constituency instead of the name of the member as it's printed in Hansard.

The Speaker: Well, an admonishment was given, directed to the Minister of Energy at the time. Perhaps the Member for Edmonton-Highlands had not heard it, but there certainly was an admonishment provided by the chair at the time.

It is absolutely correct: we do have this anomaly. Hansard refers to the name of the individual rather than the constituency. So you have this, I guess, little – little – dilemma that, in essence, if one is quoting from Hansard, you do run across the name. I think the preferred approach, of course, would be to refer not by name but to the constituency, and that would provide some purity with respect to the whole issue. But, hon. member, admonishment was provided at the time.

Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've received a certain message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits interim supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly, dated March 10, 2003.

Please be seated.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now wish to table the 2003-2004 interim supply estimates. These interim supply estimates will provide spending authority to the Legislative Assembly and the government for the two and a half months ending June 15, 2003. By that date it is anticipated that spending authorization will have been provided for the entire fiscal year ending March 31, 2004. As announced previously, we are tabling Budget 2003 on April 8.

When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $4.8 billion in operating expense and equipment and inventory purchases, $90 million in capital investment, $50 million in nonbudgetary disbursements, and $309 million in lottery fund payments. Interim supply amounts are based on departments' needs to fund government programs and services. While many payments are monthly, other payments are due at the beginning of the quarter and fiscal year. Some payments are seasonal.

2:50 head: Government Motions

11. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2003-04 interim supply estimates, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion.

The question has been called.

[Government Motion 11 carried]

12. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 58(9) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2003-04 interim supply estimates shall be two days.

[Government Motion 12 carried]

Bill 12

Financial Sector Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour today to move second reading of Bill 12, the Financial Sector Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

This bill includes a set of amendments to financial sector statutes administered by the Department of Finance. The vehicle of omnibus legislation is an approach that the department hopes to use in the future to ensure that the Alberta financial sector legislation is updated on a regular basis. It also fosters greater consistency with respect to the business powers of the Alberta financial institutions affected and allows the government to promote a level playing field with their federally regulated competitors on a timely basis.

Alberta Finance is responsible for regulating the insurance industry and provincially incorporated financial institutions operating in this province. The ministry is also responsible for legislation governing a number of public-sector pension plans. Among the major amendments proposed in the legislation is a proposal to allow deposit-taking institutions to acquire life insurance agencies to compete with federal financial institutions; a proposal to exempt employee benefit plans covering medical, dental, prescription drug, and disability benefits from the Insurance Act subject to provision allowing the application of the legislation or elements of it to a long-term disability plan should the need arise; provisions to allow the credit union system to better co-operate nationally; and a provision to formalize the Minister of Finance's ability to approve regulatory guidelines for Alberta Treasury Branches similar to those used for banks and other federally regulated financial institutions.

The first three proposals were the subjects of stakeholder consultation, while the last two were specific to the credit unions and Alberta Treasury Branches and are recommended following consultation with the affected entities. The proposal for regulatory guidelines for ATB is in response to a recommendation of the Auditor General. Within the Insurance Act we're proposing to amend the Insurance Act to exempt employee benefit plans, and this brings our legislation in line with the treatment of those plans elsewhere in Canada, with the decision to exempt them being made after consultation with the stakeholders involved, Mr. Speaker.

Many employees made the point that requiring coverage of these benefits through insurance would be too costly. As well, for some benefits insurance is not readily available, and the act will provide that it would continue to apply to long-term disability benefits only if a regulation is passed to bring it into effect for specific categories of long-term benefits. This provision is put forward to recognize the difference in impact on the individual between employee benefit plans, such as sickness and dental, and long-term disability coverage. We propose to give the minister the ability to cancel the licence of an extraprovincial insurer who fails to meet the legislated $3 million capital requirement, and the provision ensures that extraprovincial insurers are treated the same as Alberta registered insurers for purposes of complying with Alberta's prudential standards.

With regard to the ATB Act, the Credit Union Act, and the Loan and Trust Corporations Act, the insurance companies, deposit-taking institutions, and trust and loan companies are increasingly competing with each other in the provision of services to Albertans. The amendments are designed to provide a level playing field for provincial institutions, and we're proposing to amend the Alberta Treasury Branches Act to allow ATB Financial to own life insurance brokerage subsidies. Similar amendments would be made to the Credit Union Act and the Loan and Trust Corporations Act to enable these institutions to also own life insurance brokerage subsidies. This levels the playing field and allows them to compete with banks and other federally regulated entities in the provision of wealth management services. However, the authority does not extend to property and casualty insurance.

I'd like, Mr. Speaker, now to turn to discrete amendments to the various statutes. Under the ATB Act Lieutenant Governor in Council approval was required to ensure that strategic investments were approved. However, the established business planning processes have eliminated the need for approval of the institution's significant shareholdings. The minister's approval of ATB's business plan provides the necessary control over these shareholdings. Therefore, it is not necessary for the Lieutenant Governor in Council to also approve these investments.

Other amendments include allowing financial leasing directly by ATB, which would harmonize the ATB with federal financial institutions. The ATB amendments would also add additional regulation-making powers to formalize the use of guidelines in setting standards comparable to those followed by federal financial institutions and to adopt regulations governing the treatment of unclaimed deposits. These two amendments act on recommendations by the Auditor General.

Under the Credit Union Act, owing to the speed at which changes occur in the financial services sector, Credit Union Central Alberta will be given the capacity to exercise business powers available to Credit Union Central of Canada, provided those powers do not conflict with the Credit Union Act. Approval by the Lieutenant Governor in Council will be required prior to exercising those business powers. For business reasons dealing with the efficiency and effectiveness of Credit Union Central Alberta and the credit union system generally, a framework for allowing the amalgamation of provincial centrals will be available in the legislation. Conditions for amalgamation would be set, again, by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Other changes include increasing the number of Credit Union Central nominees on the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation's board from one to two members, enabling credit unions to use means other than local newspapers to connect individuals to unclaimed account balances, and provisions requiring disclosure of annual remuneration to the credit union boards to improve transparency to members. Recognizing the need to protect the privacy of an individual board member, the provisions require disclosure on an aggregate basis; for example, the range of remuneration paid on the board and the average individual amount paid to directors. The LTCA amendment brings into the act an exemption from application of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act that was previously contained in a FOIP regulation. The provision also includes a 50-year limit from the time the information is received by the regulator on the FOIP exemption. This provision is similar to the treatment of archived information under the FOIPPA.

Mr. Speaker, under the Public Sector Pension Plans Act the proposed amendment will remove the solvency funding requirements for the statutory public-sector pension plans. It will leave the flexibility to prescribe solvency funding requirements if required in the future. The requirement for the plans to fund on a going-concern basis will remain. Solvency funding requirements are used to determine if there are enough assets to pay benefits earned to date in the event of plan termination. Solvency funding requirements are not necessary for public-sector pension plans because the risk of the employer declaring bankruptcy and winding up the plan is extremely remote. Further, its application to jointly funded public-sector plans can lead to significant volatility and upward pressure on employee and employer contribution rates when market interest rates and investment returns are low and stable. Removing the requirement to fund for solvency will stabilize employee and employer contribution rates and lessen intergenerational inequities, and it again brings us in line with many other public-sector plans in Canada.

Under the universities academic pension plan, Mr. Speaker, as of January 1, 2001, the universities academic pension plan is no longer established under the Public Sector Pension Plans Act and is now regulated under the Employment Pension Plans Act. All of the plan's liabilities and assets have been transferred to the new nonstatutory pension plan.

The consequential amendments include proposed amendments to the Funeral Services Act and the Cemeteries Act to remove references to credit unions and loan corporations as authorized trustees for the purposes of prefunding arrangements such as the purchase of funeral plots or funeral services in advance of death. The very limited trustee powers of these institutions are already set out in their own incorporating statutes. The amendments remove the potential for a loan company or a credit union to incorrectly hold preneed trust moneys. We will be doing a full review of trust powers for provincially incorporated financial institutions at a later date.

Mr. Speaker, again, the purpose of this omnibus legislation is to modernize existing legislation to keep our provincial financial institutions on a level playing field with their federal counterparts. I'd urge all members of the Assembly to support this bill in second reading.

Mr. Speaker, I would move adjournment of the debate at this point in time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 19

Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

As with electricity government is pursuing further changes to the structure of the retail natural gas marketplace in a process that began over 20 years ago. These legislative changes have no effect on the Natural Gas Price Protection Act or on wholesale natural gas prices, which are set between buyers and sellers in the North American market.

Providing natural gas customer choice, which gives customers the ability to buy gas and other related services from the provider of their choice, is not new. Large industrial consumers in Alberta were first given choice in the late 1970s. Small industrial consumers gained this right in 1998. Commercial and residential customers saved when the major investor-owned utility companies gained access to choice in 1996. These rules allowed Alberta consumers served by major investor-owned gas utilities – ATCO Gas North, ATCO Gas South, and AltaGas Utilities – to buy natural gas from the supplier of their choice. At that time, choice was also extended to residential and commercial customers of municipally owned gas utilities at the municipality's discretion. It was not extended to small volume customers of rural gas co-operatives because of their smaller scale and unique nature. Today virtually all industrial customers, which use about 80 percent of the natural gas in the province, have exercised choice as well as about 40,000 residential and commercial consumers. Seven retailers now offer choice, of which two retailers, EPCOR and Enmax, are currently marketing to residential consumers.

With more real-life experience and the implementation of choice on the electricity side, government needs to update the rules for natural gas customer choice. The Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act provides the enabling legislation that will refine the structure of the retail natural gas marketplace in Alberta to provide greater opportunities for customer choice for those who want it. The changes come under the Gas Utilities Act, the Gas Distribution Act, and the Rural Utilities Act.

The proposed changes are intended to expand retail competition in Alberta beyond the two retailers for residential consumers to provide greater opportunities for customer choice; align the retail gas market more closely with the electricity retail market and permit both commodities to be marketed together; enable firms and other utility companies, called default supply providers, to provide regulated natural gas supply service to consumers. Proposed changes under the Gas Utilities Act will improve the ability of about 900,000 consumers served by major utility companies to buy natural gas from the supplier of their choice. These utilities provide about 85 percent of the natural gas to residential and commercial consumers in the province.

Up until now only natural gas utility companies could provide regulated service. The legislation will provide rules for other companies to provide gas supply service regulated by Alberta Energy and Utilities. The provider of regulated gas supply service will be called a default supply provider whether that service is provided by the utility company, as is currently the case, or by a company authorized to act on its behalf. Authorizing a default supply provider would require the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board's approval.

Consumers would have two ways of obtaining their gas supply: buying it at a regulated rate from a default supply provider, regulated by the EUB based on a flow-through of the actual market price for gas. The other option is to buy natural gas at competitive market prices through a contract from a retailer. Gas consumers who don't do anything will continue to receive their gas through the default supplier at flow-through rates just as they do today and have for many years. Contracts would not be regulated except for rules regarding ethical behaviour and the sharing of information to ensure that no company has an unreasonable competitive advantage. Consumers would receive a single bill for gas services from their retailer covering both gas supply cost and utility delivery cost rather than the two bills they currently receive from the retailer and the utility.

Under the proposed changes gas utilities would be able to separate gas supply and billing from the construction of infrastructure and physical delivery of natural gas. At the same time, natural gas utilities would continue to have the exclusive right to provide regulated natural gas delivery service. We also propose to have the EUB establish rules to standardize the exchange of data between utilities and retailers and set standards to assist the market in dealing with a large number of transactions. I should also mention, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta has some of the toughest rules in Canada for gas retailers.

The Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act also changes the Gas Distribution Act, which governs the provision of gas services by 67 rural gas co-operatives serving about 80,000 customers. Rural gas co-ops have played an important role in the development of rural Alberta, and our government will continue to support the rural gas initiative. The Gas Distribution Act currently provides rural gas co-ops with near exclusive rights to provide gas services within their franchised area. The primary change under this act would be the voluntary introduction of customer choice for individual gas co-ops based on an extraordinary resolution by their membership.

The hon. Member for Dunvegan, who led a review of rural gas co-ops in 2001, will outline more about the unique requirements of rural gas co-operatives, the proposed changes under the Gas Utilities Act, and some administrative changes to the Rural Utilities Act.

The proposed legislative changes I have outlined are intended to increase competition in the natural gas marketplace, providing consumers with a greater choice of suppliers to meet their energy needs. These legislative amendments would give consumers better ability to evaluate product offerings through greater convergence between natural gas and electricity retail markets, better ability to choose price stability, if they do so wish, through fixed price contracts, more varied product offerings, improved market efficiency, and more competition on the basis of service. At the same time, consumers who wish to remain on a regulated rate can do so indefinitely. Concurrent amendments to the Electric Utilities Act would align retail electricity and the gas market more closely and permit both commodities to be marketed together under similar rules.

Mr. Speaker, already government efforts to increase competition are paying off. A new company has announced its intent to enter the Alberta market. Other firms have expressed interest in entering the market as well. This will increase the number of retailers selling to residential and commercial consumers. I hope this gives some indication of the widening scope of the natural gas retail market.

Thank you for considering these legislative amendments.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with anticipation that I rise to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act. Again I would like to thank the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and members of the Department of Energy for their courtesy and patience in answering not only the questions I had but also the questions from our crackerjack research staff.

Now, I have been, like many Albertans, following the price of natural gas. The promise that has been made to all Albertans that increased choice will reduce prices is just that. It's a promise. Certainly, prices could fall, but I think they will have to do with the ebb and flow of the North American gas market, not with the specifics of increased competition and more choice and reduced price. That hasn't worked to date with energy deregulation. That has been the promise that has been made. Two years ago, leading up to the election, that promise was made. "Don't worry. Be happy. Trust us. Energy deregulation will work. We will see more competition, and we will see greater choice, lower prices." Well, this bill, unfortunately, in my view, Mr. Speaker, is not going to provide lower prices.

Certainly, there are two steps to the energy deregulation. Bill 19 is one step. Bill 3 is another. They're related, in the view of this member.

Mr. Speaker, companies are told what they can charge for their gas. Everybody, including this hon. member, admires profit.

There's absolutely nothing the matter with profit. There are absolutely no problems with free enterprise, but where are we going to find the profit here if there is a set price from the EUB on a monthly basis as well? Every month the price can change. Now, where's the profit going to be? It's going to come from the pockets of the consumers.

In the last three years consumers have had to dig deep, really deep in their pockets or from their purses or from their wallets to pay for energy deregulation, whether it's electricity or natural gas. Consumers are quite frustrated. I spoke just before question period today with a gentleman from west of the city, and he was outraged. He had a number of questions for me at that time in regard to natural gas. Where would we be in 10 years, and where will this Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act place us in 10 years as consumers in this province? What will be the prices? This gentleman was born and raised in this province and lived all of his life west of the city. He was just newly retired, and he was concerned about the direction we're going in this province with energy deregulation, and it is my view that Bill 19 is just another step. I won't call it a progressive step, but it is certainly a disappointing step down the energy deregulation road.

We've looked at energy deregulation in other jurisdictions. We've done a lot of research on electricity deregulation that has been attempted, and citizens have told their governments that they want no more. They can't afford it anymore, and they want to go back to a low-cost system. I think we should be looking at studying some things with natural gas in this province that are probably not going to be popular with this government.

Now, what we need to do instead of looking at making a promise and a hope – and I'm sure that whenever the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake is speaking on this bill, he's holding his fingers like this, crossing his fingers, hoping that this will work. When we think that Alberta consumers are being faced with and have faced in the past substantial increases in their monthly natural gas bills as a result of higher prices and when we consider, also, that our natural resources, which everyone owns, are sold on the North American market, the government is getting more royalties for these natural resources because the more the natural gas is worth, the larger the amount of revenues that are collected and put in the Alberta treasury.

Now, I don't know if this bill deals with the fundamental issue of skyrocketing resource prices faced by Alberta consumers within the North American market. The current PC government has chosen in the past, during an election year, to provide temporary rebates, and now we have the rebates that are not really rebates. It's just a broken promise. But while hardworking Alberta families get poorer in their pocketbooks from rising natural gas bills, the Alberta government gets richer from resource revenue windfalls. Now, does Bill 19 adjust that? Is Bill 19 a step in the right direction? I cannot say that it is, Mr. Speaker.

When we look at what has happened, perhaps it is time that this Assembly – and I know there have been stakeholder consultations with this bill. This bill could easily be called the convergence bill or the convergence act, to converge the electricity markets and the natural gas markets and who knows what's next. I hope it's not water. That'll be the next thing, water, so that the salespersons can come to the door and not only sell a long-term natural gas contract but a long-term electricity contract and perhaps even a long-term contract for water. I hope we don't go there.

Mr. Smith: Point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Smith: Beauchesne 459. We're going to hope against hope, Mr. Speaker, that this member will return to the principles of the bill, which is the topic in second reading. So we'll ask him to maintain to the principles, as it's important to this House.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you want to speak on the point of order? The Minister of Energy is rising on a point of order on relevance.

Mr. MacDonald: In response to that point of order, Mr. Speaker, in Erskine May, Parliamentary Practice, page 378, "A Member must direct his speech to the question under discussion or to the motion or amendment," but "the precise relevance of an argument may not always be perceptible." Now, I'm certainly discussing the implications of Bill 19 at this time, and I don't see a point of order here, but I would like to continue with my remarks regarding Bill 19.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, do you want to speak on the point of order?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I would just like to ask what the citation was, for my own purposes.

The Acting Speaker: Beauchesne 459.

Mr. Mason: Beauchesne 459. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, are you going to speak on the point of order?

Mr. Mason: As soon as I find it, Mr. Speaker. Yes. Beauchesne 459 states clearly:

Relevance is not easy to define. In borderline cases the Member should be given the benefit of the doubt, although the Speaker has frequently admonished Members who have strayed in debate.

The words that I heard from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar seemed to be indicating that he was talking about markets and commodities, which is precisely what is established in this bill.

So it may not be directly on gas, but I would find it unduly restrictive to force people to limit their remarks strictly to that when they want to establish a point relative to the markets of commodities that were previously in a regulated market.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wish to speak on the point of order?

The Minister of Energy rose on a point of order citing Beauchesne 459, which states:

Relevance is not easy to define. In borderline cases the Member should be given the benefit of the doubt, although the Speaker has frequently admonished Members who have strayed in debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had the floor. He was speaking to the bill in second reading, and I believe that he was trying to make a point. I hope that this clarifies that the second stage, at which we are today, is to talk about the principles of the bill.

The chair requests the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to continue with his remarks.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, with Bill 19, when we are making amendments to the Gas Utilities Act, the Gas Distribution Act, and the Rural Utilities Act, we have to consider the implications of this in the entire domestic market. I'm sure that in these difficult times the hon. Minister of Energy is doing his level best to work to ensure that commodities such as natural gas and electricity are delivered to all Albertans regardless of whether they're in Nordegg or whether they're in Innisfail-Sylvan Lake or Edmonton or Calgary.

Now, when we discuss this bill and we look at the Navigant report, when we look at other discussion mechanisms that were used to talk about the convergence of the natural gas markets and the electricity markets, we failed to outline the fact that not everyone was consulted duly, like consumers. Many consumers that I talked to in regard to this bill were not aware that on the Department of Energy web site were some of the amendments to the Gas Utilities Act, the Gas Distribution Act, and the Rural Utilities Act and had been there for some time. Not all Albertans, who because of this government's policies are now paying sky-high natural gas bills, were aware that this discussion process to bring on convergence was going on, and when you think that we are making changes to the structure of the natural gas retail marketplace to allow for more competition, then the consumers should have played a bigger part in that consultation process.

Certainly, when you talk to the rural gas co-ops, which the hon. member mentioned before, they have expressed concern about this in the past. When we think of how this legislation will affect the operation of gas co-ops by allowing their members to buy natural gas from other suppliers if choice is approved by two-thirds of the members, well, then, perhaps we should give two-thirds of the residents of the city of Edmonton or the city of Calgary the same choice. Why do we not give them the choice to see if they want to have this supposed choice in the marketplace or this free-for-all? Why does that choice to stay away from that legislation or stay away from that idea apply to the gas co-ops and not apply to the citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar?

Now, some citizens have approached me in the mall with just that question, and they do not think that they already have that choice. You know, what's their choice? Slam the door on the door-to-door salesman? Is that the choice they have? These are polite people, and they're certainly not going to do that. They're going to hear the sales argument, and I bet that by the time the snow flies next fall, there will be perhaps one or two people approaching them in regard to this matter. But they really don't want to choose between A and B as far as natural gas marketing goes. They want low prices that are guaranteed, and they want low prices that they can rely on if they're a senior on a fixed income or a senior with a pension income that just has a modest adjustment for a cost of living increase. They want to know that the price they're going to pay for natural gas to heat their homes is going to be predictable.

I'm sure we can say: oh, well, the answer is in the long-term contracts which are going to be available through Bill 19. But people don't want to gamble with that. People do not want to gamble with their utility bills. There are enough things to gamble on in this province, as we all know, without having to gamble on your utility bills. People want reliable and affordable utility costs, and they do not want to shop around. They'll certainly shop around for various other consumer products, but consumers just want reliability, and they want it to be affordable, and Bill 19 is not going to provide that. Why, after all the years of having some of the lowest heating costs in North America – and we're blessed with the natural resources, the natural gas, in this province – would we be entertaining this legislative notion that's Bill 19? Mr. Speaker, I don't understand why.

In researching for this bill, I came across a very interesting bit of information in the Legislature Library, and that was the fact that at one point, Mr. Speaker, a time period of 14 years, there was not an increase in natural gas rates in this province for residential use, and that amazed me.

Rev. Abbott: When was that?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is asking me when that was. Well, that was in the '60s and in the early '70s.

Rev. Abbott: Well, times have changed a lot since then.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member is quite correct. Times have changed; indeed they have. At that time there was a system of domestic price and export price, and now we're all tied in together with the North American price.

It's going to be very interesting as debate proceeds in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, when we allow with Bill 19 for the flow-through price of natural gas, how this is exactly going to work. Are consumers going to become more confused or more frustrated, or are they going to be shopping around for natural gas contracts?

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we look further at this bill and from the hon. member's opening remarks, I would have to assume that the object of Bill 19, well, is twofold. We were talking earlier about the convergence, but it is to align the natural gas retail marketplace with the electricity marketplace so that, again, one retailer can visit and try to sell these electricity and natural gas contracts together. I'm adding this in with water; when will we be back to deal with that issue?

The second point here is that this bill will open up the natural gas marketplace in an attempt to attract more retail competition, and I have to say at this time that it is a further step down the road of energy deregulation.

When we talk about consumer choice, again, or the ability for consumers to purchase natural gas from the provider of their choice, that has been available in the past history of this province to large industrial natural gas consumers since the late 1970s and to small industrial consumers since 1998 and to most – most, I say – residential consumers for the last six years. But currently customers who have chosen not to sign with a retailer pay a spot rate based on the monthly market price of natural gas.

Now, when we look at the city of Edmonton as an example, most residents pay the monthly ATCO Gas price that is based on the market price, and it is regulated, of course, by the EUB, or the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, but as I understand it, in my research on Bill 19, it indicates that between residential and commercial customers 40,000 people have chosen to sign a contract with a retailer for natural gas. Currently, signing a contract is one of the only ways for consumers now to receive stable monthly bills. The old days are gone, and certainly the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is right. At one time, going back into the '20s, natural gas was considered a mere nuisance by the oil industry, and they had to flare it off, and then the industry got their backs up whenever the government of this province of that day forced them to have some control of the natural gas. [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. We have just begun second reading on this bill, and I hope that the members on the side opposite and the minister in charge of this area will listen carefully and change his mind and withdraw the bill after he hears some concerns that are genuine concerns expressed by Albertans from all backgrounds and occupations.

This bill will clearly further entrench the wrongheaded deregulation experiment that this government has been proceeding with. This wrongheaded experiment is so called by Albertans because they know from personal experience that it's extremely, extremely costly. It imposes on them unwanted costs, unbearable new costs. It constrains them from continuing to enjoy the delivery of these necessary utilities, electricity and, in this case, natural gas, from sources and providers whose track record is well established. There's a historical track record, a track record which, I think, is referred to with pride by Albertans because it delivered them the goods both in terms of the stability of prices and the low cost of these utilities.

All of that is being destroyed by deregulation. It happened with electricity, and now it's happening with natural gas, and now further steps are taken to change the legislation of this province to allow some new retailers to come in. It's a bill that, unfortunately, is designed to bring into the picture a multinational player, a transnational company. It's driven by industry. It's not driven by consumers under the notion of consumer choice, consumer choice which cannot be about gas. Gas is gas. Don't tell me that consumers will have opportunity to choose between gas A and gas B. There's one kind of gas. There's no choice. What we are going to see here is a choice between unregulated retailers and regulated retailers.

Albertans have not been asked, and it's not a customer/consumer driven bill. Let there be no doubt about that. It's a bill that is, I guess, designed to help this Direct Energy. I had the pleasure of meeting with representatives of Direct Energy, who told me very clearly that their purchase of ATCO retail services is contingent on a bill that they want in place before they will come here. Come here to do what? To not add value to the natural gas utility but to extract profit out of simply retailing that and then, of course, asking for legislative authority that once they get entry into our homes to sell gas, they can sell other services at the same time such as furnace cleaning, I was told. Even furnaces, security services. All of that – all of that – and being done without first ascertaining with Albertans whether they want this kind of choice, this kind of monopoly right to this huge transnational company to be able to do these kinds of transactions with us when we as Albertans know what choice means.

There are lots of retailers in Alberta already. There are lots of heating companies in Alberta. All of those are going to suffer, Mr. Speaker, as a result of the monopoly being grabbed, granted by virtue of this act, to this one favourite of the government, this Direct Energy. I ask the question: why this particular favour to this particular utility player? That's the principle, that's the rationale, and that's the spirit of this bill. I'm talking about its principles and the driving forces behind it, the so-called talk about creating a new market structure. For whom? The answer is clear: for Direct Energy, not for the consumers of Alberta.

Therefore, this bill does not deserve the support of this Legislature, Mr. Speaker. It will obviously lead to amending the existing Gas Utilities Act, the Gas Distribution Act, and the Rural Utilities Act, but the question is: why are these bills being amended and for whom? Whose interests will these amendments serve? That's where I find no promise either in the government's own news release that it'll lead to lower costs nor the promises that Direct Energy made in that meeting that I had the opportunity to have with them. They said that they cannot guarantee lower prices; all they can guarantee is long-term contracts. How high will the costs be? "We don't know. That's up to the market." Well, will it lead to a total reduction in the size of the bill that we pay? "No, it won't. We will be charging new service charges." There'll be new costs added to what we already have, which are very high costs, and this Legislature has been speaking about those costs ever since we started the session. This bill will exacerbate the problems that Albertans face, problems created by this government's own policy in action and legislation up to this point.

This bill will simply deepen and broaden the scope of those difficulties for Albertans, and therefore I invite my colleagues to pay very special attention to the concerns that have been expressed by all kinds of observers, many of them disinterested politically at this point. The Consumers' Coalition and its legal adviser, Jim Wachowich, state very clearly that costs will go up as a result of this bill. The government's own briefing papers that were released last week, two weeks ago acknowledge that it will have a negative impact on the cost that we pay as consumers. It will create more confusion, and it will not deliver choice. There is no choice.

It will in fact limit choice in that it will give this Direct Energy company special entry opportunities into our homes so that they can sell the furnaces and the furnace cleaning, and the companies that we have indigenously grown in this province, in this city will be the ones who'll be cast aside, who won't have that kind of opportunity to have direct access to us through their billing, through their retailing activities, and all those retailing activities will cost more. Those costs will have to be recovered. Not only will those costs have to be recovered by the companies of Direct Energy, they will want to make profit on the costs. Otherwise, why invest? Why invest in retailing if you can't make profit? There'll be, of course, profit added to the cost of the gas itself, and then there'll be the service costs, which now will increase, Mr. Speaker.

I just want to, I guess, draw the attention of the House to something that was written in the Edmonton Journal today, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I hope I can quote from it. Paula Simons, one of the columnists, argues that simply deregulation wasn't enough to entice new retailers and entice customers to switch to these new retailers. She says, Consumers saw no reason to leave time-honoured suppliers for the uncertainty of new retailers. And it's not as if anyone can sell you better gas. [Because] gas is gas. And no retailer could sell it below cost.

So the province "levelled the playing field." [How?] The only way it could entice retailers into the game, and the only way it could convince customers to switch, was to lob a grenade into the works. She continues: "Gas prices have shot up because of supply, demand and politics." Those politics continue. This government has been playing politics with the well-being of Albertans when it comes to the availability of utilities and their costs.

If this government were really interested in controlling costs and keeping them stable, it would not have removed the regulatory and legislative requirements that companies that produce gas had to respect, and those were, 10 years ago, that there remain underground enough reserves for the next 25 years for the use of Albertans. When you have that kind of supply and a condition that those reserves must be kept, that keeps costs low, that prevents speculation from taking place. Those requirements were removed, brought down to seven years some five, six years ago, about the time that I got elected to this Legislature for the first time, and even that requirement now has been removed entirely. No wonder speculators are having a field day and consumers in this province are suffering as a result of this.

So it is those politics of the gas market that really must be questioned, that must be subjected to scrutiny in this Legislature if all of us are concerned about the economic well-being of all Albertans, particularly household consumers. We cannot in good conscience fail to ask these very fundamental questions about the real reasons behind the increase in costs and the volatility of costs. This government's own policies are responsible for it. It's about time this government was held accountable for the failure of its policies which have created havoc on the family budgets of millions of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I'm running out of time. I think I have stated very clearly where I stand, where the New Democrat opposition stands in relation to what should happen to this bill. It deserves to be rejected after a thoughtful, serious, thorough debate of this bill and the provisions of the bill and a critical scrutiny of the long-term policy of the government that ought to be held responsible for the crisis that we find ourselves in now.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in. We have five minutes for questions. Anybody wish to ask a question? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened intently to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and I share most of his concerns with this bill and would ask him to share with this Assembly and all Albertans what he finds to be the worst part of this particular piece of legislation.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I will just draw the attention of the House to the government's own background papers on this bill. This bill will increase the costs to consumers. This bill will add costs to the already very high costs of home heating, for heating our water that we need, and for cooking in some cases. It will impose on Albertans the choices they don't want. They never asked for them.

This is the irony, Mr. Speaker. The worst part of this bill is that it's so presumptuous. It shows that the government is so presumptuous. It says that Albertans must take a cold shower. They need to be educated. They need to be exposed to the vicissitudes of the markets. That's the only way they will learn to sign on to these long-term contracts which the retailers will have them sign under conditions which approach, in my view, intimidation and intense propaganda.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, a question for the hon. member. I'm just wondering how he can justify talking out of both sides of his mouth when during question period he says that Ontario people benefit from hedging and signing long-term contracts, yet here he's just said that he wants to deny that right to Albertans. So I'm just wondering how he justifies his flip-flopping and his double-talk.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know where the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar has been. This member never talked about Ontario people enjoying these services that he's now trying to offer to his own constituents, who will hold him to account on this. I never said that Ontario residents are enjoying the choices that he is now bringing through this bill to Albertans.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I really wonder where the hon. member gets the information that no Albertans would like this bill or wouldn't like choice, that they're not asking for it. Every time we've ever seen price increases in Alberta, there have been phone calls to numerous MLAs saying that we should have choice. I just don't understand why this hon. member always wants to keep everybody under thumb so they can't have choices in this world.

Thank you.

Dr. Pannu: A very good question, Mr. Speaker. A very good question. It's the consumers of Alberta and the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta that are entitled to make these statements, not a particular member of this House, be that me be or some other member saying that we want this choice. The Consumers' Coalition of Alberta speaks for consumers in general. I said that they are nonpartisan. They really speak to the concerns of Alberta's consumers, and that coalition says that this bill will only increase the hurt that Albertans are already feeling from the current deregulation policies of this government.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. There being no further questions, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to offer the following comments in support of the proposed legislative amendments for natural gas. Our government believes consumers benefit from competition and wants to remove the legislative impediments to choice for all Alberta consumers. There are two groups of Albertans who do not currently access choice: municipally owned gas utilities and rural gas co-ops. Other citizens have some choice, which is different from what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar earlier indicated.

Mr. Speaker, 21 smaller municipalities, which currently own their gas utility, have the legislative ability to offer choice to their members. These municipalities have chosen to exempt themselves from offering choice by passing a bylaw to that effect under the Municipal Government Act. The Alberta government is not changing any of these arrangements. It believes the decision to access choice rests with the individual municipality. If the citizens of those communities want customer choice, they need to persuade their town council to reverse the bylaw and extend the choice to its citizens.

The situation of rural gas co-ops is somewhat different. Since 1973 rural gas co-ops have provided clean-burning natural gas to rural Albertans at competitive rates. Their success is a result of the hard work and perseverance by rural Albertans and co-operation between farmers, industry, and government. Under the Gas Distribution Act co-ops have a legislative exemption from offering customer choice because of their unique situation.

First, they range in size from less than a hundred members to just over 4,500 members. Co-ops have significantly smaller customer bases over which to spread their costs compared to, for instance, ATCO's customer base of 840,000 or to AltaGas's customer base with over 55,000. Second, rural gas co-ops buy gas at over 450 locations across the province. One individual gas co-op may have as many as 25 purchase points, while investor-owned utilities have very few wholesale purchase points. It could be very costly for rural gas co-ops to develop and implement a supplement or load-balancing system for so many gas purchase points. Third, many co-ops use different billing systems, and providing choice may require extensive changes to these billing systems or in many cases a totally new billing system. At the same time, during the high gas prices of the winter of 2000-2001 some rural gas co-op members asked their elected representatives why they could not sign fixed price contracts with other suppliers. So in spite of these obstacles, our government wants to remove any legislative impediments to allow choice for rural gas co-ops.

Last year the Minister of Energy asked me to lead a review of rural gas co-op issues, including customer choice. The Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops was an important participant in that process. The committee recognized the potential financial hardships imposing choice could have on co-op operations because of their small scale and the cost of changes to administrative systems to implement choice. It recommended removing the legislative impediments for individual co-ops to provide choice to their members, but it felt the decision to offer choice must rest with the individual co-op members.

As a result, these proposed Gas Distribution Act amendments would enable individual rural gas co-ops to allow their members to buy gas from the supplier of their choice if it is approved by a democratic vote of the members of that co-op. This would only occur if two-thirds – and I repeat, Mr. Speaker, two-thirds – of the members of a co-op present at a special general meeting called for that purpose passed an extraordinary resolution calling for customer choice. Quorum requirements for a special meeting have been strengthened from 10 percent of the membership for usual business to 25 percent for a general meeting, at which an extraordinary resolution on customer choice would be voted on. This will ensure that any future decision to implement choice will be based on fair representation of the membership. If the co-op members do not choose customer choice, exclusive rights for gas co-ops would continue under the Gas Distribution Act. The proposed legislative changes include regulation-making powers in the event an individual co-op decides to offer choice. The Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops and member co-ops would be consulted extensively if any draft regulations are developed.

Changes to the Rural Utilities Act include changes in the following administrative areas. The first change involves balancing a co-op member's right to obtain a copy of the membership list while ensuring protection of personal privacy. The second change involves enabling those with enduring power of attorney to vote on behalf of a rural utility member to ensure these members' interests can be properly represented in decision-making. A third change requires rural water associations to maintain a deposit reserve fund for replacing water systems similar to what is required presently by rural gas co-ops and REAs. More and more water co-ops are being formed to bring freshwater to rural residents and farms, so proper funding must be set aside to defray major costs of system upgrades or replacements.

Mr. Speaker, these changes allow the government to move ahead with customer choice while protecting the unique situation of rural gas co-ops. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29 any questions? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There seems to be a bit of confusion, certainly for me, and I must admit that I'm easily confused. There's a situation here that appears to allude to the fact that deregulation is causing certain changes in the prices of natural gas. First of all, I'd like to know if the hon. member could tell me if 1985 might have been the right year for deregulation of natural gas, and secondly, did that deregulation cause the under $2 a gigajoule prices we saw in Alberta last summer?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, gas prices are set on a world-scale basis, and whether we have some of these regulations or not, I don't anticipate that they are the causes for gas prices to be as volatile as they are. There are other factors that cause prices to fluctuate up and down.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, did you have a question?

Dr. Taft: No, but I'd like to speak to it.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else have a question?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to be perfectly clear. I think this is a badly conceived piece of legislation. I'm reminded of a west African saying that says: many complaints have made the giant lizard death. I propose to you that the giant lizard here is the government. Let's just look at some of the correspondence on this. Has this government learned nothing from electricity deregulation? I'm now looking at correspondence to the department from Direct Energy that says that Direct Energy "supports the Department's vision of aligning the gas retail market more closely with the structure of the retail electricity market." Surely, that should make all members of this Assembly, all citizens of this province shake in their boots. My goodness. How about this correspondence from EPCOR to the department? "EPCOR is very supportive of aligning, to the extent possible, the regulatory and policy frameworks governing retail gas and electricity markets." Have we learned nothing from the destructive and expensive and pointless experiment in electricity deregulation? Apparently not, and we are now about to embark on a duplication experiment with the gas market. The whole notion behind this legislation is misguided, misplaced, and mistaken.

I've heard in comments from government members and government backbenchers on this bill that it will bring in more competition, and I don't doubt that that's to some extent, at least, the purpose of this legislation. I will say this over and over and over in this Assembly for probably as long as I'm here: competition works sometimes; competition fails other times. The evidence and the theory on that are absolutely clear. There are limits to competition.

Anybody here who has studied economics will know that markets sometimes fail. Sometimes competition is a bad idea. Electricity deregulation has shown that, and there are many other examples, and I'd be happy to tell you about other examples by way of illustration. We could go, for example, to the issue that's been in the news again in the last couple of days about antibiotics. Now, this does relate, in case the Minister of Energy wants to pop up on a point of order, to the debate here. Antibiotics. What if we just had a complete free market on antibiotics? Well, what would happen? We would see antibiotics used even more indiscriminately than they are now, and the externalities of that, the costs of that would be enormous. [interjections] I'm glad I'm getting so many responses from the government members.

We are finding in antibiotics, Mr. Speaker, that competition is causing enormous problems. It's causing all kinds of complications, all kinds of negative externalities. Unlimited competition in that field would be a disaster. Even the limited competition we've had is seriously problematic.

We could look at other examples, Mr. Speaker. We could talk about health care. Now, I have debated health care economics in here many times. I've written on health care economics. The evidence on health care economics is clear: competition does not work very well in the health care sector. In fact, a society is better to organize its health care delivery as a public service than as a competitive commodity, and the evidence for that and the theory supporting it are simply overwhelming.

We could, of course, go beyond this. We could go on to issues of justice. For example, we would all, I hope, be offended if justice was turned over to the marketplace so that it was up for sale to the highest bidder. That can be done. It has been done in history. It's done even today in some parts of the world, where you can actually buy and sell judgments. We would see that as morally wrong. There's a limit to the marketplace there; right? Of course there is, and there are limits to the market forces for natural gas as well, Mr. Speaker.

The fundamental premise of this legislation is mistaken. Competition is not going to bring the price down. It is not going to have the effects that this government so badly wants. What it is going to lead to is market failure, a well-recognized experience, a well-recognized condition, where a market does not work effectively to deliver a product at a low price to the consumers. Market failure is what we are seeing in electricity deregulation, and we are going to see that in this case, as well, with natural gas, especially – and it's just stunning – when we see companies like Direct Energy advocating for us to align the natural gas market with the electricity market. I think we're going to have to work very hard to ensure that the public is generally and broadly aware of that information, because we know how the public feels about electricity deregulation: they are unhappy.

There have also been many comments in this Legislature about how people want choice, how people are desperate for choice on natural gas. I can tell you that I've never had one call in my constituency office asking for choice, and I can tell you also, Mr. Speaker, that there have been extensive surveys done about how badly or how little consumers want choice over natural gas. You know what? Almost no consumers want choice between natural gas suppliers. What they want is cheap, reliable, service. One of the reasons for that, frankly, is that there's very little room to add value to this particular product.

We can look at lots of other products. We can look at restaurants and food services, where the market does work well for competition, is effective, and where consumers have wonderful choice, businesses flourish. It's a great idea. It's exactly the kind of place where we want a market to function. Well, of course, there are endless ways to add value to food, endless ways to improve it, to change the flavours, to change the style, the quantity, make it cheaper, all kinds of opportunities to tailor-make food to the marketplace.

What about natural gas? Well, let's see. Are we maybe going to have a choice where people might buy peppermint-scented gas or ketchup-scented gas or maybe in some parts of the province garlic-flavoured gas? I don't know. Or how about different colours of gas? You know, is somebody going to pay more so they can have rose-coloured gas or yellow gas? No. There's no point in that. Gas is gas is gas is gas. There's no way that consumers could care less as long as the gas they're provided with meets basic quality standards. That's all they want, and that does raise a point for me which maybe at some point in the debate the Minister of Energy will be able to address: are there quality standards laid out in legislation so that all gas in this province meets basic standards of quality? That's a question I'll look for careful attention from the Minister of Energy on.

Beyond meeting the basic standards of quality, people simply want a supply of gas as a cheap and reliable source at a predictable price.

And because there's very little chance for added value to gas, what's a marketer to do? What are they going to say? We have what? We add what value to your product? All they can do is create an image, a corporate image that somehow the gas from one company is more appealing than the gas from a different company. That's going to require huge investments, Mr. Speaker, in branding and in image management, investments that are of absolutely no practical value to either the product or the consumer. All it's going to do is drive up the costs. So we are going to see the base level of gas get more expensive.

Ordinary Albertans are not going to benefit from this legislation. I can tell you that there are not, as far as I know, any citizens of this province who want to have more people marketing life's necessities to them. I haven't had anybody say: gee, I wish I had more telemarketers phoning me, trying to sell me products. I've not heard that from any Albertans. I haven't heard any Albertans say: gee, I wish my doorbell rang more often at suppertime so that I can welcome more marketers into my home to tell me about what they're selling, or I wish I had more junk mail so that I could sort through it and choose who my gas marketer is. Albertans don't want that, Mr. Speaker, but that's what they're going to get. That's what they're already getting in spades in legislation.

Mrs. McClellan: Isn't he a socialist?

Dr. Taft: The Deputy Premier is raising issues of socialism. I would dispute that fundamentally. What we have here is a government that is ideologically committed to the marketplace no matter what. Whether it works or doesn't, they are going to stick to it. A socialist would be somebody who is irrevocably opposed to the marketplace. My policy is: use the marketplace when it works, and don't use it when it doesn't. That's exactly what this government ought to be doing. A marketplace is not an idol to be worshiped. A marketplace is a tool to be used. Economic policy is a tool to be used. It's not a means to an end in itself, Mr. Speaker, but what we have in this legislation is a celebration of the marketplace for its own good, even though it's going to cost people more, even though it's going to lead, quite possibly, to a wilder fluctuation in prices, even though it's going to lead to all kinds of anguish for consumers. We're going to go ahead anyway just because we happen to worship the idol of the marketplace.

Use market forces when they are shown to work; do not use them when they are not. That was a lesson, Mr. Speaker, that our fathers and grandfathers and mothers and grandmothers learned the hard way, and that's how we got into things like regulated electricity and regulated gas in the first place. The original markets for those kinds of services were wide open free-for-alls, and they didn't work. That's how we got into regulation in the first place. We should not have forgotten those lessons of our ancestors. The great wisdom of our ancestors has gone out the door with this government.

What we are asking here is for small consumers to take on an unreasonable burden. Small consumers don't want it. I am happy and it's perfectly good for large industrial consumers to be able to play on the unregulated gas market because they employ full-time staff at very considerable expense to do nothing but monitor the gas market. How many people are aware here what the most volatile commodity in history has been until the last couple of years? Natural gas. If you wanted to trade one product on the exchange, the most volatile one was natural gas. Do you know what it is now, Mr. Speaker? It's now electricity. The price swings in those two products are far more extreme, far more volatile than any other product that you can trade in, and we are exposing through this government's policies the ordinary Albertan to the most volatile products on the exchange market without any purpose. The only people who can keep track of these things and can manage effectively to these kinds of market forces are major corporations, who employ full-time, expert staff to do nothing but monitor the volatility of those products.

So we are simply putting consumers at the mercy of the market. They don't want that. They're going to pay more. They're going to be inconvenienced. The only group that's going to benefit from this, potentially, is companies like the ones we're seeing in this correspondence: Direct Energy and EPCOR and other related companies. Let's face it. This government exists to service those companies. At least, that's the image they certainly are portraying these days.

So, Mr. Speaker, you can tell from my comments today that I am strongly opposed to the entire direction of this legislation. It's misguided. It's going to serve the interests of Albertans poorly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very interested in the member's statements during his discussion there of competition and his example of antibiotics and the fact that if you had increased competition with antibiotics, you'd have a flood of antibiotics into the market, that people would be taking them like candy, I think, is kind of what he insinuated, yet they are prescribed by qualified medical professionals. I'm wondering if he's insinuating that our medical professionals are simply gouging the patients for a money motive. I guess I would say that if he fails to answer my question, I'll take that as a yes.

Dr. Taft: I'll be thrilled to answer his question at the appropriate time, which is during committee. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There were comments made with respect to the volatility of certain commodities, and I would like to know if pork bellies are maybe more volatile than natural gas, and I want to make a point: I said "pork bellies," not the Liberal "pork barrels" which, on the other hand, are pretty much constant.

There was some suggestion about gas is gas is gas, and I would like to ask a question. To this point in Alberta has the member had a choice of gas with a furnace maintenance system, gas with an air conditioning system, gas with a hot water heater, gas with a total utility package, or perhaps gas with a thermal generator?

Dr. Taft: I'll be thrilled to respond during the appropriate time, which is committee. Thank you.

Mr. Renner: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Renner: I just have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: This is the five minutes allocated for question and answer.

Mr. Renner: Yes.

The Acting Speaker: Yes. Okay.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, my citation is, in fact, Standing Order 29, and the member has indicated that he will be more than happy to answer questions at the appropriate time, but I would just like to point out to the member that Standing Order 29 reads:

A period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each member's questions and comments.

So I would just point out to the member that the appropriate time is, in fact, now.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the point of order.

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In fact, this provision was put in the last House leaders' agreement over some concerns from many contributing members in this Assembly because it is the belief of many people in this Assembly that given the long-standing tradition of parliamentary processes throughout Commonwealth countries on this globe, there traditionally hasn't been a question-and-answer period. There is one in Ottawa. They have tried it there; it's worked very well. Of course, they have a much greater participation in speeches and debates by private members who represent the government side. It would be appropriate for us to have questions and answers at all times if that was also the tradition in this Assembly, but it is not. The tradition in this Assembly has been to have the give-and-take of debate during committee. That is the procedure that this hon. member wishes to adhere to, and it is well within his rights to do so.

The Acting Speaker: On the point of order, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just wondering why the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is arguing against Standing Order 29(2) when I specifically remember her saying how happy she was to be asked a question. In fact, she said that she waited nine years to be asked a question. I remember. I think it was me who asked her the very first question, and then if I remember right, she dodged the question. So I'm just wondering why she's against it now.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to this point of order, and I refer to 29(2) of the Standing Orders which says that following each speech, a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each member's questions and comments.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I particularly do like this provision, although I certainly argued at the time that it should be in addition to the 20 minutes' speaking time, not taken from it, and argued that it was basically a way of reducing speaking time for members. However, it is a valuable tool, in my view, and actually I quite enjoy the give-and-take that it brings. However, there is nothing in 29(2) which requires a member to respond if he or she chooses not to.

In a similar way, in the formal question period there is no requirement for the government to actually answer the questions.

Mr. Speaker, it is called “question period” and it is not called “answer period,” as we on this side well know. We have stood in our place and asked very sincere questions of the government, only to be told that they are monitoring the situation, or in some way they slip into a message box that has no bearing whatsoever on the question actually asked. This is very common and frequent. However, it is quite within the rules, and I think Beauchesne’s are quite clear. I don’t know the exact citation, but the government is not obligated to answer the questions, and frequently they do not. So I would argue in reference to the point of order made by the Member for Medicine Hat that, in fact, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is well within his rights to not answer the question, and it is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else on the point of order?

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat rose on a point of order citing Standing Order 29 and making specific reference to sub (2). Hon. members, this is five minutes that’s allocated for question and answer or response. There is no compulsion to ask a question; there is no compulsion to respond to the question.

So there is no point of order, but this is certainly a point of clarification.

Debate Continued

The Acting Speaker: Do we have any more minutes left? Okay.

Does anybody else have any questions? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah, the question I was going to ask is – in his speech the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview said that all natural gas is the same, and I’m just wondering what he bases that information on, because in fact there are different qualities of natural gas. There are certainly different grades of natural gas. It’s very similar to gasoline, where you can get, you know, your unleaded and your premium and your mid-grade, et cetera. I’m just wondering why he talks about something that he obviously knows very little about?

Dr. Taft: I’ll respond during committee if the member is there. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Yes. I’m a little concerned about how low the opposition seems to hold our constituents in terms of their capabilities, in terms of their ability to operate in the market. Our constituents are used to getting mortgages themselves. I mean, there is no difference between money, you know. Money is just money. They borrow money, and they’re capable of understanding, you know, different mortgages – closed mortgages, open mortgages – different ways of acquiring money. Our constituents are perfectly capable of that. Why is it that, suddenly, when it comes to gas, they’re no longer capable . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, this is an opportunity to ask a question and make comments, not to make a statement. Do you have a question?

Ms DeLong: Okay. Well, I’m just thinking, you know: what does the hon. member think our constituents are capable of?

Dr. Taft: Well, now, that would be interesting to discuss in committee, and I’ll look forward to that. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, are you ready to ask a question?

Ms Carlson: On debate. Not for a question.

The Acting Speaker: There being no further questions, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it’s been an entertaining afternoon so far and certainly interesting to see the amount of comments off the record that have been provoked by various members speaking this afternoon. It’s interesting that the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert would talk about those that were not responded to, but in fact what we had in far greater volume this afternoon were side comments from him and several other members, in fact many members of this Assembly who chose to do that rather than follow the processes outlined in this Legislature and actually enter into debate. It was nice to see, though, that one private member who supports the government’s side, the Member for Dunvegan, actually did rise in debate this afternoon to support his colleague who brought this . . . [interjection] I hear more chirping from the Member for St. Albert. Perhaps you’d like to put your comments on the record. If not, stay quiet.

The Member for Dunvegan had some interesting comments to say, and we can only hope that more people who support this particular bill would rise in debate and explain their reasons for its support, as well, because it’s good for Albertans to hear and to know what it is that those members, private members who support the government’s side, in the government front bench, think about when they’re coming to the conclusions of why they would bring some legislation into the Assembly. This is a good example of a piece of legislation that people do need to know about in this province and fully understand why the government has brought it in in the manner that they have and also want to know what their expectations are of this legislation and the timing of how it’s been brought in.

Energy deregulation as a whole has been a hot topic in this Legislature for many years, five to seven years, I believe, if my memory serves me correctly. When this government first started floating this idea as a trial balloon in terms of following their ideology, which of course is that the free market prevails, which we have heard some comments on this afternoon and lots of sidebar comments on – it is my observation, Mr. Speaker, from having spent now nearly 10 years in this Assembly, that this government does bow to the altar of free market whenever they can. Whenever there doesn’t seem to be another easy solution for them to get where they need to be, this is where they go.

We’ve heard the arguments in various areas from an ideological perspective about why it’s a good idea to go down this particular road. We’ve also heard many arguments, good strong arguments, I believe, ones that are supportable, why the free market isn’t always a good thing. The reasons why it can be a real problem in this particular instance, I believe, are large in number, not the least of which is that there are just simply by fact some things that governments can provide cheaper. We’ve seen some good examples in this province where privatization and free markets haven’t worked very well, and I point people simply to road clearing and maintenance and construction as the kinds of issues that we’ve seen. [interjections] Well, in fact, we heard more chirping again. This time, once again from across the floor, from the Minister of Environment saying that it works very well.

Dr. Taylor: That was the first time, Deb.

Ms Carlson: Not this afternoon. Perhaps during this particular debate.

He thinks that that's worked very well, but there have been a large number of concerns and complaints raised in this Assembly about those kinds of issues.

[The Speaker in the chair]

There is the fundamental principle of whether or not companies who build in a profit factor and who are motivated by profits can in fact provide the kind of service that is best for the people of this province or of the country, and there are many arguments having been made to say that that is not always true. Are they really low-cost providers? The answer, generally speaking, is no, because they will charge what the market can bear, and they always include a profit factor into their operational costs. So they are not low-cost providers necessarily. Can they even provide it at the lowest possible cost? Often not, once again, because by the time they factor in their costs of capital and their profit factor, they're often much higher than what governments can by nature provide.

Second is the issue of how complicated the matter is that you are trying to float in the free market. We saw a question come to the Member for Dunvegan from, I believe, the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti about whether or not deregulation causes changes in natural gas prices or whether there were other factors. That speaks to whether or not people can understand the issue. Here's a man who has spent a career working in this field who puts that question on the floor of the Assembly. The answer is: not always. The answer is that there's uncertainty built into the marketplace and that a lot of the prices are fixed by world prices. Well, how is the average consumer expected to be able to figure that out and to have the time to follow that in terms of finding who a low-cost provider can be? That question was followed up by the Member for Calgary-Bow, who was concerned that one of our colleagues had what she assumed was some kind of low esteem for her constituents, and I would like to assure her that that would never be the case. In fact, what we have is a very complicated issue that people have to try and unravel, and some people have more or less ability in that area. I speak particularly to people who I have seen come into my constituency office since we have seen these high energy costs in general, being both gas and electricity, and they are very concerned, and they don't understand the volatility in the markets. They don't understand how to figure out who they can trust in this direct marketing approach and who they can't. This is not a new issue, and people in this Assembly must have heard about this from their constituents.

If we recall a couple of years ago when there was a different direct marketer who moved into the province and was going door-to-door selling packages to people, convincing them that they were a low-cost provider, many people got taken to the cleaners on that, Mr. Speaker. I remember particularly a senior constituent who came into my office. She's a widow, and she once in a while will come in to talk about topical issues and have a cup of coffee and talk about what's happening out there and ask if there's anything that she should know about. At that time, when she came into the office, I warned her that these direct marketers were going around the community and that it wouldn't be in her best interests to sign up for any of these long-term contracts, and I went through all the reasons why in terms of the credibility and potential sustainability of the company and the price that she may be tied into, the length of time that she could be tied into the price, the other options she had available to her.

She listened intently and agreed with everything I said and came in two weeks later, and what had she done but signed up with one of these hustlers at the door. Why? Because that person on a one-on-one basis had convinced her that she was going to be getting a good deal. Well, it wasn't a good deal, Mr. Speaker. She really didn't have enough information to make the comparisons or enough information to be able to withstand the pressure sales tactics that we saw in this particular instance. That's not what we want to provide to our constituents. It isn't that she isn't smart. She's very clever. She's a very smart person. She makes very sound decisions, but she needs to have available to her all the information.

In this kind of a change, when even the government, who has known about this issue, and we've had numerous debates and all kinds of questions – they still can't get it right, Mr. Speaker. They have not only the members in this Assembly but a huge staff working behind them and access to untold resources, and we're still seeing a huge mess in this province. So if the government can't get it right, how do they expect consumers, who have many other decisions to make on a daily basis, to be able to do that? There were no insinuations on the abilities of constituents in my colleague's comments. It was rather a reflection of them having to deal with very complicated issues and a hugely uncertain market, which is what deregulation and the kind of legislation we see coming in has created – a very uncertain market – and that, I believe, is what's driving costs up to a great extent, and we're going to see increased volatility in the marketplace on this.

For the past three or four months while the weather has been really cold, I have seen a steady stream of people coming to my constituency office absolutely stunned at the kinds of bills that they are getting, most recently on gas. They're saying that the prices are too high for them to be able to maintain their houses, and they don't understand how this government promised that deregulation would cause the prices to fall rather than increase, that it would give them more options in the marketplace that would be cheaper, not higher. Well, I see that the Minister of Finance is clapping at that, and it would be something worth applauding if in fact it were true, but what have we seen so far? We have seen huge uncertainty in the marketplace. We have seen prices skyrocketing and peaking. We have seen lots of organizations, companies, and this government making all kinds of promises that so far they haven't been able to deliver on.

What we have not seen is what people are asking the questions about. How come, when we are actually sitting on the resource in this province, we are paying higher prices than other provinces? Now, I know the government will make all the arguments that it's much higher in Toronto than it is here, but that isn't, in fact, true if you take out the transportation costs. We're paying on average a higher price this winter for gas in this province, and people don't understand it. They're having a really hard time pulling apart the issues of electricity and gas. To them they're combined. They're energy costs, and they're too high. They don't understand, when we're sitting on the resources here in this province and when it has been a prior practice of this province to have a deferential pricing scheme for those who live in the province, that we are now paying these astronomical prices. They don't understand why the government hasn't stepped in in any direct way to help counteract those prices.

How could they have done that? Well, of course, we could've seen, and we would've seen had this also been an election year moneys coming back to the people either as direct credits on their bills or as rebate cheques. We could see this government do what some other provinces and, in fact, every single state in the United States has done, and that's bring in some kind or some kinds of programs for home retrofits. It's very interesting to note that we often hear, Mr. Speaker, in this particular Assembly Texas held up as an icon of conservatism and . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Texas?

Ms Carlson: Yes, Texas. The kind of state that this government likes to follow in the footsteps of and stands up for a lot of things that this government admires. [interjection] Yes, that's exactly right.

There is one situation where I wish that this government would follow in the steps of Texas, and that's in retrofit programs. They have an astonishing number of programs, which we will discuss in some detail once this bill gets to committee, Mr. Speaker.

Another state that we'll talk about is good old redneck Florida. Jeb Bush. Now, isn't that a person . . .

Mr. MacDonald: He's running for president, 2008.

Ms Carlson: Well, he may be. That part I don't know about.

But I do know that this is a state where they have many layers of retrofit programs to help the people in their state ensure that their homes become more energy efficient and cut down on the energy costs. Now, this is a state that certainly doesn't experience the kind of weather fluctuations we have and certainly doesn't experience the cold, but in a very aggressively progressive manner they have brought in retrofit programs. [Ms Carlson's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: The hon. member for Grande Prairie-Smoky on the question section.

Mr. Knight: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member had indicated that some things like natural gas and power are less expensive when governments provide them. My question is: considering only the cost of the debt, does the member suggest that this government should expropriate all the private infrastructure in the province for these utilities and assume this role?

Ms Carlson: Of course not. That's a ridiculous question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster on the question and answer section.

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes. The hon. member mentioned that some things privatized didn't work out, like the maintenance of Alberta highways, and I'm wondering: could she elaborate a little bit? If the grass-cutting is cheaper and the snowplowing is cheaper and the crack-filling is cheaper and the guardrails are cheaper and we have no capital expense and no pensions and it's still only $250 million a year, what part of that isn't cheaper?

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, that would be the long-term replacement costs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the question and answer section.

Mr. Mason: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Mason: I would like the hon. member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to perhaps elaborate a little bit on how the policies in Texas are more enlightened than the policies in Alberta.

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I know that that comes as a surprise to some members in this Assembly, but in fact for not just a couple of years but for several years Texas has had retrofit programs in place to help make their communities more energy efficient, and a number of those programs are completely sponsored by state funding. It's interesting that in a state which has a very low tax rate and a very conservative kind of outlook, they could provide that kind of a service, when this province for past five years has been saying that they're not prepared to do it.

Now, we do hear these days that they have deferred this decision to Climate Change Central, and, Mr. Speaker, we will wait and wait and wait and wait and wait to see what the outcome of that deferral of a decision will be. Hopefully what we will hear happen is that this province, too, will step into the 21st century and take a look at helping every Albertan become more energy efficient, not just government buildings, which have been a good step that this government has made, but they need to move into a field where we can see other buildings funded by provincial infrastructure funds, like hospitals and schools, also become energy efficient so that they can cut down on their maintenance costs so that the maintenance dollars can go to other necessary functions such as fixing roofs and painting doorways and fixing rugs. I know there are a number of schools in my constituency that you can walk in, and as soon as the spring melt starts, they're going to have five-gallon buckets in their hallways collecting the rain.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to comment. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie made a comment that I wasn't participating in the debate, and I wanted to let her know that I have absolutely no problem at all putting my support for this bill on the record. My constituents dealt with commodities for many, many years in the agricultural sector – those go up and down – and I'm simply making those comments. I also wanted to thank the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for answering the questions which had been put to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I thought that was nice of her to do that for us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the question and answer section.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, certainly, Mr. Speaker. For the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie: in discussions on Bill 19 how many of your constituents have expressed an interest in having a choice of shopping for a natural gas contract? Or would they prefer an affordable and accessible service?

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, so far since Christmas I have heard from, by e-mail or by them walking into the constituency or by letters that we have received, just over 200 people from the constituency. I have yet to hear from someone who expresses the ability to have some choice as being their primary concern. From less than 10 of the people we've heard, they feel that they're at their wit's end, and they would like a choice for many things, not all of them being electricity, lots of them being a different choice in government, but so far none on choice in gas or electricity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the debate.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. I think we might rather call this the Direct Energy bill in reference to the British company, formerly British Gas, that has already begun advertising in Alberta.

It's just a theory, Mr. Speaker, but one I want to put on the record, and that is that the government, having got into a great deal of trouble with its electricity deregulation, is desperate for somebody to come in and provide at least some measure of competitive electricity retailing in the province. The government, having taken away regulatory protection for consumers, promised competition as a means of providing some mitigating force on the prices that consumers have to pay, but that has failed. So having taken away the regulatory protection, the government has failed to this point to provide competition in its stead. Enter Direct Energy from Britain, who likes to provide bundled services: electricity, gas, and so on.

Now, part of the problem that has existed for part of the time that deregulation has been in existence in Alberta is that ATCO Gas up until this point has provided the distribution network for all or most of Alberta and was basically purchasing gas and putting it through essentially at its cost, providing fairly inexpensive electricity except when the prices began to spike, and I'll deal with that separately. That made it almost impossible for people to compete in the market, Mr. Speaker, because they couldn't beat the cheap cost. The only way they could beat the cost is if they were wise enough to buy on a long-term contract when prices were low because ATCO has had the policy of basically not hedging its gas, so we have been subject here in Alberta to dramatic price spikes as the price of natural gas in the American market rose. So even though we're paying dramatically changing prices for our own natural gas and very high prices for natural gas at times, it made it very difficult for anyone to compete in that market.

So in order to get Direct Energy into the Alberta market so that it could compete on the electricity side, the government had to provide changes to the framework for natural gas so that they could come in and compete against Alberta companies already operating in this province. In order to do that, you have to keep people from selling gas who own the distribution network, because they can make their money on the distribution network and offer the gas basically at cost, which doesn't allow an increase or a markup for the gas. Hence, nobody will try to sell the gas. So deregulation for gas to this point has not worked, and as a result of it not working, we've had relatively low prices except, as I've said, during the price spikes that occur all too frequently during the winter.

So we have to mark the gas up, and to do that, you have to make sure that distributors and retailers are separate, and that means anybody going into the retail market has to make a profit. It means that we're building in higher prices again to natural gas by trying to make deregulation work, and what we're doing is we're adding a middleman, and we're creating room for the middleman in this act to mark up the prices even more than we're already paying. So Albertans who have been shocked by the high prices that they're paying on their gas bills during the winter months in this province are going to be paying an incremental increase on top of that the year-round in order to get Direct Energy into Alberta and provide some attempt at competition in the electricity market.

So we're getting competition and higher prices too. That seems to be the watchword of this government: you get competition and higher prices too. You don't get competition and lower prices because, in fact, the regulated monopoly system that has existed for electricity and for natural gas in this province has traditionally provided us with the lowest possible price and fairly reasonable service too, I might add. So it has to go by the boards in order that companies like Direct Energy can make money by selling Albertans their own gas.

Now, it's interesting if you look, Mr. Speaker, at why we're getting such high prices for gas in the winter, and I do want to touch on this a little bit. The government a number of years ago approved a proposal of a number of gas producers to build a great big pipeline to pump the gas into the American market. [interjection] What they've essentially done as a result – and I see that the Minister of Finance is taking responsibility for that decision, and that's good – is they are now pumping out the gas from this province faster than they're finding it, far faster than they're finding it, in fact to the point where we now have less than nine years of proven reserves in this province. That means that the gas will soon be gone or it will be at levels of production much lower than today. So the result is that the petrochemical industry that's built up – and I'm speaking specifically of Celanese, which is just adjacent to the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands – will no longer have the feedstocks that it once had, and that means that we are eventually going to lose a considerable industrial base from this province as a result of this shortsighted policy of the government.

Not satisfied with pumping out the gas way faster than it is being discovered, the government also changed rules that existed under the Lougheed administration which required that chemicals, liquids, and so on that are useful for the petrochemical industry would be extracted and only pure ethane be exported out of the province, and that meant that there could be a petrochemical industry here in Alberta. But the government has now allowed that also to be exported, so the whole gas product is now being exported, not just the ethane. It means that we are exporting jobs. This government's policy, Mr. Speaker, is clearly resulting in a net loss of jobs from this province and the export of Alberta jobs built on Alberta gas to places like Chicago and other places in the United States.

Now, the government is, as a result, desperate to try and get the natural gas pipeline from Alaska to come through Alberta so that they can restore some sort of source of natural gas as the gas comes through, and the Minister of Energy has had the audacity to suggest that Alberta should have the right to take these very same chemicals out of that gas as it passes through Alberta so that we can use them for our petrochemical industry here, having allowed the export of these chemicals from our own natural gas. It's breathtaking in its audacity, Mr. Speaker.

We need to consider what some people are saying about the government's policy with respect to natural gas. The Consumers' Coalition of Alberta submits: customers have not been or are not likely to be the principal driver of the proposed changes; rather, we see the industry driving the need to make these proposed changes so as to allow participants in the industry operating as commercial ventures to add costs to the system at the expense of the customer. So it's not just the Member for Edmonton-Highlands or the New Democrat opposition or the opposition that's saying this; it's people who study this and act on behalf of consumers. They're basically saying that in order to cater to the gas industry in this province, they are going to be adding costs to the system, which will be paid for by consumers.

Now, there's Paula Simon's article on March 11, "Gas prices have shot up because of supply, demand and politics," which I thought was very astute. [interjection] Well, hon. Minister of Learning, it's certainly more credible than this government. She says:

Consumers saw no reason to leave [behind] time-honoured suppliers for the uncertainty of new retailers. And it's not as if anyone can sell you better gas. Gas is gas. And no retailer could sell it below cost.

So the province "levelled the playing field." The only way it could entice retailers into the game, and the only way it could convince customers to switch, was to lob a grenade into the works.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the billing costs are likely to go up because the government is restructuring the industry to replace a vertical integration with a horizontal integration, and that is to say that companies like Direct Energy will bundle electricity, gas, credit cards, and other services, but there's no added value for consumers in this. You can get all these fancy little contracts. You know, you do it for three years and you get your gas for this much and so on, but basically the cost structure has been burdened with additional players. There are more middlemen, and the result is that whatever the contracts are, they're going to be somewhat higher than they are today. As the Consumers' Coalition says again: there is no cost saving or increased efficiency by having more players involved; instead, the more players involved, the more returns on investment must be met.

I think the other question is the increased confusion, and I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow believes that this is no different or no more difficult than settling on a mortgage. I don't know about the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, but when our family got involved in making a mortgage, we did an extensive amount of work and checking and comparing and calculating. We sought advice, and we basically undertook it as a major decision. The term was important and so on.

The question is why we should be paying more for gas, because we are, in order to have the choice of which package to pay more for gas. We're going to select because that's precisely the situation we're in. Life is getting far more complicated, and things which were simple before, like telephones or electricity or gas, are now becoming subject to all kinds of complexities where there's more opportunity for people to be taken to the cleaners all in order to implement this government's right-wing ideology, not just this government but across North America, that you have to have competition in every area. So it becomes more complex. Some people are able to manoeuvre in that complexity better than others. That suits the philosophy of the government very well because they believe in winners and losers anyway. But all of it needs to be taken in the context that all of this competition adds cost to the price structure, and the base price for the commodity, whether it's natural gas or electricity, is higher than it would be if we had a simple regulated monopoly where consumers were properly represented in the system. But this government, Mr. Speaker, believes that the market is a panacea, that it works equally well in all areas, and of course that's nonsense. Natural gas is not hamburgers. Natural gas is not buying televisions. It's something that's fundamental and which does not lend itself to that type of competition.

I think, Mr. Speaker, we need to be very careful with Bill 19. In my view, it is going to entrench higher prices, greater complexity, and I think that it's going to come back to haunt the government down the road. Any members here who may have been offered assurances that higher gas prices will be remedied by passing this act should think carefully before accepting those assurances and voting for this bill because it will not do so.

So I'd like to thank members for their rapt attention and yourself, as well, and I'll take my seat now. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in. Questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. In your remarks you were discussing the issue of ethane. How do you feel Bill 19 will change our competitive position not only in Canada but in North America? We are losing the ability to compete because we are losing the ability to have cheap and reliable natural gas to fuel our industries.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much for that question, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I believe that our competitive position has already declined, because we are exporting our natural gas resources for others to use to create jobs at our expense. A more foolish policy, Mr. Speaker, I can't imagine, yet that is the market philosophy of this government taken to the utmost extreme. I believe that we are exporting jobs from this province as a result of that policy.

Now, in terms of how this bill will specifically affect the situation, we are going to be paying higher costs than necessary for using our own gas, and that adds to the cost structure of our industries and our businesses and our farms. That cannot help but reduce in an incremental way the competitiveness of Alberta businesses.

5:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is this: what would he see as a better alternative to this scheme that we see in front of us today?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I see a two-stage process. Basically, we could go to the situation where it was a regulated industry which would have a number of players, and consumers would have protection at the regulatory step. Any cost to be passed over to consumers would have to be built in and accounted for and justified before the AEUB.

But I would go further, Mr. Speaker, and I would hold up Medicine Hat as the example of what could be done. This government could buy, at the cheapest possible prices, our own natural gas. It could store it in place, underground, and it could be made available for sale to Alberta homeowners, businesses, farmers at cost. We could provide our own natural gas, which we own, at cost to everyone in Alberta, and we could dramatically reduce the price of natural gas in this province.

Now, you'd have to add some conservation measures so that people don't waste the cheap gas. That could be accommodated, and that's a very important piece. We could become more competitive, we could have a greater advantage, and we wouldn't have our seniors having to turn off their fridge and store their frozen goods and the contents of the refrigerator on their back porch, which is now what's happening in this province. It's a shame, quite frankly.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, after having listened to the two socialist parties discuss this issue, I'm compelled to ask the hon. member some questions. In his diatribe he did talk about there being some ideological thing here where we were going to have a competitive market everywhere and that the marketplace was going to dictate. I wonder what he, then, would attribute as to why it is we're saying that all - all - of the transmission will be regulated if, in fact, we are moving just to market driven.

Also, the hon. member talked about how cheap gas would be and how we could sell it so cheap, but I do remember that last summer gas was down below $2 a gigajoule. I'm wondering: how low does he think it can go and still have companies drill and buy land?

Also, on his comment that we own the gas. Well, to a certain degree that is true. We own some of it, but we have sold it. The other point that I would like him to explain: how would we backfill the $7 billion that we got as royalty if, in fact, we were selling gas for . . .

The Speaker: Sorry. The time for this segment has elapsed. [interjection] I only enforce the rules, hon. member. I'm a helpless servant here.

Some Hon. Members: Unanimous consent.

The Speaker: Well, the question is asked: is there unanimous consent that the Assembly is prepared to provide to allow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to go beyond the prescribed five-minute rule to answer a question? Any hon. member opposed, please say yes.

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay.

Now, additional speakers in the debate. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, thank you. To paraphrase this very simply for the hon. members to get to their level, like Bart Simpson would say: it's just this simple. If you believe that government can control an economy and can run its people under a monopoly, where there is no choice and no competition, then you're sitting on the right side, but very few other Albertans, obviously, agree with you. The rest of the world history shows that we're right and you're wrong, and we're paying the bills for most of the people who think like you. So if you want to live in the old ages, in the dark ages, and hide behind gloom and doom and "can't work," keep sitting there, and you'll probably be down to one next time.

Mr. Speaker, it is just that simple. If free forces and competition work, then I'm all for it, and history proves it does. Thank you.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. All hon. members have already participated in the debate.

Ms Carlson: You should let us ask a question.

The Speaker: Oh, correct. You're absolutely correct. Five minutes. First, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to him is: could he explain to us in some detail what other world forces he was talking about?

Mr. Snelgrove: I'd just like to bring to the hon. member's attention the USSR, that lived under the same guidelines that you have that the state could run stuff. It very successfully disintegrated with a huge, enormous debt, one of the lowest standards of living.

Saskatchewan, my province to the left, with enough debt that they probably can't get out of it, but they think like you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the hon. member opposite, you know, will remember the incredible, tremendous comments of Homer Simpson, who referred to the situation in his employment.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, there are many, many states in the United States, some with Republican administrations, who realize that the production, retailing, and distribution of gas and electricity are most cheaply and efficiently provided by a regulated system rather than a free market system. I'm just wondering if he actually just believes this as an article of faith, that somehow the market will come through for him, or whether or not he has scientific evidence to show that this particular system, which we're now trying out in gas and have tried in electricity, actually will deliver cheaper power and gas than the kind of system that he considers to be antiquated and historical.

Mr. Snelgrove: I would like the hon. member to bring us some examples from across the United States or across Canada where people are actually paying their own way without accumulating huge debts for their children to pay with regards to their utilities, be it electric or gas. Let's put it all in context, including the other costs of the distribution. Bring me their bills, and let's sit down with my house bill, and then we'll discuss it, because inventing these hard-done-by people all over the rest of North America simply isn't fair or factual.

The Speaker: First, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: I would like to defer to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and then I'll ask my question, please.

The Speaker: Hold on. Did I also note that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview wanted to participate?

Dr. Taft: No.

The Speaker: Then fine. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to the hon. member, if I go to the trouble of providing that information to him, will he undertake to vote against this bill?

Mr. Snelgrove: There's probably, absolutely, completely no chance that I'll vote against this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, who has some substantial private-sector experience, may want to comment on areas where he has seen the invisible hand of competition, where he has seen regulated markets, where there has been a good foundation of regulation work, and other examples throughout his wide and diverse business career where, in fact, (a) it's okay to make a profit, (b) it's okay to share prosperity, and (c) it's okay to find an appropriate marketplace where appropriate commodities can be bought, sold, or traded, and in fact where there are marketplaces where there are marked rules, where there are marked codes of conduct or areas where entrepreneurs can succeed and they succeed through competition, price, service, and the other attributes that characterize an active marketplace.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, you can't pull the wool over that member's eyes. No doubt about it. Where the market forces work is exactly clear in my riding of Vermilion-Lloydminster, where they have grown at a rate because of a successful oil and gas industry that's being sold in world markets. As you just travel around Alberta, you will see that the economy we live in now is because of the tremendous competition in the other business sectors all coming

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 11, 2003 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 2003/03/11
 head: Government Bills and Orders
 head: Committee of the Whole
 [Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 21 Ombudsman Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On second reading the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie raised five questions which I would now like to address in the order in which they were raised.

First, the member asked how the Health Facilities Review Committee fits into the scheme of these amendments. Again I should point out that the office of the Ombudsman is used as a last resort. The Ombudsman cannot become involved in an issue until all formal and informal appeal mechanisms have been explored and concluded. Therefore, the Ombudsman's office will not review a complaint within the jurisdiction of the Health Facilities Review Committee until their review is complete. If the individual remains dissatisfied with the administration process, he or she can turn to the Ombudsman for further review.

The second and third questions seem to be about the same issue, so I will answer them together. The issue seems to be about section 9 of the bill, which outlines the power of departments and agencies to consider matters. After completing his review, the Ombudsman has powers under section 21 of the act to report his opinion and the reasons for it as well as any recommendations he may have to the department or agency involved. Historically some departments or agencies have felt restricted by their own legislation from implementing the Ombudsman's recommendations even if they felt the recommendations ought to be implemented. Section 9 of Bill 21 makes it clear that a department, tribunal, or agency can accept the recommendation and implement it. This means that they can reconsider or rehear a matter if the Ombudsman has recommended it and they choose to do so.

If, for example, the Ombudsman finds that a department did not properly consider all relevant factors when coming to a decision about an individual, the department can now on the Ombudsman's recommendation reconsider the decision it made and include in that reconsideration the factors identified by the Ombudsman. I would like to make it very clear that section 9 does not give a department or agency of the government the ability to "quash, confirm or vary" a decision or recommendation that the Ombudsman makes. In fact, what that section does is allow the department or agency to implement or adopt a recommendation of the Ombudsman if they choose to do so. The department or agency can also quash, confirm, or vary a decision that they themselves have made if the Ombudsman has recommended it.

One further concern seems to be that the department or agency has the discretion as to whether or not to implement the recommendation of the Ombudsman. The question has been raised as to why the Ombudsman does not have the power to command compliance with his recommendations. Traditionally the power of the office of ombudsmen across the country and indeed throughout the world has been in their power to make recommendations and bring actions of governmental bodies under public scrutiny. Ombudsmen are not invested with the ability to order or command actions. The power to issue orders remains solely with the courts and other appellate bodies. The Ombudsman's clout and influence is his ability as a watchdog to make recommendations and ensure that the public is aware of the activities of the government and its agencies. I can tell you that historically governmental departments have taken all recommendations of the Ombudsman very seriously.

The fourth point was not really a question but a reference to section 14, which allows the Ombudsman's jurisdiction to be expanded by regulation. That section of the bill is tied to the amendment in section 1, where the definition of agency has been amended so the Ombudsman can give further jurisdiction over additional bodies as it becomes apparent that these bodies are appropriately reviewable by him. The idea behind allowing new bodies to fall under the Ombudsman's review is to ensure that the Ombudsman's jurisdiction can be continually updated in a timely manner. As we all know, regulations can be updated more easily than statutes can. By allowing the term "agencies" to be expanded in the regulation, the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman can be updated in a timely and responsive way. As noted earlier, this allows the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman to be kept current with the changing face of government.

The last question relates to the concerns resolution processes. The health authorities were asked to establish their concerns resolution processes based on a policy framework developed in 1998. The framework allowed for RHAs to develop individual processes to address the unique circumstances of each region. In the interests of greater clarity for the public, clear expectations of the health authorities, and certainly about the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman, regulations are planned under the Regional Health Authorities Act and the Cancer Programs Act. These regulations will build on the principles of the original policy framework and experiences with the processes that were put in place.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this answers all the questions posed in second reading of Bill 21, the Ombudsman Amendment Act, 2003. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make my comments on this bill. I regret that this is my first time in speaking to it and we're already in Committee of the Whole. We didn't want to hold up this bill. We certainly support it in the Official Opposition, and we're willing to give it speedy passage in second reading within one day so that it can move along right smartly. So just a couple of comments, and I'll apologize in advance if I repeat issues that have been raised by my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie. I listened carefully to what the sponsor of the bill was answering, and I hope not to repeat although there may be some statements I want to reinforce.

I have to give an E for effort to the soon to be retiring Ombudsman. I note, going through a number of his reports, his persistence in raising the issues that he wished to have covered by this legislation, and indeed I believe that most of his issues have in fact been covered by this. The '98-99 report was again - oh, I'm sorry; even that's a repeat of what happened in '97-98, so he really did have a long run at it. It looks like every year of the five years that he served, he brought forward more or less the same amendments. Again he's urging this amending act to come into being to allow the Ombudsman to remain current and to incorporate all the changing ways government is doing business, particularly around the contracting out of services and the regionalization of service delivery. That was the '98-99 one.

Again when I look at the '99-2000 one, he's concerned that the fundamental issue is that if government wants the "watchdog" of administrative fairness to continue working in the manner it was intended, then legislation must be compatible to the way government is doing business, and he would continue in his efforts to press forward. That appears on page 4 of the '99-2000 report. He also talks about "the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman expanded to meet the provisions of the Health Professions Act," which would in fact have passed at that time, and he's talking about providing independent third-party review for clients or patients who've raised their complaints to the professional body.

Then, sure enough, when I look at the 2000-2001, he's still looking for "much-needed amendments to the Ombudsman Act." They "appeared to have stalled with little or no possibility of proceeding." I'm wondering what the holdup was. I mean, I'm pleased to have this in front of us, but why did it take so long? This is five years from a respected officer of the Legislative Assembly continually bringing forward the same points. So what was the holdup in getting this legislation this far? Maybe I could get the sponsor of the bill to answer that. In 2000-2001 he's again talking about the Health Professions Act, the jurisdiction with the regional health authorities, the involvement of the Ombudsman in the complaint resolution process, and that the jurisdictional role of the Ombudsman needs to be expanded.

In the most recent one, the 35th annual report, which covers the years 2001-2002, I'm quoting from page 1, I think it is.

If the Ombudsman is to be an effective investigative body within the dispute resolution process, full access must be provided so that we may conduct thorough and impartial investigations. Restricting access to information will only compromise the purpose and authority of the Office.

Again, this particular concern has also been addressed under this legislation. So he's brought forward a number of ongoing points. One is capturing and enlarging the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman to the delegated authorities that the government has put in place, the concerns around the effect of the Health Professions Act, overcoming the restrictions that they've met with the Health Information Act, and the complaint resolution process that also came under one of the health acts. All of those have in fact been dealt with.

The sponsoring Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake did identify very clearly what many people do not in fact understand about the Ombudsman. The position is meant to be one of a last resort, and it's meant to be looking at whether all of the policies and procedures that are in place were in fact followed. It's not a matter of somebody being unhappy with the decision that they got under a WCB appeal or under an SFI appeal or any other process that's there and being able to sort of get a new trial or a new appeal process. The point is: were all the processes followed by all of the staff members that were working with the individual? That's what this position is really looking for.

It's not about being able to get a new trial, a new day in court as such. People are not clear about that, and I don't know whether it's because the Ombudsman was a European invention. I don't know, but I certainly deal with those kinds of misunderstandings coming through my constituency office. We do everything we can to explain to people that, yes, the Ombudsman is the last place to go, but it's not about being able to review everything that's gone before and somehow get a new deal because you're unhappy with the decision. It's about whether you were treated fairly and all processes were followed while you went through whatever procedure you were going through.

There are a couple of areas in here that I did want to make particular note of. I noticed at the very end that the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake was commenting on section 14 and the ability of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which really is the cabinet, to "make regulations designating [additional] boards, commissions, corporations, offices or other bodies as agencies for the purposes of this Act." In other words, they can add additional organizations or agencies of the government as we go along or as they're needed. The member was making the argument that this is more efficient because it's easier to change regulations, and I continue to argue that that may well be the case, but democracy really wasn't set up to be easy or for the convenience of government. A big part of that, I think, is transparency and accessibility of information and the public's access to scrutinize the decision-making process, which is why we have things like the debates of this Assembly available in Hansard, so the public can read them and say: "Oh, okay. This is why they were doing something. This is the argument behind a given idea or a new amending act."

When we have regulations, those decisions are made behind closed doors. The decision-making process that went into it is not available to the public to scrutinize, and still, even with the advent of the Internet, it is very difficult for the public to (a) know that there's been a change in a regulation and (b) find it. That's still a concern. When we expect people to abide by whatever is passed by this Assembly or in this case abide by whatever regulations are changed by the cabinet, how are they to know that something changed? Nobody wants to invest too much money in doing a huge information campaign every time there's a change in regulations, and that continues to be a concern to me because the public doesn't know that things have changed even if they're watching it. Things are easily missed or go by even for members of the Assembly. Even we can miss having a change in regulation go by. So I will always be standing up in this Assembly saying: please don't do this under regulation. Democracy wasn't meant to be easy or fast; it was meant to be transparent. That's always my argument when I see this happen.

There are a couple of other places where it appears, and one place is where the cabinet is given the ability to expand the definition of agencies to include other bodies. That appears in section 2, the definitions. We're adding in a definition of administrative head. That's new, but it does make it clear who the contact person is, who the Ombudsman is supposed to be dealing with rather than them fishing around. Is it the president? Is it the CEO? Is it the executive director? Who exactly is it supposed to be? That is clarified here.

Now, under the definition of agency the MASH sector is not included, so we do not have the municipalities, universities, schools, or the hospitals except that some parts of the hospital staff is, in fact, in here. We were talking earlier about the dispute resolution process that's been developed by the Mental Health Board and the Cancer Board. It's quite specific here that it's excluding the governors of a university, the board of governors of a college, specifically the governors of the Banff Centre for Continuing Education, health boards under the Regional Health Authorities Act, the Alberta Cancer Board, the Hospital Privileges Appeal Board, or the board of governors of a technical institute.

Then once again we have this "board, commission, corporation, office or other body designated as an agency in the regulations," which just continues to strike me as very wrong.

Now, there was confusion. Perhaps I could get the member to spell it out here in Hansard so that for anyone else that looks at this and is going, "Which way round does this go?" it's clearly spelled out in Hansard, and they can refer to it forevermore in the immortal words of the sponsoring Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. It's around the Health Information Act, section 1.1: "This Act prevails despite the Health Information Act, except section 94 of that Act." So I think what that's supposed to mean is that the health information commission has jurisdiction over the Health Information Act but that the Ombudsman can get the information they need to investigate. I would like that clarified by the member, please, because it is a point of confusion, and we don't want to see anybody making a mistake because that wasn't read correctly.

We saw in the Auditor General Act, and we're seeing it again in this act, the change to allow that when special warrants are signed, they can be signed and pertain to a year other than when they were signed. So what's being deleted out of here is the actual language: "fiscal year in which the special warrant is signed." Where does that come from? Well, that, I think, came out of one of the recent elections that happened just before fiscal year-end, and there was a special warrant to authorize the expenditure of money for the new fiscal year. Given this glitch in the legislative offices and in the legislation that governs at least two of them – those being the Ombudsman and the Auditor General – the special warrant, when signed, only pertains to these departments for the year in which the warrant was signed. Well, it didn't work for them, and they didn't get any money. This is to allow for them to in fact get money if there need to be special warrants in the future, which I would dearly hope the government doesn't need to do.

You know, this is a large government. They have a number of good, forward-thinking fiscal procedures in place. I really don't think that in this day and age there should be a need for them to be signing special warrants or – what's the other word for them? – interim supply.

Mr. MacDonald: In the Getty days they were special warrants.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. In the Getty days they were special warrants. Now they're interim supply.

You know, there's no reason why there should be a need for that. The government can call the Legislature back in whenever they want and have enough time to get everything done, so there shouldn't be a need to do that. Nonetheless, the act is being changed to allow for it so that they would still get funding if they needed it. That's the second time that we've seen that.

We have the new section, that I had already commented on, about the patient concerns resolution process. This is really allowing the Ombudsman the jurisdiction to review these processes. That's a good one because people seem very happy with what will be in place from the RHAs, the Cancer Board, and the Mental Health Board with this patient concerns resolution process. The Ombudsman did need to be able to get access to the files to be able to review this properly, and that was not possible without this amending act.

There's wider consultation that's being allowed through section 6 of the amending act, section 16 of the original act, with notice of investigation.

There's been clarification and cleanup and updating around the agencies that are listed, people that are "an officer, employee or member of." That's been updated. The accounting organizations and forestry colleges have been dropped, and it's changed to "department, agency or professional organization." They continue to use that kind of wording.

Now, the more contentious part of this is the section repealing section 5, which is taking away the person's ability to provide or withhold permission. Essentially, there was a double permission, in effect, before because someone would complain in writing, which was required, and then the Ombudsman had to go back to the individual and say: okay; now I need your permission to actually investigate. What this is allowing is for the initial letter of complaint or request to investigate to be taken as the permission to look into their personal details. So it's cutting out a step, but it's cutting out having to go back to people and find them again and get them to do a release form to look into things. While some people may see that as a difficulty in that they have less power, in fact it's just administrative cleanup. You have to assume that if you're asking somebody to look into your file, you've got to be giving them permission to actually look into the file, and that's what you're doing with the initial letter to commence an investigation.

At this point I don't have that many more comments. I'm perfectly willing to support this bill. I asked the member to put a couple of things on the record just so that we have it in Hansard for review for people. I'm, obviously, happy as a member of the Legislative Offices Committee to support the Ombudsman in his repeated requests to deal with what he felt was needed to bring this act forward into the new millennium. It seems he was sort of asking for all of this in '97. I guess that this is his millennium present.

I don't see anything in here that I really have concerns with except for the continued insistence by the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations to change things.

Thanks for the opportunity, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to just make a few comments this evening on Bill 21, the Ombudsman Amendment Act, 2003, and I would like at this particular time to thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for sponsoring this bill. At the same time, since this is the first time that I've had an opportunity to speak to Bill 21, I would like to applaud and congratulate our Ombudsman, who had a little celebration last night on the occasion of his retirement, and to offer my thanks to him on behalf of all members of the Assembly for the job he has done as our Ombudsman over the last five years. What an outstanding job it was, and it was always done with the highest level of professionalism. It is because of his work and his dedication to the job and, certainly, his foresight that we have seen the results of that work and the introduction of this bill into this Legislature this year.

Now, then, of course, one of my concerns with the bill, as well, is that when we are dealing with the last lines of appeal for many people, we would have a lot of control put here in the hands of a minister, who has the opportunity by this bill to make all major decisions by regulations. Certainly, at the level of the Ombudsman we want openness and transparency to be perceived by all Albertans, to think that they have the opportunity for a fair hearing when they get there. I think it is critical that we take away from the minister this decision that so much of this bill will be governed by regulation. I think, as well, that one of the ways we'd do that, Mr. Chairman, is certainly by having open debate here in this Assembly. When we are having that debate, again, it allows for input to the minister from all parties and all members of the Assembly. So if there is one area where, I think, we could improve this piece of legislation, it is certainly in that area. I feel strongly that regulation is not the way to go.

As well, in reviewing the past annual reports from the Ombudsman, I was also quite impressed to see here the amount of traveling and consulting that he's done with other members in equal capacities in other countries throughout the world. As well, I think his sharing of ideas is a very, very good point. I think it is something that certainly leads to much better legislation here in the province, and I commend him again for taking this opportunity to certainly inform himself of what is happening in the related fields with other countries.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Ombudsman has made a number of suggestions and recommendations which would improve and expand his role or her role, if it happens to be a female. I think we have to look at this, particularly when such a great deal of the job of the Ombudsman is to be involved in the complaint resolution process. This complaint resolution process is not only with individuals, but it's from professional groups. It certainly is evident that the jurisdictional role of the Ombudsman must continue to expand.

Now, then, I see that in the 2001 report certainly goal 1 of the Ombudsman was to "promote awareness of the Ombudsman's expanded jurisdiction as it relates to the health professions and the Regional Health Authorities." I was paying close attention when the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake answered the questions earlier on in this debate. You clarified many issues that we had with that, and I thank you for that.

I also was looking in the report, particularly the present provisions here in section 1, Definitions. When looking at these, right now the Ombudsman Act defines agency as "a Provincial agency as defined in section 1 of the Financial Administration Act" but does not include boards of universities, colleges, or technical institutes, provincial health boards, the Alberta Cancer Board, the Hospital Privileges Appeal Board, or the governors of the Banff Centre for Continuing Education. Certainly, I think that the proposed amendment will expand the definition of agency to include those bodies named in regulation.

This regulation would help ensure that the law clearly states who is and who is not under the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman. As agencies would be added by cabinet regulation, no agencies could be added without cabinet approval. Again, this particular bit of the act which would be governed by regulation is certainly, I think, a portion of the act that is weakened because we do not include this into the act itself but rather have it governed by regulation. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre has said earlier in debate, these can be changed rather quickly. Whereas in some cases it might be expedient to have these changes, it doesn't appear that it has to be that expedient when we see that over the last five years the Ombudsman has recommended change, yet change has not occurred. It has taken us five years to get to this point, where we are bringing in legislation that would certainly include some of the recommendations that the Ombudsman has made.

Now, then, another section that I also have concerns with is section 5, where we remove the requirement that the person has to give, for lack of better terms, a second permission for the Ombudsman to have the authority to review information. I think this is another major step that is wrong. I look at today when I was requesting some medical information. Originally, we had looked at getting this medical information from the University hospital, and it was not available there. The constituent who brought this to my attention said that because this was also related to the Ministry of Transportation, let us try and get the information from there, because it was in regard to a driver's record and the loss of a licence because of medical reasons. So when we put in our freedom of information request to have this information released, what I was told by freedom of information was that my initial request for information and the release that that particular constituent had given me was specific to the information held at the University hospital. So, at that point, I said: well, why don't we just get a blanket release? They said: "No. We prefer your request to be specific."

So at freedom of information we have some very, very specific and stringent guidelines that have to be followed, yet in section 5 all that has to happen is that receipt of the letter by the Ombudsman can be considered permission for them to delve into whatever information might be on that person or that organization. So, again, I think we have two different standards when we're looking at the Ombudsman Act and when we're looking at freedom of information.

I just have a few more comments here, Mr. Chairman, that I think we have to look at, and some of those are outlined again in the Ombudsman's report. I believe it was going back as far as 1998 that the Ombudsman had indicated that there are potential new responsibilities that are required in legislation. Certainly, one of these was "to cover the new Health Professions Act – a statute which regulates thirty-one health professions." He goes on to say: "In addition, I have been asked to assume jurisdiction under the proposed Regulated Forestry Profession Act," and he lists a number of others here as well. So I certainly was glad to see under the definitions that a number of these were included and that this recommendation was accepted.

Overall, Mr. Chairman, I certainly am going to be supporting this legislation. I think it is long overdue, and I think it is a piece of legislation that will strengthen the position of the Ombudsman. I only wish that we could have had debate on a number of these and then included them into the bill instead of the minister having the ability to make major decisions by regulation.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and listen attentively while others join in debate on Bill 21. Thank you.

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 15 Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you. Today I would like to respond to questions that were raised by the hon. members opposite during second reading of Bill 15, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2003. Mr. Chairman, 40 percent of wildfires in Alberta are human caused. In the last 10 years nearly 25,000 hectares of land have been burned because of human-caused wildfires. The major focus of these amendments is to reduce and prevent the number and severity of human-caused wildfires. These changes will allow Sustainable Resource Development to better protect the public, communities, and natural resources from wildfires.

Responsible parties: children and landowners. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie had a concern regarding who is to determine responsibility for a fire and who should be held liable. Mr. Chairman, I'd like to acknowledge the co-operation of the hon. member in trying to meet with me to review these amendments and thank her for recognizing that people should be held liable for wildfires that they may cause. Sustainable Resource Development investigates all wildfires to determine their cause and to identify the parties involved. Parents who are unaware of their children's activities or landowners who do not know what actions are taking place on their land are not likely to be found liable. Their knowledge and participation would be determined through a wildfire investigation. On the other hand, if a child or a teen was found to be deliberately setting a wildfire, amendments to the legislation provide options. Government can pursue legal or civil options, can request restitution, or the court could impose creative sentences such as community service.

Sustainable Resource Development staff investigating wildfires. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was also concerned that Sustainable Resource Development does not have sufficient staff to conduct these investigations. I'd like to advise the hon. member that all wildfires in Alberta are investigated by highly trained department personnel. If required, assistance can be provided by Fish and Wildlife officers, investigators from other ministries, outside experts, and the Crown prosecution office. I would like to point out, Mr. Chairman, that Sustainable Resource Development has an annual training program for wildfire investigators that is recognized through North America and graduates 20 people a year.

Who decides on the penalties for wildfires? The final concern of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was: who's going to decide on penalties for starting a wildfire? Mr. Chairman, the final decision on penalties is the responsibility of the courts.

Liability for wildfires caused by lightning. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands was concerned about the possibility of requiring landowners to prove their innocence for a wildfire caused by lightning. Mr. Chairman, that would depend on the results of the investigation. An owner can be found liable for not extinguishing a wildfire if it can be proven that they were aware of the fire and didn't take action.

Railway right-of-ways and liability. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands raised the important issue of distance from either side of the railroad right-of-ways. The act outlines the framework of responsibility, while the regulations fill in the details. The regulation will also be amended to include the hundred-metre distance on either side of the railroad right-of-way and a new reporting provision for wildfires that railroad operators start or that they may discover. The land that the railroad operates on is private land. Mr. Chairman, they have the same responsibility to report, contain, and extinguish wildfires on their land as other landowners in the province.

Fire investigation and documentation. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highland's final concern was on the powers of the wildfire investigator. The amendment enhances the current powers and is not meant to override constitutional rights and freedoms of people being investigated. It must be noted, Mr. Chairman, that all wildfire investigators are highly trained and have a very narrow focus, one that relates directly to the wildfire investigation. During an investigation they may ask an operator to run an all-terrain vehicle so the investigator can check for sparks or check for maintenance records to determine if a particular piece of equipment shows any sign of mechanical problems that may have caused a wildfire.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, it is important to remember that during the development of this legislation Sustainable Resource Development has consulted with municipal governments, various stakeholder groups, and other provincial ministries. These groups have been supportive of our effort in the legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Nice to be able to speak to Bill 15, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2003, in Committee of the Whole. I listened carefully to the Member for West Yellowhead in answering the questions that had been brought forward by the members for Edmonton-Ellerslie and Edmonton-Highlands, and we in the Official Opposition are certainly willing to support this bill. Again, as with some of the other ones we've discussed tonight, we're passing it through very quickly. It's already gone through second and not all of our members even had an opportunity to speak to it then. We're trying to space ourselves out, and my opportunity is now.

So this is a bill that has a lot of clarification and fine-tuning, if you like. It has three objects that clarify the portions that are too vague: give more power to the forest officers and fire guardians and increase the amount the government can recover from people who are responsible for the fires. Holy mackerel. This deals with everything to do with protection of forests and prairies from soup to nuts. It's covering fires and fire-fighting responsibility, pests and pest control, forest and fire personnel, fire seasons and permits, pollution control, closure of forest areas, conduct of those on or near public land with respect to fire hazards, reimbursement of fire-fighting costs, and entry onto lands. So primarily we're looking at the issues related to fires, the liability of individuals responsible for fires, and the powers of the forest officers and fire guardians.

So this is to strengthen the Forest and Prairie Protection Act and also to deter people from irresponsible actions. You know, we're all learning to be more careful when we're in the wildlands, off the beaten trail, as we come to an understanding of how our movement through there affects both the wildlife and the flora and the fauna. I can remember when I was really young and going through, and nobody thought anything about just leaving their lunch and their garbage wherever, just leaving it there. I remember being told that the animals would take care of it. Nobody would do that in this day and age – at least I hope they wouldn't – because we understand the impact that that has on the environment.

Particularly in Alberta in the last couple of years I think we've all come to understand and be impressed by – I hope we have been – the damage that can be done by fire, and it really is incumbent upon all of us to be much more careful to make sure that we're not in any position, in any way making it possible for a fire to start or to spread. The Member for West Yellowhead was talking about the ability given through this act to test drivers of ATVs, for example.

Mr. MacDonald: What about snowmobilers?

Ms Blakeman: Well, the snowmobilers ride on snow, so there's less of a fire hazard happening there, but thanks for the question from my colleague for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

I think that testing the ATVs and consciousness of that sort of thing is a good idea. We know now that in some areas the heat from the mufflers can start grass fires, and we've just come to understand how much devastation this can wreak upon our province. So having a bill that's going to strengthen all the possibilities there and give tools to the fire protection officers is a good idea. I'm certainly willing to support it.

In section 2 we have added the definitions for burning hazard, Crown, and fire hazard, and I actually asked about this. What is the difference between a fire hazard and a burning hazard? I mean, please. But, in fact, there is a difference, and that is that the fire hazard, while it's recognized across Canada, is not specific enough for people to really understand the variations that are possible here. So "fire hazard" just describes the physical characteristics of the fuel, but how it's arranged or how much there is of it or what condition it's in, whether ladder fuels exist all would fall under the definition of a burning hazard. So it's just allowing for a lot more specifics to be used in describing what the factors are around a fire hazard. It also allows things like weather condition and extended periods of drought, all of that, to be worked into what's being considered. So that was easily answered once I actually started to do the investigation on it.

Under the same section it's also looking at including officers in the definition of forest officer, a definition for forest protection, a definition for unoccupied public land.

Now, one of the interesting ones is that favourite of all entities, the summer village, which, in fact, was not included in the act in the past. Although they had responsibility for certain things around fire protection and fire hazards, it was necessary to add in this new term, urban municipality. That new term of urban municipality includes summer villages. So there you go; they're included in the act now. [interjections] We have flights of fancy from my colleagues here. I'm glad to see that the summer villages are clarified because these are small areas that can go from a couple of dozen people to hundreds of people over the summer, and they do have responsibility for certain things, but that needs to be clarified in quite a few pieces of legislation. So here we have the clarification here.

Section 4 is really outlining who is liable for reimbursing the minister, and the Member for West Yellowhead went through in some detail about who caused the fire and who ordered it and whose land it was on, if they knew or they didn't know, so I refer people back to Hansard to the statements from the Member for West Yellowhead for the clarification on that.

A small change on the delegation of powers. The minister is now able to delegate powers other than the power to make regulations to any employee of the Crown rather than to any employee of the minister's department. I'm guessing that this has to do with other departments like Sustainable Resource Development and Environment or even Agriculture sort of crossing over in many of the same areas. So it's the employee that's really dealing with it rather than the employee of the particular sponsoring minister for this legislation.

Section 6 is looking at limiting the appointment of fire guardians by municipal councils to one year at a time.

Section 7 is repealing section 6 of the original act and inserting the right of the minister to enter into a fire control agreement with the councils of municipal districts. So that's not a material change. That was just previously in a different section.

In section 11 we've got another housecleaning section. It brings into line the wording with the new definitions of fire hazard and burning hazard, which I had detailed at some length a little bit earlier. It gives the municipal districts the ability to order elimination of a burning hazard rather just order its reduction or removal. That's interesting wording. It's not substantive; it's a clarification.

Section 12 is repealing section 11 and putting alternate text in place. That's where the railway operation distinction is being covered that, again, the Member for West Yellowhead went over. The railway operation has to report "as soon as practicable" the fire and within a certain distance from the boundary of their right-of-way, which is a good thing.

Section 13 is another housekeeping measure.

Section 14 is repealing certain sections and replacing them. The only change is that the minister is able to advertise the closure of land to the public through radio, television, or other means of communication. One presumes we're talking use of the Internet here with some sort of broadcast e-mail, which is good, or telephone, one presumes, those sort of prerecorded messages that can go out. So it's giving some flexibility there to the minister as to whatever works in different parts of Alberta, and certainly given the diversity of our province, that's a good thing.

Section 15 is compelling any person to tell forest officers who are performing their duties under the act to give the person's identification information, itinerary. So this is a fairly sweeping power. We always have to be careful about that because we're trying to strike a balance between the freedoms and liberties of the individual and the need of the Crown to control people or to know what they're doing. It's a fine balance, and I insist that it be maintained. So that section, I think, bears watching.

Section 16 is adding circumstances that are exempt from the section: added to fires for cooking or warming or flare stacks used by the petroleum industry and any other fire prescribed by the regulations. So that would be the crop burning, I think.

Section 17, again, is clarifying wording that hasn't been as clear as it needed to be, allowing it to be updated, and some sort of cleanup and housekeeping.

Again, section 19, amendments looking at anyone that has a commercial or industrial operation within a kilometre of public land having a fire control plan because we know that once we get the fire onto the public lands, then it's on our dime, and we need to be very conscious of who's responsible for starting the fires and also to try and strongly encourage people to control the fires from ever getting there.

A number of other sections, 20 through 23, again, more housekeeping changes just tweaking some wording. Then we get into pest control in section 24. Section 26, adding a caveat to when a forest officer or fire guardian may enter onto a premise without a warrant. The caveat is at "any reasonable time." Thank you. Always good to have that. You have to be again very careful with that sort of thing.

Under section 27 there are quite long enforcement powers that are added in after section 31 in the act. Oh, yeah. There's an interesting thing here. One of these is that an officer could basically commandeer or shanghai someone else's equipment to fight a fire, and if damage is caused to that equipment, I'm wondering if the third party has any recourse to recover damages. That may well be covered somewhere else. It might be quite obvious but kind of interesting to have clarified in Hansard so people can review it at some other point.

I mean, this is one of those bills that's like a huge miscellaneous statutes of minutia that's being changed here, and we went to some effort to consult a number of associations – Alberta Wilderness Association, Urban Municipalities Association, Surface Rights, fire chiefs, and a number of others – just to make sure that this was all on track, and as far as we're concerned, it is.

I know that one of the things that people expressed to me in the beginning was: is it going to be fair if a teenager or somebody like that at a bush party has had a few too many drinks at their grad and flicks a cigarette butt into the bushes and that starts a fire? You know, in this day and age I think we've come around to saying: yeah, it is the responsibility of that person. We need to be very conscious of how we behave when we're out of an urban area and to make it clear that the responsibility is on everyone to be careful, especially around fire and especially when we have had so many years of drought. This is increasingly important to every Albertan to protect our province. Certainly, there were concerns expressed to me about that, but I'm willing to stand up and defend the act on those terms. At this point I don't see any sort of hidden agenda here on that one. I mean, this government is very keen on putting responsibility for everything onto other people, but I think that in this case there is a necessity that we all recognize that it's limited. We all have to take responsibility for it and particularly when we've been experiencing drought for as many years as we have. We all have to be on the lookout. So for a teenager to think that it's okay to flick a cigarette butt into the bushes when they're out at a bush party, no, it's not, is the answer. They need to take better care and make sure that it's out and take all the precautions that are necessary with that.

When I used to smoke, I was at the point where I was packing those cigarette butt ends back out with me because it's pollution, and although I was out there, obviously, in the winter, in snow, when the fire hazard was less – although it's arguable that there is still some fire hazard – I just wasn't, you know, willing to work with that anymore, and I just packed the stuff back out with me. It was easy enough.

So what we've really got here is the current act is about 20 years old. We needed to have it updated and the wording and terminology updated and in some cases expanded to maintain consistency. As I mentioned, it's a good thing that we've clarified the summer villages and their responsibility, adding in not only the person that caused the fire but other people that were responsible for that, and some expanded abilities of the fire guardians to investigate and to prevent. So we're happy to support Bill 15 in Committee of the Whole.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to stand today to say a few comments on the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2003, Bill 15. The proposed amendments will bring existing legislation into line with current business practices. As well, these adjustments are part of a continuing process to find more effective ways to best manage wildfire for the benefit and protection of all Albertans.

More importantly, Mr. Chairman, I would like to respond to some of the inquiries that were made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands of the opposition during second reading of Bill 15. The first concern was fire control agreements with municipal districts. The hon. member was correct in saying that a positive and preventative direction is the best approach. The Sustainable Resource Development minister takes very seriously his authority and will not step in unless the municipality has requested assistance or the wildfire is threatening life and property. There are many communities and municipalities within and immediately surrounding the forest protection area, and Sustainable Resource Development enters into fire control agreements with those municipalities and communities on a yearly basis. Each year Sustainable Resource Development works closely with municipal districts and municipalities to review roles and responsibilities, update information, and ensure that everyone has the right contact names and phone numbers.

During these meetings they discuss new techniques in wildfire prevention and management and identify mutual training opportunities. It also allows Sustainable Resource Development to launch and promote innovative new programs such as the FireSmart community program, and, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to point out that the FireSmart program has been very successful in enabling communities, industries, and landowners to prevent wildfire hazards through better planning and will allow them to work collaboratively in situations that develop.

The second issue that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands was also concerned about is the section on forest closure and the limits on who can authorize them. Forest closure is an extremely serious issue with Sustainable Resource Development, and that is why the responsibility is left with the minister, Mr. Chairman. Before a forest is closed, a number of factors are considered, such as the level of the fire hazard, the threat for wildfires to start, and how many people could be in danger. Local municipalities and stakeholders are consulted throughout the process. I can assure the hon. member that public safety is our number one priority, and we will never, ever compromise on that point.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 19

Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there . . .

Some Hon. Members: Question. Question.

The Chair: Hon. members that require the question before it's even placed before the committee really aren't very helpful.

Again, are there any questions, comments, or amendments to be offered with respect to this? [interjection] Yes, there is.

Mr. Ouellette: Colleagues, as the sponsoring MLA I would like to summarize the reasons for bringing in this legislation, Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. Unlike the opposition our government believes in competition in the marketplace. We think that competition will result in lower costs in the retail gas marketplace and more choices for consumers.

To get more competition, you need more players in the marketplace. This bill has attracted a new competitor, Direct Energy, and other companies have expressed interest in coming to Alberta now that the playing field will be more level. Enabling more choice will result in giving consumers better ability to choose price stability, if they so wish, through fixed price contracts, more varied product offerings, competition on the basis of service, and improved market efficiency.

This legislation will also result in a single-bill model for retailers, reducing costs over the current two-bill model and providing more convenience for consumers. It will also allow gas and electricity to be marketed together. It doesn't make sense to have two separate regulatory frameworks for the two commodities. This means lower costs for businesses competing in the market, which should translate into lower costs for consumers. Unlike the opposition we think that businesses competing to provide gas and electricity service in the province should get a fair return on their investments. For default supply the return would be regulated by the EUB.

My friends across the way have questioned: "who is asking for choice? Consumers would just as soon have it all regulated by the government." A lot of consumers have wanted to purchase gas from someone other than their local utility company. Today over 40,000 consumers have exercised their ability to have choice. Many of them locked in when prices were much lower than they are today and are happy with the savings that they are now enjoying. The opposition doesn't seem to like airline and telephone deregulation either. I think most Albertans would agree that they have benefited from competition in these industries and would not want to return to a regulated environment.

With respect to these unbearable new costs that the NDs have implied, the implementation costs should be minimal and retail prices should be lower through convergence of gas and electricity, implementation of a one-bill model, and increased competition.

We agree that gas is gas. The difference here is how we pay for it. With retail competition you get more choices on how you buy your gas, and retailers are likely to market gas in ways that are attractive to consumers. We realize that although customer choice has been around for years, this may still be a relatively new concept for many Albertans, and it may take time before consumers feel comfortable making a choice. Choosing not to choose is still an option for these folks, as in doing nothing other than continuing to make regular utility payments. Consumers can stay on the regulated rate, approved by the EUB, indefinitely until they find a retail offering that they are happy with and make a decision to enter into a contract with a retailer. We are not forcing people to choose. We are creating an environment that will encourage more competition and choice for consumers.

Mr. Chairman, this government believes in the free market system to help all Albertans. That's what makes Alberta's economy the envy of the country. Alberta consumers – residential, commercial, charitable, municipal – who prefer price stability can enter into a fixed price contract with a competitive retailer or go on a utility company's budget billing plan.

In summary, I encourage you to support this free enterprise approach to gas retail marketing. Thank you for considering these legislative changes.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It was with a great deal of interest that I listened to the remarks just concluded by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, and certainly the testament to the free market that was expressed by that hon. member has to come into question because this is a government that owns its own bank. It's one of the very few legislative jurisdictions in North America, where the free market economy is supreme, that owns their own bank. So I don't think that statement has come in handy. The hon. member says: well, Alberta Treasury Branches are the next thing on the block, and we'll have to wait and see. That's probably a bill that will generate a great deal of interest, as is Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, or another name for it could certainly be the Direct Energy convergence act.

Now, when we talk, Mr. Chairman, about amending the Gas Utilities Act, the Gas Distribution Act, and the Rural Utilities Act, we've got to stop and think for a minute and decide who is going to benefit from all this. Who is going to benefit from all this competition? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands in second reading this afternoon mentioned the Consumers' Coalition, and the Consumers' Coalition certainly had some reservations about how this competition was going to benefit individual consumers. I have to agree with the Consumers' Coalition. We can talk about choice. This government has been talking about choice for utilities for three years. "Choice will bring lower costs." Well, it has not happened.

Leading up to the last election, choice was going to mean so much for consumers, and the only choice they have now, as I said here before, is which bill to pay first because they've only got enough money, enough disposable income, to pay one utility bill because of the high costs. The choice, Mr. Chairman, is not whether people want to select a marketer. They want cheap, reliable utilities, and this bill is not going to do it. The hon. member talks about: 40,000

Albertans have already signed up. Some of them are very disappointed with their contract. There are still 900,000 natural gas consumers in this province, and that's only a small percentage that have looked at choice.

Now, whenever we think of institutional users of natural gas, some of them have been for many years purchasing gas for their own use. Well, it would certainly be a contract, but those aren't the people that are calling the constituency office of Edmonton-Gold Bar on a daily basis, complaining about their natural gas prices. What they're complaining about is a government that has lost complete control of one of our natural resources, and Bill 19 is not going to bring that back.

When we consider what choices there will be – and we're going to have another player; we're going to have Direct Energy in the market – it is my view that Direct Energy should now, Mr. Chairman, be a licensed marketer in this province. They've certainly got an ad campaign going, and the ad campaign has been discussed earlier, in question period. There are two fellows that are pitching Direct Energy's entrance into the market here, and both of them look like they've pulled their hair out because of high energy prices. They're not happy, and I can only assume that this gentleman here has received his gas bill, and the other fellow must have received his electricity bill because he's not happy either.

Now, a licensed marketer in this province for natural gas, Mr. Chairman . . . [interjection] Yes. You certainly have to listen to this. Direct gas marketers must be licensed to do business in Alberta. Licensing requires a quarter of a million dollar security and the payment of a thousand-dollar licence fee, and marketers must provide, also, copies of all contracts and marketing materials. Now, Direct Energy is very anxious to get into this market. They have written the Department of Energy going back to November – I believe November 4 was the precise date – commenting and making suggestions regarding the draft natural gas legislation and regulations. Yes, it was November 4, 2002. They certainly expressed an opinion. They're not a licensed marketer, yet they're advertising here.

When we look at the licensed natural gas direct marketers in Alberta, we see the likes of CEG Energy Options, Coral Energy Canada, EnCana Corporation, Engage Energy Canada, Enmax, EPCOR, EPCOR Merchant and Capital LP, Nexen, PremStar Energy. But there's an advisory here from the Department of Energy, Mr. Chairman, and it states that residential consumers are advised to check with marketers to find out which client group they're currently selling to and which utilities are currently providing choice. So the Energy department is kind enough to put that there, but if we're talking about what the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake states and we're going to have so much choice, why – I would like to know in the course of debate – are there all these licensed natural gas direct marketers in Alberta, but only two of the eight licensed retailers for commercial consumers are actively marketing to residential consumers, EPCOR and Enmax?

If Bill 19 is going to get all this crowd interested in door-knocking and selling long-term contracts, why to date have only EPCOR and Enmax shown an interest? What about the other enterprises that I have mentioned here earlier in my remarks? Why have they not got involved in this market? Direct Energy is a marketer on a white horse coming in to try to rescue an energy deregulation plan that to date has failed and failed utterly and has created nothing but high costs for consumers. How, in the course of this debate – and I'm going to certainly listen to all hon. members – is this going to reduce the costs for consumers? What we're going to be doing is creating another level of middle persons. The middle persons have got to make a dollar, too, and I have no problem with a person making a dollar, but this is something that we have to recognize.

It's difficult for some members to recognize, but heat is not a luxury in this province. We live in a northern climate, Mr. Chairman, and heat is not a luxury, and heat in this case cannot be deemed as a commodity. Everyone in this extreme climate has the right to warm surroundings, and we cannot squander our resources. We have to put the consumers first. Bill 19 doesn't do that. It's setting up with Bill 3 to allow convergence of the natural gas and electricity markets, and I don't know how consumers are going to benefit in all this. They're not going to benefit with lower prices.

Now, natural gas at one time – in fact, Mr. Chairman, it was probably in the constituency that you do the honour of representing, the Turner Valley discovery – was just a mere nuisance. It was a mere nuisance. I'm told that from the edge of Calgary-Shaw you could probably see the natural gas, what was then, I suppose, countryside, but now it would be the urban part of Calgary called Calgary-Shaw. You could look south and see flares burning off the gas. It was a nuisance. Gradually we got control. Prudent governments in the past realized that it was a valuable resource, certainly, and when you consider how the economy in this province has expanded and how we have all prospered, it's based on cheap natural gas: accessible, affordable natural gas not only for residential use or commercial use but also for industrial use. In the course of the debate we're going to have to have a look and see exactly how much of our gas that we produce is used locally and by what sector: whether it's residential, whether it's commercial, or whether it's industrial, or there's another sector, I believe, and that's in power generation.

We have to be mindful when we're discussing this whole issue of natural gas of what the National Energy Board has to say, and the National Energy Board has moved to Calgary, and I think that's a very good home for the National Energy Board. The short-term natural gas deliverability from the western Canadian sedimentary basin in the next couple of years – and I would caution all hon. members of this Assembly to listen and carefully recognize that our natural gas is now like our conventional crude oil production. Conventional crude oil production, a lot of Albertans do not realize, has been in decline for 32 years now, and natural gas production – and I'm sure the Minister of Energy is going to come up with some real good incentive programs to spur on drilling. I'm certain of that. The National Energy Board stated recently in a report that the initial productivity of a typical gas well in the [western Canadian sedimentary basin] has been decreasing and that decline rates have been increasing since 1996. Because of these changing characteristics, the number of wells placed on production each year would have to increase in order to increase deliverability from the [western Canadian sedimentary basin.]

Now, the board is anticipating certainly an increase in the number of gas wells drilled. I realize that the gas wells in southeastern Alberta are shallower and they're much cheaper to drill, but where the real risk is and where the real money is spent and where the real payback can be is in the Foothills Front and in the Peace River District, including the section of the Peace River Arch that is in the jurisdiction of British Columbia. There has been increased activity, and this increased activity was expected to increase deliverability, but it hasn't happened. Unfortunately, it has not happened.

An Hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. MacDonald: Because there has been a greater than initial productivity decline in the first year flow rates of those wells.

When we look at that and we look at the price of natural gas – and I think the price of natural gas will certainly moderate. Heating seasons are going to change, and we're going to have a cooling season. For our American market air conditioners will be the next thing to be turned on. Furnaces will be turned off, and air conditioners will be turned on south of the border, but there's still going to be a market for our gas. The situation in Venezuela will probably settle itself out, and that means a lot to the industries that are located along the Louisiana and Texas gulf coast. So, hopefully, there will be some moderation.

Whenever we look at the long-term implications, Mr. Chairman, of natural gas in this province, there's not an unlimited supply, and we have to ensure – and there are many ways of doing that – that we have accessible, affordable natural gas for Albertans to heat their homes and run their businesses on. That is a priority, and I do not see that priority in this legislation, unfortunately. This legislation is just driven by this notion that we're going to have competition for the sake of competition. When we consider what Albertans have enjoyed in the past as far as affordable heating costs, I think we have to look at going back there.

Mr. Chairman, when we look at implications of NAFTA – and perhaps the Minister of Energy is going to join in debate. I'm certain that energy officials have discussed this with the minister. When the Americans used tax incentives to encourage the development of the coal bed methane industry south of the border, there were no NAFTA considerations raised by the jurisdiction of Alberta, or they alerted the federal government and had the federal government do it. Certainly, there was no notification of that or there was no discussion of that in the press. Last year in this Assembly the hon. Minister of Energy explained that 8 percent of the gas production in the lower 48 came from coal bed methane. I was startled to read in that liberal newspaper, the New York Times, of the tax incentives that were utilized to get the coal bed methane industry onto its feet.

I would like to know if there has been any exploration by the Department of Energy to check out the NAFTA implications of this. Certainly, the same thing, to my knowledge, was not going on in this province, that we were having these incentives for natural gas production, at least not on that level. I know that we do have some royalty holidays, and those royalty holidays are complex issues. Some of those royalty holidays are not even scrutinized by the public. But if the Americans can do it, I'm curious to know why we can't.

Now, there's been a lot of talk about the Americans lately, and certainly, Mr. Chairman, I'm very fond of the Americans. There are only two things I don't like about America.

An Hon. Member: They keep bombing people?

Mr. MacDonald: No. It's their beer and their health care. The beer I find too watery, and the health care I find too expensive. But other than that, you know, they're our neighbours and they're our friends, and I always enjoy myself whenever I get together with Americans. We always seem to have fun.

On Bill 19, Mr. Chairman, we have to consider all these issues. We have to consider where we will be in the future. As a result of Bill 19 will we be looking at having industries leaving this province because of fuel gas to run their industrial processes? How will this work?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wainwright indicated that he wanted to speak next, but if not, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to speak again to this bill at the committee stage. I guess I'll start by responding to the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who, much to my surprise, was critical of the New Democrats' position on this bill and, I'm assuming by implication, also the Liberal opposition's, although of course according to the Premier we're much worse than the Liberals. So if the Premier thinks we're worse, then we think that's better.

The assumption that introducing competition into an area of the economy is automatically going to produce better results is just that: it is an assumption. This assumption, if we're going to be scientific about it, needs to be tested. How do we test that? Well, what would be outcomes that we could look to to indicate whether or not one system was better than another? Well, Mr. Chairman, I would think that the first thing that you might want to look at would be the price. If you look carefully at the price of electricity, which is a similar commodity – it's not exactly the same, but after three years of deregulation in this province we have something to go on – we can see how the price has changed with electricity between the time that deregulation was begun and today. We can also compare the price of electricity in this jurisdiction, where deregulation has proceeded fairly far down the road, with other jurisdictions that have not deregulated electricity. So we can compare those prices.

We can also look at similar jurisdictions, so we could look at another jurisdiction that has tried to deregulate electricity, and we could then compare that result to the result we've seen here in Alberta. If we did all of those three things, we would be able to get an idea as to whether or not deregulation of that particular commodity had had a beneficial effect on price.

Now, I think we can do the same kind of thing with natural gas. The difficulty, of course, is that we are quite a bit earlier in the process with natural gas as compared to electricity, so we don't have a lot of results so far. But we can look at what the government has been doing with natural gas, and that is to allow wholesale exports of raw gas from the province into the American market, and we can see the result of that. We can see it with our gas bills this month and last month and next month, and we can see it with the result of government rebate programs before the last election. The result is that we have a far less stable system for natural gas pricing than we had before, and that's because shortages in other parts of this continent will drive the price that we have to pay for our own natural gas according to the system that the government has set up.

Now, is that beneficial for Albertans? Well, Mr. Chairman, it is and it isn't. It is in the sense that the government, because of its royalty regime, can realize windfall benefits from sharp increases in the price of natural gas, and they have in fact done that. That's good for Albertans provided that the government makes use of that additional revenue in a way that benefits Albertans. Again, the answer is: they do and they don't.

But it cuts both ways, Mr. Chairman, and what happens is that Albertans have to pay substantially more in the winter months when there's a shortage of gas in the United States. When we have a cold winter in Chicago, we pay through the nose here in Alberta notwithstanding the fact that it's our own gas. That hurts Albertans in a very big way, and I think that it's patently obvious that these additional costs are borne not just by individuals but by businesses, by farmers, and they are transferred to taxpayers through municipal tax increases. We have plenty of evidence of that. The city of Edmonton, the town of Athabasca: there's no end to the list of municipalities that have had to either increase taxes or cut municipal services in order to pay for both higher gas and electricity bills.

It gets passed on in medical costs to the government, so it comes back to bite them on the nose, and it gets passed on to seniors who live in seniors' accommodation. In my particular constituency there have been significant rent increases for seniors in both lodge and apartment accommodation as a result of the need for those nonprofit organizations that run those lodges and apartments to meet increased utility costs in the province. So that's a negative consequence.

What we can see with electricity very clearly is that higher prices have resulted from deregulation both compared to Alberta in the past, before deregulation, or compared to other provinces that have not deregulated electricity, or we have also seen similar results in jurisdictions that have deregulated electricity. The same kinds of things have happened where there have been dramatic increases in power costs. So I think that the evidence is clear. When it comes to deregulation of electricity, higher prices are a result. What I'm going to go out on a limb here and assert, Mr. Chairman, is that deregulation in natural gas will in fact result in exactly the same phenomenon. In other words, we are going to see dramatic increases in gas over and above what we've already seen.

Mr. Chairman, there have been two kinds of increases. One is the market swings that we've seen as a result of the creation of a North American market, but on top of those market swings, which we're now experiencing, we're now going to see a built-in or a structural increase in gas prices because the government has added costs into the structure. So by forcing through this bill and through their previous policies, the breakdown or the separation or the unbundling, as they like to call it, of retail, which is the selling of the gas through the pipes that exist, and the distribution – you can't do both – you're creating, then, two or three additional levels. There's the gas producers, there's the transmission, there's the distribution of the gas, and then there's retailers, all of whom compete with one another in order to get market share, and they have to be separate from the distributors.

So what you're doing is you're adding more players and you're stacking them vertically. Each player has its cost of operation, and it needs a return on its investment. So we're adding cost as we go, as we start stacking these various entities. Where we once had one entity, we now have a number of them, and that's the unbundling process. It builds in a structural cost to support. So the government is trying to build an infrastructure to support what they call choice, but that infrastructure has a big cost.

Now, is the choice going to offset that? Well, obviously no, because the cost structure is your starting point for the cost of your gas and any competition takes place over and above that structure. How do companies operate in this kind of market? Do they cut things to the bone? Do they subsidize the natural gas? Do they work very, very hard to give people the cheapest possible gas? Or do they compete in other ways? Well, I think you could look at other places that have been deregulated. There are some changes they will attempt to give you. You may win a trip to Las Vegas if you sign a three-year contract or you might get free gas for a month or you might get some kind of bargain on your gas if you use it after a certain time at night or if you use more in the summer, but basically they don't want to bring down nor is it in their interest to bring down the cost of natural gas to prices that could be delivered under a regulated system.

So I think we can conclude, Mr. Chairman, that there is a very great likelihood that the passing of this bill will result in an increase in the cost that we pay for natural gas from month to month. It will still swing wildly because the government has created this North American market, which they didn't have to do but that it would be very difficult to get out of now due to NAFTA, I'm quite sure. So we're now pumping out our gas faster than we're finding it. We're paying wildly fluctuating prices. In fact, we pay the highest prices at the time of the year that we use the most natural gas, and over and above that, in order to support all of these new entities that are coming into the Alberta market to provide so-called competition, we're going to build in a structural increase to the prices.

So I believe that we need to take quite a detailed look at Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, and we need to examine it. I would urge all members who are getting calls now: if your constituents are upset with the price of natural gas today, then I think you ought to consider very carefully whether you want to add to the burdens of your constituents by passing Bill 19 because that, Mr. Chairman, is exactly what you will be doing. If people can be persuaded, I guess, that for some sort of ideological reason that choice is a good idea, then they can be persuaded to go along with this bill until they have to start paying the piper. Then I think people are going to say: well, wait a minute.

There's a difference between ideology and a fervent belief in the market, an almost religious belief that the market solves all problems, and the practicalities of the matter. I urge the government and government members to put ideology aside and look at the practicalities of the matter because anyone that examines it from that point of view – what works; what delivers the lowest cost energy to homeowners; what is reliable; how can we best guarantee a reliable supply at a reasonable and a stable price? – will conclude that the package of government policies that have been proposed and implemented up until this stage and the further steps included in this bill are, in fact, the very opposite of practical, efficient, and public-minded policy for natural gas. In fact, they will have to conclude that it holds the average constituent of every member of this Assembly hostage to gas producers and gas retailers. Those companies are the ones who will benefit by this bill at the expense of the rest of us. Yet the government seems to be facilitating that even as we speak, and they are taking advantage of the fervent belief in the market of many members of this Assembly.

But I'm here to tell you, Mr. Chairman, that that is a misguided belief in this case. The market works wonderfully in lots of places, and contrary to what some may believe, we actually support the market when it comes to things like hamburgers and CDs and cars. There are lots of things that the market does a wonderful job at, but this is not one of them, and I think that it would be wise on the part of members of this Assembly to take a close look at the functionality of the system that the government is proposing and consider carefully how it will work, how it will deliver lower prices. Is there really going to be a rush of investors rushing in to fill some kind of market vacuum here in this province in order to compete with one another in a way that will drive down the price of natural gas? Is that realistic? Is that something that people really believe is going to happen? If so, what is the proof?

I believe that we should be asking the government to demonstrate in a practical way with research how this function will occur if gas is going to be cheaper and the prices more stable and supply preserved for the future generations of this province. If they believe that, then they should probably pass the bill. Mr. Chairman, I don't believe that this bill will do anything other than the direct opposite. I think that it's a grave mistake, and I think that it would be a mistake to pass this bill as it now stands.

So, Mr. Chairman, just in conclusion, I'd like to indicate that the New Democrat opposition is and remains adamantly opposed to this direction of the government, which we believe is not in the best interests of ordinary Albertans. People with homes or farms or small businesses or people who are dependent on public services will all be paying more if this bill goes ahead. So I would certainly hope that during the course of debate at committee stage, we will be prepared to open-mindedly consider a number of very positive amendments that could be brought forward in order to fix this bill.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll be prepared to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 19 in committee stage.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader. [interjections] Well, that's nice, but we just adjourned debate on Bill 19. Would you like to say some words about that?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Okay. Let's do that. Let's rise and report bills 21 and 15 and report progress on Bill 19.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 21 and Bill 15. The committee reports progress on Bill 19.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased that some progress has been made, and with that I would move that we stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:56 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 12, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/12

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Though we as legislators of this great province and its people are taken from among the population and are selected by You to be architects of our history, give us wisdom and understanding to do Your will in all that we do. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the Hon. Lyle Vanclief, Minister of Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada. Mr. Vanclief is accompanied by Ken McCready, regional director, Alberta and Territories, for Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada. Mr. Vanclief is in Alberta today to carry out a number of official duties. We're delighted to have him visit our great province. We met this morning to finalize some of the details on the ag policy framework negotiations, which I believe are an outstanding opportunity for agriculture in this country and in this province.

We had the opportunity to visit a grade 4 class at Westglen school this morning to kick off a Canada-wide campaign on allergy alerts and food recalls. I know that Minister Vanclief and I both want to thank the teachers and the students and the staff at Westglen for their enthusiastic participation. We attended a Growing Alberta luncheon where Minister Vanclief announced a $500,000 contribution to Growing Alberta, which we are matching as a province.

Minister Vanclief will carry on this afternoon after he leaves our Legislature to meet with a number of our industry leaders and continue to talk about agriculture. I know that they will continue to talk to Minister Vanclief about marketing choice for our province, and he expects it.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to have our Minister of Agriculture and Agri-Food for Canada in our Legislature today, and I would ask all members to give him a very, very warm welcome.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Mr. Reno Balon and Mrs. Margaret Balon, who reside in your constituency in Westlock. They're visiting today to watch their granddaughter, Andrea Balon, who is one of our pages assisting us this afternoon. They are standing in your gallery this afternoon, and I would ask that all members give them the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group from the Multicultural Heritage Centre who are with us today to bring attention to Farm Safety Week, which starts today through March 19. Each year too many farms are the sites of horrific accidents, and this group of 20 individuals represents the average number of people who tragically lose their lives in farming accidents each year. Even one is too many, and we thank these members for drawing attention to improving safety. They are seated in the members' and public galleries, and I would ask them to stand as I call their names: Carol Haugen, Ralph and Bernice Jespersen, Audrey Kulak, Judy and Bill Kesanko, Jeanette Smith, Lucy Judge, Darlene Enzenauer, Bruce Foster, Rae Strass, Uta Preuss, Gordon and Ila Phillips, Gerry Kulak, John and Brenda Buckingham, Stephanie Szeponski, Roxanne Fisher, and Gerry Neufeld. I invite them to receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've all heard the saying: you can pick your friends, but you can't pick your relatives. Well, I want to say today that I'm introducing a relative of mine who actually introduced me to the province of Alberta over 26 years ago. He left a small rural community in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, to come to Alberta and in fact allowed me to stay with him during my time of being a co-op student. My cousin's name is Warren Boutillier and I'd like to ask Warren to rise and I want to thank him for introducing me to this great province of ours.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure today that I introduce to you and through you to the Assembly the Kopp family. As I introduce them, I'd like them to stand: Mr. Randy Kopp, Mrs. Catie Kopp, Nathan, Joshua, Esther, and Reuben, and as a bonus we got Mrs. Judy Aikman, their grandmother, visiting from near Newmarket, Ontario. This family was a great family that helped me in my election, and I'm very proud of them. So I'd like the members to give them the warm greeting of this House.

Mr. Vandermeer: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you 55 students from the Kildare elementary school. Accompanying them are their teachers Ms Lorraine Goruk, Mrs. Diane Shih. Their parent helpers are Mrs. Judy Wong, Mrs. Jenny Wayne, Mrs. Van Tran, and Mrs. Anna Wong. They are seated in the members' gallery and the public gallery. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the Legislature two colleagues that used to serve in this House with us. Lance White and Percy Wickman joined this House the same time I did, in 1993.

Ms Carlson: No. Percy before.

Dr. Nicol: Yeah. Sorry. Percy was in before that, in '89. That's right. Thanks for reminding me. I'd like to ask everyone in the House here to join me in welcoming them back as visitors to this House.

head: Oral Question Period

Natural Gas Rebates

Dr. Nicol: Two years ago today this government brought Albertans onside with free-flowing energy rebates and a promise of lower utility bills. In addition to handing out millions in natural gas rebates in 2001, the government promised a law that would protect Albertans from unexpected spikes in the price of natural gas. This winter we have neither rebates nor a law that works. To the Premier: given that you promised Albertans that the Natural Gas Price Protection Act would work like a thermostat and kick in when the price hits a certain level, why did you change your mind after the election and decide that the trigger for natural gas rebates should be a yearly average price?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you have to bring some sensibility and some . . .

Dr. Massey: They're election promises.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if they want to talk about election promises, I'll tell you that they had election promises that totaled about $23 billion. Thank God they would never be able to deliver on them, or we would be absolutely bankrupt.

There had to be a benchmark. It was deemed that a yearly average reaching $5.50 a gigajoule would be reasonable, and when that price is reached based on the yearly average, Albertans will be entitled to the rebates. Simple as that.

Dr. Nicol: Can the Premier pinpoint exactly when this House got a chance to debate the regulation, not the spirit or the intent of the law but the regulation that stipulates that the annual average price of natural gas must reach $5.50 before rebates are triggered?

Mr. Klein: The hon. leader of the Liberal Party knows full well the rules of the Legislature. You don't debate regulations in the Legislature; you debate the legislation, Mr. Speaker. Insofar as I know – and I know one of the hon. members rose on a point of order – there was no opposition to the legislation; it's only now when the temperature is cold. Now that it's getting warmer, as the temperature gets higher and higher and higher – you know what? – the temperature over there will become lower and lower and lower, and then they'll go on to another issue. Watch it.

Dr. Nicol: Will the Premier admit that he has no business saying that this law was fully debated in the House when the truth is that the government went behind closed doors to draft the regulations that actually say how the law would work?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition has been around long enough to know how the Legislature works. You debate legislation. You debate the law in the House; you don't debate regulations. Regulations are administrative, and the people who drafted the regulations to fit the law are good-thinking people who devised a responsible and reasonable program, a program that provides sustainability, a program that Albertans can afford, but moreover a program that on a reasonable basis provides a certain degree of security relative to the price consumers pay for natural gas.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: why does the government make a flawed regulation a priority over its own promise and policy to return to Albertans a share of the resources that they own?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can remember the Liberal opposition yelling and screaming about the rebate program when we introduced it – that is, introduced it on an ad hoc basis – yelling and screaming about it, how awful this was, and now they want us to institute the same thing. They were saying at that time that what the government needs to do is to bring in a program of stability, which is exactly what we did, and now they don't like it. But that's the way the Liberals are.

Dr. Nicol: Will the Premier admit that this legislation is flawed and amend it immediately since three consecutive large increases in the price of natural gas could not trigger rebates that Albertans deserve?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question so many times in the Legislature. The answer is no. First of all, the legislation is not flawed; it's good legislation. It's legislation that fits into the government's program of sustainability, doing what is right over the long term for Albertans, not a knee-jerk reaction to a problem that exists right now, albeit uncomfortable for some. We need to keep our eye on the big picture, something they've been unable to do, and to achieve sustainability, and that law does precisely that.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: will the Premier admit that the only emergency that distinguished the winter of 2001 from this winter was the government's need to get elected?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there was no question; therefore, there will be no answer.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health Care Workers' Collective Bargaining

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has told health care unions that most of the questions they had about the new labour legislation will be answered later in regulations. High-stress working conditions are the root of the critical shortage of health care workers in this province, and the blame lies squarely on the shoulders of this government. That's why this government should promote negotiation, not confrontation, with our public health care workers. My first question is to the Premier. Now that this government has removed the right to strike from all public health care workers, will this government appoint three unionized health care workers to each of the nine new regional health authorities in an effort to promote continuous dialogue and understanding between the regional health authorities and their employees?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, something seems to be lost on the hon. member, and that is that there still are laws relative to collective bargaining and the unions have every right in the world to enter into collective bargaining. I'd point out that as long as I can remember, the nurses have not had the right to strike, yet they've been able to negotiate very generous salary increases through negotiations, and they were not appointed to hospital boards or regional health authorities. There's such a thing as collective bargaining. It has worked in the past, and it'll work in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of human resources: can the minister please guarantee that health care employees being moved into different bargaining units will retain their seniority as they move from new bargaining unit to new bargaining unit?

Mr. Dunford: Well, I think this is an opportunity again to make it clear to all Albertans and certainly to members in the House that what we're trying to do here with Bill 27 is set a platform on which the transition that's taking place in the regional health authorities can in fact take place. Now, there's some legislation that's involved, and there's some regulation that's going to be involved, but the specific that's in his question today is a matter of further collective bargaining and certainly not legislation.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: will the Minister of Human Resources and Employment table the draft regulations to Bill 27 in the Assembly so that all Albertans can see exactly what is in those regulations?

Mr. Dunford: We have been an open and accountable government now for 10 or more years. We'll continue to be that. When the regulations are ready, they'll be well publicized, and people will understand what it is and what the rules will be.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Education Funding

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For the past few weeks I've been visiting schools in my riding, meeting with teachers, principals, and parents. Full-day kindergarten, reading recovery programs, and literacy programs as well as smaller class sizes are vital programs that are achieving amazing results for high-needs children in these schools. However, many of these programs are now facing the axe next year as a result of the government's failure to address the funding shortfall of Edmonton public schools. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Will the minister guarantee that reading recovery programs and programs like them, that have led to a dramatic increase in the percentage of students who are meeting the provincial standard for reading and writing in these communities, are not cut?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that we are doing with the new funding formula that is coming in is guaranteeing the flexibility to the school boards to put their dollars where they're most needed. If, for example, in Edmonton it's reading recovery programs, then the school board has the ability to put their dollars towards reading recovery programs. If in another particular school jurisdiction it may be mathematics skills, numeracy skills, they have the ability to put their resources towards that. The flexibility of school boards is actually going to increase quite significantly this September, and I would hope that the school boards make the right decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the minister's answer, will he explain how greater flexibility is going to help the school boards, when the overall dollars that they have available are dramatically reduced as a result of the need to fund the teachers' arbitration?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member should read the budgets that have been tabled in this Legislature for the last five or six years. What you have seen is steady increases in the amount of dollars that have flowed into education. As a matter of fact, since '95 it's about a 46 percent increase. In the last four years, since I've been minister, we're sitting at around a 21 or 22 percent increase, so there's a large amount of dollars that has actually gone into the education system.

In talking to the school boards, one of their main issues is that too many of the funds have been targeted, for example, to this particular program or that particular program. They have lobbied quite vociferously to have the flexibility to put their funds where they're needed the most, and this government, being the government that it is, has agreed to that and agreed to work with school boards to ensure that they have that flexibility to put the dollars where they're needed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to give the minister credit. These programs have in fact been very successful.

The question is: will the government not recognize that there is going to be a significant reduction in these programs as a result of this minister and this government forcing the school boards to take the money for the arbitration settlement out of existing programs?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said in this House many times, there is approximately $298 million that has been given to the school boards over the past two years. The arbitration settlement rose to a level of around $260 million. Is there a lot of money left over? No, there is not an awful lot of money left over, but $38 million is a significant amount of dollars. That's what they have to utilize, and that's what they will be utilizing to put it where it's needed the most. I have confidence that the school boards will put those dollars where they are needed the most, and as I've said before numerous times, we will certainly help them if that isn't the case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Agricultural Policy Framework

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada has been in our province, many producers have expressed concerns about, among other things, market choice and the ongoing APF negotiations with the federal government. Could the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development update us on the status of the negotiations for the APF?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my introduction of the hon. minister for Canada, we did have an opportunity to meet this morning and to just try to finalize some of our negotiations. I would say that on the four chapters outside of business risk management our task is virtually complete. Alberta has many programs that fit the program, and we don't have difficulties.

On the business risk management program we're continuing to do some work on the NISA program. As members know, Alberta has not been a participant in NISA as a province – producers are but not as a province – since 1996. I am becoming far more comfortable with the feeling that we are going to be able to manage those issues. Opportunities for beginning farmers and developing farmers: that is moving along very well; appropriate triggers so that when the money is needed, Mr. Speaker, the money indeed comes out of this program.

I have made it a practice of saying: it is the net income stabilization account. That was what it was designed to do. It has not worked as well as it could, and I'm confident that the direction we're going will enable Alberta to be a participant in NISA in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question to the same minister: given that there are some time lines involved here, if negotiations don't produce an agreement soon, what will happen to existing programs for the province's producers? Will they receive the protection they need?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we don't let our agricultural producers down in this province. They can be assured that the farm income disaster program will be in place as we transition into the new ag policy framework. This is the first opportunity, I think, that we've had to have an agreement in the span of five years that completely changed the focus and brought our agricultural policies up to the current times. We're appreciative that the federal minister has been able to get funding from his treasury that actually provides some bridging into the new policy framework.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind all members that thanks to the successful negotiations and the signing that Alberta did in June of last year, about a month ago we were able to introduce to our producers a very comprehensive set of crop, hay, and pasture insurance programs, probably the most comprehensive package of safety nets in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. The federal government has said that it would like to see this agreement signed by the end of this month because that's when the old agreements expire. Will the province be able to finish those negotiations in time?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be indeed unfortunate if we as a province and a country let this opportunity pass us by. I've said in this Legislature in discussions on this: no, it's not perfect, but it's a perfectly good start. No, there probably isn't enough money, but there probably never would be. I am going to do my best to encourage my colleagues from across the country to take advantage of this opportunity for agriculture in Canada. My primary interest is our province. We're prepared to proceed.

Green Power

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, my first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. What is the current rate that Infrastructure pays for electricity, and what is the rate you locked this government into for the next 20 years with your new green power contract?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks very much for the question, because it is a great day for the environment and for the government of Alberta. We just had the opportunity to sign a multiyear contract with Enmax Corporation and with Canadian Hydro Developers, Inc., and this sees us buying power at a rate about $20 a megawatt-hour less than we are currently paying. So it is a huge savings to the province. The amount will be in excess of $4 million a year on our consumption. We currently consume about 230,000 megawatt-hours per year. This contract is for 210,000. So it's about 90 percent of our consumption. We've signed up to a 20-year contract at a fixed rate over that time. Mr. Speaker, these are environmentally sound projects, so we've also taken possession of the green credits.

Perhaps the Minister of Environment would like to add to the advantage to the environment.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, the question was: what is that fixed rate? Please share it with all Albertans.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the openness and accountability of this government, the contracts will be available. It was through an open RFP process, and the current rate we are paying is about 89 and some cents a megawatt-hour. The new price will be 68 and some cents a megawatt-hour.

Ms Carlson: So, Mr. Speaker, then will this minister confirm that at that rate, because of energy deregulation bungling, Albertans are never going to see their electricity prices fall once again to affordable rates? Look at the price you're paying.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member very much for that question, because the fact is that if it hadn't been for generation deregulation, we wouldn't have been able to enter into this contract because the small producers were not allowed to sell into the market. There was a cap uncovered, and this allowed them to come into the market, so there's hope for that break.

Don't forget, hon. member, that we own the green credits. The green credits are worth about $15 a megawatt-hour. So the fact is that we will have that rate down to about 5.1 cents a kilowatt-hour, which is actually very much a good deal.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to briefly supplement on behalf of Environment. You can see that I'm excited by this announcement today, and I'd just like to point out that for every one megawatt-hour we buy, it saves one tonne of carbon, one tonne of CO₂, one tonne of greenhouse gases. So this is very much a benefit to the environment. It is green and it is powerful and, quite frankly, the only way the Liberals will ever be green is green with envy.

The Speaker: The minister is not only excited, but he's also a fashion statement.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Postsecondary Education

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many people in my constituency are wondering what is happening with education these days, and they wonder whether or not young people in this province are able to access the proper education or whether or not they're falling behind. Our government has recognized and is promoting the importance of education. However, one still often hears negative media stories of students being turned away or choosing not to attend postsecondary education. Recently Statistics Canada released the 2001 census data on education. The statistics include information about the level of education of Canadians and how much they earn. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Can the minister explain what this data means for Alberta and how our province compares to other provinces in terms of educational attainment?

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much for that very, very excellent question, and I'd be more than happy to respond to this. Yesterday Stats Canada brought out a major report on the state of education in Canada. It's called Education in Canada: Raising the Standard. There are some very interesting details in that, and some of them relating to Alberta are nothing short of exceptional. I'll give you some examples. From 1991 to 2001 40 percent more people graduated from a trade school, college, or university in the province of Alberta. There was a 49 percent increase in the number of students who graduated from college and a 51 percent increase in the number of students who graduated from university. I think that this is absolutely exceptional. I'd like to be able to take all the credit for it, but the credit actually lies with our postsecondary education institutions and facilities and the excellent, excellent job that they are doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: so what does this data show about how Alberta compares with the rest of the world?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just happen to have that answer right here. What it shows first of all in Canada – and I realize that there are members of the federal government here, so everyone in Canada should be happy with this – is that 41 percent of the workforce population from 25 to 64 have a university or college education. That is the highest in the world, that is the highest in the OECD, and I think that we should all be very proud of that.

To put that into perspective, Mr. Speaker, the United States is at 37 percent, the United Kingdom is at 26 percent, and Japan is at 34 percent. So I think we are definitely going in the right direction. We are preparing our workforce for the educated world that is out there, and again I'd like to commend all the universities and colleges and postsecondary institutions in Canada for the excellent job that they're doing.

Mr. Lord: My final question to the same minister: given that there are always exceptions and that some of the most successful people in society don't always have that much formal education, what average correlation is there between education, lifetime earnings, and net worth?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is – and this has been proven time and time again – a direct correlation between education and lifetime earnings. I will add one thing though. The net worth tends to not be quite as direct a correlation, as many of us in this Assembly can certainly attest to. So that is not there, but the lifetime earnings certainly have gone up. The more education you have, the more lifetime earnings you get, and again certainly something we want our students in Alberta to strive for.

Untendered Contracts

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, it's amazing how this government operates behind closed doors and from under a veil of secrecy. It's undemocratic, and it's just not right. As an example of this behaviour, the Minister of Infrastructure refuses to let the public see any documents relating to untendered contracts in his department. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why have you broken your promise to Albertans to govern fairly and transparently by denying them access to the records of contracts that were issued by your department but never tendered?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, a little background. What the hon. member is referring to is a written question that they placed on the Order Paper asking for a horrendous amount of information relating to the contracts that we have out there. We have a myriad of contracts. If the hon. member would be specific – what is it that he's looking for? – we'd only be too happy, but I cannot in good faith take good taxpayers' dollars and a whole bunch of book work that is going to yield nothing. We have little contracts out there where we simply set out for the most minor of things that we ask for, and we sometimes have contracts that are a little larger. But anything that's of any size goes out for either a tender or a request for qualifications and then an RFP.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what is fair and transparent government worth to this minister? According to the FOIP co-ordinator from his own department, these documents could be made public for less than $6,000.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would sure love to see what it is that he asked of the FOIP co-ordinator, because if he's specific in what it is that he's looking for, we'll provide it. But when you put just a whole blanket out there, I will not ask my staff to spend hundreds of hours looking for these little, tiny issues.

Mr. Bonner: Well, given that the research has already been done, Mr. Speaker, and that this minister has refused in the past to operate in a fair, democratic, and transparent manner, when can Albertans expect to see the contents of the documents relating to untendered contracts in this province?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, once again, I would love to see what it is that he asked of the FOIP co-ordinator, because if he was specific in his request and indicates that it was only a $6,000 bill, why didn't he go ahead with it? Why didn't you ask then? Why didn't you get them to deliver it? Why didn't you go that route?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I should advise you as well that we do have a Standing Order that covers this last type of question. There was a decision of the House with respect to this motion.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Energy Prices

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents lately are inundated with information in newspapers, radio ads, and television ads with various companies promoting various contracts on energy. To the Minister of Energy: is there any objective information on which my constituents can make an educated decision whether they ought to follow some of the suggestions or not?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, at lunchtime I was going through the Department of Energy's web site where it talked about licensed retailers, talked about the ability for consumers to make choices, for consumers to be able to budget their bills, for consumers to be able to find the right energy mix for their particular circumstances. Now, that information is available on the Energy web site, and in fact some 40,000 residential consumers in Alberta have already either purchased on a budget equalized payment plan or have purchased on contract.

This market, Mr. Speaker, is going to become more active, as we know. As we do that, the government of Alberta, the Department of Energy, will be very active in a consumer education program. In other areas where deregulation has worked, not as well as it has in Alberta, they found that one of the cornerstones of market success is consumer education. We intend to be full, we intend to be complete, and we contend that there will be adequate information out for all consumers to make wise, good choices depending on their individual circumstances. That's going to be the key: working with their utility companies or energy retailer such that they can make a good purchase. Our job has been to create through Bill 3 and Bill 19 a plateau, a menu-driven network where people can choose what's best for themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first and last supplemental is to the Minister of Infrastructure. What is the minister's department doing right now to offset the high cost of energy that the school boards must face so that school programs need not be adversely affected?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we recognize that there are some school boards that are having some difficulty, and we are monitoring that and asking them to let us know the severity of it. But I also want to point out that as of today the spot price of gas has dropped 50 percent from its peak, so it's headed in the right direction. I also know that many of the school districts had forward contracts as far as their electricity is concerned, so they knew what that number was going to be.

As far as taking funds out of the classroom to pay for utilities, no, the school boards cannot do that.

2:10 Asbestos Abatement in Calgary Hospitals

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, under repeated questioning the Minister of Human Resources and Employment continues to provide nothing but vague assurances regarding asbestos exposure at the Foothills. The opposition raised this issue because we have obtained documents, many documents, and we've spoken with various people involved with these incidents. I'll be advising the people affected to contact his department but not until they speak with a lawyer first. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: how can Albertans take this minister's investigations seriously when the opposition, with very limited resources, finds more information and witnesses on both the Holy Cross and the Foothills asbestos contaminations in months than his entire department seems to have found in years?

Mr. Dunford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a workplace health and safety department, that is staffed by professional people. This department has been working with the Calgary health region and with the asbestos contractors I think since 1999 on this particular issue. I have given the word that I have received from the department about this issue in my place here in question period in previous situations. I also asked then that if they had information based on whatever research they have, whatever people have come forward to them, to please bring it to my attention and that I would make sure that it got looked at. I continue to wait.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've done exactly that, so what explanation can the minister give to workers like Ray Klaschinsky, whom we sent to him? This is a worker who faced substantial asbestos exposure at the Holy Cross, wrote the minister's department six weeks ago asking for help, and hasn't had any response. What's your response?

Mr. Dunford: The challenge was made by this hon. member to me a day or two ago, and my response still stands. I asked the member, if he had this evidence, to provide it directly to me, and I'm still waiting for that. Now, there have been I don't know how many letters that we would have that come to the department – that's right; I see you nodding – and that's exactly what I want you to do. We don't need to have any innuendo or anything like that about what might be happening elsewhere. If you want to make a direct accusation, then you present it to me, and we'll look into it. It's pretty simple.

Dr. Taft: Okay. So we'll carry on, Mr. Speaker. Will this minister commit to ensure here and now that all workers who have reasonable grounds to suspect that they've been exposed to asbestos at the Holy Cross and the Foothills will get the appropriate medical testing they deserve under the law in a timely manner?

Mr. Dunford: We have continued to operate within our mandate, Mr. Speaker, which of course is the law. The Holy Cross is now back on the table, then, besides the Calgary health region, and we continue to look at both of those areas. We will administer our own laws, and we don't need to be reminded by this hon. member to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks the second anniversary of broken promises and the continuation of this government's policy of high energy prices. Instead of its promise of energy rebates to offset natural gas price spikes, this government has delivered the highest electricity bills in Canada and a rebate program without rebates. Instead of helping Albertans to avoid frostbite in their living rooms, the government tells voters to look on the Internet for nonexistent better energy deals. Perhaps the government should advertise this new web site: www.untilthenextelection.com. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. What purpose does the rebate program without rebates serve other than filling up space on Tory election leaflets?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, we'll look for that question under www.dumbquestions.com.

I will table at the appropriate time today the prices of natural gas from 2000 to the present time. If the member will go through the detail, the information that I will table, he will find that the prices in 2002-2003 are lower than they were in 2000 and 2001, and in fact the basis on which we struck the Natural Gas Price Protection Act was a strike price 5 percent lower than what it was in 2001 and one that has access for people, and it's very easy. It does work like a thermostat. It's just that the thermostat is in the middle of the door. It's not at the bottom of the door, and it's not at the top of the door. In fact, when the appropriate price is reached, rebates kick in. The money is then collected through the collection of royalties, and it fits inside the parameters of the budgeting process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. As early as next Monday's cabinet meeting this government could change its regulations and provide rebates. Will the minister tell Albertans why he won't or can't fulfill his party's election promise?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure if this government was to respond to every question every day in question period – why can't we change this, and why can't we change that? – we'd probably be like ND governments in other jurisdictions. For example, in Manitoba we don't even know how they'd price natural gas, but today the price of it is over $10 a gj. So, in fact, as the member who was present, I hope, during the debate of Bill 1 in 2001 and read the press release of August 8, 2001, knows, this government reviews every regulation in a timely manner. The review for that regulation is scheduled to be July of 2003, and we will go through the appropriate process.

Dr. Pannu: My final question, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. A dictionary in my office defines a lie as something meant to deceive or give a wrong impression. Doesn't this fit the Tory Party's rebate promise?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to stand and publicly recognize the importance of green power in this Assembly. In fact, the deal that was announced today, the energy price, would not have been available without the benefits of energy deregulation, would not be able to provide people across this province with the choices they have and with the ability to know that Albertans will always have good, up-to-date electricity; good, up-to-date transmission; good, up-to-date transmission facilities for natural gas; and they will always have natural gas because this province is looking ahead. It doesn't have the ability to look behind, as the NDs continue to point out.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

External Legal Counsel

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question today involves some recent media reports concerning legal fees for external legal advice related to the yet to be implemented Kyoto accord. These reports indicate budgetary items of approximately $500,000, approximately half of which has already been spent. My questions are for the Attorney General. Why is the government obtaining the services of outside legal counsel rather than relying on the expertise and advice within its own department?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The stories that were generated recently obviously came as a result of supplementary supply estimates in this House a week or so ago, in which we asked for and received permission of the Legislature to spend a supplementary amount of up to $500,000 on external legal advice. We have, as I indicated in defence of our estimates at the time, a superb group of people who work within the Department of Justice who provide legal advice to government on constitutional matters, and we certainly have relied on their expertise and the expertise of that team in providing legal advice with respect to the Kyoto protocol and matters surrounding that.

Notwithstanding the excellent advice and the excellent support that we get from our in-house counsel, the Kyoto protocol is a matter of considerable importance to Albertans, and it could have a considerable impact on the Alberta economy. The government of Alberta and the Department of Justice quite prudently, I think, decided that we needed to look at all aspects to provide good corporate advice to all departments of government that were affected and to the government itself. You sometimes, in order to do that, need to have more than your current resources at hand and supplement those resources by going to external counsel, which is what we did in this case.

I might also say that it's sometimes prudent and was certainly prudent in this case to go to external counsel to have another look, another viewpoint at what we're doing so that we make sure we cover all the bases in providing that corporate advice. We had, in addition to external counsel, of course, the subcommittee of our External Advisory Committee, a legal subcommittee, which did not receive payment but which also provided legal advice and direction in getting on with how Alberta deals with the impact of the Kyoto protocol.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Yes. Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what is the Attorney General doing to ensure that Alberta taxpayers are getting good value for the money they spent on outside legal counsel?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This indeed is an important question with respect to any matter where we look for external legal advice in terms of monitoring how the files are handled and how the work is done on the files. I can assure the hon. member and all members of this House that we get exceptional legal value on this particular file because the file is of such signal importance to all Albertans and to the Alberta economy.

So while it seems like a lot of money – it is a lot of money to ask in terms of supplementary estimates in addition to the amount that we're expending through the use of our internal counsel. The value that Albertans get in having good corporate legal advice with respect to the Kyoto accord and the impact that it may have on our economy and on Albertans and the value that we've already seen in terms of the distance that the federal government has moved from the various positions they've taken over the course of the last six months to where they currently are, the positions they're taking in negotiating with industry in this province with respect to the targets that they might set – in all of those cases we can see both publicly and behind the scenes the value that Albertans have received from not just the legal advice but from the work of all members of the cabinet committee on climate change and all the departments of this government that have been engaged in this important discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the government's occasionally unenviable record when it comes to constitutional challenges, can the minister advise how outside legal firms are chosen?

Mr. Hancock: First, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to address the preamble to that question because we sometimes get, I think, a bad knock for the unenviable record, as he puts it. First of all, we don't take easy cases to court ever. The easy cases get resolved. It's the difficult cases that have to be litigated, so I don't apologize at all for the record of our department or of the external counsel that we hire.

Legal advice is not just about going to court. Legal advice is about assessment of risk and giving good corporate advice to government so that we can avoid risk where necessary and we can plan to deal with issues on a prudent and practical basis. Legal advice is not about going to court. Legal advice is about knowing where the risks are, knowing how to handle situations. It helps in the prudent planning of legislation. It helps in planning for whatever eventuality comes forward. The federal government in its lack of wisdom in this case did not set a strategy in place and say: this is the way we're going. So we had to plan for all the potential strategies.

But in terms of getting the right legal advice, we make sure that we go to the most competent people available, and when there are a number of competent people available, obviously other considerations come into effect with respect to timeliness, accessibility, affordability, and certainly to make sure that there's no potential conflict of interest.

2005 World Masters Games

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, the city of Edmonton is going to host the 2005 World Masters Games and is expected to put up $2.6 million to host the games. It has been indicated that the province is also planning to fund the games to the tune of $4 million. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Has any money from this year's budget been paid out or budgeted to be paid out to support these games before the end of this fiscal year?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the World Masters Games are going to be one of the most incredible multisport events this province has ever seen, and I'm very pleased that the city of Edmonton took the initiative to put in the bid and followed that up with a visit to Australia, which I also was able to go on to help bring that good news here to Edmonton.

We did provide a commitment of, I believe, $4 million or thereabouts to that very important event, and, yes, we have provided some budget moneys for it. I couldn't tell you if the cheque has actually been written and sent, but I'll find out for you. The short answer is: yes; we have budgeted for it. Whether it has been taken up or not is another matter. There are still some contingent moneys due from the federal government, and we haven't received anything in writing that I'm aware of that would effectuate a formal agreement in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. As part of the payment for hosting the games, has a portion of the funding been earmarked for a cultural component?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you for that question. Yes, we are looking at a cultural component. As many members here will know, a cultural component does accompany virtually all of our sports events, and that's a good thing. The Canada Winter Games are an example; the Seniors Games are an example; the Arctic Winter Games are an example. We fund a variety of projects, and I'm very proud, actually, hon. member – and thank you for raising this – that we do emphasize wherever possible that culture is equally important and that it has a place within the overall celebrations of our sports events.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I'm glad we could agree on that.

My final question to the same minister: will the government be smart enough this time to follow the example of the federal government by entering into an enforceable contract for a specific amount that is directed to the cultural component? You didn't do that last time. We didn't get the money to the cultural component.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do build that in with the events that we sponsor or help provide money toward provincially. Now, as I've indicated in my first answer, we have not yet signed a formal agreement with all of the details. We have what you might refer to as a letter of understanding. We have a committee that has been struck and has met several times. We've referenced the cultural component, but I will undertake, in response directly to the question, to ensure insofar as possible and with whatever dollars we can allocate to it that a strong cultural component does surface within the World Masters Games.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Food Permit Fees

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several months ago the department of health allowed regional health authorities to charge food permit fees that range up to $500 for handling, preparing, and selling food from scratch. My constituents have expressed concern that small restaurants, grocery stores, and bakeries are charged the same fee as their very large counterparts, who can absorb the fees more readily. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister consider changing the permit fees to reflect volume of sales of food so that our small business entrepreneurs will not be unjustly burdened?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd refer the hon. member to Hansard, issue 12 of the 25th Legislature, Third Session, Monday afternoon, March 10, 2003, at page 355, where I did answer a question from the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne relating to the history and the background of the charges for food permits. So for his information he may want to refer to that.

Now, it is correct, as the member says, that the cost of the permit varies between $100 and $500 depending on the class of business. So, for example, Mr. Speaker, for class 1, low-risk, prepackaged foods, the cost of such a permit is $100. It ranges up to class 4, which is any establishment offering food through multiple venues, a fee of $500. But the cost of the permit is related to the degree of risk associated with the food that is being vended. It does not relate to the volume of food that is being sold.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did refer to Hansard.

My next question, then, to the minister would be: will those small business entrepreneurs' concerns about the price of their fees be included in the review that's going on?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I did indicate in answering this question the other day that we are proposing modifications. We are listening to the concerns of Albertans, including the ones that the hon. member has mentioned. We've talked about, for example, exempting charitable and not-for-profit organizations that are selling prepackaged foods and chips, licensed liquor stores and nonfood businesses that offer their customers food like coffee and doughnuts, perhaps an ice machine and vending soft drinks. Perhaps they should be exempted as well, but we're open-minded to modification of these fees.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go to the next item on the Routine, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to be able to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 32 students and their 10 leaders from Taber, Alberta. These young people have traveled a long way to be here with us today and shown a great deal of persistence in making the trip. Their teachers are Mr. Pat Pyne, Mr. Nick Beer; parent helpers Mrs. Joanne Machacek, Ms Bonnie Elliott, Mr. Fred Williams, Mrs. Corinne Tye, Mrs. Sheila Heal, Mr. Rick Born, Mr. Ed Derksen, Mrs. Cheryl Domolewski. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Second Anniversary of Election to Legislature

The Speaker: Hon. members, today, March 12, is the second anniversary of the right to the arrival in this House of some 23 members. A two-year anniversary is a very important anniversary, but I think I'll just recognize the group, the 23 new members that arrived. When it gets to be 12 and 20, then we'll probably write something else further in there.

To speak on behalf of the group, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is first.

Edmonton Firefighters

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize today Captain Rod Kutney, Paul Hawes, and Jason Fiissel as well as Jeff Deptuck and Kurt Weare from station 5. These men are the five firefighters trapped and rescued while battling yesterday's apartment fire mere blocks away from our Legislature Building.

Mr. Speaker, firemen are a very proud group who may not often welcome accolades from others. However, I was filled with an uneasy feeling while reading about the rescue in today's newspaper. I imagined being trapped under a pile of metal, wood, and concrete. I imagined the smell of smoke and being trapped in the dark. I imagined not being able to yell for help because the mask I was wearing provided precious oxygen and protection from the rubble. I also imagined thinking of my family, especially my daughter.

We are all aware that working in dangerous conditions is always part of a firefighter's job, but I would like to recognize the heroic efforts of the firefighters who rescued their brothers as well as the five men trapped in the fight of yesterday's blaze. I understand that many firefighters feel that they are only doing their job and events as such just simply come with the territory, but to me yesterday's rescue was a sobering reminder of the dangers these men face every day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Also on his second anniversary, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Daryl Zelinski

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A young man from Whitecourt, Daryl Zelinski, just recently returned from running the Mardi Gras Marathon in New Orleans, Louisiana, on behalf of Team Diabetes and the Canadian Diabetes Association. To qualify for this marathon, Daryl raised $6,500 and trained outdoors in Alberta's cold winter weather. As diabetes runs in his family, affecting his father and his two uncles, the cause was close to his heart. Twenty-seven other Team Diabetes members from Canada joined Daryl for the run of their lives with the other 2,000 marathoners.

Daryl finished 18th overall and was top Canadian. With a time of three hours, two minutes, 49 seconds he qualified for the prestigious Boston Marathon. This was only his second marathon, which is 26.2 miles, or 42.2 kilometres. Quite an accomplishment for Daryl, but the real winner was Team Diabetes, collecting $165,000 in pledges.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Manor Village of Garrison Woods

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday I was very pleased to speak at the dedication and opening of the Manor Village of Garrison Woods as MLA and as chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta. Statesman, a well-known developer in Calgary and Edmonton, is an authentic family-operated business with president Garth Mann continuing to pursue his vision of quality independent living for seniors in a community setting. Garrison Woods, their third Manor Village for seniors in Calgary, is a beautiful congregate living facility that provides excellence in housing design with an array of services to maximize personal independence, physical health, and emotional and spiritual well-being for its residents, and it is very affordable.

I was also very excited to learn about Dr. Mann's new expanded vision for seniors' housing, which, when developed in the near future, will provide an important bridge between independent living and long-term care living.

Congratulations to the Mann family for their continued commitment to community housing that provides Alberta's seniors with a quality lifestyle.

Thank you.

Edmonton Firefighters Red Cross Disaster Services

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to thank and recognize three groups who literally rush in where angels fear to tread. I'm reminded of the message often circulated after September 11 that the only people running into the World Trade Center buildings were firefighters and police officers; in other words, members of public sector unions. Yesterday again Edmonton firefighters ran into a building. They risked their lives as an apartment building caved in on them, and their colleagues worked to rescue them. Thankfully we have no loss of a firefighter's life.

I'd also like to recognize the Red Cross Disaster Services. These constituents hit by the fire are not wealthy, and they have lost everything, but am I ever grateful that we have the Red Cross at hand to at least provide assistance, temporary shelter, some replacement household goods and, most of all, personal support.

Finally, I'd like to thank in advance the people of Edmonton, who have always come through with great generosity to help folks recover from a tragedy like this. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Members of the Alberta Legislature

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our parliamentary system has been proven through the test of time for over 800 years. Of course, it has evolved and become a remarkable, versatile, modern governance institution. Our province of Alberta has been blessed by choosing such a governance system.

Generally speaking, a system can only be as good as its components. I can say that our Alberta Legislative Assembly is the best and so are its members. First and foremost, MLAs represent their constituents. The MLAs earn their keep by making the views of their constituents known, by introducing bills, debating and discussing concerns with other members and various government ministries, but that's only a small part of the MLAs' work. MLAs perform most of their duties in their constituencies, out of sight of cameras and reporters, out of the dome. For 12 months of the year, all hours of the day and night, seven days a week they do their jobs with their ears, listening to the problems, the questions, ideas, and opinions of their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, today, March 12, is the second anniversary of the most recent election. I want to congratulate all members of the Assembly on their honourable commitment to serving Albertans with integrity and honesty and to protecting our parliamentary system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Medicine Hat Curling Club Bonspiel

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Curling bonspiels have been a long tradition in Alberta, a tradition that has been celebrated by curlers in Medicine Hat for over 100 years. The story of the first curling game in Medicine Hat is lost in antiquity. However, it is known that there was some play with, quote, iron rocks near the shoreline of the frozen river in the 1890s. This led to a turn of the century lean-to with two sheets of curling ice that hosted 18 rinks in the first annual bonspiel played in January 1903.

Over the years many things have changed. The club moved indoors in 1906. The new building solved a number of problems. However, on days when chinooks moved in and melted the ice, scheduling a bonspiel still was a little challenging. It wasn't until 1948 that ice-making equipment arrived. A new building in 1956, countless renovations, additions, and improvements, and the club continued to thrive until today. Throughout all the change there remained one constant: the annual bonspiel. A hundred years; a hundred bonspiels.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in congratulating Mr. Jim Poersch, bonspiel chairman; Mr. Des Grant, Medicine Hat Curling Club president; and all curlers competing this week in the 100th annual Medicine Hat men's curling bonspiel.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Edmonton Firefighters

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday shortly after 11 a.m. an enormous fire broke out in an apartment building very close to this place. Edmonton firefighters were on the scene immediately. While working in the parkade of the building, the roof suddenly collapsed, trapping five of the firefighters. Fortunately there was no loss of life. All five were rescued, treated by Edmonton hospitals, and released.

This story reminds us of the heroes in our midst who are not always on the front page. They are heroes the minute they rush out to answer their community's call for help. They daily face risks in order to keep the rest of us from harm. Mr. Speaker, they also face long-term risks in their profession, and that is why it is so important that this Legislature pass Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003. I am proud to rise and recognize these Alberta heroes, our firefighters.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the working poor here in Alberta I'm presenting a petition signed by 63 individuals from Calgary, Edmonton, and Fort McMurray. These Albertans are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to immediately raise the minimum wage to $8.50 per hour and then index it to the cost of living in a manner similar to that done for the salaries of MLAs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms. Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting today a petition signed by more than 600 Albertans from all over Alberta who want to stop new development in the Kananaskis valley. They are urging the Legislative Assembly to immediately withdraw the draft management plan for the Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area and revise it so as to disallow any further commercial or residential development of the Kananaskis Valley.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise at this point to give notice that at the appropriate time on the Order Paper I will rise and place a motion under Standing Order 40 before this House.
Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Bill 26 Corrections Amendment Act, 2003

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 26, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2003.

The amendments will hold offenders more accountable for their actions while in provincially run correctional facilities.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Bill 28 Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003.

The proposed amendments flow from the final report of the Select Special Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act Review Committee. The report was tabled in the Legislature in late 2002.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 28 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Further to question period today I'm tabling five copies of a document that's titled Natural Gas Prices 2000 to Present.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I have three tablings, three letters that constituents have asked me to table on their behalf. The first is from Diane Coburn, who is concerned with the provincial government deducting dollar for dollar EI and increases of the child tax credit from social assistance benefits and AISH benefits. Her question is, "This seems like theft to me and I ask how the Klein government can get away with this."

The second letter is from Darlene Vinge. Darlene is concerned with the funding of public education, and she poses a question.

When will our government leaders stop seeing their perceived realities through rose coloured glasses? When will their arrogance end? Where is their social conscience? And what will happen to our children?

The third letter is from Mr. D. Vinge. It's a long letter addressed to Minister Oberg and asks for the minister to stop regurgitating statistics, and his quote is, "We need solutions."

Speaker's Ruling

Referring to a Member by Name

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday in the House a member of the opposition rose on a point of order with respect to the naming of names, and admonition was provided to the member who did do it. Now, twice today the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods mentioned an individual member by name. My phone will start ringing in my office about: why am I not enforcing the rules? So there was an admonition. The rule was that we do not mention names of members in the Assembly.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with four tablings today. One is a copy of a letter to a manager in the workplace health and safety unit of the department of the Minister of Human Resources and Employment dated January 21, 2003, and he's asking for help. He has had no response.

The other three tablings are all related to education. I'm getting swamped with them. I've been asked by the writers to table these. One is to the Minister of Learning from Heather Waldie. It begins by saying, "I am appalled and saddened by your continued efforts to disregard the importance of funding education in this province."

The second is to the Premier from Melanie Shapiro. It's a long letter addressing the issue of public education as an investment, not an expense.

The final tabling is a letter to the Premier from Kelly Steeves of Malmo school raising issues around the formation of a new group called the Riverview Public Education Coalition.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two letters. I'll be tabling five copies of each. The first letter is from seniors, 26 residents of Meadowlark Lodge. I received this letter in the middle of December. By then the House had risen, so I couldn't table it then. They wrote to me to make sure that the House knows about their concern about the hefty increase in their monthly rent. I'm sure that by now those increases have gone even beyond where they were then, over $40. So that's the first tabling.

The second is a letter that I received. It says, "To Whom It May Concern," but I as an MLA received it. It's from Wendy Girletz from the small community of Cereal in the Drumheller-Chinook constituency. I just want to read the last few lines of it into the record, with your permission, Mr. Speaker. Ms Girletz says:

We as a community are tired of fighting to keep everything in this town and losing in the end. Many years ago we fought and lost our high school, two years ago we lost our elevators, this spring we fought and lost our health center, and now we have to fight again to keep our school.

She's suggesting that when she talked to her MLA, she said: you guys didn't holler and yell loud enough, so that's why you're losing your school.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a letter from Margaret Fester dated March 3 and addressed to the Minister of Energy. She indicates that in her condominium her thermostat is set during the day at 68 degrees and at night at 62, but her last bill was still $100.68. She writes to the minister and says, "It does not appear your theory is very effective. What is next, a toque, gloves and wool socks?"

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:50head: Motions under Standing Order 40

The Speaker: Hon. members, on a Standing Order 40 application the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Natural Gas Price Protection Act Regulations

Dr. Nicol:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to amend the regulations of the Natural Gas Price Protection Act to base the trigger price for rebates on a monthly, not annual, average price of natural gas.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, under a Standing Order 40 application a case must be made that shows urgency and/or pressing necessity. The issue that I want to raise here in terms of urgency and pressing necessity is that the responses and the inquiries that we're getting from the public in Alberta are indicating that the high price of natural gas that is being experienced by users of gas in this province is really getting to be burdensome. They're looking at the bills that they've paid so far this winter, they know that their March bill is probably going to be higher, and they're very concerned that they don't have the money to make those kinds of payments.

But this is also a reflection of the fact that many of the seniors now are starting to call back in and say that they find that they don't qualify for the program that was introduced for seniors under the seniors' benefits program, that they are, in effect, on fixed incomes, and they cannot make a good case for keeping up their utility bills because of the cost and their fixed-income situation.

The other aspect is that many people on low income have no safety net, no mechanism through the government that they can access to get help, and their low-income status is creating a crisis. They're being faced with making choices about paying their bills versus other necessities in their life like prescriptions, like food for their family or themselves. This really puts them into a position where they feel that something needs to be done and done now.

Other groups that are calling in are talking about the crisis that it's creating for them as service providers to our community. One of the examples I talked about yesterday was food banks. This is a group that, in effect, is caught in a double position under the current high prices of natural gas, a double position because they have high utility bills now and they're getting an increase in demand on the services that they need to provide. So, in effect, they need to have a greater throughput of food, but they're being cut back in the amount of money that they've got because they have to pay those utility bills.

The other issue that comes up in terms of urgency is that we have at least one more month of high bills resulting from high consumption and the high prices, and that's going to be March. Because we've had reasonably cool weather the first two weeks of the month, we're looking at high prices, and when the bills start to come in, individuals who have in effect used up the cash reserves they have on their February and January bills will now be faced with: how do we pay those March bills?

The issue that comes up is: why do we have to debate this now so that we can make sure that the trigger is actually changed? It's an issue that we have to look at in the context of: what is best to provide the support to Albertans? Mr. Speaker, I suggest using a monthly trigger that's based on natural gas prices, and that in effect creates part of the urgency. If we're dealing with this on a month-to-month basis, using a monthly trigger, working in a relationship with the gas providers and the gas marketers, we can get the money to them at the time their bill comes so that it, in effect, provides them with timely support and timely rebates that will give them a share.

The issue comes up about: should we deal with this on a volume basis or a total bill basis? I don't think that's appropriate. The idea is that we've got to make sure that it's tied to price, because if it's tied to price, then what we show is that when prices go up, the royalties of the province go up and we have the actual money available to make those payments. So we don't want to tie it to a volume base that, in effect, could provide support as well.

Mr. Speaker, on that basis, you know, the idea here is to provide a sense of urgency, and in review I would like to say that there are a number of Albertans out there facing a real crisis trying to pay their February bills. Fear is prevailing in their minds about the March bill that could be coming yet, so if we don't put in place a workable program that will give them some support in the next week or so, in effect they will not be getting support by the time that March bill comes.

So with those arguments, Mr. Speaker, I ask everyone in here to give unanimous consent to support the idea that we need to debate this. We need to pass this motion so that the government will re-evaluate that trigger point.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Second Reading

Bill 14
Securities Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate March 4: Mr. Hlady]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: It's okay.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just a little concerned that we had yet to receive the bills that were tabled in the Legislature, and that was the discussion I was involved in.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 14, the Securities Amendment Act, 2003, in second reading is one that, generally, we are thinking we will be able to support. We've got a few questions, and I'd like to go through those.

To recap what this bill talks about, it's the Securities Amendment Act, 2003, and it provides greater protection for investors, which is a good thing. It's designed to allow Albertans improved access to capital markets. Perhaps given where they've been these last few months, it may or may not be all that great, but generally speaking we should have good access. Improved access is a good idea.

It's also part of an ongoing project between securities commissions across the province to harmonize Canada's securities regulatory system, and it represents really the initial phases of these changes. These new regulations are expected in the fall, and hopefully these changes that we see here now are not premature.

We saw with the beginning of the collapse of Enron that investor confidence in securities around the world had been, we could say, I think, Mr. Speaker, shattered. It illustrated the various loopholes that existed under securities legislation and tax evasion that could be used to deceive shareholders. It raised awareness with stakeholders that something had to be done, and securities commissions, mostly in the States, began to make small changes that would hopefully prevent another situation from occurring. However, another Enron-like occurrence happened when WorldCom collapsed last summer. This was even more spectacular and shed light on even larger loopholes that existed in the electricity market. Profits had been inflated, which meant that the company was overvalued, and once this was discovered, of course, the stock plummeted to next to nothing. This province had in fact invested in WorldCom, and we're not sure exactly what the total of some of the losses were there, but they would have been significant.

So these indiscretions of the companies in the United States caused the Sarbanes-Oxley Act to be passed, which made CEOs and CFOs personally liable for the financial statements. With the passing of the act, we saw the way paved for reform of security exchanges all over the world because it applied to all companies that trade in New York. Since the passage of this securities act commissions that operate outside of the United States have begun to undergo reforms to ensure that they are in line with the act and don't have any of the similar loopholes.

All securities commissions are a provincial jurisdiction, and Canada has begun this reform process as well. The federal minister has struck a committee and is looking at harmonizing and reforming securities commissions across Canada. Alberta is a leader in this field but has decided not to participate in the committee or even the process. So one of our key questions here that we hope gets answered in committee is: why not? This government often talks about costs of duplication. This could be the case here. Will some of this work be redundant? Could it have been streamlined and more efficient if you worked with the feds on this? So if those questions could be answered, we'd be happy for that. But it is a good move, and I want to applaud them for recognizing as an issue that the Securities Act does need to be cleaned up, and we see some of the closing of the loopholes.

It tightens up the controls and clarifies the role of the Alberta Securities Commission and participants, and that's all good. But what about the ongoing harmonization project across Canada? The feds are in the midst of their consultation process, and that's a step in the right direction. Are we jumping into something before we know exactly where we need to go? We think that perhaps this bill is premature, and maybe what will happen is it gets held over. Do you think this bill is going to be held over to the fall?

Mr. Hlady: No.

Ms Carlson: No. Okay. Then we would like to have these questions answered when it gets to committee because the indication is that this bill will be passed somewhat quickly.

I just want to see if I've got any other questions that may need to be asked at this stage.

The government may tell us that the changes are mostly editorial in nature and that there really shouldn't be any debate on this bill, but we think that it is important to address the issues that we've talked about. We've talked to the Alberta Securities Commission, and they would like the government to give it new powers over public companies to prevent the kinds of scandals we saw in the past occur here, and the ASC would like the power to oversee corporate boards. Some of these additional powers are introduced here, but what we've heard from the commission, if we understood them correctly, is that they believe that further reforms are going to have to be made before this situation has been completely rectified. So if the government could address that in terms of what they see happening in the future or whether they recognize the Alberta Securities Commission's position on this, it would be helpful.

Mr. Speaker, if we can get those questions answered when we get to committee on this first, then we may see a fairly speedy passage of this bill in the Legislature. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to speak in second reading on Bill 14, Securities Amendment Act, 2003. This is not a great area of expertise for me because I've never had enough money to invest, so I have some questions for which I'll apologize in advance to the sponsor. I hope they're not too obvious; they're not obvious to me. So bear with me, please.

The bill is supposed to be providing better protection for investors and improved access to capital markets and is part of a harmonization, which my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie was talking about. She was talking about the new federal regulations that are expected to come in and that hopefully this bill doesn't sort of contradict that. I'm interested that Canada did begin this reform process, as well, as a result of the fallout, as everybody has been saying, from investor confidence in security markets fading because of the behaviour of Enron and Arthur Andersen and WorldCom and Tyco and all of those ones that gave everyone else in the security sector a very bad name because they deliberately cheated people.

So the feds have started this reform process in reaction to this. They're looking to harmonize. Alberta is pretty good in this field. Why isn't Alberta working with the federal government as part of a movement across Canada? We're such a leader. Why aren't we using that leadership with the rest of Canada? Instead, we're striking out on our own. I'm certainly sensing from some of the things that have been said in here in the last couple of weeks that there's a very strong separation streak in some of the members here. Is that why this is happening? He's shaking his head. Well, he'll give me an answer, then, when we get to Committee of the Whole. But I'm wondering why Alberta, who is a leader, is not participating in this at all.

There is a section here that is amending part of the financial matters re commission section. This is dealing with how the funds collected from the administrative penalties are spent. Right now this is spent for endeavours or activities which enhance or may enhance the capital market, and this is changing to only allow these funds to be spent to educate investors. Could I hear from the sponsor: what's anticipated here? Are they looking at public information or television commercials or leaflets stuck in your utility bill? How is it anticipated that these funds are going to be spent to educate investors? I think it's a great idea, and I'm glad to see it. I'm just wondering what's being anticipated here.

Now, when I look at the sections that are around the FOIP Act, I notice that there are changes in here governing whether or not information will be provided to or received from the bodies outlined in the section. Can we get some detail and explanation on what's expected to happen here? Let me back up. A number of times when you request information through FOIP and you're told that there's a third party involved, unless you get the permission of the third party, you're not going to get the information. Is this looking to sort of expand the definition of third party or expand the third party's participation in this? In other words, are citizens going to be able to have access to less information as a result of this or more or is it neutral?

The second FOIP amendment that I'm thinking of that really comes into play with business is the one about harmful to business interests, that the information won't be disclosed because it might be – and I'm not using the correct words – prejudicial to future business endeavours or something. Is that what's being contemplated here? So I'm just looking for some detail about what's being anticipated through this clause.

The registration section is also being amended, and it's eliminating the clause that lists the criteria that have to be met before the registration of a person or a company can take effect. So what happens now? If there's no requirement to meet criteria, does that mean that the registration is instant or doesn't require criteria or there are different criteria? I'm just curious about that.

Could I get some background, please, on the area that's talking about the types of parties not required to register before trading on the Securities Commission? Several of these types of trades and conditions have been removed, which indicates that they do have to register in order to receive this information. I'm not understanding why. Could you explain why?

Section 19 repeals a section in the Securities Act that requires reporting issuers that are not mutual funds to file financial statements every 60 days. Why is this being removed or lifted? I'm just looking for the explanation behind it.

I notice that again the power of the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations is being expanded. I hate that. Now, I'm assuming that the argument here is that because the securities sector and the markets change so quickly, there isn't time to bring a bill through the Legislature to address necessary changes, but I'd like to hear why. I really find that doing things by regulations is decision-making behind closed doors. The public doesn't get to scrutinize the arguments or the debates that happen around why something is put into place through a regulation. They're just told after the fact, and even then they're not really told. You're just supposed to know where to look to find out that something changed. It's very frustrating for citizens. So I am always going to be asking for justification when there's more regulation-making that's going on.

Finally, I'm noticing that the Alberta Securities Commission chairperson is looking for additional powers, and I'm sure that the member has been in close contact with this chairman of the ASC. They're looking for all kinds of things. I'm just reading from a newspaper article, but can the sponsor just talk a little bit about how far the government is willing to go with what's being suggested here by this individual? I guess that's not very fair if you don't know what I'm talking about. I'll table this for you or send you over a copy so you know why I'm asking.

So those are the questions that I had wanted to put on the record, and if the member is able to answer them at the beginning of Committee of the Whole, that would be helpful, and I thank you for the opportunity to bring forward those issues. As I say, I represent a very diverse community. We really go from people who live under the bridge, not trolls but people that don't have a home, to the folks that are living on Victoria drive in the multimillion dollar condos. There's some expertise in my community about investments, but an awful lot of people, myself included, just have never had the extra cash to be able to do this. This is a bit of a foreign world and a foreign language, so any clear explanations are most welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to close the debate.

Mr. Hlady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the questions from the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and the Member for Edmonton-Centre, and I look forward to answering them in committee.

Bill 20

Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to move second reading of Bill 20, the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2003.

The Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2003, contains amendments that are designed to give the AMFC greater operating flexibility, Mr. Speaker. The AMFC Act was introduced and passed in 1956. The corporation was the first of similar organizations in North America. The act established the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation, whose mandate is to help Alberta's local governments and other public service related entities gain access to capital markets at the lowest possible cost consistent with the financial viability of the corporation. This access is particularly helpful to smaller borrowers that would otherwise find it uneconomical to borrow on their own.

Since 1956 the corporation has made over 19,000 loans totaling over $13 billion for roads and bridges, water and sewer projects, other utilities, schools, hospitals, and airport authorities. The act has not had a major restructuring or review since the early 1980s, and there is a need to reform the corporate governance of the corporation. Basically, the proposed changes are intended to make the corporation more flexible in responding to changes in financial markets and to modernize the corporate governance structure of the corporation.

In the current act the corporation's powers are specifically identified, and any changes that are needed because of changes in business practices, Mr. Speaker, require legislative amendments. Providing the corporation with natural person powers allows the corporation to react to changes in business practices or other forms of innovative financing while still complying with the overall mandate as set out in legislation. The natural person powers are the broadest in law and are the modern approach to corporate legislation. Corporate powers beyond the mandate could only be approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Legislation has also capped the total debt of the corporation at $7 billion, thereby also capping its loan-making ability and the total guarantee that the province is susceptible to. Mr. Speaker, as at December 31, 2002, the corporation had debt and loans of approximately $3.9 billion.

Another part of the modernization involves changing the name of the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation to the Alberta Capital Finance Authority. The corporation's shareholders include postsecondary institutions, schools, regional health authorities, airport authorities, and irrigation districts. The term "municipal" doesn't reflect the true nature of these shareholders, Mr. Speaker.

Also, the term “corporation” isn’t widely recognized by international financial institutions like the title “authority” is.

To ensure that there is a reasonable turnover of the AMFC board members, Mr. Speaker, it’s proposed that a maximum term be put in place so that members serve no more than three 3-year terms. It’s also recommended that the minister have the ability to appoint the chair and the vice-chair. This proposed amendment is similar to what’s already being done with other Crown agencies, Mr. Speaker. Normal corporation bylaws are usually approved by the shareholders. Resolutions are normally approved by the board of directors. Like most Crown corporations only one set of policies is required, and therefore “bylaws” should be changed to “resolutions” to reflect the fact that the board of directors approves the overall policies of the corporation.

I urge all Members of the Assembly to support Bill 20. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have an opportunity to speak at second reading to Bill 20, the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2003.

I have a few more questions for this particular bill than I did for the other one. Generally we don’t have too many problems with it, but my first question comes with regard to stakeholder consultation. The stakeholders we consulted with, who were Alberta municipality kinds of associations, for the most part didn’t have anything to say about the bill because they weren’t aware that it was coming, so I’m wondering if the sponsor could elaborate on that a little bit and perhaps share with us those organizations that he did consult with in the process of this, because that seems unusual. Maybe we didn’t talk to the right people in the organizations, and until we know what the process was, I’m just a little reluctant to disclose who it is that has said they weren’t consulted with. Perhaps we didn’t talk to the right people.

Overall, this bill gives greater flexibility to the AMFC to distribute loans. It changes the name of the corporation, does quite a bit of housecleaning, and puts term limits on directors of the corporation. There’s greater flexibility in the mandate, and it’s good to see that some of this legislation has what is, in effect, a sunset clause in terms of reviewing what they’re doing, what their mandate is, and we applaud that kind of a process and wish that we could see it happen with more acts and certainly with regulations, which seem to be a big problem with this government in terms of renewal and looking at how effective they still are.

So what we have here is a provincial corporation that acts only as an agent of the Alberta Crown. It assists municipal jurisdictions within the province to obtain capital funds at the lowest possible cost through access to capital markets which would not be available to them on an independent basis. We see loans go to municipalities, school boards, and other local entities at interest rates based on the estimated cost for provincial borrowings with similar terms. All in all, a good concept. It was established in the mid-50s, and it issues various debt obligations to obtain the funds necessary, and they have the unconditional guarantee of the province. It was restructured in the ’80s, overall doesn’t have anything shocking in it and some interesting cleanup aspects to it.

Overall, we have a few issues, and those are in terms of delegating too much power to regulations. There are a few questions, and if I could put the questions on the record here at second reading and they get answered when it first comes up in committee, then perhaps we can move this quite quickly through the Legislature.

The first question is around section 3, where we see the definitions in the act, and most of the definitions are only a slight modification of those in the original one. We see new definitions being introduced for “improvement districts,” “minister,” and “special area.” Some of them are just modifications, but one of my questions is: why is the board of Northland school division No. 61 under the Northland School Division Act specifically cited as an educational authority? The definition of “health authority” is “a person, other than a regional health authority, that owns an approved hospital under the Hospitals Act.” Could you answer the question of whether or not this is a reference to privately owned hospitals? If not, what is the reference to? The term “resolution” is introduced here, and it replaces the term “bylaws” in many portions of the bill. According to what we hear, this is to reflect that these are approved by the board and not by the shareholders, which we understand and support.

Section 4. The name of the corporation is changed to Alberta Capital Finance Authority. It also gives the corporation the capacity and powers of “a natural person” but allows cabinet to make restrictions on these powers, rights, and privileges. The section also states that the corporation is not to engage in activity outside the business of the corporation. The ministry claims that by giving the corporation the powers of a natural person, the corporation will be better able to react to changes in business practices and forms of financing. We would like to see that justified. What’s the basis for this decision? Is there some background, or has it not worked in the past? If we could get some clarification there, that would be a little bit helpful.

The restriction that’s mentioned in the last subsection of this section which indicates that the corporation may not engage in “activity that does not pertain to the business of the Corporation” is good. It would seem like an unnecessary clarification, but I know from my past experience that this is actually a good thing to have happen.

Then if we go on to section 7, we see that this section repeals the original section 5 of the act, that talks about shares and their rights and so on both for class As and class Bs and class C and Ds. Our question is: why is this section being edited out entirely and not replaced at all? Some of the original sections here should be amended in the act, like the improvement districts’ rights – we agree with that – but we think the section should have been amended to conform with the new sections of the act, not just deleted. So if we could get some comments, that would be helpful.

Section 8(a) is fine, I think. Section 8(b) talks about an amendment that makes the wording say that the authority to purchase shares of the corporation may be given by resolutions “of the local authority or the Corporation.” The question is: why are you doing it there, and why shouldn’t the authority to buy shares have to be authorized by both the corporation and the local authority, not an either/or situation? Maybe we just don’t understand that, but if you could clarify that for us. It seems that the authority to purchase a share should be given the authority by the corporation. It’s maybe just confusing to us. If you could clarify that.

Section 11 talks about sections 10 to 13 of the original act being repealed, and now we see new sections to replace them. We understand that it’s largely a reorganization of the contents of the old act, and remuneration for directors and their services as well as travel and living expenses in the course of their duties is added. How that was handled before would be a question that we’d like to know. Why the reduction in the number of employees that the Alberta government can appoint to the board? It was three and now two. Cost savings or some other reason for that? If that could be answered. We see what’s repealed and added later on in the amendment is that “the corporation is a Provincial corporation.”

Also, there’s no longer the provision that establishes how a person may establish the right to vote. Why did that happen? We think remuneration of directors is reasonable and a good idea. We’re hoping that the reason why you limited the number of employees that are directors is to establish more of an arm’s-length provision. Can you tell us why there’s no longer a provision establishing how a person may establish the right to vote in the directors’ election? We think there should be a provision requiring how this happens, so if you could tell us why that was left out.

Section 12 repeals the old sections 15 and 17. If we take a look at the amendment, it changes the term limit of a government-appointed director to three years from a potentially indefinite period and explicitly states that the directors are eligible to be re-elected or reappointed. It’s good to set terms for government appointments to the board. We think that that’s progressive and certainly support that, and it then hopefully promotes a review process for appointees. Could you tell us what that would be? Do you have some criteria established?

In section 15(4) you talk about: the terms of office are arranged so that the expiry of the elected directors’ terms will be staggered over three-year periods. So that’s the same as the original act. Is it necessary to have a staggered election format enshrined in the law? I can understand why you want to do that so that you’ve got some continuity on the board. That’s a good idea, but it seems like we see, generally speaking, that kind of stuff happen in regulations, and it seems to be interesting that it’s here at this time.

Section 15(5) to (7) talks about the consecutive year limits, and we think that’s good. A nine-year limit – so that’s three reappointments – is supportable.

Section 17 talks about the minister having the power to appoint the CEO of the corporation rather than having the board elect the CEO. I have a little bit of a problem with that. I think it’s good and it establishes a better arms-length kind of transition when the decision comes from the board. There is always the question of whether or not an appointment by a minister passes the smell test. Whether that is always at issue or not, it’s something that is talked about and there is concern about. So tell me why this happens. Is this a retirement spot, or is there some other good justification for why the board would not have an opportunity to do this? I think that is almost all of what I have to say.

Now, in section 15 where the section repeals sections 21 to 25 of the original act, we see an insertion of a section specifically dealing with the business of the corporation. So it repeals quite a bit of stuff there, and we see the inserted section indicating that the business of the corporation is “to provide local authorities that are its shareholders with financing for capital projects” and more information. My question here is: why shouldn’t the corporation have to include numbers in their annual reports anymore where we see this happen down in parts of section 25? We think that it’s very important to see the numbers in the corporation’s annual report, and we have quite a few concerns over them being deleted. This is an area where we might actually see an amendment come through in committee.

When the added section allows the corporation to act as a financial agent for the shareholding authority and also allows other businesses and services of the corporation to be described and authorized by the regulations, we have a real problem with that because this is the kind of stuff that we should see more detail in. The mandate has got to be straightforward and not have that delegated to the regulations. It’s got to be. This isn’t a change from the old legislation, but it should have been changed, we think. So if you could answer those two questions on that part.

Part of the part that’s repealed here is where it talks about “a statement of the amounts borrowed by the corporation in any year shall be included in the annual report of the corporation” or “an estimate of the amounts required to be borrowed by the corporation in any year shall be included in the annual budget of the corporation for that year.” Now we don’t see those numbers, and if these dollars are backstopped by the Alberta government, which they are, then we think they should be available. So if the member could answer that, that would be helpful.

In section 16 we saw the subsections (2) and (4) of section 26 repealed, so if you could tell us why. This is an area that talks about the government’s guarantee to be endorsed on the securities issued by the corporation. Maybe there’s some technical reason why this is no longer relevant, but whatever the reason, if you could share that with us, it would be helpful.

Section 18 repeals section 28 of the original act, which talked about the corporation not accepting securities of a local authority unless all the requirements of the governing acts had been complied with by the authorities. So our question here is: does this mean that the corporation will accept securities from local authorities who have not complied with the requirements of the governing acts? Definitely we would see that as a wrong thing to do, but perhaps we’re just not interpreting this quite as accurately as the intent was.

Section 20 repeals sections 31 to 33. The changes we see here are that there is no explicit provision allowing the government of Alberta to purchase securities of the corporation instead of allowing a local authority to borrow money from the corporation by selling its securities. The local authorities can now “borrow money from the Corporation in any form or manner . . . acceptable to the Corporation.” No security provided by a local authority is invalid simply by virtue of failing to comply with statutory or other requirements related to this security. So is this good? I think we need some explanation here. Not requiring local authorities to borrow money by issuing securities allows the borrowing process to be more flexible, I think, is what I’m seeing here. If that’s the case, if you could confirm that. Not requiring them to conform to statutory or other requirements doesn’t seem very good, and we would like to have an explanation for that. It seems like you’re not requiring the securities to be legal in all aspects, and that seems illogical. I’m sure there’s some good explanation for that. That was repealing sections 31 to 33 of the original act. Maybe we just don’t understand that. It could be just that it’s not clear in how it’s laid out for us.

Section 21 repeals sections 34 to 36. There you’re dealing with the regulations for the corporation and loans to local authorities. The loss of sections is compensated for by a new section. What happens here is that the first added section indicates that the Corporation must adhere to . . . policies, standards and procedures that a reasonable and prudent person would apply in respect of a portfolio of investments to avoid undue risk of loss and to obtain a reasonable return.

Tell us why it needs to be in the act. It seems like there might be better ways of managing this. Perhaps this is a case, again, where regulations could be made respecting the corporation’s ability to make investments. If you could comment on that.

The part here where we see the added section on regulations that essentially says that cabinet can make any regulations they please, of course we’re not pleased with. Could you explain that to us, please? It looks like carte blanche for the government. Not that I would be untrusting. [interjection] Yeah. What’s my point? Exactly. You know, we just need to hear again why it’s so much more important to make stuff like this by regulation rather than having full and open debate. [interjection] Yes, well, that’s fine. Let’s hear it again.

I think that that pretty much explains the questions, and depending on what we hear in committee, we might have one amendment come up here. Generally speaking, it looks like it's a bill we're supportive of. It was good to have some of the details that we got in the notes. We appreciate that and look forward to seeing what happens at the next stage in this bill.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you ready for the question? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to close debate.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to answering all those questions, a couple of pages of them, for the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie in committee.

Bill 25 Class Proceedings Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 25, the Class Proceedings Act.

As I mentioned during first reading, this act outlines the specific procedures for parties to follow when bringing class actions forward in our civil courts. Generally, a class proceeding is a legal action that involves a number of plaintiffs with similar claims against the same defendant or defendants. These actions may include mass disasters, defective consumer or industrial products, defective medical services, or misrepresentations of financial products or services.

Specifically, this bill does five key things, which I'd like to overview for the members of the Assembly today. First, the act creates a certification process. To become a class action, the proceeding must first be certified. Five criteria must be met for the court to certify a class proceeding. Number one, a cause of action must be disclosed, such as negligence. Number two, there must be an identifiable class of two or more persons. Thirdly, there must be an issue that is common among the class members whether or not that common issue predominates over issues affecting only individual members. Four, a class proceeding must be the preferable procedure for the fair and efficient resolution of the common issues. Five, there must be a representative plaintiff for the class.

Subclasses can also be created. Each subclass must have its own representative plaintiff. A subclass may be a group within the larger class that has common issues against a defendant that are not shared by all of the class members. Selection of a representative plaintiff is important, Mr. Speaker, and the act identifies three requirements for the representative plaintiff. The representative plaintiff of a class or subclass must be a person who

- (i) will fairly and adequately represent the interests of the [entire] class [or subclass],
- (ii) has produced a plan for the proceeding that sets out a workable method of advancing the proceeding on behalf of the class [or subclass] and of notifying class [or subclass] members of the proceeding, and
- (iii) does not have . . . an interest that is in conflict with the interests of other . . . class [or subclass] members.

In certain cases, Mr. Speaker, the court may certify a person who is not a member of a class or subclass as a representative plaintiff. The court may appoint an incorporated nonprofit organization as a representative plaintiff. If the court determines that the representative plaintiff is not fairly or adequately representing the class or subclass, the court may substitute another representative plaintiff.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the act sets out what a certification order must include. A certification order must describe the class, appoint the representative plaintiff, state the nature of the claim, state the nature of the relief sought, set out the common issues, state the manner and time in which a class member may opt out, and state the manner and time in which a person who is not a resident of Alberta may opt in. If a class includes a subclass or subclasses, the certification order must include the same information for each of those subclasses.

Mr. Speaker, the court may refuse to certify a proceeding or may decertify a proceeding if the criteria for certification are no longer satisfied. However, the act specifies that the court cannot refuse to certify only because one or more of the following may apply: first, that there is a claim for damages that would require individual assessment after determination of the common issues or that the relief claimed relates to separate contracts involving different class members or that different remedies are sought for different class members or that the number of class members or the identity of each class member is not ascertained or may not be ascertainable or, finally, that the class includes a subclass whose members have claims that raise common issues not shared by all class members.

Mr. Speaker, the second key thing that this act does is set out how a class proceeding will be conducted. The act requires common issues for a class to be determined together, then common issues for a subclass to be determined together, and, finally, individual issues to be determined unless the court orders otherwise. The court may stay or sever any proceedings related to the class proceeding. The judge who makes a certification order is to hear all applications that take place prior to the trial but cannot preside at the trial unless the parties consent. This is consistent with our current rules for case management.

Moreover, the act sets out how class members will participate in the action. Generally, the representative plaintiff conducts the case, making the decisions and giving instructions to the lawyer, but the act also allows the court to permit other class members to participate in the proceeding. The act indicates who is a class member, and the act sets out that an individual who is a resident of Alberta and who meets the criteria for the class is a member of the class unless they opt out of that proceeding. An individual who is not a resident of Alberta who meets the criteria for the class may, Mr. Speaker, opt into the proceeding.

The act sets out specific instances where notice is provided to class members. The representative plaintiff notifies the class members in three cases. First, notice is given when a class proceeding has been certified; second, notice is given when the common issues have been resolved in favour of the class; and third, notice is given when an application for certification of a settlement is made. The court will also be able to order that notice be given whenever it considers it necessary to protect the interests of any class member or any party or to ensure the fair conduct of the proceeding. The act sets out the details of what must be included in the notice in each case. The court must approve the content of any notice and the method of delivery before notice is given. Finally, Mr. Speaker, the court may order who will pay the costs of giving notice.

The third key thing that this act does is to establish procedures relating to orders and judgments given by the court in a class proceeding. The act specifies the details that must be included in a judgment on the common issues of a class or subclass, and it also states that a judgment binds every class member or subclass member.

Bill 25, Mr. Speaker, sets out the procedures that the court may follow to decide individual issues for class members or subclass members. It specifies the types of awards that the court may make and how they will be distributed, and it allows the court to make aggregate or lump sum monetary awards. The court may order that the members of a class or subclass share in the award on an average or proportional basis or on an individual basis depending on the case before the court.

Mr. Speaker, the court may order that an award be directly distributed to each class member including crediting the class members as well as requiring the award to be paid into court or some other depository. The act also allows the court to make an order dealing with any unclaimed or undistributed amount of an award. The act requires that the court approve any settlement, discontinuance, abandonment, or dismissal of a class proceeding.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the act allows orders or judgments under the act to be appealed to the Alberta Court of Appeal.

The fourth key element of this legislation, Mr. Speaker, deals with how costs will be awarded between the parties to the proceeding and the rules for contingency fee agreements in class actions. The court may award costs between the parties following the same rules that currently apply to other actions under the Alberta rules of court. Rules that apply to the content and requirements for contingency fee agreements also follow the same rules that currently exist in other actions under the Alberta rules of court.

As well, the act requires court approval of contingency fee agreements at two times during the proceeding. First, the class lawyer must apply for court approval of the contingency fee agreement prior to or at the time of applying for certification of the class proceedings. Secondly, Mr. Speaker, after the common issues have been resolved at trial or when a settlement has been approved, the representative plaintiff or the class lawyer must apply for court review of the contingency fee agreement. A further check on contingency fees is that if the court determines that the agreement should not be followed, it may amend the agreement and determine the amount owing to the lawyer or direct that the amount owing be determined in any other matter.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the fifth key element of this act deals with the general issues such as limitation periods. It applies the Alberta rules of court to class proceedings except where varied by this legislation and indicates which proceedings the act may apply to.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for this opportunity to provide an outline of Bill 25, and I move adjournment of debate on Bill 25.

Bill 19

Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to stand for the first time in committee on Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. This is going to be a bill that is subject to a great deal of debate in this Legislature, and certainly, as we speak, amendments are being prepared for approval so that we can try to clean up what looks like a bill that is going to create more problems than it solves.

We heard some interesting comments when we spoke to it in principle in second reading, when certainly those of us on the side of the House that I sit on were opposed in principle very much to seeing deregulation occur in gas in this province. They really see this as a companion bill to Bill 3, which is the electrical deregulation bill, and wonder why the government had to go here in the first place at this time. There is, I believe, a fairly good understanding in the communities that in order for this to become economically viable as a deregulated service in what is a very small market for outside players or those who currently play in this market in Alberta, we had to see the companion pieces of both gas and electricity come forward for deregulation so that companies looking at moving into the market could bundle services as compared to offering stand-alone services, and this is why we see this bill before us.

On the one hand, if we are going to be in a deregulated market, I do actually like to see more businesses rather than fewer offer services in Alberta. I do understand the cost efficiencies that occur when you talk about bundling services. If those were the only reasons for this government moving forward, then they might be supportable, but in fact we have not been convinced by anything that we have seen or that has been so far presented by either the government or by potential service providers that has convinced us that deregulation is going to decrease costs in this area.

What would have been a good transition for deregulation was when several years ago this government first brought up the idea to provide a framework for what the rules of the game would be. That would have been hugely beneficial because then those existing players in the market and those who are watching Alberta from the outside could have taken a look at the framework and decided then and there whether or not it was a market they wanted to be in, whether there was going to be a good transition phase put in place, and whether at the end of the day they could stand and actually make a profit and offer a good service.

That isn't what happened. The government put off making the decisions on how the deregulation process would move forward for literally years, Mr. Chairman. What happens then is: what business who has a profit motivation is going to invest in capital structure when they don't know what the rules of playing in the game are going to be? So all of the players, those that currently exist in the province and those who are looking at us from the outside, just sat back. They need some certainty in their life, and they need to know what the rules of business are going to be. They are not going to invest in megaprojects or even in small microprojects without having some kind of certainty, so they really had to see some of the rules of the game.

So why is that important to us as consumers? It's very important because if we don't have a streamlined process from the time that deregulation is started until the time it's actually implemented by the government, then we have a lack of investment. A lack of investment means a shortage of available power – in this case, it's a shortage of available gas – and what does that do but drive up costs for consumers, consumers being individuals, companies, schools, municipalities, and hospitals. That's exactly what we saw happen.

With the undercapitalization there wasn't enough quantity of product available to consumers when they needed it, and a shortage of product also pushes up the cost. Lots of demand and less supply: obviously, prices go up. Prices go up, and it's good for the companies, so they start to accumulate the capital that they need to capitalize to bring more power onstream. That makes it an attractive market for other global companies to come and take a look at Alberta, but it doesn't do any good at all for us as individuals. To add insult to injury, we're talking about driving up a cost which has traditionally been provided at a very low and sometimes subsidized rate, Mr. Chairman.

So we now have this interesting mix in the marketplace where we have projects that were formerly subsidized by the government from a capital perspective, which gives those providers an interesting advantage in the marketplace. Of course, it's not an advantage that consumers benefit from, because the way the prices are determined is an advantage to those companies themselves. Did they accumulate that money in order to reinvest in the province? That's a good question, and I hope that somebody, maybe the Energy minister, can answer that. What it did do was certainly ensure that we had a great deal of uncertainty around all the decision-making, and that provided a very unstable market, which helped increase the prices.

Involved with that as well were some of the decisions that the government ended up coming out with on electricity, which have created some huge problems, and that is how they decided how they would eliminate monopolies and do what they felt was increased competition, and that meant putting a fence around what some of the companies could provide. So by doing that in a manner in which companies didn't have a lot of transition time between when they had to change the way they were providing a service and how they could then go out to the open marketplace, we created some real problems in the province around billings and compatible systems and things of that nature.

There's no guarantee that we're not going to see the same thing happen with gas utilities. I haven't seen anything yet come out from the government that encourages me that this is going to be a seamless transition. In fact, past performance by this government in any area would indicate to me that it's going to be far from seamless, and we're going to see any number of huge stumbling blocks as we move through this process. Who carries the burden for those stumbling blocks? Certainly, it is the consumer. So what we see here by the government's own news release is 900,000 natural gas consumers. It'll be open season on them for companies to come in and sell their natural gas to the consumers.

What we haven't seen in this process is any kind of education program by the government. When a service has been provided as a monopoly or in a monopoly kind of environment for decades, then if the government chooses to change the way that the service is provided, I believe that they have a fundamental responsibility to inform consumers of their new roles and responsibilities and rights as consumers in the new environment that they are going to be operating in, and that certainly hasn't happened here.

The problem is that the first wave of new companies in to try and supply consumers also includes a wave of less scrupulous organizations. People are out there to hustle the contracts and are middlemen and don't necessarily intend to deliver an excellent product with excellent service. When, in fact, people are locked into long-term contracts, there is no necessity for these companies to be supplying good product.

So we haven't seen any kind of an education program going out to consumers, which is, I think, a problem. Consumers need to know exactly what it is they're buying, where they can go for information on it, how they can line up the various companies and assess who's going to actually be here tomorrow, who's going to provide a good service, and who's going to have a customer service component to it that will be able to answer questions in a timely fashion, bill in a timely fashion, problem-solve in a timely fashion. We need consumers to be able to know how they get that information and how they compare apples and oranges. It's really easy to go into Safeway or IGA or Save-On and comparative shop between the apples here and the apples in another store. It isn't so easy to go to ATCO or AltaGas or any of the new companies that are talking about coming into the marketplace and compare them. People don't know how to do it. They don't know where to find them, and they really don't know what questions to ask.

So we would expect that if this province really cares about consumers, they would have provided this kind of a background. It's not too late, Mr. Chairman. They can still do that, and we certainly would like to see that process happen. They need to know what competitive pricing will look like. They need to know the kinds of products they can expect and the kinds of services they can expect to be offered. They need to know how to actually compare them in terms of whether or not they're going to be getting good deals. I'm primarily thinking about individual consumers, households, when I say this, but we can't leave out other large buyers in this province, and we, perhaps even more than with individuals, need to be concerned about what uncertainty in the marketplace has as an impact on their prices and the long-term economic viability of those organizations within this province, on gas particularly.

I was just very recently out in Morinville talking to a business owner there who was absolutely beside himself. His prices for gas for two small retail locations had more than doubled over two years, and then in January the bill more than tripled, and he anticipated that in February, given what the prices were, he was going to go from having paid $800 a month on average two years ago to paying $5,000 in that month just for his gas. This was not the kind of business that can increase their retail price or attract more customers in order to pay that. He was very much concerned that he would have to close his business down. So that puts a large number of employees working at, essentially, minimum wage levels out of jobs in a town where there are not a lot of jobs available and his whole family, which was an extended family, out of business.

I'm sure that all of the rural members that we have represented in this Legislative Assembly are hearing similar concerns from small businesses in their jurisdictions, and I'm sure that, in fact, this person had talked to his MLA, who said that they couldn't do anything about it and was really quite unsympathetic to his situation. He really wanted to know who to turn to for answers and was really at his wits' end. I'm sure that people here in this Legislature are hearing those same concerns, and I would like to hear from them while we're in committee about what they're telling the people and the business owners in their area to do and how they think that they're going to solve this problem and when they think that we can see some stability in the marketplace and whether or not, in fact, they believe that prices are ever going down. It doesn't look to me like that's going to happen, and I really wonder what's going to happen to those small businesses.

I'm nearly out of time, so I'll have to wait until my next opportunity to speak to talk about what the small business associations are saying about gas and the impact it's having on small businesses and whether or not at this stage in the process they actually believe that deregulation is a benefit or a hindrance to their businesses and whether or not they believe that the pain is short term and that these issues will work themselves out over time and whether or not they believe they will be able to sustain their businesses for the length of time that it takes to get this worked out. I think that we may see a little more stability in prices in the future, but I sure don't think prices are coming down significantly or anywhere close to where they have been in the past, so that is a very big concern.

We had a great economic advantage here for businesses in terms of costs of operations. We're losing that advantage now. There are no two ways about that. We are seeing that all those things that were attractive for small businesses to stay and large businesses to re-evaluate where they were going to be located and to think about coming to Alberta are slowly slipping through our fingers. A lot of people say that the low cost of operations was a huge benefit and that lifestyle choices were a huge benefit to relocating to Alberta, but we're seeing that the reduction in tax rates that the government promised hasn't come through.

We've seen, generally, operating costs increasing, so if our gas and utility rates are going to be as high or higher than other jurisdictions, who wants to come to a province where the weather always dips to 40 below at some point during the year, often for more than one period of time, and where we see a climate where you have to turn your furnace on, generally speaking, for four or five months out of the year, where there is no retrofit program, which is something that we see in all the states, which is a huge economic driver in terms of being a business attractor that has been lost here? Then on the general consumer side what's the benefit in coming to a province where your own personal expenses are going to be significantly higher than what they have been in other jurisdictions? Those are the kinds of questions that businesses are asking themselves, and they're seeing that when they add up the pluses and minuses of coming to Alberta, suddenly it doesn't look as attractive as it did two or three years ago. So we could hope that some of those questions get answered here.

I want to spend a little bit of time talking about the Alberta Energy news release that talks about how great the news is that natural gas consumers are going to continue to pay high prices. The minister talks about:

With more real-life experience, and the implementation of choice on the electricity side, government needs to update the rules to create a better environment for competition and allow more retailers to enter the market.

In fact, he's saying exactly what I had said, and that's that new people, new organizations, new retailers won't come into the province, into this market unless they see electricity and gas bundled because we just don't have enough people to make it viable, and that is essentially the biggest problem with deregulation. With only 3 million people in the province it just isn't sustainable, and it'll be interesting to see what kinds of packages we're going to have to see bundled together in order to make it attractive to people. That'll be very interesting to watch as it unfolds.

We see here that there are quite a few other things that they said that I have questions about, and that's when they talk about:

- align the retail natural gas and electricity markets and permit both commodities to be marketed together; and,
- enable firms other than utility companies to provide regulated gas supply service to consumers.

So am I going to be able to get my gas at the local video store, or is it going to be at the grocery store, or is it going to be with some other service that I currently pay for? What kinds of restrictions are there going to be? We see now already in this province people advertising who aren't licensed, and I find that to be a significant issue. I don't think the average consumer knows that that's occurring, and the government hasn't been able to give us any good information yet about why that is occurring. I don't think they want to, and I find it quite appalling that what we see are direct links to government web pages with some of these companies that are advertising.

Those are my comments so far, and I will be back, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Well, thanks, Mr. Chairman. It is a privilege for me to enter into debate on Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. This is a fairly minor piece of legislation that, in fact, does allow choice to continue, and it will help define market conditions. So I just want to reply to the member's comments and thank her for them.

Mr. Chairman, the member is absolutely correct when she talks about the value of a consumer education program. In fact, we probably haven't done as much as we could do, and we will do more. I would think that with the exception of maybe the Member for Highwood there's little knowledge that natural gas has actually been deregulated in this province since 1985. This is simply the final piece. So we'll take the member's comments into consideration with respect to building a consumer education program. She knows as well as anybody that a good market construct depends on good knowledge with the consumers in that marketplace, and we will ensure that that consumer education is there not only on the natural gas side but also on the electricity side.

Mr. Chairman, the foundation of these bills is to create an alignment of natural gas and electricity so that they can be picked off a menu in as simple a fashion as possible. I would emphasize that businesses, in fact, are asking for this because businesses always look for certainty and always look for ways to control their prices. The most popular way in Alberta of selling natural gas has been on a spot rate, and people now want to change that configuration.

Mr. Chairman, I am, however, driven to disagree marginally with the member when she says that the Alberta advantage is leaving us, and I can only quote statistics by august organizations such as the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, that says that Alberta will lead the nation in growth next year at 4.9 percent. I can only quote the Department of Economic Development statistics where they come out and indicate that the business bankruptcies are not being driven up by increased energy prices and that, in fact, business continues to thrive here. It continues to grow here. In fact, Albertans continue to benefit from the fact that natural gas is priced at world markets because that's how we get our revenues. That's how the oil and gas industry, which contributes to over a third of this economy, brings its revenues into this province, by believing in free trade. So I would look forward to the member tabling statistics that indicate that there is a loss of the Alberta advantage, and certainly that's something we would look at.

I would also disagree on the drivers that motivate an economy. I think that an overall low tax rate, a government environment that does not pick winners and losers yet lets free enterprise flourish, lets free enterprise succeed but creates an environment that allows for the private sector to create jobs – there has been a record from December 5, 1992, to date that indicates that this province has been overwhelmingly the trendsetter across Canada. I would think that a 10-year record of job creation, to the point where there are now more people working in British Columbia and Alberta than the entire province of Quebec – a release today from Statistics Canada indicates that the educated are coming to Alberta as well as being educated in Alberta. Over 41 percent of Albertans have a postsecondary education.

The Member for Calgary-Bow was pointing out earlier today in caucus the salary levels that are being obtained by Albertans in an Alberta environment and that those who want to succeed can succeed. The fact that we are simply building on this 10-year record of success and a commitment by our government to free enterprise and a commitment by government to (a) educate its consumers, (b) allow market conditions to operate, (c) take advantage of international opportunity, and (d) provide a warm environment for people to educate themselves, bring up a family, and then succeed in their chosen endeavours I think is an important part of the Alberta advantage, and Bill 19 is simply one small but fundamental building block to that.

So we take the member's comments into account, and we will reflect that with a consumer education program, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise again to speak to Bill 19, and I want to deal with a few things. One thing that the Minister of Energy indicated, which I think is very important to this debate, is that natural gas in this province was actually deregulated in 1985, yet the interesting thing is that for a long time nobody noticed any change. Why the change was not noticeable is a very interesting little story, and I think it bears some telling.

Northwestern natural gas and Canadian Western Natural Gas, which later became ATCO Gas, at the time had a monopoly and they owned the distribution. They, in fact, owned their own supply, by and large. They had their own transmission and distribution systems, and they were the one-stop provider for natural gas, and they were regulated in order to protect the public against their monopoly. Then the government decided that they would deregulate gas and they would require Northwestern Utilities or Canadian Western utilities to transmit other people's gas, so you had much as you have with electricity under deregulation, sort of an accounting exercise. Whose electrons really are being moved? It really doesn't matter. You get the electrons or you get the ethane molecules in the case of natural gas, and it becomes an accounting exercise to keep track of who's buying it and selling it and receiving it and so on, but it's all the same product and moving through somebody's lines.

Then nobody to speak of after 1985 began to compete with what later became ATCO Gas, and why is that, Mr. Chairman? Well, the reason is that ATCO, like Canadian Utilities before it, was making its money on the distribution, and it got a reasonable rate of return. It was still a monopoly, and other people could in theory sell gas, but they would have to make a profit on the gas. They didn't have the distribution system, so they'd have to mark their gas up, but interestingly enough ATCO didn't mark up its gas. It made its money on the distribution, and it sold its gas on a flow-through cost at cost. It didn't make a profit on the gas. It made its profit on the distribution. So under those circumstances nobody could get into the market. It was technically deregulated, but they couldn't get into the market. Why? Because the gas was already as cheap as it could possibly be.

Now, whom does that benefit? It benefits all of us. It benefits farmers. It certainly benefits Alberta business and industry. It benefits the whole public sector because they all have the benefit of the cheapest possible gas. Whom does it not benefit? Well, obviously, it doesn't benefit any potential competitors who want to sell us gas.

Mr. Chairman, the government had to fix deregulation because it was working too well but not well enough for the people that wanted to make a profit on natural gas, big profits, I might add. So they had to dismantle that system because even though it worked for 95 percent of Albertans, it didn't work for the 5 percent of Albertans that this government really represents, and that's big oil, big business.

So we now have this situation. The government now has to separate distributors and retailers in order that everybody who wants to sell gas can't just do it by making money from the distribution system. They have to do it by marking up their gas. So everybody is now going to mark up their gas, and if ATCO or Canadian Utilities or any of these people want to be involved in the retailing of gas, they have to get out of the distribution business. That means that now there's going to be a markup on the gas where there wasn't before.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is all entirely separate and different from the fluctuations due to market cost of the raw gas because of that other enormous mistake of the government, creating a North American market for Alberta gas. It also benefited the producers of the gas, and it has disadvantaged the 95 percent of the rest of us, with the important exception that higher prices seasonally provide revenues for the government, and those revenues come in part out of the pockets of Albertans who may or may not be able to afford the cost.

Mr. Chairman, if I can just get back to the situation that we have before us now, the government is deliberately through this bill creating a system in which there must be a markup on the gas where there wasn't before. Furthermore, they are creating layers of distribution, retail, and so on, so that each layer has its own costs, its own overhead, and its own requirements for profits. These profits and overheads are stacked one on top of each other, and they create a much bigger cost, which is of course passed on directly to the consumer. The government is in another way now contributing to the higher costs that Albertans have to pay to heat their homes, run their businesses, run their farms or, in the case of municipal taxpayers, run their cities, run their towns, run their libraries, their senior citizens' homes. All of these higher costs are being built into innumerable components that all come out of the so-called one taxpayer. This is obviously a bill that is not in the interests of most of our constituents, regardless of where you live in the province or regardless of which political party you represent. This is not in the interests of the citizens of Alberta as a whole.

It will create opportunities for some companies. So far, aside from ATCO, which has been here for a long time, the only people that seem to be taking advantage of this structure that's being created is, of course, the former British Gas, which was privatized by Margaret Thatcher, the patron saint of some of the members of this particular Assembly. [some applause] I note the great applause for Margaret Thatcher and her offspring, so to speak in a way, the Direct Energy company, which is now coming to Alberta.

So the higher prices that we have to pay as consumers in order to fuel this irrational plan will then be funneled into Direct Energy and go back to Britain, and all of the people that backed Margaret Thatcher are going to benefit from Albertans having to pay more for their own gas. So we become, in a sense, not hewers of wood and drawers of water but . . .

Mr. McClelland: Passers of gas.

Mr. Mason: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford says: we become passers of gas. I think that if this government is proud of that, then there are certain remedies that they can get at the drugstore that would take care of that problem.

But we do have a bigger problem, Mr. Chairman, and that is that the government is creating a structure that's far more complex than the one that went before. It not only produces higher prices for consumers, it not only takes some of the profits from the whole hierarchy of companies and exports them offshore, but it's immensely more complicated than the so-called regulated utility that went before.

We've seen the parallel too, Mr. Chairman, with electricity. When I was in my first part of the term before the last general election, I asked the Legislature Library and our staff to put together all the bills and regulations and orders in council that were in place to govern the electricity market when it was so-called regulated, because I remember Dr. West at the time saying that we were going to deregulate because we had a complex and cumbersome system for electricity, and it was very expensive to go to these hearings and challenge. Companies had to pay money, and there were lawyers and accountants and consultants. It was all very expensive. You know, according to Dr. West, it actually cost several million dollars a year. Contrast that to the several billion dollars a year that Albertans are now paying for the so-called deregulated system. Anyway, when it came back, there were about three documents: a piece of legislation and a couple packages of regulations. If you measure the complex regulated system in inches of paper, it was about 2 inches of paper.

Then it took them some time to gather all the regulations and the acts and so on to cover the deregulated electricity system in Alberta. This is all just government regulation. This is not anything that's produced by the transmission administrator or any of those other strange, hybrid government creations needed to run the system but just the regulations of the government, the laws of the government, the orders in council, and so on. Mr. Chairman, guess what? It took two people to carry them all into this Assembly. I carried them down. I was holding them down here, and they came up to my chin. That is the deregulated system.

An Hon. Member: That's not very far to your chin. Your chin hangs down quite a ways.

Mr. Mason: Well, I would expect that it would come up to the minister's chin as well.

I think, Mr. Chairman, one of the things that's clear is that we have not deregulated electricity, and we are not deregulating gas. As the minister said, we actually deregulated gas in 1985. What we are doing is reregulating it in a complex and, I daresay, unstable system in order to allow companies to move in and extract profits from the system where they have no such opportunity now. That is in a nut exactly what this bill is doing. It has nothing to do with benefiting consumers in this province and everything to do with helping private companies extract more money from the pockets of Albertans. It does nothing more; it does nothing less. That is what this bill is about.

So I would say, Mr. Chairman, that it would be prudent on our part as an Assembly to consider whether we want to go down this road. Do we really want to charge Albertans more for gas than they're paying today? Do we think that Albertans want to pay more for gas or that they will be happy with us as elected officials if we allow a bill to go forward that is going to create increased costs as a built-in function of a new system? I think the answer is no. I think the public of this province would be and will be outraged to know that this government and this Assembly are prepared to structure something in which they get charged more for their own gas than they're already paying. I daresay that the people of this province believe that they're already paying far too much for natural gas.

I've seen a number of questions. I've been very pleased to see that a number of private members on the other side of the House have been either tabling petitions against higher gas prices or asking some somewhat pointed questions to the government about their failure to provide energy rebates and to deal with high energy prices in general. That, I think, Mr. Chairman, is a positive development, but if those same members cannot analyze what's happening in this bill and cannot see that this bill builds in in a structural way increases over and above the ones that have already taken place, then I don't think they have really thought clearly about the issue, and I think that their constituents will find their efforts lacking. So I would ask the members to carefully consider if this is the path they want to go down and whether or not this act is something that they want to take to their constituents when the session is over or, indeed, in a year or two, whenever the next election is held, because I think it's contrary to the interests of their constituents, and I think their constituents will find that it is so.

Now, one of the features of the bill, Mr. Chairman, is what's becoming a standard feature of government bills, and that is what we call the shell phenomenon. The act creates, essentially, a shell in part of it which allows the government through order in council to determine the actual content of much of the bill. We saw with the bill that was introduced yesterday dealing with the rights of workers in the health care sector that it was entirely a shell. It gave all the authority to deal with this to the cabinet, which, as we know, meets once a week during the session and almost that much at other times behind closed doors and is able, then, to issue the regulations doing the things which really ought to be done by the legislation itself and debated in public by all members of the Assembly of all parties.

Now, let's look at some of the things that this act deals with by way of the shell. It's always interesting. One of the first places I always turn to in a new bill, Mr. Chairman, is to the section called Regulations. It's always a good idea to look at the regulations section of a bill because it tells you exactly what the government is going to be able to do without any further reference to this particular Assembly.

- 27.4(1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations
- (a) respecting the manner in which the functions of gas distributors, default supply providers and retailers are to be carried out;
 - (b) respecting the powers, duties, rights and obligations of gas distributors, default supply providers, retailers and customers.

It can authorize all of those to perform functions on behalf of the government. It can govern "the powers, duties, rights and obligations of persons performing functions" under the authorizations.

There's a long list, most of the alphabet, in fact, to go, so I would be pleased to stand up and finish my remarks a bit later. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My friend from Edmonton-Highlands earlier invoked the name of Margaret Thatcher, Britain's Iron Lady.

Mr. Mason: Your patron saint.

Mr. McClelland: My patron saint – thank you – who dragged the British economy and the British psyche out the darkness of recession and despair into the sunshine of a renewed economy and a renewed confidence. One of the Rt. Hon. Margaret Thatcher's most cogent statements – and I'll paraphrase it – was that there is nothing done in the public sector using public investment that cannot be done more efficiently and better by the private sector, bringing the full weight of innovation, industry, and vision to the delivery of goods and services. Mr. Chairman, we would do well to learn from her, from her resolve, from her strength, and her vision.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on Bill 19.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. [interjection] Obviously they do, but I would like to speak about Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. The natural gas industry in this province, Mr. Chairman, goes back much further than Margaret Thatcher. In fact, the first natural gas well in Alberta was found at the Langevin siding by the CPR when they were drilling for water back in 1883. Certainly a long and storied history from that particular point about natural gas in this province.

Now, then, when I look at Bill 19, I look at something here that all Albertans feel very strongly about. I would just like to read a quote or two here. The quote comes from the Calgary Herald, and it reads:

Alberta is already renowned for its low home-heating prices. Soon, the claim that domestic natural gas prices will be the lowest on the continent will be incontestably true of Alberta. It is a fitting return on a resource that belongs to the people.

Now, as I mentioned, Mr. Chairman, this came out of the Calgary Herald of May 4, 1974, and this was certainly a different vision that the government of Peter Lougheed had for the residents of this province than what we have today. Further in this article it goes on, "As owners of the resource, though, Albertans shouldn't have to pay the full freight if they don't want to." Albertans today would agree with those comments.

Also interesting to note that at that time the Premier then promised both substantial increases in the price of Alberta natural gas and protection for Alberta consumers from those increases. So, certainly, then Premier Lougheed had this right, that, yes, Albertans do own a resource and that, yes, Albertans should be able to share directly in the ownership of that resource. It seems that we have this idea here in the province of Alberta, Mr. Chairman, that the rising tide lifts all boats, but the only boats that are being lifted in this province are the yachts.

We have the people, the disadvantaged people – the low-income people, seniors, people on AISH, people on SFI – facing unprecedentedly high costs of heating their homes without any rebate. So when they see a bill such as Bill 19, they can't help but indicate: "What is happening? We are sitting on this tremendous resource, yet we are not sharing in the benefit of it." Certainly, they have every right to be confused.

Now, when we look, we realize that Alberta produces over 80 percent of the natural gas in Canada. It is the world's third largest producer of gas, and it exports about three-quarters of production outside the province. Roughly 60 percent of the exports went to the U.S. in 2001 with the remainder used in Alberta and the rest in Canada. As well, I think that part of the confusion Albertans have is when they think that this natural resource, this great resource that we have in this province, is in short supply. Or is there a lot of it?

Again we certainly have confusion when we look at the Alberta Ministry of Energy's 2001-2002 annual report. In this particular report:

At the end of 2001, Alberta's in-place reserves of natural gas totaled 253 trillion cubic feet (tcf). Of that, about 200 tcf has potential for recovery under normal conditions, using conventional means.

Now, as well, when I looked at this, I thought: well, that is quite a lot of natural gas. Then I looked at what we produced in 2001 in this province, and it was 5 trillion cubic feet of gas. So if we have 250 trillion cubic feet of reserves, well, that's somewhere in the neighbourhood of over 50 years of natural gas in reserve.

I looked as well on the web site www.energy.gov.ab.ca and got some statistics from there, and this is where I was confused. Now, it says that the ultimate potential – and these are from their 2001 statistics – is 200 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, but then it goes on to say that the remaining ultimate potential is 94 trillion cubic feet. When we look at proven reserves of natural gas in this province, I think it's safe to say that we probably have under 10 years' supply of proven natural gas reserves in this province.

So what we have is a bill that is in front of us today where we have certainly questionable reserves of natural gas, and we are going to open this up to choice. This would be good if the marketplace was not governed by supply and demand. As our reserves dwindle – and I think all members in the industry would certainly indicate that we do have dwindling reserves in the western Canada sedimentary basin – this bill will do nothing to address the fact that we do have a dwindling supply of oil and gas reserves. In fact, by swinging to this particular model, we will not provide those cheaper prices for consumers.

Now, as well, in looking at the issue of natural gas and the price of natural gas in this province – and again I went back to studies that have been done and looked at costs of natural gas – we look at, for example, that in 1998 the cost per gigajoule of natural gas was $2.22. I looked at December of 1999. The price per gigajoule of natural gas was $2.54. Then we move on to the year 2000, and in January of 2000 the price per gigajoule of natural gas was only $2.50. As we follow along through the month-by-month pricing of natural gas in this province, we notice that in February it was up to $2.52; March, $2.72; April, $3.10; May, $3.35; June, $4.33. Why did we get this sudden increase? As temperatures are increasing outside, we have a huge increase in the price of natural gas. It would seem to me that somewhere along the line the Alliance Pipeline must have had an influence, as well, on all of this.

Speaking of the Alliance Pipeline, I think that we also have to look, Mr. Chairman, at the amount of natural gas that is exported out of the province, and certainly in looking at that, 75 percent of our production goes out of province. Now, that leaves 25 percent of production for in-province, and that has a huge, huge impact on our petrochemical industry in the province, and the reason for that is that the natural gas liquids that we have in our gas here in Alberta are not stripped before that gas is marketed outside the province. I don't know where the people that negotiated for our natural gas to be exported to the States were when it came to this idea that we didn't need those natural gas liquids here in the province of Alberta.

A facility such as Joffre is a magnificent facility and those facilities were built in this province because of the foresight of Premier Lougheed many years ago. He certainly saw the value to Albertans of having a plant in Alberta where all of our natural gas would not be shipped to Sarnia or to the States or wherever to have it stripped and those stripped materials going into the petrochemical industry. So now we have this huge 42-inch line traveling from Alberta to Chicago, and all of our natural gas that is going through that line has not been stripped. It is no wonder that the petrochemical industry in this province is quite concerned about their future because so much of our gas is being exported. As well, at this point we cannot renegotiate the contracts to strip that material out of it.

Now, then, as I mentioned, the prices continued to climb from the middle of the year 2000 right up until December, when we hit $8.28 per gigajoule. In 2001 is where we got the spike. In January 2001 the price per gigajoule was $11.21. Certainly, it is no coincidence that through this particular period the provincial election year arrived.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, really?

Mr. Bonner: Yes.

Ms Blakeman: That would make quite a difference; wouldn't it?

Mr. Bonner: And it did make quite a difference. In fact, it made a difference that the government thought it was quite natural and quite right to spend somewhere between $4 billion and $5 billion in rebates to Albertans and that they would forget this high price of $11.21 per gigajoule.

Now, as well, if we looked at the prices that occurred in 2001 and we were to apply the same formula to rebates that apparently has been passed by regulation in the province, we would see today that, I think, we would not have met the same standards then that we do now for rebates. I don't have the figures in front of me for September, October, November, and December of 2001, but it's certainly something that I will be getting and I will be looking at to see if in fact we would have triggered this year average of natural gas prices so that people in this province would get a rebate.

One of the big changes in 1995 was that the Energy and Utilities Board got to set the rates, and they would do this every month. The system still worked well, and I think the Member for Edmonton-Highlands did an excellent job in indicating to all of us why the system continued to work very, very well even after regulations were changed in 1995.

We look at this legislation today, that members of this Assembly are being asked to pass, and what this legislation does is it guarantees profits to any gas distributor here in the province. This certainly isn't a free market model if you're guaranteed a profit. There's certainly no risk involved for companies that do get into the natural gas business in this province. So it is not legislation that is friendly to those who own the resource.

Certainly, when I look at this legislation – and I hear many comments from constituents. One is from the landlords of buildings, business establishments in the constituency, and they have grave concerns because the dollars that they spend to heat their buildings are enormous. They are enormous. For those that have been in business for the past decade, the prices they are seeing today are certainly quite different from what they saw 10 years ago.

As well, the higher prices have to be passed on to consumers, so certainly the consumer doesn't only see these prices reflected in whatever consumable products they happen to purchase, but they also see it in their heating costs and they see it in their gasoline. This strikes me as a bill that is so similar to what we witness at the pumps every time we go to fill up our cars, Mr. Chairman, in that regardless of what company we have out there, we see that there are groups that do control the market. All raise their price and basically by the same amount at various times, and in those cases where prices do drop, those prices are also dropped at the same time and by the same amount.

I can't see where Bill 19 just by choice is going to lessen the price of natural gas, how it is going to benefit consumers, how those families in Alberta who are presently under greater financial stress than they've ever been before in the history of this province are going to get any benefits from this bill. So really what difference does it make if you fill your car up at Esso or Shell or Petro-Can if you're paying the same high price? That is exactly what people in this province are looking at.

So, Mr. Chairman, I know that down the road I'm going to get another opportunity to speak to this particular bill, and there are a number of points that I think are very, very important that the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops has brought up, and they certainly have some very, very serious questions that they wanted answered. They had made recommendations to the department and to the minister, and I don't know that those were ever addressed, but I welcome this opportunity to speak to the bill.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to make just a very few comments on Bill 19. There was a lot said about ownership of the resource, and I think it's true that Albertans are very proud that they own this resource, but I also think it's worth noting that the resource in the ground is worth absolutely nothing to Albertans.

An Hon. Member: Why?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, it's like having something in the cupboard that you know is there, and you really need it, but you can't get the cupboard unlocked.

So what do we do in this province? We sell the right to develop the resource, frankly, and that's where the benefit comes to the people of this province. If this resource stays in the cupboard, if you wish, with the lock on it and nobody has a key or you can't get in it, there is no benefit to Albertans. I want to remind all hon. members that the royalties that we receive on that resource are what help fund the programs that every person in this province holds so dear and assures that we have the quality of life not just for us but for our children and future generations and all of the things that we desire for our families.

To continually say that it's our resource and we deserve the benefit: of course we do, and we're getting it every day. We have a great opportunity to continue to develop this resource. So when you discuss that it's our resource and we should receive the benefit, I want everyone to look at the budget for health. This province has the best health system in Canada. This Capital region for two years in a row has been applauded and noted and said to be the best health delivery system in Canada. That's what this resource pays for, and the ownership of it comes back to the people of this province. So to say that this is our resource and we should get the benefit: ladies and gentlemen, we are getting the benefit today.

We have a learning system where through our postsecondary institutions and our schools we have the highest achievers. We have the best educated workforce in Canada. That's an asset, and we get it at a very small price.

Those are only two of the very large areas where we're able to return the benefit of this resource to the people of this province. So when we talk about ownership and we talk about the people receiving the benefit, I want to go on record as saying that I believe as a citizen of this province that we receive a very large benefit from the ownership of this resource and once we have it developed.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 19 at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 19.

[Motion to report progress on Bill 19 carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports progress on Bill 19.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 8 this evening.

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:14 p.m.]

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 12, 2003 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 2003/03/12
 [Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, before we proceed, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of the 82nd Pathfinders. Their group leaders are Deena and Megan, with parent helpers Conny Pedde and Marion Reinhart. This group is working on their citizenship badge, and they're in the public gallery. With your permission I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Interim Supply Estimates 2003-04 Offices of the Legislative Assembly, Government, and Lottery Fund

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Chairman, with your indulgence, while I have the floor, can I act on behalf of another minister besides myself?

The Deputy Chair: There is no structure established for this procedure, so yes, you may.

Mr. Dunford: All right. I will make the request, then, on interim supply for both the departments of Human Resources and Employment and also Alberta Infrastructure.

As far as Human Resources and Employment is concerned, we need an interim supply amount to cover our expenses until the end of June. What we're asking for is approximately 25 percent, so we're asking for $274 million. This is used to pay income support benefits such as SFI, AISH, and widows' pension; skills investments such as the skills development program; and staff salaries.

In the area of Alberta Infrastructure an interim supply of $394.2 million for operating and equipment/inventory purchases to cover the following requirements: expenditures for infrastructure operations and ongoing commitments for the first four months of the fiscal year, which is approximately 33 percent; grant funding to health regions, school boards, and postsecondary facilities for projects under way; and start-up of new projects. Some examples are $110 million for school operations, $70 million for health care facilities, $35 million for school facilities, $30 million for postsecondary facilities. Also, a capital investment of $13,997,000. This funding is required for land purchases, centennial projects, capital and accommodation projects, and the development cost of information technology systems.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Since we've leapt right into Human Resources and Employment with the minister also offering up information on Infrastructure, if I may, I'll ask questions specific to these departments.

I caught that the minister was referring to centennial projects, and I'm wondering if we can get some details on what those centennial projects are. We know certainly that in the arts and culture sector there were some centennial legacy projects that were approved, but I'm interested to hear that there are some falling under Infrastructure, and I'd like to hear what those would be.

Additionally, I'm questioning why the minister is requesting 25 percent of the budget for his department when in fact the time period that's being covered here is not 25 percent of the fiscal year. Why is he requesting additional money up front? Is there some additional payout or some additional program that is happening early in the year that he requires that money for?

So I'll just ask that couple of questions, and maybe I could get the minister to respond. I'll do more of an overview later. Thank you.

Mr. Dunford: I will have to take the question regarding the centennial projects for Alberta Infrastructure under advisement and get the minister to respond.

As far as what we're asking for: nothing unusual. We're talking about an estimate that would get us through to the end of June, so we're looking at the months of April, May, and June. If my math is correct, that's a quarter of the year, so that's the simple and the only reason that we're asking for 25 percent.

Ms Blakeman: In the preface of the document that's entitled 2003-04 Interim Supply Estimates, in the first paragraph it says that this is asking for money to support operations from the 1st of April, 2003, to June 15, 2003, so I recognize that I'm quibbling about a mere two weeks here. Nonetheless, you have asked for more money than is going to cover that.

Mr. Dunford: She's suitably embarrassed me over two weeks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I'd like to make a few opening comments. We're here tonight to give this government approval to spend $5 billion, and what do we get for it? We get one, two, three, four sheets. Well, they call it seven because they count the back page, that has nothing on it. Four sheets of information, one of which is a preface which really says nothing. Then we get a series of very flippant comments from the front bench ministers, who are getting all of this money, who can't even get their dates straight on when it is that we're giving them a quarter of their budget for the year or for almost a quarter of the year. It's absolutely appalling.

I have to say that in the 10 years that I've been in this Legislature now, they have an absolutely consistent record. Every year at this time they come back for more interim supply dollars. What does that mean? That means that they can't get their act together well enough in advance to be able to bring in a budget on time so that when the fiscal year starts, April 1, they actually have the money to operate. It's like these Pathfinders going to their parents and saying: I can't budget my allowance, so just give me four months in advance and trust me that I'm going to spend it wisely. Mr. Chairman, it doesn't work at home, and it shouldn't work here in this province. It's an appalling record.

This is, I think, the most money they've ever come for. What it tells me at first glance is that this year's annual budget is going to be at least $20 billion, and they can't hire enough staff or work it out within their departments to be able to bring in a budget on time. Twenty billion dollars is a lot of money, and then we don't get any detail. In the time that it will take us to debate the other three-quarter part of the budget, we at least get two hours per department per day. We at least get some detail, and we at least get business plans, and we at least get some information from the ministers, not like tonight, when they just laugh their way through department after department. [interjection] Well, that's true. We do have a couple of ministers here who will give us some more detail, and I have to tell you that I'm looking forward to seeing that kind of detail, Mr. Chairman. I'm seeing maybe two – oh, well, there are three that we're looking for some detail from. Four, because we need money for trees and fish; that's for sure.

Dr. Massey: The dead fish minister.

Ms Carlson: The dead fish minister. The zero fish minister is closer to the truth.

But in terms of what we just heard from the prior minister, he talked for about two minutes on two departments. I have at least a few questions. I want to see some detail from the ministry that he is responsible for. Is this more money or less money than what you had in your department last year? Is this everything that you asked for? If not, why didn't you get the rest of the money that you asked for? I want to know about any new programs that you plan to start in that first quarter with the dollars that you're asking for.

For Infrastructure the same thing. More or less than last year? What are the priority issues going to be for the first quarter of the year? I think that's a fair question to ask for all the people in this province who are looking forward to seeing schools and hospitals and new repairs and old buildings being repaired. Those kinds of questions should be answered tonight, so I would ask that minister to stand up and respond, please.

Chair's Ruling Speaking Order

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this chair is a servant of the Assembly. In the absence of any established protocol of how this debate will follow, the chair is going to recognize a member of the government, a member of the opposition, and you can speak on any subject because there's no established order or protocol that we have with regard to how to proceed with the supply. So I'll be recognizing back and forth, and you will have the opportunity to rise again.

The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Debate Continued

Ms Calahasen: That sounds great. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, the Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is requesting $10,175,000, which represents 30 percent of the ministry's operating budget for 2003-2004. What we're looking for this money for is to pay for manpower, supplies, and services for the period April 1 to June 30, 2003. These operating costs will be consumed by the ministry in delivery of its five strategic priorities: the aboriginal policy initiative, otherwise known as the API; improved consultation with First Nations, as has been identified by a number of people; developing strategic relationships with aboriginal communities and organizations in Alberta; enhanced legal and historic research capability; and of course the development of the north. Mr. Chairman, that will be the request from Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

I would also like to represent the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. He would like me to bring out that he is requesting $1,940,000, which represents 30 percent of the ministry's operating budget for 2003-2004. It is required to pay for manpower, supplies, and services for the period April 1 to June 30, 2003, as well. These operating costs will be consumed by the ministry in delivery of its strategic priorities of co-ordinating and conducting intergovernmental negotiations, conducting successful international negotiations, and promoting and strengthening Alberta's international relations.

I look forward to the questions that may be coming our way.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to make some comments. It astounds me that we go through this process as we do. We're spending about a billion dollars an hour in the Legislature in the next two days, and when I think of how little scrutiny that spending will actually receive, I find it disturbing. I think of having come from local government and the kind of hours that are spent as school trustees and as local councillors poring over budget items and trying to make the best decisions and making sure that every dollar is well spent and how seriously that is taken at the local level. I can't believe that that's how we deal with billions of tax dollars in such a very short time with so little explanation.

The minister of human resources is here, and there are some really very, very critical questions about his department. Does this money, for instance, include increases for people who are on the SFI and the AISH programs? Those people are living on the edge, particularly with the increase in electrical and natural gas prices. The budget to those people is really a very, very significant document, and to have this before us and to have it projected to cover to June 15 without any more detail, I think, really lets groups like that down very, very badly. I think the government has an obligation to those groups to let them know what's happening. This is, as I say, really a disturbing practice, and it's one that every year seems to get a little worse. It puts the opposition and it puts anyone who would like to really closely scrutinize the budget in a really untenable position.

It'll be the beginning of April now before we get the business plans and the budget and are able to take and relate the dollars that are being spent or intended to be spent to the goals and to the past performance of various departments, and, Mr. Chairman, that seems to make a comedy of the whole business of preparing business plans and pretending that we're conducting government business in a responsible fashion. So I think my distress is distress that's shared by a number of members in the community, that we're forced to try to vote or not vote on such huge sums of money with so little detail.

I'd like to know, for instance, Mr. Chairman, about the Learning department and the kinds of increases that schools might expect, particularly for next September. We were at a meeting just last week where representatives of 38 schools in this city came because their schools are in the process of cutting teachers and increasing class sizes, and for those people the answers that they are looking for in the budget are really very critical. It affects the very lives of their children. Again, we'll have the money allocated to June when this passes tomorrow, and there'll be no answers for those people. I just find it very difficult to go to those people and explain what we're doing in the Legislature and even more difficult to explain how I as a member of the opposition had no greater input into the plans that the government has than being able to look at and criticize the kinds of things we have before us tonight.

I know that the government has to have money to operate, but it happens year after year after year. I remember as a school board member being frustrated when the same thing happened to us at the school board level with the administration wanting money before we had passed our budgets until we finally as a board just said: no; we're not going to spend a penny until we have the budget passed for the next year. That shook things up, and it was hard, I know, on administrators and people working with the system, but the change was made. Now I think it's a pretty well universal practice across the province that the boards have their budgets in place before a dollar is spent for the next year, and I need to be enlightened as to why that kind of planning is impossible at the provincial level.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We've now had two speakers from the opposition who seem to not understand the concept of interim supply, so I think it's perhaps prudent to spend a little bit of time talking about what it is that Committee of Supply is doing tonight. This is not a budget, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods quite rightly recognized although he was confused in some of his comments about it. The budget comes, as the Minister of Finance has indicated, on April 8 this year.

There are some good reasons why it's later than might otherwise happen this year. Sometimes the budget comes down two weeks after the House opens, and sometimes it doesn't. There's always good reason for the timing of a budget. Budgets take a lot of time to put together. There's an incredible amount of volatility right now in terms of markets and issues. As the opposition knows, as every member of this House knows, there are changes being made to the way we do budgets this year, and therefore the bill that the House dealt with earlier dealing with how we handle capital and budget capital had to be passed first. The opposition well knows that.

They also are, I think, acutely aware of the fact that their federal cousins came down with a budget at the end of February, and that budget very seriously has the possibility, at least, of impacting our budget because it speaks to how much money the federal government is putting into health care, and health in general is a huge part of the provincial budget. Even as we speak, I'm not sure that anybody could sort out exactly what the federal government has said with respect to what's new money, what's old money, what's indifferent money, and where it has to be spent in accordance with the protocols.

There are some very good reasons why you don't rush a budget to print without knowing at least as well as you can what your projections might be in terms of revenue, what some of your major expenditure items, particularly in health, might be, and how you might even perhaps look at your tax revenues and project those. So it's rather foolish to suggest that budgets have to come in at a particular time because April 1 is the start of the fiscal year and you have to have the budget passed so that you can start paying people.

We have a time-honoured tradition in not just the Alberta parliament but in all parliaments: the concept of interim supply. Of course, the people who work for government, the people who work for the people of Alberta have to be paid. The government continues, so you have the concept of interim supply. To suggest that we're spending a billion dollars a minute or whatever it was, a billion dollars an hour, and that we're not scrutinizing it appropriately in terms of Committee of Supply is a ridiculous assumption.

The budget is going to come down, and this Legislature will deal with the budget over 20 days as we always do, which is one of the more complete analyses of the budget, as far as I know, in any Legislature.

To expect, as is suggested by members of the opposition, that the budget should be prejudged in the interim supply estimates – with respect to what might be increased, what new programs might be in place, what people might expect in terms of what is in the budget – is ridiculous. Interim supply is just that: it's voting money so that government can continue to operate. The people who work for the people of Alberta can be paid for their work while we get on with the business of legislating, including passing a budget, which the Minister of Finance will bring down on April 8 and for which we will have plenty of time in this House. In fact, we always devote most of the spring session to the discussion of the budget.

So let's not pretend that Committee of Supply on interim supply estimates is anything more than what it actually is, which is voting a certain sum of money, in this case approximately a quarter of the year's budget, so that the business of government on behalf of the people of Alberta can continue to operate until the budget in its full and complete discussion through Committee of Supply can be dealt with appropriately and all of the issues and concerns that the people wish to raise can be dealt with in depth. That's not to say, Mr. Chairman, that Committee of Supply ought not to be an opportunity for people to ask important questions, so I'll sit down and see if some of those actually do come up.

Ms Blakeman: George Orwell must really be enjoying this. If I just heard the minister correctly, it's not reasonable for the people whose money we're spending, the taxpayers of Alberta, to know why they are being asked to okay a bunch of money in advance. Ten weeks worth of money, according to the first paragraph in the preamble of this document, for which people are blithely commenting that they're going to be asking for 30 percent, which would amount to four months, according to my calculations, which sure doesn't work out to 10 weeks. You say that this is for 10 weeks' worth of expenditure, but it's unreasonable to expect that we would have any kinds of targets, performance measurements, any kind of information about how this money is going to be used to tell the taxpayers: this is how we're spending your money.

This is unbelievable. I'm so glad those Pathfinders were in here, because they're going to be voting in the next election. [interjection] Yeah, they will be. They're over 16. Next election they're going to be voting.

I'm glad they were here to see how cavalierly this government treats their money and the money of their families. "Well, just give us an okay for it. We're going to spend a whole four hours talking about 24 ministries and some five billion dollars, but, you know, just give us an okay for this." I mean, honestly, all of you that are parents in here, would you hand over four months' worth of allowance to your child who needs it for 10 weeks without an explanation, without any kinds of targets, without any kind of discussion about how it's going to be spent or what they're expected to produce for it? This is astonishing.

Just this morning I was fortunate enough to have the Minister of Finance before the Public Accounts Committee, and we had a very similar discussion there in which the Auditor General admitted that yes, indeed, in the private sector this budget would have been ready and delivered two months prior to year-end. This coming from a government that is so keen on the free market, that is so keen on doing things like the private sector, but no, no, not when it comes to budgeting and money. With that, they're going to be late. With that, they're going to ask for 30 percent of the year's budget for 10 weeks' worth of expenditure. So these two things don't compute. There's an inconsistency here with how seriously this government takes this budgeting process, this interim supply process, and what the rest of the world looks like. There you have your own Auditor General in the Hansard for Public Accounts this morning saying: well, yes, indeed, this is a problem, and in fact the budget should be delivered two months prior to year-end so you're not having to do an interim supply.

This government calls the Legislature in. Why doesn't this government call the Legislature in with enough time to debate the budget and have it in place before the fiscal year starts? Now, I've heard the excuse: gnash, gnash; wail, wail; the federal government is picking on us again. Oh, for heaven's sake. Suck it up. You can surely get your budget done and work out what you're missing. You do enough sup supplies in this place. You can easily go back and repair your numbers after the fact if there's that big a difference from what the feds are going to give you.

But let's look at the planning process for the entities that fall underneath this government. We now have RHAs who don't get their business plans approved until in some cases well into the second quarter. What kind of planning process is that? What kinds of restraints are we able to place on them? What kinds of targets are we able to have? How are we to be able to measure any kind of performance when in some cases we're not approving budgets for our regional health authorities until halfway through the year? What on earth – how out of control is this government? You know, $5 billion for 10 weeks. This is astonishing.

Four pages. We have four pages of information here. Well, it's churlish of us to ask for more information than that because, gosh, it's an interim supply. This is ridiculous. The Minister of Finance is going to come forward with a new style of balance sheet budgeting or presenting of accounts, and I'd like to know from the minister – and maybe I'll get to hear this on the second day of two days with the supplementary supply – whether that new style and all of the rules and regulations that are going with it that we discussed in Public Accounts this morning and all of these new business plans and the budget are in fact going to be in place on the 1st of April. Are they going to be adhered to? Will everybody know what the rules are, or do they not kick in until after the real budget is done, which is somewhere in June or May according to where this government is going?

So every time you ask the Minister of Finance: well, what about this, and what about that, and how come there's a problem there? "Not to worry; we're going to have a whole new way of doing things." Really? Well, where is it? We will be six weeks into the fiscal year that she's talking about before we ever get to see all of this. There are no performance measurements, no goals, no targets in here. It's not prorated even to 10 weeks. I mean, I think any grade 10 math class you took this to would go: just a second here; what are they doing?

I mean, let's look at some of the things that the Auditor General has repeatedly said, in some cases over 13 times, that this government has been unable or unwilling to put in place. So far they have their own accounting system. Now, this supposedly is going to be changed. Well, we don't know. Is it the 1st of April? Is it the 15th of May? We don't know, and we're not getting any information about it tonight: just please give us $5 billion for 10 weeks.

So several times the Auditor General has made recommendations that "the Department of Finance change the corporate government accounting policies to improve accountability." Well, why is that? Well, there are a number of things that this government is repeatedly doing that don't jive with their much beloved private sector or frankly even with any other public sector.

What's the problem? Well, somebody said to me: "Laurie, when they go off and they make their very own kind of accounting, it kind of makes it look like they're trying to hide something, that if they did it like everybody else, somehow they would be exposed. Why do they keep choosing to run off and do their very own special one-of-a-kind accounting?" I said: well, I don't know, because the Auditor General keeps asking them to fall into line with this on the generally accepted accounting principles, also known as GAAP, and they keep saying, "We'll accept this recommendation," and it doesn't happen. Next year the Auditor General comes back again, says the same thing. The government says, "Yes, we accept this in principle," and it doesn't happen. Next year exactly the same thing. In some cases some of these recommendations 13 times, seven times, six times. You really wonder how committed the government is to following the recommendations of the Auditor General.

So what is it that's of concern here when they're not following GAAP? Well, we have things like reporting entities. Over and over and over again they say: you must give us consolidated financial statements; you have to include all of the money that the government is spending that's out there and how it affects everything that the money's going to.

"Certain entities have been inappropriately excluded from the reporting entity." This is from page 95 of the 2001-2002 Auditor General's report. "Financial statements should include all assets, liabilities, revenues and expenses in entities that ministries control."

They've listed reservations of opinion for the ministries of Health and Wellness, Learning, Municipal Affairs, and Seniors.

The CICA Public Sector Accounting Board . . . has initiated a project to assist in defining the reporting entity and another project to identify appropriate accounting policies to consolidate the entities.

Notwithstanding this, it still hasn't happened.

Assets. Over and over and over again you hear from the Auditor General that capital assets costing less than $15,000 with useful lives of more than a year should not be recorded and expensed out in one year. The government keeps doing it. Why? Well I'm told by the Minister of Finance that we're going to have a brand-new way of doing this come the 1st of April. Well, the 1st of April is two weeks from now. What is the plan?

You're asking me to approve $5 billion with no plan in place, but every time I question you about what your budgeting practices are you go: there's a new plan coming. What? You don't make sense anymore, and you're so arrogant about it, as though us asking to know what this money is being spent on is somehow out of line, that it's inappropriate for us to ask what this money is being used for and how. What are the programs? What are the measurements? How do we know if it was spent appropriately? Oh, tsk tsk, you shouldn't be asking us that; it's not a budget. What? It's $5 billion. Of course, it's appropriate for us to ask you that.

All right; let's keep looking at the things we're asking about. That was the expensing out. Other assets are "misstated in financial statements." There are reservations of opinion for the ministries of Energy, Health and Wellness, and Sustainable Resource Development, problems in all of those not being addressed or at least not that I know of. "Liabilities misstated in financial statements." "Ministries revenue and expenses . . . reservation of opinion in the Ministry of Innovation and Science." I'm sorry; I missed the reservation of opinion in the Ministry of Justice and the Solicitor General and the Environment, Infrastructure, and Transportation.

Number five out of a list of six: discontinued operations, the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Number six:

related party transactions, the ministries of Community Development, Health and Wellness, and Learning. That's pretty much gone around the world here, but somehow I'm not supposed to question this and question what the plan is for spending money because this is an interim supply.

Well, then, I go back to my original questions: why are we having an interim supply? This government has the total control to make sure that a budget is brought in and that we're in this House to debate it and pass it before the fiscal year starts, but the way the Minister of Justice is starting: "Well, no. Heck, nobody does that anymore. Gosh, no. I mean, that beginning of the year date really doesn't mean anything." We'll just kind of what? Roll through it, slide through it. But everything else is focused on that 1st of April date to the 31st of March. That's our fiscal year.

Well, a budget is a plan for spending money in a specific time period, and that time period is April 1 to March 31, so why aren't we getting a budget, Minister of Justice? Why aren't we getting that budget if we're supposed to be talking about that period of time? Why would you think it was acceptable to say: "No, no. We're just going to do an interim supply, and we don't really want to give you very many details, and don't ask for things like targets and performance measurements and business plans."

Business plans. You know, this government is actually ahead of the times on the business plans. You actually are. Good on you. But it's very frustrating when you've started an excellent process and then you've just left it there. You didn't cement the stuff in place, and you now face the possibility of slipping backwards in it. This sort of thing, an interim supply for $5 billion that's going to run you 10 weeks into a fiscal year for which you're asking for 30 percent of the funding, is exactly the kind of thing that's going to lose your status there as a leader in this.

I know that the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has been taking notes, and she's going to get up and answer this. I'm looking forward to it because it certainly is frustrating. [interjection] She's not going to answer it; she's going to do her estimate. Okay. Well, I'll look forward to additional opportunities to talk specifically about different ministries then.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am going to try and get specific and give some detail. We have been here 40 minutes, and I've heard one question, really. I think this is a serious process, and I understand that we have to have some discussion about the process. I've been in the Legislature for 15 and a half years, and many, many of those years have had a supply budget.

It's okay to hold your government accountable, but I've talked to a number of my colleagues in recent days and weeks because we're dealing with an agricultural policy framework. Agriculture is a 50-50 shared jurisdiction constitutionally, and a great deal of the discussions we're having will have a very profound effect on our budget.

The federal budget came in on February 18. Can anybody in this room remember when the last federal budget was? There is no set time frame, it seems. In fact, they go sometimes 18 months. But my colleagues tell me that some of them have not opened their Legislature yet, and their budget debate is two days. We could go back to that, but I don't think that was the best system. We could go back to A, B, C, D committees, which wasn't the most popular, where some of it was out of the Legislature room and some of it was in, and that would shorten the time frame. There are a lot of things we could do.

One of the reasons that we have three-year business plans – and they are three-year forward not three-year backward. So you can look at the three-year business plan for my department, and you can see quite clearly what we anticipate for this year. Yes, there will be some fine-tuning, and, yes, there will be some adjustments in that to accommodate new programs such as the ones that we are dealing with in the ag policy framework. Yes, we have announced already changes to our crop insurance program, and those details will be updated in our new business plan.

We do three-year business plans for that reason. They are forward-looking, and they set out a three-year plan for the government. Circumstances will in some cases cause adjustments in that, but it is an overall government plan. So to look at 25 percent of the budget isn't, I think, realistic, and you will have that not in six weeks but eight days at least. By my calculations March 31 to April 8 is eight days, and then the budget will be presented with the business plans of this government. It won't be voted in that time, but it will be in front of you in that time.

This is probably the most transparent process of any government that I know of. I suggest to hon. members that you look at what others do and that we always look to improve what we do in this province, which is what this government has attempted to do and I think succeeded fairly well. I have not had one constituent call me concerned that we're doing interim supply. I have to tell you that in 15 years I have not had one constituent call me and say: why are you doing interim supply? I can tell you that the public that votes for 74 members of this government is much more interested in the overall government plan and then the detail of the budget.

So having said that, let's go into detail. First, I'll deal with Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, where we are requesting $139,655,000. This funding is required to support our department operations until our budget and the estimates are passed, and of course that budget with our business plan will be tabled on April 8. Interim supply that we're asking for will cover these items. Manpower. We do feel that our very valued civil service should be paid on April 30. We do think that. We do think that all of the nurses, the teachers, the doctors, all of the people who work to provide services for the people of this province should get a paycheque. So I am asking you to supply part of that money to ensure that they do. There are related costs with that: supplies and services. There will be some capital acquisitions, very, very minimal, but there are also grant payments, and that's the part I'll get specific on in my department just to ensure that you are aware of this.

One of the reasons that we need interim supply is because we do pay many of our grants at the beginning of the year. This is an advantage to those groups, obviously. I'll list some of them for you. Irrigation districts. That plan has been in place for a number of years, and it varies little, very little. So if you look at what we've provided to irrigation districts for rehab and so on in the past years, you will be within a very fair range of that area.

Agricultural societies. All of those people who provide such valuable services to our rural communities and including the cities, such as Northlands – we all know what great work Northlands provides and the services they provide for both urban and rural – Calgary Stampede board, others like that. We do provide their grants early in the year.

Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. We have, of course, our crop insurance programs. All of our risk management programs with Ag Financial Services are lending both to producers at a primary level, our commercial division, and of course as you know Alberta Opportunity Company is included with Ag Financial Services. Those are some that we very specifically provide grants to at the beginning of the year. I don't think you would want to change that practice. So those are the reasons that we would require $139,655,000 for interim supply to get us through this period of time.

Now, I also have the honour of providing to you some information on Community Development, and with your permission I'll do that right now, and again I will give you some detail. This is for some short-term needs of the ministry, but mainly it's important to maintain our commitment to grant programs that support a diversity of recreation, sports, social, cultural, and heritage programs and activities through our lottery-funded programs. I know that members of the opposition support those programs, and I'm sure that they would want those grants to be paid so that that work can go on.

Certainly, our government recognizes the value of it, and as I said, I know that members opposite do as well, and it's important to support the army of volunteers that carry out those programs. That's what greatly assists the quality of life that we enjoy in this province. So I think they deserve this ongoing commitment, and I certainly support giving them their grants early in the year so that they can do that planning. Most of those organizations are operated by volunteers, and to make sure that their job is made less cumbersome for them would be helpful.

Another very important part of the interim supply for Community Development is the program for persons with developmental disabilities. I don't think that anyone would object to that being dealt with very early in the year.

Another one that's very near and dear to many of our hearts is our library operating grants. I think it's important that we do supply our libraries with their operating grants very early in the year so that they can continue their good work and know that our support for it is there.

Of course, finally, for all of the fine staff that do work in that ministry, we do want to see them have a paycheque at the end of April, as well, without any hesitation.

Those are the comments I would make. I will try to be more specific in both of those areas if I can and answer any questions, and I'm sure the Minister of Community Development will deal tomorrow with questions that I can't answer tonight. Anything that is required in detail on some of the grants in Agriculture, such as irrigation rehab, ag service boards, ag societies, and so on, I would be happy to commit again to providing how we provide those grants. If you want to know the process for division of those dollars, I'd be happy to provide that detail to you as well.

So thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We'd like to thank the minister of agriculture for the level of detail she's provided here tonight. In fact, that is what we were expecting coming into the Assembly. We will save most of the detail of the questions for tomorrow afternoon, when it looks like there will be more time to get into them. In fact, she makes our point when we say that this budgetary process could be started a lot sooner and they could come in with the budgets because a lot of these expenses are standard operating expenses. They know ahead of time what the grants are going to be. They know ahead of time what the staff wages are going to be. It sounds like a threat when they come in here and say: well, we have to pay and we want to pay our staff; don't we? To think that by some chance we here on this end of the House could hold up an interim supply request and people wouldn't get paid at the end of the month is ridiculous, and definitely with proper planning we could see budgets hit this floor of the Assembly way sooner. If they weren't completely passed, they could be close to being passed, and you could be making requests which, this minister knows, in the past have been for a lot shorter time period than the time period that we're talking about right now.

So don't tell us that because of us someone's not going to get their paycheque at the end of the month. That isn't what's going to happen. With proper planning, which other jurisdictions do – I don't think the feds do it either, so don't hold them up as an example. I agree with what you said there, but there are other jurisdictions in this country who do a very good job. [interjection] Well, let's take a look at the territories for one. They don't have the same kinds of problems that this government has here, and we see not this minister who just spoke but other ministers who've come in this evening who are absolutely, flagrantly arrogant about the level of detail that they'll provide.

When we see supplementary estimates come into this Assembly, we see some level of detail come in to back up the request. At least there's a breakdown in the program spending and in general areas and vote numbers, which is helpful. That information is already available to this government. They don't have to disclose secrets, and they don't have to disclose the big-ticket items or changes that they're going to make in whatever they roll out in the budget. For the most part the spending is consistent from year to year, and we could see that and have some detail if they think that we're going to be able to approve an interim supply for a quarter of the year's moneys prior to the end of this fiscal year. So I think that those are reasonable questions to ask.

This minister is one of the only ministers whose business plans actually make sense from year to year. With most of the other ministries you can't compare one year to the next. They say that they're three-year plans, but every year is the first year, and they reorganize the way the department is done. So it's absolutely impossible to find comparative figures. Those aren't business plans that are usable and workable like business plans are supposed to be. Those are figments of somebody's imagination, except in this department. This is one of the departments where you can actually have comparative figures, and I'd like to congratulate the minister on having done that work. It's gotten better over the years, not worse, and I have to say that in every single other department what we've seen before us has gotten worse, not better. So there's an example to follow for sure.

We also agree on this side that all grants should be given at the beginning of the fiscal year, but not just the grants. Other organizations that are dependent upon government funding need to know in advance so that they can plan their year. The biggest complaint we hear from the municipalities is that when they finally do find out how much they're getting, they only find out for the year. They need to do their planning cycles on three- or four- or five-year cycles. They don't get the information in time to be able to make good, consistent decisions and decisions that in the long run can save them money and talk about sustaining infrastructure over the long term. This government knows that those are concerns because I've been at meetings where those concerns have been given to the ministers responsible, yet we see a complete disregard for that happening.

So don't come in here and tell us that we're asking for too much information. In fact, we are asking for too little information, and I'm sure that all of these members that are here in this Assembly for the first time are appalled at the way this budgetary process operates. You couldn't do this in business. You couldn't do this at the municipal level. You couldn't do this in any other organization except a government that has had too much power for too long a time. They know that nobody's going to question what they do and they're not going to go back to their home constituency and people are going to say: how come I don't know how much money I'm getting until one-quarter of the way into the year or more?

The day will come when people start to scrutinize what this government is doing, and they will actually realize what the Auditor General and other people have been saying about the planning cycle and what turns out to be the mismanagement of planning, and that has nothing to do with whether or not money is well spent. It's the ability to build a plan and to live by it, and that isn't very much to ask of a government that's asking for $20 billion a year plus whatever other incidental spending they have.

Yes, it's true that the province doesn't know to the dollar how much money they're going to get from the feds, but they have a framework. They know in most areas the kind of spending that they're going to have available to them, and they can easily build a budget around that, Mr. Chairman. It is complete hogwash for the Government House Leader to have made the statements he did, that they can't do it. Everybody else in the world can do it. There's no reason why these people can't either.

When he was speaking, I was reminded of a breakfast meeting I went to recently where an accountant was talking about the implications the Enron fiascos have on the corporate world and how there was going to be spillover from that in the political world too in terms of how governments account for their money and don't account for their money and bring in budgetary processes, and I would suggest that this government, who likes to pretend to lead in all things, start to lead in this, and that's in responsible accounting.

I know that accounting practices for governments have been different. This government has told Albertans that they are going to try and follow business practices. Well, it's time they started to live up to that, and one of the ways that they can do that in a primary role is to start to account for their budgets in a timely fashion and bring them into this Assembly way before this time period. The minister of agriculture talked about how in her 15 years we've sometimes seen interim supplies come in at such a late date. I don't actually ever remember seeing a June date before, and I don't remember seeing this much money, but there have been many times when they've been able to do a way better job than this. This is one of the worst years on record, if not the worst year, and we will definitely be checking into that.

So I am hoping that the other ministries that stand up and have an opportunity to report tonight give the level of detail that this minister has so that we can have an opportunity to take a look at those numbers between this evening and tomorrow afternoon's sitting and at least be able to ask some reasonable questions. I really want the record to record that when I asked six questions of the minister of human resources, he refused to stand up and answer those questions in this Assembly. I hope he will reconsider that arrogance and answer those questions by tomorrow afternoon.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Like my colleagues I'm here for interim funding to meet our obligations to the public until we have an approved budget. I think that most members of the House would be familiar with the high cost of public health care. Our so-called free health care system costs this government and taxpayers approximately $19 million a day, and that's just to maintain the status quo. The cost of running our health care system requires that I ask for interim funding of $1.85 billion, enough to pay for health care until the end of June. This is prebudget funding, so like others who have commented on this issue I cannot give details now. Those will be available postbudget. This will give a good deal of time for government to pass the Appropriation Act and still keep health care operating in this province.

Now, some may be tempted to anticipate health funding for 2003 based on this interim amount, but any extrapolation of the figures would lack accuracy. Last March my three-year business plan for 2002-2005 anticipated a 2003-2004 budget of $7.11 billion. Of course, my final budget will reflect developments in the recent past; for example, the increase in federal support. However, details on my final budget and how it is allocated will not be available until budget day on 8 April 2003.

Colleagues, I stress to you that I'm not asking for an amount in addition to my 2003 budget. I only ask to advance one-quarter of my anticipated budget to cover the cost of health care for the first quarter of the new fiscal year. With access the number one issue in health care providing uninterrupted funding is essential.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the delay in our provincial budget is unavoidable if we are to table a budget that best meets the needs of this province and the people who live and work here. Interim funding for health care is equally essential so health services can continue uninterrupted until the budget is tabled.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, I appreciate it when a minister speaks for another minister, but seeing as we're not being given the opportunity to then question that person on the two portfolios that they brought forward, I'm having to go back one in order to question the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on her presentation on Community Development.

I will note that in response to the comments that the Minister of Health and Wellness has made in which he's not going to give us any budget information at all for $1.8 billion, perhaps what the government needs to consider doing is moving your year-end. If you're waiting on the federal money and that's your problem, then, you know . . . [interjection] It's not set in stone. Thirty five years ago this same government or the one before it changed the year-end date. If that's your big problem as to why you can't do it – and that's the repeated excuse that I've heard mentioned here – then look at changing the year-end date so that we can have this budget passed before.

Specific to Community Development. Minister, if I can ask you to use your seniority in that caucus. When you were the Minister of Community Development, you gave me a turnaround on questions that I asked within a couple of weeks before we had to actually pass the appropriation bill. Thank you for that. It allowed me to make a good decision and actually vote on the appropriation bill. Your colleague who you're speaking for tonight: please put pressure on him. It took me five months to get a response to questions that I asked last April. Not helpful, and if you're asking me now – we get two shots at this, two days of supply – I would like to have the answers to the questions that I ask tonight to be answered tomorrow. As far as I know, most of the staff that was there under this minister is still there under the current Minister of Community Development, so the expertise and the ability is still there to be able to do that kind of turnaround on answers.

What I'm looking for is the grant release dates, the cheque runs that happen: has that changed? My memory was – and I could be off on this – that for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts; Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife; the Wild Rose Foundation; human rights, citizenship and multiculturalism education fund; particularly with the AFA there was a sort of advance grant that you got in, like,

March. Then once everything had cleared and the budget was settled and you'd submitted your plans for the following production year, you got a final of the money in about September and the fed money came in July. So I'm wondering if the grant deadlines have been moved around here. I'm not remembering a schedule that would be releasing the grant money. I'm assuming that we're talking operating grants, but maybe I can get an answer on that as well, whether it's the operating grant money that's going to be released between the 1st of April and the 15th of May or the 15th of June, whichever date you want to take here, or the project grants. Perhaps it's both. I know that in addition we've got the individual grants that would be talked about here. So if I can get some information around that.

The library grants. Has there been a settlement about changing the way these grants are calculated? For some time there's been a lag. The calculation on the per capita was based on years too far back to be helpful for fast growing communities like Grande Prairie or even Fort McMurray. We were based on 1997 figures as recently as 2001, I think, and the money that was therefore based per capita was just insufficient to run the library. Has there been a change in the formula? Has it (a) been updated to more recent per capita figures, and (b) have we changed the amount per head that is being allocated here?

Persons with developmental disabilities. I understand that there are changes being contemplated. We've got legislation that's coming that's going to affect this. I'm wondering about the way these grants are going to be allocated, and, again, since we're doing, according to what I'm being told here, a quarter of the year, how are these grant programs working, then? Are they going to give out a quarter of the grant and then come back later and do the other two-thirds, or are they going to up-front the money? There's not enough money to cover all the grants that need to be put in in that six weeks, so I'm not sure what's happening there.

Now, there were also some problems and reservations of opinion that we got from the Auditor General, and I'm wondering if those have been dealt with in the context of getting this advanced money into the year. We have got an underestimation of the ministry's cultural facilities that are operated with the assistance of volunteer societies. These are the friends-of-groups, I'm assuming, that the minister set up when she was in that department. The ministry has not included the revenues, expenses, and surpluses. Therefore, the Auditor General estimates that the ministry's revenues, expenses, and net assets are understated by a lot of money: $3.8 million for revenues, $2.1 million for expenses, and $3.1 million for net assets. So how is that affecting the budgeted amount? If you're asking for a quarter or 30 percent of the money for the year yet this money is underestimated, what's going on? How are these calculations being worked out?

The historical facilities that used to be operated with the volunteer societies and now the ministry and the historic resources fund have recorded accumulated surpluses that have been returned to the ministry in the sum of $385,000 as deferred contributions. The fund has not recorded the surpluses at all if the volunteer societies have not returned the funds. So we've got unreturned surpluses totaling at least $223,000. Does that mean they're not going to get a grant out of the money that we're talking about here? They're supposed to work on their surpluses? What sort of arrangement is being made with these organizations? You're right. For those groups that really operate during the summer – and that, I think, affects more dramatically the groups that are part of a strong tourism endeavour like museums and historical sites – they probably do need their grants up front. How is this being resolved? Does this mean that, you know, we're going to hear that the Torrington Gopher Museum is struggling because they don't have their grant up front because they had a surplus that has been returned in a different bookkeeping year or something? I just want to know how that's all going to be worked out.

I'd like to know if in the money that's being expensed out here, being granted, there will be any expenses of capital assets of less than $15,000. The reason is that the government is constantly criticized for just expensing out capital assets that are bought for less than $15,000, and the Auditor General really wants those recorded as a capital purchase, which can be depreciated and amortized over a period of their useful life. I mean, something you spend $14,000 on, for example, isn't usually used up in a year. It has some life beyond that. So as part of this money that's being granted forward, some of it is, I note, for capital purchase. Capital investment, $265,000. Are any of those specific amounts that are under $15,000 for capital assets?

I also want to know what kind of money is being granted as part of this $209.5 million that is toward legacy projects, the same question that I asked the Minister of Infrastructure. What kind of program is in place around this? I know there was some seeking of information. The spouse of the Premier was heading up a group that looked at possibilities. There was a granting of several organizations with significant amounts of money, and then a granting process was put in place. So where are we with this legacy thing? It was happening, and then it wasn't. It was on hold. Do I take it, then, that it's happening again? Can we get some specifics about how much money is allocated there?

So those are the specific questions that I'm looking for information on for Community Development. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I think it should be re-emphasized that interim supply is just what it means. It's the cash needed, if you will, to make sure that there's continuity in the operations of the government. When the final budget comes through with the business plans, that also will include whatever has been appropriated through interim supply. So to carry on and on and on about asking for these great megadollars makes it sound like some sort of an underhanded plot to deceive, which I think is quite unfair and unreasonable.

Having said that, I'll say that we're requesting interim supply for Seniors, some $73 million, I believe it is. I might point out that there's nothing hidden in here, nothing different. Our business plans indicate that we flow through over 90 some odd percent of our budget, and quite frankly that goes towards the seniors' benefit plan, to the special-needs plan, to support for all sorts of housing programs that are under the portfolio. Will this be accurate? Even now because of changing needs we've had to enter into some changing requests. Only recently this House approved a supplementary requisition for the affordable housing program. That was done because when the budget was presented on whatever date, there was no such program to account for because the agreement was only signed in June. We were pressed just lately into supporting some special needs for rising costs to seniors. As I indicated in my comments, those costs will come forward again. They won't be indicated in the budget because, quite frankly, that information wasn't available when the budget was being drawn up. So no matter how hard we try, it becomes extremely difficult to be accurate right down to the very last penny because things change. However, I know that all the hon. members will support this request going for the Seniors ministry because it deals with the people who are most in need in the areas of income support and housing.

I'd also at this time, Mr. Chairman, like to bring forward a request for some $64,169,000 operating expense and $356,000 in equipment inventory for the Department of Municipal Affairs, and again this is to just go on and make sure that the major grant programs are paid during the first quarter. That's the indication I have, and if the hon. members have questions related to this, as usual the Minister of Municipal Affairs is quite prompt in getting that back. So if you have questions relative to this, please put them forward, and I'll make sure that he sees them so that he can respond to them.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think the discussion around the process has been valuable, but I think that what it has done is pointed out exactly what we were saying, that for most of this money the government knew that these expenses were going to be there. There's going to be a budget. In this case it's going to be later. Why not sooner? That is the question that we asked given the responses we've had indicating that these are programs that are going to be continued. I think that the least we could have had is the kind of description that we got from the Deputy Premier and the department that she is responsible for.

There are a number of questions. For instance, in Learning I would like to know if the AC program is going to be continued. It's a program that schools have come to rely upon, and it's a program that has yielded some good information in terms of school improvement. Unfortunately, sometimes the information gleaned from the projects is ignored, but for the most part I think schools have been able to do some good things with funding from the AC program. It's an important program, and it would be useful to know if it is one of the programs that's being continued under the interim supply.

Is the interim supply the money that covers these months? Is any of that money going to be earmarked to cover the costs of the arbitration awards that the teachers received? That's an important piece of information for school boards to know because their planning for September hinges on the way in which these funds are designated. How is the funding formula being made more flexible? Will that flexibility apply to the spending of these funds that the boards will receive up until mid-June? Again, an important question for board members and for schools. What is the nature of the flexibility that's going to be given to boards? The minister has talked about it. Will that flexibility, as I say, apply to the funds in this interim supply? At the postsecondary level what about the access fund? Are there funds in here to continue the access fund, to change it? It's another fund that in the past has been relied upon by postsecondary institutions to undertake some new programs and to modify and continue some existing programs. So, again, it's important to them to know: will that access fund be continued?

In terms of the whole Learning department, how much of this money is designated for administration? How much of it is going to be directed towards programs? There's a great deal of concern about that balance, and there's concern about the amounts that are going to be found in the program moneys. Are there going to be changes to the per pupil grant, and will they be reflected in the spending of this money and the planning for the spending of this money? There are a whole host of questions that we'll ask, of course, when the budget for Learning comes, and it would be good to know the answers to some of those questions when we're committing such a large portion of the year's budget in the vote that will come on interim supply.

I heard the Deputy Premier talk about the business plans. Well, in Learning I think that every year has been the first year of a three-year plan since I've been in the Legislature, and the same for Children's Services. There doesn't seem to be the kind of continuity from plan to plan that would allow the people scrutinizing the budget and the opposition, in this case, to say: well, yes, interim supply we can go along with because we have the three-year business plan, and we're into the second or third year of that plan right now, and we know what's intended. That's not the case. Every year is the first year, so you don't have that assurance that what you see on paper this year is actually going to be followed through in the second and third years in a number of departments. There's a constant shifting of the performance measures. We've asked year after year for some other measures to be added. We'll see none of that, given what we have before us in interim supply.

The whole argument that this is just to carry on business and that somehow or other we are in favour of holding up payment to public service employees is just one that's very offensive. I think it's an unfair thing to accuse the opposition of because we want to question spending of such large sums of money. Those programs are in place and could have been looked after months ago. There's nothing that they know about those programs today that they didn't know about those programs six, seven months ago in most cases. There'll be some settlements, for sure, that'll change rates, but in the scheme of things the percentage differences will be minimal. So to claim that the questioning is going to hold up or that we would be responsible for holding up their salaries is, as I said, offensive. There's no reason why those programs and the costs involved should be holding up the budget process.

So those are my comments about Learning. I have some specific questions I'd like to ask about some of the other departments, but I'll leave it for now.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

9:20

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my task this evening to introduce interim supply amounts for the Department of Energy totaling some 47 million dollars. The $47 million is essential as it ensures that the process of conducting land sales and our land tenure program continues. It's also critical for the collection of royalties and, of course, continuing the calculation of the average annual price of natural gas. Also, it's a piece that is essential, as well, to ensure that we can continue forward in not only collecting the revenues of royalties for this government but also ensuring that they are deposited into the general revenue plan.

There are no expenses that will be entertained, Mr. Chairman, outside of the business plan that has been tabled for this ministry, and there will be an update business plan come budget day which then tacks on the third year and leaves the previous two years intact. So, certainly, no surprises coming from the Department of Energy.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's reassuring to hear the minister say that there's going to be nothing outside of his business plans that we've seen in the past, and that's very positive. We'll certainly be taking a look at that when they come out next month and compare them and see how accurate that is.

It makes me wonder how much the minister plans to spend in the first quarter of the year working on the climate change issues. If he can share any of that information with us without divulging any budget secrets, even if it's in terms of more or less or an emphasis on whether the dollars spent are on research, operational, or legal kinds of costs – could you do that, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Smith: Actually, that's a good question, Mr. Chairman, because it refers to the climate change initiative, which primarily will be handled through Climate Change Central, also through the Department of Environment.

We'll continue on with our small department that does consultation with First Nations, working with that group.

Internally we're pursuing different strategies for carbon dioxide sequestration, carbon dioxide management. We are experimenting with nitrogen. Nitrogen has many of the properties of CO₂, and it's much cheaper at this stage, so we're going to experiment with putting nitrogen down hole and seeing if it can be used in enhanced oil recovery. As a matter of fact, that's ongoing right now with Talisman in the Turner Valley field. If nitrogen proves to be effective either in enhanced oil recovery or from a storage perspective, it then gives us the capability to explore both CO₂ sequestration and using more and more quantities of CO₂ for enhanced oil recovery as opposed to totally freshwater, for example, or potable water. If we could reduce the water driver behind CO₂, then I think that we can not only provide solutions to climate change, but we can also provide solutions to carbon dioxide management, which is something we're investigating. That is a part of the budget.

As I said, there are certainly no surprises coming forward. It's business as usual with our attention to climate change and our attention to being an appropriate custodian over the revenues that accrue to the people of Alberta via oil and gas royalty collection.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to stand in the House today to speak to the needs of interim supply for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development. Our ministry will require over $91 million to ensure that our operation requirements continue until the budget is approved, and I believe that was explained earlier, also, in the House this evening.

In addition to fish and wildlife, forest land use and resource management, and the public lands program, we are handling all of the preparations to be up and running for the fire season, which is going to, no doubt, commence by April 1 of this year. For instance, $1.3 million in capital interim supply is needed for such things as fire tower upgrades or fire bases that are crucial to the fire season, which of course starts early this spring. Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with the possibility of having to fight fires as early as April 1 if not before, so we definitely need to have the programs in place. We need to have people and contracts in place and ready to go at very short notice.

For the benefit of the opposition, I'd like to explain a bit more in various areas of department responsibility as to why we need to spend the money in the interim that we are asking for. The department does not stop operating. It continues, you know, after April 1. Very little changes in relation to how we operate our department.

A lot of our work, of course, is seasonal. The Alberta forest protection program is very effective in managing wildfires in forest protection areas. In addition, my department, of course, provides aid to the adjacent municipalities and counties, so we have sometimes no control in those when fire starts. Some are man-made, and others are natural, and we have very little control. Alberta forest protection policies, of course, are reducing the number of human-caused fires within the forest protection areas. Despite the population growth and escalating fire start-ups, we've done, I believe, a fairly good job in this, but we need the resources to ensure that we continue operating. Fire-fighting resources, of course, are managed to ensure that wildfire-suppression priorities of human life, communities, waterfowl, soil, natural resources, and infrastructure are met. So we continue to seek new and innovative ways of managing wildfires to benefit all Albertans.

The other area that's critical is the area of fish and wildlife management. Alberta Sustainable Resource Development, of course, manages and allocates and conserves fish and wildlife resources for the benefit and enjoyment of all Albertans. We protect Alberta's fish and wildlife through effective legislation, regulation and enforcement, and new pilot projects even in some areas to ensure that we can be very innovative in how we manage our fisheries resources. We regularly assess the status of fish and wildlife populations, including endangered species and managed species, to ensure that populations are sustainable and sustained not only short term but on the long-term basis. Through regulations, a provincial management plan, and again management programs we oversee recreational hunting, trapping, outfitting and guiding, game farming, and wildlife captivity in Alberta is also maintained. The department administers Alberta's hunting and fishing licensing system for the primary benefit of Albertans and, of course, as part of our sustainable resource management of fish and wildlife resources.

I also wanted to touch on an area very briefly, because I know that the opposition is anxious to ask some questions, no doubt, the area of forest land and resource management. Forest health continues to be important. Alberta's forests are protected from insects, disease, and pests by effective detection and management strategies. Management is a shared responsibility, of course, with other levels of government, municipalities, and also industry, and in some cases with the federal government or federal parks. Forest management planning, harvesting planning, and annual allowable cuts are, of course, part of the role of our department to make sure they're done properly, and the measurements are all in place to ensure that proper operation plans with public input are done. Sustainable Resource Development works very closely also with other departments and industry to ensure that we move into value adding in our forest industry so we can create more jobs and utilize more of the resource for local benefit in Alberta.

In the area of allocation of timber our department allocates timber based on the volume of timber that is determined to be available for harvest in a sustainable way. So what we do is ensure that we monitor very closely when operation plans are put forward so that we know that the annual growth will exceed the annual allowable cut so we can have a sustained resource for a long period of time.

Revenue generation. Of course, timber royalties represent a fair return for Albertans, and they have to be collected on a timely basis. That entails a lot of work too. After all, out of our overall economic diversification plan – agriculture, the oil and gas industry – forestry comes in third and then tourism and science and technology. It is a very important industry. It's about an $8 billion industry and employs over 54,000 people directly and indirectly, and I believe close to 50 communities depend on the forest resource as their major source of revenue for their particular areas, not only revenue for jobs but also for tax base.

The other important area, of course, is the issue of public lands and land disposition. Our goal is efficient management of public lands and to achieve the greatest sustainable benefit – environmental, social, and economic – for all Albertans. Just recently I circulated and I offered to make available also to the Official Opposition and the other opposition members the status of the public land in Alberta. A lot of people do not understand – and there are reasons for that – that a lot of our public land is protected. We have around a hundred million acres of public land in the province; 86 million of that is in the green area, the protected area, and only 375,000 acres are leased to agriculture. So only 1 percent of the green area, of the 86 million acres, is leased to agriculture. The rest is protected, and that's very important for the public to understand. I think we are doing a very good job in protecting that resource both short term and long term. Although lots of times, you know, when you drive around the open areas of Alberta, you swear that there are no trees left, but once you get on a plane and start flying north and along the foothills into the territories, you'll find that most of our province is still covered with healthy trees.

The other one I'd like to touch on, of course, is the white area, which is the farm area. There are about 10 million acres of public land in that particular area, and about 5 million acres are in agricultural leases for various uses. So in the white area about 50 percent of that land is leased.

I think it's good for people to understand that we do manage our wildlife. The other one, of course, that is very important is the area of management of some of our wildlife. The most sensitive one right now, of course, in addition to the walleye is the grizzly bear, because there are concerns by some public members mainly in urban areas, not as much from the rural, northern, native communities, where people still trap, still live off the land. In relation to the management of grizzly bears, the challenge is that we have to ensure that we have a sustained population. From all indications since 1987 the grizzly bear population, we feel, has increased by about 200. It could run anywhere from 800 to 1,000 grizzly bears in Alberta.

This year, of course, because the endangered species committee had recommended to seriously consider putting the grizzly bear under endangered species legislation, we've taken, I think, a sensible, commonsense approach to try and work towards better management and sustainability of our grizzly bears. We've set up and asked for a recovery team. We have reduced hunting. In fact, we are in the process of increasing fines or recommending through the process an increase in fines for poaching because that is one problem. I feel the way to do it is to make sure that there's a stiff penalty out there for poaching.

The other thing I've circulated to our caucus members, and I will provide the same information to the Official Opposition and the second opposition – we've reduced, actually, the hunting. There are about 4,000 applications each year. In 2002 we allowed 129 licences, but normally what's taken is about 15 annually out of that. This year, the 2003 season, we'll reduce that by 20 to 25 percent; it's down to 100. But in addition to reducing it by 20, 25 percent, we've also changed the areas of hunting. For an example, in the north there is a more sparse population of animals, less economic activity, less people activity, less roads and stuff. We will continue in zone 1, for an example, a hunt of 30. This year again we're going to keep it at 30. But in the sensitive south areas we've dropped it to almost zero in some cases, and we'll continue managing that very effectively and monitoring it.

I noticed in an article that came out – and I believe it was in either the Edmonton Journal or the Edmonton Sun just yesterday – that our neighbour just west of us here, the next province, has continued to allow hunting. They are taking, I believe, 200 animals per year there, and they feel it's sustainable, so I'm going to start working very closely with them because animals don't know the boundary between B.C. and Alberta. They could move back and forth. So we'll monitor it very closely and gather the information required to ensure that we do proper management of our wildlife species.

The other area, of course, is the recent announcement in the fisheries, the overall rationalization of sport and commercial fisheries in Alberta. One of the most challenging areas, I believe, that the department has in addition to the grizzly bear, because of the economic growth in Alberta, is the demand for increased fishing. It's very critical, so we have to manage it very carefully. We did open up more lakes for walleye fishing, and the detailed information, of course, is provided to all government members and also the opposition in relation to what lakes are open and how many fish they can keep and stuff like that. So we are trying very hard as a department to manage the resources out there and ensure that Albertans benefit from those resources not only in the short term but also on a long-term basis.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll sit down. Hopefully, they may have some questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We certainly appreciate the level of detail we got from this minister and also the openness and sharing of information that typifies our working relationship here in the Legislature. We're happy to accept all the information that he is willing to share with us and certainly appreciate that offer. It helps our understanding.

It's quite often that I ask a grizzly bear question in this Assembly, but we, too, have been closely monitoring the situation, and it looks like overall the management of that species has been progressing in a positive fashion, which is a change from where we were six to eight years before in the Legislature. So there won't be a bear question this spring, I don't think.

We still have some concerns over fish, and we'll be continuing to pursue that. We want decisions made on a science basis and look to see some progress in that area.

I'd just like to talk about the way the requests for money have come from Sustainable Resource Development. We would have liked to have seen a little more detail in terms of areas that the money was specifically requested for. But in what we did get, could we get an answer to what the capital investment money is for? It looks to me like it's a little less than half of what you got for last year, so if this is a quarter of the year's request and it's half the money that you got for the whole of last year, then that's a pretty significant increase, so we'd like to know what that is for.

Could we get some information on what you're budgeting for the fires this year and whether that's an increase over last year? Everything I've heard so far looks like it could be a worse year, so we would hope that the numbers would be as accurate as they could be so that you don't come back looking for lots of money in supplementary supply. You will have to, probably, anyway to some extent, given what happens with fire seasons, but if we could have some information on that, it would be helpful.

We see before us in this Assembly a new bill talking about fire management strategies in terms of who is going to be responsible and who is going to pay for fires. I'm assuming that the responsibility for monitoring and enforcing that law will come to your department. If so, do you have some dollars budgeted for that in the first quarter? Prosecutions, I'm sure, will be handed over to other departments, but definitely there's got to be some investigating done, so who does that is my question. Speaking of investigating, for us it's always been a real concern that in this department you don't have enough money for enforcement and monitoring what goes out in terms of manpower. So do we see somewhat of an increase there? Generally, overall do you see an increase or a decrease in your projection for moneys for this year? This is one department that we feel has been chronically underfunded and would like to make a case for seeing more dollars there.

Thanks for the information that you did give us on forest protection, which is, of course, one of your core businesses, and the forest, land, and resource management. The more information we have, the fewer questions we have in the Assembly, so I think that that sometimes can be beneficial. It certainly is to us when we have so many different portfolios that we can ask questions on. Can you tell us what's happening in the forest, land, and resource management in terms of recreational uses and if there's any specific focus on that for dollars coming this spring?

The fish and wildlife management, of course, is always a big issue. We've had quite a few more concerns this year about the wildlife management with regard to the various hunts and how licences are applied for and how they're advertised, and things of that nature. So it looks like a review of that process could be necessary, and I'm wondering if you plan to undertake that in this coming year, particularly as it applies to this request for dollars within the first quarter.

The minister talked earlier this week about what's happening with recreational fishing in the province when the lakes are opening up. We have some reservations about that and wonder if you're actually devoting enough resources in this first quarter to studying that. So if we could hear about that.

With the new bill that we're seeing, Bill 16, which talks about land use dispositions, how much responsibility will there be in Sustainable Resource Development for that? It would be helpful to know.

With regard to cabins we've had some requests from trappers who – I think it must be because it's been such a long and cold winter – in some years in the past believe that they've had access to cabins in the bush from your department. It seems like this year that access to use those cabins when they're out on their traplines has been denied, so we would like the minister to take a look at this policy. It seems to me that if those cabins are out there in the bush and given the decreasing numbers of staff you have out there each year for enforcement and monitoring, it could be beneficial to have these people use those cabins and then bring back a report to you in terms of the condition and any repairs needed, and generally having someone there to open it up, take a look, get rid of the varmints, clean it up a little bit can't be a bad idea. I'm sure that there can be some joint use agreements that occur out there that would be beneficial. It seems to be a good use of a provincial resource, and I'm hoping that the minister will take a look at that over the coming year and that we may see some changes.

Another issue that we might actually be pursuing in question period, depending on the answers we get, is changes happening in areas surrounding municipalities with regard to crossbow hunting. Crossbow hunting is, as I understand it, quite different from bow and arrow hunting, and it seems to me that people who use crossbows are not really much different from those who use guns. It seems to me that having restricted access to use crossbows for hunting purposes around largely populated areas is a good idea. We recently got some information indicating that you're looking at opening up the area just around Edmonton to crossbows, so if you could share that information with us, it may prevent us from having to pursue the issue in question period.

I think, given the time, that's the end of my questions on this department at this point. Perhaps we're going to hear from the leader of the ND opposition and his comments on the budget now, if that's appropriate.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development wants to respond?

Mr. Cardinal: Briefly. I'll answer some of the questions. If I don't answer some, we'll look at the Hansard and pass on the information.

In relation to the fisheries we do use scientists, and we're carefully evaluating the Calling Lake project, for example, and we do use scientific information. It's a five-year pilot project, so we should have a report available within the next month or two that you can have access to.

In relation to capital investment some of the stuff we require, of course, is leasing of planes, upgrading towers and upgrading communications equipment, et cetera, in relation to us preparing for the firefighting season. We also have about 38 contracts from First Nations that we require to put in place. It's capital because it's leases of equipment, leases of buses, vehicles, water trucks, et cetera. So that is where I require the capital dollars.

The fire budget itself is an interesting one because the Auditor General has also recommended that we should increase our base budget. Because of the dry weather we've had for a number of years, the five-year average for expenditures on fire is now over $200 million. I think it's $202 million a year, and our base budget is, of course, under a hundred million, so it's considerably lower. We are monitoring that very closely. I've in fact suggested to the department to start looking at maybe trying to increase our budget next year and ensure that we have, you know, proper money in place in order that the job is done.

The cabin you were talking about. I'm reviewing that particular situation right now. What I am looking at is the public liability. You know, what if somebody burns to death in a cabin like that or if somebody breaks a leg or dies out there, alone in the cold weather? We need to look at the public liability. I'm not saying that we're not going to do it. I'm saying let's use some common sense. If the public liability is there and covered already by insurance, then why can't we allow the person to use the cabin? So we are definitely looking at that.

The area of the crossbow. I am coming up with a draft strategy on the area of deer and moose and the seasons, the allocations and stuff. If you contact my office tomorrow, we can probably provide you a draft of what we are planning. It's just in the final stages, and this will come into effect, of course, next September, next hunting season. I think you'll like it. It's a good plan. In fact, I had asked my department to share it with you, but I don't believe it's been shared completely with all our caucus members yet. That's normally the first step. So I'll leave it at that because of the time. If we didn't, you know, answer some questions, we'll look at Hansard and pick them up.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and ask some general questions first about the interim supply estimates for fiscal 2003-2004. It's highly unusual to see this kind of request come before the Legislature in the month of March. I'm just finishing six years – I think that was yesterday – since I first got elected, and this is the first time in my six years and the beginning of the seventh that I see this very unusual request for interim supply estimates come before the House to address the government expenditures in the coming fiscal year, the next fiscal year. That's 2003-2004. Highly unusual. This looks like a government by paralysis, a government by inaction, a government by utter confusion and failure to develop clear estimates of what kinds of revenues there are, what kinds of expenditures are planned, and how taxpayers' money is going to be used.

The total request for these interim supply estimates comes to a little over $5.9 billion in this document. Now, this is for two and a half months, from April 1 to June 15, less than three months of the 12-month period of the next fiscal year. If you extrapolate the total size of the budget based on the request made for the first two and a half months of this year, it looks like the next budget will be at least $26 billion or maybe more. I want to know if this is more or less an appropriate estimate of the overall size of the next budget.

The first question that I have is: why this highly unusual step by this government to ask for next year's budget in the estimates before the end of this current fiscal? Normally what's been the case is we have had the budget presented to this Assembly during the month of March every year. [interjection] True, but we have had more information. Even when the budget comes before us, there's at least more information on what all these sums are about, what all this money is for. There's hardly any information here for me to be able to say yes or no to this request because there is not enough information here.

So my first question is: why this unusual step in the first place? Secondly—three questions; okay?—since this two-and-a-half-month period that's covered by this interim supply will cost us close to $6 billion, is it then appropriate to extrapolate based on this number that the total budget for the next 12 months, or the next fiscal, will be over $25 billion or so? Thirdly, how do I determine whether or not to support this request when there is no information and no specifics about the moneys that are being asked for?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have the opportunity to provide some information with respect to the estimates relative to the Department of Justice, Department of Children's Services, and the Department of Infrastructure. I think that in view of the clock we probably won't be able to get into depth on all of those items tonight, but I will give a brief start on that.

The hon. leader of the third party, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, referred in his remarks several times to the unusual step of interim supply, and I think that other than perhaps one year—and I could stand to be corrected on it, but I do take a lead from the earlier remarks of the Deputy Premier, who has had some degree of experience in this House—interim supply is not an unusual experience in this House but rather something that we've done most years. One should be prudent and cautious in government and make sure that one doesn't run out of supply, so it's prudent to bring in interim supply, even though one is bringing in a budget perhaps even in March, so that you can pay your bills and you can pay your staff come April 1. It's not an unusual circumstance either in the Legislature of Alberta or in any other Legislatures in this country or, for that matter, from time to time in other democratic jurisdictions. I can recall occasions when the President of the United States asked for interim supply because the budget was still being debated down there.

So it's not at all an unusual circumstance to have interim supply. The budget date has been announced as April 8. The rationale for having the budget on April 8, I think I mentioned earlier this evening, comes from a number of circumstances. There's certainly been a great deal of volatility this spring with respect to the energy sector and energy supply issues, and being able to do an appropriate estimate of revenue is important, not just the revenue from our oil and gas sector but revenue from the income tax sector. It's helpful to have a good handle on what the results are projected to be from the previous year to project it into next year. There is also, of course, the fact of the impact that the strong economic performance in this province has on the CHST, the transfer payments from the federal government. As members of this House will know, the stronger our economy is and the better the government does in terms of its revenue, the less we receive through the CHST, and that certainly has strong budget implications for us. I believe the adjustment during the last budget year was somewhat in excess of $150 million downward in terms of the transfer payments with CHST. All of those issues are volatile in this particular time frame, and it's helpful to have a better grasp of those before bringing a budget to the table. In addition, as I mentioned earlier in comments in the House, there's a bill that was brought forward to the House in order to enable the structure for this year's budget, and it was prudent to plan the budget to come in after the legislation approving the structure, so it was necessary to deal with the budget on a later time frame.

Of course, the impact of the federal budget and the knowledge we had relatively early this year that there was going to be a significant issue with respect to health care funding. We weren't provided with information with respect to how significant and actually had to wait until the federal budget came out to get any real numbers and, even at that, some time after that to figure out what those numbers actually meant in terms of an impact for an Alberta budget. So I think it was prudent this year to wait to see what some of those numbers were and to do a proper set of business plans with proper projections rather than to bring in a budget and then come back to make significant adjustments early in the process.

As all members know, Alberta has one of the most open and transparent budgeting processes of any democratic government, reporting quarterly and making adjustments quarterly and reporting to the public exactly what's happening. It behooves us to try and be as close to reality as possible in putting together a budget. So this year it was prudent in our view to hold off the finalization of the budget until we'd seen some of those aspects get to the extent that that was possible.

Again, interim supply is not an unusual step, not an unusual occurrence in this province or in any other jurisdiction to make sure that while one goes through the proper measured and thorough budget debate that's allowed in our jurisdiction.

Dr. Pannu: In the absence of a budget before us.

Mr. Hancock: Well, the budget will be before us shortly, but it's not that difficult to assume that there are going to be ongoing expenses of government and to assume that those ongoing expenses will be at least somewhat similar to those that are shown in the three-year business plans that were tabled last year and the adjustments that were made over the course of the year. In planning forward for interim supply, one can take some instruction from those numbers.

So to the question of why this unusual step the answer really is that it isn't an unusual step. It's quite normal to continue with supply while you're debating the budget and bringing the budget forward for a thorough and complete analysis and review by the Legislature, as I'm sure we can anticipate during the month of April and into the month of May in this year.

There have been a number of comments tonight about the time frame, and although the time frame is set out in the interim supply document as being from April 1 to a date certain—I believe June 15 is set out—really you're voting interim supply in an amount, not in a time frame. The estimate of the amount of interim supply is roughly the first quarter of the year, but interim supply is an amount of money, and therefore it's voted until it runs out. It becomes the government's object and obligation to make sure that the budget is brought in before interim supply runs out.

However, to get to your two and a half month process and extrapolation, obviously you can't extrapolate the two and a half months to the full year. Obviously the two and a half months is an estimate based on a number of factors, one being supply of normal course of business over a quarter. In that normal course of business over a quarter there are some grants that are paid early in the year; there are some expenses which are incurred early in the year. So you can't assume that the dollar amount is going to match the full quarter.

I'm glad you asked the question: how does one vote for interim supply in this amount without more information? I think this process really could be a very informative process, where questions delving into specific areas or requesting specific pieces of information could be brought to the table. It's really a free opportunity, if you will, to examine areas that one wants to find out information about rather than looking at it as being the whole accountability section in two days for a quarter of the government's budget. Obviously it's not the complete accountability session for the government's budget. That comes through the 20-day process of Committee of Supply under the regular budget and the debate on the appropriation bill at that point in time. Obviously two days is not going to be sufficient to go through in any great sense of detail the money that's being asked for in interim supply, nor was that ever really the intention of an interim supply motion. An interim supply motion is obvious in its intent, and that is to continue to fuel the government so that it continues to run in its normal course until the budget can be fully brought in and debated within an appropriate time frame.

So I hope that answers the hon. member's questions.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, you're rising on a point of order?

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Ms Carlson: I am. Under Standing Order 23(h),(i),(j) the minister was making allegations that some of his ministers would in fact answer questions, and they wouldn't.

Mr. Hancock: That's not a point of order, Mr. Chairman. That's a very specious method of getting a comment on the table without having had any other particular opportunity to do it. She could raise those questions at any other time in Committee of Supply.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has risen on a point of order on 23(h),(i),(j). However, I'd like to point members to Standing Order 58(9), which refers to the supplementary estimates. There is no provision therein that there is compulsion on any member to stand up and ask a question, nor is there a compulsion on any member to stand up and answer the question. So, quite frankly, there is no point of order on this particular section.

Hon. Government House Leader, you may proceed.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it was clear to all that the hon. member merely wanted to make a statement and found the point of order as a way of getting that on the record, which I understand fully.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hancock: In any event, at this point in time, it being past the hour of 10 o'clock, I would move that the Committee of Supply rise, report progress, and beg leave to sit again.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 13, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/13

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Thy guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly someone who really needs no introduction. Mr. Jack Ady is with us today. He sat in this Assembly as an elected Member for Cardston-Chief Mountain for three terms. During that time he was my MLA, and I can tell you and the members that he was considered by his constituents to be a very, very good MLA. I'm pleased that he's here today, and on behalf of this Assembly I would like to extend our thanks to him for the service he's rendered to this Assembly and to Alberta and to his community. He's in your gallery. I would invite Mr. Jack Ady to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to be able to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly four guests that are in the members' gallery today. The first and most important, of course, is Abigail, who is just a little girl but a very, very special little girl. She happens to be the daughter of Jennifer. She is sitting on her mom's knee up there. They happen to be the wife and daughter of Frank Ostlinger, who is a member of our government members' research staff, who originally came to us from Sweden, spent some time in the United States, and decided that he wanted to learn more about political things between Canada and the U.S., came up here and took his political science degree, also went on and took information systems and libraries. He's got his masters in that. We ended up with him as one of our incredibly talented research staff, just a huge addition to us.

But the real reason that the three of them are here today, Mr. Speaker, is the fourth guest that's with them, who is Sven – these are all Ostlinger family – and Sven is from Sweden. He originally was a marine with Sweden, later became a high school teacher, decided that he'd not had quite enough of the military and applied through the United Nations to become a member of the peacekeeping forces. So he's an encryption specialist and a sergeant now with the United Nations. He's stationed – and I'll probably say this wrong – at Prizren, Kosovo, at Camp Victoria, where he serves now. He's on leave and came to visit his brother and family for two weeks. I would ask them to please rise in our gallery, and we could all give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you three different groups. The first group is 33 students who are here today as participants in Mr. Speaker's MLA-for-a-Day program. They've spent time at their member's office and with you in the Chamber, and they will receive a tour and briefings on the constituent elements of this House later this afternoon. This program will be run again on Thursday, April 10. The ultimate aim of the day's activities is to further develop the interest and understanding of our parliamentary system among our student guests. Our student shadow colleagues are seated in both galleries, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is a group of students from Edison school, just outside of Okotoks. They're great students. There are about 25 students and parents with teachers Joseph Smith and Jennifer Harriman and parents Mike Farrier, Stephanie Orr, Krista Smith, Blair Murray, Nigel Waugh, Alnoor Rana, Brad Cennon, and Brent Spice. I'd ask those students to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly. They're over there.

My third introduction, Mr. Speaker, is on your behalf. I'd like to introduce, again, to you and through you to all the hon. members of the Assembly Mr. Brad Watson, town manager of the town of Swan Hills. He's accompanied today by his wife, Louise Watson, and their daughter Ellie Watson. They're seated in your gallery this afternoon, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you a very special guest sitting in your gallery. My sister Sheilagh Ross and her family from Camrose are visiting us today. Aside from the obvious reasons, this is a remarkable family. They are. My goddaughter Jennifer underwent a liver transplant 10 years ago and is now the longest surviving liver transplant patient in Canada. To honour that remarkable journey, my two nephews, Mike and Tim, who tower over me at six foot six and six foot five respectively, skated across Canada to raise awareness for organ donation. The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose will be doing a member's statement later about that, but I would like you to welcome my family to your gallery and give them the warm welcome and the honour they deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of people whom I had the pleasure of meeting with today to discuss issues of concern in our community. Mr. Randy Atkinson, Mr. Murray Dorin, Mr. Ramsey Mackinnon, Mr. Wynn Payne, Mr. Ted Shields, Mr. James Spalding, Blaise Szekely are all seated in the members' gallery, and I'll ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you it gives me great pleasure to welcome five dedicated and wonderful University of Calgary students to our Assembly this afternoon. I'd like to ask each of them to rise as I call their name: Jennifer Banks, Connie Bird, Kathleen White, Kent Saga, Layne Douglas. They're all social work students at the University of Calgary, and they're all stopping in to see the excitement of the Legislature on the way to the Alberta Association of Social Workers conference in Edmonton this weekend. Two of these students, Ms Banks and Ms Bird, call the constituency of Calgary-Bow home; however, I would like to wish each and every one of them the best of success as they begin their careers as social workers here in Alberta.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, the daughter-in-law of Mr. Jack Ady.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. The favourite daughter-in-law. It's on the record. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As you know, I have 25,000 students in my constituency, but rarely do they get to come up here. It's only the second time in the two years I've served. I'm proud to be able to introduce them today from Trinity Christian school and the parents. Their teacher is Mr. George Graffunder, and the parents that were brave enough to travel that far with them: Eileen Gaetz, Mary Zwingli, Monique Evans, Hazel Gunn, Linda Thiessen, Jayne Barnett, Jayne Walker, Angela Rankel, Charlotte Loeppky, Kathleen Lefevre, and Scott Dykes. I'd ask that they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

1:40head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government will stop at nothing to get permission from Albertans to use the heritage fund. Today this government claimed that a nonscientific survey will provide direction for the future of the heritage fund, a fund that all Albertans hold dear. Despite the existence of scientific proof that Albertans want their heritage fund to remain an endowment fund, this government has left the door open to raiding the heritage fund. My question is to the Premier. Will you honour your pledge made to Albertans in 1993 when you said, and I quote, this is something that's so important it ought to go to a referendum, close quote, and hold a referendum before introducing any changes in the way the heritage fund is managed?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would like to set the record straight. First of all, the Minister of Revenue set out to consult the public as to what they would like to see done with the heritage savings trust fund. All he did today was release the results of that survey. There is no action being contemplated by this government vis-à-vis the fund because, ostensibly, people said, "Leave the fund alone," albeit the survey said by 51 percent, a very, very slim majority, that a portion of the fund should be used to pay down the debt. Well, some time ago we rejected that idea and introduced, instead, a new fiscal policy, which will be outlined in detail in conjunction with the budget and the business plans.

So this hon. member is getting way, way ahead of himself, but not surprising for political reasons to instill fear, to instill anxiety, to throw out falsehoods and assumptions and speculation to get people riled up. That's what it's all about. It's not about what we're going to do or what we're contemplating or what we might contemplate relative to the heritage savings trust fund. But I can say once again that the fund as it now sits will stay the way it is today.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: so there's no basis to the Minister of Revenue's comments this morning when he said that in the next year's budget, 2004-05, you will be looking at the possibility of using the heritage fund to pay down the debt?

Mr. Klein: I don't know what the hon. member said. You know, he can say that anything is possible because nothing is carved in stone. Nothing is certain. But I can tell you that as of today, this very moment, nothing is contemplated relative to the fund. But with respect to what the minister said or did not say, why not ask the minister? I'll have him respond.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans value – and we've always known this – the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, and I do too. This question was to allow Albertans to provide some feedback about how they view it could best serve us in the future. It was always about: how can this fund best serve Albertans today and forever? So in that respect the endowment portion is and has been our policy and will continue to frame the primary policy of this government.

Now, there was one question related to the debt repayment. As was mentioned, 51 percent of Albertans did say that they would support using the fund. We released the results today. But it is important to ask Albertans, and we're pleased to be able to get a response from those types of consultations. It is not in our budget contemplation this year, but we clearly will come back and revisit making sure this fund is structured properly for even those kinds of questions but at a future date. It was just part of the consultation we've been involved with.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Revenue: you just said "the endowment portion" of the heritage fund. Since when has this fund been divided up into a series of things. It is all an endowment in the minds of Albertans. Why are you changing it by making comments like that?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This fund has served Albertans very well for a variety of reasons over its 26-year history. It was originally created as a multipurpose fund for many of its years of history. In the last number of years our priority has been to repay the debt. We have used the income to help support programs of the government, over $25 billion of income over the life of that fund. That income has helped benefit health and education, repayment of debt. It benefits Albertans continually. In that respect, it was very important to us to help clarify even the misconstrued comments at times – is it a rainy day fund? – or, otherwise, to get a clearer focus. Yes, it is an endowment fund, and I support that.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Revenue: if you wanted to clarify Albertans' perspective on what that fund should be used for, why didn't you do a scientifically based consultation with Albertans rather than a voluntary response as a form of consultation?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we are pleased with the opportunity to consult with Albertans and ask Albertans. This survey was not a survey in the sense of only limiting it to a few randomly selected people to participate. It was designed to allow all Albertans to have a voice on it. Over 77,000 people responded to it, a tremendous response from Albertans.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Minister of Finance. The process doesn't give any statistical significance to that kind of a survey. How can you judge policy changes on a survey that has no scientific statistical analysis basis?

The Speaker: I take it that question was to the Minister of Revenue.

Dr. Nicol: The Minister of Revenue, yes.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, as I mentioned earlier, was the release of the survey. There were no policy announcements, no changes contemplated in this budget, but it is part of the consultation to which we are listening, and we will follow up on it.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Revenue: since there's no scientific basis for that survey, why don't you just throw it out?

Mr. Melchin: Over 77,000 people felt it important enough to respond. That's a very high response and even statistically valid with respect to a representative sample. When you break it down geographically among all the regions of Alberta, results were similar, and it does have a high confidence level, even to that of exceeding a poll.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Natural Gas Rebates

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government threw millions of dollars around in energy rebates during the last election to hide the true cost of energy deregulation from Albertans before they voted. After the election this government promised in the throne speech that it would tap its substantial energy riches to shield consumers whenever natural gas prices get abnormally high. My first question is to the Premier. Given that after the last election the Premier stated that if we are facing something like $9 or $10 per gigajoule, that is abnormally high, why is your government so mean now when the average monthly price that Albertans are paying is over $9? Why was that true then and is not true now?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, what we have here is the re-re-rebate. You know, I've answered the question so many times in this Legislature. What we said at the time – and there was no program in place other than an ad hoc program to shield consumers. By the way, the Liberals never talk about that. They never talk about that in positive terms and the benefit to Albertans at that particular time, that along with the electricity rebates. They never mention also that they were part of the debate that led to the legislation and never opposed the legislation that went into place, setting up a program to provide certainty relative to rebates. They never ever say that. They never ever say that they were part of the debate and did not oppose the legislation. What they are doing now is pure, unadulterated, down-low politics. Nothing more; nothing less. They were there for the debate.

Dr. Nicol: Where were the regulations?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, they talk about the regulations. At that particular time – and I'd like to go back to Hansard – I don't recall any of them getting up and saying: where are the regulations; how is this going to work? [interjections] Oh, now they complain. Now they complain because it's politically expedient; the temperatures are cold. It's politically expedient for them to do it. When the temperature warms up, then they will cool on this particular issue, and they'll go on to something else, whatever is politically expedient at that particular time, whatever is negative. Whatever they can tell Albertans about what is wrong with this province, they will capture the moment and go out and spread their negativity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the Premier stated in April 2001 that $9 to $10 a gigajoule for natural gas was abnormally high, what has made your government change its mind and made you break your promise? Is the orange and blue sweater going to be your legacy to this province?

Mr. Klein: The orange and blue sweater, Mr. Speaker? Orange and blue are great colours.

I'm just reading here the natural gas prices 2000 to present: from April $3.10, May $3.35, June $4.33, July $4.42, August $3.93, September $4.66, October $5.53, November $5.79, December $8.28, January $11.21, February $8.05, and March $6.48, Mr. Speaker. Then it started to come down. We had a program in place at that particular time which was ad hoc because we didn't have the room to introduce legislation. As a matter of fact, the Liberals were out there saying: what this government needs is legislation to bring in a sustainable long-term program. We did it. We brought it in. They debated it. They didn't oppose it at all, and now they're complaining about it. But the facts clearly show that when the rebate program was introduced, gas had reached an all-time high, and it has not reached that level since.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that in April 2001 you said that if natural gas was between $9 and $10 a gigajoule – and that was an admittance that it was an abnormally high price – you would provide rebates, where are those rebates in the emergency that many Albertans are now facing? Where's the money?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, right now we go to two thousand and . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Broken promise.

Mr. Klein: Do you want to hear the information?

The Speaker: I do, and that's why I recognized the responder.

Mr. Klein: Well, they don't want to hear the information, obviously, because these are the facts.

Reference price natural gas 2001-2002: April $6.59, May $5.74, June $4.44, July $3.75, August $3.53, September $2.76, October $2.40, November $3.33, December $3.20. We're into '02: January $3.17, February $2.71, March $3.23, April $3.91, May $3.91, June $3.54, July $3.17, August $2.93, September $3.51, October $4.27, November $4.85, December $4.94. January no figures, no figures, and no figures up to March, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, if you take those averages, if you take the 12 – how thick are they to realize that there are four seasons usually in this province? There is winter, spring, summer, and fall. They only allude to summer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Health Care Workers' Collective Bargaining

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This week at the request of health employers the government moved to deny internationally recognized employment rights to health care workers and chose to shuffle them around without any promise that their service or seniority would be protected. The government did the bidding of the employers in this case but completely blindsided the employees. We have a minister of human resources who sides with business over injured workers, the WCB over firefighters, and now regional health authorities over nurses and other health care workers. To the minister: why has the minister bent over backwards to let employers write their own ticket yet failed completely to consult with thousands of workers or their unions in matters of direct concern to them?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I might remind the hon. member that with the bill that was introduced the other day, we're really talking about a platform for collective bargaining going forward. Unions will be in place. There will be collective agreements that will be in place. It's just that we've enabled a much more streamlined position in terms of nine employers trying to deal with perhaps over 400 collective agreements, that this ultimately and finally would be 36 in number.

I might add to the comments on his preamble that the particular concerns he was expressing are not really labour code activities. They're more in line with the collective bargaining that would go on between two parties, and of course that will continue to go on. That hasn't been touched.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this minister seems to value the input of employers more than that of employees, since he didn't consult with them at all, how does he define the concept of balance in labour relations?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I've had the opportunity a number of times to speak publicly regarding this particular issue, and I think that the message is coming through to Albertans, at least I hope it is, that this was all about the delivery of health care. There's reform that's taking place here in Alberta that we believe will lead to better access to health care, lead to better delivery of the health care once a patient is in the system. So we have focused entirely on that, and I think that there's a greater good here that has been met and hopefully will be achieved.

As far as balance, we still have an incredibly good Labour Relations Code in this province, and we are providing a structure for health care bargaining similar to having had to provide a structure in the past for construction bargaining, for an example. So I think that in this particular case the government has upheld its responsibility, and we look forward to the two parties moving forward, then, from this point on in a more streamlined and hopefully a more beneficial manner.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, why is it that this government uses a heavy hand – and those are the minister's own words – against its employees but a wet noodle against employers; for example, the Edmonton Economic Development Authority, which repeatedly violated Alberta labour laws?

Mr. Dunford: I guess we managed to connect some dots there.

What we, of course, do on a daily basis, Mr. Speaker, is deal with the issues that are in front of us. Again I want to repeat that this was an activity that the whole motivation for has been in the interests of the delivery of health care. That was the reason for it then, it's the reason for it today, and it'll be the reason for it tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chairman of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee I read with interest the survey results that the Minister of Revenue released this morning. They show that Albertans value the fund and are not keen to spend it. I have one question to the Minister of Revenue. To assist the all-party committee that I chair, to help us with our deliberations in our meetings, what are some of the options that are being considered?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:00

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to first say, with respect to the survey, that the heritage fund has always been known and valued, that it is an icon for Albertans. They do value it. In our approach to it all of the questions of the survey were preambled by: its uses ought to be allowed to be replenished and grow over time. That was the preface, that was the background to the survey. In that respect, with the options being reviewed, do we review things like the endowment fund? What does that mean, an endowment fund, and how is that properly structured so that it is clear to Albertans what that means and you can be clear on that? So that's paramount. That is the most supported idea, and we will bring that clarity back in further discussion. But this is a fund here to stay.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Student Loan Program

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Cuts and chronic underfunding characterize postsecondary school finance in Alberta. The students in the gallery today will be under constant pressure to pay higher tuition, higher fees, and more for campus services. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How will students at the University of Calgary next year pay for housing when a one-bedroom campus apartment costs $726 and the student loan allowance is $315?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I cannot comment specifically on what the rental rates are in Calgary, but what I will say is that the student loan limit for students this year will be around $10,200 to $10,400 per year. That means that on a four-year degree they will be able to get around $42,000. The interesting part is that they will have to pay back 20,000 of those dollars. The other roughly $22,000 will be picked up by the provincial government.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, which is really important, as well, is that in the upcoming year we anticipate that there will be 46,400 students who will receive student loans, for a value of $417 million in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: does the government see any relationship between rising student costs and the 1,500 people being fed at the U of A's food bank each year?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I have looked at a lot since becoming minister has been the student loan program, and over that time we have increased the student loan program by about 45 to 50 percent. It's something that I feel very strongly about. We have also increased quite dramatically the student awards, such as the Jason Lang scholarships, numerous other scholarships. Jason Lang scholarships, by the way, are to the tune of around $5 million or $6 million a year, are regardless of financial need, are there for performance. We have seen a tremendous amount of dollars being put into that. The Rutherford scholarships, for example, are something else that this government does. I believe, off the top of my head, that they're around $35 million or $40 million a year.

So there is a huge amount of dollars that are going in. Students, for example, now pay in tuition an average of about 25 percent of the cost of their actual education. Seventy-five percent is being borne by the government and other sources. So we're seeing a huge amount of dollars go into postsecondary education. In saying that, Mr. Speaker, I will say that it's money extremely well spent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: what adjustment will the government make in the loans program to help students deal with skyrocketing utility costs?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we tend to work on in the student loan program is the overall loan limit, and each and every year we look at the overall loan limit and how we can increase it. This year in the upcoming budget you will see what is going to happen. I think people will be reasonably happy. But, again, what I will say – and I really must reiterate this – is that Alberta has by far the best student loan program in Canada. Talk to any of the student groups; they will agree with that. It's something that we're very proud of: $417 million goes out each year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Utility Costs for Low-income Albertans

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Mr. Minister, I've continued to hear from constituents who are still worried that they won't be able to pay their utility bills, so I'd like some further clarification on this. What is your department doing to help low-income Albertans who don't have the money to pay their bills?

Mr. Dunford: Actually, Mr. Speaker, we will help Albertans who do not have the resources to pay these utility bills. We have an emergency assistance program, that we've used now for a number of seasons, under our supports for independence program, but in answering the hon. member, it's very, very important that Albertans understand that in order to be able to access this particular assistance, there is a screening process that they're going to have to go through. First of all, they will have had to have received a disconnect notice. Through examination and through revealing of their particular situation, they will have to show clearly that they have no other choice, that they have no other method of being able to pay and, I guess, more importantly, as well that they can show they are not eligible for any other types of assistance. So if you or any member here in the House have constituents that are in that situation, they must apply in person to a Human Resources and Employment office, and then we'll try to help as best we can.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. How much money will your department provide to people who have no other way of paying their utility bills?

Mr. Dunford: Well, of course, we don't have just a sum that's given to everyone. We would want to examine each of the situations on a case-by-case basis, but we have a policy in place that there could be up to a thousand dollars for a circumstance, that could be provided for utility arrears or reconnection or perhaps even if there are some deposit fees that would come into place. Now, technically, under our policy there might be an opportunity for a person, you know, in really dire situations to perhaps use this more than once, but that would be a very exceptional situation, I'm afraid.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. Mr. Minister, you haven't mentioned people on AISH. Does this include people who are on AISH?

Mr. Dunford: Well, it can. While AISH is a stand-alone program, we can move people off AISH on a temporary basis into our supports for independence program and perhaps, then, look after them that way. But in specific answer to your question, AISH in and of itself does not have this type of assistance available, so they'd have to move onto our SFI program.

Physiotherapy Programs

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, every Thursday the Alberta Liberals will ask a question that members of the public have asked us to pose. Members of the public can send us their questions by phoning our office or visiting our web site at www.altaliberals.ab.ca. Today's question comes from an Albertan very concerned regarding funding and operation of physiotherapy programs in Alberta, so my questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the Expert Advisory Panel to Review Publicly Funded Health Services has already reported to the minister, when can Albertans expect an answer as to what is going to happen with public funding for physiotherapy?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, my expectation is that government will have a response to the report tabled by the expert panel, headed by Dr. Bob Westbury, sometime in the next three or four weeks, and the public will certainly be made aware of the response that we have once government has had the opportunity to review, digest, and make decisions on those recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Given that there are no requirements that community rehabilitation funding provided to RHAs actually goes to community rehabilitation programs, how does the minister ensure that Albertans get the physiotherapy service they need?

2:10

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we do rely upon regional health authorities to establish priorities for the delivery of health services within their particular regions, so we would expect that if physiotherapy is a needed area within a regional health authority's boundaries, that need would be made known to the people who run our system in those areas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Given that the current community rehabilitation program is widely regarded in the profession as complex, confusing, and perceived by many as being unfair, what is the minister going to do to fix the system?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we have asked this expert panel to provide for us their best advice on how to resolve some of these issues as to how we get effective – cost-effective and physically effective – treatment to individuals who require it. It is a complex area, but they have been charged with the responsibility of trying to sort through some of these complexities and look at evidence-based decision-making for the purposes of making policy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Calgary Consolidated Courthouse

Ms Graham: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As someone who has advocated for a consolidated courthouse in Calgary since my election some six years ago, I was very pleased to see that government had initiated a process last summer that would see a new Calgary courthouse built. Since then, I understand that three developers have been chosen to submit detailed proposals pursuant to an RFP, or a request for proposal. My question, then, this afternoon is to the Minister of Infrastructure. When will a developer be chosen to start construction of the much-needed courthouse?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is, indeed, a very exciting and large project that we are undertaking in the city of Calgary. We're probably going to be building a building with some 1.1 million square feet, so it is a very large project. I would like to just quickly run through the process that we've been using, because it is extremely important to us that this be very open and transparent, and we wanted to make sure, because of the size of the project, that we didn't leave anyone out that had the expertise or financial ability to participate in the project.

So we first called for a request for expression of interest and had some 27 respondents to that request. Because of this great interest, we then decided that it was extremely important that we get some outside expertise to help us with it, so we called for an RFP to bring on consultants that had expertise in courthouses, in financing, in architecture, and those types of things. We then moved on to a request for qualifications, and out of that process we had some 10 people and firms respond. We then short-listed those and came out with six firms that were interviewed, and out of that, there were three that qualified to move forward to the next level, which will be the request for proposal. As we speak, the request for proposal is being printed. It will be made available to the three companies on Monday.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this process is under way and that a developer will presumably come out of this process, when will the courthouse be built? Can the minister advise?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we are actually on a fairly fast track with this whole project. We hope to have the contract signed to go ahead with construction in October with completion in the summer of 2006 and the ability to move in and start operating from that consolidated courthouse.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Minister of Justice. Given the obvious benefit to the court-going public in being able to attend one location instead of seven, I'm wondering if the minister can advise of other anticipated benefits to this new facility for the public.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we would anticipate huge benefits to having a consolidated justice facility in the city of Calgary where all citizens of Calgary would know where they could go to access courts. Right now, as the member has indicated, there are seven different locations. There's prisoner handling in at least two of those; I think probably three or four of those where there are prisoner handling facilities. There are law libraries. There is a great amount of duplication of resources being utilized now, which can all be consolidated in one facility. So from an administrative point of view it makes a lot more sense and will save us some money, which can then be redeployed into the system to more effectively serve justice in that area.

From an access to justice perspective there are huge benefits to people knowing where they need to go to the court that they're supposed to be in, and that's very problematic right now with confusion. There's an opportunity in building a facility of this nature to bring together associated justice activities: family law clinics, mediation processes, and other processes which people need to access in addition to the courts. So there are a great number of activities which can be consolidated in that area, both redeploying resources and making the access to justice more effective.

Milk River Basin Water Management

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, 20 years ago this province tried to build a dam on the Milk River. That plan was scrapped because the dam would endanger an internationally significant grassland that serves as the habitat for several rare and threatened species. But now this government is quietly trying to bring that plan back. To the Minister of Environment: what has changed in the last 20 years to lessen the environmental risk of putting a dam on the Milk River?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, we're moving forward with the study at the request of the community. The study is not just looking at a dam; it is looking at options for water storage. Even in the driest year, about two years ago, we passed on between 55 and 57 percent of the water in the South Saskatchewan basin to Saskatchewan. We have to continue to provide 50 percent. Even in the driest year there was 7 percent of the water that flowed, so as we go forward in looking at water management issues, all the water management issues in all of the province need to be looked at.

As we move forward in particular to the Milk River basin system, the Milk River would be dry if it weren't for a number of options and actions that have been taken in the past. This is a project of the community, the American government – the Milk River flows ultimately down to the Gulf of Mexico – and it is also a study that's been undertaken by us. As I say, it's just a study; there are no commitments. The study looks at onstream and off-stream storage plus environmental effects plus economic matters.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, why is the minister conducting a prefeasibility study without a river basin management plan, as required under the Water Act?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are going forward with a study, and certainly we are working with all the basins right now in terms of getting water management plans developed. We've done a good one on the Bow River, we're working on the South Saskatchewan, and we're working with one on the Milk River as well. There would be nothing built either onstream or off-stream until there was a water management plan.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, will the Environment minister tell this House how much this project will benefit Americans and how much it will cost Albertans?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course we're continuing to monitor the situation as it goes forward, but I can't tell her that until the study is complete, and if there's any benefit to the Americans, we would be expecting the Americans to pay their fair share. I had a meeting in Milk River some time ago with American community officials and so on. The Americans are interested in knowing what the costs will be, and of course they recognize that they need to pay their fair share of any project if – if – a project were to go forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have never seen education stakeholders more united against this government's wrong-headed policies, which have created a serious funding crisis in our schools. School trustees, educators, parents, and students are speaking with one voice, saying that this Tory government is just not listening to their concerns. To the Minister of Learning. I hope he's listening. Can the minister please explain how he has managed the rare feat of uniting all education stakeholders against his government's policies.

2:20

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is hallucinating again. I believe that the school boards are doing a very good job of managing their funds. I also believe that there's been huge amounts of dollars that have been put into education and the learning system. We put more money into the system per capita than any other province in Canada. Our students do absolutely the best on any examination across Canada; indeed, any worldwide examination. Lastly, our teachers are paid approximately 10 percent more than any other teachers in the country. So I would really caution this hon. member about talking about a crisis in education. It is trumped up, and I think it does a disrespect to those teachers that are doing a very hard job and doing very hard work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a very hallucinated answer to my very clear question.

My next question to the minister: why won't the minister swallow his pride and admit that the government is wrong to not fully fund the arbitration settlement and grade 10 credits and that this refusal is exacting an unacceptable toll on Alberta classrooms?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the arbitration settlement was fully funded. It was funded to the tune of $298 million for a $260 million settlement. The second point that I wanted to make is on CEUs. Do you realize that in the Edmonton public school board we had to fine schools because they were putting forward the wrong CEUs? They were using the CEUs to put dollars into their own coffers. In some school boards the CEUs in grade 10 were up to 47 per year. We had students that were receiving over 80 – 80 – credits. Do the math timewise. There aren't that many hours in the week. This was a huge problem. We have addressed the problem and are coming forward with the solution starting this September.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the minister to say today that the settlement was fully funded really shows how hallucinated he is. Will the minister tell parents and students that he has gotten the message and announce today that next year's education budget will contain sufficient funds so the school boards are not forced to lay off teachers and cut vital programs?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I will elucidate that hallucinating question. There will be money in the upcoming budget. You will however have to wait till the upcoming budget. A lot of the school boards are working extremely hard to balance their budgets. They're attempting to keep the number of teachers that will be laid off by attrition to a minimum, and we will see how they do it. I listen to people all the time. As a matter of fact, last night I met with the parent council at Eastglen, which I believe is in the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands' constituency, and I didn't see him there.

The Speaker: Boy, there's a lot of activity back and forth. To my hon. colleagues the Member for Edmonton-Highlands and the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, just button it a bit; okay? Because if you don't, I'm moving your desks over here.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Labour Supply

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent reports have predicted that Alberta is going to have high employment growth over the next few years. Reports state that over the next five years there will be a strong demand for occupations that need university degrees, especially in nursing, business, and engineering. However, with many baby boomers retiring over the next 10 years, there is a real concern in my constituency that there will be large-scale worker shortages, especially in the area of health, where it has already been predicted that there is going to be a shortage of medical doctors and nurses. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Does the minister and his department have any long-range plans to ensure that there won't be labour shortages in Alberta over the next decade?

Mr. Dunford: Yes, Mr. Speaker, to the question. In terms of plans they would be both immediate and, of course, long term and involve the federal government through the Human Resources Development branch of the federal government, but also we have cross-ministry initiatives here within the province of Alberta. I might just direct the member's attention to a recent report that has been released by the Department of Learning and ourselves called Prepared for Growth. In that report we articulate a three-pronged approach to ensuring a strong labour market.

First of all, of course you want to deal with Albertans and make sure that there are strong training programs available for Alberta workers. Secondly, then, of course you want to increase the ability of workers from across this country to be able to come to Alberta and to work, and with that, then, of course we want to have in place good accreditation systems. Then, finally, just around the world: being able to attract skilled immigrants through, of course, the Alberta advantage.

So our portion of this in Human Resources and Employment is to provide information, to provide advice, and to provide financial support to help people get jobs, get training, and choose careers, then, with bright futures, for which, of course, doctors and nurses would qualify.

Mr. Johnson: My first supplemental is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What plans does the minister have to ensure that there will not be a shortage of medical doctors and nurses in the next ten years?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member and members of this House and Albertans that our department is clearly aware of many reports that have talked about a general shortage of health professionals across Canada. Interestingly – and I think it's worth pointing out – this is one of the areas that was not specifically addressed by the federal government in its recent budget, nor was it really referred to except parenthetically in the Romanow report, although it was identified in both the Mazankowski report and the report done by Senator Kirby.

Mr. Speaker, we have done a good job of trying to deal with this particular issue, and it's a two-pronged approach. First of all, through primary health care reform we need to make sure that we make better use of the health professionals that we currently have in expanding the scopes of practice and the utilization of competent professionals in various areas of health care. So that's the first prong to the approach.

The second prong, Mr. Speaker, is with respect to the training of professionals and their recruitment and retention. Now, that is also a two-pronged approach. One is that in the short term we can recruit people from other places, and we've been successful in doing that partly because of our labour negotiation contracts with nurses, with physicians that have resulted in almost 650 new positions coming to Alberta in the last three years, some 1,500 new nurses in the last couple of years that we've been successful in recruiting.

Also, Mr. Speaker, we are interested in training more people, the theory being that people who are born, raised, and live here in Alberta and train in Alberta will tend to stay in Alberta, and so in that respect – and this is my final point – we have focused on postsecondary education seats for health care. I'm pleased to say that over the last four years we have added an additional 2,116 new spaces. Alberta now has a total of more than 12,000 postsecondary education seats devoted to the education of health care professionals.

Mr. Johnson: My final question is to the Minister of Learning. What steps has the Minister of Learning taken to ensure Alberta students are being encouraged to enter studies at the postsecondary level, that are predicted to be in high demand over the next ten years?

The Speaker: Okay. Thirty seconds, hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very, very hard to talk about our excellent postsecondary education system . . .

The Speaker: Can we come back with a ministerial statement, then, on Monday?

Untendered Contracts

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Infrastructure said that he wouldn't waste taxpayer dollars to make public the records of untendered contracts issued by his department. When I revealed to him that members of his own department calculated it would cost less than $6,000, he said the amount was so small that the opposition should pay for it. The minister cannot have it both ways. To the Minister of Infrastructure: which is it? It costs too much to find the records, or they're so cheap that the opposition should pay for them?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I think it's deplorable than an hon. member – I don't know why I use the word "honourable" – would stand in his place and say that I said something that I didn't say yesterday. I did not say that since it was so cheap they should pay for it. I never said that, and I think that the hon. member should actually apologize for making those kinds of accusations. I never said that.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: do you deny that there is public benefit to making these records public?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I told the hon. member the other day to get his act together and then we would answer his questions, but until he gets his act together, he can go the other route that he started.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister still doesn't have an answer, is he saying that the public should not be able to see these documents? What is the minister hiding that he doesn't want Albertans to see?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we are hiding absolutely nothing. If the hon. member wants the public to pay for a fishing trip, I disagree with it. If he wants to narrow it down so that he defines what exactly it is that he wants, then we will deal with it, but I cannot, when somebody says that they want every contract that we've entered into over the last two years, have staff spend hundreds of hours going through and finding it. We will not do it.

Speaker's Ruling Items Previously Decided by the Assembly

The Speaker: Just a second. The chair is going to make a comment on what's just transpired here. This is the second day in a row now that this has transpired with this question. It would've been helpful if perhaps some learned parliamentarians in the Assembly might have interjected, but the chair will.

We have on our agenda and we have in our Routine items called Motions for Returns and Written Questions. Hon. members can pose certain questions. They have them identified. They're printed in the Order Paper. They're published. We arrive here on a certain day, and an hon. member moves a question. It is not for the minister to reject or accept the question; it is for the Assembly to accept or reject the question. If it were to come about that a question is being presented by someone and the hon. minister says, "Yes, I'm prepared to provide it" but the Assembly votes no, the minister cannot. It's the Assembly that rules.

In the series of questions that were raised the other day, I think following out of the question asked yesterday and the question asked today, the Assembly voted no to the provision of the statement. So for absolute clarity from a jurisdictional point of view and a constitutional point of view let us remember that it is the Assembly that rules, not a minister that rules.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly a very good friend of mine from Pine Lake, Doug Sawyer. Doug is a rancher at Pine Lake and a very good supporter of this government and a very good citizen of the Pine Lake area. He's also the president of the Clean Lake Society. He's a big-time hunter and a big-time fisherman, and I get to eat a little wild meat and some fish when I stop over by his house. I'm glad to see him come to take part in watching our Legislature today.

The Ross Family of Camrose

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ross family in my constituency has done phenomenal work in raising awareness for the organ donation program. Mike, Tim, Kate, Jen, Rod, and Sheilagh have had a personal experience with the program. In 1992 Jenny, at the age of four, underwent a liver transplant to save her life from a virus. Jen lay sick for two weeks before an anonymous donor provided the gift of life for her. She made an excellent recovery, and she and her family have been large supporters of the donor program ever since.

Last summer Mike and Tim roller-skied from Edmonton to the Canadian Transplant Games, in St. John's, Newfoundland, in the Thanks 100 Times Over campaign. The campaign raised awareness of the organ donation program and also served to thank families of donors of organs and tissues. Mike and Tim roller-skied 6,000 kilometres in 69 days, visiting over 30 cities in nine provinces.

In November 2002 Jen was asked to represent the Stollery children's hospital as this year's champion child. She is an ambassador for the 80,000 children treated at Stollery each year. Jen has been asked to address the Senate of Canada next week on behalf of the children and families of the organ donor program.

Sheilagh Ross was appointed to the Canadian Council on Organ Donation and Transplantation in 2001 as one of the two Albertans sitting on the national council. Sheilagh is the lead for their public awareness initiative and sits on the donation committee.

The entire family continues to promote the benefit of the organ donation program, which is life. I encourage all Albertans to visit their web site at www.thanks100times.ca to learn more about the family's efforts. I also encourage all Albertans to fill out a donor card so that they, too, can give the gift of life.

From this Assembly I'm pleased to say thank you to the Rosses and welcome them here today.

Asbestos Exposure

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand excerpts from this government's own Occupational Health & Safety Magazine. These four simple pages document in just over one year the deaths of 32 workers in Alberta, workers who died because of asbestos. They were insulators, plumbers, carpenters, and electricians. They were mechanics, painters, store clerks, and engineers. These workers who died because of asbestos are only the ones we know about. How many more Albertans are out there dying from asbestos exposure?

Our knowledge of asbestos has come a long way. At one time it was known as a miracle mineral used in a variety of substances like building materials, fire retardants, and insulation. We didn't know that asbestos fibres become embedded in the lungs and can lead to several fatal diseases, but now we do. Asbestos is the largest single occupational cause of death and disease. In Great Britain asbestos kills more people each year than are killed on roads. By 2020 it is estimated that a staggering 10,000 people a year will die from asbestos exposure in the U.K. alone.

In the past few months serious concerns regarding asbestos exposure at two health facilities in Calgary have been brought to light. The safety of workers and patients was put at risk at both the Foothills and Holy Cross, and despite the seriousness of asbestos exposure, repeated breaches of the government's asbestos abatement policy continued to occur. Where is the government on this issue? A good abatement policy means nothing if there is no will to enforce it. Improper asbestos removal at the Foothills and Holy Cross are two examples that we know about. How many times each day does improper asbestos removal in Alberta put worker and public safety at risk? There is no excuse. We know the dangers of asbestos. It is time for the government to show leadership and take action on this issue by properly enforcing the legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Farm Safety Week

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and bring attention to the Farm Safety Week campaign, which began on March 12 and will be concluding on March 19.

Statistics, Mr. Speaker, show that farming is one of the more dangerous occupations in Alberta. Unfortunately, statistics don't show the real impact farming-related deaths and injuries have on the families who have had a member seriously injured or killed. Millions of dollars in production and thousands of work hours are lost, but how do you measure the emotional loss of a family member? On average there are about 120 people killed and another 1,700 seriously injured each year in farm-related incidents across Canada, and one-fifth of those deaths occur in Alberta. In 2002 Alberta lost 24 members of its farming community, and of the people lost five were children.

The focus of this year's campaign is on children's safety because even one is too many. Parents can ensure the safety of their children through proper supervision and training for any task their children might be involved with. Children need to be assigned tasks that they are capable of doing safely. Farm-related tragedies are preventable. One of the most horrific facts that surrounds the death or serious injury of a child on a farm is that in the majority of incidents the parents of the child witness the incident. Climbing hay bales may look innocent, but when children climb and play on top of them, they may become unstable and fall onto the child. Tractors are another dangerous piece of equipment that children should avoid. One of the most common causes of serious injury or death for children is when they fall off a moving tractor. Although hazards exist on farms, they are a wonderful place for children to be raised. Children just need to be aware of the dangers that exist.

Almost every farmer in Alberta could tell a story about an injury they sustained or a near miss that occurred throughout their daily farming tasks, and it is important that these stories and the recommendations arising from them are shared, especially during this farm safety campaign. Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development takes an active role in providing farmers with information that promotes farm safety year-round. Farmers are encouraged this week to share their knowledge and expertise and raise the awareness of potentially hazardous practices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electoral Boundaries

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last September a disappointing interim report was delivered by the Electoral Boundaries Commission recommending that the city of Edmonton lose a seat, that rural Alberta lose a seat, and that the riding of Fort McMurray be consolidated with the surrounding constituency to create a riding whose population was 20 percent over the provincial average.

The city of Edmonton is one of the two largest economic centres in Alberta. It serves as the capital for our fine province and over the past two years has seen substantial economic growth and increases in population. Yet even though our current population qualifies the city to keep 19 seats, Edmonton is being punished with the loss of one of them. This will leave our city underrepresented and with less influence and say in this House.

After the interim report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission was released, there was an outcry from the citizens, city council, and the opposition parties of this House. Mr. Speaker, we need representation in this city to watch out for the interests of all Edmontonians. This report takes that representation away. We need representation to protect our municipally owned utilities. We need representation to protect our public schools. We need representation to protect our public health care system. We need representation to protect and further our roads and our infrastructure. We need representation to speak for those who cannot speak for themselves: the disabled, those on low-income assistance programs, seniors, and children. If we lose that seat, the people of Edmonton will lose representation. They will have their democratic rights compromised. They will suffer the consequences of having one less voice at the legislative table.

I would now urge all hon. members, especially the majority of the Edmonton Progressive Conservative caucus, who to date, unfortunately, have remained quiet on this issue, to stand up and speak out on behalf of Edmonton. I am, as is the Liberal caucus, willing to work with those hon. members to ensure Edmonton does not lose a voice in this Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the working poor in Alberta I'm presenting a petition signed by 53 individuals from Calgary. These Albertans are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to immediately raise the minimum wage to $8.50 per hour and index it to the cost of living just in the way MLA salaries are indexed to the cost of living.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Factual Accuracy

The Speaker: Excuse me. Hon. members, I don't know what the provision is with respect to the correction of stuff that's said in the Assembly that's wrong. The chair is also the chairman of the Members' Services Committee, and the last statement made is factually incorrect. MLA salaries are not indexed to the cost of living. This has been said in this Assembly several times, and who other than the chairman of Members' Services can stand up and correct it? All hon. members know how their stipends are calculated. It has nothing to do with the cost of living. This has to be clarified. This must be clarified. That is factually incorrect.

Members' stipends are adjusted on an annual basis on a formula that was determined, an independent formula called the average of weekly earnings index of the previous calendar year of workers in the province of Alberta. Totally unrelated to the cost of living index. The members of this Assembly have got to clarify. It's wrong to stand in here and make factually incorrect statements.

Dr. Pannu: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for correcting me on this. I should have used the right language. Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions 3, 5, 6, 8, 9, and 10 be dealt with that day.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, and 10 be dealt with that day.

There being no additional written questions or motions for returns, there are none to stand and retain their places.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Bill 31

Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2003.

The act is reviewed approximately every three years. This bill will incorporate changes requested by local authorities since the last local authorities elections.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 31 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the response to Written Question 4.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter from Gerry Toller-Lobe of Edmonton dated March 4, 2003, addressed to the Premier. Mr. Toller-Lobe is expressing his extreme dissatisfaction with the government's education funding policy and the resulting negative impact on his children attending McKernan school. They are reminding the Premier that education is an investment not only in education but in "health, law and order, productivity, culture and quality of life" for the collective good of society.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is from constituent Ian Crichton, who writes about P3s, or as he likes to call them, "Picking the Public Pocket." He's asking that "the province of Alberta with ample access to capital and pride in its fiscal accountability should not risk the delivery of the services in our community so deliberately."

My second tabling is from Phillip H. Walker, who's asking that the motion passed by city council be tabled, that the mayor on behalf of city council urges the Premier and all members of the Assembly "to direct the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission to maintain the status quo in Edmonton."

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there's a heartfelt testimonial from a constituent, Jane Doe, who has found herself needing welfare and offers up her critique on the SFI budget.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm getting a tremendous amount of correspondence these days. The first tabling is from a student at Ross Sheppard high school named Tara Kryns, who has written to me expressing her concern over the services available in schools and the shortage of funding.

The second letter is from Lana Cuthbertson, also expressing her concern over funding cuts to education that the province of Alberta is making.

The third letter is a copy of a letter written to the public school board of Edmonton saying among other things: I'm concerned that my daughter's education "will suffer as a result of the recent financial difficulties your schoolboard is facing." That's from Dan Musica.

The fourth letter is a copy of a letter sent to me strongly urging the maintenance of Edmonton's 19 seats in the Legislature.

The fifth letter is from a person, Peter Schiavone, who wants to add his voice "to those calling for natural gas rebates – as promised by the [provincial government] last year."

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter that I received, and I was delighted to receive this letter from the hon. Minister of Finance. It's dated February 24, 2003, and deals with the consultation process to review the auto insurance business in the province of Alberta.

The second tabling I have this afternoon is from citizens from the following communities: Athabasca, St. Albert, Alberta Beach, Onoway, Stony Plain, Edmonton, and Calgary. There are over 200 citizens here urging the government to "reinstate the natural-gas rebates immediately" that were promised during the election.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling a letter from a retired couple in Two Hills, Alberta, dated March 7, 2003, addressed to me regarding their gas and power bills. They write, "Enclosed gas and power bills which are taking food from our mouths."

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 7(5) I would ask that the order of government business to be brought before the Assembly next week be now shared with the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under projected government business for the week of March 17 to March 20 we project that on Monday, March 17, under Government Bills and Orders at 9 p.m. for second reading Bill 27, Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, and Bill 30, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003, and as per the Order Paper.

At 8 p.m. on Tuesday, March 18, under Government Bills and Orders for second reading or Committee of the Whole, depending on progress, Bill 27, and committee on bills 19, 30, and 3, and as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, March 19, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders and Committee of the Whole or third reading, as the order progresses, bills 19, 27, and 3, and as per the Order Paper. At 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders again Committee of the Whole or third reading, as progress is made, on bills 19, 27, 3, and for third reading Bill 30, and as per the Order Paper.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: We'll call the committee to order.

Interim Supply Estimates 2003-04
Offices of the Legislative Assembly, Government, and Lottery Fund

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to comment on the interim supply requirements for the Department and Ministry of Community Development. I did note in reviewing the Blues last night – late last night, I might add – that the Member for Edmonton-Centre had placed some questions on the record which she wanted some answers to. I also noticed that she made a comment about the length of time it took to answer some of the questions that followed the main budget debate from last year, and I just want to make a brief comment on that, if you'll allow, because she has asked the question.

I want to just state at the outset that during the spirit of that exchange with the hon. member during that part of the debate, as I recall, she had requested time during the debate a year ago to put on record as many questions as she possibly could. I agreed to that, and I also agreed to Edmonton-Ellerslie's request. I can't remember and I don't have it just in front of me, but I'm sure it was close to a hundred questions or thereabouts when I combined two or three of the opposition members' questions, so it did take quite a long time to provide that.

Now, I'll handle that situation differently this year, hon. member. I will take up the time during the debate to answer as many questions from you as I can, but in response I think I provided 34 pages of answers to this hon. member and the other and then a supplementary 17 or 19 pages of answers, and my staff worked very hard to try and provide as many updated answers as we could. Some of them weren't ready to go, of course, because as I recall, they surfaced around the topic of the G8 summit. Some of that was in progress and in motion, so we held back a little bit on the timing just so that we could provide as much of the updated information as we possibly could, making it the most current, in other words. Nonetheless, my staff did try their very level best to provide as comprehensive an answer to every single question that was raised by Edmonton-Centre or Edmonton-Ellerslie or one other member whose name I don't recall.

So that having been said, we'll endeavour to do that thorough job again when the appropriate budget debate occurs, and I would hope, hon. members, that it won't take a number of months to provide, but when you ask that many questions and you have a conscientious department and staff like I'm privileged to have, some of those answers take longer than anticipated. We only have so many staff members, as does every ministry, so in defence of the ministry and my staff I make those explanations.

Now, specific to some of the issues that were referenced yesterday, I know that there were a number of items that were asked and/or referred to, not necessarily in a question form, during interim supply debate last evening, and I just will clarify again, Mr. Chair, that the request before the House right now is for interim financing or interim funding, bridge funding if you will, to meet what I could only describe as the short-term needs of the Ministry of Community Development until the 2003-2004 budget is officially tabled, discussed, and passed by all members of this House. I know that there will be some vigorous debate at that time.

Specifically, the $209.5 million or thereabouts in operating expense that is being requested and the $265,000 in capital investment that's being requested is being asked for in order to help us cover the anticipated needs of the ministry for the period April 1, obviously, of 2003 through to approximately June 15. I think everybody in the House probably heard in the debates yesterday that come the end of the fiscal year that we're currently in, which will be March 31, 2003, we do have a need to facilitate operations and continue to maintain services for Albertans in all areas from health care to education to infrastructure to transportation and on and on. So, too, is that same statement applicable to Community Development.

So we will be looking for interim supply dollars to help us continue providing services such as grant funding for our persons with developmental disabilities boards, which are spread throughout the province, and I'll comment a little bit more on that shortly. That would constitute for the interim supply period approximately $190 million in grants, and that will include funding to the PDD Provincial Board and to the regional boards. That will also cover our excellent library system and various other grant programs within my ministry's five lottery-funded agencies.

So, again, the majority of those funds, Mr. Chair, will go specifically to providing services to the most vulnerable in our society, the PDD recipients, and the system in general. I think it's probably important to note that since they receive their funding at the beginning of each month, the request before us includes about three months of supply rather than two and one-half months of supply, but still it's within those first three months, roughly, that we're looking for interim dollars to be approved today.

The other point I referenced was with respect to libraries. Libraries operate on a calendar-year basis, Mr. Chair, so of the applications that come in, many of these requests are received early, so they're processed as quickly as possible at the beginning of the fiscal year on a first come, first served basis. I'd say that about 50 percent of all the library grants that we do pay out tend to get paid out within the first quarter, so it's important that we have that interim money block available so that we can continue to provide our libraries across the province with the support that they need.

The other point, with respect to the payment schedule, which references other grants within the department and lottery-funded agencies. That varies, and that really depends on the type of grant and which specific grant program is being discussed. Some of these, Mr. Chair, do require funding at the beginning of the year, others require it on a quarterly basis, and some, as the hon. member, I'm sure, will know, require it on a biannual basis. So there are varying time frames here that we're having to deal with. But specific to the amount being debated today for interim supply, this amount that's being requested is based on our best known practices. Let's call them historical spending patterns, if you like. They reflect what we judge to be the anticipated needs for the period April 1 through to, again, about June 15 of 2003. So that tends to cover most of the 191 million or so dollars that were referred to yesterday.

The other points are with respect to salaries, Mr. Chairman. No department, no ministry is able to function without staff, obviously, and when we look at staff in Community Development, who are spread out through most of the province – and, obviously, a lot are also headquartered here – we will require approximately $8.7 million to cover the salaries for the staff members that I'm so privileged to be able to work with.

There's also, I should add here, about $265,000 that is being required for capital investment for parks facilities. I think members of the House will obviously know that our parks tend to be the busiest during the spring, summer, and early fall seasons, so in addition to the $265,000 for capital investment in the parks facilities, this interim request also references I believe about $7 million for supplies and services, which includes normal operating needs as well as some additional funding that is normally required to get the start-up of our parks going and making sure that they're ready for the very busy summer season that lies ahead.

There will be, of course, more information provided once the budget is tabled, and I know we'll get into quite some discussion on that. But the members of the Assembly along with all Albertans will be privy to those details when the budget is handed down, and I believe that will be on April 8 this year. Now, with that in mind, there were some specific questions that were asked, and I'll try and get through as many of them as I can in the time available.

There was a question with respect to grant release dates. Mr. Chair, the grant programs of the five lottery-funded agencies will continue to operate as usual and in accordance with the time lines and the time frames that we have for grant applications, and we're not expecting any changes to that. The interim request before us takes into consideration the anticipated amounts that will be required for all payments, be they operating grants or project grants or what have you, as well as other operational and capital needs items. The amount of interim supply for grants was calculated, as I said earlier, using previous spending patterns that we have a history with, and we expect that to be the same in 2003-2004.

With respect to library grants, Mr. Chair, should there be any specific changes to the library grants, those would be announced in the 2003 budget. Processing of library operating grants remains unchanged. I think that was one of the items referenced. Cheques are released after libraries submit applications and we've completed our final verifications, and I'll add that applications are, again, processed on a first come, first served basis. It probably should be noted for the Assembly that beginning in 2001-2002, the current population figures based on Municipal Affairs' official population list from the previous year have been used to calculate grant payments for libraries, and I expect that will continue.

With respect to PDD members here should know that the department—that is to say, Community Development—transfers funds that are allocated to us for that purpose to the PDD Provincial Board, and that's done on a monthly basis. After that, the PDD Provincial Board immediately forwards agreed-to amounts to the individual regional boards, and we have six of them throughout the province of Alberta, who work very hard to provide services for persons with developmental disabilities. Now, the provincial board will be working with regional and community boards to develop specific plans and determine specific allocations based on a lot of factors, such as projected caseload growth, projected increases in the cost of providing services to individuals, projected costs of increased complexities of cases, and so on. More specifics, obviously, will flow out once the budget is tabled.

The other comment is with respect to the Auditor's opinion regarding the so-called friends-of organizations that Community Development does business with. This reflects comments with respect to revenues and expenses and so on. The fact is that those aren't included right now within the areas that the member referenced, but I would say this. It's the ministry's opinion that the volunteer societies, the friends-of, that we're dealing with are legally incorporated not-for-profit organizations under the Societies Act, and as such they are independent from government operations, and I think they should continue to enjoy that independence. Therefore, their financial statements are not automatically incorporated into my ministry's budget or my ministry's financial statements. But it's a fair question for the member to ask, and in response I would only add, Mr. Chair, that we are continuing to have this dialogue with the office of the Auditor General to see if there's some other way that we can accommodate our needs as a ministry, that we can accurately reflect the independence and arm's lengthness and all of that stuff which the friends-of groups enjoy as well as issues raised by the Auditor General.

I would say that the recording of deferred contributions that may have been alluded to was done in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles because these moneys were received as restricted donations. Specifically to the hon. member's question regarding unreturned surpluses of I think it was $223,000 in the context of grants to the friends-of societies, I would like to clarify that the ministry does not provide those societies with those kinds of grants. Therefore, the amount of $223,000 that may have been referenced was not recorded in the financial statements of the ministry since they were still being retained by the various societies who operated the particular historic sites which, again, may have been referenced.

There was a question with regard to expenses of capital assets of less than $15,000 and the request for some details. I would just add, Mr. Chair, that my ministry follows the governmentwide policy and directives in this regard, and the way that we've been doing this is very compliant with the policies referred to.

The final issue is with respect to the centennial legacies grant program. As all members in the House will know—and I answered part of this question earlier this week in the Assembly—the centennial program had a phase 1, that occurred in September 2000, and then it had a phase 2, which carried an application deadline of March 1, 2001. Now, it was always referred to that the phase 2 grant applications would be dealt with and, hopefully, announced by September 30, 2001. Unfortunately, the tragic incidents of September 11 put all of that on hold. The centennial grant program had to be deferred, and as a result it still remains deferred.

We've received numerous grant applications for that program, and we've received numerous requests asking: when will the centennial grant program be undeferred? My answer to that would be: I hope it will be sooner than later. The centennial of this province will be a great event. As minister responsible for not only the centennial legacies grant program but also for the anniversary celebrations themselves and for all of the good things that will be happening throughout our province during that year and particularly focusing on September 1, 2005, I for one am very supportive of doing everything we possibly can to help the communities. The communities have shown tremendous initiative, I should add, and have gotten on with a lot of their own projects in the meantime. But the request for the centennial program to be undeferred remains on the table, and details on any possibilities of the centennial grant program being reinstated, including any budget amounts, if at all, as applicable will certainly have to wait until the budget gets tabled in early April. We don't have any way of advising any members of this House right now as to what the time frame of phase 2 applications may be, but as I said, I hope the decision to undefer or whatever will be made sooner than later.

I think there are specifics that members were looking for or that at least one hon. member was looking for, and some of those are, indeed, much more specific than I would be allowed to comment on at this time, but I can assure the member that they will all be addressed when the budget is tabled on or about April 8 or shortly thereafter, Mr. Chair.

So with that, I will cede the floor to other members who may wish to ask questions about other departments. I've given out about as much information as I'm at liberty to do at this time. So thank you for your kind attention, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Centre for her questions yesterday during interim supply debate.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise on the interim supply estimates, although I want to put on the record my concern that we're not in fact debating the budget. There's something funny here with the government delaying the budget so long. I don't know what they're actually up to, but it's something, and I'm sure that it will be clear to us after the budget is actually brought down, when it finally is.

Mr. Chairman, I have a number of questions and comments interspersed on any number of departments contained in these interim supply estimates. I'll just begin, and hopefully the appropriate ministers will be able to respond at some time, if not this afternoon then afterwards, perhaps in a written form.

I have questions for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. I'd like to know how much will be spent tracking livestock illnesses such as mad cow disease and foot-and-mouth disease. I'd like to know that if there's more drought, which seems likely, what measures will be taken to specifically protect family farms rather than to subsidize large corporate farms. I would like to know why the government reversed its position on subsidizing agricultural leaseholds, which has formerly been called cowboy welfare, between the never proclaimed Bill 31 and Bill 16, which is now before the Assembly.

In terms of Children's Services I would be interested in knowing how much the abominable adoption-by-eBay web site has cost and whether or not taxpayers will be expected to continue paying for this atrocity. Last year there was a total reduction in budgeted spending on early childhood intervention of $6,277,000, or 17.56 percent, less than the year before. I'd like to know if the minister is committed to restoring that funding. I would like to know how many support agreements or apprehensions the department has had to enact because preventative measures, such as early childhood intervention programs, have not been in place.

Mr. Chairman, I'd just like to speak to this a little bit. Alberta has a high level of apprehensions of children, and it's one of the reasons why the government has a large number of children in care, in foster homes and so on, and it would seem better to me if the government would concentrate on preventative programs to support the families in the first place so that children need to be apprehended much less frequently rather than apprehending lots of children because the families don't have support and then marketing them for adoption on web sites. I'd like to know how much the support agreements cost last year and how much we can expect to pay this year.

Now, I know that Bill 24 has placed a greater emphasis on permanent placements for children in care. This appears to be an intentional shift in philosophy. A representative of the Alberta College of Social Workers has raised concerns that child welfare reforms and reform programs for families of children with disabilities are ultimately designed to reduce costs for Children's Services. So if children are adopted or placed with permanent guardians, then the financial responsibility of the department is reduced. I'd like to know how much the department expects to save with their emphasis on permanent placements.

Bill 24 will also put a 30-day cap on secure treatment for youths with serious addictions, and that's reduced from a cap of 90 days currently. I'd like to know what the expected savings are for that measure, and I'd like to know why, if there is not a significant saving, the cap needs to be legislated in the first place.

Some questions, Mr. Chairman, for Community Development. I'd like to know whether or not more money will be allocated to hire investigators at the Human Rights and Citizenship Commission. I'd like to know why human rights complaints take so long to resolve. I'd like to know what Community Development is or will be doing to combat increased incidences of racism after 9-11. I would like to know what Community Development will do to assist community leagues whose funding has already been reduced by cuts to municipal grants. I don't need to tell anyone here who represents an urban constituency the importance of community leagues to the well-being of the community and the excellent work they do, which I daresay saves municipalities and the provincial government a great deal of costs because of the hard work of the volunteers in those organizations.

I'd like to come now to the Department of Energy, and I'd like to ask a question, and perhaps, Mr. Chairman, at this stage it would have to be considered a rhetorical question. When can we expect gas rebates? I would like a commitment from the government that if rebates are not going to be implemented now, halfway between the last election and the next one, because gas prices haven't hit the trigger, I would like assurances that the government isn't going to change the trigger just in time for the next election and allow gas rebates before the next election. I'd really appreciate it if we could get the minister or some official from the government to put that commitment clearly on the record. We spent $2 billion on rebates before the election, and that's, I think, just dealing with the gas side, yet Albertans have paid $3 billion in higher rates since the election. So the net cost to Albertans both through paying for their own rebates and the higher prices that they have to pay as well is a very, very large amount of money.

How much more will the Department of Energy have to spend on getting the electricity deregulation policy to actually work? We'd like to know how much deregulation of natural gas will cost consumers. The Consumers' Coalition of Alberta has found, Mr. Chairman, through surveys and focus groups that there was no consumer desire for gas deregulation. I think that's a very interesting point. The consumers did not want gas deregulation. [interjection] The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview seems interested in that statement, and he agrees with it. I am also not surprised to find that consumers didn't ask for deregulation of gas, just like they didn't ask for deregulation of electricity.

It's an interesting contrast to those statements that are made in this Assembly that consumers want choice. Sure, they'd like to have choice, but now they can choose between which package of high prices they want to have rather than no choice and get cheap and reliable energy. So I think that's the consumer perspective on the whole thing, Mr. Chairman. Certainly my constituency office and that of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona have not heard any demands for gas deregulation. I wonder if any other members have had calls to their constituency offices from individual citizens demanding gas deregulation. [interjections] That's interesting. A number of members are saying: no, they have not received any calls whatsoever for gas deregulation. Well, it seems, then, that the only people who want gas deregulation are very ideologically driven Conservatives, and I guess Direct Energy probably wants it too. I know that the power companies, including the much-maligned EPCOR, also favour deregulation, and I think that's because they want to make a whole lot more money than they are, and I think that they'll be able to.

I guess the next question I'd like to ask is whether or not the Minister of Energy will table before the Assembly documents from any organization that has asked for deregulation of either gas or electricity and, as well, the correspondence from Direct Energy. Since it's apparent that individual Albertans themselves are not asking for deregulation of gas and power, then I would be very curious to know who is. So I'd ask the minister if he'd be prepared to put that correspondence before the Assembly.

Now, I would like to know who the government is going to buy their gas from in the next period of time, whether or not it's going to be Direct Energy or some other company, and I'd like to know what additional billing costs we're going to have in order to support Direct Energy.

We'd also be really interested to know whether or not the government is prepared to set up any sort of program to assist people to make their homes more energy efficient. There are a number of approaches to this. One approach which was used in the city of Edmonton in connection with water was to create a revolving fund that allowed people to make investments in water reduction, and then the fund was repaid from the savings that those individuals accrued. It's an excellent approach, Mr. Chairman, because investing in energy saving technologies and simple energy reduction techniques can actually save a lot of money. If you look at it as an investment, then you can actually replenish an initial investment many times over, so it's a very, very positive approach to take.

Now, I guess the next department I come to is the Environment department, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to know how much money is going to be allocated to implementing Kyoto. Then I would appreciate it if the government could compare that to the amount of time or the amount of money spent trying to sabotage Kyoto. I think that would be a very interesting comparison. The government was obviously very, very interested in stopping Kyoto and got everybody whipped into a frenzy. Then when Kyoto was passed by the federal Parliament anyway, all of a sudden the government said: well, you know, it's really not going to hurt us very much, and we'll monitor the situation. So they clearly were crying wolf, and we all know what happened eventually to the little boy who cried wolf. He got eaten by one, or at least he should have. So I think that the government should watch out for the wolf.

I'm going to come to the money spent on lawyers when we get to the Justice department.

Dr. Taft: How much was that?

Mr. Mason: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I believe that it was half a million dollars, and that's an awful lot of money. We still don't know which lawyers got it or what they did. We do know that it probably didn't go to injury lawyers, but much more than that we don't really know.

I'd like to know whether or not the government has studied and is prepared to report to the Assembly on the impacts of intensive livestock operations on the environment. As we know, this was an area of considerable concern. I won't go into the statistics that we gathered, Mr. Chairman, about the volumes of pig manure that will be produced once the Premier has his way and we have millions and millions of hogs in this province, but I think that to err on the side of the environment, we really ought to know how these operations have affected the environment so far, the groundwater in particular. I'd like to know if the Department of Environment will commit to an independent review of the impact of intensive livestock operations on nearby ecosystems, on drinking water, and on air quality.

I have a few questions for the Department of Finance, Mr. Chairman, as well. I'd like to know why the budget is so late. I'd like to know why the Finance department continues to intentionally underestimate revenue, particularly royalty revenue. I'd like to know how much the government will be giving away in corporate tax breaks this year. That's another interesting question.

You know, Mr. Chairman, I have here a list of the amount by which the government has lowballed its revenues since 1993-94. It's averaged well over a billion dollars a year, and we're projecting it's going to be close to $3 billion this year. In that period of time – I think that's about 10 years – the government has lowballed its revenues by $23.3 billion. It's no wonder they have all these surpluses, and of course they've gone 75 percent against the debt. So by underestimating that revenue, they've managed to starve programs and accelerate the paying down of the debt.

I'd like to ask the Ministry of Gaming how much they're going to be giving to the horse racing industry this year. I'd like to know how much they're spending on VLT maintenance and upgrades. I'd like to know how much they're going to be spending on support for people with gambling problems. I'd like to know whether Gaming will continue to support core programs such as health and wellness.

3:30

Now, for Government Services, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to know if it's going to continue the unfair user-pay model that it's implemented with all kinds of multiplying user fees, given the government's promise that there won't be any tax increases. Does the government consider user fees to be a tax or not? I'd like to know if we still need to worry about people stealing the materials needed to forge drivers' licences in this province. I think that's a serious concern that we have.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to come to Health and Wellness. I'd like to know whether Albertans can finally expect to see the elimination of Alberta health care premiums this year. I'm not holding my breath, but, you know, with an election coming, we know that everything changes, and maybe the government will actually take a look at that. I'd like to know if the minister is prepared to increase the income levels for premium subsidy at least. I'd like to know if there will be funds to restore the enhanced optical and health benefits for seniors. That was a real blow to the seniors when they lost that, and a lot of people have had a lot of difficulty as a result. I'd like to ask whether the minister will increase the low-income cutoff for seniors' assistance. And will the minister commit to supporting midwives?

I'd like to know whether the government will be introducing more programs to help with smoking cessation and whether or not these programs match the increased revenue from higher tobacco taxes. People may recall that I voted against that particular provision, even though I've opposed smoking in my entire political life, because it was a simply a tax grab from low-income people who are much more inclined to smoke and there was no indication that the extra tax grab revenue would actually be used to help people quit smoking. Clearly it's not. It's just going to the bottom line. I'd like to know if there are any other programs that are being introduced to help people make positive health choices.

Now, Human Resources and Employment. I have a few questions for them. I'd like to know, given the recent surplus, whether this will finally be the year that AISH and SFI recipients can expect an increase. I'd like to know how much the government saves per year by not affording people a decent quality of life. I'd like to know why the minister hasn't pushed for a fair taxation system that would allow him to afford AISH or SFI increases. We'd like to know whether or not there are instances of caseworkers in AISH and SFI being seriously overburdened.

For the Minister of Justice and Attorney General I'd like to know how much money was spent on fighting Kyoto, and I'd like to know if he has plans to spend more this year.

Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the allocated time has run out.

The Hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know the hon. member had more questions on the Justice issue than just Kyoto, so I'll look forward to those questions when they come up, but he will have had the opportunity, of course, to debate in full in supplementary estimates not two weeks ago the supplementary estimate that was requested for the Department of Justice and Attorney General relative to a sum of $500,000 which was in this year's estimates relative to the acquisition of outside legal advice relative to the matter of the Kyoto protocol. I've indicated both in answering questions in the House and in debate on supplementary supply and elsewhere that we have, of course, a considerable contingent in-house relative to our constitutional law area. We've put a considerable amount of work in over the course of the fall in terms of providing legal advice to government on the Kyoto matter.

Kyoto, as all Albertans are only too acutely aware, is of extreme significance to our province in terms of the fact that we have a carbon-based economy, an economy that is very much supported by oil and gas, coal. Our electricity is generated primarily from coal and gas, so implementing a protocol relative to so-called greenhouse gases could have a very serious effect. So Alberta took a very strong and very important position with respect to the protocol. We always maintained that we were not opposed to doing something about the environment and environmental issues, and certainly we believed there needed to be a plan relative to greenhouse gases.

In fact, Alberta moved more quickly than any other jurisdiction in the country to establish Climate Change Central, to move and work very closely on the voluntary challenge process, to work with other jurisdictions across the country on a co-operative federalism basis with respect to how to meet the Kyoto challenge. But when the Prime Minister of this country went to Johannesburg, South Africa, and announced unilaterally to the surprise of his own government – and not just to their surprise but to the surprise of everybody across the country – what his timetable was and that he intended to do it without a plan, it behooved us to move very quickly to make sure that we understood the full legal implications of every step of that process, whether it was the process of approving the protocol or the process that might come afterwards with respect to implementation of the protocol, what our constitutional position was, what our position ought to be with respect to legislation, and what corporate advice we might give to government with respect to the risks that Alberta faced relative to the whole Kyoto question.

So the amount of money that was provided in supplementary supply, the additional $500,000, was to cover some of the costs that were incurred, both the external costs and the additional internal costs that were dealt with. I can say that I think the external bills – and I don't have the exact number at hand – to date were in the nature of some $300,000 to $350,000. I can provide that number if the member is concerned about the specifics of it.

As we go forward, we're talking about interim supply for next year, and the money that's in the budget for next year will of course cover any advice that we need to provide. The question as to whether or not the quantity of money that will be needed to deal with the Kyoto protocol will bear a great deal of relationship to whether the federal government finally comes up with any specifics relative to how they intend to implement the protocol and what work we need to do relative to that implementation process.

So I can't give the member any more definitive answer than that with respect to the specifics of the numbers, but I can assure him that we will be vigilant. We will make sure that we have good research and good knowledge of all those which we might be reasonably expected to be engaged in and that we will continue to provide legal advice relative to legislation that might be brought forward, any potential challenges that might be made if and when appropriate and only if and when appropriate, but more than that, the baseline under any discussion relative to moving forward with the implementation of the protocol and how it might affect Alberta.

I wanted to just comment briefly because the Minister of Children's Services is attending a federal/provincial/territorial ministers' meeting. I know there may be others in the House who will speak directly to her estimates, but I wanted to respond to the question relative to, and more appropriately the derogatory note relative to, how he referenced the eBay web site. Just to put on the record again, as the Minister of Children's Services has done so often in the past, the fact that we have children in this province who are in need of good homes and in need of loving parents. Any member who wants to criticize in that area – and critique is a good thing; it's not a bad thing – should be careful in terms of how they approach critique in an area if they're not prepared to step forward and do something, and there are children who need parents.

The Wednesday's Child program, using the television and using newspapers, has been in this province for a lot of years, and it's been a very successful program. Using technology to help make things better is not a bad thing. It's a good thing as long as it's done appropriately. Making sure that people know of the need for more people who are in a position to step forward and provide a good home for children in this province is a very good thing.

I can't provide the member with the specifics with respect to the cost of the web site, which was, when he got through the rhetoric, the gist of his question, and I'm sure the Minister of Children's Services will be happy to provide whatever detail is available on that, but I could not let the remark go by without comment. The web site has proved successful. People have taken more of an interest as a result of having that information available. There were a couple of issues that needed to be addressed and were addressed by the Minister of Children's Services relative to certain children who were on the web site, but overall it's proved to be a very positive tool to, again, increase the awareness of Albertans of the need to provide good homes for children who need it, when they are in a position to do so, and to provide access to the information and to encourage more people to be involved in that process.

So I would hope that he would in future, in dealing with issues of that kind of sensitivity and that kind of a nature . . . Certainly, needing information and critiquing process is a fair part of what we do and certainly a fair part of what the opposition does, but that web site is not a marketplace or an eBay or any commercial venture of that nature. It's a method, a very legitimate way of getting good information to people who need that information and to encourage people to be interested in children of this province who need their help. If they can provide that help, giving them the information and encouraging them to take advantage of that opportunity is a good thing, not a bad thing.

The hon. member also mentioned some issues with respect to Community Development. I'm sure the minister may wish to provide information on that, but he commented on one area that I wanted to deal with, and that was with respect to assistance to community leagues. Now, I'm not aware of provincial grants to community leagues other than through the very successful community facility enhancement program and the new and, again, very successful community initiatives program, but both of those programs are available for community leagues, and certainly I know that the community leagues in my region make good use of those programs to provide facilities for their communities.

I would concur with the hon. member that community leagues, particularly in the Edmonton experience that I'm familiar with, are a very, very strong builder of the community, and the programs that this government has put in place through the community facility enhancement program and through the community initiatives program serve to enhance and have been well utilized by community leagues to do that.

Community leagues in terms of their other funding and finances are really, well, creatures of the community, but they get support from the cities. So I'm not sure where he was coming from with respect to grants for community leagues or support for community leagues, but I can think of no better support than that which is there now through the community facility enhancement program and the community initiatives program.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Can I just be made clear on how much time – is it 15 minutes or 20 minutes?

The Deputy Chair: Twenty minutes.

Dr. Taft: Oh, that's fun. Thank you very much.

Mr. Graydon: You don't have to use it all if you don't want to.

Dr. Taft: Oh, I thought I had to use it all. Don't I?

I know that I share the concerns of all the members in the opposition and, I have no doubt, the concerns of any number of other members on the government side with this entire process that we're faced with today. We are being asked here to approve legislation expending over $5 billion with no supporting detail. I understand, of course, that it's interim supply.

Mr. Mason: Do we trust them?

Dr. Taft: The Member for Edmonton-Highlands is wondering if we trust them, and I guess we have no choice. Well, we do have a choice. We will be skeptical. That's our job, and it's needed. It's needed. So we're expected to approve over $5 billion of spending that is itemized in total in about, I think, five pages, a billion dollars a page. In fact, I think it's only four pages. I know that none of us in the opposition, certainly in the Liberal opposition, I imagine in the third party as well, are comfortable with that – it's simply mind-boggling – and I'm sure that the general public won't be too impressed with that either. I cannot imagine any significant sized organization running like this. I can't imagine a multibillion-dollar corporation running like this. I can't imagine even a good sized nonprofit organization or a community league or a small business running with this sort of approach, and it is very worrisome.

The people of Denmark have an interesting saying that is of some relevance here. They say that one must walk a long time behind a wild duck before one picks up an ostrich feather. In looking at this document, it is a bit like a wild duck, and we're searching through it looking for something good, some ostrich feather somewhere, and I'm afraid we're going to run out of time before we find any. It is maybe not only a wild duck but a bit of a lame duck, maybe an ugly duckling too.

So I express a lot of frustration here, and that frustration is reinforced when I go through the Hansard of last night's debate for I as the health critic have many questions about how the $1.8 billion that's requested in this legislation for the Department of Health and Wellness is going to be spent. Instead of any hope whatsoever of having that information provided, I see from last night's debate that the Minister of Health and Wellness has said that he's not going to do that.

I think it's important enough here to quote from last night's debate. I'm quoting the Minister of Health and Wellness.

I ask for interim funding of $1.85 billion, enough to pay for health care until the end of June. This is prebudget funding, so like others who have commented on this issue, I cannot give details now.

Those will be available postbudget.

So he is not prepared and indeed he says that he cannot – it's not that he will not; he cannot – give details now.

He goes on to say a few sentences later, "Details on my final budget and how it is allocated will not be available until budget day," April 8, 2003, which is about three weeks from now. He finally concluded his brief comments – and that's all he made; the only comments he made last night are a few paragraphs worth addressing almost $2 billion. He concluded by saying:

The delay in our provincial budget is unavoidable if we are to table a budget that best meets the needs of this province and the people who live and work here. Interim funding for health care is equally essential so health services can continue uninterrupted until the budget is tabled.

Well, I don't doubt that we need to find money to keep the health system going, and nobody on this side of the House is going to argue that we shouldn't, but the process is fundamentally broken here. I've heard other ministers use this terminology today, that they cannot – they cannot – provide details until the budget is dropped. Then I wonder if we aren't in a situation where in effect they would be violating parliamentary procedure in terms of anticipating the budget by giving details. If that is the case, then I wonder why we're here in the Legislature debating this at all.

The effect here is that we might as well return to the system of special warrants that was in operation for many years under the Conservative government. It was, of course, the current Premier. I think he insisted, he promised, he swore that he wouldn't use special warrants, but in effect that's what we've got here. We've got a request for $1.8 billion, yet we have no ability for meaningful discussion of that money in this Legislature. So let's call a spade a spade. Let's be honest here and maybe just handle it through special warrants. At least that way there wouldn't be any pretext of meaningful legislative debate on these issues. That's my view on this.

I'm also distressed about the whole process because of the Auditor General's recommendations, and I'm now referring to the annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta 2001-2002. Recommendation 1, Improve Internal Controls: "We recommend that the Department of Finance, working with the other departments and the Alberta Corporate Service Centre, improve internal controls." It goes on to list a series of specifics.

Then it goes on a couple of pages later, recommendation 2:

We recommend that the Deputy Minister of Executive Council, working with other Deputy Ministers, establish an internal audit function to provide assurance that significant government systems and risks are managed effectively.

Risk management. Here we are being asked to approve $1.8 billion in health funding alone, $5 billion in total funding with no detail. Talk about risk and a breakdown in risk management.

Then recommendation 3 from the Auditor General:

We recommend that the Ministry of Finance, working with other ministries, develop comprehensive standards for preparing ministry business plans. We further recommend that Deputy Ministers and the Ministry of Finance ensure the standards are followed.

Yet here we are in a situation where we are approving more or less 25 percent of next year's budget with no significant detail, none whatsoever. It's unacceptable, and I need that to be absolutely and perfectly clear on the record.

We've been arguing for years in the opposition that there's a much better way to manage the provincial budget system, and maybe – maybe – this government will move in that direction. They're showing some signs of doing so. But, frankly, I'm very concerned, and I'd be prepared to bet that next year the budget will be late again. Maybe the Minister of Finance can tell me exactly what year was the last year in which the budget was voted on and approved before the beginning of the fiscal year. It would be useful to know. It wasn't last year, and I know it wasn't the year before. It hasn't been as long as I've been in this Assembly, which is all of three years, but I'd be interested to know as a matter of fact when it was.

Now, we've argued for a radically different approach to managing the budget process, and to the government's credit they are gradually coming around to our perspective. Their wisdom is growing, but they have a long way to go before they catch up to us. What we've argued for, first of all, is to stabilize the wild misses in estimating resource revenues, to work from a five-year moving average based on the previous five-years' resource revenues so that we can smooth out these spikes and valleys in resource revenues and increase the accuracy of our resource revenue projections.

As the Member for Edmonton-Highlands was saying a few minutes ago, we have, I think he said, in the last 10 years missed the target on resource revenue projections by over $20 billion. That's a staggering problem.

Mr. Norris: If he said it, it must be true, eh?

Dr. Taft: The Minister of Economic Development is wondering if it's true. It would be easy to confirm that.

Mr. Norris: That's your source?

Dr. Taft: That's one of my sources, yeah. What's yours? I'm wondering what the Minister of Economic Development's source is around this. [interjection] He doesn't have any. Okay. I guess he doesn't have any.

The Minister of Finance has made clear – and I sympathize with her – the difficulties in picking the right figure for resource revenue predictions, but if we used a five-year moving average, I think that would smooth that out.

The second thing we've argued for to improve the budget process is a fiscal stability fund, and we are seeing the government, after years and years of hammering away on them, finally moving on this. We want to ensure that funding for priority programs – health, education, children, infrastructure – is stable and predictable, and fundamentally it needs to be based on need, not on fluctuating oil and gas prices. Somebody's need for hip surgery or a child's need for a proper education or an impoverished family's need for the next meal does not change with the price of oil and gas. We need to break that bind that this government is in, establish base needs, and fund to those levels and then manage the swings in oil and gas prices. So by establishing a fiscal stability fund or an equivalent to one, I think this government is taking the right direction, and I do look forward to seeing that in next year's budget.

The government is also moving on one of our ideas with an infrastructure enhancement fund. They're calling it, I think, a capital fund. A good idea. That will allow us to get over the problems of on-again, off-again infrastructure funding, which plagues health care systems, schools, roads, all those basic services that the public needs. We have argued it for years, and the government has to some extent done this, but I'm concerned that they're losing focus.

A three-year business plan. The three-year plans that the government has produced have become less and less reliable, I feel, as the government has lost some of its commitment to this vision, so we see one year to the next all kinds of things moving. My colleague from Edmonton-Centre was referring to changes from one year to the next in the vision statements for the Gaming ministry, for example, dramatic changes, which make it impossible to track year by year the changes that are occurring in the business plans and really make the three-year business planning process very, very weak indeed.

So we can turn now to some of the specifics. I think a number of these issues have been covered by my colleagues, and I will cede the floor to collect some more information and see if there are any other members of either side, especially the government side, who want to make any comments whatsoever on the fact that we're being asked to spend $5 billion here without any detail.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have an opportunity again to speak to the 2003-2004 interim supply estimates, and I'd like to start with a few minutes looking at the sums put forward by the Department of Children's Services. The amount here is $225,075,000. It's a huge sum. I think that there has been a great deal of activity going on in the Department of Children's Services with the reduction of the number of regions in the province from 18 to 10 and the consequent enlargement of those regions. Some of the regions are very, very large right now. The changes are calling into question one of the pillars that the recent changes to Children's Services was built upon, and that was the community-based pillar, where we would move from a provincewide system to one that really reflected the needs and the wishes of local communities. Yet everything that seems to be happening recently seems to be working towards the erosion of that pillar so that community involvement is becoming less rather than more. The huge size of the regions, I think, will contribute to making local community input more difficult.

So there are a lot of changes going in, and there were some very interesting questions raised in the family day home and out-of-school child care report prepared by KPMG for the department by Jordan Cleland. I'd like to ask some questions or get some information, if I can, in terms of the allocation we have before us and how much of that allocation is directed to rectifying or acting on some of the recommendations from the Cleland report.

The family day home program was created in 1980, and it was recognized that there was a need between formal centre-based facilities for children and then fully unregulated baby-sitting services. So it was recognized at that time that there was a need for something in between to be created. The family day home program provides care now to approximately 6,000 preschool Alberta children, and as the name signifies, it provides care for youngsters that's regulated by government standards. The care is provided by caregivers in their homes, but the system is administered by 88 community-based agencies that hold contracts with the day home providers. Those day home providers themselves, then, are under contract to child and family services. A good number of those 6,600 children are subsidized by government. Close to 40 percent receive some sort of subsidy from the provincial government, and the subsidy is paid to one of the agencies.

Now, one of the concerns that Cleland raised was the lack of an adequate supply of family day homes in general among the child and family services authorities and that there was a shortage of care spaces, particularly for the care of infants, and infants are considered from birth to 36 months of age. So I'd like to know if there are funds in this interim supply that will address the problem of trying to identify and bring onstream a number of spaces. Are there incentives being created? Are there strategies in place that will result in more care spaces in family day care homes being created?

The second question I'd like to have addressed is the concern that the family day home agencies were operating in an environment that was rather loose and that there was not the kind of accountability by those agencies that one might expect in terms of an agency that is responsible for carrying out government programs. So I'd like to know if there are plans to use funds here to tighten up the regulations or the parameters in which family day homes operate.

One of the issues that Cleland identified was the practice of paying a differential administrative fee, based on the age of the child, to the agency and not to the parent. In centre-based day care the subsidy paid on behalf of a child is dependent on whether the child is an infant or a toddler, because the day cares then turn around themselves and charge that differential fee to parents. There's a higher fee, of course, if you have to look after children who require higher levels of care, and it seems to make sense. But the differential fees are not paid to the actual care providers. The agency gets a differential fee for the homes that it has under contract, but that differential fee is not passed on to the person who is actually providing the care for the youngster. A flat $300 low-income subsidy is paid to the home on behalf of parents, and it's regardless of the age of the child to be cared for. It was a problem that was identified, and I wondered if that problem is being addressed with the funds that we're going to pass in terms of the interim supply budget. It seems only logical that you would pass on and pay a differential fee on behalf of the parents to the provider, and it seems to be a problem that needs to be addressed. It might result in more day care homes coming forward or people willing to provide care in their homes for children were that differential fee actually passed on to them. So I would like some information about the situation and what's being done.

One of the huge areas for child care, of course, is rural Alberta. Cleland spends quite a bit of time chronicling the difficulties of providing day care homes in communities that are remote from urban centres. The agencies themselves don't want to get involved in putting in place systems because of the huge distances that are involved and the costs of administering a network of day care homes in remote regions of the province. What it means is that for a large number of rural Albertans there is no option to place their youngster in a day care home. It's not just the remote regions. The report notes that even in a centre such as Brooks there's difficulty.

So the problem of rural Alberta and trying to come up with some solutions in terms of providing day care facilities or home care facilities still persists, and my question would be: what are the plans from the department? What does the ministry intend to do to address that problem? The Cleland report puts forward a couple of alternatives. One is where they have a registry that would have people register their home and become a provider, and I think the report indicated that it's used in British Columbia. That's evidently been rejected by authorities here for fear of the lack of regulation and lack of policing, the inability of the department to monitor the activities in those homes. The Cleland report does put that forward as one possible solution to the rural problem. They call it the registry model of standards administration. Again, as I said, it's one model that's been proposed to try to address the problem of providing day home service in rural Alberta.

Going back just for a minute to the provision of private care homes, one of the barriers that Cleland identified to increasing regulated family day homes was the 1994 changes that were made to the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act. Those changes changed the number of children that could be allowed in an unregulated setting from three to six. In the report Cleland says that this change was seen as an almost universal answer given by stakeholders as to one of the difficulties they had in trying to meet demand for homes. It's a matter of judgment, I guess, how many children should be in those homes, but at the time it's acting as a barrier to the growth of those kinds of homes.

A couple of questions follow, too, in terms of the operation of the family day home care program within the child and family services authorities. Cleland seems to have identified two or three things that work against the successful operation of the program. The report points to the failure of the authorities sharing with each other successful experiences. So my question would be: are there funds or are there programs in this allocation of $225,075,000 that will encourage the authorities to share information and to share successes with respect to family day home care programs? If there are, I would appreciate knowing what those incentives are for that to happen. It seems to make only good sense that we don't have 10 authorities at this point trying to reinvent the wheel if there have been successes that others could profit from knowing about.

The other thing – and I think it's most disturbing and something we've noticed in the Assembly, Mr. Chairman – is that there's a climate of cost containment identified, that cost containment seems to dominate decision-making in the child and family services authorities and the department. I guess it's that budget pressure from Alberta Children's Services that has created this environment. I think it raises questions about whether or not the best solutions are being sought and the best solutions are being put into practice when the overriding concern is not children and their care, but the overriding concern is cost containment. Cleland points that out as an observation on the funding for children's services and points to the fact that the Children's Services department has some difficulty in getting the kinds of budget allocations from the general revenue fund and some difficulties in the general budgeting process, getting the funds that would lead to that climate being changed and there being a refocus on the needs of children and the resources for programs being in place without a major concern being cost containment.

I think it's telling that in 1994 the budget allocation for child care in Alberta was $70.7 million. In 2002 the figure has dropped to $67 million, and I think that in part results in the kind of climate that Cleland reported.

We had asked, Mr. Chairman, on many occasions during question period and when we had other opportunities in the Legislature for the Cleland report. It was not that long ago that we actually got the report. I think it's a very useful document, and I think it points to some concerns that need addressing. It's my hope that the allocation of resources that we have in the interim supply bill before us will be directed to following up some of the solutions that Cleland has suggested, with the result that children in day homes and children needing out-of-school care get the kind of care that they need and deserve.

I only have a few minutes left – and I hope that I'll get another chance to speak to the interim supply this afternoon, Mr. Chairman – but I would like to ask a couple of questions. One is with respect to Executive Council. Under Executive Council there was an increase in Public Affairs' expenses in 2000-2001 from $8,954,000 to . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the time allocated has elapsed. The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in follow-up to some questions which I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands referenced a short while ago. I think there was a discussion he was pursuing with respect to community leagues. Now, community leagues do not receive any operational funding through the Department of Community Development. I believe the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General commented on some other aspects with regard to the capital side of the equation, where they may be applying for assistance through the CFEP or the community initiatives program.

Specific to Community Development, the agencies that I'm privileged to work with, which include the Alberta Foundation for the Arts; the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation; the Wild Rose Foundation; the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation; the Alberta Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Education Fund Advisory Committee; and the Alberta film development program – none of those organizations, to my knowledge, provide operational dollars to the community leagues. However, with respect to the Wild Rose Foundation, particularly, I do recall that some community leagues may have been funded for some equipment purchases. I'm just not fresh on when that was, Mr. Chair, but something rings a bell to me that items like tables, chairs, perhaps computers, and some of those kinds of things that might help them out may have been funded somewhere along the line as capital-related or equipment-related purchases.

The other interesting part of this question, though, for the member's information is to look and see how a particular community league exists in terms of its status and whether or not it's a large enough organization to own its own hall, for example, and therefore they may be registered as a society, in which case they might be eligible for certain programs in certain departments.

Now, the other part is with respect to the centennial program. I commented at some length earlier about the Alberta centennial legacies grant program. If a community league is formally registered as a society, then technically, of course, they would be able to apply for a centennial-related grant, but I don't believe any actually did, pursuant to the March 1, 2001, deadline. That's, of course, the one that is unfortunately still deferred. But I hope that would shed a little bit of light on the Member for Edmonton-Highlands' questions.

The other issue he asked about was the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission, and I think his question was with respect to the length of time it takes to process some of the alleged complaints that are received. Now, before I get into trying to comment on this area, I want to make it very clear, Mr. Chair, that the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission operates independent of government. This is not something that any minister interferes in directly or otherwise because they have their own independence, and I know that they enjoy that.

Some of the issues that the member would likely be interested to know he can certainly read up on in the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. This would outline a little more clearly for the hon. member what some of the possible grounds for discrimination under this act could be. I'll just reference a few of them for the purposes of the record, which will help me answer the other part of his question. There's a section in the act that deals with code of conduct and specifically discrimination regarding publications and notices; discrimination regarding goods, services, accommodation, facilities; discrimination regarding tenancy; equal pay; employment practices; applications and advertisements regarding employment; membership in trade unions; and so on and so on. Equally important and of great interest to the hon. member would likely be some references to the process, which is the thrust of his question. He can find some of those answers starting on page 10, I believe it is, of the act, where it talks about enforcement: who may make a complaint, settlement of the complaint, director's powers re complaint, investigator's powers re the complaint, and judge's order, and so on.

Now, what's important in having referenced that, by way of background, Mr. Chair, is the fact that we have received more complaints over this last while, I'm told, and I think that based on what I've been hearing in the community and elsewhere, the complaints are not only increasing in number, but they're also increasing in terms of complexity. So it is taking longer for those complaints to be addressed by the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission and their staff, but we do have about 40 full-time staff, I'm told, at the Human Rights and Citizenship Commission, who do their best to process these complaints as quickly as possible. But I think the first thing that has to be understood is that the nature of the alleged complaint has to really be discussed with the complainant by the staff in order to first determine what the grounds are and if there are deemed to be grounds that are in effect addressed within the jurisdiction of the act itself.

The commission staff are available – and numerous of them work in Edmonton, obviously, and others work in Calgary – and they do try to determine these kinds of things with the complainant at the outset. If the nature of the complaint or the submission of complaint is such that it does fit the terms and conditions as outlined in the act – in other words, there are grounds or there are felt to be grounds for the alleged complaint – then one of the staff members will undertake to his or her best abilities to try and meet with or speak with the complainant and review the matter, and then I believe they try to approach this from a conciliatory point of view and try to arrive at some kind of conciliation to try and bring the two parties together and try and settle the issue. In the event that the complexity of the case is such that conciliation is not possible, I believe the process then would be to try and engage in some form of an investigation, which could involve an investigator from within or, in some cases, hired from the general public, someone who has, obviously, expertise in the area. And we also have the process whereby panels can conduct hearings. So there's quite a lot to this process, and it does get quite complicated.

Now, one of the reasons why there is frequently a bit of a backlog in the system in terms of reviewing and processing these complaints has to do with the complexity that I referenced earlier but also with the fact that we have an increasing population in this province. I think we're very fortunate and very blessed to have a population that is growing, oh, roughly at the rate of about 40,000 individuals, at least from in-migration from other provinces, and of course our natural population growth added to that simply means that we have more individuals that would be eligible to file complaints should they feel they have been in some way violated.

In that regard, Mr. Chair, I do recall that some additional moneys were added to the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission last year to try and catch up some of the so-called backlog in this area. We are doing our level best to ensure that complaints get addressed as expeditiously as possible and responded to and decided upon. I'm very proud that the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission has a very dedicated staff, very hardworking individuals that are very knowledgeable in this area. In fact, of the many different departments that I've seen in operation over the past several years, I can tell you that the Human Rights and Citizenship Commission has one of the lowest overall staff turnovers, which is indeed indicative of the commitment and dedication of those staff members, led by a very fine chief commissioner, who does his best with the team to look after the protection of human rights in this province.

The final thing that I would just like to say is that we are very proud of the strong educational programs that we try to provide through the Alberta Advisory Committee on the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Education Fund. They are a very dedicated group, as well, who focus on educational programs that help eliminate some of the kinds of circumstances that might precipitate complaints coming forward to the commission itself. In that regard I would tell you that 80 percent or thereabouts, I believe, of the complaints that come to the Human Rights and Citizenship Commission are in one way or another targeting employment or employment practices. They are at least related to some form of employment-related complaint. So that having been said, Mr. Chairman, I think the Human Rights and Citizenship Commission does an excellent job. There's no doubt that human rights are important in this province and will continue to be.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I continue to be interested in the process here, and I've done a little bit of quick research, going back to the year before I became an MLA, to see when the budget was approved then. I don't know when it was approved, but I think the Minister of Justice might be interested. He personally introduced the Appropriation Act in the year 2000 on the last day that the House sat in the fiscal year 1999-2000, March 23, 2000. I haven't dug through here to see when the Appropriation Act was actually approved, but it would be interesting to see when was the last time a budget was actually approved before the fiscal year began. [interjection] I could keep digging. Maybe I will, just for the sheer joy of it.

Now, I'm wondering – and this is a serious question; again maybe the Government House Leader, the Minister of Justice, or somebody could advise on this – is there any danger of a minister breaking some kind of parliamentary protocol if they do respond with details on this bill? Are they in some way going to be violating provisions controlling the release of information on the budget? Is there any parliamentary procedural problem with their responding to details? Does anybody care to answer?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it's commonly understood in parliamentary jurisdictions that the provision of budget information prior to the delivery of the budget is a breach, and sometimes it's such a serious breach that you would then call for the resignation of the minister.

Now, in recent times, of course, we know parliamentary traditions do change. We see on the federal scale, for example, consultations with the Minister of Finance and various groups ahead of the budget and a committee which actually makes recommendations on those sorts of issues. On the provincial side, of course, there are sometimes comments made through the Speech from the Throne or through other vehicles, but I think it still is understood as a parliamentary convention that the new initiatives and changes that are being brought forward in the budget are first given to the House through the vehicle of the budget. So even through the discussion of supplementary supply one would hope that ministers and members of the House would honour that parliamentary convention, that the debate on supplementary supply is not intended to anticipate the debate on the budget but, rather, to justify the interim supply of money until you can have the budget debate.

Dr. Taft: I appreciate the minister's efforts. I'm not sure that that leaves me any more clear. I guess we can just try and see what the response is.

I was going to ask some questions of the minister of health or at least see where we might get on those. I know that the minister said last night that he cannot provide details.

Ms Blakeman: That he wouldn't.

Dr. Taft: The Member for Edmonton-Centre is saying that he wouldn't. In fact, Hansard reads that he cannot. So I'm not wanting to trip anybody up here, but we can try.

The basic point here is staying on the theme of procedures for the moment but focusing more and more on health care. I'm sure the minister is aware that the entire business planning cycle for regional health authorities has been a real concern of mine. This is simply a subset issue of the larger one that I addressed a few minutes ago, which the whole budget process of the government falls behind. That then ripples through, of course, the Department of Health and Wellness down to the regional health authorities and their business planning cycle, and we had, I think, several dramatic examples of that problem in the fiscal year we're just concluding now. In fact, I'm certain that not one regional health authority had their business plan approved on time in terms of the fiscal year. I'm not sure that any even had it done by the end of the first quarter of the fiscal year, and I know of a couple that went long beyond that.

In fact, the Lakeland regional health authority's business plan, I think, never, ever did get approved, and eventually what happened is that the Lakeland health authority was eliminated without its plan ever being approved. Well, in fact, I guess Lakeland still exists. So I'm not sure whether the Lakeland authority's business plan ever did get approved through the entire fiscal year and if it'll just fall into the history books at the end of this month. I was just speaking an hour ago or so with media about the Lakeland situation and the situation regarding the new regional health authority 7, which replaces Lakeland, and their call to involve the Auditor General in their whole budgeting process and the interregional budget issues around the transfer of funds and billing. So we had a complete breakdown of the business planning process for the Lakeland health authority.

Similarly, there was, I guess, a complete breakdown for the WestView regional health authority's business planning cycle too, and as everybody here knows, the WestView regional health authority was eliminated midway through the year last year.

So these kinds of problems, which seem to be made even more extreme now, are making it almost impossible, I feel, or making it exceedingly difficult to effectively manage our health budget, which accounts for some 30 percent of the total provincial government expenditures. So I would put this question to the Minister of Health and Wellness. He may not respond; I think he said last night that he cannot. This is a question for him, though. How can the regional health authorities' business planning cycle be improved? What does his department plan to do to improve that process so that we don't have the single largest department of this government implementing business plans that are already six months out of date?

Now, we had some discussion on this issue yesterday in Public Accounts Committee with the Minister of Finance. It was a fairly candid conversation, as they typically are with her, and I appreciated her comments, but it seems to me that we need to work year by year to get this cycle on track more effectively.

So I'm wondering, to her or to the minister of health, what is realistic to expect for next year. Are we going to be moving on to a process where, perhaps, at the beginning of September the budgets are being lined up, as they are internally anyways? We might actually see the budget for the following year introduced in this Legislature in February. I recognize that there are limitations because of federal policies and because of many other unknowns, but to be honest, those unknowns are always there. They're always going to be there. I think we would all agree that it would be a more effective planning process if the budget was introduced, debated, and approved before we began the fiscal year.

So I don't know if the Minister of Finance is prepared to make any comments on what might be realistic to expect next year in this regard. Would you like to take an opportunity on that? Yes? No?

Mrs. Nelson: No. Maybe. I don't know. When you sit down.

Dr. Taft: When I sit down. Well, I could sit down right now if you want.

Clearly, there are a host of fundamental questions to be raised about the department of health's spending here, the $1.8 billion that we're going to be approving without any detail. I mean, some of the details I would be interested in are details around capital expenditures versus operating expenditures. In fact, if I could make a general suggestion, it would be delightful if the budget actually summarized the entire department's spending vitals categories. It used to be done years ago. It was done in the Department of Health and Wellness, or under its previous names: hospitals and medical care, and so on. Up until about eight or nine years ago they would actually summarize expenditures by capital and operating. That was helpful to know because we could keep a clear sense of what was happening with infrastructure in the health system.

Now it feels to me like the system is more difficult than ever in that regard. We have the Department of Infrastructure involved and the department of health involved. We have the regional health authorities, who each follow their own plans. So it makes it very, very difficult to follow. But I would be interested to know: of this $1.8 billion how much is going to capital and how much is going to operating?

I'd also be interested to know how much is going to long-term care versus home care versus acute care and versus other services. Again, that used to be made very clear in budgets of several years past. It is now very difficult to track because each regional authority puts forward its own plans, and those are not summarized in the budget, at least not for the public to see. So we can't follow very easily, for example, what the multiyear trends are in long-term care spending or in acute care spending or in home care spending or in public health spending. That sort of detail would be very helpful. It used to be provided, and surely it exists somewhere in the system and could be fairly readily compiled by the vast staff that the government employs.

It also used to be the case that long-term care funding was broken down by public long-term care facility, not-for-profit long-term care facility, and private, for-profit long-term care facility. That, again, was helpful. Year by year you could follow the trends. How was the long-term care funding dollar divided up? How much of it went to for-profit long-term care facilities? How much of it stayed in the public sector? How much of it went to nonprofit groups like Bethany care homes and Good Samaritan long-term care services? So I would be interested in that kind of information here, and, as a heads up, I'll be asking for that in the budget when it is eventually introduced.

I think the public also has a right to know how much of this $1.8 billion is going to be spent on P3s, especially on P3s that involve public/private partnerships with the for-profit, private-sector partner. For all we know, there are substantial new initiatives being proposed here that will be launched in the next three months covered by this interim supply bill. Initiatives on P3s? We don't know. So there's no possible way that I'll be able to support this. The evidence on P3s when it comes to health care is not encouraging. The evidence is largely negative. In the long run they cost more, and often in the short term they cost more as well. There are already examples in Alberta of P3s with the for-profit health care sector that raise really serious questions. So I would like to know: is any of this $1.8 billion allocated under Health and Wellness going to public/private partnerships? A perfectly reasonable question. The public has a right to know. I'm sure my colleague from Edmonton-Centre agrees, and my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods agrees, and all the other opposition colleagues agree. The public has a right to know where these billions of dollars are going.

I know as well that there are real concerns – and they are being brought to me repeatedly, and I raised them earlier today in question period – around expenditures and plans for physiotherapy and other community rehab services. There is no possible way to know how much is going to be spent on those programs in this $1.8 billion. Will this government, will this minister, provide us with that information? I assume the answer is a flat no. I frankly think that's appalling. It's appalling that we're being asked to approve this money without any detail.

I could go on at length about health. I may continue to do so, but I have some questions about another area that I am critic for, and that's Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. This winter the issue that had been brewing for years around the access to Crown lands of oilfield suppliers and contractors blew up into the front pages of the newspapers. It was certainly brought to our attention forcefully by oilfield contractors and by members of aboriginal communities. The government eventually responded. A certain amount of confusion. We heard figures thrown around about the minister of aboriginal affairs hoping for $20 million or $25 million. The Premier said she would get $6 million. I'm wondering if any of that money is anywhere in this interim supply estimate. Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development has here a $10,175,000 allocation. How much of that, if any, is going to address this issue of access of oilfield contractors to Crown lands in the north? I would love to hear the minister's answer to that question. Is some of the $6 million that we believe she's going to be allocated in here? I don't know. Maybe she will have the courtesy to tell us that.

So, Mr. Chairman, there are many, many unanswered questions in this mystery. It's a mystery book, really; isn't it? The $5 billion mystery. I don't think this government is going to help the taxpayer solve this mystery, certainly not for many weeks to come. But we will try to penetrate the fog and get an answer on where this $5 billion is going.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

4:50

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I've been told that last night I yelled at people, and I'm sorry for raising my voice. I don't take back one word that I said, but I'm sorry if I yelled at people.

I was and continue to be absolutely appalled and astonished at the government's arrogance around this whole discussion of interim appropriation. I've now heard a number of sort of possible causes and reasons put forward by members of the government, and I just want to talk a little bit about that, and then I have some specific questions about what we see in front of us. But it seems to me, you know, that the Minister of Justice, in defense of the lack of detail that we were getting, even put forward the proposal that it was ridiculous that the opposition should be so forward in even asking for detail on this amount of money. I maintain that $5 billion is an enormous amount of money.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order
Imputing Motives

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), with respect to casting aspersions, I never suggested for a moment that it was astonishing that anybody should ask any questions. I just tried to put it on the record last night that we were in interim supply and that questions relative to the interim supply discussions ought to be within the appropriate context of interim supply rather than trying to move towards discussion of the budget and anticipate what might come in the budget. When people are asking for detailed business plans and people are asking for performance measures and those sorts of things, that anticipates the budget. So that was the context in which my remarks were made, and any allegation of other motives is not true.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I think we're arguing the same point. The minister was saying:

to expect, as is suggested by members of the opposition, that the budget should be prejudged in the interim supply estimates – with respect to what might be increased, what new programs might be in place, in other words, the detail what people might expect in terms of what is in the budget – is ridiculous.

So I would maintain that it is perfectly justified and that the minister in fact has suggested that asking questions by the members of the opposition around detail in this interim supply was ridiculous.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, a similar point of order was raised last night, and this chair did clarify that in these supplementary estimates that we're dealing with, there is no compulsion upon anyone to ask a question, nor is there compulsion on anyone to respond to that question. So I hope that this reclarifies the argument once again.

Hon. member for Edmonton-Centre, you have the floor now.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. So what we have here is the issue of an interim supply, the opposition's desire to get detail from the government as to what this money is for. A number of times the government has said: well, you get the budget on April 8. I see here, again, a difference in interpretation and time lines in that the government seems to be saying, "Once you get the budget on April 8, all things are answered," and there's a presumption there that the budget would then be passed. From the opposition's side we're saying: yeah, sure the budget comes forward on April 8, but it isn't discussed and debated and actually accepted until just prior to May 15. So there's a difference in time lines here as well. [interjection] Yeah. I just put that out, April 8 to just prior to May 15.

The opposition was saying: you know, you're asking us to stand by for a long time to approve this money before we get the kind of detail that we're looking for, because, indeed, we do go through a process of questioning each and every minister looking for that detail. Well, we're looking for some of that detail now because you're asking for some of that money now, $5 billion worth.

I raise the issue again now that I can look the Minister of Finance in the eye and suggest that if it is so difficult for the government to be able to present a budget with enough time to debate it and pass it prior to the fiscal year-end, then may I recommend that the government and the Minister of Finance look at changing the year-end. That happened previously. Our year-end used to be the end of December, and it wasn't possible to accomplish everything that needed to be done by that time, so we now have a fiscal year-end of the end of March. If, indeed, we're having to wait for federal money, then, which comes some time in between the 1st of January and the end of March, I'm presuming is what's being assumed there, then fine. Move the fiscal year-end so that we can actually have the budget debated and accepted before we start the fiscal year. It is inappropriate in my opinion to be constantly bringing an interim supply before.

Now, we've also had a great deal of discussion back and forth about whether ministers would give any detail at all, and I'm thinking back to when the current Premier assumed his position, and at that time he said: no more special warrants. You know, the government is going to be open and transparent and available to answer questions and defend its budget; therefore, we would have interim supplies. But now we have a position where there's an interim supply and ministers are in some cases flat out refusing to answer any questions. So if the government is really not going to follow a process of open debate and answering questions during interim supply, then why don't you just go back to the special warrants? Except that that would be breaking your Premier's own promise. So I call upon the Premier to enforce his promise to us of open debate during the interim appropriation.

Lastly, on this sort of overriding issue of getting information on the interim appropriation, at one point one of the ministers last night – and, I'm sorry, I don't remember which – said: "Well, we do three-year business plans. Just look in the three-year business plan and you will have the answer. The money I'm spending is all part of what's in that three-year business plan." So I did that. I got the business plans, and I got the business plans from 2001 to '04 and 2002 to '05, and I thought: "Okay. Great. Then I can look this up and all my questions will be answered. I'll be able to tell how much of their money they're asking for or what they're going to use it for." And, oh, my goodness, when I start to look at it . . .

An Hon. Member: Oh, my goodness, pumpkin.

Ms Blakeman: Indeed. Looking at the Justice business plan from 2001-2004, when I look under expenses for core business, in this first one the courts are given a target budget for 2003-04, which is the budget we're about to go into here, of $92.445 million. When I look at the next year, it's $99.580 million. So which number am I supposed to take, Mr. Minister? Let me look at another one. Legal services to vulnerable people. In one of them it appears as $84.182 million. In the next one it appears as $80.158 million. Which number am I supposed to take since all of this detail was available in these three-year plans? The plans are different.

This is the point I was trying to make last night. This government really did step forward and take the lead in putting these business plans out there, and then you didn't cement the plan in place. You didn't cement the process in place. You just left it. You walked away from it. You didn't enforce it. You didn't keep it up. As a result, these get less and less helpful. Your three-year plans three years out are not very good. You refer people like me, saying: all the questions you want, answered in here. And I look. Well, Mr.

Minister, which number would you like me to take? For prosecutions would you like me to take the $30.303 million, or would you like me to take the $40.934 million?

So when you're asking for an amount of money to be voted as part of your budget, and you're asking for $71.335 million, and I'm saying, "What's this for? How is it going to be allocated?" and I'm told, "Well, look in the three-year business plans," which three-year business plan would you like me to look at? Because the numbers are all different. Would you like another example? Let's look at revenue. When we're talking revenue, again, forecast for the year 2003-04, we have revenue of $80.079 million. I look in the other one. What's the revenue? Oh, $100.954 million. Which figure would you like me to take? How am I supposed to understand the detail when we have that kind of a difference? I mean, that's $20 million between those two figures. So this should work. I should be able to look at this and get some kind of consistency and continuity from those three-year plans. But what's happening is that everything changes all the time, and they say: "Oh, well, you know, we're improving, and we're updating constantly. We've got to allow these figures to change and roll over." Okay. Well, shall we look, then, at some goals? They should be the same – right? – because goals are goals. You're just going to keep those in place.

Well, all right. Let's do that. Let's look at the goals for Government Services. I'll go to one book: goal 1, efficient licensing and registration services. Goal 1 in the other book: a fair and effective marketplace in Alberta with informed consumers and businesses and a high standard of conduct. Which goal would you like me to work from? They're both goal 1, two different plans. Which one am I supposed to take? There's a lack of consistency of what's being delivered in these three-year plans. Should I look at core businesses? They're even changing. In one case I looked at – here it is – the actual goals themselves.

Let's look at Gaming. All right. In one of them we have a mission statement. That's a fairly significant core, base from which the entire department operates. You shouldn't be changing mission statements every year, but in one here we have a mission statement that appears as: to ensure integrity, transparency, disclosure, public consultation, and accountability in Alberta's gaming and liquor industries to achieve the maximum benefit for Albertans. Well, that should be identical in the next one; shouldn't it? No. What we have is: to ensure integrity and accountability in Alberta's gaming and liquor industries and to achieve the maximum benefit for Albertans from gaming and liquor activities. They're different goals. This is in one year, folks.

Now, pick one. Which one is going to appear in your three-year plan for the budget that you're about to bring out, that we're waiting for? You know, you're not consistent here, and you're not sticking to your three-year business plans. When you're changing your mission statement, what is it you want me to stick to? You guys are telling me that everything I want to know is in here. Oh, yeah? You change your mission statement. You change your goals. You change your numbers. You're totally inconsistent in what you're offering here. So I just thought I'd point that out, because I really think you're letting down the people of Alberta with all of this.

Okay. I have some specific questions on departments. Yes, back to the Minister of Justice. Thank you for answering my Written Question 7, but the minister and I have had an ongoing conversation for some six years now – would it be? – over the maintenance enforcement program. In 1998 there was an MLA review, and in it there were strong recommendations, accepted by the ministry, that there would be an update and a new integrated computer system that would be put in place. I had continued to ask questions about what the progress of that was and was some surprised in 2000, when I asked a written question, to be told that they were just then tendering for this new computer system. I've continued to ask those questions, so I've asked it one more time. I'm now told – and this is fascinating – that there's a maintenance enforcement tracking system called METS. It does all kinds of wonderful things and staff are able to update things and yada, yada, yada. But, actually, in the second paragraph there's going to be a new integrated system. The program is constructing a new maintenance enforcement management system called MIMS to replace the aging MET system.

An Hon. Member: What does MIMS stand for?

Ms Blakeman: Maintenance information management system.

So could the minister please clarify then? Of this money that he's asking for, the $71 million as part of the larger budget that we don't have and we don't have any detail on and does not appear in any consistent way in any of the business plans that are available – is this MIMS the long-awaited integrated computer system that was recommended in the 1998 – 1998 – recommendation?

Mr. Hancock: It's being built over four years, as you well know.

Ms Blakeman: Four years? No, I didn't know that actually, Mr. Minister. That's why I keep asking you these questions on the record, so that we can continue to track this publicly.

So this MIMS is the long-awaited new system, and the MET system is on its way out. Okay. Well, I'm putting on the record what the minister is sort of mouthing to me across the well here. We can now look forward to the MIM system in the fall of 2004. Fascinating. I'll have another written question next spring asking how we're doing on this system, which will have now taken six years to get in place. Six years those staff have been working with antiquated systems. I can't believe this. Anyway, it must just make Calgary-Glenmore spin.

All right. A question to the Minister of Seniors. Of the money that's being asked for, that being $73,115,000, which, I think, is again 25 or 30 percent of the budget to operate for 10 weeks, I'm wondering how much of that money is being set aside to deal with the increase in the budget to cover the costs of providing those seniors that are eligible with the additional money to assist them with their high utility bills caused by natural gas and electricity deregulation in this province. If I can get an answer to that, please.

Now, the next question is back to Community Development. He has a review out there for the protection of persons in care. I am wondering: of the money that he's asking for, which would be $209,510,000 or perhaps the $265,000 for capital investment, how much is to cover this review committee or the implementation of this Protection for Persons in Care Act? Of course, with that is going to go my standard questions: are you developing standards of care, and will this act be expanded, then, to include people that are not in institutional care?

Now, this next question goes to the minister responsible for insurance and for motor vehicles. I think this a joint question to Government Services and Transportation.

An Hon. Member: Treasury, actually.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I'm sorry. Treasury. All right. Great.

These are questions around why we have the increased insurance rates, going up because we have so many accidents in Alberta. I have a constituent, Jeffrey Streifling, who has written to me a number of times with suggestions on simple things that could be put in place through legislation to cut down some of the insurance claims – so this is less of an insurance question – like a law requiring properly adjusted head restraints. We require people to wear seat belts that are properly adjusted, and he is pointing out that we don't have anything that requires a properly adjusted head restraint, which would cut down on the number of whiplash claims.

An Hon. Member: It works in NASCAR.

Ms Blakeman: "It works in NASCAR" is one of the comments.

I make note in this that not all head restraints, in fact, are adjustable. A number of them are fixed in place, so that to me becomes a much longer process of negotiating with the car companies. But he does make a good point about the head restraints and how that might be able to affect those insurance rates.

He also makes a number of suggestions, and perhaps – I don't know – this possibility of legislation development is included under the money that I can't get details on under Transportation. He points out that it's impossible for the police to be able to lay charges on things like following too close. They basically just wait for an accident to happen and then hope that they can actually lay a following-too-close charge on them, but they can't sort of intervene while it's going on. He points out that drivers should satisfy one of four requirements: that the quotient of the distance between the driver's front bumper and rear bumper divided by their speed is at least two seconds, that they're traveling slower than the vehicle ahead, that the driver is decelerating, and that the driver is traveling more slowly than 20 kilometres, basically an exception.

He also raises the points of the timing in the red-light cameras, that there is a suspicion, in fact, that where the red-light cameras are being installed, the timing of the yellow light has been reduced. This is not the first time I've heard this one on the timing of it. I think that it's usually two seconds that you get.

Dr. Taft: No. It's usually three or four, but sometimes they reduce it to two.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, that's what it is. It's usually three or four seconds that you get in the yellow, but where they put the photoradar up for the red-light cameras, they're reducing it to two. So almost anybody that gets into the intersection on an amber gets a ticket. They're capturing people to make money. It becomes a cash cow. I'd like to know if there's been any investigation on this, any work on this at all, or any way that I can go back to this man.

Dr. Taft: Maybe the Minister of Justice has thoughts on this.

Ms Blakeman: The Minister of Justice has thoughts on it. Or Transportation. Well, I'll put it out jointly to the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Transportation to get something back to me on that one.

I'm over my time. I think I'm going to run out quickly. So I'll look for some response and maybe see if I can get a few more minutes later in the proceedings.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to talk briefly about children. As you know, children are a priority for this government. We heard in the throne speech last month that the government of Alberta's highest priority must be and will be to secure a bright future for children and youth. Before us today is a request for $225 million in order for the Children's Services ministry to operate without disruption before the new budget comes down. Very vital. A large portion of these funds will be provided for the ministry to Alberta's child and family services authorities for program delivery; $75,000 of that requested amount is needed for capital expenses. The remaining amount is needed for operating expenses including salaries, contracts, and outstanding commitments.

An important factor facing this ministry, Mr. Chairman, is that many contracts that child and family services authorities across Alberta have with their agencies that deliver services are on the front lines. Some of these agencies are providing funds for three months at the beginning of each fiscal year to help them with their planning goals. An example of such a funding allotment would be some child welfare protection agencies that receive a quarterly payment at the start of each fiscal year. Another example is for the family and community support services funding that goes out to municipalities in quarterly installments. Another area of urgent need is for Alberta parents who receive day care subsidy funding through this ministry so they can work while their children are cared for. A large portion of the Children's Services operating budget is allocated to salaries for direct services delivered to Alberta's children, youth, and families.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask that the committee support the supply of $225 million for capital and operation expenses for the Children's Services ministry.

Now I'd like to touch on for a brief moment, Mr. Chairman, some of the activities that I think are vital to the economic . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Economic Development, but pursuant to Standing Order 59(2) and Government Motion 12, agreed to on March 11, 2003, I must now put the following question. Those members in favour of each of the resolutions not yet voted upon relating to the 2003-2004 interim supply estimates, please say aye.

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed, please say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chair: Carried.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 17, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/17

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, grant us a daily awareness of the precious gift of life which You have given us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and of our country. Amen.

Hon. members, would you please remain standing now for the singing of our national anthem. I'll ask Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on St. Patrick's Day. [interjections] Not being St. Patrick himself, I'll take thanks for him. I have a number of guests today. Two of them are constituents, and they are in the public gallery. Mr. Murray Fowler and Mrs. Marilyn Shannon are the father and stepmother of our head page in the Legislature, Nick Fowler.

Also sitting in your gallery today, Mr. Speaker, is another constituent, Mr. Don Clarke. Don is an outstanding and dedicated volunteer, no stranger to anybody in the House. He spends endless amounts of time and energy on a number of charitable foundations, including being one of the founding directors of the Kids Kottage. Don Clarke is Mr. Volunteer to Edmonton and really does embody the slogan that we use, the City of Champions.

I would ask them all to rise and please enjoy the warm welcome of the House today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two guests who are seated in your gallery this afternoon. Donna Chamberland, who hails from the Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency, is the president of the Alberta Council on Aging. She sits on the board of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts as well as Fort George-Buckingham House board. Donna is a member of the Friends of the Forts and associate member of the Society of Western Canadian Artists. Donna is also a recent recipient of the Queen's jubilee medal. Kristina White, the second guest, the executive director of the Alberta Council on Aging, resides in the Barrhead-Westlock constituency. Kristina is also the chair of Barrhead & District FCSS and a member of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts as well as a Rotarian. I would ask Donna Chamberland and Kristina White to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 28 of the very brightest and most precious young resources that the Edmonton-Mill Creek constituency has to offer. These are students from Velma E. Baker school who are here studying the legislative process, and they are accompanied today by team leaders Myrna Januario and Charlien VanPapeveld and ably assisted as well and directed by their teacher, Sarah Boswell, who has loaned me her very special good luck Irish lapel pin, for which I am eternally grateful because, as some members here will know, I am frequently referred to as the Irishman from Sangudo, and with a name like Zwodzesky who could challenge that? Would our guests please rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour for me today to introduce to you and to our Legislature 32 guests from Barrhead-Westlock. Twenty-five students and seven adults from the Neerlandia school are visiting us today led by Jim Bosma, parent helpers and teachers Barb VanDijken, Mr. Glenn VanderLugt, Mr. Dwight Greilach, Mrs. Christine Andrukiewicz, Mrs. Elaine Aikema, and Mrs. Rhonda Tischer. I'd ask them to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly 27 bright, enthusiastic grade 6 students from Clive school, which is located in the wonderful community of Clive, Alberta. With them are teacher Rob MacKinnon and his daughter Lynn. Rob is without a doubt one of my favourite teachers. Along with them are a number of parent helpers: Mrs. Schweer, Mrs. Bev MacDonald, Mr. Abe Klassen, Mr. Art Goelema, Mrs. Friesen, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Lewis, Shaun Lewis, Dan Lebreton. Thank you very much for coming and participating today. I want to tell this House that for the last 10 years that I've been an MLA, Mr. MacKinnon has brought a class each and every year. So thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly five employees from the Alberta Solicitor General. These employees are valued members of the human resource service in my hardworking and dedicated department, and they serve Alberta Justice as well. They are on a public service orientation tour and are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd like them to stand as I introduce them: Mrs. Diana Gackle, Mrs. Michele Sagert, Mrs. Natalie Masters, Miss Jackie Moncrieff, and Mrs. Jackie Starcevic. I'd like the Assembly to give them a warm greeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the House today a visitor from down east. Her name is Heather Crowe. Now, Heather Crowe worked as a waitress for 40 years in different cities in eastern Canada. She's 57 years old and has never smoked and never lived with a smoker, but as Heather herself says: the air was blue with tobacco smoke where I worked. In the spring of 2002 she was diagnosed with inoperable lung cancer. Ms Crowe has said: I want to be the last person to die from secondhand smoke at work. She is now doing volunteer work with Physicians for a Smoke-Free Canada, actively campaigning to help create smoke-free workplaces everywhere in Canada. I would ask Heather to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few moments earlier the hon. the Solicitor General introduced five persons from the human resources department that serve our two departments. I'd like to introduce a sixth person who's here who comes from the Alberta Justice side, Mrs. Beck. Mrs. Beck and the other people in human resources for our two departments do yeomen's service serving both departments and making sure that the people of Alberta are well served. I'd ask Mrs. Beck to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through to all members of the Assembly a capable young man who's visiting here from Hinton. He's a student at Gerard Redmond high school, and he's in Edmonton at the University of Alberta attending a leadership seminar for a few days. I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. His name is Jeffrey Johnson.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two mothers who are concerned about the state of our public education system. They attended the crisis in education meeting this past Thursday organized by the New Democrat caucus and are here today in support of Bill 209, the School (Fees Elimination) Amendment Act, 2003, which I'll be introducing later today. I would ask Mona Luth and Melanie Shapiro to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Energy Prices

Dr. Nicol: This April 1 the government will play a cruel joke on the 150,000 customers served by ATCO Electric. Their power bills could double because of changes that will eliminate a stable price and force them onto the volatile spot market. This is the nightmare of deregulation facing all Albertans in the very near future. To the Premier: how does the government plan to protect ATCO Electric customers who cannot afford volatile power prices?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy supplement, but I do understand that ATCO is moving to a flow-through price system. That means that ATCO customers will pay the actual cost of electricity on their bills. Up to now ATCO has had to apply rate riders to catch up when the true cost was not being charged to consumers.

I would also remind the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition that right now electricity prices are going up, and that's due ostensibly to the high price of natural gas, which is used to generate about 40 percent, as I understand, of our electrical power, Mr. Speaker. I would like to point out that this is not related to deregulation.

I would like to point out also that Alberta simply does not have the options relative to electricity generation that other provinces do; namely, the provinces of Manitoba and Quebec, that have huge amounts of water to generate hydropower. If we had that kind of power or if we were allowed to harness some of the energy that we do have without huge environmental protests, then . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, it's quite true. Ask the NDs if they would support building a dam anywhere in this province. You know what they would say? They would say: no, not even if it means lower power prices. They would say no.

Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, ATCO has had the lowest prices for electricity in the province of Alberta for the last 15 months. We have not seen the specific application in front of the EUB, but we do know that electricity is a commodity. It has a market time when prices are low, such as ATCO's being the lowest in the land, and whatever they apply for, they, I'm sure, will be examined by the EUB. Of course, that is the importance of why Bill 3 must be passed: so that consumers can have options about how they wish to purchase their electricity.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier: what is this government planning to do to protect all Albertans from high-pressure sales tactics of the marketers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any high-pressure sales tactics being used by any of the marketers. There is a bill before the Legislature that will bring one more marketer into the system, and that is the marketer, I believe, of ATCO Gas, and I don't know if it's electricity as well, but that is Direct Energy. More competition usually results in lower prices, and I would hope that the Liberal opposition won't oppose the bill.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy: will the minister admit that his tinkering with deregulation has a destabilizing effect on energy prices that results in higher, not lower, bills for customers in Alberta? When will you unplug this mess?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, Bill 3, before the House at this time, is designed specifically for midcourse correction that delivers stability and transparency in an open marketplace that encourages generation, that continues to encourage downward pressure on prices. There's the entry of another retailer. There's the ability for gas and electricity to be marketed equally, and in fact we're able to do this without creating substantial amounts of socialist debt against future Albertans, the type of debt that now the government of Manitoba, the government of Saskatchewan, the government of British Columbia, the government of Quebec labour under, some hundred billion dollars' worth of taxpayer-guaranteed debt. That does not happen in Alberta. Albertans will be debt free for electricity tomorrow.

Dr. Nicol: As a result of energy deregulation, Albertans have never seen so many additional charges added to their already high power bills. The Minister of Energy promised relief from these expensive and annoying add-ons when he told this House last month, "These deferral accounts will fall off at the end of 2003, representing a 20 to 25 percent decline in the price of power.” Today we learned that this is another broken promise. To the Minister of Energy: when was the Minister of Energy planning to tell the 150,000 ATCO Electric customers that their deferral charges will not fall off, that instead their bills may double as a result of an additional charge that’s going to show up on their bills?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the information the member has is so preposterously wrong that it – well, actually, it does border on the existing preambles and questions.

Mr. Speaker, deferral accounts are something that occurred in the period past when power was bought at a price more than what it was sold for. Those deferral accounts – and I stand by my word, and I will continue to stand by my word – will fall off certain bills in Alberta at the end of 2003. Now, in fact, the only deferral account that does stay on is the Enmax bill, which is six-tenths of a cent to the end of 2004. All the rest fall off.

Mr. Speaker, the determination of what the price will be is a market function. Both bills 3 and 19 are designed to put a marketplace into function that will in fact be much more efficient than useless heckling from the NDs as we try to answer these questions for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you. What are you going to call those additional charges when the distributors and marketers try to catch up on the added cost that they have to pay over the regulated rate option?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, there’s been no evidence to see that that, in fact, has occurred, so it’s a hypothetical question.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Minister of Energy: isn’t it true that deferral charges and your style of deregulation go hand in hand?

Mr. Smith: Well, I guess it’s no more true than the Liberal style of governing. The federal government delivers $567 billion worth of debt in a trillion dollar economy, Mr. Speaker. I mean, believe me; when it comes to watching debt grow, watching irresponsible spending, there’s no better model than to watch the federal Liberals and any other area where the Liberals are in power.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Utility Costs for Educational Institutions

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Utility costs at the University of Alberta have jumped from $16 million in the year 2000 to a projected $31 million next year. The University of Calgary and other postsecondary schools pay similar large increases. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. Does the minister endorse the university’s plan to cut staff in order to the pay the utility bills?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have not yet seen the budget from either the University of Alberta or the University of Calgary. I am assuming that they are taking whatever is necessary in order to run a very good university, which they absolutely do. I read about it in the newspaper, but I have not seen anything in writing from the University of Alberta as of yet.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. My next question is to the Minister of Energy. What relief does the government offer to help these schools meet skyrocketing utility costs?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, as the member knows, the Department of Energy is not in that particular part of the business, and the question should be directed, perhaps, to someone in the government who is in a better position to answer that.

Dr. Massey: My next question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Why hasn’t the minister reinstated the utility rebate plan for schools?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I’m not sure which program he’s referring to. I suspect that it is the one that was through Learning in the year 2000. The questions to the Premier and others over the last two weeks relative to the rebate program have been answered thoroughly, so I don’t think it would be necessary to go over that whole field again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, another day, another example of how the government’s botched deregulation scheme is set to gouge more customers. Albertans already pay the highest power prices in Canada, but if this wasn’t enough, ATCO customers are facing an immediate hike of up to 120 percent in their power prices and will be subjected to roller-coaster rides on the open market after that. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Is this what the Minister of Energy had in mind when he promised cheaper power and lower prices, or do Albertans have to wait even longer for deregulation to deliver its dubious benefits?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, again we have to correct these paragraphs of errors. In fact, what the marketplace is structured to do with the provision of electricity at a competitive market structure is to deliver adequate amounts of electricity in a province that is growing at the rate of 4 percent a year. If we were to look back at a socialist ND model and take, for example, Ontario Hydro: you know, $38 billion of taxpayer-guaranteed debt, blackouts occurring in the province. What we are providing to Albertans is a marketplace in which power can be purchased according to the needs of the individual. They will be able to be traded freely throughout the province, will be able to provide jobs and opportunity. In fact, we have seen over 3,000 megawatts of new electricity arrive in the last five years without any taxpayer investment. Without this unregulated model there would never have been an opportunity for the government of Alberta to consummate the largest green-power purchase in North America.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister stand in this Assembly and tell customers in Grande Prairie and other areas in the electric distribution area of ATCO that they’re going to see a massive increase April 1 in their power bills? Will he stand here and admit that and tell them that?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I will stand here and tell the people of Grande Prairie and the people in the ATCO service network, those 110,000 customers, that they have received the lowest power prices in Alberta for the last 15 months. We don't know what's in front of the board, but we also know that this group has benefited from deregulation.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why is it, when the minister tried and failed to point to even a single residential customer paying less for power now than before deregulation, that his government is rushing forward to make a bad situation even worse?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I had pointed out, contrary to the member's words and exaggerations, hyperbole, mistruths, misstatements, whatever they're called in this Assembly, that, in fact, that service area had received lower power prices than before deregulation, which was never a promise of this government, because the power prices being employed in the year 1999-2000 were the last, final prices given by an old, creaky, tired, regulated system on the margin of coal. In fact, we were very close to a blackout situation. If the private sector had not responded with new generation and taking investor risk, this province would be in the same position that Ontario is in and certainly the position that California was in. Now, in the case of Manitoba, where we have this socialist Crown model, that has $7 billion worth of debt, a low power price for today, all they're doing is mortgaging their children's future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Student Finance

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I met with three student leaders from the University of Alberta, and while they were framing their argument for a tuition freeze and against a tuition deferential, the discussion led to student loans. The students claimed that for every dollar in student finance it brings with it 50 cents in administration costs. So my question to the Minister of Learning is: is this true, and if so, why aren't we doing something about it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. In the student finance program we administer $187 million from the provincial government and $230 million from the federal government. That costs us approximately $12 million to administer. Where the students' numbers are coming from actually includes the loan remissions, includes interest that is paid, and includes loan defaults, and that rises to around 50 cents on the dollar. So, Mr. Speaker, through to the hon. member, dollars that are flowing directly back to the students are what they are calling the administration costs.

Mrs. O'Neill: The supplemental is still on the topic of loans. The students also claimed that if they earn more than $200 a month, then student loans are clawed back. So my question again is to the minister. Is this true?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, part-time earnings are something that are looked into when calculating the amount of student loan dollars. We tend to work on a figure of $225 per month. That's the number that we use, so after the $225 it is clawed back.

One thing that I will say, though, which is very important and is a very important message to get out, is that there are appeal panels that look at each individual circumstance. So, for example, one of the issues that is out there is about parents, that any time a parent earns $50,000, they become not eligible for student loans. That absolutely is not true. Mr. Speaker, what I would advise the hon. member, through yourself, is that if there are any students that are having difficulty, that do not qualify for a student loan who they feel should, what they need to do is appeal. It's something that we look at on an individual basis.

Mrs. O'Neill: Well, my third supplemental to the same minister, Mr. Speaker, is with respect to the $50,000 ceiling, where if parents earn that, then the students are under the impression that they cannot access student loans at all. What are the numbers of students who are successful with appeals in those circumstances?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the appeals are done on an individual basis, and we run in the range anywhere from 75 to 90 percent of the people being successful on the appeals, where students come in, tell their individual issue, their individual problem. Realistically, the majority of the time the students are absolutely correct, and our department is flexible enough and responsive enough that it takes that into consideration when determining the amount of student loan that the students get. So again the message that I want to get out there is that if there are students out there who feel that they are not taking full advantage of the student loans or they feel that they are not getting the student loans that they are eligible for, then I really would stress to go to appeal.

Sour Gas Leak

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, at about 4 a.m. on Tuesday, March 11, a sour gas leak occurred 25 kilometres southeast of Caroline. Toxic hydrogen sulphide rushed out of a compressor station and spread to the nearby communities. Luckily no one was injured or killed by this accident, but serious questions remain. To the Minister of Environment: why was it that residents were not contacted about this potentially dangerous leak for more than four hours after the leak occurred?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, this leak did happen, as the member stated, and as I understand the issue, it was handled in full requirements of the act, our EPE Act, and it was handled the way it should be by the company. Now, I know that the company did have some difficulty in locating the leak because it was such a small leak, and it took them some time to do that.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, if that's the case, then why is the health authority now looking into this situation, and what can this minister do to reassure residents of this province that if a sour gas leak occurs, they are going to be notified promptly?

Dr. Taylor: Once again, Mr. Speaker, there is a procedure for notifying residents, and it's my understanding that the company followed the procedure appropriately.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, can't be the case.

To the same minister: given that the firm operating the sour gas wells only found out about the leak after the residents started smelling fumes, will the minister tell us what's wrong with this government's monitoring and enforcement policy?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, there's nothing wrong with our monitoring and enforcement policy. As she correctly noted in her opening comments, the residents were notified within about four hours after.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton–Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton–Riverview.

Edmonton Public School Board

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Learning currently is auditing the Edmonton public school board to determine the validity of the 13 and a half million dollar deficit. The Minister of Learning is on the record indicating that through this audit they have already managed to bring the deficit down to $6 million. However, the chair of the Edmonton public school board and many officials are in disagreement and are wondering: where have the moneys been found? My constituents are confused. Would the Minister of Learning please advise us: where have the dollars been found?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, I would like to say that the audit will not be complete until probably – we're looking at around next week. But already we have found in the range of $5 million to $6 million through things such as Metro College, through things such as the transfer of the capital reserve to operating, which I've mentioned in this House before, as well as some O and M funding. So we're in the $5 million to $6 million range at the moment. We will not have anything firm until the audit is complete, somewhere around the end of next week, but all will be made public as soon as we have the audit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton public school board right now is in the process of doing their own budgeting for this upcoming school year and hiring and laying off teachers. When will they actually have firm numbers on which they can make actual decisions on staffing allocations?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question. As the hon. member well knows, the budget is coming down on April 8, and they will not have any firm figures from our department until after the budget. So I am hoping that after April 8 they will know what their actual dollars are, and then they'll make the decisions that are needed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. If, indeed, there appears to be a deficit at the end of this audit, will the minister allow the orderly pay-down of this deficit for this past year and this year so that classroom sizes need not be affected?

Dr. Oberg: Again, Mr. Speaker, I'll repeat the answer that I've stated here. We will look at allowing the deficit to be taken out over a period of time. We're still under the assumption that we may well be able to find a significant amount of dollars, and hopefully the deficit will be eliminated, but time will tell on that. Again, we should know this by, hopefully, the end of next week, give or take a couple of days. So we're working from that point of view. I would stress again, though, to the hon. member that the budget is coming out on April 8, when they will know exactly how many dollars they have.

Edmonton Progressive Conservative Caucus

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, last week at an education meeting I attended, the Minister of Economic Development admitted to parents that he and his colleagues have done a poor job of representing the interests of Edmonton parents and schools. He said, quote: I apologize if we haven't done a better job for you, and what we maybe have not done is a good job. To the Minister of Learning a yes-or-no question: given the Minister of Economic Development's comments, has the Edmonton Tory caucus made a formal presentation to him on the expected cutbacks in Edmonton schools, and if so, will he table it in the Legislature?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the Edmonton caucus has done an excellent job of representing the community of Edmonton to me. I believe that at the meeting that we are talking about, there were five MLAs from this Edmonton caucus. At each and every meeting that people are invited to, there are MLAs from the Edmonton caucus going out, and I will say that in many cases it is very difficult for the MLAs. I've heard some of the stories that have come back from there, and they've done an excellent job. So I think Edmonton is extremely – extremely – well served by the Edmonton caucus of this government.

Mr. Norris: Mr. Speaker, in the short time that I've been honoured to be an MLA, the one thing I know for a fact is that the constituents of Alberta and, certainly, our ridings are the most important people in the province of Alberta, and the day that we MLAs don't listen to our constituents is a problem. If the hon. member over there would have opened his ears, what I said was: maybe we haven't relayed your message back to our government. I had nothing but praise for the Minister of Learning, and that member had better figure out what we were doing that night, because he's absolutely incorrect.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. We'll try another yes-or-no question. The first one didn't work. To the Minister of Health and Wellness a yes-or-no question he actually dodged a couple of weeks ago: did the Edmonton Tory caucus make a formal presentation to him on the reduced Edmonton membership on the Capital health board, and if so, will he table it?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we have one caucus, and each and every one of those members of that caucus makes representations on behalf of their constituents. That is how we make decisions in our caucus. I don't know how they do it over there.

Dr. Taft: It looks like no and no.

We'll try the Minister of Energy. A yes-or-no question: has the Edmonton Tory caucus made a presentation to him on the impact of soaring utility costs on Edmontonians, and if so, will he table it?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, this is a large, large caucus. This is a caucus of 74 people, who at the privilege of their constituencies have been asked to serve. I don't think there's any one of them in here, including myself, that wouldn't speak up for the interests of their constituency, to be able to bring the interests of the constituency to government, not to be able to do it in the calloused fashion that the Liberal opposition has displayed today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary–Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton–Centre.

Federal Funding for Child Care

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our children are our future and the Alberta's Promise initiative of the government of Alberta is about Alberta children, reflecting the concerns of my constituents and the child care organizations, my questions today are to the hon. Minister of Children's Services. The federal government has recently announced the spending of $935 million over five years for child care. Could the minister tell Albertans how much of this amount will be allocated to Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in the first year it will be 2 and a half million dollars, based on the fact that overall in Canada it will be $25 million and we get about 10 percent based on our population. So in year 2 it will be about $7.5 million, and it will go up proportionately to the final year, when we will receive about $35 million. We had reflected in Ottawa that we would have preferred to see more of the funding front ended, not complaining about the amount but some more at the front end because of the reporting responsibility we have and which we have assumed on behalf of the province. It's a very small amount for the very first year and the second year as well, but it is coming.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the same minister: my constituents are hardworking parents and need child care, so how does this money help them and their children?

Ms Evans: It would be useful to recap that today we give about 11,000 children $45 million in subsidies to assist hardworking Albertans to place their children in quality child care, either in day cares or in licensed day homes. Last December this government announced a $5.6 million amount to further supplement accreditation programs so that we can improve the quality of day care delivery services, and in that amount were some dollars for respite care and nutritional supports and teaching to parents. So, Mr. Speaker, if I was looking at the additional federal funding, then over and above what we're currently spending and with the agreement of Treasury, we'll look at our accreditation program to see what is possible in the context of spending money. I might comment that the hon. minister of human resources had a program on low-income review, and we'll look at some of the initiatives contained in that report for some expenditure as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. My last question is to the same minister. There are a number of child care organizations in Alberta that have problems with staff retention, and their staff have problems of low pay for important work. What is the government's plan to resolve the problem in light of the new funding?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, not necessarily in light of the new funding but looking at what was announced in December, the accreditation program, we're still in the process of distributing the information and listening to the concerns of the day care groups. I think it would be too early yet to evaluate how well we're proceeding on the accreditation, but if it proves to be a successful program, if it's embraced by the people that are employing child care workers and the child care workers themselves, I think you'll see a decline in the number of workers that leave our child care profession, if you will. Today 80 percent of the dollars that are being released to the day cares that are taking part in the program are going to increase the wages of child care workers. So it is making some difference, and there are also some dollars that we are applying to training needs, as well, in the child care community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

School Fund-raising

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Chronic underfunding for schools has led to parents turning to casino and bingo gambling to pay for books, computers, and supplies. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Does the minister endorse parents' and schools' reliance on casino and bingo revenue?

Dr. Oberg: No.

Ms Blakeman: What alternatives does the minister offer to parents who are morally opposed to using gambling money as a source of funding for their school?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, in the throne speech this year we pledged $20 million to the Learning Resources Centre, where the school boards purchase their supplies: textbooks, computer software, calculators, things like that. So we have done that. Again, it is up to the parent councils if they choose to partake in bingos. I had this question posed to me last week actually, when I attended the Eastglen parent council, where one particular lady said that it was against her beliefs to work at casinos, and I agreed with her entirely. I don't believe that that should be done to look after the basic needs. If it's done for the needs that are not basic, then I would support it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks. To the same minister: given that half a textbook is all that that money is going to purchase through the Learning Resources Centre, what alternatives is the minister going to offer parents who are morally opposed to casinos and bingos for funding the rest of the things they need for their schools?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, currently there's approximately $32 million per year that is spent at the Learning Resources Centre for textbooks. This is the place where they purchase all of their textbooks. We give them a $5 million credit, which we've done every year, and we also have added this year a $20 million credit. So I don't buy this purchase half a textbook.

Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, Alberta parents are being subjected to an ever increasing array of user fees to pay for basic kindergarten to grade 12 education in this province. Fees for instruction materials and supplies charged by school boards have gone up about 50 percent over the last four years. Moreover, parents are increasingly having to rely on casinos and chocolate sales to raise moneys for things that are part of the core curriculum. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. When is the government going to stop nickel and diming parents to death and fully fund public education from kindergarten to grade 12?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, we spend more money per capita than any province in Canada by about 16 percent. The next closest province is 16 percent less than us. We have the highest per student grants when all the grants are taken into consideration in Canada. So I feel that we put a lot of money into education. I'll reiterate my answer: I think that if the parents want to fund-raise – for example, at Eastglen high school, that I was at, one of the cheques that the parent council was signing that night was for a microwave oven. That was one of the things. That was their priority. They have an excellent process whereby the people who are asking for money must come forward in front of the parent board, and they must take a look at each individual project. That's an excellent way to do it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is the government imposing more and more hardships on parents who pay fees and raise money for their children's grade school education and, at the same time, undermining the principle of fully funded public education?

Dr. Oberg: First of all, Mr. Speaker, this government believes in fully funded public education and have put our money towards that, in fact. Since 1995 we've increased funding by 46 percent. The increase in student population has grown by about 6 percent since that time. So there has been a huge amount of money that has been put into education, and there will continue to be a huge amount of money put into education.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last question to the same minister. I trust that the minister is not in favour of parents fund-raising for school essentials, and if that is the case, can I count on his support for the upcoming New Democrat private member's bill that will put an end to this practice once and for all?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, many student councils choose to fund-raise for things such as band trips, for things such as school trips that go all over the world. In my particular school in Grasslands they are presently going to Malaysia. I won't necessarily comment on whether I agree with that, but they have . . . [Disturbance in the gallery]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! You're not part of the proceedings. Out.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, in my particular school jurisdiction they are raising money to go to Malaysia. I have no problems with that if that's what they wish to do. I am not in favour of fund-raising for the essentials, I am not in favour of a student council running a casino for essentials, and that's why we put in the amount of money that we do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Highway Snow Removal

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During this winter several residents of Strathcona county, including school bus drivers who travel the roads and know them well, have expressed frustration with the snow removal on highway 21 and some of the secondary highways such as 830. My question is for the Minister of Transportation. Does the department monitor the quality of snow removal service that Albertans receive from those contractors, and is the department satisfied that the service is adequate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The department does monitor the level of service on a regular basis. In fact, it's up to the department to put in place the standards that have to be met, and then on a very regular basis we have people that check to ensure that the contractors live up to those standards. The way the contracts are written is that the individual contractors are paid for the time they put in and also the material. So, of course, the sooner they're out, the more time that they put in. It not only improves the service, but also at the end of the day they get paid more.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, given that this morning residents driving highway 21 and secondary highways were limited to narrow pathways but the county crews were completely cleaning the side roads, including the shoulders, is the Minister of Transportation of the view that snow removal standards need to be improved?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, what the contractors are instructed to do is to clean one traveling lane immediately, right after the snowfall. Once they do all the highways, do all the interchanges, then they follow up with ensuring that all of the snow is removed off the highway into the ditch, including off the shoulder. This particular snowstorm, that went through early this morning, dumped a fair amount of very wet snow, and as a result they're pushing hard to get that snow off, but with wet snow like that, they can't drive as fast, of course, to get the snow off.

The one point I do want to make, Mr. Speaker – and this is very important, and it might hit home with you – is that even in your constituency when we had that last snowstorm, with a lot of snow, very windy conditions – in fact, we had two cars that actually hit our snow trucks out there in the middle of the night. So we have to be very careful, use some common sense when we put those trucks out, because we want to get the snow off the road as fast as possible, but we also have to ensure safety of not only the contractor, the person that's in that vehicle pushing the snow, but also of the cars on the road.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, since many times county crews travel the secondaries with their blades up, can municipalities take on the contracts for highway snow removal and perhaps achieve some efficiencies that way?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have always worked very closely with municipalities and also with the private contractors in saying that in emergent situations we've encouraged the contractors to enter into negotiations with municipalities. If there's a huge amount of snow, some emergency situation, we would find that municipalities and the department and the private contractors would work together.

In fact, when we first privatized maintenance, if we did the counts on the inventory of the equipment that was available for use on our provincial and secondary highways, we actually exceeded the number that we originally started with. Since then, municipalities have taken the about $85 million that we've saved them by assuming responsibility for secondaries and they've purchased more equipment to look after their own roads.

Sole-source Contracts

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the 2001-2002 report of the Auditor General states on page 158 that the Department of Infrastructure has sole-source contracts for engineering, architecture, and cost consulting services. Further, it states that the department has found no formal documentation justifying this practice. To the Minister of Infrastructure: how can Albertans be sure that they are getting the best value for their dollar with these sole-source contracts?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has mentioned, that was 2001-2002, so it is getting back in history. Whatever the Auditor General says in his report, we take it very seriously, and we have taken steps to alleviate the problem that some people seem to feel with the single-source contracting.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is there any formal criteria that contract work has to fit into to be sole source, or is it just decided by the minister?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there was a similar motion for a return. In answer to that motion, I indicated to the member that, in fact, we will be filing the new procedures that we have implemented as far as the contracting provision is concerned. But, certainly, there are some small contracts where, with the time and the cost to put out an RFP or to put out a tender, for example, when in fact you may even have someone already on a contract and it's just an extension of that contract, it would make absolutely no sense to go through that whole long process.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what would he tell my constituents who say that they want hard evidence to show that their hard-earned tax dollars are being spent properly and cost-effectively?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I would urge his constituents to get a copy of our annual report, to look in the Auditor General's reports, and to compare the amount of work and what we get done with the dollars expended, because I'm sure that he'll find that there's very good value for dollars spent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Emergency Services Workers

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Medical personnel, emergency medical practitioners, firefighters, and police officers are often exposed to the bodily fluids of people they come in contact with in the course of their duties. There's no requirement for the person to provide a sample of their blood, and hospital personnel are prohibited from disclosing information obtained as a result of samples taken during medical treatment. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Has the minister looked at Ontario's recently enacted provincial legislation that allows the local medical officer of health to order a blood sample from someone who accidentally or deliberately exposes a frontline emergency worker?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with the Ontario legislation, and I should say that the short answer is no. Our Alberta provincial health officer has not been made aware of any instances where an emergency first responder has contacted any infectious or communicable disease as a result of their occupation. We do work with colleges of health professionals, such as the Alberta College of Paramedics, to ensure that health professionals are well educated and follow consistent practices that will allow them to avoid being exposed to blood-borne pathogens during the course of their work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental question is again to the same minister. Is the minister considering similar amendments to our own Alberta Health Information Act to protect the health and wellness of these emergency workers?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, serious consideration to that has not yet been given, except that I should say that the Department of Health and Wellness does support the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Human Rights recommendation to increase efforts in gathering statistics on the number of frontline workers who are exposed to blood-borne pathogens during the course of their work. We will continue to study data on this, and if at the conclusion of such a study there is a requirement or a need disclosed to change the Health Information Act, then at that time we would be prepared to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Crop Insurance

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Farmers have been informed that they may be facing crop insurance premium increases of up to 20 percent. My question to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: how much of this projected increase is based on new programs with different coverages, and how does the premium reflect the coverages offered last year?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, a complex question. I'll try and simplify it as much as I can. There are two reasons that crop insurance premiums will change this year. One is the effect of not last year's but the 2001 claims and also, of course, to replenish our crop insurance fund, which, everyone would know, is severely depleted after last year's and this year's payments. The second reason is because of the improved program. So, in fact, on an average there would be about a 2 and a half percent increase because of the 2001 year, the drought, there would be just over 3 percent to replenish our crop insurance fund, and then it depends on the individual producers' operation and what coverage they choose. What we encourage producers to do, instead of just hearing that they're going up 20 percent: go to your district office, sit down with your agent and talk about the kind of coverage that you want for your farm, and they will tell you what the cost would be.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, granted, the government made a very large and timely contribution to the ag sector last year. They also committed $88 million as the matching component of the share the federal government made. Can the minister tell me what, if anything, of that $88 million will be going to buy down the producers' share of crop insurance? What are the minister's plans for that funding?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member is alluding to are the bridging dollars that the federal government committed to bridge between the old programs into the new agricultural policy framework. The federal contribution was about $600 million for all of Canada, and we attempted to determine what Alberta's share of that would be. That would be somewhere between $80 million and $90 million. We tried very hard over the period of a year to convince the federal minister to implement a payment system that would ensure that the money went to those who needed it the most. However, in the end the minister determined to put it into NISA accounts, which didn't really help Alberta producers who had suffered three and four years of no crops, because after all 4.5 percent of nothing is really nothing. So they got a minimum payment.

Mr. Speaker, we determined in our province to use this money for bridging in a different way, and in fact what we have done with whatever would have been our share, somewhere between the $80 million and $90 million, is make the improvements to the crop insurance program. These, indeed, have a cost to them because the provincial government is responsible for cost sharing that program with the federal government and, of course, the producer.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Well, hon. members, this is the first time since I've had the privilege of being the Speaker that I can actually say this. There's still time remaining in the question period, and we've exhausted all the questions.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Don Clarke

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a privilege for me today to stand and recognize a great Edmontonian who has received the Order of Canada from the Governor General. His name is Don Clarke. As my colleague from Edmonton-McClung, the Minister of Economic Development, so aptly stated, Don is Mr. Volunteer. I could not list all the accomplishments of this great Albertan, but I will make an attempt to list a few.

Don currently serves on the Rosecrest children's foundation. He was a founding director of Kids Kottage with Dr. Colleen Klein, STARS air ambulance, and the Variety Club, where he received the Variety golden heart award for outstanding service. Don was past president of Goodwill Industries and Edmonton Klondike Days Association. A past police commissioner and key host of international baseball tournaments in Edmonton, Don has also received awards from the city of Edmonton; namely, the silver ribbon award, ambassador award, the life-well-lived award. Her Honour presented Don with the Queen's jubilee medal. So I'd like to congratulate my former colleague, my friend, and a great Albertan, Don Clarke, Order of Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ireland Fund of Canada

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour on this St. Patrick's Day to recognize the Ireland Fund of Canada. The first Canadian chapter of the Ireland Fund was established in Toronto in 1978 by the Dublin-born former Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, the Hon. Hilary Weston.

The mission of the Ireland Fund is to be the largest worldwide network of people of Irish ancestry and friends of Ireland dedicated to raising funds to support programs of peace and reconciliation, arts and culture, education and community development for the people of Ireland, both north and south. The Ireland Fund of Canada also helps Irish projects here in Canada. Today the Ireland Fund is an international network, creating a global community of over 70 million people, including such countries as Canada, Australia, France, Great Britain, Japan, Monaco, Mexico, and the United States.

Last Saturday evening the Minister of Economic Development and I and our spouses attended the Emerald Ball, and we raised money for special olympians attending the Special Olympics event in Dublin, Ireland, next year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Minor Hockey Volunteers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If St. Patrick played hockey, he would be an Oiler. As another successful minor hockey season ends this month in Alberta, I would like to thank the thousands of volunteers, coaches, and referees for their support and commitment to hockey, the coolest game on earth. Minor hockey players of all ages benefit from the countless hours the volunteers put in. Hockey is a fast, exciting sport that must be first and foremost fun for those who play. The development of individual and team skills is important, and these skills can be used for life outside the hockey arena.

In conclusion, on behalf of all hon. members of this Assembly I would like to thank all those Albertans who this past winter took the time and had the patience to lace up tight skates for eager, excited young players, cheered enthusiastically for fair play in cold arenas, and taxied players at early hours and at odd hours to practices and to games. Your time did make a difference.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Trio Tan 'n Tone

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 11, '03, I had the distinct pleasure of attending a grand opening of the Trio Tan 'n Tone, a fitness centre in the hamlet of Radway in my constituency. I would like to recognize two good friends, Peter and Doris Kolybaba, owners of the centre, for their confidence in this province and for recognizing that this is a place to do business, that fitness and health go hand in hand. This is a welcome facility to our residents and surrounding areas. Peter and Doris, congratulations and good luck on your impressive, state-of-the-art adventure.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Great Kids Awards

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Edmonton Public Schools' Night of Music

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Wednesday evening at the Jubilee Auditorium a packed house was treated to Edmonton public schools' 39th Night of Music: A Musical Journey. It has been said that without music life is a journey through a desert. The Night of Music 2003 was a rich and rewarding experience as music students from Edmonton public schools led us on a musical adventure.

It takes a year of hard work to produce a Night of Music. A small committee co-ordinates the program and staging of the event, no easy task when 1,200 students and 72 teachers take the stage to demonstrate their musical excellence. The music for the performance was carefully chosen to reflect this year's theme and the variety of music styles and genres available to give students a broad base of musical experiences. Teachers and students have put in hundreds of hours of rehearsal time, giving up lunch hours and remaining after school, to attain a high-calibre performance and to ensure a positive learning experience for the students.

To producer Shirley Funk, music consultant, the planning committee, the music teachers, and the talented students: congratulations on an extremely successful and entertaining musical journey.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warmer.

Wheatland Select Organic Turkey Ltd.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in this Assembly today to recognize a company based in my constituency from the town of Taber: Wheatland Select Organic Turkey Ltd. Arnold and Barb Leth, the operators of the turkey farm, were acknowledged at the 2003 Alberta business awards of distinction on February 19 in Edmonton. The Leths were one of 15 small businesses honoured as winners of this event. The awards were presented to businesses in Alberta that exemplify achievement. The local organic turkey operation took home the agrivalue new venture award of distinction, sponsored by AVAC Ltd., a not-for-profit company committed to nurturing and developing value-added agriculture in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, it's with pleasure that I congratulate Arnold and Barb and Wheatland Select Organic Turkey Ltd. for their accomplishments and their dedication to the organic industry.

Thank you.

Bill 29

Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I'm pleased to introduce Bill 29, the Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003.

The purpose of this bill is to level the mortgage insurance playing field between CMHC and private mortgage default insurers to allow all mortgage default insurers the ability to sue borrowers for any balance owing on high-ratio mortgages after a foreclosure.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 29 be placed on the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Bill 30

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 30, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003.

This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Bill 208

Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003.

Bill 208 will amend the Occupiers' Liability Act so that landowners' and occupiers' burden of liability to recreational users would be reduced to a level that is owed to trespassers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Bill 209

School (Fees Elimination) Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move first reading of Bill 209, the School (Fees Elimination) Amendment Act, 2003.

Bill 209 requires the government to fully fund public education and put a stop to the nickel and diming of parents in this province. The bill eliminates fees for kindergarten and core instructional materials, computers, and equipment. The bill also enshrines in legislation a prohibition on fund-raising for school essentials.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 209 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Bill 210
Dental Care Review Committee Act

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 210, the Dental Care Review Committee Act.

Bill 210 would establish an all-party committee to review dental care in Alberta. The all-party committee would address accessibility for modest- to low-income earners, the feasibility of a fee structure, and quality care issues. The all-party review committee would prepare a report that would be presented to the Legislative Assembly. Given the links between poor oral health and heart disease, hypertension, and diabetes, this bill would have a substantial cost-saving mechanism for health care. A review of dental care in Alberta may identify potential concerns with quality of care and accessibility for Albertans, especially low- to modest-income earners, who may be without employer coverage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 210 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Bill 211
Fair Trading (Telemarketing Licence)
Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 211, Fair Trading (Telemarketing Licence) Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would require those engaged in the telemarketing business in Alberta to have a licence and, further, that to maintain the licence, the telemarketer who receives a request from a person not to call or fax a telephone number must remove that person's name and number from the telemarketer's list within seven days of the request. It's known as a do-not-call list.

[Motion carried; Bill 211 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter that I just received this morning dated March 16 and addressed to me from Mr. Victor Dorian of Edmonton, who has two elementary school-age children attending Westglen elementary school. He is alarmed at the possibility that his school will lose $84,000 in the coming year and as a result lose 1.5 teacher equivalents. This will translate into an astounding 25 to 30 percent increase in class sizes, which he says is a frightening proposition for a parent with two young children in school.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a program from Edmonton public schools' 39th Night of Music: A Musical Journey.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings. I'm getting tremendous correspondence on education. The first is to the Minister of Learning from Maureen Santin expressing her concern for elementary school funding.

The next is a copy of a letter to the Premier expressing concern over lack of vision for public education funding from Linda and Ian Hallworth.

The next is another letter to the Premier from Mona Luth expressing her concern. She says, "I am appalled by your government's lack of concern and disregard for public education."

Finally today, a letter from Matt Rose to me expressing his concern and the concern of countless others about the public education system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling five copies of the program for the Great Kids awards, 2003. I'm also tabling the biographies of all the children that were awarded that will tell you all the great and wonderful things they did to receive this award.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling five copies of the program for this year's Canadian business leader awards. For over two decades the University of Alberta School of Business has presented the Canadian business leader award to Canadians of distinction. Recipients are leaders, entrepreneurs, and pioneers of progress in the business world recognized for their outstanding achievements and business acumen. This year's recipients were Gwyn Morgan and David O'Brien.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first one is a petition by upset Albertans, and it states, "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to reinstate natural-gas rebates immediately." This is a hundred citizens from places like Spruce Grove, Edmonton, Legal, Camrose, Killam, and Bluffton, and they accessed this petition on our web site, www.altaliberals.ab.ca.

The second tabling I have is the market report from the Power Pool from Saturday, March 15, 2003, and it shows a wide range of prices, anywhere from 3 cents a kilowatt-hour to 17 cents a kilowatt-hour for electricity in this province. Then on March 16, Sunday, when you would think there would be no price spikes, we see at the same web site, the Power Pool market reports prices ranging anywhere from 1.5 cents a kilowatt-hour at 8 o'clock in the morning to 21 cents a kilowatt-hour at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, a wide range of prices.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling from Mrs. Patricia Jansen of Edmonton dated March 14, 2003, concerning the exorbitant cost of utilities caused by deregulation. She says that putting on an extra sweater has not helped.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:50head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 6, it is my pleasure to move that written questions 3, 5, 6, 8, 9, and 10 be dealt with today.

[Motion carried]

Human Resources and Employment Achievement Bonuses

Q3. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount broken down individually by position given as an achievement bonus to senior bureaucrats in the Alberta Human Resources and Employment ministry for each fiscal year from April 1, 1996, to January 14, 2003, inclusive?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are prepared to accept Written Question 3 with the following amendments, and if I could just indicate to the hon. member and to others the particulars about the amendment. We would offer four amendments: first of all, to strike out the word "total" and substitute with "aggregate"; secondly, to strike out "broken down individually by position," and submit "and range of"; the third one is to strike out "given as an achievement bonus to senior bureaucrats" and substitute "achievement bonuses given to employees"; and the fourth one, to strike out "each fiscal year from April 1, 1996, to January 14, 2003, inclusive" and substitute "the 1999-2000, the 2000-2001, and the 2001-2002 fiscal years" so that the amended written question would read as follows:

What is the aggregate dollar amount and range of achievement bonuses given to employees in the Alberta Human Resources and Employment ministry for the 1999-2000, 2000-2001, and 2001-2002 fiscal years?

Now, the reasons for the amendments, Mr. Speaker. The first one: by substituting "aggregate" for "total," we can actually give hon. members more information. What we would then do is break down the achievement bonuses that have been paid out and move them into a range of dollar amounts, which we think will provide more complete information, then, that is being requested. Secondly, in being able to reply by substituting "a range of," we, of course, clearly indicate what I just talked about: that we would provide them in terms of a range. The third one: "senior bureaucrats" is not a term that we normally use, so it's doubtful of the meaning, but I think what the member is trying to ask for is what achievement bonuses were given to employees, and we're prepared to do that within the range, of course, of the freedom of information that we can. Then, the last one, of course, is the fact that it was in 1999 that the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment was in fact created, so what we're saying with the amendment is that we'll provide those achievement bonuses for the three fiscal years past where we have provided achievement bonuses to our employees.

I would urge all members here in the Assembly to agree, then, to the amendments as we've just put forward.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only thing I can say at this time is that I'm disappointed, but I can see where the hon. minister and department officials are coming from, and I always am of the view that any information I can get from the government is a bonus in helping one do one's job, and that, from the Official Opposition perspective, is to keep the entire government accountable.

In conclusion, I would have to remind all hon. members of the Rolling Stones and the fact that you can't always get what you want.

Thank you. I accept it.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close debate, then, on this question.

Mr. MacDonald: I have nothing further to say.

[Written Question 3 as amended carried]

Seniors Department Achievement Bonuses

Q5. Mr. Massey moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount broken down individually by position given as an achievement bonus to senior bureaucrats in the Alberta Seniors ministry for each fiscal year from April 1, 1996, to January 14, 2003, inclusive?

Dr. Massey: The motion is part of a series of motions that we have on the Order Paper, Mr. Speaker, to get a handle on the kinds of salaries that are being paid. The government has been very forceful in publishing and making sure that the public is aware of the salaries that are paid to superintendents of schools and other officials across the province, and it seems to be only fair play that the government's own employees should be subjected to the same scrutiny. So I am pleased to move the motion.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Seniors the government accepts Written Question 5 with amendments. Those amendments have been circulated already to all members, and they are similar to the amendments that were just described earlier by the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Specifically, the Ministry of Seniors has only been in existence since March 15, 2001, so we have changed the request to accommodate that particular date change. Decisions on the '02-03 bonuses have not yet been finalized and so are not available. Also, we have amended the question to fall under the proper jurisdiction of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Mr. Doerksen moved on behalf of Mr. Woloshyn that Written Question 5 be amended to move that the following question be accepted.

What is the aggregate dollar amount given as achievement bonuses to employees in the Alberta Seniors ministry, and what is the number of employees broken down by range of the bonus amount who received a bonus for the 2001-2002 fiscal year?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the amendment.

Dr. Massey: Yes. I think the amendments are unfortunate, Mr.

Speaker. They really take the heart out of the questions as they are written. I think I would also like a bit of an explanation at some point in terms of where this violates the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, and if that's the case, why the same provisions of that act don't apply to public employees like school superintendents.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to close the debate on this written question.

Dr. Massey: No further comments.

[Written Question 5 as amended carried]

Government Services Achievement Bonuses

Q6. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount broken down individually by position given as an achievement bonus to senior bureaucrats in the Alberta Government Services ministry for each fiscal year from April 1, 1996, to January 14, 2003, inclusive?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to accept Written Question 6 with amendments, and the amendments have been distributed to all the members. I'd like to move that Written Question 6 be amended by: (a) striking out "total dollar amount broken down individually by position," and substituting "aggregate dollar amount and range of"; (b) striking out "given as an achievement bonus to senior bureaucrats" and substituting "achievement bonuses given to employees"; (c) by adding "broken down by the range of bonus dollar amounts and the number of employees who received a bonus within that range" after "ministry"; and (d) by striking out "each fiscal year from April 1, 1996, to January 14, 2003, inclusive" and substituting "the 2001-2002 fiscal year."

3:00

Mr. Speaker, the amended written question would then read as follows:

What is the aggregate dollar amount and range of achievement bonuses given to employees in the Alberta Government Services ministry broken down by the range of bonus dollar amounts and the number of employees who received a bonus within that range for the 2001-2002 fiscal year?

The rationale for this amendment is to be consistent with the spirit and the intent of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, which states that information that is broken down by the identity of each official will not be released as it is considered to be an unreasonable invasion of privacy. Therefore, I move this amendment.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'll be brief. I will certainly express my disappointment, but there is very little that I can do in regard to this. Certainly, the FOIP Act is important, and to see that it is going to be enforced in this way when we consider circumstances of other individuals, to say the least, is noteworthy, and it will be from this hon. member's perspective worth watching to ensure how this plays out for other individuals.

At this time, I will be anxiously awaiting the information when it does arrive from the hon. minister. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate on the question.

Mr. MacDonald: In regard to Written Question 6, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to say at this moment.

[Written Question 6 as amended carried]

Sustainable Resource Development Achievement Bonuses

Q8. Dr. Massey on behalf of Ms Carlson moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the amount of each bonus and the aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within the Ministry and Department of Sustainable Resource Development over the 2001-2002 fiscal year broken down by the identity of and amount paid to each official?

Dr. Massey: I think it's fairly self-explanatory, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would be pleased to accept Written Question 8 with amendments. To be consistent with the spirit and intent of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, information broken down by the identity of each official will not be released as it is considered to be an unreasonable invasion of privacy. Therefore, I move that the amendment strikes out "amount of each bonus and"; strikes out "senior officials" and substitutes "employees and the number of employees who received a bonus"; and strikes out "identity of and amount paid to each official" and substitutes "range of bonus dollar amounts and the number of employees who received a bonus within that range." So the question will read:

What is the aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to employees and the number of employees who received a bonus within the Ministry and Department of Sustainable Resource Development over the 2001-2002 fiscal year broken down by the range of bonus dollar amounts and the number of employees who received a bonus within that range?

Mr. Speaker, this information has been shared with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie prior to 11 a.m. as per the procedures. I believe the amendment has been circulated to all members. Thank you.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I think the amendment is an unfortunate amendment, and it's the kind of amendment we've had on previous written questions. The amendment tends to mask information, and again it seems inconsistent with what the government expects of other public bodies in the province; namely, health authorities and superintendents of schools. These are public dollars, they're salaries that are paid to public officials, and I think if they're going to be anything, at least there's an obligation to be consistent. So I think it's unfortunate if the amendment passes.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to close the debate.

Dr. Massey: No. Thank you.

[Written Question 8 as amended carried]

Operational Costs for Committees

Q9. Dr. Massey moved that the following question be accepted. What were the total operational costs of the following committees: Review Committee on Outcomes, MLA Committee on Lifelong Learning, Task Force on Children at Risk, Committee on Francophone Education Governance, Alberta Vocational Colleges Governance Task Force, Private Schools Funding Task Force, School Facilities Task Force, and MLA Postsecondary Funding Review Committee?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Yes. For the Minister of Learning, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Learning would like to amend the question to read:

What were the total operational costs of the following committees: Review Committee on Outcomes, MLA Committee on Lifelong Learning, and MLA Postsecondary Funding Review Committee?

That's the amendment that is proposed, and an excellent amendment it is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the amendment.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Speaking to the amendment, Mr. Speaker, it really takes the heart out of the written question. I think we're left with two-sevenths of the information that we asked for, and unfortunately it's part of a pattern. We've been attempting as the opposition to get a handle on the costs of the committees that the government is running. We've tried by letter with this particular ministry to get those costs, and that's been unsuccessful. We've taken the route of coming to the Assembly asking for it, and again it looks like we're unsuccessful. It's really very perplexing why this kind of information isn't readily available. So I would urge the Assembly to reject the amendment and to allow the motion to proceed as it appears on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment on the amendment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Just to provide further information on the amendment as far as the rationale is concerned, the committees that are mentioned in the revised question now, as amended, were established during the minister's tenure in this portfolio, and the costs are readily determinable from the information that would be on file. The other committees were established by other departments – for example, advanced education and career development, infrastructure, and education – and the information may not be within the Ministry of Learning's files.

[Motion on amendment carried]

3:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to close the debate.

Dr. Massey: No.

[Written Question 9 as amended carried]

Environment Department Achievement Bonuses

Q10. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.

What is the amount of each bonus and aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within the Ministry and Department of Environment over the 2001-2002 fiscal year broken down by the identity of and amount paid to each official?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've had a number of questions similar to this, and we've had a lot of stimulating debate on this issue, so I won't go over it. I'd just like to propose an amendment to the question, which is similar to the other amendments that have been proposed, and the amendment will read as follows:

What is the aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to employees and the number of employees who received a bonus within the Ministry and Department of Environment over the 2001-2002 fiscal year broken down by the range of bonus dollar amounts and the number of employees who received a bonus within that range?

As you've heard earlier, under provisions of the FOIP Act we cannot release it any more general than that, and that's an act I believe the people opposite support.

Dr. Massey: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, an unfortunate amendment takes away the thrust of the written question, and the whole series, as we've seen this afternoon, have had the same kind of axe taken to them in terms of the amendments. Again, it's unfortunate. It's information that's available, and I think it's information that could've been readily supplied by the government.

[Written Question 10 as amended carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 13, it is my pleasure to move that motions for returns 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, and 10 be dealt with today.

[Motion carried]

Breakdown of AISH Disbursements

M2. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of documents showing a specific breakdown of how much of the $346,511,000 received by people on assured income for the severely handicapped in the fiscal year 2001-2002 was given as cheques to recipients, how much was spent on medical costs, and how the remainder was spent.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if the Minister of Human Resources and Employment wishes to respond directly, but my information indicates that the government is prepared to accept Motion for a Return 2.

[Motion for a Return 2 carried]

Operational Costs of Health Reform Committees

M3. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a detailed breakdown of expenses including but not limited to research fees, hosting fees, salaries, consulting fees, public relations, advertising costs, and meeting expenses for the following committees set up under the report of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health: the Committee on Collaboration and Innovation, the Expert Advisory Panel to Review Publicly Funded Health Services, the MLA Task Force on Health Care Funding and Revenue Generation, and the Health Reform Implementation Team.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move to accept MR 3 as written.

[Motion for a Return 3 carried]

Health and Wellness Achievement Bonuses

M6. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a detailed breakdown of the bonuses paid to staff of Alberta Health and Wellness in each fiscal year from 1992-93 to 2001-02 indicating the amounts of individual bonuses paid each year as well as the position held by the recipients of those bonuses.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am prepared to accept Motion for a Return 6 with amendments. First of all, let me clarify that staff of the Department of Health and Wellness did not receive bonuses prior to the 1997-98 fiscal year, so I am prepared to provide information on bonuses received after that time. However, providing a detailed listing of bonuses paid to staff would identify individual employees. I should note that half of our freedom of information legislation is the protection of privacy. So for the fiscal years '97-98 through 2000-2001 I am prepared to provide an aggregate amount of bonuses paid, the range of bonuses, and the number of employees who received a bonus within that range.

Mr. Mar moved that Motion for a Return 6 be amended to read that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a breakdown of the bonuses and the aggregate amount thereof paid to managers and senior officials of Alberta Health and Wellness in each fiscal year from 1997-98 to 2000-01 broken down by range of bonus amounts and the number of employees who received a bonus within that range.

Mr. Speaker, I move that Motion for a Return 6 be accepted as amended.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the amendment.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Again the same complaint, Mr. Speaker. We can't quite understand the double standard in terms of the reporting of bonuses.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to close the debate.

Dr. Massey: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I was remiss in not thanking the minister for accepting the previous motion for a return on behalf of my colleague for Edmonton-Riverview.

[Motion for a Return 6 as amended carried]

Health and Wellness Credit Card Statements

M7. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the monthly statements for the credit cards used by the Deputy Minister of Health and Wellness, each of the assistant deputy ministers, the special policy adviser, and each of the minister's executive assistants from April 1, 1997, to December 31, 2002.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to respond to this on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. The motion for a return requests monthly statements for credit cards used by various members of the ministry over a six-year period. I think it goes without saying that this particular request does not deal in any fashion whatsoever with matters of public policy but, generously speaking, could be called administrative in nature. Just thinking of my own personal experiences, I know that when I receive my credit cards, often I can't even identify what's on them when I am responsible for the expenditures. So I do wonder what the purpose of this request is, given that there is no background.

Having said that, however, Mr. Speaker, the request is in the nature of records of account, and this particular Assembly has an officer who is responsible for reviewing records of account in the ministries, that is, the Auditor General. Furthermore, this particular Assembly has a particular committee which is responsible for reviewing the ministries and the records of account of those ministries, and that is Public Accounts, chaired by the able Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

So, Mr. Speaker, my recommendation to the members of the Assembly is that this motion for a return be rejected.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to close the debate.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Again, I think it's unfortunate. Certainly, the spending of the administrative wing of the government falls under public policy, and it's a legitimate request to know how money that's approved in budgets of the Legislature is being spent. So I think it's unfortunate that it's not being accepted.

[Motion for a Return 7 lost]

3:20 Tecknor Software Inc.

M8. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of any and all records prepared by or for the government or its agents relating to the tendering process for any purchase or contract from or with Tecknor Software Inc., including the requests for proposals, since April 1, 1999.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to this, I'd like to indicate that the government will be rejecting Motion for a Return 8. It's pretty clear that when a party has requested access to a third party's information, a formal freedom of information and protection of privacy process must be submitted to ensure that the applicant and the affected third parties have an appeal process, and that is available to them through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. For these reasons we will, unfortunately, have to reject this motion for a return.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

[Motion for a Return 8 lost]

Income Support Program

M10. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents prepared by and for Alberta Human Resources and Employment between May 2002 and January 30, 2003, concerning potential changes to the supports for income program.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will be rejecting this motion for a return. The government is currently looking at our income support programs. As a matter of fact, all of the documents that have been placed in question through this motion cannot be released as they are actually advice, then, to the government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to close the debate.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Again, it's unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that this information is not being shared. There's widespread public interest in what's happening with respect to these changes. There has been little information supplied, and I think that there is an obligation on the part of the government to better inform citizens in terms of what has been happening.

Bill 202 Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In lieu of all the nice speeches we had in Recognitions about St. Paddy's Day, just about everything I've got on except my shirt is green, not that we're going to need the luck today. [interjections] You guys are colour blind or something here. We hope we don't need the luck today, because quite frankly I've been out and I've talked to virtually all members of this Legislature throughout the morning, either through the leaders of their parties or their caucuses or, indeed, our entire caucus this morning earlier.

Mr. Chairman, we've all heard the debate in second reading about firefighters and what it is about firefighters and their profession that makes them very, very special and, indeed, unique, and we passed that bill handily a week ago.

What I have before us now – and I'd like to introduce it – are amendments to Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003. I do have the requisite number of copies here, and I'll ask that they be distributed now. I'm assuming that you're going to want me to wait until they're handed out before continuing, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the proposed amendment is being circulated, and we shall refer to that amendment as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, you may proceed.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Frankly, as I say, we've had an awful lot of debate on Bill 202, and the amendments that we have before us don't substantially change the intent of the bill for a very simple reason. What we were after originally was, indeed, to get presumption for firemen within the bill. Now, over a weekend of very, very difficult work with the minister's office, indeed the minister of human resources, with his staff, with the staff from the WCB – I saw somebody here earlier from there – and with the availability and the extremely hard work of a great many firefighters on the weekend, we have come up with what we think is, indeed, even superior to the bill that we discussed at second reading.

Within those amendments – and I'd like to just put them out on the floor at this point in time – we have section (a), and I'll just explain the differences, Mr. Chairman. What we've done there – and this is a fairly substantial move – is we have moved the cancer to regulation. It's as simple as that. I know that in originally speaking, we had chosen to have the cancers put right in the bill, but in hindsight and through a great many conversations talking to the other province that has this legislation, Manitoba, we feel that, frankly, by doing this, we will indeed put more flexibility into these cancers.

Now, that being said, I would like to point out that the minister and his office over the weekend as well – and actually, I believe they told me about this on Friday – came out with a seventh firefighter cancer that they would like to see covered in regulations. Frankly, neither the firefighters nor myself knew that the statistics and the statistical link were there previously, and as a show of good faith and just outright honesty from the minister's office and the WCB, they had come out and requested that, in fact, we add a seventh cancer, that being of the ureter, to the regulations. However, we have the bill in front of us today. The regulations will come down the pike fairly shortly.

The second change on this is housekeeping essentially. It was paragraph (4), and it's, "The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall make regulations." This takes the possibility of someone else such as the WCB or any other body out of the decision-making process regarding which cancers and which periods of employment indeed go in the bill. As I say, it is housekeeping. The writing is a little bit different, but we have changed it to the extent that the firefighters themselves liked it better. I think it works better for us. That is the second change.

The third change to this bill was the old section (5). Frankly, that's the section on retroactivity. I mentioned three weeks ago that we would in fact be pulling that section out and, again, for a very simple and up-front reason. We had what were seven firefighters with cancer that were known previous to this. All firefighters that are known have now received benefits. It was expressed to me by someone earlier today that they were concerned there may be one out there that we don't know about, but quite honestly in conversations with the minister's office and the WCB retroactivity is something that is in a great many of their policies, and they do indeed go back for workers in a retroactive sense and have done that in the past. We feel that we're as safe as can be on that one.

In the last paragraph – and this is more for the rural folks than the urban MLAs, if I could say that – we have made a change within the paragraph itself. This change, I might add, came directly from the minister's office, and once again I feel that it, frankly, is more well written than the one that we had originally put out. As I said at second reading in my explanation of the bill, it was never our intent to have a WCB in Alberta and a WCB in Manitoba do exactly the same study and both report to their Legislature. That was never the intent, and we've simply done some creative writing to make that paragraph a little bit more straightforward. We've still got the report that we want in three years' time, and the WCB, as I understand it – and the minister will speak to this – will in fact be talking to the WCB in Winnipeg. We will get a report. We just didn't want two provinces doing absolutely identical studies somewhere down the line. I mean, we've got better things to do with our people, besides which the feeling is that if we include both provinces in this study, we'll in fact get a larger, more encompassing study. So I think it's a very good amendment, and I'm pleased it's there.

Mr. Chairman, those are the four changes to this bill, the amendments before us. I consider all of these amendments as I've moved them friendly amendments. Definitely friendly amendments. We have checked with the firefighters who have worked on this bill since day one. Two of the four, I might add – and I'll mention their names – Ken Block and Scott Wilcox, are lawyers in their own right as well as the counsel for the firefighters' association of Canada. We held quite a large conference call that went on for some period of time on Sunday morning.

We feel that by making these changes and putting this bill forward with these changes in it, we have indeed accomplished a very, very good bill on behalf of firefighters. The advantages to these amendments, quite honestly, give us more flexibility than, as an example, the Winnipeg legislation, and in point of fact when this bill passes and the regulations are written shortly after that, as opposed to Manitoba's five cancers in their legislation, we will indeed have seven. As I say, we've created more flexibility within the bill in order to add cancers to that.

With that, Mr. Chairman . . .

An Hon. Member: Let's vote.

Mr. Magnus: Somebody says: let's vote. I'd like to call the question. However, I won't. I'll give members an opportunity to speak. I'll lay those out on the floor, and we'll see how that goes.

Thanks so much.

The Deputy Chair: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak on amendment A1 to Bill 202, and I would like to thank the hon. member for the great amount of dedication and commitment that he's shown towards a quick passing of this particular bill and, as well, for the great efforts not only on his behalf but the amount of consultation that took place with not only himself but the firefighters, the minister and his department, and the WCB.

Certainly, the amendments that do appear, that they've worked so hard to come up with, are amendments that I would also encourage the House to accept. The thing that I do like about this is that we do have a number of cancers that have been identified. We do have the capacity in this legislation through regulation to make quick changes to future developments in this regard and in this line. I think that what it also shows, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that there are links here between workplace hazards and the development of disease. I think it's critical that when we have injured workers who do get industrial diseases, whether it be the firefighters or whoever else, we do, by way of study, look at this causation factor. It is critical. It is why we currently have a group of injured workers in this province who continue to this day to wait patiently for their outstanding claims to be heard and brought to some type of closure.

We also have to realize that particularly in a province such as Alberta, where we do have a major petrochemical industry, where certainly every safeguard is put in place and every possible procedure employed to protect our workers, they are going to from time to time develop some type of disease primarily because of the association of workplace hazards. So it is a very, very historic piece of legislation here in the province, and I think it is certainly the grass roots whereby we will be able to move forward with legislation in this province, that when there is a definite causation factor, when there is a link between that causation factor and the work that people are doing, injured workers can be dealt with in a very speedy manner.

I must say that this is a tremendous first step for a group of people who put their lives on the line. Since this legislation was introduced into this House, we've had two examples in this city alone where we've had major fires that they have responded to and not only have responded to but have been involved in very dangerous situations, and they have done themselves proud. They have served the public in an absolutely incredible manner.

So, as I said earlier, Mr. Chairman, I would certainly encourage all members of the House to support amendment A1. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak in support of the amendments. Of course, it is very important to me that the work that's been done has allowed these amendments to come forward. If they are approved by the Legislative Assembly when it comes time to call the question and, of course, then become incorporated into Bill 202, then I'll be able to support Bill 202 at third reading.

I want to indicate my gratitude and compliments not only to the Member for Calgary-North Hill for bringing forward the bill and the friendly amendments but also to firefighters that have been involved in the discussions that we've had ongoing now for the past week, also to representatives of the Workers' Compensation Board. I had all of the aforementioned in my office last week, and we looked for a way in which we could accommodate some of the concerns that had been expressed by members, of course including myself, in this particular situation that we had in front of us. Really, what we were looking for was a way in which to show clear and unequivocal support to the firefighters.

Now, with the amendments that are in front of us, I think that we accomplish the goal of trying to overcome the major objections. While it is clear that there's still now a presumptiveness that's involved because we are putting the cancers first of all in the regulations, which is very, very important because it, of course, is the government that will control the regulatory framework and the actual regulations that go in, I believe that there is a solid agreement here, while unwritten, between firefighters in Alberta and the Workers' Compensation Board of Alberta that the cancers to which the presumptiveness would apply will be based on science, and that is extremely important.

What we can't afford to have, in my view – and this has been a view since the early beginning – is any sort of automatic acceptance of a condition if there was fuzzy science or if there were more factors involved than science that were associated with the particular disability that was under discussion. That has now been achieved through the amendments that are being brought forward today and, of course, to a great extent reduces, then, the resistance that I was showing.

I thought it was wise on the part of the hon. member that the amendment, under “the Lieutenant Governor in Council,” instead of “may make regulations” asked for and received the accommodation that the act will say “shall.” This is extremely important in the sense that it removes any sort of feeling of mistrust that might be out there. I've found that one of the things that I've been fighting in this whole discussion around this isn't where WCB is today, but it's where WCB was 10 years ago. This is my opportunity now to talk about the WCB and how the new WCB is being reflected in these amendments, because again the very fact that they are friendly amendments coming from the member and the proposer of the bill is a clear indication that we're into some new, some more collaborative kinds of dealings now with WCB here in Alberta, and they're to be congratulated for that.

So with that, Mr. Chair, I want to just close by making a comment about the report on the so-called volunteers. I think it is incredibly important that we go through and look at the science and come back with a prepared report that would be brought here, into the Legislative Assembly.

Now, I know that in many cases ministers are supposed to play by the book and keep their personal feelings outside of some of the responsibilities that they have and the oaths that they took, but I want members to know that I have a personal involvement here in the fact that my brother is one of these so-called volunteers, and I know how hard through the years he has worked in that capacity fighting fires that arrive in his particular jurisdiction in southern Ontario. So it's with that feeling and with that need, I guess, to establish further science in this particular area that we're extremely pleased in how we've been able to deal with this situation. Of course, then, the science will stand, and any further additions to the regulation will then stand on that science and not on any other variable.

So today, I think, is a day that hon. members should be proud of. I think it's a day that firefighters here in Alberta can be happy about. I think it's a day where WCB has shown it's clearly involved in the new era. As the minister I want to thank all of those groups and will continue to support them as best I can.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and present a few questions to the Assembly in regard to Bill 202. I apologize to the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill; I was unable to hear his initial comments this afternoon. I understand from the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment that some volunteer firefighters are also going to be covered under this bill as well as the municipally owned fire departments that have paid staff, from the firefighters to the fire chief.

Certainly, I am at first glance cautious of this amendment. When I look through the bill, if all the parties that were involved in this are satisfied with it, then that is fine, but I am very cautious when I deal with the WCB and the phrase “unless the contrary is proven.” That rings alarm bells with this hon. member because of my experiences with constituents and injured workers and the lengths, in my view, that the WCB process has gone to deny benefits to these individuals, and there is no doubt in my mind. I am disappointed that the list of cancers is being removed from statute and put in regulation.

Now, my questions – and, hopefully, they will be addressed during Committee of the Whole debate this afternoon, Mr. Chairman – in regard to these amendments are: when are these regulations going to be drafted, and are the regulations going to be drafted before the board conducts this research? If we're going to twin with the province of Manitoba and do this research together, well, that's fine. But when, precisely, are we going to be able to see these regulations? I think that whenever you remove something from statute and put it in regulations, one has to be very careful. If these regulations are going to be drafted, will they be tabled in the Assembly for all hon. members to have a look at before this bill passes third reading?

With those comments I, in conclusion, will await an answer from the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill – and we will wait with cautious optimism – that this bill has not been watered down, Mr. Chairman, from its original intent. I understood from the hon. member that there was quite a consultation process on Sunday morning, and I'm very pleased to learn that the hon. member is working diligently on behalf of the province on a Sunday morning. I suppose it's the only time that firefighters would be available. They've been very busy the last couple of weeks – that's for sure – in this city at least, well, all across the province. Their commitment to public safety and fire protection certainly does not go unnoticed on this side of the Assembly.

So in regard to my questions, if in due course of debate we could have a response, I would be very grateful. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

3:50

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Again, I'd like to stand and speak in favour of the amendments that have been brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. I know he has spent copious hours working with the appropriate parties to come forward with these amendments to streamline this bill and make it more comprehensive.

I'm particularly pleased that he has put the word “shall” in place of “may” under the regulation-making process by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. I think that is fundamentally important so that the government is directly held responsible for the process and the regulations that are going to be covered under the primary-site cancer and the period of employment regulation process that will be following on the regulations side.

When I spoke on this bill in second reading, I truly believed that we depend so much on firefighters to save us and to help us, and that's never been so evident as it was the last couple of weeks, again in the city of Edmonton, where we watched one day an apartment building burn and firefighters trapped for a time, a very scary time frame. Without hesitation they were in there to save lives and property and return the community as near to its original state as possible. To have a worry such as this burdening them is really not right morally or ethically, and for us to take that burden away by assuring them that we will put a safeguard in place that protects not only them but their families is the least we can do when they do so much for us. So I am very, very pleased to be able to stand and support these amendments and this bill. The sooner we do this, the better.

Like – and I'm almost frightened to say – the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I hope the regulation goes through speedily and without hesitation, because it is important that this come to a conclusion. I don't often agree with a Liberal suggestion. It's something I don't do, but in this particular case . . .

Mr. Mason: What about the stability fund?

Mrs. Nelson: Not you. No, no, not the New Democrats. That's stretching it. With the Liberals.

I do agree, Mr. Chairman, with this recommendation as I think it's urgent that this proceed. I want to say that I, like a number of members of this Legislature, have been cautious and somewhat suspicious of the good intentions of the WCB over the years of dealing with injured workers in our constituencies, and I'm very much encouraged by the change that I have seen of late. I think this is a good signal to send, that there's change afoot and that the credibility for us, dealing with injured workers and people in distress, is being restored to a position that was really the intent of WCB, and that was to be able to provide protection for the worker in the event of an unforeseen accident. God willing, that doesn't happen, but if it does, they are looked after and their families are looked after. Their acceptance of these amendments and this regulation process, I think, is a good signal that they are now getting back on the right track, and I hope it continues. So I would encourage them to do that, and through the Minister of HR and E we will send that message. I think it will be a good one, coming from this Legislature.

So I would encourage, Mr. Chairman, all members to support this amendment. Let's get this bill passed, get the regulations in place, and protect as best we can our firefighters, as they do us.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to briefly speak to the amendments to Bill 202. First of all, I'd like to begin by congratulating the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for his work on this bill on behalf of firefighters. I know that there were last-minute discussions around these amendments with firefighters, and that must have indeed stretched people's busy schedules to the limit, with the two major fires that we've seen in Edmonton. Clearly, between putting out fires, the firefighters have managed to put out other fires by working with the hon. member on these amendments. I was pleased, as well, to hear the comments of the minister with respect to these amendments. So it looks like we have a compromise in the works, and that is a very good thing.

There are some aspects to this that I think bear some discussion, but first of all I want to indicate that I believe that this is a very good approach. I know the concern has been that this approach could be extended to other groups. Well, frankly speaking, I think this approach should be extended to other groups but would remind people who are concerned about that that in every respect the Legislature can make a decision on a case-by-case basis, or in cases where the cabinet is allowed to make regulations, they may on a case-by-case basis make a decision on extending this on the merits of each case.

Shifting the burden of proof onto the WCB is a very positive step.

Instead of asking a firefighter who has been diagnosed with one of six types of cancer to prove a link between their occupation and illness, the link will be assumed, and the responsibility will be upon the employer or the WCB to disprove the link. I think this is well backed up by the literature that exists, the medical research that exists with respect to these kinds of cancer. This is clearly modeled on the Manitoba legislation; that province passed a similar act last year. There are 20 U.S. states, Mr. Chairman, who have similar legislation.

Mr. Chairman, firefighters by the nature of their job must put themselves into dangerous situations. Unlike other occupations, firefighters cannot refuse to enter these situations, and as a result they do suffer higher rates of illness directly related to their employment. I think that if similar occupations can be directly linked to cancer of various types or some other types of illness, then presumptive legislation may well be warranted in that case as well.

There are a number of types of toxins that contribute to these types of cancer: acrolein, acrylonitrile, asbestos, benzene, chloroform, diesel exhaust, hydrogen chloride, halons, formaldehyde, hydrogen cyanide, nitrogen dioxide, polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons, vinyl chloride, and soots of various kinds. Firefighters face a 50 percent increase in the risk of colon cancer, and that number jumps to 68 percent in firefighters employed 20 years or more. There's a 30 to 50 percent increase in the risk of prostate cancer among firefighters. So, clearly, the situation we've had up until now, with firefighters suffering these illnesses that were clearly caused as a result of their profession having to go and appeal and fight the WCB in order to get compensation, must end, and this bill will go a great way toward ending that.

I just want to indicate, Mr. Chairman, that I have some concerns about shifting to the cabinet the decision-making around which types of illnesses are covered. I understand that there needs to be some flexibility. I recognize that this may well have been a compromise that was reached in order to secure support for the bill, and I take some comfort in the fact that the amendment says that "the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall make regulations," not "may," and I think that indicates that it's probably acceptable.

So, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I will support the four amendments as I see them to be essential to the passage of the bill. Quite frankly, I see the passage of the bill to be essential for the workers of this province. It's a significant step forward. I think it's a recognition that firefighters have risks, not just their immediate risk, as we saw with five firefighters recently being trapped in the fire very near to this place. Fortunately they were rescued. Those are the kinds of day-to-day immediate and direct threats that firefighters face in their work, and they can never be underestimated. Neither can we underestimate the long-term environmental impact on the health of firefighters of that very hazardous work.

I think this bill is, in fact, good recognition of that fact and a very progressive step forward for Alberta, which has not often led the pack when it comes to progressive legislation on behalf of workers. I would take my hat off to the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for this bill and urge that it be given all-party support in entering into the statutes of this province. With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today in committee to discuss Bill 202, Worker's Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003, as sponsored by my colleague from Calgary-North Hill. I had a whole bunch of notes that I was going to go through prior to this amendment that came out, and I'm very pleased to see the amendment changes that have occurred but also to have the ministry as well as the Worker's Comp and the firefighters and the Member for Calgary-North Hill work diligently on the weekend to come to some resolution. I think that by working together, we can see what kinds of accomplishments can be made.

I think it should be noted that it's important that we see in the amendment to Bill 202 that the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall do things that are there. Rather than having it in the bill itself, it'll be in the amendments. Important to note that if it stayed in the bill, every time we wanted some cancers added to the list, the whole act would have to be reopened. By including it in regulations, now the Lieutenant Governor in Council can do that.

As a member of a rural constituency I was pleased to hear the comments made by the minister on volunteer firefighters because in rural Alberta we only have volunteer firefighters, or at least in my constituency, anyhow, I don't have any paid fire-fighting departments. I'm going to relate to the fires in Redwater the last couple of years, the dangers that these volunteers go into. The last fire I recall, they went into a fire that happened to be in a country residential area not knowing what might be stored in the back of the back 40, if you want to say. We had propane tanks blowing up. Because one fellow had about 10 or 15 or 30 cars in the back 40, there were gas tanks exploding, all kinds of carcinogenic possibilities there. These firefighters as volunteers and also the ones in the urban centres are not sure. They cannot pick and choose which fire they're going to go to.

So I think this is commendable to have the Member for Calgary-North Hill bring this bill. I think it's due time that it be introduced, and with the amendments I think we have a bill that is full and complete. Certainly, I would encourage all our members on all sides – and I think we've heard that – to accept this bill and vote in favour of it.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will take my seat. I just wanted to bring those points out. I'm pleased to see that there are also possibilities for volunteer firefighters, as the minister has indicated, after a study is done. I understand that Manitoba would be doing a study, Alberta would be. By doing it jointly, we don't have to duplicate the system.

I'm very pleased on behalf of rural Alberta firefighters who are volunteers or urban firefighters as well. I commend all these gentlemen for a job well done, and when I say gentlemen, we have a lot of women firefighters that are volunteers in rural Alberta. In Redwater itself I think it's probably about a 60-40 split female/male. They're all volunteers, and when I say volunteers, that doesn't mean businesspeople. It means people from our schools. There were so many of our high schools kids in the Redwater fire that took time off, but they also graduated with honours this past year. They not only fought for the community, but they also did their studies, so I've got to commend them for that.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to make a couple of comments. I won't repeat what I said at second reading, and I will support the amendment, but it's not without reservations. I'm very leery of regulations and regulation-making and, I think, with good cause. When we passed the bill in the House that allowed for the energy rebates, we didn't have the regulations in front of us or even the draft regulations at that time, and that's come back to haunt us.

No one knew at the time that the rebates were going to be dependent upon a year-long averaging, and that's made a tremendous difference in the lives of Albertans, who expected that that legislation would protect them from rising energy prices. So I have a deep-seated suspicion of leaving things to regulations.

Now, we've been assured that that's not going to be the case here, that the regulations will in fact include what's been taken out of the bill. But, again, regulations are much more easily changed, and they can be changed without coming before this Assembly. I think that it's something that's going to bear watching, and it's obviously been a compromise for some reason. The reason we've been given is that it allows more readily for other cancers to be added to it, but it allows for things to be taken away more readily too.

It's with that caution that I will support the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and stand in support of the amendments. The mover might be a little surprised because I was one of those who did not vote in favour of the bill in second reading. I've never in 10 years voted against principles that I believe in, and I wasn't going to start on that one.

I had a couple of reasons for not voting for it, and one of them is that as a matter of principle I don't think that politicians should be making medical decisions. I mean, we only have one medical doctor in the entire caucus, and I think he would probably have some difficulty trying to prove scientifically whether or not this should be done. I'm really pleased, though, with the amendments to the bill because now it takes it out of the realm of politicians enshrining something in legislation that is essentially based on some medical evidence somewhere and then putting it in regulation based on scientific proof. That's the key.

The second reason that I didn't vote for it is because I've been involved in trying to reform the WCB now for 10 years. At one point I tried to bring a private member's bill, much like you did, hon. member, and it was on medical panels. I think we ended up hoisting that bill; it seems so long ago now. In the meantime, we did convince the current minister responsible for the legislation to do a review, and I was honoured to be on both committees. Like the Provincial Treasurer said earlier, I'm impressed with the changes that I've seen with respect to the WCB.

One thing in particular. You probably are all familiar with Dr. Ohlhauser, the former registrar of the College of Physicians and Surgeons. Now, he's the person that the WCB put in place to put together medical panels, and I have a great deal of time for that man, and I've found him to be extremely honest in all of his dealings in the past. I know that he's doing the best that he can to ensure that the medical panels operate the way they should have always operated. One of these medical panels will probably at some time in the future look at whether or not a particular cancer or occupational disease should be included in regulation.

So given that the legislation is now changed and I think has been improved, as the hon. member said in his remarks, I'm going to be very pleased to support this bill. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this time I have one additional concern and comment and question that I would like to get on the record, and perhaps the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill can provide an answer this afternoon, hopefully. We have changed the original Bill 202 with this amendment, and I see that now we strike out subsection (2) and substitute the following.

If a worker who is or has been a firefighter suffers an injury that is a primary site cancer of a type specified in the regulations, the injury shall be presumed to be an occupational disease, the dominant cause of which is the employment as a firefighter, unless the contrary is proven.

Now, the original definition of firefighter at 24.1(1)(a):

... an employee, including officers and technicians, employed by a municipality or Metis settlement and assigned exclusively to fire protection and fire prevention duties notwithstanding that those duties may include the performance of ambulance or rescue services.

In light of those two definitions, what does that mean for firefighters that are employed in large industrial complexes? For instance, we could pick an oil refinery where there are individuals with 30- and 35- and 40-year careers. They may be there for two or three years, and they're part of the fire-fighting team. They're very well trained; they're very well schooled. It is amazing how quickly those individuals can get a fire under control, and speed is of the essence whenever you're dealing with, let's say, a refinery fire. Or let's even go further, and we can go to Fort Saskatchewan and talk about Dow Chemical or any of the industrial complexes there or Fort McMurray, where these individuals are doing this over the span of their careers, which could be 30 years. Where do they fit in this bill? What does Bill 202 do for them?

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would have to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill: what does this bill mean for firefighters that are employed in large industrial complexes? They're employed there for a long period of time, and they have other duties, but in case there's an emergency, they drop whatever they're doing and head to the firehouse. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands was talking about exposure to benzene and toluene and all these lovely complex chemicals that are known to be carcinogenic.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity to ask that question.

Mr. Magnus: Mr. Chairman, just to answer some of the questions that have come forward at this point in time. I don't believe that I'm limiting debate. I believe I have the right to get up more than once. Is that correct?

Regs to be drafted was asked right off the bat. I can't remember who on that side asked about it. The bottom line is we already pretty much have them on a piece of paper. The unfortunate part is that we can't really start writing the regs till we have a reason to do it. The reason is within the bill. Let me put it this way. I had a very short conversation with the minister. I said: is it a matter of a couple of months or a couple of weeks? He suggested that a couple of days is the answer. That should pretty much answer that. We'll have them very, very rapidly. It's not that complicated. We're going to have seven cancers on the regulatory sheet. It's going to be there, and we'll have it very, very soon.

As far as the regs – and somebody had talked about within the original bill and the fact that we changed the word “may” to “shall.” The reason for that – and I think the minister did express that fairly clearly. For those who might have missed it, the concern was that by leaving “may” in there, there was a possibility of somebody else changing those regulations. We didn't want that. We wanted Executive Council – in other words, the legislative body – to be responsible for putting these in or out, and that's exactly what we've done. This was one of the key sticking points for us over the weekend, and frankly the firefighters and myself are extremely pleased to have that in there because it simply defines who's going to be doing that.

As far as the concerns on volunteers, now I've certainly had a lot of comments about this. I've had probably a half a dozen volunteers call me. This bill is for full-time urban firefighters and asking for a study about volunteer and other firefighters. The moral of the story is that I have a brother-in-law who works at Dow Chemical. He's been there for over 20 years. He's actually an ex city of Edmonton firefighter from fire hall 1, and for a variety of reasons he went to Dow and went into private industry. I understand what the Member for Edmonton-Highlands had to say earlier about the benzene. I mean, we all know that benzene comes out of virtually everything that burns. It's the most carcinogenic substance known to man. But, at the end of the day, my brother-in-law, the guy who works at Dow Chemical, frankly, has not actively fought a fire since he left the municipal fire department; that is, Edmonton's fire department.

So I understand where the member is coming from. I'd love to cover every firefighter I can think about, but there's a difference between a full-time urban firefighter who is actively going out there as opposed to a fellow who works as a fire prevention specialist, shall we say. It's going to be an interesting question, to the member opposite, if, in fact, it's challenged in that sense, because frankly there are possibilities. There's another possibility of a full-time fire chief, as an example, in a volunteer fire department. There will be interesting rulings. I believe they'd be covered.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure today to be able to rise in the House and share my thoughts on Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003. This bill, as you know, deals with the ability of firefighters to receive presumptive coverage for certain forms of cancer, and I'd like to thank my colleague the Member for Calgary-North Hill for bringing this bill before the House, for the tremendous amount of work that he's done to bring it this far, as well as to thank my Minister of Human Resources and Employment along with the Member for Calgary-North Hill for working together with the firemen and the WCB on creating the amendments. As anybody will tell you, I don't like to see divisions in my own caucus, and there were some pretty heated debates on this bill and not because anybody didn't support firemen but, rather, because changes to the WCB are extremely important, that we still have an arm's-length relationship with them. I'm very grateful to both of them for the tremendous amount of work they did to bring these amendments forward.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

As mentioned already, Mr. Chairman, by a number of my colleagues, primary site brain cancer, primary site bladder and kidney cancer, non-Hodgkin's lymphatic cancer, leukemia, and primary site colon cancer have been shown to occur more frequently within the fire-fighting community due to their increased exposure to carcinogens and other toxic substances. Under current guidelines a firefighter may receive workers' benefit coverage; however, he or she must first prove that the specific cancer has occurred as a direct result of their exposure in the line of duty. Under Bill 202 a firefighter diagnosed with any of the cancers I've just listed would receive presumptive status as long as years of service restrictions had been met. These limitations would be specified for each of the cancers, and this is also contingent on whether the cancer was found during the initial medical examination.

Providing firefighters with presumptive coverage for certain forms of cancers is absolutely necessary, Mr. Chairman. We rely on them to put themselves in harm's way, and we cannot ask them to run into a burning building filled with toxic smoke and then tell them that they have to prove that the cancer they had been diagnosed with had something to do with their lifestyle. We need to keep in mind that firefighters cannot wait for a building to burn out so that the risk is eliminated, and firefighters cannot refuse to do their job due to unsafe working conditions. They are the only group of workers – well, one of them; I am sure the military is also another group, but this is the main group of people where that is the case. In other words, the risk of exposure to cancer-causing elements is built into their job.

Bill 202 aims to change the status quo and give firefighters the benefit of the doubt when dealing with select types of cancer. To be more specific, it deals with cancers that have been linked to the conditions present in their line of work. This, Mr. Chairman, would leave sick firefighters with one less battle to fight while dealing with this terrible disease.

I also believe that the amendments proposed today should allow for a flexible way of adding cancers to the list once a link to the fire-fighting occupation is established, and I understand that, in fact, we've gone from six to seven cancers already. That's why I believe that we should take the actual list of cancers out of the legislation and include them in the regulations. It makes it easier to add additional cancers to that list if it's found necessary, and we wouldn't have to introduce future amendments to this legislation.

The other amendment that I totally appreciate is that it eliminates retroactivity from the bill, and it's been a long-standing practice of the Legislature not to include retroactivity in any of its legislation. In fact, some of the toughest debates we've had in caucus have been about whether or not there should be retroactivity on any piece of government legislation or a private member's bill. The WCB has been effective in resolving the outstanding claims, and the need for the retroactivity clause is no longer there.

The other amendment proposed today was the change in section 2(6) so that the WCB is required to prepare a report on the state of the current research rather than conduct research, and I agree with the Member for Calgary-North Hill that there's absolutely no point in everybody doing identical research no matter which province in Canada they're in, so I'm very grateful. If we can follow along with what Manitoba or other provinces that are looking at this are doing, then we all benefit from that.

With the amendments properly reflected in Bill 202, I would like to encourage all of my colleagues, including the ones that were having such tremendous difficulty with this last time, to support this important piece of legislation, and once again, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to get my voice on the record with this bill. I didn't have a chance in second reading, so I'm very grateful for the opportunity now. Also, on a concluding note, like every member of this Assembly I have nothing but the greatest respect for the people who serve as firemen in our province. I'm very grateful that they're here able to observe this debate today, and I wish them all the very best.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and speak on the amendments to Bill 202 today. I've a few short comments to make, but before I do, I'd like to also welcome the members of the various fire-fighting departments in the members' gallery today. My late brother-in-law was a captain with the Calgary city police force, and through our discussions over the years on some of the stories he related to me, I believe he gave me a little bit of insight of the dangers that people in various fire-fighting departments, especially major city fire departments, face on a daily basis. I'd also like to commend the Member for Calgary-North Hill for the work he's done not only on the bill, which I believe to be a good bill, but on the work he's done over the weekend in addressing the various concerns brought up during second reading and working very hard to make a good bill even better.

One of the things that I'm quite comfortable with is in amendment (4), changing "may" to "shall" and including those primary site cancers in the regulations. I don't think that there should be any fears by anyone that there's any room for jockeying things around because it refers to subsection (4), that "The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall make regulations" designating primary site cancers with presumption in subsection (2), and subsection (2) clearly outlines those six cancers very clearly. I'm sure everyone will expect to see that in those regulations.

The other thing that it makes happen is prescribing the employment periods; instead of may happen, that now shall happen, so I think that's a very good thing.

One thing I do have a concern with in reviewing it after my comments in second reading – I didn't mention it before, and it was brought up by other members – is the exclusion of casual or part-time firefighters. I'm pleased to see there's an opportunity for that to be addressed in the future in section (6) of the amendment.

One question I guess I would have for the Member for Calgary-North Hill – and he may have addressed it, but I may have missed it, but perhaps in his closing comments he could address it – is: why three years? How did he arrive at three years before submitting a report to the minister on the research results regarding the industries? I'd be looking forward to why that is, why it couldn't be a shorter period of time, or why it has to be three years.

That's the only question I have, Mr. Chairman. As I said before, I believe these amendments make a good bill even better, and I would urge everyone in the House to support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Let me begin by saying that I'm very pleased to have the opportunity to rise this afternoon and speak in support of Bill 202. Since the time of debate on Bill 202 I have had an opportunity to reflect at length on this bill and, I would say, what it means for our firefighters and for Alberta. During this reflection it occurred to me how many similarities and touching points there are between the firefighters, on one hand, and a group of professionals whose job is to protect the rest of us. Take soldiers for an example. This is perhaps a particularly useful comparison in light of the events of the last 18 months and also because the future looks no less uncertain. I think it's a fair assumption to say that more than anything men and women of our armed forces are motivated by the deeply felt desire to be of service to our country, to our fellow citizens. They sign up for military duty knowing that under most circumstances their time in service will be calm and quiet. Ordinarily, the biggest upheavals they face are the ardors of boot camp or perhaps the discomforts imposed by lengthy field manoeuvres. They also know, however, that they can be called upon to enter into situations where dangers abound and where there is a real possibility that they may meet their Maker.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, we know that our soldiers are willing to make the ultimate sacrifice for the benefit of the rest of us. In fact, we count on them to be willing to make this sacrifice. We make that assumption. If you want to be a soldier, you should also know that in the event of a severe situation, you may lose your life. In the last few years there's been an occasional outcry at how poorly compensated our soldiers are. These concerns have revolved around one or two main issues. On one hand, it has been shown that in comparison to soldiers of other countries our Canadian soldiers are, quite frankly, underpaid. Headlines were made when it was revealed how some soldiers and their families live in poor conditions. The other issue that gave rise to this concern was that here we have Canada's soldiers, men and women, who are willing to die for our country and we don't offer them sufficient compensation. When you put your life on the line for the rest of us, most of us think it's okay that you get a little extra than others. In fact, it's more than okay. It's appropriate. It is the right thing to do.

Mr. Chairman, I could even go as far as to say that society has a moral duty to protect those who protect the rest of us. This is what Bill 202 does for our province's firefighters. It offers them and their families some added protection in what is, in all likelihood, the worst possible time of their lives. Those of us here today who have not had a family member or friend battle cancer are very fortunate. It seems that so many people in all walks of life are diagnosed with cancer these days. However, if we think we have it bad, we should consider ourselves so lucky that we are not firefighters. Recently the statistics indicate that the risk of firefighters contracting cancer is between 200 and 300 percent higher than that of the rest of the population. Too much of a price to pay for being a protector of the rest of us, you say, and I say: you bet it is.

Mr. Chairman, I'm very pleased that section 2 of the bill specifies that a regulation will be developed to include the list of the cancers currently known and as they are discovered relating to fire-fighting work. There are six types of cancer that available medical evidence shows firefighters develop at much higher rates than the rest of the population. These inflated rates are due in large part to occupational hazards. I don't suppose we should be overly surprised that this is so. The rest of us generally stay away from toxic fumes and scorching fires. We have a choice in that regard, and the firefighters do not. There were a number of major industrial fires in my constituency in the last few years. In a firefighter's workplace the work environment is uncontrolled. Not only do the firefighters not have the right to refuse unsafe work. They also have absolutely no control over a range of concerns including but certainly not limited to air quality, toxic gases emitted from the fire, work area temperature up to a thousand degrees Fahrenheit, zero or near zero visibility, not to mention structural instability.

To expand briefly on just one of these points, today firefighters are routinely exposed to toxins such as carbon monoxide, asbestos, benzene, chloroform, formaldehyde, halons, hydrogen cyanide, hydrogen chloride, and nitrogen dioxide, just to mention a few. As if that isn't enough, Mr. Chairman, at the scene of a fire a firefighter will encounter not just one but many toxic gases. Not surprisingly, they don't come neatly in a compartmentalized fashion. Rather, they're encountering toxins not just one at a time, but it contains a mixture of toxins. However, when we look at the situation, it's interesting that it's not one plus one equals two. It's not that two plus three equals five. The mixture together is a composition of toxins that we may not know the toxicity of.

I'm also very pleased to see that in section 2 there is an amendment that indicates scientific and evidence-based reports on the cause and effect of the concerns and also relating to fire-fighting work. Firefighters know the dangers of their job. They know that each and every time they enter the scene of a fire, there is a possibility that they may not come out. I also see that with the science-based and the evidence-based reporting, it removes the emotional and subjective views of the situation.

In recent years firefighters also had to recognize that some of the danger that they face is not immediate. Unlike the building that collapsed or whose impact it is on – they feel it right away – this toxic substance which the firefighters are exposed to lies dormant for many years. Just like the killer that cancer is, so are these toxins working away quietly, doing what they do best, killing by stealth and in slow motion. Mr. Chairman, there are times when people spend years dying. When death finally arrives, it is merely the grim confirmation that has been known for a long time.

Turning attention again to section 2, there is a mandate that if a firefighter is diagnosed as having one of the six aforementioned, hopefully developed in the regulation, that I quoted in my previous debate, "the injury shall be presumed to be an occupational disease, the dominant cause of which is the employment as a firefighter, unless the contrary is proven." By enshrining the presumptive status in the law, we will take a huge burden off the backs of firefighters who find themselves stricken by one of these cancers. In cases like this, it is only right and proper for some firefighters to do the best . . . [Mr. Cao's speaking time expired]

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The time allocated has elapsed. However, since we are in committee, the chair is willing to recognize you again if you wish to complete your comments.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You don't have to bother timing me, because I'm only going to take a few minutes. I'd like to take this opportunity just to discuss a few points regarding Bill 202, which is the WCB firefighters bill. Firefighters have always been the good guys to us. You know, little boys want to be firefighters when they grow up.

Mrs. Forsyth: And little girls.

Ms DeLong: And there are some little girls who also want to be firefighters when they grow up.

They've always been the good guys. In front of my house I've got a river which becomes very dangerous in the spring, and twice I've seen firefighters go out and risk their lives on the ice to rescue. Once there were two little girls out there. Another time there was a young man who had lost his strength from the cold water. Both times they went out and saved them. Of course, we always admire them, but then 9-11 came along, and it sort of moved up several notches in that they aren't just the good guys, but they're our heroes. They're the guys who went in there, and they're the front line now for terrorist attacks. So I'm very thankful for this opportunity to be able to support them now.

I have to thank the MLA for Calgary-North Hill and the Minister of Human Resources and Employment for coming up with this amendment, because I do very much want to support the firefighters. Since you have now moved the cancers into the regulations and we do have the assurance that these regulations are going to be based on solid science, I'm very glad that I am now in a position where I can support our heroes and support the firemen.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour to join the debate on Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. I believe that many of us have seen the print that illustrates a tired firefighter bent over, resting on a stool with two angels, one on either side of him, resting their heads on his knees, entitled Tired Angels. They say that a picture is worth a thousand words, and this print is certainly worth at least that many words plus a thousand tears.

As has been stated, Bill 202 would amend the Workers' Compensation Act to ensure that the six recognized firefighter cancers have presumptive status for any firefighter wishing to receive workers' compensation benefits due to the contraction of these cancers. There are approximately 2,500 full-time firefighters in the province of Alberta as well as 8,500 part-time and volunteer personnel, who put their lives on the line in order to save another life, and for this they should be acknowledged.

There have been some important points raised in opposition to Bill 202 that need to be clarified. The first point that needs to be addressed is the notion of retroactivity status. As we have heard from the sponsor, Bill 202 has been modified to reflect a nonretroactive clause in its wording. The retroactivity clause in Bill 202, Mr. Chairman, has created some conflict with those in disagreement with the bill. Initially, this retroactive provision would have allowed presumptive benefits to any firefighter who made a claim for any of the listed six cancers to the Workers' Compensation Board since 1992.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 202 has particularly been described as more of an emotional issue than a substantive issue. I believe that the proof from the statistics provided in the preceding and following speeches will dissuade that thinking. Bill 202 speaks to a point of unbiased medical and scientific proof that shows that firefighters alone are more susceptible to these six cancers and that they should be taken care of.

Another cancer that has not been discussed but has been linked though not officially listed among the six known firefighter cancers is testicular cancer. It is acknowledged that male firefighters may be more than four times more likely to develop testicular cancer than men in the general population according to the results of a German study. This type of cancer is rare, but it's the most common cancer in men aged 15 to 40. Although this association between fire fighting and testicular cancer is based on only a small number of exposed subjects, the findings are consistent with a recent cohort study from New Zealand. This New Zealand study found a threefold increase in the risk of testicular cancer among firefighters. These findings were published in this month's issue of the American Journal of Industrial Medicine.

Mr. Chairman, the reasoning behind such an association remains unclear, but there is a general consensus among medical experts that because firefighters are exposed to a number of potentially cancer-causing substances in smoke, soot, and the combustion products of burning synthetic materials, they are more prone to develop cancer. Again, this demonstrates that firefighters are susceptible to many risks and, therefore, should be compensated.

Another point that has been raised by those opposed to Bill 202 is what I call the floodgate factor. Opponents will argue that by giving firefighters presumptive status to claim WCB benefits after contracting cancer on the job, this will open the floodgates, so to speak, to other groups in the manual labour force that work with chemicals classed as carcinogenic. Every worker from the waitress at the local diner to the body man at the local body shop will be attempting to claim the same status as a firefighter. The reality of this situation, Mr. Chairman, is that these claims will come before the WCB regardless of whether Bill 202 is passed into law.

As of this current date there is only one outstanding presumptive claim submitted on behalf of an Alberta firefighter to the WCB requesting benefits due to a cancer illness. The point here, Mr. Chairman, is that with the passage of this legislation it should not be expected that the WCB will see an overwhelming number of claims made from a variety of industries and professions, all claiming to have contracted cancer while on the job. Opponents have made statements that other industries and vocations could claim a link to their work environment and cancer. The hole in this argument is that major medical studies over the past 50 years and especially over the past 10 years have demonstrated a direct link between the occupation of fire fighting and the six deadly cancers.

As firefighters are the only group of workers who cannot refuse to work due to unsafe working conditions and given that their jobs exist for no other reason than to ensure the safety of Albertans, we owe it to them to provide benefits when doing their job puts them in contact with cancer. Firefighters should not have to fight the system when they should be fighting this horrific disease.

There have been other questions and concerns posed to this Assembly by those who are in disagreement with Bill 202, and one of these questions involves effective ways in which the government and the Workers' Compensation Board can work together to help prevent cancer cases within the firefighting community. One very significant way in which both parties can work to prevent cancer cases, Mr. Chairman, is ensuring that firefighters have the most current and up-to-date breathing equipment available. A self-contained breathing apparatus is probably the single most important piece of safety equipment used by a firefighter. Every time a self-contained breathing apparatus is worn in a contaminated atmosphere, it is protecting the health and safety of the individual firefighter wearing it. For about 25 years firefighters have used self-contained breathing apparatus, the firefighters' equivalent to scuba gear. A hose from an air tank feeds a mask that covers the firefighter's face. This system creates positive pressure, that makes sure that leaks flow out of the mask.

A report in 1994 sponsored by the Ontario Industrial Disease Standards Panel stated that although a standard firefighter's tank contains about 30 minutes of air, the tank is actually effective for only about 15 minutes. There are several reasons for this. A firefighter must allow 10 minutes to leave a burning structure so the breathing tank can be replaced. Firefighters have made comments that under strenuous conditions this type of breathing apparatus is hot, heavy, and very cumbersome. Third, firefighters have also remarked that it's hard to breathe once the tank has reached 30 percent capacity. This means that firefighters often remove their breathing apparatus as soon as the worst is over. It is then that they are most exposed to dangerous chemicals at the fire site. Mr. Chairman, I believe that providing firefighters with the most current and up-to-date breathing equipment available is paramount in helping to improve the health and well-being of our provincial firefighters.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to stress my agreement with the proposed legislation in Bill 202. I am certain that every member of this Assembly would agree that firefighters are indeed true heroes in this world. They play a large role in keeping our communities and neighbourhoods safe. In light of this and based on the medical statistics backing this bill, I suggest that my colleagues move to accept Bill 202 and give a presumptive rest to this final fight that some firefighters may be forced to face.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. At second reading I wanted to put a few comments on the record, but I was unable to. We ran out of time. Yes, I was one of the MLAs who voted against this bill at second reading, and I did it for a reason that I discussed with a couple of paramedics from the Lethbridge fire department who were up here later that day. The rationale I gave to them was that although I didn't disagree with the intent of the legislation, I am not a big fan of legislation. I would rather have seen this addressed through changes to the workers' compensation policy or changes to regulation. To some degree I am still convinced that that's a better way to go simply because regulations can be changed much quicker than legislation, and if there is good intent on both sides, we could accomplish the same thing.

Having said that, I must and want to compliment the Minister of Human Resources and Employment and the Member for Calgary-North Hill for coming up with a solution that appears, on the surface, to satisfy most of the parties involved. For that reason, I would like to support it. I do want it on the record, though, that I still have a concern that there may be some jobs or some occupations who may not even have access to similar policy or regulatory areas under the Workers' Compensation Board, and I had made the point with Wayne and Brad, who are paramedics in Lethbridge, that it would be unfair, in my mind, to have, for instance, a paramedic working out of a fire hall treated differently or through different legislation than the firefighter who is working out of the same fire hall. Granted, we're talking about cancers that were unfortunately gotten by some of the firefighters as opposed to maybe HIV or AIDS, that might be transferred through a blood transfusion at the scene of an accident. That was the point. It wasn't to put down the fire-fighting profession at all. It was simply to try to make sure that we had equitable legislation for everyone regardless of any traumatic or unfortunate incident which might result in a terminal disease.

So I do again congratulate the two parties involved for coming together, Mr. Chairman, with a most reasonable solution, and I appreciate the opportunity to put the thoughts on record.

4:50

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm glad to have a chance to speak to this in committee, as well. I had hoped to speak at second reading and didn't have a chance to do that, so I do have some points I'll make about that.

First, I would like to speak in regard to these amendments, Mr. Chairman, the concept of moving some of the legislation into the regulation area. I think that's a wonderful thing that the Minister of Human Resources and Employment and the Member for Calgary North Hill have come up with. As the previous speaker from Little Bow said, it's nice to see that the two sides have really come together on this issue. It seems that all parties are very satisfied and that everyone seems quite interested in seeing this go forward, and it seems to have addressed all the outstanding issues that were out there. So I'm glad to see that that's happened.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 202 certainly is an amendment to the Workers'

Compensation Act that would designate the following cancers as occupational cancers for firefighters, as I'm sure has been mentioned already: brain cancer, bladder and kidney cancer, lymphatic cancer, leukemia, hemotopoietic, and colon cancer. If a firefighter should receive any one of these cancers, that were in section 2 but have now moved to regulations, given the particular amount of time that he or she has worked, he or she would now be receiving presumptive status for workers' compensation benefits. The time line for each cancer is set out by the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, so I think this is all going to work very effectively in the future.

Section 6 of Bill 202, Mr. Chairman, calls for a three-year study to be conducted by the WCB on cancer rates in volunteer firefighters. This is very important, because I think there is still a question out there today. This is going to depend on pure science, the pure science of what we're going to find out about cancer relating to firefighters, especially in volunteers, which is not known. Today most of the science is all around full-time, urban firefighters dealing with fires that are found in the cities versus what you're finding often in rural, which is somewhat different, as we understand today. I think the research will certainly show or prove one way or the other whether that is a need that needs to be met, but it will be based on science, so that's a very good thing.

Mr. Chairman, if the WCB wanted to avoid paying benefits, they would have to prove that the firefighters submitting the claim did not contract cancer due to the hazards of his or her employment. It certainly is a reversal, and I know that's a challenge on the WCB, but I think they're up to making that work, and I think that's what has been decided between the hon. member and the minister.

A little history, Mr. Chairman. The career firefighter is plagued with risks and hazards, some of which include exposure to highly carcinogenic substances that are released during fires. Past studies have shown a strong relationship between certain types of cancers and firefighters. The cancers covered by Bill 202 will currently help firefighters if they're diagnosed with cancer. It is up to him or her to submit a claim with the WCB and then prove that the contracted cancer was due to occupational hazards involved in fire fighting. So with this reversal now I think we'll see firefighters being dealt with in a very timely way and not having concerns as they go through the problems associated with the cancers.

Mr. Chairman, Manitoba is the only province or territory in Canada to provide presumptive status to firefighters who contract cancer. However, Manitoba did not give presumptive status for colon cancer, so this is something that we've seen and the science has proven and it's gone along, so we've added that into this legislation. Manitoba has placed restrictions on the minimum amount of time a claimant must have worked as a firefighter to be approved. These restrictions are as follows: five years for primary leukemia, 10 years for primary brain cancer, 15 years for primary bladder cancer, 20 years for both primary kidney cancer and primary non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, all of which are listed in section 2 of Bill 202.

Other provinces, such as British Columbia and Ontario, are currently taking the same stand as Alberta, which just has left the onus on the firefighter, but I believe, Mr. Chairman, we might see changes on that in the future. Nova Scotia is also looking at the possibility of introducing legislation very similar to Bill 202. Currently, in the United States 23 states provide presumptive status for their firefighters, and some of the states have regulations such as Manitoba, placing a time frame on that.

Some of the counterarguments to Bill 202 will state that as a firefighter certain risks are taken and numerous hazards are confronted, that these risks and hazards are part of the occupation, and those people who make the decision to place themselves in such a position are well aware of the consequences. There are definitely risks and hazards associated with being a firefighter. However, firefighters don't often think about themselves. Be it when they see a burning factory or office building with employees trapped inside or a burning apartment with tenants stuck on the 14th floor, I assure you they are not thinking of the types of cancer listed in section 2 of Bill 202. The only thing on their mind is saving human lives and extinguishing the fire. Should a firefighter lose a limb or fall out of a building while performing their heroic duties, compensation would be provided. Cancer is no different, other than that you can see a broken arm and you can see a severed limb. You cannot see the exact moment or predict the exact reason that cancer invades the body.

Another option may be to put more money into research so that advancements could be made for protective gear and breathing apparatus to ensure that firefighters are protected from chemicals and fumes. Mr. Chairman, this goes on all the time. Hopefully, we will move to that point so that we don't see firefighters needing to take advantage of this type of legislation. I applaud the idea that research be conducted to improve the equipment for firefighters. However, firefighters are still dying today, and it's going to be a bit of time before that type of research in equipment is fully available so that there is no risk in the future.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, firefighters put their lives on the line as well as the well-being of their own families to save the lives of others. Bill 202 provides a sense of security in an insecure environment, ensuring that if a firefighter should come in contact with chemicals that promote the development of cancer, compensation will be available. He or she as well as their family will be looked after and protected, a service that they selflessly offer to us without a second thought.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's also an honour and a pleasure for me to rise and speak to the amendments to Bill 202. As you know from the standing vote that was recorded, I was also one of those 12 members who stood up in opposition in second reading to the passing of this bill, but like the hon. Member for Little Bow I also would like to say that I'm now ready to support this bill with these amendments.

I want to thank the Member for Calgary-North Hill for these amendments and also the Minister of Human Resources and Employment for working with him. I know that they spent a lot of time over the weekend, a lot of hours, hashing this out, figuring out how to make the bill work.

Mr. Chairman, I had a bit of an issue because some of the problems with the bill were the fact that it was presumptive status to one occupation over another. As many people here know, I'm from Drayton Valley, which is the oil and gas capital of the world, according to the sign outside our town, certainly the oil and gas capital of Alberta, and we have a lot of people that work with various chemicals there. They find themselves in very dangerous situations on numerous occasions and also find themselves paying pretty high WCB premiums. So there was certainly some opposition from my area of Alberta with regard to this bill, but with these amendments that have been offered, I think people will understand that this is the right way to go, that this is the right direction.

I believe that by enshrining such presumptive status in law, we will take a huge burden off the backs of the firefighters who find themselves stricken with one of these cancers. In cases like this it's only right and proper that someone fighting for his or her life be able to do so instead of having to spend precious time and energy gathering evidence that it really was on the job, that it really was the fires that brought this about. Such an information-gathering process will only add to the pressure under which the affected firefighter and his or her family find themselves.

With the amendments Bill 202 deserves our support. For those who protect the rest of us day in and day out, it is the least we can do. Mr. Chairman, I'm also happy that the amendments do include a provision to look at the rural and the part-time firefighters. Being from a rural area, that's something that I was very concerned about, making sure that the rural firefighters are also given a look at with regard to their exposure to these cancer-causing agents. So I'm glad that that's going to be part of the new bill and the amendments.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that I'm looking forward to third reading, where I can show my support for this. Again, for these reasons I will support Bill 202, and I urge the rest of this House to do the same.

Thank you.

5:00

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to rise, also, to just briefly indicate my support for this particular bill, to thank also the Member for Calgary-North Hill for doing all the work and research in getting it together and at the same time to support the amendments as proposed.

We've heard many eloquent examples over the days that this has been debated, in particular this afternoon, of the bravery and the courage and the determination of our firefighters in this province and last week in particular in this city. I know a lot of us watched here from the window vantage point the horrific fire that was occurring on 105th Street, and we were all hoping and praying for the safety of the people involved as well as for the firefighters who were trying to stamp it out. The same went for the news reports that we saw with respect to the tragic fire that occurred on 104th Street and 82nd Avenue in our city.

Mr. Chair, as I look at the couple of amendments before us, I want to support that first amendment because I know that whereas the original act in section 2 did specify the particular types of cancer that might be contracted by our firefighters, I think we all understand that cancer is something that we have some knowledge about but we don't have all the knowledge about. I know we're working toward that, but by moving this to the regulations section, it simply means that we'll be able to better define and more easily include any changes that might happen to that entire area of cancer research and through regulation be able to respond to it a lot more quickly than we could if it stayed in the act as printed. Bringing in an act to the Legislature – to make amendments, to update it, to change it – is a very lengthy process, but properly crafted regulations are more easily amended, more readily amended, and hence more quickly amended. So I support that particular amendment.

Secondly, the amendment that deals with subsection (7), the tabling of "a copy of the report prepared under subsection (6) before the Legislative Assembly within 15 days of receiving it," I think speaks to rapid accountability. Members should take some comfort in the fact that there is accountability that will be quite immediate with respect to the report and the research and everything else that surrounds it.

I know that from time to time, Mr. Chair, we have to make changes to WCB legislation, and this one will result in that. It will result in it for the benefit of our many friends, family members, and others who are volunteers. I know we've also heard a lot about the people who are volunteer firefighters, and I'm reminded of the fire brigade that worked in my little hometown of Sangudo. They were oftentimes called out from sports days or woken up in the middle of the night, particularly to fight brushfires, which were very prevalent in rural communities. It seemed to happen with regular regularity, if I can say it that way, and they are to be applauded.

So let me simply close by once again supporting my many constituents who are firefighters. Let me extend my thanks to the firefighters who are here today and have been with us in various numbers over the past few days while this bill has been debated. Once again I urge all our members in the House to support the amendments and also to support the bill as it goes through the various phases and stages.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like at this time to ask those members of the government caucus who voted against this bill at second reading to reconsider. Perhaps we could have a standing vote, and we could make it a unanimous vote in favour of this excellent bill. I would like to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for his hard work on all sides of the House in getting consensus around this bill and would ask government members to show solidarity with our firefighters and vote for this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Seeing no other speakers to these amendments, I would like to answer just a couple more of the questions that have come out in the last half hour.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills asked where the three-year term came from for the volunteer firefighters. Quite frankly, it was an arbitrary number. We looked at the Manitoba legislation; that is exactly what they put in their legislation. Now, in our minds it was simply a question of we felt it would take them three years to do the study. Their bill actually passed in the fall of last year. Ours, by putting a three-year time frame, started a little later, so we just kept the same time frame. Obviously, now with the amendment that we put forward, frankly, we hope to get one big study as opposed to two smaller provincial studies. It's just felt that the three years were arbitrary. That's as straightforward as it gets.

The Member for Little Bow raised some interesting points in his debate. He and I have been friends for a long time and talked about this issue on a number of occasions. I guess the example that was used was the EMS folks that work down in the Lethbridge area and his concern that this would preclude them from getting something that indeed the firefighters are getting. I'll just go by the example that you gave us today on the floor of the Assembly about what happens if an EMS person gets stabbed with a needle and gets HIV or AIDS. The difference here is really quite straightforward, and it's what makes the firemen, again, special and unique.

For an EMS person or a nurse, as an example, in a hospital – my wife is a nurse – if they stick themselves with a needle, frankly, they have forms to fill out all over the place. They know exactly when it happened, where it happened, how it happened, and they go through a great many tests to make sure that in fact they're not infected by any of these very, very dangerous diseases that are out there today. Bottom line is that they would be covered in a heartbeat with WCB benefits because they can show exactly, again, where, when, and how it happened, as opposed to a fireman who's supposed to come up with an example of: where did you get your cancer from? Well, it could have been one of thousands of fires, and therein lies the difference.

Now, a number of members mentioned this, including the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, a couple of members on the other side, and it was based on the science to do with the cancers. The science is unequivocal. Our study groups go back to 1927, huge, huge studies. They actually started the studies going back 51 years ago, 1952, and the studies have been definitive. I'm talking about the science, the statistical linkage between these cancers and the general population and these cancers and specifically, in this case, firemen.

Just to give you a bit of an example – and I know less is more, and we're getting late in the day – the rate of cancer for non-Hodgkin's lymphoma in the general population is 2.5 per hundred thousand. Yet we've got a province like Manitoba who's been tracking this for the last 10 years: six firemen in Manitoba have non-Hodgkin's lymphoma; there are 1,800 in their study group. If I expand that – and I realize this number is not scientific, and I don't put it up to be scientific – out to the same hundred thousand of the general population, instead of having 2.5 per hundred thousand, we're now at 300 per hundred thousand firemen. Again, that number is not scientific. However, the numbers that we've got on our six cancers that were originally in the bill, not to mention the seventh cancer that will be in regulations, that being ureter cancer, the science is definitive. It is conclusive. Again, the science is there, and that's how they come in.

It is my expectation that the WCB, indeed Executive Council, because the LG in Council will be approving which cancers get in and those periods of employment – but it is my understanding that in order to pull a cancer out, frankly, you would have to have definitive, conclusive evidence stating that, in fact, firemen don't get as many victims to the cancer within each one of these cancers. Well, frankly, (a) there are no studies that show that, so I don't believe that will happen, and (b) the evidence is conclusive and definitive now since 1992. Very tough to pull one out. I don't think it'll happen at all.

As far as all the work being done, I appreciate the members saying that we've done an awful lot of work. I would point out a great many people. We have some of them here with us today, and I'd like to name just a couple of them. Ken Block from the Edmonton fire department, the fire association president; Scott Wilcox from Calgary, the Calgary firefighters association president; Gord Colwell, the association president for, in fact, all of Alberta; as well as Alex Forrest, the head of the Canadian firefighters association. All worked extremely hard on this. Love to take the credit for it, but I have to give the credit where credit is due. If you're in a government department and you're a minister or you're bringing forward a government bill, you've got the entire department. You've got in this case the WCB's billion-dollar corporation, who have all their lawyers and accountants and everyone else. As a private member you must rely on those people who are out there in order to in fact get a bill and to provide the information. Love to say I got all the research on this, but it was provided to me by some extremely solid and hardworking firemen right here from Alberta, as well as Alex Forrest in Manitoba.

The last thing I would say here is: the standing vote, I appreciate the member's viewpoint on that. I guess we'll leave it to the will of colleagues in the Legislature. I would love to have a unanimous one in third reading; I'm not sure it's really necessary this time. The moral of the story, though, is: I guess we'll see what the will of the Chamber is. I would just like to thank everybody for supporting this amendment.

Incentives for First-time Home Buyers

503. Mr. Shariff moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to establish a financial incentive program to encourage first-time home ownership.

[Debate adjourned March 10]

The Deputy Speaker: If you're ready for the question, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall to sum up.

Mr. Shariff: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to take this opportunity to thank all the speakers who spoke in favour of the motion and the two members who raised concerns about the motion. I think this is a good motion. This will help young Albertans save money. This is not a motion that's proposing any grants or subsidies be given, and I hope that my colleagues will look at the young Albertans of today who need to start saving money for a home, which is the most important investment a family can make.

With those words, Mr. Speaker, I call for the question.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 carried]

Regional Police Service

504. Mr. Griffiths moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take the steps necessary to establish its own regional police service including a regional police commissioner by 2007.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening and introduce Motion 504 to the Assembly. Motion 504 is designed to encourage the government to take the steps necessary to establish regional police services in Alberta before negotiations of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police contract, which begin in 2007.

I'd like to begin, Mr. Speaker, by indicating that Alberta has a long and proud history with the RCMP since 1932, when the RCMP took over provincial policing in Alberta. The RCMP has done an excellent job, and Albertans respect them for what they do. The RCMP has served this province with commitment and dedication, and in no way is this motion intended to be a reflection on the RCMP. The problem is not with the RCMP; it is with the federal government and the contract we have with them. The problem we face will arise in the upcoming contract negotiations with the federal government in 2007. As many members know, the current contract for the RCMP expires in 2012, but negotiations will begin in 2007. It's imperative that the provincial government takes the steps necessary to prepare for those negotiations so that our RCMP can be well-funded and that Albertans get the best policing possible.

I'd like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that policing is an area of provincial jurisdiction and that the province should therefore take more responsibility for the policing needs of this province. As with so many other areas of jurisdiction, however, the federal government has used contributions to increase their influence in areas of provincial jurisdiction. That influence has led to policy decisions made by the federal government that do not reflect the values and needs of Albertans and the local governments.

More specifically, Mr. Speaker, municipalities have been waiting for the federal government to provide more funding and to provide more officers to meet their policing needs. If the municipality needs more officers, they must wait for the federal government to come up with more money, and they must wait for the federal government to hire more officers based on federal hiring criteria, not on local needs. The province could more readily and quickly meet the needs of municipalities and could more appropriately co-ordinate with local needs rather than federal direction. If history has taught us anything, it is that the federal government will continue with cuts to the RCMP funding contract, just as they have in health and just as they did with the last RCMP contract, in 1990. Those cuts and the layout of the current contract, which gives paramount hiring authority to the federal government, leaves our municipalities in a precarious position from which there is no reprieve, except in being prepared for the next round of negotiations in 2007.

Currently, confusion reigns as three levels of government pay for the RCMP, and we can all agree, Mr. Speaker, that confusion is not a good idea when it comes to policing. Who gets the final say in hiring? Who do officers report to when three governments pay those officers? Who determines priority areas of policing in municipalities in the province? Those are good questions, and all need to be answered to make policing in Alberta the most effective it can be. That can only be done if Alberta is prepared for negotiations in 2007. It's imperative that the government be in a position to negotiate if it is to affect these improvements. That position will not come from walking into negotiations with the federal government for RCMP contracts without any options. Frankly, we have to be prepared. We have to have a choice or another option or accept the deal the federal government puts in front of us, a deal which is likely to shortchange the province's needs, the needs of the municipalities and, most importantly, the needs of the police, who are such an integral part of community safety.

Mr. Speaker, in 1985 the provincial government considered plans for an Alberta regional police service. The idea arose because of the extensive difficulties the province had in renegotiating the RCMP contract in the early '80s. The idea was later dropped with the introduction of the new Police Act in that year. However, the notion resurfaced when, once again, the contract negotiations began in 1990, and again extreme difficulties were experienced. In both cases the federal government cut its share of funding for the RCMP force but continued to maintain ultimate control. It's important to point out that as federal funding declined, the province and municipalities made up a larger share of funding but with no increased say in management. That is a situation we can no longer tolerate if we are to assure ourselves of effective policing.

I need to iterate at this time that this notion does not demand the province form a provincial police force, nor does it call on the provincial government to opt out of the current contract. The motion asks the government to take the steps necessary to be ready to establish regional police services by 2007 so that when we begin negotiations, we will have an option if necessary. We may need to move to a provincial police force. We may find the federal government's deal impossible to resist. Either way, without a choice we will find it difficult to negotiate, and we will find that we will get exactly what we prepared for and what we deserve.

Mr. Speaker, municipalities pay varying shares of RCMP contracts. Currently some counties pay nothing for policing. Municipalities can pay 70 percent, and still others pay up to 90 percent. The varying and disparate contracts are creating concern, confusion, and bitterness among municipalities, and that's being expressed to this provincial government. It is this government's job to be a leader in resolving these issues. Currently Alberta pays 70 percent of policing costs in the province, which amounts to over $100 million on policing.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Griffiths: One hundred million dollars.

Mr. Speaker, a significant amount of money is spent on policing by the two levels of government alone, with little control of hiring, little discretion over meeting local needs, and increased concern expressed by municipalities.

Following this motion, beginning this process of establishing regional police services will allow the government to address with municipalities the concerns that are arising from current contracts either by allowing us to barter a better contract in 2007 or by allowing us to tackle the issues head-on from a local and provincial level should the negotiations fail. There's an added benefit, however. Setting up a regional police commission encourages us to begin aligning our own enforcement agencies so that we are organized and more efficiently run regardless of the outcome of the 2007 negotiations. Regional police commissioners would allow for co-ordination of activities, organizations, and enforcement.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 504 is the first step in becoming prepared for the renegotiation of our RCMP contract. The more prepared we are, the better the outcome will be. There are many steps in preparation for 2007. The government may want to begin to save money for start-up costs of regional policing in Alberta. The latest estimate I could find put start-up costs at $45 million in 1994 dollars: a significant amount but easy to acquire over the next five years, before the negotiations begin with due diligence. The government may include as a step more studying of the best way to set up provincial services with regard to total and ongoing costs and differing policing scenarios. Many steps are possible, but we must take the first steps.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, Motion 504 asks us to prepare for the future, the future of policing in this province. I hope all hon. members realize the importance of this matter, and I urge all members to vote in favour of Motion 504.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair wondered whether or not the hon. minister wished to speak in his turn because of the evident enthusiasm with which he was meeting everything that was being said.

Ms Blakeman: I, too, am looking forward to the Minister of Economic Development getting up and debating on the record on this one. That could be quite interesting.

Mr. Speaker, this is an interesting motion because I don't know that the motion that's before us is reflected in the debate that the sponsoring member just gave us. I'm going to read the motion text into Hansard.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take the steps necessary to establish its own regional police service including a regional police commissioner by 2007.

I listened carefully to what the member said, and he seemed to be saying – and I was able to jot some notes as he talked – that really what we wanted to be doing was prepare for negotiations which would commence in 2007 for a contract which ended in 2012. This motion is actually saying “take the steps necessary to establish its own regional police service including a regional police commissioner.” So this motion is saying: done deal by 2007. And the member seemed to be saying in his statements that this was a preparation, a lead-up, to beginning a discussion with the federal government.

He noted that municipalities didn't have choice or that somehow the municipalities and the province were waiting for the feds to put in more money for policing. Well, if more money is truly needed for policing, then I'm assuming that the province, as well, could step up to the plate and put more money in. So I'm wondering why the member felt that only the federal government could solve this problem. Why wasn't he looking for a contribution from the provincial government?

He raised some issues around the three different levels of payment, coming from the municipalities, the province, and the federal government, and who determines priorities. What improvements is the member looking for? What priorities does he think are not established currently that he believes would somehow be resolved through instituting a regional police service?

I'm certainly quite comfortable with the concept of preparing for negotiations with the federal government. I think that's a fine idea. We certainly need to go into the negotiations with our ducks in a row, but he seemed to be saying something else when he was talking about that because he seemed to have already set the direction in his mind, is what I'm trying to say here. So it didn't seem that there was much negotiation left. He was talking about saving for start-up costs for, I'm assuming, a provincial police force or a regional police service or setting money aside for a study on setting up a provincial service. So that struck me as being inconsistent with his previous statements of saying: we want to prepare to go into these negotiations. He keeps saying that he wants to prepare for these negotiations and then talks about all of these things that he'd like to see set in place.

I'd actually sent a note to the member asking for clarification when I first read this because I think there were a number of different directions that could be gleaned from it. Was he talking about setting up a provincial police force? So this would be a province-wide police force similar to what they have in Ontario with the OPP.

Mr. MacDonald: The APP?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. In this case we'd be talking about the APP, the Alberta provincial police.

Or was he talking about a regional police service; in other words, grouping together several communities? For example, Lethbridge, Coaldale, Taber, Cardston could all enter into an agreement to have one police force that covers all of their area, and we'd probably have to have the counties involved in that as well.

Then he talks about a regional police commissioner. Then I thought: well, maybe he doesn't really want the regional service; he's looking for something like the regional health authorities or the regional children's authorities. Is that what he was looking for? Again, I listened carefully to the remarks that he made, and he seems to be advocating most strongly – although he mentioned all of those possibilities, I think, similar to the RHA setup – for the regional police service. I'm wondering what the member finds objectionable with sections 24 and 25 and 26 in the existing Police Act. What's the problem the member has with that?

I'll actually read section 24(1) into the record.

Subject to the prior approval of the Minister, [which I'm assuming the minister would give] the councils of 2 or more municipalities may enter into an agreement to be policed by one regional police service.

Now, isn't that exactly what he's seeking? It's available now. It's available now under the Police Act that's currently in force, so why does he want to do this again somehow?

The next section is:

The Government of Alberta may be a party to an agreement referred to in [the previous subsection] if the region to be policed under the agreement includes an area not contained within the limits of a municipality that is subject to the agreement.

Thus, we're able to bring in the counties and some of the rural areas.

It talks about the ability to establish a regional police commission, which the member was also talking about. That's section 25(1). Section 25(2) talks about the appointments of members to a regional police commission and how they can be revoked or not. Then it talks about an oath. Then it goes on in section 26 to talk about the responsibilities of a regional police commission.

So is there some unhappiness that the member has with the existing clauses under the Police Act, that he would like to change this or he would like, in fact, to have this in place? If this is what he wants in place, then just say it or lobby his own minister to have it put in place. It's with the permission of the minister, the Solicitor General, to do so, and he's certainly free and has an inside track to speak to the Solicitor General and have this put in place. I'm curious as to why he feels he needed to take this additional step, and I'm not sure exactly what that additional step is. I don't think the member is talking about establishing regional police authorities along the same lines as regional health authorities. If he is, I sincerely hope not, because I don't think that would work well to serve Albertans.

If we are talking about the regional police services – and as I pointed out, that is not difficult to accomplish given the existing act and with the permission of the minister and the interest of municipalities and counties that want to get involved in this – then a few things, if I might, that I would like to see considered in a regional police service: ensure proportional representation from the municipalities that are utilizing the police service; ensure that representatives to the commission are appointed by the municipalities, not by the province; make it clear that the province is responsible for the funding of the regional police service under the Constitution of Canada. It seems possible, given the amount of fed-bashing that the member got involved in, that maybe he feels that he wants something changed under that, and perhaps that's under sections 24 and 25.

I would not want to see the same downloading of a sort of responsibility and even blame that happens from the government occasionally with the RHAs, where we ask a question of the government and they throw their hands up and go: have to ask the RHA. We'd like to have direct accountability.

There are some regional police services that work very well, a couple of examples. One would be the Niagara Regional Police Service. There's also an example in Ontario, the Peel Regional Police force. Actually, this has worked very well. In Niagara they have a number of units that usually only a very large city would be able to have; for example, they have a DNA unit, and they have an explosives disposal unit and a marine unit. You wouldn't usually find those in the smaller centres. So they've really been able to take advantage of this through that regional police service, and it does incorporate the municipalities of... [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired]

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak in favour of Motion 504. I think this motion is very important for the people of Alberta. It's a motion that has long-term implications for this province, implications that will no doubt benefit all Albertans. I think we should be clear on one thing about Motion 504 and what it is asking for. Motion 504 is asking the government to take the steps necessary to establish a regional police service as well as a regional police commissioner. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre stated, the current Police Act, under sections 24 and 25, provides the legislation to proceed with regional policing, but I think it's extremely important that all hon. members realize that this motion does not ask the government to set up a police service but, rather, take the necessary steps.

Members may ask: why must we be taking steps to establish a provincial police service, especially by the year 2007? This is because the province must be prepared for the renegotiations of our RCMP contracts. We don't have a clear idea of how these negotiations are going to go. In 2012 the contract the Alberta government has with the RCMP is going to end. Hopefully, by that time we will have negotiated a new deal that will carry us for another 10 or 20 years with some portion of the present contract that's in place now. But the negotiations are going to be taking place beginning 2007, so the government of Alberta must have all areas covered before beginning negotiations. By 2012 based on the federal government's rate of $132,000 per RCMP officer at only 3 percent increases for the next 10 years, the cost could be as high as $177,000 per officer. I'm not sure which municipality can afford that.

The history of negotiations with the federal government with respect to policing in this province has become very expensive and difficult. Problems with police funding have risen to the forefront of the discussions. Over the years the federal government has cut their level of police funding to the provinces by significant amounts, and if history tells us anything, it is that when we begin to renegotiate our contracts with the RCMP, we should have a plan in place. This is because it is likely that the federal government will cut their share so drastically that we will be left to take care of most of the funding for our police agencies if, in fact, the 10 to 30 percent subsidy to Albertans is based on a true cost. If this is to be the case, Mr. Speaker, should we not prepare ourselves for the probable outcome? The answer, of course, is yes. We should be prepared.

Mr. Speaker, the best way to prepare ourselves is to look at all the options and have a plan in place that will give us an opportunity to have our own regional police service should the need arise. This will help us immensely in negotiations with the RCMP. As well, we will be in a much stronger negotiating position. If the federal government tells us that they are going to cut funding completely or charge provinces a hundred percent of the cost, we won't be left high and dry if we have a plan in place. We will be prepared to transfer policing over to regional services that municipalities throughout Alberta have agreed to.

This is not to say that we are unsatisfied with the current agreement with the RCMP. In fact, the opposite is quite true. Most Albertans would agree that the RCMP does a great job in policing our province. They are trusted members of our community, especially in our rural communities. They are active in the community, in sports, in teaching, as mentors in the community. The issues that many Albertans have with policing is not with the RCMP but, rather, with the federal government and their level of support. This being the case, we should prepare ourselves for what I feel is the inevitable.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's prudent that we also look at the MLA policing review that took place. A draft report was released in July of 2002, and in it there were a number of recommendations regarding a provincial police service and/or regional. However, recommendation 33 of the July 2002 report did state something that has implications for what we are doing here today. The recommendation states that in preparation for the next provincial policing agreement in 2012 an external study of provincial policing be conducted to determine the efficiencies and levels of service of alternative methods of policing Alberta. These could include retaining the RCMP, forming a provincial police service, or regionalization of policing throughout the province, or combinations of these forms, [including the RCMP]. This study should be led by an MLA committee.

Mr. Speaker, this sounds like a necessary step for the government to take. It's another way for us to prepare ourselves for the upcoming contract negotiation. Now, granted, the recommendation is from the draft report of the committee and the final report and the final submission from the Solicitor General have not been released, yet I am confident, however, that the release of the final report will be very similar in tone and that recommendations will not be changed substantially. Therefore, we should seriously consider the motion that is before us today, especially after reading that recommendation. We must have all the information that can be provided to us before we can decide whether or not we continue on with the RCMP.

Mr. Speaker, the MLA Policing Review Committee took a number of submissions from many people across Alberta, and it's no secret that many of the submissions asked for the Alberta government to set up its own provincial police service. I believe that many Albertans would support Motion 504. I think that many would feel comfortable with a different policing arrangement, especially if it can be proven to be more efficient than our current arrangement.

We have many policing challenges that we as Albertans are facing, and these challenges will not slip quietly away. They must be met head-on. Some of these challenges include the policing of new technological advancements, such as the Internet, photo enforcement, information technology, DNA testing. Even though these seem like very large-scale problems, we are the ones that must solve the problems, problems that could possibly be faced easier with a different police service, one set up by our government. Of course, we don't know that for sure, and therefore we should be looking at how best to deal with those upcoming policing challenges so that when we must negotiate our current policing agreement, we will have all the information that we need to make an informed and knowledgeable decision.

Mr. Speaker, many Albertans are already questioning the current RCMP agreement. Many municipalities are in fact doing the same. There have been a number of jurisdictions around Alberta who question the usefulness of the current arrangement for their specific communities. Regions in southern Alberta are talking about regionalizing certain police agencies to deal with the new challenges that have arisen. Again, it's not because the RCMP have done a poor job in policing our province, but rather new and more efficient ways of policing are being investigated, and Albertans feel that if there are better ways, they must be tried and true.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate what I said at the outset of my speaking time, and that is: this motion does not ask the government to set up its own provincial police service by 2007; rather, it's a means for us to be prepared for the renegotiations that are going to begin that year. The more prepared we are, the more Albertans will benefit. I have numerous friends and former colleagues in the RCMP that would be more than happy to continue to live and work in Alberta under a new Alberta policing model. It's for these reasons that I support Motion 504, and I urge all members to vote in favour of the motion.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always great fun to engage in these important debates.

Ms Blakeman: No, it's not. It's crazy-making. They don't make sense.

Dr. Taft: The only problem with this, I'm told by Edmonton-Centre, is it doesn't make sense.

I've been listening to the comments from all three members so far, and I think there's some merit on all sides, but I do find myself puzzling over this particular motion. Both of the government members have talked about this motion setting the stage for negotiations that commence in 2007, yet the motion doesn't say anything about negotiations. It doesn't say anything relevant to this. It doesn't talk about jurisdiction with the federal government. It doesn't talk about funding formulas. Indeed, it's so oblique as to be unclear what its purpose really is at all. Indeed, the wording of it isn't clear whether we're talking about regional police forces that might cover a region that encompasses, say, an area of southern Alberta or eastern Alberta or we're talking about an Alberta provincial police force. What are we doing here? I would like the sponsor of the motion to consider going back and thinking it through more clearly, getting more specific on the purpose of it. If it's about negotiations, let's talk about negotiations. If it's about jurisdiction, let's talk about that.

It seems to be a kind of backdoor way to start probing public opinion about the support for establishing a provincial police force in Alberta, and that kind of direction concerns me. It concerns me for a few reasons. First of all, as a born and bred prairie Canadian I have a deep appreciation for the heritage of the RCMP, as I'm sure every member of this Assembly does. The history of the RCMP goes back well over a hundred years to the days of, well, the North-West Mounted Police and the earliest days of this country's existence, and it is an extraordinarily credible, well-respected police force. We may not agree with everything they do or every procedure they follow, but nationally and internationally the RCMP are a great institution for this country. When we look at provinces like Ontario and Quebec that have their own police forces, we see all kinds of problems. I don't believe that either one of those provincial police forces are terribly well respected frankly, or I certainly hear doubts about that.

I also am very concerned that we would be introducing confusion around the mandate. Do we need yet another police service? We would have the RCMP. Whether or not we establish an Alberta provincial police force, we will always have the RCMP, just like there are RCMP in Ontario and Quebec. They do handle federal issues. So if we brought in yet another police service, we would have the RCMP, we would have the municipal forces, from the confusion and the wording of this motion maybe we'd have regional forces, and then on top of that we'd have an Alberta police force. I don't think that's necessary. I think, indeed, it runs the risk of driving up costs, confusing mandates, and adding an entire new layer of bureaucracy. So if that's the direction that this motion is trying to nudge the province, I disagree with it. I just don't think it's necessary.

I am frankly also concerned about the move hinted at here to increase the centralization of power in the provincial government. In my view, this is a government that has a history of centralizing power. We can look at school boards, which have been the subject of some active debate in this Assembly recently. Their power goes back generations, really. It traces back to the British North America Act of 1867, I believe. School boards have a tremendous history. This government, this sitting Alberta government, removed the power of school boards to raise local revenues, and by doing that, effectively . . .

Some Hon. Members: No.

Dr. Taft: Okay; I stand corrected. It greatly curtailed and meaningfully removed the power of school boards to raise local taxes, and as a result school boards do not have a great deal of meaningful independence anymore.

We have also seen the treatment of the regional health authorities. Before there were regions, there was a vast number of boards, and arguably – I think the government was right in this – there were too many boards. But those boards reflected a huge number of voices that were very broadly based. Now we have a handful of regional health authorities, all dominated by people handpicked by this government. It's very centralized power, and I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, that we will see the same trend with an Alberta police force. It's a centralization of power if we are going in that direction.

So those are a handful of concerns I have here. I've heard the expressions of concern coming from the government members about the federal government in 2012 pulling their funding and leaving the province unprepared to fill in the gap. We don't know if that's a risk or not. That's almost 10 years away. But I am concerned that some figures I have from the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association suggest that the province as it is is only funding a very small percentage of police expenses provincewide, and I'm wondering if the province really wants to accept the full cost that would go along with accepting full responsibility. I think we'd have to think long and hard about adding perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars in extra expenses to the provincial budget. All of these areas need study, they need debate, and it isn't clear to me that that sort of work has gone on in the preparation of this motion.

Mr. Speaker, there were a couple of other comments I would like to get in here before we're done. I do notice that, as other members have pointed out, the Police Act does already make provision for regional police forces, so again the purpose of the motion is not clear to me at least as a member of this Assembly. Well, we could go on, but I see we're down to the last 20 minutes or so, and I think there are other members who would like to participate.

With those comments and those questions, I look forward to a response from the sponsoring member at the appropriate time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Wainwright has brought forward a motion, and I think what the hon. member is trying to do is make us aware, aware of the expiry of Alberta's contract with the RCMP in 2012 and the need to plan carefully for the upcoming negotiations and possible changes to the costs the province might be asked to incur. Now, these negotiations will probably start five years prior to this being signed, so I think he is telling us: let's look at all of our options; let's plan ahead; let's see what can be done.

Obviously, the member is a rural MLA, serves a very vast area in the eastern part of the province, and, I'm sure, has talked and heard from many of his municipalities. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo stated in his discussion, for the last number of months there has been a committee that has been doing a lot of work on policing.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo as well as the hon. Member for Dunvegan were two members on the committee, and I chaired the committee. The hon. member talked about a report that was released in July 2002, and it was the Alberta MLA Policing Review Committee, and subsequent to that report, we heard from a number of people that wanted some clarification, wanted to come in and talk to us. We received written submissions, and we met with a number of stakeholders when they requested a meeting with us, and this has now formed the basis for another report called Listening to Stakeholders. We feel this is an excellent report. The Solicitor General has it, and I do know that in the next few weeks we hope that this report will be released.

Municipalities talked to us, and they said that there are inequities in the ability of municipalities to fund policing. There are inequities in the costs municipalities are asked to bear. There's the whole consideration of what will happen in 2012 and the negotiations leading up to that and the increasingly complex and evolving policing practices and legal framework that impact how policing is carried out.

If you look at where municipalities are in this province, I believe the system is very complex, lacks logic, and is inequitable. For example, cities and towns with populations between 2,500 and 15,000 who have a provincial contract for RCMP municipal policing pay 70 percent of the cost with a 30 percent federal contribution. Towns and villages with populations under 2,500 pay nothing. The province pays a hundred percent of the policing costs for municipal districts, some counties, towns, villages, and summer villages when they're policed by the RCMP provincial police service. Cities with over 15,000 people and RCMP municipal policing agreements pay 90 percent with the 10 percent coming from the federal contribution, and cities and towns who have their own municipal police services pay a hundred percent. Presently in the province we have eight municipalities with their own municipal police forces, and one of them just happens to be the town of Lacombe.

The town of Lacombe has for a number of years operated its own police service, and I would tell you what Mayor Bill McQuesten pointed out to me and to the committee as well. Citizens of Lacombe are very, very proud of their police service. Unfortunately, because there are so few municipal police services operating in the province, the debate on policing issues among smaller municipalities inevitably focuses on arrangements with the RCMP. During these debates the awareness of the alternative of a municipal service is lost.

Many smaller municipalities are also concerned about the level of policing they receive. We were told repeatedly that these smaller centres were less concerned about contributing towards the costs of policing but expected that if they did pay more, they would receive better service. Though I haven't sat down with both parties and gone in depth on this particular area, I will relate a story to you.

The town of Blackfalds, which is 15 minutes south of Lacombe, hit that number where they were over the 2,500 threshold. They needed to then by law put into place policing. Now, being that they would fall under the 70 percent/30 percent, where they paid 70 percent of the cost and 30 percent was picked up by the federal government, they did not spend considerable time, money sitting down and discussing, looking at a regional police service with the town of Lacombe, because if they had done that, their cost would have been a hundred percent. Lacombe is paying a hundred percent. Going with the RCMP, they could contribute 70 percent; the feds would pick up 30 percent. Now, the Lacombe police are in the business of policing. They do a good job and have done so for a number of years. What I think the hon. member is saying, which is something that we have said in our report, is that we hope this type of thing will be encouraged and not discouraged. We believe that there's little information available right now to municipalities on policing options and the benefits of developing their own police service or forming a regional police service. The information is not there.

We believe the Solicitor General should develop and compile information and a template on establishing and operating a municipal police service, regional police service, RCMP, just so those municipalities that must go through this will know what's involved, what the cost is, what is necessary, and what they can do that is best for their citizenry. This would assist them in identifying their communities' needs and then determining and implementing their best policing options.

So this is one thing the hon. member is saying: regional police could be looked at. Lacombe is in a position today – they've been policing long enough that they could very nicely tie into quite an area there and look at regional policing. So I'm saying that it should be encouraged, not discouraged; it should be prescriptive rather than restrictive. Yes, it's in the Police Act, but it would be nice if we could sit down with these municipalities as they have to move ahead and something could be done.

As I said, I think the hon. member is very correct in saying that we need to look at all of this before the contract comes up again. An external study of provincial policing should be conducted to determine the efficiencies and levels of service, alternate methods of policing Alberta. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about Ontario. We looked at Ontario. Ontario has a provincial police force, it also has regional policing, it also has the involvement of the RCMP, and I think there are some things here we could look at. I, just like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, am very proud to stand anywhere and say that we have RCMP in Alberta and in Canada. The RCMP can still be part and parcel of all of this. It's only that I think everyone should know what their options are, what their community needs are, what their crime rate is, who they're identifying, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

Only by looking ahead, planning, studying, researching this are we going to know. I think that is what the hon. member is asking for. I'm sure that he could list a number of municipalities, because the committee certainly has heard from them, that are very, very, leery right now and have some concerns as to how they're being policed. Policing is the cornerstone of Alberta. It is important for all our citizenry. We must make our communities safe. Let's open it up and take a look at it. That's all the hon. member is asking.

There's one other thing. I do hope that we will hear from the Solicitor General as to what is happening with the committee's report and in regard to the hon. member's motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and enter into debate this evening on Motion 504. I will assure the Speaker that I will direct my remarks to the Assembly through the chair.

Now, after listening with a great deal of interest to what the hon. Member for Wainwright had to say regarding this motion, I would like now to read it into the record because I couldn't understand where the hon. member was coming from.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take the steps necessary to establish its own regional police service including a regional police commissioner by 2007.

That's the motion that's printed in the Order Paper. I don't understand in the hon. member's remarks what this has to do with negotiations with the federal government. There was certainly this rant on the federal government and any number of perceived slights by that government to this province. At this time I have to caution all hon. members of this Assembly that we need to be a little bit more responsible and perhaps a little bit more tempered in our comments.

There's a public health care system to fix, and the word "public" is very important in that. I think we should be working with the federal government, not getting involved in this contest to see who can hurl the loudest insults. Nothing is going to be accomplished that way. We have softwood lumber disputes. We have the hon. Member for West Yellowhead; this directly affects his constituency. We have the hon. Member for Whitecourt: job losses in that community. We should be working with the federal government to try to resolve these issues, not going on these confusing rants.

Also, another issue, Mr. Speaker, that's going to be coming into focus very soon is: after we have run out of our own natural gas liquids, what share are we going to get from the natural gas liquids as they come down from Canada's north? If we have this belligerent attitude toward the federal government, regardless of whether it's a Progressive Conservative government or a Liberal government or an Alliance government or maybe even a New Democrat government or a PQ government, there is a responsibility and a duty. I'm afraid that in the initial comments this evening from the hon. member I just don't understand where the remarks were coming from, because the text of this motion is quite confusing, in my view.

The motion, generally speaking, has an intent to establish regional police services, but there's no idea conveyed as to how that should be done. Now, we can look at police forces across the country, as the hon. member from Ponoka . . .

Mrs. Gordon: Lacombe-Stettler.

Mr. MacDonald: Lacombe. Ooh, the Lacombe police are going to be after me.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler was talking about regional police services. Certainly, there is a police service in Lethbridge. Perhaps, you know, there could be some sort of police service for Coaldale, for Taber, for Cardston, the southern end of the province.

When we look at what we have now with the RCMP, I would have to say that if we had an Alberta police force, I'm sure they wouldn't wear tunics. They would wear sweaters. That would be part of their dress; I'm certain of that. It wouldn't be a tunic. It might be the Alberta tartan, but it would be a thick sweater. They could hop in and out of the cars and write tickets and things without getting cold. [interjection] Well, there could be a number of things that they could do in their off-hours, as described by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Certainly, whenever we think of what initiatives can be developed for the betterment of this province, we should recognize that we have to work in a larger community, and that community is this country. Instead of just banging the drum that someone else is causing all our problems, we should look at ourselves and recognize that we are blessed with unlimited wealth as a result of our natural resources, and we should consider ourselves lucky. It's not because of the Progressive Conservative government in this province; it's despite the Progressive Conservative government in this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing debate on Motion 504, as presented by the hon. Member for Wainwright. Excellent speech earlier, by the way, hon. member.

I strongly – strongly – support Motion 504 primarily because it represents an opportunity for Alberta to take more control of its own destiny by having its own law enforcement agency in the province. Second, I support Motion 504 because the history of the policing contract between our government and the RCMP leads me to believe that the federal government will want to pay even less for their share of policing in our province when the next contract comes due. If we are going to be paying the bulk of policing costs in our province anyway, we may as well have our own police force in Alberta so that we can make the necessary policing decisions to help benefit our province.

Mr. Speaker, this idea has been gaining some steam for the past 15 years or so. It gained its initial prominence when the RCMP instituted a hiring freeze, which tied the hands of the government in the area of hiring more police officers in certain parts of this province. This idea has continued to gain support but for two new reasons. First, many Albertans have argued that having our own police force will be a sign to the rest of Canada and Albertans that we are serious about law enforcement here in Alberta and that we are serious about ensuring that our communities and roadways are kept safe. Other Albertans in the context of asserting a strong role within Canadian Confederation have stated that starting our own police force will be a sign to the federal government that we are serious about asserting our provincial jurisdictional rights. So I agree with both of these arguments, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to spend the majority of my time this evening discussing these issues.

However, as a disclaimer I'd like to note that I personally have no objection to the work of the RCMP officers who currently police the majority of our province. The RCMP in the Drayton Valley-Calmor constituency are first-rate officers – I know because I live next door to one – who do their best to ensure that people feel safe and secure in our area and that they trust the region's police force. They've been there for all the residents in our riding, as I'm sure they have for all the citizens of Alberta.

The point about starting our own police force, therefore, ought to be made with a great deal of respect towards our RCMP officers. These officers should know that the provincial advantage of having a police force is not a slight against the good work that they do but is a step towards improving the way that policing is done in our province overall. Indeed, I along with many other MLAs would be honoured if many of the federal RCMP officers chose to join an Alberta police force. Mr. Speaker, the reasoning behind my support for the initiation of an Alberta police force has more to do with the advantages of having such a force in Alberta and less to do with any complaint with the work of the RCMP.

In showing this point, I'd like to talk a little about the history of the contract with the federal government with regard to the RCMP. As it stands, the Alberta government through the Solicitor General's office contracts with the federal government for the RCMP to provide policing services in Alberta. We've been doing this since 1932. The last contract we signed was in 1994 and, as has been spoken about today, is set to expire in 2012. Mr. Speaker, when we first entered into this agreement, the federal government agreed to pay a great deal of the cost of policing because we entered the agreement during the Great Depression, when times were tough in this and other provinces. As subsequent contracts were signed, the federal government agreed to pay less and less. So as it stands today, they now pay only 30 percent of policing costs in Alberta.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Rev. Abbott: Only 30 percent, and if historical trends are anything to go by, they will likely want to pay less the next time around.

In one sense, Mr. Speaker, while it may be surprising to some members of the Assembly, I do not have a problem with the federal government wanting to pay less for policing. Providing policing services, after all, is an area of provincial jurisdiction, and while that consideration has not stopped the federal government from trampling provincial rights in the past, they may be in the right by attempting to reduce their financial role. As it is our responsibility, we should pay the freight. However, if that's the case and we're going to end up paying for policing, then why would we not just have our own force?

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to draw a comparison here to the federal intrusion into the health care system. This province rightfully gets annoyed when the federal government attempts to tell us how to run our health care system, especially when they don't pay for the right to tell us what to do. Now, the same principle applies in this case. If the federal government isn't paying a lot for policing, then why would we employ their policing service, which operates under their rules, instead of starting our own?

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: We have a purported point of order. The hon. member.

Point of Order Relevance

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 23(b): "speaks to matters other than . . . the question under discussion." This is a motion that is talking about regional policing, and the member has now decided to expose his views on the federal funding of health care. Please, Mr. Speaker, let's stick to what's in front of us.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair would share the same considerations. However, it did seem clear to me that he was drawing a parallel: on the one hand this and on the other hand that. So in the limited period of time that's available, I think it's just as well to let the hon. member conclude.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very fair ruling, even though I didn't get a chance to speak in my own defence.

Debate Continued

Rev. Abbott: This is not to suggest that the RCMP would not continue to operate in Alberta but only that its scope would be reduced. It would serve to enforce federal laws whereas a provincial police force would enforce our provincial laws. It makes sense. We all know about the great co-operation and communication that we now have between various police forces, and I believe that that can be enhanced even further between the RCMP and the Alberta provincial police force.

Mr. Speaker, before I conclude my remarks this evening, I'd like to talk about a few of the costs associated with Motion 504. There are, of course, some concerns to be raised with respect to this matter, the most prominent being start-up costs. To set up the infrastructure that would be necessary to run a state-of-the-art police force or possibly to buy some of that infrastructure from the RCMP would not come cheap. After all, the province would have to purchase headquarters, stations, a fleet of vehicles, weaponry, radio towers, and new technology, just to name a few. We shouldn't fool ourselves; the cost would be significant. I know that the town of Drayton Valley would like to house the provincial training centre for the new provincial police force, and we trust that the Solicitor General's department would consider that when the time comes. Now, a new force would incur new costs, and we should be aware that many Albertans will question whether these costs are costs that the government should be shouldering instead of continuing to utilize the RCMP.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has concluded.

9:00head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 27

Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment to move second reading.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is, indeed, a pleasure to move this evening Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003.

Now, the purpose and the reason for this bill is for the health authorities to streamline the collective bargaining process by making rules governing health care bargaining simpler, more straightforward, and easier to understand and administer for both employers and unions. It is time to bring the rules governing health care bargaining in line with the changes to the health system. It is time to streamline the collective bargaining process by reducing the number of collective agreements from over 400 to 36. The legislation enables government to establish four functional bargaining units to represent employees in the regional health authorities. These will consist of nursing; auxiliary nursing; paramedical, technical, and professional; and the fourth, general support services. Bargaining will be regionwide. Simply put, this means that the nine health authorities will each bargain with four functional bargaining units. This means that employees at different sites doing the same job would be subject to the same collective agreements, and this will bring certainty and clarity to their terms of employment.

Bill 27 considers health care in the regional authorities to be essential. Strikes or lockouts compromise patient safety and patient care. This is true no matter where you are working in the health authority. Removing the right to strike from community health and mental health authorities' employees in the health regions means that they will be subject to the same provisions in the Labour Relations Code as police officers, firefighters, and close to 90 percent of health workers that currently do not have the right to strike.

The government still believes in the collective bargaining process, where parties negotiating arrive at solutions, and in the rights of employees to be represented by unions.

Mr. Mason: Gee, that's great.

Mr. Dunford: That is good. Yes, I agree.

This legislation does not pre-empt the MLA review of emergency medical service workers. Paramedics not employed by the regional health authorities will continue to have the right to strike.

The scope of practice of nurse practitioners has grown in the last couple of years. Removing nurse practitioners from the bargaining unit will give health authorities the flexibility they need to proceed with primary health care reform. Under changes in Bill 27 these employees will not be entitled to severance, neither the stability or the existence of their employment is threatened, and their terms and conditions remain substantially the same. Legislation will ensure that severance is not used for purposes it was never intended for.

The changes under Bill 27 will not happen overnight. The legislation outlines a transition plan and grants special temporary powers so that the board can deal with issues that arise because of the legislation. Now, this will be a fair process for all parties as we move forward with the changes. This legislation is important for health reform, treats workers fairly and consistently, reduces the burden of administration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have been talking about Bill 27 in the public now for a week or more, and I've tried to emphasize something that is called the greater good, and what we mean by that little phrase is the fact that this government takes very seriously its responsibilities to deliver a high-quality health care system and to be able to do that in a timely fashion. One of the things that comes with the acceptance of that responsibility is to then move all of the different aspects of legislation or regulation into line with that type of vision and, of course, that direction. Clearly, I don't know if there's anyone here in the House, including my NDP friends, that would be able to arrive at an argument that would convince anyone that a strike or a lockout is good for the delivery of health care. If there was a situation of perhaps an overwhelming majority currently having the right to strike, well, then maybe this would be something that we'd have to look at. But, again, despite all the rhetoric, despite all the reaction that we've had from various groups around the province, the fact of the matter is that we're talking about approximately 10 percent of employees that would be working for these regional health employers.

So it's very, very important, I think, on that particular matter, but also of course there have been public documents that talk about wanting nurses at the bedside and also at the operating table rather than at the negotiating table, and I think this is something to really keep in mind. For those of us that do have some experience in labour relations, we know how long it takes to negotiate agreements, but that is a very small portion of the time that is actually spent, then, in labour relations. I know that I haven't ever calculated in my own mind the amount of time that I spent at bargaining tables and then what percentage that was of the time that I had to spend in administering the collective agreement through its lifetime, but it probably is certainly 1 to 4, one hour being in bargaining to four hours administering. It might even be as high as 1 to 10. There may be studies, Mr. Speaker, that have looked at that.

In any event, you know, if it is 1 to 4 or something of that particular magnitude, then it doesn't take too long to do the math. With over 400 collective agreements currently in effect, if we are to reduce that, then, to 36 in total throughout the province, I think that the logic and the reason behind this move would be fairly obvious, and it's only the emotion of critics of anything, basically, that this government does when it comes to health care that will be left. Emotional arguments can be traumatic at any particular given time, but over time, of course, we're going to have to rely on the logic and the reason and the science of things.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the ensuing debate at the various levels on Bill 27 but really would hope that all members of the House will keep the seriousness of the bill and its provisions in mind. Keep also in mind the fact that collective bargaining is currently ongoing. Many of the collective agreements are to expire on March 31. So I think there's a timeliness that needs to be looked at, and I hope that we could expect and count on the co-operation of all parties here in the House for a speedy movement through the process of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening to speak to Bill 27. I guess that just at the end of the minister's speech there was a little bit of a contradiction from what he started off his talk with where he said, you know, that this is something that they're not going to rush into, that they're not going to try and implement all at once. Then he said: there's a real urgency to it because we have to have it done by the time this current round of negotiations and contracts gets put in place.

But, you know, the thing that we really have to look at as we go through Bill 27 and look and see what it really means to Albertans – I've already had a number of Albertans come up to me and ask what the minister is talking about when he says: we need this to promote safety and good health delivery. They're asking: is the minister trying to tell us that because of the current configuration of the labour contract negotiations, the relationship between each of the regions and their respective bargaining units, there's some implication there that we're not getting safe, quality health care? I hope that's not what the minister is trying to talk about, but it's a perception that's being left out there with Albertans, and the minister really needs to talk to some of these issues and try and make sure that when he puts messages out into the public, he's not dealing with messages that lead to any kind of a comment or any kind of an implication about the dedication and the approach taken by the workers in our health care systems.

As we look at this bill and deal with some of the background in it, the whole concept of labour relations is trying to develop a working process that allows for employees and employers to come to an agreement over working conditions and remuneration, but that whole process in itself really takes into account the fact that we do have to have a degree of consultation, a degree of give-and-take, a degree of: let's put all the issues on the table and see where we're going and what the options are that we've got. Yet in developing Bill 27, it appears that there was very little, if any, real consultation with the affected parties in terms of what their expectations were for the process.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that there were a number of voluntary negotiations already going on to try and amalgamate some of the bargaining units and make the system more effective and more conducive to good relationships between all of the bodies involved. I think that if we're going to look at that, that probably should have been the process that was used, even if it might have taken, you know, one extra negotiation period or something to actually achieve it. It basically says that this is a participatory type of relationship that we're trying to develop between the employers and the employees rather than the top-down, heavy-handed approach that we're seeing here with Bill 27. That doesn't lead to good relationships with any of the bodies involved.

The main aspect that comes up every time we talk about this bill and that we get into debates about is the implication, as the minister said a few minutes ago, that there is a right-to-strike withdrawal for the remaining health care workers who are involved within the public systems, but it doesn't, in effect, create equity either, because it ignores those workers that are in the private-sector employment delivering the same kind of a service. So they're selling this bill on the idea that it is supposed to put some degree of equity into it, yet it doesn't, and this is how we need to make sure that we should be going back and allowing the labour unions, the negotiating groups, to sit down and talk about how they want to see these kinds of things work.

But if we get to the actual idea of whether or not it is part of the option for the unions to take and withdraw their services, this creates a real inequity in terms of the negotiation and the bargaining power of both parties that are involved when the employees don't have a right to withdraw services when they want to. I think it would be more appropriate and is something that I'd like to throw out to the minister: should we not be talking about trying to define an essential level of service rather than an essential service? In this way what it does is it basically says that we know that health care in this province is essential to individuals in a critical state, in an accident state, for individuals who need treatment in a timely fashion.

There's a lot of our health care delivery, also, that is optional, that is voluntary, and that we could use as the median to deal with how we handle fair power-brokering in terms of trying to put out a point and trying to get a point established in connection with negotiations. If the employees don't have a right to strike, they don't have the mechanism to really push for their wishes. In the end what it's going to do is it'll go to arbitration, and we saw how this government handles arbitration cases when they dealt with the teachers last year. They created conditions that would allow the arbitrators to come to a settlement which didn't give full disclosure or full discussion of all of the options that were being raised as part of the issues of that strike situation, that contract negotiation situation. You know, we have to make sure that if we're going to deal with looking at trying to withdraw the option for individuals to use the ultimate withdrawal of service, then we have to make sure that, in effect, they do have some power to balance the power of government, even if it's through the Labour Relations Board, to appoint the arbitrators or to put the mandate, put the direction to the arbitrators. This doesn't give the process the same degree of balance that it has if the option is there to withdraw services.

You know, when we go through this and look at what, in effect, is happening with the implementation of this bill, we end up with some questions being raised about whether or not there's going to be fairness or equity put into this. A lot of people have already said to me: "Okay. So what? If you take away the right to strike, it doesn't effectively prevent the withdrawal of services." That is another issue that we have to watch, as well, because it has an impact on how these individuals can use the system to push, but it doesn't help in terms of labour relations when you have one group having their actions defined as illegal, when the Labour Relations Board through its arbitrators can put conditions out as well that don't necessarily appear to deal with any degree of fairness.

The next issue that comes up is this whole idea of amalgamation of the bargaining units. I've already mentioned briefly that, you know, there were some negotiations already under way to try and bring together some of those units into a larger group and a more common group, but by doing it in a heavy-handed way like this bill does, it really, in effect, doesn't give the relative units a chance to fully discuss and fully work out the issues that are involved in amalgamation, and that will create the possibility for a degree of "what would have happened if" and "you got this" and "we lost that" kind of give-and-take in the situation. That doesn't lead to good working relationships as these groups come together and have to deal with trying to get on with the delivering of health care.

I guess that the thing we have to look at, as you go through that, is that they're trying to amalgamate a number of them, yet they're going to break out nurse practitioners. What we need to do is make sure that there is an option in there for them to develop an association or develop some kind of a group so that they can deal with working conditions and their relationship to the regional health authorities. You know, this is the kind of thing that has to come out of this when we have other groups that are being singled out of the system. We have to give them an option to organize as well. If that means that we'll have the nurse practitioners trying to form a professional association like the Alberta Medical Association for the doctors, that's the kind of thing that we need to be looking at. What options will be available for those nurse practitioners? The implications of the minister's comments at the start were that we expect to see a lot more of those career opportunities develop for the nurse practitioners in the future as they play a different role and a more unique role in delivering our health care systems. We have to kind of make sure that all of those options are really handled and dealt with in the context of where this kind of a system will take us as we go through the process.

The thing that we need to deal with also is that if we look at how these amalgamations are going to come about, there's no indication in this legislation about how the relative contracts will fit together. This is all left in many ways to the regulations or to kind of the will of what would probably end up being an arbitrator because people will have to be brought together and sort those things out.

If we look at this bill, as much as anything, Mr. Speaker, what we see is a lot of the characteristics that are really common with the way this government has been dealing with a lot of legislation in the past. There are some basic principles set down in the piece of legislation, and then almost everything else is left to a set of recommendations. That comes out there, you know, as we look through what's going on in the whole idea of that section 162, where they're talking about all of the different regulations that the Lieutenant Governor in Council can pull together. These are, in effect, going to dictate and be a heavy-handed, dictatorial type of approach to how these unions have to bring together their collective agreements, how they have to evaluate the relative merits of each of the different contracts, who gets what, how they deal with issues of seniority, all of that, and it doesn't seem to be in a way giving anybody a sense of expectation other than the fact that there's a lot of uncertainty out there.

If the minister really wants to see this implemented by the end of the month so that he can start these processes in place by the next fiscal year and put it in place for these contract negotiations that he was just talking about, Mr. Speaker, I challenge him to bring the regulations forward. Let us see them. Let us have a look at them while we're debating the bill, while we're dealing with them so that we can truly see what, in effect, these regulations will do to the implementation of this bill, to the actual way it's going to make these relative bargaining units work with each other or how the relative regional authorities will be empowered to deal with the relative union contracts that they have to handle. This is one of the things that I think the government is really trying to, in essence, hide behind almost. They keep saying: you have to wait for the regulations. Well, Albertans really saw what that meant with the Natural Gas Price Protection Act. They sell the bill on one set of parameters, and then when it comes time to implement it, the regulations create a whole different environment for the operation of that bill compared to what it was when they implemented it. So you can see that those regulations really do provide for the meat of any kind of a bill that we have to be able to look at in terms of evaluating: is it going to be good or is it not going to be good for the process at hand?

When we start going through this bill and look at all of the different aspects and how they can be brought together, we see that almost everything here is undetermined. We don't know where it's coming from. We don't know where it's going. All we can see is that they're saying that the Lieutenant Governor in Council will have that power to dictate a whole series of things that either can be directly put into regulations and imposed on the process or can be directed through the Labour Relations Board and imposed on the process. I think it's incumbent on the minister to make sure that Albertans truly see those regulations while we're debating the bill, and that's important. If we don't see those, we don't really know how this is going to be implemented, how this is going to be put together, and what relative effects it will have in terms of bringing forward different aspects of that amalgamation. You know, this is the kind of thing again, Mr. Speaker, that's a very heavy-handed approach in the sense that they're not telling the relevant groups what the rules are, but they're saying that there's a set of rules you're going to have to follow, so buy into it. Well, that's not a very open, accountable process.

You know, if government is supposed to be open to the people who are being governed, we should be telling them what we're dealing with here, what we're asking them to deal with, or what conditions we're putting on their ability to negotiate with each other. If we don't do that, we're, in effect, trying to make sure that these individuals are buying into a process where they don't know what the rules are for. That's just not the right way to make legislation. That's not the right way to get groups to start working together. It's not the right way to accomplish what could be a simple process if we just let the groups negotiate with each other and put common courtesy, common practice in place and let them come up with an objective.

I'm sure and I know from talking to a number of the union members that they've already seen that amalgamations would be beneficial to some of them in a number of areas, and they were willing to do it. So why do we have to be so heavy handed on it and not give them the option that we've talked about here? Almost every one of these regulation subcategories says that the regulations will determine which trade unions are eligible for a vote by employees, will determine how the collective agreement will be selected. Why don't we let the workers make those choices themselves? The health care workers are out there. They know their working conditions. They know what they want. They know what they need to be effective in their job. Let's let them make those choices rather than have these kinds of regulations imposed on them. That doesn't help make the system work better, provide for a good working environment. We've got to make sure that that kind of thing is available on a voluntary basis, on a basis that truly lets the workers who are out there delivering our health care services in a very competent way have some buy-in to this, lets them have some say in the process.

The minister went through and said that there's going to be a common dispute process, yet how do you buy into it when it's imposed? You know, will people feel comfortable using it, either the employers or the employees? If there is a dispute that comes up, it's got to be something that the participants in it have in effect bought into by having some kind of power and some kind of a process to help design it. Yet this is one of the things that's going to be imposed through the Labour Relations Board. So we need to make sure that these kinds of things that we get in place are not done without really making sure that the groups are there. If we're going to have an effective operation and an effective moving forward by this whole process, we've got to make sure that everybody feels comfortable with it, and this kind of top-down activity by the government doesn't lead to that and doesn't promote that very much.

I guess that even when we get to looking at the four functional bargaining units that the act defines – the nursing; the auxiliary nursing; the paramedical, technical, and professional services; and the general support services – this is one of those things that we see: why didn't they consult with the health care workers to decide how they saw those things fitting together? This is one of the things where they've just gone out and defined a set of processes without saying: maybe there are unique characteristics, unique aspects, that come about in different areas that would allow or would encourage or would make for better labour negotiations if the workers that were there had a chance to decide how they wanted to work together. You know, this doesn't deal with a lot of that kind of buy-in generation, and what we're going to see is, in effect, the government being the driving agent for all of this rather than the true democratic process that usually comes about and follows collective bargaining processes.

The idea that we're going to have enforced bargaining units at each of the health regions also, you know, I think opens up some questions that we need to look at because what we want to make sure is that there is some continuity. Some of the bargaining units right now probably do represent geographic or functional areas of service within a health authority that can see themselves being or wanting or needing conditions that are not there in the broad perspective. What we're going to end up with, Mr. Speaker, is a whole bunch of subunit bargaining groups as opposed to the concept that we're talking about here of only having four. So we need to make sure that those kinds of things get put in place and make sure that the approach that gets taken leads to some kind of a buy-in type of relationship.

The other aspects that come up in connection with this, Mr. Speaker, have to deal with the way the government is going to, in effect, administer the act, bring about the proper consultation, and I would really hope and would suggest that it would help the process a lot if the minister makes a commitment to, in effect, go out, take the regulations, deal with the relevant groups that are there, make sure that they get a chance to be participants in developing those regulations so that we end up with a true process that'll work.

You know, the government thought it was going to develop some kind of a process with the teachers last spring, and all it did was create chaos and disaster. We don't want that kind of thing happening here, but this is what the government is leading to. When they make sure that all of this goes on behind closed doors, doesn't get done with the openness that should be there, what we're going to have is, in effect, second guessing – why didn't you do this; why did you do that? – and that doesn't lead to a productive settlement of any of the kinds of things that we need in making for appropriate and proper delivery of our health care services.

You know, the idea that we want to make sure that this provides us with a productive health care system I think would be a lot better if we could reflect on it from the point of view of this is something that is built and put together by the system instead of a top-down, real heavy-handed approach that we see in Bill 27. It's not going to lead to that kind of operational smoothness that the minister talks about when he gives us an overview of the bill. When you look at the kind of regulations that are in it, it's really indeterminate at this point exactly how it's going to work or any of the other aspects.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I just want to call again on the minister to make sure that the regulations that are out there are made available so that people can see how this bill will work, how this bill will actually fit together, because the way it's put together here, it's very top down; it's very invasive to the spirit that really is behind the process of collective bargaining. Where it should be a collegial

“let's sit down and talk” type of relationship, the government here has just given us a system of take it or leave it. That's their approach: take it or leave it; you're going to have to live with it. That's not right, so I would encourage everybody in the room not to vote for this because we've got to have a process put in place that will, in effect, get buy-in from all of the groups. Let the groups be a determinant of their own futures and their own working conditions. That's what democracy and freedoms are all about, and that's what we should be trying to promote through this legislation. I don't expect that this will achieve that, and I would really hope nobody would support that as it moves forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we move forward with health reform, we need to be flexible in how and where our health professionals provide service. Health reform is all about being responsive to the needs of Albertans and to the needs of health care providers. Now, we have already done much to make the health care system more efficient and more responsive, but more remains to be done, and we need to pick up the pace.

When we first created health regions in 1994, we streamlined 200 separate hospital boards into 17 regional health authorities. Those 200 boards came with 400 separate collective agreements, all of which were transferred straight over to the new health authorities. Last November we contracted those original 17 regions to nine so that they could move forward with efficiencies in health service delivery. Now we need to bring the labour structure in step with the rest of the health reform process, and Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, does that.

It releases the regions from the administrative burden of negotiating 400 separate collective agreements. It frees health care workers from the inequities caused by agreements which reflect the health system that we replaced nine years ago. As a result of those inequities, it is not unusual for one health employee to have the right to strike while another does not. It is not unusual for two employees in the same region to earn different rates of pay for the same work. That is not right. We need a system that makes sense, one in which all employees are treated fairly whether they work in a hospital or out in the community. Bill 27 gives us that system.

The regional health authorities tell us that the current bargaining structure must change so that they can continue to meet the challenges that come with health reform. My colleague will speak to the specifics of Bill 27, but I can assure you that the bill gives the health system the labour flexibility that it requires.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot ask health authorities to continue moving forward with health reform and then tie their hands when it comes to the effective use of their workforce. Bill 27 is the right legislation at the right time. It creates a system for health bargaining that makes sense. It simplifies the labour environment and creates a level playing field for health care employees. It protects health care workers from the unfairness of inconsistent labour agreements. It ensures patients receive the health care they need when and where they need it. It gives regional health authorities the flexibility to build a team of health professionals who can deliver new and innovative models of care, and that is the reason why I ask for the support of this Assembly for second reading of this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Questions? Do you wish to speak, or questions?

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have some questions for the minister under rule 29(2). I would like to ask the minister why the right to strike for public health nurses is taken away, why the government considers those people to be essential in the sense that emergency workers are considered essential.

9:40

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think that a compelling argument has been made in the past by workers within the health care system that they are an integral part of an overall system, so it matters not whether we are talking about a person who works as a nurse within an emergency room or whether we might be talking about support staff that work within the hospital environment. This is all part of an overall system, and they work together hand in glove, and any set of workers who have the ability to legally strike can jeopardize and compromise the safety and delivery of service of health care within the system as a whole.

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a question at this time for the hon. minister of health. How much money will your department save with the streamlining of the bargaining units?

Mr. Mar: That is a difficult figure to ascertain at this time. I can give, however, examples of the types of onerous administrative burden that rest with regional health authorities. As an example, the Calgary health region with its newly constituted boundaries, including those of the former region of Headwaters, will have the responsibility for 16 different sets of negotiations governing something in the range of 44 collective agreements. Mr. Speaker, one can only imagine that the need to administer all of those contracts would be administratively burdensome.

Now, having said that, the exact figure associated with the nine regions is difficult to ascertain, but I can assure the member and members of this Assembly that the intention is that any administrative savings which can accrue should be directed towards frontline delivery of services.

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Question?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: can the minister tell the Assembly what specific health reforms he has in mind when he says that the labour relations arrangements envisioned in this act are necessary in order to proceed to the next stage with health reforms? What specifically are the health reforms he has in mind, and how does this act facilitate them?

Mr. Mar: Well, one example might be our intention, as stated and set out in the Mazankowski report, to give health care workers the ability to work within the full scopes of their practice. One example of that, of course, Mr. Speaker, addressed in this particular legislation is the subject matter of nurse practitioners. We think that it would be most appropriate given the independent clinical decision-making type of role that nurse practitioners have that their role is much more like that of a physician than that of a nurse. I think that most people would find it a surprise if they were meeting with their physician but had to change when there was a shift change. So the consequence is that we would view that the role of nurse practitioners would be more like that of physicians and that regional health authorities should be able to use them in a manner which is much more flexible than a contract that might be more appropriate for nurses.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of health, please.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, the time has expired for questions.

Any members wishing to debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and get a chance to participate in the debate this evening on Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003. When we look at combining multiple collective agreements covering the same type of employees and employers to produce the same results, one has to be quite concerned with this legislation. Certainly, I think at this time that the key to not only the public health crisis but the nursing crisis and other health care professionals in this province is negotiation, not confrontation. I see this bill as being quite confrontational toward a group of Albertans who have worked very, very hard to keep the entire system together during the last decade. It has been very tough, and I don't think this is the way to treat the health care professionals across this province.

We look and we see in the government's own press release that Alberta had the second lowest rate of work stoppages in the country in 2001. We look at the Canadian Federation Of Independent Business, their issues, the issues that are highest on their list of priorities, and we see – and I'm going to list them, Mr. Speaker – what's on their mind: total tax burden, government debt and deficits, employment insurance, government regulation and paper burden, workers' compensation, shortage of qualified labour, cost of local government, availability of financing, and at the bottom of the list is provincial labour laws.

The labour laws don't seem to be a problem for the majority of Canadian Federation of Independent Business. They certainly have more concerns about the shortage of qualified labour, and I'm afraid we're going to make our situation in this province worse. Health care professionals are needed across North America, and they're going to vote with their feet on this legislation and leave this jurisdiction for places where they will be treated with a lot more respect. When we talk about having fair and balanced labour relations, this is not, Mr. Speaker, how to do it. How will this foster fair labour relations?

We have a whole series of regulations which are going to be drafted in the privacy of the cabinet room, far from any of the interested parties, whether they are the public health care employees themselves or whether they are members of the Official Opposition or the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. It's going to be removed from them, and it's going to be in the cabinet room, I would suspect, with curtains drawn. Now, when we look at these regulations – and we're certainly going to look at them in a great deal of detail in committee – we are just enabling this government to govern more with regulations. Out of harm's way we're giving, in my view, further wide-sweeping powers to the Labour Relations Board.

There are some initiatives in here, and we're probably never going to know the details until some Friday afternoon when we see an order in council come across the fax machine. How are we going to improve employer/employee conditions in this province by “authorizing the Board to make binding determinations as to terms and conditions to be included in a receiving collective agreement where the parties are unwilling or unable to do so”? Are we giving arbitration or mediation a chance, or are we going directly to the board?

Now, the idea that we have removed entirely the right to strike from this group of Albertans: we cannot take this lightly, Mr. Speaker. The right to strike is a fundamental human right and should not be taken away by any government.

An Hon. Member: A human right.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, it's a human right.

When you consider the rights that we all take for granted, whether they're the right to associate, the right to have freedom of speech, these rights are very, very important in a democracy. We're so quick to remove them. [interjection] I'm going to look forward to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs' views on this bill. Certainly he seems, Mr. Speaker, anxious to participate in the debate, and I welcome that because we need to hear all sides of the argument here.

Earlier, when previous speakers were speaking about this, it was to make everything simpler and fairer, I believe, were the words used. Straightforward was another description, and it was for the greater good. But I'm afraid that this new law, as we see it before us, will make collective bargaining in this province tougher, not easier. It will be much harder to come to a contract.

We look at what we have done to the regional health authorities and the fact that the elected representatives lasted hardly a year and a half. After a long period there were some elections to the regional health authorities, and now we have a wide-sweeping brush taken to the elected authorities. [interjection] I hear the comment that 60 percent are still elected. Well, Mr. Brian Bechtel is not among that group, nor is Ms Sheila McKay from Edmonton-Gold Bar. They were a good voice on their regional health authority. They were elected by the people; they were not selected by the government. There's a big difference in that. We have forgotten about that, and I have to wonder what part these selective regional health authorities had in writing this legislation, Mr. Speaker.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, we all know that there was a committee, and many labour groups were very, very pleased. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and certainly the Member for Edmonton-Calder and the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo were on a committee that was struck by the Minister of Human Resources and Employment that was going to study changes to the labour code. Where are the results of that committee? Has there been an interim report presented to the minister? What parts of Bill 27 are part and parcel of that interim report? Or was their work completely ignored? We have the powerful, secret cabinet committee, that was struck at an undetermined date, chaired by the Minister of Innovation and Science, and oddly enough we had the Minister of Learning, we had the Minister of Health, we had the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, we had the Minister of Justice.

Now, what is being cooked up here, not only for health care professionals but for teachers and other unionized workers in this province, that could not have been discussed by the previous committee that I talked about? All this is important in relation to

Bill 27, because if we are going to have fair, balanced labour relations in this province, the labour groups have to have confidence in the system. When we act in this manner and we strike these powerful, all-secret committees, that is not going to give very much comfort to the unions. They need to be part of the process, and from what I understand and the research I've done, I'm afraid they have not been part of this process.

We talked about the fairness of all this. Well, how is it fair that in some nursing homes in this province, the private nursing homes, employees, if they're organized, can still go on strike, but if they're receiving paycheques from regional health authorities, the staff no longer – they do not have the right to strike? How can I say that they no longer have the right to strike? They do not have the right to strike.

Now, also, I understand that there was to be a study done on essential services. Perhaps in debate here the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is going to enlighten not only this member but other members of the House. What happened to that study? Where is it? Perhaps at some time – and this will be coming later in the spring session – paramedics are to be swept into the fire services, in with the firemen. When we look at the past pattern of this government – and this is to me appalling, Mr. Speaker – this government likes to get one group fighting with another.

An Hon. Member: Divide and conquer.

Mr. MacDonald: Divide and conquer.

The Progressive Conservative book is to get one group fighting against another, and here with this bill I'm afraid what's going to wind up happening is that CUPE and the AUPE will be forced to fight it out for members and for jurisdiction, if I can use that word, authority. When we have only this one bargaining unit per health authority, this is what's going to happen, and the government is going to be able to sit back and watch these two groups have a fight over members and jurisdiction. Won't that be a pattern that we have seen before? Certainly the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has seen that. There are so many issues, but we will have lots of time, Mr. Speaker, in committee.

As I said earlier, in these regulations the labour board, I'm afraid – it is my interpretation and the interpretation of others – will be used to do the government's business with the health care professionals. Now, there are many people who have asked me: how will these changes affect the current round of collective bargaining? Mr. Speaker, we know that in the past the Provincial Health Authorities association had significant concerns. There were certainly worries in the past, going back three and four years, that the trend of aligning community health and facility-based wage rates could produce significant wage increases for some classifications. I would like to know in the course of this debate which classifications they are and how much of a wage increase we are looking at here. We are told that there's going to be significant administrative savings here, but we don't know, and I certainly would think that somewhere someone knows because we have a crisis in this province. It's not caused by poor labour relations; it's caused by poor government management when you look at how you have been planning to train and retain our health care professionals in this province. This has been an ongoing problem. One only has to look at overtime rates.

Now, I have been told in the research that I have done – and if this is wrong, an hon. member from the government could please come forward with the correct statistics – that there are 30,000 overtime hours worked a week in this province by health care professionals.

Thirty thousand overtime hours a week. The issue of overtime costs is not going to be resolved with this bill. We need long-term planning, not poor labour relations.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs on comments and questions.

Mr. Lukaszuk: A question.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I'm just wondering, for a point of clarification, if the member could advise me under what charter of human rights I would find the right to strike.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, at this time I would advise the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to send someone to the library and bring up all the covenants that are there from the United Nations, and he'll certainly find what he's looking for there. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, on comments and questions?

Mr. Mason: Yes, on comments and questions, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar if he could elaborate somewhat on the need for longer term planning in the health care system and how it relates to this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands brings up an excellent point, and that is the fact that we have in this province a health care workforce that faces many shortages, whether it's different types of registered nurses: intensive care unit nurses, community public health care nurses, emergency room nurses, general duty nurses, sexual health nurses, coronary care nurses, facility or acute care nurses, home care nurses, medical/surgery nurses. The list goes on and on and on. I would encourage all hon. members of this Assembly – again, it's in the library where I found this document. It is a study on the emerging and current health workforce issues in Alberta, and this was conducted three years ago by Alberta Health. They concluded then that there were three issues reported in order of importance: health workforce recruitment, the quality of the work life of those employees, and the need to examine quotas to address the lack of quality or adequately trained new health care profession graduates.

Now, the health care workers in this province received a needed increase in wages so that they wouldn't be leaving this province and going to work in other jurisdictions. This happened before the last election, when this government wanted labour peace. Now, two years into their mandate, they're waving this Bill 27 at the health care professionals. If anything, it's going to destabilize the workforce. For this government to complain about rising public-sector salaries – they're so concerned about it now, and before the last election it was their cash, not the people's, and the public-sector unions and, to be specific, the registered nurses were just playing catch-up. If you want them to work in Alberta, you've got to be willing to pay them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands in however much time we have for questions and comments.

Mr. Mason: If there's time remaining in his five minutes . . .

The Deputy Speaker: As long as the bell hasn't gone, you're on.

Mr. Mason: I would ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar if he might want to comment on the large scope for regulations and the problems that may be found with setting what should be regulations behind closed doors at the cabinet table.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands that I do have a lot of concern about this series of regulations and the fact that, you know, from the government's point of view – and this is not my point of view or the Official Opposition's point of view – the ideal situation is to have these regulations discussed or amended in the privacy of the cabinet room. For reasons which I discussed earlier, it's out of harm's way, it's not in any discussion, and on some quiet Friday afternoon when perhaps the reporters have gone home from the gallery down below, there'll be an order in council issued. All of a sudden we will have a series of regulations that will entirely destabilize our negotiating strategies.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to speak on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 27, which I think is a very, very important bill. It's important because it shows what the government is capable of in its labour relations, and it shows the way the government treats workers in this province with contempt.

Let's start with how the bill came about, Mr. Speaker. The minister has talked about the desire of health authorities, that is to say in this case the employers, for changes that are included in this act. Now, it's clear from that that this government consulted closely with the employer, with the health authorities, in this bill.

Mr. MacDonald: No.

Mr. Mason: It is true, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. It's apparent that this bill was brought about at the request of the health authorities themselves, and that must have involved, I think it's only logical to assume, a considerable degree of discussion with those players.

Now, these players are the employers in this case. If you look at this as a labour relations bill, which it clearly is, then there are always two sides, and the government has a responsibility to treat fairly both sides. We know from this government's record that it does not do so as a matter of course, but normally the government at least tries to maintain some sort of appearance of evenhandedness between unions and employers. That is certainly, I think, the generally accepted view of how a minister of labour – in this case the minister is not called that, but that's what he is. He has chosen to work very closely with the employer and to keep the employees and their unions completely in the dark, and he has indicated furthermore, Mr. Speaker, that he's not prepared to consult with unions, has not consulted with them in the drafting of this, and apparently will not consult with them in the drafting of the regulations under this act.

So it's clear from the outset that this bill was a setup job to give the health authorities what they wanted in order to deal with the unions in the way they wished, and the unions were left completely in the dark as to the development of this legislation. A secret cabinet committee was established that worked with the employers in this case to draft the dream legislation that they wished in order to manage the labour relations in their sector as they wished.

What do we get out of that, then, Mr. Speaker? What kind of legislation comes as a result of this? Well, it excludes nurse practitioners from the right to join a union or to engage in collective bargaining. This obviously would make them more attractive for private health providers, who would like to avoid unionized labour. It may in fact be used by public health authorities, but it clearly opens up the door for private health care providers, which is of course one of the objectives of this government.

Now, the United Nurses has argued that the disenfranchisement to severance and termination pay could mean that if services are divested to private interests, employees will not be entitled to any compensation, including the potential loss of pension contributions and any negotiated severance or termination payouts. So we asked the minister of health earlier, after his speech, about that, and he saw the exclusion of nurse practitioners from the definition of employee as a desirable thing in order to provide greater flexibility for the employer with respect to their services. That can only mean a step backwards for that particular group of employees.

One of the biggest features of this piece of legislation, like just about any piece of legislation the government has recently introduced, is the enormous scope for regulation. Things that should be legislated, that should be debated publicly by all the parties who have representation in the Legislature are being delegated to the cabinet, which of course, as we know, meets behind closed doors without public scrutiny and without any opposition MLAs to provide constructive criticism. The result is that the regulations very often are very one-sided and completely without balance.

I understand that the minister has said that consultations with the unions did not and will not occur regarding these regulations. If that's not correct, then perhaps the minister will correct me, but I don't see him heckling me at the moment, so I assume for the moment that that's a correct statement.

Let's look for a minute, Mr. Speaker, at what kinds of things the government can regulate under this act. Section 162.1(1)(a) allows regulations to establish "region-wide functional bargaining units" for all RHAs. Section 162.1(1)(b) allows regulations to determine how bargaining agents and collective agreements are slotted into the regionwide units. This includes authority to determine whether there will be votes by employees, the types of collective agreements from which the final agreement will be selected and how those types will be determined, authority to determine which unions are eligible to select a bargaining unit by vote and the circumstances of that vote, and determination of how any votes will be conducted. Well, I'm sure that the employees of health authorities are sleeping easier tonight knowing that the cabinet has unfettered discretion to determine those matters.

But, Mr. Speaker, the act goes on. It allows regulations to continue current collective agreements. It allows regulations to require employers and bargaining units to bargain in good faith and, without limitation, establish processes by which contentious issues are resolved. It allows regulations to authorize the board to hear and resolve complaints arising from section 162.1. It allows regulations to authorize the board to impose binding determinations if the parties are unwilling and unable to do so. It furthermore allows regulations to authorize the board to treat affiliated locals as a single union. It allows regulations to require that affiliated locals act as a single union.

It authorizes via regulation the board to perform any action prescribed by the board or by regulation which the union or the employer refuses to do. It allows regulations to be made on any other topic that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary. Hardly sweeping, is it, Mr. Speaker? It allows, via regulations, the chair or the vice-chair of the board to act alone with all of the powers of the board, and the board, via regulation, is not required to wait for an application to act and can intervene any time it sees fit.

So, Mr. Speaker, obviously we have components of an entire labour act as it applies to health care workers embedded in the ability of the cabinet to make the decision without appeal, without input, clearly, from all of the affected employees or their representatives, and it completely leaves health care employees subject to the dictate of the cabinet.

Other things about this bill that cause concern, Mr. Speaker, are that provisions of the act will take away the right to strike for any employee of a regional health authority, and the cabinet will be able to unilaterally change the end date of collective agreements and could extend them for months, years, or even indefinitely. Now, I don't know about some members, but I think this is a very serious situation, when you take away the rights of employees. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about it being a human right, and I believe that it is, but I do know one thing, that it is a civil right and that this country is party to international agreements that recognize the right to strike.

Now, any right of human beings in a democratic society is subject to some limitations, including even the right to free speech. So the question is: how do you define whose right to strike should be in some way abridged? The government hasn't looked at that. You know, you have people in here who are having their right to strike taken away whose services are not required on weekends, for example. So if you don't need someone on a Saturday, are they really considered an essential service? There are tests that could be applied to this, but the government has refused to debate that. It's refused to define it. The government feels quite comfortable taking away the right to strike of anyone it deems fit, and it doesn't have a consistent policy or test that is applied to workers to determine whether or not their right to strike should be in some way abridged.

Well, we over here, Mr. Speaker, don't believe that people's right to strike ought to be taken away, and if it is taken away, there had better be a really valid and strong reason for it and some insurance for those employees that they will be able to obtain fairness in their collective bargaining through some other way. This act is miles from doing that.

The act talks about regionwide bargaining units, and it proposes four units for each RHA: direct nursing and nursing instruction; auxiliary nursing; paramedical, professional, and technical services; and general support services. Now, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the Labour Relations Board was seeking consensus among the stakeholders about the number of bargaining units and was supposed to make a decision by November of this year. The RHAs requested that the province override this process, and, surprise, surprise, the government was only too willing to do so. Why is that? Why is the government prepared to throw out consultation, collaboration, and collective decision-making between employees, their organizations, and their employers in favour of what the minister has called a – what did he call it?

An Hon. Member: The greater good.

Mr. Mason: He calls it the greater good, but we know it's only the good of his friends.

He called it – well, I'll come back. Maybe if somebody wants to ask me a question, I'll remember what he called it, but I know that he's being tough with unions in order, he says, to protect health services in this province, and it's absolute nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

Now, the government, through regulations again, gets to determine every aspect of the transition from 400 bargaining units to 36, which is four units for each of the nine RHAs. It includes whether voting will take place, what types of collective agreements there are and how they'll be assimilated. Despite the authority of regulations to provide the framework for how and when votes occur, there is no provision saying that votes must occur. The board or even the chair or vice-chair of the board will be able to simply assign a union to represent unions without a vote. In the transition period any agreements on severance or termination are null.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to have the chairman of the authority determine which union workers have to belong to is a travesty of any sort of concept of labour relations that we have developed in this country. It reminds me of the corporatist model that was developed in Italy during the '20s and the '30s, where under Mussolini's government they set up industry leaders, which were the big corporations and employers, who determined the whole scope of . . . [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Do you think that the fact that unions may now have to negotiate amnesty at the end of a job action will in any way jeopardize labour relations or perhaps prolong job action as a result of the draconian legislation here in Bill 27?

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you for that, hon. member. I do believe that this will just add to the tension and the burdens and the discord that the government seems to be so keen on creating with its heavy-handed approach to labour relations. By the way, hon. member, thank you for jogging my memory. That's, in fact, the term that the minister used that I wanted to recall. He admitted that the government was taking a heavy hand with unions and employees with respect to this bill. So, yes, I do believe that there's going to be a lot of unrest for some time to come, and the labour relations climate is further going to be aggravated as a result of this action.

I guess the problem that I have, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, is that there was a process already in place where everybody was negotiating a reduction in the number of bargaining units in the health system, and there was good progress being made. The government has just thrown that all out the window, and I guess a question that both employers and unions will have to ask in the future is if there's much value in them trying to develop a long-term collaborative relationship in this industry or in any other one if the government is just going to arbitrarily intervene on behalf of the employers, throw out all of their work, and impose a settlement directly.

The Deputy Speaker: Further questions and comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Please, Mr. Speaker. I have another question for the hon. member. Given that the regional health authorities acknowledge that revisions to their boundaries could have a significant impact on collective bargaining, the resulting transfer of services and employees from one health authority to another could produce challenges in the areas of seniority, portability of entitlements, and compensation agreements covering the same types of employees as they're combined or negotiated to produce similar terms and conditions of employment. Does he have any idea how much that's cost us?

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question, and I don't have a precise figure, obviously, but we can only estimate that there are going to be considerable costs and considerable time wrangling over these details, sorting it all out. You know, I think ultimately the workers are going to be wanting to try and maintain their union of choice, and this option won't be available to them. So I think that quite clearly this is just another example. You put your finger on it. There are going to be large costs of resolving all of these disputes, and it will take a lot of time and a lot of wrangling.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Gold Bar, any comments or questions?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands: does the member feel that Bill 27 in any way, shape, or form is going to alleviate the chronic shortages of health care professionals in this province?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. No, I do not. In fact, I think the government's other agenda in health care, which is privatization, is going to set up a competition for existing professionals that will be drawn away from the public health care system leaving us with a public health system that is lower in quality and more short of key staff and professions than even it is today. So I think the hon. member has again put his finger on a very important point, and I commend him for doing that.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, again to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands: does the hon. member feel that nurse practitioners have the right to collective bargaining?

The Deputy Speaker: Time is up.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad for the opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003. This is an important bill for all of Alberta, I think. We need workers in this province from many different levels, and I'm always a little surprised at the government's attitude towards the working people in this province. I'm not a member of a union. Coming from a theatre background, we have a guild, but it doesn't provide all of the services of a union. But all of my family are union members: my mother in the teaching union, my father had five tickets and was a member of the union for every one of those trades, and both of my brothers are very active in the ironworkers' unions. So I'm certainly surrounded by union members and have very strong feelings about support for unions and for the concept of collective bargaining and the protection that it offers workers. So I was very interested in this legislation. I can't say that I was impressed by it or that I was looking forward to it, but I sure was interested.

The health authorities have already collapsed from the starting number down to the nine we're now looking at. With it, as an excuse I suppose, the government is looking at collapsing the collective agreements that went along with the originating hospital boards and then the RHAs and now down to the nine RHAs. So they're talking about coming down from 400 separate collective agreements to 36, four bargaining units for each of the nine health authorities.

I'm not in favour of this legislation as we debate this in principle in second reading, and frankly I don't see what the government could do to amend this act that would make it palatable to me. I think that the right to strike is a fundamental one to uphold that relationship between workers and employers, and I don't think it should be taken away by government. I disagree with what this government is doing. As I read the newspaper articles and the editorials that have come out around the introduction of this, there seems to be some thought that this would somehow improve labour relations. I'm trying to remember the words that the minister used, greater good or common good or something, that somehow this is going to be a great big, fuzzy, happy, pink angora sweater that everybody is going to love to put on and wear on those cold winter days. I don't think this is going to lead to better labour relations around the health professions. I think that what's at the basis of those collective agreements is trust and respect. I don't think those principles are being brought forward in this bill, and I don't think they're being demonstrated by the government towards the people that work in those areas. So I don't think that sort of basic concept of labour relations is going to be enhanced by what we're seeing here.

I know that others have commented on the lack of government consultation with the unions, and I note that there are a number of observers in the gallery tonight. I'm assuming that they're here to watch the debate on this, and I thank them for attending and watching this debate. It's important to have you here today. Thank you.

I know that there was progression on work from union leaders working toward reducing the number of bargaining units voluntarily, and now we see the government bring forward a bill that wants to do it quickly, and there's a great deal of pressure from the government to pass this act before we take our break. So there's some great haste from government now. I don't understand and I've heard no explanation as to why there needs to be such great haste here. What was wrong with the work that was being done on a voluntary basis up until now? There's been no comment from government, just: "No. Here's the bill, and by the way we need it passed in two weeks flat, please." I don't know if that means that we're going to see the time guillotine, the time closure, brought in from government on this or not, but they seem to be all fired to get this passed.

I note in the legislation, the very first thing out actually, that the bill is throwing the nurse practitioners out to fend for themselves. I've been very interested in – I don't know how to describe them – that group. Most of them are women, I think, and I've always thought this was a real advancement for women in the nursing professions and have watched with keen interest the progression and expansion of their role, and I'm not very happy to see that they have been left without anyone sort of fighting on their behalf. I mean, we've got the doctors who've got their own AMA, but the nurse practitioners don't, and this is not aligning them with anything else. They've been stranded there, and I'd like to know why the government chose to do this – it's quite specific – and whether this was the intention of putting these changes in here that relate directly to them.

There have been a couple of questions asked but not particularly answered, so I will try again. I'd like to know whether the personnel that are being transferred between these different bargaining agreements – you work for the Provincial Mental Health Board today, and tomorrow you work for the regional health authority. I'd like to know whether there is, in fact, a commitment – I'd like to hear it on the record – that staff will be maintaining their seniority and benefits and wage structures, and I'm not hearing that. Hand in hand with that goes the provision that appears at the end of the bill about no severance. Well, I can see the argument that you wouldn't need severance if you were doing exactly the same job at exactly the same seniority, exactly the same benefits, exactly the same wages and had no reason to anticipate any change in that if one day you work for the Provincial Mental Health Board and the next day you work for the regional health authority, but I'm not hearing it, and that makes me really suspicious about why no severance is in here and whether, in fact, the government is anticipating or putting in place the possibility of I think it's called constructive dismissal. I would like to hear very clearly that commitment from government.

I also note that the Labour Relations Board is charged with doing a number of things, and I sort of rolled along with that. Okay. Yeah, yeah.

- (e) authorizing the Board to hear and determine a complaint that a party has failed to comply . . .
- (f) authorizing the Board to make binding determinations as to terms and conditions . . .
- (g) authorizing the Board to deem affiliated local unions of the same parent trade union to be one.

Yada, yada, yada, all the way through these long lists of regulations, and then I note just a tiny little clause, just hardly even a sentence that says, "The Board may hear any matter or conduct any business under this Part through the chair or a vice-chair sitting alone." So all of these things, all of these powers, a lot of stuff, that are being given over to the board to put into place can in fact be done by one person. Did the minister intend this? Sorry; I'm sure he intended it. It's in the act. Why? Perhaps he could illuminate this. I know he has great faith in the chair and vice-chair of the Labour Relations Board, but, my goodness, I don't know that I can share that. So I'd like to hear some reasoning behind that.

A couple of different members have asked: what is the expected cost saving? I know that there was a question directly to the minister, who kind of ducked it and gave us some anecdotal material. I'm thinking: wow, you know, you're in such a hurry to pass this bill; you're saying that we need this for some reason. But when we go, "Okay; then is it really going to promote efficiency?" – and part of efficiency and the definition of that means saving money, economy – why don't you know how much this is going to save you or if it's going to save you? Are you saving it on the backs of the workers or saving it through some other sort of administrative protocol? Why can't you answer that question?

Once again I see this government going into major changes in the way the province operates, and nothing is being put in front of us that supports that decision-making process. I'm not getting a cost-benefit analysis. I haven't seen any reports tabled by the minister or referred to by the minister that show what a fabulous idea this is and how it was done in another land or another province and how it worked so wonderfully. Certainly, my experience with electrical deregulation and the same conversation with the then minister – not this minister, the then minister – in which I repeatedly asked him in Public Accounts to please provide the cost-benefit analysis, the reports, the studies, anything that the government had looked at at the time he was making the decision that would support why he thought electrical deregulation was such a good idea – he could not provide it, and that is well documented in Public Accounts. So it was a whim. It was: well, I think it's going to be a good idea, so we're going to do it.

Mr. Mason: It hasn't turned out too well; has it?

Ms Blakeman: No, it didn't turn out too well. So I'm suspicious of government intentions now. It ruined my trust of the government forever. [interjections] I know. It's a sad thing.

A number of people have already talked about the amount of decision-making that's going to be done after the fact, under regulations, and there is a sort of constant chorus that we get behind curtains and things that come from the backbenchers over there by way of heckling. What disturbs me the most about regulations is that there is no public scrutiny of the debates. There is no Hansard recording of who brought up one issue, which issue, which member supported what part of it, you know, who brought up in support, who was against. The public has no way of ever knowing who stood for this and who didn't. I think that's important when you're making the kinds of decisions that are being anticipated in this bill. [interjection]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the House has only one speaker speaking at a time, and, hon. member on the front bench, you are not that member. It is Edmonton-Centre.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So there's no transparency in this decision-making process. We have no idea of what the determining factors were in the final decisions. None. All we do is get the regulations. We don't understand why the government came to this. We don't get to see any of the discussion that went on. There's no record of anything except for the final order in council. There is no Hansard for this. There's no recording at all, and I think that that's a major part of the problem that this Assembly has come to. At one point there was even a standing committee of the Legislative Assembly called Law and Regulations, to which the amount of regulation that's considered in this bill could have been referred, and that committee is now gone because the majority of government members voted in favour of this recent change in Standing Orders which abolished that committee. It is a shame. At the time, I thought of it as the Gary Dickson memorial amendment because he referred so often to that Law and Regulations Committee, but it was a good idea. We even have the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who, when he first came to this provincial Legislature, spoke so passionately and at length about the importance of all-party committees discussing that kind of thing and is now silent on the issue, so I guess he's truly a member of that caucus now.

The other issue around regulations is that it's very hard to find out when they are released and, also, where one can find them completely. This government is quite good at e-government. The bills are available at www.assembly.ab.ca very quickly after they're introduced in the House, but finding out when the regulations are released and actually being able to get at them and look at all of them is a totally different story.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre whether or not she believes that decisions made behind closed doors can in some way be beneficial when it comes to the rights of workers to decide which union they want to belong to.

Ms Blakeman: I'm not sure that I'm following that question entirely. I don't know how a decision made in secret, in private would allow workers to gain any kind of knowledge or insight. They lose knowledge and insight, and so do the rest of us. I know that this government feels that this Legislative Assembly is not a useful place to be, because they've already created a parallel system in their own caucus in which they do legislative review and a parallel universe in which they often retreat and live, but it's why so many of them get impatient when we are in here debating, because they're not up debating. They will debate very little if at all. We've had two ministers up, and I'll be surprised if we get anyone else. Despite the enthusiastic commentary that I get from the Minister of Environment, he doesn't rise to his feet . . .

Dr. Taft: And Economic Development too.

Ms Blakeman: And Economic Development as well. That's right. . . . to actually put his thoughts on record. So his constituents and others do not know what his contribution was to the decision-making that goes on under the amount of regulations that are done in secret.

The Deputy Speaker: Further comments and questions? Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'd just like to add a comment, and that is that I do agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre when she says that decisions made behind closed doors or, in this case, through regulation cannot be seen to be beneficial to workers, particularly when their rights and the continuation of their collective agreement is taken away or they are forced to join a collective bargaining organization that is not their choice, if they prefer one that would be better than another. In all of those instances I fully agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I guess that I would have to ask her why she thinks the government is operating in this way, so that they make more and more decisions behind closed doors which should be made by legislation in this Assembly with full debate. What is the government's motivation for doing this?

Ms Blakeman: I couldn't begin to guess at the motivation of government. However, it is about convenience. I think it's not about democracy. Democracy is participatory and noisy and time consuming but, I think, worth it in the end. I don't see any of those things particularly upheld.

Dr. Taft: There's a lot of noise here.

Ms Blakeman: Except for the noise. I'm sorry. The noise they're good at. The participation and the looking at issues and the healthy debate and exchange of ideas: nah, not so much.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Question and Comment Period

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with the next item of business, just a reminder. There are some people who are saying that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands wasn't asking a question. Of course, that reveals a misunderstanding of what we're operating under. Under section 29(2)(a) a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each member's questions and comments.

It does not have to be questions. It can be either or both.

May we have the agreement of the Assembly to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce a number of outstanding Albertans who fight day in and day out for the working people of this province. I would ask them to rise as I introduce them and then receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

First of all, Mr. Les Steel, the president of the Alberta Federation of Labour; Barrie Regan from Carpenter's Union, local 1325. This, incidentally, is the oldest union local in the province. It is one hundred years old this year. Of course, we know that their members were integrally involved in the building of this Assembly itself. Alan Besecker from the United Nurses of Alberta, and he represents workers at the Alberta Cancer Board; Heather Smith, president of the United Nurses of Alberta; Bev Dick with the United Nurses of Alberta; Dave Malka from the Communications, Energy and Paperworkers Union; Ed Schell from the UFCW 401, representing workers at the Shaw Conference Centre. They are local labour heroes these days from their successful strike there. Kerry Barrett is the secretary-treasurer of the Alberta Federation of Labour. Kevin Flaherty is from local 458 of the Office & Professional Employees International Union. Mike Desautels is a representative of the Canadian Labour Congress. Gerry Donnelly is a representative of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers. Peggy Morton is a representative of CUPE. Alex Grimaldi is the president of the Edmonton and District Labour Council. I ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: With an introduction, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce one more person, who's been up there for, I think, the entire evening watching carefully. She's a former president of the AARN, a very well-known figure in nursing throughout this province, Louise Rogers. Please rise, Louise, and receive our warm welcome.

head: Second Reading

Bill 27

Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the debate here tonight, at least the one-sided debate. It would be nice if we heard more from government members. For the people in the gallery who've waited so long, I might refer them to Hansard so they can look at the hours and hours of discussion on the rough fescue bill, the official grass of Alberta, and the tremendous enthusiasm for that bill from the government members compared to the complete silence, it seems, on an issue of fundamental importance, labour relations.

Now, I stand clearly here: I cannot support this bill, and I will not support this bill. I will not support it on the basis of the process and on the basis of its substance. My understanding of the process through which this bill was developed was that it was a very one-sided process, a process in which the tens of thousands of Albertans who will be so directly affected by this were not consulted through their labour unions, a process that was, I believe, overwhelmingly driven by the regional health authorities, the employers. No doubt the regional health authorities have a major place in this, but they are not the only party involved, and any reasonable, credible, dignified process should have involved all parties equally and extensively. So on that basis alone I could not support it.

I cannot support it, either, on its substance. The steps that are laid out in this bill simply should not be acceptable in a province like ours. The substance of this bill: among other things, eliminating the rights of many workers to strike, forcing them into particular bargaining units without consulting them. Those kinds of steps are just not acceptable. So for those two general reasons I will not and cannot support Bill 27.

The bill, as we've all reviewed here, reduces the number of bargaining units in the regional health authorities down to 36, reduces the functioning units down to four categories of employees. It removes the right to strike from I believe about 7,000 additional workers and places other restrictions on workers which, I think, in some cases may be justified and reasonable but in other cases certainly are not.

I am also very concerned by the substance of this bill, which in fact delegates all kinds of enormous power to regulations and to order in council by cabinet, and as a result, as we have been saying here tonight and as the people in the gallery and across this province will know only too well, key decisions will be made behind closed doors without any input and will simply be announced to the public as if they were decreed from some higher authority.

So, as a result, we maybe have a bill here that should be called the labour relations mystery bill because it's filled with mystery. We don't really know any details about what's going to follow in the regulations. What happens in this sort of circumstance? Well, that mystery leads to uncertainty. That uncertainty leads to fear, to mistrust, to stress, to discontentedness, and ultimately to militancy, and we find workers and employers staring across at each other in a poisoned atmosphere, in which they are now and always will be, it seems, as long as this government is in power, in an adversarial relationship. Unnecessary damage is done to the health care system, to the labour relations environment in this province.

So this is some of the fallout, I expect, we will be seeing as a result of this bill, and it's fallout that could have been in many cases pre-empted if a more normal, healthy, open, trusting process had been followed.

Ms Blakeman: From this government?

Dr. Taft: Even from this government. Let's try something new. Hope springs eternal. Hope springs eternal.

Now, we are told that this bill is necessary because of the restructuring of health care. Again, another mystery that's going on here. The restructuring of health care is driven, we're told, by the Mazankowski report. That's the blueprint for the new world of health care in Alberta. When we were first introduced to the Mazankowski report well over a year ago now, we were told that things would unfold fairly quickly. We passed a budget that provided $25 million for the implementation of the Mazankowski report. A slew of committees was struck with all kinds of high-profile people, and now we don't know what's happened. It seems to have fallen into some nether land. There have been reports prepared. We know that some of them are sitting on the minister's desk, but some of those have been there for months and have not been made public, and I'm beginning to be concerned that they may never be made public.

So if the restructuring of health care in this province is so complex and so mysterious, that yet again makes me wonder: what's going on with Bill 27? How do they know – how do they know – what they need in labour relations in the health care system when they're not being forthcoming at all on the restructuring of that health care system? We've kind of developed a black hole in the health care system in which we keep shoveling money for committees and reports and legislation, and nothing ever seems to come out in terms of the reform. So, yet again, more reason for distrust and mistrust over what this legislation entails.

My phone has been ringing about an issue that I was able to bring to the attention of the Minister of Health and Wellness earlier this evening and, to his credit, to which he responded, and I think it's worth getting on the record here. One particular aspect of this bill addresses nurse practitioners. Now, we all know that nurse practitioners are highly trained specialists. They typically have a master's degree and advanced training in nursing, and they are given extensive responsibilities and autonomy to practise much more fully than the standard registered nurse is allowed to do. They are also, I suspect – we don't know, but this is my suspicion – crucial to the future of health reform in this province. One of the aspects of this bill is that it prevents them from being part of a bargaining unit. It actually, as I understand and read the bill, forbids them from being part of a bargaining unit under a union.

One twist to that that was brought to my attention this afternoon is that while the bill was doing this, current regulations, as they were explained to me, required that nurse practitioners must be employees either of a regional health authority or of some other equivalent sort of body. So we were in a situation where nurse practitioners had to be employees, but they were not going to be allowed to organize and have the normal rights of an employee under labour relations, probably a situation that would be open to an immediate court challenge. I consulted with the Minister of Health and Wellness. He was able to respond to me quite rapidly that the regulations had been changed and that a substantial degree of autonomy is going to be granted to the nurse practitioners so that they are not required to be employees under the new regulations.

A concern that remains that I leave with the minister to consider is that the number of nurse practitioners in this province is small. They have no association, they have no college, no particular voice that speaks for them on an organized basis, so they are left at the moment when this bill is passed having to negotiate one-on-one with regional health authorities or their other employers. That sets up a difficult situation, to say the least, for the nurse practitioners, and it's probably not something that will encourage the expansion of that profession, assuming that they do have a big future ahead of them, and I certainly hope that they do.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one of the very biggest concerns with Bill 27 has to do with the infringement on the rights of workers to do things such as strike. To that end, I'm going to propose an amendment to Bill 27. I hope the clock stops so I don't lose my speaking time, Mr. Speaker, while this goes on. Thank you.

May I proceed?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes, hon. member. You may make the motion and then we wait until hon. members have a chance to read it.

Dr. Taft: All right. Well, the motion reads that the motion for second reading be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 27, Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, be not now read a second time because it is the Assembly's view that the bill infringes on the rights of workers in an unreasonable way.

That is the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, in the nearly four minutes left.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amendment is intended obviously to make the crucial point that the rights of workers here are being seriously infringed upon, and clearly the most serious infringement is the infringement on the right to strike. There was some discussion earlier here on whether or not workers really do have any right to strike under any particular charter, and indeed they do under the charter of the International Labour Organisation, I think it is, among other groups. The right of workers to strike is well recognized, and in fact it's clearly established in law.

I've in fact spoken recently to very senior members of this party and former members of this government who find this aspect of the bill to be objectionable.

An Hon. Member: Name names.

Dr. Taft: I would, but I'm not supposed to. I will tell you later if you like.

Clearly, the right to strike is the right to withhold labour, and in that sense it argues to be a natural right of any human being. You have a right not to work. You have a right to withhold your labour under any reasonable situation. When we remove that right from workers, we are disrupting and corrupting the entire collective bargain process, for surely we must ask ourselves: why would any employer negotiate seriously with workers if those workers do not ultimately have the right to strike? What's in it for the employers, in this case, to negotiate seriously? What's in it for them to move the process along, to compromise? Clearly, when their opponents, the people across the table, do not have that ultimate hammer, their motivation is going to be to drag negotiations out, to fail to compromise, and to generally take advantage of the legislated weakness that workers labour under when a bill like Bill 27 is passed.

These people in the health care system, Mr. Speaker, are professionals. These are people who got into the work of nursing and related professions because they want to care for other human beings. These people understand the true nature of a professional commitment, which is to put the interests of the person you're serving ahead of yourself. That ultimately is the crucial definition of a professional in this circumstance, and these people are professionals. Time and again we have seen nurses argue and go out because they are defending patient care.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We still have the right, hon. members, to ask questions and make comments for a five-minute period, so if you are standing up, I presume that's what you are looking for. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. I wonder if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview will entertain a question?

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I've tried to make it well known in this Assembly that I will stick to the former rules in which this kind of exchange was allowed in committee, and I'll happily take questions in committee.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker, then I wonder if I can ask a question of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, nice try, but no.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then I'll make a brief comment.

I'm pleased to make just a brief comment following the excellent amendment that has been put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I guess I would certainly concur with him that in fact the bill does infringe on the rights of workers in an unreasonable way. It's a very arbitrary way and completely unnecessary to boot. I would, I guess, commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview – and I know he doesn't like to take questions – for this excellent amendment that the motion not be read a second time because in the Assembly's view “the bill infringes on the rights of workers in an unreasonable way.”

Well, that's certainly my view. That's absolutely my view, so I associate myself fully with Edmonton-Riverview's motion. I wonder, though, if it's the view of other members opposite here? I would like each and every member to stand up here and let us know whether they think this bill infringes in an unreasonable way on the rights of workers in this province, because that's what they're accountable to their constituents for.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Calling the question really doesn't speed up the process at all; it just adds to the clutter of noise.

Hon. members are reminded that this is amendment A1. The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment has tried several times to get up and speak to this. The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to point out for the interest of the members assembled that the right to strike is one way and a tool that is used to resolve disputes as they arise in the normal process of collective bargaining, but it is not the only tool that civilized economies have found to resolve disputes. Another excellent way that has proved itself over the years is compulsory interest arbitration. As a matter of fact, as I tried to point out earlier this evening, it is a device that's used not only by police officers and firefighters but also currently by about 90 percent of the health care workers today. So to move perhaps 10 percent of those workers into a system that has a long history of resolving disputes here within this jurisdiction in my view, then, is not an infringement in an unreasonable way, and I would urge all members to vote against amendment A1.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on comments and questions, and you will be brief this time because we have others that wish to speak.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the minister. I would like to know why he has developed this particular bill without any consultation whatsoever with the labour movement of this province?

Mr. Dunford: Before responding to that, I should also ask the members here in the House tonight to note the process that has been used. Now, it's perfectly allowable under the rules of this House, but we would note that the last member of the opposition that had a chance to speak tonight was the one that has proposed this amendment rather than, say, the first one or the second one or the third one. So there has been some heckling as to what might be going on here regarding this process, and I think people can determine for themselves just exactly what it is.

As far as the question is concerned, I don't think I've been uncandid with anyone who has asked me, including some of the people who have been interviewed here tonight in the gallery. I've been very open about what transpired in this particular case, and it was that the government decided to respond to a request from the Provincial Health Authorities association, who act for the employers in this particular case. I haven't shied away from it, and I'm not shying away from it tonight. That is your answer.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. A question for the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. If this legislation, Bill 27, as the hon. member has suggested, is at the request – I don't have the precise words – of the employers, how can one consider this to be fair and balanced? If we're going to have fair and balanced labour relations, it has to be a two-way street between employers and employees. Where was the employee input into this?

Mr. Dunford: As far as the request that was made, Mr. Speaker, it was an attempt by the employer, in their view, to bring some balance to the situation. Now, we resisted a request from the employers to get involved in the actual matter of collective bargaining as it related, then, to some specific clauses.

As far as was determined by the government, we thought it was a reasonable request in order to provide a platform from which bargaining in the future would spring. We see the fairness in it in the sense that we are still allowing employees to have collective bargaining on their behalf go forward, that they'll still be, should they wish it, represented by a union except in the case of the nurse practitioner.

Now, the nurse practitioner was, I think, unfairly characterized here earlier. What we were basically talking about – and if I could dare use an American term here in a British parliamentary system – is someone who has gained the professional attributes of a physician's assistant. So we were talking in this frame of reference, then, of someone who is between a registered nurse and the physician. There's a whole new challenging and exciting and interesting field of endeavour there that needs to be explored under health reform.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the amendment or questions?

Mr. Mason: Yes. A question for the minister: what are the criteria this minister uses when legislating away workers' right to strike? How does he decide who can strike and who can't, and who's next?

Mr. Dunford: Again, I want to assure the hon. member that we're dealing with a specific instance here. I would point to the very nature of the bill itself. It's quite an unusual title, as a matter of fact. When you look at Bill 27, Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, this didn't happen by accident, hon. member. This was specific. In a sense we were dealing with a specific situation.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. That's the end of the questions, hon. member.

We now have before us amendment A1 as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, which enables everyone now to talk once again at second reading. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on amendment A1.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with a great deal of interest that I rise to speak to amendment A1 to Bill 27 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Certainly, I have the view that a strike is a mechanism of ultimate last resort to try to settle an issue between an employer and an employee. I have to remind all hon. members of this Assembly that labour or employers for that matter don't have to worry about long periods of time where there is unrest, and there are those that will say it's restrictive or punitive labour laws that are the cause of this. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, that applies to the health care professionals. There have been very few examples of job action. I would urge all hon. members of the Assembly to support this amendment because when you look at this bill and you look at the amendment, this amendment will give an opportunity, shall I say, for a wrong to be corrected, and both sides then can have input into the legislation.

The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment explained to the Assembly that this was legislation that the regional health authorities group, or the employers, had assistance in planning and drafting. Now, I can't emphasize this enough, particularly after what we've been through in this province in the last 10 years with the lack of planning in regard to the health care professions. I know that this is not part of the regional health authorities, but I would use as an example the Cancer Board and the fact that over 50 percent of the registered nurses that work there – and there are in excess of 200, as I recall – are over the age of 50. We have to make some fast decisions here, and we've got to start talking about long-term planning. Overtime costs for that group of health care professionals in this province have gone up dramatically in the last year.

When one considers amendment A1, it would give this government time to catch their breath and say: okay; perhaps there was a little bit of a mistake made. In the past this government has taken great pride in explaining to everyone how willing they are to consult with stakeholders: there has to be stakeholder consultation. Well, why was there no stakeholder consultation on this legislation? I'm not going to get into that argument again on this amendment about the top-secret, five-person cabinet committee and how it just ignored the wishes of the MLA review committee. I don't know how some of the labour groups feel about this. These are the ones that made extraordinary efforts to contact the three MLAs on that review committee. In fact, I believe, Mr. Speaker, some of them even devoted a day and drove to Olds to see the hon. member and express their opinions on what should and should not be incorporated into any sort of restructuring of our Labour Relations Code.

Now, when you look at A1 and you look at what the hon. member is trying to attempt, again I have to urge all members to please consider this request. The situation of our public health care system is at stake here.

We can talk about having the right to strike. When that is taken away, as it is in this case, what's left? What's left here? There doesn't seem to be much left. The amendment gives us a way out from the confrontational styles of the past and gives this government a chance to have a second look at what they're doing with the health care problems. Bill 27 compounds the problems, and amendment A1 to Bill 27 allows us to get away from further pursuit of old-style confrontational tactics, that we seem willing to use with labour negotiations. I'm afraid this is only going to lead to a further poisoning of the negotiating environment and a lack of confidence in the collective bargaining process, a lack of confidence in the Labour Relations Board. It goes on and on and on.

Now, this amendment will, as I said before, allow this government to take a second look. It's almost like if this government were the Senate and they were going to take another look at one of their pieces of legislation. Amendment A1 could actually be called the Senate second look.

Dr. Taft: A sober second thought.

Mr. MacDonald: A sober second thought even.

We could have a look at the implications of the legislation here. Like, we cannot be pitting one union against another in competition to represent far fewer bargaining units. I don't view that as healthy for labour relations. Now, as I understand it, union leaders – and there are still a few of them up in the galleries tonight – are baffled by this current government's lack of consultation with them. They're willing to consult, and as far as I know from the research that I've done, they were shocked when they heard about the five-person cabinet committee meeting, the secret committee, but they are willing to go that extra mile to ensure that we have good labour relations in this province and a collective bargaining system that works for everyone.

For a group of individuals – and I'm talking about the regional health authorities here – to think that this way of dealing with an issue is the right way – well, I hope I'm proven wrong, but I think we're in for some turbulent times as far as collective bargaining goes if we pass legislation like this. If we pass this, I'm going to be very, very disappointed. When we have health care professionals and their representatives willing to be part of the process, I think they should be welcomed. They should not be shut out.

I understand that there are 64 or perhaps 70 nurse practitioners in the province. Who's going to look after their interests? Nurse practitioners, who have had the ability to prescribe medication as well as order and perform tests much like physicians, have been left to fend for themselves by this legislation from what I can understand. Now, I'm told it's going to be changed. They certainly are not governed by the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses. They don't have the same representation as doctors have through the AMA or various other groups. What's going to happen with this group? I need this explained to me. They certainly had affiliation with the UNA in the past, as I understand it. Where are they going to be now? There are many people who look at them as one of the answers to alleviating some of our problems with our public health care system.

While unions and health care professionals are upset by this legislation – and I'm suspicious too – they are convinced that the worst is yet to come in the regulations. I had outlined this earlier, and I'm not going to get into the details on that at this time, but like the Natural Gas Price Protection Act in 2001 it appears that the regulations for Bill 27 will cause more discomfort than the act. I've got nothing more to say about the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, but it wouldn't surprise me if the health care professionals are trying to negotiate sweaters into their collective agreement, white sweaters.

While we're talking about getting serious with this bill – and I certainly am serious about this bill – the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor may consider the fact that long-term planning for our health care professionals is the solution to our problems. The solution is not to strip away their rights or, as some people have described it to me, contract stripping. Amendment A1, Mr. Speaker, as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, gives everyone here a second chance. I would much prefer that the government go to the library, dust off the plan that they had devised in 1998-1999, when there were many more regional health authorities and everyone agreed that there was a shortage of professionals. If they could find the professionals, keeping them was another matter. That was the problem. It had nothing to do with the labour relations act.

Now, I would remind all members of this Assembly that before voting any further on this legislation, we need to know – and we talked about this a little earlier – whether the health care professionals will retain the seniority, the benefits and wages they've earned and successfully bargained to achieve in the past. We need to know where they're going to stand in all of this. We need to know the cost implications of all this, and I'm sure someone on the government side has a figure. It's astonishing to me that we're not getting an answer to just exactly what the costs are going to be. Perhaps the amendment would give the government members time to dig up that information. If they have to phone the Provincial Health Authorities association, well, so be it. Someone must know, and I for one do not want to see legislation such as this, the reason for particularly health care professionals who have just finished their degrees, finished their training to take one look at this and bolt to the United States of America. Good-bye. That's happened before, and we've got to learn from our mistakes and not let history repeat itself.

Now, sure, we have lived through job action 10 years ago and near job action in 1997. Yet when I look at this bill and I look at the amendment A1, I realize that the government hasn't dealt with the underlying problem that continues to plague our health care system, and that is the critical shortage of nurses. It's getting worse. They're working longer hours under high-stress working conditions, and that is taking an increasing toll on our nurses and our other health care professionals. That is – and I cannot emphasize this enough, Mr. Speaker – the root cause of the current problems. It has nothing to do with unsound labour relations or anything else. That's where we should start looking at solving the problems, not with this draconian legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Questions? Comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member. I'm sorry; I'm getting a little tired here, but I think this is an important question that needs to be resolved. So I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar if he doesn't think that taking away health care employees' right to strike won't actually help the government to recruit more skilled health care employees to the health care system.

Mr. MacDonald: No, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member. This is going to make a bad situation even worse. I think we need negotiation, not confrontation. [interjection] See? We're getting confrontation already. The root cause of the problem is lack of long-term planning. It has nothing to do with labour relations gone sour or the fact that one group has more power than another. We have not had a record of unstable labour relations in this province, and the answer lies in long-term planning for health care professionals: recruitment, training, and retaining the workers.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, comments and questions?

Ms Blakeman: Debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Do you want to speak, then, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I do, and I would like to speak in favour of the amendment A1 that has been brought forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview, which would, if this is a reasoned amendment, have the bill "be not now read a second time because it is the Assembly's view that the bill infringes on the rights of workers in an unreasonable way."

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

I think, as my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar said, this does allow everyone to take a step back and be reasonable, take a reasoned and considered look at what's happening here. When I was speaking on the principle of the bill, I talked about the work that had already been done by the union leaders in attempting to achieve a voluntary reduction in the number of collective bargaining units to do with regional health authorities, and this would allow the government to go back and allow that process to roll out more rather than simply pre-empting it, which is in fact what happened, to everyone's surprise, I think.

My colleague for Edmonton-Riverview brought up the issue of the Manzankowski report and the amount of money that was allocated to it and how little we've actually seen come out of it except for legislation like this, which I don't think is moving forward health care in the province. I think the minister and I are going to have to agree to disagree on this one. I don't see it being about the common good. There's a phrase that keeps turning up in the propaganda – I mean, the literature – that's put out by the government on how this is going to make everybody happy. I'm sorry; I'm not going to be able to find this in a hurry. But I don't think that's the case.

One of the issues that is of particular interest to me around the whole issue of rights of workers is what's been created in Alberta around staff shortages. We know that when there were enormous cuts in health care services and, I think, a fair amount of disrespect thrown about particularly around nurses, we had nurses fleeing the province and being recruited away in very high numbers, and then, in fact, we had to spend as much money as was saved in incentive bonuses to get those same nurses to come back because we had such a shortage in the province. How many times are we going to repeat that scenario? I don't think that losing the right to strike is going to be seen as a big benefit by nurses and other health care professionals, and if this is another reason for them to leave the province, what is the government going to do with that effect on staff shortages?

When we look at the doors that are being opened up around private health care – I mean, there are only so many health care professionals here, and I'm still deeply suspicious of the link or lack of link around this. Does this bill make it even less attractive for people and more attractive for private providers of health care to be able to recruit health care professionals and to pay them even less well? I'm deeply suspicious of where the government is going with that whole relationship between the people that we trained to provide health care services to us in our public system and what the government is doing to set up that they get transferred into the private system.

Going back a little bit to a report that was put out, Current and Emerging Health Workforce Issues in Alberta: Questionnaire Findings, Final Report, from Alberta Health, March 1999. As part of that, there were a number of different tables that appeared. In particular, I'm looking at table 5-2, Top Three Health Authority Issues Impacting Health Workforce.

- A. Health workforce recruitment is an issue . . .
- D. The increase in labour relation difficulties . . .
- F. Nursing recruitment.
- G. The unattractiveness of health professions as viable career options.

I don't see how this legislation is addressing any of these issues; therefore, an amendment like A1, which stops this process and lets everyone go away and calm down and come up with something better, is something that I am highly supportive of.

Under table 5-4, Strategies Identified by Health Authorities to Address the Issue of Quality of Work-Life – very interesting. “B. Consultation with Alberta Labour to streamline certificates and bargaining processes.” I guess this is what we got from that, and others have already pointed out that it was the employer who was requesting these changes, not the workforce that was requesting these changes, not the public that was requesting these changes and, I think it could even be argued, not the government that was requesting the changes. So they're responding to the employer, and this becomes employer driven. You need a balance and one that carries with it respect, and I think that we're tearing that basis apart.

I know that I had a constituent send me a very long and detailed letter, and they worked in housekeeping at one of the hospitals and were very proud of the work that they had done there and were very puzzled at what they saw as a lining up by the regional health authority to privatize the services they were working in. Yet this individual was pointing out that they, in fact, had received and their team had received awards for the work and that people were constantly saying: this place is really clean; you guys are doing a great job. They were very frustrated by what they were constantly hearing from the regional health authority telegraphing to them that they were going to be privatized at the next contract go-rounds. They couldn't understand this because when they looked at the problems that had been experienced in Calgary around some of the same housekeeping issues and where there had been a lot of problems – and that was from a privatized firm – they couldn't understand why there would be such a push from the regional health authorities to do this, and I couldn't answer the questions for that individual. I see some of the same direction, that hand pushing things along here from the regional health authorities. I don't think that it's in the best interests of the worker in the end run.

The other thing that could be addressed – and this is just a small point, but there's a phrase that is used constantly throughout the legislation of “receiving collective agreement.” I checked in the definitions section at the front of the amending act. It's not defined there, so I actually pulled the statute for the Labour Relations Code and checked to see if there was a definition there, and there isn't. Now, as I said, I'm not a labour person and I'm not conversant with all the terms, but we should all be able to easily understand from the legislation what's being talked here. So this would allow there to be some clarification around the receiving collective agreement that is used so often particularly in the sections around regulations being done.

You know, it's “establishing types of collective agreements from which the receiving collective agreement for a region-wide functional bargaining,” et cetera, et cetera, “respecting the manner of determining from which type of collective agreement the receiving collective agreement,” et cetera, et cetera. It appears in half a dozen of the clauses here that are talking about the regulations that'll be developed, and there's no definition for it anywhere. I even sought a definition through Parliamentary Counsel, and they may not have had the time to get back to me, but I didn't hear back from them. So it gives an opportunity to clarify some of that.

You know, when I think about this government's sort of track record, somewhere I was reading – oh, it was in Hansard – about one of the question exchanges with the Minister of Human Resources and Employment in which he was pointing out that he felt that there had actually been a very positive working relationship between the government and labour groups and was using as an example of how wonderful this was the number of days lost to strikes, I think. I can't agree with this, and certainly in my life and as I look at those around me that are involved in labour issues, I don't think this government has been very friendly to unions.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I think that there is a need for a replacement worker legislation here in Alberta. When I look at the strikes that just go on forever, why are they able to go on so long? Well, because the employers can bring in replacement workers the next day, so there's no impetus to get them back to the bargaining table so that they can actually settle this. I think there needs to be replacement worker legislation, but I don't see it coming from this government.

I think there also needs to be – and I may not have the right phrase here – first contract arbitration legislation. Again, that's the root, that's the cause underlying a number of these very, very long strikes that workers have been trying to get. That's what was underlying the Shaw Conference Centre. They were trying to get that first arbitration. They go on strike to try and get it, the employer brings in replacement workers, and everybody is out on strike for extended periods of time. Finally we were able to get something settled with the Shaw Conference Centre. But I'm thinking of ones like Dynamic Furniture in southern Alberta; that went on for more than a year. I mean, how is that a good labour atmosphere in Alberta?

I mean, I'm not kidding myself. I don't think that passing this amendment is going to have the government pop up tomorrow with replacement worker legislation and first arbitration contract legislation, but I think it's an example of where we don't see leadership being given by this government in its labour relations. I think that we could go a long way down that path to make things better, and this legislation that's before us as Bill 27 is not a positive move for labour relations in Alberta. I think to say, “Oh, well, it's just 10 percent,” well, 10 percent of how many? How many people are we talking about here whose lives are affected? Why is 10 percent not acceptable in this instance to make a positive move, but other pieces of legislation come before us which affect only 10 percent of the people? So there's an inconsistency there from the choices that I see the government make.

Those are the points that I wanted to make in support of the amendment. I can't say that I'm hopeful that it'll get passed, but I think it's important that we continue to raise these issues in the Assembly, and I'm happy to speak in support of the amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the comments and questions.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. In light of Bill 27 and amendment A1, as presented by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and whenever we look at the preamble of the current Labour Relations Code, which reads, “Whereas it is recognized that legislation supportive of free collective bargaining is an appropriate mechanism through which terms and conditions of employment may be established,” do you view A1 as a positive thing, and members should support it so we can have another look at Bill 27 to see if it meets that preamble?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Yes, in that Bill 27 does not come anywhere close to what's being set out here in the preamble.

An Hon. Member: You're supposed to be talking about the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. That's why there's an amendment because the bill is not coming anywhere close to this. [interjection] Yeah, and the preambles are not enforceable, but it does set out the tone of it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this is not the time in which you can fire questions back and forth. There is one person that is being recognized at a time. If you want to ask questions, please do so, rise in your place, but don't heckle.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. So, yes, I am very supportive of the amendment for exactly the sentiment that is set out in the preamble, and we need to make sure that that sort of idea is upheld.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, were you asking a question? No.

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I never said a word.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, there's a first time for everything.

I would like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre how many unionized people she thinks live in Edmonton-Castle Downs.

11:50

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, you know, the question should be relative to what the hon. member just spoke about, and posing those kinds of things – it's really not trivial pursuit here.

If the hon. member wishes to answer the question, she may do so. If not, then Edmonton-Highlands, a better question.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much for that, Mr. Speaker. I would reckon that there would probably be an awful lot.

But if question and answer is finished for the hon. member, then I'm prepared to enter into the debate on the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands in debate on the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate this amendment by the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford. The question is whether or not we should actually give . . .

Mr. McClelland: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the point of order.

Point of Order Clarification

Mr. McClelland: I'm sure the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands meant Edmonton-Riverview.

The Deputy Speaker: Presumably this is a point of clarification, and it's now been clarified.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is in fact correct. I did err, and I meant to refer to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

He does have an excellent amendment here because he's suggesting, through this amendment, that we not read Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, a second time because it's the Assembly's view that the bill infringes on the rights of workers in an unreasonable way, and I think that it does. It does infringe on the rights of workers in an unreasonable way. First of all, it takes away their right to choose which particular union they want to belong to. It gives too much power to unaccountable people to merge and combine locals of labour unions into larger organizations when, in fact, that process was under way in a voluntary fashion. So it's arbitrary, and it's the arbitrariness of it that I think is the greatest problem.

Mr. Norris: Arbitrariness?

Mr. Mason: I think "arbitrariness" is actually a correct word, hon. minister, so perhaps you'd like to check it, and then when you enter into debate on this motion, I think you can probably stand up and do that. [interjection]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we do have someone who wishes to speak, so the hon. Minister of Economic Development will be on my list after the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to hold my breath for the hon. Minister of Economic Development to actually stand up and put his comments on the record, but we can always hope.

So the question is whether or not workers, then, have the right to strike. That's another key piece, and you know it might be interesting to review how workers got the right to strike in the first place because it wasn't given to them by governments. This may surprise members of this Assembly that when labour began to be used as a way of producing goods in factories during the industrial revolution, workers were working in these factories and mines in deplorable conditions. They were terrible, and they had child labour, little children in mines pushing coal carts. They would work for 10 or 12 hours a day. They didn't have a day off, not even Sunday, and the mortality rate of workers was astronomical. The whole existence of working people at that time was deplorable, it was inhuman, and something clearly had to be done. This was the society that existed in the 1800s, and I know that this particular frame of mind, of the 1800s, is very, very attractive to many members on the government side, but I think we can see that there was some modernization that occurred, and perhaps there'll be some modernization of government members' attitudes towards labour.

The entire process was that people were displaced from the land where they farmed or where they were peasants or serfs. They were displaced from the common land, and they created a labour pool that had nothing to do, nothing to sell but their own labour, and that is how they were able to exist. So they sold their labour very cheaply at the time. But it may interest some hon. members to know that it was not legal at that time to form unions or to go on strike. In fact, they would round people up and put them in jail for doing so, but the conditions were so bad, Mr. Speaker, that people fought back, and they defied the laws that existed which made striking illegal and which made their freedom of association illegal, and there were many strikes. There was much violence. Many people were arrested and put into jail, but they eventually forced the governments of the day, which were dominated by large landowners and big factory-owning industrialists, to change the legislation. So the right of workers to organize and to collectively bargain for the price of their labour was established as a right. It was not something that was handed to them by the state. It was something that they took from the state by themselves, and the motion deals with the infringement of this bill on the rights of workers, so I think it's relevant to talk about where the rights of workers actually came from. They did not get handed to the workers by some benevolent government. They were taken by the workers for themselves because that was the only way that they could exist with any degree of humanity.

So the rights of workers in my view, Mr. Speaker, transcend the ability of governments to infringe them. They do not come from government; they come from the workers themselves. The government may place some restrictions on those rights of workers, but it always must do so with a view that the rights of those workers exist independent of the legislative authority of any government.

We have seen, for example, this Premier, the Premier of this government, go down to southern Alberta and appear at a rally for a number of farmers who illegally sold their wheat to the United States, in contravention of the federal laws. There was a rally that was there to defend those law-breaking farmers and part of their campaign against the Wheat Board, Mr. Speaker. So there was the Premier standing up for the rights of those farmers to break a bad law. [some applause] All of these members applaud. Yes. They all applaud because they know that the Legislature does not have unlimited power to take away the rights of people, and all members who just applauded have clearly acknowledged that this particular point that I'm making about the rights of workers is a valid one.

I might just note as an aside, Mr. Speaker, that all of the farmers who ran for the Canadian Wheat Board on a platform of being allowed to trade with the United States were defeated in a democratic organization. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, if you don't think that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is being relevant to the amendment, then stand up and make your point of order, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands can respond, and then maybe we might be able to make some sort of comment with respect to the two arguments. Just shouting it out is not parliamentary and shows a lack of knowledge of the rules of the House or of manners.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that ruling.

12:00

Mr. Mason: You know, I'll talk maybe a little bit about the situation in Poland because I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs was from that country. I know that he's the first MLA of Polish extraction to be elected to this Assembly, and I think that's something to be very proud of, Mr. Speaker.

Let's talk about solidarity. Let's talk about labour organizations. I'm sure the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs would probably think that the events in Poland surrounding Solidarnosc were a very positive development. There the workers and the professional people got together and went on strike and challenged the government and challenged laws that they didn't agree with. I'm sure he wouldn't disagree with that particular action. So the question is: why does he disagree with unions in this province objecting to their rights being taken away by this government? Is this government so much different from the Jaruzelski regime in Poland when it comes to respecting rights of labour?

Well, you could argue that point all day, Mr. Speaker, but the point is that workers have a right to organize and have a right to collectively set the price of their labour. It is not the right of any Legislative Assembly to infringe unreasonably upon that right, and I think that I would be backed up by the International Labour Organisation and United Nations in making that statement.

So the question is: does this act do so? I think that it clearly does infringe on the rights of workers in an unreasonable way, and I think workers have every right to oppose this legislation. I would hope that the Assembly would realize that they're going too far and that in bringing forward this legislation, this minister and, as well, the Minister of Health and Wellness are trying to do things the easy way.

Instead of working with people and getting agreement and trying to go through the process, sometimes time consuming, of actually getting agreement and making sure that everybody's rights are respected, they do what many members of this Legislature would like to do, and that is cut off the debate, cut to the chase and do what they wanted to do all along instead of going through a proper process of debate, amendment, and taking into account the positions of all parties. If this government didn't act in that way, I don't think members of this Assembly would think that that's how democracy ought to operate, but they clearly do, Mr. Speaker. They clearly believe that the Legislative Assembly is an annoyance, that it's something that is inconvenient, time consuming, and so on. I would warrant that the government feels the same way about unions.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that people who enter the health care profession do so because they have a profound compassion for other human beings. They do not and would not withdraw their services lightly or unless they were provoked to the extreme to do so. The suggestion that I think the government is making in this act is that health care professionals would be prepared to withhold their labour lightly or frivolously or use it as an unfair hammer over the health authorities' or the provincial government's head in a way that is, I think, just completely unreasonable to assume.

The Deputy Speaker: Order, hon. gentlemen. In your place.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That gives me a chance to gather my thoughts and carry on.

You know, here are some words of wisdom.

It is recognized that a mutually effective relationship between employees and employers is critical to the capacity of Albertans to prosper in the competitive world-wide market economy of which Alberta is a part;

... it is fitting that the worth and dignity of all Albertans be recognized by the Legislature of Alberta through legislation that encourages fair and equitable resolution of matters arising in ... terms of conditions of employment;

... the employee-employer relationship is based on a common interest in the success of the employing organization, best recognized through open and honest communication between affected parties;

... employees and employers are best able to manage their affairs where statutory rights and responsibilities are clearly established and understood; and

... it is recognized that legislation supportive of free collective bargaining is an appropriate mechanism through which terms and conditions of employment may be established.

Mr. Speaker, this is the preamble to the existing labour code of this province, and this particular act that the minister is putting before the Assembly is a violation of these principles, and I urge members to support this excellent amendment and hoist, or not hoist, and not read this bill a second time this evening.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member: given that there's a great deal of sympathy in the general public for health care employees and their cause and that certainly this public sentiment is added to by the well-publicized effects previous health care cuts have had on the working conditions of health care employees throughout the province, not only do health care employees enjoy the public sympathy, but they are generally perceived as being more credible than their employers or the government. Would the hon. member, in light of Bill 27 and amendment A1, agree with that statement?

Mr. Mason: Could the hon. member just repeat that last part?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly.

The Deputy Speaker: If you can't hear from that distance, hon. member, we've got a bit of a problem. We do have other people who want to ask questions of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it rather unusual and peculiar that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands would make allusions to the solidarity movement in Poland, but if memory serves me right, that movement actually rose against a socialist government, a communist government, a government that, I imagine, the hon. member would be more inclined to form if he were ever in a position to form a government. If I could refresh his memory, one of the first legislations that was introduced by this new movement was for the privatization of health care. Can you elaborate on that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Well, I was referring to that movement specifically in respect to labour relations because I was trying to stay on topic.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a comment in relation to some of the comments that the hon. member was making whilst he was trying to stay on topic with relation to the Canadian Wheat Board. He had made a comment that all of the members who had been elected to the Canadian Wheat Board were not pro choice, and that simply is not true. There was an additional member elected to the Canadian Wheat Board who is pro choice.

Mr. Mason: Well, I think that pro choice is perhaps an unfortunate way to describe it, but my understanding is that the member that was elected that is in favour of being able to sell wheat individually into the American market was actually elected in Saskatchewan and partly overlaps into Alberta. But in the major districts in Alberta in which some of these farmers stood for the positions, they were defeated and pro Wheat Board farmers were elected.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.
12:10

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and it is this. If there are significant increases in the fines that are going to be levied against health care labour groups, does this member feel that amendment A1 in relation to Bill 27 will further erode collective bargaining in this province?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar: I absolutely believe that it's going to further erode collective bargaining. Ultimately unions are faced with the ability to withdraw their labour, which creates a situation in which both sides, quite frankly, suffer. Both the employer and the employee suffer. It creates a tremendous urgency to try and find some middle ground and resolution, and that's why it has stood the test of time. The other alternatives such as the minister has suggested are basically putting the workers, then, at the mercy of the state to make a decision through some means or another. Ultimately somebody has to decide for the workers whether or not what they're asking for is fair and just.

Mr. McClelland: In the health care sector when workers withdraw their labour, is it not the patient that suffers?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, there's no doubt that the patients can sometimes suffer, but the government has as much responsibility as the unions do.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Human Resources and Employment to close debate.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I thank everyone for their participation this evening. We've heard quite an array of views, but I stand by the earlier comments that I made in terms of the greater good, which is the delivery of a quality and timely health care system in Alberta. I would urge all of the members present here tonight to vote in favour of second reading of Bill 27.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 12:12 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 18, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/18

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, we give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen. Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a true friend of Alberta. In September 2000 the current Minister of Environment with Innovation and Science on an annual trip visited Silicon Valley where the department has facilitated the interaction of Alberta technology companies with investors, mentors, and customers in California. Mr. Nissley was the first California angel investor to work with us, and we now have over 60 investors working with the Alberta/California venture channel. Mr. Nissley is responsible for another first as he and his partner Frances Chang have invested in an Alberta company, the first Californian in the venture channel to do so. May I introduce to the House Hal and Juanita Nissley and Edgar and Frances Chang from Los Altos Hills, California. They are accompanied by Randy Thompson, board member of the Alberta/California venture channel, and David Antoniuk, director of research and technology commercialization with the Department of Innovation and Science. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's such an honour today to introduce a young lady from Austria, Lisi Aichinger, who is here with Dennis Pommen, a Rotarian in Sherwood Park. She has been an exchange student on a program here for almost a year. It will be a year in July, and then she'll go back to Austria. But something remarkable that we should all pay attention to: she's been in high school at Bev Facey, but when she started her tutorial as a student, she studied English for seven years, Latin for five years, Spanish for three years, and Russian for a year so far. What an international student of absolute world acclaim. I'd ask our special guest, Lisi, and Dennis Pommen to please rise and the Assembly to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the House a group of eight very caring and compassionate people, funeral directors from around the province. Their names are Gerald Connelly, Ron Smith, LeeAnne Snodgrass-Allen, Ken Papirny, Pat Wisener, and, from my hometown of Rocky, Gordon and Diane Flinn. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise so we could give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly this afternoon Jeannie Morrison. Jeannie has been a Calgarian and a constituent of Calgary-West for five years. She lives in the community of Coach Hill, and she came to Calgary via Vancouver and Nova Scotia. She is presently external affairs manager for the west for Wyeth Pharmaceuticals. I would ask Jeannie to rise and receive a warm welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members in the Assembly today 59 visitors from Holy Family Catholic school. It's one of my favourite schools because that's where my children went. Today they are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Caroline Lepps, Ms Colette Coumont and student teacher Mrs. Alison Tymchak and teacher assistant Mrs. Marta Molnar. Parent helpers today are Mrs. Brenda Manning, Mrs. Joan Walters, and Mr. Scott Vickery. I would ask that they all please stand now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first introduction – and I'm very pleased to introduce this group – is a group of five students and their teacher from Inner City high school. Inner City high was founded in 1993 and assists students to find success in high school and to move on to employment. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Tim Christopherson. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction today, Mr. Speaker, is Mr. William Newhouse, the director of Poverty in Action, a group who advocates for low-income earners who are facing severe financial hardships. I would ask Mr. Newhouse to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you the assistant to the U of A board of governors, Louise Shulko. As well, she is accompanied by an assistant from my office, Ms Neris Valle. I would ask both of them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Energy Prices

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, today some Albertans will receive their third successive skyrocketing natural gas bill but still will not receive protection from price spikes that this government promised during the last election. In October 2001 the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board ruled that utility companies could not employ hedging to protect their customers from volatile prices because this government already had legislation in place to protect Albertans. To the Premier: will the Premier please explain how – and I quote from the EUB – consumers' interests are adequately protected by the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, end quote, when the price of gas is over $9 and consumers are not receiving any protection?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, the price of natural gas is determined by the market, and Albertans pay no differently than people in New York or people in Minnesota or people in Ontario or Quebec. It's a market determination, although most of the gas, of course, is under our feet here in Alberta. Still, market forces prevail just like they do for any other commodity.

Now, relative to the role of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board they make sure that any application for a rate increase is based on solid evidence relative to the need for such an increase, and members of the public and interested groups are invited to intervene, Mr. Speaker. I don't know what the procedure is, but the hon. leader certainly can make application to become an intervenor if he thinks that the rate increase being applied for is too extreme.

Relative to the intricacies of the hon. member's question I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier: by allowing flow-through pricing, are the government and the EUB not sentencing Albertans to the most volatile of pricing systems?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy supplement because he is more closely associated with the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the flow-through pricing is something that Albertans have been used to for many years. There are now increasingly more commercial entities that will be able to deliver appropriate contracts that will mirror Alberta's consumption habits. For example, if you're a residential homeowner, you'll use about 45 percent of your natural gas during the period of December through March. If you're a greenhouse, you'll use 60 percent of your fuel through January, February, and March. So, in fact, these different market conditions exist all across the province. The structure of the legislation, that I don't want to talk about because it is in front of the House, will in fact deliver these types of alternatives easily and in an understandable fashion for all Albertans to get what they want from energy and electricity purchases. Do they want the best price? Do they want to have the level of pricing so that they can predict what they'll pay? Do they want an equalized payment plan? These are the types of choices and options that Albertans will have before them with the passage of Bill 3 and Bill 19.

1:40

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier: why does the government have a monthly model for price determination yet a yearly model for price protection?

Mr. Klein: Again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister is more intimately involved with these procedures and these issues. I'll have him respond.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect I would correct the hon. member's assertion in the question because, in fact, the yearly average annual price is based on the monthly prices on which we collect our royalty. Of course, we spend money in a budgeted fashion throughout the year, and then for a rebate to take place, we need that time based on monthly prices for the money to come in to the government so that a gas rebate could be paid if the average annual price exceeded $5.50.

Dr. Nicol: In 2003 the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board approved a flow-through option for ATCO electricity customers. This is the same pricing model that has created unstable and uncertain natural gas prices for Albertans. To the Premier: why does this government want to have the same instability and uncertainty in the electricity market that you have had in the natural gas market?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the whole purpose of deregulation is not to create uncertainty and instability. It's done to create competition and to bring more power onstream, and that, indeed, has happened. We see many cogeneration projects, new coal-fired projects now coming onstream, more wind power now coming onstream. As this thing settles down, market conditions will prevail and people, as they are now starting to realize, can get some deals that will stabilize and provide some certainty to the power prices they pay.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much. I just do want to add that Albertans have purchased electricity and they have purchased natural gas on a flow-through rate ever since the first kilowatt-hour was generated and ever since the first cubic foot of gas was sold. It's called spot-rate pricing. This is exactly the familiar territory that Albertans have been in and exactly the reason why they want to see Bill 19 and Bill 3 passed: so that they can employ these options. If you're on a fixed income and you want to know what your payment is going to be on a 12-month period, you'll be able to take advantage of that. Mr. Speaker, these are market forces tied in with a compassion for those who are on fixed incomes and those seniors as well as being able to deliver the maximum amount of choice and benefit to Albertans.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Energy: will the minister commit to having the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board review their decision not to allow price protection by Alberta companies so that Alberta natural gas and electricity companies can provide some consumer protection that your government won't provide?

Mr. Smith: Will we tell them to do something in case somebody else doesn't do something so that if they can do something, then it would protect somebody else? Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board has worked in the responsible domain of all Albertans since its inception. It works in the public interest. It goes out; it holds hearings. Those hearings are open. Those are transparent hearings. They're transcribed decisions; they're recorded decisions. The EUB has a 50-year plus record of operating in the public interest of all Albertans.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: is it the government's policy here not to have the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board participate and work with the companies in Alberta to help consumers get some stability?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I stand to be corrected, but I believe that they do precisely that, in addition to conducting open and transparent hearings. If the hon. leader of the Liberal Party has a problem with the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, which, as the hon. minister pointed out, has operated very successfully in this province for 50 years, indeed is recognized as a model for regulatory regimes around the world, then I would suggest that he take his problem directly to the board.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the Minister of Learning's constituency parents fund-raise for student trips to Malaysia. Diane Williamson, an Edmonton parent, says that her daughter's school had to use $50,000 in casino funds to buy computers that are required by the curriculum. Obviously, two very different school worlds. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. Does the minister consider that this casino purchase was for basics, or was it for so-called extras?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If, for example, the computer purchases were to add 10 or 15 or 20 computers to those that are already there, then I would consider it the parent council's choice as to where those dollars have gone. I would like to see from the hon. member how many computers, what the computers were used for, and all of the above in order to answer that question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that some American jurisdictions allocate close to $150 per student for technology services, does the minister believe that the $43 per student that we provide offers an adequate level of service to students?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is quite simply no. The $43 was a technology supplement to be used on top of the per student grant that is given to the school districts.

Dr. Massey: My third question is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Does the minister believe that the $43 per student will cover the cost of buying computers, evergreening, and the purchase of current software so that schools can take advantage of the Supernet?

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Learning is primarily responsible for the budgeting to school districts, but I would like to comment in terms of the Alberta Supernet because the advantages that that will provide to bring distance learning from remote locations to central locations is going to provide a tremendous advantage to Alberta students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday over 100,000 ATCO Electric customers found out that they are to be the latest sacrificial lambs on the altar of this government's disastrous and ideologically driven deregulation scheme. They will face an immediate jump of over 120 percent in their electricity bills, and in all likelihood they will face even higher increases in the future, and all the government can say in response is that ATCO customers previously had the cheapest power in the province with the highest prices in the entire country. Some comfort. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. How high will prices and bills for electricity have to rise before this government admits that deregulation has been a failure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Is it 15 cents a kilowatt-hour, 25 cents, or even higher?

The Speaker: The question has been identified.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we are quite comfortable about is that we know that the prices from EPCOR are now going to be lower since he's left the management side of that company.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the minister doesn't have an answer for the people of Alberta, who have to pay higher prices, and he won't give a straight answer, I'll try again. How bad does the damage . . .

The Speaker: Please, please, please. Hon. member, we have a rule about no preambles, that your caucus agreed to. It was signed. Let's get to the question.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How bad does the damage have to get before this government admits its mistake and fixes the problem? It's very simple.

1:50

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, there has been some comment on this side of the House: would we like to go back to a socialist regulated system where we would put billions of dollars of debt on the backs of future Albertans, on the backs of future children of Alberta, on the backs of future business endeavours of Albertans? The deregulation formula was structured so that we could have generation come on at a timely rate. Now, a lot of factors have occurred since then; namely, the fact that this has been a very healthy economy. Growth means that you need new generation, and in fact – and I know that the Minister of Economic Development will want to supplement this – there has been a tremendous increase in wealth in this province. Yes, we have seen increased electricity prices, but what we see with the passage of Bill 19 is more options, now moving towards choice, new generation, and different alternatives for people in Alberta to purchase their power.

I would ask the Minister of Economic Development to supplement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister admit that during the late 1970s the economy of Alberta grew even faster than it's growing now, yet generation was brought on in a timely fashion? There were no shortages and no brownouts, and prices were stable, not like now.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that an ND politician may have come up with a new Trivial Pursuit game, and it'll be called To Predict the Past. Every time we sit and have this discussion, this hon. member wants to go back to the days when there was an economy of some $30 billion or $40 billion. There was basically a one-strength economy. The circumstances of the 1970s were entirely different than the circumstances we're faced with today. If the hon. member would visit back in his rearview mirror, without the added comments that he wants to put in, he would find that the last regulated piece of generation took some 14 years from the time of approval to the time the first kilowatt was shipped.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we would have tried . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, through the chair.

Mr. Smith: Now, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Now, please. There are a lot of young people in the galleries today. I'd sure like to impress them with decorum.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent reports have talked about a mysterious illness that has already killed two people in Ontario and more in Asia. Little seems to be known about this illness. Yesterday there was a suspected case reported in Alberta. Many Albertans are concerned about this, and my question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell us what this illness is and who is susceptible to it?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, an isolated case in Edmonton of atypical pneumonia was reported yesterday afternoon by my department's provincial health office and the Capital health authority. This particular illness is now being referred to as SARS, or severe acute respiratory syndrome. This case appears to be similar to cases reported in both the cities of Vancouver and Toronto and is characterized by high fever and a cough. The patient in the particular case in Alberta was admitted to an emergency room, and because Alberta participates in the exchange of information in monitoring these types of problems throughout the world, the patient's condition was identified, and the patient was put in an isolation area while her illness continues.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, what health officials have confirmed is that this disease is transmitted person to person, specifically through sneezing and coughing. All evidence suggests that it is transmitted only through close contact. It appears that in Canada the illness has only affected recent travelers to southeast Asia, some of their family members, and one physician who was treating a patient with SARS in the city of Toronto.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: can the minister tell us what his department is doing to protect Albertans from this illness and what precautions Albertans can take to avoid this illness?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think I need to give a very short history on the illness to put it in perspective and outline, then, what provincial health officials are doing in response. The World Health Organization issued an alert on the 12th of March of this year concerning cases of SARS in Vietnam, Hong Kong, and China. The following day Health Canada reported several people ill in the cities of Toronto and Vancouver. Based on that report, my department's provincial health office advised the regional medical officers of health throughout the province, the Provincial Laboratory, and Alberta physicians to increase surveillance of respiratory illnesses that were accompanied by fever, specifically with respect to individuals who had a history of recent travel in southeast Asia. Physicians were also asked to notify their medical officers of health as soon as they found suspect cases so that appropriate officials both provincially and federally could be notified.

Our office is in daily contact with Health Canada and regional health officials to ensure that new information is shared as quickly as possible. We are working with our global counterparts to identify the organism that is responsible for this illness so that a potential treatment can be identified, thereby slowing the speed of the illness.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us what precautions Albertans can take to avoid this illness?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I first of all want to assure Albertans that we have thus far just had a single, isolated case in Alberta at this time, involving an individual who contracted the illness while traveling in Asia.

At the best of times, Mr. Speaker, we should always say that Albertans should be encouraged to wash their hands regularly to avoid contracting or transmitting respiratory diseases. Health officials are following up with other passengers who may have been exposed to this while on flights traveling to and within Canada and with family members of current cases. As well, individuals returning to Canada from Asia are being made aware of the illness and to watch for symptoms such as high fever and cough or difficulty breathing. If such people do find that they're experiencing these symptoms, they should contact their family physician.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Energy Marketing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier told this House that he was "not aware of any high-pressure sales tactics being used by any . . . marketers." But last week an energy marketer visited an 89-year-old woman named Annie Matlock in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar and even asked for a copy of her late husband's death certificate. Mrs. Matlock, like so many Albertans, did not have enough information about the energy marketplace to protect herself from the high-pressure tactics and the offers being made and ended up signing a contract she later regretted. The company, to their credit, delivered a handwritten apology to Mrs. Matlock the following day. My first question is to the Premier. Where can seniors, who often don't have Internet access, go to find out what rights they have when an energy marketer comes knocking on their door?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely right, but to try and twist it to somehow implicate me in this particular problem is, I think, to say the least, misleading the House. I wasn't aware and I'm not aware as to what various salespeople do relative to the sale of any commodity, whether it's electricity or roofing or sidewalk repairs or anything else. The department to which this elderly person and any other person who feels that they're being misrepresented can turn is the Department of Government Services, and there are consumer protection programs relative to that particular department. The minister is not here today, but I will endeavour to get either the toll-free number or the Internet web page and pass it on to the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier knows full well that energy deregulation is the first problem here.

Again to the Premier: how is this government ensuring that a marketer is using only timely, accurate, verifiable, and truthful comparisons in their aggressive sales pitches?

2:00

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this has something to do with marketing electricity and offering a customer a deal. This has nothing to do with deregulation, which, as I said before, has brought on vast amounts of new power and has provided competition in the marketplace. I guess whenever there is competition, you have aggressive salesmen, and these problems will arise from time to time. But, again, as I pointed out, there is a consumer protection program in place through Government Services, and once I determine the toll-free number and the web page address, I'll pass it on to the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier. Consumers in this province know that energy deregulation is not a good deal. Now, how is this government ensuring that an energy marketer is not abusing the trust of a consumer or exploiting any fear or lack of knowledge or experience of a customer?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, I get sick and tired of this. When the prices are high, then they complain. When the prices are low, you don't hear a peep. Six months ago the price of electricity was 4.4 cents a kilowatt-hour, and we didn't hear a thing from the Liberals. Nothing. Nothing. Absolutely nothing. They use deregulation as a political football. When the prices are down, they say nothing. When the prices are up, it's because of deregulation. When the prices are down, what do they say? Oh, it's because of the Liberals. Be honest. Complain just as loudly when the prices are down as you do when the prices are up. Be honest for a change.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Seniors' Utility Costs

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only question today is to the Minister of Seniors. Re the special-needs assistance for seniors' programs to help seniors with the rising utility costs, does the criteria change cover costs for items like propane and other alternative fuel sources?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Being brief, the answer is yes. The special-needs assistance program focuses on seniors in need who don't have the financial resources to fund onetime shortfalls. We expanded it to include utilities, and under that category propane, heating fuels, natural gas, and any other items used, if you will, for utilities will be considered as part of the program.

Holy Cross Hospital Renovations

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, a for-profit corporation bought the Holy Cross hospital in Calgary to provide surgical and long-term care services on contract to the Calgary health region. My questions concern renovations done at the Holy Cross by this corporation. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given reports that secondhand carpeting, some of it soiled and even marked with cigarette burns, was installed in patient rooms during renovations at the Holy Cross, does the minister consider this an acceptable standard for a public partnership with a for-profit health care corporation?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of the circumstances that have been raised to the attention of this House by the hon. member, and if he wishes to bring forward appropriate documentation to demonstrate this to me, I'll be happy to look into it for him.

Dr. Taft: Well, then, given that substandard drywall was installed during the renovations of the Holy Cross, forcing building inspectors to issue corrective orders to meet fireguard standards, can the minister explain why he continues to approve of the contract with the owners of the Holy Cross?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that the hon. member had taken on a nighttime job as a building inspector.

Dr. Taft: Well, he should be better informed.

So let's try one more time. Given that the minister must grant approval of this contract, has he reviewed the government's own files that show numerous safety and building code violations concerning the Holy Cross?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, again, if the hon. member is aware of such allegations, then I'd be happy to look into them for him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Edmonton Public School Board

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the Minister of Learning has stated several times that he is in the midst of an audit of the Edmonton public school board, but I am still receiving way too many calls and letters from concerned constituents regarding the memo that the chairman of the Edmonton public school board sent out across Edmonton which states that 350 teachers could be laid off. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Is the number even remotely accurate?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, we are still in the midst of an audit of Edmonton public, and I'll be more than happy to answer that question when the audit comes in. We have seen some extremely promising results on this audit to date. We're attempting to have the audit done. We're hoping that it will be done by the end of next week, at which time I'll be able to make it public.

Mr. Hutton: Again to the same minister. A number of my colleagues attended a public forum last week, which most, if not all, of the parent councils from west Edmonton attended. They informed us that classrooms will balloon to as high . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I interjected earlier about preambles. Let's get to the question.

Mr. Hutton: The question is: will the minister inform us if classrooms will balloon past 30 to 33 students in kindergarten to grade 6 next year?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is no. We just did the class size study that went around the province. You'll be happy to know that the classes are actually slightly under what they were last year. For kindergarten the average is slightly over 19, for K to 6 the average is around 23, and above 6 it's around 25. So I don't see that. I think Edmonton public has taken steps by adding six minutes to each school day, which will help considerably in keeping the class size down. So there are things being done.

Mr. Hutton: While meeting with those parents last week, it was expressed that grade 10 funding was capped. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Is the cap on the number of credit courses in grade 10 still in effect?

Dr. Oberg: Well, I'll answer that in two ways, Mr. Speaker. First of all, there was no cap on the number of credits. There was a per student amount of dollars that was given for each student in grade 10, and that amount is $4,997.

Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting to note, though, the reason this was done. The reason it was done is that last year, in '01-02, we had over 200 cases of students who had more than 70 credits per year. Another very interesting thing is that last year there was approximately $250,000 clawed back from Edmonton public for – and I'll give you the examples – first of all, inappropriate claims, where students were given credits for courses that they didn't take, that they were never registered in. In other cases students were given credits for simply casting ballots in a student election and attending regular school assemblies. There was a lot of abuse. The Auditor General even brought this out and said that there was a lack of accountability. Since that time, we have looked very closely at CEUs, and there will be changes brought forward this September.

Mosquito Control Program

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, last year over 300 people in Ontario were infected with the West Nile virus; 11 of those infected died. We now know that the advance of the West Nile virus is threatening Alberta and its people, but in spite of this fact this government refuses to help stop the spread of the virus to Albertans. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Given that mosquitoes are exclusively how this virus is transmitted, why does this government not have a program to help control mosquito populations in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question the member has asked. Until 1993 the province was working with the municipal governments in funding mosquito control programs, but in 1993 a deal was done with the municipalities where they would take over their own mosquito control programs, and that's where it sits today. The municipalities have had that responsibility and official control since 1993.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, with this new problem that's occurring, can the Minister of Environment explain how he expects municipalities to shoulder the additional burden of mosquito control and education now, when this government has drastically reduced funding to those municipalities?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, we expect to find West Nile virus in Alberta in 2003, quite likely, in a bird first and perhaps in horses and eventually in human beings. There has been one case of West Nile reported here in this province from a person who contracted it while traveling in the United States.

Now, we do have a contingency plan for West Nile virus, but it's based on the best information about this disease in North America and on environmental and biological factors specific to the province of Alberta. We are preparing a provincewide physician education program to ensure that all physicians are aware of this disease and how to test for it and whether or not and when they should refer a patient to a specialist.

Mr. Speaker, starting in April, we will be providing Albertans with timely information about the developments of this disease and about how Albertans can best protect themselves from the infection. We will continue to monitor the presence of this particular virus, again, in birds and in horses, and we will notify Albertans as soon as we note the virus's arrival in this province.

I should note that in places in other parts of Canada where spraying has been introduced as a way of dealing with the mosquitoes, there are health hazards associated with what is referred to as fogging. It is the best advice of our medical officers that the risk associated with fogging actually exceeds the risk associated with contracting West Nile virus. The likelihood of actually showing some of the problems associated with this virus are one in a thousand. It is a disease that, from the best advice that we have, is relatively modest compared to, for example, this issue of SARS.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are focused on the issue of West Nile virus. We do have a plan in place, but I want to point out that spraying mosquitoes is not necessarily the best way of dealing with it.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, my questions are to the Minister of Environment because we want to solve this problem before it becomes a health issue. To this minister. I agree that spraying isn't the only option. There are lots of other options out there. Is he going to be involved in a program to educate individuals on how they can reduce mosquito breeding areas in places like their backyard ponds and rain barrels?

Dr. Taylor: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. We already have information like that available in regard to not allowing standing water to exist in your backyards or rain barrels, as she's used. We encourage people to get rid of standing water like that, but it's not something that we can enforce. As the minister of health has quite clearly stated, we have a good plan, giving people information on how to protect themselves; for instance, wearing protective clothing, wearing mosquito repellent. We have this plan in place, and we will continue to monitor the situation as we go forward.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, this Friday the board of governors of the University of Calgary will meet to consider hiking tuition fees for all students and imposing even higher differential tuition fees in the faculties of business, law, and medicine. In a document that I will table later, the university president, Harvey Weingarten, lays part of the blame on a 70 percent hike in the U of C's utility costs in the past two years. The planned tuition hikes will just about cover the hike to the U of C's utility costs. To the Minister of Learning: why is the government making students pay for its failed deregulation scheme through steep tuition hikes at the University of Calgary and other such institutions in the province?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, under legislation that was tabled in this Assembly approximately six or seven years ago, the student will pay at most 30 percent of the cost at a particular university. So, basically, what that means is that the government, private business, and other individuals are paying for roughly 70 to 75 percent of those students' fees.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister on behalf of postsecondary students make representations to his cabinet colleagues to scrap the disastrous utility deregulation policy, thereby allowing universities to limit the increase in tuition fees, to give them some breathing room so that they can contain the rise on a yearly basis?

Dr. Oberg: No.

Dr. Pannu: Appalling indifference, Mr. Speaker.

My last question to the same minister: why does the minister refuse to admit that the $9 million in additional utility costs at the University of Calgary is directly linked to their planned hikes in tuition fees and do something to stop this increase from taking place?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, currently the University of Calgary sits approximately number 29 out of 45 universities when it comes to the level of tuition fees. They are currently looking at putting in a differential fee for things such as business, law, and medicine. Interestingly enough, at the University of Toronto the Faculty of Law now charges approximately $16,000 per year for tuition. They also undertook a study which shows that the socioeconomic status of the participants in their faculty actually did not change when their tuition went up to $16,000.

As we look across the country, we see tuition in these three faculties being extremely high. Mr. Speaker, in medicine, for example, across the country we're approaching $9,000, $10,000, $12,000. We want to ensure that our universities have the spaces available for our students. The average cost of a medical degree is around a hundred thousand dollars per year of which these students are paying about $6,000 or $7,000. What this simply means is that the rest of the students are subsidizing those students in medicine.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly stand behind the board of governors of the University of Calgary in their decision-making process that will take place this Friday.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mental Health Services

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents in Calgary-West and others in Calgary are concerned over an apparent lack of information regarding the government's plan for transfer of responsibility of mental health services in Alberta from the Alberta Mental Health Board to the regional health authorities. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister explain the details of the transition plan and why they have not yet been communicated to mental health staff or the public?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, we actually have been in contact with the employees, and the Mental Health Board has developed an internal newsletter specifically to alert staff to new developments. Seven issues of this newsletter have been produced to keep staff informed. The transition plan includes the transfer of programs and services on a geographic basis, protection of funding for mental health programs and services, maintaining the Mental Health Board in an advisory role with governance responsibility for provincewide programs like forensic psychiatry. We will continue to communicate extensively with mental health employees and service providers and stakeholders.

I personally have been in contact with Mr. Dan MacLennan of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees to facilitate further communication. Information sessions have been held for mental health physicians and senior administrators both in Calgary and Edmonton, and these sessions are also available to other sites through teleconferencing. Presentations have been made to key stakeholder groups such as the Alberta alliance for mental illness. Finally, Mr. Speaker, last month a videoconference was held for staff and union members of AUPE throughout the province, and senior human resource staff were available to respond directly to their questions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kryczka: Yes. Thank you. Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental question is to the same minister. Can the minister assure us that after the transition mental health services will receive designated funding through the health regions, which would certainly be in the best interests of mental health patients?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is yes. I want to assure members of this House and Albertans that dollars that are currently targeted for mental health will not be diverted to other types of programs as a result of going to regional health authorities. Regional health authority business plans will ensure that mental health funding will continue to be allocated to meet the needs of mental health patients in that region.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

2:20 Breakaway to Win Hockey Lottery

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. In January 2002 the government introduced the new breakaway to win lottery for the Calgary Flames and the Edmonton Oilers. At that time, I questioned whether or not these tickets would be added competition to existing scratch-and-win tickets whose revenue goes into the Alberta lottery fund to help charities, nonprofits, and volunteer agencies. Interestingly, Alberta Gaming has now gone to a $5 ticket instead of the $10 ticket they started with. My questions are to the Minister of Gaming. Why did the department break its commitment that these hockey tickets would not be in direct competition with other scratch-and-win tickets, particularly in the $3 to $5 range?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We monitor the volume of lottery tickets which are sold within the province on a regular basis, and I can advise the hon. member and other members that, in fact, on a budget basis the sale of lottery tickets is up over budget for the year, so it would appear that lottery tickets are doing very well notwithstanding a relatively small part of the market being taken up by the hockey tickets.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. What was the rationale to changing to the $5 ticket from the $10 ticket?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In business – and the issue of lottery tickets is a matter of business – it's necessary to create some variety and interest in order that people continue to have some attraction to the product. So it's quite natural and necessary, indeed, that over time the product changes, and in this particular case one of the changes that was effected was a change in price from $10 to $5.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Does the minister have any background information or any studies that would lead them to believe that this $5 version is going to be more successful than the $10 version was?

Mr. Stevens: Like all lottery tickets ultimately the people who work on it are expert in their field. They do the best they can to design the ticket. The hope is that it will be successful, but at the end of the day the marketplace and marketing that goes along with the particular product determines whether it will be successful or not. I can advise this member that both breakaway versions to date have been successful in that the hockey teams will receive funds, in fact have received funds, as a result of the sales, and we anticipate that the $5 version will be successful also.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Bilingual Programs

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the federal government announced that it will be spending about $750 million in bilingual programming across Canada. Part of these funds will be targeted to increase the number of high school students speaking French. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Learning. How will this funding impact Alberta schools?

Dr. Oberg: Well, as is often the case with the federal government, they have not fully announced any strings that are attached to these dollars. Mr. Speaker, I would say that I'm cautiously optimistic that they will help the students of Alberta in promoting French as an alternative language, as a language that can be learned within our schools. We hope that it will be an adjunct to what we already do, but the biggest issue is that we don't know what strings are attached. We don't know how the money will be divvied out across the country. We certainly hope that it is the federal government's intention to ensure that all students in Canada will benefit from this program, but again I really have to stress that we just do not know where these dollars are and where they're going to be spent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Merci, M. le Président. Une question secondaire pour le même ministre. My second question is to the same minister. With our plans for mandatory second language training in schools will this mean that schools have to use these dollars to offer French programming only?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, it certainly looks that way, that it will be directed directly towards French, and I actually agree with the federal government on this as it is their direction for bilingualism to support both of Canada's official languages. What I do hope, though, is that we will be able to use this funding, which will free up funding for other languages. I feel that the advent of second languages, the bringing in of second languages into our curriculum, is an essential component of what we teach our children. So we will be doing that, and again I'll just reiterate that I'm cautiously optimistic that these dollars will be put towards good usage by the department in Ottawa.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. member. C'est tout fini?

Mr. Cao: Oui, monsieur.

The Speaker: Then the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Trucking Regulations

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proposed changes to the regulations concerning the amount of time that truck drivers can be on duty and the hours of service they can operate are scheduled to change in the near future. My constituency has a large number of oil field trucking companies and forestry companies, and they need to know how these proposed changes will affect them. My questions are for the Minister of Transportation. How were these proposed changes to drivers' hours of service developed, and when will they come into effect for Alberta?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All the transportation ministers have been working on standardizing hours of service over the past two years. We've held public consultations in all of the provinces. The purpose here is to improve traffic safety but at the same time allow for the growth of trade and commerce. Transport Canada has recently published their amendments to the hours of service, and we will be working with them in harmonizing them because, again, here their jurisdiction is over the provincial borders. We'll be consulting with our businesses, our transportation people as to how we're going to enforce those rules within the boundaries of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Merci beaucoup, M. le Président. My first supplemental to the same minister: will the rules be the same across Canada for similar industries?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, not necessarily. Presently oil and gas and agriculture have exemptions, and so does forestry, but in the new rules that are coming forward, it seems like the federal side of forestry will not be exempt further. As I said, we're still going to work with the industry to see that the primary cause, of course, is safety, but on the other hand we want to ensure that it doesn't impede the growth in those industries.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: will you commit to consulting with trucking firms that operate in the natural resources industries on the implementation of drivers' hours of service?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm getting a lot of advice back here as to what language I should use in responding to the question. Yes, we do commit to consulting with the industry. It's imperative that we take our time to consult with all industry to ensure that at the end of the day we find the balance between safety and the ability to conduct their business, not only protecting their workers but also allowing for the growth of trade and commerce.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as the last comment by the hon. Minister of Transportation will probably elicit phone calls to my office about the language of the Assembly, I'd like to make it very, very clear to all those listening that hon. members may use any language they choose to use in this Assembly without restriction.

Speaker's Ruling Responses to Questions

The Speaker: Just a little clarification arising out of question period today. There was a series of questions and exchanges from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to the Minister of Environment. On the second question the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness responded to the question which then elicited a response from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie saying that her questions were to be directed to the minister of health. All hon. members know that when questions are directed, they are directed to the government and the government may choose to answer and respond to the question. In this case, as the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness responded to the question, it is deemed quite appropriate because in the order of precedence, in fact, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness comes before the Minister of Environment. So that certainly meets the test about responding on behalf of the Assembly per se.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy should not feel that when the chair rose with respect to his comments on decorum, they were directed directly to him. They were directed to all members of the Assembly, and they were not directed in any particular direction, to anyone.

Now, did the hon. Minister of Energy feel that I had cut him off before he concluded his answer? If he wishes to supplement the answer he was giving, I'll certainly give him an opportunity to do that now.

Mr. Smith: No, Mr. Speaker. I have nothing further to offer, but I do want to thank you for that clarification.

2:30head: Members' Statements

Federal Gun Registry

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to let this Assembly and all Albertans know that on March 9, 2003, I visited the Canadian Firearms Centre web site, and I did what I'd hoped I would never have to do while living in this great province; that is, reluctantly I registered my guns. On January 1, 2003, thousands of average Albertans became criminals by default. That's right. By doing absolutely nothing, they became chargeable under the Criminal Code of Canada.

The federal gun registry is not only a colossal waste of money; it's also a bad law. Alberta and other provinces have strongly opposed the universal licensing and registration of all firearms imposed by the federal Liberal government through the federal Firearms Act. My government took the position that these regulations and licensing provisions were beyond the constitutional authority of the federal government. We launched a legal challenge to these provisions and pursued this challenge all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada. But you know who appoints the Supreme Court judges, Mr. Speaker: the Prime Minister. So, needless to say, we were not successful in our constitutional challenge of this bad federal legislation.

The June 2000 decision by the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the legislation so that the Firearms Act was deemed valid, valid but not good and not right. Alberta remains opposed to the provisions on the basis that they are extremely expensive to implement and do not prevent or discourage the criminal use of firearms. As the Premier often says, a criminal is not about to stop and register his guns on his way to rob a bank.

Mr. Speaker, our government believes that it would be far more effective to have Criminal Code provisions that are stronger with respect to the criminal misuse and possession of firearms rather than a wasteful and expensive licensing and registration system that penalizes law-abiding Albertans. We further believe that the billion dollars spent should be applied to the enforcement of existing laws rather than the ineffective program of registry.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would like us to look further into the proposal put forward by the Responsible Firearms Owners of Alberta called the Alberta Western Firearms Heritage and Historical Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Wealth Transfer

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, the wealth of a nation and wealth transfers within nations are not measured in dollars and cents alone. The greatest asset of any nation is an industrious and creative population, and Alberta has truly been blessed in this regard and also to see so much talent moving here from across Canada. In fact, this brain gain could easily be valued at a minimum $350 billion into Alberta, dwarfing any cash flows in the other direction. But this does not mean that we should rest on our laurels.

Alberta has also been losing a few of our best and brightest for a variety of reasons, some of which maybe we could have fixed. I think it would behoove our government to be aware of our own losses in this regard, to study why people moved elsewhere, and to find out what we could maybe do to improve the situation. For example, we have seen a lot of Alberta talent in the film, entertainment, music, and art community leave. What might a Todd McFarland have done for our economy had he stayed? Many small business entrepreneurs, including an Alberta entrepreneur of the year, have also left for a variety of reasons, one of which is a parochial approach to and subsequent lack of venture capital, a market in which Alberta is still only a minuscule player globally. Perhaps a stronger push towards harmonized national security regulations might have helped.

What is the value of people like this lost to our province, Mr. Speaker? Well, let's just take the case of one person, Dr. Norm Dovichi, who, while right here at the University of Alberta, invented technology that was absolutely instrumental in cracking the human genome. If we had just helped out that one individual, Alberta may well have been at the worldwide forefront of an industry that will rival our oil and gas industry. But we didn't recognize that, and for want of a relative pittance of research and venture capital dollars he went elsewhere.

Proud of Alberta as we are, there is more work to be done. We need all the inventors, entrepreneurs, and creative people we can get, and we need to encourage the ones we already have to stay here.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Last week an Assembly exchange between a member and the Minister of Learning revealed a serious disconnect between the government and life in Edmonton schools. For the government the glass is more than half full. For them billions are being spent, achievement scores are high, and teachers are the best paid in the country. Any problems are dismissed as the work of incompetent trustees or pesky teachers. For Edmonton parents there is little water left in the glass. Schools are cutting teachers, lack the money needed for textbooks and computers, and class sizes are growing. Parents are fund-raising for basics and a whole range of other items to free up school dollars for basic programs.

A letter I tabled last week from Mr. D. Vinge captured this disconnect. Mr. Vinge wrote: "I have noticed that when people with genuine concerns are asking questions, you throw out statistics . . . I think it would be so much more helpful if you could sincerely address parent and teacher concerns."

How has the government become so out of touch? Part of the answer rests in the kind of information the government uses to counter parent claims. For parents billions of dollars are meaningless. What counts is how many dollars arrive at the school door to cover costs. Are there enough dollars for reasonable class sizes, to buy needed textbooks and computers? Is there enough to hire support staff and provide services for special-needs students? The answer to these questions in many schools is a resounding no.

When the government hides behind billion dollar budget figures, they offend those who know better and contribute to the adversarial position they now find themselves in with parents and teachers, and they further add to the disconnect, that was highlighted again yesterday when a parent in the gallery shouted out in frustration at the minister's responses.

The time has come for the government to heed Mr. Vinge's advice: "I have no time for a regurgitation of your stats. We need solutions."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Global Conflict

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a person who has grown up and lived through the long 30-year war in Vietnam and now living in freedom in the peaceful land of Canada, I want to share my experiences and perspective.

To the leaders and the people of the hot spots of the world may I say that the measurement of the people or nation is neither in building or owning weapons of mass destruction nor the quantity of the populace. The true measurement is in the long list of achievements in mass construction of humanity and the quality of its people. The same could be said about those who aspire to compete on religious grounds. I believe the final judgment is based on human quality, not the quantity of controlled followers.

To those living far from the areas of problems, we need the ability to differentiate the criminal leadership from the populace on which they exert deadly control and to prevent that leadership from hiding in the name of the populace, race, national independence, or religious pretext. Human rights and freedoms and democracy for all humanity must be the only guide for our determination and fight against the scourge of tyranny, domination, discrimination, inhumane activities even by a government on its own people within its own boundaries.

The world has missed a great opportunity. Now we have to find and create a new one. The vacuum created by the end of the Cold War was quickly filled by the attitudes resurfaced from the Dark Ages. The world leadership failed to raise high the torch of humanistic ideals and take appropriate measures to prevent inhumane events. The UN as an organization not only has the global mandate but needs the authority and help of strong force and determination to carry it out.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill Pr. 1

Sisters of St. Joseph of the Province of Alberta Statutes Repeal Act

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being Sisters of St. Joseph of the Province of Alberta Statutes Repeal Act.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Bill Pr. 2

Forest Lawn Bible College Act

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill Pr. 2, Forest Lawn Bible College Act.

The purpose of this bill is to set up a bible college in Calgary. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a first time]

2:40head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development I'm pleased to table copies of the responses to questions raised during supplementary estimates debate for the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on February 27, 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the required number of copies of 59 letters supporting Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. I'd like to mention that these letters being tabled are from Calgary and surrounding communities. I think this helps make the point that there is a desire and support for the legislation that preserves and rebuilds communities battling prostitution.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a newsletter with the appropriate number of copies from Dr. Brendan Croskery, the superintendent of the Calgary board of education, entitled Collaboration with Government. He says in this letter that "over this past year international assessments of student achievement have placed Alberta students in the front rank of all achievers in the world." He feels that there are many reasons for this, but one is because "the policies of our provincial government have made a significant contribution to student achievement." He also states that he believes there is strong evidence that government . . .

The Speaker: Please. Sit down. It's called tabling, not editorializing. This applies to everybody.

Proceed. Do you want to table?

Mrs. Ady: Yes. Could I go ahead and table?

The Speaker: Absolutely. Please table.

Mrs. Ady: I can complete? Thank you.

It's just because of collaboration . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, just table the document. We'll move on. Okay? This applies to everybody. There's way too much editorializing going on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is the energy policy from the Communications, Energy & Paperworkers Union of Canada that was adopted at their convention in September of 2002.

The second tabling I have this afternoon is on behalf of a Calgarian, Mr. Robbie White, who would like to express his concerns about tuition increases in this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. The first is five copies of a document from the president and vice-chancellor of the University of Calgary, Professor Harvey Weingarten, in which he draws attention to the increase in utility costs from $13 million in 2000 to $22 million this year.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is just copies of a postcard campaign that was run by the University of Alberta Students' Union calling on the government to "freeze the fees" for this year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first set is an announcement of the second annual Suicide Awareness March, which I attended on Friday. With that, I'm tabling copies of an information sheet prepared by the Support Network on suicide statistics.

My second tabling is a letter from a constituent, Claire Crummy, who is concerned that "Canada must reject the paradigm of endless war and embrace a paradigm of peace." I'm happy to support her in her peaceful stance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 10 tablings today, but I'll move through them very quickly. They are a series of letters expressing concern over steeply rising tuition fees at the University of Calgary, which, the correspondence says, makes it difficult for students to continue their education. They are from Travis Murphy, D.B. Brown, Tanya K., Tyler Johnson, Robbie White, S.K. Cheria, Navid Nikou, R.T. Bergen, Kirstyn Elizabeth Nay, and J.D. Goble.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a document titled City Centre Education Project: Planning 2003-2004, for McCauley school. This document states that the school budget will be reduced by $280,000, resulting in staff reductions of three teachers, two support staff, larger classes, and program reductions.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the committee to order, but prior to calling the bill, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly a gentleman who is present in the public gallery. Mr. Lionel Laverdiere is visiting the Assembly this afternoon, and he is a business manager with Operating Engineers, local 955. I would now ask him to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Bill 19

Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak once again to Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, in committee. We have many concerns about this bill, and we are waiting for some of the answers from the government and some explanation of why it will happen that with this bill, while we are going to see the ability for people to enter into the signing of contracts, it will put many people at a disadvantage. What happens when you sign those contracts? Companies aren't foolish. They're in this to make a profit, so they're going to make sure that any contracts signed are at a price that's going to guarantee them a flow of income, which means that consumers are going to be paying a higher price.

Who is it, Mr. Chairman, that's going to be forced into a position where they have to enter into these long-term contracts? It's the people who don't have the available cash ready to be able to follow the spot prices of the market. So most of the people in this Assembly won't have any problem having a reserve of money within their households so that they can ride out the high prices but take full advantage of prices when they're lower in the marketplace. That opportunity isn't available to everybody in this province. Many people, first of all, don't understand the whole process, and they don't understand that there are going to be some highs in the marketplace and some lows in the marketplace. They're just going to believe what they're told by, as we have already heard in this Assembly today, what are often high-pressure salespeople trying to lock them into a long-term contract that is going to give them stability in prices, yes, but it's also going to give them a long-term increase in prices without any options out.

For instance, we heard about the case today of the woman who was 89 years old who was talked into signing a long-term contract, a five-year contract, in fact. What are the chances, Mr. Chairman, that a woman of that age is going to remain in that home for the next five years? I would say that there's a very high chance that she wouldn't be there for the full time, and in that case how does she get out of that contract? In fact, if you take a look at the fine print that's listed there, it's going to be very difficult for her to do that without paying high premiums. Nobody is telling these people out there that these are the risks that they're entering into by doing this. Nobody is telling them that it's those who can least afford it who are going to be bearing the biggest brunt of the burden for leveling out the prices in the future. They're going to pay a premium. Why? Not because they don't work hard and aren't committed to trying to lower the overall costs of their house but because they can't afford to do anything else, and that's a real disadvantage.

What I talked about the last time I was in the Assembly and which I would like to go back to in a little bit more detail today, Mr. Chairman, is something that leads into these earlier comments, and that's consumer education. We found that people really don't understand what's going on out there. Many people in the marketplace don't understand. In fact, it has come to our attention that many people in the Department of Energy, including some of the communications staff, don't understand what's going on here and have had to go to outside sources, including us as the Official Opposition, to get a handle on exactly what the consequences of actions can be. So how do we expect the average consumer out there to really know what's occurring here and to understand what their options are and to understand how they can best take advantage of low prices? They don't. We need consumer education.

This has been borne out in other jurisdictions who have taken a serious look at focusing on energy, focusing on energy efficiency options, and focusing on consumer education. I would like the Assembly to have the opportunity to see what they are doing in Wisconsin in this regard, in the States.

Now, we hear lots of times that this government holds up various states as real role models for delivering service and for being efficient and effective and being low-cost providers and separating the state from business opportunities. We hear that often, Mr. Chairman, so this afternoon I'm going to walk us through a few of those states who do have different incentive programs and good consumer education programs, hoping that some of these great ideas may rub off on this particular government and that they may be able to incorporate them in their downstream planning as this bill unravels and we see the kinds of problems it's going to be facing in regulations.

If we take a look at the state of Wisconsin, they have a very interesting benefits program for providing supports for clean, affordable, and reliable energy. First of all, I'd like to review the focus on energy outline they have of how their staff is delineated, in fact what turns out to be an organizational chart, which gives us a perspective on how important they see education and training being as a part of what happens when they roll out information to their shareholders or their citizens. This information comes from the Wisconsin Energy Bureau. They have administrative advisers and the Department of Administration, division of energy, and the Public Benefits Council at the top. From the department of energy come compliance agents, an evaluation team and technical advisory group. Then rolling out of that, they have low-income programs. So imagine a state that has low-income programs for energy efficiency. Haven't we asked for that in this province, and wouldn't it have been a good part to put into this particular bill? Wouldn't it be a great idea for a follow-through bill so that we see in legislation that this government is actually committed to making sure that people on low incomes in this province don't freeze in the dark?

So they've got the low-income programs directly underneath that. They have energy services and a weatherization program which is particularly focusing on energy-efficient measures and a stream of information that just educates that group of citizens. Those are low-income programs for people who appropriately qualify for them. The next phase of the program is residential administrators. So, once again, within their department they have a whole stream dedicated to low-income programs, and then they have a whole stream dedicated to residential administrators, which is quite different than this government, which has a whole stream dedicated to big business and nothing dedicated to anybody else.

Under the residential administrators what they have are the single-family, multifamily programs, so exactly what we've been asking for. Those who own their own homes, those who live in multiple residences, those who rent are all covered under this particular program, and then they have another whole area that just focuses on education, training. So exactly what we've been asking for here: let's tell these people who don't understand the program what's available, what's out there, what really is in their long-term benefit, the risks that they're taking, the kinds of forecasts that we can believe they're going to be paying as prices in the future.

Then they have a whole section designated to technology research and development. Then they have another whole sector dedicated to major markets administration. This is where the only focus of this government has been, on major markets administration. That talks about industrial and commercial programs. Now, so far what we see are just industrial and commercial pricing schemes in this government. We don't see actual programs that focus on what Wisconsin does, which has another department that talks about education, training and then another department that talks about technology research and development. Well, isn't that exactly what small businesses and medium-sized businesses are looking for now? They need to know what's available out there. They need to know how they can access technology research and development so that, in fact, they can take a look at stabilizing their prices.

It isn't enough to say that they're going to be able to enter into long-term contracts. Long-term contracts with whom and with what kind of energy sources? That information isn't available right now. What we have are a lot of companies that are under a lot of pressure to just maintain their daily functionality with increased gas costs, as we see coming through with this bill, not wholly as a result of this bill, but certainly this bill is a contributing factor to a greater or lesser degree. We see that debated in this Legislature, but certainly this bill is a contributing factor.

So now with them having to increase their output just to be able to cover their operational costs at a business level, who has time to go out there and start searching, on a cold basis, for research and development opportunities and educating themselves on what their other options can be and figuring out who the low-cost providers are and what they can access? It's an impossible task to ask these people. So what's going to happen is we're going to have businesses with very low or no profit showing. We'll see reduced incomes for business owners. We'll see an increase in debt being carried by these businesses. Ultimately what we'll see is an increase in bankruptcies. Why? Because this government couldn't figure out how to do deregulation properly in the first place and streamline electricity and gas together. What we see, once again, is this kind of ad hoc bill come in, like Bill 19, instead of what the market needed. It isn't like they weren't told that the market needed this. We've been telling them for at least five years, and they haven't listened, but this is what Wisconsin has done. They've got a whole stream just dedicated to education and technology research and development for industrial and commercial programs.

Then, Mr. Chairman, looking forward, what else do they have? They've got a renewable administrator. So this is something that the minister of science and technology should've been taking a look at in terms of building this into the program because it's really forward-thinking what Wisconsin has done. They've taken and developed a market barrier program. Excellent. Exactly what we need here when it comes to energy costs.

It never used to be a problem in Alberta. Before deregulation we would never consider gas prices or electricity prices to be a market barrier. In fact, it was an advantage for us because this province has always been a low-cost provider, and in fact the low cost that was available to businesses and individuals was a large incentive for many head offices and other kinds of businesses to locate here in this province because the cost of operations were low. Low overall costs for lifestyle choices were a very positive factor for people relocating their families here. Not anymore. Now we have the same problem that some of those other states and other countries have had in the past, and those are market barriers.

Wisconsin recognizes this, and they have put in place a market barrier program section under their renewable administrator so that they can identify what they are, and they can start to problem solve on solutions. Light years ahead of where this government is, Mr. Chairman, but something certainly that could've been rolled into this particular bill.

Under the market barrier program they have education training, so once they have identified the barriers, they can do some training on how to get around them, get over them, get through them, or develop new alternatives, and the new alternatives come within the next field that they have here, which is technology, research, and development. So, now, what do we see? We see under the residential administrator technology, research, and development and education training. Under the major markets administrator we see technology, research, and development and education training. Under the renewable administrator we see technology, research, and development and education training. Obviously, this state considers this to be a very high priority, and this in a state that doesn't have the severe kind of weather that we have in this province.

All of those also have a single integrated marketing firm that helps them in terms of meshing all of these great ideas they have: the programs, the training, the technology development, all of the research that's being done. They have a single marketing arm that helps to integrate all of those ideas back into the marketplace. So we have the best of all worlds. We have a flat kind of an organization targeted specifically to the areas where we need information, and when there are some benefits for them to have joint programming, they do it. Exactly where we should be economically when we look at the market.

Then they also have an environmental research administrator and an environmental research forum which, of course, is very important as they take a look at the technology, research, and developments and other applications that they use, and it's very good that this goes through an environmental kind of a screen so that they can ensure that they are being environmentally friendly everywhere they go in the future and that they tie into the overall state and federal plans for hitting specific targets. So this is a really good program that we see here.

Here are some details on this particular program. It's called a public benefits program, and it encompasses energy conservation, renewable energy development, low-income services. This was started back in 1999, Mr. Chairman, and it was part of the Reliability 2000 package that was promoted by a governor at that date and adopted by the Wisconsin Legislature. I'll be tabling this document when I'm finished my comments so that this government can also take a look at it.

I'd be happy to bring in a great idea like this in a private member's bill, but we know how far that would get. When people from this side of the House bring in that kind of legislation, it goes nowhere. Generally speaking, it's defeated at second reading. But I'm looking for solutions here in the shortest time possible, and I would be quite happy if some bright light on the government side of private members were prepared to take this forward because that would be the course of action that normally sees a bill passing through this Legislature. It's passed as a private member's statement, and then the government will not generally proclaim it, but what will happen is they'll come in with a government bill within a year or two of having first had that idea brought forward, and then we see it adopted. That would be very good because it would help us move into the place we need to be as future costs continue to escalate in this province and we continue to see instability of prices.

Wisconsin, who we don't really think of as a very liberal-minded state generally, I think – certainly, I haven't in the past – established a public benefits fund so that they could support low-income advocacy organizations and environmental organizations but also consumer and business groups and senior citizens and labour unions and retirees. Who could imagine that they could be this forward-thinking? But there they are. Good ideas for this Legislature to take a look at too.

So what happened? Where did they get the money from? Because this government always says: oh, you tax-and-spend Liberals. Well, here is a state that generally is not considered to be hugely liberal who has public benefit funds managed by the Wisconsin department of administration. So they get some of the moneys from the different transition funds, generally speaking previously spent by utilities internally for energy-efficient programs – some of that money has come into this program – and they have developed it.

So what happens here is that there are many participating utilities in this program, and the public benefits directly go to low-income, weatherization, and bill assistance. Go figure. They give their citizens rebates, Mr. Chairman, something this government promised to do but hasn't been able to follow through on. Even better than that, they talk about low-income weatherization, which means giving those people on low income access to the ability to lower the cost of their bills by retrofitting their homes. Exactly what we have been asking for in terms of a retrofit program and something that we haven't seen happen yet. I'm sure hoping that we see that come through in this particular budget.

We've heard now the Minister of Environment and a couple of other ministers talk about this program potentially being looked at and promoted by Climate Change Central. I don't think Climate Change Central has the money to put it in place. Maybe they do. Maybe there's a nice surprise coming for us in this particular budget, but I'd be surprised at that. What I think . . . [Ms Carlson's speaking time expired] Oh, Mr. Chairman, I'll have to come back. I'm not even done on this program.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to make some general observations on Bill 19 as we enter debate on this bill in committee. The bill deals with some matters which are at the heart of the concerns of Alberta consumers, particularly small consumers, small businesses, household consumers who are currently suffering from the spike in gas prices and having to pay huge bills to keep their homes heated, their business places warm, and to keep their water heaters going. I've been looking at some bills that have been coming through. We've been getting these bills from our municipal governments, from schools, from universities, from small businesses all across the province, public and private institutions and organizations, as well as individual families. The growth in the dollars that is indicated in these bills that all these entities have to pay on a monthly basis is truly shocking.

So when I approach my comments on this bill, when I think about this bill, I ask myself: is this bill an instrument? Is this bill a statement of a strategy that will deliver lower bills to the consumers I've just spoken about? Will it guarantee them lower bills? Will it reduce the cost to them of buying this utility, which is not a luxury? It's a necessity. I can't find any evidence in this bill that will give me even a weak assurance that if this bill is passed by this House it will put in place those arrangements which will take away the sting that these spikes result in and that it will reduce the overall costs of the gas at the very tail end of the process where it reaches the consumer.

Consumers don't care who delivers it to them, who owns the pipelines, who provides the services. All they're interested in is looking at the bill at the end of the month or the middle of the month. Mine came just yesterday, and I'm frankly quite shocked. When I looked at the amount, and when I compared it with what I paid in January and February, even this year, the increase was just quite shocking.

So why is this bill, then, being brought in? I think that what the bill really promises is a so-called choice to consumers. We already have had in this province two retailers, and now we are told that we need more. But we're not given any assurance, and there's no evidence that's produced to show that if we add a third one, a company by the name of Direct Energy – and that's what the bill seems to be designed for; that is, to facilitate the entry of Direct Energy into the Alberta consumer gas market – our bills will go down. No such indication. I can't draw those conclusions from reading the bill. I can't draw any conclusions based on the previous experience of deregulation.

So while the bill offers choice, Albertans want rebates. While Albertans are calling for this government to introduce rebates so that they could at least get some relief as they receive their bills and head to the bank to pay their monthly heating costs, and cooking costs in some cases, this bill simply offers choice without any evidence that if the choice is increased – that is, among the retailers; that's the only choice that's available – it will impact in a positive way, in a constructive way, the size of the bills that they have to pay, a size that has really grown enormously thanks to the deregulation policies of this government. So the government is frantically looking for some way in which to confuse the consumer further in order to cover up its own failure and its responsibility for the dramatic increases that Albertans are experiencing with respect to their home heating costs right now and the small businesses are experiencing with respect to the bills that they have to pay.

Just yesterday I was talking to a person that I take my laundry to, the owner of this laundry business, and she was very seriously concerned that given these increases, what does she do? Does she pass on the increase in costs to her customers? Does she cut back the wages that she pays to her employees? And the third thing that she's concerned about is that if she does the second – that is, in order to reduce costs, she tries to cut the wages – what happens to her employees who have to pay these increased costs of home heating themselves?

So the effect of deregulation is wide-ranging. It affects a number of people, and it certainly affects the costs of everything – the cost of services, the cost of goods that are produced using energy – and this fuels inflation as a result. The cumulative impact of those increasing prices which are resulting from the speculative markets created by deregulation that's a policy of this government is very negative, very bad. It will fuel inflation; it will hurt jobs; it will lead to businesses, small businesses in particular, finding it a challenge to survive in the tightening marketplace. So why this bill is being pushed is something that's beyond my comprehension at this stage, and the only argument I hear is: the markets will take care of all of us in the long run. This faith in the market is very much like faith in some supernatural power that all we need to do is to assume that someone up there will take care of all of us, and in the same way the market will take care of us.

Well, Mr. Chairman, we know that that's not how markets work. Markets left to themselves create all kinds of serious problems, particularly when it comes to the basic needs that all of us have as human beings that must be met regardless. So long as we can afford to pay for those things, we will pay for those things, but markets don't reduce the costs. They don't make those basic needs related usable any cheaper. In fact, they made them more expensive, as we have learned from the deregulation of the electricity market and of the gas markets.

One organization that speaks on behalf of these residential consumers in particular is the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta, and I have their assessment of this bill in my hand here. First of all, let me put on record for Albertans who may happen to read the debate in Hansard as to what this Consumer's Coalition of Alberta does. It is a residential utility ratepayer advocate. The CCA . . .

That is, the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta.

. . . has provided comment to the various government departments regarding issues of concern to utility customers. The CCA intervenes in utility rate hearings where the outcome of the process may impact residential utility rates.

The proposed amendments as set out in this bill, Bill 19, are supposed to sort of set a framework for the structure of the natural gas utility industry in Alberta. The comments that I find here are made by this consumer advocate in relation to Bill 19 and the amendments that it seeks to make in the existing piece of legislation dealing with natural gas utility services.

The CCA is very concerned that the proposed changes will result in more problems, very serious problems. The first one to draw attention to, of course, is the "increased costs to customers and exposure of customers to new costs or costs previously not in the utility system." I want to underline, Mr. Chairman, that in the judgment of the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta, CCA for short, one negative impact that the bill when it becomes law is going to have is an increase in costs to customers and their exposure to new costs that they previously have not had to pay. The question is then: why bring into being a law that will result in new costs to consumers?

The second negative impact that this organization draws attention to is about the "increased confusion to customers of natural gas distribution utilities and natural gas retailers." The confusion over the kinds of services for which they have to pay is the second concern that CCA expresses about this bill.

So two key negative features of this bill will either add to the confusion of customers or add to the costs that they have to pay to get the same utility that they were getting at a lower cost in the past.

Generally the CCA views the proposed changes as paving the way for the entry of retailers to replace the sales function of existing integrated natural gas utilities. This is a change made rather than insure low cost utility services and stable rates to residential and other customers. The CCA submits that customers have not been and are not likely to be the principal driver of the proposed changes. Rather [the CCA sees] the industry driving the need to make these proposed changes so as to allow participants in the industry, operating as commercial ventures, to add costs to the system at the expense of customers.

Mr. Chairman, let there be no doubt here that the bill is designed to facilitate the entry of new industry players into the market, not in any way designed to limit or lower the costs for consumers. Quite the contrary. The expenses of the consumers will go up as a result of the measures proposed in this bill.

This statement that I just referred to above concludes with how existing costs in this industry will be increased. The exposure to new costs takes place when new entities or strata of entities, such as retailers, enter a market that was previously served by integrated utilities delivering and selling natural gas to consumers. Each new player or new strata [the CCA argues] will seek its return, and this . . . will add new costs to the whole system.

Mr. Chairman, my time seems to have run out, so I'll sit down then. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to join in the debate here with respect to Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, in committee. I found it rather interesting that the debate appears to wander a bit all over the map. It doesn't seem to contain itself an awful lot to the issues addressed particularly by Bill 19.

Some interesting comments and certainly one with respect to consumer education that I think has been addressed, although perhaps peripherally, by certain ministers in this government, and we do recognize that consumer education will be an extremely important part of the whole restructuring of energy in the province of Alberta as we move ahead not only, Mr. Chairman, with Bill 19 and changes to the marketing of natural gas but also other issues that affect energy in the province.

The comments that surround things that different states are doing with respect to their energy programs are also interesting, and some things come to mind when individuals discuss places like Wisconsin or other states in the U.S. One of the things that came to my mind is a question that has to do with renewable energy and the fact that some states have administrators or sections in their energy departments that are responsible for renewable energy. Certainly, Alberta doesn't take a backseat to any place in North America with respect to those issues. I believe that it was the hon. Minister of Infrastructure that stood in the House recently and indicated to all who had even a modicum of attention being paid to his comments that the largest single wind farm generating facility will be built where, Mr. Chairman? In the province of Alberta within the next three to five years onstream. And the energy produced from that development will be used by whom? The government of Alberta. So, certainly, comments with respect to renewables – I'm glad to see that other folks are also interested in them, but Alberta is doing. We're not talking; we're doing.

Another thing that I'd like to just touch on momentarily is the misconception, Mr. Chairman, that the minute you bring new players into a marketplace, it automatically, full stop, will increase the cost to consumers. That is a misconception. The truth of the matter is that if you allow a single retailer to go into the marketplace and offer to customers a number of different services – and they may be related or unrelated to the energy business. They may be utilities, and they may be other homeowner requirements such as perhaps cable, perhaps telephones, perhaps high-speed Internet connection, perhaps things like homeowner insurance. It could be a thing like automobile recovery if you have a breakdown on the highway. There are a number of different services that can be offered to consumers, and the truth of the matter is that when a retailer is allowed to offer multiple services under one retail package, the price of the package is lower than the sum of the individual contracts with respect to the retailing portion. So those are some comments that I have with respect to some of the concerns that have been raised.

Further to that, I think it bears looking into Bill 19 – to get back to what we are really discussing in committee here, Bill 19 – and the idea, Mr. Chairman, that this bill will somehow put consumers at risk and that what the bill does is pave the way for some large multinational corporations to come to Alberta and rip off small Albertans and homeowners, et cetera. I think that if we look through Bill 19, we certainly see that the EUB does have a way to establish rules and regulations. There are appeal mechanisms, and certainly the protection to the consumers in the province of Alberta under this legislation will be at least as stringent or more so than what has happened in the past in the province where, lo and behold, who is it that protects consumers now, Mr. Chairman? I would suggest it's still the same group. We're not getting rid of them. In some cases we enhance their ability to protect consumers in the province.

So, Mr. Chairman, I'll leave my comments at that and thank you very much for the opportunity this afternoon.

3:30

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm grateful for the opportunity to finally be able to get some comments on the record with this bill. I've been eagerly anticipating being able to debate it a number of times, and somehow it's always adjourned just before I get a chance to speak. I'm not taking that personally.

Mr. Rathgeber: Let's adjourn now.

Ms Blakeman: Well, the Member for Edmonton-Centre would like to adjourn now, but I gather that that is actually something that's discussed by his caucus. I don't know that the sponsoring member is quite ready to adjourn, but perhaps he could discuss that with his colleague.

So starting from the beginning of this process, then – and I did listen carefully to the remarks from Grande Prairie-Smoky, and I will try and return to them at the end of my remarks – ostensibly this Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, is amending three different acts: the Gas Utilities Act, the Gas Distribution Act, and the Rural Utilities Act. Now, it's a sister bill to Bill 3 because it's trying to align the natural gas retail market with the electrical retail market.

So it is changing the structure of the natural gas retail marketplace to allow for more competition, or in the government's words, to encourage more competition. Part of that is providing consumers with the choice of signing a contract that's available over a longer period of time or floating on a natural gas spot market price. A big part of that is about who's taking the risk, where the consumer is taking all of the risk or where through regulation or other choices the risk is carried by other entities, and part of my concern on behalf of my constituents is not to see them placed in the position where they carry all the risk and are not reaping an equivalent benefit as a result of that. That's part of what's the expected outcome of this bill and why it's problematic for my constituents.

Part of that is allowing for this flow-through price of natural gas. We're seeing problems with that right now with ATCO Electric and its pilot project that's being carried on as we speak. So what this bill is intended to provide for us – there's already a pilot project running that we can examine and see if in fact it's going to work very well, and it doesn't appear to be. At this point it looks like it will result in on the electricity side an additional deferral. We're trying to align these two so that a consumer would purchase from one seller. That becomes problematic. It is changing the rules of the marketplace again to try and attract the competition.

Finally, it's affecting the operation of the gas co-ops because it does allow their members to purchase from other suppliers if the choice is approved by two-thirds of the members. So that's changing their bylaws in how they operate things.

Now, I think it's interesting at this time to look at some of the history of gas deregulation in this province, its history as a public utility and then not, because we are seeing, essentially, a further deregulation in this marketplace. There are a number of consumers out there who, because there's discussion going on in both the natural gas marketplace and the electricity marketplace, have just joined those two together and don't understand that the natural gas marketplace utility was deregulated some time ago, in 1985, in fact. The province and the feds signed a deal at that point to deregulate the wholesale price of Alberta gas. Before that point, the province set the sale price for the gas producers. When Ottawa ended the national energy program, then the province and the feds also ended the made-in-Alberta gas price. So that was the beginning of this process that we're now looking at some 18 years later.

Not much happened around this until we started to have changes in the '90s, particularly with the Alliance pipeline. In my mind that's what really started to change a number of things, mostly because more gas started to leave Alberta, and the price started to rise, as well. Certainly we gained from that. There's no question. We benefited greatly from the royalties, and that was used to build schools and put infrastructure in place and a number of other things.

Dr. Taft: Not since the Alliance.

Ms Blakeman: No. Prior to that. Sorry.

At that time we still had protection for the consumers, although the small businesses and householders bought gas through regulated monopolies. So we've had a series of step-up changes in the way gas works here in Alberta.

One of the things that I keep noting from this government is this full speed ahead, full frontal move to deregulate along the lines of: if we deregulate, more competition will come. So we've deregulated and deregulated, but more competition didn't come, and all I see is the government with increasingly gritted teeth saying: we need more competition; we need more competition. And the competition isn't coming. I mean, let's face it. Direct Energy, which seems to be the great saviour on the horizon, which is an international company based in England, won't come here – and they've made it quite clear – unless this bill is passed. Who's kidding who? You know, international companies don't come into Alberta unless they think they're going to make a stink of a lot of money. And who are they going to make all of that money from? Albertans. Coming out of the pockets of the citizens of Alberta.

So to somehow try and gloss over this and say, "oh, no, you know, everybody's going to benefit greatly from this," that just isn't the case. It's just not supported by what we've got in front of us. That great sort of free market drive, that private enterprise nirvana that this government keeps trying to achieve has not played out in either the natural gas market or the electricity market, yet they keep driving forward, insisting that somehow if we got more competition in here, it would all work better. Well, we're deregulating and deregulating, and they are not coming.

Mr. Rathgeber: What about Direct Energy?

Ms Blakeman: Well, the Member for Edmonton-Calder is asking about Direct Energy, which tells me he hasn't been listening to what I just said. I've just talked about how they're only going to come here if this bill passes and they can expect to make a lot of money out of the pockets of Albertans. Frankly, one competitor does not free market competition make, with the greatest of respect.

3:40

An Hon. Member: What about three?

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I'm sorry. I'm being corrected. Three. The existing two we had plus Direct. My goodness. That'll just knock them down from the competition.

You know, we've had two all the way along, and now we are doing everything we can to entice a third one into place, including passing legislation to attract a company from another country to come in. So this is not working. At what point does the government go, "okay; despite our best wishes that this would happen, it's not happening" and look at something else? I don't know. But it's certainly upsetting the government's ideological applecart that they must deregulate everything and privatize everything, and that will make it all better. Well, it's not making it better.

So what can they do to make this worth the while to entice new retailers in? Well, you know, as I've just been saying, we had a series of moves made by the government to deregulate and open up the marketplace and make it more attractive. It didn't happen, so now they're just going to throw a big bomb into it – I think a columnist in the Edmonton Journal was using that same analogy – to just blow the thing up in the hopes that somehow something will happen here and that it'll work the way they want it to, to get people to turn towards something new. Albertans don't want to do that. Albertans seem to be quite happy with the two companies that they had and have not really been demanding that they get a lot of other choice.

That brings me to a different part of this, and that is the whole concept of choice, because it's interesting that in Alberta anyway I think you'd be hard-pressed to argue with success that there is a lot of choice. It's not as though people could say: nah, don't think I'll have any natural gas; I'll – I don't know – have an in-home fire-burning stove to heat my home in downtown Edmonton or Calgary or Fort McMurray. It's not really viable here. I know of people I've visited in the States; some of them do that. They still have a furnace in which they're using heating oil, actually, but they really only use that to sort of keep the pipes from freezing. They really do heat their homes. When you go to the local pub, it's heated with a wood-burning stove, and they're very focused on that as a way to get heat. But we're not focused around that here. We really are focused on natural gas. So to talk about the very first layer of choice, which is "don't buy it at all, and then it's not a problem," that's not really viable here in Alberta.

We think that choice assumes informed consent. It's not that people can't learn how to figure out how to buy at the right price and when to buy it, but, you know, it is pretty complicated, and prior to now we had very large companies buying long-term contracts, allowing them to hedge prices. We had them with their own reserves, which were able to be pulled into use if they needed it. There were a lot of other components in place that allowed those companies to take the risk instead of Alberta citizens taking the risk.

The concept now that we're going to have someone show up at our door saying, "buy a contract from me; I'm with Direct Energy," for example, or "buy your electricity from me on a long-term contract; buy your gas from me on a long-term contract" – and this is not to say that Albertans are incapable of doing this. They are, but it is very complicated and requires that we set everything else aside in our lives and pay attention to this in order to get all the ins and outs of it. I don't have the time to do that, and I'm sure that lots of other people don't have the time or the inclination to do that. But that's the situation that we're being forced into. We're supposed to somehow become experts in spot prices for purchase of natural gas, and somehow this competition out there in the marketplace is going to make this easier for us. Well, having one more into the mix on top of the original two I don't think is going to make it that much easier.

An Hon. Member: It gives you something to think about when you're working a casino for your kid's school.

Ms Blakeman: It does give you something to think about when you're working a casino for your kid's school.

Now, what's interesting is that in a number of other areas the government has been very proactive in recognizing the need to educate and protect the consumer. There are a variety of consumer protection laws that are in place, and in fact they continue to be put in place. Every couple of years there's something new that we discover needs a law, and it's usually about complicated information being out there and a requirement that the companies put forward information. You know, there are even quite complex rules about door-to-door fund-raising.

I was thinking about that when I heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's question in question period today about an elderly constituent that he had being approached at her door to purchase a long-term contract. In fact, if that person had been at that door soliciting funds for a charitable activity or agency, they would have been required to be wearing visible ID, to provide information on the spot, mind you, not "I'll get back to you in a week or two" or "I'll put it in the mail" but on-the-spot information about the organization, financial, the board members, and also an information sheet about the process of that kind of charitable fund-raising and solicitation at the door and what the person could be asked to do and not asked to do.

So it's pretty thorough, and we recognize it in a number of sectors, but we don't seem to be recognizing it in this one. I'm interested in the change in attitude, and I haven't heard an explanation as to why we get that deficiency, so maybe the sponsor of the bill will be able to answer that for me.

I wanted to speak very briefly, and on my next chance to speak, I'll expand upon this. It is the position that the condominiums in my constituency have been put in with these fluctuating prices and the effect that that has on the people that are the owners or who are living in these condominiums. Of course, they're a nonprofit society. They're required to present their budget to their members in advance. These people are working folks. They are not for the most part accountants or bankers. They have many different jobs, and they are struggling in many cases to be able to understand how all of this works, understand how to get the best possible deal on behalf of the people living in the condominium, and to be able to forecast all of this in advance to put it into their budget.

They're required by law to put forward what the fees are going to be for the upcoming year by a certain date, and I hear from a number of the treasurers of condominiums just before that due date about their frustration about not being able to nail a lot of this down. I'm now hearing from some that are quite frustrated that in fact they did sign long-term contracts when all of this started to go wacko on them, and they know now that they've signed too high. There was quite a scare at the time about how high things could go, so when they signed in at a certain level, they thought that they were doing a pretty good deal. These people are very conscientious. They're all volunteers, but they're very conscientious that they're doing this on behalf of their neighbours and in some cases their family and friends. They're trying really hard but without a lot of education being provided by anybody or any help to make fairly monumental decisions. So that's part of what I've looked for in this act, and what I'm not seeing is the consumer protection.

I look forward to my next opportunity. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've spoken on this bill three times already, so I think that I probably have said enough, but there're a few statements that were made today that I'd like to clarify again. Everybody seems to be talking deregulation here, and they should understand that gas has been deregulated for 17 years. It seems like most of the hon. members are straying so far off Bill 19, that is stating that, yes, it's the best of both worlds. They're going to have the choice of having a long-term contract, or they can stay on the spot market exactly the way it is today.

I have to disagree with some of the hon. members that say: long-term contracts just cost you more money. Even today the way the market has gone, the EPCOR and Enmax customers are happy to be on contracts. They're paying $5 per gigajoule when the rest of us are paying $9. So why would we say, "No, we're not going allow our constituents to go out and sign a contract and be on a budget that is affordable to them"? That's one thing that you don't have to be rocket scientist for. You don't have to sit back like that little mouse voice in corner over there saying: oh, it sounds dumb, dumb, dumb.

Ms Blakeman: That mouse voice?

Mr. Ouellette: No. Over in that corner.

Where was I? They should be allowed to go out and get a long-term contract and afford the budget that they sign the contract for.

Mr. Chairman, I'm not saying that there won't be some overly aggressive direct salesmen, but the way some of the members have been speaking from next door, you shouldn't be allowing them to your door. So maybe they should just bring a bill forward to disallow direct salesmen.

The biggest thing of this bill – and I just have to keep stressing that – is that they're going to have a choice of signing a contract to be able to afford the same monthly charge 12 months of the year instead of having the high spikes. If they want to play the market, if they believe the market is going to be low, then they have that choice to stay on the spot market and purchase their natural gas exactly like they're doing today. The one exception to that is the rural gas co-ops, and we're protecting the rural gas co-ops to stay in their franchised area. The only way that their customers can have a choice is by passing an extraordinary resolution, and two-thirds of their membership have to ask for that choice. Otherwise they stay on the contracts that the gas co-ops have now.

You know, I have to rebut a little bit the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie when she was saying that long-term contracts weren't a good deal, but I remember QP today. I'm sure it was that hon. member that asked why the EUB was recommending . . . [interjection] Now you lost me again.

She was asking why the EUB was recommending that they didn't have to hedge. Well, if you want people to be able to hedge, then you also should want people to be able to have a contract because they go hand in hand.

I can't think of any other questions that came up today that I didn't answer, so thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Blakeman: Well, the member was just talking about hedging. Hedging was available to us before, but the risk was assumed by the company, and now you're looking for risk to be assumed by the consumer. So I don't agree with what's being put forward here.

Look; part of this is being sold by the sponsor of the bill and others with, "Well, you'll have a consistent bill. You'll know exactly what you're going to pay." Well, guess what? I can do that now. It's called an averaging out. Every company has a different name for it, but, you know . . .

Mr. Ouellette: But you've got to pay the piper here right soon, because the averaging out isn't going to have worked out.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I can organize with – and they make it easy for me – my natural gas provider to have an averaged out price across the year. I know exactly what I'm going to pay every month. So that convenience as such is already available to me without me having to go out and figure out whether I'm getting a great contract or not. [interjection] Well, he's saying that I'm going to get a bill that's going to try and level that out. The truth of the matter is that the company that I've worked with has worked along with me. When they knew that the price was going up substantially and I could end up with a large lump sum payment at the end of the period of time, they contacted me and we worked out a higher price per month. I was okay and kept going on that.

The truth is that the only people that will really be able to take advantage of working the spot market are people that can have, you know, whatever, a thousand bucks sit in their bank account so that if the bill comes in at $200 that month, great; fine. Two hundred bucks. If it comes in at 800 bucks, okay; fine too. But you have to have enough disposable income to be able to just let that money sit there and to be able to replenish that pot every day. There are Albertans that can do that quite comfortably, but there also are Albertans who can't do that and for whom it is most uncomfortable. Lots of people live paycheque to paycheque, and we should maybe chide ourselves because that's not the way we've been told by our accountants to do it. [interjection] You and I are a very bad combo because we talk to each other too much.

So a lot of what's being promoted in this bill is already available to me without having to go through what's being proposed here, and it strikes me that most of what we're actually talking about here or what I see happening is a philosophy over what this government feels it should be providing to its citizens and what it shouldn't be. It has an ideological bent towards the private sector and a free market. You know, that invisible hand seems to interfere in a lot of places and then sometimes needs a lot of help.

I'll be quite frank. I think that any time we're looking at provision of a service that if a profit margin decision would cause the provider not to offer it and not getting it would cause a health or a safety issue for citizens, then I think it has to be either owned in the public sector by government or heavily regulated by it. That's not where I see this government going. Okay. Fine. I'm a Liberal. I'm coming from a different point of view, but I don't see what's being put in place here as being end run a good idea for the people of Alberta. So there's no question that this is a government bill. It's following a government ideology. It's that whole thing about, you know: push it out there; get the private sector to do everything. But what are we hearing right now? We're hearing that some of us have constituents for whom paying the bill is a real struggle for both gas and electricity, and this bill is looking at integrating the two. So there's an ideological difference here, but I just have not seen the government make decisions around this that end up being most beneficial to constituents.

Not to flog a dead horse here, but the primary example in this debate is what has happened with electricity prices and that drive to deregulate the electrical industry. Prices have gone nowhere but up, and everyone admits they will never go back to the level that they were at. Aside from price we're also talking about stability and certainty in a market. That is nowhere to be seen here. My friend here from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, the sponsor of the bill, will be saying . . . Sorry; I've totally lost that train of thought. I'll have to turn this over to someone else while I collect my thoughts and come back to this.

Thank you.

Mr. Ouellette: I just want to answer that one more time by saying that I honestly believe she was almost speaking for the bill there, saying that we needed the stability of contracts, and I'd like to congratulate her on that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to respond to some comments that were made just a short time ago about the relationship between hedging in contracts and our question that came up in question period today. The whole idea is a matter of the number of tools and the kind of tools that are made available for marketplace management. If we look at it in the context of what's going on here, true hedging in the legal sense of the word is when we pass the risk of marketplaces off to a third party, not the buyer or the seller, but a third party handles the risk. That's what hedging is all about.

When you have the possibility of dealing with pass-through or spot market pricing, what you're in effect doing is passing on the largest percentage of the risk to the customer, the consumer. So what we're doing in the process of deregulation is, in effect, setting up a structure that passes all the market risk to the customer, because when you have pass-through, or flow-through, pricing, there is very little if any risk at the marketer's or producer's level. So in order just to make sure that that point is understood and, in effect, reflects correctly on the question that we were asking in question period today, it's the idea that if we don't put all the tools in place, then we don't create any kind of a market system that will work.

All that is is a signal that the government, in effect, doesn't understand the marketplace they're creating and doesn't respect the fact that there are all kinds of tools that operate truly in an open market. When we say that we're going to have to deal with that, yet we'd limit it, it just shows me – and that's what was reflected in the questions that were asked in question period – that this government doesn't intend to do anything that would pass on to the customers any kind of stability or protection from price variation and price instability.

The idea that the EUB would not allow for hedging, in effect, made sure that the variability of the spot market or the flow-through pricing always ended up facing the customers. If they would have allowed that hedging, what in effect would have happened is that when the marketers were flowing through, the variability could have been adjusted for the revenue they made off the hedge, and that would have given some stability to the customers. In effect, the businesses in this province care more about stability for the customers or dealing with the stability for the customers than this government does, because they won't allow the businesses to put in place those kinds of hedging options, and they also won't allow for a viable price protection system that will work. That's why we've got a price protection system that operates on a yearly basis, yet our pricing model is based on monthly or flow-through monthly prices.

That, in effect, doesn't create any kind of a mechanism for protection for the customer because they don't make their decision on the same basis as the price protection act. They make their decisions based on the monthly flow-through price, and that's where the protection should be occurring. We've got to make sure that when we look at these, we deal with the whole system of commitment, making sure that there are processes in place that will protect the customer. After all, as a government it's the people of this province that we should be acting for.

Mr. Chairman, I taught in the Faculty of Management. We taught businesses how to look out for themselves, how to deal with the issues. Government's responsibility is to make sure that the externalities don't impact adversely on the consumers in this province. This act doesn't do it; the price protection act doesn't do it. This whole deregulation system doesn't do it, and we should stop it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I made some comments on this during second reading, and I'm pleased again to speak to it in a bit more detail during committee. There are many issues that have come up, and many of them have been addressed here. Everybody in this Assembly will know that based on all the evidence that I've seen, the business that this province has embarked upon of completely rearranging both the electricity and the natural gas markets is a mistake. This business of aligning through Bill 19 the natural gas market with the electricity market to create what is being called a dual fuel market is a massive mistake.

In fact, I'm concerned that we are through these processes rearranging some of the fundamental strengths of Alberta's economy into fundamental weaknesses and that we are in effect corroding the long-term strength of our province and diminishing our future substantially here. We will not understand and realize the full consequences and costs of these decisions and these bills that we're passing for years to come, but we're already seeing the terrible playing out and terrible costs of the electricity deregulation, and we will see that played out substantially further through Bill 19 in the regulatory changes to the gas market.

I also worry – I listened to the comments of the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky in which he spoke about the opportunities, as he put them, for businesses, marketing companies, and so on, to combine gas and electricity marketing and bring in other things. I think he mentioned insurance, auto breakdown services, undoubtedly credit cards, cable TV maybe, telephone, Internet access, and who knows what else. We could have one giant omniscorporation handling all of this. My prediction here is that the next item we'll be seeing brought into this kind of structure is water, and that scares me even more because water is the very substance of life.

As I went through the briefing notes provided by the government on this bill and went through some of the correspondence we've obtained on the bill, I noticed that various groups and corporations were consulted. EPCOR submitted extensive material, Direct Energy did, and Enmax did, at least. But one of my questions is, frankly: who was consulted, and who was listened to seriously?

An Hon. Member: On Bill 19?

Dr. Taft: I believe so, yeah. I'll check my correspondence. They were all quite keen on aligning the gas market with the electricity market through Bill 19, and I do have some of their correspondence in my files here.

I'm concerned about other people whose consultations either weren't sought or were not attended to. I'm looking at a report done by the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops among other things. They were also working with Gas Alberta Inc. on Bill 19. They submitted an extensive report, I believe, to the Alberta government on restructuring the gas market, and they expressed some real concerns. In fact, they came out quite bluntly and said that the federation and Gas Alberta Inc. do not disagree with the fundamental principles of enabling competition or providing customer choice and that under certain conditions and with certain commodities there can be intrinsic value in introducing competition. That's a point I've made many times. They go on to say that deregulation of natural gas has worked well at the wholesale level. That decision was made many years ago. They're quite clear here. In this report they say that it does not work.

Now, I stand to be corrected in later work from the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, but the discussion they're presenting here is quite clear. They're coming out raising very, very serious questions about natural gas deregulation and the added costs of bringing in the marketing structures and the new competitors, the advertising that's required for that, the much more complex regulatory regime that's required for this. They are raising concerns that the price of natural gas is actually going to go up. They do conclude with, I think, a very good question.

The Federation and GAI conclude this summary by repeating the question that has been repeatedly put to us by our customers and which we have been asking of government for some time. "Who is asking for these changes?"

That's the question that I, myself, asked some years ago when I was doing some analysis on electricity deregulation, and it's a question I find myself asking again when it comes to Bill 19 and the deregulation, as it were, of the retail natural gas market. Who is asking for these changes? I hear nobody in my constituency asking for these changes. In fact, the feedback I get from my constituency is that these changes are likely leading to higher prices. That's exactly the experience people have with electricity, and they're not looking forward to this business.

We've also had examples brought forward about the kinds of hassles and pressures that ordinary people are subject to from gas marketing companies. This province has had some very bad experiences with natural gas marketing companies in the past, and I can't imagine that anybody in this province, any consumer in this province is looking forward to being subject to more and more of those pressures again. People were perfectly satisfied with the system that was in place some years ago, and I would much, much prefer that this government leave well enough alone rather than being driven by ideology and by lobbying, and I have no doubt that there has been heavy, heavy lobbying going on to get a bill like Bill 19 put into place. In fact, some people have referred to this along with Bill 3 as the Direct Energy bills because Direct Energy, part of a huge multinational corporate group, seems to be pretty well setting the agenda on this and pulling the government's strings so that legislation that they say will have to be put in place before they'll come into the market is – snap to it – put in place by this government.

It makes me wonder about the issue of a registry for lobbyists, and I won't go off there because I might get called on a point of order on relevance, but frankly in my view it's highly relevant. We need to know who is lobbying this government and who's getting paid to do so, because I suspect that a tremendous amount of lobbying went on behind the scenes with Bill 19.

I'm, frankly, concerned about regulatory changes for natural monopolies in other areas as well. I was recently talking, just two days ago, with somebody who does a tremendous amount of work, in fact has built a career out of doing regulatory work on telecommunications and the CRTC at the federal level and who was making the point that the CRTC in the last 20 years has gone from the best telecommunications regulatory body in the world to one of the worst. What has led to that judgment? What has caused that downfall? An unrelenting drive by the CRTC to force competition on a natural monopoly. He was making the point that CRTC rulings now are almost scoffed at across the board by people in the industry and in the know. I'm afraid we're heading in the same direction with the regulatory regime in Alberta's gas and electricity industries, and Bill 19 is going to accelerate rather than slow that down. We will be back over and over again to address the issues that are spawned by this bill.

So I'm quite clear in condemning this legislation. I'm quite clear in condemning this entire process. As an Albertan I'm worried that the future of my province is being eroded, that the economic viability of this province is being weakened, that the tremendous natural wealth that we have in Alberta is being drained out of this province as quickly as possible, and that the handmaiden to all of this is this government.

Those are my comments for today on Bill 19, Mr. Chairman, and I would encourage anybody to stand and participate. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to accept the invitation of my friend from Edmonton-Riverview to participate in this debate because it's an extremely important debate.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview indicated that there was perhaps some ideology behind this debate, behind the movement to deregulation, and I would suggest that there is perhaps some ideology behind the motivation to resist a move to deregulation or to a free market. As I had indicated briefly the other day in the House, for those of us who feel comfort and strength from the free market system, the notion of deregulation is not a fearsome thing. The notion of the private sector being the primary driver of a particular sector of an industry is not a fearsome thing.

We, of course, as a government have an oversight responsibility, and we need to ensure that the actions, particularly, as has been said, in businesses or companies that operate in a near monopoly or oligopoly status, do bear the scrutiny of those of us elected in the public interest. But the public interest is best served, in my view, through the initiative of the private sector, and there are very, very few, if any, goods or services that cannot be delivered at least as well, perhaps even better, by the private sector that are presently driven by the public sector.

Now, we as a government and as a province and as a nation have made the determination that there will be some aspects of our economy that will be a combination of private and public. Some will be primarily public, and some will be primarily private. But when we come to the notion of the regulation of the delivery of energy, we are dealing with a product that has an absolute value, and that absolute value is not determined here in Alberta. It's determined because of the value of the commodity on a world market. We would all like to have our input costs protected so that we pay a lower input cost for our raw materials or our energy than any other sector. It gives us a competitive advantage. But what it doesn't do is give us any motivation at all to use that resource wisely, to use that resource as a finite resource, to put the real value of the resource directly attached to the product we're using.

Let me draw on the notion, for instance, of energy that's used in an automobile. If gasoline was 20 cents a litre, would there be any impetus on anyone's part to be frugal in the use of that commodity? I think, Mr. Chairman, that you will see innovation driven by the fact that Albertans are paying a market world price for energy. Innovation will drive conservation, will drive the efficient use, will drive new sources of energy so that we will have a critical path; for instance, perhaps into a hydrogen-based economy in the future. We are dealing with a resource that is finite, perhaps not in our generation, perhaps not even in our grandchildren's generation, but we cannot use the energy resources that we have today as if there is no tomorrow. There is a tomorrow, and that tomorrow will require us to be careful and conserve the products that we use. We should make as small a footprint on the world as we possibly can when we happen to be here in the world.

So with the notion of private initiative in the distribution of energy – and in this case we're talking about natural gas, but I think that in a greater vision we're talking about energy as a whole – we should not be afraid of the innovation that comes through private participation and ownership in a particular sector. We should embrace it. It doesn't mean we should go into it blindly, but we should go into it knowledgeably, carefully, considering all of the various avenues that we may end up going into, not abdicating our responsibility to act in the common good and in the public interest but with the confident resolution that the private sector has within it the capacity to deliver goods, services, and products at a level of efficiency and cost that just can't be done in an economy that does not have competition as its base.

So, yes, there is ideology here. There's ideology in that there are those of us in the House who believe in the private sector, and there is the ideology of those of us in the House who feel the comfort of the public sector. Yes, there is a divide there. That's why there are 74 members of that ideological divide that believe in the private sector compared with considerable fewer who are perhaps wedded to the notion that it must be the public sector that supplies everything.

An Hon. Member: How many?

Mr. McClelland: How many? Less than the 74 that are driving the notion that free enterprise will deliver a better product at a better price virtually every time.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I do appreciate the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and I'm happy in committee to jump up and engage in debate.

I'll start off by, well, challenging some of the premises of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and some of the premises that underlie Bill 19. I've argued in this Assembly and in many, many forums that the marketplace at times is incomparably effective and successful, that competition in the right circumstances works very well to produce the most goods at the lowest cost. It is highly innovative. It's creative. It's even fun. As somebody who's written a couple of books, there is, I would argue, no more purely competitive market than the book market. You go into an average Chapters bookstore and there are over a hundred thousand titles in that bookstore. You put your book in there. You're up head-to-head with a hundred thousand competitors. It's pure competition, and I'm pleased for that, and the last thing I would argue for is for the government to run all our bookstores.

I am quite comfortable with the notion of competition and a marketplace and the private sector but where the evidence shows that it works. The world is full of evidence showing that in many cases it does work. Equally, the world is full of evidence showing that in other places for any number of reasons the market does not work. So we maybe in this Assembly have three different ideologies. I think we are all, ultimately, ideological or value-based creatures. From the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, when it comes to values and ideology, at least with economics, he's been very clear. He said articulately that the public interest is best served by the private sector and made a couple of sweeping statements which I would like to challenge: that almost without exception – indeed, I think he went beyond – a private market will outperform a public delivery of services. On the other hand, the New Democrat members, I think, would be much more skeptical about the marketplace and indeed at times, without putting words in their mouths, might argue that a market is inevitably a rip-off, that profit – I may be corrected here, and this is the joy of debate – almost by definition is a rip-off of the value of a worker's labour.

My position and, I suspect, the position in the middle is that we don't want to look at the issues with this ideology. We want to look at an ideology that asks: what's the most effective way to meet our fundamental values of freedom and prosperity and equality of opportunity? Those are questions, I argue, that could almost always be answered on the basis of evidence.

So while a moment ago I argued about the wonders of the marketplace for books – it's not perfect, but it's very, very good – I would in the next breath argue that the marketplace is an abject failure when it comes to, for example, health care. I've argued this forcefully and, paradoxically, in one of my books, and the evidence is really very clear. I won't go into that evidence because we're not debating health care here. But we are debating energy deregulation, and the evidence is equally clear that when we deregulate things like electricity and natural gas, especially at the retail level, we're likely going to see a lot more problems than we used to have. In fact, that's exactly what's happened with the electricity business in Alberta, and I'm afraid that's what we're about to launch into in the natural gas business. So this is a situation where the evidence I've seen suggests huge, huge caution. We should not proceed in this direction. If anybody on the government side has substantial evidence to the contrary, I'd like to see it. I assume that it would be on paper, and I'd like to look through it, because ultimately I am prepared to accept the evidence.

I would point out to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford that when we look at the impact of the public sector on the economy, if you were to look at the list of the largest corporations in Alberta in the National Post magazine of last year, you would find that four or five of the largest seven corporations have their roots in the public sector. I'm going from memory here. CP: we all know the origins of Canadian Pacific, scandalous as they were. They were squarely in the public sector. EnCana, which was formed out of a marriage of Alberta Energy, which was created by this Assembly, and PanCanadian, which was a spinoff of CP. Petro-Canada and Syncrude: those are among the very largest corporations in this province. I think we need to bear in mind that at times the public intervention in the market does make sense. I could go on. I am not convinced that the price mechanism alone, which we will see unfurled further through Bill 19, is going to lead to the innovation and conservation that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and other government members assume will happen.

There is no doubt that price does have some effect on demand, and indeed I and I think all of us in the Liberal caucus, as much as we've argued for rebates on natural gas, do not see that as any more than a short-term solution. It does disrupt economics. But when I see the price of gasoline soaring and I still see the number of SUVs on the roads, I think that the link between price and consumption is less direct than we might assume it is.

So, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the articulate comments from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, but he's probably shocked to know that he didn't change my mind. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. My friend from Edmonton-Riverview brought up a couple of very, very interesting points to make his argument. One was the competitive nature of the book-publishing industry, and I wonder if there is an industry in the country that is more heavily subsidized than the book industry in every single aspect. The book-publishing industry is perhaps the least free market industry and for some, I think, very understandable reasons, but just imagine trying to publish a book in this country without some public involvement of one form or another. I see friends laughing because they recognize the truth of that statement. At least, I assume they recognize the truth of that statement.

But another interesting point that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview made had to do with the fact that he read an article recently in the National Post that indicated that four of the largest private-sector companies operating in Alberta today had their roots as public enterprises, and it's interesting that they grew from a public enterprise to a private enterprise driven by competition, driven by the market situation – and I can think of another one, Air Canada – driven by the necessity of getting capital. Members are laughing as they're thinking that Air Canada is perhaps not the most public of public companies at the moment.

Ms Carlson: They're not happy unless we're not happy.

Mr. McClelland: The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is commenting about Air Canada, and I can recall specifically when that decision was made federally that the head office of Air Canada should remain in Montreal forevermore. But, anyway, we digress. The point that I'm making is that the evolution from a public company to a private company is not new. It happens all the time, and essentially, I think, that's what's happening in our province and eventually will happen in our country as regards energy.

Now, Alberta had the resolution to see it through, and we're not right out of the weeds yet, but when we made the decision to go to a market economy in energy, it was by all accounts a gutsy manoeuvre. I mean, it was something that required unremitting resolve to see through to an end, and once started on a course of this nature, you don't change horses in midstream. You've heard the old chestnut that you've got to leap a chasm in a single bound. The worst thing that we could possibly do would be to in any way waiver from our resolve to see this through. Look what's happened in Ontario, for instance, as a direct result of the fact that they started on the road to deregulation, got cold feet. Now they've got the worst of both worlds, and it is going to be forever.

Mr. Mason: A low price.

Mr. McClelland: The Member for Edmonton-Highlands says, "A low price." They don't have a low price. What they've got is a subsidized price through the tax base for the energy that they're consuming today because they don't have the political courage to see it through to the end.

At the end of the day Alberta will be in a deregulated free market environment where energy will be used in accordance with its value in our economy, with all of the virtuous habits that that will entail. It will also mean that private enterprise will have invested in the regeneration of new energy sources. We will have the efficiencies of new energy sources and, as the Minister of Energy has said on a number of occasions, the capacity to bring green energy onside. Now, we're paying more and making a conscious decision to pay more for green energy than we would be for natural gas energy, but we're looking at it as an investment in the future.

So, Mr. Chairman, there certainly is an ideological root to this debate, and that is not a bad thing. The ideological position that is presented by our colleagues representing the Liberals and the New Democrats toughens our argument. It makes us make sure we've crossed the t's and dotted the i's. That's what their role is. But make no mistake; in their heart of hearts even the opposition understands the wisdom of what we have embarked on as a province. We have the unwavering resolution and the unwavering courage to see it through to the end, and our grandchildren, all of us, one day will look back at these days and say: thank God they had the vision and the courage to see this through.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, that certainly is breathtaking in its scope and gives tremendous target to aim at. I would like to begin by assuring the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford that we are here to do more than correct your spelling. Hopefully, we can correct your policies as well.

Now, the member has begun his comments – not these comments, the ones before – by suggesting that the private sector is not a fearsome thing. Well, it may surprise him to know that we don't fear the private sector either, but we do think that there is an important role for government in ensuring that things work well, work fairly. And it may further interest the hon. member to know that we don't believe that private sector necessarily is the organization that provides things in the best possible way. The hon. member said on March 12 – and I'm quoting from Hansard briefly, Mr. Chairman. He talked about Margaret Thatcher, Britain's Iron Lady, and I responded that that was his patron saint, something which he accepted. He said:

My patron saint – thank you – who dragged the British economy and the British psyche out of the darkness of recession and despair into the sunshine of a renewed economy and renewed confidence.

And he went on to say what he considers to be the Rt. Hon. Margaret Thatcher's most cogent statement. He paraphrased it, and he said that there is nothing done in the public sector using public investment that cannot be done more efficiently and better by the private sector, bringing the full weight of innovation, industry, and vision to the delivery of goods and services.

He went on:

We would do well to learn from her, from her resolve, from her strength, and her vision.

Now, the statement that there is nothing done by the public sector using public investment that cannot be done more efficiently and better by the private sector goes beyond ideology. It is dogma. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, it is nothing but dogma, and we in the New Democrats are, of course, considerably more practical in our approach to the balance between the private sector and the public sector. There are things that are more appropriately delivered, in our view, by the public sector, or if they are delivered by the private sector, they need to be regulated in the interests of the public by government or by government agencies. Things that fall into the categories of natural monopolies are first and foremost because if it's not a publicly owned monopoly, it will very soon become a privately owned monopoly.

I'll take Air Canada, in the first place, as an example of how all of the wonderful promises for a sunshine of a renewed economy and renewed confidence comes to Air Canada. The hon. member was very eloquent that night, and I think that we could look at Air Canada as a perfect example of what happens when you take a publicly owned corporation, you privatize it, you promise that the service is going to get better, you promise that you're going to get more flights, you promise that prices are going to come down, and so on and so on and so on, and because there's limited capacity in the marketplace for true competition – that is, multiple players that compete with one another – it transforms itself into a monopoly situation, except it's now one that's for private profit instead of public profit and it's no longer regulated for the protection of the public. That's what we have with Air Canada.

Just to give another example. Right now my wife and I are involved in a battle with Telus company because we can't get our phone repaired. There's some problem with the phone that's lasted since last week. I'll just recount for members a little bit of what we went through with this competitive, lean, private-sector organization that really wants to deliver customer service. We can easily transfer to someone else who will be completely better than they are and cheaper and more customer oriented, you know, and all of the other things that were promised by those people who actually believe this stuff. We can hardly hear on our phone, Mr. Chairman, because there's such a loud buzz, and we don't know what caused it.

Dr. Taft: Maybe it's being tapped.

Mr. Mason: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview suggests that it's because it's being tapped.

We had arranged for them to come and fix the phone on Friday, and since my wife and I both work, we'd arranged for them to stop at the neighbours', pick up the key, and come in. Well, the repair person came, got the key, went in the house, couldn't find the box where the repairs were going to be done, and instead of phoning us – and we'd left him our cell numbers – from the house to find out where to go to fix it, the repair person left the home, returned the key, went back to his office, then phoned us: I couldn't find the box. So that was Friday.

Then we called and we said: you've got to come and fix our phone on Saturday. Well, they didn't come. We stayed home all day. They didn't show up. Then we phoned again and said: you must come. They said: we'll come tomorrow; we'll come Sunday. So I stayed home most of the day, and by lunchtime I was getting pretty fed up, and I phoned them and I insisted on talking to a customer service representative from Telus, who explained to me that because it just showed on the computer that we had noise on the line, we were a relatively low priority for them, so they probably wouldn't come because they had these other ones that were completely out of service. I said: "Well, we can't even use the phone. Why didn't you tell us that? You just let us stay home all weekend long waiting for you guys to come." So they said: "Okay. We'll change it. We'll come this afternoon." Well, they didn't show up.

On Monday, yesterday, we both went to work, and we came home. Attached to our front door was a little piece of cardboard, a note saying: we called to repair your phone, but you weren't home. We had of course given our cell numbers and tried to make arrangements.

So that is the customer service that people that are Telus customers are receiving. This was supposed to be a company that was going to be customer oriented, that was going to provide good service. You know, when it was Edmonton Telephones, Mr. Chairman, you got better customer service than you do now.

So what's happened is that they make all these promises about how the private sector is going to deliver it better and so on, and you don't really end up with much competition because in most of these fields you probably get two competitors at the most, maybe three if you're lucky, and they all have the same lousy customer service because none of them wants to spend a whole bunch more of the shareholders' money to improve it.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford talked about gas, and this is something that caught my interest a great deal. He's suggesting that we're paying a world price for natural gas, and that's a good thing because it means that we will conserve our natural gas and put it to the best and highest use. I think that's a fair paraphrase of what the hon. member has said. Except, Mr. Chairman, we don't have a world market for natural gas. We have a North American market for Alberta gas because the government has supported gas producers in the construction of the Alliance pipeline, which links Alberta's gas fields with American markets.

So what's happening is we are paying American prices for our own natural gas. Not only that, but we are pumping out the gas so fast that we have less than nine years of proven reserves. We are rapidly depleting Alberta's natural gas supplies. Most of the natural gas produced in Alberta is exported to the United States. I think the consumers of Alberta, not including the large industrial consumers in Alberta, consume about 15 percent of the natural gas produced in this province, but over 50 percent of the gas is exported in its raw form to the United States. So in order to achieve this wonderful international price that's supposed to help us conserve our gas, we have to pump out our gas or we won't have any left. How does that help us conserve the natural gas? Again, Mr. Chairman, it's just a matter of bringing some practical reality to the ideological constructs that we all have. I don't believe that we are in any way conserving the natural gas here in Alberta by exporting it much faster than we find new reserves.

It may well be that the move towards deregulation is a gutsy manoeuvre. I won't quibble that it's a gutsy manoeuvre. It certainly shows a lot of guts to carry on in the face of the mounting evidence that it's a disaster. But is that what you want? Do you want to just go ahead for the sake of being gutsy or courageous, or do you want to go and be courageous because it's going to benefit the people of Alberta? That's the kind of courage that we need to see, Mr. Chairman; I'm absolutely convinced. I would say, quite frankly, that it would show far more courage on the part of the government if it would admit that it had made a disastrous mistake and changed its direction. That would show courage. But proceeding hell-bent for leather towards the iceberg is not showing courage as much as it's showing – well, I'll leave it to people's imagination what that would show.

Now, it's interesting, Mr. Chairman, that the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta has prepared some comments on this legislation, and I think it's worth quoting at some length from their concerns about this legislation. The Consumers' Coalition is very concerned that the proposed changes will result in two key problems.

1. Increased costs to customers and exposure of customers to new costs or costs previously not in the utility system,
2. Increased confusion to customers of natural gas distribution utilities and natural gas retailers.

The CCA views the proposed changes as paving the way for the entry of retailers to replace the sales function of existing integrated natural gas utilities. This is change made rather than insure low cost utility services and stable rates to residential and other customers. The CCA submits that customers have not been and are not likely to be the principal driver of the proposed changes.

I think this is important. They're saying that it is not the consumers – it's not the customers – that want this. So why is the government doing it? Well, they say that they see the industry driving the need to make these proposed changes so to allow participants in the industry, operating as commercial ventures, to add costs to the system at the expense of customers.

In other words, the objective here is not to provide cheaper gas, more reliable gas, or gas for longer in terms of availability of supply. The objective here is to allow more companies into the market and allow them all to make a profit. So it's not a natural free enterprise system; is it then?

What it is is it's a natural monopoly that artificially needs to be transformed by elaborate regulation to create the opportunity for additional players to come into the market, make money, and add cost to the entire system. So it's not free enterprise functioning free and natural and bouncing through the fields. It's actually a rather complicated artificial legal construction that allows companies to come in and pretend to compete with each other in order to milk the consumers. That's the kind of free enterprise that we're getting in our energy industry in this province.

I'm carrying on with the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta.

The exposure to new costs takes place when new entities or strata of entities, such as retailers, enter a market that was previously served by integrated utilities delivering and selling natural gas to consumers. Each new player or new strata will seek its return and this, we submit will add new costs to the whole system.

The proposed changes to the regulations are in our submission much improved over the first drafts circulated earlier in 2002. Having said that we are still very concerned that the drafts create a confusing scenario for the average consumer of utility services. Terms such as "gas services" and "gas distribution services" are too much alike to allow for ready distinction . . .

We submit that at the end of the day the utility customer understands the concept of a natural gas utility to be not just a bundle of services but all matters relating to home space and water heating as well as cooking in some instances. We see no evidence, from focus groups or surveys that illustrates otherwise. It remains unclear to us that the proposed amendments do little if anything to move toward clarity, certainty or ease of understanding for the natural gas utility customer.

Now, I agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

An Hon. Member: Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Mason: I always get you guys mixed up, and I don't know why. Your constituents. Your constituents.

An Hon. Member: They're both taller than you, Brian; that's why.

Mr. Mason: Yes; I know.

I guess I agree with him when he says that rebates in natural gas are not the ultimate answer, and we agree with that too. That's a subsidization of a high price, and ultimately you're subsidizing people that are charging you too much for your own gas. I don't agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview when he says that it's a distortion of the market because I don't think market applies or should apply in this case, and I guess that's maybe why he's a Liberal and I'm not. I believe that the market is based upon supply and demand, and the Americans demand and we supply, and that is exactly the cause of the high prices that we have in our situation right now. As long as we are pumping the gas out so fast into the American market that it's rapidly depleting and having to pay their prices for our gas, we've got a situation where the gas that's owned by Albertans is not being used for their benefit. They derive an indirect benefit through the windfall profits of the provincial government from royalties on that natural gas, but that's not the same thing as making sure that the gas is put to the ultimate use of the people who own it, and that is the people of Alberta.

So, Mr. Chairman, just in conclusion, I think the direction that the government is going with respect to this is disastrous and will produce the same results for natural gas and natural gas prices as the government's experiment with electricity deregulation has produced in that case, where prices are continuing to go up. We've seen already with electricity prices that they have increased in the three years since deregulation between 40 and 100 percent, depending where you live. The place where it's gone up about 40 percent – I'm sorry; I think it's closer to 60 percent – is in the ATCO area. Now, with the move to flow-through pricing for electricity, the prices for April in that particular distribution area will be based on the prices from this March; that is, the prices we have today. So if you watch those prices – and you can look them up – they have exceeded for the past period of time 10 cents a kilowatt-hour, and if that continues for the rest of this month, then the people in the ATCO service area will be charged an increase on their electricity bills of 120 percent over and above what they are now paying, and that is going to be a disaster not just for those people but for the people representing them.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, are you rising to speak?

5:00

Mr. Knight: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, there certainly has been a lot of discussion here this afternoon about disasters. However, I think that it needs to be pointed out here that deregulation is not one of those. Deregulation isn't now nor will it be in the future a disaster. It's claimed to be a disaster because of the situation that we find ourselves in currently in North America with respect to the price of energy and whether or not it is the responsibility of the government to shield consumers from the price of energy. That's a bit of a global issue. It certainly is a North American issue, and we are tied into that system.

There are some disasters, however, Mr. Chairman, that do have effect on the price of energy in North America, and most certainly here we're discussing situations with respect to public utilities and private utilities and mixes of the two and where private utilities should get regulation from or where they shouldn't. Do we deregulate them, reregulate them? One of the disasters that we have seen recently is certainly the situation in Venezuela and the inability of the Venezuelan system, public and regulated, to continue to supply a product into the marketplace. It caused a complete collapse of Venezuela's contribution into the North American energy picture. That was one of the disasters that caused a bit of a price spike with respect to hydrocarbon in North America. Certainly, the situation that we currently find ourselves in in the Mid East is another one. We do have some problems that we have faced over this last winter with respect to the weather that have pushed up the prices of natural gas.

Production shortfalls. The member indicated that there certainly were some difficulties with respect to production. In Canada the export market to the U.S. for us has not increased. The member suggested that we are rushing to export all of our gas into the U.S. market. The fact is that Alberta had a 3.5 percent decline in exports to the U.S. over the last year. For the continental U.S.A., interesting to note, their conventional production of natural gas also declined about 5 percent, which has added again to the high cost of energy over the period of the last two or three months.

However, Mr. Chairman, there is globally a surplus of methane. The problem that we have with methane is not that there isn't enough of it; it's just that it's in the wrong places. The technology with respect to transporting methane globally has made some huge strides in the last few years. Certainly, with the coming to the marketplace of a situation where we see some new technology with respect to glass fibre wound tanks being transported on oceangoing tankers very similar to the oil tankers that we now are familiar with, we'll be able to transport compressed natural gas, probably in the order of two bcf per trip. In the next 10 years I'm sure that we'll see this technology approaching North America's shores, and that, along with liquified natural gas that we have used for 25-plus years now globally, will help to stabilize the prices of methane in the marketplace over the next few short years.

So the disaster is not deregulation. Certainly, deregulation had at one point in time perhaps contributed, because there always is some uncertainty when you look at the changes in legislation required to do something as bold as deregulate these industries.

The other situation with respect to natural gas – and we're speaking, of course, about Bill 19, so it's maybe on topic to speak about the U.S. multifuel generation system. Of course, when Venezuela and the Mid East went a little bit crossways in recent months, natural gas became a fuel of choice not only for reasons of trying to comply with emissions, but also there's a shortfall in the crude required to fire some generating stations. When you connect that with the weather and the requirement for power on the U.S. eastern seaboard and the midwest United States, certainly it pushed up the requirement for natural gas. We saw a historic drawdown on the storage caverns both in Alberta and certainly in the U.S. system. There was about an 800-bcf drawdown, I believe, at the end of last month with respect to the U.S. system, and it will require a certain amount of activity in the industry in order to replace that capacity.

To get around to some of the questions more specifically with respect to Bill 19 and the provision of some sort of protection for customers and the idea that customers are going to be left holding the bag or that the situation with respect to choice is being forced on them, that they're not asking for the choice and they don't want the choice, that they just want a bill and they want a low bill – I would agree that not many of us appreciate bills that we consider to be out of the realm of kind of average, and they have been, certainly in the last two or three months, anything but average. In my own experience, I live on a farm a couple of hundred miles northwest of Edmonton. My average bill from a rural gas co-op over the last three years for the winter months has been about $150 to $175. Interesting to note that when I opened the last one, it was $398, and certainly the picture won't be any prettier with the next bill. However, on consultation it has been indicated to me that in this difficulty that we face, although we will have to pay for the energy we use, they will allow a system where we can spread our payments out over the next six or eight months, I believe, maybe till the end of September, to help ease the shock of these last few months of certainly high consumption because of the weather and high prices because of some of the things that we have indicated here earlier.

When you get back to the situation again with the rural gas co-ops and their request or not request to have choice, certainly the legislation here will deal with that. I believe that the hon. member had spent a considerable amount of time with a task force with respect to rural gas co-ops. They have reached an agreement that I understand the co-ops are reasonably happy with, and that is that in order for choice to be implemented in any particular rural gas co-op, it will take a two-thirds majority vote of a special meeting called by the board of directors for that specific purpose. So we're not forcing the choice on any rural gas co-ops. They do have a mechanism to bring in choice if they require it or want it.

There were some comments made with respect to the government of Alberta allowing some percentage – perhaps it was higher than 50 percent – of Alberta's natural gas to be exported in a raw state. That's an interesting comment because to the best of my knowledge I actually don't know of any gas that's produced in the province of Alberta that leaves our borders in a raw state. I'm kind of thinking about the export pipelines, and I think I have a reasonable picture in my mind where they are and where they go and what's in them.

If the member was discussing or commenting on gas that's in the Alliance pipeline – and I presume that that is the gas that you're speaking about – very interesting for you, perhaps, to take a look at where that gas comes from. In fact, none of that gas, that I know of, that's in the Alliance pipeline is raw gas. None of it. For the gas that is rich gas, the specs on the Alliance pipeline are slightly different than the specs on the other export transmission lines that leave Canada. Of the gas in the Alliance gas pipeline, depending on the day, between 60 and 80 percent belongs to the province of British Columbia. We have absolutely no control over what liquids they do or do not ship. The gas does not belong to Albertans. We have on any given day between 30 and 40, 45 percent of that gas, all of which is processed to some degree. So no raw gas, to my knowledge, leaves the province of Alberta, and those liquids are not sold outside of the province of Alberta to the benefit of other people, companies, foreigners, or others.

So, Mr. Chairman, those are a few comments that I have with respect to some of the debate and some of the issues that are surrounding the debate. Certainly, I think that we've had some good comments on both sides, and I would be pleased to hear a response from the members opposite with respect to Alliance gas and the price of – and let's be clear – methane in the marketplace in North America.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have just a few brief comments to add to this because my friend from Edmonton-Highlands was so eloquent, and he drove me to search for yet another quote, this time not from the patron saint, which I freely acknowledge, Margaret Thatcher, a woman of tremendous steel that, as mentioned earlier, almost single-handedly brought the British economy out of the depths of despair and darkness into the bright sunshine of a better day. I see that it's bringing tears to the eyes of my friend from Edmonton-Highlands. My friend from Edmonton-Highlands also mentioned dogma and said that ideology is perhaps a step ahead of dogma and that those of us who would perhaps use dogma as a crutch would find our karma being eaten by our dogma. I don't think so, but I do think that straight reliance on ideology or dogma is a crutch that prevents us from having to think on our own about a particular subject that may be coming to the fore. It's our responsibility not to be trapped in the pit of ideology or dogma. That's why I would urge members opposite to consider the words of Thomas Jefferson, surely – surely – a hero of all democrats, democrats from either side of the aisle.

An Hon. Member: Old and New.

Mr. McClelland: Democrats old and new.

Thomas Jefferson, by the way, invented the angle on the plow, an interesting little bit of information for Trivial Pursuit fans. Thirty degrees is the angle, the optimum angle of a plow. Can you imagine the money that he could have made out of that? Except he felt that there are some things that man's ingenuity brings forth that belong to the common good. He was in charge of the U.S. patent office, and he did not take out a patent on that. He said it belonged to the common good. Quite a man.

One of the quotes that I'm sure my friend from Edmonton-Highlands will take comfort in and that will give him support as he goes into this deregulated world where he hears a buzz on his telephone, his alone:

If people let government decide what foods they eat and what medicines they take, their bodies will soon be in as sorry a state as are the souls of those who live under tyranny.

Now, of course, the context was entirely different at that time. When he made that quote, I would think that he was thinking more in terms of whether the food and the medicine they took were from a republican from the New World ideal or from the Old World.

As members know, that was part of the great debate when the United States really became the first modern democracy that gave individuals, regardless of their status, equal opportunity to succeed. That was the magic of the New World, I'm sure people would agree, and Thomas Jefferson was a bright light, a beacon of hope to many in the world. He placed economy and the capacity of the private sector to bring the best of whatever human ingenuity could bring to the table at the first of the capacity of the New World to be different from the Old World, to give opportunity to people because of their ingenuity and their own innate capacity and capability.

So when we talk about ideology and about a strength and a sense of faith in a free market, we don't do so blindly and we don't do so without the full knowledge that we serving the public have a fiduciary trust responsibility to ensure that the very misuse of an oligopoly or of a monopoly does not take place. We cannot allow ourselves to be so ideologically narrow that we would not think that an advantage that could be taken would be taken advantage of. That's why we have to be vigilant, and that's why this member, for one, salutes the opposition for ensuring that things don't just slip through.

I would encourage my friends opposite that when this debate is done, as surely it will be done – in a democracy we have the responsibility to try to bring others to our point of view. That's a cornerstone of democracy. We have the free and unfettered right to try to persuade others to our point of view, and at the end of the day if we are not successful, we have the obligation to join with the majority and go forward together. That's how democracy works. That's the foundation of democracy. If we don't do that, if we don't see that we have the obligation after a debate to join with the majority and go forth together, then we are doomed forever to go into ever smaller, narrower groups of self-interest, and that is not the aggregation of interest that results in the public service being served.

5:20

Now, I know that my friends opposite, particularly the Liberals, understand the innate wisdom of those words because they are from an icon of the Liberals here in our country, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, who uttered those very words, that in a democracy we have the right and the responsibility to try to bring others to our point of view, and if we're not successful, we have the obligation to join with the majority in the common good.

I ask my friends opposite to join with the majority in the common good, and we'll go on to the next battle.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Date: 2003/03/18

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 30

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Government House Leader on behalf of.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move for second reading Bill 30, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003.

As all members of the House know, we brought forward in Committee of Supply estimates letters from Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor recommending to the House that we have interim supply. It's necessary to provide interim supply because, as all members know, the budget comes down on the 8th of April, and we will then have a full month to . . . [interjection] Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will move right along and move second reading of Bill 30.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise tonight to debate the process in second reading of Bill 30. This is, basically, the bill that now puts in place the legislative authority for the Committee of Supply of last week. So we want to kind of look at the process of what we're doing as much as anything.

I guess one of the things that we have to start with early on in this discussion is the fact that this interim supply is quite different from the interim supplies that we've had in previous years. Recognizing that time constraint with the 1st of April start of the fiscal year, we end up needing authorization for expenditures to begin the first of the fiscal year, but we don't always have the budget completed at that time.

I guess the thing that's unique about this year is the fact that as we go through this, we don't have a budget document to tie the interim supply to. I know that that, in effect, doesn't influence the operation of ministries very much, because they do have the authorized power to move money around within their ministry as they see fit anyway, even after we approve a budget. But the thing is that for MLAs to critically evaluate what the Crown is asking for in the ministry, what we need to know is: how does that fit with the budgeting process? What percentage of the budget is represented by the interim supply? We know it varies by ministry, but it doesn't give us much to go on, because we don't have that base budget for fiscal year changes that we've always had in other years when we've been dealing with interim supply. It's generally been a process that's occurred halfway through budget deliberation so that we, in effect, have that document. I guess the thing that we need to deal with here is the idea that we are not as informed this year as we usually are by having that budget in process when we debate interim supply.

So what we're dealing with here, you know, is just blanket authorization of money for the ministries to spend. This leads to a lot of questions that come up in terms of: how do we go about now and begin our planning processes as we start looking at this over the next number of weeks, possibly months, until we're finished with the budget? We start on the 8th of April. Where do we end up by the time the budget process is finished? It could be, you know, late May, possibly the start of June. In effect, what we've got, then, is the government operating with no program guidelines, no message being sent to agencies that use those dollars, like school boards, health authorities, children's authorities, local governments. They don't have the kind of information that they would have had if the budget had been in the process of being debated.

So I guess the question that comes up as we look at this is: what is it that sets this year apart so that the government is so late in bringing forward a budget? You know, the normal process is to blame the feds – right? – because they interrupted our budgeting process by having the gall to come forward with their own budget halfway through our process. But that doesn't really hold much when you look at it in terms of real process, because all we're dealing with are revenues that are going to be transferred down from the feds and how that fits into our budget. That kind of thing could have been adopted and fairly easily built into the budgeting process after the federal budget came down in late February. So the idea that it's almost two months after the federal budget before we can come up with our budget, to me, Mr. Speaker, doesn't hold much of an argument in terms of why we're so late this year.

So one has to put some other questions out there about what is going on. What has happened that the government couldn't finalize a budgeting process this year? You know, the volatility of revenues and the projections for revenues for the next year should have led the government to a reasonable expectation that they could have built this budget around the second year of last year's business plan and the fact that we're going to have dollars available because of the surplus this year to start a stability fund, which would then be there for us if some uncertainties were to arise during the next budgeting year. I guess the real question is: what happened this year that the budget was so late? It's really raising some concerns about: how do we operate as a province? What kind of planning can we do as a province? This delay and the uncertainty that gets created by this really start to reflect on whether or not we are really sending the right signals.

Mr. Speaker, this is where I think I get a chance now to talk about the fourth component of our fiscal plan that we keep talking about. The other three now have been basically adopted by the government, and I'd like to see the fourth one as well. That is, for any given budget the second year of the previous year's business plan becomes the basis for the next budget, and that has to be built on and prorated each year, based on per capita and productivity changes, so that we end up with, in effect, a really strong message being sent out there about a base budget for the year. Then bringing forward a budget is really fine-tuning it. It's a decision process that shows that we want to move money from one program that's now complete to a new program or to supplement an ongoing program or to in effect cut back expenditures for the province.

These are the kinds of things that we need to be more explicit about. This kind of a budgeting process, where there's always the uncertainty that gets reflected in the government's lack of consistency and lack of predictability in their budgeting processes, really leaves us in a situation where we should be looking at whether or not this is going to in effect stabilize and give us reasonable planning and reasonable direction for where we want to go.

So the process that we want to go through, then, is to look at that in terms of making sure that any kind of a budget expectation should almost have fixed dates through the year. The government has been getting fairly consistent now at starting session in early February, usually the second or third week in February. You know, it would be great if we could institutionalize the same kind of thing about budgeting, say, being the last week in February. Then we could have it effectively through the process of approval by the time a budget year starts on the 1st of April so that we don't end up with all the uncertainty that gets passed on to the agencies that depend on the government for their funding. This is the kind of thing that we really need to be able to look at in terms of being able to work with the community groups, that more and more are responsible for delivering those services.

If we don't as a province put some predictability and consistency into our budgeting process, what do we expect, then, from those agencies? How do school boards finalize their budgets so that they can start dealing with staff, dealing with changes in school openings, classroom sizes, that kind of issue, until they get a budget? So, you know, it's really important that we be consistent and be in a position to facilitate proper decision-making and full decision-making by these agencies. To have them go through "Let's guess at our budget process" right now and then, when they do get the budget, have to go through the process again, that in effect wastes dollars that could be in the service delivery areas. We want to make sure that that doesn't detract from how we go about providing those services in a cost-effective way. We don't want to in effect create an overhead budget problem, because we're going to be dealing with the issues of uncertainty associated with not knowing what their budget is at the time they have to start operating under that budget. So that's what's important about having some consistency and some timing expectation associated with the budgeting process.

As you go through the document of Bill 30 and look at the different ministries, there are obviously different percentages allocated to the ministries. You know, it's not all consistent with, say, a three-month budget or a four-month budget being a quarter or a third of the total expenditures. Without having anything else in front of us, we have to make the assumption that this kind of reflects the in-year expenditure pattern. Some ministries spend more at the early part of the fiscal year; some spend more or less at other times.

You know, I think that really brings us back to the whole idea that we have to have some kind of planning process that gets accountability. Mr. Speaker, I was traveling the province in the last couple of weeks, and I ran into an individual who was kind of shaking his head at a phone call that he'd received that week. He had been a fairly regular supplier of material or services to the government, and he got a phone call from one of the people that he'd been dealing with saying: you know, we've got a bunch of money we've got to spend before the end of March. Well, that kind of message being distributed through communities really raises some issues about how accurately and how well we plan our budgeting processes. I don't want to in any way jeopardize that individual's relationship with the government, but the expenditures that he talked about making were in a program area that, to the best of my knowledge, is not an ongoing program.

Why are there a number of expenditures right at the end of the fiscal year when the program, in effect, is phasing out? These were not phaseout or closeout types of expenditures; they were asset expenditures. So with a program that's closing out, why do you need additional assets? You kind of wonder what process was going on in terms of getting those kinds of end of the year budget-clearing activities.

It would be, I think, more appropriate if we had the budget document in hand. Then I could be looking at it and saying: well, okay; I was operating under misinformation or incomplete information because I thought the program was ending, yet according to the budget there are actually going to be expenditures in that program next year, so it might be reasonable for these kinds of asset expenditures at the end of a year. But, you know, that's the kind of question that comes up when we don't have a full disclosure and we're trying to debate and question what government expenditures hope to achieve.

Now, the idea that we're dealing here with interim supply. We'll get to address those issues after the 8th of April, when the budget is fully brought into place. You'll hear the story again at that time probably, and that means that in effect we'll be judging whether or not the kinds of things we're hearing in the community do reflect what is actually happening in this interim supply. You know, when you kind of look at it, it's awful hard to recognize that we're dealing with what is, in a sense, a couple of months' worth of expenditures in the budget when we're not really going to be able to know with any degree of accuracy where those dollars are going, where they're going to be put. So the main thing that we have to look at is: are we going to make sure that this budget process leads to that kind of support for and ability for the agencies that we've got out there to plan so we can really make sure we're dealing with them from the point of sending the right signals to them?

It's quite interesting in the sense that, you know, this year we're authorizing significantly more money for most of the departments than we did in interim supply last year. I guess that means that we're looking at the possibility of a longer time before the government expects the budget to be approved or whether or not it's just a matter of: they ran it too close last year; they want to have a little more this year. Yet we're trying to look at creating accountability and openness in this process, and that's kind of the basis for the comments that we're making that we can't judge what's going on when all we get is a set of numbers in a five-page document. The role that we're supposed to play dealing with the budgeting process is to be able to question government expenditures, yet when it comes to us in this form, as the opposition it's impossible for us to make any kind of a strong judgment about what is there.

I think that if we're going to convey to Albertans that we're serious about being an open process here, having full debate of what we're doing with their money, then what we should be doing is making sure that processes are in place for that kind of transparency, and we need to make sure that the budget document is available in a time frame that we have it when we start talking about spending parts of the money on a ministerial level expenditure base. The main focus there is to make sure that, in effect, as we look at the budgeting processes, the analysis that comes up – or even when we were in Committee of Supply on the debate on these bills, it's really difficult to talk about what is there when you don't have line items and all you can do is relate expenditure patterns here to comments that have been made by ministers with respect to expected changes in their programs or expected changes in their budget processes. We look at this in the context of where it might be going, and we don't really see much in the context of revenue-side estimates to balance what we're seeing here in expenditures.

We have to make an assumption that, in effect, this expenditure pattern over the period that it's authorized for – you know, it's interesting that we're authorizing it for the entire year because all of the little clauses in the bill talk about expenditures for operating expense or capital expense up to and including March 31, 2004. So this is a full year's expenditure possibility. I know full well that it'll all be gone long before that, but the main thing is that it gives a part of a budget for a full year's expenditure program, yet when we were in Committee of Supply debating this, there was no ability to relate it to the programs that potentially will be offered by those ministries or to go back and look at potential revenues, changes in revenues, what impact this might have with respect to the status of the budget.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, in many of the departments this is much bigger than last year, yet what we're dealing with is the idea that we have no basis to tie that into the revenue stream. If we're going to be assuming it's over the same number of weeks or months of expenditure, then obviously the budget for this year is going to be significantly bigger than last year's was. Well, is that a fair implication to be sending by putting this out without any revenue-side comparisons? We've got to be looking at this in the context of: is it reasonable for the next year? Is it operational for the next year? Will we be able to make it work? Will we be able to balance it with our revenues? Yet there's nothing in here that talks about where we will be expecting those revenues to come from, what basis they have for the significant changes that go on in some of those departments compared to the interim supply from last year. By that, I mean not only ups and downs but relative to other ministries. Why is it that we see such big shifts of the total dollars being spent by ministry this year?

You would expect that there would be some degree of consistency if we're looking at the same movement through a fiscal year, that they should have the same relative expenditures early in the year versus later in the year. That's the kind of approach that we think would really make the process work better, would be able to help so that as we go out to Albertans and they say, "Well, what's happening? You're not voting on the budget until May or something," you can say, "Well, we had a good view of the budget in the interim supply." Under this basis right now it's hard to say what the budget might look like from this interim supply.

That's, I guess, one of the other issues that I need to put on the record at least, that it was very difficult when we were in Committee of Supply on the interim supply estimates because what happens is that when you ask questions about those expenditures – why they were different from last year, how they related to last year's expenditures – the response that comes back from ministers is: well, we can't talk about that, because we don't want to disclose the budget. You know, I guess if that's the kind of attitude that's going to be involved in providing interim supply, what we need to do is, in effect, change the interim supply process more into the special-warrant process that occurs outside of session. What we have here is authorizing money that we have no idea and no ability to question how it's being spent.

That's the same thing that happens when you have special warrants outside the session except that it's cabinet that approves it as opposed to the Legislature. You know, when you don't have debate on it, what's the significance of our legislative vote as opposed to a government cabinet vote? In effect, what the government is trying to do is move this more and more into a secret, closed-door, behind-the-door process rather than having it open and out where we can effectively say: why are dollars being spent in certain ways at this time of the year when budgets are still being planned and we can't get a real good sense of what's needed to be done to make the process work?

Mr. Speaker, as I kind of wind down here and make some final comments, as someone who looks at this and says, "What do I tell my constituents when they ask what we did in terms of interim supply debate?" I'm not going to be in a position to be able to give them very much information about what we were doing, what we were expecting, what the government was telling Albertans about their expenditures when we voted to spend more than $5 billion of their money. I think that really should make all of us a little bit uneasy when we're in effect committing $5 billion of Alberta taxpayers' and other revenue sources of dollars to programs that we have no basis to judge, no basis to compare to last year, no basis to compare to what we're hearing in the communities. I think that this really creates an accountability problem for us here in the Legislature as we look at this and say: what's going on? Why are we not providing Albertans with a degree of information that'll let them judge what we're doing when we vote in excess of $5 billion for programs?

So, Mr. Speaker, I guess this is one of those bills that we have to have, but it's one of the bills that you kind of just feel like: how do we justify voting for it? The services that Albertans want from their government have to be there on the 1st of April, have to be available while we do the rest of the budgeting process. I guess all we can do right now is truly, you know, hold our nose and say: let's get on with it so we can see the budget on the 8th of April and hope that the explanations that we need will be available at that time. From the perspective of going back to my constituents now and saying, "I did a good job by you by voting for this," I'd have a real tough time trying to do that and feel that I was serving them well as their MLA.

I guess the question here is: next year let's make sure that the budget document is available by the time we start dealing with interim supply. Because of the fiscal year status relative to the first of the year and the process of getting the Legislature started, it's probably a little bit farfetched to ask the government to make sure that the budget is approved before the 1st of April so that we can get proper debate. But at least by having the budget document in the public domain by the time we vote on this, there's a greater degree of connection between what we're doing here and the ability to go out to our communities and tell our constituents that, yes, we worked on their behalf, and we worked in a way that will be accountable, that they can follow through and see that we worked on them.

As we go through this process, it's important that we try to do better next year. This is the 11th budget that I've debated since being in the Legislature, and I have to say: it's the worst budget process that we've had in the whole 11 years.

Rev. Abbott: You said that last year.

Dr. Nicol: Just in response to the member across the hall who said that I said that last year, that's a real bad admission by that member over there because it means his government is going downhill instead of making improvements over what we evaluated last year. That's the thing that we have to be afraid of, Mr. Speaker, and make sure that next year we go uphill, get the budget on the record before we have to vote for interim supply.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a second time]

8:30head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 27

Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just some comments I wanted to make. I know the minister is not here this evening, but maybe he could reply to me.

The health care staff out in Whitecourt-St. Anne have provided great service to my constituents. I often have time to talk to both the providers and the users of our health care system, and they've gotten to be good friends. The questions that the providers have on Bill 27 are few but very important to them. They are concerned that Bill 27 might remove their ability to fairly and freely negotiate with their employers. I would like the minister to address this for me.

As the MLA for Whitecourt-St. Anne I'm concerned that our rural health care facilities are able to keep and attract nurses and other health care professionals. Again, if the minister can give me assurance that Bill 27 will not negatively impact the staffing out in my constituency, I'd feel much better.

Those are my comments. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Chairman. I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003. This legislation strikes the necessary balance between the right to be treated fairly as a worker and the right to be a patient receiving care. The amendments facilitate better operations, fairer working conditions, and more effective and seamless patient care.

Albertans should be proud of our health care system. It is one of the best and most progressive in Canada for patients and caregivers alike, but this did not happen by accident. We are leaders in health care because we understand that to be the best means finding new ways of delivering health care and being committed to a vision.

When we started down the road toward health reform, we understood that the road was going to get rough from time to time. We also understood that we must stick to our vision and make the necessary changes that bring us closer to better patient care for all Albertans. This means we must be flexible and willing to adapt where we see a need for change. That is what Bill 27 is about. It provides the health regions with the flexibility they need to use the workforce to the best of its ability. It provides a level playing field and fairness for workers. It ensures that health care workers are available and that patients can count on those services at all times.

I'm particularly interested in the common dispute resolution mechanism that is established in this legislation. This is an area that the MLA review committee on ambulance service delivery closely looked at. In Canada there are some services that are so important to the public's well-being that the right to strike is withheld. In Alberta that includes people who work in hospitals, firefighters, and police officers. If these groups cannot come to a settlement on their own, they use compulsory arbitration to resolve these disputes.

Mr. Chairman, I've been an employee of the Calgary Police Service for 25 years. During my 25 years as a member I had the opportunity to work as an association representative for 10 years as well as a management representative sitting across the table from the association for three years negotiating contracts. We didn't have the ability to strike or the right to strike, but I can guarantee you this: the arbitration awards were always fair. The arbitrator himself was always selected mutually with both parties in agreement as to who that arbitrator should be. Firefighters and police officers have resolved their disputes successfully through compulsory arbitration for decades. In Alberta those same firefighters, police officers, and nurses are amongst the highest paid in Canada.

In the regional health authorities even the threat of a strike affects services to patients. If you can't be certain that the health workers will be there to care for a patient, surgeries begin to be canceled and key people are pulled away from managing patient care to work on contingency plans. Health services and the authorities are so interconnected that you can't draw lines around certain groups of workers. If a person on early discharge from hospital can't get their IV drugs administered by a community nurse, people get backed up in the hospital, wait times increase, and more people have to be turned away. Having the right to strike in one part of the system affects the entire system, and we have seen health workers manage to negotiate very competitive salaries and benefit packages even when they do not have the right to strike. Currently 90 percent of the regional authority employees do not have the right to strike, and compulsory resolution is consistent with the dispute resolution process that most health care workers work under. As the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness said, reform is about being "responsive to the needs of Albertans and to the needs of health care providers." This legislation is a means to provide that responsiveness.

Bill 27 is necessary legislation to move health reform forward, reforms that will see Albertans enjoying improved access, expansion of primary health care, a stronger workforce, better collaboration among regions, and ongoing sustainability. Bill 27 is not the answer to health reform, but it is a necessary step on the road to reform. Providing our regional health authorities with the flexibility to develop the best team of health professionals helps Alberta's health system remain the best place to work and receive care.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise this evening in committee and participate in the debate on Bill 27. Certainly a lot has happened in less than 24 hours since we debated this bill at second reading. I listened with a great deal of interest to the previous speakers, and certainly with the firefighters and the police services across the province there has been balance and fair labour relations. The city of Edmonton firefighters are a model for a lot of different groups across the country that do provide essential services in that way, but I don't think that the nurses with Bill 27 can show much faith or confidence in any form of compulsory arbitration when we look at the wide-open window which is the regulations to this bill. If there's anything that would cause this member concern, it's these regulations. Now, what they will become, who's to say? But it is my view – and I expressed it last night certainly with section 162.1(1)(f) – we can eliminate an entire step in the collective bargaining process by mediation or going directly to the board.

Now, since we had a discussion on this at second reading, I see where the union, the Alberta Federation of Labour to be exact – and this is information from today. For more information regarding this concern regarding Bill 27, some unions in this province have launched a NAFTA challenge of this proposed labour bill. We thought last night that perhaps it would be prudent to have another look at this legislation, but obviously the will of the Assembly was not there. So less than 24 hours later, Mr. Chairman, here we go with a statement from the Alberta Federation of Labour that Bill 27 would strip all fairness and balance from negotiations in the health sector. Mr. Steel, who is present in the public gallery for the debate tonight, is one of the organizers and spokespersons in regard to this matter. I think we in this Assembly should take this matter quite seriously.

If the Alberta Federation of Labour and seven unions representing health care workers in the province have decided to launch a formal challenge to Bill 27 and the amendments that are incorporated in Bill 27 on the grounds that it violates the NAFTA side agreement on labour, I would think that it's certainly time for – perhaps the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment doesn't have the time himself – officials in his department to maybe talk to this lawyer.

Now, the union's brief to the NAFTA administration office has been prepared by Mr. Robert Blair, described as a prominent Edmonton labour lawyer and the former chief of the Alberta Labour Relations Board. So this individual knows a great deal about this issue, and I think we should have, again, another look at this issue.

One of the key features, according to the Alberta Federation of Labour, of Bill 27 is that it robs health care workers and their unions of the right to due process when it comes to basic labour relations. This is a statement from Mr. Steel. We had quite a discussion on this and a lengthy discussion, granted, last night. There were many members on this side of the House who expressed similar concerns.

Now, the Federation of Labour also has this to say, and it is a quote: this is a clear violation of the obligations outlined under the North American agreement on labour co-operation, better known as the NAFTA side agreement on labour. The agreement was entered into in 1995 by a then labour minister who went on to a certain notoriety in Ottawa, the former Member for Red Deer-North, on behalf of the Alberta government. The labour minister signed this deal on behalf of the Alberta government, and it's still in force today.

Where the union is coming from on this, Mr. Chairman – the union complaint, which will be filed later this month, argues that Bill 27 violates part 2, section 5 of the North American agreement on labour co-operation, which says that each party – Canada, the United States, and Mexico – shall ensure that all labour relations proceedings “comply with due process of law.” This is very interesting. If you don't have a copy of this document, it is available at www.afl.org for any of you who have a laptop, because this is quite interesting.

Mr. Chairman, as it stands right now, the Alberta Labour Relations Board administers the rules governing collective bargaining in Alberta, but they decide whom the unions can bargain for, when they can bargain, how they can bargain, and even sometimes what they can bargain. The Alberta Labour Relations Board is bound by law to exercise its authority in an evenhanded manner. In particular, before making any decisions, the board conducts formal hearings at which all parties have the right to state their case publicly. The board then makes its decision based on the law and the evidence. It is exactly the impartial and balanced approach, a process that respects both sides in labour relations, that is being thrown out by Bill 27, and this is a concern, again, from Mr. Les Steel.

Basically, with Bill 27 the government is breaking its promises again. We've had many broken promises with this government, and this could be added to a long list. Bill 27, according to the Alberta Federation of Labour, is breaking its promises under NAFTA and completely short-circuiting the Labour Relations Board process. Instead of decisions being made with input from all parties, the power is going to be transferred to the provincial cabinet. There will be, in their estimation, no fair hearing for health care workers and no due process. It will be a kangaroo court. This is a concern, again, that was expressed last night. Of course, I was disappointed when we didn't decide to put a six-month freeze on this bill and have another look at it. We're going full steam ahead with this.

Now, people are very concerned about this bill, and one of them, of course, is Mr. Blair, whom I mentioned earlier. His concern with Bill 27 is that it will give the cabinet power to determine appropriate bargaining units in health care, to determine which unions emerge as bargaining agents after regional health authorities have been amalgamated, and to determine which collective agreements are going to govern in those new bargaining units. So the cabinet is going to make this decision. On one hand and in one bill we have the argument being made where choice is good. Choice is good. We can have choice for electricity providers, choice for natural gas providers, but we're not going to give the health care workers any choice.

Mr. Dunford: You're wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. minister says that that statement is wrong, and certainly I would welcome his input in debate on this matter, Mr. Chairman.

This is a serious departure from past practice and in clear violation of our commitment to due process under NAFTA, maintains Mr. Blair.

Now, the Labour Relations Board has traditionally maintained its impartiality by engaging in a very careful balancing act between the interests of the employer and the workers, but with Bill 27 the government is throwing out all pretense of impartiality. We have to take the words of this learned fellow very seriously, and we have to study this. Again, Mr. Chairman, I'm urging all members to have a close second look at just what this gentleman has studied in this proposed bill. I think we should have a look at this, and we should examine this thoroughly.

When we have a complaint of this nature being filed, Mr. Chairman, and it is filed jointly by the Alberta Federation of Labour, the United Nurses of Alberta, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, the Communications, Energy & Paperworkers Union of Canada, the United Food & Commercial Workers' International Union, the United Steelworkers of America, and the International Union of Operating Engineers – that is a large group, and that group wants to be part and parcel of a vibrant, progressive province. They don't want to be treated any differently than anyone else. They want to be treated with fairness, and they want to know that whenever they have an issue surrounding collective bargaining, it will be dealt with in a timely fashion and, again, with impartiality.

After reading this, my concerns, as I outlined them last night, Mr. Chairman, are deeper than ever regarding this bill. I think that when you look at the whole issue of essential services and the fact that it's not fair and it's not balanced and that some nurses in the public sector have lost their right to strike and others who are working in private nursing homes have not – no one has explained to me how this is fair and why one group loses their rights and another does not. I hope that this is not done on purpose. I can't see this being done on purpose. Why would we in this Assembly devise a law that's going to pit one group of workers against the other? That is what I'm afraid can happen here by, let's say, pitting the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees against the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Mr. Dunford: It happens all the time.

Mr. MacDonald: If we're going to have this happening all the time, as the hon. minister states, how is that going to improve relations? Certainly, one group at the certification process can try to attract workers to their union, but let them work it out. Let's not take perfectly good sectors and throw one group after another. Let AUPE and CUPE go to the private nursing homes, and if conditions are right, then unions will be formed because the workers will see that it's in their interest to get together so that they can have a common voice.

There's an old adage not only in Alberta but across the country that bad employers attract good unions. That's where competition belongs in the union movement; it's to have them go out and spread their message, organize the unorganized. It would be very easy for them to organize the unorganized if there is a poor employer or an employer that does not see them as a resource but looks at them as a commodity. I think we should always, if we're going to have productive labour relations, see our workforce as a resource. Workers are not commodities.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I will conclude my remarks regarding Bill 27, and I will be anxious to hear the comments from others, particularly in light of this development today where the Federation of Labour is launching a NAFTA challenge to this proposed bill.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I know that there are members on both sides of the House that want to enter into the debate. One of the terms that's come into our jargon is mid-course corrections. One of the things we need to do if we see any member getting steered off a little bit is try to bring them back in line or at least in the direction very, very quickly before the rhetoric gets totally lost on us. I think it's important that we do that.

One of the things that I'm hearing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talk about is a concern about cabinet somehow picking the union or picking the collective agreement. Of course, we have to be clear, I think, about this particular area. Yes, there are going to be regulations that go along with this act, and this is causing some concerns, as has been articulated not only here in the House but also outside this Legislative Assembly. Basically, I'd just ask you to look at the patterns and processes that are already in place. It's not unusual in labour relations through regulation to bring some powers to the Labour Relations Board. When the hon. member and people both inside and outside the House get to see the finalized regulations, I'm sure that'll cause them a great deal of relief instead of the sort of grief that they currently have as they start thinking about all this boogie-woogie stuff that they keep surmising and of course trying to articulate.

I probably am as happy about today's events as the hon. member. I might even be more happy. I am happy that we have unions in this province that feel so strongly about an issue that they would actually make a NAFTA challenge. I think that is great. I think that shows that over time unions have come to realize what an important aspect NAFTA has been for the province of Alberta. This has been a tremendous trade agreement that has added immensely not only to the number of workers that are employed in this particular province but to the general wealth of workers that are employed in this province.

What I am particularly pleased about today, then, is the fact that here is a legal means that is available to organizations such as the unions that the hon. member listed that now are taking legal action against what we believe to be a legal entity here, Bill 27. I think that's right and proper. As a matter of fact, I have no idea what the press gallery did with this today, because as a member of government I can't expect to be shown in good light all of the time. Certainly, when I heard about the NAFTA challenge and when I was approached by the media, this was extremely refreshing because up until that point the only time the media were approaching me was about what I was going to do in case there was an illegal strike. Very refreshing today, I must say, hon. members, to be able to talk about opposition within a democracy and what they were going to do in legal terms. I think this is extremely important.

Where we need to make a midcourse correction, I think – if we listened closely to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, he talked about pitting a union member against a union member. Now, this happens. In the real world this happens. Unions are very aggressive. Unions just don't go out and try to organize unorganized workers. Unions are no different than any marketing, free enterprise operation in the sense that they try to increase their jurisdiction, they try to increase their mandates, they try to increase their membership. And why shouldn't they? What is wrong with that? In an Alberta that is based on the principles of a market system, who here in this Legislative Assembly could possibly be against it? I'm certainly not.

So what we have here is not something that is abnormal or unusual. If there's anything unusual about it it is the fact that the government is taking a direct hand in saying that, yes, there's going to have to be some reorganizing of the certificates that are existing here in Alberta so that at the end of the day, whenever the end of that day is, we're going to have four certificates within a jurisdiction operated by a regional health authority. We're not saying, hon. members, for one minute which union it has to be.

Dr. Taylor: Of course not.

Mr. Dunford: That's right. Of course not.

We're saying: look; there'll be a democratic vote at some point, and the very people that will be covered, then, by that certificate and then subsequently that collective agreement are going to have a choice on who they pick. It is very, very simple what is taking place here.

As a reference to an earlier question that came from the MLA for Whitecourt-St. Anne, he talked about the concern that people have about removing their ability to fairly and freely negotiate with their employers. That's going to still continue, but the difference is that, like I tried to talk about last night, instead of 400 and some-odd collective agreements that have to be administered, well, throughout this province there are only going to be 36.

You know, I'm not so sure that the unions might not be supportive on this. Can you imagine all the energy and all the resources that they must put into administering 400 and some-odd collective agreements? And here's the government that is going to bring it down to 36, probably going to save them some resources, and at the same time they kind of get to kick us in the shin over it. Actually, they've kind of got it both ways when you think about it. I mean, we're probably doing something that's going to help them eventually, and in the meantime they get to continue with their old position and their traditional position of bashing this government. Actually, I'm not so sure that I shouldn't get with the leader of the Alberta Federation of Labour and maybe tell him what a good deal I think I'm giving him. Would you support that? [interjections] Absolutely. Okay.

An Hon. Member: We might come along for the show.

Mr. Dunford: Well, now, just a minute. I had some invites of people that might want to come along for the show. Now, just be careful.

I am having a little bit of fun, but I want to get serious for a moment. I want to get back to this NAFTA challenge and how important I think this is. I believe that it establishes once again why this government has the respect it has for the Alberta Federation of Labour and for its leadership, not only now but the leadership that it's had in the past. You know, it's really the Federation of Labour that probably gets caught up inside the so-called pitting of unions, as they try to pick a union that will represent them over another union that was currently in existence. So I recognize the role that the Alberta Federation of Labour must have to have as kind of a referee within the union movement. I would think that they would have some understanding, then, of what we have as a government here and then trying to referee the situation that happens in just the normal events of labour relations as it happens here in the province.

But there's no question – and, again, I think I've been straightforward on this – that the reason we have Bill 27 in front of us tonight and the reason that Bill 27 has the title that it has is because there was a request by the employers involved in the reformation, the reorganization of the regional health authorities, and they asked us for some help in this area. The government after some deliberation said: yes, we are willing to help in this particular area. I think it's an exaggeration to suggest that we've gone overboard, that we're trying to switch a balance here in favour of all employers over all unions throughout the province. Again, I want to indicate that this is a specific situation that's been set up for a specific reorganization that is taking place.

There was a concern expressed last night and again tonight about whether or not our changes are going to somehow restrict the ability of people to go into this profession. Now, I might be wrong, but I would bet that there's not one nurse, there's not one licensed practical nurse, there's not one lab tech, there's not one dietician that went into this profession because they would then be able to join a union. I don't think that that's a part of the equation at all. The beauty of the whole situation, though, is that when they became a registered nurse or they became a licensed practical nurse or whatever profession they chose inside the system, in certain occupational capacities they could make, then, a clear choice as to whether or not they wanted to have their individual situation as it related to salary and benefits and working conditions bargained on their behalf by a registered trade union, and that's the way it should be. There's nothing in this bill that takes away from that.

So with those clarifications, thank you, Mr. Chairman, for recognizing me, and I hope this midcourse correction gets us back in the direction in which this bill is truly trying to go.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I would like to enter the debate on Bill 27, Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003. The title of the bill is quite innocent. The argument is given that since the number of health authorities is now cut down to about eight or nine, we need to make some changes in the legislation to reflect the reduction in the number of health care authorities across the province.

On the face of it it looks obviously interesting, reasonable, but I want to start by reflecting on some of the remarks that the Minister of Human Resources and Employment has just made. He's the one minister in this cabinet whose job it is to make sure that both the legislation related to labour rights and the policies governing the relations between employees and employers are even-handed, that they're fair, that he's not taking sides. The minister, I would like to hope, takes that responsibility seriously and interprets his responsibilities in the spirit and the way in which I have interpreted these responsibilities of his. I want to look at his remarks to see whether or not in my judgment he's so doing.

He talks about midcourse correction. I guess this is a term which is rather loose. It can be used in all kinds of ways. He, I guess, was referring to intervening in order to set the course of the debate here in the House midway through this debate ride, but I guess he's also perhaps alluding to the government's midterm crisis, midlife crisis, as it were. It's now desperately looking for ways of creating new issues. Its agenda has failed on deregulation, its agenda on education is blowing in its face, its policies on seniors are coming to haunt it, and now it's trying to create new bogeymen to attack. Its policies on regional health care delivery in rural areas are giving it some concerns. There is a veritable revolt in the rural areas in response to this government's attempt to roll back the services that are available to Albertans who live in small towns, in rural communities, on their farms.

So in order to cover its failures, in order to put a cover on its failed policies and anti ordinary people policies in this province, it's now targeting the union movement. It's targeting radiologists, the radiological technicians, X-ray technicians, nurses, most of whom also happen to be female workers in this province. The attack in this bill on labour rights very seriously has a focus of attacking female workers in this province, most of whom are the frontline workers in our health care service. I challenge the minister of labour to address these points that I'm raising and assure me that that's not what this bill is about.

He is talking in a very, I think, frivolous way about how the labour movement has come to see NAFTA as a benign agreement rather than acknowledging that the concerns of the labour movement must be so serious as to lead them to contemplate undertaking this most expensive lawsuit against this government's desire to dismantle the framework of labour relations that has worked really, really well in this province up to this point and is therefore saying: well, well, yeah, we know that we have pushed the labour movement to the wall. If anyone has their back against the wall, they fight back. That's what the labour movement is doing and is determined to do, it seems from the news release today.

If the minister is really serious and not frivolous about his remarks on the labour movement's attempts to take this matter through the NAFTA process, then he ought to stand here today and say that he is willing to commit his government and his ministry to footing the bill for this legal challenge so that once and for all the labour movement's concern, Alberta Federation of Labour's concern that this bill will violate NAFTA provisions is addressed and addressed not at the cost of the unions that represent custodial workers, janitorial services people, people who keep our hospital floors clean and get the minimum wages to do it for us, that their union membership fees are not used to pay for this NAFTA challenge but that this government in fact, taking the concerns of the labour movement seriously, is ready to pay for the legal costs of the NAFTA challenge that AFL and its affiliates are about to launch. I want the minister's answer to this. If he is serious in his praise of the labour movement, then I think it's incumbent on him to stand up and say that he will in fact find the funds from his own ministry under this government to pay for that. It's good for them, it's good for us, it's good for this Legislature, it's good for this government, it's good for the labour movement to have this matter settled. I'm disappointed but not surprised that the minister will do this. He was not being serious about this.

So Bill 27 is what I've said it is: it's a frontal assault on the democratic rights of Albertans. It's a frontal assault on the internationally recognized human rights of the people working everywhere and the people of Alberta. On the eve of a war that's being taken into a country tomorrow in the name of democracy, I think we need to remember how we got these rights over the centuries. People fought for them. I'm sure the ancestors of most of us were victims of the injustices which brought them to a point where they recognized the need to organize to seek justice, fairness, and dignity for all regardless of whether these people are employees or employers.

A decent society, a good society, a civilized society extends those rights of dignity and fairness and justice to all, and this bill, in my view, is a withdrawal from that commitment. It's turning back the clock. I don't think that I for one am remiss in making note of what I see in this bill, which is really the betrayal of those commitments, which have historical roots. It's those commitments that were made as a society to all employers, employees, and ordinary citizens: powerful and weak, rich and poor, women and men.

Anyone who wants to seek employment in the workplace today I think has the right to expect to be treated fairly, treated in terms of laws that are fair and just and not told: we're going to take away the rights from you because we want to tell you that unless you accept these rules, we won't be able to deliver the health care services in an orderly fashion to Albertans. It's putting at odds with them the sons and daughters of the very people that this government claims to want to provide these services to.

Who are these nurses? Who are these X-ray technicians? Who are these dieticians? Who are these janitors? Who are these custodial workers? These are men and women whose parents are the ones that use these hospitals. This government wants to pit the frontline health care workers against their own parents, against their own brothers and sisters, against their own communities, Mr. Chairman, and that, I think, is a deeply regrettable strategy on the part of this government to divide and rule.

I will not stay silent on this. I want to bring these matters out and put them on the record. It's not a very creditable way, it's not a very good way, it's not a very reasonable way to deal with the changes that we are making and the changes we need in legislation to reflect those changes in the organization of regional health authorities. There are other ways, better ways, more fair ways, just ways of addressing and responding to those changes that are needed as a result of the reduction in the number of health authorities to the eight or nine that we have now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I also want to beg your indulgence to refer to the circumstances that constitute the background to Bill 27. Bill 27 is part of a series of legislative and policy steps that this government has taken to undermine our health care system, to undermine the labour relations framework that has governed the delivery of services within health care. We first had the private hospitals bill, Bill 11. That's been in place. We've got the legal machinery and the legal framework now for private hospitals to set up shop, and we have one already operating. Then we had the Mazankowski report and the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, that was a product of that Bill 11. So the Mazankowski report has been accepted by this government, and the thrust of the agenda of those 46 or 47 recommendations that came out of the so-called Mazankowski report was to shift the costs of health care more and more to the users of those services and of course to facilitate step-by-step growing and progressive privatization of the health care system.

The third is the most recent step: the dismissal in a most contemptuous and regrettable way of the democratically elected members of the regional health authorities. That is the third major step in the progression of steps that this government has taken, all designed cumulatively to undermine the public health care system in this province and in this country. This government has made no apologies about leading the charge on assaulting our public health care system in this province and setting an example for other people in other provinces who think in the same way as this government does to be able to do the same. This contemptuous dismissal of democracy and democratic practices and democratic processes that provided Albertans some assurance that the regional health authorities would have if not a hundred percent at least 66 percent representation through the democratic will openly and freely expressed by Albertans has been now squelched. That's been killed. So that's the third step.

Then we reach Bill 27, Mr. Chairman. This bill is not an isolated bill necessitated all of a sudden overnight by a change in the number of health authorities. It's part of a chain of events. It's part of a systematic attempt on the part of this government to transform our health care system so that we'll never be able to recognize it. If this government continues to be able to do this for another 10 years, it'll turn it into a private, for-profit health care system and a two-tiered health care system.

This Bill 27, then, in my view, is yet another step in the direction of not only weakening the health care system as we know it but of creating space for private, for-profit providers, the so-called private delivery of publicly funded health care services. Private companies don't come into the field unless they get legislative fire walls built around their rights to make profit. We have seen that with respect to Bill 19. Direct Energy wouldn't come into this province unless they are given the freedoms and the liberties that they think they need in order to make a profit.

Here, too, Bill 27 is creating the conditions for private, for-profit providers of health care to find the legislative framework in place which will assure them hefty profits without any roadblocks in their way. They want these legal guarantees, and that's what Bill 27, it seems to me, provides. It does so, as I said, Mr. Chairman, at a huge cost in terms of democratic rights that have been taken away from ordinary Albertans who are willing to work in the front lines of our health care system from janitors and custodial workers all the way up to physiotherapists and nurse practitioners. What's the reward for their willingness to work, for the commitment to provide those services when we need them? To lose the democratic rights that they along with all of us have earned as a result of the centuries of struggle and hard work on the part of democratic forces in our modern societies.

Government's agenda has changed. It's now to privatize, to assure that private, for-profit providers feel confident and assured that they can enter the field without risking their investment. To guarantee them profits, then, the government is willing now to stop talking about the cost-effectiveness of their policies. Whether they have to do with a reduction in the number of health authorities or the dismissal of democratically elected members of the regional health authorities or anything else, the government is now silent on the cost-effectiveness impact of its policies and merely talks about making sure that there remains in place one payer, the so-called public payer, but the delivery of services regardless of cost increasingly would be transferred to private, for-profit health care deliverers.

Having changed its own agenda, having come to the conclusion that its own policies will not lead to a reduction of costs – and we are seeing that, and I think they have come to realize this now – they are now changing the items on their agenda, what they want to accomplish. What they to accomplish is, therefore, privatization, and privatization requires, of course, decimation of the unionized labour force that presently provides the nursing services, health care services to most of us.

There may be another motive here. The health care service providers represented by public unions have of course stood very firmly in support of a public health care system. They opposed the introduction of private, for-profit hospitals in the province, they opposed most of the recommendations of the Mazankowski report, and they have advocated the rights of Albertans to be able to have health care when they need it at a reasonable cost. They are being punished, I guess, for standing up for public health care, and this bill is further evidence of the fact that this government will not spare any man who stands up and defends the public health care system and expresses dissent and opposition to this government's agenda with respect to its own so-called reforms of health care.

So there's a price to be paid, Mr. Chairman, in this context, and much of the price is going to be paid by health care workers. They are going to lose the right to strike. Not only will they lose the right to strike; some of them will not even have the right to join a union. That to me is one of the legacies that this bill will leave behind if it ever becomes a law, and that's why I'm calling on everybody in this Legislature and everyone outside, whether they're members of unions or not, to pay attention to the real intentions and the potential impact of this bill before they decide to support it. This bill does not merit our support. This bill needs to go back to the drawing board and address the issues, some of which have been raised here by other colleagues of mine and some of which I have raised here at this moment. Once we do this, then we can go on to find a better bill to address the issues.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member who has just taken his seat, the hon. member representing Edmonton-Strathcona, a person for whom I have great personal respect and whom I know to be a person of passion, I know to be a person who is entirely committed to the position that he brings to the table and, it must be said, is consistent. Each time our friend representing Edmonton-Strathcona takes to his feet in the Chamber, he's consistent in what he says and essentially how it is said.

I think tonight the argument of our friend representing Edmonton-Strathcona is somewhat overblown, and in my considered opinion his argument is not strengthened when hyperbole is used to suggest that the legislation is anti woman, which it is clearly not; to suggest that it is anti union, which it is clearly not; to suggest that it is anti labour, which it is clearly not. The member asks: who are these people? Who are they? They are X-ray technicians, they are the nurses, and they are the support workers. They are also our brothers, our sisters. They're our mothers and our fathers. They're our neighbours. They're people that we work with shoulder to shoulder. They may be our children. To suggest that somehow there is a divide that divides all of these people who work in the health sector from all other Albertans is just not true, because we are all in this society together and we all have different responsibilities that we bring to the table. They're all human beings deserving of respect, human beings deserving of respect because they are human beings and deserving of respect for what they do, what they do for us as individuals, for us as a society, for Albertans as a whole.

Nothing in this legislation takes anything away from that. This legislation respects the employees. It respects the unions representing the employees. It does create a situation whereby employees are going to have to make a decision and make a decision in their best interests, and they will be the ones making the decision about what union they will belong to. At present, as has been said, there are over 400 collective agreements representing these people who will now be working in nine health regions, and is it not better that people working shoulder to shoulder should have the portability to be able to work within the health region and work shoulder to shoulder beside others who are working under the same terms and conditions?

It respects the employer, and the minister has said that this legislation very clearly comes as a result of a request from the employer because the employer needs to have a much more workable relationship within the bargaining units. Can you imagine over 400 collective agreements and how much better it is for everyone involved, including the employees covered under these agreements, to bring it down to a workable 36?

Finally, this bill respects the taxpayer, the person that eventually pays the freight, and let's not forget that in a province with a budget of something in the region of $20 billion a year, when the direct government expenditures in health care are in the region of $6.5 billion, many of the people that we're discussing today to be covered under these agreements are the very taxpayers that will be funding the agreements in the first place. We can't separate people who work in the health care industry from people who pay taxes and support the very health care industry in which they're working. It's an enormous part of our gross provincial product.

So this is a commonsense approach in the consolidation to nine health authorities, four broad distinctions within the health authorities in bargaining units, and a total of 36 different collective agreements. It provides flexibility for the employees and the employers, it provides consistency for those working side by side, shoulder to shoulder, and it reflects a genuine commitment of the minister and of the department to the collective bargaining process and respect for organized labour and respect for people covered under collective agreements to be treated with respect and to be treated fairly.

The bottom line is that this legislation, in my opinion, is fair to all parties, including the public, the public who are part of this agreement through employment, through management, through use as a patient, and finally as a taxpayer.

Mr. Chairman, I commend this legislation to the House and ask that all members wholeheartedly support it. Thank you.

[Two members rose]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods had indicated that he wanted to speak, hon. member. Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Dr. Massey: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments about Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003. It's interesting to view the context of the legislation that's before us. I think that if we look back, there's been a history of conflict between this government and unions. They certainly haven't a history of getting along with each other, and it's rather curious because the government parades itself often as a populist government. Certainly, the Premier is noted as seeing himself as a populist Premier, yet when it comes to concerns that everyday Albertans hold dear, I think it's interesting that the right to belong to a union and to take appropriate action if your interests are not being served by your employer is not supported by the government claiming to be populist.

So the context of this is an important context. I'm not sure quite what the word is, but when I saw the government describe the legislation as housekeeping, as just a correction, I thought that that is really unfortunate because it is not any of those things. It's not housekeeping. It's not a correction. It's a direct attack on unions and the ability of unions to represent and to serve the interests of their members. So it's, as I said, unfortunate in terms of the way the government is describing the legislation. It's not the minor piece that they would have us believe it is, and I think that everyone in the province now knows that that's to be the case.

Part of the problem, of course, is the brevity of the bill. The main highlights of the bill, I think, are fairly obvious. It makes employees of the same employer subject to the same dispute resolution process, and it takes away the right to strike. It creates four functional regionwide bargaining units within each health region, and it excludes nurse practitioners from labour relations coverage. Finally, it ensures that severance isn't paid to a person who continues in the same job even though the name of the employer has changed.

So it's a bare-bones piece of legislation. It's a great piece of law writing. It doesn't really tell the full story, and I think that everyone is waiting for the other shoe to drop, and that's when the regulations are formulated. I think people have every good reason to be fearful of the regulations. We've been burned in this Legislature with regulations in the not too recent past. Just prior to the last election the rebate legislation was dramatically changed by the regulations. It was only after the regulations came out that Albertans found out that rebates wouldn't kick in until energy prices had reached a particular level and remained that way over the period of a year. That was a betrayal, I think, of the people of this province, and that was done not in the legislation but in the regulations that appeared later.

So I think that this is an instance where the government would be wise to put in place the draft regulations before the bill is passed in the Legislature. I've had this discussion before with government members who say: well, you can't have regulations until you have the bill passed. But you can have draft regulations. You can give interested parties a look at the shape of what regulations might look like, and probably you can give them just about the full body of the regulations, knowing the legislation that you have before the House. I think that given the unease of the unions and working Albertans over this legislation, the government would be wise to put forward the draft regulations for their examination before the legislation is through the House. I think it would be one way of at least delaying some of their fears. It doesn't take away the negative aspects, the attack in this bill on unions, but at least it would allow people some confidence that the worst is not yet to come.

It was interesting to note again the context of the bill, and again there's a commentary by a history professor at Athabasca University about the legislation. He reiterates the notion that there's a long history of conflict with this government and unions and people who represent workers. As that commentator, Alvin Finkel, indicated, it's a relationship that has been in place almost since the Conservative government came to power. He goes on to speculate that the root of this uneasiness is that the government is in actuality a big-business government that parades sometimes as a populist government. So that context, I think, is important as we view Bill 27.

One of the tragedies of it is the cavalier way in which the right to strike and unions are dismissed. I look at the profession, of course, that I know best, and that's the teaching profession. I look at how long and how hard that profession had to work to organize to gain professional status and to gain the ability to control its own affairs, and it was rooted in the treatment of workers and teachers that was just reprehensible. Teachers could be fired at the will of a school board member. They could be fired if they didn't buy their insurance from a particular insurance agent in the community. Their abuses were many. At one point one of the local school boards contributed part of their salaries to the war effort without consulting with the teachers. So their will to control their own affairs, to gain some independence, to balance off the power of their employer with some power of their own was rooted in a long struggle and a very unfair history. There's a similar history to most unions in the province. Their roots are in unfairness. Their roots are in situations where they were not treated fairly by employers. They're rooted in situations where they found their work undervalued. It was a hard, hard struggle, and there were many, many sacrifices by many Albertans to obtain the rights that professional groups and unions enjoy today.

Here we see, with the stroke of a pen, those rights being abolished for a large number of Albertans, and again I think that that's really unfair. From the kind of comments I've heard from government members, there's little recognition of that history, and there's little recognition of the kinds of injustices that workers in the province have suffered. Again, I think that that's unfortunate. It's easy to take away rights from a group. You can take away their rights, but you can't make them believe, and I think workers will not believe the kind of pitch that the government has accompanied Bill 27 with in terms of the reasons for its need and the way it has been passed.

I think it's unfortunate that the government failed to consult with union officials. It seems the height of arrogance to take and change people's lives without even having the courtesy of consulting with them. It could have led to a so much better climate were the government to have spent some time talking with the union officials, talking about the kinds of things that they were trying to achieve, and to seek the co-operation and also the good ideas that unions might have brought to the table in terms of achieving those objectives. It's, again, a failure, and we've seen this, unfortunately, before.

I think the teachers' strike, the first provincewide teachers' strike in the province, is almost a case study in how not to work with unions, and it was fraught with opportunities lost on the part of the government, where if at any point someone had picked up the telephone and talked to the professional association, things might have then turned out quite differently, and students and teachers may not have lost time in the classroom. It's a real failure, I think, on the part of this government not to consult with those people that are going to be affected by the decisions that they're making, particularly as important a decision as taking away the right to strike and reorganizing the way in which they will operate with their employer and negotiate with their employer. So, again, I think that a failure to consult is unfortunate.

There are a number of things that can be said about the specific sections of the bill, Mr. Chairman. I think the detail is fairly clear. Again, the most contentious section is section 96, which lists employees who cannot strike and prohibits lockouts, the widening of the list of people who are not allowed to strike.

So I think that with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude, and hopefully the government will see fit to pick up the telephone and talk with unions to see if the kinds of very offensive sections of this legislation can't be ameliorated and made more palatable to the employers and to the workers that it affects.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the minister for clearing up one of the questions that I had, but could the minister comment on the second part of my question, regarding if Bill 27 will negatively affect the ability to keep or attract health care workers in rural areas? I think that if I could have that assurance, I could definitely support this.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: Shall the progress on Bill 27 be reported when the committee rises? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 19 Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. There is still a great deal to talk about regarding Bill 19 at this time. It is of great importance to Albertans that there be a detailed discussion on the implications of this bill along with its sister bill, Bill 3, because when we align the natural gas retail market with the electricity retail market, we've all been told that this is going to be a good thing for all Alberta consumers. We have been told as consumers to wait and we will see all the benefits of deregulation, whether it's for electricity or for natural gas, and if we are patient, we will see the economic benefits of this. Well, I'm afraid that Alberta consumers could have a great deal of patience and the only thing they would see is their pocketbooks getting thinner and thinner and thinner as a result of the deregulation of our energy supplies.

Now, when we amend the Gas Utilities Act, the Gas Distribution Act, and the Rural Utilities Act, as we see in Bill 19, it puzzles me for one reason when I was listening to their earlier discussions. The amendments for this draft bill and the regulations, at least some of the regulations, were on the Internet for months, and I like that. A person could have a look at them. The researchers could have a look at them. If it's good enough for this bill, why would it not be good enough, for instance, for Bill 27? Why could we not have the draft regulations to Bill 27 on the Internet for all to see? The labour groups could also have a squint at the amendments.

When we talk here, Mr. Chairman, of changing with Bill 19 the structure of the natural gas retail market to allow for more competition, is this competition just for competition's sake, or is this actually going to drive down prices for Albertans? Now, I'm told by members opposite that this Bill 19 is to provide consumers with the choice of signing a contract or floating on the natural gas spot market to receive natural gas, and it allows for a flow-through price for natural gas. It's going to change the role of the marketplace in an attempt to attract more competition. Certainly, Direct Energy is very, very anxious to participate in the Alberta market. At least, they're advertising now. We have discussed this campaign in previous debate on this bill, and I'm waiting for the campaign to go one step further, and we will see what happens with that.

This legislation also affects the operation of the gas co-ops by allowing their members to buy natural gas from other suppliers if choice is approved by two-thirds of the members. Now, I said this earlier, and I have had no satisfactory answer: if we're going to allow the gas co-ops, their members, this choice, why not give the citizens of Calgary or the citizens of Edmonton the same opportunity to outline their views on this?

I have, Mr. Chairman, a constituent who ran into this whole idea of choice here a couple of days ago. The door-to-door salesman knocked on her door – the woman is 89 – and she was very polite, let this gentleman into her home, and he immediately went into a sales pitch. Within a couple of minutes he wanted to see her previous gas bill – and this is what the future is going to be for all Albertans – and then he wanted to see her electricity bill. This is the convergence that we're talking about. This fellow said that everyone in the neighbourhood was buying, and this was the price. Now, gas for a five-year contract would be $7.25 a gigajoule, and for a three-year contract it would be $7.67 for a gigajoule of natural gas.

Now, when one looks at this and one looks at the current price and what the price has been and one looks at the long-term forecast – and there's a great range in those long-term forecasts – where is the benefit for the consumer? We can look at the natural gas contract, and we can look at the terms and the conditions – and, fair enough, it's all outlined in the code of conduct regulations – but when we have this army of door-to-door salespeople, how is all this going to be regulated? How is the consumer going to be protected?

I asked earlier in question period here today about a senior citizen without Internet access. Fair enough, the Department of Energy, at www.customerchoice.gov.ab.ca I believe it is, has the marketers listed. Direct Energy's name is not on that list, but EPCOR is and Enmax is. There is a significant amount of money an outfit has to put up front in order to participate in the market, but seniors who don't have Internet access don't have access to this information, and in the case of the constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar and other people in the neighbourhood, they had no idea if there was such a thing as an exit fee, what exactly it would cost if they wanted to remove themselves from the contract. There were taxes and other charges. What would that cost them? None of this was explained, as I am aware, between the time the salesperson entered the premises and the time the contract was signed.

Now, this particular company, EPCOR, to their credit realized that this was a rather forceful presentation and sent a supervisor around with a handwritten letter of apology to that customer, and they voided the contracts that had been sold. The 10-day cooling off period did not have to work, and that was a responsible company, in my view, but how many people besides the constituent, in this case Mrs. Annie Matlock, have signed these contracts and have not regretted the decision until it was too late? Now, there are some interesting details in this contract. I'm not going to discuss them before the Assembly now, but we need to know that if this bill were to go through that consumers, Mr. Chairman, are going to be protected.

Now, when we talk about marketers and misrepresentation, the government promised that there would be a strict code of conduct in place for marketers to follow, and make no mistake, the government assured everyone that they were going to be prepared to enforce it. Certainly, if we're going to have this system – and I look across the way and I'm disappointed, but it looks like we're going to have it – the first thing that Albertans who have concerns with any contracts have the right to do is to compare prices. The marketers must give consumers the time beyond the initial contract to read all documents and understand them before they make a decision. That was not the case in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. That didn't happen.

Sure, we can cancel energy marketing contracts within 10 days of signing for any reason and without any discussion and without paying a penalty. These cancellation rights must be disclosed in the contract, but I would like to see the marketers explain the exit fees as well because if you want to get out of some of those contracts, the $150 a month can add up to a lot of money for a senior that's on a fixed income.

Any and all marketers – and this is where the Navigant report hopefully is going to come into play – have to state plainly what they are selling, and certainly they have to show identification, and they must make timely, accurate, and truthful comparisons on every aspect of the contract including the cost or the price. You just can't go into someone's home and ask for their utility bill and then tell them, "This is what you're going to save," and forget to add on all the municipal franchise fees, the GST, the distribution charges. You can't forget to add those things on in your price comparisons. I don't know who is going to be monitoring that if we pass this legislation.

Now, marketers also cannot exert undue pressure. I believe in the case in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar that undue pressure was exerted. Marketers cannot state that a product is less expensive when it cannot be proven, and certainly we have to give consumers a break after 9 o'clock at night and not bother them until 8 o'clock in the morning. Certainly the legislation that was presented this week by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford . . .

Now, we could have . . .

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Chair: Hon. members. If you wish to be on the list for debating, hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, I'm happy to oblige. Just put your name on the list. The same goes for you, and I'm not sure whether it was Edmonton-Glengarry or Edmonton-Strathcona. [interjection] You're the sinner. All right. Then we'll put your name down too. But right now we have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. When we have a look at how Bill 19 and Bill 3 are going to affect Albertans, we have to be concerned as to how this will lower the price in this case for the almost 900,000 natural gas customers served by the major utility companies.

Now, I talked a little earlier, Mr. Chairman, about consumer choice or the ability of consumers to purchase natural gas from the provider of their choice. We know that this has been available to large industrial gas customers in Alberta since the late '70s.

If we do an analysis of this bill and if we look at this whole notion of convergence and if we look at the Navigant report, and the Navigant report was urging some sort of consumer education program for Albertans, and the cost of that was $2 million, 2 and a half million dollars, I don't know who's going to bear the cost of this, but perhaps that would help out consumers such as those in Edmonton-Gold Bar who were visited recently by the door-to-door salesmen.

Now, other jurisdictions have tried this deregulation. A lot of jurisdictions have tried it and have come to their senses and have concluded that it's not a situation that's going to benefit consumers, and so they have gone back to more regulatory control.

If we were to take Bill 19 and place in it somewhere a process whereby we were going to allow for consumer education, consumers could know, and the senior who does not have Internet access would know the questions to ask the individual who comes to his or her door; the senior would know. I could be wrong, and certainly hon. members are encouraged if they have the Navigant report in their bill brief to discuss the total cost, but I believe it was about 2 and a half million dollars for this consumer education program.

Now, maybe the Minister of Energy is going to surprise everyone and announce a consumer education program. Maybe the government could rent part of our website, www.altaliberals.ab.ca. We could certainly help them out and put a page on there of consumer information and ways that consumers could have information and protect their interests whenever the door-to-door sales people come. We may have more retailers in this province as a result of this bill, but I don't think that's going to make things automatically better for the consumers, Mr. Chairman.

Now, we've heard this before, but there is still no guarantee that more competition will reduce our heating bills. Retailers will only come to Alberta if there's a possibility of making a profit, and if you've got the middlemen, they're going to want to make a profit. That's fair enough, but the profit is going to come out of the consumers' pockets. I don't know how we're going to reduce costs in this way. An enterprise has to make a profit. They certainly do, but I don't know how this is going to reduce gas bills, and Albertans have said many times over that they consider not only electricity but gas for heating as an essential service. They do not want to shop around. They want reliable and affordable prices, and there are no guarantees from this bill that just because the government makes more changes, energy deregulation will suddenly start to work.

If anything, I would have to say that the changes proposed in this act are going to create more uncertainty, more chaos for the customer, more frustration, more confusion. At the proper time I'm certainly going to try to repair this bill, to improve it. I look at the numbers across the way, and certainly it would be a miracle if we could convince this government that energy deregulation is an expensive folly, but I don't think that's going to happen. We're going to have to try to make a bad situation better with amendments.

I cannot support this bill at this time, because I think it's going to make things worse for customers. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd also like to add a few comments on Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has certainly raised many, many concerns that Albertans have, particularly about our energy costs and certainly where the government is going in regard to the delivery of energy to our homes. With the tremendous spikes that we've encountered in the price of gas this particular winter, Albertans are confused, and they're quite baffled about the whole process. But they're most concerned about the fact that not very long ago we had a very good system in this province where we didn't see these sharp spikes.

Certainly, when we look at legislation, particularly when Albertans look at legislation, one of the questions they do ask is: who does this legislation benefit? We look at the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act and see that one of the big selling points is that it gives the consumer choice. It gives them the choice of the supplier, but it certainly does not give that consumer the opportunity to get cheaper gas prices that supposedly, because of competition, this is going to lead to.

Now, one of the examples that the Member for Edmonton-Gold

Bar did bring up was about a constituent of his who got approached by a particular salesman of a particular company. Well, one of those salesmen actually visited my home and offered my wife – I wasn't home; I was here – the same deal of signing a five-year contract whereby we would be paying the $7.25 per gigajoule. Now, she is a thrifty Scot, and she watches those dollars and cents pretty close, so she said: "Well, I need some information in order to make a decision of this nature. That's quite a while, and we've seen many, many variations and fluctuations in the price." She said: what have you got for me that shows me that this will be beneficial to me? This person did not have any information that was satisfactory to her. The only information she could judge on was the last few gas bills that we had received, and they were certainly above the $7.25 per gigajoule, so she said: well, no; I am not prepared to make this decision right now without at least having the opportunity to research this.

Now, then, it's also quite interesting to me in all this talk about whether rebates kick in or not that we don't use some type of a weighted average on this average price of natural gas that we do pay. When we're paying so much more for natural gas in the winter months, the colder months, and when we are using so much more, it would only seem fair to me to use a weighted average to determine what sort of price would trigger a rebate system, but it doesn't seem to be going to happen in that particular fashion.

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

I have other constituents who have phoned my office, Mr. Chairman, and they're also concerned. They're concerned about these other charges that they see on their bill, and one of their favourite questions they seem to ask and a very popular question is: how many times do I have to pay for the cost of bringing energy from the alley to my home? It seems that, you know, when people have lived in their homes for 30 and 40 years, they've certainly paid for that distribution system, and now they're paying again. So they do have questions of this nature.

Now, then, as well, in looking at Bill 19, one of the groups that we did have contact with and did provide us with information was the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops, and this is a group that certainly has a long and proud history and also a long record of providing the people in the federation with very affordable, very reliable energy over many, many years. One of the things with the federation and the Gas Alberta Inc. group was that they were also quite concerned with the changes that were going to be brought about by Bill 19. These are elected boards, and they do have governing executives to ensure that any initiative that is promoted by government meets a test of prudence and satisfies a cost-benefit analysis.
