Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After a long winter with a lot of snow Edmontonians are finally experiencing pleasant, warm weather that comes with spring, and as the snow melts and the water drains through our storm water system, there is a very real perception that months of dirt and grime and salt and oil collected in the streets are making their way into the waterway systems including the North Saskatchewan River without being treated. To the Minister of Environment: please tell us what your ministry is doing to mitigate the environmental damage that occurs when untreated storm water is discharged into the waterways?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We at Alberta Environment are very concerned about untreated storm water entering our rivers. It is a significant issue because, you know, as we all water and fertilize our lawn, when you get a rain and that runs off, those residues certainly go into our rivers. The way it works right now is that Alberta Environment does have regulations around the storm water systems. We regulate the construction of storm water systems as they move into our rivers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Masyk: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: are you aware of any low-cost or any cost-effective, environmentally positive ways to deal with storm water?

Dr. Taylor: Well, as I said, Mr. Speaker, we are very concerned about the issue. In Calgary and Edmonton they're actually causing storm water catchment ponds to be constructed in the new development catchment areas. In Calgary, for instance, any new development since I believe 1998 has to have a storm water catchment area. So what happens is that the storm water runs into the catchment, they plant the appropriate grasses and weeds, it takes about a week for the water to move through the catchment pond, and when it comes out the other end, it's clean and can go directly into the river. Certainly, this is one example of a good program. Edmonton is conducting similar programs. It's still in the experimental stages, but it appears to be working.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you. My final question to the Minister of Environment: does the province's draft water strategy propose methods to deal with the treatment of storm water before it is discharged into local waterways?

Dr. Taylor: Pollution prevention has always been and must always be the prime foundation in any water quality program. That's why Alberta Environment monitors all the watersheds, and we will continue to monitor the watersheds. Mr. Speaker, as I say, pollution prevention – that is, preventing the pollution from getting into the water – is certainly a prime focus of the draft water strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Police Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the government was touting their budget as fair and balanced, but the Solicitor General admits that there is little increase for policing aside from salary and minor adjustments. Urban and rural Alberta have requested help to prepare for antiterrorism initiatives, training, and basic police funding. My questions are all to the Solicitor General. How is this budget fair and balanced to Edmonton and Calgary when the province hasn't paid anything for any policing services in these cities since the mid-90s?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, under our government unconditional grants the municipalities that the hon. member is referring to, Edmonton and Calgary, get $16 million, and then the budget is determined by the cities on where the dollars should be spent.

Ms Blakeman: It's not for policing.

Given that the Solicitor General has stated that municipalities now have access to a $60 million unconditional fund which can be used for any number of municipal services, does this now pit smaller communities against larger ones for their share of the fund?

Mrs. Forsyth: No, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't. And it wasn't $60 million; it's $16 million under the unconditional grants.

We're also working with municipalities across this province. As the Solicitor General I fully understand that communities in this province are facing problems with policing. We had a policing committee that went out in this province, who were very competent and very hard working, and brought forward recommendations, and we are working through those recommendations to try and ease the policing burdens in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How is it fair and balanced that rural communities with 2,499 people get their policing costs completely paid for by the province, but communities with over 2,500 people have to pay the lion's share of their policing services themselves?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member is referring to is clearly spelled out under the Police Act. Municipalities under 2,500 people get their policing paid for. Again, this is one of the things that the policing committee that went around and provided me with a supplement is addressing. They've worked hard, and we're working through the process right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Calgary Diversion Project

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the minister of health. In November 2001 a pilot project was launched to provide treatment for mentally ill Albertans who might otherwise be jailed for minor offences. By many accounts the Calgary diversion project has been successful, yet media reports indicate that the program may not be expanded. My question: is that true?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say first of all that like the hon. member I have read initial reports from the diversion project in the city of Calgary, and it has been, from initial results, successful. It appears that it does not make any sense to have people placed in jails when they should instead be receiving proper treatment for their mental illness. So far, of the 50 referrals that the Calgary diversion project has had, where people who have had mental illness have gone on to treatment instead of going through the judicial system, the rate of recidivism has been zero. None of them have been repeat offenders. Many people deserve credit for the success of this program: everyone from the police to social services agencies and the judicial system. Everyone has worked very co-operatively, but I wish to make note of one individual, His Honour Judge William Pepler, in particular, who initiated this project.

With respect to whether or not this program will be expanded, we haven't made a decision to do that yet. There is a commitment to continue the funding for the Calgary project in the amount of $1.4 million to the end of March of 2004. We've recently announced that a similar project, based on the interim results from Calgary, will take place in Edmonton, and the details of that will be coming shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you. My supplementary, then, is to the Solicitor General. From a law enforcement perspective, has the project been successful?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to add my support and recognize the people in Calgary on this particular project. The police play a very important role in ensuring that the people that they are dealing with get appropriate treatment as opposed to being circulated through the justice system. The police are often the first contact with mentally ill people, and therefore they're in the best position to decide where these mentally ill people should be placed. The project that has been referred to by the minister of health has been hugely successful. He's indicated that he's going to be expanding it to Edmonton. I support that, and I also support expanding it through the entire province.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Spruce Grove Junior B Regals

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is with great pleasure that I rise in the House to bring recognition and congratulations to the Spruce Grove Junior B Regals hockey team. On the weekend of March 29 the Spruce Grove Junior B Regals won the provincial title for a second consecutive year. The tournament was hosted in Okotoks this year, and our team played the final game against Fort St. John, British Columbia, for the win.

As I've said in the past, I'm a parent of a young hockey player with whom I share a love for the game, and I can truly imagine how proud the parents of these young folks are. I would like to congratulate their coach, Cam Aplin, and all the volunteers who have worked hard to ensure that this team has the opportunity to play to their ability and represent us so proudly. The pride does not only come from the win, Mr. Speaker. This group of young men are considered great young gentlemen on and off the ice.

As we speak, the Junior B Regals are traveling to Portage La Prairie, Manitoba, where they will represent Alberta in the Westerns and defend their 2002 silver win, hopefully with a gold. Whether they receive the gold at this competition or not, our community shall always consider them winners.

I want to extend my constituency's pride and also the province's as they have represented Alberta well as great Alberta ambassadors in the sport of hockey. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Yoshio Senda

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to congratulate late Dr. Yoshio Senda from Lethbridge, who received a volunteer recognition award from the Minister of Community Development at the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation awards banquet last week. Dr. Senda has dedicated his life to building the sport of judo in Lethbridge and all across Canada, including work with Judo Alberta as secretary, as president, and as provincial coach. He served Judo Canada as the first vice-president and national coach, and he founded the University of Lethbridge Judo Club in 1967 and the Lethbridge Judo Club in 1952. Because of his leadership and success Dr. Senda has received numerous awards, including induction to the University of Lethbridge Athletic Hall of Fame, the Alberta Amateur Sports Hall of Fame, election to the Canadian Amateur Athlete Hall of Fame. He's also received the Alberta coach of the year award.

On behalf of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West and the hundreds of individuals who have benefited from his mentoring, please extend our warm wishes. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Michael Kostek

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I recognize the work of Michael Kostek. Mike celebrates his 50th year of service with the Edmonton public school board this year. Mike is the public school board's Mr. History. Besides writing two books on the board's past, the restoration and relocation of the Edmonton 1881 schoolhouse and the restored McKay Avenue school and archives owe much to his work. Mike is a past member of the city of Edmonton Historical Board and the Historic Sites Board and the Names Advisory Board. He received a heritage preservation award from the city of Edmonton and the Alberta achievement award for excellence.

Mike has taught, served as principal, consultant, director, and finally as the executive director to the superintendent of schools before his retirement to McKay Avenue school, where he is now paid the generous stipend of $1 a day for his services. In 1994 the school board honoured Mike's work by naming a school after him. The Mike Kostek school holds a birthday party for him each year. This year the party will be very special.

Congratulations, Mike, on 50 years of outstanding service to public education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Stirling High School Lakers Basketball Team

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise in the Assembly today to recognize another outstanding boys basketball team from Stirling high school, the Stirling Lakers. This team is comprised of Courtney Clawson, Shawn Nelson, Chris Hotton, Rocky Big Smoke, Wes Walk, Kris Clark, Jordan Clark, Scott Erickson, Darcy Steele, Cam Toth, Cory Edwards, Josh Day Chief, Ray Walk, and coach Darren Mazutinec.

This team had an outstanding season and displayed remarkable talent and skill. They played in two leagues during the year: the River Ridge League, where they captured first place, and the Deep South League, where they shared the first place title with Picture Butte. The Stirling Lakers, Mr. Speaker, then went on to win gold at the provincial finals of the 1A boys provincial tournament.

Mr. Speaker, I know this team and their coaches and the members of the community, and they worked really hard to make this achievement. As you know, it takes a lot of work from a community like this to achieve at this level. Therefore, I congratulate all the members of this team and their community and parents for their achievement in this year's provincial finals and an exceptional season of basketball.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

2:30 Radway and District Friends of STARS

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to recognize Maurice Kruk and Chris Dowhan, co-chairs of the Radway and District Friends of STARS fund-raiser 2003, for a job well done. Thank you to all volunteers, donators, participants, and surrounding communities. Thank you to emcee Kerry Smith from CFCW and auctioneer Joe Dobyanski.

All catering, food, hall rentals, and proceeds were donated to this worthwhile cause. The community may be small, but it's big in heart, raising $40,000, and in the last two fund-raisers they raised $66,000, Mr. Speaker. I ask all members to congratulate Radway and surrounding communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Alberta Seniors' Week

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seniors' Week is a wonderful time for all of us to celebrate Alberta's seniors, 320,000 of them and growing, to recognize their accomplishments, and to highlight the positive contributions they make in their communities, and it is also a time for us to have fun with them. Since 1986 the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta has annually spearheaded this special week by encouraging volunteer organizations, service clubs, businesses, communities, schools, and all levels of government to plan celebration events. The theme for Seniors' Week 2003, Vital, Active, Involved, recognizes the energy and enthusiasm of our seniors population and also the 65-plus seniors, who log more hours than any other age group.

Over 3,000 Seniors' Week packages have been mailed to Alberta communities and MLA constituency offices to assist in organizing special events. In 2002 there were 227 Seniors' Week events registered with the council, and I suspect that hundreds more occurred. As MLA for Calgary-West and chair of the Seniors Advisory Council I challenge all of my colleagues in this Legislature to promote and also attend Seniors' Week 2003 events from June 1 to 7. Your time recognizing seniors will be well spent.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Calgary Humane Society

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to recognize the Calgary Humane Society not only for its efforts to protect vulnerable animals but also for its strides to educate Albertans about the link between violence against animals and violence against people. As Mohandas Gandhi astutely observed: the greatness of a nation and its moral progress can be judged by the treatment of its animals.

The society is developing a program to train staff, veterinarians, teachers, and child care workers to recognize the link between animal cruelty and domestic violence. The program is partly based on American studies that firmly established a connection between animal cruelty and family abuse. A similar study surveying women staying at Calgary's women's shelters in 2001 found that one in four women delayed leaving an abusive situation out of concern for the animals that would be left behind. Many murderers also have a history of animal abuse.

Thank you to the Calgary Humane Society for its unwavering commitment to all living beings.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Exhibits

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's never been my purpose in life to interfere or interrupt an hon. member when they're participating in either Recognitions or Members' Statements, but the hon. Member for Calgary-West clearly knows the rule with respect to exhibits and props in the Assembly. Her smiling companion from Drayton Valley-Calmor should by now have noted this because I do recall on a previous occasion having drawn it to his attention. So one might suggest that one shouldn't have to do this more than one time, two times unless there's something that would require further investigation by the chair.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I have five copies of the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal annual report. They've taken a different tactic in terms of being innovative, hopefully to clarify activities to the public, and I now present them for tabling.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, as an agency of the government of Alberta and reporting to the Minister of Health and Wellness, contributes in a major way to the health of individuals, families, and communities in this province. Today it's my pleasure to table the 2003 to 2006 business plan of the commission. This business plan outlines the goals and strategies of the commission in providing alcohol and other drug and gambling information, prevention, and treatment services to the people of Alberta over the next three years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 26 letters to table, all addressed to the minister of health, asking that the Calgary regional health boundaries be adjusted so that the Didsbury health service region is within the Calgary health authority.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a report with the title Generation Debt: An Investment in Education is an Investment in Alberta's Future. The report was given to me yesterday at a meeting with the representatives of the Council of Alberta University Students. It contains solution proposals for issues that students are facing.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-West, did you want to table your sign?

Ms Kryczka: I'd love to.

The Speaker: You need five copies.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. They are all expressing concern about the state of education in Alberta. The first is from an Elizabeth Miller of Edmonton giving the government an F in listening.

The second is tabled with permission from a Margaret Ritchie expressing her concerns about the overcrowding of classrooms.

The third is with permission from Sherry Norris expressing concern about the current situation regarding funding of public schools.

The final one today with permission is from Mr. and Mrs. Hoffpauir. They are expressing their desire for properly funded public education.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. Both relate to the crisis that the school boards and the schools face with respect to funding. The first one is a letter from a parent by the name of Sharman Armfield, who has a child enrolled in the Edmonton public school system, and he registers his worries about the possible loss of reading recovery programs and other early childhood educational experiences that he finds so valuable for children's learning success.

The second one, Mr. Speaker, is copies of a news release by the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta called FASTreport. Under a heading of "Provincial budget dashes expectations, raises flags for public school education" what's noted here is that the educational shortfall for K to 12 education base funding continues to hover at $250 million after the presentation of this budget.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first tabling is a letter from Lynda Wignall and Colleen Huston, and they are asking the Provincial Treasurer: "What happened to immediate rate increases to Alberta's poor?"

The second is a government of Alberta news release dated September 13, 2000, the former Provincial Treasurer Dr. West promising that education property taxes will not only be reduced by $135 million in 2001 but also frozen at $1.2 billion. This Provincial Treasurer obviously knew the meaning of the term tax freeze, Mr. Speaker.

2:40head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: We'll call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Offices of the Legislative Assembly

The Chair: Standing Order 58(8) indicates to us that the estimates of the Legislative Assembly, as approved by the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, and the estimates of the Officers of the Legislature shall be the first item called in the Committee of Supply's consideration of the main estimates and the Chairman shall put the question to approve the estimates forthwith which shall be decided without debate or amendment.

Offices of the Legislative Assembly $61,233,000

Revenue

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to this? The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour to be able to be here today and present, I guess, the third annual estimates of the Department of Revenue for the years 2003-2004.

Before I start, I'd like to make some introductions of a number of individuals that are in the members' gallery. I would compliment them for being some of the best and most outstanding employees of the government. They do exceptional work. We're fortunate to have such professionals with the provincial government. I'll start by introducing Bonnie Lovelace. She's the corporate secretary for Alberta Revenue. Beside her is Juliette Blair, manager of strategic and business planning for Alberta Revenue. Beside her is John Osborne, who is the director for portfolio analysis and research for the investment management division of Alberta Revenue. Beside him is Christine Oness, manager of budgets and business planning for Alberta Revenue. Beside Christine we've got Barry Meilleur. He's the analyst in budget and business planning for Alberta Finance. Behind them is Lukas Huisman, our assistant deputy minister of tax and revenue administration, Alberta Revenue. Beside him is Glenn Shepherd, my executive assistant. So very appreciative of having them here today and thank them for so much of the work that really goes behind the preparation of the estimates that are before the Legislature today.

With respect to our Department of Revenue Premier Klein over two years ago in the creation of the Department of Revenue mentioned that as a result of the growing complexity and size of the revenues of the provincial government, this department was created so that we could direct our attentions and as a ministry focus much more on the strategic policy and operational issues that affect the revenues of the province not just today but well into the future so that we might have a long-term focus in ensuring that the revenues and investments of the province are in good stead and that they're organized and that they anticipate those needs of the future to serve Albertans in the best way possible.

Last year the tax revenues for this province were over $9 billion, a very substantial amount of money that was collected through this Department of Revenue out of a total revenue of $22 billion for the government. The Revenue department also manages an investment portfolio of $35 billion, investments of the province. Those would include the endowment funds, the heritage fund and all the other endowment funds, some of the short-term cash flows of the province as well as many of the public-sector pension funds that are administered and invested on behalf of the pensioners.

Alberta Revenue's vision is a province where government revenue policy and administration reflect the values of Albertans, balance present and future needs, and contribute to a stable environment for the generation of wealth for all Albertans.

We've heard many recommendations in public consultations, that could be things such as the Future Summit, including recommendations of the Financial Management Commission that emphasis ought to be placed upon long-term strategic planning. As a result of that, four of the strategic priorities that we have in our department have to do with the long term, not just a three-year but a long-term plan.

The first of our strategic priorities has to do with the revenue management framework. In that framework our priority is to continue to focus on revenue to enable this government to make decisions that will benefit Albertans over a long time. We do this in consultation with all the departments. We as a department only specifically direct the policy of taxation with respect to personal, corporate, and fuel tax, tobacco tax, hotel room tax, but we co-ordinate and work with all of the other departments, be it Energy or Gaming, health care premiums, to ensure that there's a correlated approach to what revenue streams we ought to count on in the future. How can we ensure that there is that predictability, that we have the right amount of revenues for the needs of the government, and also that we ensure that we have a bearing upon that the government does have upper limits, that they ought to be cautious about how much revenue they collect to ensure that we do preserve the Alberta advantage that we have in this province?

Dr. Taylor: Why didn't you reduce taxes then?

Mr. Melchin: With respect to that comment it's an excellent suggestion. Part of this budget does actually contemplate – and we'll talk about that – the corporate income tax rates being reduced from the general rate of 13 percent to 12 and a half percent and the small business rates being reduced to 3 and a half percent and the small business threshold being increased to $400,000. So we are continuing on those promises that we have made to Albertans that we would continue to lower those corporate business tax rates, following up after already reducing taxes with respect to personal income tax, that was incorporated a couple years ago.

Another strategic priority of ours is with respect to the endowment funds. That's not just the Alberta heritage fund, but that would include the investment of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, the Alberta heritage scholarship fund, the Alberta heritage science and engineering research endowment fund. One of the things that we did conduct last year, that everybody's fully aware of, was the survey Looking Forward, a survey of Albertans, asking for feedback on the direction of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. We felt it really important that we clarify the reasons why we should be saving for the future, that our investments be properly structured so that we can ensure that they're there for the reasons anticipated for those future times necessitated by the purposes of savings.

From that, we have known and we hear it reaffirmed again that Albertans do value that we should save, and it is a strong commitment of this government to continue to save. One of the strategic focuses of this upcoming year will be to assess and address: how do we strengthen the mandate of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund? How can it operate, the preference as responded by Albertans, as a long-term endowment, that its value can be protected over time? So we'll bring forward in our initiatives further recommendations on that fund through this year.

We will also want to see that we've got the right governance in place for those funds with respect to not just the governance of the heritage fund and its policy directions but also with respect to the investment policy and direction of the other endowment funds: the medical fund, the science and engineering and scholarship funds.

A third key initiative, which I somewhat touched on already, has to do with our investment organization. We have many challenges facing the current market environment. As we know, this past year we've had a marketplace where we've seen one of the deepest recessions or declines in the market since the crash in the '20s, and it's been the deepest since 1937 and '38. We continue to see uncertainties in the world with respect to the investment climate, partially maybe due to the wars, some of it with respect to investor confidence, some of it with respect to economic slowdown in many of the countries of the world.

Investment organization structure is a key priority of this department to ensure that we have the best governance to maximize the returns for those pensioners, for all Albertans with respect to their savings. We have the fifth largest organization in Canada, with over $35 billion of assets being managed. Our costs continue to climb with respect to the administration of those funds, but they remained the lowest cost provider in the industry. In fact, we save over 10 basis points inside by managing our funds internally versus outsourcing any of those funds. We continue to provide a very strong investment community here in Alberta with respect to the administration of this fund.

A fourth key initiative that we have is with respect to securities regulation. We are strongly committed to the efforts to increase efficiencies in securities regulation and promote the Alberta capital market and to ensure that we have markets which are efficient and which protect and promote investor confidence and safety and that also attract the accumulation and investment of capital in Alberta. The Alberta Securities Commission has separate legislation and governance and falls under the Department of Revenue, and its regulation is through the Securities Act.

A number of significant issues are being led by our own Securities Commission. One of the uniform securities legislation projects that's been working with the other security regulators is being led by our own Alberta Securities Commission, and they will continue that work with those other provinces. Part of the legislation before us today in the House has been with respect to starting to harmonize those rules.

A very significant initiative which started last fall when we met with our counterparts in the province of British Columbia was to find what common grounds there could be to improving national regulation of securities. From there, we met with the provincial ministers of Quebec, Ontario, and British Columbia to assess if there was likewise common ground to find resolution in improving the efficiencies of national regulation of securities given that it's still a provincial constitutional authority. We have created an initiative from those four provinces where there'll be a steering committee now of five, Manitoba joining with us as part of the steering committee, and all of the provinces and territories joining the initiative. So we have unanimous consent of all the provinces and territories to proceed with a project that will provide a working plan, to conclude by this September 30, of an outline of what we can implement to improve the regulation of securities in this country.

One of the ideas which we are studying – we've chosen that we'll study two issues – which has the greatest degree of acceptance at this stage, would be a passport approach, where those companies, for example, that would be registered or operational here in Alberta would work with the Alberta Securities Commission, obtain all the clearances for regulatory approval, which would grant them the authority and the ability to raise that capital throughout the country without having to go through further vetting by other security regulators in other provinces. All of the provinces are unanimously in agreement to studying this issue, working to promote that that would be at a minimum adopted as a working plan by this September 30.

Furthermore, we will study what we've called a national/provincial/territorial regulator model to assess if there's methodology other than just a passport approach that would still preserve the jurisdiction of the provinces to retain responsibility for regulation of securities in the country yet improve that regulation throughout the country.

So we're pretty excited about this. This is the first time an initiative of this magnitude has happened among all the provinces. The marketplaces are becoming more and more intertwined not just nationally but internationally, and it is important that we improve that access to capital and interface with other provinces and other countries of the world to both assure and protect investors, ensure that there is confidence in the markets while also improving access to capital.

Our business plan outlines a number of programs. Managing tax and revenue programs is one of the key programs of the department. Our goal is to continue to focus on fair and competitive and efficient tax programs. The overall operating increase in our budget is close to $1.9 million, and those increases would include manpower in the audit area due to a reduced vacancy factor. The vacancy discount in 2002 was high due to difficulties in recruiting qualified staff, and we are and have been successful in recruiting a number of staff to add to our audit area. The Canada Customs and Revenue Agency tax collection agreement for tobacco products and an increase in vouchers to the Alberta Indian tax exemption retailers, technology improvements, salary adjustments, and employer contribution costs form part a bill that's before the House already as to improving the efficiency of our tax collection.

Another of our main programs is to manage and invest our financial assets. In that area of our business our overall operating increase is approximately $2.2 million for the investment management division. That will add an additional eight full-time equivalents, and this is to strengthen the governance, the management, and the resourcing of our investment operation. Contract services for the introduction of new investment products, risk management software, and endowment assets in management consulting are part of the inclusion of that increase in the budget.

It's important to note that a hundred percent of the investment management division's budget expense is recovered from the investment funds it manages. In fact, over three-quarters of that is recovered from outside clients such as the other pension funds which we administer.

A third area of business focus in our department has to do with managing risk associated with the loss of public assets, our risk management and insurance division. It administers a program to protect, secure, and preserve public assets against risk of significant accidental loss. In today's climate with, you know, increasing premiums for insurance coverage, this aspect of our risk management has proven very successful, very cost-effective and efficient at managing the risk and ensuring that we have the right insurance coverage and in some cases ensuring that our limits are at the right thresholds. That we can self-insure the lower amounts of deductibilities and reduce the cost of premiums has been a cost benefit for our government.

The fourth area, which I touched on already, was to regulate and foster the capital market. I just thought I would mention that the revenues are budgeted for $2.7 million from the 2002-03 year. Part of that fee increase is for prospectus and financial statement filing fees and exemption applications, a proposed fee increase that's gone to stakeholders for consultation that would be effective July 1, and an overall operating expenditure decrease of $645,000, and that's due to some nonrecurring expenses for the closure of the Edmonton office that happened last year.

This is just a quick overview of our department's responsibility with respect to its various core businesses, and I'd be delighted to answer questions this afternoon as they come forward. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Happy to be able to participate in the debate this afternoon on Revenue as a part of the overall budget presentations made by the government. I'd like to thank and welcome all of the staff that are here to support the minister in this afternoon's debates. We know that you make him look good. We don't necessarily appreciate that, but I'm sure that he does. It's been my experience with this particular minister that he's very good at answering questions that we ask of him or getting back to us in the near future on those that he doesn't have the detail for, and we certainly appreciate that.

My understanding of this process this afternoon is that we have two hours for debate. The first hour is for the exclusive use of opposition asking questions of the minister back and forth. The second hour is then opened up to the entire Assembly, if any backbenchers want to ask questions at that time. [interjections] We would appreciate the Minister of Environment not participating in debate in the first hour because he's cutting into our time.

My process this afternoon will be to ask a question and ask the minister at that time to respond. I expect to take about the first half hour of time, if that's okay with other members here. Then I'll do some cleanup afterwards, after everyone else has had an opportunity. So now I need to ask some questions.

Mr. Minister, I'm just going to ask you some introductory comments to get some definitions of some of the terms in your business plans first, and then I'll get into some of the detail of the other things I want to talk to. When we take a look at your business plans – I'm on page 328 – under the first of the key strategies goal 1.1 is: "A revenue structure that meets Alberta's needs and is consistent with Albertans' values." You talk under Key Strategies about developing and maintaining a long-term revenue management framework. We want some detail on what that framework is. Do you have something written down that's available for public consumption, or can you just give us some more detail on that right now? [interjections]

Mr. Chairman, if the noise level is really high, I'm not going to be able to hear him.

Mr. Melchin: I don't have a document at this stage that's publishable for public consumption, but I can tell you that the realm of that discussion gets into looking at identifying all of our revenue sources today, the long-term projections and scenarios for each of those revenue sources over the years, not just the tax policies but even looking at working with, say, Energy on what would be the long-term revenue scenarios from oil and gas revenues so that we can be clear about how much you can rely upon each of those. It would be looking at growth factors that are implicit in how they're structured. Take personal income tax, for example. Because it's a rate of tax, 10 percent, it does capture all the growth in the economy, employment, so they have various factors of growth rate or not. A fixed flat fee doesn't capture any increase in inflationary growth, so we have to look at those types of factors. Are they revenue sources that grow or not? We will examine alternative sources of revenues that are used by other jurisdictions so that we're understanding the nature of opportunities for revenues and the right structures and to then assess whether they should apply to the province or not.

One area has to do with the size, answering the question of size. How much revenue is needed not just to service the programs, but what might even be an optimal size of revenue so that we can both fulfill the needs of the various programs to provide funding for health and education and all the programs of the government but also ensure that you're not taking too much revenue out of the economy so that it becomes a deterrent? So there become thresholds where if you take too much out, it chases away capital investment, creation of new jobs and opportunities.

I would say, for example, anecdotally that one of the things that does happen in Canada – when you look at our other provinces, we have only two provinces presently who are net contributors to all Canadians. All the other provinces are net recipients of the economies of Alberta and Ontario in transfer payments in taxation that the federal government takes versus what is brought back to our province. So I would hope that we could continue ensuring how we grow and create the right climate so that more opportunities can grow in revenue for everybody. When persons succeed, when businesses succeed . . .

Mr. Doerksen: Especially for innovation and science.

Mr. Melchin: Including all the innovation and science opportunities of the future. Correct. When they succeed, we all have more for our needs personally, for business, for family, and for the government.

There's only one taxpayer. It only comes from one source, so part of that is to ensure that we get the right balance in assessing the size. That'll be looking at even a competitiveness question. How do we rank with respect to other provinces? How do we rank with respect to other countries? Specifically and probably most importantly, how do we rank in our overall tax burdens with respect to the United States, being our largest trading partner, but clearly also to the world? So that'll address that one aspect: size and overall need and optimal size of government. Second is to look at the sources, the mix, the types of revenue sources we ought to rely upon, identifying and being really clear about what policies are in place on our existing revenue structure, to see how that will roll out in long-term scenarios and then to look at what might be the optimal sources of revenue for the longer term planning. That's the basic structure of a revenue framework.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. When you have something that is available, we would certainly appreciate a copy of it.

Given what you've said now about growth factors and how much is too much revenue to take out of the communities – and I'm thinking more in terms of consumer spending than commercial types of revenue when you talk about thresholds – I want to talk for a moment about gambling revenue and the amount of revenue this province receives now from gambling. It seems to me that the numbers look like what we get from various lotteries is now greater than what we're receiving from oil and gas revenues. If that's incorrect, if you could correct that for me. Do you factor that in? What is the growth anticipation? What are the growth factors you're looking at for gambling revenue? Have you determined that there is a threshold where the amount that consumers spend on gambling on an individual basis is actually too much to be taking out of the economy in that capacity and not leaving them enough for general day-to-day expenses? If you could give me your views on that and how they fit in with the government's overall strategy.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. One of the things I did mention up front: we will work with the other departments. The Revenue department doesn't have specific responsibility for policy in some of these areas. You mentioned two of them, gaming versus energy. Just in the budget I might comment for your purposes. I know it's been mentioned that gaming is higher than the crude oil royalty. In that one line item that may be true, but our oil and gas revenues clearly far outweigh in magnitude and amount that we continue to collect, even now and into the foreseeable future, versus gaming.

As to what are the growth factors, we will work with the Department of Gaming with respect to those questions. They will develop the policy. We will work with them on the kinds of questions you posed. How much should we rely upon any of these sources for our long-term planning? You have very good questions. How much do we want to see come from gaming? As you would say, to what extent are there thresholds that are beneficial or not beneficial for our province? I think they are very good questions with respect to gaming, including when you look at energy or any of the other sources of revenue. They will all have inherent similar types of questions.

Rate structures. You know, what are royalty rate structures? With the expansion of, for example, the oil sands up in the Fort McMurray area, how much will come from those vast amounts of reserves in our royalty rates and structures for that in the long term? Those will be policy decisions of the Energy department, that will work with it and build in the scenarios that they'll provide to us as to the right mix. But it will be part of ours to make sure that we've questioned and put back some of those specific questions that you've just said. I don't have the specific growth factors we have for those two here. That will be developed in conjunction with those departments.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, to the minister: will those factors ever become public?

Mr. Melchin: I can't commit to what extent or how much of the revenue framework will be a public document or not. I haven't contemplated that specific question but would be happy to respond. I do view that with this document and the work that we've been doing actually for quite awhile now, much of that, if not coming out as a document, i.e. a revenue framework, will certainly start coming out through policy directions in a lot of revenue sources over time.

As to the publishing of a revenue framework, it wasn't intended to be a public document, though we may find part of that tool very useful to put out for public feedback and thought and process on it. I don't have a specific answer as to what would be public at this stage though.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, to move on to the next page. The minister talked about performance measures, and one of them is that Alberta's provincial tax load for a family of four is indicated as being the lowest in Canada, and that's the projection for the next few years as a target, but it seems to me that this clearly doesn't include user fees. Can you explain to me the philosophy where you would make these projections? It seems somewhat misleading to me. If we're talking about tax burden or tax load on a family, then that includes user fees. There have been many definitions by many different organizations within this province that would indicate that a user fee is a tax by any other name. Can you explain to me the philosophy whereby you would not include user fees here, and do you do that anywhere internally to see what exactly the average kind of load between pure taxes, as you call them, and user fees would be for the average family in this province?

Mr. Melchin: Well, I would first like to mention that we are pleased to continue to have our performance measure as the lowest in Canada. Whether or not that specific formula includes every fee or fine or penalty that could ever be included, we are still substantially ahead of all of the other provinces, and even the inclusion of those, I would suspect, would still keep us the lowest in Canada.

But there is still a difference in the sense that many of these revenue sources are compulsory by nature; taxes are. We set out a rate, and all those that earn income will be compelled, required to comply with the Income Tax Act and pay their tax. So when we look at things such as personal income tax and all the taxes that we have in place and even health care premiums in that bundle of tax load, it's because of the compulsory nature of all those taxes that that's our performance measure that we're specifically comparing to the other provinces.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I'd now like to talk a little bit about the heritage savings trust fund. That's a fund, as this minister knows, that was started at the same time the Alaska fund was started. However, the Alaska fund has significantly grown over years. I understand that it's perhaps close to $30 billion now. It has paid out over time, the time being the same length of time that the Alberta heritage savings trust fund has been operational, over a billion dollars to its residents. We haven't seen those same kinds of dividends here in this province. As part of the review that you've undergone and some of the initial comments that you have made, Mr. Minister, do you anticipate seeing not only inflation-proofing that fund in the future but taking a look at significantly growing it for whatever long-term benefits you determine there to be?

Mr. Melchin: I've been informed that there are others listening for this answer, equally waiting to understand what that might be.

I want to first mention something about the heritage fund versus the Alaska fund. We have examined, actually, as part of our review this past year a number of funds throughout the world. Many of them are oil and gas kinds of funds like the Norwegian fund, the Alaska fund, and the heritage fund. The heritage fund in its creation actually had a different mandate from day one than the Alaska fund. It was actually created in 1976 to do a multiple of things. It had a source of revenue from oil and gas that would be put into it annually, which would then partially be saved for the future. It would then also be for social and economic benefits. It would be for capital projects. It would be for economic diversification. So this fund actually served a variety of purposes. It was never in its inception intended to be just a growth fund that paid out a dividend, whereas the Alaska fund was created for a different purpose and structure.

However, saying that, the heritage fund has benefited Albertans substantially over that time, over $25 billion of income that has helped a variety of things: our programs, tax structures being lower, and the repayment of debt. So it has benefited Albertans but maybe in a different way than how Alaskans chose to use their own fund.

With respect to our survey that we put out last year, it once again reaffirmed that the high priority of Albertans out of all the options of saving would be to save it for the future: keep it and let it grow as an endowment. So inflation-proofing, I think, when you look at an endowment fund, that's a very significant question we need to bring forward, and we intend to address that question, as I said, over this next year with respect to: how do we get a proper structure of an endowment fund so that you can preserve its value over the long term? And that does mean inflation-proofing in some factor.

As to allowing it to grow, those would be policies of a budget, priority decisions of a budget as you go forward, because there are many options for increasing assets. One way of increasing the net assets of the government is to pay down debt. Another is to increase the heritage fund. Through the 1980s and the early 1990s the governments throughout Canada – and Alberta was also one – accumulated significant amounts of debt, unlike, potentially, the Alaska one. The differences, without going through their budget – we accumulated up to $23 billion of operating debt, and therefore our priority and Albertans' priority continues to say: get rid of the debt. We're almost there. We've made substantial progress, coming from $23 billion down to just about $4.8 billion of our debt remaining. So we've come a long way.

That's why we also started in timing: let's start planning now for what is the heritage savings trust fund's purpose in the future. We are clarifying that it is an endowment structure, that it should be held for the long term, that it should be allowed as an endowment, I would say, to retain its real value. Then as you have surpluses in the future, you will have the opportunity to allow those to either grow or go to other priorities, but that's something that will have to be decided among future budget considerations.

Ms Carlson: In terms of the long-term endowment, then, you must have some initial steps that you're putting in place right now to help determine the direction that it'll go in the future, because to just say that, yes, the fund will continue to be a long-term endowment and that we're going to put the right governance framework in place means nothing if we don't see some of those details. What have you got as a starting point in that regard?

Mr. Melchin: Well, actually as a starting point it has been and will be retained. Clearly, the principal of that fund will be retained and going for its structuring so that just under $12 billion has an opportunity to grow with real value. That'll be a budget consideration, but it's also a policy discussion that we haven't completed. Therefore, I can't tell you specifically what that means. There are various options that we are considering in light of the survey results. Yes, we've done much work on that. We're close to bringing that back for some proposals for caucus, cabinet, and our standing policy committees' approval, and we'll bring that forward in this next year for approval and then presentation back to the Standing Policy Committee on the Heritage Savings Trust Fund.

Ms Carlson: Fair enough, Mr. Minister. Your projections for this year with that fund are to see more than $400 million coming back in revenue either to the GRF or retained. I'm not sure that that's determined. Given the uncertainty you have in terms of where you're going, where do you expect that revenue to come from? Is it all going to be generated from the mutual fund investments and so on that are currently existing?

Mr. Melchin: I'm not certain if I fully understand. You're talking about the $426 million in the estimate of income and where that's coming from. Our investment policy asset mix is still the same as the business plan of the heritage fund, so it will come from equities, real estate, fixed income. So it's going to come from a diversified portfolio. This year even that number we expect is truly not the optimal level that it will get to. We expect there's still a lot of volatility left in the marketplace, and as such our forecast for this year is actually still quite low. It might be high given the economic climate, but we expect long-term returns to be actually higher than that just even with the diversified portfolio. But this year out we expect returns to be lower than what would be normal.

Anything that we would contemplate in terms of the growth of the fund, be it inflation-proofing or otherwise, has to come for policy approval and then also budget discussion and deliberation. Therefore, this budget doesn't incorporate any such projected changes since that policy is not before the Legislature.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, staying with the heritage savings trust fund for just a moment longer, I'd like to talk about the investment strategies themselves. I would like to see the portfolio mix change slightly in terms of ethical investing and green investing. If we take a look at where the market is going globally in these areas, many investors and large investors are taking a look at avoiding unethical investments and taking a filter that talks about investments that have not only adequate financial returns and that are secure, which of course would be a basic minimum for anyone, but also that are ethical in terms of avoiding causing illness or disease and death, those kinds of investments such as tobacco companies, avoiding destroying or damaging the environment, and avoiding treating honest people with disrespect or disrespecting people's basic civil rights. We've had some of these discussions with regard to some of the investments like Talisman that the heritage savings trust fund has had.

I would like to add to that: taking a look at companies that are green. Companies that outperform on the environment traditionally, if you take a look at them individually, also outperform financially, and we are seeing globally progressive investors draw on world-class sustainable investments, that have become very positive. That ties into other requirements we have on the environment side. When you talk about the changes that are happening in terms of energy sources, we're seeing some of these new companies and solar and wind growing at phenomenal rates, and we will see those financial returns. I'm wondering what it's going to take for the government to take a look at this as a philosophy change, instead of giving no direction to the capital managers, to lead the stage in terms of provincial dollars being invested, to have a heavy focus in these areas. So if you could comment on that.

Mr. Melchin: I'd be happy to bring back to the all-party Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund discussions that might be very helpful, I think, on those and other investment policies. We have examined specific ethical or green, as we used to call them, investing policies. I would say, too, that in the investment community, though there are some small targeted funds and amounts that are being put towards those specific categories of investment, truly when you look at an ethical investment policy, I would counter that we do have an ethical investment policy, that we do invest in companies even by our natural selection of – take the Standard & Poor's 500, for example. These are companies that have gained a reputation not just for success but because they meet and abide by the laws of the land, they are successful in employment practices, investing practices, business practices, and they gain the support of the communities.

Standards of ethics are really the purview of Legislatures such as ours to pass those things which are acceptable in our societies, those being all the laws that we pass. The business communities are very ethical by nature. They need to attract clients and customers and serve them well, and by their nature they're driven, even though there are some bad apples in anything, to having an attitude of serving their customers well and having a high ethical standard of behaviour and performance. So the standard of the securities regulation ensures that there's a compliance factor to that, and one of the best things we can do is enforce the violations. That would be a very high ethical standard so that if there is an abuse, such as the Enrons of the world – and the marketplace is quick to pass judgment on those things – prior to those even getting that far, we have the right standards for companies if they want to have people invest in their companies.

So the securities regulation, ensuring that we've got the right laws in place for securities monitoring and investor confidence, the right accounting principles in place so that disclosure requirements are there: all these things will provide a common standard to say that they comply with the laws of the land, that they do meet a very high test of success. Then you and I are free to judge and all our investment funds are free to judge the likelihood of their success given their business plan scenarios, which are subject to a very high standard of investment judgment.

So I would counter that it is ethical to invest in public companies because they meet a high standard already. They have gone through very rigorous scrutiny to ensure that they're qualified, that they abide by the laws, and that they're very prudent in their business practices. I would be pleased to bring that back for further discussion specifically related to the pros and cons of that green or ethical investment strategy.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Minister, I certainly look forward to that debate in the committee because I think we need to raise the bar a little higher than what it is right now.

My last question at this time is on the 3.6 percent growth you project. We'd like to know what you're using for prediction models for the oil and gas prices, where you get them from, and what those are based on. If you have any actual documentation that we could review, we'd appreciate that.

Mr. Melchin: With respect to the 3.6 percent growth, is that with respect to the overall, total, revenues? Is that with respect to some tax revenues? Is that with respect to energy?

Ms Carlson: I think just oil and gas.

Mr. Melchin: I'll have to defer that. Even though we do work closely with the other departments, those specific criteria they're forecasting would come from the expertise in that specific section of the Energy department. They would be the ones that even we would go to as a Revenue department to find out those same answers. It will be more applicable when their estimates come forward to address that specific question to Energy.

3:30

Ms Carlson: Okay. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Many of my questions regarding the budget for Revenue are pulled from comments made by the Auditor General, so I'm looking for in a lot of cases status and updates on status. In some cases I'm continuing themes of questions that I've had with the minister previously. In particular, I'd like to talk a little bit about forgone revenues, which has been a theme of my questions to you in the past.

Now, you were looking at doing some improvements around valuation, value for money, from forgone revenues, and during your appearance almost exactly a year ago before the Public Accounts Committee you and I had a couple of exchanges about forgone revenue. My question is: have you been successful in updating or achieving the level of information that you wish to have? You used the example of the TEFU, the tax exempt fuel use program, a couple of times, and I'm wondering if you were successful in achieving a better indication of what you were getting. What kind of value were you getting for that forgone revenue outside of that one program that you talked to me about before? I'm looking for that discussion around those improvements.

There was also a discussion around uniform practices for fuel and tobacco tax, so I'm looking for an update on that status: consistency of looking at the treatment, control of uniformity of standards, and consistency with regard to smuggling and to the use of those taxes as well.

I have some questions around the royalties and the amount of net royalty holidays but royalty reductions and how that's figuring into, again, forgone revenue. How are we getting value for money? What is the scrutiny of that essentially lost revenue? I may not be perfect on my examples here, and feel free to correct me. My understanding is that in Syncrude right now we are either taking zero or 1 percent royalty off of everything that's produced there while they are involved in their expansion plans. So that's a lot of money not to be bringing in. What's the judgment? How are you able to satisfy the questions of myself and other Albertans that this is a good use of that forgone revenue? What are we achieving from that, and how are you measuring that? Are you able to measure it? Perhaps you can't. Perhaps you're hoping to be able to do this in the future. If so, fine, but let's hear it.

Moving off of forgone revenues, but just a question. There was a lot of talk about the hotel room tax, and I don't see that it . . .

An Hon. Member: The hotel?

Ms Blakeman: The hotel room tax. Yeah. That, in fact, was under this minister – I'm assuming it's still under this minister – and I'm wondering what happened there, because there was some chatter in the newspapers, and I'm pretty sure I heard certainly the Minister of Economic Development personally talk about that, yet I didn't see it. So did I miss this? Did I have two pages glued together, and I've missed this? I guess if there was a decision not to raise it, then what's the reasoning behind that decision not to raise it? Of course, this is of interest to me with Edmonton-Centre as my constituency and the number of hotels that are in it, but certainly the hotel industry was lobbying to have the government back away from collecting that tax, leave it essentially in place, and then they could use the money for tourism and other improvements that they needed. So did I miss it, and if I didn't miss it, what was behind the decision not to put it in place? I apologize for speculating here, but I didn't open the door to this speculation; colleagues to the minister did, so I feel free in asking that question.

We have not had the pleasure of having the Minister of Revenue back before the Public Accounts Committee on the '01-02 budget. The last time we talked to him we were examining the public accounts for the 2000-2001 budget, so I'm looking for some updates based on the recommendations coming from the Auditor General from essentially the previous fiscal year.

There continues to be a reservation of opinion for capital assets, so once again I'm asking for the minister to defend that choice of not capitalizing and amortizing those expense acquisitions under $15,000. That's a fairly standard comment from the Auditor General, and every year I'm going to hold the minister to account for his choice in not implementing that.

They repeat their recommendation that the trustees of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research . . . request clarification over the meaning of "real value of the Endowment Fund over the long term" in its legislation.

This is pretty detailed. I'm expecting to receive the answers in writing from the minister, but for his department staff's use I'm looking at the Auditor General's report, page 233. Actually, the minister has done quite well, and those are pretty short Auditor General's comments, much shorter than what I'm used to seeing. Mind you, you don't have that many expenses in your department. So those are the two questions that arise out of the Auditor General's report.

Perhaps I'll sit down and I can get what answers I can from the minister, and then I can add a few others that I've got to ask as well.

Thanks, Minister.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I don't actually have with me today all the responses to the Auditor General, and some of this I will provide to you with follow-ups, with some answers. I'll comment on a few of them generally that I have the knowledge of in front of me.

Most of our debate today really is on the estimates, and therefore the Auditor General's report hasn't brought that material as far as a debate on estimates. I would say this on forgone revenues: I do actually concur with the Auditor General's recommendations on the cost-benefit analysis of forgone revenues. Therefore, we have been working on both quantifying and identifying specifically in our own department – not all of the forgone revenues are within the Department of Revenue – and we are focusing in on programs like TEFU, that you'd mentioned, and we can quantify how much tax is forgone. We know that amount. It varies. Around $130 million annually is actually the amount of forgone revenue on TEFU in specific, $130 million, $135 million, in that range.

This past year with respect to TEFU we have undertaken actually quite a consultation with industry itself about what options we could take; i.e., maybe eliminate the program altogether under some cost neutral basis if there's another way that we could provide it to them. We weren't looking for more ways to bring in more revenue, but there are some ways: is this program really needed? So in that discussion we haven't finished that. We're actually still in the middle of that, trying to find out to what extent this program is really benefiting the industries to which it's targeted. We're accumulating some of that material right now so that we can be more clear as to the benefit of such a program.

Also, at a minimum one of the outcomes we're attempting to then do is to ensure that it's simplified and easy to understand and enforce, not just from the company's perspective as to their applications and getting refunds but also from the department's and the company's perspective as to making it simple and understandable so that there's a way to ensure a higher level of compliance. We are looking to simplify that program at a minimum. We're in the middle of that, and we will bring forward some conclusions about what we view as easier to quantify: the costs forgone, the revenue forgone. A little harder to make sure you substantiate what are the benefits that are realized.

That one has been our main one. That's been the largest one that we've looked at. There are others, actually, some of them outside of the purview of our department, that are large in scope that we are working on with other departments, and you'd need to specifically speak to those departments at that time, though we will continue to address the ones inside of ours. I don't have any specific numbers for you as to the cost benefit of the TEFU program right with me.

I wasn't quite clear what she'd asked on the uniform practices of fuel and tobacco taxes, so I might ask for a further clarification. You mentioned also something about smuggling, and I'm not certain if that related to your comment on uniform practices or on another area.

Royalty deductions was a question you raised. That one you'll have to address to the Department of Energy since royalty policy and revenues flow through the Department of Energy. For example, you mentioned Syncrude. We do have a royalty policy of 1 percent until they get a payout, until they've recovered their costs, at which time it increases to upwards of 25 percent of royalty rates for the oil sands projects up north. But as to what it's achieving, that'll have to be specifically addressed to the Department of Energy.

There have not been any changes in the hotel tax that you mentioned. There has been, as you mentioned, much discussion on the topic as to a number of things. Do you leave the tax in place and then flow through the money for tourism? You can ask the Minister of Economic Development when his budget comes up for estimates review. There were also discussions about a levy, maybe eliminating the hotel tax altogether and letting industry raise a levy. There are a variety of options that have been considered. Nothing has been finalized. There are no changes in the tax structure of the hotel tax in this budget. It's still as it has been in the past and is still being collected as it has been in the past, though that topic with respect to that policy of funding for tourism and whether or not that ought to be dedicated from hotel tax would have to go back to the Department of Economic Development in their estimates.

Our present policy has been that we don't take our taxes as dedicated revenues. We want to preserve a broad base of taxes and sources of revenues to finance the highest priorities of government such as health and education and those areas so that you don't get into dedicating every tax into other specific areas and don't have the flexibility to offset. When one revenue source is high and another is low you need the balancing of the two in an overall revenue structure, and that's why there hasn't been a specific dedication of a hotel tax for any specific purpose. If there was a desire to increase the funding for tourism, that would have to be a question separate from the revenue taxation policy. If there were any changes in that policy in the future, it likewise could be addressed then. But you didn't miss anything. There have been no changes in this budget. It is pretty well the same status quo with respect to hotel tax.

Updates with respect to Auditor General comments. We will provide you with an update on any of the comments. There have not been many, actually, with respect to the Department of Revenue as you appropriately suggested. That's because our group is doing such an outstanding job. They're complying and meeting the Auditor General's expectations and seeing that all of those things are met. In fact, our department does work very closely with them by the nature of the work they do.

Not capitalizing expenses under $15,000. In any of these things there are policies which are not clearly in accounting policy black and white; i.e., it has to be one way or the other. When you look at a policy of what it is that you capitalize, you usually pick a threshold of expenditure that makes it simple so that you're not trying to capitalize everything because it stays on a balance sheet to be amortized over a lengthy period of time and makes it difficult both for an administrative practice and even for the public to understand accounting rules and principles and amortization. So you usually take a threshold of saying a certain dollar amount below which it isn't material enough to capitalize everything given that our budget is a certain amount. The dollar amount you pick is kind of the arbitrary rule because it is an arbitrary number that you're picking given how large your budget is, the size of the government.

So $15,000 on budgets of hundreds of millions is part of that question of materiality. Is it really worth the extra effort to capitalize and amortize? Does it add any real new information or value to the public? Is it material enough to do that? That's part of the judgment you use in applying accounting principles. As such, that's why in the past it has not been the practice of the government to capitalize items under $15,000, and there's been that discussion going back and forth: is that the right number?

I don't have a latest update if there is a latest update. Other than that, we'll provide you that one as well.

You've mentioned also the science and engineering fund, and my good colleague the Minister of Innovation and Science is going to have an opportunity to likewise respond to that in his estimates.

Mr. Doerksen: Tonight.

Mr. Melchin: Tonight. Oh, yes. He's ready to go, and he'll remember this and can supplement with . . .

Mr. Doerksen: What are you talking about?

Mr. Melchin: We're talking about the science and engineering fund, the ingenuity fund, which it's now called, that one of the requirements is to maintain the real value, and given that unfortunately the $500 million that was put into the fund – timing for investment purposes couldn't have been worse really. In the last two years the markets have dropped substantially, so the real value of that fund has dropped below $500 million. So the question to the Auditor General is: with our legislation do they have the spending authority?

It was anticipated that that fund would earn a certain amount of income every year, of which most of it could be spent for science and engineering research and then retain an inflation-proofing so the real value of the fund was kept. But from day one the markets went down and the investments lost money; therefore, that needed to be clarified. There was, actually, in this budget a top-up of $22 million coming in this year for the science and engineering fund to put that book value – in the estimates of Science and Innovation tonight that should probably be more fully explored – back to the $500 million, which doesn't necessarily fully answer that question, but it does address one of the problems that we have heard from the Auditor General.

Some of the specific questions we'll provide also back to you in writing. Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. The minister started out by sort of saying: well, we're looking at the estimates here and not at the Auditor General. In defence there I think it's important that we do always look at those two hand in hand because if we're not going through into a new budget with some of those recommendations from the Auditor General about the budgeting process and the accounting process and the performance measurement process of government, if we're not including that and moving forward with it, we're in trouble. So I'm always going to bring this up and query everybody on it.

I'm wondering if the minister is able to give us a list of the number of forgone revenue programs that he is currently overseeing in his department. He keeps mentioning the one, and I keep probing to see how many are being overseen here. I understand that he's only willing to talk about the ones in his department. That's fine, but I'd like to get the list.

I find it interesting that the minister is not keen on assigning sort of dedicated taxes, and I find myself agreeing with him because I think it takes away the flexibility of government to assign that money. I'll give you a specific example. You work yourself into a position where you're having to raise a tax to satisfy the demands of the group that is receiving the tax. I know that in the States, for example, the snowmobile clubs down there do very well because they are assigned a certain percentage of the gasoline tax. But as they expand their operations and want to do more, they're looking for more and more of that money, so they want more and more of that tax collected so that they, in fact, get more for themselves. To my mind, the purpose of levying that kind of tax is not to become a revenue stream for very specific groups. So I'm agreeing with the minister there.

I have to argue a bit with the minister – this is an ongoing battle between the Auditor General and almost every ministry – about capitalizing and amortizing these costs of $15,000. I don't want to let the minister's comments go by in Hansard without challenging them. I mean, yes, it's one thing to say that $15,000 for one item is not worth going to all this effort for, but when you've got departments that spend that $15,000 on a hundred items, you've now spent far more than $15,000. You've spent $15,000 for every one of those hundred items. That now becomes a significant amount of money. The fact that you're saying that we just dropped $14,500 on a whatever – car, computer, whatever – and its value is used up inside of one year is simply not accurate. It retains a value beyond that year, and we're losing the sense of the value of those assets. So I'm just arguing back with him there.

Now, he was asking about: what was this uniform practice? I'm, in fact, looking for a status update because I'm reading through the questions and comments from the minister's appearance on April 17, 2002, before the Public Accounts Committee. There was a question asked by the Member for Calgary-Bow, and I will just quote it for you. She's referring to the Treasury annual report. That would be for 2000-2001, page 41.

It's reported that "Alberta Treasury commenced working with industry and other governments across Canada to set standards and to seek uniform practices" with respect to the taxation of tobacco and fuel. What are the benefits to Alberta from participating in the fuel tax and tobacco tax uniformity projects, and does Alberta retain its sovereignty over fuel and tobacco taxes?

And in the minister's response, he talks about addressing the smuggling. That's where that's coming from.

So if his staff wants to go back and look at those comments from that Public Accounts meeting, which is Hansarded, I'm looking for the status update on where you're at with that. The minister does say that the uniformity project is helping; if it's harmonized; tobacco smuggling is important; looking at methodologies, et cetera, et cetera. My point is: where are you with this? You were asked a question. You sort of said: we're getting to it. Where are you? We're now actually two years past what we're talking about here. So there's the reference for him or for the staff to go back and look.

The issue around the 1 percent royalties for Syncrude. I think what bothers me about that and what bothers me about whether we're looking at examining the value, the cost-benefit analysis on that forgone revenue is that that's 1 percent of everything that Syncrude produces. We're not talking 1 percent from that section or 1 percent from, you know, that process. We're talking 1 percent of absolutely everything that they are processing up there. That's a lot of forgone revenue in support of a new section being built. The minister minimizes that, and I think he's wrong to do so, and I think we need to look at whether we really are going to be getting that out. [interjection] Right.

I don't really need responses at this point to the points that I've raised. I've given you the reference documents for the staff to go and send me the responses in writing, and the rest, I think, was really just comments back and forth.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

The Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would also like to rise to ask a few questions of the minister on his report. I am very pleased, in fact, to hear some of the comments that the minister has made, particularly in regard to the interprovincial initiative to start a committee to start looking at national harmonization of our security regulations. In my view, this is one of the largest and most important issues in our country and not just from an economic development perspective but also from a national unity perspective. I have for years felt that the lack of harmonization between our security regulations across this country has been a significant deterrent to creating venture capital, to creating new companies and just a host of other issues and problems that it has created.

Now, there have in the past been attempts made to do this. There have been other committees that have looked at it. It has not been successful to this point and thus the questions that I have for the minister. I'm wondering if the minister could elaborate for the Assembly here on how this committee would be sort of structured. Who would be sitting on this committee? How would they be selected? Are they appointed? Is there any opportunity for public input, scrutiny? Is it an open process? How would the committee membership be chosen, I guess, is sort of the first question.

The second question: considering the importance of this initiative to economic development, is the minister's department working closely with the Economic Development department to ensure that there is a full breadth of input into this process and that this time hopefully it will succeed where in the past it has not? So I'd appreciate if the minister could comment on that.

Mr. Melchin: I'm glad you raised this. Too often I would say it maybe doesn't catch the highlight because it isn't health or education, but it's critical, if we want to improve the capital markets both for investor confidence and safety and the willingness to invest, to improve our regulation of securities in Canada and throughout the world. It can be a foundation for us. You mentioned national unity, which is another great by-product of this, but it can be a foundation for us in ensuring that the Canadian markets grow, that we have more access to capital over time versus other countries, especially like the United States, who has such a large share of the world markets.

With respect to this committee's structure, its structure, we thought, is important enough that we were going to leave it as a ministerial committee. So rather than appointing and delegating it like the federal committee which is also out – the federal minister put out a wise persons' committee and nominated some people from various provinces. But, ultimately, it still has to come back to us as legislators in each of the provinces to assess what we are going to do. Given that it's a provincial jurisdiction, we're going to have to address these questions provincially, and therefore we felt that as provincial ministers we would steer this committee. In fact, I chair the committee of ministers from across the country and the territories, and all of us have unanimously concurred that we want to provide by September 30 a working plan for regulation of securities nationally.

That said, we are going to work towards providing a document for public input. You talked about public input. We will meet as provincial ministers over conference calls each month, but by the end of June we're going to meet together after more work has been done by our departments, by the securities that we are asking as resource groups to this. We are inviting a variety of people that have expertise in this industry to be resources to us. Our departments, from deputy ministers on, will be providing resources. All the securities commissions will be providing resources. Our own Alberta Securities Commission will be a resource to us as well as industry individuals. We have written to and asked for the input of all stakeholders in the industry, in the investment community, so they have been informed of this initiative, and we will be providing a document to them by July for their public feedback.

Our working plan will not solve all the details of implementation by September 30, but we're going to get a commitment from all of the provinces and territories for an outcome. One really is to streamline a national approach to regulation of securities so that a company has a one-window approach to approval, not having to deal with 13 regulators to get something done, where rules are different in each province, where the regulators have different sophistication and interest in each of the provinces. So it's going to put some requirements on all of us to come together and work in a national interest on solving these problems.

We're thrilled with this initiative. We'll be reporting back periodically as to the progress. September 30 is a tight deadline. We do not want to give it a lot of time. We want some action. We want to start driving a commitment by all of the provinces to resolve this issue. It will help resolve some of the uniform securities legislation across all the provinces. It will help resolve issues of access to markets. It's a one-window approach rather than a 13-regulator approach. It will address questions and even access when dealing with other countries. What is our international presence and a way we can promote ourselves internationally and represent ourselves internationally as a country even though it's provincially regulated?

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

It's the Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. I have just a few questions for the minister today, and the first one deals with some Auditor General recommendations in some of his previous reports in which he asks the government to determine the objectives that are supposed to be met by tax decreases for the corporate income tax. Now, I know that many people believe that cuts to corporate income tax are beneficial, but it always seems to be the corporations that say so. Similarly, cuts to the personal income tax of high-income earners have their partisans too, but they're mostly to be found among those who have high personal incomes and not amongst those who have low personal incomes. So the question really is: what is the objective of the four-year reduction in the corporate income tax rate? Has that been defined? Will it be defined for the Auditor General in a way that will be satisfactory to him, and if it has been defined, what is the objective? Since we are now partway through that program, what has been accomplished with it so far?

Secondly, the reduction in the last couple of years has been less than initially indicated in the year 2000. I think it's another half percent instead of a 1 percent reduction this year, and I think it was much the same last year. So what is the reason for the reduction in the reduction, if you will, from the original four-year plan?

My next question has to do with the school property taxes, and this is expected to grow by $64 million this year because of growth in the assessment base. The mill rate is not being changed, but as anyone who's been involved in municipal government can tell you, the best way to get a tax increase without anybody really knowing it is just to leave the mill rate the same and have the property values increase either through new properties being added to the base or through an increase in the relative value of the properties themselves.

This is similar to bracket creep on the income tax side, and the government has taken some credit in the past for eliminating bracket creep, so the question is: why not eliminate it here? When did the decision to go away from capping the total revenue from the property tax to simply capping the rate take place? When did that policy decision get changed and why?

The other question has to do with the heritage savings trust fund, and I'd like the minister to comment on the decision to change the balance in the fund to a more aggressive one, increase the proportion of equities, and why that was done at a time when the market was at or near its peak and had been long overdue for a correction and what the justification of that is in light of the losses of the fund subsequent to that and whether or not the minister plans to revisit the mix between equities and bonds in the fund.

Those would be my questions for now, Madam Chairman. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Madam Chair. The first one was the objectives to be met when you cut taxes. The objective is that we want to ensure that we retain a climate where people will want to come and live, where opportunity for jobs can be created, and where it can attract capital. If we're at the higher rates of tax burden, then you become a significant deterrent for people wanting to live here. Look at the many people that choose to move to Alberta, even for reasons such as taxation. Look at the many companies that choose to come here for reasons of the Alberta advantage, of low cost. If you want to formulate capital and grow and create jobs, you need to retain money, dollars.

I'll give you just another. It's anecdotal. Last year we were in New York visiting with a number of large fund managers, and it's their opinion, but I said: here you are sitting in New York; tell me what your view of Canada is. I asked a similar question to a number of the different fund managers. This is where really 50 percent of the capital markets are coming out of the world, and they're looking at placing funds and investing money in the world. "So tell us about your view of why you would invest in Canada." They do say a lot of great things about Canada because we have much to be pleased with in our opportunities in Canada in relation to the world, so there are many great, complimentary things to say. Yet when you look at cost, they said: your tax rates and the amount of the tax you take in Canada is too high versus what happens in the United States; we actually get a better return by investing our money in the United States than what we get for a return on our money if we invest it in Canada, in the companies in Canada. It's that type of an approach that I find unacceptable. If you want to increase the wealth so that we would have more even for government and its services, how do you grow the economy? How do you grow the opportunities? How do you encourage that to flourish? So it is important that we set thresholds of being competitive vis-à-vis the other provinces and especially with our largest trading partner, the United States. So that tax business component is a very important component of that mix.

When you look at our heritage fund investment objectives, our own investments – and these are scaled down given the marketplace – our assumptions in our heritage fund business plan for return on our own investments in companies in Canada in the equities is 7 percent versus companies in the United States, where it's 8 percent. When the markets were more at their peak, it was 9 percent in Canada and 11 percent in the United States, you know, a spread of 10 to 15 percent difference in return in investing your money in companies on our own fronts. So why is it that individuals like you and I that invest for our future in our savings, in our RRSPs and our pensions and so forth are asking for greater foreign content in our RRSPs? We're asking to invest more of our money as Canadians outside of Canada. Why we ask that is because we actually get better returns on our money if we don't be so punitive to us in formulating capital and clearly for all the diversification of risk factors. So it is important for us in Alberta – we're a small population of 3 million people in a vast world, with a neighbour to the south of 300 million people and 30 million people in Canada – that we make this an attractive place for people, that they can save their money, that they can take care of their own individual needs, that they can plan for their future, that they would be prepared to invest their money here, that they're prepared to attract more money from the world here. It's that that creates more opportunity for all of us. It is precisely for those reasons that you do not also get punitive to the high income.

Our cuts, for example, to personal income tax that happened before – you didn't hear the complaints when the temporary surcharges on the high-income earners were placed in place to deal with the deficits. Those were temporary surcharges, and when you try and remove it, all of sudden you're favouring the rich, whereas it was temporarily punitive to them. Our tax policy even there will facilitate not being punitive and penalizing those that want to work – and it doesn't matter how much income they're making – and save that bonus for their personal needs rather than it always having to come to the government. It is an essential component, I would say, to our framework in the Alberta advantage.

When you look at the revenue structures of high taxation, look at what's happened in Canada as examples. Of our neighbours to the west and east of us there are only two provinces now, Ontario and Alberta, that are actually contributing in excess of what they give back. We are helping all Canadians because of what this policy has done for us. We don't make any apologies for it. It has worked well. It has created an opportunity where people want to move to Alberta. They're moving here in great numbers. Our corporation base of taxation is improving. Even with lower numbers, lower rates of tax it's increasing. More companies are moving to Alberta. More opportunities continue to expand, and it's been evident just by what we've done.

I'll have to defer the school property taxes. My hon. colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs actually has education property taxes in his budget. The education property tax, the school property tax, is actually in Municipal Affairs and therefore not in my estimates. I could certainly give some comments, but I'd ask you to maybe defer the comments for when he is here to talk specifically on his estimates.

The Alberta heritage savings trust fund decision. When did we change the diversification? The only other survey done of the heritage fund was back in 1995 or early '96, and it asked some questions of Albertans about the purpose of the fund. Should we make a long-term decision now or wait until budgets were balanced and so forth? Albertans said at that stage: retain the heritage fund; wait until you've balanced your budget and started to pay down the debt before you actually make the more longer term decisions about the heritage fund. But they did also give the feedback to keep it structured as an endowment fund. Within that survey the context of public policy and legislative changes were brought forth and introduced, to start with the 1997 year, that changed the structure of that fund, when it was divided into a transition portfolio and an endowment portfolio, where the funds were being taken out of the transition, which was all a fixed-income portfolio, and gradually being moved over into an endowment. So it actually goes back six years in direction and policy, and we've benefited through a lot of those years, too, in the markets. As they continued to improve in the early years, so did our income stream do very well during those years in our investments.

Are we going to revisit the mix? We're constantly revisiting our asset mix and policy investment decisions. In the heritage fund business plan we've actually changed a component to put more into absolute return strategies, to increase that to 5 percent of the mix, and to increase private equities to 5 percent of the mix, both to help diversify the risk but also to maximize the long-term yield.

It's impossible, I would still say, to choose the peaks and the valleys of any investment. Take a bond today. We have a policy of 35 percent of our portfolio in bonds. Our portfolio is actually potentially exposed to some capital losses, so there's no such thing as no risk in bonds. If interest rates go up, the value of your bond will go down. If you can get today a bond for, say, 4 percent and tomorrow you can get a bond for 6 percent, you're not going to pay the same money for that bond at 4 percent that you would pay for a bond at 6 percent. So with the value of your bond that you hold at the lower rates and with interest rates at historical lows, in the bond markets it's very questionable as to the risk with those even. Our portfolio could suffer substantial losses if we only choose bonds when interest rates are coming maybe back and start escalating. It's been the last 20 years that bond markets have rallied because we've had historical high interest rates, and it made maybe more prudent sense then to take that strategy. High interest rates, that were double digit at the stage, have been gradually declining to the point now where bond interest rates are once again at historical lows.

So the long-term strategy is what we're looking for with the heritage fund. Albertans said: a long-term strategy. They want the fund here for a long term. That was reiterated again in our survey this past fall. What I would say is that if you're looking long term, just a couple of statistics for you. We looked at this. In 67 of the last seventy-seven 10-year rolling year periods equities outperformed bonds. In 10 of those years bonds outperformed equities. If you look at a 20-year rolling period, equities have always outperformed bonds. Always. So the longer your time horizon the less risk you have. If you're prepared to say that your investment strategy is a long-term horizon, then your risk is diversified by a portfolio balance and also by a time horizon.

Our heritage fund is not a short-term fund. This is a long-term endowment, and if you want to maximize returns and still diversify and manage the risk component, you will diversify, and therefore I would say to you: you're still going to want an equity component in a long-term strategy. If you need to exit for retirement reasons or for some reason in the next one to five years, then don't go into equities: too much volatility, especially in today's market. But if you're prepared to be patient in the long term, you will outperform bonds. And to not put all your eggs in one basket: that's why we diversify. That's why you do say that bonds have an important component of it. So does real estate. That's why we have actually diversified our portfolio into up to 10 percent of real estate over the past couple of years so that we're getting a better blended mix of risk and return strategy in our portfolio. Our managers of the fund are doing an exceptional job. We've got some tremendous professionals that know the industry well, and we're very pleased with the oversight of that fund despite the difficulty in the world markets today.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I did have a few more questions on the national harmonization of security regulation initiative, and I certainly appreciated the minister's answers on the previous questions.

Of course, the minister did allude to the difficulties here of getting into this issue, and of course it's a little bit too technical, I think, to attract general interest. In fact, it seems to only attract the interest of former stockbrokers, like myself, and people who have been around this issue for some years. But I was not kidding when I said that I felt that this is one of the largest issues holding back the Canadian economy in the world and holding back provinces within Canada. That's why I mentioned that it's very important, I think, for not just economic development but in fact even national unity. So I'm very concerned and very interested in this review going forward.

The minister has answered how the committee will be struck. I guess sort of the first question I'd like to know about is whether or not there are going to be web pages, some publicity, some press releases, et cetera, outlining this as it goes forward so that stakeholders that might be affected will be aware and will be invited to have public input.

This has been a long, difficult, and contentious issue for many, many years. It's been ongoing for many years. People who have been involved in the industry have been complaining about this problem for many years. Of course, it's very difficult to address parochial viewpoints and interprovincial trade barriers and so on. What I would like to hear the minister discuss is: how would this review be different from anything that has occurred in the past? How will this be different this time in terms of committee makeup, for example, the types of expertise and the type of experience and, I guess, the types of industry interest that will be represented on this committee that would be different from previous efforts to address this issue? For example, will there be small business entrepreneurs on this committee or allowed to be involved in the votes on this? Obviously, that's a critical stakeholder in the entire issue, and in trying to raise venture capital, they are in fact the people that are most affected.

I guess that if the minister could address those two issues, I would certainly appreciate it, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We're glad we have someone, the hon. member, with his background in the stock market industry. I'd agree that this is a critical issue for unity. In fact, it's really been interesting thus far as we've talked. You might say what provinces might be really against this, and you could certainly take Ontario, where the largest capital market of Canada still is. They might have a different interest in saying: yes, let's nationalize and put it all in Ontario. They might come from that perspective. Or you might say Quebec. You know, have they looked at this differently as wanting to participate with the rest of the country? Do they even want to be tied in with the rest of the country?

But without exception even those two provinces as well as when we talked with the Maritimes or the territories and clearly our prairie provinces, all of the ministers have acknowledged that maybe it's timing, that it's a critical question for us nationally, that we do expect and take seriously our provincial responsibilities, that we can find practical solutions to still live within our constitutional jurisdictions yet solve the 13-jurisdiction regulatory difficulty that the small businesses in particular, when you're raising small amounts of capital, find extremely burdensome and almost preventative in accessing capital markets. Absolutely correct. The formulation of that capital and venture capital under a small amount of money becomes prohibitive. So in the simplification of that approach to regulation and accepting of the standards, the interprovincial trade barriers need to be removed.

What's different this time? You're absolutely right. You would know better than maybe many that this has been studied by many other committees before. It's been attempted and failed time and time again. This is the only time that I'm aware of that all of the provincial ministers have agreed at the onset that there is at least one objective that we can get to, and that's the passport approach, and we want to accomplish that. We've already assessed: is there something that, if this is not the best model, at least practically can attain most of the objectives that we'd like? So we've come to agreement on that.

It's going to be difficult in the details maybe, but we're committed to drive this through legislatively and in support of the provincial legislative processes in all the provinces, which has never happened before. In the past they put out, like the federal government did today, a wise persons' committee, and they put out a committee of experts in the industry. Then all of a sudden they come back at the end of the day and they put it back on the provincial regulators, expecting to somehow come onside with answers that may not be politically acceptable; i.e., a national, federally regulated model that is not acceptable to any of the provinces. That's what happened in the past: they kept coming back to turning it over to federal jurisdiction. We're not going to wait for how many decades or lifetimes to open up constitutional questions. We can solve these practically and efficiently and still be very responsive to our provincial questions. So the commitment of all the provinces, of the ministers to specifically stand by and lead this process and ensure by the tight deadline of September 30 that it doesn't get studied forever – that doesn't mean that all the details will be sorted out, but it will mean that an action plan can be put in place to get us there.

You've made some great comments about: how do more people get involved? Web sites, press releases raise the profile. We're early into this process, and I will take those recommendations as solid ideas that we will need to do. We've done a number of press releases, but you've got to continue to keep that awareness more and more. We have written a fairly lengthy stakeholder list already, and we'll continue to broaden that. We're asking all the provinces for a good stakeholder list that we can advise and update. We're developing a background paper on this that we'll put out for public discussion for the first part of July so that through the summer months and through the beginning of September we can get that public and stakeholder feedback and conclude at least the outline of the plan for an action plan by September 30.

Involving small business entrepreneurs: I like your idea on that. We will ensure that that's a stakeholder group that is represented and ensure that their ideas are on the table and facilitated.

Thank you so very much for your comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. One last question to the minister. A number of commentators in the United States and elsewhere have predicted that we in fact may be entering a period of deflation in the economy. I'd like to know if the minister has considered that possibility, how seriously he thinks it may affect us, and what steps he has taken to insulate the heritage savings trust fund from a threat of deflation, what strategies the government has in place to protect the fund if in fact that comes to pass.

Mr. Melchin: Very good questions. You know, the challenge with economists – and it's heard many times. The economists have predicted 10 out of the last three recessions, and that's the problem. I don't know how many times every economist you choose is going to have the crystal ball of the future. None of them really know. They can take the models and project. There is a case to be made: are we going into a period of deflation? We've heard that. I would say that there's always a risk of some of those factors. We've seen a softening in the economy certainly to the south of us, in the United States, but even many of the economists in the United States are saying quite the opposite, that the United States will yet pull out of this and improve.

Your question is very good, but in not knowing if it is one of those times or not – I clearly can't guarantee those future events; you don't know what impacts of world events could combine to create a deflationary period – how do you insulate any investments? You know, I guess it gets back to, in a long-term view, that you have to have a diversified portfolio, then, because how do you pick any one scenario as being the only scenario or the best scenario given that you can't guarantee the future? So if you picked any one investment strategy, you might win big or just totally lose everything if you invested everything in one portfolio, and it wouldn't matter which one you picked, including bonds. You can lose a lot of money if interest rates all of a sudden escalate like they did in the '80s, and you've got bonds at 5 percent interest and all of a sudden there are double-digit interest rates.

So there's no such thing as investing with no risk. That's not the case. But you do make a prudent investment rule that you would invest as a prudent investor would invest. If it's a long-term strategy, you'd be prepared to invest through cycles, not just trying to pick the highs and lows. If it's long term, which the heritage fund is, you'd be prepared to invest with long-term thinking and be patient with your strategy because the diversified portfolios of equities and bonds, real estate, and so forth are just that, to diversify and hedge against a variety of these problems, be it deflation or any other investment challenges that arise in the market.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise this afternoon and participate in discussions on estimates for Revenue. Just a few comments before we start. A number of people have been talking about our heritage savings trust fund, and it is one of those funds that are under the Ministry of Revenue. I had the opportunity to read a book called Simple Wealth, Inevitable Wealth, and it's just a beautiful little book. Certainly, it focused on equities. It traced the record of equities back to 1926. One of the encouraging things that all members should know is that since 1926 equities have averaged 9 percent per year. So I think it is a prudent choice that we have in the heritage savings trust fund, particularly when we're looking at long-term investments, that we have invested in equities. So I have great faith that they will come back. Now, I don't know if it will be in my time. It's a crazy world out there right now. One of the stats that was brought out in the book was that even after the Great Depression, five years after the big crash came, 95 percent of all those equities had regained their initial value at the time of the crash. So I do have a tremendous amount of faith in our endowment portfolio in the heritage savings trust fund.

One of the other examples that was cited in this particular book was about Warren Buffett. Warren Buffett is also big into equities, and he had a paper loss of $6.5 billion which he recovered in three months. Now, we're not doing that right now, but in the long run I know that we will.

I was also very interested in the comments by the minister regarding why people will come to Alberta. Certainly, right now we are doing a lot of good things in this province to pick up our economy and whatever.

Another interesting book that I was reading was Road to Growth. Tax structure to turn economies around is a very, very important issue, but one of the other factors in turning around economies is the downsize in governments. Now, I know that we have some work to do here. We went from 18 ministries to 24, and perhaps the minister in his wisdom and if he follows the examples of economies that he had cited, whether it be the United States, whether it be Ireland, whether it be the Dutch miracle, whatever – in all of these the other component to reducing taxes was to downsize government. So I think we do have some work to do there in Alberta.

Now, then, as well as the heritage fund being part of the responsibility of the ministry, we also have the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research endowment fund, the Alberta heritage scholarship fund, the Alberta heritage science and research endowment fund, the Alberta risk management fund, and the Alberta Securities Commission, so a very, very important ministry and a very complex ministry with all these various funds to oversee.

[Ms Graham in the chair]

Now, then, as well, one of the major roles of the ministry is to manage our investments in the province, to develop tax and revenue policy within the province, and to administer tax programs and minimize the risk of loss of public assets. In looking at this year's budget, the government is requesting $45.3 million to operate four core programs, and these are broken down by the ministry's support services at $3.962 million, revenue collection and rebates at $21.439 million, investment at $15.408 million, and risk management and insurance at $1.039 million. I have a few questions for the minister. What kinds of rebates does his department issue? How do they vary from year to year? Is the government planning on following the same investment strategy for the various funds that they did this year? So if the minister could answer those for me, please.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Okay. Well, first off, I appreciate actually the comments you made back on heritage fund investing in equities long term. Thank you for your comments on it. It's nice to hear that there is support for some equities, and I know that's been true, too, from the participation of the members opposite on the all-party Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee when we analyze policy and investment decisions. It's hard and it's always difficult to have to stand up and be a year that's comparable to the crashes in the 1920s and the other significant downturn in the 1970s and have to be the third worst in that last 100-year period. It's never easy to want to be patient and prudent through that time, but I would concur with your analysis that patience through this will prove very beneficial for all Albertans and that we still continue a diversified portfolio to include equities as well as bonds and real estate.

The Road to Growth and downsize government, cut taxes. Well, glad to hear you commenting on those and advocating those. We take those in context. We'll remember to quote you, though, on those two comments quite often. Thank you.

Let's see. The rebates. I've got to get the line item. Maybe I'll have you comment again where you got that. I missed your comment on the rebates. If you could just let me know what that is, I'll get back to it.

Mr. Bonner: I will get those back to the minister.

On page 328 of the Department of Revenue's business plan for 2003-2006 the department indicates that it will "develop and maintain a long term revenue management framework." This is the same performance measure that was used last year, so my question is in regard to this. What kept the department from meeting this goal when they first established it last year? My second question in regard to this is: when does the department plan to have this framework in place? If the minister does have a target date, could he share that with us?

Mr. Melchin: I'm sorry. I've got to ask for your reference again. You said page 328?

Mr. Bonner: Yes. Of the business plan.

Madam Chair, for the minister that would be goal 1.1, the first bullet under Key Strategies.

Mr. Melchin: Okay. Goal 1.1, key strategy, development of "long term revenue management framework." You were asking – and I've got to clarify this again – which of the performance measures we did or did not meet. Is that what your question was?

Mr. Bonner: It was the same goal you had last year. Was the goal met last year, and if not, why not?

Mr. Melchin: Okay. With respect to this one I do see that this "develop and maintain a long term revenue management framework" isn't so much of a project that's completed and finished in one year. We have always thought of it being an ongoing part of the work of our department, that we will continue the research I would say continuously on options, on long-term scenarios, on alternatives for long-term planning of revenue sources. So in that respect we have met many of our objectives.

One of our first things was to make sure we do a proper inventory of what is, working with all the other departments to establish and understand better what their revenue sources are, what their policies behind that are, and how that will affect the long-term streams of revenue. So on that part much homework has been done, not necessarily complete but great progress on that front. Our development now of long-term strategies is becoming more of the focus for our next year coming up. I would say in that respect that this is one of the key works that's ongoing. It's not so much a project having been completed and finished, but it will be ongoing work with which we've made great progress, and we'll continue to do so going forward.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I wasn't going to get up and raise this, but I was looking at your goal 1.1, "a revenue structure that meets Alberta's needs and is consistent with Albertans' values," and goal 1.2, "fair and competitive provincial tax and revenue systems."

I just want to share a little story with you. A good friend of mine loves a great cigar, and recently he confessed to me that he hasn't bought a cigar in Alberta for months and months and months. In fact, he can get cigars sent to him out of Manitoba, pay the freight, and they're still less than half of what he has to pay for them here. So I thought I'd better look into this because I didn't realize that that's really what took place with respect to the change in the tobacco tax.

It turns out that I have a tobacco store in my constituency, so I went over and had a chat with the owner. I didn't even know that this store was there, but the first thing that impressed me was the significant investment that this businessperson had put into controlling the humidity and the temperature and all of that for the product.

An Hon. Member: A humidior.

Mr. Herard: Humidors? Thank you, hon. member.

But this is not a small investment, so I asked him what the impact of this tax had done for him, and the bottom line is that he is finding it extremely difficult to stay in business.

So when I look at goal 1.1, I don't think that it would be within Alberta's values to have a tax system that would force somebody out of business. That would not be an Albertan value, I'm sure, but it would certainly be consistent with goal 1.2 to have "fair and competitive provincial tax and revenue systems." It looks to me like this is really not a policy issue, because I'm sure we didn't go out there and create this policy that would in fact be detrimental to one particular sector of the economy, so it must be an administrative error. So if it's an administrative error, then would the minister consider fixing that administrative error so that we don't in fact discriminate against certain vendors?

Mr. Melchin: Thank you for raising such an enjoyable topic. You piqued the interest of a few people. You have a friend who loves a cigar. Well, I appreciate that you do.

Now, last year in our budget, as you know, we raised tobacco taxes not just a nominal amount but a 125 percent increase in the rates, and that 125 percent increase was on the cigarettes, loose tobacco, cigars, and everything. One of the first things you talk about is: what value structures are we incorporating by raising taxes so much? I would say that it's a great lesson on taxation. What does taxation do to economic activity, especially when you go to certain thresholds? What values are we supporting by raising taxes so high that we do cause a problem to a business segment? Myself not being a smoker, I'm not certain why it is that the public has chosen a value set lately, which I support, of antitobacco. You know, the health risk factors have become a factor such that we said that our policy was to reduce consumption of tobacco.

So think of all the business vendors out there that are now selling tobacco products, cigars also included. Our policy is going to have an impact of reducing their sales, and what has happened, for example, just to give you some information, is that cigarette consumption has been down close to 20 percent in this past year, volume reductions. Cigar taxes actually have only been down about 5 percent. I've been surprised, given that actually there is a difference in the calculation of tax on cigars versus cigarettes. Cigars are on a percentage of the manufacturer's suggested sales price versus cigarettes, a flat amount per carton. With the tax on cigars versus cigarettes the question is: is it an administrative oversight? You might recall that we actually had a discussion on this. We brought it back and had some discussion on the differences, and this has been our policy. Now, what is different about the two of them is this. [interjections] I appreciate the support. You know, it's nice to have the support of your caucus with you on your new policy. Thank you, team. It's nice to have you right there behind me when I really need it. They're all quite aware of a discussion we've had in cabinet, caucus, and so forth on this topic.

Ms Haley: Amazingly enough, it wasn't in the newspapers.

Mr. Melchin: It wasn't reported before we even had the discussion. I appreciate that support when the time counts, you know, that when we stand up to defend it here as the minister, everybody is solidly behind you. So I thank you again as a caucus.

But here's the issue again. There is a difference and always has been a difference, so it's not necessarily new, though when we raise taxes, it now shows the magnitude sometimes of the problem. When you apply a tax, a flat rate on cigarettes is one thing, but on cigars being a percentage of a sales price, the tax component is quite heavy on a low-end cigar. That's a true case. On the higher end cigars it's actually less because we have a cap of $8 on any one cigar.

An Hon. Member: What?

Mr. Melchin: Yeah. It's only $8 for one cigar on the high end. Doesn't that make you feel good about tax content?

Anyway, what I would like to say is: it has been the policy that because the products are sold differently, different methodologies of taxation have been applied to cigars and cigarettes over the past. That methodology has been the policy of our government. It does create a reduction in sales. Cigarettes are actually down more than cigars. So if you're looking at what it's done to the marketplace, our policy has been to see that we work towards tobacco cessation, reduction in consumption. That's been our policy.

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: I think we're probably up on the same thing, and I'll repeat the question.

An Hon. Member: You're a reformed smoker.

Ms Blakeman: Well, yeah. Okay. I am a reformed smoker. I don't care about people smoking cigars. What's striking me about this is that there is such a differential on the increase of the tax for cigars. I listened very carefully to what the minister said, and I appreciate that he's feeling that wind whistling behind him where nobody is standing anymore, but what I'm questioning is: why aren't you fixing this? Obviously, it sounds like you didn't intend that there be such a differential in the increase. Okay. We wanted to increase or the government wanted to increase the tax on cigarettes by 125 percent, but what if the increase on cigars is like a thousand percent. I mean, the difference is just staggering. So why aren't you fixing it, or are you happy to leave it at that kind of, frankly, discrimination? How are you justifying this, or do I hear the argument that it's a health thing and that if you smoke a cigar, well, you're just discriminated against even more? I'm wondering why the minister isn't fixing the discrimination when they are so far apart.

Mr. Melchin: Let's first off say that this isn't an issue of discrimination. A tax policy has been designed for a long time about how you price tax on different products. Last year we chose and we uniformly increased taxes by 125 percent, approximately that number on all tobacco products across the board. Our tax content went up a substantial rate by policy, and it was designed to reduce consumption of tobacco so that we would have less health problems resulting from tobacco consumption. So that's been a uniform policy applied uniformly across all of the products.

Mr. Herard: I take it, then, that the minister will get back to us on the fairness issue.

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Some excellent questions by the Member for Calgary-Egmont, but I'm sure the minister realizes now what Churchill had said in the Commons one day when he said: my opponents are opposite me; my enemies are behind me.

The minister had asked for a reference earlier when I asked the question: what kinds of rebates does the department issue? This is found on page 304 of the government and lottery fund estimates for Revenue under equipment/inventory purchases where we have Revenue Collection and Rebates. That is where that is found. If the minister wishes to answer that a little later, that's fine.

I did have other questions. On page 328 of the Department of Revenue's business plan 2003-2006, goal 1.3, Key Strategies, bullet 1 indicates that the government is planning on implementing the ministry's e-strategy "to improve client service, including the electronic filing of corporate income tax returns." A few questions on this particular initiative. When will this e-strategy be operational for Albertans? If the minister could please indicate how much it will cost to implement this strategy. Has this amount been budgeted for this year? What is the plan for Albertans who do not have Internet access, and have there been improvements considered for them?

Now, as well, on page 328 of Revenue's business plans for 2003-2006 it indicates that the department is planning on addressing issues "related to the underground economy." I found this under goal 1.3, Key Strategies, the second bullet, and I have a number of concerns and questions regarding this particular bullet. If the minister could please explain what these issues are, what plans he has on addressing these issues, what costs will be associated with addressing these issues, what indicators the minister does have that there is a vibrant underground economy if we are putting this into our business plans. How large does he think that underground economy is, or what are projections on how large it is? Finally, is the minister going to work with the Solicitor General to solve this problem as it could involve law enforcement as well?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. With respect to the first question we'll get you a written response because I still, once again, missed your reference by the time I got there.

Your second one was with respect to the e-strategy to improve client service. Great progress has been made with this, and it's primarily due to corporate income tax. Most corporations actually are pretty well tied into the web, and in that respect they're driving, wanting the service more than the paper filing. You can still file in the traditional method. It's not to prevent that, though in our transition it'll make it a lot simpler and more efficient for the filers and for us – for compliance purposes, for review of it, for refunds and the like – to process them on a more timely basis. It hasn't yet been finalized, though much of that's already at work now. Much of it's actually being implemented, and much of it's actually functioning for Alberta filers today.

We've got some more work left to complete that, so I'll get you a more detailed plan of the stages of where we're at in response to that question. Our budget does accommodate that as ongoing work. It isn't a new budget item for us, so it's not going to be additional costs other than in the sense that it's part of our ongoing work of continually trying to upgrade our systems. So that will help improve our efficiencies over time.

The underground economy. I guess that if we really knew how large it was, you would have probably been able to identify it and prevent it long ago. The cost of it no one really knows. We do know this, and that's part of the reason for us having hired even in our last year's budget and through this year to see that we had additional full-time equivalents added to the department so that they could do the compliance work. Your real work is to ensure that it's level and there's a means to make sure that those that are offenders are caught, that there's a fairness approach put to them. They should comply with paying taxes. That's why there are penalties for not having filed.

Our tax systems in Canada are very much voluntary. You know, you might not think of it that way, but our filing is a voluntary compliance methodology. If people all of a sudden come into the province and you're not aware of them and they don't take measures to declare themselves one way or another, it may take you some time before you're aware of both their residence and maybe if they have started a company. But there are many ways that we work with the various departments. You know, we would clearly work with the Solicitor General if there were criminal kinds of activities and charges. When it gets into smuggling types of activities, you work quite a bit with Gaming, with the Alberta Liquor Control Board. A lot of their enforcement in the gaming industry also facilitates their investigation with respect to the tobacco taxes and collection. So it's a constant challenge. Any time you implement a tax, you drive some activity underground, and with the voluntary compliance of filing, that's why you want to improve the efficiencies and the ease of filing and also why you want to ensure that your tax policy is simple, that the rates aren't too high, because the higher the rates, the higher the compliance problems you'll have, the more underground economy you'll create. I can't really give you any great numbers on the size of it. They're all estimates, and they're anybody's guess really.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. On page 330 of the business plan, core business 2, Manage and Invest Financial Assets, I'm looking at goal 2.2, "An effective management organization," the first bullet under Key Strategies: "Develop and implement a new governance structure for government endowment funds." If the minister could please inform us: which endowment funds will this plan encompass? Will the new governance structure improve the performance of these funds? When will this new governance structure be in place? As well, how will this new governance structure affect the costs of operating government endowment funds?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. With respect to our investment management organization one of the challenges we've had and we've identified with that organization is that we have a variety of different clients with different objectives and purposes, pension funds for example. Upwards of about $17 billion of the $35 billion are various pension clients, and they have separate board governance that will define and give policy oversight, investment policy direction to our investment management division. So there's a segregation of that responsibility, clearly, for those.

When we talk about government endowment funds, we are specifically speaking of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, the medical fund, the science and engineering and scholarship funds, the ones that are clearly under the purview of the government of Alberta and of this department for investing. What we are looking at doing is ensuring that we've got the right investment policy boards in place for them. In fact, we are creating a committee to strengthen both outside participation and advice to the department to be chaired still by the Minister of Revenue but would include a number of outside professionals in the industry to help provide direction and advice on investment policy decisions so that we separate policy decisions from investment management. So part of that governance, when we then have the investment management division, would be charged with investing according to our investment policy directions, and we separate the two. So that's part of the structure we're talking about, and that will be in place as we implement that over this next year.

We've had good oversight. We're just trying to make sure that we've got the right structures to both empower the separation of policy and investment advice to the management of the funds itself. Then from the management of the funds you need to give sufficient autonomy to that group to be able to react, like any investment organization would, to the latest products that are out there, the sophistication of the research tools they would use, to everything from the systems that they employ, so those budgeting constraints so that they could operate in some respects with a little bit of autonomy but professionally managed with a governance oversight with it.

We have that governance oversight with the Investment Operations Committee already, but we want to improve that so that we've got the appropriate oversight of people, that the appropriate autonomy is given them, the flexibility to respond quickly. Because investment products are changing all the time, and the cost structures might be more or less for some, but if all of a sudden some great investment products come along and they're going to cost a little bit more, you want to be able to have the right governance that allows that flexibility, because the returns that you can yield would be substantially better. You might be prepared to spend a dollar to make multiples of dollars, and that's part of the issue with the governance. We're trying to ensure that we've got the right flexibility, the right professional judgment, and the right board governance with respect to the investment organization.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry in the three minutes remaining.

Mr. Bonner: Okay. How much time do I have, Mr. Chairman?

The Chair: At 5:10 we'll have to go through the vote and that kind of thing. According to the Standing Orders we must have the report done by 5:15.

Mr. Bonner: Okay. Just a few more questions. Still on page 330 of the business plan, under goal 2.3, "Superior investment returns subject to client-defined objectives and policies," and the second bullet under Key Strategies, "Enhance management of the investment portfolios by implementing new monitoring and analytical tools including improved risk management tools." Just a few questions here for the minister, and then we will put the rest in writing to the minister. Are external managers to be included in this strategy? What types of risk management tools are being considered? My final question on this particular vote is: what monitoring tools are currently used, and what holes exist that need to be improved upon?

If the minister would take further written questions, we would appreciate that.

Mr. Melchin: I'd be happy to supply a written response to this one to give you an idea of the various tools. It's a continually changing marketplace, very sophisticated investment tools. Some of them are very software oriented. So they're looking at products that are being developed around the world that we will buy and/or tailor to our own investment decisions. It also gets into having the right research component personnel. We've put the portfolio at an increased absolute return strategy, and we don't necessarily have all that expertise inside, so you start finding that with outside fund managers that can bring those risk management tools to you. So it may not all be internally, but you do look where the sources of expertise are for your own people, your own systems, your own research, and your use of other external expertise through other fund managers. We'll provide you with some specifics on that as well.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: If we still have some time, I'd like to put one more question on the record that you could respond to in writing, and that is: how many local capital managers do we have? How many in total? What is your perspective on venture capital in this province? We see that nationally we provide 13 percent of the GDP, that we're 10 percent of the population but only 2 percent of the venture capital available in the country. There are a number of people who think that that focus should change and that we spend some portion of our investment dollars or at least that a direction should be promoted to the small business end of the market. So if you could respond in writing, that would be appreciated.

Mr. Melchin: We'll be happy to get you specific answers. I think one of your questions was on the number of people that we have involved in the department. In our investment management division we have 57.6 full-time equivalents. I don't know who that .6 person is. The securities administration systems division, which is the back office part of it, has 37.5, so 95.1 full-time equivalents involved in our investment management division here.

The other one we'll respond to in writing.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Innovation and Science

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Shall I begin, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chair: You've been recognized, minister.

Mr. Doerksen: Well, thank you. The first thing I'm going to do is introduce some people from the Department of Innovation and Science, but even before then I'm going to alert one of them. If they would ask my assistant to bring down my binder from my office, it would be helpful.

An Hon. Member: I think that they're watching that hockey game.

Mr. Doerksen: They were watching the hockey game. Yes, it is a great night, Mr. Chairman, because Edmonton has just won its first game of the series, and then we get to talk about the Ministry of Innovation and Science, which is all about the future. So it's a good night.

People attending from Innovation and Science this evening are Glenn Guenther, who's from the communications department; Linda Moisey, who is on the human resource side; Brian Fischer, who does the money side; Blake Bartlett, who helps him; Mike McCullough; and then there is Grant Chaney – I should have just read my list instead of looking up there – Mel Wong; Ron Dick is there somewhere as is Peter Crerar as is Byron Nagazina. Let's see; who else did I miss? Robb Stoddard, is that you? Great. Okay. Colleagues and members of the Assembly, this is the great team that's assembled to put together the future of Alberta, and I appreciate all the work that they do on our behalf.

I'm just going to actually take you through the business plan. If you go to the book of the Alberta 2003 business plans, the plan for Innovation and Science starts on page 251. Taking you through the business plan, you see that we essentially have two main business areas, the first one being research and development and the second one being corporate information and communications technology.

Again, bearing in mind some of the comments that were made last year when we made our presentation, there was some complaint that the business plan from the previous year was not as consistent as the business plan for the next. You'll see more consistency this year from last year's business plan to this one. There are, of course, some changes to our measures, some changes to our performance indicators, but essentially we've tried to maintain the same format, provide a little more clarity around some of the objectives that we are trying to achieve. I think that will help, and I do look forward to members' questions later on.

I also want to introduce now – there are some more people that have arrived – Dwight Dibben, who is my executive assistant, and Stan Hayter. I'm not sure I introduced Stan before, but I see him there. Also, my son Courtney Doerksen, who doesn't work for the department but's visiting tonight just to see what we blather on about in the evenings in this great place.

We're going back to just talk a little bit about our first core business, research and development. Again, in all of the areas what we're keenly interested in trying to do in this province is invest in people, invest in research infrastructure, make sure that we focus some of our research activities into areas that are our strengths, work at trying to create innovative solutions and policies for Alberta business.

I just got this little letter yesterday from ICORE, which of course is one of our program areas, and they sent out a list that shows the effect we've had on the people side, particularly when it comes to information, communication, and technology research. If you look at the highlights of the letter that he sent me, he said:

Alberta attracted 23% of Canada's top NSERC postgraduate scholarship awards in Computer Science, and Electrical and Computer Engineering in 2002 . . . [We] increased from 18 in 1999 to 50 in 2002 . . . while the number in [the province to the west of us] fell from 28 to 21, and Ontario increased 22 percent, but our increase was 178 percent. In electrical and computer engineering at the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary we ranked number 2 and number 3 in Canada. In computing science the University of Alberta now ranks number 1 in both masters and doctoral NSERC award recipients.

An Hon. Member: What number?

Mr. Doerksen: Number 1. "Alberta, as a province, now ranks #2 after Ontario in Electrical and Computer Engineering" and number 2 in computing science masters awards. So it's a clear indication that the objectives that were set out when ICORE was established in that program have actually borne out in terms of the quality of people that we now have in the province.

I want to point out the one significant change that we've made on the research side has been an increased emphasis on the Alberta Energy Research Institute. Part of that is directed to the climate change initiatives that we are taking and that are aligned with our five main target areas in energy, those being CO₂ and water management, oil sands upgrading and value-added, clean coal technology, recovery technologies, alternative energies. Actually, I think on page 256 you'll see a very clear breakdown as to where we will be committing those resources over the next number of years.

Now, of course those won't necessarily be exactly precise, but we've tried to give an indication of some of the priority areas that we're going to be focusing on. Of course, fundamental to the investment here will be to find an equal partnership with the federal government to make sure that their money also comes to match the investment we make, as well as industry, because, Mr. Chairman, we are not going to do this by ourselves. It has to be a team effort, and my colleague the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake as the co-chair of the Alberta Energy Research Institute is doing a fine job. We just held a challenge dialogue that AERI put on bringing in people from Energy right across Canada to lead in a dialogue that says: what can we do in a combined effort to solve some of these issues? So we're very excited about that particular area.

Just to explain, you'll note under the Alberta science and research investment program that our numbers have gone down from $39 million to $37 million because what we did is re-profiled some of that investment, again, to focus more on the energy side, but I want to be quite clear here. One of the challenges that we're going to have in this budget is going to be the ability to match the granting agency awards that will come to Alberta with respect to our budgets. I want to make it quite clear that in any of these research areas we expect that money out of those particular budgets can be used as part of our matching component as those awards are announced and as they go further. So while it looks like the investment in what we call the ASRA program is declining somewhat, we actually have more money available to help us match the awards that are going to be coming. But to also be quite clear, we expect and we have said that the areas of energy, ICT, life sciences are going to be our priority areas. Those are going to be the ones that we pay the most attention to. So there's a little bit of explanation on the energy side.

Then when you go to goal 3, you'll see – and I referred to this already earlier with ICORE – again a focus on information and communication technology research. I'm not going to spend a lot more time there.

Goal 4, "To foster excellence in life sciences." Mr. Chairman, we've begun to explore this area. Even though we currently invest great sums of money through the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, through some of our agricultural research programs, we also think this is an area for the future, and with the release of our life sciences strategy we've begun to build the framework around how this is going to look. We're working very closely with the minister of agriculture because there is commonality, actually, that runs through a lot of these programs because if you look at agriculture in the biofuels, that pertains to energy; that pertains to agriculture. If you look in the field of genomics, you're covering the areas of bioinformatics, which is ICT; you're covering biology. There's a lot of crossover between disciplines. So in the life sciences we've begun the work there to create some specific direction.

We'll talk a little bit about a particular goal that's very important to me this coming year, and that relates to goal 5, where we talk about "foster the growth of knowledge-based industries and establish Alberta as a preferred location for the commercialization of technologies." Together with the Minister of Economic Development we'll have an umbrella value-added strategy which really talks to commercialization of technology, talks to trying to find the right policy areas that can actually allow us in Alberta to take the good ideas that are produced here and move them into the next phase and actually be able to generate the results of those good ideas through investment and through commercialization and, ultimately, production and jobs in Alberta. So that's going to be a particular emphasis for the ministry this year in terms of coming up with the right policies that can help to move that forward.

Then moving on, our second main area in the Ministry of Innovation and Science is corporate information and communications technology. Again, before I get to the Alberta Supernet, I think you'll see that we've tried to get quite specific about what we're trying to achieve with respect to corporate standards across government. You'll see, for instance, moving to an Office 2000/Windows 2000 common standard. We should be at 100 percent compatibility or consistency there in '03-04.

You'll see some objectives we have around enterprise architecture and authentication, which of course is a very important issue when it comes to security and more importantly as we move to web-based applications and as we allow customers to access the information from the government right from their own homes or offices or wherever they have access. Then, again, you can see in some areas we actually want to do consolidation. So you'll see that we have an objective to reduce the number of e-mail systems, the number of directories, the number of services. One of the reasons we're doing that in particular is so that we can reduce the amount of effort we have when it comes to help desks or resources that you have to commit to managing all kinds of different systems. We really think we want to drive that down to have some common platforms right across government.

Then, just moving back to the Supernet, quite clearly you'll see in the business plan there on page 261 that we did not achieve our targets for the number of schools, hospitals, libraries, and buildings that we had expected to be at this year by this time, but it's been no secret to the Assembly that we've had some commercial disputes between Bell and Axia. It has been raised through questions in the Assembly and also reported that several weeks ago we were able to reach a conclusion to some of those commercial difficulties that has put the issues at dispute to the side to be resolved through an arbitration process. Bell West will take over the build of the network for the entire province, and then, of course, Axia as another part of the contract will continue to be the access manager to manage the network as it's built.

More importantly, I think, what I start to talk about now when I'm out promoting Supernet is that I'm beyond the place where the build actually gets completed, because the Supernet is going to get built. We're going to have an infrastructure. It's going to be unique in the world. It's going to give us opportunities. But for us to take advantage of that infrastructure, we're going to have to find the applications that go along the network, to find the technologies, the delivery services that are going to fill the pipe and prove it out. Every day I'm encouraged by different things that I hear. Today, for instance, we met somebody from a remote area who wants to establish in their municipality a GIS system, and they can't completely implement the GIS system until they have the proper bandwidth. They can implement parts of it, but they can't implement the whole package until they actually have access to the bandwidth. I was also reading today about the fact that we actually are already sending ultrasound images to radiologists who are not located in the same place, but it's done on a static basis. With enough broadband access we'll be able to do that live time. So there are, I think, some exciting applications that are going to come, and that's where the payoff for the Alberta Supernet will come.

Lastly – well, it won't be last – I insist that in our business plan we also have performance indicators with respect to our human resources in our department and how they feel about their contribution to their work and the satisfaction levels that they have working in the department. That's very important to me. It's very important to me that people that are working in Innovation and Science know how they're contributing to the objectives that we're trying to reach in Alberta. So I do insist that we do have some reporting there. We're not at the levels that I like to be at, but I'm very confident. I have a lot of confidence in the staff in the department for doing these great things for Alberta, and I'm delighted with the people that we have.

Again, just moving to the financial page just to kind of provide some clarity with what you have there, you can see how we've broken down the expenditures into our priority areas. So you'll see Energy, which has some numbers there related to, for instance, Alberta Research Council. Alberta Research Council also has a line item in life sciences; they have a line item in information and communications technology. All we're trying to do there is to show you where the investments are going in all of the things that we're doing that actually go to our areas of priority. So that's kind of how we've laid that out for the business plan.

Now I'm going to check my notes and see if I missed anything.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the time allocated to you has run out.

Just for clarification purposes at this stage for the first hour it's a back-and-forth between the minister and the opposition party. So, Mr. Minister, you'll be able to come back to the points that you may want to cover.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thanks, Mr. Chairman, and thanks again to the minister for the information he provides with respect to his department and the very professional way that things are conducted. It's a pleasure to have the department as an area to scrutinize, and that's in large part because of the work of the minister.

I have a number of questions, but before I go back to my list, I wondered if I could just ask about one of the last things that the minister talked about, and that was tracking employee satisfaction and understanding of their contributions, their place in the scheme of things. I was quite surprised to see that there were really some fairly substantial drops in employee satisfaction. It's a great measure to have here, and I certainly applaud the minister for having it. As he has indicated, it's an important measure for him and for those who are working in the department to have. For instance, the last one is the "percentage of employees indicating that their organization helps them know and understand how well they are performing." From 2001 to 2002-2003 it's gone from 69 percent to 58 percent, which is quite a drop, as is the percentage of employees who agree that Innovation and Science provides the support they need to acquire or develop knowledge and skills in their current job.

It would seem to me sort of ironic that of all departments this department would have a drop in that area. I'm sure the minister is concerned about those numbers and we'll have some hypothesis in terms of what has caused those changes because most of the time when you take those measures, unless something dramatic happens, they remain fairly constant and usually fairly high. So I'm glad the measures are there, but I think that there must be some explanation for the rather dramatic drops that we see there.

If I could start back, then, at the beginning of the budget items. Starting with program 1, the ministry support, maybe I could go through and ask some questions about ministry support and then stop and get some answers. Under the ministry support what is included in the line items for communications and strategic management information services? I haven't got my other budget book here, but I believe these are new budget items. It amounts to about $3 million of new spending in the ministry this year, and I wonder if I could have a bit of an explanation in terms of what that includes.

There's also, in program 2, corporate information and communications technology. What will be the responsibility of the chief information officer? It leads me to a question that I had not just about this department's budget but about the communications people that are hired in all of the departments. It seems to me that over the years there's been a growing number of people that have been put in positions of communicating, or PR positions, for the department. My question, I guess, is: are they all really needed? Is there some way that some of them might be shared? Is there a better organization? Does each department, as it seems to appear, need to have the communications capabilities and the number of people involved that they seem to in the budget? That may just be from having read quickly through the budget and not fully understanding what each of the departments are doing, but it does, I think, raise the possibility of an awful lot of money and resources being put into communicating and trying to explain things from a particular perspective. I think it's worthy of some explanation. So the responsibilities of the chief information officer – I'll leave it at that.

In program 3, research and development, what is included in the line item operations and policy implementation? If we could have a bit of an explanation of what's involved there. I think that just sort of as a first swipe that does it.

I have some other questions. The Ministry of Health and Wellness is in the process of establishing an electronic health record system for health providers. Is the Ministry of Innovation and Science involved in any way with this project, and if so, what is the nature of that involvement? Are there funds in this budget, in Innovation and Science, that could be included here or rightly included in the health department in terms of the electronic health records system? Has the department provided assistance to Health and Wellness with the physician office system program, the program that's designed to help physicians in the province automate their offices?

I've already talked about the performance measures. The minister has touched on Supemet, and I think, as the minister's indicated, we're aware of the problems that we've had, but I wonder if we could have an explanation about how we're going to stay on track with the time line that's still in the business plan, given the problems there have been with progress this far. What's being done to speed things up, and is it going to cost more money to make the kind of progress that's outlined in the budget? I wonder if I could, maybe with that first set of questions, have the minister respond, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Let me just say from the outset that there are some questions that I will not be able to answer tonight, and we'll certainly provide the information to you, to members of this Assembly after we've had some time to dig into the details, but I will try to answer some of the points that have been raised.

The first one that you highlighted was the employee satisfaction ratings. To be clear, I noticed those trends too, and for me that's important to put in here because we want to be accountable and we don't want to fabricate numbers just for the sake of fabricating them. If there are some issues with the staff, we have to identify them and come to terms with them, but we have certainly taken a number of initiatives already with the employees. We introduced a program called PRAISE, which really is an employee recognition program to try to again provide some ongoing positive feedback to our staff. We've tried to put in place some principles that involve input from all of our staff members in terms of decision-making and communications about plans. So your points are made, I am certainly aware of them, and we are working to improve.

The most important thing is that people, staff in Innovation and Science and frankly anywhere in government, need to know that the work that they are doing is contributing to the betterment of all of Alberta. That's the kind of thing that we try to foster in our department, that in fact the work you do is meaningful and it is important to the people of Alberta. So we're going to continue to work on that.

On the communications question I didn't know exactly where you were to start with, but then I found it. I think particularly in Innovation and Science this is such a critical element because the hardest thing that I have particularly when it comes to research and development is telling Martha and Henry about the results that research and development accomplish for them. To translate it from the lab to the average person sitting around a kitchen table or in a coffee shop is a difficult job, to try and communicate that message. The things that we do at Innovation and Science aren't the things that the media glom onto. So in our department in particular I would venture to say that we probably could stand to put some more resources into the communications side.

One of the very effective tools that we have used over the years has been in conjunction with our ASTech awards, which really recognize significant accomplishments of Alberta companies and individuals in research and development. We also run a documentary about Alberta innovators, which has been very well received. It has run a couple of times over TV stations. We've had good feedback from that. Again, what we're trying to do is profile and let Albertans know of the excellent quality work that goes on in this province. So on the communications side we have to keep that effort up and, if nothing else, do more.

You talked, I think, about the chief information officer. I was looking for some other information, so I didn't quite follow the question through, but we'll get you that information in writing.

The electronic health records. That again is a very important objective that health has. You'll hear more about it, I think, when they present their business plans about what activities they're doing. With respect to our role on the standard setting, our role in helping to make sure that we maintain proper privacy records, we'll provide those details as well.

The one thing I didn't get a chance to talk about in my opening remarks which was a really important event from yesterday's budget was of course the approval of the health research innovation centres at both the University of Alberta and University of Calgary. It was their top priority from a university standpoint, and we've been working with them along with Infrastructure on trying to make those a reality because there are a number of CFI, Canadian Foundation for Innovation, awards which are actually contingent upon those projects proceeding. So that was good news for our department frankly, too, that we were able to have some influence to make those happen, and that's just going to help build our life sciences ability in this province from where it currently is.

On Supernet and how we make sure it's going to stay on track and will there be any overruns, the answer that I'll provide there is that shortly we expect that Bell is going to deliver us a recovery plan to bring the build of the network back on schedule so that we can finish it within the time frame of the contract, which of course is to be substantially completed by the end of 2004. There will be some final things that will have to happen in the following year, but substantially we expect that it will be complete in that time frame. The contract also provides that if there are any cost overruns, they are at the cost of Bell. The amount of money that we have committed to it is a finite amount, and if there are any cost overruns on the bill, they're not our responsibility.

I am confident that we are going to see a great deal of progress this year. This is a critical build year for us, and as the weather warms up now, it becomes even more critical. This is a big year for Innovation and Science for the build of that contract.

I'll just sit down now and get some more questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thanks, Mr. Chairman, and thanks for that information. Just one more on the satisfaction of the staff. When I first read it, I thought maybe the numbers were wrong, and I wondered if they had been checked to make sure that those drops are real or whether somebody has not transcribed the information correctly.

Martha and Henry. I think that's a growing concern in the government, and there's a provision in here to put more and more government information and government interaction with citizens on-line, and I wonder if the department has looked into who uses government services that way. What causes me to ask the question is that I was on the phone recently trying to make some air reservations, and of all the telephone choices I was given, the only one I could access was on-line, an e-mail address, and I thought that that was fine for someone who uses a computer all the time, but what about those people who don't do that? I found it quite frustrating because I did really want to talk to someone. I didn't want to just e-mail.

The concern I have is particularly with seniors. We have, as I'm sure the minister does in his constituency office, a lot of seniors come in to have government programs explained to them, to fill out applications for government programs. I know that when we talk to them, they are not users of computers, so it's a whole area of information that's not available to them. I guess if I have a concern it's that for a while at least I think there will have to be parallel systems, and you'll have to make sure that we don't go too fast so that these people are left out and excluded. I wonder what kind of thought has gone into that in terms of providing government information and government services on-line. As much as we want everyone to be hooked in electronically, we know it's not going to be possible. What assurance are we going to give those citizens who aren't that somehow or other they aren't going to be excluded?

The recovery plan from Bell I think is going to be interesting to see in terms of how they plan to make up for lost time. There is still from schools – and I'm sure the minister has heard – the concern that they are not going to have the technology to take advantage of Supernet when it is available. I haven't heard it as much, but it still was raised just last week by a principal who indicated that it was not going to be something that they were going to be able to take advantage of right away because of the state of their equipment. Has there been co-ordination with the Department of Learning in terms of the provision of money for technology that will ensure that the optimum use will be made of Supernet once it does arrive at the door?

Maybe just one last concern on this round, Mr. Chairman. Is there any concern not only with this department but with the Learning department with respect to postsecondary institutions, that the pressure or the drive to commercialize research is going to distort research at universities and research institutions? I still think that there's a place for a public research agenda, for research that doesn't have immediate commercial payoff, that is sort of nongizmo research. We've benefited greatly in the past from that kind of research, and my concern is that with an overconcern on commercialization the tendency to design and to foster and encourage short-term research with immediate payoff is going to be done at the expense of longer term projects and projects, as I said, that may not have an immediate commercial payoff.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Doerksen: Again, thank you for those questions, and I'll try to work through them one at a time. The question "Who uses the services?" is an important question. Again, access to on-line services: we are moving to deliver more and more of our services on-line. So, yeah, there's always the issue of what's commonly known as the digital divide, those who actually have access to not only computers but then also access to a proper network to hook into. That's one of the reasons why even with the Supernet project it's my opinion that the library connections particularly in the remote communities become a critical component of the Supernet access because that will provide not only ability for anybody, any citizen, to get access to a computer but also access to web services. It certainly is an issue.

The concern with seniors is in a line like that, but on the other hand some of the most ardent disciples of computers and ardent disciples of the Internet in particular are the seniors who have found that they can use this facility, and I'll use my own mother for an example. She uses her computer enough to keep in contact with all 30-some of her grandkids. In some of the schools where her grandkids go that run web pages and keep track of class activities in the different provinces, she can go and log on and look and find pictures of her grandchildren in their activities in the various schools.

I'll never forget the one time – and this was actually quite a number of years ago – when I was doing an opening at one of the lodges in Red Deer where this elderly lady introduced me before I cut the ribbon and gave this whole long detail about the person I was. I had no idea where she would have got this information from, but she had spent some time on the Internet getting all this information, and I was absolutely blown away. And this would have been almost seven or eight years ago, which is far back in the history of IT.

But the concern is there, and I think those are valid. Obviously, within the various departments, with the Department of Seniors, these are some of the issues that I think they need to grapple with as well, but those are not necessarily new issues because any kind of paperwork and forms to fill have always driven those kinds of questions. So we'll take the point.

In terms of the schools probably one of the bigger proponents of Supernet actually has been Alberta Learning and has really been behind the push to bring the technological advantages into our schools to make sure that we do have the connections. Again, some of these questions will have to be answered by Learning in terms of the resources they're committing to it, but I will say that we have been in constant contact with Learning in terms of the development of Supernet and when it's going to get to their schools and even as we start to move toward applications.

We are doing a pilot project with actually the Red Deer Catholic school division in collaboration with Notre Dame school in Red Deer and a school in Rocky Mountain House where one segment of Supernet is up and running, where they're doing interactive classrooms, interactive Smart board classrooms as we speak. There are some pilot projects that are happening. There are some other ones that are ready to go in different parts of the province. So they're working on that.

On your comment about the drive to commercialize, I have to tell you that over and over and over again for the last two years that I've been in this portfolio – Alberta has all the advantages when it comes to capability for research, has all the advantages when it comes to a fiscal climate, has all the advantages when it comes to developing a knowledge-based economy, but we continue to lack a proper private-sector receptor capacity for those good ideas. If I can refer to a recent report on the Alberta Science and Research Authority – it was an international review – they made the two fundamental points, one being that Alberta is head and shoulders above most places but that we lack the sense of urgency to develop the private-sector capacity research. I've got about five or six reports that I can show you that keep coming to the same conclusion. So it's an area that we cannot ignore. I hear the concern, but it's an area that we have to address without compromising, again, the part you're talking about, the benefits of the long-term sustained research that don't immediately show commercial return. I hope that helps a little bit.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have just been out double-checking some of my facts, and my questions may overlap with some that have already occurred, but I feel very strongly about this. My constituency includes undoubtedly the largest single research institution in the province, the University of Alberta, and I am often talking to researchers and scientists and people from that facility who have lots of success stories and lots of concerns. A concern that I have heard frequently voiced over the last year from several independent sources – the sources aren't related – from scientists working in different areas of research, is that there's a great deal of frustration in getting matching provincial funds to correspond with federal grant money.

I'm looking here in your business plan, page 254, under Investing in People.

1. Provide support for the recruitment and retention of key scientific personnel at Alberta universities . . .
5. Work to leverage research funding from industry and federal sources.
6. Develop a mechanism to encourage greater investment in Alberta . . . from industry and federal government sources . . .
8. Work with Alberta Learning and public institutions to coordinate research-related policies and programs.

What I would look for from the minister and his officials – and this is a serious problem but one that I have a feeling can be cleared up without spending huge amounts of money, maybe just cutting red tape. The concern is this. Scientists apply to one or another federal source for funding. They win approval for that funding, but it depends on matching provincial amounts. For reasons either of delays with provincial funding – and that funding may not come from your department; it may come from I'm not sure which sources but you would undoubtedly have some influence over how the process works – or insufficient funding, the federal government then holds back on its share because there's a contingency here. Or as one scientist described it, you can end up in a downward ratchet because the federal government approves a certain amount contingent on the province matching it. The province comes in under that, so then the federal government drops its level, which causes the province to drop its level, and they go down and down and down.

Two or three consequences of this are of direct concern, I'm sure, to the minister. One is delays and frustrations: delays in projects getting launched, with one scientist I was just talking to, a year-long delay. Second, a huge distraction of energy in which scientists are then, in trying to make up the shortfall in provincial funding, having to haggle with all kinds of private suppliers for equipment and for computers and so on to find the money to make up the difference, causing a great delay. It's frustrating to scientists, and if they can go to Toronto or UBC or Cambridge or North Carolina or wherever and those problems are taken care of because the red tape is cut or sufficient matching funding is available, we're not going to get them here or we're not going to keep them here even if we attract them. So that's part of the issue here.

I want to bring it to your attention as the minister and to the attention of the officials. Let's see if we can work more effectively with the federal funding agencies so that the scientists, who are trained in science, don't have to spend years haggling over funding issues that delay their research. So I guess that's the main point on that.

The second point is that I have heard a rumour recently that the province is actually backing out of ongoing funding for research. They will set up a research project at a university for three years. They'll equip the lab, they'll get it up and running, and then in three years the money is gone, the funding is stopped, and we're suddenly left with a researcher who is out of work or is left scrambling, spending his time scrounging for money instead of doing the work that he or she has aimed for. In fact, the rumour is going around right now that the province has actually said that it will not accept any more applications for operating dollars for projects which were started, say, three years ago with provincial money. We need to have a long-term, reliable basis to develop the people and the labs and the facilities and the brain power for a critical mass of innovation and science work in this province.

So, you know, it's budget debate, and this is absolutely related to money. I'm not raising this issue with the minister so much looking for documents or background as to say: we're going to lose some of the best and brightest we have if we can't sort out these funding issues. If you possibly can, as a government work more smoothly with the federal government. Please consider ongoing operating funding for labs and innovation.

Thank you.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, I do want to provide a few remarks about that particular concern that has been raised, and it's one that I've heard too. There's no secret about that. I'm not the expert in this field, so we have set up, without apology, a strict due diligence process within the department by using peers and experts to help us examine the applications that are made for research dollars in Alberta. Quite clearly, we also set a high bar around the areas of research that we want to focus on. So there is that due diligence that does go on.

Again, the nature of granting being the way that it is, they're quite often in the three- or five-year kind of envelopes. I imagine that there has to be some kind of review at the end of each of the periods to say: well, looking at the proposal that was presented when you got the money to start with, in fact have you achieved some of the results, and is it worth while, then, to keep that money going? So there is that kind of due diligence, and I think that's very important because it's not just a matter of just throwing money out without some accountability. There has to be an accountability process.

Without a doubt, we have not guaranteed an automatic match for every award that is won by researchers, because, again, we do have our own due diligence process and procedures that we go through. The federal budget this year has presented us with an interesting challenge because they have put more money into the federal granting agencies. Just projecting ahead, if we continue to have the kind of success rate that we've had in the past, it's going to put a strain on the budget, but in many ways that's a good problem to have when we have that kind of success. We're working just as best we can with the institutions, with the federal government, because they have a role to play to help us out as well. For instance, I refer to the HRICs. The going ahead of those two projects at both universities was critical to being able to advance the money. Those were one of the conditions, actually, that were given by the federal granting agencies before they could advance the money. We've been working together with them, but without question it is a challenge.

I know that there are frustrations with researchers, but while there is frustration, if you look at page 255 of our business plan, you will see that in terms of the sponsored-research growth in Alberta at our universities, it has been quite remarkable. Going back to 1998, you will see an increased investment of $65 million from the province, and if you go up, this year's target is $135 million. So there's been growth. You can see the same kind of growth in the federal money in industry resources. So the growth has been there, but there is a challenge.

The other thing that you didn't mention – and I'll just alert you to this because it's another issue – comes through the foundations. The Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, because of the equity markets and the lack of investment, has not been able to make as many awards this year, and there's a lot of research work and people that have been relying on the funding that's come out of the foundations, which is also presenting another challenge for us because we've built up that critical mass of researchers and capability and want to maintain that. You didn't mention it, but I will. So there are several issues that kind of compound the current situation.

You will note, though, that there's one thing we did add in my budget that I didn't mention in my comments. With the Alberta ingenuity fund we've put another $21 million or whatever the figure is – I can't find it right now – into that fund to try to bring it back up to the level of the original $500 million that was established to begin with. Again, our objective is to hopefully at some point continue to build that endowment fund up to a billion dollars and bring it to the same level that we are with the Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, but that's all contingent on fiscal plans and objectives. I appreciate your raising the issue. It's one that I'm very well aware of, and we are trying to manage it as best we can.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the first hour that was allocated between the minister and members of the opposition has now elapsed. Any other member wishing to participate will be able to do so.

The chair recognizes the Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise and respond to the minister's comments, and I did have a few questions for the minister just in regard to the presentation. I might say that I was very pleased to hear from the minister that he has performance indicators incorporated into the business plan. Of course, that's a subject that I've paid a lot of attention to over the years. I'm very pleased to see it. Let's face it: what gets measured gets done. And performance measures instill accountability and in fact help inspire people to focus on going forward and to get the job done. Of course, it's rather difficult to do and to envision how one would put performance measures in place in some areas such as Innovation and Science, especially when you're trying to, you know, discover new inventions or foster innovation, foster research. It's hard to envision how you would actually put performance indicators into that. Eureka science is just hard to measure, and benchmarking geniuses is hard to measure. However, there are many areas where it can be done and, frankly, should be done.

In particular, I'm wondering if the minister has looked at some of the different performance measurements out there and some of the new ways of doing that, measuring and accountability and so on. In particular, I'm referring to the ISO series and whether or not the minister has looked at perhaps some of the ISO series certification as a means of introducing efficiency, effectiveness, and measuring it and measuring the business processes within the department. ISO, for those who may not be familiar with it, basically is the International Standards Organization, and it is the primary, number one benchmarking sort of system in the world now. It was actually developed by the Europeans but based on a Canadian invention, which the Canadians failed to capitalize on.

Going back some 50 years, Canadians came up with the CSA standards, Canadian Standards Association, which of course is well known in the electrical field, and it standardized quality in the electrical field so that people did not have to wonder about the quality of electrical products they were buying. That saved a great deal of money for purchasers, suppliers, et cetera, because it set a standard that if you had CSA approval, everyone knew that this product would work as advertised, as it was supposed to, and you didn't need to take it all apart and examine it, et cetera.

Well, the Europeans have taken that considerably further in developing this ISO series. It's now becoming basically a prerequisite for doing business globally around the world. People ask: are you ISO certified? If you are not, they don't want to do business with you. Where it applies in government, however, is in standardizing processes, the business process, so that people know what to expect and get the same answer every time regardless of which government bureaucrat they're dealing with or administrator they're dealing with.

In Canada a small village in Quebec was the first municipality in the world to actually become ISO 9000 certified. It found that customer complaints dropped by some 90 percent. The entire process recovered its full investment in less than two years, and approval ratings by the citizens absolutely soared, so it was very, very successful in being introduced into a smaller city. Now the city of Calgary has adopted ISO series. In fact, it's trying ISO 14000 certification, which makes it one of only three cities of its size in the entire world to attempt to do this. In the pilot project they recovered their full investment of a half million dollars within three months, finding efficiencies and effectiveness in the city waterworks department, and that inspired the administration to undertake to put this right across the city.

ISO 14000 is basically the world's most efficient, effective environmental management system as well as the business standardization system. I am wondering if the minister has looked at perhaps implementing within his department an ISO series of business reprocessing to see whether or not that might help with efficiency and effectiveness. In effect, the ISO 21000 series incorporates ethics and all sorts of other processes as well, and I would think this would be something that would be particularly innovative in government and therefore would be particularly apropos for the minister to look at in the Department of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Chairman, performance measures are very important, and the challenge that we always have I think in any ministry is to find those performance measures that actually tell you whether you're getting to what your goals are. No question that we wrestle with this every year, and we say: do we have the right performance measures that actually show the kinds of things that we're trying to achieve? So all I can say about the suggestion made by the hon. member is that I am not overly familiar with the suggestion that he's made, although because he's made his comments, they've obviously been noted not only by myself but by the members of my department. Whether it is one of those measures that would give us a better indicator of what we're trying to achieve – I mean, I'm always open to good ideas.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I'd like to make a suggestion stemming from our earlier discussion for the business plan and for the budget, a suggestion for the minister to consider that probably not only wouldn't cost anything but might save some funding. I am wondering if there is a way to cut the red tape that researchers have to face when they apply for federal and provincial funding by having a combined application process so that if the researchers apply, they apply to one jury or one decision-making body, and a decision from one body automatically triggers approval from the other. It's a way of streamlining things. I know this government is very keen on streamlining procedures, as it should be, and I'm sure in many cases has done an excellent job. This would require, I assume – I'm not an expert on these sorts of things – some kind of formal agreement with the federal councils that make these decisions, but on first blush

I'm wondering why that wouldn't work, why you couldn't have a single jury make a decision, review the application. If they approve it, both the provincial and federal funding automatically follow, so you don't have these poor researchers having to apply, go through two related but different processes, waiting for different deadlines, and on and on and on. Just a suggestion, but maybe it would be worth looking at.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, I'd be delighted if the federal government would approve the projects that we approve, that meet our objectives in the processes that we go through, but I say that a little bit tongue in cheek because you're right: there are dual processes. We're not there yet. I think we've made progress. I recognize exactly what you're saying. It would be preferable from my way of thinking that the more time the researchers actually spent researching instead of writing grant applications would be better for all of us. Although – again, I'm not a grant writer – I've never written a grant proposal, I've seen some of them. I suspect that part of the process, the writing of the proposal, helps to refine the research objective as well. It's kind of also sorting out their thinking pattern. But, you know, it's a valid suggestion, and we always have interesting relationships and negotiations with our federal counterparts.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to ask another question of the minister with what I hope might be an idea that he would take under consideration and perhaps answer a question or two about. Now, this particular idea was suggested to me by a friend of mine, a German engineer, Dieter Remppel, a friend from Canmore, in fact. Dieter is quite an inventive fellow and has in fact several patents and inventions to his credit. He was explaining to me that while he would like to have his most recent one patented in Canada, there's a great deal of red tape, it costs a fair bit of money, and there are a number of other issues involved, whereas in Germany, being that he has immigrated here from Germany, he says that they have a government program with many, many volunteers and many business people involved. It's quite a massive program apparently, he says, and they invite people to submit their suggestions to them. They will do the patenting. They will pay for the cost of the patenting. They will do the studies to commercialize the product. They will commercialize the product. They will in fact take the entire product through from invention until full commercialization, and if there's any money made, they will then deduct their expenses and forward the royalty cheques to the inventor. In fact, that leaves the inventor having to do little more than just invent, which is what inventors like to do. They don't necessarily have the training, the skills, or even the desire to start corporations and look for venture capital and do all the things necessary to actually commercialize their inventions. They tend to like to tinker in the garage and then solve problems and just come up with some brilliant solutions.

He says: although I've been in Canada now for many, many years and it would have been nice to see it as a Canadian invention, my patents are in fact German patents, and they will be commercialized and sold as German inventions. I'm wondering if the minister has any initiatives or ideas or has been looking at ways to perhaps follow the model that they're using in Germany these days, which apparently has been very, very successful, to help people who are inventors and just want to invent, to maybe create these as Canadian patents instead of German patents and perhaps get the benefits here in Alberta accordingly.

Mr. Doerksen: I actually think that the member has hit on one of the important subjects that relates back to my opening comments about what one of my primary objectives this year is: to find the right policies to put into place that actually address the issues of intellectual property protection, patents, and so forth, particularly for SMEs, who don't have necessarily a whole battery of lawyers to help them through the process. They could be at a disadvantage from the bigger companies.

I think you've raised an important issue, and again, like I said, this is a policy development area that I think is critical. To my knowledge I don't think that any province in Canada or I don't even think the federal government actually has an intellectual property policy. It's probably high time that one was developed and to find out: what are the roadblocks, what are the barriers, and how can we help our businesses better? Actually, probably through the Alberta Research Council, which of course is chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, because they're also involved in the commercialization side probably even more so than at the university in particular. So that might be a challenge I would throw to her as well to help us out, and I know she always rises to a good challenge.

This is a very important area. I'm not the expert in it, but I know enough or I've read enough to realize that it can be discouraging in terms of getting your product or your idea out into the market. So I appreciate the comments.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly the Innovation and Science department, if things work out, will make a significant contribution to the future of this province. I wish the minister and the department, including the researchers that are in various laboratories, the very best and good luck and good success in their research.

We are at a crossroad in this province's economic history, and it's certainly outlined in these budget documents. We're on a downward slope as far as conventional oil production and natural gas production, and to diversify the economy, prudent research and development I believe would be a priority. I certainly hope that this department is successful.

Now, there are some projects, and the hon. minister mentioned them before. Before I get to that, I would like to briefly comment on the hon. minister's visit recently to the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. I was pleased to see that the province is a very active partner with industry and the federal government in research at the local King's University College. The projects there are certainly much smaller than what goes on at the universities or at the Alberta Research Council, but they're just as important. I think that if we can have some diversity with our research projects, it will add to even more success.

The hon. minister spoke earlier about the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed in the capacity that she currently holds with the Alberta Research Council. I did not attend, but I certainly appreciated the invitation to the Alberta Research Council. I couldn't make it, but if a tour was to be arranged for some of the Alberta Energy Research Institute's facilities, I would be most anxious to see how our money is being spent here.

On page 256 of the business plan, we're going to spend some money on CO₂ and water management. We were going to have 20 projects; that's going back to 2001-2002. We had 20 projects. We reduced the number of projects to 14 and then to seven, so that's basically one-third of the activity. I would certainly like to know more about these projects in light of the Kyoto protocol and the fact that we thought in the fall of last year that the sky was going to fall in, the province was going to come to a stop, Mr. Chairman, but certainly that has not happened. I think the communication spin was extravagant and embellished.

We just see that Suncor has had a significant vote of confidence with another major expansion, but if we are going to manage CO₂ in this province, how are these projects working? Now, is this CO₂ sequestration? Are these projects involved with CO₂ sequestration? Or are they involved with capturing water that is drawn off a coal bed and in some experiment with coal bed methane production? Is this water being injected into one of our mature oil-producing formations to enhance oil recovery? What precisely is going on here?

Certainly oil sands upgrading and value-added would be self-explanatory, but with CO₂ and water management, if I could have the details on those projects from the minister, I would be very grateful. If at some time in the future a tour could be arranged for this side of the House, I would like to check that out. Certainly we are talking here about CO₂ and water management, we are talking about clean coal, but are there any research projects going on with the hon. minister's department to capture and compress the emission stream out of the coal-fired plants? Are we looking in any way, shape, or form through research at perhaps having some sort of horizontal flue stream for a while so it would facilitate capture and compression? Then that gas, once it's captured and compressed, could be used for enhanced oil recovery. I know there are other outfits in this province that have got their eye on that, and I would like to know if we're spending any money on that, how much, and if there are any partners involved in that, who they are.

Now, we're looking also at some research into alternative energy here, and the number of projects – again I'm surprised – is not growing the way I thought it would with the ratification of the Kyoto protocol. What alternative energy projects are we looking at? Are they just wind power in southern Alberta? There has been some mention of solar power research, and I believe I saw something to do with fuel cells. Is this just renewable energy electricity sources or what? A further explanation of that would be gratefully appreciated by this member.

On another matter, going back from the business plan to the lottery fund estimates on page 246, there is a significant amount of revenue from commercial sources. That's a good thing to see. In two years it has increased from roughly $34 million to $46 million, and I would like to know how we're getting this revenue. Is this from the commercialization of past research and development? What exactly is the source of this commercial revenue? I guess I could say, Mr. Chairman: who, why, and how much? Certainly I think Albertans would be interested to know if they're getting a return on previous research and development budgets.

Further on the same page I see that the Alberta Research Council Inc. is going to have an expense of $5.6 million, and we see that the Alberta Research Council Inc. contract research is at $53.4 million. My, that's gone up a significant amount: $14 million or so in the last couple of years. Who are we contracting to? Is it to the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary? Is it to private labs? Is it to pharmaceutical companies? Where is this money going? Are we paying for research outside this province, outside this country, or is all this research being conducted by graduate students from this part of the world? If we don't have the information available here, if the minister could provide it in writing at some date in the future – not too far in the future; certainly I would have a target of the Victoria Day weekend – I would be very grateful for that information.

I have some further questions and comments for later on this evening in regard to the ministry audits and recommendations from the annual report of the Auditor General. At this time I will cede the floor to another hon. member of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to talk to a couple of the points that were just made by the hon. member. The first thing he said was: if things work out, this will be good for the province. Well, I'm much more optimistic than that. I believe these things will work out because we have the talent, we have the ability, we have the infrastructure in this province. So I'll take a more positive approach to that.

The member raised a very important point that I'd like to re-emphasize. He referred to the research work that was done at The King's University College. Quite often when we're talking, we refer primarily to the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary, which of course do the bulk of the basic research in the province, but we do have other institutions like King's University College, like Olds College, like Athabasca University who are involved in research projects. We also have our technical institutes and community colleges which are engaged in some areas of applied research. So we have people and the Alberta Research Council, which I mentioned before, working on research on a variety of fronts to advance our advantage here in Alberta.

The member raised some questions going to the energy research part. In particular, he asked some questions about the CO₂, and let me just comment briefly that, yes, we are doing projects in a number of areas with CO₂. One would be CO₂ sequestration, but probably more important would be coal bed methane projects where the injection of the CO₂ into the coal bed can actually release the methane and have some use. There may be potential application. I've seen at Alberta Research Council a number of years ago where they actually had a scale-up model kind of thing where the CO₂ being emitted from the coal plants would actually then be re-embedded and the gas came up. It was just kind of a little model to illustrate the point that there was the capture and then the embedding. The member might also be aware of the Weyburn project, which uses CO₂ to enhance oil recovery as another method of using CO₂.

Again, I'm not the expert in these areas, but there are a number of I think exciting initiatives that are taking place that will not only fulfill our objectives toward looking after the situation with greenhouse gases but actually turning these into an economic advantage. But, clearly, we've got a lot of work to do in that area. Again, with the great leadership of the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, I'm convinced it's going to happen. It's just a matter of time.

The alternative energy. All I can say is: stay tuned. There are some projects under way that I can't talk about yet, but I know they're in the works, and they look like some excellent projects coming there. I think in the whole area – we talked a bit about bioenergy – I hear some excitement around the development of energy from the leftovers that hogs leave behind. So, I mean, these sound like some pretty innovative ideas. Again, we're moving into these areas. They will take some time, but there is some excitement there.

I would encourage the member, because I know that he has access to the worldwide web as he has alerted us to many times in this House on a certain web site that will go unmentioned tonight, at least from me – if you look at www.innovation.gov.ab.ca, there is a wealth of information there. We do have the energy research strategy, the links to that strategy, which will describe in much more detail than I can some of these things that we're talking about with respect to our objectives in that strategy. So please expand your horizons and move beyond your single-focus web site to another great web site at www.innovation.gov.ab.ca.

With respect to your comments on revenue the commercial revenue question that you asked is primarily commercial revenue from the Alberta Research Council. The Alberta Research Council is engaged really in several areas. They're engaged in public-good research, which is the main amount of money that is granted to them by the Alberta Science and Research Authority, which is in the neighbourhood of $27 million to $29 million, the kinds of things that improve the lives of all Albertans that a commercial venture wouldn't necessarily enter into because the returns aren't there. But then they also do a lot of work with private companies, and some of it is, in fact, contract research. Because Alberta Research Council has the facilities, has the people, has the talent, they can hire the Alberta Research Council to do their research, to help them commercialize their products, and in some cases actually get into the production phase themselves. They've had one very successful product. The name escapes me, but it was in the pressboard industry. They have a machine that they actually market worldwide that's been very, very successful. I think it's called PressMan, actually, if my memory is right.

So they work in that area, and then they also on some occasions will actually enter into partnerships where in exchange for their expertise and know-how they might take either an equity position or an interest in the licensing or future revenues that might come out of the results of this joint work. So for the last number of years, probably the last five, six years they have actually put – because basically from a government point of view we've flatlined the investment in Alberta Research Council. If you look at their annual statements, you'll see that they've been trending upwards on their growth. That growth is all coming from commercial revenue. It's not coming from more investment by the province. So they've been successful.

Then you referred to contract research on the expense side. Essentially, the numbers don't quite add up, but because they are owned by the Alberta Science and Research Authority, in the consolidation any revenue that they earn from commercial contracts, even though it's not government money, gets recorded on our books as does the expense. So if their commercial revenue goes up, so does their expense line. It's just kind of a flip-off. It's a way we account for it because they become fully consolidated in the government books. So that, I hope, provides a little bit of explanation around that line.

Now, I know I haven't got all of your questions. Again, like you said, you don't have anything to do on the May long weekend, so we'll try to have some reading for you when you have nothing to do during that weekend, and then you can follow it up.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would just like to begin by thanking the Minister of Innovation and Science for having given me the opportunity of having a great growth experience as the co-chair of the Alberta Energy Research Institute. I'd also like to thank the ministry and the minister responsible for the sizable increase that we have seen in our budget.

The Alberta Energy Research Institute, as the minister mentioned in his opening remarks, has developed an energy strategy not only for Alberta but an energy strategy for all of Canada for the reduction of greenhouse gases. With the extra dollars that have been allocated in our budget we will be able to do great work in terms of cleaning up the environment and the climate across our province and also being able to assist other provinces, possibly other countries with the knowledge that we will gain in terms of making the world a better place for all of us.

As the minister also mentioned, AERI is presently going through a challenge dialogue. Through this dialogue we have participation from other research people across Canada. We have participation from many industry leaders that are here in terms of assisting, in terms of working together and agreeing as to what strategy should be the focus. We understand and we know that there are people that are doing research all over the world, so it's not necessary that the Alberta Energy Research Institute become the lead organization in all these different research projects that are taking place, but it is very important that AERI stay plugged in with all the other research projects that are taking place.

At our last challenge dialogue meeting that we held in Calgary a couple of weeks ago with a little over 50 participants, it became very evident that AERI was leading the way and that AERI was not only a provincial leader across this nation but was also becoming a national leader with international assistance coming in from other research authorities. So the future certainly does look bright.

The funding, as it's been indicated, in the budget increases by additional millions of dollars to build us up to about $10 million over the next three years in extra dollars, which will certainly go a long way in terms of combating the Kyoto challenge and making this a better place to live.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, I am flattered by the kind remarks from the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, but I have to point out that the direction in terms of allocating our resources to research areas actually comes from the Alberta Science and Research Authority, which is an independent body of people that provides advice to the government in the areas that we should invest in, and quite clearly their direction for us this year was to direct as many resources as possible into the energy research strategy. That's a challenge that we have to take on. Again, there are a lot better people than I to provide that kind of strategic advice, not only the Alberta Science and Research Authority but the people in Innovation and Science that work with this on a daily basis. That's where the thanks, if you want to call it that, should really go.

I do want to make one comment because there's something else that needs to be said here when it comes to the energy research strategy. This is not just a function of Innovation and Science. We work very closely with the Department of Energy and the Department of Environment because the three of us have a vested interest in this whole area. There's been a lot of support that's come from the Minister of Environment and the Minister of Energy to start looking for the growth drivers in energy in the future, so we have to recognize that.

Also, I have been remiss because there are two other institutes that are important that I haven't talked about, and I want to just briefly comment on them so that everybody knows. It's the Alberta Forestry Research Institute, and the co-chair, the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, does good work there. The budget amounts in that area are modest, but that does not underestimate the importance of strategic advice that they provide on another important industry in our province. The other one, of course, is the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, that has done an enormous amount of work this year, particularly when it comes to co-ordinating research in that whole area and bringing the different groups together to make sure that we are moving forward in a . . . What's the word?

An Hon. Member: Collaborative.

Mr. Doerksen: A collaborative approach.

Again, the minister of agriculture has been instrumental in making sure that she's provided her support from her own department to say: yeah, we've got to work together on this kind of stuff. It's going to fit very well within our life sciences strategy, within the agricultural research strategy, because the more we look at it, the more these things all are coming together. They're cross-overs, they're combinations, and to use an agricultural term, frankly, we have to get out of our silos and work together.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few additional questions for the hon. minister at this time. Certainly, one is on the issue of coal bed methane production, which the hon. minister was discussing in his response to the earlier series of questions. If there is no research being done, I would strongly encourage this ministry to see that it is done. When you have a coal bed producing methane and, of course, you're drawing off a bit of the water with that process, how does that methane production change, if at all, the level of the water table? There is some concern in rural Alberta that there are significant drops in the water table. If there's any research being done on this, I would appreciate an update on it, and if not, I would think that there should be a partnership developed, in this case with EnCana, on adjoining land just to see how their test site is working, if it is affecting the surrounding water table or not, because I think it would alleviate some of the fears that people have. Certainly, we could separate ourselves from the Americans and not make some of the mistakes they have made with the development of their coal bed fields for methane production.

The next question I have is regarding clean coal technology. I see where there are a number of projects, and I can only assume that these are going on in Alberta. I was told last year, I believe, and I can't recall, Mr. Chairman, by whom – I understand that we are in partnership with the huge laboratories in Los Alamos, New Mexico. We are a partner with that organization in clean coal technologies, particularly with the combustion of coal and the efficiencies that are involved in that. There are some extensive studies going on as to how to burn coal more efficiently, whether the coal is changing how the firing is occurring. If I could possibly get a breakdown as to how much money we are spending on that laboratory from this department, I would be very grateful. If this research is going to continue, I think it's very important.

I hear a lot from the Americans, and it's on their web sites. I do find the American web sites fascinating. I find the American government web sites, as a matter of fact, much more open and transparent than the web sites of this government. It astonishes me. I know that this is not this minister's department, but the investigations surrounding Enron by the regulatory authorities in America are open and they're transparent, and I can say that we are not. But that's not to be discussed in the amount of time we have to do the estimates this evening.

How much are we spending at the Los Alamos research facility? What sort of interim results is the government getting in regard to improving our coal burning technology? I'm quite concerned about the base load for our electricity system in this province, which is coal fired. It's decreasing. In the budget for another department is detailed information on that decrease. That is reliable, affordable electricity. Sure we can build the natural gas fired and combined-cycle power plants, but it's an expensive fuel source. I would really appreciate it if the minister would continue with clean coal technology research and, again, an update on how we're doing with the folks in Los Alamos.

In conclusion, for the amount that it would cost – you know, we're putting a lot of money into these research projects – I think there should be more detailed reports provided to each and every member of this Assembly as these reports become available. They are funded by the taxpayers, and the taxpayers have a right to know about this research, particularly with the Alberta Energy Research Institute. Also, if we're giving any money to the Canadian Energy Research Institute, which I believe we are, as their documents, their research initiatives and reports, become public, I think they should be made available. What I'm saying is that for the cost of it every member of this Assembly should be on the mailing lists of those various research institutes so that we can pass this information on to our constituents. I'm sure it would be a very modest sum, and they could find it in this budget to ensure that all members of this Assembly are informed regarding the research that's going on.

Thank you.

Mr. Doerksen: Well, I very much appreciate the member's interest in this matter. I try to get off mailing lists because I get way too much stuff that I can't possibly read. But it's a good suggestion.

The other thing I do appreciate is your support for the clean coal technology. I agree that it's a resource that we do not want to strand in Alberta. It's something that we have accessible to us. I think that if we can develop it in a responsible and efficient manner, it can continue to pay dividends well into the future. So I appreciate that.

As far as the change in the water table and that question, the hon. member obviously knows a lot more about that subject than I do, so I'm not even going to try to answer that one. I don't know the answer. Maybe somebody else can find out the response to that question.

As far as the investment in Los Alamos, yeah, we are partners there. One of the reasons is that we have to work with other jurisdictions on a number of initiatives, and if they have a demonstration plant that can help to prove out some of our technologies, by all means we should make use of that rather than having to reinvest in a complete infrastructure system in Alberta to do the same thing. As I mentioned before, with the Weyburn project we work with other partners and provinces, so admittedly and quite properly we work with other bodies to advance research. In nanotechnology, with the National Institute for Nanotechnology there will be a great amount of collaboration among researchers in Canada and globally, because again there are some global questions that we're involved in.

As far as openness, Mr. Chairman, I think that if the member goes to the Innovation web site, he'll find a huge amount of openness and information there. I encourage him to go in there and browse and, again, take his Victoria Day long weekend to search the site and see if he can get to the depths and the ends and the breadths of all the good information.

Mr. McFarland: Minister, I've been reading some of the numbers here under your expenses for the various programs. I have to start by saying that I'm very happy that in the area of research you've been able to grow the amount of investment in research by it appears to be about 40 percent from 2001-2002 to the target date, '05-06.

I know that there are three of us who have at one time or another chaired the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, and I know that they did a lot of leading-edge technology research, and much of it was precommercialization. I have to admit, though, that I am a little bit disappointed to see that AARI, Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, and the Alberta Forestry Research Institute appear to be about the only two who have either been flatlined or taken a little bit of a reduction. What I was wondering with respect to AARI was if you've had a lot of success or if the research institute has had a lot of success in terms of attracting commercial investment from other corporate sources and if, in fact, some of the other institutes, like the Alberta Energy Research Institute, have been able to attract an increased amount of corporate research dollars and if, in fact, the change has been from leading-edge technology to some other form of research. I do think that was one of the strong selling points of the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute. They, in the past anyways, have exhibited a good deal of co-operation not only with producers, academics, and researchers but also with other provinces, and of course they had involvement from the federal level.

So I would look forward to some of your comments. If you can't give me any of the direct answers tonight, Minister, I'd be happy to hear them later on. Thank you.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, just for my own clarification we go till 10 o'clock?

The Deputy Chair: Yes.

Mr. Doerksen: I just want to make the point, Mr. Chairman, that all the research money and activities that we do in the province are not necessarily housed within my budgets. I for one am not one that really is all that concerned whether the numbers show up in my budget lines or somebody else's budget lines. What's important to me and one of the primary objectives of Innovation and Science and through ASRA is to encourage research on a number of fronts and to monitor the research that actually, in fact, goes on in other departments. Just off the top of my head I know, for instance, that in the department of health there is money that goes into cancer research through the Cancer Board, so there are more research dollars committed on that front. We know now that through Children's Services they are going to be doing a research project. I forget the name of it now, but there's some research around fetal alcohol syndrome issues.

With the department of agriculture you were concerned about the low budget figures for AARI. What I really look to from a group like Alberta Agricultural Research Institute is to provide the strategic direction, not necessarily just to be a group that says: give me more money; give me more money. So if they can actually tell me how we can use the money that currently resides in different pockets and how to best expend that money, that's really the advice that I want and the energies that I want them engaging in. The agricultural research framework, that was introduced by the minister of agriculture just about a week or a week and a half ago, talks about some of the investment that they're making in research that doesn't necessarily show up in the numbers.

In going back to the performance measures, I would point you to page 254 of our business plan, where you can actually see how we measure the total government of Alberta research. As best as we can, we identify the research activities that are taking place across government and have some targets there in terms of what percent of our expense budget we want to put into research. We're moving from a low in '01-02 of .95 percent, moving upwards to 1.3 percent by '05-06, so showing a larger emphasis as the government as a whole toward research projects. So that's really what's important to me. It's not necessarily: does it show up in my line or not? It doesn't matter. It's the end that's important for me.

If you look at one of the conditions that we negotiated hard for with the National Institute for Nanotechnology, particularly with the federal government, we started at a five-year agreement, and we basically said, "No, we won't sign a five-year agreement because we want to have the operating commitment beyond the five years, so we're not going to enter into this deal unless we have a commitment to ongoing operating expenses from the federal government after that five-year commitment is complete," and they provided that. It was a $12 million annual commitment toward the operations. That's just one way that we use our influence, if you want to call it that, to promote research. So everything you see isn't necessarily in the numbers. We're really in the strategic modes, making sure that we've got the right policies and procedures in place, and we will deliver the future.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a couple more questions for the hon. minister. Certainly, this one is centred on the Alberta Research Council. I've had a good look through the business plan and the budget, and I have not found any contingency that has been taken in case the citizens of Alberta are successful in their lawsuit in regard to the pine shakes. [interjection] Yes, pine shakes. There was a considerable amount of interest in research done on this product by the Alberta Research Council in years past, and I'm wondering at this time what, if any, contingencies are being made by the Alberta Research Council just in case the citizens are successful in their court action on this matter. I received countless documents through freedom of information in regard to that research that was conducted, and this goes back to I believe initially 1989. I would be just curious. I don't see it in here, and if it's not in here, which department would it be under? I think this is going to have considerable interest from the public, not only in Edmonton but also in Calgary as well and maybe even in places like Wetaskiwin and Camrose too. I certainly am surprised, whenever I drive around Alberta, at just the number of houses that have that pine shake on the roof as material, and it startles me. We seem to have forgotten about that, but it's an issue that's going to make its way through the courts, and I just wonder how the Alberta Research Council has prepared, if at all, for that hearing.

Thank you.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, I'm not intimately familiar with all aspects of the Alberta Research Council, but if I have a decent grasp on my knowledge of accounting and auditing, contingent liabilities are recorded from the knowledge of the Auditor General and the auditors – I presume the Auditor General in this case – looking at the books, examining potential liabilities. They are required to record it if in fact it is a contingent liability. So if it is not showing up on the books, I would assume that through examination the Auditor has assured himself that it's not an issue.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates unless there are no members who wish to speak prior to the conclusion of the two hours, I must now put the following questions after consideration of the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Innovation and Science for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004.

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$167,833,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$21,430,000
Capital Investment	$58,700,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the Committee of Supply rise and report.

[Motion carried]

10:00

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004.

Innovation and Science: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $167,833,000; capital investment, $58,700,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $21,430,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

13. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to section 11(1) of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act the Legislative Assembly concur in the recommendations of the final report of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission, entitled the Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries and Names for Alberta, tabled in the Assembly on Wednesday, February 19, 2003.

[Adjourned debate April 8: Mr. Masyk]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Motion 13. The debate so far has been very interesting and informative for me, particularly as we looked at the boundary revisions and listened to the speeches particularly from the members from Ponoka-Rimbey and Lacombe-Stettler. It's obvious to me that the difficulties there have had a domino effect and have also affected my constituency. I can only imagine, however, the difficult task for the Electoral Boundaries Commission to come up with a report that would effectively combine all electoral division considerations including representation by population, sparsity or density of population, type of area served, municipal agreements, and so on.

My constituents valued their opportunity to have input into this process at least in the early stages of the consultation. Before the first interim report the commission held consultations in my constituency, and many groups and individuals made presentations. After the interim report was released, my constituents were generally satisfied with the commission's report as the changes were considered to be of a relatively minor nature. However, when the final report was released, the constituents of Wetaskiwin-Camrose were faced with major alterations to boundaries for which there was no provision or opportunity for response or input. It was anticipated that if changes were to occur in the final report, they would be of a minor nature.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I tabled three letters – from the town of Millet, the county of Wetaskiwin, and the city of Wetaskiwin — here in this Legislature. All three municipalities expressed concern over the significant change in the final report that separated Millet and Wetaskiwin into different constituencies in spite of the fact that they along with the county of Wetaskiwin are in the same economic development partnership. To clarify the point, I'd like to quote from the county of Wetaskiwin's letter.

The City of Wetaskiwin, County of Wetaskiwin and the Town of Millet have embarked on a regional economic development partnership funded by the Regional Partnership Initiative Grant from Alberta Municipal Affairs, in which three municipalities investigated the feasibility of establishing a tri-municipal partnership for Economic Development and Tourism cooperation. The three Municipal Councils have agreed, and are currently establishing the legal framework to form a Regional body such as a Commission for the coordinated promotion and development of industrial growth. The revision of the Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency boundary would inhibit the MLAs ability to effectively represent the unified municipalities within this region. This change is likely to have negative impact on the economic growth of the region.

As well, to quote from the letter that I tabled from the town of Millet:

The council of the Town of Millet has unanimously passed a resolution that it adamantly objects to the Town of Millet and surrounding area being removed from the Wetaskiwin-Camrose Electoral Division . . . Historically, the Town of Millet has had economic and social ties to the City and County of Wetaskiwin. Council finds it ludicrous for the Commission to . . . transfer political boundaries without having the slightest knowledge of how it may affect our municipality.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to pass on the concern of the municipalities in my constituency who are affected by what is viewed as a major change in the final report without any prior consultation or opportunity for input on that revision. Again, I do appreciate the many hours of work by the commission in producing the electoral boundaries report.

In conclusion, I would like to say that I am supportive of Motion 13 with the hope that there might be opportunity, when the electoral boundaries bill is debated, to consider a minor boundary adjustment that would address the concerns that my municipalities have raised.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As some of my colleagues have already done, I would like to acknowledge the work of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. Their task was extremely difficult, and it must have been hard to come up with solutions that would benefit everybody.

As an MLA for the city of Edmonton I am not happy with the final report of the commission. I do not like the fact that Edmonton will be losing a seat. I don't feel that it is fair to the city or to the province. I feel the numbers show that Edmonton should have at least kept all of its 19 seats and that the changes should have been made elsewhere in the province. We cannot, however, advocate for an additional seat in the province because that would not be fair to the taxpayers, who are, of course, the most important to us and would have to bear the costs of an additional MLA.

With all that being said and even though I am extremely disappointed in the final product, I do support the work of the commission. The process that we have in place to decide what boundaries go where is one which is far superior to many other systems around North America. We must support this system because we do not want it to end up like our federal system, a system where changes are based on political decisions and favoritism, where one constituency is eliminated because the electorate does not elect a member who is sympathetic to the governing party. That is not the kind of system that we want here in Alberta. I do not want to belong to a government – and I am proud to say that I don't – that makes decisions of this nature by playing favourites.

The commission has done its part, and now it is time for us to do ours. We knew that there were going to be changes to the electoral boundaries, and we now have to accept those changes that are made by an arm's-length commission that works independently of elected officials. Again, I am not happy with the outcomes of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, but I will support the results because it is the only way we can assure Albertans that this is indeed the best system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, many of us are left in dilemmas by Motion 13. I listened last night to the opening comments on the debate offered by the Minister of Justice, who had said something to the effect that the commission "did a good job . . . I just don't happen to like the results." I listened to the very passionate speech given by the Member for Lacombe-Stettler, who expressed her opposition to Motion 13 in no uncertain terms.

I also find myself in a dilemma with this motion. The simple fact of the matter is that when it comes to my particular constituency, Edmonton-Riverview, I believe the commission got it right. Edmonton-Riverview holds together and has three or four neighbourhoods added to it under the report of the commission, and all of those neighbourhoods were developed in a similar time in Edmonton, in the 1950s and the early 1960s. They are overwhelmingly single-family homes, similar levels of education and income, similar ethnic makeup, and as a result it will continue to remain, if this report is accepted, a coherent and cohesive constituency. So I feel very strongly that in the particular case of Edmonton-Riverview the commission got the answer right, but I also feel that in the case of Edmonton as a city the commission has made a very serious mistake. Edmonton should not be losing a seat in this Assembly.

This is an issue that cuts to the heart of democracy. The comments of many members have spoken to the importance of fairness, and I couldn't agree with those comments more. Ultimately our democratic system is based on the idea that every citizen is equal, at least when it comes to voting. One vote per person. There is no more fundamental principle to democracy than that one. We all recognize that the realities of a modern democratic society mean that those voters have to be formed into constituencies and not every constituency is going to have exactly the same number of voters.

It's a long way from the origins of democracy in ancient Athens, where every citizen had a vote and every citizen participated directly in government decisions. Now, there were huge shortfalls in that system. For example, to become a citizen, you had to meet very limited criteria. You had to be male, and you had to be born of previous citizens. You couldn't be a slave, and on and on. So we've come a long way from there, but the principle of one person, one vote remains at the heart of democracy.

I'm reminded a bit of George Orwell's great work – remarkable work – Animal Farm when I read this and the powerful line from Animal Farm that says that all animals are equal, but some are more equal than others. In some cases sometimes I read this report and I think that to some extent applies here. All voters are equal, but it seems that in Alberta some are more equal than others, and it seems that some are less equal. That's especially true if they're from Edmonton and particularly if they're from the poorer neighbourhoods of Edmonton.

The constituency that is being eliminated from the map of Alberta is I believe the poorest constituency, the most needy constituency in the province, the constituency of Edmonton-Norwood. I spent some time studying the demographics of Edmonton-Norwood, and I believe I'm correct in saying that it is the lowest income constituency in this province. Its levels of education are virtually the lowest in the province. It has perhaps the highest or one of the highest immigrant populations. It has a very high percentage of people who do not speak English as a first language. It has one of the highest unemployment rates. If such things were collected on the basis of constituencies, I would think we would find that it has one of the highest crime rates, one of the highest disease rates, and one of the highest poverty rates in this province. In other words, it's a very, very needy constituency. These are people who need a voice in this Chamber, and we are taking it away.

Beyond that, we're taking a voice away from the city of Edmonton, a city that, even going by the 2001 census, deserves 19 seats, not 18 seats. I think the minority report written by Bauni Mackay and attached as an appendix to the Electoral Boundaries Commission report is an eloquent and, to my mind, convincing argument about why Edmonton should not be losing a seat. She says that among many things "the residents of Edmonton will have their right to democratic representation compromised." As I have gone to some lengths to point out, the very residents who are compromised the most here are the ones who are in the greatest need. I think there's something nearly tragic about that, a betrayal of democracy.

I also found a couple of paragraphs of Bauni Mackay's report worth quoting for she takes the issue beyond the numbers, she takes it beyond the mathematics to the spirit of democracy. I'm just going to read two paragraphs from her report into my comments.

The recommendations of the Electoral Boundaries Commission are based on a precise interpretation of the legislation and pertinent court decisions, with little visionary latitude. Exchanging three electoral divisions north of Red Deer for three electoral divisions in and around Calgary recognizes neither the geographic size nor the economic explosion of the top two-thirds of the province. Similarly, focusing on the numbers disregards the fact that Edmonton is the economic and social hub of the northern two-thirds of the province, extending from Red Deer to the Northwest Territories border and beyond.

Edmonton is the capital city, the seat of government, the gateway to the North, and the magnet site for health care, education, employment, recreation, and commerce for the major part of the province. Residents from Red Deer north to the Territories and beyond depend on Edmonton for all of these services, some within a 100 km. radius on a daily basis, others intermittently as the need arises. Government decisions affecting the central and northern part of Alberta have an impact on Edmonton, and Edmonton's voice in the Legislature must be strong enough to influence these decisions.

To me that summarizes, especially when it's combined with the census material, the argument that Edmonton should not be losing a seat.

Mr. Speaker, as torn as I am on this issue, for I do recognize that the constituency of Edmonton-Riverview is served well by this report, I must ultimately put my city's interests above my own and those of my constituents and oppose Motion 13.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I have a concern that we're kind of dealing with this from the wrong end. We set aside a commission, we give them the parameters to deal with an issue, then they go and do it, and then we start picking apart the work they did. Now, I don't agree with every line they've drawn on that map. As a matter of fact, lots of it looks illogical. But that's not the point here. If as a group we don't like the parameters that are set out or some of the guidelines that were in there previous, if that has to be changed, then we ought to have this discussion before we send them out on the road show to live under the rules that apparently many of us don't like.

I think that we have taken to an extreme the idea about one person, one vote being one of the end-alls. Quite frankly, in the situation we are in in this House, where it's a democracy run by party politics, if I win my riding by one vote more than the poor guy who didn't win, I come in here with every bit as much right to vote as the person who won by 55,000 votes. So the one man, one vote works at the constituency level and in this province. Every party has the ability to challenge at the constituency level for that seat in the House. Whether you're representing 20,000 or 30,000 or 40,000, that's where the race is run. That's how our system is based: on the party that gets the most seats. But the Liberals or the NDs have every bit as much chance of winning that seat with 20,000 or 50,000 as anyone else.

Keeping that in mind, we should have to wonder why it is so critical to keep boundaries we've had before. If government is a policy creature and we're treating schools and roads and our infrastructure from a position of fairness, and if it's dealt with on a constituency basis only because that's where the project is required, it shouldn't be a big leap to move over to the neighbouring community and serve them as an elected person. It shouldn't be a big problem for the opposition or the other parties that run at the election to also take in boundaries and challenge an election on what you as a party provide. Character is a big part of politics, but ultimately the policies of your party are what the people should vote on, and they have as much right in that size, their constituency, whether it be in Wabasca or Calgary, to win that seat and take their place in this House by one vote at that level.

I think we've done ourselves a disservice by leaving the guidelines there, as outdated as they might be. We use rivers, and I mean when was it all decided that it was that tough to get across a river? If you're quite friendly with the minister from Vegreville-Viking, maybe you get a bridge quicker now. Things that make your constituency different: in my area, for example, Lloydminster has become quite a regional hub. It's taken people from Vermilion many years to get over the fact that that's where the Wal-Mart store is, but now it's there, and the people from Tulabi Lake are using Lloydminster as their centre. It would be great to see them stay there, much to the discomfort of the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake who I'm sure would love to have them, but in fairness, if an arbitrated . . .

I'm saying that things change. People travel maybe a little bit further. I think that if we ever get into the discussion of how hard it is to represent a rural constituency with 22 communities and three counties and several school boards and regional health authorities – it's much more difficult than a city. That's just the way it is.

Mr. Smith: How do you do that?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, we just work hard.

The simple fact is: we've set this commission up to fail if we're going to second-guess what they've done. We might not like it. Let's make sure that the next time we send them out to do it, we set the guidelines so they do it right, or we better do it and at least offer them guidelines that we can live with. But once it's done, it's a little bit late to start picking apart the pieces of it. So whether we like it or not, we hired them to do it, probably paid them a good dollar. Live with it, and let's get on with life.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to add my comments tonight on Motion 13. Much has been said about the report that the commission brought in, and I'd just like to comment a bit on the commission members and remind everyone in here that we chose these members, and we chose the guidelines under which they were to operate. These commission members are highly respected in all our communities, from where they come. They're respected throughout the province, and they are very highly respected by members in this Assembly, or we wouldn't have picked them.

I'd also like to remind everybody again that we picked the guidelines, and now it seems that we have this great expectation that we should all be pleased with the report. When you look at the task that they had to do of changing all these pieces of the puzzle to accommodate the changing population in the last eight years, when you change one, it's not easy to change everything else to fit the way you want.

Now, my constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills this time was changed very, very little, but that hasn't been the norm over past boundary review commissions. This is probably the first time I can remember in my life that it's undergone such a small change. Just this morning the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View reminded me that in '97 she lost a great deal of her area to me and all those good people in Trochu, Three Hills, Acme, Linden, and the Kneehill county. I can tell you that she worked very hard while she was the MLA for that area in developing relationships with the people and the boards and the county members and the town councils, and it was a tough thing for her to lose that.

The Deputy Premier also likes to remind me that she's losing another good part of her constituency this year, but back in '97 she lost her whole constituency. It was amalgamated into Drumheller-Chinook, and at the time she was I think minister of health or something. I know I was arguing about health issues with her at the time, so I think that it was minister of health. The other member was the Speaker of this Assembly. So two very well-respected members and both well known to me, as it's a neighbouring constituency, and I can remember that that was a very tough situation for both of those members to deal with, but they did. They found a way to deal with it.

This situation has created some tough things for some of our members. I can sympathize with that, and I can sympathize with the situation they find themselves in today. But what's the solution? What do we do? Do we reject this motion? Do we strike another committee of other well-respected Albertans? Do we change the criteria and hope that it won't be challenged in the courts, as it was in 1991? And we lost. Who would we pick for this new commission? Last night the members of the Edmonton city council were here. They're very well-respected members in their community. I have a lot of respect for them myself. I think that they're very fair-minded people. Would they be able to come up with a recommendation that would please any more of this Assembly than the current commission? I don't think so. I don't even know that if they were given the task with the same criteria, they would actually give Edmonton that extra seat.

There's a lot said about Edmonton losing a seat, but, you know, every time there's a boundary review it seems that rural Alberta loses a seat.

Mr. Herard: Because they're all moving to urban Alberta.

Mr. Marz: Well, exactly. So we adapt to that criteria.

Edmonton didn't increase at the same rate that Calgary did, unfortunately, and I think that the commission did what was expected of them under the guidelines. I believe that whoever we would reappoint for a commission probably wouldn't come up with any better solution. They'd just perhaps make a different group of people upset and angry with their conclusions.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that it's easier to criticize something than to come up with a solution yourself. Like I said before, I'm not sure that even if another group were given the task, it would be any more acceptable to us than in the past. I criticized myself I think every boundary review commission that I can think of because it seemed that every one of them resulted in a loss of rural members, and that is a concern to all rural representatives in here. Every time there's a boundary review, there are fewer rural representatives. I guess we can argue about cities being the hub of economic activity, but rural Alberta is where the wealth is generated to begin with. It may be managed from the cities, but it's generated from the rural, and there's a huge impact on rural Alberta where that economic activity takes place.

When we look at some of the changes that happen in rural ridings, you know, I could argue that when a rural riding changes, they always become bigger. I don't get more staff. I get the same amount of staff to help with the extra town or two or three, an extra rural municipality, maybe an extra health board, maybe an extra school board, and quite a few different people. That creates quite a different workload. I guess it depends on how you look at it. It's also an opportunity to meet more people, make more relationships, and that's one of the bonuses of this job. I was discussing this with my wife the other day. When I leave this job, the one thing I'll take with me is the relationships I was able to make and all the people I was able to meet over the course of my time spent here. It's something I'll take with me forever.

Mr. Amery: That's very nice for you.

Mr. Marz: Yeah. I think it is too.

I'm concerned, Mr. Speaker, with some of the comments that were aimed at the boundary review commission in the task that we gave them to do, and I think we owe a vote of thanks to this commission for doing a very difficult job under some very stringent guidelines. I wouldn't want them to think by reading Hansard that we weren't appreciative of the task they're doing, and I wouldn't want this commission to be something that no Albertan wants to sit on for fear of never being able to come up with something that is going to be pleasing to everybody and end up in a no-win situation. I think they did the best that they could do with the guidelines we gave them.

I believe we should accept this motion, and I would urge all the members in this Assembly to do so.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured and pleased to join today's debate in the Assembly regarding the new electoral boundaries. First of all, I would like to make it clear that I am not happy with the fact that Edmonton will be losing one of its ridings. However, I must consider three important points about the final proposal put forward by the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

Rev. Abbott: How many points?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Three. The commission followed the law, used an objective statistical model, and balanced the needs of rural and urban communities.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the balanced representation is compromised the moment politicians from any level of government take charge in constituency border drafting. We must respect the fact that the electoral boundaries process was as objective and unpolitical as possible. The Electoral Boundaries Commission remains an independent body whose members are appointed by the independently selected chairman of the Assembly. Names are provided from the government leader and the leaders of the opposition and are subsequently appointed.

The Electoral Boundaries Commission Act compels the commission to divide the province into 83 electoral divisions with a population within 25 percent of the provincial average in a way that will ensure effective representation for Albertans. Mr. Speaker, the commission must also consider factors that ensure effective representation as guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The scarcity and density of Alberta's population is important because Alberta's rural communities must be treated with the same relevance as the province's growing urban centres. Common community interest and community organizations including those of Indian reserves and Métis settlements are important factors to ensure that the new boundaries cause as little friction among neighbouring communities as possible. The existing community boundaries within the cities of Edmonton and Calgary must also be preserved as well as the existing municipal boundaries, the number of municipalities, and the other local authorities. Geographic features such as road systems and understandable and clear boundaries should be maintained wherever possible as well, Mr. Speaker.

The report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission designed three guiding principles of effective representation. The first was to reiterate the tradition of Canada as a nation of "effective representation, not absolute parity as in the U.S." Second, "the process of achieving effective representation may involve diluting the political force of some votes but not unduly and not without reason." The third principle, Mr. Speaker, states that "the balancing of these interests is a delicate one, which involves an examination . . . of the social history, geography and demography of communities in every sense of the word."

The commission has been guided by the principles set out by the Supreme Court of Canada and the Court of Appeal of Alberta. In being guided by these principles, it has been mindful of the principles of effective representation as opposed to absolute parity. Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to cry foul after considering the legal framework and guiding principles used to redraw Alberta's electoral boundaries. We must also remember that there is a relationship between the number of members in this Assembly and the population of Alberta.

Section 12(1) of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act requires that the commission is to use the most recent census data as well as the population on Indian reserves provided by the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs. The most recent census available in the 2001 Canada census counted 2,974,807 Albertans. Indian and Northern Affairs Canada indicated that 9,113 persons who were not included in the census count live on Indian reserves. The commission concluded that the total population used to calculate the boundaries would be 2,983,920 persons. The members took the number, divided it by 83, and came up with 35,951. This was to be the provincial quotient, or the average population per electoral division. This number, of course, was only a guide as the act also legislated a certain degree of flexibility. The allowable range for standard electoral divisions under the act is 44,939 to 26,963 plus or minus 25 percent. The commission had the flexibility to allow special consideration for an electoral division to have a population as low as 17,976, or 50 percent below the average population.

I am disappointed with the final results of the Electoral Boundaries Commission in Edmonton. In an ideal world no jurisdiction would lose their representation, but there are other emerging issues as Alberta's population changes. Travel time will continue to have a major impact on effective representation in rural ridings because the area will continue to expand, causing constituencies to be more spread throughout the land mass. The combined effect of the projected population growth in Alberta's urban centres and the reduced number of rural electoral divisions is that there will be fewer geographically larger rural areas within the new division.

The report has a rational explanation for the definition of a major city as a sound argument for increasing the number of ridings in Calgary and reducing the number in the capital city. Mr. Speaker, the commission defined a major city group, which included Edmonton and Calgary, as arising from the population density. The geographic area of the electoral divisions in the two cities is relatively small. There is one municipality, one regional health authority, and one of each type of school authority. Both cities are major regional service centres for a large area of the province in which most provincial services are delivered including specialized services. Both major cities also tend to be the initial entry point both to Canadians from other parts of the country and for immigrants from other countries to Alberta. I would note that in both cities there are more MLAs than there are members of the city councils.

Mr. Speaker, I spoke earlier of a rational approach to the use of the commission to redraw Alberta's boundaries. The 1995-1996 Electoral Boundaries Commission developed a matrix which is used to apply a variety of factors reflecting effective representation. The matrix took into account several variables including geographic area, population, number of households, and distance to the Legislature and scored each on a scale from one to 10. The 2002-2003 commission decided to build on and refine the matrix to assist in developing its recommendations. Other variables in the matrix included the area of the division in square kilometres and the density of the population, or the number of people per square kilometre. The dependent population proportion is the number of children and seniors compared to the total population, with a higher ratio indicating a larger number of persons eligible to be dependent on various provincial programs.

The way the matrix is structured, a higher score indicates greater difficulty in providing effective representation. A lower score indicates less difficulty. Edmonton's population in 2001, Mr. Speaker, according to Canada's census, was 666,104, but after including St. Albert, Sherwood Park, and surrounding area, Edmonton's total population was 776,830. The metro Edmonton area is still far less than Calgary's 2001 population of 878,866. In addition to the 2001 Canada census numbers the report from the Electoral Boundaries Commission revealed a major population growth difference between the two cities over the previous decade. Between 1991 and 2001 Calgary experienced a 24 percent population growth increase compared to 8 percent in Edmonton. Edmonton is enjoying an incredible period of economic growth, but this growth pales in comparison to the boom experienced in Calgary since the mid-90s.

Mr. Speaker, I may not like the fact that Edmonton stands to lose a riding, but the fact is that between 1991 and 2001 Calgary grew much faster than Edmonton. Several prominent leaders in Edmonton worry that the city will be underrepresented in this Assembly. After studying the report, it becomes clear that this potential problem of underrepresentation currently exists in Calgary.

The Electoral Boundaries Commission adopted a scientific approach to ensure effective representation for Albertans. I am not happy that Edmonton loses a riding in the proposed changes. However, I cannot ignore the significance of the statistical data or the validity of the commission's objective approach. The process to redraw Alberta's boundaries depends on statistics to ensure an impartial ruling. This ensures a rational, scientific approach to an emotional issue. As I said before, I'm not happy with the results, but the results seem to balance the needs of urban and rural Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening to make a few comments as well on the divisive and difficult issue before us, and I will try to be quite brief, considering the late hour.

Change, of course, is always tough, Mr. Speaker, and this is no surprise at all to we who have been involved in politics for some time. This issue has always been divisive. In this province there are issues between rural and urban. There are issues between ridings, you know, larger or smaller populations and distances. Frankly, this is an issue I've been interested in for some time because of sitting on city council in Calgary. This was a subject of much discussion.

So during that discussion I decided to do some research and to look at the larger issues and see what we could perhaps learn from other jurisdictions because, frankly, we're not the first to go through this. In fact, all democracies go through this throughout the world wherever there is growth or decline in the populations.

It's not a surprise to find out that in many jurisdictions, in fact, ultimately decisions had to be made through judicial processes as opposed to political processes, and court decisions ultimately had to rule to force change because change was not desired. For example, in the United States you look at the 1963 Baker versus Carr decision in which this subject was brought all the way to the Supreme Court resulting finally in a Supreme Court decision. One man, one vote. I believe the 14th amendment specified that after that decision, and frankly it did change politics right across the United States. That one Supreme Court decision changed the dynamics and the nature of politics. In fact, I credit that with much of the success of the civil rights movement in the United States.

Some people would say that it resulted in a worse situation, but it depends on which side of the fence you're on, rural or urban. As one who grew up in rural Alberta and who now lives in urban Alberta and having been on both sides of that issue, you can certainly see the complications and why we're having the division before us. It's not an easy issue.

Having said all of that, I've looked at the situation and my first question was – well, in 1979 we had 79 MLAs. We had approximately 2 million in population. It's now 20 years later. We have 3 million in population, yet we've only seen a very small number increase, 79 to 83. In that same time, the cost per capita of MLAs to taxpaying Albertans has actually declined dramatically, and the workload on MLAs with 50 percent more population has gone up considerably. So I guess I had the question of why couldn't we add a few more MLAs, which would have resolved much of the division that we see before us. The decision, I guess, was made not to do that.

We often hear arguments that, for example, in Calgary there were only 14 aldermen and a mayor and we have many more MLAs than that. I actually see the two issues as completely unrelated. I don't believe that's a valid comparison at all. In fact, I think it's very important that in an area that's growing as fast as Calgary is, people continue to have solid representation and fairly equal representation and that the urban vote not be diluted as much as it is compared to other areas of the province because there are important issues there.

So I guess the comment I would make is that I felt it would not have hurt to add a few more MLAs, and I think that would have resolved the issue. However, those arguments did not carry the day when this commission was set up. The commission did their work. They did their work as requested. I believe that we now have to support the work the commission has done.

The way this relates to me personally in the constituency that I have the privilege of representing now, Calgary-Currie – yes, there have been substantial changes made. Quite frankly, I am saddened and disappointed to see that some of the areas that I've been privileged to serve as their representative will now no longer be in Calgary-Currie moving forward, so for the folks in those districts I would only, I guess, say that I thank them for supporting me. New districts have been added, and I'm looking forward to making new friends and meeting new people in those districts and hopefully earning their support. So I am looking forward to that, and I guess the changes that are before us we will try and get ahead of them and make them positive, make them work for everyone.

With that, I thank you for being able to make those comments, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just going to take a moment here tonight to explain why it is my intention to support Motion 13. Only from my perspective. I do not understand the demographics nor the distribution as it relates to a number of other areas of the province, but I want to speak specifically with respect to the constituency of St. Albert as it relates to and also shares the municipality of St. Albert with Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert constituency, and I also want to speak about the capital region. I believe both demonstrate the fact that we in this particular House can address the needs, the wants, the desires, and respond to the queries, if you will, and the needs of good provincial government to the community of interest of the capital region.

It dismays me to think that there is, of course, a seat being lost within the city of Edmonton, but I would hasten to add that that does not mean that the people in Edmonton, any section of Edmonton, have lost a voice in this Legislature. It is just being redistributed. There are many things in the capital region that are of common interest, and those of us who represent areas that are in what we would call and have come to call the doughnut – that is, around the capital city – share those interests, and we advocate for and respond to the people and their projects, if you will, and their policies that they want to see implemented and their legislation that they want to work under as it relates to this particular community, and I'm very happy to be part of it.

However, if the formula that was used by the electoral boundaries review committee was to be applied, then there would be probably an interest in having some of the Edmonton constituencies reach into some of the other communities that are in the outlying areas. That would have been an encroachment, in my estimation, on the integrity of that municipality's boundaries. I do recall several years ago when the city of St. Albert was divided in a very, very awkward fashion, in such an awkward fashion that my residence, where I live, was 12 houses from the constituency and was joined to another one and allocated to it. It still is an awkward allocation. However, I can say that from my office in St. Albert it doesn't matter where the individual lives. It just matters that we are there to respond to them. So for that reason I would like to say that I think the boundaries commission served my area as best it could, recognizing the formula that it decided to work under, acknowledging the community of interest that is integral to the municipality, and also recognizing the fact that the capital region does have a voice that extends beyond the boundaries of the city of Edmonton.

With that I just wanted to indicate that I think the people can be well served from my perspective in the area that I'm familiar with. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm responding to the urges of all my colleagues at five minutes to 11 to say something on this issue. Actually, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster I think said some of the things that I was going to say, so I won't say them again, but I think he was right in saying that sometimes we do things and we may be setting them up for failure. Essentially, it's my belief, my personal belief, that until such time as we look at what is effective representation in the 21st century and until we ask Albertans what it is that they feel is effective representation, then we will continue to have the same kinds of difficulties that we've had with this commission and with many others because essentially no one can win working on one of these commissions. They all work very hard, but everybody in the end has problems with what they've done.

We live in a different world, and I think that the hon. member also talked about things like horses and buggies and rivers and bridges and things like that. Well, in today's electronic age I think things are a whole lot different, and even though it is probably more difficult to represent a rural constituency when you've got so many boards and so many towns and villages and councils and municipalities and all those people, I would venture a guess that most rural MLAs will tell you that they deal with a whole lot more people today than they ever did because of the way that we are wired today with respect to communication. I mean, most MLAs, I think, probably have a cell phone, and most MLAs today also have a blackberry where they receive their e-mails wherever they go. So you can get the raspberry from your constituents pretty much from anywhere.

Anyway, the bottom line, though, is that technology, I think, is also at the root of some of the problems we've seen with this report. Many hon. members have said, you know, that it's relationships, and politics is about relationships. When you tell a computer to divide a province into 83 constituencies with as close numerical comparisons as you can, it'll do that, but it won't care about the relationships. It won't care about the fact that it's splitting up communities here and there and everywhere. So I think that's really where the root of the problem is, and I think we've had an opportunity and we've been told that there will be an opportunity as we debate this bill to perhaps right a few of those wrongs. In other words, where communities have been split, perhaps we have an opportunity to redress those kinds of problems.

So, all in all, I think that I'm going to be supporting the motion, and I would adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 10, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/10

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our divine Father, as we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our thanks and ask that we may continue our work under Your guidance. Amen.

Please be seated.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have a special privilege of introducing some excellent students and the teaching staff and parents that accompany them from Jean Vanier elementary school. The teachers include Mrs. Marjorie Mather, the principal; Vicki Whalley, the teacher with them; Treena Raboud; Mr. James Gueffroy, the student teacher; and Mrs. Marie Petryshen, a teacher assistant; as well as a parent helper, Mrs. Taylor. Now, there are 33 marvelous students in this group from Jean Vanier, and I would ask, if they'd rise, that we give them the warm welcome that they so richly deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members 37 students who are here today as participants in the second session of Mr. Speaker's MLA-for-a-Day program. They have spent time at their member's office and with you, Mr. Speaker, in the Chamber, and they will receive a tour and briefings on the constituent elements of this House later this afternoon. The ultimate aims of the day's activities are, first, to show how MLAs carry out their responsibilities as both representatives and legislators and, secondly, to further develop the interest and understanding of our parliamentary system among our student guests. Our student shadow colleagues are seated in both galleries, and I'd now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to introduce you to a Lethbridge businessman. His name is Mark Switzer, and he's in the members' gallery. Mark is a past president of the Lethbridge Chamber of Commerce, past member of the regional health authority, and current chairman of the Community Futures board of directors. I would like all the members of the Assembly to extend him the traditional warm welcome. Thank you, Mark.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we have with us in the members' gallery the dynamic duo of Blake Robert and William McBeath. Blake was recently acclaimed as the president and William as the vice-president of finance of the PC Youth Association of Alberta. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand today and introduce to you and to members of the Assembly five employees of risk management and insurance of Alberta Revenue who are on a public service tour to have their first opportunity to visit the Legislature and become more acquainted with it. I'd ask them to stand as I read their names: Jacque Rocheleau, Brian Proctor, Betty Wong, Francis Sandul, and Brenda Poltorak. If they'd stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A shocking introduction this afternoon: I'd like Thompson MacDonald and Bob Nicolay from Enmax Corporation to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature. They're just around seeing "watts" up in the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a friend of mine who came to this country a number of years ago from the country of the Netherlands to marry a good friend of mine. He's since become a very active member of his community and an outstanding new Canadian. I'd like to introduce my friend Marten Boonstra. If he'd rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Education Funding

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, everywhere in Alberta the number one priority of parents is having good schools in their communities. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Given that schools are a priority for parents, why was there $37 million more in the budget for government buildings than for school buildings?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that clearly Albertans appreciate that we've put forward a new structure in this province that deals with not only the operations of our core programs of health and education and transportation and infrastructure but also focuses our attention on a capital plan, a capital plan that is going to actually deliver products and buildings and structures that are going to get built. One of those components clearly is to deal with the issue of schools for our children, whether that be new schools or renovations. I think that quite clearly this plan of $5.5 billion of capital infrastructure over the next three years is a very, very, very active plan that Albertans can appreciate involves over $450 million going to schools for new schools and upgrades and renovations. So I think they appreciate that we are on the right track, that this is a budget that deals with the needs of their children and their community, and they're very pleased with the budget.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Infrastructure: if this is such an active plan, will this government provide the complete list of schools to be built in the next three years, or will the announcements continue to be made on a piecemeal basis?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition yesterday, we will be putting forward a list of the major projects that will occur in the coming year. However, as far as going out the total, full, three years: no, because we simply don't know what other projects there might be later on. I would really think that the hon. member would want us to be able to address situations that come up over the three years as opposed to trying to now say and anticipate everything that's going to happen over the next three years. Circumstances change.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Infrastructure: can the minister assure Albertans that they will get the schools they need without the construction freezes, as we've seen in the past?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased that the Leader of the Opposition would raise that question because that is one of the great things about this particular budget. Any projects that we start we are going to be able to complete, and we talked briefly yesterday about the fact that there is a statement in the budget that says that $1.4 billion may be required from alternate forms of financing. So that tells me and it should tell the hon. member that projects will be funded as they progress.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, this government is using the budget to disguise its agenda by claiming to fully fund education and health but then failing to cover labour costs. This is putting school boards and health authorities in a tough position, driving more and more Alberta workers to strike. This government rigged the bargaining process against the teachers, and now they're rigging the bargaining process against nurses. My questions are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Why are you provoking teachers, nurses, and public-sector employees into strike situations?

Mr. Dunford: Man, a 14 percent increase. Some rigging.

I think we need to make it clear that in the preamble and in the question we have some identifiable groups that have the legal right to strike and others that of course have to use compulsory interest arbitration. So I think that's the first thing that needs clarification.

As far as provoking, I think the hon. member knows well enough that I'm probably the last person in this House that would provoke anybody.

An Hon. Member: He's a lamb.

Mr. Dunford: That's right. We're here to . . . [interjections] Well, I hear a lot of my nicknames being bandied about, and I'm not sure I want to make them public.

In any sense what we've been doing both with teachers last year and now with health care workers this year is looking at a specific situation and then dealing with it as best we can in a manner that will be successful.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is it government policy to force unions into strike positions to turn public opinion against them?

Mr. Dunford: One of the great attributes about Albertans which I think is clearly identifiable is their ability to get along with each other and to resolve disputes. One of the things that I'm most proud of with the mandate that we have, Mr. Speaker, is that within Alberta and with the number of collective agreements that had to be negotiated on a year-in, year-out basis, we actually have, if not the lowest, among the lowest lost time due to strikes in Canada.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the same minister: when your government claims that there's enough money in the budget for labour settlements, are you not then interfering in the bargaining process by imposing restrictions?

Mr. Dunford: Well, again, I'm not sure exactly where the hon. leader is coming from when he terms restrictions, but we do have legal rights and legal obligations and legal responsibilities. While some people might see them as constraints or restrictions, what we see is a very effective means of handling labour relations situations here within Alberta.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A parent council chair from Grande Prairie writes that as a result of underfunding her school has already cut one full-time teacher, increased class sizes, and reduced programs. This week's news offers only more of the same with the projected cut of 23 teachers districtwide. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Can the minister explain to this parent council chair why schools in Grande Prairie and other districts across this province are cutting teachers?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, as I've said in this Assembly many times, it is too early to tell whether teachers should be cut or not. With specific respect to the Grande Prairie school district, one of their issues is something that I've raised in this Assembly before, and that is that they have a declining enrollment of 1 and a half percent. That puts a lot of our rural boards in a very difficult issue, because the number of students are going down. As good financial managers they have to respond to that drop in the number of students. We're predicting that they are going to be receiving about $800,000 more than they did last year even with that decline in enrollment.

Grande Prairie is a school district that does have some financial issues. As a matter of fact, I'm scheduled to go up to Grande Prairie to talk to them and hear what they have to say. So hopefully we'll be doing that very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what does the minister suggest these parents do to avoid further program cuts? Fund-raise?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member wasn't listening to what I said. Their biggest issue is that there's a 1 and a half percent enrollment decline in the Grande Prairie school district. When there is an enrollment decline, there are changes that are going to have to be made. In some of our school districts around the province we're seeing as high as a 5 percent decline. This is a very serious issue, but I will say that when it comes to this issue across Canada, we are very fortunate because our enrollment is at least holding even. In places like Newfoundland they're down 15 or 20 percent over the past three or four years.

Dr. Massey: I'm sure that makes that parent feel better.

How will the projected loss of 800 teachers provincewide improve classroom conditions for teachers?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked a very good question. It is not about improving classroom conditions for teachers; it is about improving classroom conditions for students.

Dr. Massey: It's the same thing, and you know it.

Dr. Oberg: It's the same thing? Is that what the hon. member just said? It's the same thing? This education system is there for students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

School Property Taxes

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Provincial Treasurer told the House that the government had decided to freeze the mill rate for school property taxes, yet in the fiscal plan for the 2001 budget the minister said, "In future years, Albertans should get automatic . . . property tax rate reductions as the $1.2 billion revenue requirement is held constant but spread over a growing assessment base." Because of this broken promise Albertans will be hit with a 5.8 percent increase in their school property taxes next year in a budget which falsely promises no tax increases. To the Minister of Finance: why is this government again picking the pockets of middle-class Albertans with this hidden tax increase?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, when I responded to the question earlier, I indicated to the hon. member that in the budget we have frozen the mill rate. We have not increased the mill rate for the school tax on properties. We have not increased that. What we have allowed for is to recognize the growth that has occurred in this province. If the hon. member would listen, he'd realize that we have had a huge migration of people to the province of Alberta, so with that comes the cost of educating the children that come with them. The reality is that you have to capture the growth within the province. So if we freeze the mill rate and recognize that the population is growing, then there will be more dollars collected on that assessment, and those dollars will go into supporting education within the province. This is not rocket science. This is clearly accepting the fact that the province is growing, which is a reality, freezing the mill rate, and putting those dollars into an education system which is needed to effectively provide for a system for all of the children that are here and coming to this province.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister has completely flip-flopped from 2001, when she said that "automatic school property tax rate reductions as the $1.2 billion revenue requirement is held constant but spread over a growing assessment base," can she explain to the House when she changed her policy and why she changed her policy?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, naturally, the increase in the revenue raised will be spread over the population, but the rate base for the mill rate has stayed the same. So there's a larger population that will be paying into the school property tax assessment, but the mill rate is frozen. It has not moved.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the minister is not listening to her own words. Will the minister explain to Albertans why she told them that this budget doesn't contain any tax increases when it clearly does?

Mrs. Nelson: Once again, Mr. Speaker, freezing the mill rate means it's not moving. Because there are more people paying, because we've had a migration to the province, there's been no increase in the mill rate. I don't know how much clearer I can make that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Hell's Half Acre Remediation

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in the Turner Valley area of Highwood are concerned that an environmentally dangerous situation has been uncovered at the historic oil refinery site known as Hell's Half Acre with reported site contaminants like heavy metals and hydrocarbons leaching into the Sheep River and into the nearby aquifer. To the Minister of Community Development: why, as the report suggests, has your department done nothing about it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the report may or may not indicate, we've done quite a lot at this very unique site. It is a national treasure, and it's a provincial treasure. There are about 22 acres there, as the member would know, and not all of it contains contaminants.

However, we have been working over the past several years with the Department of Infrastructure as well as the Department of Environment on site reclamation and environmental concerns there. We've sealed off those areas, hon. member, where we know there are contaminants. We've also hired accredited companies who come out and do test drillings. They insert their instruments, of course, into those test holes, and they give us readings back. I just want to assure this hon. member and others that there are no measurable levels of contaminants that are entering the aquifer or the river system in that area.

In conclusion, I would say, Mr. Speaker, that we have health and safety protocols in place there for staff, visitors, and local residents, and we also have spent over $1 million so far, and in the budget provided here a couple of days ago, we will be adding a further $1.5 million to complete the excellent work that is ongoing in this regard.

Mr. Tannas: To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that Hell's Half Acre site is your responsibility, Mr. Minister, why hasn't your department taken any steps to clean up the contamination before this time?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is true that we are responsible for that site and the cleanup. It is not true, though, to say that we haven't spent anything because, in fact, we have spent some $772,800 on that particular site. In the upcoming budgets we do have about another $1.5 million budgeted to continue and complete that cleanup.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Environment: will the minister commit to having his department check for contamination in the Sheep River and nearby homes that have wells to determine the levels of pollution and, if found, issue orders for the cleanup and remediation?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Environment acts in this situation as it would with any other contaminated site. Whether it's Community Development's or Infrastructure's contaminated site or a private-sector contaminated site, we and our legislation clearly indicate that we act the same. With this particular issue we have told Community Development and Infrastructure that they need to develop a remediation plan. They need to expand their monitoring of the situation. As we've heard the two ministers quite correctly say, there's new money in this budget to both work on the reclamation and expand the monitoring of that site. So as we go forward, we will act as a regulator and make sure that those departments are doing the appropriate job. We'll make sure they're remediating. We will make sure they're monitoring, and we will certainly provide technical advice and any technical assistance they need in regard to remediation and monitoring.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, this government has said time and time again that it makes decisions only when it has studied an issue and found concrete evidence that supports its plan of action. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what studies and evidence does the minister have to show that P3s are a good idea for Albertans?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that you wouldn't want me to take a whole lot of time, because I could go through a very long list of very, very successful P3 projects that have already occurred in the province. In fact, there are a number, of course, outside the province, and we have a number of experts within the province that are very familiar with how these can be constructed to be advantageous.

Yesterday the hon. member made some comments about how terrible P3s were and how it was a way of rewarding the corporate sector. I think that that is a very, very shameful statement, particularly when you look at groups like Bethany Care, like the Good Samaritan Society, like Caritas and other groups that have produced P3 projects in this province that are operating very, very well and providing an extremely good service. I find it very offensive when he goes after those kinds of people and projects.

Mr. Bonner: Yes, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the fact that we are talking not about nonprofits but the private sector, given that P3s have failed in every other jurisdiction in which they've been tried, will the minister table on Monday all of those reports that indicate to him that P3s will work in Alberta?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I guess that when you look at the numbers over there and you hear these kinds of questions, you understand why those numbers are there. People are burying their heads in the sand. There are different ways of doing things out there, and we are prepared to look at different ways of doing them. When he talks about not for profit, I would like to know, then, what he has to say about the situation at Olds College where, in fact, John Deere Limited has spent a very large, considerable amount of money on a P3 project for the benefit of students that are attending Olds College. How do you answer that one?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that Albertans would rather see answers and hear answers to a $1.4 billion line item in the budget than hear insults, why won't the minister table all of these reports?

Mr. Lund: I'll try to go through it more slowly this time for the benefit of the member, but the fact is that yesterday – yesterday – we talked about the $1.4 billion, and he said that it was all P3s. I clearly demonstrated to him that it's not all P3s. P3s are only one of the tools in the toolbox that we are using to look at how we can do things more efficiently and in a more timely manner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Police Services

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Solicitor General. The Edmonton police department has made representation to the effect that their budget is negatively affected to the tune of $13 million because they provide services that are the responsibility of the province, services such as documents service, witness management, bail hearings, Check Stops, and commercial vehicle inspections. My question: is this true?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many aspects of police work that support the judicial process. These roles are considered an important part of work that the police provide. Under the Police Act in municipalities with their own police force police budgets and plans are clearly the responsibility of the police commission in consultation with the police chief. Municipal councils are responsible for establishing the total budget for the purpose of the police service, and the police commission is responsible for allocating those budgets. The government provides $16 million through an unconditional grant, and it's up to the municipalities to determine how they spend that money.

Mr. Speaker, the city of Edmonton also receives fines generated by this province, and they received $23 million in 2001-2002, and it's up to the municipality to determine how to spend that funding. If the municipality determines that they want to fix potholes, then they determine the priority.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplementary is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. How are citizens to feel secure if the enforcement of laws by which we conduct ourselves is subject to economic brinkmanship by various orders of government?

Mr. Hancock: Well, the answer, Mr. Speaker, clearly is that they ought not to be put in the picture of economic brinkmanship. In fact, we work very closely with all of the stakeholders in the justice system across the province – with the Solicitor General, with the police forces, with the courts, and with all of the stakeholders in the community – to make sure that the justice system is run appropriately and that people have safe communities in which to live.

The reality is that there are always limited resources. I mean, one of the real difficulties of government is the allocation of scarce resources. No matter how much money you have, there will always be more things that you could do, and every year in budgeting we find that very circumstance. I'm sure that the Edmonton city police force and every other police force finds that, that Edmonton city council and every other city council finds that, but the reality is, as the Solicitor General has said, that a number of years ago municipalities asked for all of their emergency grants to be rolled into one grant, unconditional, and that was done so that they have that money to spend and allocated on their priorities. The reality is that fine revenue generated under the motor vehicle act goes to the municipality in which it's generated, with the exception of the small portion that we keep in Justice in order to manage the process and run the courts. In fact, that revenue is destined to go up this spring when the new Traffic Safety Act is proclaimed and fine revenue amounts go up and some of the other fines come under that act. So revenue is going up. The city gets to set the priority with respect to those revenues.

I might also mention, Mr. Speaker, that we have, as an example of co-operation, our early case resolution process, where we have by hiring more prosecutors provincially and investing resources at that level and working with the courts been able to resolve matters before going to court, saving, for example, the city of Edmonton 5,700 fewer witness appearances from their police over the course of 2002 than in 2001 as a result of that process. That's a lot of police officers who can be on the street doing police work as opposed to being in court doing police work.

Government Regulations

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, every Thursday the Alberta Liberals will ask a question that members of the public have asked us to pose. Members of the public can send us their questions by phoning our office or visiting our web site at www.altaliberals.ab.ca. Today's question is from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. The CFIB is concerned that the burden of small businesses in Alberta will be increased because of the lack of scrutiny regulations set by this government undergo. My first question is to the Minister of Government Services. How many regulations has the Alberta government introduced since the year 2000?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question if you were to ask a businessperson of this province over the last 10 years is probably: too many regulations. The province of Alberta put into place in 1994 a secretariat to look at regulations, to analyze them, and take a look at them along with an advisory board which the Chambers of Commerce, the Alberta Economic Development Authority, and the CFIB were on. They looked at a number of regulations—I believe it was over a thousand in total over the last six or seven years—and I can report today that every single one of those regulations with the exception of about 30 of them have been completed with expiry dates, sunset clauses, and actual regulations that have been repealed in this province.

In terms of those that have been added, yes, this government does put in enabling legislation that allows for regulations to be made. So there are always regulations coming onstream from every department of this government. Those regulations, Mr. Speaker, will also come under the scrutiny of the secretariat in the future.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Given that the new food permit fee, established behind closed doors, affects the bottom line of many businesses in the hospitality industry, why didn't this minister ensure that the government's regulatory review committee examined the impacts of this new regulation?

Mr. Norris: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. Clearly it relates to health, but I will address it and maybe ask the minister to supplement.

The general idea behind that tax was that anybody who was involved in the food and service industry in any way, shape, or form, be it a bed and breakfast, a small restaurant, a convenience store, should be accountable for what they sell. I mean, I think that's what the opposition members would like us to do in a responsible fashion, but in certain instances that did go too far. You're correct. We have worked very hard with the minister of health to understand where that regulation should fit in in the context of small business and large business as opposed to where it's a health issue. I have not only received many letters on it; I've responded. My colleague and I have worked together in dealing with this so that the small bed and breakfast operator who's maybe serving eggs and bacon for breakfast isn't included in that.

At the end of the day it's all about the safety to Alberta visitors and people who are going to these places because heaven forbid, as you were attacking the other day on SARS and other things, that we're not vigilant. It's a real balancing act, and I think we're trying very hard to make sure that those regulations don't affect small business.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Government Services: can you tell us how you determine which regulations you go forward with in terms of the benefit to the province as compared to the benefit to businesses or the cost to businesses?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the secretariat has a process to look at all regulations when their expiry dates come up and, as I said earlier, when regulations go forward, they're also given scrutiny by the secretariat. In terms of whether it's to the businesses' or to government's benefit, that doesn't matter. The regulations that are put forward are the ones that get scrutiny.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Water Use by Oil and Gas Industry

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, there is still much debate and discussion around the use of water by oil drilling companies to inject into underground wells to increase crude oil production. This has sparked much controversy around the province and especially in southern Alberta, where drought is a major concern. The city of Red Deer is now in the midst of a struggle with an oil company that wants to use water from the Red Deer River to inject into underground wells for oil recovery. My question is for the Minister of Energy. Why is it necessary to use freshwater supplies, and is there an alternative practice that can be used?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. This issue has been one that has been in front of the House before, has been part of discussions. It certainly will, I'm sure, be addressed as part of the water strategy.

Mr. Speaker, a water flood is a process that the oil and gas industry uses to increase or increment production from existing wells. In this particular instance there have been wells there since 1981. They have applied for water access to the Red Deer River, about eight days out of a year's supply, to use to drive the oil up to the surface, where it would be produced and, of course, royalties in the neighbourhood of 25 to 35 percent paid on that to the Crown. In the water flood they use fresh water when it's accessible; they've also used brackish water; they use saline water. In fact, the industry has reduced its consumption of fresh water by some 40 percent over the last few years. Clearly, they're working responsibly, but they're also very much concerned with increasing their production, which of course means incremental royalties to the Crown and subsequently all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental question is again to the Minister of Energy. Given that water is fast becoming a diminishing resource that needs protection, will your department encourage oil companies that need to repressurize their wells to investigate their use and the use of alternate methods?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, in a number of cases we encourage companies to do a number of things. For example, we're experimenting with using CO₂, which is carbon dioxide, which is a part of this government's commitment to reducing greenhouse gas emissions, as a way of injecting into depleted reservoirs to see if, one, we can sequester or store carbon dioxide in those formations and, secondly, to find different uses other than fresh water.

Mr. Speaker, as we move forward in Alberta and see this continued rapid escalation of economic growth, the oil and gas industry and the growing population have a tendency to get closer together. If we take a look, for example, at the city of Red Deer, which, of course, boasts on its web site, and rightly so, that it has an unemployment rate that's the second lowest in Canada, 26 percent of the GDP of Red Deer – 26 percent – is from the oil and gas industry. In fact, $6 billion of that GDP comes from the oil and gas industry, and there's a petrochemical industry that contributes $7 billion to the economy.

So as much as the opposition member does not want to hear good news from Alberta and growth in particular areas, it's important to remember that the EUB operates in the broad public interest of all Albertans, even the seven Liberals.

Lobbyist Registry

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the outgoing Ethics Commissioner has once again called for a lobbyist registry, something the opposition has also been requesting for years. The government refuses to accept this policy. In the interest of helping the public understand who is lobbying the government and on what issues, I have some questions for the Government House Leader. Given that we have no lobbyist registry in Alberta, can the Government House Leader enlighten us on who was lobbying the government last night at the regular Wednesday evening lobby night attended by government MLAs? Who was filling the feed bag?

Mr. Hancock: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, it's not an area that's within my responsibility, and the truth is that, no, I can't enlighten them because I don't know. I wasn't at either of the events. I'm sure both of them, if there were two, were very good. In any event, I don't have the answer to that. It's not within my area of competence or jurisdiction.

But I can tell the hon. member that members of this House meet with constituents, meet with the Alberta public, meet with interest groups, meet with business and industry on an ongoing basis in many venues, in many areas of the province, and sometimes it's very helpful to get many of us together in the same room so that the same message can be imparted to all of them at the same time. There's nothing inherently wrong with that. In fact, it's the way that the business of government and the business of politics is done, and the fact that one might eat or have some refreshment at the same time as one is talking about politics, governance, and issues of interest to Albertans is certainly a good thing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we'll try again. Will the Government House Leader admit that the government's refusal to create a lobbyist registry is to avoid revealing that the chair of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health is directly tied to a major lobbying firm for drug insurance and health corporations?

Mr. Hancock: Not my area of jurisdiction, Mr. Speaker, and, no, I can't confirm that, because I don't know that.

Dr. Taft: It is true, and if we had a lobbyist registry, we'd know it.

To the Minister of Infrastructure: who has been lobbying the government in support of P3s?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I've met with the Bethany Care, with the Good Samaritan Society, with Caritas, with a number of school boards, the University of Alberta, the colleges. There are a whole host of people that are very interested in looking at other ways that we can accomplish and keep making Alberta an even better place, not putting our heads in the sand.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Private School Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tuesday's provincial budget contains a huge 14 percent increase in the dollars going to private schools, several times larger than the corresponding increase for public schools. There appears to be an agenda at work here to expand private education by letting class sizes grow and learning conditions deteriorate in the public system, inevitably leading to a two-tiered system: one for the rich and one for the rest of us. My question to the Minister of Learning: why is the government putting more and more dollars into private schools while allowing learning conditions in the public system to deteriorate through a lack of proper funding?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member full well knows that 60 percent of the basic per student grant goes to private schools. The reason for the increase quite simply is because enrollment has gone up.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister or his department studied the trend and the causes of the increased enrollment in private schools and any resulting negative impact on public education, and if he has those studies, will he please table that information in this House?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the key component to our private school system in Alberta is that they follow the Alberta curriculum, and there is a requisite that the Alberta curriculum is followed in private schools. Beyond that, it is the choice of the parents as to where they send their kids.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister has not done any such studies, why are he and his government pursuing a two-tiered education system in which only students from privileged backgrounds receive a high-quality private education while the rest of the children and their parents are expected to accept growing class sizes and declining resources in the public system?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would recommend to every MLA in this room who has private schools that they give those last comments to their private schools, because by far the majority of the private schools that are in Alberta are religious private schools who choose private schooling because of their religious beliefs and their religious morals. The arrangement for giving money to the private schools is 60 percent of the basic grant with nothing for capital expenditures. So to the hon. MLAs in this House I would advise that you send the comments to your private schools and allow them to address the hon. member's question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Special Constables

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Solicitor General. In light of an incident in the county of Grande Prairie a couple of weeks ago where a special constable had to take refuge behind his car because he was getting shot at, I'm wondering if the minister is reconsidering the current policy which prohibits special constables from carrying sidearms.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, the question that the hon. member refers to had been a very serious incident which is currently under review. It's an incident which I am deeply concerned about, and it's an example of why special constables should not be armed. It's an example of why special constables have to have special training and be within their authority and their training. Prior to 1988, I believe it was, special constables did carry firearms, but that matter has been reviewed over and over and over again, and each time it was agreed that sidearms would not be reissued. I will continue to work with the special constables association on standards, training, and their clarification and classification of duties. It's important to keep in mind that special constables are special constables, and they're not police officers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Graydon: Only one shot today, Mr. Speaker. No supplementals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Insurance Industry

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three of the primary causes of the dramatic increase in the consumer price index in this province have been in this order: high electricity prices, skyrocketing high natural gas prices for heating, and, of course, insurance rates, which are also going through the roof. My first question today is to the Minister of Finance. How many insurance companies have stopped writing automobile insurance policies in Alberta in the last year?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, to the best of my knowledge I'm not aware of any that have stopped writing insurance policies, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: if a company such as The Co-operators were to withdraw from the Alberta marketplace, what would that do to automobile insurance rates in this province?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is speculating, but let's be very clear. The Co-operators have not withdrawn from Alberta and, in fact, are very active in this province, and we're very glad to have them here.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how many insurance companies is the superintendent of insurance watching in this province because he's concerned about that enterprise's financial liquidity?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, the superintendent of insurance is the overseer of all the operations of all the insurance companies, Mr. Speaker. That's his job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

High-speed Rail Link

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. As a former railroader and somebody who's hooked on trains it has been exciting for me to hear about the possibility of a high-speed passenger rail link between Edmonton and Calgary. Is Economic Development currently involved in a study of high-speed rail, and can the minister advise what the findings of this study are?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Having had many interesting activities on trains, I can certainly agree with the hon. member that there is a lot of excitement in railroading. We have looked at this a number of different times over the years.

As you can understand, when highway 2 between Edmonton and Calgary was built, the Alberta population was some 900,000 people and that roadway system was seen to be a little extravagant at the time, but as it's proved out, this province has grown and swelled and it's now teeming at the seams. If you've driven it, as many of my colleagues do on a regular basis, you see that we need to look at some expansion, and rail is a possible link that we've been talking about.

I've been working very closely with the Minister of Transportation on this, and we have jointly done a study with the Van Horne Institute in Calgary to look at the reality of putting a high-speed link either on existing tracks or maybe setting up a new system. The price tags range anywhere from $800 million to $4 billion, so there is a reality of economics that's going to have to drive this. If we look at a vision of Alberta 20, 50, and a hundred years down the road, is it a cheaper way to go than paving two new lanes on highway 2 to Calgary? Maybe. Is there an option to run a spur up to Fort McMurray to deal with that incredibly hot economy? Maybe that's the route to go.

The study is looking at all those aspects, Mr. Speaker. We'll come back with some recommendations, and the Minister of Transportation and I will continue to monitor the situation and come forward with a plan in the near future.

Mr. Maskell: I just have one supplementary, Mr. Speaker, and it's been partially answered I think. When will the results of this study be available?

Mr. Norris: Well, at the outset, Mr. Speaker, the study was taken on about four months ago, but recently there have been changes to technology. You may have seen the Bombardier JetTrain that came to Edmonton from Calgary the other day. I was actually traveling on the highway with my kids when it went past and stopped to look at it because it's quite fascinating to somebody as simple as myself.

Having said that, the technology is bringing us to a point now, Mr. Speaker, where our study is going to have to be extended to incorporate some of the cost savings that this new technology brings forward. So we're anticipating – and the Minister of Transportation may wish to supplement – that about the mid-July, August area we're going to have the preliminary study brought forward. I don't know what it's going to say or what the realities are.

Let me just conclude by saying that if we want to keep fueling the incredible growth this province has had, transportation links are obviously vital, and this may be a very good piece.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Health Region Boundaries

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've recently tabled in this Assembly the names of over 1,600 constituents who've expressed a desire to have the boundaries of the Calgary health region adjusted to include the Didsbury regional health services as well as letters of support from the county of Mountain View, town of Didsbury, town of Carstairs, and I understand that the village of Cremona also supports such an adjustment. The April 1 deadline for the new regions has past, and I have still not received any indication from the Minister of Health and Wellness as to the status of the Didsbury hospital. My question to the Minister of Health and Wellness is: can he advise me when he will make a decision as the current situation is causing much uncertainty with the staff, the residents, and the health authority members themselves?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, my department and I have both reviewed this matter, and the town of Didsbury will be remaining within regional health authority No. 4, which was formerly known as the David Thompson region. This decision was made after discussions with the chair and the CEO of health region No. 4 as well as the CEO of health region No. 3, formerly known as the Calgary health region. The relevant considerations were made with respect to factors like patient flows; in other words, where do patients actually go to get their services?

I have notified verbally the chair of health region No. 4 of this decision. I have signed letters and sent off correspondence of notification of this decision to the chairs of the relevant regional health authorities as well as the mayors in the surrounding areas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell me why he has not taken into consideration the views of the councils and the residents of the Didsbury health services region?

Mr. Mar: Well, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do understand the concern expressed by area residents, but the review of health region No. 4's existing boundaries demonstrates that it clearly does reflect the current patient flow patterns. So the decision to have Didsbury and the Mountain View county remain within No. 4 was based on discussions with regional officials and the facts about where patients actually go for health services.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to Didsbury hospital in particular, I've been advised that health region No. 4 is currently undertaking a review of its facilities and services and needs throughout the region. Certainly, the Didsbury hospital will be included in that review, and we'll work to ensure that regions No. 3 and No. 4 work together to ensure that the hospital is properly utilized.

Mr. Marz: My final supplement to the same minister: has he ruled out any future boundary adjustments if it can be shown to benefit a particular area?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, if there is departure from the current patient flow patterns in the health region, then the answer would be that we would review such boundaries if such a change in utilization occurs.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the first four for Members' Statements, why don't we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature 28 special guests from Ardmore school in the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Jackie Wakaruk, parent helpers Mrs. Becky Charlton, Miss Charlene Swerhun, Mrs. Marlene Strzepek, Mr. Dean Thompson, Mr. Don Paige, Mr. Norbert Loiselle, and bus driver Mr. Maurice Roux. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: To the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake: I had a chance to say hello to the young people, and they were surprised that I knew where Ardmore was.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Cochrane Chamber Community Awards

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Saturday I had the great pleasure of attending the Cochrane Chamber community awards banquet. Cochrane, as you know, is the fastest growing municipality in Canada. Luckily, the growth in population has been accompanied by a corresponding growth in the number of people who are contributing their time, efforts, and ideas to help make Cochrane a great place to live.

The award for youth of the year went to Samantha Catley and Karly Wilson for their work and support of the local victim services and the Humane Society.

The ambassador of the year award went to both Alanna Blinn and the MC Dancers. Alanna, a local grade 12 student, is well known for her competency in the sport of fast draw and has become a respected role model and spokesperson. The MC Dancers, meanwhile, is a nonprofit dance troupe dedicated to encouraging and fostering the talent of local dancers.

The award for citizen of the year went to Jack Tennant, who owns and operates the Cochrane Eagle. Jack has served as a volunteer for many organizations and in recognition of his work with charities recently received the Queen's Jubilee Medal.

This year's recipient of the community builder of the year award is Patrick Coyle for his many years coaching teenagers. Through his skillful and caring mentorship many of Cochrane's youths have become not only better athletes but also, more importantly, better people.

Cochrane's employer of the year is Larry Giles, publisher of the Cochrane Times. Larry is known as a generous and kindhearted man who gives a great deal to his community.

The FCSS award for volunteer of the year went to the Cochrane Activettes, who have helped hundreds of families over the years, organizing food hampers, operating a clothing thrift store, and coordinating the meals-to-go program.

The Rotary integrity award went to Chester Mjolsness, the original driving force behind Spray Lake Sawmills, Cochrane's largest employer and a major contributor to the community. Chester's name is synonymous with hard work, integrity, generosity, and decent family values.

Lastly, there was a tie for the Cochrane Times newsmaker of the year award. Alex Baum of Cochrane Dodge gained national recognition in 2002 for his lead role in Ranch Aid, a highly successful relief effort that raised money to assist drought-stricken ranchers. Meanwhile, at the tender ages of seven and nine Ali and Emily Conaway undertook their own fund-raising efforts in support of Ranch Aid, and Cochrane can be proud of these young citizens.

Please join me in congratulating the award recipients.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Tartan Day

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Being of Scottish descent and a member of clan Graham, it's with pride that I rise today to recognize Tartan Day, which was celebrated on April 6 in Alberta, Canada, and across different parts of the world.

Tartan Day is celebrated for two reasons. It is significant to Scots and non-Scots alike for it commemorates the signing of the declaration of Arbroath, also known as the Scottish declaration of independence, which has been recognized around the world as one of the earliest expressions of the right of humanity to a peaceful and productive life free from oppression. It was on April 6, 1320, at Arbroath, Scotland, that Scottish nobles including four Grahams gathered and pledged to defend Scotland from persecution and foreign domination. They even agreed to cast aside their own king, the legendary Robert the Bruce, should he falter from the path of self-determination and freedom. Mr. Speaker, I've circulated to members in the Assembly a copy of the declaration, which is written in the form of a letter to the Pope in very poetic and passionate language.

Tartan Day also gives us the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to recognize the tartan as a symbol of Scottish culture and Scottish clans, but the tartan is not exclusive to Scots alone, and in fact new tartans are continuously being created by groups and regions to identify themselves and are worn by people all over the world. Today, again, I am wearing a kilt in the official Alberta regional dress tartan, which was adopted by this Legislature three years ago and is one of my favourites. I've also used on the declaration another of my favourite tartans called the Flower of Scotland. It was designed to commemorate the deceased author of a very beautiful Scottish song by the same name.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the significant contributions of Scots to the province of Alberta from the earliest days to the present, I ask members to join with me in celebrating Tartan Day.

Elder Abuse

Ms Blakeman: Thank you to the hon. member. As a Scot I appreciate that.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take the opportunity today to talk about the University of Alberta's legal studies program and its commitment to the safety and well-being of our senior citizens. The program under the direction of San San Sy officially launched a web site today called the older adult knowledge network, or Oak-Net for short. The site is devoted to describing different types of elder abuse in noninstitutional settings and what protection is offered by the law. The information relates to financial, physical, and psychological abuse of seniors as well as neglect and over- or undermedication. The web site offers options for abused seniors and friends of abused seniors to get information on how to stop abuse and, if warranted, seek compensation or legal remedy.

Elder abuse is a serious crime that cannot be allowed to continue in our society. It's up to everyone to do their part to help vulnerable people from being taken advantage of or hurt. I would recommend that everyone take a look at the older adult knowledge network web site at www.oak-net.org, because knowledge truly is power. And thank you to the University of Alberta legal studies program for providing another tool to help stamp out elder abuse.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year's flip-flop budget has been followed by this year's clip-clop budget. The horse racing industry gets an even larger feedbag while children of Alberta's poor make do on Kool-Aid and crackers. The long shot came from behind and crossed the finish line with an extra $4 million in Tuesday's provincial budget. The odds of the horse racing industry tying with the supports for independence with $4 million increases were slim to nil anywhere but in the province of Alberta. Where else would a government give poor people struggling to pay sky-high utility bills the same raise as the horse racing industry? Only in Alberta would a mode of gambling receive a 12 percent hike while the vulnerable poor get a 1 and a half percent raise, that translates into an extra $20 a month, or 66 cents a day. The government members who gorge themselves weekly on free food and drink courtesy of lobby groups should be ashamed. Alberta and its advantage have been shamed.

The prosperity of any province can only be truly judged by how well its poorest member is faring. In Alberta the poor aren't doing very well, while horse racing is considered of greater importance. Perhaps this government would like to see supporters for independence recipients bet at the track the extra $20 that some of them will receive. Is that the welfare program this government has in mind?

The extra $4 million in this budget for racing industry renewal took horse racing from receiving $33 million last year to $37 million this year. In last year's budget they even had a double increase in their budget, from $17 million to $33 million. I think this is obscene. This government has even managed to separate classes among the province's poor. They could call them the will-gets and the won't-gets. An extra 66 cents a day, the equivalent of one pound of potatoes on sale at the market, will only be received by supports for independence recipients with children or the singles and couples who are not expected to work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your patience.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to present a petition on behalf of the parent community of Bertha Kennedy Catholic community school, who obtained 218 signatures regarding funding for public education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to present a signed petition:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to reject the recommendation of the Electoral Boundaries Commission that Edmonton lose a seat in the Legislative Assembly.
Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday we will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 11 and 12.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday we will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 12 and 13.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with the appropriate number of copies of the Alberta Economic Development Authority report for 2001-2002 entitled Strong Performance in Uncertain Times. I think that's a very appropriate name. As you know, we've come through some tremendous challenges in Alberta and survived them, and the Alberta Economic Development Authority has helped us guide our policies and our taxation performance. I would like to thank them for their excellent effort and offer them all my continued support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Brenda Kaplan, Montrose junior high school council chair, detailing her concerns about the cuts at her school and the deficit position faced by the school board there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling, myself, and with your permission I would like to table another one on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands. My tabling is a document which debunks the private/public partnership model for hospitals in Ontario, the P3 model. The title of the document is Brampton Health Coalition Debunking the Myths about Brampton's New Hospital. That's the first one.

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is simply a whole series of quotes from Hansard, starting in '97, attributable to former finance ministers, the treasurers of the province. One of the quotes says that "government has quietly reached around with a hand into the back pockets of people and slipped those extra dollars out and made as if they took nothing," and second, that "this erodes buying power and hits low-income citizens hardest."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members and to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, did the chair hear that the hon. member tabled documents of Hansard?

Dr. Pannu: Quotes from Hansard, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, Hansard is the official record of the Assembly. It's printed. There's no need to table it again, hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: These are selected quotes.

The Speaker: It's all part of the history and the record of the Assembly.

2:40head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. acting Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 7(5) I would ask the Government House Leader the projected government business for the week of April 14 to 17 inclusive.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, April 14, under Government Bills and Orders at 9 p.m. we anticipate completion of the debate on Government Motion 13; time pending, second reading on bills 35, 33, 34, 28, 32 and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, April 15, under Government Bills and Orders in the afternoon, of course, day 4 of Committee of Supply with the Human Resources and Employment department, as designated by the Official Opposition, and as per the Order Paper. On Tuesday, April 15, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders day 5 of Committee of Supply, Executive Council and thereafter second reading of bills 35, 33, 34, 28, 32, Committee of the Whole for Bill 16, and as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, April 16, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders Committee of Supply day 6, as designated by the Official Opposition the Department of Learning. At 8 p.m. that day under Government Bills and Orders Committee of Supply day 7, the Department of the Solicitor General and then second reading of bills 35, 33, 34, 28, and 32 and as per the Order Paper.

Thursday, April 17, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders, as designated by the Official Opposition for day 8 of Committee of Supply, the Department of Environment.

Point of OrderAllegations against a Member

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order this afternoon, and I quote 23(h) of our Standing Orders, which states, “makes allegations against another member.” While I was asking the Minister of Finance a question this afternoon in regard to automobile insurance rates, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, the Minister of Environment, stated that I had a drunk driving record and have difficulty getting auto insurance. I find this to be extremely distasteful. It’s not only disrespectful to me but to all members of this Assembly, and I would now ask the hon. member to withdraw that statement and apologize.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister on this point of order.

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, I made no such statement. I asked him a question, and the question had to do with whether or not he’d had a conviction – I can’t remember the exact words; we’d have to check Hansard – whether or not he’d lost his licence for drunk driving. It was in question form. But if he found that question offensive or in any way harmful to him, then I’d certainly withdraw the question.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, do you want to get involved in this?

Mr. Hancock: Well, not really, Mr. Speaker, but it was raised as a point of order, and the point of order is relative to something which was not the official proceedings of the House or presumably on the record of the House, as the person who raised the point of order mentioned he was asking a question to another minister, and anything else that was happening in the House at the time – no other member was recognized to speak.

The Speaker: That’s absolutely correct, Government House Leader. No other member was recognized to speak, and in this case we’re looking at the Minister of Environment, who surely was not recognized to speak. Now, the chair did not hear any of this. If it occurred at that end of the House, the chair, again, did not hear it.

Now, the rules are very, very clear, and the hon. members might just want to refer to 526 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice. If the chair is not able to hear and does not hear, the chair is not in a position to make a comment or a ruling, a ruling in particular. He’s certainly in a position in this case to make a comment.

We have no record of Hansard having heard anything other than blurred comments, but I’m going to pursue this matter further, and I’m going to check it to make sure that such a statement was not made in the House, because clearly the Minister of Environment had no business being involved, none whatsoever. But the Minister of Environment has dealt with that, I hope to the satisfaction of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. The Minister of Environment said that he would withdraw the comment.

Now, the chair not having heard it, if one member says one thing and the other member says another thing, it’s very difficult to deal with it. But I don’t believe that this is at the moment, pending a further review – and we’ll check whatever we can in Hansard and anything else to see if there’s anything further than that, and we’ll report back on Monday. At the moment we’ll leave the Assembly today satisfied that the matter was raised, that the matter was responded to, and if there’s anything further, we’ll report back to the House on Monday.

You want to say something further, hon. member?

Mr. MacDonald: Please. I certainly appreciate your wisdom and your advice, and I do accept the withdrawal of the comments from the hon. member, but I also think that an apology is in order as well.

Thank you.

Dr. Taylor: Well, if he is certainly offended, I have no problem apologizing, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. By looking at body language and nods, then this matter is now ended, and the chair will not pursue this matter any further. It’s over and done with.

On that fine note, to celebrate and commemorate Tartan Day in the spirit outlined by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, there will now be great harmony as we declare Orders of the Day.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I’d call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Gaming

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to this? The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I’m glad to be able to provide this afternoon some information on Gaming’s estimates, because I know from all the questions raised about Gaming’s interim supply that certain of the hon. members opposite have been very, very curious about them. I hope that what they hear this afternoon will satisfy that curiosity so that they can go back to a full night of sleep.

As has been my pleasure for the last two years as Minister of Gaming, I’ve had the opportunity to review in detail with you the Department of Gaming’s estimates, which for 2003-04 total just over $150 million, and to outline the lottery fund estimates, which for that time period are almost $1.1 billion.

I’d like to begin by highlighting some of the key areas in Gaming’s estimates for 2003-04. The first important item is a $13.5 million increase to the community facility enhancement program, or CFEP, which brings the program’s total budget to $38.5 million. As most hon. members are aware, CFEP is funded through the Alberta lottery fund, and these funds are directed to community-based facilities such as playgrounds and community halls as administered through the capable assistance of the department staff. The increased funding will allow CFEP to continue this important work in communities throughout Alberta and address some of the demand created for this type of funding by this dynamic and growing province. Surely, everyone will agree that this is $38.5 million of very necessary spending.

Next I’d like to highlight the community initiative program and its $30 million in funding from the Alberta lottery fund. As you will recall, Mr. Chairman, this program was announced in June 2002 after a review of criteria for CFEP and five lottery-funded foundations in the Ministry of Community Development; namely, the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation, the Wild Rose Foundation, the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, and the human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund.

The community initiatives program was designed to focus on smaller community projects and those that fall outside the parameters of the other lottery-funded programs. The program has completed its first year, and I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that it's been a resounding success. We've handed out somewhere in the neighbourhood of a thousand grants to eligible groups for everything from replacing the table settings at the Macleod Pioneer Lodge in Fort Macleod to group home construction for the Winnifred Stewart Association for the Mentally Handicapped here in Edmonton. We need to be able to continue funding projects of this nature and many others, and in order to do that, we require $30 million in funding.

Funding from the Alberta lottery fund of about $46 million is requested to allow the Department of Gaming to continue the flow-through arrangements we have with three different groups. One such arrangement is with Horse Racing Alberta. A portion of the net proceeds generated by slot machines at racetracks is provided to Horse Racing Alberta to help strengthen and expand the horse racing and breeding industry in this province and create the many spin-off benefits that are important to rural Alberta.

Another arrangement is with the Edmonton Oilers and Calgary Flames, which receive the net proceeds from the sale of special NHL lottery tickets. Albertans who want to support their favourite Alberta NHL team can buy these tickets and know that the funding flows through the Alberta lottery fund to the teams. Although we are somewhat disappointed with the results of the last Breakaway to Win event, sales of the new 3 Star Selection have been strong to date.

The final flow-through arrangement is with the province's bingo associations and the charities that work bingo gaming events for fund-raising. Net proceeds from electronic bingo and keno will flow through the Alberta lottery fund and out to the associations for distribution to the charities. Installation of electronic bingo and keno has taken a little longer than anticipated at this time last year, but Albertans can look forward to playing these games before too much longer.

I think my hon. colleagues will agree, Mr. Chairman, that these arrangements give Albertans flexibility to direct their entertainment dollars to some very deserving groups and that our funding requests merely allow us to act on the directions we receive from Albertans.

The department is also requesting $17 million in funding from the Alberta lottery fund to continue to assist Edmonton Northlands and the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede and the additional seven major fairs and exhibitions throughout the province to carry on their important work. This funding is consistent with funding requirements from previous years.

Gaming has also continued its relationship with the Alberta Gaming Research Institute and the Gaming Research Council into 2005 and is requesting $1.6 million from the Alberta lottery fund for those groups so that they can continue to sponsor world-recognized research into various aspects of gaming.

The final $17 million requested, Mr. Chairman, is made up of $13 million in lottery funding for the other initiatives program and $4 million for the administration of the department and its grant programs.

That concludes a quick tour of the department's funding requests, but before I move to the lottery fund estimates, there are two more pieces of information that I would like to share. The first, Mr.

Chairman, is really a reminder. One of the changes made to the Gaming and Liquor Act last summer was to allow the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission to net its operating costs against revenues. That means that the AGLC gaming operation costs are netted against gaming revenues, and liquor operation costs are netted against liquor revenues. As I explained last year, this method of accounting is consistent with other commercial enterprises within the government of Alberta. With this change the AGLC no longer receives an operating grant from the department that some hon. members may recall as program 4 in the department estimates from prior years. The details of the gaming and liquor revenues and gaming and liquor operating costs are still presented to the Legislature on page 179 of the estimates, so there is no loss of information to Albertans. In fact, I think the funding arrangements between the entities within Gaming are now much clearer and easier for Albertans to understand.

The second item is the AGLC's planned VLT replacement. The replacement itself is old news, Mr. Chairman, as it's been part of the AGLC's business plan for a number of years now, but before the hon. members opposite get eye strain from scouring the estimates for the much-publicized $104 million replacement cost, I'll save them the trouble. Since the central system and the VLTs themselves are used to generate revenue in a commercial enterprise, they're considered to be capital, and since the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission follows generally accepted accounting principles, the cost of these capital assets will be reflected in its operating costs over the number of years that the assets are expected to generate revenue. That means that the gaming operating costs of the commission presented on page 179 include a 2003-04 portion of the replacement cost, and a similar amount will be included in the operating costs for the next six years.

I know that some members here are not in favour of this VLT replacement project, but the reality of the situation is that VLTs are a major source of revenue for the Alberta lottery fund. With VLTs generating approximately $600 million per year for the lottery fund, I would be remiss as minister not to ensure that the network is up to date in terms of equipment and operating system. If we don't protect the VLT system, Mr. Chairman, we risk losing all or part of the revenue it brings in year after year for the Alberta lottery fund. More importantly, we will lose the opportunity to direct those lottery dollars to the thousands of volunteers and nonprofit groups, and millions of Albertans will lose the benefits from the projects undertaken by those lottery-funded groups. To be even clearer on the relationship, over the seven-year expected life of the new VLT system it is likely to generate more than $4 billion. I'd say that that is an excellent business investment. Looking at this from that perspective, the amount needed for the replacement is a minor cost to uphold a major revenue stream, a revenue stream which is one of the cornerstones enabling us to assist Alberta's flourishing volunteer sector.

That brings me to the lottery fund estimates. As I mentioned previously, the total lottery fund estimates are just under $1.1 billion for 2003-04. As has happened for the past few years, lottery funds are directed to programs in several ministries. This year there are 12 ministries including Gaming. Programs that are fully or partially lottery funded tend to be community-focused programs, ensuring that the benefits of the Alberta lottery fund are shared throughout the province.

Changes recommended by the Financial Review Commission and accepted by the government relating to debt repayment mean that lottery funds can no longer be allocated directly to debt repayment. Instead, about $96 million of the Alberta lottery fund has been earmarked for transfer to the sustainability fund. Given the fiscal management benefits that the sustainability fund will provide to Albertans, I think my hon. colleagues will approve of this change. Since the Alberta lottery fund does its good work through a number of ministries, each minister will be able to address detailed questions about their lottery-funded programs and initiatives when the minister meets with the Committee of Supply.

As you've heard, Mr. Chairman, there's nothing unusual in our funding request. We're simply trying to continue to operate in a straightforward, transparent fashion so that the department can provide Albertans with the well-managed lottery-funded programs that they deserve and the AGLC can continue to provide Albertans well-managed and well-regulated gaming and liquor industries. It's a simple request, and I would encourage all hon. members to support us.

I have from the department certain members that I would like to recognize this afternoon, and perhaps I should describe them in terms of FTEs because that seems to be the nature of the discussion. I have, specifically, three full-time FTEs located in the members' gallery. Norm Peterson is the Deputy Minister of Gaming and also the CEO of the AGLC and the chair of the board of the AGLC. But I think that for technical purposes he is a Gaming FTE as opposed to an AGLC FTE. Just a little hint there. Ann Hammond is our assistant deputy minister, and Jeremy Chorney of course is my executive assistant.

I believe that the way we will be dealing with the first hour this afternoon, which is devoted to the benefit of the opposition, is that they will ask questions and I will respond. To the extent that I do not respond to questions that are asked, I will provide written responses both for the next hour and until this particular segment of Committee of Supply is concluded.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Yes, indeed, as the minister has just pointed out, we did have a moment to speak and agree that over the next hour, the first hour being dedicated to opposition questions, he and I will go back and forth with a short series of questions and answers, and of course as always I appreciate him responding to any unanswered questions in writing.

I would like as well to acknowledge and thank the staff that work with the minister. I'm pleased that they're able to be out to witness the debate today.

As the minister has hinted and likes to respond to this critic in question period that we're missing information somehow or not knowing information, after today and all of the thorough and detailed answers he'll be giving me, if there is any lack of knowledge in the future, then we can lay it at his door because he will have answered the questions so fully.

I would like to start by acknowledging a couple of the programs that the minister mentioned. An increase to the CFEP grant, the community facility enhancement program, which is a program that is of great value to the nonprofit and NGO, nongovernment organization, sectors. With matching equity or sometimes sweat equity put into it, they can achieve up to $75,000 in grant money, and this is a very valuable program to the community. I notice a slight increase in this, and that is following with what was in the business plan from the ministry last year.

The CIP, the community initiatives program. I think we need to note that the credit for the very existence of that program should go to the community who lobbied persistently and gathered a great deal of community effort fueled by the power of outrage to have the government put in a replacement program for the loss of the community lottery boards, and in fact the CIP came about as a result of that, I believe. Although a number of people have expressed disappointment that the program is not the same – it's not local decision-making; there is a cap on the amount of money; it does require in most cases matching funds, none of which existed in the previous community lottery board program – nonetheless groups are certainly looking for assistance, and they're happy to have the program that's there.

There are seven areas that I'd like to discuss with the minister. Problem gambling. My second category of questions is around: how much is enough? The third category is the reviews that are going on; that is, the eligibility for licences and the use of proceeds. The second review is the bingo terms and conditions. The fourth category is the unallocated funds. The fifth category, Internet gambling. The sixth category, the new VLTs. And the seventh one for me is a number of financial questions.

I do have to state my bias up front in this discussion. The minister likes to talk about how much this money benefits the volunteer- and community-based sector in Alberta, and I fundamentally disagree with the VLTs in Alberta. I actually feel quite strongly that the government is addicted to gaming and gambling revenues and has made all Albertans addicted to gambling revenues. But we're addicted now, and there's more money brought in through the gambling sector than the government is now receiving through all kinds of oil royalties. I have a bias in that I fundamentally disagree with the use of gambling as a revenue source, but I'm not on the government side – I'm on the opposition side – and I don't get to set this. But I thought it was important that I put that concern up front.

Now, starting with problem gambling. There was recently a gambling conference that was held in Calgary, and some of the issues that were raised were around youth gambling and the fact that the video screens on the new slot machines and the VLTs are very similar to the kind of eye movement and presentation that's available through video games. There is a concern that children can move very quickly from those sort of innocent video games into gambling, and that's been raised by a number of experts that are working and are concerned with youth gambling. I'm wondering what specifically this government is doing to address the issues around youth gambling and what programs there are in place. If we look at an overall heading of problem gambling, then youth gambling and youth addiction is one of the areas that falls underneath that.

I did take some time to contact people in the gambling addiction area and ask if they had any concerns that they wanted us to bring forward. Gary McCaskill from G-Mac Consulting raises the issue that "each year more and more Albertans present for gambling related problems, yet these numbers are disproportionate with the number of problem gamblers that research tells us there are in Alberta." So we have a reality gap there, if you'd like. Going hand in hand with that is the services that are currently provided by AADAC or AADAC-funded agencies. How can these be effective when there's an uncertainty about the number of problem gamblers that are actually presenting? He wonders also about the exclusivity that AADAC has in this area and wondering if that is impacting the effectiveness of the programs and Albertans' choices on access to services. For example, he notes that many Albertans view AADAC as a drug and alcohol agency, but in fact that's the only source or window to access gambling addiction, and people don't want to be painted with the drug and alcohol brush when they're looking for assistance with problem gambling.

Ralph McNabb notes that the biggest problem is the lack of treatment centres and prevention programs, a lack of treatment centres for problem gamblers. There are a handful of treatment centres in the province, but most of them very limited, two weeks in length, and he feels that it's just not long enough to be effective. What work has the ministry done on what is the appropriate amount of time? That's a problem that I see repeat itself in a number of government departments, where a program is offered but not for long enough. So in the end really how effective was it to give somebody two weeks of addiction counseling when it can be shown somewhere else that it takes six months, for example? Now, I'm pulling that out of thin air, but that's the kind of information that I'm looking for. Do you have something that clearly says that two weeks of treatment on gambling addiction is enough to kick it? Or is that enough to kick it for 10 percent of the people or 50 percent of the people or 70 percent of the people? What's the information that you're working from that would make you make the choice of a two-week treatment program? Mr. McNabb notes that there are no treatment centres in Edmonton. There are some workshops held here, but there is no intensive treatment available. He feels also that there's completely inadequate funding. His group, which is the Problem Gambling Resource Network, is now doing 450 workshops a year, and there's been no increase in funding for four years.

That is part of my larger question about the link between the increased revenues through gambling and how much of that revenue is dedicated or attached to problem gambling treatment and research, and there is no connection. There is no percentage connection. It's not attached in any way. I think that if you actually run the numbers, the amount of money you come up with put into gambling addiction is a fraction of 1 percent of the money that's brought in from gambling in the province. I'm wondering if the government is prepared to tag or attach a certain amount of money for problem gambling. I know that in Ontario they look at I think it's 1 percent. Oh, yeah. The budget in Ontario is that 2 percent of the VLT revenue goes to problem gambling. That was an amount of $29 million last year and $36 million this year. So it's very specifically tied together. That only makes sense to me. If you've got more gambling revenue, you've probably got more gamblers, and therefore your percentage of problem gamblers is also going up with it.

I'd also like to repeat my question of earlier years around: is the government or any research institute any further ahead in understanding the link or being able to prove the link between white-collar crime or any kind of crime and gambling addiction? We know that drug addicts, for example, commit crimes to fuel their habit. They go out and they steal things and they sell them and they take the money and they buy drugs with it and they ingest the drugs. It's believed strongly by a number of people that the same thing is happening in gambling, that people need money to fuel their gambling addiction: they go out; they commit a crime. But there has been no tracking up to now in the same way that there has been with the petty crime, where we're able to actually track how much money this is costing us and how much crime is being generated. So I'm looking for an update on that one.

I think those are the issues that I wanted to raise under that first section of problem gambling, so I'll turn it over to the minister, and then I'll come back for the next one on: how much is enough?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a quick comment with respect to the hon. member's statements regarding the community facility enhancement program. The existing upper limit is in fact $125,000, not $75,000. Seventy-five thousand dollars is CIP, so that is the monetary distinction between the two.

Dealing firstly with the youth gambling comments. I believe the recent conference dealing with this matter was in Lethbridge, and I did not attend it. I attended it for the purpose of making some remarks at lunch, because I did have to get fed that day, but apart from that I was unable to attend the conference. Members of the department were there, and as such a brief is being prepared for me so that I know what went on.

I do know that there were some topics regarding youth gambling. The first and most obvious statement I would make is that in order to gamble in Alberta, one must be 18 years of age or over, so youth, if you define them as persons under the age of 18, in fact are not allowed to gamble here. We have introduced as of last year rules to ensure that there are adequate fines for establishments that would breach that rule. In fact, there are now fines that can be levied on a youth who would breach it. The information that we have is that that is not an issue. It is not an issue of youth entering the authorized licensed establishments that are casinos or racing entertainment centres or lounges that have VLTs to participate in gambling or that they in fact approach some 2,000-plus retailers who vend lotteries. That is not something that we have information indicating that there is a problem with. We do monitor that. We do have over history some examples of it happening, but there's no indication in this province that that is an issue.

According to the most recent information I have, AADAC is currently in the process of finalizing a report regarding I believe a study of junior high and senior high school students in the province regarding their habits as they relate to drugs, alcohol, and gambling. So I think that in short order we will have what I would call perhaps some form of prevalent study regarding that issue, which will give us a snapshot of what is happening in that area and what the attitude of youth is in this province. I don't know anything more about that. I do anticipate that in the next few months we should have access to that information, but once again that's an AADAC study. That's not something that is under my ministry per se.

With respect to the comment on a problem gambling survey creating a certain impression regarding the number of problem gamblers and anecdotal evidence indicating a different number, I can say that as a result of establishing the Alberta Gaming Research Institute, a new method of measuring problem gambling in Canada was created, and I believe it's the Canadian problem gambling index. In fact, it was created by two researchers here in the province, and at this point in time it's my understanding that they have used that particular survey or methodology to do surveys of all of the provinces in Canada. In the province of Alberta the information is that some 1.3 percent of those that gamble are problem gamblers and that another 3.9 percent would benefit from treatment assistance. So in round figures 5 percent is the number that is reflected in that survey, which would have been conducted some time over the course of the past year or 15 months. I believe the information came to me about a year ago or thereabouts.

So that is the most recent information here in the province, and on the basis of the review that I have done, comparing ourselves to other provinces, it seems similar. In other words, whether you go to Ontario or Saskatchewan or other provinces, it would appear that about 5 percent of the population that gamble fall into the category of people who would benefit from some form of treatment, with about 1.3 percent being problem gamblers who have a lot of impact on their lives as a result of that addiction.

With respect to the experts in this area in the province the experts are without a doubt AADAC. AADAC is celebrating their 50th anniversary as an addiction treatment organization, and I know my ministry and I believe all Albertans look to AADAC to determine what there is to know in the province – at least that's the starting point – regarding addiction to alcohol, gambling, or drugs and what kind of treatment is available. I can tell this hon. member that as a result of a very recent survey that we did, 95 percent of Albertans are aware that AADAC offers the services that they do for alcohol and gambling, so I'm satisfied that Albertans fully understand that AADAC is out there and available for them.

As it relates to what we do within Gaming, there are a number of things that we do. All of the machines that we have have AADAC's 1-866 number on them for help. The new VLT machines are going to have that information in electronic form. There are posters that are out. The information that we have is that the collective effort to communicate the fact that there is help available is well known to all Albertans, and I think that that is a good thing.

Regarding the issue of funding, once again, AADAC is part of Health and Wellness. It's one of its line items. We have for some time through the Alberta lottery fund funded in its entirety the budget of AADAC, and once again this year we are doing that, and once again it has gone up. I believe it's gone up something in the order of $1.7 million. My understanding is that generally speaking the money that AADAC receives with respect to problem gambling and which they devote to that particular issue is the money that they feel is appropriate to that particular issue at that point in time.

In other words, if you compare it to alcohol, alcohol is an issue that this society has lived with for a longer period of time. I think that people in the business of addiction recognize that it is better understood than gambling addiction, that the experts understand alcohol addiction better than gambling addiction, that society understands alcohol addiction better than gambling addiction, and that there is a reflection of that in part in the people who seek out treatment. So the resources that are necessary for that are less than on the alcohol side. I think that on the basis of people that I've talked to and what I've read, that seems to be a fairly consistent message that's coming through. But the key point here is that it's my understanding that the amount of money that we are devoting to this through the AADAC budget is in fact an amount that is appropriate to the situation in accordance with the people we look to as being experts in the matter.

I mentioned that we will be introducing responsible gaming features on the new VLTs – we can talk about that later when you get to that in one of your later topics – but we also have been funding now for four years the Alberta Gaming Research Institute for problem gambling research, and we have just finished the first year of a three-year program. They've now received four years of funding totaling $1.5 million per year. I believe they have something in the order of 30 projects that they have already awarded and which are in progress in various stages, and I believe that some time this spring they're going to have another awarding of research. So that is being done, but my understanding is also that when it comes to research, research with respect to problem gambling matters is relatively new, and we can be very proud of the people here in Alberta who in a relatively short period of time, four years, have developed an international reputation. But there's much to learn in the area, and we continue to be part of that through funding.

The member is quite correct that we do not have any percentage allocated towards what I would call the issue of responsible gaming. We have certain initiatives that we think are addressing the issue, and we have no intention at this point in time of arbitrarily identifying an amount by percentage or otherwise that is going to go to that because, as I indicated in an earlier comment, AADAC is the expert in the matter, and when it comes to actual treatment, it's their budget through which that is done.

With respect to crime and addiction and what links there are, from time to time you hear a comment on the news or read a comment in the paper from someone who says that there is such a link. My understanding is that there is no such link established by any research to date. In other words, while there are crimes that are connected, there is no indication that there's an increase in crime as a result of gambling being available. I can tell you that there was research recently. I don't know at what stage it is in the publication process, but two of the researchers who are funded through AGRI worked with the Edmonton police force to review their files in certain crimes with a view to finding out if they could make a connection between those crimes and gambling. I don't know that that particular research has been published. I know that it has been done, and my understanding, once again on the basis of very cursory information – it was probably secondhand – was that the files of the Edmonton police force are such that it doesn't disclose much in the way of a connection between crime and gambling.

Once again, methodology of recording information and the questions that are asked often have something to do with the information that you get. I think we can look forward to that study coming down and making comment, but it wouldn't surprise me if one of the issues is whether or not that type of information is asked for and recorded. That could be part of the issue, whether there's a standard approach. When we had this issue earlier in the year regarding the link between gambling addiction and suicide, one of the issues was the relativity of information from one jurisdiction to another, and it was determined that the medical examiners who are responsible for that information from jurisdiction to jurisdiction don't use the same methodology. Therefore, it's not reliable to make comparisons from one jurisdiction to another, and indeed I think there are even some issues with respect to the value of the information that is recorded for those groups who in fact do record some information.

You know, if you want to have good information with respect to these kinds of links, hon. member, I think more work is going to have to be done on getting the good information in so that people who understand this kind of thing can do the research.

The Chair: Before I recognize the hon. member, I wonder if we might get agreement from the committee for the brief reversion to Introduction of Guests.

Gaming (continued)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Continuing on then. The second series that I was interested in asking questions on and having the minister respond I've entitled: how much is enough? Really what I'm looking for here is: does the minister have any data to show how much gambling is enough for a given market? Alberta is not a destination hot spot for gambling. I believe the minister would be hard-pressed to prove that people are signing up for bus tours to truck them into Alberta as a destination tourist market for gambling activities. Therefore, we have a finite number of gamblers here, and my question is: how much gambling is enough? How much will the market bear, so to speak? Given so many square feet of casino space and so many gamblers, where do we reach our saturation point?

The minister has been quoted widely recently – actually, I'm assuming he did his own press conference yesterday – saying that there were nine new casinos coming into the province and that we have an additional I think it's 16 applications that are pending or a number of additional ones that are pending, particularly aboriginal casinos. So that is my question. What is the minister basing these granting of licences on? How much more can we take? Can we take 25 more casinos in Alberta? At what point does it start becoming diminishing returns? I'm looking for specific information on how many people play casino games, how much they gamble on average, and where they're coming from. As I say, I'm pretty sure I'll be proven right in that they come from here, that they're not acting as a tourist in Alberta to reach gambling destinations.

Another part of that is that there is a connection between illegal and legal gambling; for example, the poker rooms. If you have poker rooms that are going on in casinos – in other words, legal poker – that does in fact create a certain amount of after-hours or illegal poker because people start playing, they want to keep playing, and the casino is now closed. We even have late poker rooms here, but even then they do shut down eventually. People want to keep playing, so then they start to look for the illegal gambling and the connection that's happening there. So what kind of work has the ministry done on that connection between legal gambling creating illegal gambling? Or perhaps he doesn't even consider this to be an issue or a problem, but I'd like his thoughts on that.

Further to that is the issue around VLTs creating illegal gambling. I know that back when the Member for Barrhead-Westlock, now the Speaker, was the Economic Development minister – I've heard him speak a number of times that back 10 years ago the advice given was that if the Alberta government didn't get into the VLT business themselves, we would be overrun with illegal VLTs. Well, the truth is that I think the statistics show that Alberta does in fact have fewer illegal VLTs, but I don't know how that stacks up when you start looking at places like B.C. and Ontario, B.C. in particular, which has no VLTs. Obviously, the minister knows what I'm talking about there.

Now, part of this “how much is enough” is around the aboriginal/First Nations casinos. There are a couple of issues there that have been raised repeatedly. One is around what some people are perceiving as an unfair distribution or allocation of the proceeds, some concerns from certain business sectors that there will be unfair competition, that money is able to be used by First Nations gambling to enhance other parts of the facilities on the First Nations properties. As well, there's the issue of the court cases that are currently going on in Ontario.

I know that there is a backlog, and the case that I was waiting to be decided is fairly far back in the line, but I'm sure the minister is familiar with it. That is the case where the one First Nations had an agreement with the Ontario government that a certain amount of money would be turned over as part of their agreement, not unlike the agreement that the Alberta government has worked out whereby 30 percent I think was to come back to Alberta Lotteries as compared to the usual 70 percent that's coming back to Alberta Lotteries. So there was a deal worked out between this particular First Nations and the Ontario government, but First Nations operated the casino, and in fact they never turned over any money at all. When the Ontario government said, “Excuse me, but you owe us the money; that was the deal,” they said, “You have no jurisdiction on First Nations land. You're a province. Go away. You annoy us.” That is now in court obviously, and I'm assuming that the casino continues to operate and they continue to make the money. The Alberta government was proactive in negotiating the agreements with the aboriginal casinos, but what plans are in place or what expectations does the government have in case things don't play out the way that they want? Are there any kinds of other plans that are being put in place here, as much as the minister would be able to talk about? I'm happy to receive things in writing on that one.

Now, we do have a difference in the formula, and I have had a number of groups approach me and say: what's going on here? It's particularly around the First Nations development fund. Correct me if I'm wrong, but that fund is available for any First Nations to apply for it for grants or for moneys from the fund. My question is: does that include urban aboriginal groups applying, even provincial aboriginal groups? In other words, not specifically off of another reservation or another identifiable First Nation or tribe. Would the Métis be able to apply to this fund? Would nonaboriginal groups who are offering programming to aboriginals be able to apply to this? In other words, the Brothers and Sisters group in Edmonton is very active. They're offering a number of programs. If they wanted to offer a program that specifically targeted aboriginal youth in the inner city of Edmonton, would they be able to apply to that native development fund for moneys to support that program, or would they be cut out because they're not an aboriginal group?

The perception there is that the normal amount or percentage of money that would be coming back into the lottery fund to which all groups could apply will not have the same percentage flowing through. A separate fund is being set up. Only certain groups can apply to that, and the other groups are not going to be able to access that money, and there's a question of fairness that's being brought forward there.

I think that what I'm going to do is add the other section in that I was going to do, and that's around the reviews. We've got the eligibility and use of proceeds review that was going on, and my question about that is: why was that not completed or not made public prior to this budget coming out? From where I'm sitting, it only makes sense that we would know what the end result of that review was and how it was going to impact upon this budget. We don't have it, or at least it hasn't been released publicly, and I'm wondering: does the minister have any expectation that this will affect the budget, the dollars that are being brought forward in his budget, from the results of that review being done? Certainly, I think it's going to affect some of the groups that had been receiving money or had been trying to access licences for casinos and bingos.

There are a couple of very specific issues around that. One of the issues is around adult sports. I think I even asked a question in question period once that there seems to have been a prohibition against athletic groups getting licences to do casinos, and then seniors' recreational athletic groups were allowed to do it and youth recreational athletic groups were allowed to do it, and at this point the only group that's not allowed to do it is the adults. So now we really do have an inequity. I can't see the government turning around and punting the seniors and the children and the disabled people, but there seems to be an insistence that they are not going to include and allow the adult sports groups. We have money being spent by one department that is trying to promote healthy, active lifestyles, and then we have the minister's department, which is considering refusing or continuing the prohibition against adult athletic groups from trying to make this available. Now, this may well be an ideological difference where the government says: "You're adults. You're not disabled. User pays." But I'm having trouble reconciling these two things where we have another government department spending money to tell people to get out and get active, and groups that are trying to provide that outing and that outlet are being prohibited from helping to fund their activities through a different department.

I'm assuming that the problem with groups like the Edmonton Sport Council is being addressed by the ministry. I had raised this a year or two ago where they were trying to run casinos, because they're an umbrella organization, essentially on behalf of a number of groups and were being prohibited, and they had gone to the ministry. I'd like an update on that, please, to know what's happening there.

The bingo terms and conditions. Just a couple of issues I want to put on the record for the minister to know, and I'm sure he's gotten the same letters. I hope he got the same letters as I got. A couple of issues being raised there were particularly around the use of staff, paying staff. My concern with that is that I can see a point in the future where the ministry turns around and says: "Gambling in Alberta is based on a charitable model. We no longer have the charities doing the work," i.e., supplying the volunteers, because they're now paid staff, "and therefore we can withdraw" – I would say further, but the minister I'm sure would say withdraw – "funding from those groups or access to gambling revenues from those groups." I have a real concern that that's what's being put in place for down the road, and I'd like to get the minister very clearly on the record with a philosophy, a policy, an ideology, future plans, or however he wants to couch it. I'd like to get that on the record, please.

Secondly, I know that there is still some time for groups to respond to the draft bingo terms and proposals, but a number of groups were very concerned that they were not given enough time. Not-for-profit groups need better than three months' turnaround time, and I think that after the extension they got exactly three months' turnaround time. Also, a number of them did not receive the full report. They didn't even know they didn't have the full report, so that in itself was a problem, whether there's any possibility of a further extension on that.

I myself have a real problem with choices being made that are extremely unpalatable for these groups, and the one that I am most concerned about is the bingo and booze proposal. That is that electronic bingo aside from handheld electronic bingo will only be allowed in facilities that are also providing liquor, and I really have a problem with that. It is putting a number of groups in an untenable situation, and I am very concerned about what is behind the ministry's thinking in putting that forward, and I'd like an explanation on that, please.

I think, actually, I'll just sort of add the one more little bit in, and that was on the unallocated funds. Now, when I asked the minister a question in question period the other day about the persistent rumours and stories that we hear about unallocated funds, I certainly got some interesting facial expressions from the minister. Nonetheless, the rumours persist. Now, the minister seemed to be telling me in his response to my question that in fact these so-called unallocated funds are appearing as the new initiatives line, and if that's the case, then I would like to have the criteria for applying for funding under the new initiatives line. If it's not a grant program, then what is it? There's an increase in it this year. It went from $10 million to 13 million dollars and change this year, so what exactly is that new initiatives program? Is it a grant program? If it is, what's the criteria? I'd like a list of who has received the grants through that program. The minister mentioned Vertigo theatre in Calgary, and I think he indicated that the money for Vertigo came from new initiatives, which is leading me to believe that it is a grant program and that people have applied and received funds through it. So I'd like a list of the groups who have received that funding.

I'm also wondering – I'm looking throughout the budget, and I'll ask this in every department – is there any money in this fund under the minister's control, under any of the grant programs that is earmarked or set aside or believed to be in support of a centennial or legacy program or projects or grants anywhere in his department? There was a significant amount of money in the budget two years ago. It was cut, and I cannot find any single line item that is coming back that's looking the same. So I have to believe that the government has split up the money and it's now tucked away in a number of different departments. I'd like to know if any of it is tucked into this minister's department.

I just combined three different sections for the minister, but I appreciate that they were pretty small. I'm sure he can handle it.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. The first area dealt with: how much is enough? I think the focus essentially was with respect to new casinos, but I think it's important to just have an overview of exactly what authorized gaming is in Alberta.

Basically, authorized gaming involves the provincial lottery, which is the lottery tickets, the VLTs, and the slot machines, and then you have bingo, and then you have the raffle tickets. Essentially, lottery tickets are sold through some 2,000-plus retailers. It's a relatively mature market, and it changes from time to time, because that's necessary to continue to market the product, but it's a relatively stable and mature market. VLTs have been capped at 6,000 VLTs since 1995. We reiterated that they would continue to be capped as part of the licensing policy review that we released in 2001, and that continues to be our plan. So that's a static number, if you will. Bingos are very much a charitable model, and the government, in fact, does not earn revenue from bingos with the exception of some modest licensing. So really you're down to casinos as being the potential growth area in gaming in the province and racing entertainment centres, which is part of the racing industry renewal initiative. Those are the two areas where you can concentrate the discussion and really not miss anything at all.

In December of 1999 the government froze expansion of gaming so that the licensing policy review could be done, and in the fall of 2001 the policy review and the government's response to it was released, which was to accept the recommendations. In March of 2002, after further consultation of stakeholders, the final rules with respect to expansion of casinos and racing entertainment centres were released. The moratorium was lifted.

What I'm going to deal with is just simply the expansion of casinos, because that's really principally what we're talking about. What that process did was establish an eight-stage process. It incorporated into that the fact that it wasn't government that was initiating this – it would be members of the community, a private enterprise if you will, that would have to come forward with an initiative – that communities had an opportunity to say no, and that there was going to be the need for viability if the process was to be pursued successfully. So essentially it was going to be up to the private enterprise to come forward with a proposal. Communities could say: we don't want a new casino in our community. In any event, it would have to be a viable operation. In other words, it would have to make sense within the charitable model, which is, in fact, what casinos are all about.

The hon. member is undoubtedly aware of some communities which have been pre-emptive with respect to this issue. Lloydminster recently had a plebiscite where they voted not to have a casino in their community. Edson had a vote last municipal election which was in favour by a small majority, and I think it was at the same time that Strathcona county had a vote, and they voted not to have casinos.

Now, Lloydminster and Strathcona, from my perspective, are two communities who have established the facts to say: our people do not want casinos here. And whether they're viable or not, any application that went forward would have little likelihood of success.

The article that appeared in the paper recently – I think it was this morning as a matter of fact – indicated that there would be nine new casinos, and in fact what I was indicating to the reporter was that there are nine areas in the province in which notices of expressed interest have been received, and that doesn't mean that there will be nine new casinos, because what's necessary is that there is going to be no negative response from the community in which those casinos are proposed. It will be necessary for the applicant to pursue the matter, and this is a timely and costly exercise, so there are people who can start the process and not proceed, and they have to be in areas which are viable. If all of those things come to pass – that is, the community either supports it or is neutral about it, the applicant pursues it, it's a good plan and in an area that's viable – and if all other conditions that are required by the municipality are met, then I would suspect that there's a pretty good likelihood a new casino licence would be granted, and if they have the money, they'll end up building it.

Because it's driven by those things, we in Gaming do not have a vision of how many casinos there will be, but I agree with your perspective that when you have 3 million plus people in a market which is largely going to be domestic as opposed to destination – I think there is some destination in the sense that people from Saskatchewan, people from B.C. do come, but it's no Vegas; there is no illusion in that regard, so it's essentially a domestic market – there is going to be a maximum amount of gaming that makes sense, but that is going to be measured from time to time based on the applications that come forward in the communities where they are brought forward. Some communities may make sense; other communities may not. As I said, some communities that make sense might say no. It's going to be measured by the AGLC on an application-by-application basis.

Now, I believe at this point in time there are nine different streams of applications. I must just indicate that all of the information with respect to the rules regarding new casinos, the eight-stage process, and the status of the applications can be found on the AGLC web site. We try and keep it completely up to date, so if you want to know what's happening and who the applicants are, to the extent that that information is available, it's all on the AGLC web site.

Four of those nine streams are First Nation; five are traditional.

So there are four First Nation potential casinos and five traditional casinos. I think the total number of applicants in those nine streams might be something in the order of 25 to 30. It'll be up in that number, say 25. There are a number in Edmonton, a number in Calgary. There are a number in the central region. In three of the First Nation areas I believe there's only one applicant. In one of the First Nation streams, in the last one, there are six. So it just depends on which one you're looking at.

You asked about a connection between legal and illegal. Alberta Gaming and the AGLC have jurisdiction with respect to authorized gaming, and that means gaming within our environment: at casinos, at lounges where VLTs are, at bingo. Outside of that environment it's a police matter. We work very, very closely with the police with respect to these things, and in fact there is a committee involving AGLC, city police in Edmonton, Calgary I believe, Lethbridge who work together regarding matters of common interest. From a jurisdictional point of view the illegal gaming, as you put it, is a police matter and not an AGLC matter. But we understand full well that there is an overlap, and we work together in order that we have common information, and to the extent that we can assist one another, we do.

With respect to VLTs and illegal gambling that is not to my knowledge an issue in this jurisdiction, and I certainly agree with the comment that was made earlier, that one of the reasons for government to be in the gaming business is to ensure that there isn't an illegal, criminal element that is successful in dealing with illegal gaming, because that can be very, very lucrative. I believe that in B.C. not long ago – as you rightly pointed out, there are no VLTs – there was something in the order of 3,500 gray machines; in other words, illegal VLTs. That just creates a whole host of different issues for us to deal with. At least with the way that we're dealing with it, we have an income stream and we know where they are, and I think that when it comes to illegal machines, we've effectively, because of the way we've dealt it, eliminated that.

Poker rooms do go all night. I'm sure that there are some illegal poker games out there some place, but the fact of the matter is that casinos will stay open 24 hours a day for poker players. That's the way it's set up. They have their own door, and they can play as long as they want provided there are people to play. So I also don't believe that that's much of an issue, although I'm sure that it does occur from time to time.

The First Nations gaming matter. You're right. The First Nations gaming policy, which was announced in January of 2001, was a result of negotiations between the government and the First Nations of Alberta, some 46 First Nations. The detail of that was ultimately put together late in 2000 and was voted on and approved by all chiefs, if I recall correctly, early in December 2000, and as I said, government approved the final terms of that in January of 2001.

It sets out the parameters of that particular program. Essentially, the way I look at it is that the gaming rules with respect to traditional casinos are 98 percent applicable to First Nation gaming. The differences are that First Nation casinos must be built on reserves that were in existence as of January 2001 or which come into existence and which are contiguous to an existing reserve after that date and with the approval of the government. You have the 15 percent that goes to the operator in both cases. You have the 15 percent that goes to charity in both cases, except in the case of the First Nations it will be a First Nation charity in all likelihood; in other words, one charity which will operate it 365 days a year rather than 180 charities that operate 365 days a year. The money that the First Nation charity receives must be used for charitable purposes just as the money received by the traditional charity with the exception that – and this is an employment economic incentive – the First Nation can pay its volunteers so as to create some employment for people on the host reserve. So that's the difference on that particular line.

The hon. member correctly outlined that 40 percent of the slot revenue goes to the First Nation development fund, and 30 percent goes to the Alberta lottery fund. That is a difference because traditionally it's 70 percent. The hon. Minister of Community Development is responsible for the First Nation development fund. The First Nations gaming policy agreement that was reached in January of 2001 sets out the parameters, and those parameters indicate that the money, the 40 percent, can be used for economic, social, cultural, educational purposes, but it cannot be used to build or operate the casino. It's my understanding that 30 percent goes to the host First Nation, and 10 percent is available to other First Nations. So if you think of it in these terms, if you have 46 First Nations and one casino is built, that one First Nation will receive 30 percent of the fund, and the other 10 percent will be available to the other 45. Where did those numbers come from? Those numbers came from the First Nations. Among themselves they said, "This is the way we would like to deal with this matter," so we accepted that as part of the First Nations' development. People can have their own point of view with respect to it, but the fact is that the First Nations people themselves are the ones that chose those numbers.

With respect to who can apply and can it go off reserve and so on and so forth, one is going to have to wait until the terms of the First Nations' development fund agreement are finalized. Those are still under discussion. As the Minister of Gaming and knowing the process that has gone on to date, my perspective is that if it is for the economic, social, cultural, or health/welfare of aboriginal people, I don't know that this government is going to care where the money is spent, whether it's on reserve or off reserve.

At this point in time I believe that the tenor of the agreement with the First Nation peoples is that it will be with First Nation people as opposed to Métis people, that it will be reserve based as opposed to off reserve based. But if someone came to me and asked me, "Do you have an objection if money goes from that particular fund into an addictions treatment centre located in the city of Edmonton or Calgary?" I would say: of course not. So I think it's going to be in large measure driven once again by the First Nation people rather than by the government. If they want to have a broader group that can access that money, so be it, but that's a discussion I haven't been privy to, and I don't think we know exactly at this point in time where it will go or whether it will happen.

With respect to the arrangement we believe that the First Nations have accepted that the province of Alberta has jurisdiction with respect to the matter of gaming, and that's why we have a policy. With respect to the operation we have the AGLC approving the licensing of the operator and the charity and all of that just as they do in the traditional, so that is identical. We control the process. The machines that will be located on the reserve are going to be owned or leased by the government through the AGLC, as they are in the traditional, and they will be controlled in the sense of on or off and the servicing, just as they are in the traditional.

So from my perspective we have all of the same kinds of control features with respect to First Nation gaming that we do with respect to traditional; in other words, if there's a problem, we have the ability to move in and deal with a serious problem. We aren't looking for that. We are looking to have success with respect to these matters. I don't spend my time thinking about that, but I can tell you that when we went through the amendments to the Gaming and Liquor Act last year, we included things like receivership. We thought through the "what if we have a problem" scenario to build in the remedies that we thought were reasonable, so at this point in time I feel that we have all the control we need relative to any casino in the province should there be an issue.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. May I start by recognizing the minister and the minister's command of that ministry and his co-operativeness with other members throughout the year. In my opinion, the Minister of Gaming certainly has his hand on the tiller, and he knows what he's doing, and I think that should be recognized.

Having said that, I would like to, if I may, take this part of the debate on the estimates in a slightly different direction. Following up on the direction the Member for Edmonton-Centre has taken us in on gambling, I wonder if we might go to the notion of fetal alcohol syndrome and what the department is doing in that regard.

In the core businesses, goals, strategies, and performance measures of the department on page 175 item 3 says: "Support leading-edge research on gaming and liquor issues in Alberta and partner to build awareness of the social aspects of gaming and liquor." The report of AADAC, which of course reports through Health and Wellness, indicates that the percentage of women who consumed alcohol during pregnancy is suggested to be 4 percent, and the target for the end of next year is 3.8 percent, which would be a significant reduction.

There is no question that alcohol and the consumption of alcohol by women who are pregnant have very significant societal effects, none of which are good. The societal cost is huge in the loss of potential to the children that are involved, in the dysfunction within the family unit that's caused by this dysfunction, later in the school system, and, then, unfortunately, in the criminal justice system. I am aware that the majority of people incarcerated do suffer from either fetal alcohol syndrome or fetal alcohol effect. So I don't think that we need to make the case that as a societal problem that can be cured, it should be, if not the number one priority, very close to the number one priority. Since it's identified as a core business of the Department of Gaming, I'm wondering what is being done with regard to research, as has been outlined, within the department.

Secondarily, I'm wondering if there has been any consideration to covering the cost or at least starting to cover some of the cost of fetal alcohol syndrome and fetal alcohol effect by the manufacturers of alcohol, who profit from the sale of the alcohol? Perhaps those resources could be directed to prevention of fetal alcohol syndrome and trying to help the individuals concerned both in the family setting and as individuals in intense therapy, because the benefit to our society would be tremendous.

In the opinion of many, shared by myself as an individual, we're putting far too much emphasis on the end-of-life issues and far too little on the beginning-of-life issues. We're spending a fortune in health care for people who are in the twilight of their years when we could have as a society a much better bang for the buck and do far more good in society by putting far more resources in the front end.

Thank you.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you, member, for the kind comments on the good work that the Gaming and AGLC staff do. I'm very, very proud of my department. We have people with a long history in government, a long history in this area, and I would think that when it comes to corporate knowledge, the Department of Gaming and the AGLC stack up well against anybody else in government. It's one of those areas where people seem to like working, and when they come, they stay.

In that regard what I'd like to do is also just introduce one other person who has joined us, and that is Marilyn Carlyle-Helms. She is our director of communications, and she's been doing an excellent job with us over the course of the last 18 months or so.

You raise a very important issue; that is, responsibility and alcohol, particularly as it relates to FASD. The nature of government, as the hon. member knows, is such that some of these issues tend to get broken into different categories, so when I hear that, I think in terms of Health and Wellness, I think in terms of Justice, I think in terms of Children's Services, I think in terms of Gaming, and I imagine probably Human Resources and others. Our ability to do matters in this area from a jurisdictional point of view is relatively small. We are interested in it. For example, we work with the liquor industry in assisting them, encouraging them in being responsible. There's a group here in Alberta called ALIRT, which stands for the Alberta Liquor Industry Roundtable. It is made up of various representatives from the liquor industry, so you will have liquor retailers; you will have manufacturers, both spirits, beer, wine, and others.

Last year I went to a conference in Red Deer where the principal issue was fetal alcohol syndrome and what could be done here in the province to deal with that issue. I can tell you that in June that particular group – I think it's the Alberta Liquor Store Association – is having another conference in Red Deer, and that is going to be the topic once again. The Minister of Children's Services will be speaking at that on that very issue. Last fall ALSA, Alberta Liquor Store Association, members worked with Children's Services in putting up posters in all of their stores making the connection between FASD and alcohol and the improper use of alcohol.

I think it's largely an education matter. What we do within the ministry is encourage that, work with that. We don't have a research program as such. I believe there is some research that's done by AADAC. I know there are other things that arise that are tangentially connected. For example, the University of Lethbridge has recently submitted a proposal for an addictions chair in I think the therapeutic area. So that's bringing an all-star here to the province. We should be very proud of this in Alberta. They are the only university in Canada that offers a baccalaureate in addictions counseling, and that's here in Alberta. So is that fetal alcohol? Well, no, it isn't, but on the other hand I think that everything about fetal alcohol is education. So to the extent that we build capacity in that particular area of addictions knowledge, we'll be further ahead.

That is my response. We are concerned about it. We work with the industry. I can tell you that we're working with the industry right now on developing an industrywide responsible intervention program with respect to liquor. That will include the Alberta Liquor Store Association, the retailers if you will. It will include the hotel and lodging association, and it includes the Restaurant and Food-services Association. What we're trying to do is encourage them to come forward with one program that all of their servers will have that will teach them the responsible use of liquor and their ability to intervene in the appropriate circumstances. While I haven't seen the detail of the program, I expect that some portion of it deals with the service of alcohol to people who are apparently pregnant. We've had this issue in here before, and this is a difficult problem. I mean, I understand that, but the fact is that I think it's one of those areas where you make baby steps. That is one of those areas where I think a baby step may be made. So that, hon. member, is the response to your question.

I'd just like to, if I might, continue with a couple more comments to Edmonton-Centre, because when I heard a buzzer, I sat down. Being Canadian and being trained to do the right thing at the right time, I just assumed my time was up.

Ms Blakeman: It was.

Mr. Stevens: It was? Oh, okay. I did do the right thing.

The eligibility of groups in the use of proceeds. That particular report deals exclusively with the use of charitable gaming; that is, the licensing of groups to run casinos, bingos, and raffles. The use of those proceeds is tied to the Criminal Code and common law interpretation with respect to what "charitable" means in that context and the use of proceeds. So if it's religious, if it's charitable, if it's for seniors, if it's for youth, that kind of thing, that's all a given. These other areas are more problematic.

On the issue of adult sports, when I became minister, the department had at that point in time and had relied on an interpretation from Alberta Justice which said that adult sport groups, based on the law in Canada and the Criminal Code, did not qualify for a licence. So that is why we are where we are today: because the legal advice that this ministry received from this government's lawyers was that way. Now, that is an issue that has been raised by the Edmonton Sport Council and others. That is one of the issues that's being addressed, and when the report comes forward, you will find that it is in fact addressed in there.

From my perspective there are absolutely no budget considerations. There might be a couple of items where there's a minor expenditure by the department on something; in other words, maybe a couple more dollars will be spent administering something. That's a possibility, but from a budget perspective this is budget neutral. The timing of this particular report has everything to do with its being ready. All I'm saying is that it has nothing to do with the numbers. The numbers that we're looking at today will not change, because this is for charity. These are numbers that charities get, not numbers that will impact the government's revenue.

With respect to bingo the licensing policy review that came forward and was accepted in 2001 had 13 recommendations that were accepted, so what we're dealing with today, at least in this review that's out there, is in part some of those recommendations. What you have with the introduction of handheld bingo and keno into the bingo association setting is in part acceptance of and following through on the promises from the fall of 2001.

Private operators. The private operator model is the model that is used in casinos. It is a charitable model that we use in casinos. It is a charitable model that we use in the bingo associations. It is the intention of this minister, this ministry, this government to maintain the charitable model for casinos and bingos, which is what you wanted to hear me say, and I'm happy to say that before you because that has always been our position. We feel that the option of private operators, which works very well in the casino model, can work well in the bingo model. So that's one of the issues that's out there for discussion.

Ms Blakeman: Timing?

Mr. Stevens: The matter went out for review in January. The AGLC has worked extensively with all the bingo associations. Every one of them had been met with, I think, by the end of last month. Bingo associations, as the hon. member will know, are made up of the charities that work the bingos at that particular location, so those folks become very familiar as a result of working through that stream. In addition to that letters were sent out which provided some of the material in writing but referenced the web site where all the material can be found. I'm told that the information and the feedback that we've been receiving through the work of the AGLC has been going very, very well, and at this particular point in time I have no reason to believe that we need an extension beyond the end of April. That is what I have been telling people, and actually I haven't been receiving much in the way of requests in the last two or three weeks indicating that that's a problem.

Once again, I'm told that an understanding of the issues that are reflected in the document, the fact that it's draft, the fact that people can put forward alternatives has provided some comfort to them and that there's a much higher sense of understanding today than there was, say, in January or February when people were saying: I'm concerned that you're going to do something that will materially and negatively impact us. That is not our intention. Our intention is to make bingo better. So at this point in time the AGLC will continue to do its work and receive information for the balance of this month, and they will provide a report following that.

The concept of unallocated funds is still very much a new matter to me. When the hon. member asked a question the other day and, following that, tabled a letter, I took the opportunity to get a copy from the table, and my department is currently looking at it. For the interest of those who follow these matters keenly – and I'm sure there might be one or two somewhere – the letter in question was dated the fall of last year, and it was written to an hon. member in the Liberal opposition. I think actually the date of the letter was maybe late in the year but relating to a meeting that had been attended in the fall. So there was a meeting, which gave rise to the questions. A couple of months later an hon. member received the letter requesting information. It's now reached my desk, and what I intend to do is see if we can provide some clarification with respect to that. That's how I intend to deal with the unallocated funds issue, because I understand that that term is used in there. I looked at the letter long enough to know that that was the case, and I said: figure out what the issue is.

Other Initiatives. Other initiatives have been with us for some time. It's been part of the line items since I've been minister. Basically, what it reflects is an amount of money that is available to address community initiatives which otherwise would not be dealt with as you go throughout the province over the course of the year. There are things that happen in our communities that don't neatly fall within a particular program, or if they do, the program may not have any funds or the program may not have the level of funding that's available to address the issue.

If I may use Vertigo Mystery Theatre as an example of that because I know that the hon. member is familiar with it, they approached members in Calgary last year saying: "We have a dire situation on our hands. We currently are located at a place and our lease is going to be up shortly and if we don't find space in which to move, we're going to be homeless, which means that the work we do and the work that other people who are connected with us do will be lost. Can you help us?" They were looking for a lot of money. If I recall correctly, they were looking for something in the order – I'm going to say $6 million or $7 million.

Ms Blakeman: Seven point six.

Mr. Stevens: Seven point six million dollars to take on what I consider to be a wonderful project, which was to move into what had been cinema space in the bottom of the Calgary Tower. It's located in what is the cultural area, the theatre area, of Calgary. There's a connect there. They said: we need some help there.

Well, at that particular point in time we had CFEP, which was good for $125,000, and we might have had CIP – I can't remember – but it's only good for $75,000, and they were looking for a lot of money. What we were able to do in that particular case after reviewing the matter with them, after understanding what their needs were and understanding that the federal government had been approached, that there were members of the private sector in the Calgary area who were prepared to come to the table with significant funds – we were able to make a commitment to them of $2 million.

That $2 million will be funded from other initiatives, but the reason that we were able to do that is because we had this fund available, once again, to deal with unexpected situations that arise from time to time. Do you apply for it? No, you don't. This fund is what I would call sort of an emergency type of fund. Yes, we do provide the full particulars of this. It's part of this ministry's annual report. You can take a look at last year's when you go back to your office. I can tell you that you will find the Edmonton Odysium as the recipient of $1 million last year. You'll find a lot of different projects, many of which received amounts of money beyond the $125,000 that's available through CFEP. So that's really what it amounts to.

The way I look at it, actually, is as follows: does it meet all of the demands that are in our society? Obviously not. I get to see the kinds of projects that are out there because people come and talk to me on a regular basis saying: we have a wonderful project in our community. And there are wonderful projects throughout Alberta. The hon. Minister of Community Development, as a result of being responsible for the centennial initiative, probably knows better than anybody the breadth and depth of those kinds of multithousand, multimillion dollar projects. We aren't going to be able to address all of those projects. That's just a fact of life.

I look at this as a situation where with this particular fund we can provide some stopgap measure from time to time for some groups, which will make a difference in those communities when you leverage it with the municipal, with the federal, and with the private sector. That's the nature of it. It's not something new; it's something that's been around since before my time in this particular ministry.

There was a question as to whether I have any centennial dollars squirreled away in my ministry. The answer is no, I don't. I don't have any such money. The money that we can grant in Gaming is CFEP, CIP, and other initiatives. Otherwise, what you see is what you get. For example, the Alberta Gaming Research Institute gets $1.5 million. I mean, those are moneys that go to the people that are indicated. Those are the only three programs in which funds can be found that are not allocated at the beginning of the year and will be allocated in full by the end of the year, because if you don't spend it, you lose it. You don't get to keep it in a new fiscal year, so typically there is a real effort made by the Ministry of Gaming to make sure that all those community initiative-type dollars are in fact expended. But we don't have any centennial dollars in our budget.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much for those answers from the minister. I appreciate that.

I'm noticing that under my category of reviews and, in particular, the bingo terms and conditions I neglected to raise one point that had been brought to my attention by some groups, so I will add that now. That is the concern that the AGLC regulates bingos, but it also can act in competition to the very groups that would be going to AGLC for decisions to be made or for regulations, and groups are questioning that.

So you have the AGLC approving or regulating a bingo association or a group that's holding bingos, and they have to appeal to the AGLC if there's some ruling that goes against them, but it is the AGLC itself who is their own competition because they also are bringing in funds or regulating or allowing other gaming activities to go on. Some of these groups are trying to make money through their bingos. They're trying to do what they're doing. The AGLC says no, but then the group ends up competing against the AGLC trying to get charitable dollars, and the AGLC is able to regulate and provide things like VLTs and slots. There doesn't seem to be any appeal process outside of the AGLC, and I'm wondering if the ministry has ever contemplated some sort of third-party group or not AGLC to allow appeals when groups are unhappy.

Just going back briefly, the minister is saying that the communities can decide about how much gambling is enough. This is a pretty astute minister, and there are some very good people working in this department. I'm struggling to believe that the minister isn't looking to the horizon on the possibilities for gambling expansion. I'm having a hard time choking that one down. You know, gambling revenue is a huge part of the economic diversification for this government. It's now bringing in more money than oil royalties, including synthetic oil royalties. I guess I don't accept what the minister said – I'm having a hard time choking that one down – that the ministry hasn't looked at exactly how much gambling they think the province can hold and that they are leaving it up to the communities to decide. So I'll just put that one on the record.

At the same time I'm also struggling to accept that the ministry and the AGLC haven't sussed out their competition; that is, their after-hours competition or illegal competition. I mean, this government was particularly alive to potential competition from illegal VLTs, which is why they went into the business themselves in the first place. So I'm kind of amused to hear that the minister doesn't look at this or that the AGLC doesn't seem to be keeping a finger on it, that he's suggesting that illegal gambling is solely under the auspices of the Solicitor General and that he doesn't think that it's a problem.

The adult sports definition not being included as charitable: we have an issue there, I think. In Canada our definition of charity at this point is coming solely from Revenue Canada. What Revenue Canada wants or needs or finds acceptable as a definition of a charitable activity is no longer fitting the amount of activity in the NGO sector and the volunteer sector in Canada. There's a recognition that having that sole definition flowing from Revenue Canada really is not addressing what is the reality today. Perhaps there is some room there for the provinces to start to put their own definitions in place or to be able to add on to the list that the federal government certainly has now. I'm looking to the future on that one, because the Revenue Canada charitable status is really about forgone revenue, and it's just not pertaining to what's happening today.

Finally, the minister says that he doesn't have any centennial legacy money squirreled away, but in fact if I'm hearing him correctly, under the other initiatives program he could end up dispensing money to what is a centennial program. There's nothing stopping a group that wants to do a centennial legacy project from coming to him and convincing him of the need for it and that they have buy-in from other levels of government and the private sector and doesn't he want to come on board with that. In other words, there is no provision against any of the money from the other initiatives group being used for centennial legacy funding.

Okay. The last three categories that I had were Internet gambling, new VLTs, and some financial questions.

Internet gambling. Again, what policy and consumer protection is in place now, and what policy is the AGLC and the ministry looking to develop around consumer protection for Internet gambling? This is a very difficult one. As the minister well knows, he and I have been at the same conferences. I hope that this is an area that the ministry and the AGLC are looking at to develop policy for consumer protection. So I guess I should ask the question: is the government considering using the same strategy that they used around VLTs? In other words, get into the business yourself in order to have some control over the amount of activity that's happening in the province, which would make the province of Alberta get involved as an Internet gambling provider. So let me just ask that question, and we'll see what kind of a response we get from the minister on that.

The new VLTs. In January of this year we had the Supreme Court ruling that it is not unconstitutional to remove the VLTs from areas in Manitoba that voted against them, so I think we can safely assume that's how they're going to come down for similar challenges in other provinces. A couple of questions here. I don't see VLTs being taken out of communities. I have asked this before, and I've always been told that the government was going to wait for the outcome of the Alberta challenge. I'm just checking that that's still the status, that they are not going to remove any VLTs from communities that voted them out pending the decision on Alberta.

My question there is: what's the plan after that? Will the VLTs fall under the casino plan of whether communities wish to have them or not? I have in front of me the plan that the minister described with the seven steps for a community to approve casinos, but I haven't seen or I don't remember that that can also be used to say no raffles, for example, or no VLTs. Is there a plan to expand that? Perhaps it's already in there, and it's just not publicized. What is the plan B after we get that court decision? I'm not a gambling person, obviously, but I think it's fair to anticipate that we will get the same ruling for Alberta as we got in Manitoba. That's very consistent with the rulings that have happened in other kinds of court cases. So what's the province going to do with those areas, and what are the ministry and the AGLC going to do about future areas that decide they want the VLTs out or they don't want them in in the first place?

Okay. I'm on the new VLT section. The minister did anticipate my question about where's the $105 million we've heard about, and I hear him saying that it in fact is being expensed out over an appropriate period of time. Could I ask him to give me the exact line vote where I could find the money and how much money is in there for this year, next year, and the third year out for these machines? Just prior to him telling me that, he talked about netting out of the gambling revenues. No, no, no. Sorry. That doesn't work because he did say that it was capital. Forget that.

I had asked a question in question period about the – I'm not going to remember the words that are used on that – antiaddiction functions that are on the new VLTs and that they're fairly unproven. Is the government planning on using the same system that's in place in Nova Scotia, or are they looking at a newer version of that? What information do we have that is within the last six months on how effective these problem gambling alleviators or reducers are? I'm especially interested, as the minister knows, in how that offsets, how it nets out, if you like, against the enhanced entertainment value of the machines. You know, they're snazzier. They look nicer. The graphics are more interesting. What kind of work has been done on having this new entertainment value, and how does it net out against the problem gambling functions that are put on?

I'd like to go now to some financial questions that are fairly specific out of the budget book. There's been some discussion about the horse racing subsidy through the racing initiative, and the minister has said, maybe in response to questions, that this was all part of the plan. My question is: when does this subsidy run out? When does it end? I've looked for the documentation of what was in the initial documents from Racing Alberta or whatever its predecessor was, and in fact they were asking for I think it was $87.1 million over a period of three years. The government has now given them $87.9 million over that same period of time, so a question about why they got more money than in fact they asked for and than in fact did appear in documents that were forecasting this money out. This horse racing subsidy was to help this struggling industry get back on its feet, but how long does it help them get back on their feet? At what point is this subsidy over?

Okay. These are under sort of the financial questions. We've got a communications budget for the ministry. It appears to be going up by $28,000, from $197,000 to $225,000. Is that a cost of doing business, an inflation increase, or is it representative of additional things, and if so, what?

When I looked, I in fact did not find the increase in the racing industry renewal. In last year's business plan it was not mentioned that there would be a $4 million increase, or 12 percent of its budget, going from $33 million to $37 million in this year. When I looked back in the business plans, that increase did not appear. Perhaps I'm looking in the wrong place, but was this increase planned? I'd be interested in knowing more about that.

Now, the net gaming lottery is down by the $14 million. Is that the effect of netting out that's appearing in this budget?

Mr. Stevens: Could we get page references?

Ms Blakeman: I've just got a bunch of scribbles on a pad here. I think it just appears where we were looking at the netting out. There's a difference there. On page 175 of the numbers book, the actual budget, government and lottery fund estimates. There's a slight difference there.

Now, the minister hinted that the change in the FTEs had something to do with the AGLC, so I'll just put the question on the record and he can answer it flat out. It looks to me like the FTEs in the department have gone from 32 to 39. Again, what is this, or is this AGLC FTEs, and what are these additional positions doing? What are their official titles? Are they administrative 5 or communications 3? What are they?

I notice the contingency allowance – I think it had a different name last year – that is appearing in the Alberta lottery pages. Last year I think that was debt pay-down, and this time it's appearing as a contingency allowance for the Alberta stability fund. If the minister could explain that or expand on that a bit more. Is it an expected expenditure, or is it in there as a cushion? If it's in there as an expected expenditure, when does he expect the money to be transferred across or used?

The business plan talks about reducing the number of VLT sites by 10 to 15 percent. I know that in something the minister said that I've read – maybe it was last year's debate – the explanation given was that essentially the VLTs were going to be taken out of sites that were not as high performing and put into sites that were better performing. What's the criteria around that? [A cell phone rang] I'll allow the Minister of Revenue to answer his cell phone, but perhaps I could ask him to leave the Assembly before he actually carries on the conversation.

Is the determination of the choice of the VLT sites strictly by which ones generate the most money, or is there other criteria that's coming into play on that, and could I get some explanation around that?

Also, in the business plan it talks about working with nonprofits to implement new gaming activities. I'm assuming that this is around the bingo terms and conditions, but I've learned not to assume here, so could I ask for an explanation of exactly what's being contemplated here? Is it new bingo? Is it new bingo games? Is it new casinos, new kinds of raffles? What is this?

When I look at the business plans, I have some questions around the performance measurements, and I know that I'm running out of time again here. When I look at performance measurements like we find under Core Business One, I'm really frustrated with the government. They had a good system with these performance measurements, and they put the first ones in place and then never reviewed them and made them really work. As a result, these performance measurements have less and less relevancy as a management tool in my opinion. So when you get things like the "percentage of Albertans surveyed who are satisfied with the conduct of the liquor business in Alberta," that's really not giving us much. I don't think it's giving very good information. It's a popularity poll, but it's not giving us information on: should there be more low-cost items or more high-cost items? [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] Hopefully I'll get another chance to continue.

Thanks.

The Chair: Hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, you wanted to get a few questions in before the minister answers?

Mrs. McClellan: I did, if he had time.

The Chair: Whitecourt-St. Anne is also indicating that he'd like to get a couple of questions in.

Mrs. McClellan: I'll try and be quick and brief.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to first just commend the Gaming ministry for the way they manage the industry in our province. The fact is we do have a gaming industry, and the very fact that it is operated so well I think should be appreciated by everyone. Other provinces have gaming industries, and their performance is in no way matched by this ministry, and I think that point should be made.

Over the last couple of days a lot of talk has occurred in this Legislature over the horse racing industry, and I heard the question again on the increase to the industry. I know that the minister is going to answer this, so I'm not going to get too deeply into that, but I did want to talk a little bit about the industry. I'm sad that the people that speak against this don't understand the value of the horse industry, first of all, to Alberta and the horse racing industry, which is a part of that. I think it's important that members understand that of the 880,000 horses in Canada almost 400,000 of those are in Alberta. It is an important part of our culture, of our heritage, of our economy, and of our way of life.

It is a diverse industry, and that is the strength of the industry. If it were a single-sector industry, it would not have that strength and it would not have that growth and opportunity. The sport and recreation side of the horse industry has a value of about $500 million to this province a year, and the agricultural side is about $88 million. That's almost $600 million. Most of the horses in this province are used for sport and recreation. They're used at spectator events like rodeos, 4-H events, gymkhanas, community shows, many things like that, and over 50 percent of the ranches or farms in this province that have cattle have horses, so they're still used in a very working way.

You can't talk about the horse industry in this province without talking about Spruce Meadows and the value that it brings to this province as well, whether it's the three major events, one of them being the Masters, that brings over 1 and a half million dollars in prize money and brings people from 22 countries to our province, or Equifair, that's held in conjunction with the Masters. It's the largest and most significant trade fair for horses and horse-related products in North America. It has over 250 exhibitors from North America and Europe.

Then the agricultural side of it, whether it's the PMU farms, that have, of course, a product that's used to make Premarin, which is a substitute for estrogen and is sold throughout the world – there's about a billion dollars of it sold throughout the world. Well, we have a pretty good chunk of that industry as well. Of course, the one that nobody ever wants to talk about really is horsemeat, but there is a need to dispose of some horses. There are about 50,000 horses in western Canada that are processed in Alberta, and all of that meat is shipped to Japan and Europe. None of it is consumed here, at least not legally.

So then we come to the other element of the industry which is the horse racing industry, which is the one that pertains to the minister's discussion today. Again, that industry has a very long and valued history in our province. The strength of that industry has a rippling effect through our economy and I would say particularly in the city of Edmonton, which is where we are today. It benefits everyone in the agricultural community and, certainly, many in the urban community. There was some research done in about the year 2000 that indicated that the salaries and the wages of Albertans working in the horse racing and breeding industry totaled more than $83 million. That is a huge contribution to jobs. There are about 3,100 Albertans that have permanent jobs in that industry, and the value of that racing and breeding industry in our province is about $134 million. So it provides thousands of jobs, millions of dollars of economic benefits not only to the urban communities, where most of the racing activities occur, but also to the rural communities, where a number of other activities occur.

Let me just give you an indication of the people who work in the industry outside of the racetrack. There are veterinarians. There are blacksmiths. There are hay and grain suppliers. There are transportation workers. There are harness and saddlemakers and many others that provide this service. So that is how we have this rippling effect.

The horse racing industry made a commitment to manage their industry themselves, and an agreement was struck last year on that. As I say, the minister will explain the increase, I'm sure. I'll touch on it briefly, but for some time Northlands Park or the Spectrum have had gaming machines, and they receive a percentage of that. What was agreed to last year was that the horse racing industry would indeed manage their own industry. They would do the marketing, the promotion, be the licensers, do all of that work, but with a board that is made up of people from all of the different breeds in horse racing.

It's interesting that the complaint that's coming in this Legislature is on an increase that's based on performance. The expected increase in this budget is based on performance, not on a gift, not on giving more money. It's based on performance. I should not be surprised that the members opposite have a difficulty understanding that you actually could work harder, perform better, and get more money. But that is really what it's based on. It is based on performance. I would like that clearly understood once and for all. It is not a gift. If the industry does not perform with their racing entertainment centres, there will not be an increase in this year.

So, Mr. Chairman, this is a valuable industry. It has a long and valued history in this province. It is managed extraordinarily well by Gaming, and I just am one who really hopes for further success in this industry and that it'll continue to grow and continue to add to the economy and jobs in our province.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne before the minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to expand on the comments made by the Deputy Premier regarding the horse racing industry and the relationship that the Minister of Gaming and his staff have with this industry. When I hear comments opposite belittling this industry, they belittle my constituents, they belittle my family, they belittle my friends, and I take exception to that.

You know, there are thousands of tonnes of feed delivered and purchased by horse owners, millions of dollars in tack, vet supplies, food services, equipment, and of course employment comes from one of the finest horse racing centres and casino centres in this province at Northlands Park. Northlands Park right here in Edmonton does a fantastic job with this industry. You know, good, hardworking rural Albertans and I guess probably hundreds of Edmontonians deserve praise, and I congratulate them for their efforts and their investments to keep racing in Alberta and at Northlands Park viable and strong.

I've listened to members across, and I think the only part of horse racing they've got is maybe a little hoof-and-mouth disease because of the way they spew false statements, and I take exception to that.

The Chair: We have a point of order. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, the point of order and the citation, please.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Ms Blakeman: The citation would be 23(h), (i), and (j). The member is indicating that he believes that members of the opposition have somehow contracted hoof-and-mouth disease, which is certainly making an allegation, definitely imputing a false or unavowed motive, and most definitely using abusive or insulting language that was really unnecessary for this debate. So with that point of order I'd like a ruling from the Chairman, please.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, would you like to speak to the point of order?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I guess that since they haven't been tested to be positive, it's probably out of order, and I would withdraw that.

The Chair: Withdraw and . . .

Mr. VanderBurg: Withdraw and apologize for that comment.

Debate Continued

Mr. VanderBurg: But I would ask the minister in light of the great things that are done by this industry and by this department – we'll just take one of the facilities at Northlands Park – could the minister share with us some of the good news stories, some of the statistics about Northlands Park, some of the employment opportunities that are there, some of the housing opportunities that are there? There are many people that live right at Northlands Park, right at the track. Grooms and other employees do lots of great things right there at Northlands Park. You know, this industry really adds to the Alberta economy, and I'd like to hear the minister talk about some of the good news stories and how this industry contributes to Albertans.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to start by dealing with some of the questions that were asked by Edmonton-Centre, and I'll conclude with comments regarding the value of the horse racing industry.

The issue of how much is not a science. It's not something where we have a formula and we go out and predetermine that. What I indicated to the member is that we spent two years talking to Albertans about how to go forward. We developed a process. The public and the commentators with respect to that process were very, very supportive. I recall the Edmonton Journal writing headlines to the effect of wise new gaming rules and things of that nature. So I'm satisfied that people said: you've done a good job addressing where the future is going to go. That particular exercise, the licensing policy review, was to determine the future of gaming in this province with a view that we would review it again in five years. So what we do is recognize that the landscape changes. It is not unrealistic, it is not improbable, it is not inappropriate for me to indicate that the measure of the market, the measure of community interest in expansion of casinos in any particular community is going to be driven with the issue arising. We're not going to go out and start determining these matters if there is no interest whatsoever. So that is how it's going forward.

What I've indicated when asked is that in my view we've had a situation where the expansion of gaming was put on hold for in excess of two years. We've now had a full year since that expansion was lifted, so we now have, reasonably enough, a number of people who have indicated that they are interested in seeing if they can get an application accepted by the AGLC based on the rules, which are clear and apparent. There will be some people who receive applications as a result of that. I don't know how many, but I believe that in the next two to three years you will find that most of the interest and most of the market demand for new casinos will be met by whatever exists at that point in time. The areas of the province which from my perspective most reasonably might have the ability to house more casinos from a market perspective have applications. So I think, without having science to back me up, that in two or three years what you see is likely what you're going to see for some time unless there's some kind of material change in the number of people in our society.

I didn't say that I was not concerned about illegal gambling. What I indicated was that our responsibility with respect to gaming and gambling is authorized gambling, which is within the confines of those premises which we regulate and that in fact our inspectors meet with the police forces in the province to deal with matters of gambling generally because there is interest in knowing what happens outside of casinos. In fact, there is a sharing of information. So that's the accurate description of the approach of this ministry with respect to that matter.

On the issue of what a charity is, Revenue Canada has a definition, but I want it to be made clear that the definition of Revenue Canada has never been the definition of the AGLC. That is a definition that's out there. The federal law that drives this particular issue is the Criminal Code and case law with respect to what the Criminal Code of Canada says, not Revenue Canada. Revenue Canada has a definition. Groups that qualify for licensing in this province fall within the Revenue Canada definition, and some fall without it. So that definition is there, yes, but it is not the one that is used in this province.

Internet gambling is illegal in Canada unless a province offers it solely within the boundaries of its province, and there was a recent case. P.E.I. offered Internet gaming. The Supreme Court of Canada said, "What you're offering is illegal" because they offered it outside of their province. So we know that, and it's illegal for people to participate. The real issue is the fact that the Internet seems to be without boundaries, and we're not unmindful of that, and we address this issue. During the licensing policy review, we asked Albertans about that, and the large majority of them said: we're not interested in Internet gaming. Having said that, we continue to monitor it to find out what other jurisdictions are doing because we understand that it is a potential issue for us at some point in time. During the licensing policy review Albertans indicated that very, very few of them participated in Internet gaming, and we don't know anything different at this point in time. So we don't think it's a major issue as it relates to our revenue, and there is no plan by this ministry at this time to get into the Internet gaming business. We continue to monitor it, and I am very much interested in developments as they arise.

With respect to VLTs April 28 is the court date. I, like the hon. member, believe that we have a very good chance of being successful. You may recall that following the plebiscites, the AGLC made a move under the then existing legislation in the fall of '98 to remove certain VLTs, and a court determined that there was no jurisdiction in the then legislation to do that. That gave rise to an amendment in the spring of 1999 that specifically listed seven communities that had had votes which were in favour of removing VLTs. Those particular communities were put into the legislation specifically, and that particular legislation has now been under challenge since that point in time. The very next day they got an injunction, and that's where we are today. So the answer to the question is: on April 28, if that injunction is lifted, the VLTs in those communities as listed in the legislation and in accordance with the direction – the law, if you will – in that legislation will be removed from those seven communities. That is where we're going with that particular matter.

With respect to the plan regarding VLTs, that is addressed in the licensing policy review. The plan is that we are going to have 6,000 and we are going to reduce the number of locations. That is the plan, and in five years we'll review the overall gaming, as was our promise.

I'd like to make a few comments regarding the horse racing industry. Once again, this particular initiative that we have is based on slot machines and racing entertainment centres. The racing entertainment centre is attached to the track. These tracks have long-term licences. We have one in Edmonton and one in Lethbridge that are in existence at this point in time. The fact of the matter is that if you did not have the initiative, you wouldn't have the racing entertainment centres. If you didn't have the racing entertainment centres, you wouldn't have the slot machines and you wouldn't have the revenue that is generated from those slot machines, some of which goes to the operator, 15 percent, and 51 and two-thirds percent going to Horse Racing Alberta, the balance going to the Alberta lottery fund. So this is very much Gaming revenue which has been generated as a result of this initiative. It is not a matter of anything other than that. As the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development indicated, it's as a result of performance that there are additional dollars coming forward, particularly an expan sion of Northlands this past year when they went from 250 to 500 slots. This upcoming year reflects the fact that there will be an entire year of slot revenue available.

Mr. William Ernest "Ernie" Jamison
February 27, 1924, to April 11, 2003

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is with sadness that I inform you today of the passing of former member William Ernest "Ernie" Jamison on Friday, April 11, 2003, at the age of 79 years. Mr. Jamison was first elected to the Alberta Legislature in the general election of August 30, 1971, and served until February 14, 1979. During his years of service he represented the constituency of St. Albert for the Progressive Conservative Party. During his years in the Legislature Mr. Jamison served as the chair of the Special Committee on Censorship and served on the select standing committees on Law and Regulations, Private Bills, Public Accounts, Public Affairs, and Workers' Compensation.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of his family who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember Ernie Jamison as you have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Her Excellency Shashi Uban Tripathi, high commissioner for the Republic of India. Alberta and India have had a long and close relationship. Alberta has a strong and active Indo-Canadian community with more than 61,000 people of Indian descent now calling Alberta home. Bilateral trade between Alberta and India amounts to more than $150 million per year, and with its population expected to exceed China's by the middle of this century, India represents a huge potential market for Alberta goods. I would ask that our honoured guest please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also privileged today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Marie Bernard-Meunier, Canadian ambassador to the Federal Republic of Germany. Germany is one of Alberta's most important economic partners in Europe. Just last year Alberta opened a trade office that is colocated in the Canadian office in Munich. We appreciate the co-operation of the Canadian government in making this possible. Also, last year Alberta signed a co-operation agreement with the German state of Saxony in the former East Germany. The ambassador and her staff play a vital role by assisting in our province's relationship with Germany, and we appreciate their efforts as Alberta actively seeks further German investment, trade, and tourism. Besides Alberta's close business ties we share close cultural ties with Germany as well. One in six Albertans is of German ancestry. I would ask that our honoured guest please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Premier I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly six members of the Public Affairs Bureau who are in the building today on their public service orientation tour. I'll ask them to stand as I call their names so that you can all recognize these very valuable employees. With us today are Sarah Burghardt, Kevin Donnan, Robin Fielding, John Lear, Kathy Reinhardt, and Jane Trotter. I'll ask them to rise again, and we will accord them our usual very warm welcome.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, seated in the members' gallery is a young man, a resident of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, who needs no introduction. He was our head page last year, recently retired and attending university. I'd ask Brent Shewchuk to rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of Edmonton-Centre. This gentleman is a member of the Central Lions Seniors organization and was a very active volunteer with Meals on Wheels until about 16 months ago when a pinched nerve in his back sidelined him. Don Perdue is here today to see his letter tabled, and I would ask him to now please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you 25 energetic students who are visiting the Legislature today from the village of Gwynne. They are accompanied by their teachers Char Fraser and Janice Nemecek and by parents Marilyn Zielke, Shelley Ohman, and Carol Senz. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you four very special community leaders who work within Community Development developing and delivering community programs. They are Lloyd Bentz, general manager of the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation; Pat Blakney, acting executive director of the Wild Rose Foundation; Clive Padfield, executive director of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts; and Les Hurt, director of the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation. These four foundations are all managed by volunteers in our community, and these are the professional staff who work with them, and we're very pleased to distribute approximately $76 million annually through their good graces and thanks to Alberta's Department of Gaming for important projects throughout our communities. Would you four all please rise together so we can salute you and thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to other members of the Assembly this afternoon a very special member of Alberta Gaming, Mr. Carl Royan. Carl is the director of lottery funded programs, and he and his staff manage the community facility enhancement program, some 38.5 million dollars, and the community initiative program, $30 million. This past year Carl and his staff were responsible for in excess of 1,700 successful grant applications. Carl, please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

School Construction

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Wednesday four new schools were announced for Calgary-Shaw by the local MLA. The next day when the Infrastructure list was released, it showed only three new schools for Calgary-Shaw. Then the list was revised with four new schools for Calgary-Shaw, but the Minister of Infrastructure said that his department would not fund the fourth school. Then the Premier's office said that the fourth school would get funding. To Albertans it looks like an extra $6 million that was not originally part of the government's capital plan will be spent as a result of a Tory MLA's initiative. To the Premier: who issued the order to put the Chaparral school back on the list, and where will the money come from to fund it?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is absolutely right. There was a flip; then there was a flop. Then there was a flop and then the flip. But the good news is that Chaparral is getting a school. I don't know how it all came about, but I'm trying to get to the bottom of it. The $6 million, I guess, will have to be found somewhere, but we can't have an MLA announce a school, then take it off the list, so we decided to do the right thing. [interjections] I'm so happy that the Liberals would be pleased that we did the right thing and put the school back on the list.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans are happy when we get a new school.

To the Minister of Infrastructure: why will you now pay for a project you said you wouldn't fund?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I think it's extremely important that we understand what was going on. The fact is we were very busy working with the Calgary board of education and somehow there was some information that got out that was only partially accurate. You've got to recognize that the last time that there were a number of announcements, it was about a month that we worked with the boards to get things right. The problem we have with this short time frame – we were working on old information within the department. It was a year old, and of course with the growth and the things that are happening in Calgary, there were changes and there are changes. We are continuing to work with the board, and I believe that everything will turn out okay in the end.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Finance: is this the kind of long-term stability you envisioned for your new capital plan, where your plans change in a heartbeat, or is this the first use of the new stabilization fund?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the capital plan that we filed last week in the budget was to put $5.5 billion of investment in this province. In that $5.5 billion there was $450 million allocated for new schools and renovated schools. That's a lot of money to meet the needs of Albertans. I don't think one Albertan is arguing about the priorities of this government.

Government Capital Assets

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, before the government's new capital plan was even a week old, a bungled decision-making process forced the government to deviate from the plan. Ad hoc-ery describes the government's infrastructure plan, and the plot thickens as the government considers selling off its capital assets. Each and every time this government sells off assets, the taxpayers of Alberta lose money. To the Premier: why are you even considering selling needed capital assets when it can't be proven to be cost-effective?

Mr. Klein: First of all, Mr. Speaker, relative to the preamble this is really what interests the Liberals. You're talking about an item that is one-twelfth of 1 percent of the total capital budget, and they get all excited about it. That shows you where their priorities lie.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the issue of selling capital assets, this is nothing new. This is nothing new. During the early to mid-90s we sold millions of dollars' worth of liquor stores, government facilities. What the Minister of Finance is saying is that if there is a building that becomes surplus to our needs – and I don't know what kind of a building that might be – then it stands to reason that rather than hold onto it and pay the maintenance on that building, we would sell it. That's all she's saying.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, I'll look after every penny of Albertans' dollars.

To the Premier: given that Alberta taxpayers are on the hook for billions of dollars because this government sold off their power plants at fire sale prices during energy deregulation, why has the government announced that more taxpayer-owned assets are for sale?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's too bad that all of Alberta isn't listening, because we never owned any power plants, so we had none to sell.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: will the Premier use the Holy Cross hospital in Calgary, which was sold for a quarter of its value and then leased back to the government at a great loss to taxpayers, as a model to follow when selling other facilities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, all of these items will be considered on their merits. The minister is not talking about willy-nilly going out there and selling off government assets. The minister – and I'm sure she will expand on the answer – is talking about possibly selling assets that are surplus to the needs of the government, and I'll have the minister respond.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, when the question was asked of me last week, after the release of the budget, during an editorial board about the capital plan and some of the alternative funding options that could be available, I made the comment that, you know, we have to accept that the government really isn't in the business of real estate, that in fact other people could own real estate and we could be an anchor tenant in that piece of real estate, that we didn't actually have to own the building. So the question came: would you sell off a piece of real estate? Well, the answer is yes, if it made sense. But I did say very clearly that any proposal that came forward would have to have a full business case analysis attached to it, and it would have to be beneficial to Albertans for us to dispose of that asset. A recommendation from the outside review panel would come to government, and we would assess it. If in fact it made sense, we would proceed. If it did not, we would not. That's all that conversation involved, and the hon. leader opposite is building this into a case that is not, quite frankly, there.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Property Taxes

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton schools find themselves in the worst of all worlds. Increases in the market value of property find the city contributing more and more to the provincial education pool while at the same time Edmonton public schools are being forced to cut staff and to increase class sizes. My first question is to the Premier. Why, when students need funding stability, does the province predicate the education budget on volatile property values that do not change equally across the province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we try to be as equitable as we possibly can. Market rates for property, the assessed value of property is predicated on the evaluation set by city assessors. We have absolutely nothing to do with assessing the value of property. We do have something to do with the distribution at least of the education portion of property tax, and it was decided that we should collect an amount in accordance with the growth in this province. The simple fact is that unless an individual's property value goes up as the result of reassessment, their education portion of the property tax should remain the same.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: when will the government follow the recommendations of ASBA and end its reliance on education property taxes?

1:50

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, everyone has an opinion on what should be done, what possibly can be done, but these are matters of major policy decisions, and that situation will have to be discussed thoroughly by caucus. It would have to go through the SPC process, perhaps a public consultation. You know, unlike the Liberals we don't think that money just falls from the sky. If you eliminate the education portion of the property tax, that money will have to be replaced. The Liberals are saying, "Spend, spend, spend, spend more," but they're saying: collect, collect, collect less. So I don't know, unless they are magicians over there, how you balance what they say and what we try to put into practice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how can communities like Edmonton fund their own municipal priorities when the government has downloaded so much onto their shoulders for education funding?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the mayor of Edmonton is somewhat happy. He was happy last night. I was with him at the hockey game; he was very happy. He didn't mention anything to me about any downloading whatsoever. As a matter of fact, he indicated to me that everything was sort of tickety-boo.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Redwater.

ATCO Electricity Rates

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. ATCO Electric's 110,000 residential and farm customers are going to be hit with a double whammy of rate hikes in their electricity bills this month. For the first 10 days of April the new flow-through electricity rate ATCO customers are being forced to pay is about 60 percent higher than the rate they paid last month. In addition, ATCO customers will soon have new rate riders added to their bills. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister confirm that the rates for ATCO Electric's residential and farm customers have increased about 60 percent since flow-through pricing kicked in on April 1, exactly as predicted last month by the New Democrat opposition?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, just as ATCO has had the lowest prices since the new market structure has been implemented, I assume that they're responsible under EUB rulings for their own charges. They file, and they follow the regulations as set out by the regulated rate option.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I've never seen a minister wash his hands of a problem like that before.

Can he confirm that ATCO Electric will soon make an application to the EUB to add rate riders to residential and farm power bills due to a financial shortfall ATCO incurred on their electricity purchases in the first quarter of 2003?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, no, I can't. There would be no reason for an electric utility company to be informing me of this or not informing me of this. In fact, we have a regulated market structure for the regulated rates, and then we're moving towards contract rates, and we're moving towards a fully competitive market structure.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister seems to believe that it's now just a question of the market setting the rates, what is his responsibility to protect consumers from high electricity bills, or is he just going to completely wash his hands of the whole issue?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the preamble is so erroneous that it makes the question hypothetical and therefore unanswerable.

Bingo Industry

Mr. Broda: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission is in the process of updating the terms and conditions of the operation of bingo. Some of the charities in my constituency are worried that these changes will have a negative impact on bingo revenues. My first question is to the Minister of Gaming. Will charities suffer as a result of these policy changes?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the proposed changes to the terms and conditions are in fact meant to revitalize the bingo industry and to enhance the returns to charities. Over the past several years across North America and certainly here in Alberta attendance at bingos has been going down, and as such the returns to charities have been declining. The terms and conditions that are proposed add flexibility to the bingo industry and, as such, an opportunity to take advantage of the flexibility and enhance the returns to charities. I have no doubt that these proposals will in fact enhance the returns to our charities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Gaming. A number of bingo associations think that they cannot meet the proposed guaranteed rate of return for their charities. If bingo associations think that the charitable return criteria is unattainable, why is it that this is in the draft terms and conditions?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, bingo is very much about the charities. It's not just simply about the prizes. What's important at the end of the day is that the charities do receive a reasonable rate of return. The licensing policy review that was looked at by this government in 2001 and approved by the government had a provision that there would be guaranteed returns to the charities. The average returns last year were 17 percent. The proposal is for a range, depending on performance of the individual association, of between 15 and 24 percent and, as such, would appear to be a reasonable range.

Mr. Broda: The second supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is to the same minister. Why has the AGLC proposed that registered bingo workers cannot play in the bingo halls where they work?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, integrity is a key to Alberta Gaming. It's important to be honest, but it's also important to appear to be honest. On a number of occasions there have been issues raised with Alberta Gaming regarding bingo workers actually playing bingo in the facility in which they work. This policy is consistent with the policy we have with respect to casino workers. In other words, casino workers cannot play in the casino in which they work. There are a number of bingo associations which in fact have already voluntarily prohibited their employees from playing bingo in the facility in which they work, and this particular policy has been in place in Saskatchewan for the last 10 years and is also in Ontario and appears to be working well.

Health Care Labour Relations

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the message from this government to regional health authorities is loud and clear: we don't fund labour settlements. If a labour settlement costs RHAs more than the government budget covers, the RHAs will have to cut services and compromise care even if that settlement is forced on RHAs by binding arbitration. As a result, RHAs could soon be in the same bind school boards are in today. To the Premier: how can the Premier assure Albertans that the government's refusal to cover future labour settlements won't force RHAs to lay off staff and reduce beds and services?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, that question is highly speculative. The hon. member makes some assumptions. We don't know what those settlements are going to be. We hope that they will be reasonable, and certainly we have indicated – and we have to budget – what we're willing to accommodate relative to overall operating for regional health authorities, and included in that overall operating, of course, are salaries, which consume, I would suspect, the majority of the operating costs. We set down in the budget what we think is an appropriate amount to accommodate the regional health authorities to offset their operating costs, which include salaries, and they take it from there.

Dr. Taft: To the Minister of Health and Wellness: is it government policy to allow regional health authorities to sell off hospitals and health care facilities to finance settlements for nurses and technicians?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you, sir. I just want to go back to Monday, April 7, to a CBC newscast when the hon. Leader of the Opposition, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, was asked to comment on what he expected out of the health care budget on the following day, which was budget day, being the 8th of April. His comment was that in health care we need to look for something in the neighbourhood of 6 and a half to 7 percent. The budget that was actually tabled is 7.2 percent. So, clearly, on the issue of the sufficiency of funding in health care what we provided as a government in our budget is even surpassing what the expectation of the Leader of the Opposition was.

Out of that 7.2 percent, a global amount of something that will be in the range of $7.35 billion or nearly $20 million a day, we think it's perfectly reasonable that the allocation given to regional health authorities will be appropriate for them to come up with a good, solid arrangement with nurses.

We have had good experiences in the past. We know that both nurses and their employers, the regional health authorities, struck an agreement that was in the range of 22 percent the last time around. There was some catch-up, and I think that the public well knows about how large this agreement was. In this round of negotiations I don't think that there's the same expectation on the part of the Alberta public that we would be able to fund an agreement of that magnitude. Expectations are much more reasonable this time around.

We do value our nurses. We think that the regional health authorities are doing a good job. Nurses are well paid in this province, and there are many issues that we need to deal with in terms of their contract. The regional health authorities are moving forward on that, and that is what we should expect to see in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He completely dodged the question, so let's try somebody else.

To the Minister of Innovation and Science, who chairs the cabinet committee on labour relations: will he and his committee agree to meet with representatives of the United Nurses, the Health Sciences Association, and other health care unions?

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would ask your direction on this matter. The legislation to do with labour and health is not under my purview, so I would request your advice in respect to answering this question.

The Speaker: The protocol is very simple, hon. minister. With questions directed to the government, anyone in the government may choose to answer.

The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. We've already met, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Automobile Repair Industry

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past weekend a national consumer protection agency reported on their findings regarding their cross-country investigation into the integrity and competency of the automobile repair business. The results nationally were mixed, with some excellent and some not so excellent results. Of disappointment to Calgarians was the finding that the two most expensive incorrect auto repairs in the country were both in Calgary shops. This small investigation seems, however, to have touched on some issues that are very big issues with my constituents in Calgary-Currie, at least the ones that I discussed this with over the weekend. My questions are to the Minister of Government Services. Does the government of Alberta send out undercover investigators with car problems to test automobile repair shops in a similar manner to what this consumer protection group did?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the automotive repair business, particularly in Calgary, has not just 10 automotive repair shops in it. There are literally thousands in that city. To pick out 10 and accuse those 10 and make the assumption that 60 percent of the shops in Calgary are doing bad things is wrong because there are thousands of shops that are doing a really, really good job, and they have employees that do a very, very good job.

But it is unfortunate that there are individuals and there are corporations and there are companies out there that do unethical things. So to mitigate that, we have in Alberta the Fair Trading Act, which has an automotive business regulation component to it. That is administered by the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council, known as AMVIC. AMVIC is an agency that reports to Albertans through my department, and it's designed to protect consumers against illegal and unethical business practices. AMVIC also has a consumer alert program where they can designate and notify consumers about the businesses and the individuals who are doing unscrupulous things. I would encourage the hon. member to ask any of his constituents who may believe that they have been treated badly or less than fairly in the automotive repair business in Calgary to phone our Government Services call centre at 1-877-427-4088 for the AMVIC phone number.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: what trends has the government identified in terms of numbers and types of complaints emanating from consumers in regard to automobile repairs?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council takes very seriously every single complaint that comes into its offices. The council is currently working on a trend analysis and is compiling statistics based on science rather than hearsay. I want to share with the hon. member, since he asked the question, that last year, from the statistics available, AMVIC fielded 6,600 complaints. A hundred and forty-two of those cases were resolved by mediation. Another 244 led to formal investigations. One business was closed as a result of AMVIC action, three businesses had their licences revoked, and 97 had criminal charges that were laid against them. So considering the number of businesses and the number of employees that we have, this legislation works for Albertans through the AMVIC investigations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister explain what else the government does proactively to ensure honesty, integrity, and accountability in the automobile repair industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. After more than two years of consultation with the industry and with consumers the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council has assumed responsibility for administering and enforcing the portions of the Fair Trading Act that apply to consumer protection for the automotive field. Businesses involved in all aspects of the automotive sector, including repairs and maintenance of automobiles, trucks – and recreational vehicles are even included in this – as well as the people that sell them and the people that work on the automobiles involved must be licensed by AMVIC. AMVIC provides a level playing field not only for the business but for consumers, and they strive to make a fair marketplace. They are also involved with education, training, and consumer satisfaction supports to make sure that the automotive business and the salespeople are legitimate in the province of Alberta.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, last Thursday I asked the Minister of Infrastructure to explain what made him think that using P3s for financing infrastructure was a good idea. The minister responded that groups like Bethany Care, Caritas, and the Good Samaritan Society have made P3s work in this province, but the minister knows full well that these nonprofit organizations are not the ones who would be financing provincial capital projects. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why did the minister cite the examples of Caritas and Bethany Care when asked about the wisdom of financing infrastructure with private dollars? Did these companies become for-profit financial institutions without telling anyone?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, it's very interesting that the member would ask that question today, because just this morning I met with two of the mentioned groups talking about their financing, not us financing but their financing. So they, in fact, do finance facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that P3 financing has failed in every other jurisdiction in which it has been tried, what evidence does this minister have that it will work in Alberta?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we've just finished demonstrating to the member how it worked so well in these other cases. If the hon. member wants to go have another look, maybe you could go down to Olds College and watch down there what P3s can do.

Mr. Bonner: The private sector, Ty.

Mr. Lund: The hon. member says: well, that was the private sector. Well, what do you think we're talking about? The private sector getting in with the public and in fact it having facilities built that are very effective in the delivery of a service: that's what this is all about.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that the Minister of Infrastructure has repeatedly failed to table any of the myriad of evidence he claims to have showing the effectiveness of P3s, will the Premier table these documents for him?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of tabling any documents for the hon. minister. We have a system set up to evaluate whether in fact P3s should be used. That system involves a private sector, people a lot more knowledgeable than the Liberals in financing, in real estate, to evaluate the worthiness of a project and whether or not that project should be submitted to a P3 process. It's a fair and unbiased evaluation, and while there have been some failures relative to P3s, there have been some tremendous successes. We want to make sure that whatever we undertake relative to P3s is indeed successful, that it works. That's why there will be this independent, unbiased evaluation by experts, not Liberals, in the private sector.

Livestock Industry Review

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are involved in the cattle industry, so they've got a great deal of interest in all the ongoing activities related to that industry. My questions today are for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Why are the livestock marketing and brand inspection processes being reviewed at this time?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think that a number of members would recall that prior to this change in brand inspections the brand inspections were actually managed by government. A wise decision, I believe, was made in 1998 to turn it over to the industry, and they've been managing that process since. Some parts of it have gone very well, and some have had some bumps along the way, but when we made that decision, we agreed that there would be a legislative review, and the time is coming to do that. This involves four acts and 14 regulations that are administered by LIS on behalf of our government, and it's important, I think, that we take the time now, prior to the fifth anniversary of this relatively new entity, to ensure that it is really meeting all of the expectations of the industry stakeholders. It'll give our industry stakeholders an opportunity to have input into the future of livestock marketing and brand inspection and related legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again. I'm sure many of my constituents will welcome this review. Could she tell me what the status of the ongoing review is and how my constituents and other industry stakeholders can participate?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, early in 2002 there was a legislative review working group convened and a legislative review steering committee. We have representatives on that from our department, as does Livestock Identification Services. The first round of industry consultation is under way. About 300 packages have been distributed. They contain some discussion papers and questionnaires, and to give an indication of the importance and the size of this industry, they have been distributed to about 225 industry organizations. I might also say that for people who are not a part of that who are interested in accessing this information and making comments on it, it is on the LIS web site as well as Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development's Ropin' the Web web site.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the same minister: how will this review process be of any benefit to the livestock industry?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that certainly we have great expectations of the review process, and the industry also has responded in kind. In fact, as of April 7 we've had about 200 questionnaires returned to us, so it is an item of a great deal of interest.

Mr. Speaker, livestock transitions need to flow efficiently, and this will, I think, improve that where it's required. It'll, I think, increase confidence in the integrity of the industry, create standard rules that allow all industry stakeholders to structure future business plans.

As we have noted over the past years, the issue of food safety is of great importance to people, and it's interesting that we are one of the few jurisdictions that really do have a livestock identification service that can provide trace backs and identification in a very prompt and secure manner.

Energy Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sparks flew at an all-Tory standing policy committee meeting on energy last Monday night after Aquila made a presentation much to the interest of a reporter from the St. Albert Gazette. Confusion and frustration about energy deregulation have now spilled over from Alberta consumers into the divided Tory caucus. A high-ranking Tory cabinet minister present stated, and I quote: I consider myself fortunate that only 25 percent of my constituency is served by Aquila; for some of my colleagues with almost 100 percent of their constituencies covered by Aquila, this must be just killing them. End of quote. My first question is to the Premier. Given that Aquila claims that its billing system is 99 percent accurate, is energy deregulation to blame for the endless number of complaints that are coming to the constituency offices?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, is energy deregulation to blame? My answer to that is no. Of course, you can't go back and you can't reregulate energy to know what the rates would be today. You know, that is the problem. So it's so easy for the Liberals, because it's a good 15-second sound bite, to say that it's all due to deregulation and to this government. That's a good 15-second sound bite, and they don't have to justify it. They don't have to do any comparisons to a regulated environment. They can't because we don't have a regulated environment. So my answer would be no, and if they want to say something to the contrary, then I guess it's up to them to prove it.

You know, I can recall 2000, I guess, when deregulation came in, January 1, and the price of power shot way up. Of course, the opposition at that time said: well, it's all because of deregulation. They purposely failed to mention to the Alberta public that a number of power plants were down at that particular time, that the price of gas shot to an all-time high, that the economy of the province was growing at an unprecedented rate. They forgot to point out all of those things, Mr. Speaker, because the simple thing, at least for a Liberal, was to come up with a 15-second sound bite saying: oh, this is all due to deregulation. That is the simple thing. That is the way they find solutions. That's the way they present solutions to problems: through a 15-second sound bite.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that energy deregulation is the cause of high energy bills, not Liberal policy, the Liberal policy that he is free to take, what constituencies besides Cypress-Medicine Hat are continuing to hear about problems of billing accuracy and poor consumer relations from Aquila?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, without doubt – and I'll concede this to the hon. member – there have been some billing problems. The Minister of Energy and the Minister of Government Services have been dealing with this particular situation, the situation as it specifically relates to Aquila, and I will have the two ministers respond as to what they are doing relative to this situation.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the companies that are involved with respect to the billing inaccuracies – namely, Aquila and an electricity provider by the name of EPCOR – were on the consultation team prior to the introduction of the new market model. They were involved from 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, so they were supposed to have been prepared to deliver commercial solutions to commercial problems. In effect, these are commercial problems. In order to hasten that improvement, we put an order in, a deficiency regulation, such that the EUB will upon review of a customer's file and finding out that there's an inaccurate meter reading refund the customer $75. Now, to this point it's my understanding that out of 350,000 customers billed about four times, the EUB has in fact delivered in between 250 and 400 refunds.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier consider a suggestion from a frustrated rural Tory backbencher, this time from the Drayton Valley-Calmar constituency, and implement a $75 fine for Aquila, similar to the one that was legislated for EPCOR, or are you going to continue to pick winners and losers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, relative to the situation as it pertains to protection of the consumer, I'll ask the minister responsible to respond.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, we had all five companies, including rural electrification units, sitting at the task force table, and every single solitary one of those people agreed with the outcomes of the task force in terms of simplifying bills, making them easier to read, making them more understanding of what was being charged. When we came around to the issue of billing accuracies in terms of what is on the bill and whether it is actually accurate according to what the meter may have put forward, they all agreed that customer service organizations within each of their companies, not just one company but within each of their companies, would do two things. The first thing was to work better together between the wire service provider and the billing agent. Secondly, as an individual company they would make sure that those billing accuracies would be looked after by their customer service people.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, two years ago this government promised to cap the amount they collected in property taxes at $1.2 billion. It's not the first time this government has broken its "the only way taxes are going is down" promise. This is the same government that raised health care premiums and added over 70 new fees last year. Now, according to the city of Edmonton the government's latest tax grab will add close to 9 percent to the provincial tax bill in the form of school levy for Edmonton homeowners. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Will Edmonton homeowners be paying more in provincial property taxes because of her budget? Yes or no?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, last week in our budget we announced that we were freezing the mill rate for the property assessment for school taxes, a move that we had done the previous year. What we said, though, was that with the number of people that have come to the province and settled here and built or bought homes, we would capture the growth within the province. The market value assessment on their homes will be based on the current market value assessment that their city has put out to them. If there has been no increase in the market value assessment of their homes, there'll be no change in their property tax insofar as school tax goes. So it's on an individual basis. Some communities have seen their assessments flat, others have seen them go up, and some communities' within the larger cities have actually gone down.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister has broken her promise, why should Edmonton homeowners care about the mill rate if the end result of this broken promise is an 8.9 percent increase in their taxes?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the only part of the equation that the province actually sets is the mill rate assessment for education on the property assessment. Now, we don't do the market value assessment; we don't do the city side of the equation. We only set the mill rate for the education component. That's all we do, and that has been frozen.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I ask the minister again: why did she break her promise to cap – to cap – the total amount of revenue collected from the provincial property tax? That's the question she hasn't answered.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, only someone who doesn't realize that this province has an economic climate that is making it grow would ask such a silly question. We've frozen the mill rate. With more people coming here, there are more people contributing to tax. You just have look at our financial statements and realize that we have kept our personal income taxes low. We've in fact indexed the increase on it to make sure it's the lowest, but we receive more. Why? Because there are more people in this province paying into the pot, so there are more dollars coming forward. I don't know why this is so hard for him to understand. We froze the mill rate. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, actually, you know, if somebody asks a question and somebody agrees to answer the question, we really shouldn't heckle either the questioner or the responder to the question.

Let's try now the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Low-income Support Programs

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As part of Budget 2003 government announced an increase for some people receiving supports for independence, or SFI. Families with children will receive an additional $20 per month increase effective June 1 and keep the projected $15 per month increase per child from the national child benefit starting in August. For the people on SFI who are not expected to work, they also get a $20 per month raise starting June 1. My question is for the Minister of Alberta Human Resources and Employment. People receiving AISH are also not expected to work, but many do and in some cases have children to support. Why didn't the AISH, or the assured income for the severely handicapped, recipients also get an increase?

Mr. Dunford: We were looking at two situations, Mr. Speaker: first of all, of course, our supports for independence program and also AISH. In terms of AISH this is a program that is recognized as probably the most generous across Canada; if not, certainly at the top of the list. So it was felt that we would concentrate more on the supports for independence side as we move forward.

Now, we didn't forget about AISH altogether. Many members here in the House have for a long time had concerns with constituents of theirs that are on AISH that are also receiving income from the Canada pension plan, and of course, Mr. Speaker, as we are all aware, the CPP is indexed to a cost-of-living measure. Sometimes it does happen where a minor increase in the consumer price index can actually move them above the $850 and then take them off of AISH. In recognizing that, then, Budget 2003, of course is now extending health benefits to those AISH clients that run into that experience.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental question is to the same minister. What can AISH recipients expect down the road and into the future?

Mr. Dunford: I've made the commitment, Mr. Speaker, to AISH stakeholders here in the province to be having a look at how we can make sure that this program can continue and can continue on a sustainable basis. We've increased the budget within Budget 2003, but frankly that is to take the anticipated growth in the program.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the first of several members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a longtime friend and constituent and probably most important of all a trail-riding partner, Mr. Pat James. He's seated in the public gallery. I'd like to note also that Pat in addition to his duties as a county of Mountain View councillor also is a director with the AAMD and C. I would ask Pat to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

90th Anniversary of Olds College

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday a number of colleagues joined me in Olds to celebrate and recognize the 90th anniversary of Olds College at a very gala event.

Olds College is a vibrant educational centre in the heart of my constituency. The primary focus of the college is promoting a strong agriculture sector in Alberta by educating students in all aspects of agriculture, whether it be the business side, the research side, or practical applications of new technologies. One of the greatest things about Olds College is that it takes all these innovations, some of which are made at their very own Centre for Innovation, and shows Alberta farmers how to apply them on the farm. Albertans appreciate the practical skills and know-how, and Olds College excels at getting that know-how to rural Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, it's no secret that Alberta is moving towards an increasingly diversified ag sector, and the search for new ways to make money on the family farm knows no bounds. It's largely because of the skills that students learn at Olds College that agriculture is growing so quickly.

I want to commend Olds College and ask this Assembly to join me in wishing them the very best of luck and success in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Leigh Goldie

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Hon. Gene Zwozdesky, Minister of Community Development, announced Alberta's first annual athletes and volunteers of the year. One of this year's volunteer recipients is longtime Grande Prairie resident Leigh Goldie of the Alberta Volleyball Association. Leigh has been avidly involved in the volleyball community for 25 years. In 1984 he formed the Wolves Volleyball Club in Grande Prairie, and since then he has remained as a director of the club and has helped it to grow and flourish to become one of the largest clubs in Canada.

At the provincial level Leigh has been a longtime executive member of the Alberta Volleyball Association and was also chair of volleyball for the 2000 Alberta Summer Games in Grande Prairie. Currently Leigh is the vice-president in charge of finance and administration for the Alberta Volleyball Association.

Mr. Speaker, he has received numerous awards including the 1998 builder of the year for the Grande Prairie Multi-Sport Development Centre, coach of the year for ACAC men's volleyball in 1989, and the Routledge award in 1997 from the Health and Physical Education Council. I would ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing Mr. Leigh Goldie.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Excellence in Teaching Awards

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize six finalists for the 2003 excellence in teaching awards whose schools are in the Edmonton-Gold Bar constituency. These teachers are six of the many great educators in this province and have been chosen with 122 other fine educators by a selection committee of representatives of stakeholder groups and education partners in early childhood services to grade 12 learning community as finalists for the 15th annual excellence in teaching awards. These finalists for the excellence in teaching awards have demonstrated creativity, innovation, and effectiveness in teaching.

I would like to recognize Jennifer Prestash and Randy George Radmanovich from l'école Kenilworth school; Errol Valentine Johnson, Mary Kelsey, and Diane Gayle Smarsh from McNally high school, Sharon Goulet from the Suzuki charter school.

Transmitting the collective knowledge of our community from one generation to the next is the most important job in our society, and our teachers do it very well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Canadian Men's Curling Team

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today in the Assembly to recognize an outstanding sporting event and a remarkable group of athletes, the Canadian men's curling team. On Sunday, April 13, the Canadian skip, Randy Ferbey, and his teammates defeated Switzerland 10-6 in nine ends of curling to win the gold medal at the world curling championship in Winnipeg.

The Canadian team consists of lead Marcel Rocque, the pride and joy of St. Paul, who threw 96 percent for the final match; second Scott Pfeifer; third Dave Nedohin; skip Randy Ferbey; fifth Dan Holowaychuk; and coach Brian Moore. All are residents of Edmonton and Sherwood Park playing at the Avonair Curling Club in Edmonton, the city of champions.

Curling combines strategy with skill, and Canada has dominated, winning eight curling world championships since 1992 including 2003 and a record 29 since the Scotch Cup started in 1959. Canadians may not have invented curling, but we sure have made it our own.

I would ask that the Members of the Legislative Assembly join me in congratulating all members of the Canadian curling team for their extraordinary talent and their gold medal win at the world championships.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Calgary G-8 Organizing Committee

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and honour to rise today to recognize the Calgary G-8 Organizing Committee for winning the White Hat of the Year award in Calgary last Tuesday. All eyes were on them and Calgary and area to successfully execute this event, the most significant international occurrence here since 1988. The event's success not only helped secure our reputation as a safe world-class destination and host for major diplomatic events, but it generated 1,500 full-time jobs and an estimated economic impact of $193.1 million for Calgary and area businesses.

Mr. Speaker, Calgary and area enjoyed extensive regional, national, and international media coverage before and during the event. Our city's promotion as a world-class destination for both business and leisure travel was unmatched by this opportunity. The organizing team's contribution has helped to establish a legacy for Calgary as an international host, and political leaders and international media responded with praise and suggestions that future events be modeled and measured based on this team's successes.

Congratulations to Mayor Dave Bronconnier, Police Chief Jack Beaton, Fire Chief Wayne Morris, Calgary emergency medical service's chief Rick Stanger, city of Calgary G-8 project manager John Chapput, and city of Calgary CEO Dale Stanway for representing Calgary and the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton Highlands.

Action for Healthy Communities

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize a program of the Edmonton Healthcare Citizenship Society that was established in 1993. The Action for Healthy Communities is committed to building stronger and healthier communities through a community-building process that fosters citizen participation and advocacy for public policy that improves the health of the community. Example projects include collective kitchens, tai chi lessons, and development of a mental health awareness video.

Under the direction of co-ordinator Debbie Chaba they are currently working on an energy retrofit project partnered with Michael Kalmanovitch and the Ecology Systems Information Society, assisting homeowners in central Edmonton on limited budgets who are interested in reducing energy consumption and saving money.

Action for Healthy Communities exists to improve the well-being of their community, and I applaud their work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to beg your forgiveness, sir, for my breach of protocol in my just-passed recognition. I inadvertently mentioned the member's name in the House.

Speaker's Ruling

Referring to Members by Name

The Speaker: Hon. members, perhaps just a bit of explanation why this is rather important. It's not one of those rules that just sort of kicked in out of the blue. Two things can happen, and hon. members can see the use of names in this Assembly where some hon. members, unfortunately, have a difficult time dealing with a certain name from a certain culture, and sometimes there's a slurring, which is an embarrassment to the member and an embarrassment to the person whose name is mentioned. So in the Assembly itself there may be names which, depending how you pronounce them, may lead to some considerable degree of embarrassment for everybody.

Now, we have no current member called Paquette. Now, you can play some unfortunate games with that name. We have no member called Foquette. The rule is very clear. We mention the member's constituency and not the name.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present five copies of 18 letters addressed to the Minister of Health and Wellness and myself requesting that the Didsbury health services be located in the Calgary regional health authority.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a letter from St. Rita's parish in the community of Valleyview urging the provincial government to deinsure the practice of abortion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and table five copies of a letter from constituent Don Perdue, who's asking if it's true that "medicare is being slow in delivery to seniors in the hope that they will pass away and thus the governments will save money" since they no longer have to pay pensions. This constituent notes that money being spent that's paid into the medical system "does not appear to be used to relieve the patients who pay for it in taxes and premiums."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I have two tablings today. The first is a letter on behalf of the Liberal caucus signed by our leader congratulating the team of Randy Ferbey, Marcel Rocque, Scott Pfeifer, and Dave Nedohin on winning their second world curling championship in a row.

The next letter is again signed by the Leader of the Official Opposition on behalf of the Alberta Liberal caucus to Mike Weir on being the first Canadian to win the Masters championship.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your concurrence I have three tablings this afternoon. First are five copies of a study entitled Teachers' Instructional Practices in Small Classes by Haughey, Snart, and da Costa, soon to be published in the Alberta Journal of Educational Research, volume 49, issue 2, in the summer of 2003. The study details how small classes facilitate a variety of instructional strategies, effectively moving children to the literacy goals of the grade 1 curriculum.

The second study – and I have five copies of it, Mr. Speaker – is entitled Enhancing Literacy Achievement in Small Grade 1 Classes in High Poverty Environments, soon to be published in the Canadian Journal of Education, June 2003, by Haughey, da Costa, and Snart, concluding that smaller classes, a focus on literacy, and continued professional development was successful in helping grade 1 students in high poverty, high transiency environments make solid gains in their academic and social abilities.

The third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Melanie Shapiro indicating how the 2003 budget cuts will mean larger classes in Edmonton schools and that the impact of that on children will result in behaviour problems and less individual attention.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first one is the market surveillance administrator's annual report for the year 2002. This is dated the 10th of February of this year, and it's the market surveillance administrator, again, from the Power Pool of Alberta. I would urge all hon. members who are nervous about energy deregulation to please read this.

My second tabling is copies of a petition, and it states, "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to demand the government fund education adequately and equally across the province."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a document. It's an editorial in the Alberta Doctors' Digest March-April 2003 issue. This document is called Lies, Damned Lies and Politicians' Promises and mentions how the Alberta government's ideology of privatization is harming consumers and how Albertans have felt scorned from remarks in this House that they can afford to pay greatly increased costs of natural gas and electricity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a document today from ATCO Electric showing the steep rate hikes being incurred by its residential and farm customers as a result of the Tory government's flow-through electric pricing scheme. This is consistent with New Democrat opposition predictions made last month.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 10, it is my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 11 and 12.

[Motion carried]

Transportation Achievement Bonuses

Q11. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. Bonner that the following question be accepted.

What is the amount of each bonus and aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within the Ministry and Department of Transportation over the 2001-2002 fiscal year broken down by the identity of and amount paid to each official?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to accept Written Question 11 with amendments, and the amendments have been distributed to all members, shared with the opposition before 11 this morning. I'd like to move that Written Question 11 be amended by (a) striking out "amount of each bonus and," (b) striking out "senior officials" and substituting "employees, and the number of employees who received a bonus," and (c) striking out "identity of and amount paid to each official" and substituting "range of bonus dollar amounts and the number of employees who received a bonus within that range.”

Mr. Speaker, the amended written question would then read as follows:

What is the aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to employees and the number of employees who received a bonus within the Ministry and Department of Transportation over the 2001-2002 fiscal year broken down by the range of bonus dollar amounts and the number of employees who received a bonus with that range?

The rationale for this amendment, of course, is to be consistent with the spirit and intent of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move that Written Question 11 be accepted as amended.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak against this amendment. This is part of a manner of operating that I see this government increasingly using that I have to object to. The changes as outlined by the minister in this amendment to the original motion are so thorough as to make the original question meaningless. When you change almost every word and every clause in here to take out all of the information that is pertinent, it makes the original request meaningless. For a government that claims to be open and accountable, open and transparent – we’ll give you any information you want – it’s making a mockery of this process.

We’re not getting the information that we’re requesting, and this is information that’s widely available inside the government. The government knows exactly how much percentage of bonus it’s going to offer to each level. There are supposed to be targets set and achieved by these senior officials in order to receive the bonus. Why is this information not available to the public? The public’s tax dollars are paying for these bonuses. Why do they not get to hear? The Official Opposition and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry didn’t ask for people’s names. It just said various senior officials that were in the particular positions, and that’s now been watered down so much that it’s meaningless.

I will note that this government makes the school boards and the regional health authorities publish the amounts of bonuses that the superintendents of the school boards and the CEOs of the regional health authorities get – makes them, requires them, or publishes for them – but what’s good for the goose doesn’t seem to be good for the gander here. So I question what the big secret is. If you’re proud enough of these employees and their work is exemplary enough that they stand to have earned an achievement bonus, then fine: let’s see what the positions are; let’s see what the targets were that they were to achieve and how well they achieved them. But this level of disguise and obfuscation and smoke and mirrors that’s now going on with this government is utterly unacceptable to me. If you’re so open and transparent and accountable, then let’s see it. These kinds of shenanigans are totally unacceptable to me.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the amendment.

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am speaking against the amendment. This amendment effectively neuters the original question as put on the Order Paper and doesn’t give us any kind of comparative . . . [interjection] No. I’m speaking about government members, hon. minister. It doesn’t give us the kind of information that we require to make good comparisons.

We have a government who continually talks about how they like to parrot the practice of industry. Well, industry does report bonuses and information of that kind to their shareholders and often makes that public in public documents. So for this government to continually hide behind legislation when it doesn’t need to is irresponsible and certainly does not meet any of the parts of its mandate that it continually talks about having in terms of openness and accountability. So I definitely will be voting against the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Now on the main motion as amended, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We asked for this information about bonuses and aggregate amounts of bonuses to the department so that we could start to do what this government should be doing in its business plans, which is monitoring comparative figures and taking a look at relating actual performance . . .

Dr. Taylor: Monitoring?

Ms Carlson: Yes, monitoring. And you talk about it, Minister of Environment, but in fact, Mr. Speaker, he doesn’t do it. So this is a way of putting into place one of those kinds of reporting practices so that we can actually see if performance ties in to dollars paid. We believe it doesn’t. We believe that if it did, this government would have no problem disclosing that amount, so that’s why we asked for this particular question in the first place.

[Written Question 11 as amended carried]

Municipal Affairs Achievement Bonuses

Q12. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. Bonner that the following question be accepted.

What is the amount of each bonus and aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within the Ministry and Department of Municipal Affairs over the 2001-2002 fiscal year broken down by the identity of and amount paid to each official?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly am prepared to accept Written Question 12 with amendments, and the information has been shared with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry in accordance with the procedures.

I would like to also move at this time that Written Question 12 be accepted as amended. I would like to add, though, that, you know, in keeping with the spirit and the intent of freedom of information and protection of privacy and the points that were made earlier in terms of accountability and transparency, the bottom line is that what taxpayers should know is simply how much their tax dollars are going towards. Certainly, with the new amendment that I’m putting forward, it would read as such:

What is the aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to employees and the number of employees who received a bonus within the Ministry and Department of Municipal Affairs over the 2001-2002 fiscal year broken down by the range of bonus dollar amounts and the number of employees who received a bonus within that range?

This certainly keeps to the spirit and the intent of accountability and transparency.

So moved.

The Speaker: But, hon. minister, you're not moving anything. Now, we're on an amendment.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He'll learn the rules eventually, I'm sure.

On the amendment, once again this one does the same thing as the other amendment does, which does not give us the information which makes people accountable for the dollars that they are receiving, so we don't like this amendment either. In fact, once again I'm surprised that this minister wants to hide behind that legislation, because there are many cases and many other circumstances where bonuses and dollars paid out to individuals in high-ranking decision-making positions are completely transparent and are available for public scrutiny, and we would expect that same kind of behaviour from this government.

The Speaker: Okay. So the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has moved an amendment. This is now what's before the Assembly.

[Written Question 12 as amended carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 10, it is my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 12 and 13.

[Motion carried]

3:00 Sustainable Resource Development Liability Claims

M12. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the 62 contingent liability claims against the Department of Sustainable Resource Development in the 2001-02 fiscal year as mentioned in responses to supplementary questions from the Committee of Supply, April 16, 2002, and attached to correspondence code DM02-KC-0671 from the Hon. Mike Cardinal, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

The Speaker: Now, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that Motion for a Return 12 be rejected, and the reason for this is because the information requested is protected by sections 25 and 27 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, or FOIP. In fact, as stated in the legislation, disclosure of this information could possibly, one, harm the economic interests of the government of Alberta; two, result in financial loss to the government of Alberta; three, compromise or interfere with negotiations with the government of Alberta; four, prejudice the government's legal position on matters in question; and five, result in the loss of legal privileges attached to some of the information in question. For these reasons we will not be accepting this motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have a real problem with the rejection of this motion. At least we could have expected some amendment to give more general information about this.

If you take a look at responsible financial reporting and any kinds of accounting principles used by any governments worldwide or any corporations worldwide, you will see that they have rules in place for disclosing contingent liabilities on financial statements. Even if we don't get who the contingent liabilities are with or the individual amounts that could be outstanding, at least we need to get a best estimation of what this government expects to pay out over time, because that does impact the financial viability of the province and is an outstanding liability that does need to be recorded. So we find these to be quite irresponsible accounting practices, never mind governing practices or revenue projection practices.

We would urge the minister to consider releasing some sort of information in and around these contingent liabilities so that good decisions can be made by all those reviewing the statements, because we need that information to be reflecting accurate liabilities in all cases.

The Speaker: The Assembly will only be voting on the motion put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, not the motion put forward by the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

[Motion for a Return 12 lost]

Kyoto Accord

M13. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all correspondence between the Minister of Environment, the Premier, Public Affairs Bureau, and the Minister of Energy regarding the Kyoto accord and Alberta's anti-Kyoto campaign.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I must say that it is my privilege and pleasure to respond to this motion. Simply put, this motion cannot be accepted. Not only does the motion ask for information that is privileged under FOIP – and the member and her caucus so strongly support FOIP, so they should know that – but it certainly makes assumptions about last year's climate change discussions. It talks about an anti-Kyoto campaign, and I just want to make very clear to this member that our campaign was a pro climate change campaign on a national basis. It was not about anti-Kyoto; it was about pro climate change and a national plan. As well, if our plan was anti anything, it was anti federal intrusion into areas of provincial jurisdiction, and certainly I would say strongly still that we must stand up and protect Alberta's interests from the anti federal intrusion into our jurisdiction, which is something that the members opposite don't seem to understand with their close connections to the government in Ottawa.

So I clearly – clearly – urge all members not to accept this motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What this government truly is is anti openness and accountability, as certainly shown by the amendments and rejections of motions today. [interjection] That is certainly true. The Member for Edmonton-Centre's comments are very accurate.

How this member can stand here with a straight face and say that they had a pro climate change agenda – well, I see he's not so straight faced now that he's sitting down in his seat. A pro climate change agenda: what was that about? I must have been out of the province during that debate, because I certainly didn't hear it. What I saw was a lot of money being spent on a stance which they have subsequently had to soften, I'm happy to see, in the new bill that we see coming out on climate change and the commitment of some dollars to moving forward on this particular item in the budget. So it's nice to see that perhaps he's moving from his before Christmas anti-Kyoto stand to this stand now which is going to be working in some co-operation. So it isn't all bad, bad feds. It's also uninformed provincial government on the issues and on where in fact their liabilities do lie and what they do have control over in terms of the province.

It's important for people in this province to know what this government is doing, and I would remind this minister, who aspires to being well read, that other jurisdictions do make available these kinds of documents. I would refer the minister to Australia, where they do have certain rules that impose a degree of openness and accountability on governments. I have seen this minister in the past cherry-pick those ideas from Australia that he likes. So I would encourage him to take more ideas than just those that he likes, and some of them include making public these kinds of pieces of correspondence which help the voters know where their money is being spent and the kinds of filters their government is using for decision-making, particularly when they're making poor decisions.

So we would urge all members in this Assembly to vote for the acceptance of this motion.

Bill 204
Insurance (Accident Insurance Benefits)
Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate April 7: Dr. Taft]

The Speaker: Hon. members, there are 72 minutes left under the Standing Order agenda.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to stand in the Assembly today to debate Bill 204, the Insurance (Accident Insurance Benefits) Amendment Act, 2003. I'd like to take this opportunity to commend the MLA for Drayton Valley-Calmor for bringing this legislation forward.

It raises some important issues that need to be addressed regarding section B benefits. Bill 204 would amend the Insurance Act to accomplish two primary goals: alter section B benefits and include a dispute arbitration mechanism. First, Bill 204 would increase the limit of section B medical benefits to $25,000 over four years from the current level of $10,000 over two years to individuals who have been involved in an automobile accident. Second, this bill would include initiatives for a dispute arbitration forum between the insurance companies and claimants receiving section B medical benefits. In conjunction with this dispute mechanism the amendment would introduce the use of independent medical examiners. Mr. Speaker, with the passage of Bill 204 our province would be on the same payout level of section B medical benefits as Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Nunavut, and the Northwest Territories. Currently Alberta ranks as the lowest jurisdiction in Canada with regard to payout limits on section B benefits.

Mr. Speaker, having mentioned Alberta's low limit on those benefits, I feel it's also important to highlight that the average section B payout is well below the set limits. Over 2001 the Insurance Bureau of Canada reported that Alberta's average payout for section B benefits was $3,320, whereas the average all-inclusive payout was $5,967 for the same year. It must also be recognized that Alberta's low payout of section B benefits is not a true indicator of benefits available. If a claimant is involved in an accident that is not their fault, they are not entitled to additional benefits. Accident victims can recover medical costs through third-party liability insurance of the driver at fault. Additional benefits include a minimum of $200,000 in third-party liability, $2,000 in funeral expense benefits, and maximum disability benefits of $300 per week, or 80 percent of gross wages over a 104-week period.

Mr. Speaker, difficulties arise when comparing Alberta insurance benefits to other provinces. We are basically comparing apples and oranges. These are two separate and distinct types of processes. The essential difference is between no-fault and tort systems. In Alberta we have a tort system, whereas provinces like Quebec have a no-fault system. Section B benefits limits are high in no-fault systems because claimants do not have the choice to sue for pain and suffering. In Alberta's tort system those at fault pay. Section B benefits allow for insurance benefits on a no-fault basis to those injured in an accident, while those not responsible for the accident are eligible for third-party liability benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to shift my focus and address the remainder of my remarks to the dispute arbitration mechanism. This is the portion of the bill I find most important and highly valuable. By providing the provisions for dispute arbitration, greater clarity, honesty, and impartiality would be brought to the process of resolving insurance claims. I acknowledge that by including an impartial arbitration panel, the government would have a more extensive role in regulating the insurance industry. Some may argue that this role is an example of government overregulation in the insurance sector, but I feel that the benefits of an impartial arbitration panel and the inception of independent medical examiners far outweigh the costs of this additional regulation.

With the passage of Bill 204 an impartial arbitration mechanism would be established to settle disputes that arise between insurance companies and claimants. This legislation would introduce independent medical examiners. The College of Physicians and Surgeons and either the Finance minister or the superintendent of insurance would supply a list of approved doctors to be selected as independent medical examiners. Both civil trial and insurance lawyers feel that the current system is unfair to individuals involved in automobile accidents, in particular with regard to their health assessment. As the system stands currently, an insurance company wanting to stop paying medical benefits to a claimant can send this individual to a medical professional of the company's choice. If this doctor deems that the claimant no longer needs medical benefits, the injured individual can be cut off from their medical benefits. By providing a mechanism for dispute resolution along with the introduction of medical examiners, enhanced clarity and fairness would be brought to insurance claims. Mediation and arbitration involve an essential, impartial, objective third party in settling disputes.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that in regard to the impartiality and dispute settlement and independent medical assessments it is important to highlight recent provisions that were made to the Workers' Compensation Board. Recommendations outlined from reports on WCB service delivery and the appeal system were instituted with the passage of Bill 26 in May of last year. These provisions were brought forth to ultimately improve the clarity, fairness, confidence, and accountability of the system. Within these recommendations there was a call for the use of independent medical examiners. I feel it is important to look at the merits of this recommendation and how independent medical examiners and a similar process relate to Bill 204.

The seventh recommendation in the WCB review report called for a medical resolution committee to be established under the auspices of the Appeals Commission to review all cases where a difference of medical opinion between the medical examiner and the treating physician arises. It outlined that the committee's decision would be final and binding on all parties as it relates to the medical facts of the case. This recommendation states that the members of the Committee are to be chosen from a continually updated list of [medical professionals] selected by a medical body that is independent of the WCB and Appeals Commission, such as the College of Physicians and Surgeons or the Alberta Medical Association.

The WCB has introduced independent medical panels to resolve medical disputes. These panels have specific guidelines for defining medical positions and differences in medical opinions. The provisions adopted for the WCB were brought forth to improve the structure of dispute resolution and the system as a whole. The dispute mechanism proposed in this amendment is along the same lines as changes made to the WCB to improve its operations.

This bill hopes to achieve the resolution of benefits disputes due to automobile accidents in a timely fashion. An impartial arbitration panel would ensure quality and establish uniform standards of competency for physicians performing independent medical assessments and appraisals of those involved in a motor vehicle accident. This impartiality allows for fairness and neutrality in a conflict. Parties involved are not working towards a specific outcome to benefit one side of the dispute; instead, they work to solve the conflict as quickly as possible.

Independent medical examiners are an important component of workers' compensation systems and are also used to clarify other liability cases. Impartial appraisals are often used to provide a more objective understanding of the impact of an injury or illness. Whenever an individual or his or her physical condition is under scrutiny in any case in which compensation is sought, an impartial medical appraisal must be given. Mr. Speaker, the establishment of independent medical examiners benefits the public good. They provide objectiveness and reduce bias. The College of Physicians and Surgeons and either the Finance minister or the superintendent of insurance would choose credentialed physicians competent in their specific fields of expertise which they feel have demonstrated the knowledge, skills, experience, and abilities required to perform independent medical evaluations according to the outlined medical performance standards.

An amendment to the Insurance Act allowing for the establishment of impartiality in medical assessments will prove to be more just to those who have been involved in an automobile accident. Mr. Speaker, I feel that a dispute arbitration mechanism and the inclusion of independent medical examiners are important features that would improve the current system. These measures would increase impartiality and fairness for claimants involved in automobile accidents, and for this reason I support and encourage all of my colleagues to vote in favour of Bill 204, the insurance amendment, auto insurance section B benefits act, 2003.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to join in the debate on Bill 204, sponsored by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. Bill 204, as everyone knows, is a subject with which each of us is all too familiar, some more happily than others, that being insurance and the insurance industry in Alberta. We're familiar with it because it's not something that we have a choice in. If we drive, we must carry insurance, and therein lies the problem.

Because it's necessary to carry insurance, we are pretty much obligated to pay whatever we have to pay in order to get it, and many individuals sometimes feel that they're being taken advantage of one way or another. If you buy insurance and if you have to use it, God help you the next time you have to have your insurance renewed, because your premium reflects what might have been a once in a lifetime accident. If you do have that accident and you have been paying insurance premiums for a long period of time, the next time you come to the bar, you'll find that your insurance premiums will reflect that accident.

I think many Albertans and many Canadians wonder why it is that our insurance premiums never seem to go down. No matter how good we may be, they always seem to go up, and if you happen to be younger, they happen to go up exponentially, which results in the unhappy circumstance of an increasing number of Albertans driving without insurance, which is against the law, which is absolutely wrong, but then that puts those who find themselves in a collision with someone that doesn't have insurance under double jeopardy because it's even more difficult for the person who is one hundred percent blameless in any particular accident to find their interest being served. I think that this, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps the most frustrating aspect of individuals when they deal with insurance companies. When they have found themselves in an accident and they need the protection and the assistance of the insurance company that has their policy, they find themselves almost in an adversarial position not only with the other insurance company but with their insurance company as well.

The net result is that Albertans have had an increasingly difficult relationship with their insurance carriers over recent years. This is in part because the insurance companies, as everyone knows, have taken a tremendous hit in the equity markets, as most of us have as individuals and certainly anyone, including the province, who has an equity position. The insurance companies, as you know, Mr. Speaker, have informed us that they have for years been offsetting the cost of their premiums through funds generated through their equity investments and their other investments, and their premiums have not kept pace with the cost of claims.

It's really interesting when we look at statistics of claims. In general terms over the past 10 years we all know, Mr. Speaker, that cars are more expensive than they've ever been. Thus, intuitively one would expect that the cost of fixing cars would be more than it has ever been. There are more cars on the road, and the cost of fixing those cars, one would expect, would have increased. Well, the reality is that the cost of repairing damage to automobiles has remained relatively constant over the last 10 years. At the same time that cars have been becoming more expensive and the number of accidents has increased and the cost of these repairs has remained constant, the cost of bodily injury has gone up 3,000 percent.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. McClelland: Three thousand percent.

You don't have to be Dick Tracy or a detective to be able to figure out that there must be some relationship between the costs incurred by the insurance companies for bodily injuries and the increased cost. This is what has led many people to question the insurance industry and the associated lawsuits by the legal industry. I think it's also fair to say that if you look in the phone book of any major city in Alberta today, there are quite a number of advertisements for injury lawyers. This is something which was not part of our culture until fairly recently. So there may or may not be a connection between these two. As has been made evident in many conversations that I've had with both the legal industry and the insurance industry, we have a responsibility to hold harmless from the cost of the accident those injured in accidents, and that certainly could account for a large part or a proportion of the very large increase.

The question also, then, has to be addressed: does it make sense for a person who may have been injured in an automobile accident to benefit from that automobile accident? That brings into question that even if you pay premiums on an insurance policy to protect one from the effects of an accident, if you had three insurance policies all covering the same thing, should one be eligible to collect on all three policies because in fact you're paying for it? [interjection]

Now, the Member for Edmonton-Centre is remarking on the fact that she's trying to find the relevance of this to this particular bill. Well, the relevance is the part B medical and whether or not this should be increased. The relevance, Mr. Speaker, is that we should not – we could, but we probably should not – look at one particular aspect of the insurance industry in isolation because the insurance industry is far broader. There are more intricate and far more complex and complicated issues, and the more one delves into it, the more one notices or understands that there are two sides to every story.

So insurance companies have had an increasingly difficult time meeting the premium demands as the situation exists now. The Insurance Act, as members know, is being carefully considered by the government now. So the question then before us, Mr. Speaker, is: is it appropriate for this Legislature at this time to consider Bill 204, or is there a better way to consider the elements of Bill 204? I submit that there is a better way.

According to Statistics Canada as of December of last year automobile insurance premiums in Alberta rose 57 percent in a one-year period, so it's very obvious that the need to address this has been established. It's been further suggested by the insurance community that if section B benefits were to be increased, they would immediately apply pressure to limit the amount of money that a claimant could sue for due to pain and suffering, and that seems to defeat the entire reason for offering section B benefits. Insurance companies offer section B benefits in order that they work in conjunction with a whole range of benefits that are available to those who are involved in an automobile accident.

Mr. Speaker, this government is taking action on addressing rising insurance premiums. It has been acknowledged that Alberta Finance will be reviewing and examining insurance consumer issues during the automobile insurance review this calendar year, 2003. In light of this and the Alberta Finance review I move that the motion for second . . .

The Speaker: I think, hon. member, we've passed the time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Having reviewed the bill and its contents, I definitely will be urging all members of this Assembly to vote in support of hoisting this particular bill now before the House, and I would like to move the amendment to hoist Bill 204, that it not now be read a second time.

The Speaker: We'll await the circulation of such document so that all members will have an opportunity to review this.

Then do I take it the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is proceeding?

Mr. Lukaszuk: That is correct. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I'm sure many of us have heard stories from constituents who had a tough time filing claims and accessing fair benefits for injuries due to automobile accidents. The process often involves lawyers squaring off against insurance companies, and one has to wonder if all sides have the best interest of the victim in mind. Bill 204 attempts to alleviate some of the factors that tend to heat up contentious claims by modifying the Insurance Act to include an independent medical examiner.

Mr. Speaker, the proposal for creating an independent medical examiner is a very intriguing aspect of this bill. Obviously, one of the most important aspects when settling automobile insurance claims is the role of the medical adviser. Usually there is more than one doctor involved in an insurance claim. The lawyer representing the injured party has some doctors, and the insurance company has a different set of doctors. Both sides argue that their medical examiner is right and that the other one has failed to properly evaluate the injured party.

Mr. Speaker, setting up a list of independent medical examiners that each must choose from will bring more openness, fairness, and accountability to contentious disputes over automobile insurance claims. I believe this bill, Bill 204, will benefit the injured party the most. I see no problem with a list of independent medical examiners that each side must choose from, and I hope this idea is taken under consideration in the future. I also suggest that these medical examiners be certified and proficient in their use of approved guidelines of assessment for clinical impairment.

However, there are parts of Bill 204 that really trouble me. These parts involve the changes to section B benefits. Increasing the limit and the amount from $10,000 to $25,000 over four years may actually result in a less flexible system that is less responsive to change. Moving forward on this part of Bill 204 would also get in the way of the work already being done by this government. The Department of Finance is already addressing this issue through a discussion guide released some time last year.

Mr. Speaker, in December 2002 the Department of Finance released a document entitled Automobile Insurance: We Want Your Feedback. This guide covered two broad areas. The first area deals with situations where expenses exceed the injured person's income. The second area discusses the fair level of benefits available for catastrophic injuries. This second area covers a great deal of what is discussed right now in Bill 204. This discussion guide asks the government and stakeholders to review limits established in other provinces, seek stakeholder feedback, and consider the possibility of setting higher benefit limits for catastrophic injuries.

Mr. Speaker, the goal of this discussion guide was to take the first step to develop new regulations under the Insurance Act. The document welcomed feedback to the proposed amendments and also asked if any change is needed. This is an important point to remember. In our zeal to pass legislation, we need to make sure that changes are necessary in the first place.

More importantly, legislative changes must be consistent with the policy direction of the act. This discussion guide is only one part of the process to review the Insurance Act. Obviously, car insurance is important to every driver on Alberta's roads and highways. If this Assembly is to debate any changes, we must be sure that the proposed amendments will benefit drivers and those who actually get injured. A comprehensive review which encourages all affected parties to provide input is a more logical solution than a private member's bill. Because the Department of Finance is looking at this issue, Bill 204 may confuse the impending review process.

Mr. Speaker, we must also be very careful when making amendments to the act when a huge impact on the day-to-day lives of Albertans could be caused by such legislation. Members of this Assembly are compelled to be part of the discussion-making process and therefore part of the solution. Bill 204 seems to be based on very little feedback from the insurance industry or stakeholder input. Based on these considerations, I believe that Bill 204 would be against the best wishes of Albertans. The funding for increasing the level of section B benefits would increase the actual cost of insurance policies.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta ranks lowest amongst provinces in the maximum limits it has set on section B medical benefits, and if claims set for section B benefits hardly ever exceed the limit we have right now, why would we consider increasing the limit to begin with? I don't seem to understand the upside of raising the benefits if many of the stakeholders in the insurance industry haven't raised the issue. Lower rates for section B benefits may prevent insurance fraud in this area as well. Lower rates may also serve insurance companies or premium money. We don't know if this is the case, because the result of the Department of Finance consultation is not yet available to us.

The members in this Assembly are charged with the job of representing their constituents to the best of their ability. This representation is accomplished in part through careful study and critical analysis of legislation. I don't believe we have had an opportunity to critically analyze this legislation by way of generating feedback from the industry and the stakeholders, being Albertans. The Department of Finance regulates the insurance industry in Alberta and monitors availability, affordability, and fairness of insurance to Albertans. There is no doubt that the automobile aspect of the Insurance Act needs to be reviewed.

The policy promoted in Bill 204 would encourage more lawsuits, making litigation more attractive for people injured in car accidents. We should be working towards curbing the amount of litigation rather than creating an environment that increases section B insurance claims. If people see lucrative awards for injury claims, they may be easily persuaded to seek legal action. An increase in section B benefits would only help out the driver who was at fault in the accident. The person who was not at fault can recover up to $200,000, which is the minimum for third-party liability. One has to wonder if there is a real need for concern for the at-fault driver.

The average paid for section B benefits between 1997 and 2001, Mr. Speaker, was $3,094, far less than the current $10,000 limit. Also, a national auto owners survey in 2001 revealed Edmonton as the second least expensive place in Canada to own and operate a vehicle. Increasing the threshold may cause a ripple effect that will have a dramatic impact on Alberta drivers. Although the number of automobile accidents has declined, the number of injury claims, which are more costly by far, has gone up dramatically. This combined with an increase in medical claim costs plays a large part in the overall increase of the claim. Increasing section B benefits will only make this problem worse by encouraging more accident fraud.

The number of injury claims continues to increase, bringing us closer to the situation of our neighbours down south of the border. In 2001 Alberta drivers spent $877 on premiums on average, but drivers in New Jersey, Washington, D.C., and New York pay over $1,100 per year for premiums, and that's U.S. dollars.

Mr. Speaker, vehicle premiums continue to rise, which has concerned many Alberta drivers, especially those on fixed incomes. The early stage of the review process has already started. The risk in making these changes is too high at this point in the process. Therefore, increasing the amount and time period for section B benefits would also encourage people to not return to work following an accident.

I'm not satisfied that the proper consultation has been done to proceed with the changes to the Insurance Act at this time. Mr. Speaker, although I strongly support the idea of an independent medical examiner, I cannot support the other elements of this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're on an amendment. The last discussion seemed to focus on the bill, not the amendment. The amendment is very clear: "be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence." That is the subject of the debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking directly to the hoist, which is one of those nice little legislative tricks that can be slid into a Monday afternoon when they hope that everybody is sleeping, interestingly brought in by one member when it was actually written by another. [interjections] Well, I certainly am paying attention. Don't worry.

I would encourage the member who brought in the hoist to also pay attention and to read the information that was provided to him by one of the stakeholder groups, being the Alberta Civil Trial Lawyers Association, who specifically addressed one of the points that he finds particularly abhorrent in this particular bill, subsequently making it necessary to hoist. I would refer that member to page 5 of that stakeholder feedback information, which was given to all MLAs in this Assembly, where they talk about changing "the criteria for medical examinations to allow the medical examiner to be agreed upon jointly by the insurer and the injured."

The original problem, Mr. Speaker, is that the standard Alberta automobile policy allows for an auto insurer to appoint their medical examiner to determine if the insured person requires further treatment. Often the accident victim's own doctor's advice is not properly considered. In the best light it is perceived by Albertans to be unfair. Often it is very unfair.

This association states that the solution to that is:

Change the criteria for the insurer's medical exam to allow the medical examiner to be agreed upon jointly by the insurer and insured. This proposed amendment is the subject of Bill 204 sponsored by the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

This is a very real issue that we have heard discussed often that is left out of the legislation in Bill 33, as one of the other members was speaking about earlier. It's a good reason to have the vote on this bill and a debate and a discussion now, not six months hence, Mr. Speaker. I think that the member who introduced this amendment needs to go back to the information that was provided to him and read it, and then he would not have been so hasty in bringing in a hoist to this particular bill.

We will be interested to see what other members have to say about this. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan on the amendment.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Keeping in mind your admonishment somewhat earlier, I certainly intend to speak to the hoist and offer some comments about Bill 204 as it exists and provide some good reasons why it should be hoisted.

Mr. Speaker, as Albertans we live in a province that's a vast territory, broad landscapes. It's a province where the cities and towns and communities are all separated by long stretches of road and highway, and unlike other countries or perhaps even other places in Canada here in Alberta we definitely have to have some sort of motorized transportation in order to go about our daily lives. We don't have to look too far in order to see this. The geographic and the economic trends are shaping the city of Edmonton in such a way that most people who work in the downtown area live in the outskirts of the city or perhaps even in the community that I represent, the constituency of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. So many Albertans are dependent on their vehicles – their cars, their personal vehicles – to get back and forth, to and from work. Other citizens who live within Edmonton still rely on those cars and their other vehicles for work, other activities that they find essential for daily living, and the rest of the province isn't much different.

We're a nation, we're a province of commuters, and our vehicles are not a luxury but a necessity. Since so many of us spend so much time of our life out on the road, we invest many dollars in auto insurance in order to ensure compensation in case we get into an accident. Taking into consideration that there are so many vehicles on the road and the fact that there are so many potentially deadly or disabling accidents waiting to occur – and I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that one member of my constituency claims that we should not call them accidents. I agree with him, because so many of these are preventable, and there are concerns in the research area that we should prevent and avoid these incidents as much as we can. These crashes are potentially there to occur at any time, and the law stipulates that for liability reasons all Albertans must keep them insured.

However, Mr. Speaker, Albertans have paid and continue to pay a hefty premium on automobile insurance in this province. Over the past several years we've seen our insurance rates rapidly increase. Last year the rates rose by 57 percent. We wonder what can justify this unprecedented rise. Well, if we listen to the insurance companies, they say that the jump is a result of the rising number of false or fraudulent claims that are being put forward by certain members of the community. They say that it's not them who are responsible for the astronomical increases in the premiums but rather those that are taking advantage of the system. If we listen to the insurance claim lawyers, they in turn tell us that the insurance companies are purposefully milking more money out of Albertans in order to either fatten their pockets or perhaps pay for some poor investment decisions.

Whom do we trust then, Mr. Speaker? I would argue that the truth is, as always, somewhere in the middle.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm citing Standing Order 23(b) and Beauchesne 459.

I've listened to the member for some five minutes now, and I'm seeking desperately to see how his comments are specific to the hoist that is before us, which is that the bill be “not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.” What I hear is him speaking off his speaking notes to the bill but not to the hoist.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan on this point of order.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I wasn't so sure she was listening attentively for the full five minutes because when I glanced over there, I was not sure. I sort of thought she was looking for some reference in Beauchesne to rise on a point of order and disrupt my flow of thought here and the argument that I was trying to put forward.

In fact, I would encourage the hon. member to listen for a few more minutes, and as the argument is fully developed, she will see what the reason is that's being presented and, in fact, why I'm advocating – well, she's presuming, I suppose, that I'm speaking in favour of the hoist, but she will see the argument being fully developed, and I'm sure that she'll agree at the end of that time that the argument is complete and comprehensive and convincing, and she'll vote along with me on that hoist.

The Speaker: Well, relevance is a very important criteria in this Assembly. The chair would have some empathy for the argument put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre because the chair too has been listening very attentively for well beyond five minutes. So presumably now with the five minutes plus the time spent on the point of order, probably within the next minute or two the hon. member will bring this argument to a conclusion, that will become very clear with respect to how the hoist amendment fits into this.

Mr. Lougheed: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if I can accomplish it in just a minute or two because there are quite a few points to be made here, but I will do my best, as you have admonished further, and I feel chagrined.

Mr. Lougheed: Anyway, Mr. Speaker, as was mentioned previously, it's really important that we have our vehicles to drive and go about our daily lives. We have no choice. We will continue to pay these high premiums even though the vast majority of us are responsible drivers. Many Albertans are tired of spending more of their hard-earned money on auto insurance premiums, which seem to increase every year. Certain aspects of Bill 204 could be useful to Albertans in future reference.

The bill at the present time appears to be a wrong policy for this province to follow. The reasons are twofold, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, the parameters of Bill 204, particularly the proposal to limit section B medical benefits from $10,000 over two years to $25,000 over four years, would be potentially useful to some Albertans, but the end result of such a policy would be a further increase in rates. In its very nature Alberta's insurance industry is profit-oriented. Therefore, if this government forces the industry to provide an increased service or compensation limit such as the proposed increase in section B medical benefits, the industry could very well not enjoy the same profit margin that it has previously enjoyed. The insurance agencies will undoubtedly compensate for the loss of profit by further increasing the insurance premiums, and this will result in Albertans paying even more for auto premiums. In the future, perhaps six months hence, it may be prudent to increase the limit on section B medical benefits. It would not be wise to do so at this present time, especially considering the fact that the rates are at an all-time high.

The second reason, Mr. Speaker, why I cannot support the proposed increase in section B benefits from $10,000 over two years to $25,000 over four years is because currently the vast majority of Albertans are not coming even close to the $10,000 limit. According to the Insurance Bureau, over the past five years, as was previously stated, as the other hon. member speaking in favour of the hoist amendment commented, claimants' average amount paid out was $3,094. The same statistics indicate that in 2001 the average payment was about $3,385 per claimant, two-thirds less than that maximum. These figures indicate that there's currently no reason to increase the section B medical benefits coverage. If in future time withdrawals by a . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Point of Order Relevance

Ms Carlson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It's Beauchesne 459, on relevance. We still haven't heard anything pertaining to the hoist, and it's another three minutes into his argument.

Mr. Lougheed: Well, Mr. Speaker, I really feel poorly about this assault by the opposition, complaining perhaps that they don't like to listen to some speeches from this side. Over and over again they comment on how they want more involvement from the government members on speeches on different bills, and we could contribute at great length, of course, because that's what we could do. It's our opportunity to speak, just like theirs, but we don't.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I expect that the speaking time allocated to the hon. member is coming to an end pretty quickly.

Let's just wrap it up.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been occurrences where there have been outright refusals for these payments.

The amendment that I'm speaking to, to delay the passage of this bill or the discussion for another six months, is appropriate for several of the reasons that I've put forward: the concerns that the industry has, the concerns that the people that are paying those premiums have. Sometimes we've found that insurance companies have kept their clients on these benefits for only short periods of time. The reason why this happened is because the current rules regarding section B outline that the insurance companies can discontinue paying the benefits.

Mr. Speaker, everyone in this House can see the flaw in the arrangement. Under such favourable arrangements it's no wonder that some insurance companies will shortchange their customers for profit. It's true that within the current automotive system we don't have a general insurance ombudsman service which is designed to provide mediation. However, the rulings would not be binding, and the vast majority of claimants would not even be aware of its existence.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it's clear that when it comes to conflict resolution between insurance companies and the claimants with regard to the payout of section B benefits, the companies hold the advantage. Many use this advantage . . . [Mr. Lougheed's speaking time expired]

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 204 carried]

Bill 205

Citizens' Empowerment Act

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure this afternoon to rise and move second reading of Bill 205, the Citizens' Empowerment Act.

I guess the purpose behind this bill is to in effect provide a tool or a mechanism for Albertans to become involved in their democratic process a little more than what is available to them at this point. The purpose behind it, I guess, again, is to make sure that democracy has different mechanisms for messages to be sent to the Legislature about, in effect, the wishes of Albertans, whether they are wishes for change or wishes against change.

If we do that, we have to provide the tools. We're always hearing that Albertans want to do something a little bit differently, a little more direct with their MLAs. If we do it this way, we should make sure that the messages that get sent at an election time are not built around only one concept or one issue because that vote at an election time shouldn't be issue based. It should be government-philosophy, government-approach, government-competence based instead of: are we all going to vote for a bill that will do one thing or another?

We've seen a number of cases where one-issue elections have really changed the direction of government because once that one issue is addressed, governments don't have other agendas. This is the kind of thing that happens in democracies on a fairly regular basis. What this bill is going to do is in effect it's going to give citizens just another mechanism to send a message to their elected officials so that they can respond to the wishes of their constituents.

The thing that we have to do is make sure that as we look at how citizens should be allowed to voice that input or be part of that input to the legislative process, it's important that we look at, in effect, the four basic parts of the development of legislation and whether or not citizens should be involved in it. The first one is when you initiate legislation. That, in effect, right now occurs either by the elected government, the government in power, or groups coming together with the government saying: we think this needs to happen. Then what you do is you go into a discussion on how those ideas actually get put into legislation, and that's in effect a formative stage. Then you end up with the idea of how you get involved in debate, and there's a lot of that that goes on in terms of contacting MLAs about this perspective on a bill, that perspective on a bill, and that's what we see a lot of in terms of the approach.

It's a matter of: how do you weigh the seriousness of how individuals in a community feel about an initiative? How active do they want to become in either supporting a piece of legislation or bringing a piece of legislation to an end? I guess that takes us right into the fourth part of it in the sense of what happens if legislation gets derailed and you want to stop it.

Well, Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 in effect will provide citizens with a mechanism to address both the front end part of that four-step process and the back end part of it, that I just described. In other words, it will give citizens two chances to broaden their participation where they don't have it right now. The first one is on the initiation of legislation, and this is basically where a group of citizens can put together a prototype bill, you know, a bill that basically outlines what they would like to see in that legislation, petition the Chief Electoral Officer, get a petition in place, bring that to the Legislature and say: this petition would ask the Legislature to enact a bill similar to or consistent with the prototype that they've brought forward.

If during that sitting the government doesn't enact that bill that reflects the wishes of that constituent group that did the petition, then what would happen is during the next break in the Legislature a referendum would be held, and if the referendum passes, then the government must introduce that legislation. Now, they can vote it down, but they have to bring it to debate in the House, the idea there being that if they do vote it down, the consequences are at the next election, when individuals say: "Look. You didn't follow our direction. You weren't representing us." So, you know, in effect you need to make sure that you get more in tune with your constituents. That briefly provides them with input that comes at the initiative part of taking an idea and bringing it forward into legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's critical at this point that we look at the limitations that we impose on that initiative in the sense that we do not allow that to be a financial bill; in other words, suggest taxes or suggest anything to do with the budget. We also don't allow the bill to suggest legislation which would in any way contravene the Charter or the human rights acts of Alberta or Canada. So, in effect, it does limit suggestions of where initiatives can be brought in. What it does is makes sure that any legislation is consistent with the wishes of Albertans but doesn't become a majority imposition on a minority. So that's where the human rights protection comes in. The other part of it, too, is that by doing this, the act cannot infringe on the government's need to do business. In other words, the budgets, the taxing patterns of the province can't be influenced by this kind of initiative.

The other half of the participation is in a sense to say: "Hold it. No. You've made a mistake. Let's stop that piece of legislation." What it would do is in effect create a 90-day window between the third reading of a bill and royal proclamation of a bill. So during that 90-day period if citizens get together a petition of 5 percent of the registered voters, then they can precipitate a referendum that would say: yes, we support this bill, or, no, we don't. If the referendum defeats the bill, then it cannot move on to royal proclamation. Again, we put conditions on that in that if it is a bill that the government designates as necessary for a crisis, then that window is not open. Citizens can't stop a bill that the government designates for a crisis. Obviously, if there's a crisis, there's a need to act quickly, and to go through the process of first the petition and then the referendum would delay a solution to a crisis too long to make sure that we do what's appropriate to manage the affairs of the province.

So from that perspective, you know, we have to make sure that as we move through this process citizens feel that they truly have input to the piece of legislation, that they have input to the way their democracy works in our province, and that we end up making sure that all of the aspects of good government and responsible government, responsive government are actually put in place. I truly think that if we pass this bill and put it in place, what we'll end up with is a real opportunity to move away from one-issue type elections to: let's talk about the philosophy of government; let's talk about the approach to government during elections. Then we don't have to have that one-issue debate that could swing votes during an election, because that can be done through this kind of a process or a citizens' initiative.

In wrapping up, Mr. Speaker, the main thing is we have to recognize that the bill in no way limits or prevents democratic action by the Legislature. What it does on the initiative side, on the input side, is goes through a two-step process. In the end the Legislature is the final say with consequences at an election. So, in effect, it doesn't get into the kind of "let's have a referendum and make laws" that we see in some of the U.S. states where this kind of legislation is in place. This would always make sure that the final decision-makers are here in this House so that we end up making sure that we don't have, you know, the hype that comes with issue-based votes so that you end up with conflicting referendums, bringing forward legislation under a referendum proposal. The House in itself would have to sit and debate how these pieces of legislation fit in with all of the others, and if they can't see it fitting, then the Legislature has the right to not move ahead with it.

That, I think, is critical in the context of making sure that citizens have a voice, that they have an option to say: consider this. There has to be that interlink between the suggestion and other legislation that's on the books, and that's the role of the Legislature. That's why, you know, we didn't make this legislation so that the absolute power resides in the referendum. We didn't want to have a situation where through lack of ability to really analyze and investigate the interrelationships and the interlocking of legislation – that's the role that the Legislature can carry out. Citizens out there just voting on an idea with a prototype bill would not in effect have that ability and have that expertise to deal with all that interlink, the way that they really need to look at the impact on other pieces of legislation. That would be the responsibility of this House, the final responsibility of the legislative process when it gets here to deal with it in the context of: does it fit with current legislation, or are there other bills that would have to be amended if this legislation passed, and what would be the repercussions of that change? You know, that's kind of the important part of making this legislation work, the idea that it's not an absolute on behalf of a referendum. It's a strong suggestion through a petition. It's a stronger suggestion through a referendum, but the House in the end still has control.

The same on the other end. The perspective is there that if citizens decide they want to have a bill stopped, there's a very small window they have to be able to rally Albertans to get the petition in. Otherwise, they can drag it out too long, and we don't want to in effect delay unintentionally, you know, without purpose, legislation. So the 90-day window to get your petition in is effective. It's enough time if Albertans feel strongly enough about it to get that petition in that then calls for a referendum within six months.

So I think this is a good addition to the tools that we've got to make our democracy work, and I hope that we can count on the members of the House to support it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Well, I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to join in this debate on this very interesting piece of legislation, and I congratulate the Member for Lethbridge-East, the hon. the leader of the Liberal opposition, for bringing this thought-provoking notion before the House. When the opportunity arose to speak to it, I asked if I'd be able to speak to this and get on the list because I've had considerable personal experience in this. As a matter of fact, this very issue is what caused me to get involved in provincial politics rather than remain in federal politics with the party that I used to represent. As members will know, the party that I represented in the House of Commons to start with was the Reform Party, which was wedded to this notion that opinion at a constituency level would in fact trump judgment at a political level. This is all well and good until, actually, the rubber meets the road, and in my particular experience the rubber met the road under Bill C-68, which was the infamous gun control legislation.

The more I learned about that legislation and the more research that I did, the more I realized that the notion that was driving it at a constituency level, at an individual level was to achieve something that we already had as far as gun control is concerned in Canada, but they were measuring our situation against a situation they saw on television in Detroit or Chicago, primarily in the United States. So the opinion of the people being measured by a public opinion poll in order to determine opinion was not necessarily informed decision.

I found myself in the very, very difficult position of voting against the bill at second reading even though I knew that the constituent opinion in the constituency I represented was in favour of the legislation by a majority of over 60 percent. In three separate, independent, carefully crafted by an outside third party polls, it was clear that the majority of the constituents that I represented were in favour of the bill despite the fact that they had no idea what was in it in relative terms. I shouldn't say on broad terms. I think that it was fair to say that the majority of people felt that they were making their judgment based on the emotion of what they hoped that this bill could achieve for the country, noble intentions. So I ended up voting against it despite that. Then at third reading I voted in favour of the bill, as presented by the Liberals, against my better judgment, against the party position but upholding the opinion as represented by opinion polls in the constituency. The net result was that I found myself in a position where judgment gave way to opinion, and that caused me to rethink the foundation upon which I was elected initially and upon which we collectively administer the affairs of our province on behalf of the citizens of the province.

Was Edmund Burke right, or was Preston Manning right? That's really the question. In my opinion, as a result of my test I think that Edmund Burke was right. If I was troubled and if I was torn between this notion based upon gun control, what would happen were I faced with the same decision based on a moral, ethical issue, and is that not what the Nuremberg trials were all about?

So then we get into majority versus minority rights, and where does the majority get the imprimatur to govern? Who vests with the majority the right to govern? How do we as a majority government have the right to govern? Well, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that right comes . . . [interjections] If you don't mind, you guys, let me finish here first. I suggest that the right to govern is vested with the majority by the minority because the minority feels secure and safe that the majority will not trample their rights. It is, in fact, the minority that vests its confidence with the majority in a continuum that makes a complete circle.

Now, how does one arrive at a majority? Well, in our democracy as we have evolved, a majority comes to be because minorities have been given the unfettered opportunity, the unfettered right to bring others to their point of view, and if they are not successful in bringing others to their point of view, they then have the obligation to join with the majority so as not to have ever diminishing narrow and separate issues.

Ms Blakeman: What?

Mr. McClelland: I see the Member for Edmonton-Centre becoming apoplectic on that, but I wonder if the member would be interested in knowing the source of that particular quote. None other than Pierre Trudeau, who said: in a democracy the minority has the right to bring others to their point of view; if they are not successful, they have the responsibility of joining with the majority, and we move on from there. That's how democracy works, and that's how we keep from going into ever diminishing circles of narrow self-interests.

That, then, Mr. Speaker, brings us to the point of what political leadership is and how political leadership should be defined. Is political leadership measuring the wants and needs and desires or the opinions of the constituents and then representing that, or is it aggregating interests in the common good and being able to hold a principled opinion even if that principled opinion goes against majority opinion but is the right thing to do? That is the essence of political leadership. Political leadership is not defining or finding a narrow, separate special interest, catering to that special interest at the expense of all others. It is about listening carefully to what we hear, then aggregating those interests and articulating a vision based on what we have heard, what our experiences are, who we are, and then articulating a vision that inspires us to be more together than we are as individuals. Political leadership is not finding a special interest and catering to that. It is doing what's right for the common good, and that cannot be done if we rely on opinion polls to form our judgment. Judgment is a sum total of who we are and how we got here. Judgment is defined as our life experiences, good and bad, that our electors expect us to use and to exercise on their behalf.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, with deep respect for the principles underlying this notion of populism and underlying the principles that brought this to this House through the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, I must say, using my experience and my judgment, that this is not worthy of support in a democratic House.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak in support of Bill 205, the Citizens' Empowerment Act, this afternoon, and I'll resist the siren call to respond to the previous speaker's comments. I think the distinction that's made between opinion and, as I think the member indicated, aggregated interests is a fine distinction, and I think that there are some issues in this province that clearly would have been acted upon by citizens had they had the opportunity. One of those issues that immediately comes to mind is that the government's decision to cut the funding for kindergarten was not something that was dominated by opinion. There was some pretty solid research that indicated that that was a bad thing to do. So I reject the notion that the former member puts forward.

In speaking for the bill, I think that really the essence of the bill is that it allows two things. It allows citizens to bring a bill before this Assembly, and it allows a citizen to cause this Assembly to take a sober second look at legislation, much in the same manner that the Senate does for federal legislation. I think you aren't in the Legislature long before you're approached by one citizen or another asking: what can I do? They're interested in a particular issue. They're interested in a particularly public policy and feel strongly about it and come to us often asking for advice: how can I get involved? What this bill does is give them one more tool.

The kind of standard things I think we all suggest to them is that they can obviously meet with MLAs, and I think of some good examples when meeting with MLAs was effective. I go back again to the kindergarten issue. On that particular issue I know that the former president of the University of Alberta made a point of meeting with every member of the Legislature individually and arguing the need for the restoration of full funding for kindergartens, and I think that the president's arguments were effective.

We also suggest that they get involved and organize some like-minded groups. I think that we saw an example of that not the last session, the session before that, where the Save Our Schools parents organized a provincewide petition, and we were able to each day in the Legislature table those petitions with parents' signatures asking that the underfunding of education be addressed. I think it was a very effective tool in citizens' hands to draw attention to a public policy that they thought needed changing. Those are the kinds of things that we often suggest to citizens.

We suggest, for instance, that they write letters, that they become involved with other citizens. We give them suggestions about letter writing: if you're going to write a letter, make sure you do sit down and pen it or craft it yourself, that you don't spend the time signing duplicated letters, that you make some effort to personalize it, that you ask for a response. There's a whole set of instructions that we give citizens who are asking for ways that they can affect public policy to use letter writing as a tool.

We also encourage them to bring forward suggestions for private members' bills, and I think we've seen that time and time again in the House, where there have been suggestions that were from citizens for legislation that they thought was important. Some of the ones that drew a great deal of public attention were the private members' bills that were concerned with cell phones. There were private members' bills that were concerned with using radar for catching speeders. A great number of private members' bills, and we spend a great deal of our time in the Legislature debating those bills. Again, it's another tool where citizens can have their ideas brought before this Legislative Assembly for debate and in many cases for adoption at some point.

I think of the class size bill that we've brought forward in various forms over the years, and it's one that citizens are continually coming forward and saying: how can we get something in the Legislature to be debated? Unfortunately most of those bills were far enough down on the Order Paper that they didn't get debated, but citizens who wanted those kinds of things could look at those bills and see that the interests that they wanted pursued were being taken seriously by this Legislature.

We've suggested that they hold town halls. I think of the parents of children with special needs and their joint concern that there was something that needed to be done for children with special needs because of the things that were happening to them in the classroom. Again, we encouraged them as citizens to organize town halls, and I went to some of those town halls and in fact helped organize a couple where parents were able to talk about their concerns and where special-needs parents were able to meet other special-needs parents and bring together their thoughts and suggested actions in terms of things that could be done to help the situation for special-needs children in our schools.

We suggest that they write letters to the editor, and we see those every day, Mr. Speaker, addressing one or more public policy issues that are being debated in this Legislature.

As an opposition – and I'm sure that government members do likewise – we suggest that if they're concerned, they may want to ask the opposition to ask questions in question period to again have public policy debated, to have a particular viewpoint on an issue brought forward.

These are all things that we suggest to citizens who are interested in becoming involved and who want to feel that they have some power over what's happening in their lives. We suggest that they do these things.

What we have before us in Bill 205 is just one more tool. I think it's a tool that we should look at very seriously, Mr. Speaker, before we reject the notion. If you really read the bill seriously and look at the provisions, it's not going to be the kind of action that special-interest groups will undertake frivolously. There's a lot of hard work involved in what is included in Bill 205 if a piece of legislation is to be brought before this Legislature or if one of the bills that the government has brought forward is to be challenged. It's not easy. There's, as I said, a lot of hard work that must be completed, and the bill I think would actually in practice see limited use. They would have to be really issues where there was large public outcry or large public support, and again I think on those issues it's not just a matter of opinion.

The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford talked about the gun legislation and said: well, it was just a matter of opinion. But I remember that that opinion at the time came from some rather respected groups, including the chiefs of police across the country who had supported that gun legislation, and I don't think that they can be dismissed as just a sample taken in some offhanded survey. I think there were groups that command a fair amount of respect who were in favour of that.

I urge members to support Bill 205. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and address Bill 205, the Citizens' Empowerment Act, proposed by the Member for Lethbridge-East. Supporters of Bill 205 argue that the bill will provide Alberta with much-needed direct democracy. However, I cannot support this bill for three reasons. [interjections] I know that it's a surprise to many. First, I feel that special-interest groups will gain control of the policy-making agenda and in the process not serving the best interests of all Albertans. Second, the hands of government will be tied, and our roles as legislators in a representative Assembly would be diminished. Finally, the costs involved could be much more wisely used for immediate needs facing the province.

Bill 205 would legislate that a petition of 5 percent of the electorate could stop any piece of government legislation provided it does not deal with emergency situations from coming into force. Five percent is not a large amount, and this is my first problem with the bill. With respect to this small threshold, Mr. Speaker, the special-interest groups would play a formalized role in our legislative process. These well-organized groups would have the opportunity to collect the signatures of only 5 percent of the eligible voting population, which is about 95,000 people, a small number in my opinion, and dictate the policy thereafter.

This raises three main concerns. The first concern pertains to the control of information surrounding the petition in question. This problem is directly related to the second issue of special-interest financing. The final problem lies with the potential of regional confrontation over issues.

When an issue has been successfully petitioned and scheduled to be voted on in a provincial or municipal election, the voting public will seek information pertaining to the issue. Special-interest groups will present one-sided information to further their goals. These newly formed propaganda machines will bombard the public with slanted information. The government will be forced to defend its position with a balanced message. This will only increase the level of distrust in the public psyche and cost taxpayers in the process.

The amount of money spent on winning public support in both the petition signing and referendum would be ridiculous. The government would be forced to spend money on television, newspapers, which could be money well spent on much-needed infrastructure, education, and health care.

In the United States, where 24 states have citizen initiatives, it can now be seen that the process has been corrupted with big money. Like their candidate campaigns a referendum's chances of winning are now handicapped according to its bankroll. Paid signature gatherers are now needed to qualify an issue for the ballot. An example of powerful special-interest groups can be seen in California. Of the 1.1 million signatures gathered in support of California's initiative against affirmative action, only 147,000 were obtained by volunteers; 800,000 were secured by people who were paid $1 per signature.

I would like to read to you, Mr. Speaker, two quotes from two local state officials. The first is from 1996 and Washington Secretary of State Ralph Munro: "It used to be the most important thing was the issue. Now the most important thing is the money." The second is from 1996 and Oregon's Secretary of State Phil Keisling, who dubs the new version of citizen initiatives a "cash and carry democracy." If we pass Bill 205, we will see the same problem arising in Alberta. Big money will seek to bypass the legislative process and impose their own agenda on the public.

Mr. Speaker, special interests located in different regions also pose a potential problem. Urban Albertans would have a much easier opportunity to gather signatures than their rural counterparts. I can see how this bill could bring about an issue between urban and rural areas to the detriment of the province as a whole, considering that special-interest groups in the city could force an environmental action that may conflict with farming practices.

This thought leads to the second major problem with Bill 205 in that it ties the hands of legislators. Developing legislation is a thoughtful, conciliatory effort. Through our current system of private members' bills it's not difficult for a group of concerned constituents to petition their MLA and have their concern drafted into legislation. An example is the good firemen's legislation that was just recently passed in this House, Mr. Speaker.

There have been a large number of private members' bills and motions generated from constituents' concerns. In fact, government bills are also generated from constituents' concerns. There are many ways for Albertans to participate in the guidance of legislation and formation of policy, as has been mentioned by the previous speaker. Just to name a few, this government has held a justice summit, an Ag Summit 2000, and a Future Summit. These consultation processes are some of the best ways for Albertans to get their views heard. We have some of the best legislation in the country coming from these processes. Bill 205 would make these consultations seem unnecessary and useless.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 polarizes Albertans as it forces them to vote either yes or no when the best solution requires getting both sides together around a table so that they can hammer out a compromise. That is a major role of the politicians: to be problem solvers and arbitrators between opposing forces. It's our job to make the hard decisions; that's what we were elected for. We listen to the people who elect us, and we act on their behalf. Bill 205 would strip us of that elected responsibility, a responsibility we hold and deliver very well, and we take it very seriously. Giving such a small minority the ability to block and introduce legislation over the will of the majority simply does not make sense when the people have already spoken by electing their officials.

Mr. Speaker, I've already mentioned the related costs of holding a referendum, and I specifically only mentioned the cost to the government for presenting their side of an issue, which could venture into the millions. However, I did not mention the direct costs related to holding a referendum. According to the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, a referendum would cost just as much as a normal election, which in 2001 cost $5.4 million. Adding citizens' initiatives to an existing ballot in an already pending election would increase the cost of that election by 25 to 30 percent, according to the office of the Chief Electoral Officer.

Bill 205 states that a referendum must be held within six months of when the 95,000 signatures are delivered to the government. This means that we could be having a referendum on a variety of issues every six months, costing taxpayers $5.4 million every half a year. In a time of fiscal restraint and the public demanding the government to be frugal with spending, such expenditures are not something the average Joe Albertan would be supportive of.

With ever escalating health care, education, and infrastructure costs the government should not be wasting money on referendums when legislators are paid and elected to make those decisions. We are elected to represent the people, and we do that to the best of our ability. If Albertans feel that we fail at doing that, they will let us know in the next election. That is where we are brought to task; that is where we are held responsible.

So let me repeat, Mr. Speaker, why I cannot support Bill 205. First, it allows special-interest groups to become agenda-controlling parties. Special-interest groups polarize the public and feed society with one-sided messages. They normally have deep pockets and will have the opportunity to get their issue brought forward. In a time when the public is already skeptical about the amount of money in politics, this bill will only fuel that sentiment. Special-interest groups in urban areas may be disadvantageous to special-interest groups in rural areas. Secondly, Bill 205 nullifies the whole reason why we sit here today. We are the elected officials, elected to make those hard decisions for the best interests of the entire province for all Albertans. Finally, the costs involved in holding referendums cannot be justified when much more pressing issues face the public.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I will not support Bill 205, and I urge all my colleagues not to support it as well. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to speak in support of Bill 205, the Citizens' Empowerment Act. This is an excellent bill, and this is a concept that I have seen supported in this Legislature by a variety of people over time, so it's surprising to hear what we're hearing from some of the members who support the government position in terms of opposing this.

The object of this bill is to be another part of our democratic process package that we are putting together to bring some strong representation to the people of Alberta and have them able to participate in that kind of democratic renewal. This one talks specifically about the elements of direct democracy and brings it into law in this province.

We have two distinct parts to the bill. One is the referendum on the legislation passed by the Alberta Legislature, and the second is an initiative process where Albertans can petition the Legislature to introduce a piece of legislation. It's similar to B.C. legislation. The difference, though, is that our legislation does not allow an initiative petition to deal with money at all, and that has been a standard practice in this particular Legislature, that money bills are handled a little differently. I happen to agree with that particular process, and we would see that supported in future endeavours.

The referendum on legislation is a piece that has been intensely popular with Albertans over time, and this particular section of the bill attaches the condition that once again, as we see now, no act can come into force until 90 days have passed from the date of Royal Assent, enabling people to bring forward the petition for a referendum. What this does is make members more accountable for their actions, and it eliminates some of that strong party discipline that we see develop in parties who have been in power for a long time as we see examples of in this particular province. It means that backbenchers have an opportunity to break rank for good reason: because they are being petitioned by their constituents, who are really the people who elected them and not their party, although in this province that's sometimes debatable. What it does, for sure, is make sure, then, that those representing their constituents are more accountable, and that's certainly what we need to see happen here.

So if people want to bring the petition forward, what they do is: within the 90-day window they have a number of signatures. We're suggesting equal to 5 percent of the total number of electors eligible to vote in the most recent general election, and that's about 95,000 signatures. So it's a significant number and organizers have to be committed and people have to be convinced that it's a good idea to go forward. It's a significant amount of the people in the province who would do this.

What would happen then, if the petition was in order, is that the Lieutenant Governor would set a date for a democratic guarantee election, and the date must be no later than six months from the date of the Chief Electoral Officer. So what would happen then, too, is that we would have legislation that is a little more accountable when it comes to the floor of the Assembly.

I've seen quite often in the 10 years that I've been here legislation come forward that is flawed or poorly written, and it's either withdrawn from the floor or it comes back for amendments at some later date or we encounter some significant problems with it as it's ruled out. I believe that this would add another level of scrutiny to the legislation on the government's side, so what we would see would be better drafted in the first place. That would be good. That would be good for everybody, I think. There's enough staff in government to ensure that that happens. There just needs to be the will on the part of the politicians to bring it to force. What is the best piece of pressure that you can put on a politician? That's the pressure of their constituents' wishes, and this would see that happen. With this legislation an Albertan could apply to the Chief Electoral Officer to start a petition proposing that a piece of legislation be introduced, when we talk about initiation legislation. We heard some members talk about their now lobbying their members for a private members' bill, which does happen, but we all know the number of pieces of legislation we get to bring in every year. In my experience that's one piece of legislation. I'll get two pieces on the Order Paper, but I'm lucky if one of them gets debated. As an opposition MLA none of it ever gets passed. When it gets passed is when the government takes up the idea a couple of years down the road and brings it in as their own legislation. So for someone . . .

Dr. Massey: Like the stability fund.

Ms Carlson: That's right. Like the stability fund. Well, there are lots of really good examples. Freedom of information: not the way we would have rolled it out, but it was our idea. There are lots of good ideas like that in this province.

What we need is something that's a little closer to the people, where they can bring in their own good ideas and have a forum for them to be debated within the Legislature in a nonbiased kind of way. I'm sure that if a constituent of Edmonton-Ellerslie brought forward a piece of legislation, this government would be fair and reasonable and give it the same due process. I see that the Minister of Infrastructure is shaking his head positively, and that's exactly what I would expect from him, that we would see it have the same kind of positive due process as a constituent bringing forward legislation from his riding.

So that would be a good thing, not like what happens now. When I bring legislation forward, you guys dump all over it. [interjection] Well, that's certainly been the experience in ten years; yes.

Rev. Abbott: Boohoo.

Ms Carlson: No, it's not a situation of boohooing, Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. It's a situation of reality, yes, and respect and taking a look at what the performance has been for the members who support the government and the government itself in supporting Official Opposition legislation. It's been few and far between that we've seen the odd nod come our way. So a fairer process would be to have . . .

Mr. Rathgeber: When you move adjourning, the House would always vote in favour.

Ms Carlson: Well, some members like from Edmonton-Calder don't actually like to show up to work all that often or participate in a general venue where they actually stand up and get their names on the record. So we would like to see that process changed from the only thing that I bring forward that he votes for being the adjournment of the House to actually voting for legislation, which would be actually what he's paid to do, not to vote for adjournment of the House.

I would like to comment for a moment if I could, Mr. Speaker, on his former comment congratulating me on being a grandmother. I'm very proud of being a grandmother, and he can make that comment any time he wants to.

So back to the legislation where we talk about members of the community being able to initiate legislation on their own. What it would mean is that we'd see more new fresh ideas in the Legislature, because I am sure that we would have a part of the daily Routine set aside for those initiative processes to take place. That would be good, because certainly this government can use good ideas, and we could see them act on some of those. So that would be positive.

Once again, we talk here about not having to deal with money. So money bills talk about imposing taxes; they talk about cutting funds for public projects. We also would not like to see any legislation come forward that's contrary to the Charter of Rights legislation. I think it is the government's role to decide how the money is spent. Unfortunately, it's not spent as wisely as we think it could be, but it is their role to decide how that is done. They have more information available to them than people in the province or opposition members have, so we don't have the opportunity to really make those kinds of interrelated and connected decisions that the government does. But all other legislation could be brought forward to this House so that we could really see some representative democracy happening here. We think that that's a very good idea and that the time frame on bringing this kind of legislation in would be within 90 days.

With that, I'm urging all members to support this piece of legislation because it is good.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for this opportunity today to rise and speak to Bill 205, the Citizens' Empowerment Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. The hon. member holds the position of Leader of the Opposition, that is steeped in the history of parliament and the traditions of our democracy. It is a position that has developed over time through the successive sessions of Legislatures and parliaments around the world. This history, this tradition helps to define not only the hon. member's role but all of our roles as well. Each day we are reminded of the legacy of our forefathers and the standards and conventions that they helped to establish. All of us today are playing a role in the continued development of the Westminster parliamentary tradition, which future parliamentarians of both this province and the Commonwealth as a whole will one day follow.

We all know that each and every one of us will be doing our constituents and others a great disservice if we ignore the core principles of this Assembly and the democracy that it helps to facilitate. I remind hon. members of this history because I believe it is essential to understanding the dramatic shifts that are represented by Bill 205, and while I commend the member for trying to facilitate an increased role for Albertans in the legislative process, I believe that this bill represents a flawed move away from good governance. It is an affront to Alberta's democratic traditions and values and has logistical errors within it that distort its intent.

Good governance to me means the best interests of the people and not public opinion, for I truly believe that the best interests of the people represent something broader than public opinion or just chasing the polls. Public opinion can be influenced by the temperament of the times, by the issues and circumstances that can dissipate and ebb as quickly as they gather and build. Legislation and the future direction of the province require more consideration than whether an act is popular or not. Public opinion and input into the legislative agenda is vital to a government and to the common discussion that we continually have on where we as Albertans are headed, but public opinion, while an important factor to consider in setting our province in a new direction, is not a direction in and of itself. Bill 205 and its democratic guarantee elections would quite simply compromise the ability of any government to exercise its proper legislative prerogative.

Citizen participation is clearly important to the legislative process, but as an hon. member has pointed out, "there also has to be the legislative prerogative to make sure that it balances with all the other aspects that go on in the context of how we deal with policy." The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East was correct when he made that statement back in 1998, and he would be well served to consider that comment again today. This government was re-elected to office twice after making tough and necessary decisions to guide Alberta into the 21st century, and I firmly believe that this government already has the successful means and ability to listen to and consider the input into the public and legislative process, that people themselves have the successful means and ability to properly judge the entirety of a mandate and consider whether a government should continue to guide Alberta.

Good governance is something that Albertans are accustomed to. By its very definition good governance requires governments and legislators to always consider the best interests of the people, and when they don't, Albertans are not shy about expressing their sentiments at not only the polls but also through the regular channels of our democracy, be it through letters, phone calls, faxes, e-mails, or public displays. To suggest that these sentiments are casually ignored is at best false and at worst a dangerous comment. I have never, Mr. Speaker, ever ignored my constituents.

I would like to stress that subjecting the majority of legislation to the constant threat of override by unions or special-interest groups calls into question the history of this Assembly. A government stands on the confidence of the House, and when a bill passes with a majority of support, regardless of which member votes for it, it is a fundamental tenet and belief of our democracy that the government enjoys the support of the people. They receive this support through the members the people elect to represent them, and it is constantly tested and reaffirmed each time a vote in this Assembly occurs. Allowing legislation to be dismissed at the whim of only 5 percent of the population is an insult to the democratic will expressed at a provincial election and the clear direction provided by the people to the government.

A provincial election is not only an affirmation of support or protest, but it also represents a direction for government to carry out a set of initiatives. These initiatives as endorsed by the democratic will of the people should not be subjected to the override of a dissatisfied few. Elections also represent a coming together of the people. Coalitions of interests and people come together in our process to work towards the betterment of all Albertans. These coalitions usually entail that legislation is subject to the give-and-take of the political process, but at the end of the day the legislation appeals to a broad grouping of individuals.

By subjecting legislation to this sort of warped legislative veto as proposed in this bill, we would be subjecting our system and these coalitions to a fractionalization effect that would threaten to segregate interests rather than bringing them together. Supporters of these sorts of initiatives would argue that people deserve to be consulted on a regular basis and that somehow a provincial election presents a limited opportunity for the public to engage in the political process and that the government can run wild and abandoned in the meantime. This view breeds the sort of political cynicism that all of us face. However, it shows a clear misunderstanding of how government works. You create fear and look for someone to blame, which is a typical opposition tactic and nothing but sheer rhetoric.

Governments who ignore the people do so at their own peril. Making tough decisions in the best interests of the province does not mean that the people are not being listened to or being properly served. This government not only listens to the people but actively engages Albertans on a regular basis. The result, Mr. Speaker, is better legislation, a mandate that has propelled Alberta to the forefront of Canadian life, and a citizenry whose interests are constantly looked after.

I would like to take a moment to describe some of the logistical errors that I see in this bill. Specifically, I am concerned with the requirements that Bill 205 sets out for the initiation of provincial legislation by the people. An hon. member has previously indicated:

I guess if there's a concern, it has to do with the requirement that the petition be less than 25 words. How do you get out an idea that's complex enough to become a law in 25 words so that it can be understood and fully appreciated by all of the citizens who are going to be voting on this piece of legislation?

What an excellent point, and I again applaud the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East for making it so sensibly back in 1998.

Members of this Assembly are tasked with the responsibility of the operation of this House. That means taking the time to understand legislation, discuss its merits, and contemplate its impact on Alberta. Albertans appoint us to this task, and I fail to understand how the hon. member expects Albertans to be better served by a process that dilutes ideas down to 25 words or less. I mean, really, how realistic is that? The hon. member himself usually can't get his own question in question period down to less than 25 words. How can he expect Albertans to do the same to an idea that has the potential to become the law of this land?

Engaging Albertans is something that all governments must do. In fact, it is something that Albertans have become accustomed to through our parliamentary system, through our history, and something that they have come to expect from their present provincial legislators. That is the point of the consultations done by government through summits, roundtables, and workbooks. While some would argue that this bill is a step in the evolutionary process of our democracy and traditions, I would respectfully disagree. This bill represents a radical departure from our history and a misunderstanding of the basic role of MLAs and the public that we serve. Citizen participation is key to all that we do here in this Chamber, and no one would argue to the contrary. In fact, it is a reflection in part of the reasons why we are all here. Each of us as private citizens took the time to become involved in the process. Each of us took the time to learn the issues. Each of us offered our services to fellow Albertans, and we were all honoured to be elected. I know of no member of this Assembly who does not respect or honour public participation in the legislative process. All of us can also appreciate and acknowledge other Albertans who participate in our process in countless other ways.

Bill 205 does not properly serve either the interests of the people or the good governance that they have come to expect. Thus, a vote in opposition to this bill is not a vote against legitimate citizen participation. It is a vote in opposition to poor legislation. I would urge all hon. members to exercise the duties the people have entrusted us with and vote no to this legislative veto by unions and special-interest groups and vote no to initiative petitions that seek to water down important legislative ideas and issues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. This has been very interesting. Very interesting. I remember that vote in '98. Well, this has been fun.

We know that we have citizens that feel that they're disconnected from what goes on in here and increasingly disconnected from what goes on in this House. About 50 percent of our voting population is not voting. They feel that they aren't connected to what's going on in this Assembly, that they don't particularly have influence. We've had a number of interesting statements and suggestions made.

5:10

Mr. McClelland: Especially that Trudeau fellow.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, especially that Trudeau fellow.

A certain amount of fuzzy thinking, I think, from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford with that one quote that he clings to so tenaciously. I think the whole point of why we needed a Charter of Rights and Freedoms and in fact why we have most laws passed is exactly to protect the minority from the tyranny of the majority, so I'm going to have to disagree with the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on that one.

Dr. Massey: We actually had this kind of legislation before.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, we did actually have this kind of legislation before in Alberta, and it was repealed, which is very interesting.

Currently we have a system in Alberta where it's first-past-the-post, majority wins, and I think a number of us are recognizing that that system is not finding as much favour as it used to, because we're not bringing into the fold those members whose votes are not reflected in that, are not reflected in the popular vote.

Why do we have so many citizens in Alberta that are dissatisfied with, I think, whether or not they're able to get their voice into this Assembly? I look at the changes that have been brought into place by this government just in the time that I've been here that make it harder for their voices to be heard. We have things like the petitions. Now, we had the Standing Orders renegotiated, and of course the government with its majority for the most part I think actually almost exclusively got its way in the changes to Standing Orders. So the petitions are now so narrow and so restrictive that we have very few petitions coming forward to the House. That was a tool that I think a number of citizens wanted to be able to use, but it's so restrictive now that very few of them can meet the requirements.

Tablings. We still have tablings in the Assembly, but they've been moved to the end of the Routine, when a large number of members of the Assembly have already left, so the impact of being able to table and say a few words about what the citizen has said in their letter or their document that they've brought forward is much minimized. With the change in the Routine, as a matter of fact, many members start leaving immediately after question period and miss both Presenting Petitions and Tabling Returns and Reports.

We've had the government develop essentially a parallel system which is an internal and partisan system, which I believe subsumes the importance of the Legislative Assembly. Often I see the irritation of the government members at the processes that we have before us in this Assembly, and I think that a lot of that is due to: they think they've done it. You know, they had their internal partisan committees. Somebody has told them that it's a good bill and they should vote for it, and here's the little four-paragraph or four-sentence blurb on it, and there you go. That's the bill. Be happy. So when the bill actually comes up for debate here, nobody wants to get up and debate it because they think they've done it.

The Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert said: well, I mean, we can have citizens bring a private member's bill before the Assembly. Interesting idea, but certainly with the size of the majority we've got now, there are some 58 private members. There's a lottery, a draw your name out of the hat system that's used to establish what are going to be the private members' bills that make it before the Assembly, and that lottery starts over every year. So you can have private members' bills that could have a whole number of constituency issues they'd like to bring forward, and they never get chosen in the draw. So they're not serving their constituents very well there. They can't. They're precluded from it by the very system that's in place here. Those citizens don't get to get their voices heard here.

I heard the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View talk about a veto.

There's nothing in this bill that vetoes. This is pretty simple, basic stuff. This is about a mechanism, a tool so that the citizens of Alberta can have an opportunity to have the Assembly have a second look at legislation that the petitioners believe deserves a second look and should not be proclaimed quickly and also allows citizens to bring forward and petition to have an idea looked at. Nothing requires the Assembly to give up its good judgment, which is how the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was somehow misconstruing what's in this bill.

It's been very interesting to see the many different interpretations that the government members have had of a fairly straightforward idea. Even if you look at the preamble, it talks about people having "a more direct role in influencing the laws" and that "Alberta has a long tradition of grassroots democracy" – and indeed it does; as I said, we've already had a citizens' empowerment act in place in Alberta, and it was repealed – and also that "legislators be receptive to initiatives for direct democracy." Indeed.

So I'm very interested in the vigour, the energy, the outrage that was brought forward by the members of government in their concern that somehow citizens would be able to bring something and have it put before the members in this Assembly. What I see are members of a government who don't want to listen to what their citizens are saying. They keep bringing forward pieces of legislation, bill after bill, statute after statute, into this Assembly that are what they call enabling legislation, and what's that? It's a shell bill. It's a blank cheque bill. It says: you just approve this, and the minister has the power to do everything else. Well, that's not about involving citizens. Indeed, it's very much about saying to the citizens: "No, no, no. All of this will happen behind closed doors." I don't know how the government thinks or what's in their brain. You're not important enough or you're not smart enough – I don't know; maybe you don't have enough money – to have an active involvement in that. "No, no, no. We're just going to pass all of this legislation, then we'll go behind closed doors and make up the regulations, and you don't get to see us make up those regulations." You don't get to hold your MLA accountable for how they participate or do not participate in the debates behind those closed doors. You don't get to have any influence over what happens with those regulations, and out they're going to come if you can find them when they do.

So it's been a very interesting exercise to watch how vehemently the members of the government oppose this pretty simple bill that's really just trying to say: we need a couple of opportunities for people to have influence on what's happening in this House. The fallback is always every four years, the ultimate influence that the voters have. But you know what? The world is moving too fast, and people are not willing to accept that every four years bit anymore. I think, which now brings me around to where I started, that's in large part accountable for why we have 50 percent of our eligible voters not participating in that process in this province. They don't see how they can possibly break through what this government has put in place, that wall, that castle with a moat, that specialized up on the hill, don't you dare come in here and tell us what to do or even suggest nicely what to do.

So thanks very much for the opportunity to bring a few of these points forward, Mr. Speaker. Boy, this has been fun. Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to rise today and join debate on Bill 205, the Citizens' Empowerment Act, 2003. While I always support and encourage the public's involvement and participation within our provincial political affairs, I believe that introducing a bill which, if approved, could potentially block future government legislation via referendum would be a foolish and counterproductive measure. In my view, Bill 205 is an unnecessary and unhelpful piece of legislation because it creates rather than solves problems. Before I get into the reasons why I believe that Bill 205 is unhelpful to Albertans, I would like to reiterate the provisions of this bill.

The purpose of Bill 205 is to create an environment which would permit petitions signed by only 5 percent of Alberta's electorate to carry the same weight as government bills. Furthermore, not only would such petitions carry the same weight as bills. They could also serve to block potential government legislation. Bill 205 mandates that if particular government legislation gets blocked, a referendum would be held in order to determine whether the legislation would be passed.

The problem with this arrangement, Mr. Speaker, is threefold. First, here in Alberta we currently not only have a good, responsive government, but we also have a system which allows the citizens of this province to interact and work with their elected representatives in order to ensure that they are acting in a manner that is responsible to all Albertans. Albertans have given us a mandate to work with them and create policies which are designed to best address the needs of the entire province. Therefore, by permitting petitions signed by only 5 percent of Alberta's populace which could block government legislation, we would not only make our system of governance ineffective, but we would also be catering to the aspirations of only a small segment of Albertans while ignoring the rest and most likely the majority. Apart from creating some extremely damaging problems relating to our system of governance, Bill 205 could also potentially cost this province millions of dollars of public revenue.

Mr. Speaker, I do not have to remind you that referendums are in many ways similar to elections. They take time to administer, and they cost a large amount of money. Spending millions of dollars on referendums every time a small percentage of Albertans are in disagreement with a particular act would zap this government's ability to put appropriate funds in programs and services that matter to Albertans.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I for one have not heard of any of my constituents calling me for the introduction of any provisions even similar to those outlined in Bill 205, and therefore I cannot see any reason to support it.

We as Albertans have always valued the importance of our free and democratic system of government and the leading role our electorate plays in the political affairs of this province. Unlike many other people in this world who live in less fortunate political environments, we are extremely fortunate to live in a province which values and promotes the political involvement of its citizens. Our democratic system of government is embodied with society's values, and in turn our society is the cornerstone of our democratic system. Without the continuous input and involvement of Albertans of all political orientations, our democratic institutions would not only become ineffective and unproductive, but they would eventually cease to exist. To put it in other terms, Mr. Speaker, the political involvement of the masses is the fuel which runs the engine of our democracy.

Under our democratic political system all Albertans enjoy the same basic rights and freedoms, which include the right of political involvement, association, and expression. A very important point to make, Mr. Speaker, is that not only are Albertans entitled to publicly voice their opinions and concerns, but they have and continue to actively utilize the various means and tools that are available to them in order to work with this government and help us create sound policies and initiatives.

As a result of this vital co-operation, Mr. Speaker, this government has brought forward a number of policies, legislation, and initiatives which have proven to be extremely beneficial to all Albertans. Therefore, I think that provisions outlined in Bill 205 would not only be damaging to the effectiveness of our democratic parliamentary system, but they would also have some extremely detrimental effects upon the people of this province.

As I previously mentioned, Mr. Speaker, from the very onset this government has stayed true to the policies of listening and communicating with Albertans and crafting policies and legislation which reflect the issues and concerns voiced by all citizens of Alberta. As an example of this policy, in 2000 the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development launched a public consultation process regarding the issues facing Alberta's agricultural industry. This review process, which is referred to as the Ag Summit, gave Albertans, especially farmers, the opportunity to give voice to concerns relating to the challenges facing the industry in a modern and globalized market system. The consultation process is still under way, but once it's been completed, the recommendations of the issues that Albertans have raised will undoubtedly be addressed in future government policies and legislation.

Another example is this government's commitment to consulting with Albertans with regard to pressing issues facing our province. Alberta Learning undertook to review Alberta's special education system. The review process focused on public consultation with education partners, stakeholders, and service providers. The purpose of the review process was to determine whether the current resources allocated to our special education system were sufficient and whether they were being utilized to their full potential. Once the special education review was completed, a report was released to the public outlining 66 specific recommendations, all of which were designed to improve the delivery of administration of special education programs in Alberta. So far, Mr. Speaker, 43 of the 66 recommendations have been implemented. The work is under way to incorporate a further 17, and the six remaining recommendations are already part of Alberta Learning's ongoing services.

Mr. Speaker, the Ag Summit and the review of special education are only a few in an endless list of examples where this government has asked Albertans to bring forward their concerns, ideas, and recommendations and looked into incorporating them into policy. Therefore, I believe that Bill 205's underlying argument which maintains that Albertans currently do not enjoy enough input into the government's policy and legislation is false. Albertans do enjoy a very high degree of input in this government's policies and legislation, and they will continue to have this input because all of us in this House are Albertans and we are committed to paving the way for Alberta's future success.

Apart from having false presumptions, Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 also assumes that Albertans would be content to see their government spend millions and millions of dollars on ongoing referendums. Elections Alberta estimates that the cost of a referendum in Alberta could be very similar to the cost of a provincial election. Our last provincial election cost the taxpayers $5.4 million. You can clearly see that if we have to administer a $5.4 million referendum every time a special-interest group collects signatures from only a small percentage of Albertans, we could have a cost which would run into tens of millions of dollars.

We don't have to look far beyond our borders, Mr. Speaker, to see how ineffective and costly the legislation would be. Similar to Bill 205, in our neighbouring province of British Columbia they have what is referred to as the Recall and Initiative Act, which allows constituents to recall their Members of the Legislative Assembly provided that they come up with 40 percent of eligible votes within a 60-day period. The process may sound good on paper, but when you put it into practice, it proved to be ineffective and very costly. Since 1995, the year when the Recall and Initiative Act was introduced, there have been 11 recall petitions. Incidentally, not one of them has succeeded in recalling even a single B.C. MLA, because the petitions either failed to get the necessary number of voters or were withdrawn by their proponents.

I now move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Provincial Education Savings Plan

506. Ms Graham moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore new means of helping students finance their postsecondary education including the establishment of a provincial education savings plan to supplement Canada's registered education savings plan.

[Debate adjourned April 7]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to be able to rise today and speak to Motion 506, exploring new means to help students finance their postsecondary education. I'd like to begin by thanking the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for bringing forward this motion. I think it's timely, and I think it's the right thing we should be discussing today, and I was quite excited when I saw it.

As I looked at this, I kind of cast my mind back really quickly on the last three generations of my own family. I looked at my father, who was technically brilliant but came out of high school during the Depression. He didn't have a father and food was really important, so he never got a postsecondary education. In fact, he didn't go to get a postsecondary education until he turned 65, and then he got his first degree and his master's degree after he retired.

He raised six children. He taught us that education was very, very important and that we should all have one. It was one thing he was very good at doing. He had six children, and unfortunately it never even occurred to us that we would have any help getting that postsecondary degree. It was really up to us. In fact, I remember the day that he dropped me off at university. He turned to me and he said: do you have any money? And I said: no. And I remember he gave me $20.

I cast that with my own son, whom I took to university five years ago. I mean, I never asked him if he had any money and gave him $20. I registered him in school, I bought his books, I got his housing taken care of, and I saw it really as a primary responsibility of our family.

So as I look at the generations of time as they've progressed, as people have tried to get their postsecondary, we have kind of progressed quite a ways. But also in that time period I've often heard that they say that we've learned more in the last 10 years than we have in the history of this earth. I think we do live in a knowledge economy, and the day has come when kids have to have postsecondary degrees today just like they used to have to have a high school diploma. It's important for them to go into almost any line of work, and because work has become so technical, it's become even more important.

So as I look at this motion and I look at how we can help students, I think back to the way that I got through school. I worked 20 hours a week on campus. I worked full-time in the summer. I competed on a speech team because it paid tuition. I mean, I did a myriad of things in order to get through, and I didn't always just look to government or to a student loan. I think that I learned some of the most important things in school by working my way through school. So I first of all think it's important for kids to participate.

But the hon. member brings up an important point. She talks about the provincial educational savings plan or an RESP to complement the federal one. Now, we wouldn't see the results of that for 20 years, but it's a beginning. It does help parents prepare to help their children when that day does come, and it does come. I have three children in postsecondary today, and it is a big responsibility for our family as we look at that.

The other thing that I thought of when I saw the member's motion was also this idea that kids can participate, and I think they should. I had a student in my office last week, and she was complaining that she had five roommates, and I thought: well, I had nine roommates, you know, and we ate macaroni and cheese for three years. I thought you could die of that, but I lived on.

I think that sometimes my own children think that life should be exactly the same as it was when they were home. I always say that going to school is a rite of passage, and you should suffer, and economically it squeezes you, but that's not all bad at that time in life. But that being said, kids need a way to get through school financially. I'm encouraged by our student loan program which asks kids to participate.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'm having a difficult time. There seems to be a number of people on the front bench who are bent on discussing the affairs of the day, and I would invite them to go outside and carry on their important debate or discussion. Meanwhile, let us have one person at one time speaking in the House. For those hon. members the invitation is clear.

Sorry, hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. I was saying that students need a way to manage this. One of the things that concerns me is sometimes our student loans are based on parental participation. Now, in my constituency sometimes parents help a lot. I help my kids a lot. Parents don't always help, though, and these kids do encounter difficulties if their parents' incomes are too high. They might have to go out and work for a few years before they go to school, so I'd like us to seek other ways as well to open the doors for learning so that kids have access to education.

It says in the Council of Alberta University Students' book that 85 percent of Alberta parents expect their students will attend postsecondary education, but only 25 percent of them actually save for it. That tells me there's a big gap going on there and that if we want to encourage parents to help their kids prepare for the day when they are in postsecondary, this would be a good start. We could actually see parents begin to contribute when their kids are little and have the means to help their children when that day does come.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for bringing forward this motion. I think it's very timely, and I will be supporting it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to close debate then.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the sponsor of this motion, which urges government to explore other means of helping students finance their postsecondary education, I am pleased to make some concluding remarks to close debate on the motion this evening, but before doing so, I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Egmont, who graciously agreed to move the motion on my behalf last Monday. I know that the hon. member has done some considerable work of his own on the subject matter of the motion and was certainly supportive of the general intent of the motion. In addition, I'd like to thank other members of the Assembly both from the government side and the opposition side who have spoken in general support of the motion, all of whom I know share my belief in the importance of higher education and the need to help students achieve postsecondary education by removing barriers of cost and institutional capacity.

Simply, Mr. Speaker, my reason for bringing forward the motion was that I wanted to ensure that Alberta students faced with unmanageable financial burdens will not pass on a postsecondary education. Why is higher education so important right now? Well, more than at any other time in the past education is fundamental to our ability in Alberta to compete in the global marketplace. As was mentioned by the Member for Calgary-Egmont, 70 percent of all jobs in Canada nowadays require postsecondary education. The economy of the new order is such that it is fueled by knowledge, and this requires a highly educated workforce. Accordingly, we cannot allow the high costs of postsecondary education to be a barrier to entry.

I would also like it to be noted that while I believe that the benefits of higher education are important to economic considerations, I certainly believe they go much beyond that and provide other societal benefits including social, cultural, and health benefits as well as personal benefits to the individual.

I think it is readily acknowledged, Mr. Speaker, that the cost of postsecondary education has been trending up for a number of years, and I am aware of a report by the Canadian Association of University Teachers which shows that the average costs of an arts program in 2002 in Canada at about $3,561 is 67 percent higher than a decade ago when you take inflation into account. This is due to a number of reasons, among them, changes to tuition fee policy, which has caused tuition rates to increase steadily as operating budgets of institutions have increased steadily. When you combine rising tuition costs with rising costs of living, the cost of textbooks and supplies, then the total cost of postsecondary education has become increasingly difficult to manage for many students.

In my own city of Calgary, just to give you an example, Mr. Speaker, operating costs for the upcoming year are viewed at being an increase of at least 7 percent while funding under the current budget is only going to rise by 2 percent. To deal with these higher operating costs, the board of governors at the U of C recently passed a 6.3 percent increase in tuition across the board in all programs. They have also adopted a differential tuition fee model for medicine, law, and MBA programs, which will see fees more than double over the next two years, and this is happening in institutions all across Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 506 gives government the opportunity to explore new ways of funding postsecondary institutions as well as finding new ways of helping students finance their education, which could entail a review of student loans, scholarships and grants, tax credits, and tuition policy in general to make sure that these programs are serving students' needs, as we would like to see them served. One of my preferred options, which has been mentioned by other members in their comments, would be to establish a provincial RESP coupled with a matching grant much like the federal one.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's future depends on good access to postsecondary education for our students. I urge all members to support Motion 506. Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 506 carried]

Disposal of Public Lands

507. Mr. Broda moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to sell or dispose of public lands that do not possess any economic potential for the province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to rise today and introduce Motion 507, which calls for the disposal of Alberta's surplus public lands. The purpose of Motion 507 is to urge this government to sell off or dispose of any public lands which the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development deems could be better utilized by the private sector. The reason I brought this motion forward is because even though this government has gone to great lengths to sell or dispose of surplus public lands, I believe that we should commit ourselves to furthering our efforts in this area. There are still thousands of acres of publicly owned land that would be put to far better use if they were in the hands of private entrepreneurs.

Before I begin to discuss the reasons why we should be actively pursuing this policy, I would like to make it clear what I mean by surplus public lands. Surplus public lands are parcels of grazing lands under lease, vacant lands, and lands that are currently not being utilized to their full economic potential. Therefore, when I'm talking about disposal of such lands, Mr. Speaker, I'm not referring to valuable forest lands, areas with historic natural grasslands where they're situated, or lands which have been reserved for conservation.

With regards to the status of public lands, Mr. Speaker, this government's policy has been to lease lands rather than sell them to private operators, which in some cases has created certain problems related to effective land utilization, lack of land development incentives, and overextended government ownership of lands. However, the Department of Sustainable Resource Development has pursued the policy of public land sales in certain cases in order to promote agricultural expansion and particular types of commercial, industrial, and recreational uses; provide the necessary land for various essential services, including public works projects, which would benefit Alberta's communities; and free the government of commitments associated with upkeep and management of surplus Crown lands. This policy, Mr. Speaker, has resulted in consolidation of various privately run farms, increased industrial development of land, and increased tax revenue associated with private ownership of previously publicly owned land.

Presently the Department of SRD uses two types of sales methods in order to dispose of Crown lands. One is that public land sales are administered by a public auction which takes place when a particular parcel of public land is considered vacant or has been released from a lease-holding agreement. In other words, this means that the leaseholder has agreed to end the lease-holding agreement. The other one is the public land sales process allowing individuals and companies to place their bids on any piece of public land that has been up for auction. As a result of this process, land is sold to the highest bidder. The other type of sales method that the Department of SRD uses in order to dispose of Crown lands is the private and priority land sale method which is administered through public competition. This type of sale, Mr. Speaker, allows the leaseholders the option to purchase the land that they lease at a fair market price.

The public lands that are generally sold to leaseholders and other private buyers and industrial operators are found in what is referred to as the white area, or the settled portions of the province. More specifically, the white area is made up of populated central, southern, and Peace River regions. The lands in the white area are mainly used for agricultural purposes. As a result, of the 10 million acres of public lands found within the white area, almost 6 million acres are used for agriculture. In turn, Mr. Speaker, these 6 million acres of agricultural land are divided into 7,769 agricultural leases, licences, and permits of various types. Of these 7,000 or so leases, 5,400 consist of grazing leases and 547 consist of grazing permits.

When all the grazing leases and grazing permits are added together, they correspond to almost 5.1 million acres of agricultural public land. This figure represents about 85 percent of all white area land that is used for agricultural purposes. This is a huge land area, and there is no reason why the province needs to hold onto so much of it. The costs associated with administration and management of such a large area of land are undoubtedly very high. If some of this land were sold to private operators, the money that is being spent to administrate all this land could be directed towards more important areas of concern such as health and education.

I think that all of us in this House are aware of the fact that privately owned lands have always been more productive than publicly owned lands. Farmers who own their own land have a vested interest in making it as productive as possible and as a result are willing to invest more time, more effort, and more money than a farmer who is only leasing the land. The private or priority land sales method, which I mentioned earlier, is an ideal way of facilitating land sales to those leaseholders who are in a position to purchase the land that they are leasing. In other cases where leaseholders are not maintaining the bare minimum standard of land development or where parcels of land have become vacant, the public land sale method can be used to sell the land to the highest bidder, be it to an individual farmer or to a larger industry operator. In both cases, Mr. Speaker, the end result is that the land will be better utilized and the government will have less land mass to administer.

Motion 507, Mr. Speaker, will help facilitate this process by urging the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to utilize the tools that are available to him in order to dispose of a large number of publicly owned grazing lands, vacant lands, and lands that are currently not being used to their fullest economic potential. Disposal of some of this surplus land will undoubtedly boost land productivity, help stimulate the Alberta advantage, increase the government's tax revenue, and free up some of the government's valuable resources which could be used for other more important purposes. With this in mind, I urge all my colleagues here today to vote in favour of Motion 507.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and join in the debate on Motion 507 regarding the disposal of Alberta's surplus public lands, sponsored by the hon. Member for Redwater. Listening to the hon. member with regard to this motion thus far, I would like to put forward an amendment to the wording of the motion which would help clarify the intended purpose and the rationale behind this piece of legislation. I have with me 85 copies of the amendment, and I would like the opportunity to share it with all my colleagues. Would you like me to just continue, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: You might read it out. That would be helpful.

Mr. Horner: If I may, Motion 507 is amended by striking out "public lands that do not possess any economic potential for the province" and substituting "lands that are declared surplus to the needs of the province." With your permission, Mr. Speaker, proceed?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Horner: Presently, Mr. Speaker, Motion 507 urges this government "to sell or dispose of public lands that do not possess any economic potential." The amended wording of the motion would in turn urge the government to go to a declared surplus to the needs of the province. It's my belief that this amendment would serve to clarify the purpose and the principles behind the motion. The amended wording would make it clear that any surplus public land would be sold or disposed of only after the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development has approved its sale or disposal. Currently the motion is open to more than one interpretation, which makes it very awkward to understand. I believe that the proposed amendment would make it clear that the motion is not calling on the government to sell or dispose of any public lands that are not economically viable to the province but only those lands that the Minister of SRD deems could be better utilized by the private sector. As my colleague from Redwater already mentioned, such lands include grazing lands under lease, vacant lands, or lands that are currently not being utilized to their full economic potential.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend our government on their commitment to the goal of ensuring good stewardship of public lands, a valuable resource to Albertans. Over the years farmers and ranchers with lease agreements on these lands have provided excellent stewardship, taking care to ensure that these lands are kept in good condition. There are 32 provincial grazing reserves located throughout Alberta. Some of the reserves are community pastures or natural grassland while others have been partially cleared and seeded to forage. They range in size from 6,602 acres to 76,681 acres, and the overall average is close to 22,500 acres. The main purpose of these reserves is to provide summer pasture for Alberta's farmers and ranchers on public land, enabling them to use their own land for crop and hay production.

In keeping with the government's multiple-use policy for public lands, the reserves also offer a variety of recreational opportunities including hunting, hiking, trail riding, cross-country skiing, snow-mobiling, camping, and sightseeing. Others who use grazing land are oil and gas well operators, pipeline companies, gravel haulers, seismic crews, and firewood cutters. Large portions of the reserves also provide excellent habitat for wildlife.

Through the grazing reserve program the province has pioneered the development of tame pasture from tree-covered areas on a large scale. The reserves are on generally poor-quality soils that are not suitable for annual cropping. If these areas are developed properly, they can yield high-quality pasture. Part of the pioneering process has included establishing ways and means to retain good-quality, developed pastures even though nature continues to try its best to re-establish the tree growth that originally existed on these lands.

The multi-use nature of our public lands has raised some concerns between members of the public and leaseholders. Mr. Speaker, there have been many disputes over the years on public land access. Many of the disputes have left many unsure of their rights and responsibilities when it comes to public land that is leased for grazing. The main groups of concerned individuals are recreational users such as hunters and snowmobilers. Bill 16, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, deals with clarifying any uncertainty surrounding the issue of the rights and responsibilities of Albertans on public lands. I think Bill 16 ties in nicely with Motion 507 in that all the issues in Bill 16 could be solved if government were to adopt legislation such as is urged in Motion 507. There would no longer need to be clarification of any uncertainty surrounding this issue. The landowner would have control over access to his or her land. If there is public land that is used for grazing and a recreational user would like to access that land, he or she must be granted permission by the leaseholder and the leaseholder must provide reasonable recreation access to the public leased land.

Not all leaseholders feel that they should have to grant permission to anyone who asks to use the public land or even provide reasonable access. They have cattle or other livestock that use that land for grazing and are not always able to supervise the recreational users to ensure that the actions they take are not harming the land or the livestock. If the leaseholder were able to purchase the public land, these issues would be solved. The only recreational users that could use the private land would be those that the landowner approved of. There would no longer be any recreational users that would be uncertain of their rights. It would be as simple as: if you want access to the land, the landowner has the final say, not the government. After all, it's the leaseholder that knows the land. It should be his or her decision on who gets access to the land, not the government. Selling the land and legally making it the property of the land user will accomplish this task and remove any uncertainty when it comes to access.

Another group that may require access to public lands are oil and gas well operators, pipeline companies, and seismic crews. Farmers and ranchers could benefit from these actions through agreements and contracts between the landowner and company seeking to use the land. Again, Mr. Speaker, there is uncertainty concerning access rights, and again these uncertainties could be resolved by clearly distinguishing a landowner through the sale of public lands to private owners. It would seem to me that with all of the uncertainty and disputes surrounding access to public lands, there is a lot of time spent on the issue, time that could be saved, as well as money, by clearly distinguishing who has the rights to the final say on access to the grazing lands. Motion 507 urges the government to do just that by giving a leaseholder the opportunity to purchase grazing land. It will then be the landowner's decision on land access, thus saving time and money trying to solve disputes caused through the vague access regulations that are presently in place.

Ranchers use their grazing land for the purpose of providing feed for the livestock that they have spent their life and quite often generations acquiring and expanding. This is their investment, their livelihood. I think it's the rancher's right to know who goes on his or her land, and it would be prudent for them to have the final say on those actions. After all, I don't think many members would look highly upon subjecting their lifelong investments to uncertainties when those uncertainties could easily be dissolved.

Motion 507 urges the sale or disposal of public lands that are declared surplus to the needs of the province. I have to agree with that statement, Mr. Speaker, as I had mentioned earlier. If this government is able to sell public lands that are currently causing uncertainty and are tying up valuable government resources, they should be sold if only for the reason to solve disputes and release public lands that are not of any economic benefit but are also surplus.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to support the amendment and Motion 507 as amended. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater on amendment A1.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert for the amendment. I would agree with it. Basically, when the first words came out, economic potential to the province – I think there's a lot of economic potential in agriculture. So declaring it as being surplus lands for the needs of the province makes for more clarity to the motion, and with that I would encourage people to accept the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: On the amendment, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Knight: I've got a couple of comments, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the amendment and substituting for "public lands that do not possess any economic potential for the province" to "lands that are declared surplus to the needs of the province." My question would be with respect to that. I'm not exactly sure who it is that does the declaring, and at what point in time that is going to happen. What's the time frame that we'd be talking about? If we would suggest that any given piece of real estate in the province of Alberta today isn't something that is necessary for the province of Alberta and could be considered to be surplus, we might be a little short-sighted. When we're looking at future situations like the possibility of requiring carbon sinks – the Kyoto accord comes to mind – to meet our international requirements with respect to that sort of thing, it's difficult to tell what piece of real estate it is that would be surplus to our needs. Certainly, in light of that, if we're talking about larger tracts of rural real estate, the possible future value of real estate may be much higher than anything that we could garner for the province of Alberta in the near term.

I had another comment with respect to leases and the fact that leaseholders now have a bit of difficulty controlling their land or being sure that there isn't any detrimental action that takes place on the land with respect to their livestock or that type of thing. With the new legislation that will come forward, I believe there wouldn't be any difference in an agricultural person using his own titled land or a piece of public leased land with respect to his livestock for grazing purposes, because one of the exemptions that allows the leaseholder to withhold access is the fact that if he has livestock on the real estate, he can reasonably withhold access. So I don't really see that there's, you know, a difference with respect to whether the land is leased or owned in that particular case.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the amendment that would be my problem with it. I have some trouble trying to decide who determines when the declaration is made that this real estate is surplus to the province. If we were talking about commercial buildings and that sort of thing, then I think that's a little bit easier to define, but when we start moving away to larger tracts of public land that are held by the province for other purposes, I guess I have some reservations with the idea.

I'll leave my comments at that. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne on the amendment.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to have the opportunity to join in the debate on Motion 507, sponsored by the hon. Member from Redwater. Motion 507 deals with a subject that is also of considerable importance.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we're going to run into this problem. Perhaps you might move that we vote on the amendment, and then you can get on with your speech.

Mr. VanderBurg: I move that we vote on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, thank you.

Mr. VanderBurg: No problem.

I'll speak on Motion 507 as amended. Motion 507 deals with a subject that's also of importance to many of my rural constituents in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, and the motion has been brought forward to urge the government "to sell or dispose of public lands" which might be better utilized by private landowners. These lands for potential sale include grazing lands under lease, vacant lands, or lands that are currently not being utilized, and I would guess that maybe even recreation leases may come into it. I know that for one of my counties that is an issue.

Mr. Speaker, it's widely accepted in the business world that private ownership maximizes economic potential, and giving a person the right to use the land but not to improve it only results in the minimum amount of production for that land. So give that same person the option of purchasing the land for their own to improve upon or to add value to, then that land begins to realize its full economic potential. This is one of the basic prefaces behind capitalism. There are some that are opposed to such a motion and are under the belief that in the hands of private landowners the land will suffer. Well, this rationale is unfounded and false. It's been shown throughout history, especially the history of capitalism, that when individuals have a vested interest in a piece of property, whether it be land or any other tangible asset, it is to the benefit of that individual to improve and to add value to that asset. On the other side of this argument, when individuals are given access and use of the land or any other tangible asset, there is no incentive for that individual to add value to that asset. So it's kind of the basic language in the business world.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 507 will also face critics who believe that all public land should be treated equally. Well, this is not entirely a reasonable argument. While it's true that we need to hold our land very dear and near to our hearts, we need to differentiate between land that could be used in a more productive fashion and public land that should be held in conservation for us. As has been mentioned earlier by my fellow colleagues, there are currently public lands situated in the middle of land that is being cultivated for agricultural purposes. Well, for situations such as this, there is no reason to keep its status as public land.

For example, some Albertans would oppose the sale of natural grasslands in regions in southern Alberta, you know, because they're considered to be part of Alberta's western heritage. I'm sure that when immigrants came to this region of western Canada, they came with dreams and aspirations of improving their lives in the process, improving the land. Maintaining our western heritage would be truly exemplified if we acknowledged the hard work that our forefathers put into the land to build a life for themselves. This tradition carries on today in our agricultural community, a community that we all look to as a reminder of where we started from as a province and as people here in Alberta. If we truly wanted to maintain that sense of heritage, we would move to sell this public land to people who continue to have the goals of building the economy and, of course, this province.

Mr. Speaker, the selling of public lands that are deemed to be of more beneficial use in private hands makes sense not only from an economic perspective but also from the standpoint of protecting the integrity of this historical piece of property. The sale or disposal of Alberta's surplus public lands would lead to an amalgamation of existing private farming operations, increase the development of public land for the benefit of all Albertans, and increase tax value.

I guess if there's any weakness in this motion, it's that it only deals with land. Albertans own white elephants like the federal building right beside us, you know, just one block from here. I'm hoping that the Minister of Infrastructure is listening.

An Hon. Member: Turn it into a school and give it to Calgary.

Mr. VanderBurg: Yeah. Exactly. Let's move to get rid of that white elephant. It costs us lots everyday to heat. This is something else that could be included in this motion.

Back on the subject, it's worth while to note that the idea raised in this motion coincides with the viewpoint of the Department of Sustainable Resource Development. The department's mission statement is to "ensure the sustained contribution of benefits to Albertans from Alberta's public land and wildlife resources."

For the reasons I've outlined above, I urge my colleagues to back Motion 507 and support the disposal of Alberta's surplus public lands. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This motion as amended is very important as it touches on the issues of land usage and private property rights here in Alberta. I believe in private property rights. From gun ownership to land ownership, private property rights are important. The principle I would like to advocate today is that both a democracy and an economy work better when they are underscored by a strong private property system. I believe that this assertion withstands both the weight of philosophical reasoning as well as the weight of evidence, and I'd like to discuss some of the reasons that I make this assertion, and at the same time I'd also like to discuss cases from other parts of the world where, once public lands were transferred to private owners, the economy of the country took off.

Mr. Speaker, as has been stated already, the underlying principle of private property is that when a person owns something, he is more likely to take care of it because in taking care of his property, he is taking care of his interests and contributing to his own success and prosperity. I'm sure that every member in this Assembly can think of an example from their own lives where this has been the case. Remember your first car? Well, I see a lot of young guys around my constituency, and when they get their first car, they are so proud. They polish it, they keep it clean, they maintain it, and they paint it. Essentially, they do all the things that their mother always tried to get them to do around the house, things that they wouldn't do or would only do once their mom or dad got on their case. Now, a quick observation becomes very clear: they care about their car because they own it. It is in many respects an extension of them. They care about it because they put work into it; they invested their time. And they care about it because when somebody owns something, it is a symbol of their own self-reliance, which raises their self-esteem.

I'm sure that everyone here has heard the problem of the free rider, or the freeloader, as some call them. A free rider is someone who obtains the benefits of something held in common but does not put in his share of the work needed to maintain it. There are historical situations which highlight this problem. For example, in the 1800s and 1900s a lot of bigger cities in Europe and North America went out of their way to create free public spaces for citizens to congregate, either to go for a walk or to play a pickup game of basketball, baseball, or soccer, whatever, or just to sit out on a bench or on the grass. Now, initially it sounded like a great idea. As cities became more congested, it seemed appropriate to make space for citizens.

But then something happened. Everyone was using the commons for their own interest. Everyone took, but no one gave back. No one took the time to clean up the litter and the waste, or if in a game of soccer a divot of grass was taken out, the players didn't stop to replace it. People just bucked their responsibilities to the land they used. The inevitable end was that the common free spaces turned ugly and unimpressive as people did not take the time to manage them properly. In the end people stopped using these free spaces, and the only way the cities brought people back to the free spaces was to refurbish them and to hire city maintenance workers to constantly provide upkeep. Now, Mr. Speaker, guess who had to pay the expense? That's right; it came at the taxpayers' expense, even those who had never even used the free spaces and had no intention of ever using them.

Now, if I could bring this back to the example of a car, could you imagine if four guys bought a car instead of the one guy in my constituency? The car would probably be run into the ground because each of them would assume that the other would take it to the car wash or change its oil or fill it with gas or maintain it. As well, each would likely assume that the others were not putting in their fair share, so they would either attempt to force the others to put in more or, more likely, they would minimize the amount of money and work that he had put into the car thereby caring for it less, and in the end the car would be less well off due to its common ownership.

Now, it's one thing, however, to own something and be proud of it and another to own something for the purposes of reaping an economic benefit. If you own land that you want to sell for a profit, then you'll consider different ideas of how to improve the land thereby increasing your profit margin. You'll also consider what sorts of groups may be able to make the best use of the land and market it to those groups, hoping that they'll see its potential and offer you more money for the land. Finally, you will consider ways that you may be able to use the land for your own business or personal interests, and in doing so, you will be able to find a way to make good use of the land.

The basic point is this. When you put land in the hands of private interests, you put land in the hands of people who have a greater stake in its ability to be used successfully and for a profit. If you leave land in the hands of government, the thought of it making a profit is put to the back burner.

Now, I would guess that for some members across the way it's better that we leave this land to government. I respectfully disagree. Study after study shows that the more land is held by private interests, the more successful an economy is. This is because the land is taken away from the reach of political concerns and is open to the ingenuity and creativity of a person trying to either care for the land or to make it economically viable.

A few cases in point ought to be mentioned here. In his study of the history of economic growth in the U.S. economist Hernando de Soto noted that it was not until squatters were given title to the land they were squatting on and it was not until other lands were put up for auction that their economy began to take off. As well, de Soto has argued that if private property laws were instituted in countries such as the Philippines, Peru, Haiti, and Egypt, their economies would be poised to grow as well. Now, this is not to suggest that selling land is the only step involved in economic growth. Of course, it's only one step. But the point that de Soto makes is that when this land is owned by the government, it is effectively dead capital. There is no profit to be made by it. In fact, in the four countries I just mentioned, de Soto has charged that there is more than $450 billion in dead capital, most of it being land operated under antiquated property laws.

Now, Alberta doesn't need to follow those countries. Our government has made the commitment to get out of the business of business. Part and parcel of that is getting out of the business of owning land. Let's pass this motion, and let's get our government working on selling this land to private interests, and then let's let Albertans turn that land into economic and personal success.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I would take a slightly different approach than the previous speaker. I don't think that there is any great economic boom in this. I don't think it's going to drive the economy of Alberta a lot, but what it's going to do is it's going to use a little bit of common sense in the money that we spend on administering many parcels of land that simply doesn't need to be done. The old school properties, for example, in many, many cases have been broken up and added into farmland. In lots of cases all that's left are the trees that surrounded it. It's basically nonproductive land that grows weeds. It's a pretty handy place for the local farm kids to party, so maybe we should leave some of it.

I think we have to look at it as: what would be the best for the land, for its neighbours? Simply adding in some cases three or four acres or 10 acres into a farmland is not an economic boom. It's just something that we only have to do once, and then we don't need to keep a couple of hundred people busy writing up these leases. It makes it difficult if you have some of the leased land and you want to improve it. If you want to do dugouts or you want to do fences or however you want to work it, then you need to get into the SRD department, and the parade of people that have to come and investigate this stuff is really astounding. Quite honestly, what they should send out is a real estate agent and determine a fair market value and sell it to you.

Some of the people say: well, the public will lose access to lands. We're not talking about a great deal of land here. I don't think anyone is suggesting we sell the eastern slopes, but there are many, many quarters of land within even 10 miles of the community I live in that are part of a farming operation now where no one could tell the difference between titled land or the government land. It just simply doesn't make sense to keep leasing it year after year after year. The idea that this land might not be used appropriately or that they may be overgrazing just doesn't reflect what the farm community does with its land. They're probably better stewards of land than all the well-meaning do-gooders that we have hired.

I think we can go about it in a very orderly manner too. We don't have to rush out and look for these parcels of land. In the term of their lease, if it's a 10-year term, if we're eight years into it or if we're one year into it, when the lease comes due, give the owner adequate notice that you intend to sell the land and provide the options to him so that it doesn't come as a big surprise to anybody in the chain of command, so to speak, so that they know what's going to happen. They also know, then, if they have the intention to buy it, that they can do improvements, and we can address that. If they've fenced it and cross-fenced it or put in water improvements, dugouts or wells of any kind, they can be treated fairly, and part of the sale would recognize that they have done improvements to it.

I think that in summing up, Mr. Speaker, it's simply time now to move these parcels off our plate, to take the money that we would gain from it and use it to the greater advantage of the rest of Alberta. There's really no cost to the province in getting rid of it. The cost savings come in administrative savings. Certainly, the economic boon to the people buying it is that the stability is there in knowing they have ownership. I think that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne's example of the federal building down the road would be a perfect example of where we may include things besides farmland in getting rid of things that are virtually useless. I just wanted to make sure that we got the point across that there are some things that should be sold quicker than others.

So, Mr. Speaker, with that, I would just encourage everyone to support this motion and support the minister in his efforts to get rid of the land that's not environmentally sensitive or doesn't fit into the long-term needs or requirements of the government of Alberta. Thank you.

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted this evening to have the opportunity to join in the debate on Motion 507 as amended and sponsored by the hon. Member for Redwater. Motion 507 as amended deals with a subject that is of great importance to many constituents in the province. Public land that is held under control of the Crown accounts for a large percentage of the land used for agriculture within our province.

To reiterate, Motion 507 is designed to urge the government to sell off or dispose of lands that are declared surplus to the needs of the province. Some of these lands that are deemed for potential sale include grazing lands under lease, vacant lands, lands that are currently not being utilized to their full economic potential, and perhaps the federal building, that's been mentioned a couple of times already. It has been shown time and again in many examples across the province that leaseholders often do not hold the long-term interests of the land in their decision-making. Why would an individual who does not know if he or she will be farming or ranching this parcel of land the following year do anything beyond the minimum to ensure that it was taken care of or improve it in any way, shape, or form for future use.

It is reasonable to believe that if a piece of land is suitable for lease purposes, then it is suitable for sale for private means. The government of Alberta need not hold such land under the authority of the Crown just because it has the power to do so. It has been the mandate of this government to remove bureaucracy from where it has proved inefficient. Controlling land held under lease by the government that is of suitable quality for private purposes is an inefficient use of that land. At the present time over 60 percent of Alberta's land falls under the category of public land. This land is divided into two categories or zones: the green area, consisting of the forested portions of the foothills of the province, and the white area, which is made up mostly of agricultural land in the populated central and southern parts of the province as well as the Peace River region.

Currently the following criteria are used in order to determine whether a parcel of public land is deemed suitable for sale. First, does the sale impact important resource values such as conservation or recreation? Second, does the proposed use of the land conform to provincial and municipal land use policies? Third, what is the availability of private land for uses of economic or social importance?

Public land sales are held in two different fashions: through a public auction or via a private or priority land sale. Public land sales are administered by a public auction that takes place when the particular parcel of public land is vacant or has been released from a disposition by a disposition holder. Individuals and companies are permitted to place their bids on any piece of public land that has been put up for auction. When land is sold via a tender or auction, an appraisal process is used to determine the price. Private or priority land sales take place without public competition and are administered when the leaseholders hold a recreational lease for the purpose of a commercial or recreational development or when the land under lease has already been developed by the leaseholder. When land is sold by a private land sale, the price is based on its actual market value.

Mr. Speaker, it should be noted for any of my colleagues here who are not familiar with leases and their structure that the makeup of one lease is not necessarily the same as the next. In Peace River, for example, lease parcels are generally smaller than leases in the southern portions of the province. It is not unusual to have 160-acre parcels of lease land or less in any given northern county or municipal district. This is compared to lease parcels in southern Alberta, where these tracts of land can be the size of a township or, to put it in equal terms, approximately 20,000 acres. Parcels of lease land in northern Alberta are dotted throughout a county map or a municipal district. An individual landowner may hold rights to a parcel of lease land that is situated in the middle of his privately held land. This individual may be interested in bidding for this public land and not necessarily be keen on having another party gain control through a public auction. A first right of refusal option should be given to existing lease owners on the basis of providing them with an avenue to keep adjoining parcels of land intact. This, in essence, would qualify as a priority land sale.

Farmers and ranchers are constantly moving machinery, livestock, or vehicles from one piece of land to another. If at all possible, farmers and ranchers generally prefer to have all of their land as close together as possible for these reasons. It simplifies things. Any of my rural colleagues with an agricultural background can surely relate to this concern. Anyone who has had the responsibility of moving machinery across the countryside or moving cattle from one pasture to another pasture appreciates the work involved in this process. Accordingly, allowing these individuals the ability to purchase that lease land that adjoins their own not only allows for easier access but also speaks to increasing safety within the community as both machinery and/or livestock are not being moved as often on shared roads and pathways.

For these reasons which I have outlined, I urge my colleagues to back Motion 507 and support the disposal of Alberta surplus public lands. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I stand tonight to speak on Motion 507. With the amendment that the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert made, I think it makes it really thought provoking on this for the real reason, as you realize, that a number of years ago there was a grazing lease review done. When you go around the province and you see the small leases that are embedded in owned land and the confusion that it causes, especially in the white zone, for people that want to get access – they don't know who to get a hold of. I think that if we work with a system where there is land that's embedded in deeded land and remove it, it's like one of my colleagues, Vermilion-Lloydminster, said: then you're cutting back on the aspects of the handling of this land and everything else.

It also gives the owner of the existing land around a chance to look at his crop in a different way. If he wants to do more improvements, at least he can. Then it gives a better understanding if there are people that want to go out hiking or may want to look at the aspect of bird watching and that. At least they know where they can go rather than looking at one of the county maps and seeing all the different land descriptions, and then you don't know who you have to speak to to get on this land.

I think it'll make it a lot easier for the different counties or municipalities that have the land, where they garner taxes on this land. They can just send it to one rather than having to send a whole bunch of different bills out to the landowner all individually because they'll be under all individual titles. In this way, you can do amalgamation and move it along so that it works a lot better. I think that with the understanding like that, it works a lot better within the whole community. I know that in northern Alberta it's quite a bit different because with a lot of leased land that we have in that area, they're able to . . .

13. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to section 11(1) of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act the Legislative Assembly concur in the recommendations of the final report of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission, entitled the Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries and Names for Alberta, tabled in the Assembly on Wednesday, February 19, 2003.

[Adjourned debate April 9: Mr. Herard]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This evening we are charged with the final discussions regarding Motion 13, where we choose as an Assembly to accept or reject the Electoral Boundaries Commission proposed report, which determines the boundaries for the next election. After having heard the debate in this Assembly, which has been, for reasons known mostly to the government, not allowed to occur until after 9 o'clock at night on several evenings, it becomes quite apparent that we did not give very good direction to this particular boundaries commission in terms of setting out their mandate and having some rules with regard to how we could establish boundaries that best serve the needs of all Albertans.

I'll start my remarks off this evening with a quote that states: "There is no issue that is more sensitive to politicians of all colors and ideological persuasions than [redistributing]. It will determine who wins and loses for eight years." That quote was made by Ted Harrington, the political science chair of the UNC, Charlotte. This was quoted during the Shaw versus Hunt trial in March 1994 in the States, Mr. Speaker. It's very well said in terms of what the ramifications are for all of us in boundary redistribution, and we see those exact consequences occurring here: Edmonton-Norwood is gone, we see one riding gone from the main growth corridor of Alberta between Calgary and Edmonton, and we see the riding gone from Athabasca, the area where we have more than a third of the land mass, but a small amount of population. We've seen accusations in this Assembly of gerrymandering. We've seen heartfelt comments by members on what happened during redistribution and how little pieces were plucked out of their constituency and dumped into another one without any apparent rhyme or reason.

So what should this commission have done and what could they have done if they had had some good direction from us and if we had had some debate to begin with about what the rules could have been around what happens with redistribution? We were negligent, I believe, in this Assembly by not giving the commission more decision-making power. We have the ability here to say to them that you can choose more or less than 83 constituencies. You're not bound by that.

We could have made a stronger point to them about going with natural boundaries. I take a look at what happens with Morinville. They are now cherry-picked out of the area where they have been and put into Barrhead-Westlock as a riding, an area that they have got absolutely no natural kinds of boundaries with. We could have asked the committee to go whenever possible with municipal boundaries so that in rural areas there was an alignment between what happens provincially and municipally, vastly simplifying the municipal politicians' roles and increasing the understanding of the electorate and making the MLAs' job easier. We certainly could have used different cutoff figures for population bases and percentages, but we didn't do that, and that was very shortsighted, I believe.

What the commission did do was decide their mandates based on some ideas that I think very few people in this Assembly agree with. As outlined in their report on page 3, they used pragmatism as a key filter for making their decisions rather than scribing for any kind of philosophical ideal, whether it was one we could agree with or not. Using this filter, the committee decided to eliminate a Conservative Edmonton riding. Why? It stated in the record: because it was a Conservative riding. Just looking at the very shortsightedness and, I think, very shallow reasoning. That to me, when you choose something because it is of any political stripe regardless of whose it is, is not only erroneous, but it is gerrymandering, Mr. Speaker, so I have a real problem with that.

They could have had lots of choices on how to make that decision, but stating openly that the two ridings that are gone are because they don't expect the members to run in the next election in the rural areas and the one in Edmonton to be gone because it's a Conservative riding should nullify this report. We shouldn't even have to vote on it. And yet, what happens? [some applause] Yes, I see some support for that, and I think that that's the debate that we should have. It's our job and our responsibility to make some of these tough comments and decisions, and we have a choice tonight to not accept this report and to reconstruct a new committee, to have some serious debate in here about how the decisions should be made, and to have them go out and do it. There's enough time to do it before the next election, Mr. Speaker.

Sure, it is going to cost more money, and I know you guys say, "All you Liberals want to do is spend," but there are some times when a dollar spent now is a saved dollar down the road. If it means that people have better representation and we have fairer boundaries, then I think we should spend that dollar.

But what do we see happen here? We see a government now managing this process, and we've seen that unfold as the debate occurs. What happened with the introductions in this Assembly were that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, who is also the Government House Leader, was the very first person to speak. So when he stands up to open debate on an issue, it's a signal to all the members of his caucus on how to vote and how to frame their decisions. He talked at that time about him having an obligation to vote as he particularly didn't like the report. And then, in his comments, he initiates a drive-by smear of Liberal MLAs by saying who was there and who wasn't there, erroneously, as it happens, because he missed a lot of people who actually did make presentations. Then he talked about his concern about Edmonton losing a seat, and the commission's lack of recognition of growth in the area.

But then, Mr. Speaker – this is the part that pulls it all together – he encourages members of the Assembly to accept the report with all of its warts. So the typical example of what people hate about politicians: when you talk out of both sides of your mouth, and then you vote in the most expedient way possible. I find that quite reprehensible, and it's what happened here.

What we have is really an alarming decay in civic and political involvement: the lack of people who go to vote, the apathy we see, the uninformedness of citizens and their uninterestedness on current issues and all of the adults who don't participate regularly in electoral policies. My question to the Assembly here is not why they don't come, but why would they when they see these kinds of decisions being made by their politicians? When we as a Legislative Assembly don't have the courage to help define boundaries in a fair and representative way, let alone talk about a representative voting system, then how can we expect voters to engage?

We've seen exactly that happen with this particular situation. We see MLAs from the Official Opposition and from the other opposition bring up the concerns and talk about not voting. From the government's side, we've seen so far four government MLAs come out in strong opposition to this motion. But we also see the Conservative machine move into place showing MLAs how to keep the party discipline: by complaining if you want to, but hold your nose in voting. Whips are on. As the Premier admitted this afternoon, he would expect this particular motion to be defeated if the whips were not on in their caucus.

So once we get the overview and the direction from the Government House Leader and how all of his caucus members are to vote here, what happens? The very outraged MLAs who support the government position speak and speak well, Mr. Speaker. We hear first from the Member for Lacombe-Stettler, who takes a very courageous stand against her caucus and for her constituents, and that's exactly the leadership that Albertans expect in this province and the kind of leadership that people respect. So I thank her for making those comments even though I know for her that there was some cost to that.

We then heard from the leader of the New Democrats, who was against and made a very good argument about that. Then the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, who loses his seat, made some very telling comments. It started out as a rather low-key speech, but then he was the first person to name gerrymandering in the appearance of how things happen and how, in the elimination of his particular constituency, it violated all of the rules that this particular committee had said it was making its decisions by.

Then we heard from the Member for Rocky Mountain House, the Minister of Infrastructure. He got up and said that he, too, was against this motion, and he had actually given the committee a solution to solving the problems, which was a very reasonable solution, but then the party machine rolls in. It starts out with the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. He rolls out the party line, and "we don't want to lose a seat, but we really don't have the political will to rock the boat in this particular case," and that was our conclusion of the Tuesday night comments.

Wednesday night. Now the government line's strongly in place. Wetaskiwin-Camrose expresses his constituents' concerns and introduces the concept that minor boundary adjustments will be possible, so he's going to vote for the motion. So what does "minor boundary adjustments" mean? When I talk about, for example, Morinville with about 5,000 votes being involved, that didn't seem minor, but maybe a street here or a street there. So members have got a way out to their constituents: "Oh, minor involvements. Don't get too upset about this motion because the bill's coming."

Then we see Edmonton-Riverview. He is against the motion based on principles of fairness and democracy, but he's going to vote for it. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster agrees that lots of the boundaries look illogical but will vote for it. The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills accepts the guidelines, doesn't want to spend time to look at recommendations, and supports the motion. The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs states that the "process was . . . objective and unpolitical" and supports the motion in spite of what his own colleagues have stated. The Member for Calgary-Currie sadly disappointed but supports the motion. The Member for St. Albert dismayed but supports the motion. The Member for Calgary-Egmont describes the need to define . . .

Mrs. O'Neill: I did not say "dismayed."

Ms Carlson: Well, in fact, hon. member, you did, and I challenge you to read Hansard and see what exactly you did say.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there isn't a back and forth. There's only one person speaking at a time.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: And that would be the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: The Member for Calgary-Egmont describes the need to define "what is effective representation in the 21st century" and supports the motion. That would have been a good kind of discussion for us to have prior to going into this particular debate and one I wish we would have.

I, Mr. Speaker, will be opposing this motion. I strongly support the minority report. I think that some very, very good decisions and comments were made there, and I would leave this particular debate with one more quote, and that's from John Adams. His thoughts on government dated 1776 which still appear to be very, very appropriate to today's discussion and decision-making. He states that:

The principal difficulty lies, and the greatest care should be employed, in constituting this representative assembly. It should be in miniature an exact portrait of the people at large. It should think, feel, reason, and act like them. That it may be the interest of this assembly to do strict justice at all times, it should be an equal representation, or, in other words, equal interests among the people should have equal interests in it. Great care should be taken to effect this, and to prevent unfair, partial, and corrupt elections.

We had a chance to do that at the beginning of this process, and we lost that chance. We didn't take it. We have a chance now to do it again by rejecting this motion, and I urge every member in this Assembly to stand up and vote against this motion when it comes up for a vote at the end of this evening.

The Deputy Speaker: I wonder if we might have the Assembly's permission to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House several guests seated in the public gallery. Eight of them represent eight different Edmonton constituencies. They're New Democratic activists in those constituencies, and one is from Calgary-Fort, very active in the constituency there. They are John Kolkman, Edmonton-Highlands; David Eggen, Edmonton-Calder; Lorne Dach, Edmonton-McClung; Erica Bullwinkle, Edmonton-Riverview; Dave Malka, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview; Alex McEachem, Edmonton-Glenora; Chantelle Hughes, Calgary-Fort; Larry Zima, Edmonton-Rutherford; Jette Badre, Edmonton-Whitemud. They're all here to observe the debate taking place on Motion 13. They're concerned that as the motion is passed, Edmonton is likely to lose one of its 19 seats, and they were unhappy about it. I'd ask them to all rise and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

An Hon. Member: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: No. We have a number of people that have yet to speak.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regarding the proposed provincial boundaries motion, Motion 13, I rise to speak against the acceptance of the electoral boundaries motion. I'm speaking against the motion because of concerns with the boundaries of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and also because I support the city of Edmonton, its bid to retain 19 seats in the Alberta Legislature. Today when the population growth in this province is unprecedented, it is folly to rely solely on 2000-2001 census data. To do so will result in Edmonton being underrepresented in the Legislature after the next election.

If we want to talk about 2000-2001 census figures, I understand that the average of any current Edmonton constituency is 35,058, or only 2.4 percent less than the provincial average of 35,951. However, in the commission report it is indicated that commission members never inquired with the city of Edmonton planning department to determine the community growth and population projections for the 48 developing Edmonton communities. A glaring example which I know personally is occurring in the constituency that I am honoured to represent, the constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and the neighbouring constituency of Edmonton-Manning. The constituency that I represent was turned on its side to take in the communities of Delwood, Balwin, and Belvedere, that were hived off from the disappearing constituency of Edmonton-Norwood. The situation that the commission created here is that all growth areas are being given to Edmonton-Manning, and Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is being locked in so that it will never experience any significant growth.

On the other hand, Edmonton-Manning has grown by approximately 4,000 or 5,000, maybe even more residents in the Miller subdivision since the 2000-2001 census. Another huge subdivision area to the north of the Miller subdivision, where construction is in progress as we speak, will bring approximately another 5,000 or 6,000 residents by the next election and probably 12,000 to 15,000 more by the next boundaries review. Given the amount of good farmland that is being stripped, these are probably conservative estimates. To top it off, the commission in its wisdom or lack thereof is also splitting the community of Clareview, now in my constituency, and giving north Clareview to Edmonton-Manning. This is another huge development area, which will see probably 4,000 residents by the next election and 6,000 or 7,000 by the next boundaries review in 2013 or so. In total, given the present growth patterns, Edmonton-Manning will grow by about 14,000 or 15,000 residents by the next election and by 25,000 or more by the next boundaries review.

Something is very wrong with this picture. Edmonton-Manning was given three large growth areas, yet the commission seems to have gone out of its way to split a community in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview constituency, which contains a large growth area, and gave it to Edmonton-Manning, which is already growing out of control. Now Edmonton-Manning will have three growth areas, which will very quickly make it an underrepresented constituency because of the number of residents over the mean average that will be living there. If common sense had prevailed, Beverly-Clareview should have at least been left with the growth area of north Clareview, which would have allowed more or less even growth in the three northeast Edmonton constituencies. This was brought forward to the commission appeal hearings, but they chose to ignore common sense, even though they seemed to be hearing and agreeing with the arguments that were presented by the constituency association at the appeal hearing.

Should Edmonton lose a seat in the Legislature, there is no assurance that in 10 years, when the next boundaries review occurs, Edmonton would regain the lost seat. Edmonton is and has been Canada's fastest growing city for some years now, yet the commission seems to be totally ignoring this fact in the way that they have drawn the boundaries.

In drawing up the new boundaries, the commission broke or ignored many of the legislated guidelines as outlined in section 14 of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act. This section states that certain parameters "shall" be taken into consideration by the commission when drafting new boundaries. Section 14(c) says that common community interests and organizations shall be taken into account. Section 14(d) states that “wherever possible, the existing [municipal] boundaries within the cities of Edmonton and Calgary shall be considered.” Section 14(g) says that “geographical features, including existing road systems” shall be considered, and section 14(h) states that “the desirability of understandable and clear boundaries” shall be considered.

Clearly, when the commission split the community of Clareview or attached the communities of Delwood, Belvedere, and Balwin to Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, they did not follow guideline 14(c), which says that communities should be kept intact, along with section 14(g), which talks about natural boundary lines. The communities of Belvedere, Delwood, and Balwin have no commonality whatsoever with Clareview. In fact, they are separated by about two kilometres of the Kennedale stockyard, light industrial area, and a railroad. These communities border Edmonton-Glengarry and Edmonton-Manning and should have been parceled out to those constituencies.

These communities split off from the disappearing constituency of Edmonton-Norwood in fact took up a petition with some 395 names saying that they have no commonality with Clareview and don't want to be included in the Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview constituency. This was presented to the boundaries commission, which chose to ignore the request. In fact, 600 residents had signed the petition, but only 395 names were accepted; the rest were rejected because of some technicalities. How many other constituencies have been redrawn in this manner yet are not speaking out?

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that Edmonton as Canada's fastest growing city deserves a review of the loss of a seat and the configuration of specific constituency boundaries. If it means striking a new boundaries commission and going through the exercise again, so be it. The commission that drew the boundaries we have before us did not listen to reason not only in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's and Edmonton-Manning's cases but, I'm sure, many other constituencies. One member of the commission seemed to be saying just that, and you can read her arguments in appendix B of the boundaries commission final report.

If the commission ended their job on a divided note, then there is something wrong, which I think calls for a review of at least some of the recommendations of the boundaries commission. To totally ignore calls coming not only from individual MLAs but complete city councils, as in the case of the city of Edmonton, or counties and town councils, as we heard from other speakers, is wrong. It's not about trying to gerrymander something; it's about achieving the best representation for constituents and common sense.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: We're a long way from being ready for the question, thank you. I have a long, long list.

Hon. members, I wonder if we might again revert briefly to Introduction of Guests.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is recognized next.

Point of Order
Question and Comment Period

Mr. Mason: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Are we not able to ask questions of the speaker on this motion?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes. If you wish to ask questions, you may do so.

An Hon. Member: On a motion?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes. This is not a private member's motion, hon. member. This is a public motion. So, yes, you are. Comments and questions, yes.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: Just a comment and then a question. I appreciate the courageous position that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has taken on this report, and I would like to ask him: specifically, what process does he believe we should now follow in order to deal with this deeply flawed report?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Yes. Thank you for that comment and question, Edmonton-Highlands. As for the process to follow, well, I guess we'll know what the vote will be tonight. If the motion passes, well, I guess there's not much process that we can follow after that except to move on. If it should fail, then I guess it would go back to the boundaries commission for a review. But there is also a process in place where we can ask for small changes to our constituencies by applying to the Justice minister. So I guess at least we can do that: apply for small changes.

The Deputy Speaker: Further comments or questions?
The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I guess what I'd like to say is a couple things about where we're at. The most important thing, I think, is that we've gone through a whole process here that has taken a long time. Our constituents have gone through a process where they have gathered information. I can talk about my own particular constituency where we brought people in to inform them about how the commission works, what the commission guidelines were, and informed the people about what was going to happen. They also had an opportunity to go in front of this commission not once but twice.

From that perspective I really believe that what we need to do is go ahead with the recommendations from the commission at this time. We can talk a lot about some of the inadequacies that the commission has brought forward. All of us have those inadequacies. All of us have probably seen some of those inadequacies, each one of us. But, overall, if we vote against this motion, inevitably what is going to happen is that we will have to bring forward another commission and really go through this process again for another year. I really don't believe that our people are ready for this. I don't believe that it is necessary, and I think it's very important that we go ahead with the present recommendations maybe with some alterations that individuals may have. I don't know if that'll take place or not, but presently I think it's very important to go ahead with the report from the commission.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I wonder if we might briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise this evening and introduce to the members a constituent of Edmonton-Glengarry, Kina Schoendorfer. Kina is a student at a St. Joe's high school, and it's my understanding that she's here this evening to view the proceedings of the House and also to observe one of our pages as he goes about his business. So I'll now ask Kina to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House. Thank you, Kina.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is next, hon. Minister of Community Development, and then you're following that.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Government Motion 13. I want to say at the outset that I recognize the hard work that the Electoral Boundaries Commission undertook, their travels around the province, and the many, many hearings that they had, and I certainly acknowledge the difficult job that they had. I had the pleasure of appearing before them on two occasions, and the first time they held their hearings in Edmonton prior to the presentation of their preliminary report, I warned, I think probably for the first time, that according to the matrix that the commission was using, Edmonton stood to lose at least one seat and potentially even two seats. I argued at that time that the matrix was unjustified, that it, in fact, discriminated against urban ridings in a significant way. Now, since that time more and more people have expressed their concern about the recommendations that the commission has made. Following their preliminary report I again attended their public hearing in Edmonton and argued again that the recommendation of eliminating a seat from Edmonton was both unfair and significantly unnecessary.

Now, in our democracy, Mr. Speaker, representation by population is a fundamental principle. In provinces like Saskatchewan and Manitoba the variance in population from one riding to another cannot exceed 10 percent, so once they establish an average, a provincial constituency can be either 10 percent larger or 10 percent less but no more. However, within the recommendations contained by the commission, there's a range of 32 percent below the average in the case of Dunvegan and 19 percent above in the case of Wood Buffalo. The argument has been made, of course, that since these are primarily rural ridings and northern ridings that have significant differences in their population, these rural ridings are more difficult to represent, but I would contend and I did contend at the time that there are many challenges faced by urban MLAs, including linguistic and cultural diversity, poverty, and unemployment. There's difficulty with high-rise apartments. Sometimes they're very difficult to get access to, particularly during elections. There's illiteracy, and there are significant numbers of constituents with physical and mental disabilities. None of these challenges should override the principle of representation by population.

The matrix used by the commission overstates the difficulty of representing a rural riding by including variables of area, population density, rural/urban ratios, and the number of elected bodies within the riding. As the area increases, density will fall, the rural/urban ratio will rise, and there will be more elected bodies. The correlation is demonstrated in appendix E of the report. Twelve of the proposed recommendations have three or all four of these variables. Twenty-seven have less than three of all four of these variables. At the same time, the demographic variables were not included even though the data is collected by Alberta Finance.

Now, if we take Edmonton, according to the 2001 census if we divided it equally, Edmonton should have 18.53 seats. That, obviously, Mr. Speaker, is impossible. I was taught in arithmetic class in grade 3 – and I remember it well – that when you round a number up or down, if it's higher than .5, you round up. If it's .5, you round up. Otherwise, you round it down. So that means that if they had rounded the number of seats for Edmonton up to 19, where it is now, we would have been closer to the provincial average than we are with 18. So the question then is: why did they round down and eliminate a seat for Edmonton? According to the simple rules of arithmetic Edmonton should have 19 seats, but obviously there are other factors that override that.

Rev. Abbott: A point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is rising on a point of order. Can you cite a citation for us?

Point of Order Exhibits

Rev. Abbott: Yes. Beauchesne's 501 to 504 talks about exhibits, and I notice that while the Member for Edmonton-Highlands was talking about Edmonton keeping a seat, he's wearing a political button, quite a large one. I see that his colleague is also wearing one. I notice that 504 says that political buttons are not included as exhibits. However, those ones are quite large, and I'd just like your ruling, Mr. Speaker, if those are acceptable or not.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the point of order.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar never ceases to annoy. This is clearly just an attempt to disrupt my speech, and obviously he's even given you the quotation in Beauchesne that says that buttons are allowed.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar has raised a point of order on whether or not a political button might be worn in the Chamber. The chair would view that if you have a very small pin that can hardly be seen, then we get into measuring it as to how big and then how big the letters might be. I think that for the moment, not to take any further time away from this important debate, the chair will defer that and see if we can come up with something that's a little more discernible as a rule than he thinks or he doesn't think it is offensive to the House rules.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I assume that my time will not be docked for that frivolous point of order.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, you know, I want to talk about some of the concerns that have been expressed. The very day that I first appeared before the Electoral Boundaries Commission to argue that their matrix would result in the loss of one or more seats from Edmonton, I also took a copy of our submission to Edmonton city council and handed it personally to the mayor. The mayor was shocked, quite frankly, to learn that Edmonton could potentially lose a seat. In fact, the city council has taken a very strong position that Edmonton is a growing urban area that has been discriminated against in the criteria used by the commission and that, in fact, by the time the boundaries are again drawn, Edmonton will be seriously deficient and another correction will need to be taken.

We have also seen, Mr. Speaker, the school board make representations. They expressed a great deal of concern. Mr. Fleming of Edmonton public schools says that Edmonton is enjoying unprecedented growth and a reduction in the number of MLAs representing our city strikes us as a step in the wrong direction . . . This proposed reduction will diminish Edmonton MLAs' ability to adequately and effectively represent the needs of the people they serve.

Similarly, a number of people, including prominent businesspeople in the community and community representatives, have all expressed a great deal of concern.

The next point I'd like to make is that the riding that was chosen for elimination is perhaps one of the poorest inner-city communities in the entire province. So why was this constituency selected as the seat that needs to be eliminated, which of course it doesn't need to be, from Edmonton? But once you proceed on that assumption, then where do you go to eliminate a riding? Well, the commission has taken the poorest constituency with perhaps more dependence on some provincial programs than others, and it is a constituency that, as much as any other, deserves a voice in this Assembly. So it is a shame, I think, that the weakest communities are selected or targeted for the elimination of their riding.

Now, if I am to be re-elected in the new riding if this motion passes, then I will certainly seek to represent those people from Norwood that fall within the expanded Highlands-Norwood riding that's proposed to the best of my ability and to give them a voice, but it is in my view wrong to take the most vulnerable communities and divide them among a variety of ridings. It disenfranchises those people, it takes away their voice, and I think that it's a completely wrong direction for the commission to go.

Here's what Ewen Nelson of the Boyle Street Community League has to say:

We have grave concerns about the proposed changes. Edmonton's inner city communities are a complex mixture of people of widely varying needs, and the residents of those communities often have great difficulties getting those needs met. One source of assistance has always been the Member of the Legislative Assembly for the area. By reducing the number of Edmonton ridings, the MLAs for those ridings will be less able to assist citizens in need.

Now, the next thing that happened, Mr. Speaker, is that because they eliminated an inner-city Edmonton riding, it meant that there was a vacuum created. All of the other ridings had to be compressed into that area, and the boundary redistribution was predicated on a vacuum where Edmonton-Norwood used to be. Edmonton-Highlands is drawn into it, but it also then brings Edmonton-Gold Bar across the river. You have Edmonton-Gold Bar, which is an older, ex-suburban area including Capilano, Forest Heights, Ottewell, and so on, now being brought across the river into Boyle Street and McCauley and Riverdale, inner-city communities that have long been a part of Edmonton-Highlands. So we now have not just one transriver constituency in Edmonton; we have two. I think, quite frankly, that the new boundaries of Edmonton-Gold Bar don't make any sense at all. You have people that have no community of interest at all. You have this major geographic boundary that bisects that riding, and I think it's entirely an artificial creation. It doesn't really make any natural sense. So I think there are many reasons why we should reject this.

I think that the motion made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, that would have corrected this problem, was an excellent one. A most wise member, the leader of the third party, I think put forward a way out. It's unfortunate that so many members voted against it, Mr. Speaker, because I think it would have provided us with a solution. You know, you have members of the Edmonton caucus of the government, like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, saying things like this: "I don't want to lose a seat in Edmonton. I would like to keep things the way they were, but that would be selfish, self-serving, and subjective, Mr. Speaker."

Ms Blakeman: To whom?

Mr. Mason: To whom is exactly the question that needs to be asked. To whom is that selfish, self-serving, and subjective? To the people that that hon. member represents? To the people that we represent? I can't fathom this kind of reasoning, Mr. Speaker, at all. It really seems to me that a number of members of the government side who represent constituencies in Edmonton need to stand up like some of their colleagues have done and fight for Edmonton. That is in fact what I'm calling on them to do tonight: stand up for Edmonton. It's not hard, it's good politics even, and I highly recommend it. What a concept to actually stand in this place and represent the people who sent you here. It's an amazing concept, and I think some hon. members ought to give it a try.

So, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would ask all members, particularly those of all parties who represent the city of Edmonton as well as those who also feel that there are problems with the commission's report in other parts of the province, to stand tonight with us and vote against this report. There is time for the commission to re-examine the question and deliver another report. I want to make it clear just for the record that we in the New Democrat opposition believe that can be done. We do not support the addition of more seats to this Assembly. That fallacious argument that it really meant that we wanted to have a bigger Assembly was made when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona moved the motion. Well, that's the easy way out. We're not proposing that. We believe that Alberta has more than enough politicians as it is, and we don't support an expansion of this Assembly, but we do believe that this report is seriously flawed. The questions need to be re-examined, and the commission or a new commission needs to be struck. There is time. The issues at stake are so great that it is a step that we should take, and I hope that the Assembly will take it and vote down this motion.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments? Questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands – he quoted a couple of municipal politicians that indicated that if Edmonton were to go to 18 seats and if the seats became correspondingly larger, the members would have trouble representing a larger number of constituents. My question is: how many constituents did the member have when he was a councillor for ward 3 in the city of Edmonton, and did he have a difficult time representing over 100,000 constituents?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good question. The wards in the city of Edmonton are, in fact, very large and considerably larger than provincial constituencies, and I was always an advocate of increasing the number of wards in the city of Edmonton because from time to time it is difficult. There's an additional problem in the system used in the city of Edmonton, and that is that although there are six large wards, there are two councillors elected from each one, and this creates a lot of difficulty, a lot of duplication and overlap. It does tend to share the load to a considerable degree, but it creates its own set of problems. So while I was there, I certainly advocated that we should increase the number of municipal wards, and I still think that that's a good direction to go.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, you indicated that you wished to comment.

Mrs. Gordon: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to ask the Member for Edmonton-Highlands – I'm seeking clarification. I'm sorry, hon. member. I don't have the Blues in front of me, but you were talking about the difference between urban and rural constituencies. You talked about that you have language differences, a difficulty with accessing high-rise apartments, dealing with unemployment and poverty. Do you not think those things exist in rural Alberta as well?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, yes, I do, but I am trying to portray some of the specific issues that I know that I have in representing my constituency in a fairly high-density inner-city riding. I believe that those problems are perhaps a little bit more concentrated in inner-city constituencies. I certainly would not ever argue that rural ridings don't have some of the same problems, and I thank the hon. member for the opportunity to correct that.

The Deputy Speaker: Further questions? The hon. Minister of Community Development, followed by Edmonton-Glengarry when that's finished.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a lot of mixed emotion tonight to speak to Government Motion 13, as it's called, even though this is not a government report. Nonetheless, I use the term "mixed emotion" because I do understand the dilemma that faced the commission as it was preparing its recommendations for this Assembly. On the one hand, I'm well aware that they must redraw the provincial electoral boundaries, but in doing so they must not exceed the population formula specifications of plus or minus a certain target figure, nor can the commission exceed the current number of 83 constituencies, and so on. On the other hand, they are dealing with the very difficult issue of having to increase the number of seats in some parts of the province as a consequence. In order to do that, they know and we've now learned that they will have to reduce the number of seats somewhere either outrightly by demising some constituencies or by collapsing two into one or whatever. The choices, I'm sure, as we've been hearing for the past several days of debate on this motion, were very difficult, and I also believe that drawing and discussing these new boundaries must have been at times an absolute nightmare for this commission, albeit an independent commission.

I know they had to consider a lot of factors such as physical size of a constituency, the population density, Indian reserves and Métis settlements, rural/urban ratios, municipal boundaries, and the list goes on and on. Still, the fact is that we were required to have this done, so we now have before us their committee recommendations.

I should add, Mr. Speaker, that I am not pleased at all to see Edmonton losing a seat in the process, nor am I happy to see rural Alberta, where I grew up, losing a couple of seats either. However, in fairness to the commission's impossible task of its assignment, I know they probably feel that they did their best, and I know that they did consult Albertans quite thoroughly by hosting provincewide forums or perhaps through correspondence or in personal conversation or whatever.

In the end, having been through this boundary redesign process at least twice personally now, I believe we only have two choices. One would be to accept their recommendations, albeit with some minor amendments at the bill discussion stage perhaps, and proceed onward. The other would be to kill the motion at this stage and start the process all over again. Going with the latter of these two difficult options would of course delay the inevitable. It would likely result in a highly similar set of recommendations. It would frustrate even more Albertans than already are frustrated. It would cost thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands of dollars all over again. It would lengthen the process for another year or more, and in the end – you know what? – it would bring us right back here to this very moment in this very Legislature to experience what we are experiencing right now. Do I like the recommendations of the commission, Mr. Speaker? No, quite frankly, I do not, nor do I know many others in this Assembly who do. But it is the process that all Members of this Assembly agreed to establish, that being in part to have an all-party, independent commission established to handle this issue.

I know that when the president of my constituency and I discussed this very early on in the process, we had many concerns. Some of them were specific to Edmonton-Mill Creek, which is the riding I'm privileged to represent, some of them were specific to Edmonton's total number of seats, and others pertained to Alberta in general. In fact, my president attended the commission's hearings in Edmonton and expressed these concerns on my behalf and on his own behalf last year. I do not believe that Albertans want more than 83 seats in the Legislature at this time, but I do believe that Alberta's phenomenal population increase, particularly in Calgary and Edmonton – and I know that there are other centres throughout the province – should be addressed from the perspective of having as effective a representation as possible. Perhaps it is the number 83 that should be addressed at some point.

Nonetheless, having said that, Mr. Speaker, several of my constituents continually ask me why it is that in the city of Edmonton we have 19 elected officials to represent us provincially, 12 plus 1 elected officials to represent us municipally, and only six elected officials to represent us federally. It's a good question, and it's a very difficult one that's not easy to answer. Each level of government has different responsibilities, slightly different issues, and some in fact are vastly different issues. However, at some point it must also be understood that the quantity of representatives is not the sole deciding factor in getting important work done for a particular area. Surely the quality of representation is an equally important factor, and every member of this Assembly has amply demonstrated his or her quality of representation capabilities in one positive way or another.

Another important aspect of all of this is the teamwork that happens in the so-called party system, which we have at the federal and provincial levels, and working with all of your colleagues at all levels to get things done for the benefit of your community and for the broader community of the province or the country you represent. Things like the proximity to the Legislature in Edmonton, for example, were referenced in one of the commission's statements. I'm reminded of the work motto of triple S, that being sweat plus sacrifice equals success. I know we all strive to do that for the constituents that we serve regardless of how many of them we have, and there's really no substitute for that triple S motto when it comes to effective representation. We all know and understand sweat and sacrifice, and we all know what success is about.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, when it comes right down to it, redrawing electoral boundaries is a very messy business, and it never pleases everyone. Sometimes it does displease everyone, but we have to face the realities that I outlined earlier. I've heard from a few constituents on this matter and I've heard from some other Edmontonians on this matter, as well, who are very concerned about the commission's recommendations, just like we were when the boundaries were redrawn for the 1997 election and just like we were when we saw the boundaries redrawn for the 1993 election and just like we will be, sure as I'm standing here, concerned about what happens in five or six years in lead-up to the election of that time frame. But that's the democratic process that has been established, and that's what we have to keep foremost in mind. It is what it is. I don't like having one seat removed from Edmonton, just like some objected to having one seat added to Edmonton in 1993, but it is all part of the ebb and flow of the democratic process.

So having expressed my concerns and frustrations about that, Mr. Speaker, but also being very aware of the rather difficult options before us, I find myself having to support the advancement of this process or, alternatively, watching it start all over again only to wind up right back where we are tonight, having the very same debate, probably with the same concerns almost word for word being expressed. There is no win/win option in this matter, and many of us here regret that.

In conclusion, I just want to emphasize that the recommendations of the commission are not government recommendations, but the legislative process does require us as a government to carry them forward. I was struck by several of the comments which the report made and how they made them, and I did note that they were not unanimous in their particular presentation either. I would hope that the next time we go through this process, we could perhaps require a commission to be unanimous in their redrawings before they bring this kind of recommendation forward and put us through this kind of frustration.

Thank you.

10:00

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Questions? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, please.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was interested in the comments of the hon. minister with regard to teamwork and the various levels of government. I know that in this debate there's been some discussion of the differences between Calgary and Edmonton, and being a member representing two communities who are very, very close in proximity to the city of Edmonton, I know that I am involved in a number of issues that involve close ties with Edmonton because our infrastructure is integrated, our community development issues are integrated in large part. I was wondering if the minister might comment a little bit about the workings of the capital region as compared with the Calgary region and how the teamwork works there.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, I'd be happy to, hon. member. Thank you for that question. I have always tried to market, if you will, and promote the capital city region as such, and I'm very grateful that we have the close proximity to communities like Leduc and Fort Saskatchewan and Redwater and St. Albert and Spruce Grove and Stony Plain, and when we make a pitch, we're talking about teamwork that comes from good representation from all of those members regardless of the parties that they're with. There are many things which the public probably doesn't realize that we as members representing this area agree on, but those things seldom make it into the press.

Equally important is the relationship of teamwork that we have with our federal counterparts. I think that we have some representatives there today on both sides of the political fence so to speak who work very hard with us and with our municipal leaders to ensure that we do things like attract international sporting events. I just happened to be at an event tonight welcoming over 30 sports organizations that aren't all just from Edmonton. They're from the surrounding area, and they reflect maybe 60 different sports that we are all proud to share in as we do with our facilities. So those are some of the examples, Mr. Speaker, of the kind of teamwork that I'm talking about.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. minister, who indicated in his comments that the commission was independent and of an all-party nature. I would remind the hon. minister that it was not an all-party committee. The structure calls for an independent chair – in this case, Mr. Clark, an excellent choice and someone we think is very independent – but then two members nominated by the government and two members by the Official Opposition. So we had a situation where we had an independent chair, but two Conservatives, two Liberals sitting on the commission. My question to the minister is this: does he believe that in the future we could find a better way to indeed make the commission more independent and less partisan – for example, by making use of retired judges or community representatives from business, labour, farm communities and so on – and get away from the partisan balance between the two parties but not the third party that's built into the current system?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, I think that's a pretty interesting question. I personally wouldn't see any reason why we wouldn't be able to have that discussion. When it comes to something that is not a government recommendation nor is it an Official Opposition recommendation nor is it a third party recommendation such as this boundary review, I'd certainly be willing to support looking into whether that's possible to do.

The bottom line here is that we're trying to get as good and as thorough a report on probably the messiest part of the whole electoral process, and that is this boundary issue. I think that as part of that, too, we should get the independent commission to take a look at more closely aligning municipal boundaries with electoral provincial boundaries because they've made a bit of a – well, I hate to say hodgepodge, but that's certainly what it looks like to me. So it's causing a lot of frustration in and amongst municipal level councillors as well. Some of those as retired individuals could probably serve very well and provide some very good advice to an independent commission down the line.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

No further questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is pleasure to rise this evening and speak to Government Motion 13 regarding the Electoral Boundaries Commission. At the outset I must say that it was a very difficult task that they had trying to satisfy 83 constituencies and that they certainly did do their very best to complete this task. They did it through a lot of travel, a lot of consultations and certainly submissions, either in person or written.

I had the opportunity to make a written submission on behalf of the constituents of Edmonton-Glengarry in the first round, and I had hand delivered it to the designated authority that we were suppose to. Somehow this did not get passed on to the commission, but they did retrieve this and certainly included it in the second round of written submissions.

Now, the first recommendation that Edmonton-Glengarry had in their report was that Edmonton retain the 19 seats that it currently holds. The second main thrust of the report from Edmonton-Glengarry recommended that Edmonton-Glengarry retain its present boundaries and that if our numbers were to increase, one of the communities to the west of Edmonton-Glengarry be added to our constituency. Now, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, neither of these recommendations was accepted, and in fact the boundaries of Edmonton-Glengarry will change.

Edmonton-Glengarry is one of those constituencies that represent what Alberta is all about. We have a wide range of people that are separated by age, education, income, and ethnic background. Unfortunately, in the redistribution Edmonton-Glengarry will lose the older communities of Rosslyn and Lauderdale and the area that houses the military at Griesbach, all on the west side of the constituency. On the other hand, we will gain an area to the east of the constituency known as Cherry Grove. In looking at the recommendations of the commission, these changes will not significantly alter the makeup of Edmonton-Glengarry. The new areas will fit in very well with the northern portion of the constituency, which tends to be a newer portion of the constituency, as is Cherry Grove.

Now, then, another change that was recommended by the commission and a change that I certainly commend them for was to change the name of Edmonton-Glengarry to Edmonton-Decore, and this recommendation, Mr. Speaker, will honour an outstanding Albertan, Laurence Decore, who gave so much to this province and city while serving in public office for many years. So I feel very strongly that in terms of Edmonton-Glengarry, the recommendations of the commission will work.

But in terms of the city of Edmonton losing a seat, this is a serious mistake. It is also interesting to note that for federal ridings if you get a situation like Edmonton with a number such as 18.5 seats, then by the Constitution you must round up. Now, I'd also like to quote Bauni Mackay in her minority position: "The concept of representation by population (one person, one vote) is fundamental to a democratic society. Voter parity should be the first consideration" I certainly think that when we look at the situation in Edmonton, we have to pay particular attention to this comment.

Mr. Speaker, the Electoral Boundaries Commission has a huge mandate. In my estimation the final report fulfills that mandate with one exception. The work of the commission must not only appear to be fair, it must be fair. An article in the Edmonton Sun on December 18, 2002, indicates that the report was not fair, that the chairman of the Electoral Boundaries Commission compromised the fairness of the report when he indicated to the Member for Edmonton-Norwood that his seat was picked for elimination partly because it was a Tory seat. How can we consider this report to be fair and unbiased after these comments? If we pass this legislation, are we just looking for a court challenge?

We also have to consider, Mr. Speaker, what price we put on the protection of democracy. How can we accept a report that compromises Edmontonians' right to democratic representation? This report does not reflect the tremendous growth experienced by Edmonton since the 2001 census was completed. Statistics show that single-family and multiple housing starts continue at a staggering rate. Considering the next commission will not be appointed for approximately eight years, Edmonton's representation would be less than the figures in the report indicate it should be.

Edmonton-Norwood is certainly one of the poorest constituencies in the city. This constituency would have a disproportionate number of low-income wage earners, high poverty rates, greater unemployment, a greater number of new Canadians, and many other social issues. These are the very constituents that require a consistent voice in the Assembly, and they should not be separated between other constituencies.

Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with other MLAs that the commission has done its work and we must now accept their report. There is plenty of time to appoint a new commission, and we have the power to do so. We had the example last week of how quickly this government can respond and change plans in Infrastructure announcements. The price of a new commission is far less than adding one extra school. The cost of a new commission would be much cheaper than a court challenge to correct a bias. The cost of a new commission is small compared to my city's interest in fair representation.

It is for these reasons that I will be opposing Motion 13, and I urge all members to defeat this motion. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Questions, at all, of the member?

Then I would call for debate the hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to speak to Motion 13. I would like to speak on behalf of the town of Turner Valley and the town of Black Diamond, and I wish to raise their objections to the final report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

Both of these Highwood communities objected to the interim report of the commission and wrote directly to the commission to request that their respective communities be allowed to remain in the Highwood constituency. I'll just read from a copy they sent to me of that letter, a number of paragraphs, but in conclusion it is with great humility and respect that we request that the Town of Turner Valley be excluded from the proposed Electoral Division of Rocky View and that we remain with the Electoral Division of Highwood.

This is signed by the mayor and all six councillors.

Now, the mayor and council's worst fears did materialize in the final report, so again I would refer to the two town councils and their letters directly to me requesting that I raise this objection. The first one, from the town of Turner Valley:

Please take this issue to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. The Council of the Town of Turner Valley is deeply concerned with the new Electoral Division Boundaries as suggested which would put us in the Rockyview Constituency.

And from the town of Black Diamond, also signed by the mayor, as the first letter was:

Re: Electoral Boundaries

The Black Diamond Town Council is requesting that the Town of Black Diamond be retained within the boundaries of the Highwood riding.

And speaking to me:

We are hopeful that you will be successful in helping us with this matter.

Mr. Speaker, before you ask me to table them, I did table five copies of each of those two letters several weeks ago in preparation for raising their issues here. I've also acted in response to their wishes and have formally requested on their behalf that the hon. Minister of Justice consider an appropriate amendment to have Turner Valley and Black Diamond remain in Highwood.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there's an old, medieval form of public execution called being drawn and quartered, and in the case of Highwood it's had its boundaries redrawn and in quarters. Just to kind of explain that, Highwood is being divided into four parts. The first part would be about 25 percent of the land area in the south, not 25 percent of the population but 25 percent of the land area in the south, including the MD of Ranchland, the MD of Willow Creek, the towns of Nanton and Stavely. These will all go into the Livingstone-MacLeod riding.

The far west portion of Highwood, approximately 10 percent, give or take, the southeast end of Kananaskis Country, and the northern part of the Bow-Crow forest or the Rocky Mountain forest will go to Banff-Cochrane. That's an interesting move, Mr. Speaker, because to my knowledge no one lives there on a year-round basis. Not even the forest rangers live there anymore. They are only temporary residents. Anyway, that land is now part of Banff-Cochrane.

About 15 percent, give or take, in the northwest area, particularly the north and the northwest of Highwood, will go into the new constituency of Foothills-Rockyview, and that includes the towns of Turner Valley and Black Diamond, who objected to being placed there. Approximately 50 percent of Highwood, two-quarters, will be the MD of Foothills or part of it remaining and the towns of Okotoks and High River, the village of Longview, and Eden Valley reserve. A few hamlets are also in there as well.

Mr. Speaker, the Electoral Boundaries Commission had a difficult task, and they conducted themselves without undue favour to any one of the 83 constituencies. Inasmuch as Highwood's population is the 10th highest of the 83 constituencies, about 46,000 according to the 2001 census, changes had to be made that would allow it to come close to the provincial average. The task of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, then, required tough decisions. This is an arm's-length commission. They did their best to be fair to all, but they could not please all, so one understands the decisions they made. You don't have to agree with them, but you understand them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Questions of the speaker?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford in debate.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, here it is some many hours since this debate began, and many of the areas that I wanted to touch on have already been covered, but I feel that it's important for the record, representing a seat in Edmonton and having had some discussion in the media concerning this, to put my interests, my consideration on the public record as regards the redistribution.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I'd like to start with a consideration of just who I happen to represent here in the Legislature of Alberta. I represent Edmonton-Rutherford and the constituents of Edmonton-Rutherford, as each of us do our own constituencies, and I represent all of the people, whether they voted for me or not. I represent all of the people of Edmonton-Rutherford, and I'm privileged to do so. I represent those constituents in the Legislature of Alberta. I don't represent people in the Legislature of Edmonton. I don't represent people in the Legislature of the capital region or even in the Legislature of Rutherford. I represent the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford in the Legislature of Alberta. As such, I have a responsibility to consider the overall interests of Alberta in context of my responsibility of representing Edmonton-Rutherford, so I can't legitimately speak only of the self-interest of myself as a representative of Edmonton-Rutherford.

So, then, let's look at redistribution and its checkered history since last summer. I think it's fair to say that most of us really didn't pay a whole lot of attention to the redistribution until midsummer. I know that certainly I didn't. I understood redistribution to be something that happens every once in a while and that we would find out in due course what was to happen. I learned later that not everyone had such a detached attitude.

Our constituency determined that we would make representation to the boundaries commission via the area president, with whom we worked. Three or four constituencies came together. Representation was made. I've since learned – I learned later – that some of the other constituencies, particularly the rural constituencies, made direct personal representation to the commission, as was their right and perhaps even their responsibility. The net result was that we had some members representing their constituencies' interests directly and some indirectly, and I think that was the case pretty much with all of the parties represented here.

They made representations to an electoral commission that was appointed by the Speaker. Two of the representatives were appointed on the recommendation of the government, two by the Official Opposition. The commission was headed by the Ethics Commissioner. At the conclusion of their work there was a minority report, which then indicates that the two government and one of the Liberal appointees concurred in the report and one did not. When the dissonance started with regard to this report, the very first indications that I was aware of in the media were that somehow Edmonton had been hard done by because Calgary was picking up these extra seats at the expense of Edmonton. Initially even the editorial writers of the Journal here in Edmonton didn't seem to twig on to the fact that we were not increasing the number of seats, that the number of seats was going to remain constant, and that by its very nature indicated that someone's ox was going to be gored. That was the nature of the redistribution, that it wasn't going to be painless.

Subsequently the debate began to take on a different tack. When people started to understand that even after redistribution Calgary was going to be in strict number terms underrepresented, then the debate became: well, rural is overrepresented, and urban is underrepresented. That's where the debate went. So then we're faced with the situation under redistribution: what's equitable representation? It's been clearly indicated by the Supreme Court that representation is to be equitable. It doesn't have to be one person, one vote. That's the optimum, but that's not the way it is. At least in Canada that's not the way it is.

So we have a situation where sparsity and density of population is one of the major defining characteristics of redistribution. If we were to, then, consider sparsity and density of representation, we would find that after redistribution Calgary will be represented by one MLA per 38,211 persons, Edmonton at 37,005 persons, urbanized – those are places like Grande Prairie with the urban/rural mix – at 35,622, rural at 33,213, and one special rural, Dunvegan, at 24,202. So by any standard the test of fairness has been met except in the case of Calgary.

Now, the case has been made that Edmonton is the fastest growing city in Alberta.

An Hon. Member: Is that true?

Mr. McClelland: Well, it may be, and it may not be, but 10 years hence will it be? We don't know. The mandate of the commission is to make a decision based on the information at hand, not what might be in some future years. Why would we assume that Calgary was going to stop growing? What we're really talking about here is the urbanization of Alberta and how we as legislators are going to come to grips with the fact that the rural areas of our province feel quite rightly that their way of life is gone or that their voice is less resonant within the urbanized population. That's why the Supreme Court has said that fair representation need not be exact, one person, one vote.

In any event this all led up to the publication of the interim report. The city of Edmonton then became quite exercised over this, and the city council and the mayor decided that they were going to budget $50,000 to raise awareness within the city, and this ground swell of umbrage and outrage was going to cause the Legislature to revisit this question. The advertisements came and went. At one stage, after a full month of advertising, 500 and some-odd people had called to complain. I understand that at two months plus, something like 2,000 people had called with comment after all of this publicity. And to what end? I understand that when the cat bylaw was being changed, 500 people called in one day, just to put this into perspective. So this umbrage is really the mouse that roared.

I think that there is quite a bit of, if you'll forgive me, Mr. Speaker, political gamesmanship going on here, particularly with the Liberal and the New Democrat opposition. I have no doubt that at the next election I'll be reading these very words published by my political opponents and being asked to defend them, and I will. I will do it with great ease because the average severely ordinary Albertan understands intuitively that fairness is fairness. If after the next redistribution Edmonton needs another seat, Edmonton will get another seat.

So, Mr. Speaker, because it's late in the evening, because most everyone has heard these words before, I am about to accept the invitation to take my seat, and I do so urging all members to vote in the interest of all of Alberta, to accept some of the arrows that we must accept in this legislative, in this political life and get on with it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions? The first one is by Edmonton-Highlands, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I appreciate the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, but I would ask him why at the outset he said that he represents everybody in his constituency and that that's his primary duty and he closes by saying that we have to swallow our misfortunes and do what's best in the interest of Alberta as a whole. Surely there are many, many representatives of other parts of the province, including the city of Calgary, that can do that. I guess I would say that he's accused us of being the mouse that roared. Perhaps the Tory caucus is the lion that squeaked.

Mr. McClelland: Mr. Speaker, if in some way I have conveyed the image that I felt that we were hard done by, I certainly didn't mean that. There are others here who have made that case and felt that we've been hard done by. I have not taken that tack. I do not think that we have been hard done by. I happen to think that the Electoral Boundaries Commission has done the best job that they could possibly do with a very difficult situation. I think that the opposition has been very cagey in putting the cat among the pigeons, metaphorically speaking, so to speak, just to try to make life a little uncomfortable for some of us on this side of the aisle, and I think that the opposition will once again be disappointed in the effect.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we all know in this Assembly, Edmonton will be celebrating its centennial next year, and unfortunately we will be losing a seat. I think that for this Legislative Assembly to wish Edmonton well next year after this year removing one of the seats from the Edmonton electoral map will to say the least not make for a very happy birthday.

My question for the hon. member: as chair of the Edmonton government caucus, as I understand it, what is the role of the chair if it is not to represent the political interests of this city, and how as the chair of the Edmonton government caucus can you stand by and see this city lose one seat from this Assembly when it was only in the last redistribution, in 1997, that we did go up to 19 seats?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for that question. I guess the test of character is to do what's right even if it hurts. In the case of Edmonton losing a seat, well, Edmonton-Rutherford is not my seat. None of the seats in this Legislature belong to the individual that happens to be representing that particular seat. The seat belongs to the people. The 83 seats in this Legislature belong to the people of Alberta. We hold them in trust for the future and future generations, and they will ebb and flow and change as Alberta ebbs and flows and changes. We are not being hard done by. We are merely accepting the fact of life, doing the best we can, putting it behind us, and moving on because that's how democracy works.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has an opportunity to close debate.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 13 carried]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 15, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/15

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, we confidently ask for Your strength and encouragement in our service of You through our service of others. We ask for Your gift of wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you some very special guests. I often refer to them as Alberta's most precious resource. These are our students. Our group today comes from Blessed Kateri elementary school. There are 24 of them, and they are accompanied by their teacher, Brigitte Berube, and by parent helpers Jackie Playford and Louise Molenkamp. I would ask all of them to now please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. Thank you for coming.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is really special for me to be able to introduce to you and through you some people from my constituency. A lot of rural MLAs don't have as many visitors as some of our urban counterparts here, so it's a really special day when we do. I have 12 guests in the members' gallery: 10 grade 10 students from the Airdrie Koinonia Christian school accompanied by Mr. Paul Holmes and Mrs. Shannon Rast. I would ask them if they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly a couple from the Forest Heights district of Edmonton-Gold Bar. I am pleased to introduce Emilian Groch and Dianna Groch. They are the proud parents of Paul Groch, one of the pages here in the Legislative Assembly. Certainly, Paul and the other pages are a very good example of the young people of this province. They are all polite, hardworking, and intelligent. I certainly hope my children mature like Paul and the other pages in this Assembly. I would now ask the couple to please rise in the Speaker's gallery and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you 77 bright and enthusiastic students from Bishop Greschuk school in Edmonton-Glenarry. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Aleksandra Nikolic, Mrs. Tina Madron, Mr. James Harris, and Mr. Hugh Esch and parent helper Mrs. Diane Spruyt. They are seated in the public gallery, and with your permission I would ask that they all now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Harold and Jean Healy, both proud members of the Kainai First Nation within the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod. Harold shares the distinction, along with our Premier, of being a member of the Kainai chieftainship. Harold is also recognized in his community for being a leader in youth justice issues. He is a 12-year member of the advisory board on the RCMP for K Division. As well, in his spare time he is the president of the Buffalo Nations Luxton museum in the beautiful constituency of Banff-Cochrane. They're in the members' gallery. I see that they're already standing, and I'd ask them to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Emergency Services in Calgary Health Region

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, from the beginning the Calgary health region has been plagued by mistakes, dubious business deals, and a culture of denial. When Calgary was the country's fastest growing city, the CHR blew up a major hospital and sold two others to well-connected investors. Questionable deals have been made involving senior officials of the CHR, and the Auditor General has raised serious concerns about conflicts of interest. Now the report of the fatality inquiry into Vince Motta's death accuses the region of failing its responsibilities in the strongest terms. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: can the minister explain why Vince Motta died only six months after a previous inquiry into the death of a young girl made recommendations to prevent another such death from occurring? Why aren't these taken seriously?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, first and foremost, I want to express condolences to the Motta family. There were tragic circumstances resulting in the death of Vincenzo Dominic Motta. A public inquiry has been called into that. The results are found in a report that has been forwarded to me through His Honour Judge Delong. We will take the time necessary to review this report in its entirety. There are some 25 recommendations contained within it. We do take these things seriously. One ought not be in a position of trying to score political points upon the death of an individual, but it is important that we focus on how we can do better, how we can improve our services in emergency care.

There are thousands and thousands and thousands of people that go to emergency rooms every week in this province. In the city of Calgary, Mr. Speaker, there are some 250,000 emergency room visits. We're happy to report that in the overwhelming majority of cases people enter the system, they get treated, they get better, and they're released. We don't have an infallible system. We have a system that is very good. Occasionally it is excellent.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, we can say simply that at this time we need time to review Judge Delong's comments. I have spoken with the chair of the regional health authority in Calgary. He identified to me their desire to improve their service and that they have already taken steps similar to those recommended by Judge Delong in terms of improving their service. They've already done that. He also did explain to me that there was a concern that he had with respect to the conduct of regional health authority staff members in dealing with the Motta family and that he himself was personally committed to looking into that, but we will move forward on improving patient safety in this province.

Dr. Taft: We'll go to the Premier then. Will this government follow the recommendations of the Motta inquiry and call a full public inquiry into the state of emergency services in Calgary?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to address the preamble to the first question. I listened very intently to the hon. minister's reply. It was polite, it was professional, it was courteous, unlike the preamble to the question, which was vicious and vindictive and uncalled for. I commend the minister for keeping his cool and providing an answer in such a polite and professional way.

Relative to the question, Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister has indicated that an assessment, I would assume in conjunction with the Department of Justice, is being done of the Delong findings and the recommendations contained therein, especially recommendation 1, which calls for a public inquiry into emergency services within the Calgary regional health authority, and once that assessment is done, then appropriate action will be taken.

Dr. Taft: To the Premier again then: given the years – the years – of controversy and problems in the Calgary health region, will the Premier have the guts to suspend this board and appoint an independent CEO, or is he content to let it remain a Tory patronage playground?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would say that the Calgary regional health authority is among the best of all health administrations in the country. As the hon. minister indicated, there are literally hundreds of thousands of people, 250,000 people approximately, who attend emergency wards in the Calgary regional health district over the period of a year. Most of those people, a large percentage, I would suggest well in the 90s, attend, get treated, and are released or are hospitalized for further treatment and have no problems whatsoever with the system. When there are problems, we act on those problems. We address those problems in conjunction with the regional health authority as, indeed, we are reacting and assessing the situation relative to the Delong decision.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary Catholic, $14 million; Red Deer public, $1 million; Elk Island public, $6.9 million; Holy Spirit Catholic school district No. 4, $2.1 million; Chinook's Edge school division No. 73, $2.2 million; Calgary public, $30 million; and Edmonton public, $13.5 million: just some of the current and projected school board deficits across this province. My questions are to the Premier. Does the Premier support the layoff of hundreds of teachers and the increases in class sizes that are going to be forced on boards to wipe out these deficits?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes all kinds of assumptions and contemplates layoffs that may or may not occur. The budget has been handed down, and we allocated to the various school districts an amount that we deemed sufficient to operate their various school districts. I think it's entirely premature and, I would suggest, irresponsible to suggest at this time that there are layoffs.

They may be talking about layoffs, but nothing will happen until there's been a full assessment as to the impact of the increased dollars and how far those dollars will go to accommodate the ongoing operations in the individual school districts.

Dr. Massey: Again to the Premier: what is the reason, Mr. Premier, for pursuing a government policy that will see such massive cuts to school classrooms across this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where this educated person comes up with his ridiculous math. How can a 4.7 percent increase be construed as a cut? You know, this guy is a university professor, and an increase to him is a cut. No wonder some of our students suffer. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member does have the floor.

Dr. Massey: The rhetoric just doesn't cut it, Mr. Premier.

When are you going to address the fast approaching funding crisis in this province, or are you just going to stand by as you did with the teachers' strike and let it happen?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I completely disagree with the assertion that there is a funding crisis. I'll have the hon. Minister of Learning respond in further detail, but this is the difference between a cut and an increase. When you increase, you give more. When you cut, you give less. I mean, that is basic. That is economics kindergarten, never mind 101. Basically, we have increased funding for education by 46 percent over the past six or seven years – well, it's more than that now; it's probably in the 50s now – while enrolment has grown by something like 6, perhaps 7 or 8 percent by this particular time. Nevertheless, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Included in this budget this year was a $191 million increase for the basic K to 12 system. The boards that the hon. member was talking about were boards that were putting out preliminary data for next year. There are no budget deficits this year. We have dealt with Edmonton public, and we feel that we have given them a solution so they will not be in deficit this year.

Mr. Speaker, the other really key issue here and the key point that people in Alberta need to realize is that enrollment in our schools is flat. Last year it increased by .25 percent, so two and a half new students for every thousand students in the public education system. This year we're predicting it to be absolutely zero. Some of the jurisdictions that he was talking about here are seeing a significant decline in the enrollment, which does lead to decreased funding because there are fewer students there.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Property Taxes

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Education property tax bills in Edmonton are going up an average of $57 a household, yielding the province a $17 million windfall. While the government basks in riches, the fund-starved Edmonton public school board crunches the numbers to determine not if, Mr. Premier, but how many teachers they will lay off next September. My questions are to the Premier. Why are Edmonton public ratepayers experiencing an 8 percent increase in taxes and fewer teachers in their schools?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it clear once again . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Your policies don't work.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, our policies do work. I'm responding to a shout across the aisle by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who said that our policies don't work. Well, I'm going to tell this fellow something. Our policies must be working, because we have 74 members and they have seven, so something must be working.

Mr. Speaker, to address the question, the education portion of the property tax remains the same. There is no tax increase. I repeat: there is no tax increase. Now, if the value of the property, an individual householder's property, goes up through a reassessment, then there will be an increase in taxes according to the assessment base set down by the municipal council, but relative to the education portion, which accrues to the province of Alberta and is redistributed to the school boards, there is no tax increase. No tax increase.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the Premier: if, as you say, the tax grab is due to inflated property values and population growth, why aren't the same factors reflected in school board funding?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, while we froze the mill rate, we did give an increase in this year's budget to the various school districts averaging I believe 4.7 percent for learning. But I repeat – and this alludes to the preamble; he talks about inflated property rates – that we do not have anything to do with setting the mill rates for municipal properties or any property for that matter. That is entirely up to municipalities under the municipal taxation act, or it used to be. I don't know if it's under the MGA or the municipal taxation act. Basically, it's up to the municipal council as to whether they want to conduct a reassessment or increase the value of individual properties.

Dr. Massey: My question again is to the Premier. Given that Edmonton will contribute $17 million more to education, why are they seeing no relief for their public school board?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, they are. They're sharing on a needs basis. They're sharing in what I think is a reasonable increase to accommodate population growth and a very, very minimal growth in class size. I would add also that $51 million, I believe, is being allocated to Edmonton for capital, whether school renovations or new schools, where it's deemed to be a priority.

As the Minister of Learning will probably point out – and I'll have him supplement my answer – the budget is predicated on the priorities set down by the school boards. Perhaps the hon. minister can expand on the priorities of Edmonton public and Edmonton Catholic.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To start off, I will say that Edmonton will be increasing by $17 million, but the actual dollar increase that Edmonton public and Edmonton Catholic will be receiving is around $25 million. Interestingly enough, the Alberta school foundation funds now approximately 34 and a half percent of education. The general revenue funds approximately 65 and a half percent of education. The hon. Premier has given the reasons why the mill rate was frozen, but again a lot of it, on the capital expenditure for example, is the priorities of the school board. Really, to reiterate: a $25 million increase for a $17 million cost.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary health region has been a cesspool of mismanagement, incompetence, conflicts of interest, and Tory patronage. All of this has led to the avoidable death of a 23-year-old Albertan. The fatality inquiry into the tragic death of Vince Motta has brought the CHR's failings into sharp focus. My first question is to the Premier. Given that Judge Delong cites the closing of three Calgary hospitals in the mid-90s as a contributing factor in Vince Motta's death, will the Premier now apologize on behalf of this government to Mr. Motta's family for the reckless decision to blow up the Calgary General and sell Calgary Holy Cross and Grace to private, for-profit interests?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Motta's very unfortunate death had nothing to do with the old Calgary General hospital or the Holy Cross or the Grace hospital for women. Nothing whatsoever. It had something to do, according to Judge Delong, with the administration and the operation of emergency rooms and emergency procedures within the Calgary regional health authority.

I take great offence to the hon. member's reference to the Calgary regional health authority being a cesspool. You know, NDs get sick in Calgary and they get injured in Calgary and they have to attend hospital. When they attend hospital, they get treated. They get treated well, and they get released. For this person to stand up and call the Calgary regional health authority a cesspool is absolutely shameful, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Calgary regional health authority is big and they're honest and they're professionals and they're courteous. If this person ever gets sick or injured in or around the city of Calgary, you know what? They'll forget what he said completely. They'll close their ears to it, and they'll treat him like any other human being, and he will come out a better person hopefully.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. By continuing to put his faith in the Calgary health region, why is the minister ignoring Judge Delong's finding that a system under siege or in crisis requires dramatic change, not incremental change?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we are making dramatic changes in our health care system. It's better than it's ever been. We have a system that we can be proud of. We can look at objective evidence, if that's what the hon. member is looking for. We can look at the Canadian Institute for Health Information, which shows that the best place to have a heart attack, where you're most likely to survive an acute myocardial infarction – the top five places in all of Canada are all in Alberta. That includes the Calgary health region, and he ought to know that.

It is not mere puffery. It is not being a braggart to say that the Calgary health region when it comes to the treatment of strokes and heart attacks in their emergency rooms, in facilities in Calgary, will benchmark against the top 5 percent of places in the world, Mr. Speaker. We'll continue to express support for the regional health authority and the hardworking people who are on the board, who are physicians, who are health care providers, who are nurses, who continue to do an outstanding job in the city of Calgary for the benefit of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Given that the Minister of Health and Wellness has failed to act responsibly, will this minister heed the recommendation of Judge DeLong and call a public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act of Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister of health has eloquently outlined for opposition members raising questions today the need to carefully look at a 68-page decision that was delivered yesterday, to carefully consider the impact of that decision and what the recommendations were, to work with the Calgary health authority to determine whether progress has been made in some of the areas. He's got a lot more work to do in that area, and we have to look at the recommendations thoroughly and deeply. When you have a fatality review inquiry, it behooves you to be very careful and prudent in reviewing the results, the decision of that inquiry, and not to engage in the very knee-jerk type of reaction that we're seeing today.

Mrs. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, my constituents are seeking clarity. Having served for several years as Lacombe's mayor, I understand the need for and the use of municipal property taxes. Today I need to ask some questions related to the school side of things. Property taxes often go up as a direct result of a municipality experiencing overwhelming population growth. Property values are an integral part of this equation. With an increase in property value, up go the taxes. With a decrease in value – and this does happen – down they will go. The two appear very similar. To the provincial Finance minister: are they? What part of the school property tax does the province actually have control over?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has answered some of this question in a previous question, but I'll say it once again. The role that we play in the school property tax, that goes out on an annual basis, is that we actually set the mill rate, and this year in our budget we chose to freeze the mill rate based on the previous year. So there was no increase in the mill rate for property tax assessment this year.

Mrs. Gordon: To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: who approves the value and/or formula used when determining market value assessment? How does it work, and who does it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutillier: Well, thank you. I share with the hon. member having sat on city council for 12 years, like many of my colleagues in the Assembly here. I want to say this. The value that is determined is ultimately market forces on each individual municipality, either urban or rural. What I would like to be able to say, though, is this. If the value of your asset in assessment goes up, then there will be an adjustment towards that on your tax bill, but if the value of your asset in fact stays the same based on the fact that the Minister of Finance has frozen the mill rate, there will be no change in your education property tax. Finally, Mr. Speaker, if in fact the value of your assessed property goes down, in actual fact you will pay less in education property tax this year.

Mrs. Gordon: To the Learning minister: what is the Alberta school foundation fund, ASFF, and how does its application relate to school property tax and your overall budget with the many new and exciting initiatives including several new school construction starts as announced recently in the Learning budget 2003?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, the education property tax goes into the Alberta school foundation fund. To the hon. member, as well, this is a fund that must be spent on education. It cannot be taken and spent on anything else. It is a designated fund. So when the municipalities increase the amount of dollars that go into that, it goes directly into education.

Mr. Speaker, the other very important point must be made that approximately 34 and a half percent of education, of my budget, of the basic K to 12 budget, is actually paid for by property taxes. The other 64 and a half percent is paid for out of general tax revenue.

The final part of her question, Mr. Speaker, was: how much of the excellent construction program that Infrastructure has done is paid for by property taxes? The answer to that is zero. There is none from that that goes into the construction. That all comes out of Infrastructure's budget, which is general revenue fund.

Vote on Electoral Boundaries Commission Report

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, MLAs are elected to represent the views of their constituents in what is traditionally called a free vote. However, it seems that not only are the Conservative MLAs willing to abdicate their responsibility to their constituents but that the Premier is willing to hand down autocratic dictates to those members on how to vote. The Premier calls this a controlled free vote. The opposition calls it undemocratic. To the Premier: if the Premier is confident in the quality of the Electoral Boundaries Commission report, why didn't he let Conservative members vote freely on the motion to accept the report?

Mr. Klein: Well, far from being autocratic or dictatorial, Mr. Speaker, caucus makes the decision. I don't know how it works in their caucus, nor do I have any desire to find out, but the way it works in our caucus is that the whip rules. She really tries to achieve consensus relative to the direction we're going to go, and the direction that we decided to go as a caucus and as a government relative to the electoral boundaries report, the legislation of which will be debated in this Assembly very soon, is to basically allow those who have really strong feelings about the changes to express their feelings in the way they vote. If that means voting no, then they will vote no.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, given that by his own admission if a free vote on this motion was allowed, it wouldn't have passed, how can the Premier claim that this government is representative or democratic or open or accountable when he hands down orders to MLAs instead of letting them vote the opinions of their constituents?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I never ordered our caucus to vote any way or another. This is a caucus decision. These are 74 good-thinking men and women who decide for themselves how they are going to address a particular issue, and that can hardly be construed as being autocratic or dictatorial. To me this is the democratic way. Those expressions of concern have already been demonstrated by some members and will be further demonstrated when the bill comes forward to bring about the boundary changes.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier again: given that by their own statements in this House the majority of members obviously don't have confidence in the report, how are Albertans supposed to have any confidence in the report?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you can not like a piece of legislation, but you can understand, as the Liberals might someday understand, the reality of the situation. The reality of the situation is that when you go through this exercise of changing boundaries, there are bound to be numerous, I would suggest, MLAs who are upset with the boundary changes. Nobody is happy with change, especially if the change is substantial and the particular MLA has become comfortable with the constituency that he or she represents, whether it's an opposition constituency or a government constituency.

But as the Justice minister so aptly pointed out – and I know that I ought not to be debating legislation that will be coming before this House – will we get anything better if we reject the recommendations of the commission and convene another commission? You know, that is the question. The answer, according to the consensus of our caucus anyway, was that, no, we don't like all of the recommendations, most of the recommendations, many of the recommendations, but are we going to get anything better? Do we want to go through the exercise again? The caucus decided: no, we don't want to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Centennial Projects

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the recent Premier's dinner in Calgary I was asked by some younger private-sector professionals whether the province has planned or is planning any special events to celebrate our centennial such as – and this was their idea – a festive promenade north on 108th Street from the Legislature to Jasper Avenue, and being a true Albertan who was born in Alberta, raised in Edmonton, and a resident of Calgary for 40 years, I took that sincere question seriously. The year 2005 gives us only one and a half years to plan, and a hundred years, I believe, is a very special event. My first question is to the Minister of Community Development. What plan is there for celebration activities in Edmonton and elsewhere in 2005?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of projects happening at the municipal level and certainly at the community level right across the province because everybody is so proud of our 100 years in Confederation. As a provincial government we, too, are planning a lot of projects on our own and many of those also in partnership with those communities and municipalities. Some of the projects on the drawing board at the moment include a re-enactment of the original inauguration day of September 1 – that could very well include a parade through the heart of our capital city, Edmonton; we'll see – a commemorative coin, a commemorative stamp, a commemorative medallion; events to honour Alberta's pioneers, the people who built this province; events to honour industry, business, community, and so on; as well as possibly an RCMP showcase – that might even happen in conjunction with a royal family visit at some point; we'll see – official opening of a 50th anniversary time capsule; other special projects sprinkled throughout, possibly even a centennial day holiday. Everything is up on the board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Which October 2001 community-based deferred projects in Calgary have been reactivated due to last week's budget announcement regarding the centennial legacies grants program, phase 2?

2:10

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I want to be very clear that last Friday I announced the undeferring of projects under the centennial legacies program that were scheduled to have been announced in September of 2001. Unfortunately, tragic events of September 11 pre-empted us by about two weeks. We've been in a frozen mode since, but on Friday I did announce the go-ahead of about 31 community-based projects so far, which is in addition to several that were announced in September of 2000. Specific to the Calgary region, that includes $3 million to help support the Heritage Park project.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, if I understand correctly, the minister announced this last Friday, so the information is freely available. Urgency is one of the parameters of question period.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Ms Kryczka: My second supplemental is to the same minister. What is the status of Calgary's Jubilee Auditorium renovations, also originally announced in October 2001?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I didn't get into the specifics of that announcement, so there is some urgency to this, and I'm happy to answer it. In fact, we are going to be announcing the details of the specific plan for the auditorium renovations in both Edmonton and Calgary, and we will commit $32 million to improve specifics such as sight lines, seat replacements, ventilation replacements, air conditioning replacements, all of those good things that the patrons of Calgary and Edmonton expect to see in the pride and joy of two of our provincial treasures insofar as arts and cultural facilities are concerned.

Provincial/Municipal Agreement

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the Municipal Affairs 2003-2006 business plan says that the ministry plans to invest in relationships with stakeholders through initiatives such as the Minister's Provincial/Municipal Council on Roles, Responsibilities and Resources in the 21st Century. Recently the province refused to sign a fair and equitable working relationship agreement for this council. To the minister: why did the province refuse to sign the working relationship agreement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much. I want to thank the hon. member for recognizing the only type of committee of its kind in all of Canada, and the province of Alberta in fact is doing it. In fact, Mr. Speaker, in two weeks' time I'm going to be speaking to a delegation in Quebec because they're very interested in terms of what Alberta has been doing in this regard.

Relative to the issue of signing, it came to caucus, it came to cabinet, and we're moving forward with an agreement that we have with all of the municipalities that sit on that committee. So, contrary to what the member has said, we are in agreement as we move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. The minister's own council developed and approved the working relationship agreement. Given that the minister has representation on the council and the council approved it, why is it taking so long to get this signed?

Mr. Boutilier: You know, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this. In my 16 years in public office I've never, ever been accused of moving slowly. I remain with that theory today, and I will continue to move in that direction at what I believe is lightning speed.

Mr. Bonner: His defencemen on his hockey team always said that he was slow at back-checking, Mr. Speaker.

Given that, does the province's refusal to sign the agreement indicate that it does not believe in these admirable goals?

Mr. Boutilier: Getting back to the original point though, I always remember Tommy Lasorda when he said: that guy is so slow that if he got in a race with a pregnant woman, he'd come up in third.

If you really think about that today, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this: we're moving forward. It's the first of its kind in Canada, and I'm very proud of the committee. The Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne and the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford sit on the committee. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View sits on the committee, as do the mayors of Calgary and Edmonton, the AUMA president, AAMDC, Alberta Economic Development Authority. The bottom line is that we're making good progress.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Interpretation Services in Courts

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that courts are not only the place to administer justice but also a place to educate people about the law of our land and given that languages are needed to have messages understood by those involved against the law, the service of language interpreters and translators in Alberta's courts is very important, again not just as a provision for equal access to fair trials but more importantly as deterrence and prevention factors through understanding. A group of court interpreters came to me last November and explained their concern. Their concern is their low rate of pay for their important and special qualifications, particularly compared with other jurisdictions in Canada. I have communicated with the Minister of Justice and Attorney General about this matter. My question today is to the same minister. Can the minister advise the members of the Assembly what the current fee structure is for Alberta's court interpreters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree that the role of court interpreters is very important, particularly in ensuring that all Albertans have access to justice and that language barriers do not impair the ability of the court or the ability of the participants in court to understand what is happening, to understand the relevant testimony and the evidence that's being put in place in the courts. So the role of the interpreter for those people who are more comfortable in a language other than English is extremely important.

Under section 4, specifically to answer the question, the fees and expenses for witnesses and interpreters regulation, an interpreter is paid $15 for each hour or part of an hour in which they're in attendance with court proceedings. They're entitled to expenses set out in that regulation for travel by public transportation or private automobile as well as meal expenses if they're required to work over a mealtime.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that our Alberta court interpreters are advising me that the current fee rates have not been changed for 18 years, can the minister advise if there are any plans to revisit the current fee structure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We are reviewing the current fee structure. We are cognizant of the fact that there hasn't been an increase in the fee structure for a considerable period of time. We are very prudent with our resources in the Department of Justice, but we recognize that there needs to be an opportunity to review the fee structure in that case to see whether it's still representative and still affords us the opportunity to ensure that we have qualified interpreters in the courts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the needs are increasing and the quality of work tends to go with the dollar paid, is there anything the hon. minister can do now to address these concerns?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue of fees not just for interpreters but fees paid to witnesses, expenses, and indeed salaries has been a concern in the Department of Justice over a number of years. We've been able to address a number of those concerns, and as resources are available, we'll be able to address additional numbers of those concerns. We will be dealing with the Department of Justice estimates on I believe the 1st or 2nd of May in Committee of Supply, and we can get into some detail with respect to what we're able to do with this year's allocation of funds under the budget that just came down. It's not easy, because in every aspect of justice there are more demands than there is supply in terms of the resources available. So we have to make the most effective use of the resources we have available, but we're very cognizant of the important role that interpreters play in our court system, and we're having a very close look at what we can do in that situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Aquila Networks Canada

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In regard to Aquila the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat stated at a standing policy committee meeting last week, quote: frankly, I don't see how it could get any worse. End of quote. Well, Aquila's parent company in Kansas City, Missouri, announced today a net loss for the last quarter of over 1.2 billion Canadian dollars. Aquila's financial difficulties mean more trouble for Alberta's confused and frustrated electricity consumers. My first question is to the Premier. Who is going to be left paying the power bill in the Aquila service area if it is forced to abandon the deregulated, scandal-plagued Alberta energy scene?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta energy scene is not scandal plagued by any stretch of the imagination. The hon. member poses a hypothetical question. There were a lot of ifs in that question. That's the way they seem to operate: on the basis of speculation and innuendo. I don't purport to answer if questions. I tell the media all the time that you've put the wrong preamble on the question if it starts with if.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy: what credit and prudential requirements does the government of Alberta require Aquila to have in place to ensure that there is no interruption of service for customers in case of a withdrawal from this deregulated, scandal-plagued Alberta energy scene?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are so many errors in his preamble that it makes the question again hypothetical. Let me say that the EUB has in place measures which will ensure that no matter what happens, similar to what happened when Enron changed hands – not one gas shipment was missed. Not one kilowatt-hour of electricity delivery was missed. In fact, for example, one would ask the question: if one company with this much debt can still deliver power, how can one political party with so much debt still continue to function? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: To the same minister: should not the credit and the prudential requirements for energy firms operating in Alberta be increased to provide Albertans more consumer protection – and this is all about consumer protection, not about raw politics – from energy firms with liquidity problems?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the EUB has in place, as well as the Electric Utilities Act, ample measures in which to ensure that Albertans are neither defrauded nor short of power deliveries. If it hadn't been for this competitive market model, there would be shortages of electricity, and in fact parts of the province would have been subject to brownouts and/or blackouts. What we have seen with this competitive market structure is a new era of transparency, an era of transparency that has forced utility companies and electricity providers to provide accurate, correct service, and by doing that, they are serving the customer better. Is it a rocky road? You bet it's a rocky road. But are the customers being better served, are they getting more truthful information, and are they being well regulated? The answer to that is yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Municipal districts and county councils are telling the New Democrat opposition that their power bills have gone through the roof since this government went down the disastrous and, admittedly, rocky road of electricity deregulation. Between 2000 and 2002 rural municipalities who contacted us saw their power bills rise by an average of 44 percent. Some even saw bills increase by as much as 75 percent. Now, we all know that there are only two ways that these local governments can absorb this hit, and that is to raise property taxes or to cut municipal services. I'd like to ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs a question. Does the minister know how much property taxes will rise in rural municipalities as a result of this government's deregulation mess?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having once been someone who taught mathematics, I understand the value of statistics. Sometimes it's not what is being told. The hon. member indicated that he's been in contact with numerous municipal districts and counties. What he failed to say is that 96 percent of them did not respond to his survey, so what is very important with this is that he's not being entirely accurate with those statistics.

Mr. Mason: Is the minister honestly trying to suggest that the ones that gave us their power bills have substantially different power prices than the ones that did not? Is he trying to just pass off this issue? Is he trying to just slough this off on all the municipalities of this province? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Boutilier: The hon. member wants to talk about the 4 percent, which is fair. We want to deal with all municipalities. I can say this, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member did not make details relative to the fact of this. In a year-to-year comparison he actually fails to account for the fact that the 2002 bills include charges and rate riders for power consumed in 2000 and 2001. So let us be clear. With 96 percent of those municipal districts and counties that are going forward, we're making progress. As the Minister of Energy has indicated, it has been a rough road, but the bottom line is one of determination of our municipalities. They have worked with our government. They're continuing to work with our government because they have the attitude that we can find the solutions that are required in serving the citizens of Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, when will this minister stop playing with numbers, confusing people, and stand up for the municipalities of this province and tell the Minister of Energy that it's time to scrap this made-in-Alberta disaster they call electricity deregulation?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, one thing for certain is that this government doesn't play with numbers, and to reinforce that, I'm going to ask the Minister of Energy to supplement on this important issue where he has the facts and figures.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the survey had some 4 percent respond. There are 83 seats in this Legislature, two of which are held by his party. That equates to about 3 percent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

No-Bull Marketing Ltd.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize an innovative group of individuals from the constituency of Little Bow. In the early 1990s six farmers from the Carmangay-Nobleford area formed a marketing club. The club was a grassroots support group for farmers who wanted to share ideas about how to make their operations more profitable. Those farmers, agribusinessmen are Dennis Benci, Dan Greene, Eldon Hubka, Terry Ross, and Ron Svanes from Carmangay as well as Doug Wright from Nobleford.

The club's earliest conversations focused on higher value crops. By 1996 their company, No-Bull Marketing, was in place. Over the next seven years these six farmers built and expanded a $4 million investment in Carmangay, along the CP's main rail line. Their company now contracts, cleans, bags, and ships Alberta-grown chickpeas around the world. Agronomically chickpeas are a drought-tolerant dryland crop that boosts soil levels of nitrogen, thereby reducing the need to apply nitrogen-rich fertilizers for the next year's crop.

Mr. Speaker, due to the hard work and ingenuity of these six individuals and their families, the spirit of entrepreneurialism in the industry of agriculture is alive and well. I am honoured to take this moment to acknowledge and thank these individuals. They are examples of what this province was built upon: the dream that anything is possible given an equal and fair opportunity.

Thank you.

Alberta Ballet

Mr. Maskell: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to rise today and share with the Members of this Legislative Assembly one of Alberta's great success stories, the Alberta Ballet and School of Alberta Ballet. Alberta Ballet is Canada's fourth largest dance company. Now completing its 36th season, Alberta Ballet has developed a distinctive repertoire and performance quality, winning critical acclaim at home and internationally. Its dancers have earned a reputation for their exceptional versatility and artistic excellence.

Founded in Edmonton, Alberta Ballet completed a successful merger with Calgary City Ballet in 1990. The organization, serving the entire province, relocated its core operations to Calgary. It maintains an administrative office in the heart of Edmonton's arts district.

The seed of Alberta Ballet was planted in the early 1950s by Dr. Ruth Carse. Today under the artistic direction of Jean Grand-Maitre the company has 23 professional dancers and two apprentice dancers. The company performs from October through April in Calgary and Edmonton's Jubilee auditoria and is accompanied in Calgary by the Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra and in Edmonton by the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra. Alberta Ballet tours extensively throughout Alberta, across Canada, and internationally, always to rave reviews from audience members and critics.

On July 1, 1991, Alberta Ballet established the School of Alberta Ballet in Calgary. The school's training is rooted in the classical ballet tradition. In 1998-99 a partnership was formed between the School of Alberta Ballet and the Calgary board of education to provide high school credits for dance courses, and the same year a bachelor of arts dance (ballet) degree was created at the University of Alberta, the first of its kind in Canada. Most recently Alberta Ballet established a hundred thousand dollar education fund which provides monetary assistance to successful applicants registered in the professional division.

I encourage members to attend an Alberta Ballet performance. For the first timers I'd suggest attending the Christmas production of Nutcracker with family or friends. You will become a subscriber.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Protection for Persons in Care

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of this province's pioneers are unable to live in peace because of the horrific accounts of elder abuse within the system and this government's refusal to put adequate standards of care in place to prevent and detect neglect and abuse against some of our most vulnerable citizens. In the four years since the Protection for Persons in Care Act was enacted, there were over a thousand complaints of neglect and abuse in institutional long-term care homes, but the definition of abuse and neglect needs to be clearly defined and monitored.

Conditions are ripe for abuse since this government forced the closure of some acute care hospitals and changed others, resulting in the net loss of 8,300 active treatment beds since 1988. The number of long-term care beds has grown by only 1,400 in the last 10 years, while the number of seniors in this province grew by a third in the same period. Waiting periods can now reach six weeks.

Intolerable conditions have been created for our elderly. One Alberta seniors' organization says that it has 174 documented cases of alleged elder abuse in Alberta institutions including 14 resulting in premature deaths. How is it dignified to be diapered because staff are too busy to help residents to the bathroom? Who decided that a limit of one bath a week was adequate and acceptable?

In addition to adequately funding the eldercare system, this government must take steps to show that it takes elder abuse and neglect seriously. Special investigator positions should be created within the Alberta Seniors department to do random inspections and pursue complaints of neglect and abuse. Citizens must also be legally required to report all cases of suspected abuse and neglect.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Providence Children's Centre

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday, April 10, I was honoured to represent the Premier and my colleagues at the facility tour and ribbon-cutting ceremony for new gym equipment at Providence Children's Centre, which is located in the Premier's constituency of Calgary-Elbow.

Providence Children's Centre is a developmental centre for young children with special needs and since 1943 has provided critical early prevention through unique and therapeutic services. Daily, 240 children ages one to six benefit from their mission, which is to enhance the health and development of children and their families.

The Rotary Club of Calgary Sarcee, of which I am proud to be an honorary member, through its fund-raising efforts provided the funds for the new gym equipment, and most members were at the centre for the happy event.

Community support enables the board and staff of the Providence centre to continue to meet their mandate, and the new gym equipment will improve the opportunities their therapists have to enhance the health and education of these children with disabilities. Ongoing funding and support for the centre is provided by Alberta Learning, Alberta Children's Services, and Alberta Health and Wellness through the Calgary health region.

There were many significant impressions for me that morning, three of them being, first of all, the high level of happy activity involving so many little groups of little people; second, the dedication of qualified staff and volunteers; and third, the sensory room, only one of the amazing, very creative approaches designed by staff for these high-needs children.

My learning experience at the Providence Children's Centre was truly one of a kind and very memorable and would not have happened without these key people: Ian Playfair, president, Rotary Club of Calgary Sarcee; Rotary members; Special Olympian Stacey Kann and her sister/coach Cora Kann; and Providence staff and volunteers Lary Mosley, president; Patti Dragland, volunteer board member; Terence Creighton, executive director; Ann O'Donnell, manager of fund development; and Christine Keogh, fund development.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Premier I would like to make two tablings. First of all, a letter from the Premier to Premier-elect Jean Charest of the Liberal Party of Quebec congratulating him on his recent election victory and expressing our desire as a government to work co-operatively with the new government of Quebec.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a letter from the Premier to Premier Landry expressing to him the appreciation that we have across Canada for the degree to which he has worked very, very hard and worked, as he saw it, in the best interests of Quebec over the past number of years.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two quick tablings. One of them is an official letter that I'm sending on behalf of the government of Alberta congratulating the world curling championship team of Randy Ferbey.

Secondly, a letter of congratulations to the Masters tournament winner, the wearer and bearer of the coveted green jacket, the greatest Canadian golfer we have, Mr. Mike Weir, offering our government's congratulations to him as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two reports today. Firstly, I rise to table the requisite number of copies of an extensive list of successful, indeed award-winning case studies of very successful and notable public/private partnerships. It lists everything from utilities to infrastructure to public services to schools and libraries. This list was developed by the National Council for Public-Private Partnerships, which is an excellent resource centre and has an excellent web site on the subject.

The second set of reports that I rise to table is the requisite number of copies of the speaking notes from a speech by our federal Liberal government's Minister of Transport in which he talks about the exciting and innovative developments and successes in the transportation field as a result of the introduction of P3s. He specifically praises the many advantages, including cost advantages and greater accountability that public/private partnerships have brought across Canada since being introduced into the federal government practices.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three tablings today. The first is a letter to this member from the hon. Minister of Human Resources Development on the federal level in answer to my query on eligibility for cultural workers for the EI program.

The second is a media release with information from the Cultural Human Resources Council announcing the release of their Face of the Future, A Study of Human Resource Issues in Canada's Cultural Sector, and it contains their recommendations.

Finally, a copy of an e-mail from a constituent, Ian Crichton, who expresses his dismay at the government's decision to divest Edmonton public schools of adult learners over the age of 20 at Metro Community College, asking that the decision be reversed or at the very least the government allow a transition period for these important classes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a decision rendered in the Court of Appeal of Alberta between Wolfert and Shuchuk.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. The first one is a summary of recommendations in Judge Delong's report to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General in the matter of public input into the death of Vince Motta, dated April 14, 2003. In the first two or three recommendations the judge calls for a nonpartisan commission of inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter that I received from Mrs. Sharon Tucker of Medicine Hat, who is a recipient of AISH benefits. She expresses her extreme frustration and helplessness to live on those $850 and has asked me to lobby on behalf of AISH and low-income people so that the government will "give us a break, and a cost of living, or something so that we could have at least a comfortable life."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the appropriate number of copies of municipal government electric bills from the period 2000 to 2002 showing an increase between 29.2 percent and 74.7 percent, with an average increase over that period of 44 percent. I'm presenting reports from municipal governments including Barrhead, Bighorn, Clear Hills, Lesser Slave Lake, Lethbridge county, Mackenzie, Northern Lights, Peace, Pincher Creek, Provost, Red Deer county, Spirit River, Taber, Two Hills, and Westlock.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Oral Question Period Practices

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to raise a point of order today with respect specifically to the questions raised by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie in question period relative to votes on Government Motion 13, which took place last night. In citation I would offer a number of citations. First of all, Standing Orders 23(f), "debates any previous vote of the Assembly unless it is that member's intention to move that it be rescinded;" 23(h), "makes allegations against another member;" and Beauchesne's 409, 410, and 412.

There are a number of reasons that I wish to raise this issue today. We've had a number of circumstances and questions in the House over the last two weeks relative to questions not about government policy or government position or what the government is doing and not about the responsibility that a minister may have for the government, for their department, or that the Premier may have for government but rather questions with respect to, if I may say it, the actions of members of the Legislature in their capacity as members, specifically today the capacity of a member to vote in the Legislature. On previous occasions a question was asked of me as Government House Leader, and I commented at the time that I didn't have a responsibility to answer as Government House Leader but then answered the question anyway – because there's no secret to the activities that are engaged in by members of caucus – about members of caucus going to a reception outside the House.

Specifically today the question to the Premier was a question about votes in the House, and, Mr. Speaker, first of all it was a question which alluded to a vote last night where members attended and voted on Government Motion 13. Therefore, in my submission it's not in the hands of the hon. member to question the activities of members of the House in that vote or the result of that vote. That vote was done.

Secondly, under 23(h) she in essence was making an allegation against each and every member of the House who participated in that vote, that they did not participate freely in that vote, make their decision as a member of this House in attending on that vote.

Thirdly, under 409, Mr. Speaker, questions ought to be within the administrative responsibility of the government. Well, questions about a determination that's made by caucus, agreement made by caucus members as to a course of action, and votes made by members in the House are not the administrative responsibility of the House, but when they come to the House level, they are in the hands of each member of the House.

Under 410(17), "Ministers may not be questioned with respect to party responsibilities." With all due respect to the hon. member, the activities of caucus are party responsibilities and not government responsibilities. With respect to 410(10) the subject matter of questions again must be within the collective responsibility of the minister and of the government. Caucus activities are not government activities by their very nature.

And under 412 of Beauchesne, "A question may not be asked of a Minister in another capacity, such as being responsible for a province, or part of a province, or as spokesman for a racial or religious group." I would suggest that caucus is, again, another group.

The purpose of question period is to hold the government to account, to ask about government policy and direction, to ask about the administration of government, to hold the members of Executive Council to account for those actions. On two occasions, the latest being today, the first being the other day when the Member for Edmonton-Riverview asked the Government House Leader about attendance at social functions – but today specifically the question from Edmonton-Ellerslie to the Premier was relative to caucus discussion and caucus decisions on how to deal with a matter which was coming before the House. It should be clear to all members of the House, and I'm sure it is to all members of the House, that caucus discussions about how to deal with a matter are entered into voluntarily by members of a caucus who adhere to the terms of being members of caucus, and they make determinations as to how to proceed.

When we come into this House, each and every member of this House may vote in any way they please. That is their right as a member of this House. That right is not fettered by anything that happens outside of the House. However, members of a government caucus, as, I presume, members of an opposition caucus, make a determination to be a member of a caucus, to discuss within that caucus a direction, and then, whether they were supportive or not supportive, agree to go the direction that the caucus has determined.

That agreement doesn't fetter their discretion as a member of this House. They come into this House and vote as a member of this House. If they determine not to vote with the caucus in the direction that they've agreed on, they may or may not be able to participate in the same way in further discussions of the caucus or be effective in those discussions, but that's a personal decision of a member of the House. That's not a government decision, that's not a direction of government, that's not a responsibility of government, and it should be clear to members opposite that government cannot fetter the discretion.

I thought it was important, Mr. Speaker, to raise, however, this as a point of order today because we've seen on a number of occasions, specifically today, the opposition, and particularly this member today, asking questions of the Premier, asking questions of Executive Council not with respect to the administration of their departments, not with respect to the policy of government, but with respect to how a caucus, which is a political organization, carries out its business, whether that is with respect to who it meets or with respect to how members might proceed to vote or agree to work together in terms of the process.

So, Mr. Speaker, I raise that as a point of order today because I think there ought to be direction made in the future that questions should adhere to the rules, should be with respect to urgent matters of public policy, the direction that government is taking, the responsibility of government, and those things within the administrative competence of the members of government or Executive Council.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the Government House Leader comes very close to trying to breach one of my fundamental rights in this Assembly, and that's freedom of speech, and I would refer him to Beauchesne 75 and 76. It is, I believe, well within our rights as an opposition in this Assembly to question the Premier on his actions. As the head of the government he reflects the policies of the government in everything he says and does, and when in open discussions and in answering questions outside of this House he puts forward certain positions and decisions into the public domain, then it is well within our right to ask those questions in terms of how they determine the mandate of this government and its policies. Perhaps I could have worded my questions more directly back to determining policies, but I believe I was well within my rights in asking them.

The Government House Leader made a big deal about the separation between the Conservative caucus and the government, but in fact this very Government House Leader and his entire front bench have made a very big deal about blurring the lines between these two groups. I would use as an example the number of government bills the Conservative members have introduced not just this session but in many sessions. So those lines are very blurred.

We saw in the speeches that we heard over the last three evenings on the motion under question today many of the members making references to toeing the line on this particular motion. So I would say that if he doesn't want us to ask questions in those regards and to have a clear separation between their caucus and their government, then they need to make that clear in all their actions.

I don't believe there is a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Additional participants?

Hon. members, the chair does have the Blues in terms of what the specific questions were. To just sum up, the gist of the first question is – and I'll just extrapolate some words out of it to quote – “Why didn't he,” meaning the Premier, “let Conservative members vote freely on the motion to accept the report?” The second question, again I paraphrase:

How can the Premier claim that this government is representative or democratic or open or accountable when he hands down orders to MLAs instead of letting them vote the opinions of their constituents?

The third one, of less significance, I guess, to the debate in question: “How are Albertans supposed to have any confidence in the report?”

The chair has listened very carefully to submissions made by the Government House Leader and the response made by the Opposition House Leader. We'll spend several days pondering one conclusion, anyway, reached today, that the caucus is a political entity, not a government entity. That's quite a statement and quite a revelation, and I would suggest that perhaps all members might want to reconsider what this really means in terms of parliamentary democracy, the impact in this House, because of far-reaching consequences and implications in another venue that I'm not sure that one would really want to go into.

The gist of the matter is that the fundamental rule basically would report to be Beauchesne 411, and 411 would strike me to be the most important segment that one would want to raise with respect to this, and 411 says:

Some further limitations seem to be generally understood. A question may not . . .

(4) criticize decisions of the House.

The chair listened very attentively to the questions that were raised this afternoon and tried to find where the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was actually questioning a decision of the House. One might argue that there was an implication in there that it was a decision of the House that was being questioned and was being criticized and was being raised. If that would have been very, very clear, there would have been an intervention by the chair, as he has done on previous occasions, to basically say that that would be inappropriate and one is not in a position to criticize decisions of the House.

The Government House Leader has made it very, very clear, and a correct statement as well, that members in this Assembly – and no member has risen on a point of privilege to suggest that he or she had been intimidated or pressured by anyone to vote in a certain way, so it's pure speculation after that to suggest that everybody would vote in a particular way. Every hon. member in this Assembly comes here – and I use my own words but also to paraphrase others as well – very, very freely in this Assembly. There's no intimidation unless the member wants to rise and then say that there's an intimidation and raise such a question, but no member has. When that does happen, then quite clearly there will be intimidation. That would be a complete violation of every democratic principle that we want.

So it's pure speculation, I guess, to suggest, despite all the outside controversy that seems to be surrounding this particular subject, that in fact that kind of intimidation would exist or to imply that such intimidation did exist, and it's very difficult for the chair to find where this was a criticism of a decision taken in the House last night. There were some very skillfully used words by the opposition member who raised the questions today and some degree of reflection on government policy, far-reaching but still a bit of a connection there, and there was no intervention by the chair with respect to these questions.

There will be no further statements made with respect to this particular point of order other than to say that it's very clear that decisions of the House are not to be criticized in the Assembly by any member. If any member chooses to rise on a point of privilege to suggest that their rights as a member in this Assembly have been conflicted with or intimidated by, breached by anyone else, they have that right to do this on any given day. It will be dealt with then accordingly.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Human Resources and Employment

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister for Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm here to present the 2003-2004 estimates for Alberta Human Resources and Employment. Sometimes I'll refer to the full name; other times I'm sure I'll just use HR and E.

We have staff in the gallery today. We have Dan Thompson, who is director of budgets and forecasts. We have Duncan Campbell, the senior financial officer, and Mark Asbell, the chair of the Alberta Labour Relations Board.

As members will know, the ministry of HR and E has five components. We have the department, we have the Alberta Labour Relations Board, the personnel administration office, the Appeals Commission for workers' compensation, and the Workers' Compensation Board. Now, members, I'm asking for $1.072 billion to support the work of our first four entities. WCB is entirely financed by employer premiums so is not part of these budget estimates.

First to the Department of Alberta Human Resources and Employment. The line items in these estimates reflect our three core businesses: investing in people, investing in skills, and investing in workplaces. Our first range of programs is people investments, and we provide monthly financial benefits to people in need. Expenditures this year will be about $740 million. This is about 2 percent more than last year and calculates out to be about 70 percent of the department's overall spending.

The largest program in this ministry is assured income for severely handicapped, or the so-called AISH program. Now, AISH is the most generous program of its type in the country. Three hundred and fifty-seven million dollars in financial and medical benefits are provided to about 30,000 Albertans, and this is projected for '03-04. This is an increase of $7.5 million over last year's actual expenditures. This program budget is increasing to cover the rising costs of prescriptive and health care and the costs of providing benefits to more clients.

We are making important changes to AISH for people who leave AISH because of indexed Canada pension plan disability benefits. Historically clients lost their medical benefits when their CPP disability benefits rose above $851. We have now removed that hardship. People who have left AISH after January 2002 because of higher disability benefits from CPP are now eligible for the health coverage. But, members, you must be aware of this: they need to apply to our department for that coverage. We already have been providing extended health coverage for AISH clients that move to the world of work. I encourage each hon. member to share this news with their constituents and let them know about this new initiative.

Now, supports for independence, commonly referred to as SFI, provide financial benefits to people who are in emergency situations. This is a situation of either transition or inability to meet their basic needs, and it provides a monthly benefit based on circumstance. Let me tell you about some of the people who must rely on the government.

Last July a married couple with a six-year-old child came into an Edmonton office. The dad had been working, but his hours were cut back several weeks earlier. The mother had just got a new job but would not be starting for two weeks, and they were unable to pay their utility bills and had just been cut off. Frankly, they were embarrassed to see our staff. They'd never been on SFI before, but they had reached a point where they could not cope. They explained the situation and received help to pay their utility arrears. A few months later our staff received a note. The family was back on track, and both parents were working. They just needed that hand up and required no further assistance from us.

A highlight of Budget 2003 is a $20 increase for SFI clients who are not able to work and for families with children. Families with children will also see an increase of a further $15 per month per child when the province allows a flow-through of the 2003 federal government's increase in the national child benefit supplement. The rate increase and flow-through decision will mean that about 72 percent of Alberta's SFI clients will have higher monthly incomes. Now, this marks a shift in approach. In previous years Alberta has offset the federal increase and reinvested the funds in programs that help parents stay working. This year we are letting parents keep the monthly increase versus a reinvestment strategy like the Alberta child health benefit.

A monthly increase in benefits is good for families, but more government spending isn't a long-term answer to poverty. Employment is the best answer, and we help people gain employment. We help clients look for a job, get the skills to be employable, and get the experience to get their foot in the door. Welfare reform in the early 1990s was focused on turning SFI from just a cheque into an active program. New employment supports, skills training, and the opportunity to gain hands-on experience were introduced.

An example of that is Alberta community employment, the ACE program. This is for employment of SFI or AISH clients who have been unable to find work in the competitive labour market. Developed in 1993, the six-month program provides Albertans with the opportunity to improve their job skills and gain valuable work experience and work for nonprofit societies such as municipalities, hospitals, and schools. Members, we have an example of this. In 2001 HRE staff in Red Deer helped find a young SFI client an ACE position with the city of Red Deer. That person made contacts during her employment term and showed a great deal of dedication to the work that she was doing, and now two years later she is working full-time. The contacts she made during employment with the city as well as her excellent references and dedication to her work all enabled her to qualify for this new position. The provincial government helped her reach her employment goals. About 80 percent of the people in our employment programs find steady work.

The Alberta approach has worked. We have about as many households on SFI this year as we actually did in the 1970s, when the Alberta population was 1.6 million. The population is now 3 million, and that is about a 90 percent increase. So an increase in population of about 90 percent whereas we've been able to hold the number of households about level over that period of time.

Now, the question before us today is whether or not this is good enough. Moving 80 percent of the clients into employment is fine, but what is the right balance? Currently we support 30,000 households on SFI, which is the lowest ratio in the country, but can we get that number even lower, and can we help more people find jobs? We believe that, yes, we can, and we believe that that is an honourable mandate and an honourable objective because we need to make the most of every person's potential.

Each month that an employable person is on SFI is 30 days of lost opportunity. This is loss for employers who need workers – and many of them need skilled workers – loss for the person because they are missing the satisfaction and the cumulative self-respect that comes with working, and loss for the government because it means that we have let that person's skills set or that human capital go unutilized or actually slip away on us.

This province leads the nation in productivity. We have the highest workforce participation rates in the country, with 73 percent of our adults in the workforce. We have the highest worker productivity. We are aiming to have the safest workplaces, and I'll talk more about that later. We're saying that the best way for us to lead the country in social policy is to lead the country in labour market policy.

This session we are discussing Bill 32. This legislation is to integrate income support and skills training programs. We're saying that each person has potential, and we're saying that the government will support that potential to find employment. This year the department's second business, skills investments, will devote over a quarter of a billion dollars to ensure that people are trained for jobs and training for people who want upgrading. Now, these investments include four program streams: career information, which includes career workshops and skills planning; work foundations, which includes basic skills and academic upgrading; training for work, which includes work experience placements; and workforce partnerships which help develop human resource strategies. Also, this year the disability-related employment supports, DRES, will invest $8.3 million in helping people with disabilities who want to work and to learn and employers who see ability first and disability second.

One of our staff in Edmonton tells the story of a teenager that we'll call for our purposes today Brenda. Three years ago she was working the streets. She was never able to follow through on anything and had no direction. Her mother described her as a nightmare teenager. Our staff helped Brenda get an assessment. She has attention deficit disorder, which means she is bright but learns differently. She is now doing high school upgrading at NorQuest and getting honours marks, and Brenda will be at school full-time this fall. Without funding for assessments and DRES support for three hours of tutoring every week, Brenda could still be on the street. Instead, Brenda is now a responsible person on the right path. We're giving this young lady a second chance.

Now, for some people it's a question of getting a first chance, a first job or a summer job that opens up a whole new career path. Across the province we help people who visit our labour market information centres, our career development centres, and of course the Canada/Alberta service centres. Staff in these offices help people be successful in job hunting and work with seminars on how to find a job or information on why one career path suits you better than another. Other people need information, and we provide, of course, opportunities to them as well. Alberta Human Resources and Employment provides programs and services to help Albertans get skills and move into work.

We are also part of Alberta workplaces. In employment standards and other enforcement areas of the department our approach is to educate first and then regulate. We'll be devoting $5.1 million to employment standards initiatives this year so that we can continue to help people and workplaces be fair. We also want Alberta workplaces to be safe, and our major initiative in that area is WorkSafe Alberta. Our objective is to reduce the injury rate by 40 percent, and this would keep 15,000 people per year from being seriously injured or, God bless them and their families, experiencing a fatality. We'll be conducting more inspections, we've changed the act, and we're looking forward to working with all of our partners, which include employers and employees, to achieve this goal.

The final component of our workplace is labour relations, and again we're responsible for mediation service, and you might have seen some of that in the news lately. Also, of course, we have a second component in our ministry that is tied in with mediation, and that's the Alberta Labour Relations Board. The recent passage of the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, has set out a number of temporary tasks for the board in the coming year, so they're going to be busy. They include runoff votes between unions, determination and votes on collective agreements, and the settlement of issues arising from these votes. In the last fiscal year, for the purposes of an example, more than 57 percent of applications were resolved without formal adjudication, and this gets back to the fact that they have a disputes resolution mechanism in place that deals with matters before full hearings.

The third component is the personnel administration office, with a budget of $8.3 million. As probably the largest employer in the province we face the same crucial challenges as other organizations. We're competing in tight labour markets, and we need to find, of course, the people that we're looking for. So we're out trying to find a new generation of civil servants that will come and replace those of us that are moving on in years. We do this through an intern program. We have an ambassador program that we're very pleased with, and of course we provide learning and development opportunities inside these particular areas. We're proud that the PAO has an excellent working relationship with the civil service and their main representative, which is the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. Later this year we'll be involved in wage opener negotiations with AUPE.

The fourth and final component is the Appeals Commission for Alberta workers' compensation. They have a budget of $6.4 million. This commission joined the ministry on September 1 of last year, so now we're talking about its first full year. The Appeals Commission, established under the Workers' Compensation Act, is a separate government entity independent from the WCB, and the Appeals Commission, or AC as we refer to it, hears appeals from a decision of the review bodies of the WCB that is being questioned either by the employer or the employee. The operating costs of the AC are paid from general revenue, which is reimbursed from the WCB accident fund. The accident fund is made up of the assessment contribution of employers. The Appeals Commission continues to bring about changes to make the appeals system open, transparent, and accountable. Now, recent changes that address recommendations of the Friedman and Doerksen reports include such things as an enhanced prehearing process and the publications of these decisions. By the way, they're currently available on the web.

So the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment has been an active part of thousands of Albertans' lives over the year and will continue to be over the year ahead. As stated earlier, we'll invest $1.072 billion for Alberta people, skills, and workplaces. Of course, these dollars come with personal stories that make a difference to people every day in communities right across the province.

Now, because of the pressure of time I've skipped over some of those particular areas. I would have liked to have expanded on them further. Bill 32 will likely be up for debate either today or certainly later this week. We're very anxious to see that move forward. It is a meaningful attempt, a sincere attempt to move to a more integrated system as to how we deliver services to the most needy people that we have here in our province. I have for a long time been frustrated by our system of labeling and thus providing entitlements and what you do if the menu of entitlement that's there for a particular person isn't basically what they really need. So we are looking for a much more personal approach, an approach that would be considered more of a case management approach rather than just simply, I guess, a program that would allot some benefits to certain types of people. I think the basic theme that I would want to leave everyone in the House with is the fact that we are making a significant change in this particular area, because rather than trying to fit people into a program, we are trying to find programs, then, that will work for the people.

So I look forward to the comments and questions that all and any hon. members would have about these estimates. I certainly will answer questions as best I can, and thank goodness for Hansard, because if I don't get to them this afternoon, we will provide written answers.

With that, Mr. Chair, I think my time is close enough to being up. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to express my appreciation to my colleague who is actually the Official Opposition critic for the Department of Human Resources and Employment, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, because he's allowing me to go first and get some of my issues on the table here, and I appreciate his being generous enough to do that for me.

There are three things that I would like to have a discussion about if the minister will be so accommodating. One is to continue the discussion we started last year around cultural workers. I think we have a part B that we can now talk a bit about. I'd also like to talk about an issue that I raised with the minister in question period and that I'm still trying to pursue, and that is the question of discrimination in being eligible to receive AISH benefits or AISH medical benefits based on source of income. Second to last, I'd like to talk a bit about the ACE program, that the minister mentioned.

But I'd like to start out by thanking the minister for his assistance in looking into a matter with the recreation groups. The department was a partial sponsor of a survey that the recreation groups were looking at doing in Alberta, and there was some question about including the definition of culture. The cultural groups have worked long and hard over the last 10 years to establish a very clear definition of culture, and this was causing some stress between the two groups. The last I heard of it, someone contacted me Friday and said that the parks and recreation group had in fact decided not to pursue including culture and the definition of culture and cultural groups and activities in their definition of recreation. So that came to a happy end. Thank you for that one.

Okay. I just want to work my way backwards then. The first thing on that list I gave you, as I work from back to front, is the ACE program. I remember that quite clearly from when I was at the Advisory Council on Women's Issues, because I endeavoured to bring in a number of people from that program. Now, the minister says that that program started in 1993, and I left the advisory council in that year, so there must have been a predecessor program that was almost identical in that it took people who were currently on supports for independence. The employer received the wage subsidy for them, or I think it was in fact the entire wage plus an additional percentage to compensate the employer for the minor administrative costs of having an additional person in the office; for example, an extra telephone, an extra desk, perhaps a bit more paper used in the photocopier, a couple of more pencils used, that kind of thing. The question I am posing to the minister is: what sort of evaluation process is in place for the success of this program, and has it in fact been altered or updated? What has come out of monitoring an evaluation process? Have there been any changes in it?

The minister here is talking about a 10-year program, and I know that there was a version of it, perhaps a pilot project, that existed prior to that, because my experience around this program – and I think I've probably hired about four people on an ACE program – was that candidates who were in fact overqualified for ACE were the ones who were most likely to be successful. So out of the four that I hired, only one was able to successfully move on as the program had envisioned. In fact, on paper and in person in an interview she appeared overqualified for what was being considered here. As I say, she's the only one that was able to move on successfully. An awful lot was expected of the employer, and of course many in the nonprofit sector took advantage of this because they saw it as: hey, free help, free workers. I very quickly learned that that was not the case at all. There was a great deal that was expected from the employer in working with this employee.

The one woman that I had that was successful and went on into, I'm presuming, a long employment history with the civil service couldn't answer the phone. Now, this was part of her cultural background that she was struggling to overcome. She could not cope with picking up the phone and having people ask her things and, as she perceived, yell at her. Even though in fact I think I would have considered it a request or a firm request or a straightforward request, she very much saw that as being yelled at. So it was a great deal of work and effort from everyone in the office to help her move on, and she was in fact successful.

The point of all that is to say: what has the department looked at? What is the monitoring and evaluation process for the program overall? We're 10 years into it now. Is the program run the same today as it was 10 years ago, and if so, why? I would have thought that it would have needed to be updated. So what sort of changes have been made in the way the program is offered and operated?

Backing up, I guess the next thing I'll go to then is the discussion around cultural workers that the minister and I started some time ago, a year ago actually, in this same budget debate. What we were talking about a year ago was that the ministry in fact had done a great deal of work with cultural workers and the cultural industry sector, realizing that there's great potential for development in that sector, and there had in fact been a document that was produced. I had given the minister a series of questions: where was he expecting to go, and what was the department going to pursue with what was coming out of that document? I tabled in question period – and I did send over a personal copy for the minister – a media release from the Cultural Human Resources Council, that has now done a sort of part B to what in fact Alberta was looking at, and this was released on the 20th of January 2003 and includes a number of recommendations that they are looking at. So I'd like to take about 10 minutes and just talk about what I'm still seeing as issues for cultural workers and where I'm looking to the minister and his department to be providing either leadership or providing direct programming.

Let me say before I start into this that we know and can prove a number of times over that the creation of a job in the cultural sector is around $40,000. The creation of a full-time job in the manufacturing sector is about $20,000. So investment in the cultural sector to create jobs for cultural workers is a great investment and a great payback for the province.

Secondly, we have a fairly rich cultural industry here in Alberta, but we are struggling with things like succession planning. We're struggling with getting into managerial positions people with some years of service and experience and training or even book learning under their belts, and then the low pay, the hours, the lack of appreciation comes down on them, and they leave. So we manage to get people to a certain point, and then they're gone. We can't seem to offer them that additional professional development, that additional lifelong learning track, the mentorship that is going to help keep people in that sector.

Let me be clear here. I'm not expecting or looking to this minister to be providing funding for the arts. That's not what we're talking about. It is about recognizing that there's a particular group of people working in a sector here that really contribute to Alberta, but they have some unique needs. Frankly, it's not unlike the unique needs of, say, the agricultural sector. A lot of the same sort of prohibitions exist there but also, one would say, opportunities. So I'm not asking for handouts here, but I am asking for the minister to recognize and to help lay out some programming that is going to attract people to a sector and keep people in a sector that has tremendous payback to the community that it exists in.

So I found a couple of things going through the document Face of the Future: A Study of Human Resource Issues in Canada's Cultural Sector, the findings and recommendations document. This was prepared by Mercadex International Inc. on behalf of or presented for the Cultural Human Resources Council. In it they talk about the significant strengths that are exhibited by the cultural sector, and they note things like the diversity in people and the activities of the sector, the motivation and tenacity and competence and the passion of the workers in the sector. That's important because that motivation and passion carry people through a lot of stuff where I think in other sectors they'd just say: "That's it; I've had enough. I'm out of here. If there's no paycheque, I'm not going to come back in on Monday." That motivation and passion bring people back the next Monday in the cultural sector.

Part of what I'm interested in is the economic impact of the sector, and particularly here we're talking about the leverage effect for other sectors. I've always been very clear that the cultural sector itself is not an economic driver, but when you put the cultural sector into a given geographic location, they will create an enthusiasm, a vitality, a buzz, an energy that attracts people to that area. Then business is able to take advantage of that, and those businesses become the economic drivers of that area. So the cultural sector has a lot of leverage possibility to it, but I want to be clear that I never consider that they in themselves are an economic driver, because they don't generate that much money. But the money they do generate stays in the community. It doesn't leave. It's not sent to the parent company in the States or things that happen in other sectors.

This document also notes the cultural sector's links with other industrial sectors and the ability of the sector to stick, to maintain and even increase its activities under pretty adverse conditions. I'm just going to read a section out of here.

Creators, performers and cultural workers across all sub-sectors and disciplines are experiencing insecurity and instability in their employment and independent/contract work. The problem manifests [itself] in a variety of ways: the decline in available full-time and permanent jobs, the transitoriness of employment/engagement, the need to secure and balance multiple jobs to make a reasonable living, systemic barriers for the self-employed, the absence of a social safety net, and wholly inadequate remuneration.

So what the minister and I had been talking about last year were things like training programs and access to training programs. What we're looking at here is some of the difficulty of the working conditions like poor pay, heavy workloads, the lack of full-time work, overwork, high performance expectations despite insufficient training and support – so another area where this minister comes into play is that training section – and the human resource development, which this sector has never been involved in because they could never afford it and just didn't see themselves being able to take advantage of human resource theory and practice.

One of the other things I note is:

The cultural sector is a well-worn training ground that produces talented workers who, upon reaching a threshold skill level or a ceiling on their professional [development], leave the sector for opportunities elsewhere. The requirement to continually recruit and retrain workers is a huge drag on the already stretched financial and human resources of the cultural sector.

Later on it talks about "the natural successors [having] been eliminated over the last decade of sustained funding cuts," so we don't have any succession planning happening here. The last time I talked to someone and they said, "Oh, I'm retiring," I said, "Oh, okay. Good. Then what are you going to do about succession planning? Who have you got coming along?" And they just looked at me and said, "It's over. We're closing." So there went that succession planning. I mean, they were going to shut down, and there went all possibilities for the future. But it is one of the areas that we're not taking advantage of.

Upon his request I had sent a letter to the federal Minister of Human Resources Development pleading the case that a number of the labour market programs that were offered as part of the dual agreement between the feds and the province required eligibility for employment insurance in order to be able to qualify for participation in the program. It didn't mean that you had to be on unemployment insurance, but you had to qualify for it. Of course, cultural workers almost to every being do not because we don't fall into all of the criteria like choosing work hours, choosing a place to work. All the artists are considered self-employed, and in fact we are specifically precluded from either paying into or drawing from unemployment insurance as artists. Now, if you're also working as a waiter somewhere or if you're a telephone operator or whatever and paying in, well, fine, you may be able to draw down for that. Whatever the many different ways that artists choose to supplement their income, they may be able to draw that way, but they're not able to draw through their training and experience as artists. So I had written to the minister pointing out this problem.

Now, the minister wrote back to me finally, February 17, 2003, and I did send a copy on to the minister's office. In the last paragraph the minister notes:

Your points with regard to the training and professional development programs available to cultural workers are well taken. However, it must be stressed that the authority to refer persons to a course of study has been devolved to Alberta since the signing of our Labour Market Development Agreement in 1996. Under the terms of this Agreement, all moneys for employment programs are in fact turned over to the province, which sets its own conditions as to eligibility and participation.

So the very thing the minister sent me to lobby his federal counterpart for was in his hands.

So I come back to him now and say: where can we start to work with this? If in fact it is in the hands of the minister and his department staff, where can we start to go to offer some of the human resource planning and management that is needed, the capacity building in the sector to be able to retain our senior members and senior administrators, and also to get access to some of the other skill development programs that people in the cultural sector need? Now, in a lot of cases we're talking administrators, but in many cases we are talking other kinds of support staff and artists themselves.

I'm noting that I'm coming down to the end of my time here, so I'm going to move on to the last issue that I had raised with the minister, and that was the issue around discrimination on source of income. The question, if I can refresh the minister's memory, that I asked in this House a couple weeks ago, a month ago, before the break, was that there was discrimination based on source of income to determine the eligibility of using other income and examining it. For example, if people were receiving CPP disability, that was looked at differently by the department, and the eligibility requirements were different than if someone had in fact a private disability from, let's say, Great-West, even from the disability insurance that is available to members in this House or to other staff in the government.

If you had a private plan, I think the first $200 was knocked off, and the remaining $700 was dealt with at 25 percent. Well, that brought the person's eligibility down under the mark, and they were able to then be eligible to receive and did receive the AISH medical benefits, which is what the individuals need. But if they have CPP as their source of income, it's not deducted. The first $200 isn't lopped off, and the rest of it isn't discounted at 25 percent – I'm sorry; I can't remember what the exact method was that the department staff were using, but it's something like that – and as a result they don't come down. It doesn't bring them down below the line, and therefore they're not eligible for the AISH medical benefits, which is what they really need.

So we continue to have a discrimination here based on source of income, where their money is coming from: CPP disability versus a private plan. And it's all laid out on the minister's web site. You can go there. It says: if your income comes from the following seven places, bye, and if it comes from these other places, this is how we treat it. I think there's an issue here that could well be a Charter challenge, if someone chose to take it forward, because it is discrimination based on source of income, particularly where we have individuals in Alberta that are sent by the department to draw down CPP disability, and then when they return to the province and go, "Okay. I did that. All I need now is access to the AISH medical benefits," they're told: "Sorry. Out of luck. Bye." What can we do to address the particular problem, especially when their source of income is CPP disability? I don't think that we want to be discriminating against these people, but we are.

So those are the three issues I wanted to put before the minister, and thank you very much for his willingness to answer back to me. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In addressing the three items, I want to defer my answer on the AISH program evaluation. I want to deal more thoroughly with that and do it in writing.

On the area of cultural workers I think the hon. member is on to something here. I'm not sure what the actual numbers are, but I believe that even a tight definition of cultural activity probably would lead to well in excess of a hundred thousand workers here in the province of Alberta. I think that this is something, then, that we need to pay attention to. I know that she has raised it on a number of occasions, and perhaps we haven't responded to meet the satisfaction of some of the members here in the House or indeed perhaps some of the people that are involved or could be involved in the so-called cultural industry.

There have been a couple of things that have happened since a year ago when we were discussing the estimates. One of them was, admittedly, a social event, but there was a discussion regarding the economic drivers here in Alberta and thus the differences between Calgary and Edmonton. There was, surprisingly to me, a general agreement within this informal group that I was involved with but who were made up of recognizable industry people that the future of Edmonton from an economic development standpoint was in fact around the arts, that there is a huge infrastructure here in this city and there is a huge amount of interest on its festivals and all of the cultural activities not just within this province but actually throughout this nation, this continent, and indeed around the world.

So the articulation that was coming out that particular evening was that the business community in Edmonton needed to start paying better attention to what was happening within the cultural industry right here at their own doorstep and that in fact this was perhaps the economic and cultural future of this particular area. Now, whether or not this was perhaps an elaboration to some extent of what is actually taking place and could take place, nevertheless the interest was that here we had responsible people acknowledging and forecasting what could happen within this particular industry and within this particular region. That was the signal to me, then, and of course now to our department of some things that we need to be cognizant of and start to plan for.

I want to deal delicately with the suggestion by the hon. member that I may have tried to get her involved in a lobbying activity and that it went there and then came back to me. I have a lot of time and a lot of respect for the federal Minister of Human Resources Development Canada. She has a tremendous mandate, a range of responsibilities that far outstrip anything that I would certainly be involved in. To her credit I think she is a minister of the federal Crown that has understood and continues to understand where the provinces are coming from when we try to deal with our federal counterparts and we try to get involved in all of these sort of jurisdictional issues. She seems to be a minister that understands the term flexible federalism. Now, part of that flexible federalism has been that this minister has been very active in signing labour market development agreements. Of course, for those that might not be as up to date as others, basically it is the recognition by the federal authority that it is a provincial jurisdiction in terms of the education of workers. Therefore, because they want to participate in that particular area, we use the technique of labour market development agreements, and I believe that in large part these have worked very well, but we find that they are too restrictive.

I think that the hon. member in her comments hit on one of the points that is a particular sore point at the present time between provinces and the federal minister but particularly this provincial minister and the federal authority, and that is that it is very tightly wound to being employment insurance eligible. I agree with what the hon. member has talked about, that many people in this particular area just cannot meet that criteria. So what has happened is that there have been virtually millions of dollars across this country that were out there under planned labour market development agreements, but because in all jurisdictions we couldn't meet the employment insurance eligibility requirement, there have been many of those millions of dollars that have actually gone unused and have flowed back to the federal coffers.

Now, I don't want to be too sad about those kinds of things, because I'm first and foremost a fiscal conservative and there is only one taxpayer in this country and that taxpayer is trying to feed three levels of government. But once that tax has gone to Ottawa and is in the hands of the federal government, then I'm not too shy about trying to get those dollars back into Alberta and to do something with them. I think that maybe with the combined efforts of the members of this House we might be able to find an area where some of these previously lapsed . . . [interjections] Was it as good for you as it was for me? [interjections] Oh, is that going into Hansard?

We really have a situation here where all members might be able through letters and through discussions with various contacts that we all have with our federal partners to find a way, then, to loosen up these constraints, and it would seem in cultural activities that there's likely a compelling case that could be and should be made.

In any event, we are here discussing cultural workers in more detail than I think we ever have previously. Again, Hansard is picking up our discussions in this area plus we have department staff in the gallery who are hearing, then, the interest that the minister is displaying in this particular issue.

The third one, in terms of AISH benefits, I want to deal with in a more global fashion than just focusing on the source of income. The estimates, of course, indicate an increase in spending, and if one isn't careful, one might think that somehow there was an increase in benefits at this particular time, and, no, that is not the case.

When we were putting Bill 32 together in terms of the income and employment supports, even though the low-income review committee had recommended that we look at just one program that would include of course our supports for independence, would include our widows' pension, would include the skills development program, they also asked us to consider including the AISH program in that area, and through our internal processes that we go through as a government and as a government caucus, we have chosen not to do that at the particular time. So Bill 32 only covers the first three that I mentioned, and AISH will continue for the time being and maybe for time immemorial as a stand-alone program.

But as a stand-alone program it is not sustainable, and this is a prime concern that many people have certainly within this government and this caucus. It's a concern that I know opposition members have because of the nature of the questions that I've received on it, and also, of course, it is a concern for the general public as to whether or not people that need government assistance are truly getting the kind of service that they need. In particular, it is a real concern for someone that has been diagnosed, has been found to fit the criteria of severely handicapped so that they qualify for this assured income. I have to tell you that the dollars that you see in that area are there to pay for existing services, existing benefits because of the tremendous upward pressure we always see on costs within our health system, particularly as it relates to prescription drugs and of course, then, just the general growth that has occurred within the AISH program in terms of numbers.

Now, people are aware that I have been in contact and meeting on a regular basis with the stakeholders groups that are all involved, then, in and around the AISH program, and at some point in time, if not within this particular quarter certainly within the next quarter, sometime before the end of September, in my view we will have to have an in-the-room, sit-down meeting, all-cards-on-the-table kind of situation where they must help me determine how we are going to, one, achieve sustainability on this particular program. Secondly, of course, how can we ensure that the truly needy within that particular program are getting the income and getting the health and the other supports that they need?

I always worry when I get into anecdotal situations because there is the tyranny of the anecdote. We're all aware of it. One particular situation might not be, I guess, symbolic, then, of the whole situation. I do know that it's a favourite technique of critics of this government, in particular this department, you know, to broaden the mandate and come up with anecdotes, then, that would see that good work that we do day in and day out almost seem unreasonable and perhaps ridiculous. So we have to be very, very careful, hon. members, when any of us use anecdotes. I know I did in my opening remarks, but it was again trying to provide examples of actual situations that we do run into.

So, in that regard, we find even within the AISH program concerns that families have about their, if I can use this term, "grown children." They want to ensure that these grown children that need assistance – they are severely handicapped – are being looked after by someone, and of course they look to the government, then, in order to do that. We know – and again this is the anecdote – that they don't need the income, but they feel that they're obligated to accept that income because that ensures that their loved one is on that AISH program.

One of the early recommendations that's come back from some of the people that I've been able to talk to says, "You know, Clint" – that's what they say; can I say that? – "we don't really need the income, but we want the assurance that this government is going to be looking after them, and we want the assurance that they have that medical card." So you saw one of the things that we've done is to try to move forward on keeping people eligible for the medical card.

It hasn't reached the formality yet of a recommendation, but one of the suggestions is: why don't you look at splitting income and splitting the health benefit so that you can look at one or the other and don't have to automatically do both and when one stops, then the other automatically is lost? So I think there's something there. Like many suggestions, of course, we have to look at it, massage it, work it around a bit to see how we can deal with it, but it sounds like the makings at least of an attempt on this group's part to acknowledge some of the concerns that we as a government have over this program and again share our sincere interest in finding a way to provide the sustainability of AISH.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, again, thank you for the time you've allotted me.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Just a few quick clarifications to close off the exchange between myself and the minister. Again, I'm conscious that I'm taking time from my colleagues, and I appreciate their patience.

The minister has referred a number of times to what he finds in Bill 32, and I'm not questioning him on that because there will be time scheduled for debate on Bill 32 and I didn't want to take debate time away from the estimates and from the policy that goes along with the estimates. So that's why I haven't responded to or referred to Bill 32 at all thus far.

I'm interested to hear that even in a social setting the minister heard others talking about the importance of the cultural sector. I just want to tell him a little story, a true one. I participated as an observer in a cluster group sponsored by the EDE, Economic Development Edmonton. It was very interesting because in the beginning everybody talked about how important the cultural sector was and, oh, yes, we had to have that, and, yes, it was a driver, and blah-blah-blah, and, oh, yeah, it was going to be right up there. But as the group met over a series of times, over six months or more, by the time we got to the end, culture was gone. And when I said: excuse me; where did it go? "Oh, it's so important, but you know, we needed those roads for the truck routes, and we needed the technology and the telecommunications sector, and we needed the sales sector." It was really, really important, yeah, yeah, but it was off the table.

My point to the minister specifically for what his department offers: when we talk about capacity building for this sector, I'm glad to hear that he's now recognizing how important it is and in fact that it is part of an underpinning for other economic drivers in Alberta. The point I keep trying to make – and I'm obviously not making it very clearly – is that the infrastructure in the cultural sector is intellectual property. It is in the heads of the people. The physical infrastructure is sporadic and in varying degrees of usability. So we have facilities like the Citadel Theatre. Great, wonderful, terrific; wonderful to have it. We now will have a reno at the 50-year mark of the Jubilee auditorium, another facility that's part of the cultural infrastructure. Great, wonderful; glad to have it. But beyond that, you're dealing with people that are working out of, you know, unheated warehouses and garages and all kinds of other physical space which is pretty crappy frankly. So when we talk about trying to keep this sector alive, it's about nurturing and looking after the people because it's all in their heads, and when we lose people out of this sector, a lot of our infrastructure walks away.

I talk about institutional memory a lot and the loss of institutional memory, and it's priceless because this stuff is not written down. You know, who do you call if you are trying to figure out how to fly Peter Pan? That is not stuff that's written down. It's in somebody's head. You happen to call the Foy brothers; that's who does it in North America. That's the point I'm trying to make to this minister: when I talk about capacity building, I'm talking about support, training, mentoring programs, labour market development programs available for the individuals in the cultural sector. I hope that I've been clear this time.

Just as a final closing note and I guess a bit of a gentle prod: why are the minister's anecdotes excellent examples but my anecdotes are hyperbole? You know, I think I have a valid issue here, and I will continue to press the minister to address it. There are the two examples that I have brought before you. I'm not going to bring you one example; that's not fair. But when I start to see two examples, that's indicative to me in a fairly small market – I'm talking my own constituents – that there are more there. Now, I can try and find it as proof, but, I mean, how much time do you want me to spend in order to prove that there are enough people there to make it worth your while to work on it? I think the issue is: we have a discrimination factor here, probably inadvertent, that we need to deal with, and that's why I keep bringing this back before the minister.

Thanks for listening to me wrap up on a number of those points, and I'm now going to let my colleagues get on with it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed a pleasure to get to speak today on estimates. As well, I would like to start out by thanking the minister's department for being here today and certainly assisting with any questions that might require more research and more time than what can be answered here and as well to certainly let him know that we appreciate the demands that are put on the department by a booming economy and particularly in two of the three areas such as skills and workplaces.

Certainly, when we're talking of a budget that is in the neighbourhood of 5 percent of the entire budget, then we are talking about a considerable amount of money. In looking at estimates and particularly at skills and workplaces, we do have a situation in Alberta where there is a tremendous demand for skilled workers. Of course, because of this demand we also get a young and inexperienced workforce. There is a huge demand and a stress to meet deadlines, and certainly with a young, inexperienced workforce this does lead to safety issues.

Now, then, currently in the province I believe it's somewhere in the neighbourhood of 27,000 injured workers who could possibly get new hearings, and these of course are the long-term and contentious claims. Given that many of these have had to resort to AISH, welfare, CPP, EI and that in some cases their medical costs have not been borne by the Workers' Compensation Board but by Alberta health care, then when we look at the settlement of these claims, if it is indeed found that their claims were justified, that for whatever reason WCB should have been responsible for all these costs – and these were costs that in some cases, such as AISH or Alberta health care or supports for independence or welfare, have been the burden of the taxpayer – I'm wondering if the minister could let us know how these issues will be rectified as to who pays for costs that should have been borne by WCB but were paid by the taxpayer. Would this money be coming from present employers in the province, or would these benefits be paid out of some of the investments that WCB has?

Now, then, as well, earlier today I tabled a memorandum of judgment in the Court of Appeal of Alberta, and this was between Randy Wolfert, the Workers' Compensation Board, and Gene Mudry as the appellants and Thomas Shuchuk, the respondent. I think that it is a very timely memorandum in that certainly when we look at the possibility of 27,000 injured workers getting new hearings and that in this particular case – and I'll just quote from the paper from Mr. Justice Ritter.

(1) The appellants appeal a chambers decision in which the chambers judge held that the respondent was entitled to advance a claim against the appellants based on the tort of abuse of public office. They argue that the statement of claim should have been struck in its entirety or, in the alternative, that they have established a case for dismissal pursuant to the summary judgment rule.

Now, I'm certainly no lawyer and don't pretend to be, but point 12 in this particular memorandum indicated that the appeal which was put forward by Randy Wolfert, the Workers' Compensation Board, and Gene Mudry was dismissed. This certainly has absolutely huge implications when we look at the 27,000 new hearings that potentially could be overturned. If in fact it is found that there was an abuse of public office in the case of case managers or employees of the WCB, then who would be responsible for the costs of such claims? Would this be WCB, or would this in fact be the Alberta taxpayer? Part of my concern is from the fact that the Appeals Commission and the members of the board of directors aren't government appointed. So does the responsibility rest on WCB, or does it rest on the government of Alberta?

So those are a few questions I have for the minister at this particular stage. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Sure. Well, just to talk briefly about an item that's currently on our work list, the long-term contentious claims, when we released a status report some time ago on the recommendations of both the Doerksen and the Friedman reports, of course we had to deal with, then, the recommendation that had called for an independent tribunal to look at some old claims. If my memory serves me correctly, I believe that we indicated that this was under review. Now, it's been under review for quite a long time, and what we've been trying to do is find a way in which we could get the various stakeholders to come to some kind of an agreement – we knew it would never be unanimous, but some kind of an agreement – to deal with this particular area. It's very, very controversial – extremely controversial – because every MLA has cases within their files in their offices, and they've tried to bring these forward on behalf of constituents. Even myself; I'm no different. You know, we have a couple of situations where what actually occurred just doesn't sound right. So there's been a desire on the part of many people to see if somehow that couldn't be resolved in some manner.

On the other hand, you have people with experience that have the attitude, and I think justifiably so, that have said: look; there were good people making decisions that they thought were the right decisions under, of course, the rules that then existed at that particular time. Yes, we have come along, and we've changed some of those areas, but that's what progress is all about, that's what change is all about, and then you keep moving forward. You don't continually get into retroactivity or get into revisionist history. So that probably in a matter of a couple of minutes has shown the huge chasm that we as a department have been trying to build a bridge over.

Now, I had put together a task force. I asked them: if we were going to find a way to review some of these longtime claims, what would the things be that we should look for and what would the criteria be? Men and women with sincere hearts have tried their best and submitted a report. We made the report public as to what they thought, you know, a criteria might be. We've had discussions of: if this were to be set up, who would pay? I think there was a general agreement that of course in the administration of any kind of process to relook at these things, that would fall, then, on the department, on this ministry, and thus on the taxpayers of Alberta. But if there was a decision that was overturned – and I guess it's a one-way street when I think about; I'll get into that in a minute – to the benefit, then, of an injured worker, this would be the responsibility of the workers' compensation system and its accident fund to actually look after those particular costs.

What we have not dealt with to any great extent – and I can tell you that I do have some although not many employers that are wondering why we're not going ahead with this situation as well, because they feel that they have an appealable situation where a worker was deemed to have had an incident in the workplace leading to injury and to long-term benefits that was not correct, did not happen in the workplace, did not prevent the employee from ever working again either for themselves as an employer or for other employers. They, too, are waiting for an opportunity to have this case looked at once again. There's been very little if any discussion or suggestion as to: if that case was overturned, how does that wrong get righted, then, in terms of costs that were experienced in the past by way of assessments on a single employer or on an employer group? So there's a tangled little situation here that we can get into very quickly.

But, you know, one of the things that we have discovered throughout the analysis of this whole situation is that to some extent we've had the development of an urban myth in this area, and that is that all workers who have not been successful in their appeals in terms of WCB somehow have ended up on AISH or SFI. As a matter of fact, we looked at that. I don't think there's any question that the relations between certainly our ministry and this government generally and the WCB have improved over the last two to three years. We had actually received a level of co-operation where we felt confident to ask for a study with our officials and with WCB to see whether or not the allegation of AISH and SFI was in fact true.

Now, there were some limitations, of course, certainly in the passage of time, other limitations as well in terms of protection of privacy and freedom of information, but they were able to study a number of cases where they thought: well, there might be something here. And I don't have the numbers in front of me, so it might lead to a question in QP sometime – I mean, who knows? – but I believe that it was .04 percent of the investigated files or situations where there might have been some kind of a direct relationship. But, hon. members, at that kind of a percentage, I mean, this is not the kind of incident rate, then, where you're going to invest a huge number of dollars.

The thing that all of us have to understand is that workers' compensation, first of all, is not a government department. It's not a government program. Certainly, there is an act where this government is charged with the responsibility of overseeing the activities of workers' comp, but the understanding, then, amongst the general population has to be that workers' compensation is not a government department. These are not taxpayers' dollars that we are talking about. Workers' compensation, while a monopoly, is a beneficial monopoly that provides insurance, actually wage loss insurance to be more particular, but also, then, some rehabilitation and some other benefits as well to cover a worker should an incident happen at the workplace that creates a disruption and a separation from the workplace.

Now, as an insurance company surely all of us would know and understand that there isn't an insurance company in the world that would accept a hundred percent of the claims. So if you've had someone who applied for WCB and was not successful and ended up on SFI or on AISH, you can't necessarily just draw a line between the two dots. The fact that an overwhelming percentage of WCB claims are in fact accepted every year – and it's something in the order of 98 percent or something, you know. I guess the actual number from last year would be available, but they accept a tremendous number of their claims, and employers complain to me about that. They think that there's an inherent bias on the part of workers' compensation on behalf of the injured worker. Now, doesn't that sound surprising to MLAs in this House that have to of course deal with the injured worker whose claim wasn't accepted? We don't see the tens of thousands of WCB claimants that are successful each and every year.

So we have a number each year that are not accepted. They start to accumulate. The people try to go through the appeal system as best they can. We've tried – and I believe that we've been successful – helping with the appeals for the benefit of injured workers not only inside the WCB but, of course, as mentioned now, through one of the components of our ministry, which is the Appeals Commission.

In any event, hon. member, the use of the number of 27,000 injured workers who might have a justifiable grievance under the old system I think is far too high. Again, good people try to make good decisions. I can't for the life of me understand why it would be anywhere near, anywhere close to that kind of number. As a matter of fact, knowing the hon. member's sincere efforts on behalf of not only his constituents but on behalf of injured workers across the province, I am frankly surprised that he would use that kind of number because those numbers are so scary that in all likelihood it is meant to scare off anybody from actually taking a look at this area. In fact, the 27,000, if I'm not mistaken, is a number that's been used by employer groups to try to get me, the minister, not to venture, not to tread into this kind of territory, because they're saying: Mr. Minister, you simply have no understanding of what it is that you're trying to do. I don't believe that for a minute. I don't believe 27,000 for a minute. I don't believe 7,000 for a minute. I do believe that every MLA in this province has a sum that they would like to look at. Again, I think the exaggeration in terms of those numbers has been used by parties and by advocates without any kind of discrimination on what they were doing and what kind of game they were playing, and it has really been to the detriment of injured workers in this province.

Certainly, Bill 27 was an attempt to change some of the appeal systems that we are currently involved in inside of Alberta. Of course, we did provide within a section of that act that the minister may provide some kind of mechanism to look at those areas. You folks were in the House at the same time I was to hear the reaction of the injured workers in the gallery. I have to tell you that that was a very low moment in my political career because I've never had the employers on my side on this situation from day one, but I did think that to a large measure I had support from the injured workers. Well, they made it pretty clear that particular day that they weren't there either. So you want to talk about a lose/lose situation, then I think that's exactly what we're looking at here.

We have it under review. We still have time to move forward on this in some way in which to do something, but I'll tell you that the way this whole thing has unfolded, it's really shown the kind of acrimony that can get involved in systems when there's a lack of good evidence and a lack of, in some cases, sincerity. This thing has been used by people that have been carrying around WC baggage all their lives as a way to kick the hell out of the WCB system. I say again that those that have participated in that have not done a favour to the injured workers of this province, and they have not done a favour to the employers of this province, and they have not done a favour to the WCB system of Alberta, which is a beneficial monopoly and one of the best WCB systems that you're going to find operating in North America.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate, as usual, in the budget estimates for the Human Resources and Employment department. I listened with a great deal of interest to the minister talk about Bill 27, but I believe it was Bill 26, the WCB legislation, that had closure, and Bill 27 had to do with labour relations.

I don't share the hon. minister's view in regard to the WCB. I think, unfortunately, the passage of time is proving that Bill 26 was not an improvement of the adjudication process. I thought I would give it a chance, but with the calls that I'm getting to the constituency office and the length of time that it's taking for decisions to be made at the WCB, it's just not working out. But I will at this time tip my hat to the minister for going where others have refused to go, and that's at least trying.

Certainly, with the WCB, Mr. Chairman, we look at the compensation board premiums and we see that Alberta's are the second lowest in the country after Manitoba, and I understand that Manitoba has a rebate system for good employers. When you consider that our WCB premiums are the second lowest among the provinces and on average are slightly less – they're about $1.87, I believe; they're less than $2 on a hundred dollars of gross payroll – we are doing well.

But with a little bit of bad luck, I suppose you could say – and we have a high number of accidents – we would surpass Quebec, B.C., and Saskatchewan and maybe even New Brunswick or Ontario.

So we have to be diligent to keep accident rates down and, as we saw, keep premiums down. The hon. minister I think is on to some good ideas there. At the same time one cannot argue poverty and refuse to pay out the long-standing contentious claims. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry has so often reminded me, these are debts that we owe, not future costs. There are just too many people falling through the cracks.

Now, I would be curious if the minister could provide an answer before I go any further, Mr. Chairman, in regard to age discrimination for older workers; that is, those workers who are over 65 and still active in the workforce. As the population ages and more and more people are still active in the workforce after 65, are there any programs in the WCB to ensure that they are not discriminated against because of their age when they're injured on the work site?

In our constituency office I have a file where a gentleman is still injured, and WCB insists that this man can work at something. He can hardly get from the sofa to the fridge. He's crippled, and everyone but the WCB seems to recognize that, including his doctors. This gentleman is over 65, and I'm concerned that there's age discrimination going on here. I would prefer that the minister could have a look at not only workers under 65 but those over 65 because certainly there's going to come a time in this province where we're going to have incentives to keep workers active. I'll be one of them.

Now, we dealt with the cost of settlement for long-standing contentious claims a little earlier. I would like to move away from the WCB for a minute. Before I go, I would like to talk a little bit about my concerns – and they're not addressed in this budget – about the skyrocketing health care costs and the use of for-profit health providers. Are they responsible for those increases? I will give WCB this: they are quite straightforward with FOIP requests. There's room for improvement, as far I'm concerned, with openness and transparency, but they're a lot better off than a lot of respective departments in this government as far as being straightforward with FOIP. Some documents we have received show that the WCB's total health costs have ballooned 78 percent while its use of for-profit health care providers has been steadily increasing as well. Now, in 1997 the WCB's public health care expenditures comprised 26 percent of total health spending. In 2001 these expenditures comprised only 19.3 percent of total health spending. The WCB's total health spending grew, which is interesting to note, from $77 million in 1997 to $148 million in 2001.

Now, it seems that the WCB's increasing use of for-profit health care providers is driving up total costs. When we look and see the businesses in this province, how premium rates jumped an average of 27.3 percent in the past year due to rising health costs, and we are now looking at higher costs that may be related to the use of these expensive for-profit facilities, I would like to know where we're going to go with this in the future. It seems to me that premiums are going up, but where these workers are being treated is going up as well. I have a document – and I would certainly share it with the hon. minister – where an injured worker from Edmonton was sent to Calgary for a week to one of these private, for-profit outfits, and it was a $5,000 invoice for a week, and I don't think that included his accommodation. I could be wrong. But I was astonished at the cost of this. I think it merits checking out.

Certainly, there is another issue that I would like to commend the minister on because the minister has gone, Mr. Chairman, where others have failed to go – others have failed, and I'm disappointed in their failure – and that was to enforce and show a willingness to enforce the workplace health and safety laws and regulations in this province. This minister in the time that the hon. minister has been in this department has in my view on this matter made a significant positive improvement in workplace safety, and I think the improvements will continue to happen.

The minister admitted in question period the other day that there were 101 workers, either through auto accidents or occupational diseases or fatalities in the workplace, for the year 2002. The previous year I believe there were in the range of 118, maybe 120, but that is a significant drop, and I attribute that drop to this minister's willingness to enforce the laws that are under his command. Other ministers have failed to do that, but this minister did that, and we see the immediate results.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are other initiatives that have been implemented by this minister, and we will see how they work out. Certainly, his call centre. I would like an update on that call centre. I would also like to know how the minister is planning on advertising that call centre because I believe it was last year I reminded the minister that I was on a work site and I was astonished to find out that particularly the younger workers, which he is targeting – and that's a good idea – were completely unaware of his call centre. I don't know how we advertise that in some of the higher risk towards injury job categories, but surely something can be worked out so that they know that they can comfortably call that call centre up the hill here and get answers to their questions. I think that can be accomplished. There are a number of ways of doing it, and I'm not going to repeat them this afternoon, because I have suggested that earlier to the minister and his department. But this call centre is also a good idea, and perhaps it could be part of supervisors' training program. I'm sure this is already part of the apprenticeship programs in the province, to take a half an hour out of the curriculum and explain how the call centre works and explain how workplace safety regulations and laws work, who is responsible for what, and as workers leave SAIT or NAIT or wherever they are being trained, they will take that with them to the site.

We often talk in this province and it's been pointed out to me that we believe in a market economy, and I certainly do, but this government doesn't believe in the market forces as far as supply and demand of labour goes and workers and wages. When you have poor planning, as is obvious to this member, by this government, particularly in the health care professions and in a lot of the construction trades, where we have recognized that there is a shortage of workers but we have done very little to train the appropriate numbers, now because market forces are indicating that there is a shortage and as a shortage more employers are willing to pay top dollar to attract those workers, the government's answer to market forces is Bill 27, to restrict and limit what the market will bear for labour costs. Now, that is a philosophical contradiction of this government.

I know the minister is looking a little bit puzzled at that last statement, but I'm sorry. If market forces are going to apply, then they're going to apply to everyone. Why restrict and limit what people can get? Instead of doing that, I would have thought that the hon. minister and the other members of the government would have worked co-operatively with other provinces in Canada and resolved our labour shortages together. Perhaps it's time for this minister to get on a plane. I shouldn't say that too loudly, but someone from the department could get on a plane and get together with other department officials from across Canada and decide that we're going to train one group of RNs here in this province, and this province is going to become a centre of excellence in training, let's say, nurses to deal with neurology, and the universities in Saskatoon or Regina are going to train nurses to look after ICU patients or open-heart surgery patients. We could work at this together instead of graduates from the University of Alberta, the University of Saskatchewan, the University of New Brunswick or wherever going to the job fairs, driving the price up by competing with one another for that pool of labour instead of working together to resolve the issue on a national basis. Instead of pointing fingers at other jurisdictions, perhaps we should look at working together with them a little bit more. The same would apply for teachers, as well, and petroleum engineers.

Now, we look at Bill 27, and again another reason why not only this hon. member but many Albertans have difficulty with restricting and limiting what we can do with collective bargaining is that we look at the labour productivity from page 110 of the so-called Alberta Advantage. It states in here the annual average between 1998 and 2002, the dollars of real GDP per hour worked. "Albertans are the most productive workers in Canada, as measured by real GDP dollars." We are followed closely by our cousins in Saskatchewan, and after that Ontario ranks third. We're above the national average certainly in this province, so why would we accuse Alberta workers – and I've heard this not from that member, to be fair, Mr. Chairman, not from that member, certainly, but from other members in this Assembly that union workers are lazy and unproductive. When we look at that statistic, that just doesn't bear it out, that bar chart there.

On the same page we look at the labour record between 1998 and 2002, the person days lost due to disputes, and that is 10,000 person days worked, and with this bar chart Alberta is again the lowest in the entire country. The Canadian average is around eight days per 10,000, and in Alberta it's slightly above two. Now, I know there are those that will say: well, none of the workforce is unionized, and the majority of the public-sector workforce that is unionized doesn't have the right to strike, so that doesn't mean anything. But when you have a record like that, why do we need legislation such as Bill 27? That's puzzling, and many people have pointed that out to this member, Mr. Chairman.

Getting on to certainly other issues, Mr. Chairman, I'm very disappointed in this government and in this department and in this minister in the fact that only $20 has been made available to certain groups that receive SFI benefits. When you look at inflation as a result of energy deregulation and what that has done to the disposable income of that group of Albertans, 20 bucks a month is not enough. I heard before the budget from undetermined voices in this section of the House: "Wait. Be patient. Wait for the budget, and you will see a significant increase to AISH benefits and to SFI benefits." That has not happened, and those individuals deserve a wage increase or a benefit increase too. All of them. I'm sorry; many of those individuals through no fault of their own cannot find and keep gainful employment. We in this province can help them out.

Whenever I think of the cuts to those programs and the fact that there's been very, very, very little money put back into those programs – you look at the caseloads, and you see the reduction in caseloads – this is shameful. This is just shameful, Mr. Chairman, that a government would turn around. Now, in the last couple of years whenever we compare the horse racing industry to these individuals that need these benefits to live very modestly, sure, the horse racing industry this year got a $4 million increase, the same ironically as what these SFI people got, but the year before the horse racing industry went from roughly about $17 million to $33 million, and this is just shameful. Our priorities are wrong. [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

Mr. Dunford: Talk about a nose at the wire, I guess.

There were quite a number of things here, but is the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona going to speak? Later?

Dr. Pannu: Perhaps. Please go ahead.

Mr. Dunford: All right. Well, I'll try and keep this to about 10 minutes then.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, of course, has a long experience in the workforce, and he's quite right. We're probably going to need to put him back to work after he's 65 not here in the House but as a plumber and a pipe fitter. You know, we're still going to need . . . [interjection] No? Was it boilermaker? Yeah, okay. So he's right. As I stand here, I don't know of concerns about age discrimination, but, again, now that it's on the record, certainly we'll investigate and respond in writing as to our findings.

The member is absolutely right, though, about health costs. This is a huge issue for the WCB and then of course for employers that have to pay the assessment. The numbers that I saw about a year ago when they were discussing what the rates were going to have to be for the 2003 year: I remember seeing something of the order of a 90 percent increase in health care costs in, you know, the last – I don't know – three or four years, so it's a huge issue for them. The member also talked about the average assessment being $1.87, and he's right. What is very interesting is that even though we've had all kinds of angst and animosity about huge increases in WCB assessments, the actual rate in 2003 is less than it was in 1997. So what's the beef here?

Now, one thing that WCB has decided to do, which I support fully, is that from here on in – 2003 is the first year – the assessed rate is going to reflect the actual costs, then, of dealing with the incidents that have led to injury and fatality and the dislocation from the workplace and the costs of getting these folks back into the workplace. That's how it should be. This is an insurance system, and the rates ought to reflect what is actually happening. I think this is what makes WorkSafe Alberta such an important initiative. With an objective of a 40 percent reduction of incidents in the workplace that lead to injury or fatality, this has huge benefits not only just from the humanitarian side of it in the sense that 15,000 fewer Albertans are injured in a particular year, but let's just move ahead for a moment and talk about: if there's already a shortage of skilled labour, just think of taking another 15,000 out of the Alberta economy for short or long periods of time through injury. Just think what kind of an impact that has.

Let's go to the attainment, then, by the end of 2004 when we achieve that particular goal. What is this going to mean in terms of WCB assessment? It means a reduction of $200 million – $200 million – in assessment. To translate this into what would be the general assessed rate on a hundred-dollar payroll basis, well, it's pretty simple. Four million dollars of cost to WCB is one penny on the assessment, so we're looking at a 50-cent reduction in the general assessment across this province. Now, that's not only going to put us below Manitoba; it'll probably put us below Singapore, you know, where, I'm constantly being reminded, they have better safety records than we do. [interjection] Well, the whole concept of WorkSafe Alberta came about from a discussion I had with the Construction Owners Association of Alberta. They asked to see me. We knew from our annual report what our incident rate was, and we felt actually pretty good about it because we were meeting our objective. We were in the bottom third of the jurisdictions in Canada, and that's how we were willing to be measured. Well, they came in, and they looked me right in the eye and said: Mr. Minister, we want you to know that Alberta is a dangerous jurisdiction in which to operate.

After some flurry and some negativism and defensiveness on my part we finally decided: "Well, all right. Let's have a look at this." They assured me that they have operations in Alberta, they have operations in the Gulf coast, they have operations in the Middle East, they have operations in Singapore, and they do the statistics the same way around the world in all their operations, and Alberta then was a difficult place. Well, that was all we needed to take off our cloak of complacency that had been existing.

Mr. Smith: The cloak of complacency?

Mr. Dunford: The cloak of complacency. We took off the cloak of complacency in this province.

Mr. Smith: That's like the mantle of mediocrity.

Mr. Dunford: Absolutely.

Mr. Smith: The pants of pulchritude.

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Chairman, will you straighten this guy out? No. I know you can't, so we'll let it go.

Mr. Smith: The socks of sobriety.

Mr. Dunford: No. I like "cloak of complacency," hon. member, and I'm going with that.

In any event, that was the genesis of WorkSafe Alberta. That was the reason for setting the 40 percent reduction, because we wanted to forget about all the comparisons that we'd been making previously as far as Canada was concerned, and Alberta was going to lead the way in these reductions. We're calling upon the employees of this province. We're calling on the employers of the province, the private providers that educate and have safety programs. The WCB itself is funding a large part of it that we're involved in here with WorkSafe Alberta, and we're going forward with it.

Of course, part of that, then, has been a clearer definition of what the principles are that we act under here. Hon. members, we have five principles. The first one is education and the second one is education and the third one is education and the fourth one is education and the fifth one is enforcement. We want to send a clear message to all the employers and employees throughout this province that we will educate first but that we're no longer shy about enforcement.

We made the changes in Bill 26 last session to increase fines. Now we're providing on-the-spot fines as a pilot project within construction. You know, we've allowed judges now to go to alternative sentencing. We're doing what we can, and of course we did raise the maximum fine from $150,000 to $500,000 on a first offence. The courts of course have recognized this. They're taking this into account. We now have our own dedicated prosecutor that we fund through the Department of Justice, and we're moving forward in this area. So the call needs to go out that there's a new paradigm, that there's a new objective and motivation on the part of the government of Alberta, and that is that there will be fewer incidents in the workplace.

Now, hon. members might have noticed that I've yet to use the word "accident." I don't believe in it. Every one of us, especially the boys here in the Legislature – we all know how we dealt with our moms when we got into trouble.

An Hon. Member: Oh, not the towel.

Mr. Dunford: No, no, not the towel. You know: "It's not my fault. It was an accident." Is there a male in this House that hasn't used that? "It's not my fault. It's an accident."

Mr. Rathgeber: Still do.

Mr. Dunford: Yeah, still do. So you know what I mean.

There are no accidents anymore. There are incidents, and incident leads to responsibility. We all have our part to play in that area.

I'll need to get more information for the member on the call centre. I don't have up-to-date stats on the actual number of Albertans that are using that call centre. It is huge, but more importantly what it's done is relieved our inspectors of a huge amount of administrative work in the sense of trying to provide just general information, because now there are people that are operating those telephones. There's information on the Internet now that can provide all that, and it frees up our people to educate, educate, educate, educate, and of course enforce.

Moving from that area – and I'll wrap up so others can speak – I can't resist a comment about Bill 27 and what we're trying to do there. I want to repeat again in the estimates here, as I have in question period and as I have in public, that it has a very unique name for a bill: labour relations, bracket, health care restructuring, whatever it is, another bracket. I mean, it's a very unwieldy title for a bill, but the whole idea was to send a message to everyone and especially to the labour movement in Alberta that what we are talking about here is a specific situation. We're talking about a restructuring that is going on in terms of the regions and the realignment of the employer component, then, in employer/employee relationships. Bill 27 is simply a bridge to get from where we are now to where we're going to be, we believe, by September of 2004. Now, that date is important. The chairman of the Labour Relations Board is here in the gallery today, and he needs to hear what the time frame is that we're placing him under and that this will be one of the measurements, of course, that we'll be using in terms of our movement toward the goal.

Twenty dollars on the SFI on June 1, $15 a child in August: that is an amount that was deemed we could do with the particular estimates that we had to work with, but it transcends the dollars in terms of the significance because this is the first increase that we've had in this area now in 10 years. I hope that all folks noticed that these were for people not expected to work and for parents because they have children. If you are expected to work and you don't have a child, there is no $20 and there is of course by definition no $15 in August because you don't have children. But if you're expected to work, then we mean that: you're expected to work. The member talked about the shortage of skilled labour. There are jobs available, so we need to send a clear message to all Albertans that if you have the ability to work, then get out there and work and don't expect to rely on the government. I made the commitment at question period the other day. I'll review the minimum wage if that'll help. I don't think it's particularly relevant right now with the economy that we have because even the member talked about supply and demand, so probably the real starting rate in Alberta these days is well north of $6. I'm not sure just what the review would find, but in any event we will do that and always, always keep our philosophy clearly in front of us that we want to provide people with hand-ups rather than handouts and that you'll always, always be better off working that relying on a government.

Mr. Pham: Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasure today to join the debate on the budget of the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment.

First of all, let me put it on the record that I think that the minister who looks after this ministry is an excellent minister. He has tried very hard to improve the service provided not only to workers but also to low-income Albertans. For many of the critics maybe what he has done is not enough, but to me as a member of government I know that he has tried his best, and it's a lot easier to talk about things than to get things done.

Having said that, today I would like to focus my comments on two areas. The first one is the Workers' Compensation Board, and the other one is the program for severely handicapped people in Alberta. As many members of the House know, I have been a critic of the WCB for many years now. I believe that the Workers' Compensation Board has done an adequate job with many injured workers, but also at the same time the WCB has neglected a fairly large number of long-term injured workers. I have always hoped that the WCB will improve the service for the long-term injured workers. I have waited for many years, and I have seen some small improvement here and there, but overall the service WCB provides for this group of workers is still not very good.

A common practice, then, by the case manager is that after an injured worker has spent a year or a year and a half on the benefit roll, WCB will try to kick that person out of the benefits, and then the workers will have to try to climb back in again. That process is not easy. The fence is set very high, and for many of the injured workers the stress of the injury, the stress of the loss of income, and the stress of the family all compound together and make it almost impossible for them to prove their case. The WCB case managers most of the time are very articulate. They can formulate really well-written decisions, and they can always pick and choose the most beneficial medical decisions to defend their position. It is quite difficult for an average injured worker to fight against the system. I grant that there are also some people who try to abuse the WCB benefits, but by and large, you know, people who have spent a year or more on WCB benefits usually have significant injury, and for the WCB to have a pattern of kicking them off the benefit roll really disturbs me.

I have many cases in my office, but I had a really interesting case that I brought to the minister's attention. When the worker got out of the rehabilitation program from Columbia Rehab centre, on the medical discharge information it was stated that this injured worker cannot sit for more than six minutes, cannot stand for more than one minute, cannot walk for more than one minute. Throughout the 14 months that I worked with the WCB on this case, from the case manager level to the supervisor to the CEO of WCB, all of whom are very reasonable people, intellectual people, and extremely capable, all of them seemed to be of the same mind-set that somehow if they reverse this decision, if they admitted a commonsense thing, that a person who cannot stand for more than one minute cannot return to work, the world will cease to exist, everybody will climb on the WCB benefit roll, and it will cost the WCB a huge amount of money.

The cost argument and the fear that it will cost the WCB a significant amount of money is being used again and again and again, not only in this case but also when it comes to dealing with all of the long-term contentious claims. This really intrigues me because on one hand the WCB claims that they want to do the right thing. On the other hand, they say that they can't do these things because it will cost them so much money. If it is true that what we want them to do for the long-term contentious claims will cost them a lot of money, that means that there are many, many cases out there where the long-term injured worker was treated improperly in the first place. If that is the case, then is it important to do the right thing? Is it important to do what is just, or is it important for the WCB to worry about the bottom line and just ignore these people?

I, like the minister, do not think the cost is very high. I think that the number of long-term contentious claims that need to be reviewed and dealt with is relatively low. But this guy has a funny situation because in this case you have both the advocate for injured workers and the WCB seeming to sing from the same song sheet. The WCB used the argument that there are many people in this category, and therefore they reject doing it because of the cost.

Of course, the WCB is a very, very powerful organization. Every time that they talk about the cost, it excites the employers who have to pay the bill. The employers get on the phone and start a letter-writing campaign, and many of us as elected officials listen, and we begin to second-guess whether it is the right thing to do or not.

I still remember that last year during the introduction of Bill 26, about the WCB, I had the pleasure of exchanging e-mail with some of the business leaders in Calgary. In fact, I got some very nasty e-mail. Some of them went as far as threatening me that they would do everything they could in their power to make sure that I don't get re-elected again. Mr. Chairman, I have heard that threat many times before, and it's kind of interesting that it came from the people that I didn't expect to hear it from. But life goes on, because as elected officials we try to do what we think is right and what we think is best for Albertans.

Coming back to the case that I mentioned earlier, after 14 months WCB came up with a new medical report saying that my constituent's condition was not as bad as they first said it was. In fact, he has a limitation of 10 minutes walking, 10 minutes standing, and 60 minutes sitting. The irony is not in the new condition. The irony is that given their belief that the limitation was one minute standing, one minute walking, and six minutes sitting, they still reached that conclusion that he was able and fit to return to work. That was the irony of it. You know, under that restriction the case manager, the Claims Services Review Committee, the CEO of WCB say that that poor man was able to return to work, and, Mr. Chairman, if that logic applied to every case, then I wonder: is there anybody that the WCB thinks is not capable of returning to work?

A case like that really makes people like me feel that there has to be a better accountability framework in the system, because today I really feel sorry for the minister every time when I . . .

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 15, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/15

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Executive Council

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to this? The hon. Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you. Mr. Chairman and hon. members, I'm pleased to appear before this committee to discuss the Executive Council 2003-2006 business plan. Programs under the Ministry of the Executive Council include the office of the Premier, Executive Council, and the Public Affairs Bureau.

I'd like to begin my remarks this evening with a brief overview of the programs covered under Executive Council as well as its goals and plans for the coming year. Executive Council provides support to cabinet and its committees such as the standing policy committees. It also includes my office here in Edmonton and the southern Alberta office in Calgary as well as my deputy minister's office. Another program under Executive Council is support for policy coordination, business, and strategic long-term planning for the government as a whole. Staff in this area will continue working to ensure that ministers across government are working together effectively following a variety of cabinet processes and that the needs and priorities of Albertans are reflected in the government's long-term strategic plans.

Another area that falls under Executive Council is the protocol office, which looks after provincial government ceremonial events and visits from senior international dignitaries. Yesterday, for instance, we had the high commissioner for India and the Canadian ambassador to Germany visiting the Legislature. In addition to performing those duties, the office also continues to provide protocol advice to government offices, community groups, the private sector, and individual Albertans who may have questions about protocol requirements for their special events.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the Executive Council provides administrative support to the office of the Lieutenant Governor and the Alberta Order of Excellence Council, for which the Lieutenant Governor serves as chancellor. Those administrative support services will continue to be provided. I'd like to also add that we're all looking forward to having Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor healthy and back on the job as soon as possible, and I'm sure that all members of this committee join us in wishing her a full and speedy recovery.

Mr. Chairman, I'd now like to turn to an overview of the projected spending for Executive Council for 2003-2004. Spending for Executive Council is forecast to be $18 million, up roughly $1 million or 6 percent from 2002-2003 levels. I should also add that the budget for Executive Council and the Public Affairs Bureau has been virtually unchanged for the past 10 years. During these past 10 years Alberta's population has grown 18 percent, and we've seen the development of a whole new area of on-line communications thanks to the Internet. So this year's modest 6 percent increase will be divided between a number of initiatives to improve information access for Albertans, and I'll detail those programs for committee members shortly.

Another part of the increase will go to salary increases for bureau and Executive Council staff. These increases are being seen in all ministry budgets and are in line with increases generally given to all public service employees. Members may note that the total full-time employees for the Public Affairs Bureau is forecast to increase by four, for a total of 131 full-time equivalents in 2003-2004. These additional staff members will ensure that key information access points such as Alberta Connects and the Service Alberta call centre, formerly known as the RITE centre, are adequately staffed to meet the growing demands of public users.

Before I turn to the Public Affairs Bureau's business and their business plan goals, I'd like to also draw members' attention to a change in forecast revenue for the bureau through the Queen's Printer bookstore. Revenues are expected to decrease to $1.2 million this fiscal year. That's down from $2 million last year, and one of the main reasons for the drop is that we're now past the bulk of sales for the Revised Statutes of Alberta. This was a major project that I think went on about seven years for the Alberta legal community that generated increased revenues. Now with the project completed, revenues are returning to normal levels.

Members should also note that forecast revenues for future years are lower due to an increased availability of free legislation through the Queen's Printer's Internet site. Again, the Internet has its advantages, but it has its disadvantages relative to our ability to generate revenue. The Queen's Printer is also noting a trend among legal offices to simply order individual pieces of legislation through the web site as needed rather than ordering those large volumes of print copies. The Queen's Printer staff will continue to adapt products and formats to ensure that the legal community receives the legislative resources it needs in the most convenient and most cost-effective format possible.

Mr. Chairman, I'd now like to talk about some of the goals and strategies listed in the 2003-2006 business plan for the Alberta Public Affairs Bureau. Sometimes people who work in the Public Affairs Bureau are simplistically dismissed as spin doctors. That's partially because many people are either politically inclined and want to characterize them that way or because many people simply aren't aware of the many different kinds of jobs that PAB staff do. These are jobs that indeed are important to all Albertans. I'll give you one example. Some of our communications people deal with as many as 35 media calls per day. Those media calls don't come from the so-called legislative press gallery. They come from media throughout the province, from rural media to inquiries from national media, and they want to get correct, up-to-date responses to those inquiries. That's essential so that media are reporting the facts accurately on government initiatives and programs.

But there's much more to the work of communications staff than media inquiries. Working hand in hand with ministers and ministry staff, communications staff in all departments are substantially involved in helping Albertans get important and helpful information that they need to conduct their day-to-day business. Communications staff in Seniors, for example, work hard to keep seniors informed about programs to help them. That's an entirely exclusive constituency, Seniors and information for seniors, a huge job in itself.

In Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, Mr. Chairman, communications staff provided essential support in publicizing farm aid programs, last year, for instance, during the drought, and indeed there's a tremendous amount to communicate in agriculture. I can tell you that when I attempt to learn about the various agricultural programs, my eyes start to glaze over. There's just a tremendous amount of information to be communicated about agricultural programs.

In Children's Services I'll give you another very good example. Communications staff were directly involved in organizing and hosting the annual Great Kids awards. This is a program, Mr. Chairman, that honours young people who make outstanding contributions to their communities.

In Transportation we hear the ads and read the results of the press releases on a daily basis. Communications staff work hard to promote highway safety. It's a day-to-day issue. In Sustainable Resource Development communications staff are at the front lines when Albertans need to know about forest fire activity. Indeed, they're right there with the forest firefighters.

In Learning communications staff assist with the promotion of available scholarship programs and other financial aid, to name just a few of the things that are dealt with under Learning. In Government Services communications staff help out to promote and raise awareness of consumer protection laws and rights. In Environment communications staff are a vital part of the work Environment does to promote energy conservation in Alberta and to tell Albertans about all of the programs that are carried out under the Department of Environment. So these are just a few examples of the value and expertise that the people of the Public Affairs Bureau bring to the job of communicating with Albertans.

The three core businesses for the bureau include helping government ministries communicate with Albertans, providing Albertans with two-way access to government, and publishing and selling Alberta's laws and other materials. Under core business one, an initiative that will receive new funding is the creation of a corporate communication strategy for the government. This strategy will ensure that public information programs are co-ordinated across government and that Albertans are getting the information they need about the programs and services that affect them. The initiative includes efforts to ensure that government communications reach diverse Alberta audiences such as youth, new immigrants, multicultural communities, persons with disabilities, and rural Albertans.

The initiative also involves a cost-effective and co-ordinated advertising plan to ensure that Albertans know how to access information about important government initiatives, programs, and services. In conjunction with this initiative bureau staff will also begin work to revise the corporate visual identity for the government, and this will be the first update for the visual signature in over 30 years. Don't ask me what that signature is going to look like at this particular time, because they're still working on it, and God forbid that I should be involved. Thirty years. It's maybe time for a change. The current plan, of course, is to have the updated signature ready to coincide with the 2005 centennial year.

So when you look at the very wide range of communications programs that take place across government every year, it's easy to understand the need for ongoing improvements to communications co-ordination.

Mr. Chairman, the allotted time for my portion of this debate doesn't allow me to list all of the areas covered by government communications activities, but I can tell you that they cover virtually every Alberta government program and service offered to the public including health care; Alberta's learning system; support programs for farmers; services for children and families; economic and fiscal updates; infrastructure, roads, and capital spending; crime and safe communities; seniors programs; workplace safety; parks and sustainable resources; and security issues and emergency preparedness. While the content of programs and services being communicated may vary, the goal of the communications is always the same, and that goal is to ensure that Albertans can quickly and easily access the information they need about those government programs and services that matter most to them, whatever they may be.

That's why another portion of this year's funding increase will go to ensure that key information access points are able to keep pace with growing public usage. For example, dollars will go to help improve services offered to Albertans through the toll-free Service Alberta centre, as I mentioned earlier, formerly known as the RITE centre, and the toll-free phone and e-mail services through Alberta Connects. While members of the committee may be familiar with Alberta Connects, Service Alberta, formerly the RITE service, will be a new term. In fact, the RITE telephone centre has been renamed since this committee last met, and members may know that Service Alberta is a combination now of telephone and on-line information resources designed to answer Albertans' questions about the government programs they use most often. The former RITE telephone centre is offering Albertans the same high-quality service under its new name. We know that the service is popular because the Service Alberta operators handle approximately 1.1 million calls each year. Another 5.4 million callers use the direct-dial option to complete their calls. So this gives you some indication as to the number of inquiries and the number of people who are phoning in to find out about government programs and services.

The Alberta Connects service is also growing. Last year it received over 20,000 calls and 17,000 e-mail requests for information on a number of initiatives including farm drought assistance, the heritage fund survey, climate change public consultation, and the new Traffic Safety Act. Work will begin this year to increase the speed and efficiency of both the Service Alberta call centre and Alberta Connects so that Albertans can find the information they need even faster. Efforts will also begin to increase public awareness of these valuable information resources.

Increased funding will also be used to improve the Alberta government home page. This time last year I remarked to this committee that Internet usage in Alberta was growing rapidly, and I think it's safe to say that the trend shows no sign of slowing down. The Internet has become an integral part of any public communications initiative. Members might be further interested to know that hits to the Alberta government home page have almost doubled from a year ago to more than 12 million in 2002-2003. The government web site is an important source of news and information for Albertans and allows them to respond and ask questions of their government. The site has played a central role in addressing the government's implementation of health reform, recommendations and communications around the G-8 summit in Kananaskis last summer, and of course our position on the Kyoto protocol last fall. So all of these statistics underscore the importance of continued efforts to make sure that the government home page provides the information resources Albertans increasingly expect to find.

Work will continue to make sure that the home page meets public needs. Initiatives this year will include looking at ways to make it easier for the visually impaired to access the page. A facility will also be added to the government home page that provides consolidated listings of public consultations taking place across the province so that Albertans can learn about and participate in the various consultation opportunities.

The Internet is also playing a role in communications planning for the Queen's Printer bookstore, which is the third and final bureau core business I'd like to discuss today. As I mentioned earlier, Albertans are making increased use of free legislation materials through the Queen's Printer web site. Queen's Printer staff will continue their efforts to improve service available through the Queen's Printer web site. This includes the initial steps to publish the Alberta Gazette free and on-line. This will not only increase free public access to information; it will also reduce administrative and print expenses for the government.

So, Mr. Chairman, that concludes my introductory remarks on Executive Council's business plans for 2003 through 2006. Thank you.

The Chair: Before recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, I'd ask the committee if we could have your consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

8:20head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly the 9th Hermitage Scout group. They're from my constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and they are here to tour the building and to observe the sitting this evening. They lucked out because the Premier is here with us this evening, so it is quite an honour for them to be here. The group consists of eight group leaders, and they are James van Lieshout, Teresa Black, Brett Symington, Lori Symington, Brent Galipeau, James Toupin, Lisa Wickman, and Steffni Ault. There are also some helpers, Stacie Reinhart and James Galipeau, as well as 14 Scouts and Cubs. They are seated in the visitors' gallery, and I'd like them to rise at this time and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to rise this evening and introduce to you two constituents of mine Mr. Brock Comartin and C. J. Stav. Brock is one of those great Albertans who is very generous with his time as a volunteer. At this time he's volunteering as a Big Brother, and his little brother is C. J. Stav. Would Brock and C. J. please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to participate once again this year in the budget debate on Executive Council. I'd like to thank the Premier for his opening speech and would like to add the Official Opposition's wishes for a speedy recovery for the Lieutenant Governor, as the Premier stated earlier in his comments.

Interestingly enough, in his opening comments the Premier talked about people sometimes viewing the Public Affairs Bureau in simplistic terms, and I would like to reassure the Premier, the chairman, and all of the staff from the Public Affairs Bureau that we never underestimate them. There is nothing simple about being a spin doctor for this government; I'll tell you that. Like I said last year, if we could just have the amount of people and these exact people who are here tonight for one month, Mr. Premier, you'd be in trouble. I'll tell you that much. Just for one month is all we need them, never mind all of the rest of the people in that staff.

Mr. Klein: I'm going to hold you to that.

Ms Carlson: Absolutely. Loan them to me for just 30 days. That's all it would take, and we'd see some significant changes. They're good. They're going to make us look really good; I'll tell you that much. Look at what a great job they've done over here. Look what they had to work with. I know who to trust in this government, and it's the public servants. As often as the Premier says, "Trust me," it's them I trust. That's where my money goes. They do a great job.

The Provincial Treasurer doesn't like those comments, but it's very true. They do an amazing job. Just take a look at what they did with this latest advertising campaign about the budget, Mr. Chairman. We see ads about something that isn't really talked about in the budget at all, and that's the paying down of the debt. We see fancy charts, no graphs. Graphs were pretty good because they represented all the spending, and now we see charts in there that take some poetic licence with scale. They're interesting to look at and a very good example of what this Public Affairs Bureau can do. But I don't want to talk about the Public Affairs Bureau too long, Mr. Chairman, because I know that my colleague for Edmonton-Riverview is chomping at the bit to get into that particular topic.

What I would like to do for about approximately the first half hour this evening or at least 20 minutes of it is focus on the Premier's talk about Executive Council's role in policy co-ordination and strategic planning. I would like to ask him some questions about parliamentary reform and fiscal management systems that we don't see this government going in the direction of. We certainly would like to see what his comments are in terms of why this government doesn't put them into their strategic planning process. We think that one of the biggest problems with the system is the system itself and that with a little democratic renewal we could see some way better legislation and perhaps some better planning processes put in in the long run on a strategic basis and start to build more trust in the electorate for politicians, for politics, and for the system.

The first one I'd like to talk about is free votes. We had a little taste of that last night and today in question period, and we saw a little bit of the Government House Leader trying to throw his weight around, but I would like to have the Premier's opinion on free votes in general, about initiating them to a greater degree. Not on money bills, because I understand that the government needs to have some solidarity around budget issues, but most of the other legislation that hits this Assembly, particularly with this big of a majority of government members, would I think face some healthy tests and healthy review if we had a freer process in the Assembly. I know that the Premier talked today in his media availability about five minutes from each member in this Assembly on most subjects being too much time, but it is important, I think, for members of the public and members of the opposition to have some understanding of how the decisions were made for bills being brought in and not only what cabinet thinks of them but also what members who support the government's position who are not in cabinet think about it, in five minutes if that's what you want to allow.

So a random selection, maybe two or three people, five minutes each, explaining how the government got to their decisions and their position in an open and accountable manner and then allowing for more free votes within the system. It doesn't matter now when you've got such a big majority, but it could be helpful to your members in the long run. You could never face the challenge on the doors from us or any other opposition to talk about caucus whips and party solidarity and party discipline. To be able to say that we have lots of free votes in this Assembly on key, critical issues I think wouldn't be a bad idea. So if the Premier for a few moments could tell us what he thinks about that.

Mr. Klein: Well, the question, Mr. Chairman, was relative to free votes, which has absolutely nothing to do with my budget, but I guess it has something to do with politics and the way government conducts itself. I would remind the hon. member that there was a free vote not so long ago.

An Hon. Member: Two years ago.

Mr. Klein: Two years ago? Only a few days ago, and that free vote was a vote on the firefighters' bill, a private member's bill which was passed by this Legislature and a good example of a free vote on a bill that turned out to be a productive and worthwhile bill and an exercise that was a good exercise. I'm glad that the opposition members voted freely along with government members in support of that particular bill.

Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member is talking about the resolution relative to the Electoral Boundaries Commission, I will explain what I explained in question period today, that contrary to the statement that was made by that hon. member, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, I do not run an autocratic or dictatorial caucus. That's not my style. Basically, when we sit down as a government to discuss an issue, a difficult issue, we say: okay; what is the consensus of caucus? On this particular issue not everyone was pleased, but we were given advice, good advice, that we would likely not get anything better by convening another commission to conduct another electoral boundaries review. Some members, however, are adamant in their opposition to this, and that's fair enough, and we said: feel free, then, to vote according to your conscience and according to the wishes of your constituents. That indeed is going to be done and was done relative to the resolution and I suspect will be done relative to the legislation when it's introduced and finally debated.

So, Mr. Chairman, free votes are something that we condone and we encourage if the situation is right and if there's a caucus consensus that there ought to be a free vote. I don't tell caucus. I don't tell these members, "Well, we're going to have a free vote on this" or "Damn it, we're going to ram this through. This is a government bill, and you're going to vote for this or else." That's not the way we operate. We operate freely. I don't know how, as I said before, the Liberal caucus operates, nor do I want to know. I don't want to be a fly on the wall relative to the Liberal caucus, but I can tell you that I have known of some leaders of the Liberal Party who have said: you vote this way or you're out of here. Right. I get that from former members of the Liberal party, and that's: it's either my way or the highway, and you vote my way or you get out of here. Well, that's not the way I operate. Maybe it's the way they do, but it's not the way I operate.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to thank the Premier for his comments. Of course, we expect all private members' bills to be free votes. My comments were more general in relation to government bills, but we certainly got his political answer for this evening. I would like to remind the Premier that he's the one who told me – and it's listed in his documents – that this department deals with policy co-ordination, business, and strategic long-term planning. So democratic renewal and long-term planning and strategic directions are the context within which I'm asking these questions. I'm not asking them specific to any one particular instance in the near future or the near past but in general in terms of looking at where this government is headed for a strategic direction in the future.

My next question is on MLA working committees. We've talked for a long time in this Assembly about improving the system by having all-party committees, and I know that there is at least a little support for this concept on the other side of the House here. We think that all-party . . . [interjection] Well, perhaps it is only one or two people who occasionally have a fleeting thought that it might work, but I think that there is some evidence to indicate that all-party committees have not been unsuccessful in this House in the past. I know that over the past 10 years I've sat on a few of them. I don't think Public Accounts works very well at all, but I think the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee has worked very well, and I think that that's a committee where you can see that on occasion opposition members bring something to the table in terms of new ideas, in terms of different perspectives on looking at things, in terms of ways to work co-operatively.

Now, I don't think any minister or committee chair in that committee has ever been sandbagged by an Official Opposition member while I've been here. We have tried to work co-operatively. We know out front that we're not going to win any votes, but we also know that if we work in a co-operative fashion, we can have some say in what happens, that we can have some opinions brought to the table that might not otherwise be heard by government, and that is a healthy way to run a government. It just makes you guys better. It makes you stronger in the long run and gives the people a better government.

So we are strongly in support of MLA working committees that would be all-party committees because we think that they would help with accuracy and efficiency of government programs. It would also speed up some of the discussions that we have in the Assembly. If you share the information with all members, members agree on what the contentious issues are and set those aside for dealing with in the House, work through some of the smaller issues, you get a better piece of legislation and you get better ideas, and there's nothing wrong with doing that, we think.

A lot of people think that Official Opposition members have access to detailed background on bills and legislation coming forward in this House. That isn't the case. If we work with a co-operative minister, we get briefings on bills. On private members' bills often the members will give us briefings, but otherwise we hardly get any information at all. In fact, members of the general public often have greater access to information than we do. If we're informed about the issues, it makes the debate more relevant, more important, and certainly more interesting. So we think that that would be a very good idea. We think that this strengthens the role of MLAs in general and certainly think that it would be a good idea.

Perhaps, Mr. Premier, you would think about looking at it in terms of one standing policy committee. Add one or two opposition members, and see what happens. Try it for one session. What would be the harm in that? If we see better legislation, if we see more streamlining, if we see more co-operation, if we see up front the setting aside of the contentious issues for debate in here, I think we're going to see a better working government. So if we could have your comments on that.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member brings up a very interesting comment. Again, this has absolutely nothing to do with my budget, nor does it have anything to do with the business plan of Executive Council or the Public Affairs Bureau. Again, it has something to do with the traditions of the Legislature, of parliamentary tradition.

I'm not trying to inflate the importance of government, but the simple fact is that under the system we have, people elect individuals who belong to a particular party. If those individuals have more than the individuals who belong to another party, then they form the government and they in turn are charged with developing policy and delivering programs and services. That is the parliamentary tradition. You have the government, and you have the opposition. The government is charged with developing policy, and part of that policy development includes the standing policy committees, committees that go through in detail issues surrounding a particular proposal or a particular piece of legislation or regulation or program that might be proposed by an MLA or a special interest group or indeed just an individual to really vet in a responsible way the pros and the cons of a particular program, service, policy, or regulation and bring recommendations to cabinet. That is the role of government. That's why they were elected to government and not to the opposition, so that they could develop policy, and that is consistent with the traditions of parliament.

Now, if the opposition wants to amend and reshape the way the parliamentary system works not only in this province but in Canada, then I would suggest that they go about it another way. There are various parliamentary conferences, I understand, to which members of the opposition are invited. Perhaps they can stand up and say: we need a change in the parliamentary system in Canada. Tell that to the Prime Minister. Start right there at the top, you know, and change the parliamentary system in Ottawa. You can start by promoting an elected Senate. You know, that would be a good step. If you want to change the parliamentary system here, then I would suggest that you use the proper and appropriate forum to do that and not this Legislature, particularly not the business plan of Executive Council.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My questions are relating to the budget specifically and the increase in the budget numbers. I'm looking here at last year's set of business plans, Budget 2002 business plans, and on page 155 it actually lists expenditures for the last few years and targets for the next couple of years. The target for ministry expense for the combination of the Executive Council and the Public Affairs Bureau in 2002 for the 2003-04 year was just a hair under $15 million, $14,994,000. What we're seeing here in a budget proposal – and the Premier can correct me if I've made a mistake here – is that rather than coming anywhere close to that target, say $15 million, we're just a hair over $18 million, which is, well, a substantial overshooting of the target. I'd say about a 20 percent overshooting of the target in one year if I'm doing the math correctly in my head. I'm wondering if the Premier has any comments on why the target for this year that was set out last year is being overshot by such a large amount of money.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, I'm on page 155. We see the office of the Premier and Executive Council. Maybe we're reading from different documents, but I don't see those target dates. I see targets for 2004-2005 of $18,035,000, '05-06 for $18,035,000.

Dr. Taft: I'll stand up and review it again.

Mr. Klein: I'll sit down.

Dr. Taft: Okay. The whole point, I assume, of a multiyear business plan is to look ahead the next couple of years and make some workable targets. The target set last year – and I could send this over by page if it would help – for 2003-04 was $14.994 million. We'll say $15 million. So last year we were saying: okay; looking ahead to 2003-04, we would spend combined $15 million. Instead, what we're having here is a proposal to spend 20 percent more than that, which is $18 million. In other words, we really overshot the business plan as laid out last year, and I'm wondering – maybe if he can't explain it now, I'll refer that to his staff.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, the problem is that I have before me the business plan going from 2003 to 2006 and this year's budget. You know, I don't have last year's budget in front of me.

I don't have the information in front of me, but my officials have sent down some information, Mr. Chairman, with the explanation that there is a $2 million comparable transfer from Health and Wellness for the Alberta Connects program. This is not new money or an increase. It is simply funds transferred from another department.

When the Alberta Connects program started three years ago, the funding was in Health because the focus of the program was on health communications. Since then, the focus has expanded to incorporate cross-government communication initiatives and issues, so it makes sense to transfer those dollars to the Public Affairs Bureau. Now, not having the breakdown – that is, the numbered information – before me, I would have to accept that as a logical explanation for the $2 million difference.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. There's still a million dollars missing in that explanation, but perhaps they can account for it in subsequent notes. [interjection] Sure. Thank you.

I do need to note that the actual expenditures of the Executive Council and Public Affairs Bureau in 2000-2001 were $13.75 million. We're now up to $18 million. So it is a pretty rapid growth over three years. Any explanation of that would be helpful.

Now a handful of other specific questions. At some point in follow-up to this debate here this evening could the Premier please provide some details on the classifications and job categories of the 130 or 135 FTEs of the Public Affairs Bureau? I don't know how many people that would total, maybe 175, 200, whatever. It would be interesting to know how many are directors and how many are this and how many are that.

The cost of a new visual signature is going to undoubtedly come up for some debate. I'm sure that the Public Affairs people have already anticipated that. These kinds of procedures, if they're done the way a major corporation would do them – and I suspect they will be here – are multimillion dollar undertakings. There's the whole business of developing and testing a new visual signature and then the very substantial expense of implementing a new visual signature. So I'm wondering if there is a budget allocated for developing and implementing the new visual signature.

Mr. Klein: Interesting. I don't know, Mr. Chairman, if there is a specific budget allocated for the development of the visual signature or whether this is work being done collectively or by a few assigned within the department to do this. I will attempt to get that information as to whether there is a budget specifically assigned to this.

Relative to the other question, Mr. Chairman, I'd be very happy to provide the breakdown relative to both the Public Affairs Bureau and the Executive Council. The full-time equivalents for Executive Council in 2003-04 total 181. The office of the Premier's full-time equivalent staffing for 2003-04 totals 47, and I'd be glad to list those staff if the hon. member so wishes. The office of the Lieutenant Governor includes three administrative support staff. With respect to the PAB and the specific question, the Public Affairs Bureau's full-time equivalent staffing for 2003-04 totals, as I mentioned, 131. Four additional staff have been added.

So 78 full-time employees help government ministries to communicate with Albertans. They supply professionals to government departments to develop and implement communications programs.

They provide communications planning and consulting to support government programs. They co-ordinate government communications to and from Albertans on priority areas for government initiatives and during public emergencies. They provide specialized writing and editing services to government. They create and implement a corporate communications strategy to ensure that public information programs are co-ordinated across government and Albertans are getting the information they need in the most cost-effective way possible. That involves 78 FTEs.

Thirty-four FTEs provide Albertans with two-way access to government. This involves managing Service Alberta, formerly the RITE call centre, to give Albertans toll-free access to government. It provides Alberta Connects call centre support for major government initiatives. It involves managing the two-way flow of information through the Alberta government home page. It involves providing technical support for major government news conferences and announcements. It involves providing research and implementation support for new communications technologies and Internet-related consultative programs to departments. It involves managing the provincewide distribution of news releases. That involves 34 FTEs.

Eleven FTEs are responsible for publishing and selling Alberta's laws and other government materials. Specifically, they are charged with publishing and selling Alberta's laws and other government materials and operating the Queen's Printer bookstores in Edmonton and Calgary.

There are three FTEs in the managing director's office. Now, I don't know if these are referred to as directors or executives. I'm getting a signal that they are not. I know that there is an executive director or a director of the department who has deputy minister status, but the director's office staff looks after overall management of the Public Affairs Bureau.

There are five FTEs on the human resources and administration side of the Public Affairs Bureau charged with managing the human resources and finance needs of the Public Affairs Bureau and also charged with developing business plans and budget preparations, performance measurement co-ordination, annual report development, FOIP administration, central bureau reception, and central bureau reception services.

That's about all I've got on the Public Affairs Bureau.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A number of other questions here. There certainly appears generally to be a marked increase in the amount of advertising undertaken by this government: the campaign around the Mazankowski report, the Kyoto campaign, the Healthy U advertising, and so on and so on. I am wondering if somewhere or other there's a total figure allocated for all the advertising undertaken by this government. I'm wondering if the Premier might be able to indicate to us how that's organized. Is all of that advertising managed through the Public Affairs Bureau whether it's for the Department of Health and Wellness or Environment or whatever, or is that handled individually by departments? How are the advertising buys managed, and how much in total is paid by this government to the buyers for their services? I assume that the government has an advertising buyer who handles that. I'd be curious to know how much that is worth. Who manages the advertising campaigns? In other words – and the Premier would know this exceedingly well, I'm sure – the whole process of developing and implementing an advertising campaign.

So there's a series of questions there about the millions of dollars, maybe even a few tens of millions of dollars now spent by this government on advertising. The Premier is welcome to comment now, or again I'd be happy to take his responses later.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, I can answer some of those questions. Certainly, major advertising and the agents who handle advertising, the advertising agencies, are selected by tender, I would think, for most of the projects. I'm receiving a nod in the affirmative. I don't know what these agencies charge. I used to know what they charge, but that was many, many years ago when I used to buy advertising. I don't know what they charge today – and I'll attempt to get that information for the hon. member – nor do I have a total amount that we spend on advertising in a given year or what it's anticipated we will spend in 2003-2004, and again I'll attempt to get that information.

I can advise the hon. member that all advertising endeavours by the various departments are co-ordinated through the Public Affairs Bureau, but certainly it's up to the department. If it's Sustainable Resource Development or Learning or Government Services or Finance or any of the other ministries, if they feel the need for an advertising campaign and they know that there's a message that needs to get out, then that is co-ordinated with the Public Affairs Bureau.

Dr. Taft: All right. I look forward to some more detail in writing subsequent to these questions.

My next questions actually follow up on the Premier's comments about the Public Affairs Bureau staff working with staff in various departments. Indeed, my understanding is that many Public Affairs Bureau staff are assigned to departments throughout the government, but at the same time as the Public Affairs Bureau staff is assigned to a department handling communications, some of the departments have their own communications staff. So, for example, Government Services has a few communications staff it pays for, and the Public Affairs Bureau has some of its staff assigned to Government Services. At least that's how I understand it. If I'm wrong, I can be corrected on that.

I'd be interested to hear from the Premier, also serving as minister responsible for the Public Affairs Bureau, some comment on who controls the communications staff of the various departments. So does the communications staff of Learning report to the Deputy Minister of Learning, or do they report to the Public Affairs Bureau director assigned to Learning? Also – and I don't expect the Premier to have this figure at his fingertips – how many communications staff work for the government outside the Public Affairs Bureau? They're scattered throughout the government. That would be an interesting figure to learn perhaps in a written response.

Mr. Klein: Perhaps in a written response, but I would be very surprised if the Public Affairs Bureau didn't retain the services of outside public relations and advertising experts from time to time and for specific projects. How much we spend I don't really know.

Relative to communications directors, they are charged to the Public Affairs Bureau but I think report directly to the ministers if they're assigned to a department, but any public relations campaign or advertising campaign that is planned is co-ordinated through the communications director with the Public Affairs Bureau.

Relative to the other information, I'll attempt to get that information for the hon. member.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Premier, it's always a delight to have you with us when you present your budget for Executive Council and the Public Affairs Bureau. I just have a couple of questions, but first I would like to give you and your people some kudos. I really believe the RITE line, the RITE centre, what will now be called I think you said Service Alberta, does an outstanding job for Albertans. It certainly connects constituents and parts of our constituency to each other, and though we all over a period of time hear from constituents, I only hear good things about the RITE line.

If you would just reiterate for me, did you say that there had been 1.1 million calls last year? With going to the concept of now Service Alberta, basically what will change, and will it require a larger budgeted amount? Also, I think we can be very impressed. In Alberta we've come a long way, I think, in a short time, and I'm sure we will move farther ahead yet on the whole computerization and technology, and I was just wondering if your people would have any idea how many hits on the government home page we have from outside of Alberta. We always talk about putting dollars into tourism and this type of thing, but I do believe people now are often using the Net to seek a lot of things they used to find elsewhere, and I do want to compliment you on your home page.

One thing – and I will sway a little bit here. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie got more out of the budget and into other things. I feel very honoured and privileged to be a standing policy chair. I think the concept and this approach is very good for all members. I am wondering, now that it is some years old and stood the test of time, if you know of other jurisdictions that have implemented this over a period of time.

One other thing before I sit down. I just was wondering: for yourself, your office, the Lieutenant Government, do the security provisions come out of your budget, or in fact is that out of the Solicitor General's?

Thank you.

Mr. Klein: Okay. Security for the LG and security for Executive Council I believe comes out of the Solicitor General's budget because this is handled by the security detail in the Legislature. It's the same detail that oversees the operations of CAPS, which is the court and prisoner services, I guess it is, and that all comes under the Solicitor General.

Relative to how many hits we receive from outside the province, I really don't know, but certainly the government's home page is available for all to see who have access to a computer, and I wouldn't be surprised if there are many hits on the Internet, especially from people who want to or are planning to travel here, to have a holiday here, maybe set up a business here. There's a wealth of information on the Internet. As a matter of fact, you could spend all day, all week, weeks, months on the Internet finding out about various government services, programs, and opportunities here in Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: I have some stuff on staffing, but I . . .

The Chair: Okay; the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I wondered if I might ask the Premier a couple of questions about the performance measures in the business plan. I look at performance measure 1, "public satisfaction with government communications in priority areas", and it's 63 percent. That's really not very good. I look back at the Premier's annual report, where there's a bit more detail about the performance measure, and it indicates how they arrived at this 63 percent. They indicate that they do it by "telephone interviews with 1,003 adult Albertans conducted" – and they tell you when they conduct it – "randomly selected from across the province." I guess my question is: is that the best strategy to get at this particular measure? Will you ever reach the 75 percent goal, given that you randomly select from the population? There must be differences in people who have specific issues that they're dealing on with the government.

I know that the theory is that that should be randomly distributed through the population, but I still have some questions about: is that the best way to find out if the public is satisfied with the communications in the priority areas? I wondered if there had been other ways of trying to secure that knowledge. I think it's a useful performance measure, but I guess I'm not convinced that that's a true measure of what's happening out there in terms of public satisfaction. Again, as I said, I wonder if it'll ever get up past that, given that kind of methodology.

The other one with the same kind of concern is number 2, and that's the public satisfaction with access to information. Again, if I go back to the Premier's annual report, that measure is taken exactly the same way. I wondered if there shouldn't be some way of actually tracking some people who are using government information and then taking that kind of a measure.

Fundamentally, my questions are about the performance measures and how useful they are to the government in trying to really get at what's happening.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, those are good questions indeed, and, you know, statistical information is only as good as the question that is asked and the truthfulness and how the question is posed. In order to get a true response, the question has to be framed in such a way as to elicit a true response, so respondents were asked to rate their overall satisfaction with communications in the areas they see as a priority for the province. In this particular case, they were free to define their own priorities rather than being limited to a set of predetermined areas. This change ensures that the question is inclusive and relevant to all respondents, so the lower result of 63 percent satisfaction is the result of the question format being changed. With that change in the question format comes a change in the results. The question is a much more significant question, it's a much broader question, and it brings about a different result than the previous question. Certainly we would strive to achieve 75 percent, and that's why the target is 75 percent.

Now, you might want to ask: why 75 percent? Why not 80 percent, or why not 90 percent? Well, Mr. Chairman, it doesn't matter how good you are; 75 percent is deemed to be about, you know, where you're going to be, which is not bad. So, in other words, one has to assume that 25 percent of the people are going to be antigovernment. That's not to say that they're going to be pro-Liberal, but they're going to be antigovernment, and we found that out. You know, no government in the world, I think, gets consistently above 75 percent. There are always people who have a bone to pick with the government, so 75 percent is a good target figure.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Premier, first of all, I'd very much like to compliment two aspects of your staff, and one is also the Public Affairs Bureau. I think they make sometimes the questionable and the opaque very understandable and clear to many of our residents of Alberta. I'd also like to make a couple of comments about the Service Alberta call centre. A lot of the comments that I hear coming out of rural Alberta are on what a useful service that is and the ability of some of the staff that you do have in their quick response time.

I do have a couple of questions that I would like to present to you. The first question, Mr. Premier, is on page 136 of the Executive Council's estimates on line 2.0.5. The Service Alberta call centre shows a budget of $815,000 in 2002-2003 and $1,043,000 requested for 2003-2004. Can the Premier please tell the committee why there's an increase in the Service Alberta call centre budget of more than $200,000?

The second question I have, Mr. Premier. You had mentioned that the hits had doubled on the web page, and I guess this may be crystal balling a little bit, but do you feel that, with the advent of technology and of course the usage of technology, that may take some pressure off communications staff and the Service Alberta call centre?

Thank you very much.

Mr. Klein: I'm sorry; I'm being inundated with paper here. The last question had to do with my thoughts relative to an anticipated use of the Internet? Is that correct?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Premier, I guess what I'm asking is: when we talk about the doubling of hits on the web page so that we have more people using the web sites and using the home page, in the future do you think that that's going to decrease the need and the use for communications staff and maybe the need and the use for the Service Alberta call centre?

Mr. Klein: I don't know if it's going to reduce the need for the Service Alberta call centre. Perhaps it will because as you know, technology tends to replace a lot of functions that were done by a human hand and human mind. That seems to be the way of the future. More and more is being done on the computer, especially as people acquire personal computers. I look right here or there or over there and I see all these laptop computers, and I see the PalmPilots here and the BlackBerry there. Most of this work is now being done on computer, and MLAs are accessing most of their information by computer. Before, they used to pick up the telephone or write a memo and ask for that information to be retrieved for them. Now they're retrieving all that information by themselves and for themselves, and I'm doing the same thing because it's convenient and it's quick. So perhaps down the road it will, but that is the way of technology.

Relative to the specific question – that is, the increase in the budget of the Service Alberta call centre – as you know and as I explained in my initial remarks, the Alberta call centre is operated under the Public Affairs Bureau and was formerly known as the RITE service. I forget what the acronym is.

Mrs. Gordon: R-I-T-E.

Mr. Klein: Yeah, I know that it's R-I-T-E, but it stood for something. I know it was brought in during the Lougheed years. It was a tremendous service at the time and has been a tremendous service ever since. That service provides toll-free access to government by simply calling 310-0000. Once connected, of course, Albertans can access information on government programs, services, and initiatives.

Now, callers have the option of directly dialing the number they wish to reach or having an operator assist them with their questions or their inquiries. As I mentioned, the total number of calls received by the Service Alberta call centre averages 6.5 million calls per year. That's a phenomenal number of calls. Of that number, the direct-dial portion of the call centre handles approximately 5.4 million calls a year, while the operator-assisted portion handles an average of 1.1 million calls a year, still a phenomenal number of calls. Those call centres, as I mentioned, are located in both Calgary and Edmonton.

As for the increased budget allotment to Service Alberta, much of the money will be used for the four additional full-time equivalents I spoke about earlier and to increase the efficiency of the services offered. Mr. Chairman, this is a service that will continue to see an increased demand, so it is imperative that we develop effective practices to increase the quality and the speed of the service that we provide.

I think it's also important to note that Service Alberta agents are also utilized during special announcements and government initiatives to answer inquiries via the 310-4455 comment line, which is also a fairly new service. These include communication projects such as the Kyoto protocol, which generated a tremendous amount of phone activity. All you have to do in government is make a comment, and you will get lots of reaction and people will phone; believe me: the war in Iraq, the Alberta government's position vis-à-vis the United States. I can tell you that the one situation that caused no end of work for the RITE staff, all the communications people in the Public Affairs Bureau, and the staff in my office was the Vriend decision. As a matter of fact, we had to replenish our fax machine about every half hour during that particular debate. So, you know, you name it and an issue can be created, and when an issue is created, the phone lines start to buzz. Believe me.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to speak to the estimates of the office of the Premier and Executive Council, and it's a pleasure to have the Premier in the Assembly tonight. I think it would be a lot more fun in here if we had the Premier on a regular basis, but I know he's got the province to run.

I did want to focus a little bit on the Public Affairs Bureau estimates, Mr. Chairman. I noticed that the budget for the Public Affairs Bureau is being increased from $17 million to $18 million, so that's a significant increase. I think that many of us read the hon. member from Edmonton's book which focuses a great deal on the Public Affairs Bureau, and I think it enhanced public awareness of how that organization operates. It's clearly a centralized organization which reports to the Premier's office, and it has the advantage for the government of ensuring a more consistent message getting out to the public.

Now, it's interesting, Mr. Chairman. I had a look at the number of spin doctors employed by the Public Affairs Bureau, and there is in fact a significant increase. You know, everybody has spin doctors, but this leaves us feeling rather outgunned. The total number of directors in the Public Affairs Bureau in 2001 was 48 and in this budget is increased to 56, so that's across two years of course. The number of public affairs officers has increased from 85 to 98. The total increase for spin doctors in Public Affairs Bureau over the last two years is from 133 to 154, which is a net increase of 21.

It's interesting that a couple of the departments have seen the biggest increases in spin doctors. Particularly, the Department of Energy has had an increase of four public affairs professionals, from 14 to 18, and I think that would certainly be accounted for by some of the problems that the department has had to deal with. Health and Wellness has stayed pretty much the same. Learning has gone up by a couple. Innovation and Science has gone up by a couple, and I find that interesting because there's not a lot being announced from that department. Human Resources and Employment is up four.

So across the board, Mr. Chairman, there is a significant inflation in the number of communications professionals in the government, and I think it outstrips the growth in the government itself. It's the one area where the government is loath to cut and reduce and impose quotas and, I think, for very good reason. The department itself is a cornerstone, in fact, of the political strategy of the government.

I'm interested in the Premier's remarks about the comment line, and I know that government does generate a lot of calls. I would be interested in knowing if the comment line information is collated and collected and whether or not it's publicly available or whether or not it's just available to the government. I appreciate that some comments often generate lots of calls from citizens, but I think the Premier should take some comfort in knowing that he no longer has responsibility for regulating cats, because that in my experience is the number one issue at the municipal level for generating comments. You can get thousands and thousands of calls about cats. You can raise taxes, and you'll get a couple of hundred calls. If you bring in a cat bylaw, you'll get thousands. So it's funny what sets the public off.

I wonder if the Premier can comment on a communication strategy for the future. One of the concerns that we in the New Democrat opposition have had is an increasing tendency of the government to focus on the federal government as the bad guy. I don't know what is exactly behind that, but I just suspect that it's more fun to talk about the foibles of the federal government than to talk about the foibles of this provincial government. I note on the issue of Kyoto that Public Affairs and the government actually whipped up quite a firestorm of concern about Kyoto, but when Kyoto was passed, it suddenly subsided. In fact, we had members of the government privately saying that they knew all along that the federal government, true to form, would pass the Kyoto resolution in the House of Commons but weren't really expected to do anything serious about implementing it. I was concerned that that particular campaign – and I'd like to know the costs of that campaign to date – whipped up a lot of anger and resentment against Ottawa in this province and, I think, needlessly so, because once it was passed, the government acknowledged that Kyoto was not in fact the mortal threat to the Alberta economy that they had let on.

Similarly, the Wheat Board has been an issue that the government has focused on. It's interesting, Mr. Chairman, after all of the debate and hand-wringing and attendance at demonstrations and people going to jail and so on, that of the districts for the Wheat Board falling entirely within the province of Alberta, they all elected pro Wheat Board, pro one-desk selling representatives on the Wheat Board. That is a clear message, I think, that the government has been offside, with wheat farmers at least, on this issue, because when they had the democratic right to elect their own directors, they picked people who were in favour of one-desk selling and supporters of the Wheat Board.

Similarly, Mr. Chairman, the government has been making a big deal about the gun registry, and I would just make a couple of points. I think that it's fair to say that Canadians and Albertans are disgusted with the $1 billion cost associated with that gun registry. It's a massive overrun, and I think everybody has concern about it. But I would note that provinces like Alberta have contributed to those costs by refusing to co-operate with the federal government. Notwithstanding, when I was still in the municipal level, I remember that one of the solicitors general took a poll of Albertans' opinions on the gun registry and found that in fact a majority of Albertans at that time – and this was a number of years ago, I admit – supported the gun registry. Again, I think the government is offside with many Albertans and particularly urban Albertans, who now comprise the majority of the population in the province.

I'd be interested in whether or not there are independent budgets that have been established for communications plans or PR blitzes with respect to any of these issues. We know that this was the case on Kyoto – and I'd like to know the total amount to date – the Wheat Board, the gun registry, and in fact even Senate reform, another issue, I think, that these days puts more Albertans to sleep than Sominex, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to know as well what the government's plans are for communications on these four issues, which I call the fed-bashing four, and I'd like to know if the government has allocated money within the existing budgets that we're considering to deal with those issues.

That concludes my comments, Mr. Chairman, and I would thank all members for their rapt attention.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, I'm more than pleased to respond. Some of the questions, of course, again have absolutely nothing to do with my budget or the budget of Executive Council or any of the departments.

Certainly, there was an advertising campaign conducted – and those dollars will be available in public accounts – relative to the Kyoto protocol. This protocol had and still has the potential of costing the Alberta economy literally billions and billions of dollars. It's an unfair, thoughtless protocol. By the way, it is just that. It is not the law of this land by any stretch of the imagination. It is a protocol which by the way – and the hon. member knows this – is not even a protocol yet because one of the major signatories has not signed on. If Russia does not sign on to the protocol, there is no protocol at all. It's dead.

So, Mr. Chairman, when he tries to imply that it is the law of the land, he is misleading people. It is not right. It is not the law of the land. It is a protocol. It's not even an international accord. It is a protocol; simple as that. It is not the law of the land. You know, a protocol or a thought can be changed with a new Liberal leader, and soon enough there's going to be one, and perhaps he'll have a different approach to this ill-conceived and thoughtless idea as to how to address global warming and to reduce greenhouse gases.

I find it interesting that the hon. member alludes to the Wheat Board and the gun registry. You know, again he's not entirely correct when he talks about the gun registry. The majority of people are saying that they want gun control. They want control of firearms in order to keep firearms out of the hands of bad people. But when you poll people relative to the intrusion of the government into the rights of people to protect and own their property, then you will find a different attitude, and that's what gun registration is all about. It's about private property and the right to private property. Big difference between gun control and gun registration and the way it's being administered and the boondoggle the federal government has created, the 1 billion dollar plus boondoggle the federal government has created. So, yes, you know, if the hon. member has given me a platform to bash the federal government, they deserve to be bashed on these issues. And you know what? This isn't costing anything other than the time of the Legislature. Nothing.

The Wheat Board. Well, I can understand where this hon. member is coming from because he loves to have the state control everything. That is the philosophy, and that's . . . [interjection] Controlled by farmers? In a pig's patoot. You know, it's not controlled by farmers at all. It's controlled by the government, and it discriminates against Alberta and Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

All it does is create a socialistic monopoly, which he loves. No. It's inherently unfair. It's a bad law. It's an outdated law, an archaic law that was brought in under the War Measures Act to make sure the Canadians didn't starve prior to the Second World War.

Mrs. Nelson: Just after the Depression.

Mr. Klein: Just after the Depression. Things have changed. Well, they've changed for us. They haven't changed for the socialists.

And the Senate. Well, you know, at least the NDs say that there ought not to be a Senate. We're saying: if there's going to be a Senate, at least it should be a fair Senate and it should be effective and elected and really representative of the people. Right now it's nothing but a reward program for the person who happens to be the Prime Minister of the day. That's all it is, a tool to foster patronage. That's all it is. But the socialists like that. They like it.

You know, I don't know where the hon. member was – perhaps he was listening on the box – when I said that sometimes people who work in the Public Affairs Bureau are dismissed simplistically, by simpleminded people I should have added, as spin doctors. [interjections] Not by the Liberals, no. Not by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. She stood up for the public service employees of this government. But this hon. member insists on referring to them as spin doctors because he isn't aware – he isn't aware – of the many, many different kinds of jobs that PAB staff do. He started out by being wrong. He started out by saying that total full-time equivalents are 181. Well, that was a 2003-2004 estimate. Actually, there are 177.

Mr. Mason: I said 154.

Mr. Klein: You said 181.

Mr. Mason: No, I didn't.

Mr. Klein: You did too.

I would like to go through – and I think this is very important because he made some very disparaging comments about members of the Public Affairs Bureau. He implied that they are nothing more than spin doctors, government lackeys. First of all, they help government ministries to communicate with Albertans.

Mrs. Nelson: Absolutely.

Mr. Klein: Right. They do this by supplying professionals to government departments to develop and implement communications programs. They do this by providing communications planning and consulting support to government. They do this by co-ordinating government communications to and from Albertans on priority areas for government initiatives and during public emergencies. It's very important. They do this by providing specialized writing and editing services to government. They do this by helping ministries purchase advertising services. They do this by creating and implementing a corporate communications strategy to ensure public information programs are co-ordinated across government and Albertans are getting the information they need in the most cost-effective way.

Yes, the hon. member pointed to a budget increase of $977,000 for this particular activity. There is a reason for that budget change. The budget increase of nearly a million dollars is to develop and implement a corporate communications strategy that increases public awareness of the Alberta Connects telephone and e-mail service. This is a program that goes to the heart of what ordinary Albertans, to use a favourite ND phrase, expect in terms of gaining access to their government.

Ms. Carlson: Settle down, Ralph. You're going to have a heart attack.

Mr. Klein: No, I'm not. I go on the treadmill every day.

Indeed, there has been an increased workload in updating the Alberta logo, adding an on-line public consultation facility to the Alberta government home page, and looking for ways to make it easier for the visually impaired. I think this is very important: for the visually impaired. He would deny the visually impaired access to government services; that's what he's implying. And, of course, salary increases that apply to staff across government: the NDs certainly don't have any problems with applying salary increases to public service employees. I know that for sure.

Now, there was an additional $348,000 increase in the budget, and this is to provide Albertans with two-way access to government services. This involves managing the Service Alberta call centre to give Albertans toll-free access to government, providing Alberta Connects call centre services for major government initiatives, managing the two-way flow of information through the Alberta government home page, providing technical support for major government news conferences and announcements, managing the provincewide distribution of news releases – and believe me; those news releases come from all over, including some of the ND rags that, you know, are prevalent in some of the urban centres – providing communications technology support to Executive Council and Internet consultation to departments.

So it goes on and on, Mr. Chairman, and to bring it down to those simplistic terms that are so easy because they elicit the five-second sound bite, because I don't think they're capable of 15 seconds, to something that is as simplistic as "spin doctor" – it's much more complex than that. It's much more involved than that. Indeed, these are dedicated, committed public service employees, talented, professional employees, and they're a lot more than spin doctors. I'll tell you that for sure.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Alberta is renowned around the world for many areas of excellence including our Premier, and, Premier, it is really good to have you here with us tonight. Another area where Albertans excel is in athletics and in particular the game of hockey. Tonight as we discuss Committee of Supply main estimates for the Executive Council, the Edmonton Oilers are discussing their superior skills with the Dallas Stars. More notably, however, the Red Deer Rebels are in the seventh game of an exciting WHL playoff series with the Medicine Hat Tigers, and in an equally exciting playoff series in the Alberta Junior Hockey League, the Camrose Kodiaks and the St. Albert Saints are battling each other for the provincial championship in the seventh game. Tonight Albertans will celebrate and salute the talent and dedication of coaches, players, and organizations who work together as a team, use discipline to achieve their goals, and represent all Albertans nationally and internationally.

Mr. Chairman, not unlike our hockey teams the government of Alberta must work together as a team, use discipline to achieve our goals, and represent all Albertans in all that we do. Whether it's Great Kids awards, that recognize and honour our kids who make outstanding contributions to our communities, or the Public Affairs Bureau, that strives to be a centre of communications excellence, the Executive Council works diligently to provide open communications with Albertans. As our population increases and the levels of interest increase, open communications are even more important for Albertans, and as a result of open communications I am pleased to be able to ask my question this evening.

Premier, on page 137 of the estimates under the Statement of Operations by Program, the ministry revenue for the 2003-2004 estimate of $1,200,000 on the revenue side is considerably lower than the 2002-2003 comparable forecast of $2 million. Could you please let us know why this estimate is significantly lower than the previous year? That's page 137 under Revenue.

Dr. Taft: You already answered that.

Mr. Klein: Yes, I did answer. The hon. member is absolutely right. The discrepancy is due to the Queen's Printer revenue being down, and as I explained earlier, there's been a budget reduction of $406,000, or a 21.3 percent decrease, in revenues due to completion of the Revised Statutes of Alberta. If you'll recall, there was about a seven-year program to revise all the provincial statutes. That program has now been completed, and most of the revised statutes were obtained by the legal profession last year, so there's less of a demand. It's due also to a lot of the legislation, regulations associated with the legislation being available on the Internet. Indeed, as I was coming into the Legislature this evening, the hon. Minister of Justice was accessing some regulations associated with a piece of Alberta legislation on the Internet. I would suspect that many lawyers are now accessing those regulations on the Internet, which has resulted in a decline in revenue to the Queen's Printer.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Once again I want to congratulate the Premier because I think his comments are clear evidence of my point that we do not need this increase in the number of staff positions in the Public Affairs Bureau. It's obvious this Premier doesn't need a spin doctor. When the opposition stands up and asks legitimate questions about an increase in communications staff in his office, he can actually turn it around into the opposition wanting to take services away from the blind. Now, this man does not need a spin doctor, and I think we could cut one right here, and the Premier would be fine.

I do want to indicate that I recognize that these are skilled professionals and that all parties use so-called spin doctors or communications professionals. The concern I have is twofold. One is the expansion of the number, and the justification for that hasn't been given.

The second aspect that I have a concern about is what they're actually focusing on. It's clear that communication of legitimate information that Albertans should know about their government and its policies is important, and I'm not attempting to challenge that in any way, but I did mention a number of issues where I think these professionals are being utilized for clear partisan political benefit of the government that leads to a sense of disunity in the country and in this province and that the government is doing that to divert attention from its own problems, which are multiplying, Mr. Chairman. Particularly in the areas of electricity deregulation, gas prices, education funding, and so on the government is increasingly finding itself under fire from individual Albertans.

One question I asked that the Premier did not respond to is whether or not the aggregated information from the comment line is going to be available to anyone besides the government. Is it going to be public information? Will opposition parties in the Assembly have access to this information, or is it strictly going to be used as strategic information to benefit the government alone?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, the question is an interesting one, and I wish I could provide the answer, but I can't because I don't know. I know that in my own office we have never used that information. I know that when there is a hot issue and phone calls come directly to my office or to Alberta Connects, we get an indication of how many people are calling. We sort of get a general breakdown of whether people are for the issue or against the issue, but I don't recall ever seeing a compilation of all the comments, and I don't know how that is made available. I don't know how it ties in or relates to the protection of privacy legislation, but I will endeavour to find an answer as to how that information is treated and whether or not it's publicly disseminated.

The other question again goes back to the Public Affairs Bureau. I guess, Mr. Chairman, I could sum up the Public Affairs Bureau by reading the mission statement because I want to put to rest this notion that the Public Affairs Bureau contains nothing but a bunch of spin doctors. Certainly, the people who manage the RITE lines and the Alberta Connects operation are not spin doctors in any way, shape, or form – they are simply there to assist Albertans in getting the information they require – nor are the people who work as communications officers in the Public Affairs Bureau. They are there to do a job, and as I mentioned in my initial remarks, they deal with a multitude of issues for a multitude of departments.

I outlined, for example, that the Public Affairs Bureau itself, just the communications people, probably receives at least 35 calls per day from media of all sorts, including national, international media, rural newspapers, you know, radio stations, and that's just generally. Then you break it down by department. I'm sure that those interested in children's services or agricultural services or justice or finance or you name it – there are individual calls to those communications officers directly involved in the departments, and that probably adds up to hundreds more calls each and every day, and you have to have talented, professional people who are knowledgeable so that they can answer intelligently the questions that are put to them.

You look at the vision overall for the Public Affairs Bureau: the bureau "strives to be a centre of communications excellence and one of Albertans' preferred choices for news and information about their government's policies, programs and services." That is it in a nutshell. You look at the mission of the PAB: "The mission of the Public Affairs Bureau is to help the government" – and that's what makes the hon. member mad; that's what makes him mad because it is to help the government, the duly elected government – "in its ongoing dialogue with Albertans by providing quality, coordinated and cost-effective communications services." Again, I underline "the government" because it says in the mission statement "to help the government," not the NDs but the government. It doesn't say to help the New Democratic Party or the New Democrat opposition or the Conservative Party or the Liberal Party. It says, "To help the government," and it just so happens, as I explained earlier, that under the democratic process and the British parliamentary system this party happens to be the government.

In the business plan the PAB outlines strategic priorities.

The strategic priorities identified in this plan will increase the coordination and efficiency of communications from the government as a whole and ensure Albertans enjoy quick and convenient access to the information they need. A key priority is the development of a corporate communications approach to ensure Albertans receive timely and coordinated information from their government. From their government.

The Bureau will also begin to revise the corporate visual identity for government, updating a visual signature that is over 30 years old. I mentioned that in my opening remarks.

Other initiatives include ensuring Albertans have access to information in all priority areas, improving electronic access to government information and further developing available e-communications resources such as Alberta Connects and the Alberta Government Home Page. [The PAB] will also review Queen's Printer Bookstore operations to ensure full public access to legislation while maintaining efficiency and cost-effectiveness.

That in a nutshell identifies the priorities, the mission, and the vision of the Public Affairs Bureau.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Before I get to my question, I do have a brief story I'd like to pass on to the Assembly that occurred Sunday, and I know it relates directly to Executive Council. I was at the Edmonton Oilers' hockey play-off game on Sunday night, and the Premier and his deputy chief of staff were sitting behind me. Midway through the third period a number of visitors from Toronto approached us and asked us if they could take our Premier back to Ontario with them for the people of Ontario so that he could lead that province as he has led our province so well in the last 10 years. We informed the well-intentioned individuals that an autograph will have to suffice as we do not want our Premier to go anywhere for quite some time, thank you very much.

My question is from page 139 of the estimates of Executive Council. It indicates that the office of the Premier has 50 full-time equivalent staff for 2002-2003 and 127 in the Public Affairs Bureau, for a total of 177. Executive Council staffing has remained the same for 2003-2004, but the bureau's full-time equivalents have increased by four, bringing it to 131. What are those additional four FTEs to be employed to do? I know that the Premier has elaborated quite a bit with regard to the 181 FTEs allocated in Executive Council, but if he has missed any, I would certainly be interested to hear.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. [interjections]

Mr. Klein: Well, I hear a lot of chirping from over there about the question being asked, but I'm glad the question was asked, because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has all his information skewed. It's not the right information. He must have got it from the phone book or someplace. I don't know where he got it. The NDs do not have the correct data on the number of PAB staff. They're using discredited data compiled, as I said, from the phone book or someplace. Maybe it's the government phone book; I don't know. For the record, the PAB is adding four FTEs – you alluded to that – four full-time employees, all of whom will work the Service Alberta phone lines. That is a wonderful service, formerly the RITE service. That is a wonderful service to simply provide information or to steer the caller to the appropriate department to gain the right information.

Ms Kryczka: I didn't think I would have time to speak this evening before time was up. First of all, I just want to say that I'm pleased to be able to say anything at all. My first question or comment was actually answered, Mr. Premier: what does Public Affairs provide in supports to communications branches of various departments?

I was just proofing a document a little while ago. We are immensely enlarging the profile and the involvement of Senior Citizens' Week activities this year. I know that the Seniors department has excellent staff in their department. Well, you would have seen in the House a week or so ago the best ever poster for Senior Citizens' Week, and the activities are certainly exciting. I have a question. Does the Seniors 1-800 line receive support and advice from Public Affairs? It's a very valuable service to Alberta's seniors.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-West, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates unless there are no members who wish to speak prior to the conclusion of the two hours, I must now put the question on the proposed estimates for the Department of Executive Council for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense $18,035,000

The Chair: Shall this vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Chair: Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following department.

Executive Council: operating expense, $18,035,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Some Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: So ordered.

head: Second Reading

Bill 28

Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 28, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003.

It is seldom that FOIP legislation would arouse such excitement, but at this time anything could happen. The proposed amendments flow from the final report of the Select Special Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act Review Committee. The report was tabled before this Legislature in late 2002.

An amendment is being made to protect personal banking and credit card information. The amendment will state that it is presumed to be an unreasonable invasion of a third party's personal privacy to disclose their personal banking and credit card information. Mr. Speaker, another amendment to the act will give the Information and Privacy Commissioner the discretion to refuse to conduct an inquiry after considering all the relevant circumstances. This will reduce the time and resources that are currently spent on inquiries that are simply unnecessary.

Criteria are currently set out for excluding public bodies from the application of the FOIP Act. For consistency the proposed amendments will make the criteria for excluding public bodies from the act the same as the criteria for including them. Consequential amendments will be made to the Traffic Safety Act to allow for regulations that will establish criteria for releasing motor vehicle registry information. The remainder of the amendments to the FOIP Act are housekeeping in nature.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I also would like to move to adjourn the debate on Bill 28. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 35 Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to stand today and move second reading of Bill 35, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003.

This bill will make several changes in the legislation governing the collection of tobacco taxes in the province. The proposed amendments will provide a level playing field for tobacco consumers and retailers in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, since the introduction of higher tobacco taxes last year, the purchase of tax-paid tobacco has dropped dramatically. While many Albertans have in fact chosen a healthier life, a small part of the reduction is due to increased sales of tax-free tobacco at the duty-free stores and through the Alberta Indian tax exemption program. As a result, the Alberta government is losing millions of dollars in potential tax revenues. The amendments will set appropriate limits on the amount of tax-free tobacco that can be brought into Alberta and further improve our ability to ensure that any tobacco purchased tax free is for personal consumption only and not for resale to others.

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, the intent of raising tobacco taxes was to create a healthier province in which we all enjoy living, and it's working. The intent of this amendment is to close the loopholes, that are now being abused by some, in order to further discourage smoking and thus ensure that we continue down the road to a healthier Alberta.

I urge all members of this Legislature to give Bill 35 their full support. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 35, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003, in second reading. As we understand the object of this bill, it's twofold. First, we see the legislation closing some loopholes that currently are allowing tobacco products to enter the province tax free. The changes in Bill 35 would see Albertans pay taxes on cigarettes that are imported into the province. Secondly, the changes proposed in this legislation would further discourage smoking amongst Albertans, we hope, because a cheap source of cigarettes is eliminated and thereby increasing the financial incentives not to smoke, so we think that those things are all good.

When we take a look at the background for this bill, we see that in the 2002 budget the Alberta government decided to substantially increase tobacco taxes to discourage Albertans from smoking, and we saw cigarette taxes rise from about $1.75 to about $4 per pack, and the taxes on loose-cut tobacco were equalized at this rate. Also, taxes on cigars rose by the same percentage as taxes on cigarettes. We had that debate here in the Legislature the other day when one of the members from Calgary talked about his friend – or perhaps it was himself – who's importing cigars from Manitoba now cheaper after paying the freight than he can purchase them here. So that is specifically what this particular bill addresses in terms of closing that particular loophole.

So what happened back in 2002 is that over the short-to-medium term the government believed that the increase in tobacco tax would result in increased government revenue. The revenue goes straight to the general revenue fund, therefore enabling the government to have access to more money to spend on anything they wanted. When the government proposed this significant increase, some Albertans raised concerns about it, particularly with regard to black-market cigarette activities that this tax might create. Amongst those people were the Official Opposition, and of course what we thought would happen did in fact happen. People talked about the black market for tobacco products in Alberta growing significantly because smokers who did not want to quit would begin to look for bargains, and we saw examples of that in this House. Since the high tobacco taxes have been implemented, the numbers of Albertans purchasing tobacco products have decreased, and the number of Albertans who import illegal cigarettes and tobacco products, that you do not have to pay taxes on, is on the rise.

According to a study conducted by the government's own department, the Finance department, cigarette sales declined 18 percent in the first three months after the tax hike. As of October 31, 2002, cigarette sales had declined by over 21 percent. In comparison, Stats Canada has reported that cigarette smoking in Canada over the same period is only down 8 percent. So the statistics confirm that encouraging the price of cigarettes to go up discourages smoking amongst Albertans, and this bill is a move forward in terms of trying to further decrease the number of Albertans using products by providing a level playing field and making them uniformly expensive for everybody. So it hopes to provide a further disincentive for smoking cigarettes, as we see it.

The government predicted that the $18 per carton increase in the price of cigarettes would boost illegal sales and bootlegging, and they had budgeted an extra $1.5 million for enforcement. As we understand it, part of the money was used to increase the number of tobacco tax inspectors to 20 from five. Tax-free sales are only permitted to natives with an Alberta Indian tax exemption card, but inspectors have uncovered a number of illegal sales since the taxes came into effect. As of the end of November 2002 tobacco tax inspectors had seized many cartons of cigarettes, well over 200. Twenty-seven people were charged and 13 were convicted, paying a total of $7,500 in fines.

Recently, Albertans have found that they can dodge the tobacco tax by purchasing their cigarettes from the United States and over the Internet. On-line sales have seen big increases since the government increase in tobacco taxes, so this legislation looks at closing that loophole by requiring all cigarettes that arrive through the mail to have taxes paid on them before they can be removed from the post office. This is only possible as a result of a deal made with the federal government to allow postal agents to collect this tax. Additionally, many Albertans have started to travel over the border to the States in order to bring cigarettes back to the province tax free, and the claim is being made that some Albertans are making several trips every day, Mr. Speaker, and bringing back their personal limit of tax-free cigarettes each and every time. So, once again, this bill attempts to stop this by allowing customs officers to charge a fee equivalent to the tobacco tax before the products can be brought over the border.

There were several sections of the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act debated in this House last year but for some strange reason never proclaimed into law. So as we see this bill, we've got some questions that we hope will be cleared up for us when we get to committee, and subject to the answers that we get, it looks like we're going to be able to support this bill. Firstly, of course, we believe that any initiative that will reduce tobacco consumption is a good thing, reducing tobacco consumption, regardless of what they're smoking and how they're smoking it. Definitely there is lots of scientific proof to determine that smoking is harmful to health, and of course by reducing the number of smokers, we reduce health costs, and reducing health care costs is in everybody's interests, and that's definitely a very good thing.

We want to eliminate tobacco products that are available on the black market and ensure that there is fairness for both users and retailers of tobacco products. So the issues that we need to have answered are: why were there sections of the Tobacco Tax Act that had been passed by this House not proclaimed into law? What was the delay in making these pieces of legislation into law? How do the changes proposed in Bill 35 affect the unproclaimed changes that are currently on the record? What guarantees do Albertans have that the changes proposed in the bill will eventually become law?

The amount of tobacco products that are not marked for tax-paid sales that a person in Alberta is allowed to hold has decreased from 1,000 grams to 200 grams. So if you could give us the reason for the decrease and why 200 grams was chosen and how they expect the changes to affect the current practices.

When the government put the tobacco tax in place in 2002, they allocated 1.5 million more dollars for increased enforcement. Why didn't the government just put the changes proposed to Bill 35 in place instead? Do you expect the changes proposed in this bill to save money with respect to enforcement costs? If so, how much? If not, why not? Now that the changes are in place, will the tobacco tax enforcement costs return to the previous levels? If not, again, could you tell us why you're making the changes then in the first place?

We want to know why section 7 doesn't come into force with the rest of the act. If you can tell us why there's a delay in that. We'll get into that in committee in more detail, but generally if you can give us a reason before we talk about it in debate, that would be good.

So these changes require some significant co-operation with the federal government. We hear this is a government that doesn't like to co-operate with them too much, so if you can tell us how that little plan is going to unfold, we'd appreciate it.

My last question has to do with how taxes will affect companies like FedEx and Purolator who are now making deliveries. What's going to happen with the recovery of the charges on those packages?

Does, in fact, Alberta have jurisdiction in those areas, or does that require some other kind of issue? Do you see any problems with NAFTA with regard to the changes being made here?

So, Mr. Speaker, if we could get the answers to those questions when we get into committee, we'll be quite happy. With those comments, I'll take my seat.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to speak to Bill 35. I just have a brief comment. Members may know that I did not support the legislation that was introduced a year ago to jack up taxes on tobacco, and that is notwithstanding a long personal history of promoting antismoking measures at the municipal level of government, where I'd always been a strong advocate of things which would reduce tobacco consumption. I believe that tobacco consumption is a major driver of our health care costs, and I think that effective means to deal with smoking and to reduce it are very important.

The problem with the legislation that was passed at the time and which this legislation amends is that it was essentially a tax grab. It wanted to increase the government's take from tobacco without allocating those additional revenues to programs to help people to quit smoking altogether. In other words, the government is only doing half the job and, in fact, has an ongoing benefit from the continued sale of tobacco products. So what I would like to see – and it's not here in this amending bill – is some provision that this money should be earmarked for smoking cessation programs and various other programs that would reduce the amount of tobacco consumed by Albertans.

The other point I'll make is that low-income people disproportionately are smokers relative to the population as a whole. Particularly in parts of my constituency there are a lot of low-income people and a lot of people who smoke, and a strictly financial approach to smoking reduction in my view is unfair and discriminates against the low-income people, who have a harder and harder time being able to afford the tobacco products. That burden does not fall equally and fairly. So it's a very one-sided approach. It's an approach that is ultimately designed to increase government revenues, and I have a difficulty with it.

I have some questions relative to the bill. I find it interesting that the government of Alberta will now effectively impose duties on tobacco products coming across its border. Since we don't have customs locations on the Saskatchewan border or B.C. border, then I'm interested in how the government would intend to enforce this. I notice that there are exceptions in the act dealing with the importation of tobacco through the mail and the use of postal agents and customs officials and so on of the government of Canada to enforce that, and I am again curious how the government would see this being enforced through the mails in a practical way. It's great to say that, you know, legally you owe this money if you import it, but is it in fact going to be an effective piece of legislation?

I guess it gives rise to the last point I'd like to make, which is that surely we need to have some sort of national approach to this question. Rather than just Alberta jacking up its tobacco taxes, it might be an idea to have a national approach to tobacco, a national tobacco reduction strategy, and perhaps the government could take that up once they've finished resolving issues around gun control, the Wheat Board, and so on. Perhaps they might engage in some actual constructive federalism with other provinces. You know, for that matter, you don't even have to deal with the federal government in the first instance. You could talk to other provinces. Let's move towards harmonizing tobacco taxes in this country and develop a co-operative approach that not only imposes taxes on tobacco but puts the revenue from those taxes to work in helping people with tobacco cessation programs and so on instead of just punching people who may be addicted to tobacco but don't have the financial means to afford the high taxes. That's a rather crude and unfair approach, Mr. Speaker.

So with those questions in mind, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort to close debate.

Mr. Cao: I call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a second time]

Bill 32

Income and Employment Supports Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 32, the Income and Employment Supports Act.

First, I'd like to thank the MLAs for Edmonton-Castle Downs, Calgary-Bow, Calgary-East, Cardston-Taber-Warner, and Edmonton-Norwood. This new legislation is a direct result of the outstanding work that they did on the low-income review.

Too often people are skeptical about consultations and reports and wonder if any action will come out of it. Bill 32 is proof that the process works. We have listened to the voices of hundreds of people who participated in the review process. We have listened to stakeholders and people who work on the front lines and, of course, with the clients, and now we're taking action.

But by way of action tonight, Mr. Speaker, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:26 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 16, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/16

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we begin our deliberations in the Legislature today, we ask You, O God, to surround us with the insight we need to do Your will to the benefit of our province and its people and to the benefit of our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 47 visitors from Tofield school. They are seated in both galleries. They're here with teachers Mr. Fred Yachimec, Mrs. Lynn Hryhchuk, Mr. James Rae, teacher assistant Mrs. Sandra Norton, and parent helpers Mr. Doug Herrick and Mr. Wayne Lysons. I would ask all of our visitors to rise and please receive the traditional welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 23 visitors from Winfield school in Winfield, Alberta. Winfield is the school that I graduated from way back in 1984. These students are accompanied by teacher Terri Cocke and parent helpers Greg Patton, Michelle Malbeuf, Marilyn James, and Samantha Heeney. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them all to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Vandermeer: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 23 wonderful students from St. Dominic Catholic school. How do I know they're wonderful? Their teacher described them as such a wonderful class. Mrs. Jones is their teacher. They are also accompanied by Mrs. Laura Marrelli, Mr. Geoff Turtle, and Mrs. Cheryl Smyth. I'd ask that the Assembly give them their traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly eight people who are here today because they were the guests of the Premier. Brian Sehn, the owner of Alberta Asphalt Enterprises, had purchased a luncheon with the Premier at a Rotary auction, and he invited seven of his business associates. They're here today seated in the members' gallery, and they are Brian Sehn, as I said, the owner of Alberta Asphalt Enterprises, accompanied by Pat Bancarz, Dale Klein, Michael Keating, Basil Koziak, Neil Koziak, Dan Peskett, and Dean Paprotka. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Education Property Taxes

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, yesterday when asked about education property tax, the Premier stated: "There is no tax increase. I repeat: there is no tax increase." I can't say that the Premier is telling lies – it's unparliamentary – but I can't say that he's telling the truth either. To the Premier: will you admit that the bottom line is that Albertans are going to pay more property taxes this year to fund education than last year?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there will be more money collected because, fortunately, there's been tremendous growth in this province due to the prosperity.

Relative to the education portion of property taxes, that will remain frozen unless, of course, an individual's property is reassessed and is assessed at a higher value. Then not only will they pay more in property tax, but they will pay more in education tax. It only stands to reason. That's how it works in this system.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: will the Premier tell his ministers to not continue saying that there's no tax increase for education?

Mr. Klein: No, Mr. Speaker. We are not going to say that because fundamentally the education portion of the property tax has been frozen unless there is an increase in the value of property, and that is a determination that has to be made by the municipal council.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: so you're willing to allow your ministers to confuse Albertans by telling them one thing when in fact something else is happening?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can explain it this way so the Liberals might be able to understand it. Might. I emphasize and underline "might." Under the Canadian system of taxation – the Canadian system, because I'm using an analogy here now – when you earn more money, you pay more in income tax. That doesn't necessarily mean that the fundamental rate or the base goes up, that the taxation rate goes up. It just means that you make more money. As it stands with property tax, the more the value of your property increases, the more taxes you pay. It's simple.

Dr. Nicol: The bottom line is that Albertans will be paying more in education property taxes this year when compared to last year.

Albertans' education property taxes increased more than government spending on schools. To the Premier: when will this government stop using education property taxes to fund education given that education property taxes aren't based on Albertans' ability to pay?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Learning supplement, but not all education costs are supported through the education portion of property tax. About 32 percent comes from the education portion of the property tax. The rest is funded out of general revenues. I know that it's a matter for Committee of Supply; nonetheless, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Very quickly, there has been an increase in the amount of the taxation that has been collected due to the growth in the province. The amount has been around $60 million, I believe, in that area. Our budget for the K to 12 component of Learning went up $191 million this year.

Dr. Nicol: Again deception, Mr. Speaker.

To the Premier: when will the government fund education based on the cost of education instead of on the value of someone's home?

The Speaker: We're right on the edge here. We've got a designated estimate this afternoon with respect to Learning, and we have ample opportunity this afternoon to debate the budget of the Department of Learning. If we're on property taxes . . . If we get on the other one, we're right on the edge.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've mentioned in this Assembly previously, the education portion of property tax is one source of revenue to partially fund, I think to the tune of 32 percent, education in this province. If we were to suspend that and not count on that money, we would have to find it from other sources. That could involve raising provincial income taxes. I don't know if we want to do that. I don't know if the Liberals want us to do that. But if they have any bright ideas for a change that could result in changing the way we obtain that revenue, send them over.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: will the Premier change government policy and restore local democracy to the individuals in the communities and allow local taxpayers to determine how local taxes are spent?

1:40

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure what the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is driving at. Basically, property tax is set by the municipal council, and there are processes in place through the courts of revision in the various municipalities to appeal taxes if they think that those assessments are unfair, and that to me is all part of the democratic process.

Emergency Services in Calgary Health Region

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the report of the fatality inquiry into Vince Motta speaks forcefully about concerns with the Calgary health region. It says, "The public is being misinformed," and "The adult emergency services area has . . . worsened . . . and continues to worsen." It calls for dramatic change and says, "There is no place for pollyanna reports that speak of 'strengths and areas in need of improvement,'" and then says, "By most accounts, serious weaknesses and problems exist in the emergency departments in Calgary." To the Premier: given that yesterday the Premier said, "When there are problems, we act on those problems," how does the Premier explain why there was no action on an earlier fatality inquiry which might have prevented Vince Motta's death?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond in more detail. [interjection] I'm sorry; he's not here. [interjections] Oh, he's just come in. I don't know if he caught the question, but I can tell you generally what we plan to do relative to the Motta situation. As the hon. minister pointed out, this is a very tragic situation, and I know that the heartfelt condolences of everyone in this Assembly go out to the Motta family on their loss.

The Calgary regional health authority is taking this fatality inquiry very seriously and has already, as I understand it, taken steps to address some of the concerns raised and, I would assume, also steps to address the specific situation the hon. member alludes to. Actions have been taken to improve co-ordination among emergency room staff and to free up hospital beds, and as a result, as I understand it, waiting times in Calgary emergency rooms have dropped 28 percent since 2000-2001.

The judge called, as the hon. member knows, for an independent inquiry into Calgary's health system but only – but only – if steps have not been taken to improve the system. Steps have been taken, and we'll need to evaluate whether those steps have been sufficient to justify the findings of Judge Delong.

Calgary emergency rooms serve, as the hon. minister pointed out, about 250,000 people a year. Sometimes, unfortunately, mistakes are made, and improvements are needed to ensure that they don't happen again. In that regard Alberta Health and Wellness is working with the Calgary regional health authority to review the recommendations, and any other further steps that need to be taken will be taken.

Relative to the specific question I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: We'll move on.

Dr. Taft: To the Premier again: given that senior positions in the Calgary health region have been occupied by the Premier's former chief of staff, by the Premier's former deputy minister, by the Premier's former Treasurer, and by a host of other Tory supporters, will the Premier admit that the top of the Calgary health region is rife with patronage appointees instead of seasoned health care executives?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, these are competent individuals. I'll tell you and I'll tell the hon. member and I'll tell this Assembly a little story about the selection of my former deputy minister, the Deputy Minister of Executive Council. I was driving along one day when I received a call from the then chair of the Calgary regional health authority, who advised me that they were conducting a search for a chief executive officer. He said: the three candidates we have in mind are all from Ontario, and they want salaries in the area of $500,000 to $700,000 a year. I said: God forbid; surely you can find someone in Alberta who can fulfill that job. I said, "Take a person like Jack Davis," for instance, who was earning far less than that, about $150,000 a year as head of Executive Council. The chair says: are you serious? Well, at that moment I knew that I'd been hoisted on my own petard because they hired Jack Davis, a perfectly capable, very, very competent public service employee.

Dr. Taft: I guess that if you're the right person, a job is only a phone call away.

To the Premier: given that the need for a new hospital in south Calgary was identified as urgent six years ago and was to open this year, can the Premier explain why the Calgary health region hasn't even formally asked for the money to build one?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the priority in Calgary was the children's hospital, and we have fulfilled our commitment to the capital costs of that particular hospital.

Going back to the previous question, you know, it strikes me that this is what the Liberals want, to hire someone from out of province at an inflated salary, because it fits in with the traditional patterns of unreasonable, unaccountable, Liberal spending.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in question period the Premier stated that the death of Vince Motta had nothing to do with the closing of three hospitals in Calgary. Unfortunately, for all his public relations efforts, Justice Delong disagrees. In his fatality inquiry an entire section is titled Delay Due to the Lack of Beds. Justice Delong points to the lack of beds and notes the closure of three Calgary hospitals. Judge Delong writes, "To suggest the solution does not include more beds is to ignore the obvious." He later writes, "This must be seen as an urgent matter." My questions are to the Premier. Now that you have had a day to actually read the report, is Justice Delong incorrect, Mr. Premier, or does this government in fact owe an apology to the Motta family for closing hospitals and causing an avoidable death?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have again the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond, but when those hospitals were closed in Calgary – and indeed one was imploded . . .

Dr. Pannu: One of them was blown up.

Mr. Klein: Imploded. Blown down, not up.

Mr. Speaker, that was done precisely to allow more hospital beds in facilities like the Peter Lougheed hospital and the Foothills hospital, the Rockyview hospital to open up. So the beds that were lost through the closure were more than gained through the opening up of new beds in state-of-the-art, good facilities. I think that we need to do a thorough evaluation of Justice Delong's findings before we jump to any conclusions relative to this issue.

Relative to the bed situation in Calgary I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The province of Alberta is one of the only jurisdictions – it may in fact be the only jurisdiction – that in fact records information about wait times in emergency rooms. We track this for the purposes of determining how it is that we are improving in the area of improved service in emergency medicine. Obviously, it's difficult to compare Alberta with other provinces when other provinces don't record this kind of information, but demonstrably we are reducing the number of unnecessary visits to emergency rooms throughout this province.

I think it's well known by members of this Assembly as well as members of the public that the Health Link line has dramatically reduced the number of unnecessary visits to emergency rooms and physician offices throughout this province. It will be up and running throughout the entire province by this summer. In the example of the Capital health region before the Health Link line was put in, the number of emergency room visits was growing steadily at 6 to 7 percent a year. It's dropped now to a much more sustainable 1 percent a year. This can be directly attributed to Health Link. It's the reason why primary health care reform is very important here.

That's not to say that we have an emergency room system in this province that is ideal, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there continue to be things that we can try to improve. We are committed to doing that, and we are committed to carefully considering and working with the regional health authority on His Honour Judge Delong's recommendations, the 25 recommendations set out in his report.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier make a commitment to the people of Calgary today to accept and implement Justice Delong's recommendation to find additional hospital beds, and will he do it setting a time line that reflects the urgency noted in his inquiry?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we have already embarked on increasing the number of beds in acute care facilities in the city of Calgary. To the best of my recollection there are some 1,400 beds planned for facilities in Calgary. They've already opened up 700 of the 1,400.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can this government and this Premier continue to defend the board and senior management of a health region that Judge Delong says takes an adversarial approach to a fatality inquiry and views it as a public relations challenge rather than a fact-finding exercise?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, they do not view this as a public relations challenge. That is an irresponsible statement, to say the least.

As I said in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, this was a very tragic situation, and our condolences really do go out to the Motta family. I said that actions have been taken to improve the co-ordination among emergency room staff and to free up hospital beds. The hon. minister addressed the situation vis-à-vis hospital beds in Calgary and mentioned the plans for 1,400 new beds, 700 of which have already been brought onstream. That's more than two full hospitals.

The judge called for an independent inquiry into Calgary's health system but only if steps have not been taken to improve the system. As we understand it, steps have been taken, and we'll need to evaluate whether those steps have been sufficient to justify Justice Delong's concerns. That reasonable, intelligent evaluation is now being undertaken, and we will continue to work with the Calgary health authority to review the recommendations and to take any further steps that need to be taken. We will take those steps because we're concerned, as indeed are officials of the Calgary health authority, as indeed are citizens at large, as indeed are the members of the Motta family that this kind of tragedy does not occur again. We're interested, Mr. Speaker, in addressing the problem, in fixing the problem. We aren't interested, as the NDs are, in using this as a political football.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Debt Reduction

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Since this government eliminated deficit budgets in Alberta, it has been a priority to make annual payments reducing Alberta's debt. A number of my constituents have expressed concern that the new fiscal policy implemented in budget '03-04 does not appear to maintain that same commitment to debt reductions. My questions today are to the Minister of Finance. I would like to ask the minister why there are no identifiable lines in this budget dedicated to debt reduction.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let's be very clear. In the budget document there is a section called Accumulated Debt, in the fiscal plan, that clearly lays out how our debt will continue to go down. This will occur because we have had banner years in the past where we've put money away in what we've almost labeled a prepaid mortgage account, and in this particular fiscal year the scheduled debt that comes due will be paid by those dollars that were put in that account for this year and for next year. So at the end of this fiscal year our debt will be down to $4.8 billion. That's nearly 80 percent. Nearly 80 percent of the accumulated debt of the province will have been cleared by the end of this fiscal year, so we're way ahead of target, and we're keeping our eyes focused on getting rid of that debt.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: can the minister assure all Albertans that this government remains committed to eliminating Alberta's debt?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Nelson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we can. In fact, we are so committed to this that I can tell you as a promise – and I've said this in two budget speeches – that we will be the first province in all of Canada that will in fact be debt free.

I can also tell Albertans, Mr. Speaker, that we're so committed to getting rid of this debt that the benefits we have today are as a result of staying with our feet to the fire to clear the debt. We've cleared over $1.3 billion on interest expense from our books forever. I call those lost costs because they don't do anything other than pay interest. Today those dollars are employed in priority programs that Albertans want, such as health and education. So our commitment is there. It's sound, it's true, and we will continue on that path.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Renner: Thank you. My final question to the same minister: can the minister advise what the expected time frame is before the sustainability fund is fully funded and debt payments will be resumed?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, we would hope, based on our analysis within this budget, that in the next couple of years we will have roughly $2.2 billion to $2.5 billion in our sustainability fund. After that fund reaches $2.5 billion, we will have choices if there are additional revenues that do come through from operating surpluses or from our resource revenues. We'll be able to make choices such as continue to put money into debt retirement or put money into capital and a variety of other things that would enhance the asset base of the province. We're hopeful that the fund will build quicker as opposed to later so that we do have some additional choices to make. But let's be very clear: we're very focused on clearing the last of the accumulated debt.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Income Tax Deduction for Purchase of Tools

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During debate on a private member's bill to allow for an income tax deduction by Alberta workers for the purchase of tools necessary to do their job, a vote in this Assembly was held. When a standing vote was conducted, of the members present 42 stood in favour of more tax breaks for workers; seven stood against. My first question is to the Premier. Given that the Premier promised that the only way taxes in this province were going was down, why, 18 months after the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001, was voted in this Assembly, has it not been proclaimed?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, private member's Bill 207, I believe it was, the income tax amendment act, which would have provided tax credits for the purchase of tools by tradespeople, has received royal assent but, as the hon. member has pointed out, will not be in force until it receives proclamation.

There was a recent newspaper article that reported the Liberal labour critic, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, as saying that the government is showing contempt for journeymen and democracy by not proclaiming Bill 207 even though it was passed in November 2001. Well, Mr. Speaker, there are good reasons, reasons that even the hon. member should be able to understand. One, in December 2001, one month after Bill 207 was passed, the federal budget included a new tax deduction for the extraordinary cost of apprentice vehicle mechanics' tools. It was thought that proclaiming Bill 207 could result in double credit for vehicle mechanic apprentices because of the interrelationship of the federal deduction and the provincial tax credits.

An Hon. Member: The federal Liberals beat you to it.

Mr. Klein: No, they didn't beat us to it. I think that they were watching us and said to themselves, as Liberals often do: "Hey, that's a good Conservative idea. What we'll do is we'll snatch it."

Mr. Speaker, the federal deduction in fact has addressed the largest part of the concerns that led to the passage of Bill 207 by allowing the tool deduction to apprentice vehicle mechanics, who incur the highest tool expense or cost and have the least ability to pay. If a decision is made to proceed with an Alberta credit, the Alberta legislation should be amended to eliminate duplication or double-dipping before it is proclaimed. The Minister of Revenue, I understand, has discussed this with the sponsor of the bill, Bill 207, the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, and has agreed to meet with a number of key industry people to discuss the matter further.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that corporations have received tax breaks recently from this government, why have not workers at the will of this Legislative Assembly received a tax break as well?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, you provide the answer as clearly and as succinctly as possible, and they don't understand it. Well, they do understand it, but what they haven't been able to come to grips with is that from time to time they have to get away from their script.

In answer to the question, Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Revenue respond.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'd first like to say that it's nice to see that some of the members of the Liberal opposition are now asking for proclamation of this bill when only two voted for it in the first instance, and two actually voted against it. So it's interesting that that would be brought forward at this time in the Legislature.

Furthermore, this bill was actually targeted so that the apprentices, the largest group, would actually be benefited. The workers of which you spoke, the mechanic apprentices, actually are the ones who have benefited substantially by it. So we have addressed it already by the Liberal government introducing legislation that accomplishes much of this purpose.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you also rose on a point of order; right?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

To the Minister of Revenue: given that the hon. minister has stated that the Department of Revenue has evaluated the act, how much money did the government save by not providing this tax break to workers in this tax year that has just concluded?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, actually, the best option that the federal government did take – and I know that the sponsor of the bill, the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, would say the same thing – was to get the deduction both for federal taxes and provincial taxes. Our provincial tax rates are already at a 10 percent threshold, very low amounts. So what the federal government did by incorporating some of these suggestions is what the apprentice mechanics now get in both the deduction for federal taxes and provincial taxes. They do receive the benefit of a reduction in provincial taxes already as a result of the new legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Alberta/Quebec Relations

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. On Monday Quebecers elected a new government. Many of the intergovernmental priorities Jean Charest advocates are similar to those our Premier has been talking about for some time, like addressing the fiscal imbalance and scheduling regular first ministers' meetings. My question: will the government of Alberta enlist the support of the new Quebec government to advance our mutual interests?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has noted, we do have a number of areas of mutual interest as provinces, and of course one of the priority items is that of the fiscal imbalance within Canada. Quebec and Alberta have a long history of working together on intergovernmental issues, and we look forward to reinvigorating this co-operation with the election of a new government in Quebec. Premier Klein has written Jean Charest congratulating him.

The Speaker: Please, Minister, please, please. We know the rules about identification of names in this House. Let's get on with the answer.

Mr. Jonson: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has written to the Premier-elect of Quebec and expressed his desire to enter into dialogue and discussions with the Premier-elect. The intergovernmental agenda will be a busy one in the year ahead, and I look forward to meeting with and discussing mutual issues with the minister of intergovernmental affairs when my counterpart is announced in the province of Quebec. We will be examining and exploring every opportunity to work on matters of mutual interest. We all, of course, have the goal in mind of strengthening Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you. My final question to the same minister: has the government of Alberta identified a single priority issue that will be pursued with the government of Quebec to get one recognizable achievement?

Mr. Jonson: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, both governments, I believe, have a concern with respect to the lack of respect and co-operation that seems to exist in Canada at the moment with respect to the place of provinces and the importance of provinces within Confederation. With the election now of what we understand to be a federalist government in Quebec, the government of Alberta is certainly interested in working with the province of Quebec to pursue our mutual interests and to develop a stronger and more united Canada where provinces are fully respected.

Provincial/Municipal Agreement

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of Municipal Affairs why the province refused to sign the fair and equitable working relationship agreement for the minister's council on roles, responsibilities, and resources. The minister refused to answer my question. Instead, he talked about how wonderful the council is. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will you sign the working relationship agreement? Yes or no?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, let me repeat my answer from yesterday to the hon. member. In keeping with the spirit of the slowness that was mentioned yesterday, let me just say this. I have spoken with the council, as have some members of this Legislature: the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. We have communicated with the mayors of both Calgary and Edmonton and the presidents of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and we have communicated.

Thank you.

Mr. Bonner: Given that the minister said yesterday that the agreement has been through caucus and cabinet, what is the holdup with signing it?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for that excellent question: this is the fourth time I'm answering it. We are moving forward with a committee, the first of its kind in Canada. We are working very closely, and in fact I want to reiterate how pleased I was with both the mayor of Edmonton and the mayor of Calgary, who commented on the positive nature of our most recent budget we announced in this Assembly.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, given that members of this council have stated that the council has no mandate, would the minister please tell us what the mandate is, where it is written, and what tangible results municipalities can expect from this council?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I could relay that one of the products of this committee is that of: how do we grow the pride? Specifically, cities like Calgary and Edmonton are growing, and we're trying to work with them on issues such as infrastructure. The importance of infrastructure with municipalities was clearly reflected in the most recent budget. We're moving continuously along that line in this very, very important partnership, that I'm very proud to be associated with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Midwifery Services

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, many women in Alberta choose to use the services of a midwife, who is a specially trained professional in pregnancy and childbirth. With numerous hours of teaching, coaching, and physical, nutritional, and emotional support midwives provide a very valuable service. This holistic service is, however, only available to families in Alberta who can afford it. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec cover the cost of midwifery services. Can the minister advise the House if this government is considering paying for the cost of midwifery services?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, parents and families continue to tell me that the choice of a midwife-assisted birth is important to them. Right now in the province of Alberta there are some 23 midwives, perhaps a few fewer now. A couple, I understand, have left the profession. They were responsible last year for 248 hospital births and 396 home births in the year 2001-2002.

I have requested a review of funding of midwifery services in the province of Alberta. I'm advised that the working group has concluded its work, although I have not yet seen the final report, and I do look forward to reading the recommendations that they set out.

We do of course, Mr. Speaker, continue to subsidize the profession by covering the cost of professional liability insurance for midwives, a step that was taken last year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the cost of malpractice insurance is a challenge for midwives in maintaining a practice. What is this government's commitment to supporting the cost of midwives' malpractice insurance?

Mr. Mar: In 2001 a rather large spike occurred in professional liability insurance faced by midwives across Canada. They did come to this provincial government to look for assistance in covering their professional liability insurance in order to sustain their profession. We did that in 2001. We continue to do it now, Mr. Speaker, and this year we will cover 70 percent of the cost of the insurance. That amounts to $11,270 per midwife for a total cost in insurance of $16,100.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No more questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The legitimate line between private firms and government services is becoming more and more blurred. How companies become involved in government programs and reap publicity is of increasing concern as Alberta's Promise is developed. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. How many companies besides Sleep Country made a bid for the minister's appearance in their community service advertising campaigns with respect to children?

Ms Evans: I suppose I ought to be flattered, but I'm flabbergasted. Alberta's Promise, which was given royal assent, was actually a bill that the opposition appeared to like, and today in this House I just await more, Mr. Speaker, breathlessly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. At least it wasn't "stunned"; it was "flabbergasted."

How will the minister ensure that private involvement in Alberta's Promise programs will not be seen as government endorsement of commercial enterprises?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's Promise is actually arm's length from this government. It is a council of entrepreneurs and corporations that has been selected to be a part of an overall group that will promote and, I would say, provide huge support through their communities, as they've always done, for the kinds of activities that people like to do to better the communities for children and families. Yes, I am there in my capacity as Minister of Children's Services to be a part of liaison back to this government, but overall those are people that have been selected not as a part of any party but because they are leaders in their own right in our communities. The United Way is there.

I'm not sure if they're trying to challenge the integrity of those CEOs, but perhaps the Premier would like to add his observation.

Dr. Massey: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how will the minister ensure fairness to all companies who may want to become partners in Alberta's Promise?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we are not making selections of corporations to be involved. Every corporation in Alberta should be involved. Every company in Alberta, every corner store, every person that earns a dime anywhere should be quite willing to stand up for Alberta's children and families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Municipal Financing Corporation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In last year's budget the government took $100 million from the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation's retained earnings and transferred it into government general revenues. The Provincial Treasurer claims that the Alberta government needed the money despite posting a $1.8 billion surplus this past year. Alberta Urban Municipalities met with the Minister of Finance to protest this action and to urge the government to turn the administration of AMFC over to Alberta municipalities. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Why is the government adding the $100 million transfer from the Municipal Financing Corporation to its multibillion dollar budget surplus instead of returning it to municipalities to support needed infrastructure projects, including green infrastructure projects, which the AUMA says can help Alberta reach its greenhouse gas targets?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, about seven questions there. Just deal with one. Okay?

Mr. Boutilier: I'll try to move slowly with the response to the question. The hon. member does raise an important point regarding the $100 million with the Alberta Financing Corporation. I will ask the Minister of Finance, who's ultimately responsible for that corporation, to also supplement, but I want to say this. We had the pleasure of meeting with the AUMA on this very important initiative in dealing with greenhouse gases. In fact, the Premier attended our meeting. They had some very good ideas, and in the budget the Minister of Finance indicated that we are pursuing very actively this initiative in partnership with the AUMA.

I'd ask the Minister of Finance, responsible for the corporation, to also supplement.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite tried to indicate that we had a negative meeting with AUMA. In fact, we had an extremely positive meeting with AUMA. We chatted about the future, and we did talk about the $100 million that was moved into general revenue from AMFC in the previous year, but we focused our attentions on the future.

One of the things that was very important was a proposal that they had come forward with to our government just a matter of a couple of weeks before our budget was presented in this very Legislature, and it's an excellent project that would actually see municipalities have the ability to retrofit a number of municipal buildings to help in the climate change and energy efficiency projects that we have throughout Alberta.

In the budget speech itself I did mention that additional work would be done to flesh out this program and that the Minister of Municipal Affairs would be bringing a scenario forward after working with the AUMA for our caucus to consider a policy direction. Personally I think it's an excellent proposal that did come forward, and I'm anxious to see it occur.

So to indicate that the meeting was negative was absolutely incorrect. The Premier and the Minister of Municipal Affairs and myself all came out of that meeting feeling extremely good.

Mr. Smith: I was there too. I felt good too.

Mrs. Nelson: Yes, the Minister of Energy was also there, and he felt good.

Mr. Mason: I'm glad they're all feeling fine over there, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the AUMA's own report to its members said that "AUMA's executive recently met with Finance Minister . . ." – I'll leave out the name – "to protest this action and to urge the government to look at the feasibility of turning over control of the AMFC to municipalities under a system similar to the one in effect in British Columbia" and that "the minister rejected this idea," I will ask . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, later on this afternoon come and visit, and we'll go over the scripting of how to write a question. Come to the question, please.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given those comments from the AUMA, I would like to ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs why he didn't stand up for municipalities in this province when the Provincial Treasurer took away a hundred million dollars.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, quite the contrary. We had a very positive – it's proactive. Alberta is leading this country in dealing with environmental initiatives. I want to say that the Minister of Environment participated in the meeting. We have an infrastructure in place called Climate Change Central, which was the first of its kind in Canada. The Premier implemented this plan over four years ago, and we're going to embark on this partnership with the AUMA and other important stakeholders in terms of energy efficiency.

I would like the Premier to supplement.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member is getting his information.

Mr. Mason: From AUMA.

Mr. Klein: Well, maybe a member of the AUMA who obviously was not at the meeting. This was not a meeting to protest anything.

As the hon. Minister of Finance pointed out, the president of the AUMA led off by asking that the $100 million be returned. We said: well, let's put our minds together and see if we can come up with a better way if you want to use this money to address the problem of greenhouse gas reductions. We suggested a few ways in which this may be accomplished involving all municipalities. They were very receptive to the ideas.

I can tell you that the Minister of Finance was there, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Environment. I was there. Representatives of the AUMA were there. Everyone left. We all shook hands. It was a very enjoyable, a very cordial meeting. This scenario that the hon. member is trying to create through what I would suggest is serious misinformation is absolutely wrong, because the tone of that meeting was a very, very good tone. Indeed, it was a very cordial meeting, and we went away with an understanding that the AUMA and the government of Alberta worked together.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we have now spent seven minutes on two rather lengthy questions, which have raised answers of great length.

We're going to move on to the hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Infrastructure Canada/Alberta Project

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This morning I attended an official announcement of the ICAP program, the infrastructure Canada/Alberta project. The announcement was for 43 community infrastructure projects worth about $43.2 million. My question is to the Minister of Transportation, and it is around what role Alberta has played in the establishment of this project, in the funding formula for it, and the unique situation that Alberta finds itself in with this program as it unfolds, as I understand, across Canada. There were 43 projects announced, and I might add that six of them were in St. Albert.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Upon receiving notification that there were some funds available from the federal government in terms of a three-way partnership, we immediately wanted to ensure that the $171 million that Alberta committed to the program would be spent in such a manner as to get the best value for the taxpayer and also improve significantly a lot of the hard infrastructure in the province of Alberta.

What we did, to my knowledge the only jurisdiction in Canada, at least the first to do that, was involve our municipal partners in a committee not only to build the criteria as to how the program would proceed but also involve them in a management committee that looked at all of the project evaluations and made the decisions on the projects coming forward. This committee decided that as much money as possible should be invested into green infrastructure. This is water, sewer, improving roads. Some of it went into co-nominated money between the feds and the province in terms of buildings.

The hon. member is correct. We announced a number of projects today, and I'm happy to say that all of it went into hard infrastructure, into the ground where we really don't see it, but it certainly improves the quality of life for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Mrs. O'Neill: No, sir.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll introduce the first, who comes well decorated, the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Medicine Hat Tigers Red Deer Rebels

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the reason I stand before you today dressed in red and black is because I lost a bet. I had hoped that the Member for Red Deer-North would be standing in her place today dressed in orange and black making a similar statement to the one I'm about to deliver.

Last night the Medicine Hat Tigers met the Red Deer Rebels in game 7 of a hard-fought second-round play-off series. As you might have surmised from my dress, the Rebels won. Congratulations, Rebels. The people of Medicine Hat wish you all the best in your drive to the Memorial Cup.

More importantly, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Medicine Hat Tigers. To owners Darrell and Brent Maser, general manager Rick Carriere, head coach Willie Desjardins, assistant coaches Bryan Ellerman and Doug Lidster, and most importantly to every player who to a man played his heart out, congratulations on an outstanding season. Hockey fans in Medicine Hat haven't had this much fun in years. To the returning players, we look forward to an even more successful season next year, and to the players who will be moving on, may the years to come be as memorable and meaningful as the one just completed.

Mr. Speaker, go, Tigers, go.

The Speaker: Standing Order 2 actually provides the Speaker some leeway in terms of contingencies unprovided for, and I'll now call on the hon. Member for Red Deer-North to extend congratulations.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that it was an exciting series and that Medicine Hat outdid themselves and made Red Deer work to their best potential. I am very proud of the Medicine Hat Tigers, but I'm also very proud of the Red Deer Rebels, who will go on to fight in another series against either Regina or Brandon. We'll cheer them on as they end up fighting Kelowna and going to the Memorial Cup. I just want to say thank you very much to the people of Medicine Hat for making it very exciting for the people of Red Deer during the series.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Musical Montage 2003

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am so proud of our students from many schools in southeast Calgary for the effort they have put together in their performance at the Musical Montage last Monday at the Calgary Jubilee Auditorium. I want to recognize the excellent and dedicated work of teachers and parents to develop our youngsters through musical and performing arts.

Mr. Speaker, with your permission I want to take this opportunity to name the people who made this outstanding event possible for thousands in the audience and hundreds of performers: Bob Edwards school led by David Siemens, Chris Akkerman school led by Heather Nail, David Oughton school led by Corry Moriarty, Dr. Gladys Egbert school led by June Pearson, Erin Woods school led by Liz Pewtress, Ernest Morrow school band led by Erin Brinkman, Forest Lawn high school dance led by Sylvia Hayward, G.W. Skene school led by Anne Hodgson and Dian Goods, Langevin junior high school led by Harriet Siemens, Milton Williams school led by Barb Schantz, Mountain View school led by Carrie Stoesz-Johnston and Gail Langman, Penbrooke Meadows school led by Susanne Lee and Paul Toews. All of this is possible under the co-ordination of director Liz Gouthro, principal Stephanie Davis, and musical director Joan Sampson.

Thank you.

Education Funding

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, over the next few weeks many school boards across this province will be faced with difficult decisions as they enter their budget process for the next school year. They must face this task with revenues that were much less than expected, a change of funding for grade 10s resulting in lower financial support, and decreased funding for plant operations from Infrastructure. In addition to these shortfalls, they must also factor in an increase in salaries and benefits for teachers as a result of an arbitrated settlement.

School boards facing budget shortfalls will require staff reductions to balance their books. In one school board for every $7 million shortfall they will have to cut 100 staff. What makes this decision so difficult for school boards is that some of their brightest, enthusiastic, and least experienced teachers will be let go from jobs they love and will probably never return to the teaching profession. For example, a high school with 3,000 students could lose 10 staff.

To all school boards in the province: we thank you for your continued commitment and dedication to excellence in education for our students. Best wishes on your forthcoming deliberations as you try to maintain these high standards on severely restrictive budgets.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Henry Heuver

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize an outstanding Albertan, Henry Heuver, who was the first annual recipient of the Olds College partner of the year award. Mr. Heuver has dedicated countless hours to the college by chairing the Olds botanic garden committee and sitting as a director on the Olds College Foundation. Mr. Heuver was instrumental in the development of the beautiful Olds Botanic Gardens, which were officially opened in July of last year.

Mr. Heuver's passion has transformed the Olds College. As a man of vision he does whatever is needed to help turn the college into a living laboratory and increase the learning capacity for the students. Mr. Heuver plans to continue to play a major role in the next phase of the Olds College campus development, which will see a 16-hectare teaching and research wetlands project completed by 2005.

I'd like to take this opportunity to join with the staff and the students of the Olds College in thanking Mr. Heuver for his dedication to the Olds College and congratulate him on this well-deserved award.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Erle Rivers High School Boys' Curling Team

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is again my pleasure today to rise to recognize excellence in high school athletics, in particular to recognize an extraordinary team of athletes from the Erle Rivers high school boys' curling team. Recently the Erle Rivers team won gold in the provincial curling championships, which were hosted by J.C. Charyk high school in Hanna.

The Erle Rivers team consists of lead Chris Lindeman, second Craig Pittman, third Adam Thompson, skip Owen Conway, spare Jason Wehlage, coach Boyd Conway, and school representative Ken Brown. These young curlers continued the long tradition of the sport in its finest and most honourable form at this year's provincials. Curling demands sound tactics, solid teamwork, a deft touch, and nerves of steel. The Erle Rivers team displayed exceptional skill and excellence and strategy to capture the gold medal.

I would ask the Members of the Legislative Assembly to join me in congratulating all members of the Erle Rivers boys' curling team for their remarkable talent and their provincial championship win.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mill Woods wide events and the results of communitywide deliberations like the suggestions from our town hall on reducing crime are published. Volunteer sports organizations and Mill Woods groups like MCAR-FA keep residents informed of projects. Columns and advertisements from local, provincial, and federal political representatives serving Mill Woods are included. The newsletter is a unique source of information about community events and opportunities.

Congratulations to the Mill Woods Presidents' Council and those who work to bring the Mill Woods Newsletter to life each month. You make a huge contribution to better living in Mill Woods.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose is pretty proud, too, today. The hon. member.

Camrose Kodiaks St. Albert Saints

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was another important hockey game last night, and today the Camrose Kodiaks and their many fans and supporters are celebrating. Last night the Kodiaks emerged as the Alberta Junior Hockey League champions with a 1-nothing win against a formidable opponent, the St. Albert Saints. It was a fitting end to a thrilling seven-game series.

It was an extremely tight series, and both organizations should be commended on their great play. The coaching staff of both St. Albert and Camrose did amazing work with their respective teams.

Congratulations are especially given to the coaching staff of the Kodiaks, head coach/general manager Boris Rybalka and assistant coaches Doug Fleck and Miles Walsh.

The Camrose Kodiaks are owned and operated by the Camrose Sport Development Society, who are to be commended for their success with the team since entering the league just six years ago. This is the second Alberta Junior Hockey League championship for the Kodiaks in the past three years. Two years ago they went on to win the Royal Bank Cup Canadian championship. Now for the Kodiaks it's onward in representing Alberta in their quest for another Canadian championship.

Congratulations to the players, coaches, and all those within the Kodiak organization on their Alberta Junior Hockey League championship.

The Speaker: In terms of fairness might I again exercise the privilege accorded to the Speaker under 13(1) and call on the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to first of all congratulate the Camrose Kodiaks, who played very, very well in the seven-game series, but I'd like also to congratulate our St. Albert Saints, who with the Kodiaks spent many an hour on the ice during this series in overtime. While it was a 1-nothing game, indeed I think both teams played very well, and I'd like to congratulate the coaching staff, the owners, which is a community-owned team in St. Albert, and all of the players for their terrific sportsmanship and their wonderful play on the ice. Congratulations also to the St. Albert's Saints.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table copies of petitions containing the names of 190 Albertans who as residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to deinsure abortion through Alberta health.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with two different petitions today. One is signed by about 55 people from around the Edmonton region, and it says:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to consider a funding increase for public education to provide relief from the financial situation arising from the arbitrated settlement of the teacher's labour dispute.

The second is also signed by 50 or 60 residents of the capital city region, and it says:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly . . . to reject legislation that allows for the sale of municipal reserves and the privatization of the construction and ownership of publicly funded schools.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of three different studies done regarding the earned income tax credit, otherwise known as the incentive to work program, which is an alternative idea to raising minimum wages and which is credited with lifting 4.8 million people out of poverty in the United States.

I also rise to table the requisite number of copies of a report called Improving Effectiveness and Efficiency in Government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of 31 letters to the Minister of Health and Wellness requesting that Didsbury district health services be within the Calgary health authority.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you. I rise again, Mr. Speaker, to table the appropriate number of copies of letters from 34 Albertans asking the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to deinsure abortion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon, and it is a series of documents that were released yesterday in regard to Aquila corporation in America indicating that there was a net loss of $977.9 million U.S. for the quarter ended.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today, all with permission. The first is copies of a letter to the Minister of Learning from a constituent, the mother of four sons, who says among many things: "it has been very discouraging to me to witness continuing cutbacks in funding to our public education system."

The second is also from a constituent, Carleen Ellis, with permission. It's also expressing concern about the funding to public schools following the teachers' arbitration settlement last year.

The third one is also from constituents with permission, Catharine Compston and Dr. Paul Bird, writing to the Minister of Learning to express concern over increasing erosion to the public school system.

Finally, with permission copies of a letter sent to me, although it's addressed also to the Premier, from Rod McConnell expressing great concern over water policy and the possibility of a new tax on water, which the government is "preparing to impose on the citizens of Alberta."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I table five copies of a notice entitled Solutions for Schools, a notice of a public forum to be held on April 24 at the Provincial Museum which will focus on presenting funding solutions for Alberta schools. The forum will highlight a policy expert from Colorado, Dean Neu from the University of Calgary, parents, and two teachers, who will examine the way in which Alberta schools are financed and present some proposals which will see that system bettered.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. The first one is a letter that I received just a couple of days ago from Mrs. Cindy Jefferies, chair of the board of trustees of Red Deer public school district no. 104, in which she seeks our support for the trustees' request to the Minister of Learning to make some amendments to the School Act so that certain absences of insurance coverage for perils arising from terrorism, toxic mold, and cyber risk can be covered. Certainly, we'll be extending our support to that change.

The second tabling is appropriate sections of Judge Delong's report referring to the issues that I raised in my questions; namely, closing of hospitals and the resulting shortage of beds in Calgary, overcrowding in emergency rooms there, and the failure of the CHR to provide information in a timely and useful manner.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of page 133 of the financial report of the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation and an AUMA article called Budget Watch. The finance report indicates that on March 19, 2002, the government of Alberta transferred $100 million of AMFC's retained earnings to the provincial revenues. The AUMA article mentions that the government used the $100 million to offset the budget's shortfall and that the AUMA met with the Minister of Finance to protest this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Imputing Motives

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order, please, and I quote Standing Order 23(h) "makes allegations against another member," and (i) "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." This is in regard to an exchange in question period this afternoon between myself and the hon. Minister of Revenue.

The Minister of Revenue stated earlier – and I don't have the convenience of the Blues – that only two members from the opposition voted in support of Bill 207. Now, on November 21, 2001, in Hansard there certainly was a standing vote in regard to the matter of Bill 207, the Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, and certainly there were more than two members of the Official Opposition that voted in support of the motion. They were, for the record, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Against the motion there certainly were seven individuals from this Assembly. There were 42, as I said in my question, for the motion, but for the record, two that were against the motion were the hon. Minister of Revenue and the hon. Minister of Finance.

With that, I would now ask that there be a retraction and an apology not only to this member of the opposition but to the entire opposition benches because this was certainly a misrepresentation. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member has clarified from his perspective and perhaps from his caucus's perspective. I don't know what the position of various members of the Liberal caucus was on Bill 207. Hansard says what Hansard says, and it's available for the perusal of all members, but my understanding – I don't have the formal Hansard document in front of me – is that there was a recorded vote on November 21, 2001, and I think that that was the vote to report the bill from committee. There were two Liberals voting in favour and two Liberals voting against. That, of course, does not deal with all of the other votes that might have happened on second reading or third reading or in terms of other votes that might have happened in committee, and therefore we have to take the hon. member's representation that some members of their caucus may have been in support of the bill and some may have been against the bill.

I think that's clarified the situation. I don't think there's a particular point of order on this situation, but I think it is clear that on the one vote that we have a record of – and I certainly don't want to be encouraging recorded votes just so that we have a record of how everybody votes. Heaven forbid that we need to go through the process that we've gone through earlier on that. We cannot take a recorded vote on one vote on a bill as being the be-all and the end-all of how everybody voted on the bill.

So I think that on behalf of the government I'm prepared to accept the hon. member's submission that some members of the Liberal caucus were in favour of the bill and some members of the Liberal caucus were against the bill, and the exact numbers haven't been recorded for posterity nor is that necessary to do because in fact the bill was passed by this Legislature and awaits proclamation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is one of those interesting situations where perhaps it's best not to walk down the road that one wants to get involved in.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar raised a point of order. I'm going to read from chapter 13, the Rules of Order and Decorum, Marleau and Montpetit, with respect to the rules that govern certain activities.

Members may not speak against or reflect upon any decision of the House. This stems from the well-established rule which holds that a question, once put and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again. Such reflections are not in order because the Member is bound by a vote agreed to by a majority.

The chair has been quick to call attention to reflections on votes.

Now, this chair gives a lot of leeway in this Assembly and I guess would be standing up virtually 25 times during the question period if one were to enforce all the rules. So it's very clear that one is not supposed to reflect on votes, yet the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in his first question said the following: "42 stood in favour of more tax breaks for workers, seven stood against," which would sort of violate what we're supposed to be doing. So then when the point of order comes up and another member responds and basically makes the comment that certain people voted against something, that would have been a violation too, but it followed the first violation. So that sort of negates it all.

Now, I really don't want to go down this road, but we do have all the recordings published in the Journals. They're part of the historical record, and on page 132 of the First Session of the Twenty-fifth Legislature dealing with a vote held on May 23, 2001, on second reading with respect to the bill in question 46 members voted in favour of the motion, 11 against. I can read into the record who voted for and who voted against if you wish, which is part of the record already, but it's really not required.

Secondly, on November 21, 2001, there were actually two votes that occurred. The first vote occurred on an amendment. Forty-two voted in favour of the amendment. Seven voted against the amendment. Again, of the seven it's very clear to me which political organization the various members belong to. Then you turn over to the next page and then the question on the bill itself to be reported. Thirty-six voted in favour of the motion, nine against.

Now, in just this very little brief overview there were a number of numbers quoted, a number of statistics quoted, and it basically points out the reason why we're not supposed to reflect on votes in the House.

So if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar wants me to rule that there was a point of order because the hon. Minister of Revenue violated something, I must also rule that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar violated the rule by reflecting on the vote in his preamble. So we'll call that one a draw, and maybe we won't reflect on the votes in the future.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today during question period on my second question I was called to order for including a somewhat lengthy quotation in my second question, something which I accept as quite correct. However, when I rose to ask my third question, I was not permitted to ask that question, to put it to the minister, and my understanding is that too much time had transpired. Given that we often have very, very lengthy answers from particularly the Premier but also other ministers without intervention from the chair, I would ask under 13(2) for you to explain your decision in that matter.

The Speaker: The chair would be absolutely delighted to explain the decision. Let's see. First of all, the chair will begin by quoting to the hon. member Standing Order 2 of our Standing Orders.

In all contingencies unprovided for, the question shall be decided by the Speaker and, in making a ruling, the Speaker shall base any decision on the usages and precedents of the Assembly and on parliamentary tradition.

The chair would then refer the hon. member to Standing Order 13(1): "The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and shall decide questions of order."

Further, the chair would draw to the attention of all hon. members, starting at page 420 and continuing in Marleau and Montpetit, a section called Role of the Speaker During Question Period, and the chair would like to in essence quote the following.

The Speaker has often expressed concern that shorter questions and answers would allow more Members to participate. Since the Speaker retains sole discretion in determining the time that individual questions and answers may take, the Chair may interrupt any Member consuming more than a reasonable share of time in posing or responding to a question. While it is not the Chair's responsibility to determine the length of answers given during Question Period, the Speaker has pointed out to the House that, in the interests of fairness, questions should be as concise as possible in order to encourage answers of similar brevity and thereby allow the Chair to recognize as many Members as possible.

Today the chair has attempted to provide as many hon. members with an opportunity to participate in question period as possible, and today 15 hon. members did advise. Now, our rules – no, not our rules. Not our rules. A ruling by the chair determined a number of years ago that the order of the questions in question period would be the following: the first three questions would go to the Official Opposition, the fourth question would go to the leader of the second party, the fifth question would go to a government member, the sixth to an Official Opposition member, the seventh to a government member, the eighth to an Official Opposition member, the ninth to a government member, the 10th to an Official Opposition member, and the 11th would go to a member of the second party. So, in essence, what you would have in the first 11 questions is: the Official Opposition, which in this case has seven seats, would have six questions; the government, in this case with some 50 private members in the House, would have three; and the third party, with two members, would have two questions.

Now, today this is what happened in terms of length and brevity: the first set of questions took two and a half minutes, the second took four, the third took 6.5, and then we came to the fourth question. The leader of the third party consumed seven minutes in questions and answers. The fifth question took four; the sixth took six; the seventh took not very many; the eighth took three; the ninth took three; the 10th took three; and the 11th, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, two questions in seven minutes. At this point in time we got one more question in, and if I count out this time, our question period is 50 minutes, and between the leader of the third party and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands their questions and answers, albeit that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands only got two in, consumed 14 minutes of the 50, or 28 percent of the question period time, which, if anything, is disproportionate in terms of the opportunity for other hon. members to participate.

I repeat again, and I quote from Marleau and Montpetit:

While it is not the Chair's responsibility to determine the length of answers given during Question Period, the Speaker has pointed out to the House that, in the interests of fairness, questions should be as concise as possible in order to encourage answers of similar brevity and thereby allow the Chair to recognize as many Members as possible.

All the chair was trying to do was to be fair to all hon. members. I suspect that that's probably more of an explanation than the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands was seeking, but the chair would encourage him to review the statement just made by the chair in its totality prior to the next situation that may develop with respect to this.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: Good afternoon. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. I wonder if for our first consideration we would give consent in committee for a brief introduction of guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwofdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to introduce a very special guest who is in our members' gallery this afternoon. She has a keen interest in education issues and is here to listen to the discussion at the Committee of Supply stage for Learning. She is an active parent volunteer in the Hazeldean community, and I would invite Dawn Banner to please rise and receive the warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

The Chair: Any others? No?

3:00head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Learning

The Chair: I would ask if there are any comments or questions to be offered with respect to these estimates and business plans. We'll call on the hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's certainly an honour to be able to stand before you today and explain the budget estimates of the Department of Learning. Before I go any further, I would like to thank the House for supporting my ministry's budget in the past years. We've made education a priority, and the world is taking notice as countries seek our advice in improving their own education systems. They are striving for similar achievement test results as obtained by our students. So thank you very much to all Members of the Legislative Assembly for making that happen.

The estimates of Learning begin on page 275 of the '03-04 government and lottery fund estimates. Learning's business plan starts on page 295 of the Alberta 2003 budget document Making Alberta Even Better. These estimates further the excellence in our learning system and will continue to ensure that Alberta has one of the best learning systems in the world if not the best.

Again for the '03-04 year my ministry received the second largest dollar allocation of all departments. This demonstrates continuous government commitment to making education and lifelong learning a top priority for all Albertans. In this coming fiscal year total investment in our learning system will top $5 billion for the first time. This also includes $162 million of support to our opted-out separate school boards. This planned spending represents an increase to base program spending of $231 million, or a 4.8 percent increase. In addition, school boards will receive $20 million for textbooks and other classroom resources, and postsecondary institutions will receive $10 million in performance awards.

On page 285 of your estimates book operating support to public and separate schools has increased by $147 million, or 4.9 percent, to just over $3.1 billion. This budget provides school jurisdictions increased funding to operate their schools and provide a quality education to their students. The increase provides for, first of all, $77 million, or a 2 percent increase, in general grant rate adjustments. There's also $17 million, or 8 percent, for enrollment increases for students with severe special needs. There's another $20 million for technology upgrading and a $10 million increase in the SuperNet funding. Also included are $6 million for general enrollment growth and $17 million for annualized teachers' salary enhancement. Mr. Chairman, the $6 million for general enrollment growth is predicting an enrollment increase of .25 percent over the upcoming year. The $17 million for annualized teachers' salary enhancement is the continuation of the 4 percent and 2 percent that was announced two years ago.

We're also revising the funding framework to provide school boards the maximum flexibility to address student needs and local priorities. Mr. Chairman, this was a huge priority for the school boards, that they wanted and needed the flexibility in how they spend their money, and indeed in the new funding framework approximately 90 percent of the funding will be available in flexible terms for the school boards. In addition, we have renewed our commitment to the Alberta initiative for school improvement at $68 million a year.

There's also $44 million in other increases, including $5.7 million for curriculum supports through our Learning Resources Centre, about $1 million, or a 2 percent increase, in student health services, an increase of $29 million for teachers' pensions. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important number. Of the government's contribution of $268.3 million that goes directly to the teachers' pension plan, approximately 40 percent is for the unfunded liability and approximately 60 percent is for the ongoing increase.

Private schools will receive about $110 million in '03-04, an increase of $8.9 million. Mr. Chairman, this reflects the 60 percent funding component of the basic instruction grant and a projected 5 percent increase of students with mild and moderate special needs as well as an overall projected enrollment increase.

Mr. Chairman, in postsecondary education funding will increase to a total of approximately $1.3 billion in '03-04. This includes $1.1 billion for postsecondary institutions, an increase of $44 million, or 4.1 percent. Page 281 of the budget details how the $1.1 billion is allocated. The increase provides $22 million for a 2 percent operating grant rate increase, $12 million to maintain student spaces for apprentices, and $10 million to enhance accessibility and high-priority needs of study. In addition, there is $10 million in onetime performance funding to be awarded to institutions meeting key performance indicators including accessibility, quality, learner outcomes, and research.

Alberta's postsecondary system plays a critical role in the preparation of a highly skilled workforce as well as in the creation and application of new knowledge and technology. Our government is committed to ensuring that the system can continue to fulfill its role. In anticipation of questions, Mr. Chairman, the guidelines for the $10 million onetime access fund have not been put out yet. As well, the guidelines for the performance grants have not been put out yet. We are looking at modifying the KPIs, or key performance indicators, to ensure that they fully are responsive to what is needed within Alberta's postsecondary institutions.

Within the $1.1 billion as well, we will spend $113.1 million on the access fund to maintain expansion seats created within the postsecondary system. This includes about $12 million to maintain 5,000 training spaces created for apprentices, Mr. Chairman. The access fund is one of the best ways that we have to increase the size and enrollment of our postsecondary systems. In total 11,000 new postsecondary spaces will be created through the access fund in '03-04.

In addition to the direct funding to our postsecondary institutions, $18.9 million will be invested in community-based lifelong learning including inmate education, special English language training, family literacy opportunities, and another $5.5 million in interjurisdiction programs. Again to anticipate a question, the interjurisdiction programs are veterinary medicine at the University of Saskatchewan, optometry at the University of Waterloo, and orthotics and prosthetics at British Columbia Institute of Technology. These are incredibly important interjurisdictional relationships that we have, and it is something that we have to continue. As you know, there is no veterinary nor optometry school in Alberta, and it is through relationships such as these that we enable our students to complete veterinary medicine or optometry or orthotics and prosthetics.

I would now like to direct your attention to page 282, which is titled Assistance for Learners. In our continuous drive to create and maintain a well-educated workforce in Alberta, we strive to ensure that financial need is not a barrier to further education. While we recognize that the cost of postsecondary education is a shared responsibility between students, their families, and government, government does its share to maximize opportunities for students and keep debt levels down. In '03-04 the Alberta government will spend $55.3 million on needs-based bursaries and grants to students, $34.1 million on scholarships to about 20,000 students, $35 million to cover future costs of student loans issued, and $108 million to be disbursed as student loans. Loan limits are being increased to reflect the rising costs for all students. As well, the amount of additional loan assistance available to rural students who must move to attend a postsecondary institution will be increasing to $2,100.

When a first-time, first-year student's combined loans reach $5,000 per academic year, or $2,500 per semester, any further Alberta student loans assistance is provided as a nonrepayable loan relief benefit. Mr. Chairman, what we have attempted to do is keep that $5,000 level. That has been the level for the last three years, and as you have seen the loan limits go up, that $5,000 limit has stayed. In effect, what is happening is that any increase that has gone to the student loan program has indeed gone directly into the students' pockets in the form of nonrepayable student loans. It's commonly known and it's commonly understood among students in Alberta and among students in Canada that Alberta has the best student loan program in the nation, and that's something that we're extremely proud of and that we continue to move on.

Mr. Chairman, I will, if I may, anticipate one question that I'm sure is coming on the estimates, and that is in relation to what I have just been talking about, support to postsecondary learners. Indeed, what you see is the dollar amount going down from $134 million to $133 million. What we have been able to do in agreement with the Auditor General is decrease the amount of the future cost of student loans issued from $41 million to $35 million. In actual fact, it is freeing up an extra $6 million to put out to students through this because we do not have to hold back the future cost of student loans. This has been an agreement that the Auditor General and I have arrived at.

There are a lot of things that are included in this budget, Mr. Chairman. Our department continues to be one of the top departments in the world when it comes to learning. In the things that we do in Learning, whether it's curriculum revisioning, whether it's postsecondary education, again we continue to lead the world. Our postsecondary institutions are something to be extremely proud of. Campus Alberta is alive and well and is moving towards even bigger and better fruition. As I have told the Assembly in the past, there will be a new postsecondary act that will be coming this session, which will combine the four existing postsecondary acts into one act. Also included in this will be the ability for institutions to provide baccalaureate degrees where the quality is there. This could be such things as a bachelor of technology at NAIT or SAIT. It could be a bachelor of arts at Grande Prairie or a bachelor of nursing at Medicine Hat.

Mr. Chairman, for those hon. members who did not see the news on Monday, something happened that does not create much news in the city of Edmonton, but it's probably one of the most significant events for northern Alberta that has occurred in quite a while, and that is that NAIT has taken over Fairview College. This will enable the resources at NAIT, the programs of NAIT to be delivered onsite in Fairview, which will be a huge, huge benefit to the students of Grande Prairie, the students of Fairview, the students of Peace River, and the students in between.

Mr. Chairman, we continue to move along. This morning, for example, I okayed the new curriculum that will be coming forward. For your information, when I okayed the curriculum today as to what is going out, we will be looking at a new curriculum being in place in the years 2008, 2009, 2010 for different subjects. Again, what we have to realize in curriculum revisioning is that it does take us that long to move it along because we study, we field test, we ensure – we absolutely ensure – that our curriculum is the best in the world as it goes forward, and my curriculum department is certainly to be credited with that.

Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of people in the audience today who for some reason or another are undergoing some penance to be here, and I hope they enjoy what they're going to be seeing this afternoon.

I would invite the hon. opposition members to ask any questions, and I would give to them the undertaking that if there are questions that are not answered, we will be following up in Hansard and will be supplying the hon. members with written answers to those questions. So I understand it is back and forth between the opposition members and myself for the first hour.

Mr. Chairman, thank you very much for allowing me this opportunity to open the debate.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to review the estimates of the Department of Learning for this coming year. There's a great deal of financial information in the documents, and in anticipation of today's review I've been talking to a number of parents and a number of parent groups. I'd like to focus, if I could, for the first part of the questioning on the money that would be included in program 2. The minister can correct me if I'm wrong, but I believe that it's the money in program 2, page 278, the support for basic learning, once that money is approved, that forms pretty much the basis for the funding for school authorities, that from that we get a per pupil grant for grades 1 to 9 and we get a CEU for grades 10 to 12.

I have to admit, Mr. Minister, that the last funding manual I have is the one that appears on the Learning ministry's site. I just ran it off earlier today. It's dated September 2001, so the numbers I use may not be right. That funding manual indicates that for 2003-2004 the basic instruction grant will be $4,454 per funded student and that the CEU for grades 10, 11, and 12 will be $127.26 per CEU. So those are the figures that I've been roughly using, and they may be incorrect. I'm not sure that it matters that much. What I'd like to do, if I could, for those parents is to try to unpack that student funding and what the assumptions are that are built into that per student grant. How did the department decide that $4,454, if that's the figure, was the correct grant to pass on to school boards so that they could fund instruction or that $127.26 is the correct funding for each CEU? So I have a series of questions about the assumptions built into that number.

The first one is: what are the assumptions about teachers' salaries that are built into that number? Is it an average teacher's salary from across the province? What is the assumption that's built into the teacher's salary for a classroom teacher? In terms of principals' salaries what assumption is built into that? I've looked at the assumptions from some other jurisdictions, and they have used average costs across their jurisdiction, so I wondered what ours was and how it was arrived at. I'd like to know what the certified employee hourly wage rate is that is built into this grant.

I'd like to know the core instructional staff that is assumed by the number. For instance, in kindergarten what is the assumption in terms of how many youngsters there'll be in a kindergarten, and with respect to grades 1 to 9 again what are the assumptions in terms of class sizes? I know that from elsewhere there's a wide range of assumptions. I think that for the last jurisdiction I looked at, they assumed a class size of 24 or 25 for grades 4 through 9, and that was built into their per pupil grant. So I'd like to know the number of students that it's assumed will be in classrooms across the province so that this rate could be determined.

I'd like to also know what the assumptions are about specialized staff: music, physical education, art, second language, reading specialists, those kinds of individuals. Are there specialist assumptions based on this number, and if those assumptions are there, how do you determine that, yes, we will be funding music specialists or we'll be funding art specialists or phys ed specialists, that we expect there'll be this number in the province and then that gets reflected in the instructional grant?

One area where the information is readily available is for students with severe disabilities: the severe mental, multiple, physical/medical, deaf, or blind disability. According to the funding manual I have, they're funded at $13,382 per student, and I'd like to know: what percentage of the student population does the government assume will draw upon that grant? That is, what is the student population that will be eligible for that $13,000 grant, the percentage of the students in the student population with severe disabilities? And, if I might, the percentage of students that the Learning department expects will be eligible for the severe emotional/behavioral disability grants, which are part of the students with severe disabilities, and that grant is $12,180 per eligible student. Again, some indication of the percentages of those students that the Learning department assumes will have to be funded across the province when they're drawing up the budget.

Similarly, if I might, Mr. Chairman, the funding for English as a Second Language, the ESL funding, according to this grants manual is $759 per funded student, and may I ask: what percentage of students, again in the student population, does the Learning department expect to serve or draw upon that grant?

In terms of substitute teachers is there assumption built into this in terms of how many substitute teachers will be required across the system so that it can be reflected accurately in the per funded student grant?

The assumptions that are built in for professional development. This funding, as I understand it, would have to include funds for professional development. What assumptions did the government have when they determined the formula this year, what assumptions about professional development, and what is the basis? How do they make those assumptions? Do they assume so many professional development days for a school? I look at some of the funding formulas from elsewhere. For instance, in a thousand-student high school it's assumed that it'll take a full-time equivalent each year to provide the professional development for teachers. Again, what is the assumption built into it?

The supplies, books, and materials. What is going to be the number that's used so that the $4,454 per student would be deemed adequate? I wonder if we can get the numbers with respect to classroom materials and equipment. Is that included in here, or would that be somewhere else? There's a whole section on supplies, books, and materials. How much out of this $4,454 was dedicated to supplies, books, and materials?

I have a number of other questions. The funding manual on the government's web site indicates that SuperNet access funding is to be announced, and I wonder if that has now been determined. There was a second one that I had. I've lost my place. Sorry. I'll have to come back to it later. There were a couple of other funds.

The question is: are supplies, books, and materials included, I guess, under the learning resources, the $10.75 credit per student? Would that account for all of that: copying, texts, classroom materials, and equipment? Is that what the $10.75 covers, and if that's true, how is it determined that $10.75 would adequately cover the needs of a school if that's the allocation there?

The technology integration allocation of $45 per funded student. Again the question is: how did the department determine that $45 was going to be adequate for schools to meet the requirements for technology integration? Similarly, with the early literacy initiative of $231 per student how did the government decide that $231 was an appropriate amount?

The questions I have asked, Mr. Chairman, are really very detailed, and I don't expect it's the kind of information that the minister carries around in his back pocket, but I think it's really very important information for parents who, understandably, look at the budget, and many of them read the numbers, the $2,277,286,000 that are going to be spent on support for basic learning, and their eyes sort of glaze over. I think it's at the level of that per pupil grant that it starts to become more meaningful to them, and I think it can shed a great deal of light in terms of the way that the budget is constructed. I think it provides a strong rationale for the government in terms of how the budget has been built.

3:30

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We'll certainly endeavour to talk in some general terms about the questions that were asked, and for any specifics that have been asked that I do not answer, again, I have people who will review Hansard and make sure that the answers are given to the hon. member.

The first set of questions that the hon. member has asked is: what rationale have we got for the numbers? In essence, what dollar amount have we placed for teachers' salaries, have we placed for principals' salaries? Mr. Chairman, one of the important things that we do in budgeting is we allow flexibility for the school boards. It is a well-known fact that teachers' salaries are different all over the province. In some areas, like Edmonton public, they're up to around $72,000 as the average salary and benefits. In other areas they're down around $65,000. What we do is provide the basic package of dollars for the school boards in which they can then use those dollars as they see fit. I believe that that's very important in the local decision-making process. If we were to completely itemize, for example, how much a teacher costs, to me, you know, there is a question as to how that relates to bargaining, how that relates to a lot of things.

So what we in essence do, Mr. Chairman, is provide a onetime grant, and the actual numbers that the hon. member used were pretty close. There were a few discrepancies to what are actually located in the budget, but I will go over some of these because I do feel that they are important. First of all, in grades 1 to 9 the first number that is utilized is $4,454, which is the amount that each and every student receives. To put that in perspective, for a class of 25, say, just for comparison, we're up to $111,350. You then add in those students that have severe special needs. You can add in early literacy. You can add in sparsity and distance. All of these different issues are then added on top. To give you an example, a severely disabled student, a cognitively disabled student, would receive – and I apologize for my taking time here, but I will get the exact number – $17,836 from the basic grant as well as the severely disabled grant. That is what they would be receiving through the jurisdiction. Again, what the school boards have asked us for is flexibility on how these dollars are used.

Another question that the hon. member asked was: what percentage of the school population is severely disabled? Again, Mr. Chairman, this is something that we have changed quite significantly in the past few years. When I first became minister, there was a cap on the number of students who would qualify for severely disabled. One of the first things I did as minister was take off that cap because it didn't make a lot of sense to me to not pay when the students were there to need it. What that moved into was the whole idea of assessing each and every student around the province, and what soon became very evident is that we were spending thousands and thousands and indeed hundreds of thousands of dollars to have students assessed. That was purely there to get funding. So what it was in essence was an assessment for funding, and to me that wasn't a very good utilization of the school dollars.

So what we have now evolved into is a system where we look at the profiles of every jurisdiction in the province and then extrapolate that number forward in anticipation of the number of students. So, for example, Mr. Chairman, to put it quite simply, if a school jurisdiction three years ago had 100, the next year had 110, the next year had 120, the next year 130, well, what we would anticipate this year is 140. It has worked very well. We instituted it two years ago, and there have been some complaints. Whenever there is a complaint, we go in and audit and take a look at what the actual number of students is and fund accordingly. What we found is that this greatly diminishes the amount of administration that is needed for the severely disabled students. A good example would be a blind student. Quite frankly, what we had to do in the old system was we had to have the child assessed every three years to see if they were still blind. [interjection] Yeah, I agree. That was something that was kind of silly and realistically was a waste of money, so we have moved away from that.

Another point that the hon. member raised – and this is very important – is the technology integration. The member is right; it's around, I believe, $44 per student. That doesn't sound like an awful lot, Mr. Chairman, but let me put it in a slightly different perspective, and that is that it's $20 million on a per year basis. If you went out today and bought $20 million of computers, if you used it specifically for technology, specifically for hardware – and I fully recognize that there are other needs such as software, other divisional needs – you would probably get over 20,000 computers put into the school system each year. That's for a school population of roughly 580,000 students. So that's a tremendous amount. The important thing about the technology grant is that it is an add-on to the per student grant. It was not anticipated to be exclusively the only money that could be used or would be used for technology. Again, this is included in the flexibility that is given to each individual school board.

The other point that I wanted to talk about – and there are lots of them – is that ESL students now receive $736 per ESL student. Again, that is an actual amount. It is an extrapolated amount. To put it into perspective, if you have 10 ESL students, you're receiving about 7 and a half thousand dollars.

Another point I want to make that was raised is the CEUs. We're now up to $127.27 per CEU. For grade 10 students that are on 31 or more credits, they would receive $5,097. The partial program, which is less than 31 credits, would receive $2,548.50. So, Mr. Chairman, if you had a student that was doing 15 credits or 20 credits under this plan that we instituted, you would receive 2 and a half thousand dollars as opposed to slightly under $2,000. So it is not ideal. The CEU credit program is a much better program.

I will say, however, that we have had some large issues with the CE programs. I've said in this Assembly numerous times that there were some students that were taking in excess of 80 credits, much of it due to CTS credits, and I will for the benefit of the Legislative Assembly just give one example, Mr. Chairman. I believe this illustrates the issue that we have with the CEUs, and that is – and I want all members to listen to this. We had one particular high school that played music over the intercom at lunch hour. For that music over the intercom at lunch hour $129,000 was claimed. Each student was given one credit to listen to the music over the intercom at lunch hour. That is not the intent of CTS courses. CTS courses are a very valuable add-on to the education system, and this is obviously playing with the system in order to receive funding. Albeit the CEUs have a huge advantage – and that huge advantage quite literally is to ensure that there are different learning opportunities for our students – what we have seen over a period of time is that there have been some severe issues with this.

What we are doing this year is we are retaining the full-time funding in grade 10 of $5,097 per student, $2,548.50 per part-time student, and what we are doing is asking the school jurisdictions to monitor the CEUs through a new accountability mechanism that will ensure that things such as what I have talked about do not continue to happen. I will say, just for the record, that this school was not in Edmonton. There are numerous schools around the province that have done this, and we really do have to be very, very careful as to what we are funding because it is taking money away from the other school boards. It is a closed pot, so the more money that one school jurisdiction claims for those dollars, the less another one has the ability to claim.

I believe in the CEU program. I believe in the learning opportunities that that program gives to students, but we do have to get the accountability back. I cannot justify as Minister of Learning to spend $129,000 to have a high school listen to music over their intercoms at lunch hour. I don't believe that any taxpayer in Alberta would justify that expenditure. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, in keeping with that, the Auditor General raised this as an issue itself. So it is something that we have acted upon, and we will be implementing the accountability component. We are hoping that if the accountability component follows through like we think it will, the full funding for the CEU credits will be back in September of 2004 provided that the accountability is there.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the opposition would like to ask some more questions. Thank you.

Dr. Massey: I want to make it very, very clear to the minister that I wasn't asking for a rigid set of constraints to be placed on school boards. What I was asking for were the assumptions, and surely there had to be some assumptions about salaries for the Learning department to come up with this. If you look at how those templates are applied, they're applied globally, so you come up with a number. The money that goes out to a school district, as the minister appropriately says, should be flexible. If they want to spend the money on more teachers' aides and fewer teachers, then that's up to them, but at least there's the assurance from the province that there is a teacher for each classroom, that there's a basic amount of money there for textbooks, that no school should want for the technology they need. It's a way of arriving at the figure. How the money is actually spent is up to the school boards, and in terms of the school boards sending their money out to the schools, the same thing happens. They say: "This is what we're allowing you for teachers. This is what we're allowing you for maintenance. How you use it is up to your individual circumstances." It's really critical. It's at the base of school-based budgeting. There were times when schools were being painted out of central office and didn't have science textbooks, and that really upset teachers and principals.

Please don't misunderstand me. I'm not asking for rigidity; I'm asking for the assumptions. There have to be some reasons for these numbers to be here, and that's really what was at the base of my questions.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the Minister of Learning for introducing his budget and for making some preliminary and helpful observations on the budget and how he sees it holding a promise for improving the education system that we have. Certainly, the business plan talks about commitment to "continuous improvement of the learning system," and I am willing to assume that when making decisions on the budget, the minister certainly had that goal as an important goal in front of him.

In the budget, Mr. Chairman, as the minister has outlined, although there's an overall increase which would suggest that the total money being spent will be going up by some 4 percent or a little more, the fiscal plan clearly outlines how this increase will be distributed across different functions of the system. A 2 percent increase in basic instructional grants is built into the system. A 3 percent increase in student transportation grants funding and funding for estimated increases of one-quarter of a percent in the overall enrollment increase. An 8 percent increase in students with severe disabilities. Twenty million dollars for technology upgrading is part of a three-year $61 million commitment. So I just want to make sure they accurately refer to the numbers here. It's those numbers that I will be using in making my observations and asking questions.

Now, the increase in basic instructional grants will be 2 percent, and the inflation rate, I guess, over this year, 2002-2003, according to the government's own numbers will equal 3.7 percent. If you look at some other sources, actually Stats Canada's consumer price index for Alberta between February 2002 and February 2003, this twelve-month period, will be 6.9 percent according to them. But even if we take the lower figure of 3.7 percent in the 2003 calendar year as the rate of inflation, then I would ask the minister to address the discrepancy between the 2 percent increase in basic instructional grants when the inflation rate, as the government's own official sources indicate, during this calendar year will be 3.7 percent. How is that discrepancy to be addressed? The minister would I hope make some comments on that.

The issue of class sizes is an important one for Albertans. I had the pleasure of appearing before Alberta's Commission on Learning, that the minister established last year, among the hundreds and hundreds of other Albertans, and that commission's work is in progress at the moment. It will be coming back to I guess the minister and to this House with a final report sometime in the fall, but what the commission has heard so far are very serious concerns, almost the universal concerns across this province, expressed by everybody who has appeared before the commission on class size and the increasing diversity of our student population. So this increasing complexity and diversity of the learning population combined with the growing class sizes is a challenge that I was hoping and certainly parents and school boards were hoping that this budget would address, and I would like the minister to comment on it given the fact that we already have the highest student/teacher ratio in the country.

I'm referring to the student/teacher ratio in the country. The government's only poll, released January 19, 2002, found that average class size in grades 1 to 3 was 23 students per class; average class size in grades 4 to 6, 25 students per class; average class size of grades 1 to 6 is 24 students; and average class size of kindergarten, 20 students per class. Seventy-five percent of the classes have an average of four students with special needs. The average of these classes is 23.3 students per class. Forty-one percent of the classes have 25 or more students. These are numbers, I guess, that are the minister's own.

Using those numbers, my information is that that puts Alberta at the top in terms of average class size in the country, so the question is: given the budgetary allocations, the minister's commitment to seeking "continuous improvement of the learning system," and it being, I think, generally agreed that class size and classroom conditions are a key to seeking this continuous improvement of the learning system, how will the budget numbers that we've just referred to contribute to this and support that very noble objective that the minister sets in the business plan for the children and the families of Alberta?

The other concern, Mr. Chairman, that emerges from this budget allocation, the budget that we are debating, the estimates that we are looking at, is now coming forth with much more clarity. The minister was asking the House and certainly members on this side of the House to wait until the budget was presented before we begin raising concerns about teacher layoffs and the possibility of growth in class sizes. I just looked at the Calgary Herald report this morning, and the Calgary board of education is now saying that having looked at the budget numbers, it is predicting at least a $35 million shortfall for this year and the next year. It's a very dramatic number. The minister can no longer deny that the boards haven't looked at the provincial budget yet; therefore, they can't make these comments.

Similarly, Mr. Chairman, the situation with Edmonton public is just as bad. According to the board the budget of the school board will be burdened with a minimum of a $10 million deficit as they move into the current year, and by next year their problems are only going to get worse. They are contemplating having as many as 350 fewer teachers. Whether it comes through layoffs or whether it happens through natural attrition, it doesn't really matter from the point of view of parents who have children in school. What they want to see is the relation between the number of students that are being served and the number of teachers available to serve them. The loss of at least 350 teachers is predicted.

I want the minister to now comment on the numbers. He has undertaken what he at one time called an audit of the Edmonton public school board expenditures. He later, I think, used a more precise and more accurate term to call it an operational review. There are certainly clear differences between what the minister's opinion is with respect to the shortfall for the year just ended for the Edmonton public school board. The Edmonton public school board insists that it's short by $10 million at a minimum while the minister continues to insist it's $5 million.

Whatever the amount, it's an amount that will have to be paid back. With the increases in class sizes, with the loss of teachers, and with other expenditures that are growing and the big gap between the increase in the per pupil grant rate of 2 percent and the inflation rate, which will be at least 3.7 percent and could be much higher if we were to refer to the cost of living increases in Alberta over the last year, how are the school boards supposed to be coping with it? Can the minister assure the House and through it the parents who have very grave concerns about the continued underfunding of our schools that the minister's budget will not lead to teacher layoffs or loss in the total number of teachers by our school boards?

I just mention, too, Mr. Chairman, that there are other school boards which are in a similarly precarious position. Edmonton Catholic has already expressed very, very serious concerns about losing teachers and not being able to maintain the quality of education because of their fear that class size will grow and learning conditions in general will deteriorate in light of what they know about what this budget and these estimates are promising. Elk Island school board is another one, Grande Prairie school board is yet another one, and I could continue to name more school boards. There are many, many school boards which do not see this budget as helping them to address in a satisfactory and adequate way the educational needs of the students that they are responsible for. The minister will, I'm sure, be in a position to comment on this.

I want to briefly and quickly turn to the postsecondary situation. There is a table here that I want to draw the minister's attention to in the business plan, page 302, and the table is related to outcome 2.2, "Learners complete programs." I find that I have some very serious concerns about the numbers that the minister's department quotes there with respect to "Educational Attainment of Albertans aged 25 to 34." This is the only number here that has a comparative basis. Alberta, being the richest province, having an economy which is expanding we are told at the fastest rate, has an educational attainment rate which is lower at the postsecondary level than the national average. We have jurisdictions in this country, other provinces here, who are far poorer, far less endowed with revenues and resources than this province. This national average of 62 percent includes all of those provinces from Saskatchewan to Newfoundland to Manitoba, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and P.E.I., and we have an attainment rate which is 4 percent lower than the national average.

Now, this is the province where I hear a great deal of talk about growing shortages and continuing shortages of skilled workers and their availability and the commitment of this ministry and this minister along with the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to create conditions and make commitments and investments on behalf of this government to make sure that these skill shortages don't remain a problem. Now, given these numbers here that I've just quoted, I'd like the minister to perhaps reflect on what the ramifications are of this gap between the national average of people with postsecondary qualifications in Alberta and the national numbers there. What are the ramifications of it, and how do the current budget estimates address this gap between the provincial and the national numbers on the one hand and the well-acknowledged problem of continuing and perhaps growing shortages in certain occupational areas? I think the minister of human resources referred to about 35 different occupational groups where we have shortages.* Maybe the Minister of Learning has knowledge of those occupations too, so maybe he can refer to some and draw the attention of the House to how this budget is so designed as to at least address the shortages in some of those occupational areas. These are the people with skills whose availability is crucial to the continuing growth in the economy and the ability of our industries and institutions to have available to them the people with those skills that they need.

A couple of other questions here, Mr. Chairman, to the minister. Here I refer to the document that I'm sure the minister also has received. We have received it from the Council of Alberta University Students, CAUS. It's a February 2002 document, a year-old document. The title of the document is Alberta's Tuition Policy: Ensuring Affordability, Accountability, Accessibility, Predictability and Quality. The students are very concerned about the tuition fee burden. The minister is aware of it as much as I am. He has in his introductory remarks tried to address this issue.

Here are some of the facts before us, and then I'll have a few questions on this. Every student debt, I guess, is $18,000. This includes students in two-year programs as well as in four-year programs. So that's an average. University students have a much higher debt load, I would think. I'd like you to address that.

The business plan addresses affordability and the accessibility issue. The strategies it lists in my view will not have a direct impact on the growing student debt load. In 2001-2002, at least, we know that in terms of the public's satisfaction only 65 percent of the public were satisfied that the learning system is within the means of most Albertans. The question is of affordability and not just the number of spaces available but for students and families to purchase those spaces, if you want to use that term. Only 65 percent, and that's a very low percentage, in my view. About one-third of Albertans deem the system to be unaffordable. Is there any commitment on the part of the minister to increase this level of satisfaction, and what are the segments of the budget which will help raise this level of satisfaction to a higher one? In my view it should be closer to perhaps 80 percent, not 65 percent.

The Chair: Hon. member, your 20 minutes are up.

Dr. Pannu: I have one more question, Mr. Chairman. Then I'll sit down.

The Chair: You can go unlimited time.

Dr. Pannu: Okay. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll just comment to the hon. member that the chairman was so engrossed with what you were saying that he didn't realize that 20 minutes were up. [interjection] No. That's what I mean. He was.

Mr. Chairman, what I'll attempt to do is answer as many questions as I can here, and again the same offer applies to the opposition in that I will get back to him with any answers that I am unable to answer here today.

First of all – and I'll go from the last question backwards, if I may – the increased level of satisfaction. Obviously, that is something that is extremely important to us, and indeed that's one of our measures in our business plan, as well. The interesting point when you actually look at that document – and I apologize because I don't have that document in front of me, and I haven't seen it for probably three or four months – is 65 percent of the adults and the parents and the people feel that education is affordable; 35 percent believe it's unaffordable. One of the interesting points in that study as well is that they actually feel that tuition fees are in the $6,000 to $7,000 range and are considerably higher than what tuition fees are. What my department and I have realized – and I think that this was a very good study from that point of view – is that the information is not out there for the students about what the actual tuition costs are, what the actual costs of the system are, what the actual costs of an education are. This was a very good study that these guys did, and consequently we have embarked upon a campaign to update what high school students know about tuition, to update our web site, to make our web site more user friendly, to make information about student loans more available to students, and again I feel that that's something that's extremely important.

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

The hon. member also talked about the affordability of education, and the way I will answer that is that our tuition policies are such that it can go up at most around $275 per year, Mr. Chairman, and I'll give an anecdote, if I may. I attended the hockey game on Sunday night, which was an excellent hockey game, by the way – and I've been an Edmonton Oilers fan for years – but as I walked in, there were some students who started chanting and making some remarks at me. But the interesting component was that each one of these students had on an Oilers jersey, which is probably around $100. I'm assuming that their seat to the hockey game was probably around $120 or $100, so there's $200 right there. I would bet money that they probably had a beer a two, which was about $5 to $10 there. So in that one evening these students who were chiding me about the cost of education spent more than their tuition fees would increase for their total year in education. I'm not trying to make assumptions on that, but I think it's an interesting analogy as to the priorities of how people spend money.

I'll correct the hon. member on one thing; that's debt. The university undergraduate debt level is $18,871, for colleges it's $10,679, and for technical institutes it's $10,118. That's the average net indebtedness in '01-02 by institution and program. For graduate or professional degrees the average is $28,800, and I believe that puts us at about the second or third lowest in the country when it comes to net indebtedness of students that go forward. Again, a lot of this has to do with our tuition fee policy, which is included in here, and our student loan policy, which allows for students who qualify for the full amount of student loan to have no more than $5,000 debt per dual semester, per year.

Again, quite astutely the hon. member picked up a very interesting issue with Alberta society, and I'll use Alberta society as the starting point in this discussion. On page 302 of the business plan what it shows is that the educational attainment of Albertans aged 25 to 34 is at 58 percent for postsecondary and 89 percent for high school. I'll preface this by saying that the number of people in Alberta who have a postgraduate degree is the highest in Canada, at about 54 or 55 percent. So what is the difference? What has happened here?

Well, there are a lot of theories on this. My personal theory is that because we have so many jobs in construction, because we have so many jobs in the apprentice industry, because our economy is going so full tilt, a lot of students instead of postsecondary education have opted for the trades, have opted to go into jobs directly. Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member knows full well, when a student, for example, says that they're going to take one year or two years off to go and work for a little while, often they continue to work and do not come back. So that may be the cause of that.

Is that something that I'm happy with? No. Quite frankly, I'm not, and it's something that we need to increase. We need to increase the number of postsecondary education students that we have in this province – and that is certainly a goal – and that's why our goal is continuing to increase the number of Albertans 25 to 34 with postsecondary education. It's very important.

Mr. Chair, as you can see, on measure D it says that the universities were up to 66 percent of a completion rate, 59 percent for colleges and technical schools. So there are a lot of different issues that are at work here. Again, though, I feel that it's my job as Learning minister to attempt to get as many qualified students as possible into the postsecondary system and ensure that they do in fact finish postsecondary education to go on and get jobs in Alberta.

I just will add one plug, if I may, and please take it as such, and that is something that's very important. As everyone here knows, one of the largest issues in governments around the country is the cost of health care. Indeed, in this budget we see approximately a 7.2 percent increase in health care. I will put in a plug and say that the number one health determinant is level of education.

So take with that what you may, but again it is this department's goal to increase the number of students in our postsecondary system and indeed to increase the number of students who have access to postsecondary institutions, whether it be through on-line learning, whether it be through campuses around Alberta. The ones I talked about earlier were NAIT and Fairview College, and I will add that there are at least two other jurisdictions that are looking at some very considerable changes that will help students in rural Alberta.

Another interesting point – and if I can hit over to the basic side – the hon. member raised some issues about class size, and first of all I don't know what information the hon. member has about class size, but I would caution him on comparing actual class size to student/teacher ratio. I believe the numbers that the hon. member read out were class size, which was done on a polling of the various schools around the province. Indeed, in this year we received something like a 95 percent success rate in getting that information back. I would caution the hon. member in comparing it to pupil/teacher ratio because for our own benefit as well I could stand up here and say that our pupil/teacher ratio was 17 or 16 or 18. It doesn't really mean anything because a lot of the teachers employed in administration are not employed in the classroom. So what we chose to do was get an accurate assessment, an accurate picture of what is happening in the classroom when it came to classroom size and actually poll the students, find out what the numbers were.

The other point that I will add is that we're in the process of tabulating our data now, but the class size for this year, for '02-03, is very similar and, indeed, just a bit lower than last year. So from a statistical point of view it has remained unchanged.

Another interesting dilemma when it comes to class size – and I apologize for going on to this, but the hon. member has raised this. One of the great things about Stats Canada is that they analyze data that we have, and they bring back a lot of issues that are very statistically significant but issues that we don't have the capacity to analyze. The last one that came back from Stats Canada showed a huge difference between rural and urban education and rural and urban educational achievement right across Canada.

Mr. Chair, the interesting point on this is that the rural students did worse than the urban students. As we know, for those of us who are in rural Alberta, as a general rule – there are some exceptions – class size is significantly smaller in rural Alberta than it is in urban Alberta. I think the answer is very obvious, but the question is: what role does class size play in this? The answer is: probably a very limited role because the class size in urban centres tends to be larger than the class size in rural. If it were a strict 1 to 1 or 1 to 2 ratio, we would see that in these results, but we're not.

Therefore, there are other factors at play here, some other very important factors which lead to the decision-making that we have done. That is that the school boards need the flexibility and the grassroot teachers, the grassroot principals need the flexibility to design their classrooms with the needs of the students in mind, and indeed numbers of students play into that also. It's a very interesting dilemma on the urban versus rural, but it is something that we are attempting to get to the bottom of. The difference is statistically significant, so we have to find out. The onus is on us as the Department of Learning to find out why.

Another thing that the hon. member raised was the inflation rate, and he will be pleased to know that the cost of living is actually a component of the new funding formula, and what it is based on is 20 percent versus 80 percent. The 80 percent is salaries, which the cost of living does not play into, but for the 20 percent of supplies, of other needs cost of living does play into that, and that is what is reflected in the new funding formula. To put it in perspective, Mr. Chairman, for those of us who are in southeastern Alberta, Medicine Hat for example, on a scale of 100 Medicine Hat would be at roughly 98 and Calgary would be at 110. So there's probably a 10 to 12 percent difference in cost of living, cost of supplies between Medicine Hat and Calgary, and that level becomes exaggerated even more when we move to communities like Fort McMurray or Grande Prairie. So for that reason it is included in the new funding formula as a variable that will be instituted.

Another issue that the hon. member raised was the actual grants, and he is right that there is 2 percent, or $77 million, for the per student grant, but there's also an 8 percent increase for the special-needs students. There's also a 3 percent increase for transportation.

Probably one of the most significant numbers, though, is something that is not in this budget that is seen for school boards around the province, and that is their enrollment. Obviously, we fund on a per student basis. A very, very significant issue to the school system in Alberta is declining enrollment. We have some jurisdictions that are seeing a decline of 3 to 4 percent per year, and that is very, very serious when you have to have staffing. You have to adjust the staffing to reflect that decrease in enrollment. Indeed, even in places like Calgary, where we're seeing a huge number of people, a huge expansion in Calgary, the actual predicted enrollment at Calgary public is down .79 percent. To put that in perspective, that's probably about 600 or 700 fewer students next year than what they have this year. That is significant, Mr. Chairman. It's very significant. So it is an issue that they have to deal with. It's an issue that they have to look at: 600 fewer students. I will say that 600 fewer students is good news for them because they were actually increasing their amount of students back to levels that they were five to 10 years ago. Calgary Catholic is also showing a decrease of .22 percent, which is not nearly as bad, but it is significant.

So I believe I've answered most of the questions, and any that I have missed we will get to you in writing if I can. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Obviously, we have lots of questions. We have limited time. So I'll focus on a few.

The minister's comments on there being no one-to-one relationship between class size and educational achievement of students is an interesting one. Class size is a critical factor but not the only factor in student achievement, and I'm sure the minister recognizes this.

I'm comparing rural/urban areas. I think one major set of differences between urban and rural areas is that because, as he says, of the sparsity of population in rural areas, schools normally don't have as good a specialized staff. I taught in them many years ago – that was 40 years ago – and taught seven subjects, you know, from high school to grade 8, so I know the challenges there. It's not just the class size. My classes were smaller. My burden of teaching was much higher and challenges were much higher because I had a huge number of different subjects to attend to, and students don't get as good a quality of instruction under those conditions.

Small class size does not in itself determine the educational outcome. There are a number of other factors that play into it. There is the question of psychological services, library services, and other things that vary between urban and rural areas. Concentration of the population allows schools to offer those services that may not be available to every student who goes to a rural school. Those factors have to be taken into account, so he's not off the hook easily simply by drawing attention to the fact that out in the rural areas class sizes are small. The student achievement may be not as good as in the urban areas. I just wanted to draw his attention to it.

His own class size study that his department commissioned here in Edmonton demonstrated beyond a doubt that smaller class size, particularly in early grades, makes a huge difference. Then to ignore this, you know, in making decisions in the budget, I think is something – and I have a kind of worry that the minister doesn't seem to be fully seized of the importance of class size and educational outcomes and student achievement, particularly in the lower grades, especially in those neighbourhoods in urban areas with a great deal of diversity. There are students with special needs, including English not being their first language. So class size is hugely important, and it's something that I think is not adequately addressed.

My other question to the minister has to do with a question that we've been dealing with in the House since the presentation of the budget: the school property tax issue. Since last week we have been debating whether or not the government has in fact decided to collect more revenues from this particular source of revenue than it had made a commitment to do two years ago in the budget, in writing. That is indeed the case, and that's never been acknowledged. However, the Minister of Finance, in answering my questions here in the House and questions of other members, has implied that the extra school property taxes will flow into the education budget, into schools. [interjection] No. There are two items there, two lines there. In the 2003-04 Government and Lottery Fund Estimates, page 279, there are two items there. There's the opted-out item, but that's not what I'm talking about. I'm talking about the other one, Alberta school foundation fund. More than $1 billion is taken out of the operating support to public and separate schools. It's not added to. I want the minister to comment on it. I think the Minister of Finance was incorrect in saying that the money goes into. You can see your own numbers here. The government's own budget estimates give a very different picture. They challenge the explanation that the Minister of Finance gave. That's the one that I'd like the minister to comment on in particular.

I want to correct myself, Mr. Chairman. I think I mentioned 32 or 35 occupations where there would be shortages.* I think there are 22 rather than 32. The minister, if he chooses to, can certainly comment on those numbers and say which occupational groups are the ones where we have shortages and then address the question of how those shortages are being addressed in his budget and in the budget of some other sister departments, I think, with whom he may have been discussing this matter.

So I will stop here so that some other hon. members can have a chance, and then if there's time I'll ask more questions.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and again I'll move from back to front. The shortages in specific areas again are something that we address through our apprenticeship program. When it comes to the construction trades, the trades where the general overall shortage seems to be, included in this budget is I believe 12 and a half million dollars extra to ensure that the student spots are there. In the apprenticeship program we're up around 40,000 apprentices right now. Our apprenticeship program tends to grow – and it varies throughout the year – by a net of approximately 100 per week. So we do address it that way. We address it with our institutions to determine where the needs are, and then we act accordingly.

The other point that I will make as well is about the access fund, where we determine what seats are needed because of trends that are occurring in business, trends that are occurring in the availability of jobs, trends that are occurring in our society. We do not determine, for example, the number of bachelor of arts students or the number of bachelor of science students.

The school property tax. What the hon. member has is on page 279 of the budget material. We have the operating support to public and separate schools at $3,144,731,000, $3.144 billion. Whew, it's hard to bring it out, Mr. Chair. It says "less property tax support." The only reason we have put "less property tax support" there is so that we can highlight the amount that is general revenue fund support. The actual $1.161 billion and $162 million from the opted-out boards equals roughly $1.132 billion. Those dollars have to go by law to the school jurisdictions. You have to add $1.161 billion, $162 million, plus $1.821 billion, and you receive the final amount of $3,144,731,000. Do you understand that? [interjection] You add the bottom three numbers of that column, and they equal the top number. All we're attempting to show here is that the property tax support is X number of dollars, that the support from general revenue is X number of dollars, and that's what was attempted to be shown there.

The key component, Mr. Chair, on the education property tax is that the mill rate did not go up. So as the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs have more than adequately shown in question period, if your house value goes up, if it goes up from $150,000 to $160,000, you'll pay more.

Mrs. Nelson: And you have higher equity.

Dr. Oberg: And you have higher equity.

If there are more houses in a particular jurisdiction, Mr. Chairman, that particular jurisdiction will have to put in more money because there are more people. There are more houses.

Mr. Chair, we have used this year exactly the same rules – exactly the same rules – as we used last year on the capping rate, which was 8 percent on both business and residential taxes. We have frozen the mill rate. Last year we decreased the mill rate slightly. This year we froze it. So that's what the school property tax is.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The other point – and I'll just comment on this very briefly – is the issue about class size. Hon. member, I believe that we're saying the same thing when it comes to the rural/urban issue, and that is that there are a lot of other factors that are involved in the education of students than just class size. The hon. member is absolutely right. There are split grades. There are specialty teachers. There are resources that are available. There are a lot of different issues that are at play here. It is not just an issue of class size. You cannot say: well, my class in rural Alberta has 15 students; therefore, I am going to do better than the same class in urban Alberta that has 25 or 30 students. You cannot say that. You cannot make that qualification. You cannot make that assessment because there are a lot of different issues that are at work.

Mr. Chairman, on the class size study. What it showed on the study that we did is that indeed numerous students did better, probably a quarter of the students did about the same, and about a quarter of the students did worse. This study has been utilized by the school boards when they address issues such as class size, when they address what they want, which is a flexibility by the grassroots teachers, the grassroots principals to determine what is the best class arrangement. Again the hon. member has raised an excellent point when he says that there are on average two to three to four kids with special needs in each individual class. Well, the hon. member is fully aware that a class with 10 special-needs students is significantly different than an IB program of 30 students.

So again it goes back to my original argument, which is that a class is not a class is not a class. Every class is different, every individual student is different, and the best people to determine what goes into that class are actually the grassroots teacher, the principal, and the superintendent. That's why we have not legislated class size. That's why we have not gotten into that issue of class size: because we feel strongly that it is up to the school boards and the administration to make the best decisions possible within their range of funds.

Mr. Chair, I believe that anything else, again, we will give to them, and I'll now allow the other opposition to continue.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the approach that the minister is taking here in responding in person and then following up with written responses. He can't possibly know everything we're going to throw at him.

I've ended up dividing my questions into a number of categories. The first ones have to do with postsecondary education. The University of Alberta is in my constituency and, as a result, so are many, many students and many faculty and other employees. I hear often from student groups and student organizations and individual students about their concerns over funding trends at the postsecondary level, and I hear the same from parents, and having kids who I think someday will go to university, I can be sensitive to those as well.

One of the documents I've got is from the Council of Alberta University Students, and it makes a couple of statements. I suspect the minister might have this document. It says:

The per-student operating grant to the U of A has dropped by 29% [since '92-93]. At the U of C, the per-student operating grant has dropped by 21% [since 1992-93]. Universities are educating more students with fewer resources.

I will be honest; I don't have the figures right now to confirm or refute those claims. But I would be interested – and I don't expect the minister to have that right now; maybe he will – what the government's story is on the longer term trends, the trends, say, over the last 10 years, which is what this group is referring to. Certainly, I have an impression that the universities are under more funding stress now than they were a decade ago. I'm not sure if that's right or wrong. I can find out, but I'd be interested, so my question is a very general one. In light of this budget we're debating today, what's the government's story on the 10-year trends on per student operating grants to the two major universities in Alberta?

Staying with postsecondary education, I know there are debates within the universities about the role and costs of learning versus the role and costs of research. Researchers will say: well, we bring in huge grants. Of course, professors who tend to emphasize teaching will say: well, we bring in money through tuition fees. There's a struggle between those two priorities that I think causes some strain at the heart of the universities' very function and identity.

I'm also aware that there are concerns that actually research grants can lead to deficits, can cost the university more than they bring in, because the research grant actually doesn't cover nearly all the costs that they lead to. It's like they leverage costs instead of leveraging revenues. I'm not sure again, first of all, if the minister or his department would like to comment on that and if there are any considerations of those factors in the business plans and budgets that we're discussing here. Is there any time when tuition fees actually end up subsidizing research so that students who are paying primarily to be taught are actually seeing some of their tuition fees going to research? I know that it's a complicated debate – believe me – but there is a sense that tuition fees should go to teaching.

Moving on in the postsecondary arena, the whole Campus Alberta initiative is, I guess, unfolding. I haven't been able to stay on top of it, but I'm wondering how the business plans here and the budget relate to that. Also, I would be interested in any comments from the minister on the impact of the proposed universities act, which we will see in a few weeks I think, on the business plans in the future.

I don't expect that act to have a lot of impact on this year's budget, but the business plans do go over the next three years.

I want to give a bouquet, a compliment, to the department and to the minister. I've been going back through the business plans that were presented a year ago, which made projections for where we would be today, and then I've looked at actually where we are today, and my impression is that this department is doing better than many others in terms of actually being reasonably close today to where they said they would be when they said that a year ago. Well done. In most lines we're on the plan, and that's good, because it doesn't always hold true across the government. So my compliments to the minister on that, although I might disagree with the plan from time to time.

The next series of questions has to do with basic learning, K to 12. I think this has already been raised maybe by some members here today. I know that the minister hears it, and it's been really driven home to me in the last few months as I've focused my work so much on the school system: the high school completion rates are not what they should be. I will be blunt. I didn't realize until just a couple of months ago that they were as low as they are, and I know that it's not limited to any one school board.

I'm thinking back to when I was a junior high school student in the Edmonton public school system. So this is going back a few decades; let's say about 35 years maybe. At that time it was driven home to us how important it was to complete grade 12. I remember posters up in the guidance counselor's office and everywhere emphasizing: finish grade 12. There were figures on the impact that finishing grade 12 would have on your income and job opportunities. That was hammered home to us.

An Hon. Member: See what happened?

Dr. Taft: Yeah. See where it got me? That's right. I listened maybe too carefully.

I don't know what the completion rates were, say, 35 years ago, but the fact that they're only about 70 percent today makes me think that we haven't moved that high enough, and I suspect the minister agrees. My question then is: how does the budget that we're debating today specifically relate to improving the high school completion rate? We have a resource; we have an objective. How do the two relate?

Moving on from there to an issue that I've been mulling over for a long time, and this afternoon I've been struggling with how to approach the issue because we've frankly hammered away at each other in this Assembly on these issues, locked horns, and gone nowhere on them, yet I know that these are real issues from talking to the parents in the schools in Riverview and talking to teachers and parents from many, many other communities. Those are issues that the minister has heard so often, and I'm struggling with how to bring fresh perspective to these issues, issues around fund-raising and issues around staffing levels and the very real concern over layoffs as a result of this budget.

In Edmonton-Riverview I am told now through a group of parents that over $500,000 a year is raised by parents to put towards education, and they don't believe for a minute that that is just going to extras. They believe that they are fund-raising and having to fund-raise for things that contribute to the basic necessities of their children's education like computers and supplies and textbooks. So I know that the parents in my constituency will feel that the budget that we are debating today is inadequate for covering some of the basic requirements of supplies and equipment, for meeting the needs of the curriculum. Beyond that, I know they will also believe that the budget we're debating today is inadequate for providing adequate staff at schools. That's teachers, of course; it's also support and clerical staff. There's a school I know of in my constituency – it's a large school, about 800 students – and they are down, as I understand it, to one secretary. For example, they're looking at probably losing teachers in the fall.

Of course I understand the debate: well, the budget figures aren't final and this and that and the other thing. Frankly, the parents are going to be demanding from me to demand of this government enough money at least to cover the arbitrated settlement. That's not in this budget. I don't know if the minister has anything more to add to that debate. We've banged away on this one, but I'll tell you, I have a sense of a storm gathering, and I wish we could prevent that from happening. So I'm struggling there to bridge the gap between us, and I'm not sure how to do it.

My last set of comments have to do with something that I know is near and dear to the minister's heart but has an odd twist to it, and that's AISI funding. I repeat the concerns that I'm sure the minister is aware of. Some of these programs have been wonderfully, remarkably successful – reading recovery and many early intervention programs – but there's a tragic sense that they're cut short because of the three-year limit on the funding. So if there is anything in the budget here that will help some of the most successful of those programs to become permanent features of the school system, I would be thrilled. So the minister has a chance to thrill me, and I ask him to please do so.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm not entirely sure I'm going to thrill the hon. member, but I will attempt to explain some of the issues that he's brought forward. Just in saying that, I'll make one comment about the questions that have been asked today as potentially this could be the last kick at the cat that I have. I would just like to thank the hon. members for the tenor of their questions today. They've been excellent questions, and I do like the way that they were approached.

Some Hon. Members: Aah.

Dr. Oberg: Sorry, guys. Well, they were.

The issue on the AISI funding is quite simple. There is included in this budget $68 million for AISI projects. When AISI was initiated three years ago, it was initiated as a three-year plan, and we have now continued that for another three years at $68 million per year. Very important to the AISI projects, though, is that we continue to get new ideas. What we have said is that places where the projects have finished, where they have run three years, if they're doing well, then we feel it's important for the school board to keep those types of projects going, but we also feel that equally as important is that there are new projects brought in.

I believe that if I just put this $68 million in and keep running the same projects, then I might as well just put the $68 million into the general fund. We have to keep moving forward on our research projects. We have to keep moving forward on finding new projects. I have given the school boards the permission that if there is a particular program that is doing well, if they want to move it to a different school population, a different age group, a different geographic population, they certainly can. So we do have a fair amount of leniency with them.

In Edmonton public I understand that what happened is that they did not allocate out the AISI dollars until just recently. It's a very interesting point for myself on communication on AISI. Mr. Chairman, as you may know, at the breakfast back in November I announced that AISI was going to be continued for another three years. I then went to an AISI conference, and the main question I got was: well, AISI is finished; what are you going to do? In actual fact, I had announced it three months before, yet that message did not filter down. So I'm not sure if I've thrilled the hon. member in what I've said, but the $68 million is still there. There will continue to be projects.

The other question that was raised – and it was very politely raised – was the issue about fund-raising, staffing levels, and curriculum projects. I will say that since we have done the operational review on Edmonton public, I have a much better sense as to what has been happening in Edmonton public. Quite frankly, from a distance, at a macro level – and I must say that we only looked specifically at eight schools – they put the wrong dollar amount in on a teacher basis. It's $62,000, which is the amount that they've put forward to fund their teachers. The principals went out and spent money and hired using the $62,000 figure. Obviously, if they were wanting to run 85 percent of their budget on staffing, at $62,000 it probably would be okay. But then in September of 2002 the school board came to them and told them: well, the actual cost is $70,000. So what happened is that they had all these teachers hired over the summer when the actual costs were $70,000 instead of $62,000, and the school board basically said to them: suck it up; take it out of your school funds. When I take a look at some of these schools, some of these schools have as high as 92, 93 percent in staffing costs, and what I believe happened is they hired using the wrong numbers. They were supplied with the wrong numbers for teachers' salaries. They subsequently went out and hired.

We had the unusual circumstance of having 300 new students in the Edmonton public system yet 82 new teachers, and again I will reiterate that I believe it was due to the fact of the dollars that they were using to base their budgets on. This directly affected fund-raising in that in many places when you're at 92, 93 percent of your budget for staffing, it does affect fund-raising, and that is what I believe is the evolution as to what happened. Again, it's a very cursory look at Edmonton public. We only looked at eight schools. To give an example, one of these schools read in the newspaper about the teacher increase and saw that it was going to be about 11 percent. He set his money aside, and consequently that particular school had a $500,000 surplus. So a lot of it had to do with the numbers that were being used, and I'm not faulting the principals or the schools on what they used, because they were only using the figures that they were provided with.

High school completion rates. I'm glad you asked that. That is a huge push in my department now. We have done studies on how to increase high school completion rates. I'm going to say this because it is an actual fact, and I make apologies to anyone I say it to, but the aboriginal population in this province is not finishing high school. We have a significant issue here, and consequently what is included in this budget is aboriginal initiatives. Its sole attempt is to increase the number of aboriginal students that are graduating. I am not happy at 73 percent when you take a look at some of the figures in our business plan. I want it to be 100 percent, and that's the goal that we are aiming for: 100 percent of students to be graduating from high school.

When you look across the country, what you find is that essentially all the jurisdictions are very similar. It may vary from 67, 68 percent in one jurisdiction to 74, 75 percent, but they're very similar right across the country, excluding places like P.E.I. that really don't have the population to make them statistically significant. This is a very important issue for every minister of learning, minister of education across the country, and it's something that we are concentrating on very much.

The proposed university act. Again, I will not talk about the specifics of it apart from what I've already said in that part of this act will enable institutions to grant degrees when the quality is there. This will have an effect on our upcoming budgets, and it will be built into our upcoming budgets because as more and more students get more and more degrees, there is more of a cost, but that is a cost that this government will more than willingly bear because we are aiming to have more students graduate with postsecondary degrees/diplomas. I see this legislation as being incredibly important because now, for those of us in rural Alberta, they will be able to get their degree in rural Alberta. They will be able to get a degree in Grande Prairie, in Medicine Hat.

The other very important issue that must be stated any time we talk about degree-granting is that the quality has to be there. We cannot just allow these institutions to provide degrees if the quality is not there, and included in the legislation that is coming forward is a mechanism to ensure that the degrees are peer-reviewed, that the quality is there. I know the hon. member is as concerned about quality as I am, and that is the direction that we're going.

The tuition fees subsidizing research. That's a good question. To be a hundred percent honest, I cannot give you the exact answer, as I'm sure the hon. member knows after being involved in the postsecondary system. What I will say, though, is that in reviewing our tuition fee policy, we exclude all research components as expenses. So to the best of our ability we take anything to do with research and take it out of the expense column when it comes to the tuition fee policy, and the tuition fees are judged according to that. It cannot at this moment in time go beyond the 30 percent cap, or roughly $275 per year.

The hon. member also gave me a good opening on the research side of things when he talked about research grants not keeping up with the actual costs. Again, the hon. member is absolutely right, and I will point my finger at where the blame really lies, which is the federal government. I know everyone here would be shocked to hear this, but when the federal government gives a grant, they do not give the indirect costs. For the edification of the people in the Assembly . . .

Dr. Massey: Didn't that change?

Dr. Oberg: No. I was just going to comment on that.

For the information of the people in the Assembly, the average indirect cost is 40 percent. The federal government has made some movement in the indirect costs of education, but it is still not complete where they fund all of it, and it is my understanding that it is a time-limited commitment and that it is not a full commitment on their research grants. From my point of view and from Alberta's point of view it is absolutely essential that we get research grants that are fully funded. If you're going to give us a research grant, which is extremely important, make sure they have the money. We do our budgeting process, and if we have to expect our universities to suck up another 40 percent for these research dollars, it does lead to significant issues and significant problems. We want to get the research grants, we want to get the research chairs, but there has to be a recognition of the actual costs of these research grants and research chairs.

The last question that the hon. member raised was about the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary, and I will give you my figures. From '99-2000 to 2002-2003 at the University of Alberta the general grant went from $239,035,808 to $296,091,384, for an increase of slightly over $57 million, or 23 percent. Those are not in static dollars. They're in year-to-year dollars. At the University of Calgary the grant went from $157,593,000 to $201,929,000, an increase of roughly $44 million, or 28.1 percent. In that time frame the University of Alberta increased their student enrollment by 12 percent and the University of Calgary increased their student enrollment by 11.4 percent. Just for your information, as well, the University of Alberta enrollment in '02-03 was 29,115; at the University of Calgary it was 23,492.

I would welcome any other questions from the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Maskell: Minister, I have a couple of issues, concerns, interests, passions that I would like to ask you about today. One of the things that you talked about a lot is that all students should be able to read by grade 3, and you have a renewed vision for the K to 12 learning system. I wonder if you could update us on how this is proceeding and how that is supported within this budget.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for that excellent question. One of the areas that I'm a firm believer in is that although we are the best system in Canada – we probably are the best system in the world – there is a danger of becoming number two, and that danger is accepting the status quo and not improving. We have to continue to improve, and I feel that the revision of our curriculum is a direction that we have to move in in order to improve. This started off as actually a fairly simple exercise, but it's something that blossomed quite large. We sat down and took a look at some of the issues that were involved in education and some of the outcomes that we wanted, and it soon became readily apparent that the earlier you get involved with kids, the earlier you work with kids, the earlier you teach kids, the earlier kids learn, the better they do. That is becoming very evident, and I don't think anyone in this Assembly can argue with that fact.

Another fact is that when you take a look at those students that have attention deficits, those students that have learning disorders, it may be that many of these go back to the idea that they can't read and that they never did learn to read properly. So you put all of that together and you come up with a new direction, and that direction quite simply and quite succinctly is that in the K to 3 age group what we are attempting to do, first of all and foremost, is literacy and numeracy. On the literacy side we want to ensure that 100 percent of the students by the time they hit grade 3 know how to read at a grade level. We also want to do that for the numeracy. There are a couple of things that are included and imperative when I say that. First of all, you have to be able to assess if they can't, and second of all, you have to be able to do something about it if they can't. So we're looking at the remedial reading, remedial literacy programs that can condense kids into bringing up their grade levels very quickly, and there are a lot of programs that are out there that have shown that with concentrated learning they can bring up the grade level two, three, four grades in a space of six weeks. We're looking at how that can be done. The same thing occurs with numeracy. We have to identify those kids who do not have numeracy skills at grade level, and then we have to remediate those that do not, and we have to ensure that they catch up to the other students. So that can be done.

Also, in kindergarten to grade 3 there are some other interesting issues. One of them is physical education. I don't think there's anyone here in this Assembly or anyone in Alberta that can deny that we need to be fit. We need to be fit when it comes to health care, we need to be fit when it comes to lifestyle, and we have to instill a need for physical fitness in the daily routine of every student starting at a young level. We have to get that instilled into them, and, Mr. Chairman, that will be our third focus on the K to 3 side.

The fourth focus is something a little different, and it's something that I will say that I did not believe in. The hon. member, I know, is completely opposite from me on this fact, but it has to do with fine arts. Fine arts has never been my forte, and I will readily admit that. But it has been shown that the patterning that is involved in music is essential to the development of the brain, that it is essential to how kids learn, and that when there is music involved in studies, involved in their daily routine, kids learn better. I think the evidence is irrefutable, and I think we have to move in that direction.

So those are basically the four issues that we're dealing with on the K to 3 side. As we hit grade 4, we're going to be putting in, starting in 2006-2007, another curriculum revisioning which has met with international acclaim. As a matter of fact, John Ralston Saul in his speech last week, on budget day actually, in London, Ontario, praised Alberta, which is rare for him to do, for initiatives on second languages. He also praised the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta for their pushes in second languages.

We are going to be making second languages mandatory starting in grade 4. The second language does not have to be French. It can be any second language. I'm a firm believer – and I believe that the studies will back me up – that when you learn a second language, the third, fourth, and fifth second languages come that much easier. So we'll start that in grade 4. For those people out there who are listening, of which I'm sure there are multitudes, the point that I will make is that it will start in grade 4 and move through the system with that grade. So for those parents who have students in grade 12, they are not expected to learn a second language in one year. It will move through the system so it will be implemented over a period of eight years.

The last component of the curriculum revisioning has to do with some of our students that are graduating. One of the issues – and I believe that this is reflected in a question the hon. member asked me just a little while ago about high school graduation and issues such as that – is that a lot of students when they come out are disillusioned. They don't know what to do; they don't know what to do for a career. I believe that one of the issues is that we do not do a good enough job on basic guidance counseling, basic career counseling for these students. I have daughters and a son that are going through that time frame right now. And, Mr. Chairman, for your information I will not my call my son a goofball today. Even though he is one, I will not call him that.

What has happened is that these kids are being expected to make decisions in grade 9 which are probably beyond what they are capable of doing. They're expected to determine what career path they want to take, whether they take the old so-called matriculation component, whether they want to go to university, whether they want to take the easier grades, the easier classes, and if they make that decision, it is very difficult for them to undo that decision. So, in essence, what you have is that at the end of grade 9 a child – and I will say: a child – has to make a very important decision that will affect him for the rest of his life. I believe that that should be changed. I think we need to move until the end of grade 10 to do that. I think we need to put in elements of career counseling.

I also feel that we need to have tracks in grades 11 and 12 that the students can go on so that they know what it leads to. For example – and this is just in theory; we're working on this – there would be a university track; there would be a college track; there'd be a technical school track; there would be an apprenticeship track. The idea behind that is that these students would then focus on what they're going to be doing, the direction that they're going to be taking when they're in grades 11 and 12, and I hope that it will allow the students to become more focused.

Imperative in this plan is that there are crossovers. It's very evident that very few students who are in the apprenticeship programs are at the bottom of the class. It just does not occur. Thirty of the 50 apprenticeship scholarships that were given out last year actually went to Rutherford scholarship winners. So there needs to be that crossover. If you want to be an apprentice and then two years later you want to change to go into university, that ability has to occur. That crossover bridging has to occur. It does not have to occur in high school. It could occur in colleges, it could occur in universities, but it has to occur, and it has to be there.

Mr. Chairman, I've used kind of a fair amount of time to talk about something that I feel is extremely important and is going to set the future for education in this province, is going to move Alberta in a direction that other provinces have not gone, where other provinces will certainly want to follow us. The concepts that I talked about I will say are concepts. We're reviewing each one. Each component of what I've talked about today is going to have to be field-tested. It's going to have to be studied extensively, and then we are going to move in and make those changes. It will be co-ordinated between the schools. It'll be co-ordinated with the Department of Learning, and we'll ensure that it will occur. The key goals, though, I believe, are very good goals, very laudable goals and something that I think is going to lead to even better performance of our students as they come out of the high school system.

I would ask the indulgence of the Assembly to watch this, to give input on this because it is important. It's all of our kids. It is not just government kids; it's actually opposition kids as well that are going through the school system.

Dr. Pannu: Alberta's children.

Dr. Oberg: Alberta's children. Absolutely. It is important that we look at this objectively, and it's important that we get a better system. Not that we have a bad system, but we have to continue to change. We have to keep adapting to the time frame.

Mr. Chairman, I'm almost out of breath and out of speech, so I'll sit down.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask the minister about page 301 of the business plans, where the government says that they are going to support the recommendations from Alberta's Commission on Learning, and then they are also developing a renewed vision for the K to 12 curriculum, and then down at the bottom of that section: "continue the work of the Review Committee on Outcomes." Now, I've seen some of the work of the committee on outcomes, and it seems to me that they are proceeding on exactly the kinds of items that we expected the commission to be dealing with. So my question to the minister then is: how seriously are the commission results going to be taken by the department, or are they going to magically coincide with the work of the committee on outcomes?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: I'll answer that very quickly if I can, Mr. Chair. Very quickly, a lot of these jobs that we have been undertaking – the committee on outcomes, for example, has been in process for three years. Just because the Commission on Learning is there, we did not stop. We feel that we are going in the right direction. If the Commission on Learning tells us something significantly different, then certainly we will move in that direction, but we could not stop. We could not hold the Department of Learning back for a full year while the Commission on Learning did its job. We have to continue moving. If we lost a year in the progression of education in this province, it would be detrimental to us.

We hope, we anticipate that there will be some synergy between the Commission on Learning's recommendations and what we're doing, and if there isn't, then we'll have to change.

The Chair: In the one minute or so that remains, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know that we have perhaps a little less than five minutes there. I have three questions for the minister. He doesn't have to answer them today, but I want to put them on the record.

I drew the minister's attention in my first round of questions to this lag between the educational attainment at the postsecondary level between Alberta's average and the national average, about 4 percentage points difference: 58 here, 62 nationwide. The minister speculated as to why that might be the case, and I'm asking him: will he go beyond speculation and try to find answers? I urge him to do some studies on it and come back to us with some information on this. I could speculate one way, he could speculate the other way, and we could go on doing that without reaching any firm conclusions.

My second question is whether of not this gap has grown, developed in fact, between the provincial average and the national average over the time that the government introduced increases in tuition fees. Is there any correlation? I want you to have that question addressed in the research.

My third question arises from the observations that I have heard and read about the Calgary Catholic school board. They are confronted with losing about 140 teachers, they say. This Edmonton public . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must put the following questions in order for us to get through and make the report in the time specified. Solicitor General

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to present the Alberta Solicitor General business plan for 2003 to 2006. Before I begin, I would like to introduce some of my great staff that are seated in the gallery. With me today I have Jim Nichols, Deputy Solicitor General; Bob Dunster, ADM for public security; Arnold Galet, ADM for corrections services, better known as Big Guy; Dan Mercer, ADM for strategic services; Shawkat Sabur, executive director, financial services; Bronwyn Shoush, director of aboriginal initiatives; Jean Olynyk, my communications director; Maureen Geres, who everybody knows, my executive assistant; and Debbie Malloy, who's a special adviser to the minister. [some applause] See, Mr. Chairman, I told you I had good staff.

The 2003-2006 business plan makes changes to the ministry's vision and mission statements. These have been rewritten to more clearly recognize the minister's role in ensuring safe and secure communities for Albertans "to live, work and raise their families." Our new mission statement also highlights the ministry's role in policing, security, and correctional services and in assisting victims of crime. These changes are also reflected in an expanded list of core businesses.

Our past business plan outlined three core businesses: policing and crime prevention, victims services, and corrections. In this year's business plan we have separated policing and crime prevention so that each is a stand-alone core business. Over the past year we have taken on a larger role in provincial security and now include security operations as a core business. In fact, in the past year security and information management, or SIM, as it is known, was created to ensure that the appropriate mechanisms are in place to identify and mitigate potential terrorist threats. The core goal related to corrections has also been expanded to better reflect our role in providing custody, supervision, and rehabilitation programs for offenders.

The financial content of our business plan reflects Treasury Board's approval over the past year as well as federally funded programs and funds for continuing core programs and services. The Alberta Solicitor General's budget for 2003-2004 is 277 and a half million dollars. This is an increase of $10.1 million over last year's comparable forecast and $11.1 million over last year's comparable budget. This is still a hold-the-line budget, reflecting increases for ongoing program costs and improved security operations. Most of the increase is dedicated to salary adjustments for our full-time and contract employees in corrections and policing.

Overall spending on policing and crime prevention will increase by $4 million over the 2002-03 budget. Despite this increase we continue to be pressed by communities right across this province to address the issue of policing costs that are outreaching local budgets.

Funding for custody, supervision, and rehabilitation of offenders has increased by $5 million and continues to account for just under 50 percent of the total budget. There is also increased funding of $1.2 million for protection services and counterterrorism operations.

This year I hope to conclude the reviews of Alberta's policing, corrections, and victim programs that were begun last year and previous. I will be taking our recommendations through the government approval process. I believe it is imperative that the challenges facing policing and our corrections and victim programs be dealt with and brought to resolution.

In closing, I would like to highlight some key accomplishments of the past fiscal year, accomplishments we will be building on this year and into the future. Last year my ministry and Alberta Municipal Affairs introduced Alberta's counterterrorism crisis management process. As a result of the intelligence-led process, we are well positioned to identify and respond to any changes in Alberta's security.

We've continued our partnership in Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, or CISA. Funding to CISA is in the form of an annual $2.4 million grant. This funds joint police operations into organized crime across Alberta. Some of the funding is provided by CISA directly to police services to help them target local organized crime, and earlier this year CISA established a new web site where Albertans can go for more information about organized crime in Alberta and its impact on the communities. We believe that this type of public awareness is critical to fighting organized crime in Alberta.

Last year Alberta became the first jurisdiction in Canada to introduce the Amber Alert. In the United States the Amber Alert program has helped police successfully find about 30 children and teens that were abducted. While I hope that the Amber Alert is never needed, having the Amber Alert in place offers the police a new tool that we hope will help them find kidnap victims and return them safely to their families.

Lastly, over the past three years we have prepared for the new federal Youth Criminal Justice Act, that came into force on the 1st of April, by providing training and briefing opportunities to the police, the courts, and our corrections staff and by creating the new programs that the act requires. But I'm very concerned about the new federal act. Not only does it not provide stiff penalties for young offenders who commit serious and violent crimes, but the federal government has not acknowledged its previous commitment to fund 50 percent of the ongoing costs of administering the youth justice legislation. Once again the federal government has introduced a new program and left us holding the bag. The lack of commitment means that once federal transition funding ends in 2005, the Alberta government will have to find a way to sustain funding for these new programs.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my comments on the 2003-2006 Solicitor General business plan. I'd be pleased to address any questions regarding the plan and will provide a written answer to any questions not fully covered today.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Masyk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to introduce a friend of mine from up north, my home town of High Prairie, Mr. Kevin Cox. He's here on some business, and I invited him to the Legislature to observe for a few minutes. I would ask Kevin to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to the Solicitor General for her opening remarks. My memory is that she's pretty good about answering the questions here during the debate, and those she doesn't I'm sure will be answered by her and her staff following this debate. I would just ask to get, if possible, the responses prior to having to vote on the appropriation bill. That way I have all the information in front of me before I have to vote on that bill, and I appreciate that.

The first hour tonight is dedicated to opposition questions, and I've already spoken to the minister about doing some back and forth. So what I'd like to do is just run over the areas that I have here, and maybe we'll take a couple of them at a time and then go back and forth with questions and answers.

I did want to comment a bit on the information that's in the report and the change in the vision and mission. I'd like to talk about the reports on victim services, on policing, and on corrections. I have some general sort of stakeholder questions, sort of a grab bag of different issues that have come up. I'd like to also spend some time on the issue of police funding, which is overall as an issue certainly rising to the top and starting to bubble over a bit, and maybe an update on the diversification project, something I know we're both interested in.

From the beginning I noticed right off that the government is no longer offering a highlights section, and I think this a general observation. This is the second ministry that I'm critic for that's been debated thus far, and that highlights section seems to have been pulled overall. That's too bad because I found it a useful section. It doesn't seem to have been replaced in any particular area, but if you put together both the introduction and the planning environment, sometimes you can glean what's going on. So I'm going to go through some of the issues that have been raised there. The MLA reviews of the victims' fund, policing, and corrections are mentioned here in the introduction. As I said, I'll come back to that.

Then there's, "We will continue to inform Albertans about serious and violent offenders, . . . participate in the development of a National Sex Offender Registry" – that's the federal one – the Amber Alert, which the minister just mentioned, the changes to the federal Youth Criminal Justice Act. Now, it also talks about "developing a proposal to address gang activity in Alberta," so I'm interested in what the minister is anticipating there.

The Solicitor General is also working with others on a provincial impaired driving enforcement strategy. If I could get some detail, please, on who all is involved. What are the other ministries and stakeholders who are involved in this, a list of those, plus what actions are being anticipated that are different from what's being offered now? Is this an enhancement? Are you changing some things? Are you looking at bringing in legislation? Are you going to have another MLA review? What's being anticipated under that?

It talks about "rehabilitation of offenders" and a continuation of "work service to Alberta communities." Now, I'm assuming that that's the old pick up the garbage along the highway and cut firewood for the provincial campgrounds and prune trees and cut grass and that sort of thing. It's also being mentioned here along with the youth justice committees again: "rehabilitation of first and second-time young offenders." So I'm curious, first of all, with the adult offenders where the rest of the rehabilitation is. Or is that what the minister accepts as rehabilitation, these work camps? Have we totally abandoned the idea of training for occupations other than crime obviously? Have we abandoned all of that programming, and the rehabilitation part of it is picking up litter in the ditch? What happened to the rehabilitation part of our programming? There certainly seems to be an emphasis here: "work service" is how it's phrased.

Also, therefore, that trickles down to the rehabilitation for the first- and second-time youth offenders. Is their rehabilitation really about this community service? Do they do some sort of junior version of litter picking and pruning and wood chopping? What's being anticipated there?

One sentence about supporting initiatives for domestic violence. I'd like to know what's anticipated there. It seems to indicate that it's supporting existing programming but doesn't seem to be considering any expansion of this, and since we're looking at a three-year period here – the minister has introduced her budget as 2003 to 2006 – do I take it, then, that we're not anticipating any new initiatives around domestic violence? It looks like we're just keeping the status quo.

There's some information here about the victims financial benefits program, making it "more responsive to the needs of victims of crime." Perhaps that's connected to the victims of crime MLA review and report that's still outstanding. I see a little nod from the minister, so I'll leave that and come back to it when I talk about the reports.

The minister also spoke a little about the counterterrorism efforts. This is kind of a difficult one, because it's not as though the minister can stand up and say, "Here are all the initiatives we're taking for counterterrorism," and sort of let the cat out of bag. On the other hand, the minister is spending taxpayer dollars here to follow some kind of plan on counterterrorism. So how are we supposed to know what the minister is doing? We're in a bit of a catch-22 here, and it's not acceptable to just say: "Trust us. We can't tell you this is counterterrorism, but give us a bunch of money to do it." You have to give some kind of indication as to what's being anticipated here or what's being followed. It's not enough to just say: trust us on this one.

The new section called Planning Environment is very interesting. It says that the following environmental factors have been considered when you're looking at the plans that you're going to set forward over this three-year period. It talks about things like demographics, aboriginal justice, victims, implications of new legislation, policing . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: I'm sorry to interject, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, but the noise level is getting pretty high. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has some very interesting and important points to make, so can you please respect her recognition to speak and allow her to continue.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks, Mr. Chairman. I don't care if they listen or not, but it would be helpful if the minister could hear me.

In some context these environmental factors seem to be delivered as though these are things that are sort of holding us back or reasons why we can't accomplish what we'd like to accomplish. Overall, since this is a new area, if she can talk about the choices that she has made in setting these particular areas down. Is she seeing these as barriers or some sort of restriction to what she's trying to accomplish? I think the answer will probably be: some areas are and some areas aren't. If that's the case, which are and which aren't? A little expansion on that, please.

In particular, I notice that the aboriginal justice section is listed under the environmental factors. I'm interested in this because I don't see the aboriginal factors being discussed at length in any other section except for this one. So could I ask her to expand, please, on what's being anticipated here? It does note that the Aboriginal population is young and the fastest growing segment of the Alberta population. A large proportion of the Aboriginal population in Canada experiences socioeconomic disadvantages in comparison to non-Aboriginal Canadians.

Okay. So what's the minister trying to tell us here? Does that mean that she's going to have lots of programs, no programs, or that this is a difficulty she's trying to overcome in some way? It's one of the few places where I actually see aboriginals mentioned in the whole context of the programs and services that the Solicitor General is offering.

The minister has already talked about the new legislation that's coming through federally that will be affecting what she is attempting to offer provincially, and that includes the Young Offenders Act, the Sex Offender Information Registration Act, and the Criminal Code changes.

Then she talks about provincial policing programs, which I'll come back to, and I've already talked about terrorism.

Organized crime I'd like to come back to in the context of gambling, because during the debate with the minister of gambling the Solicitor General was referred to, so I've made a notation to come back and ask her some of the questions under that.

Under goals and strategies, goal 1, to "ensure safe communities in Alberta," a couple of questions have arisen out of that. I'm referring to 1.5 on page 351: "Enhance the partnership with the RCMP in monitoring the Provincial Police Service Agreement." Now, the Member for Wainwright had a private member's motion before the House that was talking about – well, actually I gave him a bit of a hard time. [interjection] Well, I'm sure that if the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is so interested in the debate, he's going to get up when he has his opportunity to do it rather than just constantly commenting and heckling from the back row there.

The Member for Wainwright was commenting on a need to develop or get in place plans for a regional policing service. He was also talking about a regional police commission. But mostly he seemed to be frustrated and all those that spoke on his motion seemed to be frustrated about somehow being prepared and ready, as the minister goes into negotiations with the RCMP in 2007 to 2012, to break away and go into it saying: we can do this on our own, so better negotiate with us the way we want, or we'll just strike out on our own. So I'm wondering what the minister is anticipating when she puts down as a strategy: enhance the partnership with the RCMP.

I also note in the next one, 1.6: "Reinstate Restorative Justice Grant funding." Could the minister talk about that, please? How much money is going to be put into these grants? How is the program going to be administered? What's the criteria for application? Is this done in conjunction with the Minister of Justice, or is she running the program herself? What's the level of grants that is anticipated? How often is the granting cycle? Once a year? Twice a year?

The other thing that the minister mentioned. She's made some very definitive choices, and I'm wondering if she can talk about her philosophy in moving forward on this. The previous vision was "a democratic and prosperous Alberta based on respect for the law, where all Albertans are safe in their homes and communities." The new version is: "Ensure Albertans have safe and secure communities in which to live, work and raise their families." So some quite deliberate choices have been made there, and can she please talk about what her philosophy is that allowed her or had her make those choices?

The mission. The previous mission: "Our mission is to serve Albertans by promoting safe communities and by communicating with Albertans about the administration of justice." Now, that's likely heavily tainted by the previous position where both the Solicitor General and the Justice minister were the same ministry. The new mission:

Our mission is to serve Albertans by ensuring safe and secure communities through effective policing, security and correctional services and when crime is committed to assist victims of crime.

So that one's a bit more obvious, but I'll get her to talk about her personal ideology in leading this department forward and the choices she's made to establish that mission.

I note that the department's budget is up by a little over 4 percent but not by a lot, and I'm questioning the minister's confidence, backed up by some detail, about the sustainability of service delivery. We know that with the simple cost of living, with increased volume for delivery of service to more Albertans – I've heard a number of times the comment that with the in-migration into the province they didn't bring their police service and their roads and their schools with them, so that's affecting the minister's ability to deliver these services. There are a number of factors to be considered here, and I'm questioning how she's confident that a 4.2 percent increase is enough to maintain or sustain service delivery. We've got likely increased labour costs. The number I heard tossed around a lot until about a month ago was 4 percent. We've got inflation, the normal cost-of-living increase, and we've got this volume increase from the in-migration. Now, in the studies that I've read, they were talking between 7 and 10 percent to sustain program delivery. This minister is putting in 4.2, so I'd like to hear some of her detail in her confidence in that number.

Now just some general and stakeholder questions that have arisen, if I may. The Solicitor General had introduced a Victims of Crime Amendment Act, and this changed guidelines with respect to the financial benefits program for those people who were victims of crime. But when I looked at the victims of crime funding, it's bounced around a bit recently, and I'm questioning if the minister could expand on why that has varied so much. For example, the victims of crime funding is $10 million in this budget, up a small amount from $9.8 million last year, but that in fact was a decrease of almost $3 million from the year before. So we've gone down by $3 million and up by $200,000. What's the sense in this? What's the minister anticipating here?

In the business plan it's also mentioning that there are going to be the regulatory and legislative changes to the victims' financial benefits program. Could the minister expand on that? Is she talking about bringing in legislation? Is she talking about doing that in the spring session or in the fall session? Is this going to be done by regulation? What is she anticipating precisely?

The next short segment I want to talk about is illegal gambling. During the Gaming estimates the Gaming minister referred this particular item over to the Solicitor General. When I was asking about his department's monitoring of illegal activities or anticipation or planning for or investigation of, he didn't want to touch that one and punted it. It was punted to this particular minister. So what sorts of activity has the Solicitor General taken to anticipate amounts of illegal gambling, to measure it or count it, to look into the future on it? This is a three-year plan. What's the minister anticipating by way of increases in illegal gambling?

There's also some concern over the increase in illegal VLTs or what are called gray machines. Now, Alberta had attempted to counteract that by putting in their own machines. Where is the Solicitor General on monitoring this activity?

I think that's close to the end of my first 20 minutes, Mr. Chairperson, so I will take my seat and allow the minister some opportunity to answer the questions I've put before her. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. The hon. member in 20 minutes has asked a whack of questions, so hopefully I've got a few of them.

One of the questions that she started off with was about the highlight section, that it was gone, and she was wondering why we think that our business plan is put together well. The highlight section, if that's a concern, is something certainly that we can look at next year. It has not been one of the things that we've been told has been a problem quite frankly.

Then she went on to talk about the serious and violent offenders, and I would assume she's referring to our high-risk offender web site. I can tell the member that the Alberta high-risk offender web site has been extremely successful and extremely popular. At the beginning we were getting about 3,400 hits a week. We started to do a bit of research and found that a lot of it was parents accessing the high-risk offender web site and saying to their children when they saw this: if you see this particular individual, he's not a very nice man. So we've been very, very pleased. In fact, from what I understand, Manitoba has launched a high-risk offender web site very similar to ours, and Ontario has already got one.

In regard to the national sex offender registry Alberta along with Ontario has been key in pushing the national sex offender registry. In fact, we buddied up at the federal/provincial/territorial meeting in bringing that to the attention of the federal government and finally managed to get them to move on that. One of the things that we aren't in agreement with and are pushing the federal government on is retroactivity, and they've been a little obstinate and stubborn about that particular issue. We think it's important that some of the offenders – for example, Paul Bernardo, Karl Toft – should be part and parcel of the national sex offender registry because they have committed horrific crimes in this country and done a lot of damage to a lot of people.

She talked about the gang proposal. Several weeks ago I went to Ottawa and made a proposal to the federal Solicitor General, who was quite key in regard to our gang proposal, which would be on a provincial level. Similar to how we set up G-8, which was very, very successful, we will have the federal Solicitor General, the provincial Solicitor General, and then all of the players across, whether it's the RCMP, the municipal police, aboriginal policing, and people involved in the gang proposal. We're currently just sort of finishing that up, and then we'll be sending the proposal to the federal Solicitor General. Again, I'd like to emphasize that he was quite key on that, and I think that's something that's very important. I think Albertans have to realize that we have a serious gang problem in this province and an organized gang problem in this particular province. One just needs to look at what's happening in your own city of Edmonton and some of the incidents that have happened in Mill Woods, et cetera. The police have done a wonderful job in trying to attack it. We've had two very, very successful takedowns in regard to the gang strategies that were co-ordinated with the city police and the RCMP, one being operation Kachou, and the second one is – the name's escaped me, but it was out of Calgary.

The Amber Alert, as you're well aware, hon. member, is the first in Canada. I got that idea when I was doing some research over a year ago now. I found it very interesting and pursued that to see how it worked, and when I was invited to the President's conference in Washington, I talked to a lot more people. So we were very, very pleased to be able to announce the Amber Alert in Alberta. We now have several provinces that are particularly interested in the Amber Alert, and my staff are diligently helping the other provinces that have shown keen interest in the Amber Alert.

She touched briefly on the provincial strategy, and I believe the one you're referring to is when we're partnering with Transportation on I think you mentioned drinking and driving. I, too, like you, found it was a little bit noisy trying to hear what you were saying to me. It's something that we're looking at, working on some strategies with Alberta Transportation on how to address the high percentage of accidents that are occurring in rural Alberta mainly from a couple of things: running stop signs, speed, and things like that. I want to emphasize the fact that it doesn't necessarily mean it's rural Albertans that are causing these accidents. It could be city pumpkins like me going down a dirt road, not familiar with the roads, speeding through a stop sign, and then wham. So we're working with Transportation on a couple of issues: the drinking and driving strategy of course, which is my department, which includes obviously working with them and the police on trying to curtail the drinking and driving, and then on some other transportation issues on accidents that are occurring on rural roads.

You asked about the rehabilitation of offenders. Key thing. I really believe it's important that offenders are rehabilitated and how we can work on rehabilitation with the offenders. It's an interesting question you asked. I did a tour yesterday at some of our probation offices because I wanted to talk to some of the probation officers, and I was talking to one of the probation officers on the huge success they're having partnering with AADAC. AADAC is coming into the office and working with offenders because a lot of our offenders obviously have drinking and drug problems. So I found that is extremely beneficial. The probation officers in this province do a wonderful job once our people get out of our correctional facilities, trying to match them up with appropriate rehabilitation, whether it's anger management, alcohol and drug counseling, a number of different things that they're working on then. We try and do the same thing when they're in our facilities, but you have to keep in mind that the majority of our offenders are there for such a short period of time when they go into our correctional facilities, but we try and address their issues while they're there and then work through on probation.

You asked about the work service for our offenders, and, yes, we like to keep our offenders busy. We have some very, very successful programs within our facilities that have been hugely successful, and I would invite the member to come to my office and see some of the woodworking toys. I think you did see them when you were in to see my office in regard to some of the woodworking that our offenders are doing particularly in Fort Saskatchewan. All of those toys that those offenders are making are being utilized by Santas Anonymous, and they do a really good job.

Another good example of what our offenders are doing is the eyeglasses program in the Fort Saskatchewan jail. All of the glasses are dropped off at LensCrafters. They're taken to our Fort Saskatchewan correctional facility. The offenders have been trained by optometrists to clean them, so they can tell the strength of the eyeglasses. Then they're all shipped overseas, and it's extremely beneficial. The number of times I've actually visited the correctional facilities, the offenders that are working on the eyeglasses and have the ability are so proud of what they're doing, and quite frankly they're bragging about where the glasses are going. It's nice to see because they feel that they're contributing back to the community. We just celebrated in December our one millionth pair of eyeglasses that have been shipped overseas. So it's very exciting.

Our youth justice committee is hugely successful. Hugely successful. In fact, we were honoured to receive a gold award down east in recognition of our youth justice committees and then be watched right across the country on our youth justice committees. We have even had interest over in – I hate to name some place because I may be wrong, but I believe it was Africa or Australia, somewhere over there. I'm sorry; it's gone.

You spoke about domestic violence, and we're partnering with Children's Services and the Minister of Children's Services and have been very proud to be part and parcel of that, working with our police on how to deal with situations when they're called to the home. It's been proving very successful. We have some more work that we have to obviously get done.

You talked about the victims of crime fund and the surplus: why hasn't the money been spent? [interjection] Yes? No? I can't remember. Anyway, the victims of crime fund does have a surplus. The surplus has been set aside to allow the implementation of the recommendations that are from the victims of crime consultation. As the victims of crime is a regulatory fund, any surplus at fiscal year-end remains in the fund for future use and spending of the money to benefit victims, and I think that's the intent of it.

You talked about the counterterrorism plan, and you're right. There's so very, very little information that I can give you because of all of the very high-security information that we're receiving about terrorism. We have been very, very fortunate in the fact that we've got a very good working relationship with CSIS, which is out of Ottawa, with CISA, and with some of our partners, that we're gathering intelligence information all the time. It's been extremely beneficial, and we're extremely proud of what we've been able to achieve on counterterrorism. Not only that; the SIM unit – we had a conference. I believe it was in October or November. We were fortunate enough to have the federal Solicitor General come and bring us greetings on that. He was very, very impressed with our counterterrorism plan, our security management SIM unit. In fact, he wanted information from all of the speakers that were presenting and said: Minister, why would I reinvent the wheel when you guys have gone way past? So Alberta is leading the country in counterterrorism and our SIM unit.

You talked about aboriginal initiatives. We have a wonderful person, that I introduced earlier, in my department by the name of Bronwyn Shoush, who even just recently got back from speaking in Thailand because she's so good at what she does. We're working on a lot of aboriginal issues, and we're well aware of the aboriginal population in our correctional facilities and how we deal with those particular aboriginals in our correctional facilities. Should they be there, or where should they be? It's an open door, and a high percentage of aboriginal people are in our correctional facilities.

We have been doing a lot with First Nation policing, trying to deal with the issue of First Nation police taking care of aboriginal people within the community. It's something we need to work on, we're going to continue to work on. I have a soft spot for the aboriginal people in this province. I don't know if it'll be my term or whose term it'll ever be if you can ever try and address all of the aboriginal issues, but we'll continue to plug away. We're currently working on another proposal on drugs on the reserve, which surprised me when I was doing tours. I knew that drinking was a problem with the First Nation people, but what surprised me more than anything and something I've been working on diligently is the drugs that are coming onto the reserve now. It's becoming absolutely uncontrollable, and they're something that we have to deal with.

You briefly asked me a question about my philosophy in the business plan. I think my philosophy is to make sure that Albertans are safe and they're secure and they're well taken care of and they feel safe in their homes and they feel safe in their communities and they feel safe in their jobs.

You asked me about the budget. I briefly talked about the budget and the increase we got and the challenges that we have within the budget, and I acknowledged the challenges we have in the budget when I spoke. We have communities across this province that are feeling the challenges of policing, and they're feeling those challenges of policing for several reasons. What used to be urban crime is now moving into rural, and crime is different. We're seeing a lot of challenges. Again, I go back to the crop-up of meth labs that are appearing in our province and in our rural areas, the green operations that are growing. I thought B.C. had a problem, but we're starting to see a problem with the marijuana growth in our province.

That is what I wrote down, as much as I could write down, so I'm prepared to sit down and listen, and we can tackle it again.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Where we were not able to hear each other because of the ambience in the Chamber, I can clarify a couple of those. I was asking about the provincial impaired driving enforcement strategy, which appears on page 348 of your report under Introduction. I think you did pick up on it and said that you were working with Transportation, particularly around rural areas is what I heard you say. It's stated here that the "Alberta Solicitor General will . . . work with other government ministries and stakeholders to develop a Provincial Impaired Driving Enforcement Strategy," and I was asking: please give us details on what you're anticipating here. Who are the stakeholders? What are you looking to do? It's a three-year plan, et cetera, et cetera. I'm looking for the details and to roll that one out a bit.

There was one in there around the victims of crime fund. I'm sorry; we just didn't hear each other. So we'll have to wait for Hansard for clarification on that.

She did pick up on the questions about the programs for aboriginal populations, and if she can give me some details and flesh that out a bit. She said that she had a particular staff person working on it. Maybe I could get a list of the projects and initiatives that are there and perhaps what the vision for the future is or the vision for the three years is anticipated to be.

Now, there are some issues around First Nations policing. I may come back to that one because I'm trying to remember something I've been told very specifically about First Nations police officers and it's not coming forward in my brain. So I'll come back to that at the end, and maybe my memory will have come forward.

I was asking quite specifically about the changes and why the changes in the vision and the mission, and I was talking about what the Solicitor General's philosophy is around this because she is the leader of this department. She is setting the pace here; she's setting the philosophy. So it's either her philosophy personally or her philosophy for the department developed in conjunction with staff and stakeholders, et cetera, et cetera. But I wanted to have some detail, fleshing out, some explanation on why the changes and what was being anticipated, what's going to fall under that. You don't just make changes because you thought you would or because it's a new three-year plan. I expect that the minister will have made these with some deliberation, so I'm looking for the background on what was behind the deliberations in making the changes. Those are the sort of catch-up comments.

Now, on we go. Okay. The last thing we talked about, then, was gambling. I'd like to talk a bit about the three reports. The victims of crime review that was done was actually completed, as far as I know, more than a year ago. It's still never been released. So out of the three reports – the review of the victims legislation and programs, the MLA review of the Police Act, and the MLA review of corrections – only one of them has been released, actually in two forms, and that was the MLA review of the Police Act. The other two seem to be on the shelf. So I'm not sure if the minister is looking to age them like a fine wine or a cheese, or what's the deal.

It is more than a year past when she received one of them. The other one, the Corrections Act – I'm trying to remember now. It's six months, I think, since she received it. So when do we anticipate the public release of these two reports? The taxpayers put money forward for these believing that they're going to lead to something. They like to see what they got. They like to get it in their hands and to know what actually came out of it, something concrete, if you will. So when specifically is the minister anticipating releasing the review that was done on the victim services, and when will we be seeing the public release of the corrections review?

We've had, as I've said, two versions of the MLA review of the Police Act, one that was released last mid-July, and the second one was a sort of update that was in response to a further feedback loop in the community. In fact, a number of recommendations that were made in the first version were pulled back or withdrawn or stopped in the second version. So I'd like an update on what the minister is seeing there, where she anticipates that to go. Is that the end of it now? Is there another feedback loop? Will there be a final final version of that, or have we had it? When will this be rolled out?

Now, with the corrections review the review set out to look at sentencing, staff and funding resources, offender security and staff safety, capacity requirements in the facilities, and offender rehabilitation programs. So, as I said, we haven't seen the report. We do have proposed legislation in front of us which seems to come out of the corrections review, but we don't have the corrections review. So we don't know from what sprang the legislation that's in front of us.

Also, can I get an update on the cost of the committee? I did write to the minister about three or four months ago and was given a figure of $40,000 that had been spent on the review of the Corrections Act. Has there been any additional resource expended on this? The minister is shaking her head no. Okay.

One of the areas that was much anticipated but in fact not addressed or that we haven't seen anything further of was the private prisons.

An Hon. Member: Prisons for profits.

Ms Blakeman: Prisons for profits, yeah.

Can I get the Solicitor General on the record, please, to tell us if she is expecting in this three-year period between 2003 and 2006 to look into private prisons? Is she expecting to implement them? How is she expecting to do that? Are we only going to hear about that when we get a report from the review of the Corrections Act MLA committee? If so, then we need to see the report from the government MLA committee. This starts to become a never-ending circle from which the public gets no information. So I'm probing the minister to please get us some information about that and to put on the record whether she is planning to implement private prisons or any version of privatization of our prison system or our corrections system in the next three years.

She's responded a little bit to my questions about rehabilitation. I think the average stay in provincial prisons that I've heard before is 32 days. I agree: not a lot of time to get a university degree underneath an inmate's belt. Certainly, that's not a possibility. She has to my memory only ever talked about rehabilitation and programs by talking about drug and alcohol addiction counseling. Is there any other kind of program, rehabilitation in the sense of literacy assistance or numeracy assistance or any kind of skill upgrading, anything else at all that the minister is currently offering or is anticipating offering over the span of the three-year plan that we have in front of us? With that, of course, is: will there be the funding that supports that?

Now, the second MLA review was of the Police Act, and again when I contacted the minister several months ago, the cost of that committee was a little above $10,000. Could I get an update on the cost of that committee as well?

Mrs. Forsyth: Hasn't changed.

Ms Blakeman: Hasn't changed at all. Still $10,000. Okay.

Again, the goals of that review were to engage the stakeholders with their thoughts on changes to the Police Act, looking at strategic policing issues, legislative issues governing police, accountability, special constables, alternative measures on policing. Some of the more controversial issues that were brought forward around that were photoradar, implementing the deputy constables, the use of private security guards and private policing services, the unmanned aerial surveillance, and the provincial police force. So we have had the original release in June and a supplement. I'd already asked if we were getting a final report on this.

Further to that, are we anticipating changes to the Police Act? I don't see any indication of expected legislation in the spring session. Are we expecting to see something later that would then be debated in the fall, or are we now looking at next year? What is her time line: (a) is she expecting to change the Police Act, and (b) what's the time line on it?

I'm also interested in, especially in light of the episode that has been raised a couple of times in the Assembly actually around the special constable who . . . [A cell phone rang] A phone is ringing again, and perhaps the person could answer it outside. Perhaps if they could go outside to have their discussion, that would be helpful.

The special constable got caught in that very unfortunate circumstance with someone that had a gun in their vehicle, and the special constable approached them. After that, there was a call to allow special constables to arm. So I'm going back and looking again at the recommendations for deputy constables compared to special constables. Could I get some from the minister what her thoughts are, what the department's thoughts are, what they anticipate actions are on allowing those deputy constables to have firearms, side arms, or any kind of weapon that they would be using and also a clarification of what's being anticipated for them.

There's a certain sector of jobs that are set aside for the special constables to be doing. How does the minister anticipate the deputy constables would be different from them? What different list of job activities would they have? So if we can get the list of job activities for the special constables and then the list of activities that the minister anticipates the deputy constables would be involved in and the discussion of the carrying of the side arms. I'm interested to see whether the Solicitor General is pursuing that.

Also, could I hear the minister's thoughts and any plans, expenditures of money on a provincial police force and whether she is pursuing this through planning or through additional research or whether she's not interested in pursuing this at all. Where is the minister on this one? I know that we've got some private members that are very keen, but I don't know where the minister is standing on this particular issue.

Now, flowing from the MLA review of the Police Act, we have the issues around police funding, and that's been in the paper a great deal. I've got a mittful of various articles that have turned up recently: Mayor Presses for Police Funding in the Edmonton Journal in January; Action Plan in the Works for World Cop Funding from the Calgary Herald; Cash-strapped Police Balk at Providing Free Services for the Province, again in the Edmonton Journal; Gibbons Feeling Robbed over $200,000 Policing Fee; and it goes on. So there is increasing agitation around the funding of police services.

The minister and I have an ongoing disagreement about who funds how much of this, and I'd like to get some clarification, please, from the minister, then, with facts and figures. According to AUMA the province pays 14 percent of policing costs, the municipalities pay 49, and the feds pay 37. When I use those figures, the minister jumps up and says: no, no, that's not including the grants from the municipalities. But when you look at the grants from the municipalities, in a lot of cases, particularly in the case of Edmonton and Calgary, that doesn't include any money for policing services. So there's a great deal of disagreement about who's paying how much.

Now, we do have under the Police Act communities with a population under 2,500 receiving their policing services free of cost, but communities with 2,500 to 15,000 people must pay 70 percent of the cost, and communities of over 15,000 pay 90 percent of the costs. So is there anticipation of changes in the funding formula for policing services? Specific to Edmonton and Calgary, will the province now start paying for policing services again? That money was completely cut out of their budgets in 1995. If the minister wants to explain how she thinks that money wasn't cut out of it, I'm sure the chief would be interested in hearing it.

I'm also interested in what concrete plans the minister has in place to sit down with the chief of police for the Edmonton Police Service around the payment of services that the police service is offering: jurisdictional, operational, regulatory, and regional. It's performing these services on behalf of the province and not recouping its cost outlay on this. What discussions, what plans? You know, concrete dates when the Solicitor General is sitting down with the chief of police for the Edmonton Police Service to start to work this out.

I have a great deal of concern that this is only going to escalate. Looking across the province a number of groups seem to be unhappy with the amount of money that they're receiving from the province or the amount of money that they're having to pay out or specifically about what a number of smaller communities feel is an inequity. If they have 2,501 people, then all of a sudden they're paying 70 percent of the cost; if they have 2,499, they're not paying anything. So this is causing increasing stress in the community, and where is the minister going to go with this? I'm looking for a plan complete with time lines on how she's anticipating meeting with different groups over this.

Again, just clarification on whether she's anticipating a regional police force, which may well work in Alberta given some clusterings in particular areas. I'm thinking of southern Alberta, for example, where you've got Lethbridge and Coaldale and some of those areas that cluster very closely together. That may well work, but is there money being set aside to study this? Is there money being set aside to enhance this or to assist the groups to go in that direction if they so choose? What's the plan here?

Could I also probe a bit more on the antiterrorism equipment and training, on the status of the negotiations with the feds for money to cover this? That had been a response that the minister had given to me some time ago in response to my questions. What is the status of negotiations on this? I know that there had been particular concerns expressed by the larger police services saying, "We need money for," and then there was a long shopping list of things that they felt they needed: the biochemical suits and certain other protective equipment. Where are we with that shopping list? Is there going to be money coming from the feds for it? Has the minister been negotiating? I mean, I know she's met recently with her federal counterpart.

I appear to have reached the second of my opportunities to raise questions, and I look forward to another opportunity. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the first hour that's allocated between the minister and members of the opposition has now elapsed. Any other member who wishes to participate will be able to do so.

The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. The member has indicated that we both had a bit of a difficult time hearing earlier.

The development of a provincial impaired driving enforcement strategy is in conjunction with Justice, Transportation, and other police services. There is presently a steering committee composed of Alberta Justice, Alberta Transportation, a senior representative from police services, as well as the Solicitor General who have been developing a three-year strategy. As well, there's a 10-year business plan to combat impaired driving in Alberta. The committee is focused on Check Stop initiatives, utilizing multi-agencies in regional settings to specifically enforce the impaired laws in both urban and rural settings, and the Provincial Impaired Driving Committee has recommended a tripartite initiative between Justice and Alberta Transportation and my department. So we're working with various agencies on this issue. We believe that it's vitally important to the safety of Albertans. We believe that we need to bring a higher level of awareness to the high societal costs that result from impaired drivers, and we continue to work on it.

You asked about First Nation policing. You said that you'd heard something recently, but it had escaped you, and you'd come back to it.

You again asked me about my changes to the visions and missions. Quite frankly, hon. member, I like the vision, and I like the mission. We worked very hard putting together the vision, and we worked very hard on the mission. My background is advertising and marketing, and I spent many, many years in the advertising and marketing field. One of the things that they say that's important is the KISS philosophy and keeping it simple. You know, the vision is clear. It's articulate. "Ensure Albertans have safe and secure communities in which to live, work and raise their families." That's a vision. It's a vision Albertans understand. It's clear. It's concise. There's just no question about what our vision is for Albertans, and people are comfortable with that. They want to be safe. They want a secure community where they work, where they live, and where they raise their families.

The mission statement:

Our mission is to serve Albertans by ensuring safe and secure communities through effective policing, security and correctional services and when crime is committed to assist victims of crime.

Well, we're including the victims in regard to the mission. We're talking about our police. We're making sure that people are secure.

The department and the minister responsible spent an awful lot of time coming up with this vision. We have great people in our communications department, and we wanted to make sure that the message was a message that was done well and sent out to Albertans and things that they would understand.

You asked a lot about the reviews that we have going on. One of the things that I thought was important when I took over the ministry was to look over the reviews. You made some criticism on some of the time and the length of time, and I fully will accept criticism and responsibility for that. I think that when you're dealing with a sector of people, for example, the victims, which I think is a portion of society where crime has been suffered, that has lost out tremendously, the pendulum has swung so far to the side of the criminal that I think we've had to take the opportunity and bring the pendulum back to include how the victim feels. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw went out and did a review for me, and she did a very good review. We're studying that review. We're studying it very intently and looking at the financial implications of that review to make sure that we do it well and that we do it on behalf of the victims of this province who have suffered crime. We will be releasing that very shortly. So it's important.

You talked about the policing review. I know I let you know, because you wrote me and asked me, that the cost was $10,000. It hasn't changed. As you're well aware, the committee went out, tabled their review of policing in July of 2002, and there was quite a bit of controversy in regard to some of the recommendations that the committee made, and you alluded to it. You talked about the photoradar, and you talked about the deputy constables and several other things. So the committee asked me for the opportunity to go out and clarify their recommendations to the stakeholders, which they did. They worked very hard to do that and came back with their report. It's called Listening to Stakeholders, and it was a supplemental to the policing report. It was released probably about three or four weeks ago – I'm not exactly sure – to give the stakeholders the opportunity to look at the supplemental, and we're working on it right now. We're working in the department, and we're assessing the original report from July, the supplemental, the 200-plus responses we've heard from stakeholders on top of that, and putting together a minister's report, to take it through the process of government, which we do. It will be released once it's gone through the government process. I know that's probably not the answer that the member wants to hear, but unfortunately on the government side we have a process that has to be followed.

I have met with stakeholders. The stakeholders are well aware of it. I have talked to the mayors. I had a meeting yesterday with the AAMD and C. I'm meeting with the AUMA next week. So the stakeholders are aware of the process. They understand that policing in this province is a very, very complicated, complex issue, and we need to make sure that we're doing it right. You indicated and I've indicated – and I'm not embarrassed – that policing funding is a problem and how we address the needs of the community. Currently, right now, 2,500 don't pay, and we've heard many, many complaints about that in particular: why only 2,500? It goes on to the fact that the counties around it are not paying, but the counties are getting the revenues from fines. Then you say that all policing pays, and we heard that in the original report, and then you hear from the communities that say that they can't afford to pay. So it's a very, very complicated issue.

You then alluded to the provincial police force. Obviously, you're well aware of the motion that was brought to the floor by one of my colleagues, and you asked if we were moving in that direction. No, we're not moving in that direction at this particular time. The RCMP contract is done in I think it's 2012, and we will be doing some consulting. I can tell you, though, that I had a three-hour meeting with the RCMP. They're not afraid of a review. They're not opposed to a review. They would like Albertans to understand what they bring to the community, their cost and the benefits of RCMP in this province. Quite frankly, we have a survey, and I think the RCMP in this province are at 85 percent, which is huge support for the RCMP in this province.

The member asked about the regionalized police model. Well, the Police Act allows for the agreements between municipalities to amalgamate their police services, to develop a regional model. We are not opposed to it, are watching very carefully and are in several discussions with Chief Middleton-Hope in Lethbridge in regard to their regionalized police model in Coaldale. It's not for the minister to dictate down to the communities if they want to go ahead with the regional police model. It is up to the minister, though, to provide them support if they need it. We indicated to both the chief in Lethbridge and the chief in Coaldale that we would provide a facilitator, if so needed, to help them with a regional model. I spoke to the chief I guess it was a week ago Wednesday, and he indicated to me that things are moving along, and he hopes to keep us posted and would let us know by mid-May how he felt that model would be going.

The correctional review. Where is it in the proposed legislation? You alluded to a correctional review at a cost of $40,000, which I think is really relatively inexpensive to review how we are dealing with corrections in this province. Quite frankly, I encourage you as a member to call your federal Liberal government and encourage them to do the same thing as we've done with our correctional facilities.

Mr. Lukaszuk: They could hire our committee.

Mrs. Forsyth: Edmonton-Castle Downs has offered his ability to be hired.

The committee traveled right across this province and visited the correctional facilities, all of the work camps, probation offices, even made a trip to Ontario to look at the privatized model of prisons and wanted to see how that was working, whether it was successful or not. I am in receipt of the report and looking at it very carefully. Again, we have a process that we have to go through in regard to government, how we're going to deal with it.

The other thing you referred to was about the Corrections Amendment Act. Why are we bringing forward the Corrections Amendment Act when the corrections committee hasn't reported yet? Well, I had actually been working on the piece of legislation probably for three years prior to being the minister and had been working in consultation with some of the correction officers, et cetera, let it sit on my desk, and a year ago we as minister and department decided to look at the act again to see if it was still worth while to bring it forward. I actually asked the committee if they would comment on the act and if they felt that I should hold off or I shouldn't hold off or if I was interfering in their process. They felt that, no, it wasn't interfering in their process whatsoever. So that is what you see in front of us.

You talked about the rehabilitation of offenders in the correctional facilities. You know, all of our offenders in our adult facilities either have to be working, in upgrading, or they are ill. I really would like to get back to you, because you mentioned two and I only caught one. You mentioned literacy and one other.

Ms Blakeman: Numeracy.

Mrs. Forsyth: Okay. I'm not sure, and I'm sorry, but we will get back to you on that particular question. I can tell you that we do spend a lot of time with our offenders, and I alluded to that before.

You asked about the special constables, a huge issue obviously. One only has to read in the paper an incident, a very tragic and sad and very unfortunate incident, that happened recently to a special constable in Grande Prairie. We have since written to that special constable. We feel that he was way out of his authority in what he was particularly doing and have suspended him with pay until we review all the things and questions that we've asked him in regard to acting outside his authority. I have no problem telling the hon. member the number of complaints we get about special constables. That doesn't take away from the special constables that are doing good jobs in this province, because we have over 3,000 special constables and about 140-some with more authorization than the majority of them. Their capacity is bylaw enforcement and a bunch of things.

So we sat down with the new president and the old president of the Alberta Special Constables' Association a few weeks ago and talked to them. They're keen on allowing a whole bunch of new things for their special constables: carrying side arms, carrying Taser guns. I've indicated to them: no, I'm not prepared to do that. I think the first thing that we have to do is start looking at standards, getting their association up and running, somewhere where we can deal with roles and responsibilities. I have assigned one of my staff members who's a former RCMP fellow working very closely with them, and we will try and help them as much as we can on this special constables issue.

You asked me about the chief of police of Edmonton. I'm continually meeting with Chief Wasylyshen quite frankly. I was trying to flip back in my Day-Timer, but probably within the last month I sat down with the chief, and prior to that it was regularly. Chief Wasylyshen knows that I have an open-door policy. He also has my private home number, and he has my cell number if he would like to talk. I am not going to get into a spitting match with the chief, and I am not going to get into a spitting match with the mayor in regard to policing issues. I encourage them to come to my office.

The functions that they are currently doing that they were alluding to in that article – and the chief has not spoken to me personally; just what is involved in that particular article – are all part and parcel of the Police Act and their responsibilities. If they feel that they shouldn't be doing that or they want to withhold their services, well, I guess we have to sit down and frankly talk about it. But as I explained to the hon. member, we provide $16 million in an unconditional grant, and the city of Edmonton received approximately $23 to $25 million in fines, but we must keep in mind that it's very clear in the Police Act that the funding for the police, for the municipality, is done in conjunction with the police commission, the chief of police, and council, and they determine their budgets. If Chief Wasylyshen has a problem with funding, he should be talking to the commissioner and he should be talking to the mayor in regard to funding. The municipal funding, the unconditional grant, comes under Municipal Affairs, but I have and will continue to advocate on behalf of all police in this province and try and get more money.

The last question you asked was again on antiterrorism. We have given the city of Calgary – and I don't have the funding in front of me – X amount of dollars after the G-8. The number has escaped me. I have indicated in a letter to Chief Beaton on the 17th of January, I believe, that if the city feels that they need more funding for terrorism, then by all means they should present before the task force that the Premier established, and I reiterated it again when I met with Chief Beaton and David Mitchell, who is the commissioner, and have not heard from them since then. So they know, again, that the door is open. I explained to Chief Beaton that if you got X amount of dollars before and you feel you need more, I'd be pleased to have them present in front of the ministerial task force that the Premier set up.

So I think I covered most of the questions. I may have missed a few, but if so, we've got people in the gallery taking notes and said that we would certainly get back to you on those.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a last couple of categories to cover and a few clarifications. According to what the Solicitor General just said, then, services such as serving documents, providing witness management and protection, conducting bail hearings, check stops, and commercial vehicle inspections are all duties that are to be assumed and paid for by the civic police force. Those are not provincial duties. They're not performing that on behalf of the province. Did I hear the minister correctly say that under the legislation they're supposed to be doing it, that it's not the province's duty or obligation to pay for it in any way, shape, or form, that this is under the legislation? So just clarification there.

One other thing. With the offenders I was talking about numeracy and literacy programs. The other one that's obvious is English as a Second Language. Even in 32 days on an average stay there's some work that could be offered there that would be of great benefit for offenders who are trying to rehabilitate and move into a constructive community life.

Now, just a few other areas to cover. Again, this is coming out of a lack of information with no corrections review forthcoming. There had been some discussion a year ago about closing correctional facilities. I'm wondering if we are expecting or if it's reflected in this budget. Is the minister anticipating any correctional facilities closing in the next year or in the following two years, to make the full three-year period this budget is anticipating, and which ones are being anticipated? If they're closing, then is there a consolidation that's expected, and would people be transferred? Where? Could I get some information on that?

I'm just going back over the questions that I asked last year and looking for answers. Just a few of them were questions that I couldn't find an answer for. Around the G-8 summit there was some outstanding money that was owed back to the province. Did we receive the full amount of funding that the province provided services for and was anticipating being reimbursed for? Did we get all of that money from the feds, or is there still money outstanding there?

Also, last year I asked about sharing information and enforcement with the aboriginal casinos, and I didn't get a clear response on that from last year's debate, so I'm reasking the question. This also came up in my debate with the Gaming minister this year where there was a question about enforcement and working around possible white-collar crime fraud issues around gambling, that the Minister of Gaming referred to the Solicitor General, saying: that kind of enforcement is not my problem; it goes to the Solicitor General. So I'm putting it to the Solicitor General.

The issue of caseload for probation officers. Could the minister please supply me with the numbers that tell us what is the previous year's average caseload and what is this year's average caseload for probation officers? What is anticipated for next year's average caseload for probation officers? I don't see increased funding to support or to lessen that workload. I'm wondering what the minister is anticipating for the future. Is there a sort of breakpoint that the minister will start to take action as we approach that? Is it 500 cases per or 700 cases per? What plan does the minister have? Perhaps it's not written down, but surely the staff have anticipated, as the workload continues to increase, that at a certain point it's going to be approaching a crisis. At what point does the plan kick in, and what's the plan?

The minister's office shows an increase of 7 percent. Now, that may not add up to actually very many dollars, but it is 7 percent. What is that 7 percent covering? Is that additional staff, or is it renovations of the minister's office or a lot more photocopying that's being anticipated? What's that 7 percent covering?

Now, I did remember what the native policing issue was. A couple of issues there. It's been pointed out to me that officers are often seconded from the RCMP to work in Justice or in the Solicitor General's area, but they believe that no First Nations police officers were ever seconded to the department. Could the minister check and see if that information can be backed up, and in fact if no First Nations officer has ever been seconded to the department, why? Would there be something that could be put in place in the future?

Secondly, the minister was talking about a Special Constables' Association. At first she talked about it like it existed, and then she talked about helping them set one up. I'm wondering if there is a First Nations police officers' association, and if not, why not? Would the minister consider assisting them to set one up, or is there a reason why they don't belong to the other regular one? That's probably obvious: it will be a geographical restriction there. But if I could get some answers around that. Also, has the minister consulted with any of the First Nations or aboriginal police forces around the discussions for either a provincial police force or a regional police force? Have they been brought into a discussion, or have they been consulted at all on either of those two issues?

The fine revenues. Aren't these fine revenues collected by First Nations police? Are they allowed to keep it, or could they be allowed to keep this fine revenue? That was something that was being discussed as part of that police review and different possibilities of collecting fine revenue: putting it into a special fund, not putting it into a special fund. Where are we at with the fine revenue? What's actually being considered here now? If I can get a specific section answered, then, on the First Nations.

The last of my questions is around the diversion project. The minister and I have spoken about that I think for two years now. Certainly, I'm supportive of it. I know the minister is supportive of it. Can we get an update, please, on what's happening with this project? When I met with the minister last summer, she indicated that this was really a multiministry committee and that it was being chaired by her deputy minister. I think, but there were a number of others that were involved. Most recently I think in the news we've heard a bit of a difference of opinion, shall I say, between the Solicitor General and I think it was the health minister over this very diversion project. We know that there was the pilot project in Calgary. I believe there was also a smaller one that happened in Edmonton. Can we get an update on what's happening with that and whether the minister thinks she can move forward with this project, or whether it needs more buy-in or more time? What's needed in order to expand this program and make it available to more centres and to make it a permanent program?

Those are the questions I have so far, and I will allow others to get on the record with their issues for the Solicitor General. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask a few questions of the Solicitor General on the departmental estimates today. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to do so. I was looking at the business plan, and I find that under Core Performance Measures the first set of measures deals with victim financial benefits, victim services, and victim service initiatives. I heard the Solicitor General speak about how the pendulum had swung over the last several years away from the protection of victims and services they needed provided to them and that she had made a determination to correct that imbalance and bring the pendulum back to where the situation would be more friendly towards victims.

Now, when I look at page 353 of the business plan and look at the number of victims' services initiatives, I notice that the minister is planning to increase these initiatives from where they were in the years 2001-2002 from 213 to 220. I wonder if she could shed some light on what these additional initiatives would look like. What are they? On the same page "access to victim service units" is planned to go up by a few percentage points. These are ambitious new targets, and I find nothing wrong with those as such except that I need more information on the nature of the initiatives that'll be added to the existing ones from the year that's just passed.

When I look at the budget line items under expenses, the victims of crime fund will decline by about 7 percent. So I find it difficult to square the circle. That is, on the one hand the Solicitor General is planning and making commitments to increase services and initiatives in favour of the victims of crime, and at the same time the only item under expenses where this money will go down from $10,813,000 to $10,045,000 is in the area of the victims of crime fund. So there's a reduction of about $768,000. I'm sure the Solicitor General will try to address this apparent anomaly between the amount of dollars that she is allocating to that category and her plan to increase the services to the victims in addition to, of course, telling me what these new initiatives will be.

My second question has to do again with listening very carefully when the minister was responding to some questions from the Member for Edmonton-Centre with respect to some ongoing exchanges that have been going on between the minister on the one hand and Edmonton police services, both the chief of police and the police association. In addition, I understand that the police association may not have been in direct exchange with the minister, but certainly the chief has been. I notice that at least according to the recent Edmonton Sun story of April 10, which is just a few days ago, the mayor seems to be sharing the serious concerns of the chief of police of Edmonton when the chief says that his police service is and has been providing unfunded provincial services that are not really within the funded mandate of the Edmonton city police. He puts about a $13 million price on the services that the province receives and seems to continue to expect to receive from the Edmonton Police Service.

So I want a quite specific and clear answer from the minister as to what she thinks of the claims, which are outlined in detail on the piece of paper that I have here by the Edmonton Police Service. The amount is $13,020,000, and they've outlined in quite a bit of detail, item by item, why they think that the province owes the Edmonton Police Service at least $13 million for the services that the province is receiving directly and which are over and above the work that the Edmonton Police Service does under the authority of the Police Commission for the city of Edmonton. So if the minister would address that question.

My one other question. I heard the Solicitor General commenting on the radio perhaps a few days ago on her support for the Edmonton city police's consideration of installing some cameras on Whyte Avenue. The Solicitor General said quite categorically as I heard her on the radio that privacy concerns as expressed by some people may be there, but security comes first. Public safety comes first. Okay. Now, I happen to represent that area of the city. With the exception of one major breakdown in public order two years ago on Canada Day I think the issue of public safety is not that critical. If it is there, it's related to there being too many bars and some people getting too drunk after midnight. The communities around Whyte Avenue have not been asking for surveillance cameras but for a reduction of the number of places where people go and drink, and they think that would be the appropriate answer rather than breaching the privacy of tens of thousands of Albertans, including Edmontonians and people who live in and around Edmonton-Strathcona, who want to spend time on that avenue.

I think their privacy is an issue, and to simply say that public safety comes first I think fails to address the question of where the threats to public safety come from. They don't come from people just being on Whyte Avenue. The sources of those potential threats may reside not in lack of surveillance cameras but in the overabundance of bars and the licences that are issued, and part of the responsibility for that happening must be accepted by the Alberta liquor board, which is the responsibility of the government and not of either the business owners or the city police or the city of Edmonton. So that's my third question. Would the Solicitor General clarify as to why she thinks that privacy considerations must give way to public safety considerations? Why does she think that public safety will be better served by installing surveillance cameras rather than by taking serious action to reduce the incidence of heavy drinking which results from the excess capacity and the excess existence of watering holes around the area?

So these are three questions that I would raise at the moment. To conclude, I just want to make a general statement about the complaints that I hear from city of Edmonton representatives, including council members, about the withdrawal in the mid-90s, I guess, of grants that the city used to receive for policing. Those grants in today's dollars are estimated to come close to $30 million. The province at that time removed those grants in order to respond to the pressing concern with deficit reduction and debt repayment. Those concerns now, according to the Minister of Finance, are not pressing. Why is it that cities like Edmonton are still waiting to hear from this government, including this minister, that those grants will now be restored?

I'll stop there so you can answer those questions for me. I'd really appreciate it, Minister.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm going to go third to first if I may. I find of interest the video camera comments that the hon. member has alluded to. Yes, I was on CBC, and yes – I mean, you heard me. I was very, very clear. I think public safety is paramount. You referred to the fact that, well, we only had one major incident. You know, I don't know if this is a fair analogy or not, but sometimes major incidents make you wake up and realize some of the things you have to do. I don't think, hon. member, that anybody ever, ever in a million years would have forecast the incident that happened on September 11 and what we face with the terrorists' act and what has happened since that terrorist attack of September 11 in North America as far as preparing for security and what's going on.

You know, I've talked to some young people about video cameras. In fact, I've talked to some young people – and we face a similar situation in Calgary. I forget what it is; it used to be Electric Avenue, and now I think it's 1st Street where they've decided to do their drinking. The kids that are on those streets or the people that are visiting those bars that are purely innocent – they're going there to drink, and they're going there to have a good time – don't have a problem with the cameras. But I have to tell you that I was on a ride-along program last May for crime prevention, and every third call that we were getting on that police scanner was for fights, was for brawls, stuff coming from the bars, and it tied up the police incredibly. Of course, you get a bunch of drunk kids or drunk adults – I don't want to just pinpoint this on kids, obviously, but you get drunk, inebriated adults and trouble breaks out.

So, I mean, I honestly – and I can tell you this quite frankly – think that the number one priority that is paramount is the safety of Edmontonians, Calgaryans, Albertans. You know, I don't think we're invading anybody's privacy. Why would you invade anybody's privacy if they're just quietly walking down the street and they're not doing anything? We have video cameras around this Legislature for the protection of the people that work in this Legislature and for people like yourself to make sure that you're safe and secure. You may or may not agree with that particular incident, but as the Solicitor General it clearly says in my mission statement: safety and security of Albertans and a safe place for people to raise their families.

Hon. member, you have to appreciate the fact that we are in a new time, and as much as we don't want to or we don't like it, we have problems in the cities with gangs – and I know you're well aware of that – and we have difficult crime situations that our police have to deal with on a daily basis. I honestly thank God every day for the police in this province, the cops that take care of us every day, our CAPS officers that do a good job, my correction officers, and my probation officers for the stuff that they have to put up with on a daily basis and how well they deal with it in protecting the people of this province.

You talked about the chief and the mayor again, and I answered that question to the Member for Edmonton-Centre. I'm not going to get in a spitting match with the mayor, and I'm not going to get in a spitting match with the chief of police. But let me tell you, it clearly spells out under the Police Act that in consultation with the chief of police and the commissioner and council they decide on the budget and the priorities and how that budget is aligned, and if they say this million of dollars goes to the police, that's exactly what goes to them.

When I hear you allude to the fact that the police threaten that they're not going to provide their duties within the courts, let's work on a bit of a scenario here. A police officer is in a high-speed chase. You can say a B and E, you can say whatever you want. He catches the guy, he cuffs the guy, and he takes him and he charges him. If the police in this province for a minute think that they are going to stop that particular duty at that particular time, then you can say bye-bye to the offender because those police have to be used and they are needed at court when they go before a judge. That is part and parcel of their particular duty.

You referred to the victims. First of all, there are several things, you know, in regard to the pendulum. I think we have to really, really talk about the victims in this province. As the result of amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada in December '99 the victims of a crime are given an opportunity to read their victim impact statements aloud in court for consideration prior to sentencing so that the judge could hear it. As well, the judges are now all obliged to inquire whether the victim has been advised about the opportunity for a victim statement, so I think that's one of the positive things that we're moving forward.

I mentioned earlier, when I was speaking to the Member for Edmonton-Centre, about the victims' review, apologized for the length of time that it's taken for this victims' review to get to this point, where it still hasn't been released, and I'll take full criticism for that. I think that what we have to do on this particular thing is make sure that we're doing it right, make sure that we can follow through with some of the recommendations. We also have to consider the financial implications that are involved in that particular victims' review. There's no sense getting anybody's hopes up, especially when it's the victims', if I cannot provide them the funding under that review.

Dr. Pannu: Funding is reduced. That's what my question was, why funding is down.

Mrs. Forsyth: You're not supposed to be talking now. It's my turn. You're supposed to be sitting listening. But I'll sit down and let you ask again.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've listened with interest for quite some time to the exchange between the hon. minister and various members of this Assembly. I look at the Alberta Solicitor General annual report and I look at the Minister of Justice, and certainly the first thing that comes to my mind is that perhaps all this is unnecessary. We look at the expansion of the cabinet after the last election, and maybe we would be better off speaking to the hon. Minister of Justice. We could do all this under one department and save a few dollars in the process, save a few administrative dollars. They could be better spent fighting crime, educating the public about crime and the effects of criminal activity. I just think that the former member of this Assembly, I believe from Ponoka, a member of the Progressive Conservative Party, was absolutely right when that individual talked in an open letter to the province about the expansion of the cabinet from 16 to 24 hon. members of this Assembly and how that money could be better spent, and this is a case of it.

Now, I'm looking at page 344 of the budget document, the government and lottery fund estimates, and I see victims programs and the expense item estimates for this year of $2.3 million. Previously there was $1.8 million spent. If one is to look back and go back on this, the actual expense, true enough, is $1.8 million, but the actual budget that was allocated for that was – and we'd have to go back to an annual report from a previous year to confirm this. We would see that there was a budget of $3.5 million, and this is for victims programs again. This year we are going to budget, as I said, $2.3 million. What programs is this money being spent on? Why do we have the actual expense in the previous fiscal year of roughly half of what the actual budget was, and is that going to reoccur in this budget when we're talking about victims programs here?

Also, in financial benefits the actual expense is indicated at – and this is on the line above, again for the hon. minister, on page 344 – $10.6 million in the fiscal year 2001-02. In this year's estimates it's $7 million. But financial benefits – and this is in the victims of crime fund – was overexpended by $3 million, yet we're going to spend in this year $3 million less. Now, how is all this going to work out? If the minister could explain these discrepancies, I would be very grateful. Certainly as I understand it, the victims of crime fund in these documents has an administrative staff of nine, which doesn't seem out of the ordinary when you have a total full-time equivalent employment in the ministry of over 2,000 souls. What exactly is going on to cause these discrepancies in the victims of crime fund? If the minister could explain all that to me, I would be grateful.

With the victims of crime fund itself, on page 341, I believe it was overexpended – and I'm just calculating this – by 10 percent. If the minister could explain to me why, I would be grateful for that explanation too.

Now, getting further on here, Mr. Chairman, to the crime statistics. Whether it was in the Department of Justice or in the department as we know it now – you know that we reinvented the Alberta Solicitor General, that department. Interesting. People would not believe this. The crime rates are actually decreasing if you look from 1991 onwards and particularly per thousand population. That's a noble effort, and that's a good goal. Regardless of whether I feel it should be in Justice or independent, it's a good goal to strive to reduce our crime rate when you compare us with the rest of Canada.

I notice in the performance measures that we just talk about the western Canadian provinces, and I don't know why that would be. Is there sort of an equal amount of population that resides in urban areas, that resides in rural areas, in small towns? I don't know why in the annual report from last year we're talking about Canada, yet here I see that we're comparing ourselves to the four western provinces. When we look at the public perception of safety in the home, in the last five years there has been significant progress made, and those responsible – well, if I had a hat, I would tip it. Public perception of safety in the neighbourhood: certainly there has been significant work done there. Also, with the victimization rate there has been a slight improvement. We look at the crime rate, violent crime and property crime, and to have the lowest violent and property crime rates of the four western provinces is the target.

Now, when we compare ourselves to the rest of Canada, we seem to be going down parallel with the country in total, and that is progress. Certainly there is more progress to be made. There are certain people who almost make the publicizing of crime a cottage industry. They put a lot of fear into individuals. We live in a big city. We live in a city where there is violent crime, unfortunately, occurring on a daily basis, and these crimes are being committed against innocent victims in all age groups, all genders; it doesn't matter. When you talk to some of the victims of those crimes, they would not believe that crime rates in this province and in this country are dropping, but the statistics are here.

I would like the hon. minister's view of this. Are we changing how we're reporting crime? Do we have less police? Are they overworked? Well, we all know they're overworked. The population of Edmonton has grown in the last 10 years. The number of police officers to police it certainly has not grown at the same rate. It's starting to grow a bit now.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates unless there are no members who wish to speak prior to the conclusion of the two hours, I must now put the question on the proposed estimates for the Department of Solicitor General for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004.

Bill 25
Class Proceedings Act

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Rathgeber]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to take this opportunity to respond as critic to Bill 25, the Class Proceedings Act. I think this is an act that has been long sought in Alberta. Class action legislation allows two or more people with an identifiable similar case to sue over a common issue to go forward to the courts as one, and this allows for a consolidated process instead of having several individual cases or in some cases hundreds of individual cases come forward on the same issue. Examples that could have been used in Alberta would be around things like the sterilization issue, pine shakes, and we've already seen issues like the breast implants. Albertans had to go to other provinces to be involved in class action suits. The other one would be WCB widows. They went to B.C. to get involved in the B.C. class action. So I think a number of people applaud this proposal to bring the legislation forward.

I'd like to recognize my colleague, the former Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who raised this issue I don't know how many times, dozens, hundreds, during his tenure here in the Legislative Assembly, and I have certainly been asking the government to bring it up since I've been the critic for this area. I would really like to support this legislation seeing as I was so keen on having seen it brought forward.

My one hesitation with it is the decision to put into the bill the clause around costs, and that is that costs are awarded under the rules of court, so strictly speaking, costs could be recovered only in a meritorious outcome. That can be seen as frightening off some groups who are not educated legal participants or not used to working inside the legal system. I had real concerns about this. This was enough to make me say: ah, darn, the process got tainted here and I can't support the legislation anymore. But I've spent some time consulting with a number of different lawyers that are coming from different backgrounds, and while they all say that it's wise to note it and to express a concern about it and that we need to be alive to people not being turned away from or discouraged from launching class action suits, the advice I'm getting from the lawyers is it is not enough to not support the legislation. In fact, a number of lawyers had said that they felt it just wasn't an issue, that in fact the courts can decide how the costs are awarded themselves. So even if a class action suit didn't win, the courts could still say: well, you didn't win because of a rule of law, but certainly, you know, your case had merit, and therefore we're going to split the costs. They can make a number of other decisions, and that's entirely up to the judge. So it wouldn't necessarily mean that the costs would all come back on the members who brought forward the class action suit.

It's particularly scary because out of all the individuals who gather together to form that class, one person's name usually appears at the head of this and is listed as the plaintiff. So it's kind of scary for that individual person to contemplate being held responsible for the costs of the entire trial. That's enough to scare a number of people. I think that we need to be encouraging people to use the legislation the way it was intended, not to be scared off by the costs prohibition, and to trust that the courts will deal with this in a fair and equitable manner.

There have certainly been some lawyers that did come forward to me and to the media saying that without a fund to assist the costs of class action, it would preclude people coming forward. They certainly argued vehemently and vigorously, but according to the Uniform Law Conference of Canada:

Normal costs rules pose barriers to bringing a class action.

Although the whole class may benefit from the action, the representative plaintiff shoulders the burden of paying lawyers' fees and disbursements and will receive only a portion of the total costs back if he or she is successful. The representative plaintiff is also liable for any costs ordered by the court if the action is unsuccessful.

So it does sound like a hard line, and it can be enough to scare people off, but I have been reassured enough that people need to stand by their action and believe in it and, of course, not bring forward frivolous actions, which I don't think many people do in the court system. We're happily in Canada still not a litigious society. We don't go forward to court unless we really believe there's a genuine case there, and we certainly don't have a culture that encourages people to go to court at the drop of a hat, and that I think is a good thing.

I do note that in B.C., who has a no-cost scheme, they're actually looking at moving away from that and looking more at what Alberta is proposing here.

Boy, I hope I'm not wrong on this, but I've been reassured enough by a number of people I respect in the legal community that this clause should not preclude people from getting involved in this and it should not be enough to stop me from supporting the legislation. I mean, we're in second reading with this. This is a debate about supporting the bill or not in principle at this stage, and I've certainly put the concern about the costs and the lack of a fund on the record. I'm satisfied enough with that that I can support the bill in principle.

The bill goes through a number of other sections that are needed. It talks about the class of plaintiffs, that they're all bound by the outcome. There can be subclasses. If there are certain people that share even closer issues than some of the others, then they can form themselves into a subclass. So they share a common cause, but there are some elements that are different from the other group. People that fall under a class can opt out of the process if they choose to do so, and that prevents people from being trapped that don't want to be covered by a class action. It does allow the class to solicit funds from organizations and people who are not part of the class action.

So without going into a sectional analysis, I'm satisfied enough by the long lobby to get this legislation in place and by putting the concerns on record around the costs section. I'm looking forward to hearing the sponsor of the bill or perhaps the Minister of Justice give justification for why that choice was made in Alberta. Was it because they'd looked at B.C. and felt that it wasn't successful there, or is this just following through on the government's philosophy of a user-pay system? Obviously, they considered it, and they deliberately included it in this legislation. So my question back to the proposer of the legislation and to the Minister of Justice is: why? Tell us what your reasoning is for having included that particular section which puts the costs back onto the plaintiffs. I think we'd all like to hear that. I'd be very interested as to whether or not the government has a reassurance that they'd like to offer to people. It would be particularly interesting if they were silent on that issue.

It's always interesting how much talk there is from the government side about opposition dragging out bills, but I don't believe in doing that if we're willing to support legislation, so I don't even need to take up my entire amount of allotted time tonight. I've said what I need to do, and I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the bill. I'm willing to go on record as being in favour in principle of Bill 25, the Class Proceedings Act, with the reservations that I've noted.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak on Bill 25, Class Proceedings Act, in its second reading. Looking at the title of the bill, I like most others who look at just the title would be tempted to speak in favour of and to support this bill because it would fill a big hole that's been present in the justice system for a long time. Many other provinces, six of them in fact, have already enacted legislation which would permit citizens to collectively launch class proceedings against a company or a government or another party. So if the bill were straightforward and an attempt to catch up with the other six provinces which had already learned from each other's experience and developed legislation, I think I would be supporting it.

I was looking at the news release from the government of Alberta that was released in March of this year. The intention as stated there is that this bill "will help ensure that class action lawsuits in Alberta proceed in a fair and efficient manner." Now, the efficiency side of it perhaps is something that we can say that this claim has some substance to because the certification process that sets out criteria to define the type of case that may be pursued as a class proceeding would be a help, I think, for potential plaintiffs to determine whether or not they should proceed with such an action in the first place. So the outlining of criteria is useful. I think that will be helpful and will I suppose contribute to increasing the efficiency in the dispensation of justice.

The issue of fairness is the one where I think this bill is most seriously flawed. Again, the news release from the government claims that the bill is "based on the Uniform Law Conference of Canada's model class proceedings act" and further says that therefore "it will ensure that Alberta courts are operating under similar guidelines currently operating in other provinces." Well, I am afraid that this claim that it follows the model that's in place in other provinces I think is questionable, to put it mildly. In the other provinces to my knowledge the representative plaintiff isn't left legally holding the bag in case the plaintiffs lose the case.

Ordinary citizens don't have the time and don't engage as a matter of course in playing legal games and launching class lawsuits in the hope of seeking awards which may be $2,000, $5,000, maybe $10,000. They undertake legal action because they feel that they have been seriously wronged. The typical defenders in class action cases are powerful parties, usually, who are not willing to sit down and negotiate a settlement, so they have to be taken to court. They happen to be either governments, who don't have to and don't normally worry too much about how much it is going to cost for them to take a matter all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada if necessary as we all know, or big corporations, who have the capacity to outspend ordinary citizens as plaintiffs.

So this bill doesn't make the processes and the system of justice fair in a way that would ensure that in case ordinary citizens lose a case, they won't face bankruptcy; they won't face financial ruin. All the costs associated with the suit in such a case would have to be then borne by the representative plaintiff.

So I guess the concern that I have is this. If the province of Quebec can protect a representative plaintiff from this financial jeopardy in the case that the plaintiffs lose the case, if British Columbia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and I think even Ontario don't have this particular provision in their legislation, which imposes such heavy costs on a representative plaintiff, why is it that in this province there is no evidence in this act that we have learned from the experience of other provinces? Why this excessive caution, if it is a caution, by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, who I guess is the sponsor of this bill? It just doesn't make sense.

The Alberta Law Reform Institute makes clear recommendations that for this bill to work, for Albertans to feel secure when they consider and in fact undertake to launch a class action suit, they have to be assured by provincial law that they will not face financial ruin in case the court determines that they have no case except in cases where there is clear evidence that can be provided that the suit was either an act of sort of frivolous conduct or that unnecessary applications were made deliberately to delay the proceedings or other such exceptional circumstances. So the Alberta Law Reform Institute must be disappointed, must feel that the work that they have done over the years has come to naught.

This bill will not make matters more fair. If anything, it will act as a deterrent for aggrieved Albertans who think that they have justification for getting together to launch a class action suit but won't do so because of the financial costs that are potentially built into this act that will be imposed on them in case they lose the case. The concern that to enact in Alberta legislation that is similar to the other six provinces would engender a society where we encourage more lawsuits I think is simply not a persuasive argument to make in defence of this very serious flaw that this bill suffers from.

I have known some people in the Alberta Law Reform Institute, and they are very, very serious scholars of law and practitioners of law. When they say that they're disappointed, they feel let down by these provisions of this proposed bill, and that the purpose of the reforms that they were seeking will be defeated if this bill proceeds and becomes a law I think is a warning that needs to be taken seriously, that needs to be heeded. So I would hope that the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General of the province would reconsider the flaws in the bill and, if necessary, not proceed with it. Having heard from Albertans, having heard from representatives of the legal community, having heard from Alberta Law Reform Institute spokespersons, and having heard from the members of this Legislature with respect to the serious concerns that they have with this bill, I would hope he would take it back to the drawing board and bring back a more improved bill.

I think there's no need to rush this bill through the legislation this session. If we have waited this long that we are the seventh province to make a move in this direction, I think a few months' delay, if the delay is to be used to improve this bill in bringing it back to the House in the fall, would be a worthwhile delay, and Albertans won't be disappointed if the Minister of Justice does in fact take that kind of action. So I would strongly urge him to consider this suggestion that I'm making, and I hope that he will respond positively to it.

With this, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my second reading comments on the bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I'm wondering if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona would entertain a question in regards to his remarks on Bill 25.

The Acting Speaker: Okay.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona felt very similarly to what the Alberta Law Reform Institute feels in regard to having a no-cost process: because it would operate more fairly. You described this bill, hon. member, as having "heavy costs." Do you think this bill will deny access to the natural flow of justice for Albertans, and how do you feel this would work in regards to protecting and enhancing our public health care system?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that it's an important question, a significant question. I just want to draw the attention of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and my colleagues in the House to the recommendation that the Alberta Law Reform Institute made with respect to the design of such a bill. The institute was of the view that such a bill must be designed so it makes the process a no-cost process. Quebec and some other provinces have a fund which they use to take care of the costs the plaintiffs may have to bear in case they lose the case so that the money doesn't come from their own pockets. But if they have followed the advice and the norms and procedures set out in legislation in their determination of whether or not they need to proceed and if they have followed those procedures seriously, then the costs are to be deferred in some other way. I think that's a good way of dealing with it.

Now, it's clear that this government or any government could be subjected to a class lawsuit if it fails to provide health care services, for example. The patients could as a class take action against the government. I wonder if the government feels so sensitive about such possibilities that it wants to prevent such patients who may feel that they have received injuries while they're under treatment in the public health care system from proceeding that this deterrence is built into the act. If that's the case, then I think that's not the way to go. That's the wrong thing to do. That's why this bill, I think, needs to be changed, and I urge again the minister to think about the suggestion seriously.

10:30

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, are you rising to question?

Dr. Massey: No. To speak on the bill.

The Acting Speaker: Does any other member have a question?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments about Bill 25 and the class action lawsuits that it will bring to the province. I think that when we're in second reading, we're considering the principles of the bill. There are three principles in this bill that I think are very important, two of them very positive and the third controversial, as already has been mentioned.

I think that one of the principles that the bill is built on is that it increases access to justice for citizens in the province, and I think that's a principle that we can all support, Mr. Speaker. Any bill that widens the powers of citizens to take action on their own or on behalf of others I think is one that deserves close scrutiny and in most cases should deserve our support. So the principle of increasing justice for citizens that this bill embodies is an important principle that I really support.

I think that another important principle the bill is built on is that it does allow citizens who may not have the individual resources to take action. It allows those citizens to join with others to sue a defendant, and often those defendants have enormous legal resources. If you think of some of the class action suits south of the border that have become quite famous – the class action suits against tobacco companies, the class action suits against manufacturers of breast implants – there have been some very high-profile class action suits south of the border. I think that this is an important principle in that it allows people to come together who may not individually have the resources but who collectively then can take on some giants who would escape prosecution just by the mere fact that they have such huge resources to draw upon. In many cases the complainant would be someone with limited resources and wouldn't be able to take action. So a second sound principle that the bill is built on, Mr. Speaker.

The third principle that the bill embodies, that citizens should be personally liable for costs of actions that they initiate, is one that I think is going to cause the most controversy. We've heard arguments on both sides of that principle, from those who say that this is going to be a deterrent and that people won't undertake class action suits because of the potential liability that it opens them to, while others say that that really isn't a problem, that the courts are able to award costs. If citizens really do believe that they have been wronged, then they should have the courage of their convictions and be willing to stand behind them, and that means standing behind them financially. I worry about this principle, Mr. Speaker, and I guess that when we get into looking at the details of the bill, I'd like to hear of more cases and the implications of class actions for those who filed them, and I'll look forward to that debate at that time.

I'm pleased that the class action bill is here, Mr. Speaker. There are certainly a number of circumstances in this province where class action would have been a very, very useful tool for citizens to have at their disposal, and Bill 25 does just that. I think it's progress in terms of citizens being able to defend and to right wrongs.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have been looking at this bill rather closely, the Class Proceedings Act. Certainly, if we were to make this bill into a law, I wonder who would be the first to be in court by the citizens. When one looks at the newspapers and follows political commentary in this province, it would probably be the provincial government class action lawsuit.

Certainly, we need this legislation. There is no doubt that we need this legislation. We have the whole issue of faulty fixtures being sold in this province. Some consumers that have been at a disadvantage regarding that matter have had to travel to B.C. and hook up with a group of citizens there who were making class action proceedings in regard to this.

The pine shakes issue is another one. I believe it was rule 42 of Alberta Rules of Court, which are mentioned in here, Mr. Speaker. Yes, it is Alberta rule of court 42, and that has to do with representative action. Now, if we were to have Bill 25, the Class Proceedings Act, as law, rule 42 in that case would not be applicable. Unfortunately, when this whole sordid affair of the promotion and authorization of the pine shake as a suitable roofing material – and this was before electricity deregulation. I actually had a call this week, as a matter of fact, from a consumer in Claresholm, Alberta, who was so frustrated about the high cost of electricity that he wanted to know if he could get together with his neighbours and file a class action lawsuit against the provincial government. I told him that, unfortunately, he would have to go the representative action route but that if he had patience and waited – and I could say that with confidence because I knew that his electricity bill wasn't going to go down anytime soon – Bill 25 would be law, and away we would go. He would have the choice of having the opportunity or the option of pursuing the government, who he blamed. He didn't blame Aquila. He didn't blame Enmax. He didn't blame me. He didn't blame EPCOR. He blamed the government for the high electricity costs. This gentleman is frustrated, he's confused, and I think he's going to follow the proceedings in regard to Bill 25 with a great deal of interest.

Now, when we get back to the pine shakes case – and that is slowly proceeding through the courts. That's why I would urge hon. members of this Assembly to have a very close look at this bill and what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder is trying to achieve with this legislation. There certainly are some flaws in this bill, as was outlined in the Assembly by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, but I would classify the bill as a good start after the experience that I've had with frustrated homeowners in the pine shake fiasco. Now, there's another word I would like to use, but it's unparliamentary, and I will not use it at this time. But the pine shake case is a classic example of why we should have legislation of this nature in this province at this time.

I have some reservations about this legislation. Certainly, they were outlined earlier by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in regard to the recommendations that were made by the Alberta Law Reform Institute, and we need to ensure that we have the right law in place at the right time for the right reasons. When we debate this, and we think of the public meetings that the citizens of this province with the rotting pine shakes on their roofs had to conduct in Edmonton and in Calgary, in Camrose, in Wetaskiwin, in Cochrane . . .

An Hon. Member: How many seats did you have there?

Mr. MacDonald: Now, the hon. member opposite is talking about how many seats we do have now. Well, we're going to have a great deal more seats after people discover that it's the government that caused the rotting pine shakes.

I've been in the neighbourhoods that the hon. Minister of Finance proudly represents in this Legislative Assembly, and there are a lot of pine shakes, untreated pine shakes, in that constituency. I was in awe. I would say that there are more pine shakes in the constituency that the hon. Minister of Finance represents than there are even in Edmonton-Whitemud, that the hon. Minister of Justice represents. I thought Edmonton-Whitemud was the capital of rotting roofs in this province, but I say give Calgary-Foothills a chance to catch up. A couple of wet springs there and there are going to be an awful lot of little dark spots appearing on the roofs of the homes. Some of the pine shake homeowners call them jack-o'-lantern roofs because of the gaps.

But when we think of how those homeowners would have benefited from legislation such as this in the flawed form that it is and the lack of interest in all the recommendations from the Alberta Law Reform Institute, I would have to say that I would give serious consideration to supporting this legislation, Mr. Speaker. I think of the citizens of St. Albert, and I would feel very guilty because the citizens of St. Albert are also a victim of this pine shake fiasco and how it was promoted and authorized by this current government, and look what we have. It's taken so long to get through the courts. We used to talk at meetings about how all this would work and what effect it would have, and I thought the court system would proceed and we would be finished working it through the court system by 2001.

Mr. Smith: We are.

Mr. MacDonald: No. I can assure the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity that it will be next year at the earliest before it is heard in the courts.

Now, what's going to happen? It'll be before the courts and the courts will determine who was at fault and who was to blame, but this could have been settled so much faster if we had legislation such as this.

Now, I have experienced conversations, I've had correspondence with various consumers across this province who are, as I said earlier, getting involved with citizens of British Columbia to proceed with their actions there. Has class action legislation worked in other places? It certainly has. Du Pont I believe is the name of the company who had some building materials that were faulty, and there was class action legislation. I believe it was initiated in the state of Louisiana. I don't know why they would pick Louisiana, but it was Louisiana or Mississippi, somewhere down in that neighbourhood of the United States. This company – and I could stand corrected; it might not be Du Pont, Mr. Speaker – was found guilty, and there were millions and millions of dollars at stake here because these fixtures broke loose inside the walls of people's homes and sprayed water everywhere. It was a mess, and it was very similar to the pine shakes because adequate research had not been conducted before the product was put on the market. Now, in the case of the pine shakes I don't know what got into this government to authorize and promote it, but something got into them. I don't know whether it was dollar signs or what, but certainly homeowners in this province are paying the price.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind all hon. members of this Assembly to please think of the pine shake home owners when you are considering whether or not to support this legislation, because if we can learn one lesson from their experience, it is this: we need some form of class action legislation in this province. If this is not perfect, perhaps at the committee stage, with the advice of the critic and the sponsor of the bill perhaps even, we could work diligently to improve it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a second time]

Bill 18
Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate March 27: Dr. Taft]

An Hon. Member: Just adjourn.

Ms Blakeman: You'd like me to adjourn? I'm happy to adjourn debate on Bill 18, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:49 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 17, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/17

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. In our mind's eye let us see the awesome grandeur of our Rockies, the denseness of our forests, the fertility of our farmland, the splendor of our rivers, the richness of our resources, the energy of our people. Then, O God, let us rededicate ourselves as wise stewards of such bounty on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour today to introduce to you and through you Mr. Fred Drury. Fred is an excellent example of how care for employees on the jobsite can have remarkable impact and remarkable effects. He is the owner of Flexxaire Manufacturing Incorporated. They employ about 40 machinists, welders, electrical assembly people, and they are currently celebrating 3,308 days without a chargeable incident. Now, depending on how you want to count the number of workdays in a particular year, by any calculation that's going to be somewhere between 12 and 13 years without an incident leading to an injury or a fatality, so there's no wonder that we went to Fred's manufacturing operation to help kick off WorkSafe Alberta. He's here in the members' gallery today. It's the first time, I understand, that he's been able to visit the Legislature when it's in session. I would ask Fred to rise, and we'll give him a very warm welcome and reception.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the House 103 visitors from Spruce Grove. These students attend Brookwood elementary, and they are a great group of kids. The staff and parents are to be commended on the great job they do at Brookwood. The students are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Debbie McFarlane, Mrs. Ev Nixey, Mrs. Nancy St. Amand, by teacher aides Mr. Don Antkow and Mrs. Heather Poff, and by parents Mrs. Cathy Seifrit, Mrs. Cheryl Pitruniak, Mr. Brad Wilson, Mrs. Cherine Campbell, Mrs. Laurie Moeller, Mrs. Betty Lou Lesoway, Mr. Doug Gallacher, Mr. Darrell Hancock, Mr. Bob Shepherd, Mrs. Brenda Maginnis. They are seated in both galleries, and I would ask that they rise and be granted the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 40 visitors from Killam. They include nine parents and teachers and 31 of the best and brightest students from my constituency that this province has, and judging by this group, the future of this province is bright. The teachers are Karin Brussé and Denis Boutin. The group leader is Colleen Helgeton, and parent helpers include Ginette Dammann, Bill Felgate, Meredith Neilsen, Diana Kelndorfer, Jim Slavik, Barb Holmstrom. I apologize for butchering any names. I also would like to point out that one young lady is turning 12 years old today and is sitting up in the gallery. Her name is Kaylene Bieleny. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you to members of the Assembly it gives me great pleasure to introduce my evil twin, the other half. This is, to my knowledge, the first time he's visited this Legislature. I'd ask my brother Brian to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Edmonton Oilers and Calgary Flames

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this glorious Alberta day to talk about something near and dear to all of our hearts. As a lifelong Albertan I'm very proud today to recognize our incredibly hardworking Edmonton Oilers and Calgary Flames. These teams' efforts have simply been outstanding during the year and during the play-offs. The Oilers have played extremely well, giving their best and, in doing so, providing us with some outstanding hockey. Edmontonians have been overwhelmingly supportive of their team. Sold-out crowds have rocked the Skyreach Centre, and sound barrier breaking cheers and applause are there every night, and in true Alberta style they just as enthusiastically cheered the anthem of our U.S. visitors.

It's great to say, Mr. Speaker, that in Alberta we have two world-class hockey teams, the Edmonton Oilers and the Calgary Flames. As well as providing Albertans with superb entertainment, the Oilers and the Flames are ambassadors for Alberta and the world, promoting our province throughout North America and indeed the world, and both teams have value-added impacts upon our economy. The benefits include taxation dollars to all levels of government as well as numerous spin-off jobs in food, merchandising, retailing, and of course the sale of beer. This coupled with the crowds attending the games circulates money throughout the cities and keeps our healthy economy vibrant. From all perspectives it's a winning arrangement for Edmonton, Calgary, and the province of Alberta.

On behalf of all Albertans I would like the Edmonton Oilers to know that we'll be cheering for them, and even though we're not in Dallas, I know that because we are so fervent, you'll hear us all the way from Edmonton.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We in the Official Opposition are proud to stand and recognize the Edmonton Oilers Hockey Club and the numerous benefits this club brings to Alberta. The play-off series between the Oilers and the Dallas Stars has been fierce. With the series tied at two games each, tonight the game in Dallas will be playing in most Alberta homes, restaurants, and sports bars.

Each time the Oilers score a goal on the ice, the Alberta economy heats up a notch. A world-class hockey club coupled with world-class hockey fans means numerous opportunities for economic growth and diversification in the province. From producing and selling souvenirs to drawing people into Edmonton hotels, the Oilers keep our economy moving.

Alberta is especially blessed, though, because we have two great hockey teams. That means twice the impact on our economy and twice the chance of a home team making it into the play-offs. The Calgary Flames and their fans also do their part to keep Alberta's economy pumping and vibrant.

The hockey tradition in Alberta will continue long into the future. The battle of Alberta followed by the first-round play-off battle between the Oilers and the Stars will keep Albertans watching for many years to come.

Good luck to the Oilers tonight. We are sure they will bring home a win to Albertans.

head: Oral Question Period

Northlands Ad Campaign

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the budget introduced last week saw the horse racing industry get a 12 percent increase in funding, and the government continues to give Northlands over $7 million. This money is being spent on expensive half-page ads promoting the horse racing industry in the context of belittling the conflict in the Middle East through the horse Free Drop. The ad contains quotes such as "the jackals of revenge smell nothing but the sweet bouquet of Free Drop's Jihad" and "the infidel mercenary driver is all about lies." To the Premier: how can the Premier justify allowing taxpayer dollars to be spent on such deeply offensive ads?

1:40

Mr. Klein: First of all, Mr. Speaker, they are not taxpayers' dollars.

In answer to the question, this ad was placed by Northlands and not Horse Racing Alberta, as we understand, because we've done an investigation into this. I agree with the leader of the Liberal opposition that it is a pretty tasteless advertisement, and I encourage those who want to complain to contact Northlands.

I don't think that the Liberals would want this government to begin censoring advertisements by nonprofit organizations, whether or not they receive public dollars, and I would remind the hon. leader of the Liberal Party that virtually all nonprofit organizations receive one form of government dollars or another. I know that through the community facilities enhancement program many of those nonprofits are agencies of the United Way but also receive government dollars, so I don't think that the Liberals would want to impose censorship.

Having said that, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission has advertising guidelines for racing entertainment centres, and this is a racing entertainment centre. I understand that the Minister of Gaming is going to have the commission's regulatory division take a look at this ad to see if it is within those guidelines.

Mr. Speaker, just so the record is clear, this government respects all Albertans of Iraqi and Middle East descent, and we deeply sympathize with innocent Iraqis who were killed or injured in the recent war, and I will certainly ask the Minister of Gaming to look into this advertisement.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Premier for that.

Will you table the results of the inquiry in the House so we can know what the Minister of Gaming found out?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have no problem doing that. I think that this is a very public issue in that the ad is public, in that the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition raised this matter in a public forum, i.e. the Legislature. Therefore, I see no reason why the results of this investigation ought not to be tabled in this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to go to my second question, if I might.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Democracy in the Provincial Government

Dr. Nicol: The Premier has been musing about creating a fire wall around Alberta. All the while this government is creating a fire wall between itself and Albertans. The events of the past few weeks have proven that Alberta is experiencing a democratic deficit. It's been shown that government members are taking advantage of all-expense-paid lobbying functions. Democratically elected local boards have been scrapped, and political concepts such as controlled free votes are being vented out of thin air. To the Premier: given that these lobbying events affect government policy, will the Premier ask the government whip to table a list of those groups which have and will be hosting these functions?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the preamble sort of caught me off guard because it relates in no way, shape, or form to the question, but I don't have a problem with the list being provided. As a matter of fact, I don't have a problem either with the Liberals being invited to these receptions, and I understand that they are indeed invited to some of the receptions, either in conjunction with government MLAs or separately. They have no problem whatsoever. I attend the odd reception or two, and I see lots of Liberals at those receptions, and you know, they have a drink in one hand and hors d'oeuvres in the other hand just like everyone else.

Dr. Nicol: Will the Premier commit to democracy today and reinstate the process of electing regional health authorities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, no. No.

Dr. Nicol: Given that the term "controlled free vote" actually means toe the line, how can this Premier ask other jurisdictions to become more democratic when his government doesn't follow that advice themselves?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, how we conduct our caucus, I would venture to say, is none of their business. We do not get involved in their caucus matters, nor do we get involved in any way, shape, or form in how they conduct their meetings, nor are we interested. But I will share with the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition how the government caucus deals with issues. We deal with issues as a caucus and in a democratic manner. In other words, caucus reaches consensus as to how we should approach a particular issue, and on this particular issue it was decided as a caucus, not in an autocratic or dictatorial sense, that we would vote in favour of the motion except for those who were vehement in their opposition to the electoral boundary guidelines. That was the decision of the caucus, not my decision but of the caucus.

Calgary Regional Health Authority

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier confirmed the obvious: the executive positions of the Calgary health region are little more than a patronage playground for Tory favourites. In fact, the Premier enjoyed regaling this Assembly with a story of political patronage, boasting how he helped his former deputy minister become the Calgary health region's CEO and claiming that Calgarians got a bargain because this man did not make half a million dollars or more a year. To the Premier: given that the Premier found it astounding that a CEO of a health region would earn $500,000, how does he justify that his former deputy minister earns $500,000 as CEO of the Calgary health region?

Mr. Klein: I don't know what he earns right now, but he certainly didn't start out at that wage. I think his salary was something in the range of $300,000 a year, which isn't a bad salary.

An Hon. Member: It's a really good salary.

Mr. Klein: No. It's a reasonable salary. It's quite reasonable in terms of what the Liberals would like to see, and that is to spend from $500,000 to $700,000 for a person from outside the province who doesn't know the system to come in and run the regional health authority. That is their idea. But that is typical Parkland Institute thinking, you know: no expert is good enough from Alberta; go and hire someone from someplace else. Even though this hon. member is a university professor and academic himself, he doesn't even believe in his own findings. They have to get a professional opinion from someplace else. That is typical Liberal, socialist thinking, Mr. Speaker, that contributes to the rising cost of government, but they could care less.

Ms Carlson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order.
The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Well, again to the Premier. The Premier is right. There have been some good raises in this man's package.

Given the sharp criticisms of the Calgary health region from the Motta inquiry, how does the Premier justify the CEO of the Calgary health region, his former deputy minister, receiving a whopping $50,000 raise last year alone?

Mr. Klein: That is entirely up to the Calgary regional health authority. I'm sure that had that CEO been working for the Liberals and had they been the government, that increase would probably be $150,000 a year.

Dr. Taft: Again to the Premier: will the Premier disclose to this House how much is being paid by the Calgary health region to his former chief of staff, and can he confirm that his former chief of staff advised the Calgary health region on communications and public relations?

Mr. Klein: He probably does, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if that information is under FOIP or is FOIPable under the rules, but I don't think that there's any secret. I'll tell you what: I would rather have my former chief of staff giving me information and good advice than any Liberal. As a matter of fact, that's why they're at seven members, because they took advice from ill-informed consultants.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Federal/Provincial Relations

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whenever this government gets into any trouble, it looks to find an outside enemy to blame all of its problems on. A favourite target often is the federal government. When energy bills get too high, the Premier talks about separation. When the government gets caught raising taxes or receives a scathing report into the Calgary health authority, they speak about putting up a fire wall. To the Premier: given that this government has already studied and rejected the major planks of the so-called fire wall letter, why is the Premier wasting any time on it other than in the hopes of providing yet another distraction from the business of governing this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, this is a caucus matter and ostensibly a party matter, but I guess it relates to government in some way or another and, quite frankly, is none of their business. We don't get involved in the NDs' business. We don't get involved in their, well, little caucus at all, and we don't care how they strategize and how they go out and stir up the unions and militant activity and so on. We know that they do it, but we don't care how they do it.

This again was a situation that was brought up at the party conference, and obviously they were not invited, nor did they bother even to find out what went on at the party annual general meeting. This was a discussion at the party annual general meeting. None of your business what goes on unless you want to make it your business. Then that will be a decision of caucus as to whether we want to invite you in, and I don't think we would.

Mr. Speaker, we will take all the information gleaned from the party convention and the discussion on Alberta's role in Confederation to a meeting of our caucus to decide as a party and perhaps as a government what we want to do vis-à-vis Alberta's role in Confederation. It's as simple as that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the somewhat incensed Premier: why is the government more interested in talking about the $1 billion wasted on the federal gun registry than it is in talking about $4 billion to $5 billion wasted on electricity deregulation?

Mr. Klein: No money has been wasted on electrical deregulation. There have been no taxpayers' dollars allocated to electricity deregulation, Mr. Speaker, but if the ND opposition thinks that it's right to waste $1 billion – waste, down the drain – on the gun registry, I would challenge them to stand up and say so.

Dr. Pannu: To the Premier again, Mr. Speaker: given that the Calgary public board of education is facing a $32 billion shortfall, when a judge calls the Calgary health authority under siege and in crisis, shouldn't the Premier be looking after his own backyard rather than picking fights with the neighbours?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm not picking a fight with anyone. What our message is to the federal government is that we want to be a strong and meaningful member of the Canadian family. We want the federal government to understand and recognize the contribution that this province makes to Confederation, but we also want the federal government to understand some of the frustrations amongst the majority of Albertans, not the minority, not the very small minority that support the socialists, but the majority of Albertans, who have major concerns over the absolutely sinful waste of money, the billion dollars on the gun registry, who have concerns over the fact that we have in this province elected two Senators through a duly democratic process, over the Canadian Wheat Board, which is highly discriminatory, over the Kyoto protocol that was implemented. The resolution passed in the House of Commons without any consultation with the province. And the list goes on. Albertans who contribute so much through equalization payments, so much more than they get back, are saying to Mr. Dion and Mr. Chrétien: listen to us. These are the concerns of the majority, not the Liberal minority, not the ND minority but the Conservative majority in this province. Listen to us. That's all we're saying.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Telemarketing Fraud

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Telemarketing fraud in Canada has risen steadily over the past five years. According to a recent W5 program, Canada is considered to be a haven for telemarketing con artists, who use this activity to take tens of thousands of dollars from unsuspecting citizens. It's been reported that organized crime is becoming involved in this fraud to a great extent because of the easy money and lenient laws and punishments. My first question is to the Minister of Seniors. What advice can be given to my constituents, especially seniors, when they receive a telemarketing call?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in 2001 the Ministry of Seniors along with Children's Services, Alberta Government Services, Solicitor General, and 11 community groups developed a fraud awareness package directed at seniors and seniors' caregivers. The package is called If in Doubt, Check It Out, and it's targeting all sorts of fraud, one of which is the telemarketing aspect of it. What I would suggest in short to the hon. member is for anybody, not only a senior, who receives telemarketing solicitations: unless they know 100 percent what it's about, say no. Don't give out your credit card number, don't give out personal information, and then phone the police or, if you still have concerns, consumer affairs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. My second question is to the Minister of Government Services. What protection from telemarketers does the Alberta government give?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If an Albertan is sold something by a telemarketer, like a product or a service, and they are dissatisfied with that product or service or feel that they have been misled by a telemarketer, the Fair Trading Act in Alberta protects those consumers. Should they be dissatisfied, then they can call our consumer protection branch, and we will investigate. If through the investigation we find that an offence has been made to the Fair Trading Act, we will go through the process of convicting. Telemarketers that would do that type of thing would be subject to a $100,000 fine and/or two years in jail.

If consumers out there would like to see their name come off a telemarketer's list – the telemarketers in Canada are licensed under the CRTC – the consumers can phone or write the CRTC and ask to be taken off that telemarketer's list. As well, the Direct Marketing Council of Canada will also assist consumers in getting their names off a list. Albertans can call our 1-877-427-4088 line and get the numbers for Alberta consumer protection, for the CRTC, and for the Canadian Direct Marketing Association.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. My third question is to the Solicitor General. What is the Alberta Solicitor General's department doing in response to telemarketing fraud?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question that the member has brought up, and it's an important one. It's an unfortunate truth about telemarketing fraud: it is a crime that affects seniors mostly. As part of our focus on crime prevention my department supports the Heads Up Fraud Prevention Association, and in 2001 we gave Heads Up a $10,000 crime prevention grant to develop awareness programs and to expand to 20 new Wise Owl programs across Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, Wise Owl works directly with seniors to increase awareness about fraud and decrease victimization. Telemarketing fraud is an important focus of both the Heads Up and Wise Owl programs, and my department, as the Minister of Seniors has mentioned, is working together with 11 other members in regard to the Seniors Fraud Awareness Committee, and the goal of the committee is to prevent seniors from becoming victims of fraud by increasing their awareness about types of crime. This is a huge concern to this government, and we will continue to work together with our partners.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier stated that the priority for Calgary was the construction of a new children's hospital. However, in 1998 the Premier said, and I quote: clearly, southeast Calgary has been identified as one of the fastest growing areas, and that's where the next hospital should be built. To the Premier: since the Premier himself identified a hospital in southeast Calgary as a priority five years ago, how does the Premier respond to Vince Motta's father, who said, and I quote: if we had a hospital in the south, I bet Vince would be with us.

2:00

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm still of the opinion – this is my personal opinion – that, yes, the southern part of Calgary is growing at a very, very fast pace. Indeed, the Calgary regional health authority has identified the southeast sector as the next area for a hospital, but in the interim they also identified the children's hospital as a priority. We agreed with them and have committed funds to the children's hospital. Now, if the hon. member is suggesting that we should abandon the children's hospital and direct the health authority to divert the funds to the southeast hospital and infringe on their decision-making abilities, then stand up and say so.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, can the Premier explain why Calgarians were forced to choose between a new children's hospital and a badly needed full-service hospital in the southeast?

Mr. Klein: Well, Calgarians are not being forced to choose. Since 1998 the only public comment – and I don't get a lot of cards and letters on this particular issue – has arisen since the Motta situation. We will investigate, certainly, the judge's findings, do a complete analysis of the ruling, and respond to the recommendations as fast as we possibly can.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: if it is all right to blow up or close three hospitals at the same time in Calgary, what's wrong with building two new hospitals at the same time in Calgary?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the list at my fingertips, but first of all we didn't blow up a hospital. We blew down a hospital. It was imploded. It wasn't blown up. That was done after careful consultation and consideration by both the medical profession and the administration of the Calgary regional health authority at that particular time, and it was done for a specific reason. That hospital was imploded, the Holy Cross was closed, and the Grace hospital was relocated, not closed down but relocated to the Foothills hospital site. The two hospitals that were actually closed were closed to allow the Calgary regional hospital authority to open new, modern beds, many of which had never been used before, 700 beds, the equivalent of two hospitals, in existing facilities; i.e., the Loughheed hospital, the Foothills hospital, and the Rockyview. So, in fact, what the hon. member is suggesting has occurred: we opened up the equivalent of two new hospitals in terms of new beds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Lynnview Ridge

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the great honour of serving the residents of the Ogden-Lynnwood community. This area stretches along the beautiful Bow River and has a history dating back to the very early days of Calgary and even long before that. A number of the residents have requested the provincial government to investigate whether the Lynnview Ridge area was a possible buffalo jump and aboriginal campsite at one time. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. Could the minister clarify for us his department's plan to evaluate Lynnview Ridge as a possible historic resource?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to tell the member that staff from my heritage resources management branch did in fact do a preliminary visit and examination of the site in mid-March, just a month or so ago. We know from that visit that that particular location has had some significant impact from a previous commercial development there, an oil storage facility, plus some redevelopment for real estate purposes that has been done. So there's been significant disturbance, if you will, to the site.

But I should also tell the member that down in the valley below there is Beaverdam Flats Park. There are some oral histories that abound that suggest there might have been some evidence of some kinds of campsites by aboriginal groups in the past, likely thousands of years ago, but none of it is conclusive. In any event, that area is under the jurisdiction of the city of Calgary, and they have indicated to us that they will work with us should they plan any further disturbances to that area in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Can the minister tell us if this is the only evidence of possible buffalo hunt activity in the area?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, briefly, Mr. Speaker, there are varying kinds of evidence all around and throughout Calgary. There are probably over a thousand different locations that at one point or another according to oral history might have had some significant buffalo traffic, if you will. This may well have been one of the sites. Some of the areas go back 8,000 to 9,000 years ago, and it's difficult after all of that time to really finitely determine which other sites might be of historical significance. But we do have a process in place to have that investigated.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental question is to the same minister. How can local residents pursue their interest in having the history of this site commemorated?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do have the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation. They have a very capable staff. There are grants available. They'd certainly be welcome to contact staff at that branch, and I'd be happy to give the member the phone number later to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Child Care Workers' Safety

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today's fifth question was provided for us by Karen Collier, the mother of Sharla Collier, a child care worker who was killed last November in Lethbridge. Karen Collier still has many policy questions that she needs answered. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What is the minister doing to protect child care workers that are supposed to accept violence in the workplace?

Mr. Dunford: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the areas that we became concerned about a number of years ago – actually, it happened to another young woman that had grown up in Lethbridge but was actually murdered on a work site in Calgary – of course was to look into the whole situation about working alone. Now, what we did through that investigation – and it was quite an extensive investigation – was that we determined that the fact of working alone, while somewhat hazardous, wasn't necessarily the full danger. So we put into place some regulations then that if an employer had an employee working alone, there were some things that had to be done. For an example, it required a hazard assessment, it required to make sure that the employee was aware of the hazards that were in existence, and then thirdly provided for a means of communication should that employee get into some difficulty.

So when the situation then happened in Lethbridge with the child care worker, we were of course involved in the investigation. Our policy has not changed. We have actually posted an order requiring the employer to ensure that given these kinds of situations the working-alone regulations would be adhered to, and as a matter of fact we have an ongoing investigation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Children's Services. What is the minister doing to make sure another child doesn't fall through the cracks and present a risk to himself and others?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to, in the follow-through with the answer given by the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, just make an observation to this Assembly. At the time we completed our special case review relative to the findings of the Collier case, a most regrettable and a most tragic case, we were well aware that this case was before the courts. To be case specific, point specific relative to this case would be totally inappropriate for me as minister, but I would like to just make this observation. Every day, 24/7, 365 days a year the contracts we define for agencies and the work that we do with our social workers and the training that they receive is geared to make sure of worker safety and the best interests of the child.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: how is Workplace Health and Safety monitoring agencies like the one Sharla worked for to ensure that health and safety guidelines are followed?

Mr. Dunford: We have a protocol that we use, Mr. Speaker, in terms of inspections. I want to indicate, though, to the hon. member but also to the House and to the Alberta public generally that because of this case we haven't targeted any of the personal care situations that are here in the province. We have an ongoing investigation, as I mentioned in my first response this afternoon, but it is certainly a part of our obligation in making sure that the working-alone regulation is followed by employers in this province to do periodic checks on a random basis.

I must say to all employers and employees that might be listening today to make sure that they take this situation seriously because if an unfortunate incident like what happened to Miss Collier was to happen again, one of the first questions we're going to be asking is: okay; where are the rules governing working alone? Where is the hazard assessment? Where is the written material that ensures that you've made your employees aware, then, of the particular hazard, and what is the specific device that you're using for employees to be able to communicate with the employer?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Cormorant Control Project

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. In 2002 this House passed the fisheries amendment act which I introduced to address the problems with the decreasing fish populations. It is my understanding that the minister's department has plans to carry out a project to decrease cormorant populations in Alberta, which, by the way, would be a most welcome initiative in the Lac La Biche area. Can the minister please provide us with details of this plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. I'd be happy to provide some detail on our cormorant control project in the Lac La Biche area. The project is a comprehensive plan that's part of our overall plan in sports and commercial fisheries management in Alberta.

In relation to cormorants, Mr. Speaker, there are over 15,000 cormorant nests and about 62 nesting areas across the province, but about 50 percent of those cormorant nests are in the Lac La Biche area itself. My department, of course, heard from many people as to their continued concern about the negative impact cormorants may have in both the sports and commercial fisheries. We are launching a five-year pilot project to study their impact on the fisheries, and we also intend to control the population by oiling cormorant eggs in some areas to restrict the hatching of eggs. Of course, as we do this, we'll monitor closely and gather data as we move forward working closely with our biologists.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental and my next question to the same minister: how will this control pilot project be monitored during the next five-year period, and what information are you hoping to acquire?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker, this is a very important project. The member mentioned monitoring. It is very important as we move forward with the pilot project that we monitor closely so we do the right things for Albertans. The issue has been boiling for a number of years and surfacing as a problem across the province. The biologists in my department have been doing studies, have been monitoring the process as we move forward and will continue doing that.

Mr. Danyluk: My final question, Mr. Speaker. In fact, there needs to be a conclusive study on the amount and the species of fish that cormorants do eat in the northeast area. What research was conducted before this decision was made for the pilot project?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, one of the areas we research, of course, is the population, which has increased drastically in Alberta. In fact, fish research conducted both in Ontario and New York gave us some understanding as to what negative impacts the cormorant population has in certain jurisdictions. We will also be working closely with the University of Alberta, of course, and our biologists in designing the project as we move forward. Again I'd like to stress that we will monitor it very closely.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Bow River Fish Ladder

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fish ladder at Carseland on the Bow River is used every spring by rainbow trout and many other fish. They use the ladder to swim upstream to the small creeks and ponds where they spawn. In fact, the rainbow trout run is currently near its yearly peak. Unfortunately, the province has chosen this time to replace the fish ladder, an operation that will keep the ladder closed for at least another week. This will be damaging not only to the fish population but also to all those Albertans who fish on the Bow. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why has your department allowed this ladder replacement to proceed at precisely the time when the trout need this ladder the most?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, in fact, that concern has just been brought to my attention by a number of MLAs, and I've agreed either to go visit the project immediately or deal with the issue immediately.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the minister for that answer.

To him as well: what scientific evidence did the minister consult so as to disrupt the spawning of these trout at exactly the time when they're most vulnerable?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I'll be honest. The issue was brought to my attention just recently, and I've agreed to deal with it immediately.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, he has only one week to rectify the problem. Does he think he can do that within the next week, while the fish are spawning?

Mr. Cardinal: Not like the Liberals, Mr. Speaker, who would take a year to do it, we'll do it immediately.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Municipal Financing Corporation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The president of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association recently wrote the Premier with concerns that proposed changes to the Municipal Financing Corporation will allow private business to borrow from the same pool of money at the same rate as municipalities and other local authorities. The AUMA expressed disappointment with the lack of consultation with municipalities on the proposed changes and urged the government to reverse them. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Is it the government's intention to allow P3 entities that may own approved hospitals or other public infrastructure to borrow from the new Alberta capital finance authority, in competition with the municipalities and other local authorities?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the AMFC is an entity that was created through legislation, and clearly if the hon. member will go to the act, he will see that there is a list of shareholders that are involved in the AMFC, and those are the people who are able through regulation to make financial arrangements with the lending institution itself. There would not be the opportunity for those that were not members of the shareholder list to participate in AMFC. It is there for a specific purpose, and it has been very, very successful. I do believe that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has had a subsequent meeting with the group and dialogued on this, so I'd ask him to supplement the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Finance has indicated, I spoke to the president of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association yesterday. I would like to clarify, based on what was said yesterday by the hon. member, number one, that when we met, the meeting was positive, and they are extremely pleased. Contrary to the document that the hon. member held up, that does not in any way, shape, or form reflect anything that the AUMA said, and that was reaffirmed yesterday by the president of the AUMA.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and that had nothing to do with the question.

Just to be clear, is the Minister of Finance then categorically ruling out the possibility of a policy change of the government that might lead to P3 entities being able to borrow from the new capital finance authority?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it again abundantly clear that AMFC is an entity that's created through legislation, and it clearly lists the shareholders who are involved in the corporation, and there are rules attached to it. It is very rigidly governed, and there's no anticipation of making changes to that. We did make a change last year when we did allow the three airport authorities to participate in the organization, but we do not have any further changes that are moving forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While this is indeed welcome news, why did the government fail to consult with AUMA on the proposed changes to the Municipal Financing Corporation?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have any proposed changes other than an administrative change, that is before the House now.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Rathgeber: Mr. Speaker, Budget 2003 contains welcome tax cuts to corporations in the amount of $94 million. However, government spending is up to $20.8 billion, and at $6,420 per capita some groups argue that we have the highest spending in the country. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister not concerned that these spending habits are going to compromise the Alberta advantage?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta advantage has been applauded from coast to coast, from east to west to north to south, and it's an advantage that we are very fortunate to have in this province. Yes, we do have a large resource revenue side of the equation that we count on. Yes, we do have large revenues. Yes, we do have expenditures. But in this year's budget we were able to maintain a 4.9 percent increase in spending on the operating of programs in the province.

Let's look at the Alberta advantage that is actually here, Mr. Speaker. We enjoy the lowest overall tax regime in all of Canada. We have the best competition rate in all of Canada. We have a government that has had 10 consecutive balanced budgets, 10 years. We have reduced our accumulated debt in this province by 80 percent. No other province could do that. We will be the first province to be debt free. We have the highest spending per capita in Canada for learning in this province. All of these are advantages to Albertans. Then this year, in addition to that, we have recognized the need to have our advantage enhanced by putting $5.5 billion into infrastructure and transportation programs to further enhance the Alberta advantage within this province. I don't think Albertans are complaining. In fact, I think they're very proud to be part of that Alberta advantage.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when are Alberta families going to enjoy tax cuts comparable to those recently announced to Alberta corporations?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, clearly, Mr. Speaker, when we started to be able to move into a different fiscal structure, we were able to announce the reductions in personal income taxes and a new tax regime. We have a single rate of taxation within this province, which makes us the envy of all other provinces. We also have the highest personal exemption in the country in the province of Alberta. Last year and this year we were able to make sure that we inflation-proofed that personal exemption so that we maintained that tax advantage. That was at a cost of $130 million. Albertans are enjoying lower taxes on the personal side.

Now, at the same time, we did announce that we were going to be reducing corporate taxes, and we could only do that when it was affordable. We had to go at a slower pace than we did with the personal tax reductions, but this year we were able to proceed and continue with some of our corporate tax reductions to the tune of $94 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, also to the Minister of Finance: with debt servicing costs of $465 million per year, when is this government going to make debt repayment a higher priority so that further tax relief can be offered to individual Albertans?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, striking the right balance by dealing with all of the pressures that come to a government is sometimes difficult. This year we were able to report that we were over 10 years ahead of the scheduled debt retirement legislative package that had been put forward by our government. In fact, over 80 percent of our debt had already been retired. In the last few years we have been putting dollars from additional operating surpluses into an account to pay off our debt as it comes due. I've said in this House many times: I cannot pay our debt off faster than we are today. So it makes sense for us to recognize the fact that we'll use dollars that we've put away in the debt retirement account to retire debt this year and partway through next year. In the meantime, we will invest in very much needed infrastructure and transportation, and getting that balance is critical. Albertans have asked us to do that, and we have listened, and we are responding.

Seniors' Lodges

Ms Blakeman: A number of seniors' lodges are struggling to maintain the same level of service. Costs are rising, provincial grants remain the same as 1995, and the province no longer provides sustained capital funding for new units. My questions today are to the Minister of Seniors. Why has the minister chosen to continue the government funding freeze for seniors' lodges for almost a decade while their costs have continued to rise?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, that's a relatively good question, but we have to keep in mind that the lodges are operated by lodge authorities, and a good number of them are owned by the province. Yes, some authorities are entering into financial difficulty, and we are working with those people to see how we can best address the problem.

The preamble to the question was totally wrong. Seniors are not in jeopardy. Seniors are receiving good service in the lodges. We have been working with the lodge authorities to ensure that the rents being paid are fair and equitable and that there is in fact a proper cash flow. I might add that under the current system some lodge authorities have surpluses, some have shortfalls, some requisition municipalities, and some do not. We are currently working with two or three major lodge authorities to see how we can best address the problems.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Why does the minister continue to fund an unequal and lesser rate to larger management bodies given that they have higher expenditures, especially in the cities?

Mr. Woloshyn: Again a thorough lack of research. A few years ago the lodges in Lethbridge, Edmonton, and Calgary because of their size came forward saying that their costs were much lower due to their economies of scale and that the rural lodges were smaller and had higher costs. That was agreed upon. That system of differential funding, in my mind, is fair, it's equitable, and it recognizes the different needs of different areas. All lodges have increased costs, urban and rural.

With respect to construction, Mr. Speaker, the lodge improvement program as administered by Infrastructure has been putting millions of dollars into lodge renovations on an annual basis for the past number of years in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Given that some municipalities are expressing extreme concern that they have had to take on more debt to build new lodges and to finance soaring operation costs, why is the minister putting municipalities in a position that the province would never accept for itself?

Mr. Woloshyn: That is true. Some lodge authorities who choose to expand have gone forward and borrowed money. I must say that these borrowings have to be approved by the ministry. They have to be endorsed by the supporting municipalities who are part of the overall operation. We do give them the flexibility of making the decisions and try to ensure that the decisions are the right ones. We certainly don't want a community who wants, needs the lodges and whose municipalities support that to be stopped by the minister because he feels differently. The soaring costs of operations are a concern, and we are trying to address those.

The Budget Race

Mr. Mason: It's a field of five racing at the Legislature track for the Government Priorities Cup. It's the Budget Race.

They're at the post, and they're off. Taking an early lead is Better Health Care. Gonna get away second is the favourite, Public Schools. Racing in third is the 1 to 5 choice, Cheap Power, and on the outside are long shots Corporate Tax Cuts and Horse Racing Subsidy.

Into the first turn Better Health Care is dropping behind. Public Schools is setting the pace with Corporate Tax Cuts and Horse Racing Subsidy coming on strong on the outside. Cheap Power is falling behind.

Coming out of the turn it's Public Schools with Corporate Tax Cuts and Horse Racing Subsidy close on his heels. Next, Better Health Care and Cheap Power dropping further behind. Corporate Tax Cuts on the outside moving up on Public Schools. Corporate Tax Cuts taking the lead. Horse Racing Subsidy overtaking Public Schools, who is faltering badly. Better Health Care is next with Cheap Power falling almost completely out of sight. Pacing with the lead now is Corporate Tax Cuts. Holding the lead to five is Horse Racing Subsidy. Public Schools, who looked good at the start, is falling back. Next, the 500 to 1 shot, Better Health Care. Cheap Power is not even on the horizon.

Into the final turn it's Corporate Tax Cuts and Horse Racing Subsidy neck and neck. Further back, Public Schools with Better Health Care, and Cheap Power may not even place. Corporate Tax Cuts, Horse Racing Subsidy. No, it's Corporate Tax Cuts, Horse Racing Subsidy.

It's down to the wire, and the winner is Corporate Tax Cuts, taking in a purse of $94 million. Horse Racing Subsidy gets a consolation prize of $37 million. Public Schools, Better Health Care, and Cheap Power finish out of the money.

Better luck next year.

Public/Private Partnerships

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Glenarry. This House has been warned repeatedly about the dangers of financing public infrastructure through public/private partnerships. Not only is this method of financing more expensive to the taxpayer, but it takes local control of these buildings from communities and places it in the hands of profit-driven corporations.

Some members of this House undoubtedly think that my opposition to P3 financing is simply an ideological and rash reaction. This couldn't be further from the truth. There's been a considerable amount of research into the practical application of P3s, and there is a large amount of supporting evidence that P3 financing has cost taxpayers more and has decreased the value and service citizens receive for their money. Examples such as the Confederation Bridge in the Maritimes, Evergreen Park school in New Brunswick, P3-financed schools in Nova Scotia, the Hamptons project in Calgary, and many projects in Britain, Australia, and U.S. have shown that P3 financing just doesn't work. In fact, it can't work.

We all know that Alberta has a credit rating that makes corporations green with envy. We can borrow money at a rate far lower than any corporation ever could. Thus, when a corporation borrows money to finance a P3, it borrows at a higher rate than the provincial government. The corporation then passes the added cost on to Alberta taxpayers. Moreover, P3s mean that Albertans have to pay for the profit margin of the financing corporation and the added costs of a new middleman. The bottom line is this: if we need new infrastructure, it's cheaper to borrow the money ourselves rather than let a corporation do it for us.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are best served by publicly financed infrastructure. The schools, hospitals, and the very House we use today stand as proud testaments to the fact that there is no substituting for public money and control over public infrastructure, testaments we might not now have if they were built using P3 financing.

I urge all of my colleagues in this House to remember that public buildings are meant for the people and not for profit.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Alberta Research Council

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Increasingly in various circles in the province, particularly in government, there is a growing realization that we must extract much more value from our financial investment in research and development in the province. Innovation is the key to this situation: converting ideas into products and services and shortening the time to commercialization. A strong innovation system ideally consists of more applied research, stronger ties between the private sector, institutions, and all levels of government, and higher rates of technology commercialization, and this is, in fact, our government's vision for a stronger and healthier value-added economy.

The Alberta Research Council, with which I am proudly associated as chair of the board, is a key player in Alberta's innovation system. ARC as the major performer of applied research in the province is in the unique position to bridge the gap between knowledge and technology and the marketplace. ARC has been progressive in its approach to technology commercialization, seeking out opportunities to work with others to forge profitable and mutually beneficial ventures.

One of ARC's new initiatives involves strengthening ties with colleges and technical institutes in the province. Together the Alberta Association of Colleges and Technical Institutes and ARC are collaborating to investigate ways to enhance the role of colleges and institutes in innovation in Canada, and as part of this effort I will be visiting colleges across the province to help promote the need to build Alberta's innovation capacity through strengthened ties with our colleges. My first visit will be to Olds College on April 29.

In expanding the innovation system in Alberta we are only limited by our imagination. ARC is working hard to help achieve a stronger, brighter future for all Albertans through efforts such as I have just described.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Stan Reynolds

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to honour a great Albertan: Stan Reynolds. Mr. Reynolds is the man behind many of the fascinating pieces at the Reynolds-Alberta Museum in Wetaskiwin.

Early in his life Stan Reynolds began buying and collecting cars. He subsequently donated his collection of cars to the museum so that everybody could partake in their rarity and beauty. Mr. Reynolds has contributed over $11 million in donations to the museum that bears his name, and the community of Wetaskiwin is grateful for his involvement in both the museum and the community.

Yesterday it was my honour to be present when the Friends of Reynolds-Alberta Museum presented a video called Stan Reynolds - The Great Collector. The video is a biography of Mr. Reynolds' life, and it shows the spirit of collecting he so wonderfully embodies. Mr. Reynolds was a guest of honour at yesterday's screening, which took place at the museum, and many people from the Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency were there to pay tribute to the classic car collector.

In the video Mr. Reynolds stated, and I quote: when I started collecting, I had no idea there would be an increase in value. This is my life work; rather than see it destroyed, I wanted to preserve it. End quote. This attitude is the reason why the Reynolds-Alberta Museum exists and continues to remain extremely popular. I encourage all hon. members to go out to the museum to take in the wide assortment of classic cars, airplanes, and machinery.

I would like to extend warm congratulations to Stan Reynolds on his life's work and thank him for his vision, dedication, and valuable collections on display at Reynolds-Alberta Museum.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, the majority of members in the House today were not in the Assembly when the Assembly did not have part of its Routine, Members' Statements and Recognitions, and when these changes were made, they were made in such a way as to afford an opportunity for hon. members to wax eloquent on a subject matter that they wanted. The last two members were recognized, were met with great decorum in the House, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed and the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. There was no interference, no heckling, no statements. That could not be said the same way for the first two hon. members who were recognized this afternoon. It's a forum of decorum, and I would really encourage you to remember again why we have this and what is expected of us when we do have it.

head: Presenting Reports by

Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee recommends that the following private bill proceed: Bill Pr. 1, Sisters of St. Joseph of the Province of Alberta Statutes Repeal Act.

The committee also recommends that the following private bill proceed with an amendment: Bill Pr. 2, Forest Lawn Bible College Act. As part of this report I will be tabling five copies of the amendment proposed for this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I request the concurrence of the Assembly in this report.

The Speaker: Do the hon. members agree?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: Opposed? It's concurred.

2:40head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a document in which 212 Calgarians petition this Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to do the following three things:

1. To immediately withdraw the draft management plan for the Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area and revise it so as to disallow any further commercial or residential development of the Kananaskis Valley;
2. To redesignate the Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area and adjacent unprotected public lands as a Provincial Park, with those parts currently undeveloped designated as Wildland Provincial Park;
3. To maintain Kananaskis Country in a natural state that provides high quality wildlife habitat and nature-based recreational opportunities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice to the Assembly that since Monday next is a holiday, there will be no notice of written questions or motions for returns until a week from today.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to be able to table with the House today five copies of the 25th Legislature MLA receptions list that has been co-ordinated – and I emphasize the word “co-ordinated” – through my office by a number of groups around the province that have asked to meet with MLAs on issues that are near and dear to their hearts. The list includes things like the Chambers of Commerce, Grant MacEwan College, Telus, the University of Alberta, and the Long Term Care Association. These are the ones that we attend if we choose during session on Wednesday nights. I'm pleased to do this. I gave it to the press last week. I gave it to the press last year. There's nothing that I'm ashamed of here, and if everybody would prefer we not co-ordinate these, that's just fine. They will continue to happen whether I co-ordinate them or not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter from Ms Shirley Reid, issues co-chair, Canadian Federation of University Women Alberta Council, addressed to the Premier. I received a copy of it. Ms Reid is urging all levels of government to work collaboratively in a nonconfrontational manner to adopt and implement the Romanow report recommendations as soon as possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Mayor George Rogers, the president of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, dated March 31, 2003, addressed to the Premier. The AUMA is urging the provincial government to stop the passage of Bill 20, the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a handful of tablings today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent today to the Minister of Health and Wellness concerning issues of toxic mold at the Foothills hospital in Calgary.

The second is copies of a postcard calling for “fully funded high quality public education now” from a Mark Glover of Edmonton.

The next is copies of letters to the Minister of Learning and to the Premier expressing concern over cutbacks in public school education in the province.

The next is a letter written by the Windsor Park School Council to the Premier and the Minister of Learning and to me expressing concern over elementary school class sizes and funding.

Finally, copies of postcards calling for fully funded public education. Barbara Krahn says, “Fund the arbitrated settlement fully,” and the other says, “Show you have a vision for this province by making the future of its youth a priority.”

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would ask that the Deputy Government House Leader share next week's projected government business with us.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, Easter Monday will be a holiday, so there will be no sitting.

Tuesday afternoon will be designated Committee of Supply for Seniors. Tuesday evening will be designated Committee of Supply for Economic Development and, if time permits, second reading of bills 18, 12, 28, 29, 31, and 32, and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of Supply, the opposition has designated the Department of Finance, and we'll do that plus anything else that time might permit as per the Order Paper. Wednesday evening Committee of Supply will be Municipal Affairs and, if time permits, second reading on bills 18, 12, 28, 29, 31, 32, depending again on progress made the day before, and possibly Committee of the Whole for bills 6, 10, 14, and 16, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday afternoon under Government Bills and Orders Committee of Supply will consider the Department of Infrastructure. That's it for now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on a point of order.

Point of Order
Allegations against Members
Imputing Motives

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I stand on Standing Order 23(h) and (i) with regard to an exchange between the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the Premier during question period today. In answer to the question from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview the Premier once again today made numerous allegations and talked about hypothetical situations. I don't have the Blues in front of me, but the essence of the comments that the Premier made was that he believed the Liberals would want to pay outrageous amounts of money to CEOs from somewhere outside of the province. This both indicates a hypothetical situation and makes an allegation and then imputes false motives to us by indicating that we would do this when in fact the only people actually paying outrageous salaries in this province are the Premier and his government.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've been in this Assembly for a long time, and I've heard all kinds of different things that get said from time to time both officially and/or across the bow. We only need to look at some of the preambles, for example, which are highly inflammatory and far more damaging attempts at cutting than anything I heard the Premier say today for certain. I think the Premier made some reference to the fact that the Liberal opposition had some ill-informed consultants going into the previous election. I think election results might or might not bear that out. So I would suggest that consideration be given to the tempo and gusto of the debate that took place this afternoon and hope that others might agree and that you might rule in your wisdom, of course, that this is merely a question of interpretation more than it is a point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that this is the second consecutive day the Premier has made completely unfounded allegations about our intentions. I refer you to Hansard yesterday in which, among other things, he said, "What the Liberals want [is] to hire someone from out of province at an inflated salary, because it fits in with the traditional patterns of unreasonable, unaccountable, Liberal spending."

Now, we have in no way, shape, or form advocated or considered what the Premier alleged yesterday. Because of our good graces we let that one pass, but today he repeated the allegation, and I think there needs to be an end brought to this line of false accusation and impugning of motives by the Premier against us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 23(h) says, "makes allegations against another member." Standing Order 23(i) says, "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." The operative rules and the operative words in these two Standing Orders are "another member."

What was said was the following: "It's quite reasonable in terms of what the Liberals would like to see," and then it goes on to say, "and that is to spend." That is not against another member. Interesting use of words.

Actually, I anticipated an entirely different point of order. That was not a point of order. There could have been two. First of all, the Premier could have raised one against the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview when the member was asking someone to justify something. The purpose of question period is to deal with government policy. The other one could have gone the other way: would impute motives in terms of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview might have taken a point of order with the Premier when the hon. Premier said, "He doesn't even believe in his own findings." That certainly would have been imputing motives. But neither one was right, so we move on.

I hope the Easter bunny will be good to everybody this weekend.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the committee to order.

Environment

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to talk about my estimates today. I'm going to keep my comments brief. It is Thursday afternoon and it is a long weekend, so I'm going to keep my comments brief.

So maybe there is some hope that we can take some questions, and definitely we will provide written responses to anything I don't answer. That's been my history. The opposition has got full answers to all their questions if I don't respond to all of them here. I guarantee you that you will get full answers on both sides. Both opposition parties will get full answers to all their questions if I don't respond here, so I just want to assure the members of that, because I have in the past found the time very valuable. I've tried to be honest with the members of the opposition and will continue to do that today.

So it is a pleasure, Mr. Chairman, for me to be able to address the issues around environment and the Department of Environment. This is my third set of estimates. For the first one, perhaps, I was just made minister, so it could be rightly laid at the feet of somebody else. But certainly the last one and this one are mine, and the department is moving in the direction that we need them to move. I want to say that being Minister of Environment has been a tremendous learning experience for me. I mean, it's just incredible how much I've learned around environmental issues, environmental law and so on, and that's because I have excellent staff.

I've got a really fantastic staff, and I've really received many, many compliments from my colleagues in the House. Even some opposition members have complimented my staff as to how co-operative my staff has been in answering questions and dealing with their issues, other than, of course, one member. All the other members in the House are very complimentary towards my staff. So as we move forward, I look forward to that kind of working relationship the staff has with the MLAs of all parties out in the field.

Now, as it happens, many of the issues happen in rural Alberta, so we tend to run into, on the whole, more Conservative MLAs in rural Alberta, but we have dealt with an issue in the Leader of the Opposition's riding in terms of a cattle and truck wash. He approached me on those issues, and I believe we answered his questions. It's in Little Bow's riding.

Mr. McFarland: I'm his MLA.

Dr. Taylor: Oh. Well, there you go. The hon. Member for Little Bow is the MLA for the Leader of the Opposition. That's good to know because the next time when the Leader of the Opposition asks me a question, I should tell him to refer it to his MLA and then the MLA can ask me the question. Certainly that might be a better process, and I'd be pleased to work in that fashion if the Leader of the Opposition would like to.

We are moving in the direction that we need to move, Mr. Chair. We have had some shift in how we manage our environmental and enforcement programs. The philosophy that we're trying to drive is one of education, one of leadership. As I've said many times in the past, if we have to fine somebody, if we have to charge somebody, then the mess has already been made. From my perspective and many persons' perspectives it's much better to actually prevent the mess. Now, if we have to charge, we will continue to charge, but, as I say, at that stage there's already been environmental damage, and we prefer not to get to that stage. So we will continue trying to educate Albertans, educate Alberta companies, so that they don't do the environmental damage.

I did release to the House some time ago our enforcement actions of the previous year, and I don't have it with me, unfortunately, but I can remember that there were millions – millions – of dollars in fines. So we do enforce when we have to and it's necessary, and that is certainly something that we have to do. When we enforce, we'll do it heavy and we'll do it hard. I'd, as I say, prefer to educate before so you don't have to enforce, but some cases we have to enforce, and we'll continue to do that.

We are dealing with a number of major issues, Mr. Chair. We're certainly dealing with climate change issues, and that has been a major emphasis of the department. We're also dealing next year with water issues, and as we move forward, some of our budget is going to be devoted to water strategy and how we deal with significant issues around water.

Those are two major issues we're dealing with. Water for Life I've talked about in this House and had some excellent questions from the member opposite, the Lady in Red I guess I could say. That's not impolite, I don't think, in the House because I'm not using her name. [interjection] Excellent song I might say about Lady in Red as well. As we move forward, we will continue to address these important issues.

We have got an increase in budget this year, Mr. Chair. Some of the increase in budget will be going forward with the Water for Life strategy. Other areas are certainly going to be increased in the budget as well, so as we move forward we will continue to deal with important environmental issues that affect Albertans and affect Alberta's environments. All Albertans, including myself, want to leave the smallest footprint possible on the environment.

An Hon. Member: You know what they say about small feet.

Dr. Taylor: No, I don't know what they say about small feet, Mr. Minister. Perhaps you'd like to get up and tell me what they say about small feet.

Certainly, as we move forward, Mr. Chair, we intend to continue to enforce environmental regulation and at the same time educate the population and deal with these significant issues that we're dealing with as the Department of Environment.

I'll stop there. As I said, Mr. Chair, I intend to keep my comments brief, and hopefully we can answer briefly some of the questions from the member opposite, as I said, the lovely Lady in Red, and we'll go forward from there.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Compliments aren't going to help this, Minister; sorry. But I would really like to compliment the minister's staff. They have been very co-operative, and we do get good information from them when we ask for it, and they have been very helpful in a number of areas. I would set a challenge for the minister, though. We actually get more information from the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development's department, so perhaps he could take that as a challenge for the next year in terms of keeping us informed on the issues. But your staff is excellent. They're very friendly to deal with. They answer our questions in a very reasonable time frame. We often get briefings on information that is helpful to us as we move forward.

The format for today. Now, I'm torn between the minister who's asking for an early release day and other ministers who are asking me to be particularly tough on this minister. It's tough to do both, but I expect that we can probably wrap this up by 5 o'clock. I'm going to start by asking for the minister to develop some issues that we have talked about in question period that we don't really get an opportunity to, I don't think, get full information on, given the format of question period. Then my other colleagues will go through a list of questions that are more specific on the dollar amounts in the budget. If we don't get through those this afternoon, then we will of course pass them on to the minister in writing, and we have always gotten good responses and timely responses to those written questions.

The first two issues that I would like you to spend some time talking about for us, if you can, are your current policy on interbasin water transfers and your position on a retrofit fund from an environmental perspective on energy.

Dr. Taylor: Well, let me talk first about the interbasin transfers, Mr. Chairman. We have legislation in the province that prevents interbasin transfers, and as a result even a small interbasin transfer is prevented by legislation. So if we want to do it, then we must bring forward a special act to the Legislature.

Last year you saw us bring – I can't remember the number or the name of the act. I'm going to call it the Red Deer water act or something like that. What it was, Mr. Chairman, was a special act to the Legislature to allow interbasin transfer in the Red Deer area. Essentially what it was, briefly, was to allow Red Deer to provide drinking water to a number of other communities out of the Red Deer River, which is in the South Saskatchewan River basin, and some of the communities discharge their wastewater into the Battle River, which is the North Saskatchewan. Although it's treated water in both cases, that still remained an interbasin transfer, so as a result we brought through special legislation to do it.

I don't see any effort and I have no desire to change that legislation. We will leave that legislation where it is because I think that if interbasin transfer is going to occur, then it needs to be very up front and there needs to be a very good discussion of it in this House. That's why if it would occur, then we'd need legislation to do that. I don't have right today any other plans to do any interbasin transfers. I do those only on the request from the communities. This one act that we did do was based on the request from a whole series of communities in central Alberta that are involved with the water supply system there. As I said, as of today I don't have any other requests to do any more interbasin transfers. I don't think it's acceptable. I don't think it's economically viable to even talk about large interbasin transfers from the north to the south. I mean, you'd need a special act here. I've got to be careful what I say because I don't want to give the impression that I'm going to do it or have any ideas of doing it. If at some stage it would happen in the future, it would have to be discussed here, but I have no plans to do that. I think that it's just uneconomical at the present time to do it, and there's not enough known about it, a whole series of issues around it. So I don't see that happening, at least as long as my tenure as the Environment minister.

The second issue was around energy and energy efficiencies. I'm working at the present time with Climate Change Central, and we fund Climate Change Central. We fund their operational costs to the tune of about $2 million a year. In this budget I have some new money that could be made available to Climate Change Central; it's about 2 and a half million dollars.

I think that the member raises a good issue around encouragement of energy efficiency. I don't believe that it's the government's job to do that. We might disagree, and that's a philosophical and ideological position. I understand that, and that's just my philosophical and ideological position. I don't think the government should be in the business of giving loans, loan guarantees, or grants to individuals. However, Climate Change Central – and I've talked to Climate Change Central and talked as recently as last night about it in a speech in Calgary – may be a body that might be able to do that, and I asked them to give me a proposal. We've started this office, and we're funding this office – I think it's called Energy Solutions – and I've suggested to them that one of the opportunities that they have is to develop an energy efficiency fund of some sort that would be no-interest or low-interest loans. Moreover, I've suggested that if we got a proposal from them, we could look at putting some of this extra money into a fund like that at Climate Change Central that would then do it.

Now, I further suggested to them that there should be private-sector money that would be interested in matching our money. If a company sells energy-efficient furnaces, why wouldn't you contribute some money to a fund like that, promote your product, matching dollars? Why wouldn't insulators contribute to a fund like that? Why wouldn't people that have more energy-efficient windows contribute to a fund like that? You could develop quite a large fund for either zero-interest or low-interest loans that then would be a revolving fund.

I have suggested that to Climate Change Central. They do have their own board, and we'll have to wait and see what kind of response we get. I think that would be an appropriate place to do it with matching dollars in a fund from the private sector. Climate Change Central has been very efficient in getting matching dollars. For every dollar we gave them last year, they got between $4 and $10 from the private sector. So if we put a million dollars into a fund like this, if they'd get the same kind of match, then they'd have between $4 million and $10 million. That's the way I would look at it, and I understand, you know, that the member may disagree with me on my ideological viewpoints, but I guess at the present time I'm the minister.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think that on that particular issue the minister and I aren't that far away in thinking, but maybe that's an interpretation. I think Climate Change Central is primarily an arm of the government, so if you give them the money, it's still the government paying out.

A hint for Climate Change Central and this minister is that if you take a look at the retrofit programs that have been established in the States, they have been almost 100 percent funded by energy companies. I think that if you're looking for matching moneys, that's also an area to take a look at.

Could the minister now talk for a little while about what we have heard from a number of people and organizations as to what seems to be a building area of concern, and that's the Ministry of Environment moving to codes of practice? We see some of that happening in I believe it's Bill 36, and there are some concerns around that. So if he could talk about why they're going there and how he thinks that's a better system for us to have rather than the more traditional methods, I'd appreciate it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you. I might make just one comment about my last response. One of the things that you could do on an energy fund or, you know, a retrofit fund is you could actually structure it so the people could pay back the fund out of their energy savings, and I suggested that to the director of Climate Change Central just last night. As I say, I don't control what they do.

In terms of codes of practice I'll use a specific example, Mr. Chairman, because I think you can generalize from that specific example to the larger case. Let me use the example of well site reclamation. We have today in this province 28,000 abandoned well sites that need reclamation certificates done on them. We have in the neighbourhood of 14,000 abandoned pipelines that need reclamation certificates and I think 8,000 or so abandoned batteries. I'm just going by memory. So that's over 40,000 units of those three sorts that need reclamation certificates done on them. As well as that, at present we have 155,000 active wells that are going to need rec certificates done.

Now, since either '63 or '67, I believe, the Department of Environment has issued 40,000 rec certificates. So essentially in almost 40 years we've issued 40,000 rec certificates. Well, we've already got a backlog of over 40,000, so we couldn't possibly hire enough staff to actually catch up. We have a significant issue. We can do about 1,700 a year. That's what we can actually do. If you look at 1,700, over 40,000 to do, you can see that there is a very significant backlog and significant time frame involved plus the 155,000 active wells that are going to need to be reclaimed as well.

So what we're working on with the industry is a code of practice. We've contracted the Alberta Research Council to come up with very clear standards, not subjective standards but objective standards as to what a well site reclamation should look like. The Alberta Research Council is doing that for us. They've got a fellow that's doing it I believe from the University of Alberta that has worked 30 years in the reclamation business and very clearly understands that. I can't think of his name offhand, but I could get that for the member if she wanted it. I know that if she would check on his background, he is a very credible person.

So now what we're talking to the industry about – we get these objective standards, and then we're looking at a methodology of allowing the industry to hire a reclamation specialist. That might be an agrologist with experience in this area. That might be an engineer with experience in this area. It could be any number of specialists. We have rec specialists that come out of the colleges in this province, so it could be any number of specialists. The oil company or a gas company would contract them. They would do the reclamation, certify it.

Now what we would ask is that when they submit the certification to the government of Alberta, they would also submit a copy of all those papers to the landowner or whoever is in control of the land. Right now an oil company or a gas company can submit a rec certificate and the owner of the land doesn't know it's even submitted. So at the same time as they submit it to the Department of Environment with some kind of professional stamp on it, I'd compare it. One of the things we do is construction in our private sector. So when I get a blueprint done, we get it stamped by an engineer. The engineer puts a stamp on it and says: yes, this blueprint is acceptable. We take it to city council, and city council looks at Pat McNally's stamp on the blueprint and says: "Yes, McNally Engineering and Associates has stamped this. Go ahead. Your blueprint is okay." That's the kind of thing we're looking at, a professional designation, a professional organization in the background so that if there is a problem on the blueprint or on the rec certificate, there's an organization there that has penalties, and as well we would have the ability as the Department of Environment to withdraw your right to any more of these reclamation certificates.

So then what would happen is the papers go to us, they go to the landowner, land lessee, whoever it is, and with the documents that the landowner gets, there's going to be some document of some sort – we don't have the wording yet – that indicates that the landowner has to sign. If they don't like what has been done, then they would send that into the Department of Environment on this document, and then we would automatically go out and inspect.

As well, we will audit many different sites. I mean, if I ask my guys in the field, they'll tell me, you know, who the good companies are and who the bad companies are. They know that. Certainly, some companies won't get audited as much as other companies, and we will audit the companies that perhaps haven't been as good in the past. But if they're not doing it properly, remember that you've got a rec specialist that could lose his professional designation. So there's a certain incentive for them if that's the way they're going to make a living.

So what that will allow us to do under a code of practice is really get through a number of rec certificates and reclamations much quicker – it's still going to take a number of years to catch up – because you're going to have different people doing it in the Department of Environment. We will still continue to do the 1,700 to 2,000 inspections every year out in the field, but they're going to be auditing inspections as opposed to, you know, writing rec certificate inspections. We're still in some negotiations with the industry and the various groups on this. We're looking at some things. Right now you only have a five-year liability as a company. We're looking at quite a long extension of that liability, which the companies are prepared to give. We're looking at 20- to 25-year liability.

The other thing that can happen with this new methodology is that a director of the Department of Environment can pull the rec certificate at any time. He can't do that now. Once you're given a rec certificate, it's there. The Department of Environment will be able to pull that rec certificate at any time, so it's a real incentive again for the companies to do a good job and for the rec specialists to do a good job up front, because if it gets pulled, there are going to be substantial costs, almost a penalty that the company will have to pay to the Department of Environment to go through the process again. So there are lots of incentives to do it through the code of practice the first time and do it right the first time. So that's what we're looking at. That's a very specific example of a code of practice, but we're looking at, you know, things like that for different areas.

Hopefully that gives you some idea of where we're going.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the minister for those answers. When you talked about the ARC, it reminded me of a question that I had for you. I think the ARC does an excellent job, and they're working on some great projects. The last time I was there, they were talking about coal bed methane recovery, so if you could give me an update from your perspective on how close they are to actually figuring out a way to recover it and what impact you believe that will have in the near future.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you. ARC does an excellent job. I actually used to be chair of that organization, and then I was the minister in charge of the organization. I can speak very highly of the Alberta Research Council, and I will say that they have an excellent chair right now, probably a much better chair than I was. He keeps pushing the ARC and getting it moving forward.

Dr. Oberg: No doubt about that.

Dr. Taylor: "No doubt about that," says the Minister of Learning. He's certainly better looking than I am, anyway, Mr. Learning Minister.

The ARC and coal bed methane. Actually, we have about 24 or 25 wells that are presently getting methane from coal in the experimental process, many of them in my constituency. They're actually right now working on some experimental wells to do that, so I think it's pretty close. It's interesting to note that we have more reserves of natural gas in the coal bed methane today than we do of what I would call traditional natural gas. There are huge amounts of natural gas or methane in coal beds. So it's going to be an interesting experience to try and get it out. As I say, there are some experimental projects going on right now. I can't remember if it's 24 or 43 wells, but a few experimental wells are drilled and are working. So as we go forward, I would expect to see more.

One of the issues around coal bed methane is water though. In some of the coal there's potable water. So it becomes a significant issue as to how you handle that potable water. In my constituency some of these wells are into potable water. So it's an issue they're trying to figure out: can they get the water out without damaging it and then put it back down, or exactly how are they going to deal with it? I mean, the Minister of Innovation and Science or the Minister of Energy would perhaps be a better one to answer this, but I think that from my perspective one of the big issues is figuring out how to deal with the water. Not all water in coal bed methane is potable – there's lots of brackish water too – but we have to figure out an appropriate way to deal with potable water.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think we need to learn how to deal with the brackish water as well in order to keep it contained and then put back wherever it's going to be put back.

So my next questions are really around water. That was a great wish list that you brought out for the water for life strategy. I would like to see everything in there implemented. How soon do you think you'll be able to give us some preliminary findings of what there is? Aside from that, are you making some progress on a water audit for Alberta? I think that's a very important thing to do. Also with regard to water is there any more discussion about preventing water from becoming a commodity under NAFTA? Are any of those discussions happening with your department?

3:20

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, do you want to respond?

Dr. Taylor: Yes, I do. I'm just making a note. My memory isn't as good as it used to be, and if I don't make some notes as to her questions, I'll forget them. Water audit was a question.

The first question was: interesting wish list. No, I don't think it's a wish list, Mr. Chairman. As the members will see in the fall, I think it's actually going to be a water strategy. What you will see coming back in the fall will be time lines and budgets associated with those time lines. Now, obviously, this is a long-term, 15- to 20-year process, I think, so you're going to see long time lines, but you will see budgets, and as we go forward into the next business-planning cycle, for the issues that we have to deal with in 2003-2004 under the water strategy, you will see budget requests. Because we do three-year budget cycles, you'll see the time lines. For anything within that three-year time line you're going to see budget requests. This is not a wish list that's going to end up on a shelf; this is going to have numbers and time lines.

Now, does that mean I'm going to get everything I want from our good Minister of Finance and Treasury Board? The Minister of Learning, who sits on Treasury Board, is nodding his head in the affirmative, so hopefully we will find that to be true. I will do absolutely the best I can to convince my colleagues. I think everybody in the House, all my colleagues and everybody in the opposition, recognizes the importance of a water strategy. I think most Albertans do as well, and I'll be doing the best I can to try and get money in the budget to meet the time lines in the three-year business plan cycle. But as I say, there will be time lines and there will be budget numbers. I guess we will see how successful I am in the future at getting that money. I mean, certainly, if I have my way, I'll get it, but as I say, as you know, member, there are many demands on money in government, so you don't always get everything you want.

A water audit is a significant and interesting issue. We have a pretty good idea of the surface water, where it is and the amount. We can monitor that pretty closely. What we don't have a good idea of generally around the province is the underground water, or groundwater. We don't know, really, in most places in the province where it is, how much there is, or what quality it is. In the Edson area we've got a pretty good idea. I think we've just released a scientific study, that has just been put out or is just coming out, on groundwater and surface water in the Canmore area, and in the Milk River basin we've got a pretty good idea. So in some really small, small portions of the province we have a good water audit on groundwater, but we need to do more of that. It's going to be part of our water strategy. It costs money.

As well, there's a lot of information out there that we're not collecting. Anytime somebody licenses a well, they have to provide us with information on flows. We have hundreds of wells licensed every year. Every time an oil company drills and uses water, they have to have a licence for a well and they have to provide information on flows. So the oil industry has a lot of good information on water, and we've got to figure out how to make their information on their computers compatible with the way we can collect information on our computers. As much of a technology guru as I am, you're going to need better people than I am to figure that out, but we have people working on it, talking to the oil industry right now on how to get the information from the well licensing into a system to better understand groundwater.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Are you monitoring it?

Dr. Taylor: No. Actually, we're doing more than just monitoring. We're taking action in this case, Mr. Chair. It's moving forward. So that's where the water audit is.

Water commodity under NAFTA. My understanding, not being a lawyer, is that as long as we don't bulk export water to the U.S., then it's not an issue, and we have no intention as a government. We have legislation against bulk exports of water to the United States. If we were to start that – I have no plans to start that – I mean, can you imagine the legitimate screams of Albertans, when we really have significant water supply issues in the province, if we tried to export water to the United States? We only have one river. The Milk River, as you know, runs in from Montana and back into the U.S. No, there are no plans to do bulk water exports to the U.S., and I can't see it happening for the foreseeable future – ever, really.

Dr. Oberg: As long as we stay in Canada.

Dr. Taylor: Well, the Minister of Learning suggests "as long as we stay in Canada." Hopefully, we will always stay in Canada, so I can't see it happening.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Earlier today the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had the pleasure of introducing his twin brother. Well, I am very pleased to announce that my mini me has indeed arrived in the members' gallery, and I would like to introduce to you and through you my younger brother, Mr. Adam Lukaszuk.

Environment (continued)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now would seem to be an appropriate time to talk about the Milk River Ridge dam. I've read through the material. It seems to me that nothing has changed in terms of the last time they talked about this being an internationally significant grassland that serves as habitat for several rare or threatened species. The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has offered to take me on a tour of that site this summer perhaps in the hopes of changing my mind. I'll be very happy to go out and take a look at it. I do think that dams are always an expensive choice and that we generally have other options, and I would like the minister to comment on it from his department's perspective but also perhaps from the other implications it has in that region of the province: who it's going to serve, the economic benefit. Try and convince me that it's a good idea.

Dr. Taylor: Well, I won't try and convince you that it's a good idea, because I don't think it's possible to convince you that it's a good idea, but I'll try and give you some rationale for why we're doing it.

As you know, we're doing a study. I can't remember the exact cost: $240,000 or $250,000. I should say that our chief financial officer, Stew Churlish, is in the House. He could probably tell us the exact dollars. My communications director is in the House as well, Val Mellesmoen. My executive assistant, Ken Faulkner, is in the House. I'd say that the toughest job of all of them would be my communications director. She has a tough job trying to control what I say on occasion. So I give them all credit; they all do good work for us.

Back to the point in question. We were asked again by a group from that area, the Milk River water users association, whatever their appropriate name is, to take another look at it. I said I would only take another look at it if they contributed, you know, some of the money for the study, because if there's no community buy-in, then why should we put the money out? Sure enough, they went back, and they came up with a substantial amount of money for small communities and contributed to the study. So that's one issue, just to let you know that they have committed dollars to it.

The other thing that makes this different is that the Americans are interested. We have in Montana a siphon system from the St. Mary River to the Milk River, and that siphon system is about I think 23 miles long. It's long, anyway. It needs about a hundred million dollars worth of repair. As I said, the Milk River comes in and flows back into Montana. In the Havre, Montana, area they're irrigating about 85,000 acres from the Milk River, but because the siphon system is old – and that's actually an interbasin transfer, because the St. Mary River ends up in Hudson Bay; the Milk River ends up in the Gulf of Mexico. So if you want a big interbasin transfer, that's one. You know, nobody's died from it yet, but we won't get into that argument. So there are these massive siphons. They haven't had much work done to them, and they've been there since 1908, I believe, so they need some massive work done in the neighbourhood of a hundred million dollars.

So the Americans are now interested because they have to stop the irrigation in Havre usually by June 1 because the Milk River goes dry. The Milk River would not flow all year if it weren't for the siphons from the St. Mary River. It actually dries up. Two years ago, in 2001, when we had the severest drought in the south of Alberta and there wasn't enough water in the St. Mary River to keep the siphons running, then the Milk River did dry up and you could walk across the Milk River on solid ground. You didn't have to walk on water to get across. So the siphons keep it running. So that's another difference. The Americans are now interested.

The study is more than just about a dam. The study is also looking at off-stream storage. Unfortunately, I have to agree with you that it appears at least that big dams aren't economically or environmentally – you can't do them right now. It doesn't make sense.

3:30

Mr. Mason: Who are you, and where's the real Minister of Environment?

Dr. Taylor: I'm the real Minister of Environment, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Okay.

As I say, I tend to agree with you. The Meridian dam isn't going to work. At least in my life span I don't think it's going to work either economically or environmentally.

Now, the one difference in this is that if there ever were to be a dam built, it's a very small dam and not a very expensive dam according to the Milk River water users. So we're looking at that. Will small dams be both economically and environmentally affordable? I don't know. But we're also looking at off-stream storage because in discussions with the environmental movement they're more in favour of off-stream storage than onstream dams. So how the study is going to come out I don't know. They are looking at not just dams but off-stream storage as well.

I really believe that as we move forward, we're going to have to look at more off-stream storage and how we deal with water because the Milk River like the South Saskatchewan and North Saskatchewan – we have to provide 50 percent of the natural flow to either Saskatchewan or the U.S. When the Milk River is running, we're still providing about 85 percent of the natural flow into the U.S. So the Americans would certainly be concerned if we were to build a dam and just provide them 50 percent because that would shrink their irrigation possibilities even further.

We did have an interesting meeting in Milk River. The Americans were there. The federal Bureau of Land Management was there, very senior people, I think out of Cheyenne, Wyoming. The equivalent Montana people were there as well. They want to be involved in the study, so we are involving them and keeping the Americans informed. So that may make a difference. They've indicated that they may be willing to fund some of any project if it suits their needs as well, so that might make a difference as to the economics at least. We don't know the environmental effects, but this study is looking at the environmental effects as well. So that's where that project is. We hope to have results probably by either the end of June or the middle of July.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to engage the Minister of Environment in some discussion about his budget. I would like to, I guess, begin by talking about the budgetary increase of 11 and a half percent. I would note that the department has still not caught up to 2001-02, particularly in the area of environmental leadership, and I'd like to know what programs have been cut or reduced since 2001-02.

In terms of water I'm curious about what action the department is taking to improve water treatment in towns like Gleichen. I know that water is a serious concern across the province, but good, safe drinking water should be an essential part of the life of every Alberta community. There have been a number of issues brought to our attention with respect to the quality of drinking water in certain areas of the province and often on reserves. This has been brought to our attention by a number of native organizations, that there are serious deficiencies in certain parts of the province.

I'd like to know as well what the status is of the proposed water tax and also would like to know about the metering of domestic water use. I know that comparing the cities of Edmonton and Calgary over the years when Edmonton had water metering and Calgary didn't have mandatory water meters – I'm not sure if they do now or not; I suspect they do – it was clear that water usage per capita in Edmonton was consistently lower. So I guess, in my view, a water meter is the number one water conservation device that you can have, and I certainly feel that the government should move to ensure that water meters are mandatory in Alberta municipalities. I think that would go a long way toward reducing consumption. So if the minister can report on the status of that issue, I'd be very interested. [interjection] Do you want me to stop now?

Dr. Taylor: Yeah. I'll get too far behind you.

Let me respond quickly to a couple of the points the member has made. The metering issue is a significant issue, and he's correct. Metering is one of the most important things we can do for conservation, and I'll use the city of Calgary, where half the city is metered; half the city is not metered. The half of the city that is not metered uses double the water. Calgary has brought in a 15-year plan to do everything with water meters, but I'm saying that that's not quick enough. Part of our water strategy, that you can look at on our web site, I believe has to have a major emphasis on conservation, and part of the emphasis on conservation has to be, you know, getting meters in Calgary quicker than a 15-year process. If we end up with the final strategy looking like the draft strategy, then it's something we need to take action on and work on.

In terms of a water tax we've never proposed a water tax as a government. We did have a water forum, and we did hear from thousands of Albertans, and one of the issues that Albertans raised was: should there be a price on water? It appears from the information that we've got that it's about a 50-50 split. You've got about 50 percent of the folks saying, "Yeah, you should have a charge for water other than your conveyance charges that you pay now" and about 50 percent saying no because they don't want another tax grab, and I agree to some extent with the ones that don't want another tax grab. If there were to be any charge for water, I would not support it unless it went into a designated fund for water infrastructure, and I say: if.

So if you look at our draft water strategy, one of the statements we've asked people to respond to – it might even be on page 34 if I remember correctly – is: develop and implement a water pricing process or something like that. We're going to get feedback on that, and hopefully it'll be interesting. But as I've said repeatedly in the public and in the press, everybody agrees on the need for a strategy. You go out and talk to any Albertan, talk to all of you folks in the opposition, even all of my colleagues, and they all agree on a need for a strategy, but once we bring a strategy forward, it's going to be very interesting to try and get general agreement on a strategy. That's not just from the opposition but from some of my own colleagues as well.

So it's going to be interesting on some of these issues, but I believe it's necessary to do. I believe it's necessary to have the discussion. I can tell you that we're the only jurisdiction in North America that's trying to do a broad water strategy like this that includes both drinking water, you know, maintaining healthy aquatic systems. California is probably as far advanced as anybody in water thinking, and they haven't had a broad strategy. They've dealt basically with irrigation: irrigation water and irrigation supplies. So it's going to be an interesting discussion as we go forward. But as I said earlier, the final draft will be out September-ish, and we will have time lines and budgets on that final draft, so you can look forward to that.

In terms of water treatment and quality of water on native reserves, that's very clearly a federal issue, and we would encourage the federal government to be more responsible in terms of how they do water treatment on reserves. We would work with them. We volunteered and will continue to volunteer to work with them on that, to improve the quality of drinking water.

Now, drinking water in a more general area in rural Alberta is also a very interesting and important issue. The best example I can use is Walsh, which is in my constituency. There's been a four-year boil order in Walsh. There are about 15 houses at last count when I was there that have about 63 people in them. We spent over a million dollars on a water treatment facility, and it's not working. The first engineering firm has said that they've done all they can do, and they've vacated the space, so to speak, and there's another engineering firm in there. But it is a very significant issue. As I said, a four-year boil water order, probably the longest in the province, in my constituency, so I'm very familiar with water issues in rural Alberta.

One of the real hopes I see for that is to actually go to regional water systems. You see us doing that in the Red Deer area. I met with people from Grande Prairie yesterday that want to go to a regional system there, and I think that in rural Alberta to try and work through regional water systems is probably the way to go. So if you look once again at my constituency, Medicine Hat, a city of 55,000 people, has a big plant and they can put out high-quality drinking water. Well, Bow Island has a treatment facility, Seven Persons has a treatment facility, Etzikom has a treatment facility, Foremost has a treatment facility, and Walsh has a treatment facility. So I've got approximately five small treatment facilities. It doesn't matter what we do there; those folks cannot afford to pay for the quality of water that you're going to get out of the Medicine Hat system. So it makes more sense, instead of us putting millions and millions and millions of dollars into those small treatment facilities, to put a pipeline from Medicine Hat.

To give you an example, this is the number that was quoted to me from Grande Prairie yesterday. Now, I haven't checked them out. I met with the Grande Prairie councillors and from Sexsmith, the county around Grande Prairie, and the city of Grande Prairie. For Sexsmith I think the cost is $30 million to upgrade their water system. Well, they're telling me that for $30 million or $40 million – and I can't remember what the exact figure is – you can have a pipeline from Grande Prairie to do this. That includes the county; it includes Sexsmith; it would include other small communities out there.

I know that the Minister of Transportation, whose budget would be going to this area, is strongly supportive of regional water systems, and he's assured me that he's going to have a lot of money in his budget next year to do regional water systems. Of course, he has to convince Treasury Board as well, and sometimes that's not as easily done as said.

That's what I see as a response to drinking water in rural areas, I think: regional systems.

Now I'll stop there.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

An Hon. Member: Riverview.

Mr. Mason: He just cut me off, and I was . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I just want to make sure that there's a clear understanding. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands had the floor. The minister interjected and said that he wanted to respond because he had not finished taking full notes. So I'm not sure if the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has completed his remarks. Have you?

Mr. Mason: No, not yet.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Then let's let him finish his remarks, and then we'll recognize you.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. [interjection] I can stand up and look the Minister of Economic Development straight in the forehead.

I appreciate the minister's comments on regional water because we're certainly familiar with that in the Edmonton area. Since Edmonton kind of screws up the North Saskatchewan for people downstream, it only makes sense that Edmonton should locate its water treatment plants upstream of the wastewater and then pump the water downstream.

I want to ask the minister about the export of water. I know that the strategy isn't finished and so on, but I wonder if he can give us any idea as to whether or not the government is considering interbasin transfers that might facilitate the export of water. I would note that Alberta is relatively short of water compared to other provinces and would certainly be very concerned if our American neighbours were able to persuade the government to export water.

I'd like to know about the plans for the oil and gas industry. The oil and gas industry was licensed by Alberta Environment to use 438 billion cubic metres of water in 2002. Only 58 billion cubic metres were actually injected, or this was at least according to a newspaper article recently. I know that the government has talked about alternatives to freshwater injection, but I'd like to know if those are practical now and what action the government is taking to speed up the alternatives if not to limit the use of water for partially depleted wells. I forget the technical term, but it's injected to squeeze out more of the oil in a depleted field.

Just to finish on water, I'd also like to ask about the impact of some of the intensive livestock operations on the incidence of E coli in groundwater and whether or not the government is monitoring that and if they're monitoring it, what they've actually found.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thanks. Just on the export of water. I was asked by a Liberal member, and I'll reply briefly. There's a law against the export of water. We have no plans, zero plans, as a government to do interbasin transfer to export water. We have a water supply issue, and I've said repeatedly that unless we have a major water strategy within 10 to 15 years, we're not going to have enough water for Alberta. It would make absolutely no sense, zero sense, to try and export water. So there are no plans to do that, period, ever.

Oil and gas are licensed for about 3.5 percent of the water in the province. Municipalities, irrigation are licensed for much more. But that doesn't mean that the oil and gas industry can't do things better. One of the issues is that what you're licensed for and what you use are two different things.

At present, today, as we speak, we're working with the oil and gas industry. We've hired a consultant to determine exactly how much water they're actually using. So that's your first step: determine how much water they're using, what kind of water it is. Is it potable? Is it brackish? That's the first step. The next step that we foresee happening once we have that information – we should have their information by the end of June – is actually setting up a protocol and a group of people, including the various industries, to look at how and what technology is available to reduce the use particularly of potable water. So that's where we're going. We do have a plan to go forward with it.

The oil and gas industry is being very co-operative, and as we move forward, one area we will be looking at specifically with this group of individuals is their utilization of water. We'll put a number of people on that group to work with them, and as I say, they are co-operating. They understand the necessity of developing new technologies to reduce their utilization of potable water both in injection and in the oil sands, because the oil sands use huge amounts of water as well. So in the oil sands they're experimenting with different kinds of flood. Instead of steam or water flood they're experimenting with propane flood, they're experimenting with some solvent flood, and the one I found most interesting was fire flood. I saw a model. There's a company in Calgary. I can't remember the name. Ken is mouthing the name to me.

An Hon. Member: Fire Floods Are Us.

Dr. Taylor: Fire Floods Are Us. No, it's not Fire Floods Are Us. CMG or something. They're actually doing modeling on fire floods. One of the kind of fascinating issues is that they do three-dimensional computer models, and you actually see the fire flood going through the existing oil sands. They go out and drill wells and then tell you where the sands are. One of the problems with the fire flood, of course, is that sometimes they have trouble putting the fire out once they've got it started underground. So they've got some issues to figure out around that, but they realize the need to work on other methodologies. That's moving forward, I think, as a direct result of our water strategy and drawing attention to it.

The intensive livestock industry and water. Essentially, all we do with the intensive livestock industry is license a well; okay? The NRCB licenses the operation, so we go in and license the well and require the intensive livestock operator to monitor wells. I can think of one that was just done in my constituency. It's an intensive hog operation, and what Alberta Environment required was the hog operation to monitor all neighbours' wells in a significant area around to see the drawdown or see if there was any pollution coming, as well as to have a number of monitoring wells around the hog operation that are monitored or audited . . .

An Hon. Member: In this case it's legitimate.

Dr. Taylor: Yes, in this case it's legitimate. They're monitored on a regular basis, and the water is sent for testing. So, yes, we are doing that as necessary and where necessary.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A handful of questions. I appreciate the minister's back-and-forth responses here. It makes it more interesting for all of us, I'm sure. This is, I hope we would all agree, a very important department and requires strong leadership and a tremendously farsighted vision, I think, for the leader. So I look forward to many good things from the minister and look forward to his comments here.

I will cluster my questions into some specific areas here. The business plans are useful, and the budget is – well, it is what it is. One of the frustrations with government budgets is that they tend to be at such a general level that it's hard to know the details, and that's why the minister's responses are so helpful.

Of pressing concern – and I worry that this is going to become potentially a huge issue; we've raised the issue a few times in question period – is West Nile virus. Maybe I'm more sensitized to it because of the SARS outbreak right now and watching the impacts of that, but I think that West Nile virus could within months be a huge story in this province. I think of its impact on recreational activities, people going out camping or golfing or whatever, its impact on economics, tourism, forestry. You think of the workers who are sent out into the bush and how many mosquito bites they get, so there are real risks there. We have raised from time to time issues of mosquito control, and it's a dilemma. I think we all recognize that this is not an easy issue at all.

I guess that what I'm going to ask the minister is this. Is there any place in his budget and business plan or elsewhere in the government for an interdepartmental centre, a task force or some equivalent to that that could be ramped up more or less instantly if we find that two or three months from now there's a real crisis around the West Nile virus? I have read recently that the form that's turning up in Canada is the most virulent form of the disease. Is there any provision in his business plans or his budget for some ability to suddenly rise to action on this issue?

Dr. Taylor: Well, let me start by saying: this is a significant issue. I don't understand all the science around it, but I do understand, unfortunately, that apparently if there is West Nile, the most likely place it's going to occur is in southern Alberta, and that's because of the heavy irrigation and the water and the high temperatures. Apparently, that's what those kinds of mosquitoes like. There are a number of different varieties of mosquitoes. Only certain varieties carry West Nile, so that's why you can only kill it in the adult population. That's why spraying programs don't make sense.

But there are a number of other things, and this is really a partnership between the department of health and Alberta Environment and some others. The department of health minister could probably give you more information. There are a number of things that you can do as an individual. One, you should make sure you don't have standing water in your backyard or in your neighbourhood, you know, if you can get rid of any standing water or possible breeding places for mosquitoes. It's going to have to be, quite frankly, a lot of self-protection. I know that there are some plans to go forward with education programs that we can put out there: you know, mosquito spray with deet in it, wearing long sleeves, just being aware of all the different self-protective measures, staying in screened houses if possible, and so on. So there's a lot of self-protection education that we have to do.

In terms of funds I don't have a specific fund. I can't comment on what the ministry of health has, but I do have in my budget disaster funds that aren't specified, obviously, because we don't know. Hopefully, there are no disasters, but we do have hazard and risk management funds, and certainly if something major was happening, some of these funds could be very quickly diverted because this would be hazard and it would be risk management. In partnership with the department of health these funds could be diverted. As I say, they're there to do exactly that. So that's where we could immediately get dollars for it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just have one quick question for the minister. Before the question, an observation. I realize that this is merely an observation, but if municipalities had to get their input water downstream and their effluent went in upstream, it might seriously change the amount of interest that went into treating the effluent. It's just an observation. I know it's impractical, but it is an observation.

My question, though, has to do with storm water and the drought that we've experienced and the concern that people have that we may be entering a period of prolonged drought, and this has been the case as made by some. Are we giving consideration to trapping storm water, or has there been any additional interest in saving storm and runoff water because of our experience in the drought?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you. Let me comment on your first observation. Actually, the water that goes back into the rivers from tertiary plants – I mean, people say that you can drink it. I wouldn't necessarily want to try and drink it. I've never seen anybody drink it, but some of the technology people say that you can actually drink it. So for out of a tertiary treatment system like you have in Edmonton, it's a very good system. I see the Sergeant-at-Arms looking at me with amazement on his face. He might want to try and drink it. I don't know if he would or not, but it's supposed to be that clean. I think that as we move to tertiary treatment plants, that issue is eliminated to a large extent.

Now, in terms of collecting storm water, storm water all ends up eventually back in our rivers and streams, so it's a matter of getting and storing more water. As I said, on all our river basins we have a 50 percent issue to Saskatchewan or the U.S. North Saskatchewan: I would suspect we're flowing 90 percent to 95 percent into Saskatchewan at most times. Even in 2001 when we had the severe drought in the south, we flowed 57 percent of the South Saskatchewan into Saskatchewan, so there was still 7 percent we could have captured. But the question is: how do you capture that in environmentally and economically sustainable ways? That's what we're trying to work on. We've got these watershed management committees. The North Saskatchewan has one. Certainly, it's a huge issue, and we just need to figure out how to do it, and I don't have an answer on how to do it.

Dr. Taft: The minister just mentioned the North Saskatchewan River valley water basin management system, and my next three questions all relate to those activities. The first one could also relate to other areas, but it has to do with the very clearly observed diminishing of the glaciers in the mountains, which are one of the sources of the North Saskatchewan and of a number of other rivers. One only needs to hike into the glaciers in some of the national parks to see how much they have receded, and, well, there's very clear evidence that they're continuing to recede.

My first question has to do with any work that's being undertaken through this budget to look at the long-term implications of the shrinking of the glaciers on the eastern slopes, the glaciers that serve as sources for some of our major rivers.

The second question has to do with Lake Wabamun, which is in the North Saskatchewan River drainage basin, and is I think probably the most heavily studied lake in the province, or certainly one of them, because of the heavy concentration of power plants and coal mines right around the lake as well as CNR's transcontinental line and a lot of recreational use. There are concerns. I hear them in my constituency because a number of my constituents are cottage owners there. There are very serious concerns about the quality of the water, the presence of heavy metals such as copper and mercury, which have entered the lake through the emissions from the nearby power plants. So any comments the minister has on his awareness of quality of water issues at the lake and the monitoring or auditing programs they may have around that lake and, frankly, any other lakes in that vicinity. There are, actually, a number of lakes around there.

Finally, any comments relating to Lake Wabamun about the attempts to restore the water levels to the historic levels. TransAlta has been trying for years to successfully transfer water from the North Saskatchewan River into the lake. They spent $15 million or $20 million, I think, on a water transfer plant that didn't initially succeed because it couldn't clean the water sufficiently. The trend of that lake in the last several years has been calamitously down. Any comments or initiatives the minister has on the level of the lake.

Finally, the North Saskatchewan River valley itself, which runs right through the middle of my constituency. There are questions around the ongoing quality of the water, issues around the construction of the new bridge that's part of Anthony Henday Drive. There are concerns that the last bridge that was constructed across the North Saskatchewan River, which was the LRT bridge, quite badly and permanently disrupted the river bottom, which was potentially one of the areas where sturgeon used to breed in that river.

My understanding is that the sturgeon population of the North Saskatchewan River is in real distress, that when they do samples of the sturgeon population, you can find adults – and these fish tend to live very long – but there are no juvenile or new sturgeon in the river. So any comments about ongoing activities of the department to restore the quality of the North Saskatchewan River.

That completes my set of questions on the North Saskatchewan River basin. Thank you.

Dr. Taylor: With the sturgeon really you'd want to ask the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, unless the cormorants are getting them or something. I'm not sure. But, you know, he's got a treatment for cormorants.

The fish and bridges issue is largely a federal issue because if you have a waterway that has fish in it, that's under the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, so any bridge that would have to be built is going to have to satisfy the needs of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans on habitat concerns. I can't comment on how they are going to respond to that. But certainly in terms of the overall water quality, if you look at our water strategy, we're proposing several levels of water management authorities, and in the south they've been more active and are further developed.

I might use the Bow River Basin Council as an example. In the last number of years the quality of water in the Bow River has improved dramatically, and that's because there's a Bow River Basin Council that's made up of stakeholders. It's got the municipalities on it. It's got environmental groups on it. It's got the industry groups that are around the Bow River on it and so on. We fund that group. We're prepared to fund other basin management groups as well.

There's been perceived to be more of a need in the south, not necessarily more of an actual need but more of a perceived need. It's the same thing on the South Saskatchewan. There's a very active South Saskatchewan River basin group. I think that will happen on the North Saskatchewan as well as people become more aware, and I think the water strategy is going to drive that. So we see a very valuable role for groups like, I think they call themselves, the North Saskatchewan River valley authority or something. We see a valuable role for that. I'm not sure if you're familiar with CASA. What we're proposing is an overall water body like CASA for the province in our draft strategy. But we really do see that these groups perform a valuable service.

I think that as the issues become more visible, then you're going to have more interest in the North Saskatchewan basin. My interpretation of what happens right now is that when people see the rivers going down and a much lower supply of water, then they get concerned, but in the North Saskatchewan you always have, for a southerner anyway, this huge volume of water rushing down there, so you haven't raised the same level of concern. But people are becoming more aware of the issues, and I think you'll see that kind of thing improving with the development of the basin council around the North Saskatchewan.

Lake Wabamun is an interesting issue. As you say, it's the most studied lake in Alberta in terms of the lake levels. In five years they'll be back to normal. The EAB has actually ruled and said that under the present regime and the fact that the transfer plant is now working, they will be able to put 10 percent more of the average level back into the lake within a five-year period. So I guess time will tell on that, but it appears to be working. Lake levels will be going up and are going up.

In terms of the heavy metals and so on – you're an ex-academic, so you'll appreciate this – there's another study ongoing as we speak. This is being conducted by TransAlta and scientists actually at the University of Alberta to just try and figure out what's going on. We really don't know at the present time, so I don't know what else you do but another study. So that's where that one is.

In terms of receding glaciers, it's an interesting issue because some glaciers are increasing in size and some glaciers are receding, and it raises a whole series of issues around adaptation to climate change. Whether you accept climate change or don't accept that there are human causes to climate change, you can see the receding of the glaciers. As much as I'd like to make more snow, I can't make more snow.

Mr. Mason: But you can snow us.

Dr. Taylor: Well, I can try and snow you, the Member from Edmonton-Highlands has suggested, but actually I'm not trying to do that right now, no.

There are some glaciers growing back in the mountains of B.C., and there are some glaciers growing in Greenland. That doesn't help us, but there's a mixed message on glaciers. The member is quite correct that the ones that feed our rivers are receding. What's causing the receding glaciers? Perhaps it's some warming, although we have a study that we're just doing right now on weather patterns across Canada and in Alberta and looking at historical data.

This is just initial yet, so I don't want to make it a final thing, but it appears that the hottest decade from the time records have been kept in the last hundred years was the '30s. As I say, those are the initial results as I understand them, but I wouldn't like to be quoted because that's just the initial, not the final. So we actually have that happening in trying to understand weather patterns.

Once again, it's a professor at the University of Alberta that's doing that for us, and hopefully we'll have those results available to release that study looking at weather patterns and severe weather patterns, you know, severe weather occurrences. As I say, this gentleman at the U of A is looking at that, and hopefully by the summertime – it depends how long the academic community takes. I can be as hopeful as I want, but both of us are familiar with academic communities. Sometimes you don't want to overdo your hopes.

An Hon. Member: He's trying to bore you to death.

Dr. Taylor: I'm trying to give them accurate information, Minister, not trying to bore them to death.

We do need to have a serious look at adaptation around climate change, because all our research and all the efforts being put into, you know, trying to stop climate change – okay; we're going to reduce emissions – well, you're not. Climate goes through natural cycles and occurring cycles, and we need to do as much as we can as individuals to reduce our contribution to it. I absolutely agree. But they're still cycles, and you can look at the geological history of the world, and it's there. So the question is: how do we adapt? We need to spend more time talking about adaptation to some of these issues, in my mind.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To the Minister of Environment: I would firstly like to congratulate you. I think the ministry that you're involved in is a tough one. I think that there are a lot of issues, and I do congratulate you for the way that you embrace your ministry. I find you very easy to talk to, straight-forward. You will give the answers. You enthusiastically, as demonstrated this afternoon, are presenting the picture of your department, so congratulations.

You talked about interbasin transfers, that will be something that we'll be dealing with more and more in the future, and I couldn't agree with you more. I don't want to put you on the spot, hon. minister, but the communities that I represent have recently gone through an interbasin transfer with the Red Deer River, which you certainly understood and very, very quickly made sure would happen through legislation that was passed last session. However, it becomes more and more difficult to deal with this from the municipal perspective with the cost of doing some of this. These communities will be piping water from the Red Deer River. In the Lacombe area this is a necessity. The aquifer is not there. There is a severe need for water. However, regardless of what you do in this type of thing, it's very, very costly.

Do you see in the future, with direction coming possibly from your department along with the Minister of Transportation, who does look after a lot of the dollar amounts that go to municipalities for wastewater and these types of projects, where we will have to look at how we are going to help these communities to ensure that they do have water? In this particular consortium the cost will be upwards of $14 million, which is a great deal of money to come up with all of a sudden right now, when it's needed, to ensure that the residents have water, and it is something we're going to have to wrestle with as more of the province deals with this.

I have a great appreciation for the high benchmark we put on many of the environmental issues. It's very important, particularly with drinking water and a lot of other areas, that we do have a high benchmark. However, it's becoming harder and harder for municipalities to reach this benchmark. Also, with the advanced technology and more education to do with environmental issues, this benchmark often changes very, very quickly, and what was a known technology that cost dollars to put in just a couple or three years ago, all of a sudden now changes and the requirements change, and of course that will cost the municipalities and their taxpayers more money. This is something that I think a lot of municipalities are wrestling with. How are we as a government going to correlate and work with this between your department as regulators and other departments that are on the end that finance part of these projects?

Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Some excellent points have been raised here, and I'll try and respond to them. The first one in regard to the specific instance in the Red Deer water project, I absolutely am convinced that we have to go to regional water systems. I believe we need to make it a priority of this government, and I will be doing my best to convince the government of that. Obviously, it's the government or members of this caucus, that we both sit on, that decide how much money Transportation has to do these things. So it's going to be a significant job for both the Minister of Transportation and myself to convince this caucus that regional water systems are the only way to go as we move forward.

Ms Carlson: What does that mean? Explain that.

Dr. Taylor: What?

Ms Carlson: A regional water system.

Dr. Taylor: Oh, a regional water system. I'll give you an example of one around Red Deer, where you have a major urban area that has a very high-level treatment system. Instead of spending a lot of money on little treatment systems in Lacombe or Blackfalds – I'm not sure of all the communities there – you actually upgrade the Red Deer system and pipe the high-quality drinking water out to the system.

Yesterday I met with folks from Grande Prairie. They want to upgrade Grande Prairie's system and pipe it out to Sexsmith. Does anybody here know if county of Grande Prairie is the right name?

Mrs. Gordon: It's the county of Grande Prairie.

Dr. Taylor: The county of Grande Prairie and the little communities around there. So you have one high-level treatment facility. It doesn't matter. You're never going to be able to have the same level of treatment in Sexsmith that you have in Grande Prairie simply because of the volume of water and the costs involved. So that's what I mean by regional systems.

So as we go forward in the next year, hon. member, we must convince our caucus, our cabinet, and our Treasury Board of the necessity of spending money on regional water systems. There's no doubt in my mind.

We actually have a good example of that as well – I haven't mentioned it – in southern Alberta, the South East Alberta Water Co-op, and that's a pipeline. The regional system is going to go from Chin Lakes – and Chin Lakes is just south of Lethbridge – right across to Manyberries. That's basically across the extreme south. It's going through places like Foremost, Etzikom, so the extreme south of the province, crossing the whole bottom of the province. It's raw water, mind you, not treated water, and the cost is being split one-third, one-third, one-third. It's being split one-third by the people who benefit from it, one-third by the federal government, one-third by the provincial government. The total cost of that project is going to be someplace between $25 million and $35 million. We hope to have pipe in the ground this fall. That was one scheme driven by the local community, just as the Red Deer one was and just as the Grande Prairie one is. I think we have to move into those systems. It'll only make sense, and although it might cost you more up front, it saves money in the long term. So we've got to think in a little longer term perspective on these issues and particularly in the Red Deer one. It's going to save huge amounts of money in the long term.

High benchmarks is an interesting question. I'm going to give you a very practical example of this. Right now our regulation says that you can have particulate matter – turbidity I guess is the right word, which is particulate matter – up to .5 parts per million, and the technology is now available to go to .3 and to .1. Now, interesting question. I've asked the AMD and C to come back to me on this. It's not hard for Edmonton, Calgary, and Medicine Hat to go there. Okay? They're probably there already. It's just the nature of their plants. They're big plants. They're more efficient and so on. But for the Bow Islands and the Foremosts and the Seven Persons, I mean, it's impossible. Bow Island, for instance, has already borrowed to the max. For them to go to .3 is going to be a significant cost.

I've asked the AAMD and C to come back to me with an approach or a position. Should we say, "You're not getting sick at .5 today"? I mean, we don't have people across this province getting sick from water. We've got strong standards, the strongest in Canada actually. So if you don't get sick at .5 and the technology is there to go .3 and .1, shouldn't we let that be a community decision? If it's not a community decision, should the provincial government pay for it? So I've asked the AAMD and C to come back to me – they're going to discuss some of these issues – and just talk about this issue, because it is a significant cost to upgrade technology.

4:20

The other thing we're going to do – we've got some money in our budget to do it – is a risk assessment of all our water treatment facilities across the province. There may be some in rural Alberta that can meet these tighter standards, but it's in the way they're being operated. One of the problems, of course, is to get qualified operators to go to Duchess or qualified operators to go to Etzikom. So we're looking at creative ways. One of the ways is to use SuperNet to help us in our monitoring of water treatment plants across the province. So we're trying to be creative. We're looking at a number of different options as we move forward.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This has been an interesting exchange between the hon. Minister of Environment and various members of this Assembly, but I, too, have questions in regard to this year's budget. Going through the budget line by line, I am puzzled, certainly, by where I would find the information in regard to how much money is being collected, if any, by the Department of Environment. I've been led to believe that there is money being collected in water rights or royalties, so to speak, from hydraulic pressure behind the dams that generate electricity at the Brazeau and Ram River dams. How much money is the Department of Environment collecting, if any? Where would I find it in the revenue category, and is it true, if there is money being collected, that it is being used to offset the cost of irrigation in southern Alberta?

Dr. Taylor: Interesting question.

Mr. MacDonald: Interesting question indeed.

Dr. Taylor: Conspiracy theory.

Mr. MacDonald: No. The hon. minister may say that it's a conspiracy theory, and I certainly don't have the correspondence with me, but I've been led to believe from previous correspondence with this government that that is indeed the case. I need to have this clarified, and I need to know how much money is involved in this.

Also, I'm curious to know: where in the budget is the pool of money for land reclamation for old and abandoned coal mines? There are many old and abandoned coal mines in this province, some of which are located perhaps within a two- or three-kilometre ride from this Assembly along both the north and south banks of the North Saskatchewan River. Does this fund still exist that people can access for land reclamation projects? If a landowner was to find a sinkhole on their property that would be there as a result of an abandoned coal mine or coal mine shaft, is there a fund where they can access money to fill in and make sure this sinkhole does not grow even larger? Certainly, for instance, in the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands there are old abandoned coal mines.

Mr. Mason: Lots.

Mr. MacDonald: Lots, I'm told.

Mr. Mason: And in Drumheller.

Mr. MacDonald: Certainly in Drumheller there are. Yes.

If I could have an answer to those questions, I would be grateful.

Also, while we're on the issue of coal, how much is the Department of Environment spending to help out with the costs of the clean coal technology research that is currently going on in Los Alamos, New Mexico, at the huge American laboratory there? How much are we paying for that? Where, also, would I find that in the hon. minister's budget?

Also in regard to clean coal technology, how much research is going on in this province, and if the department is co-operating with other government departments or private agencies, what is going on in regard to studies to reduce the cost of capture and compression of CO₂ gases, for instance, at coal-fired generating stations? Is the department actively involved in that with the private sector, and if we are actively involved in that, how much money are we spending, and what is the target to reduce costs, say, per tonne of captured emissions? Certainly, it would be wonderful if we could reduce that to the point where we could capture this CO₂ economically and use it for enhanced oil recovery. If that would be the policy goal of this government, would this government consider at some time incenting, through perhaps the royalty regime, enhanced oil recovery through the use of CO₂ sequestration from coal-fired power plants?

There are some other items at this time, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to get on the record in regard to the business plan. Now, the business plan of the Department of Environment on page 140 contains the vision, mission, and preamble to the three-year business plan of the ministry, and maintaining economic prosperity figures prominently in these statements. This exposes the ministry's predisposition towards responsible environmental stewardship until that stewardship interferes with economic prosperity. In this budget the government recognizes that the natural resource revenue will be declining because of declining production numbers. The next big industry, I think, in this province will be the tourism industry, and the Environment minister has a duty to ensure that we have pristine areas left to enhance our future tourism industry. However, to what extent does the ministry take into account the economic ramifications of these policies? Would it be fair to say that the ministry is often more interested in financial impacts than environmental impacts?

On page 142 in the business plan it is interesting to note that it states that the ministry would like to "influence inter-provincial, national and international water initiatives and agreements to protect Alberta's water resources." What specific plans does the ministry have to influence these initiatives?

Now, also on page 142 of the business plan it states that the ministry would like to "influence national and international climate change strategies and agreements." What is the ministry planning to influence Canada's ratification of the Kyoto accord? What precisely do you have in mind in regard to the Kyoto accord? We all recognize in this Assembly that an air shed respects no provincial boundary and no international boundary, and we're all in this together, and we can't stick our head in the sand and pretend there's nothing going on. There is something going on: global warming. The evidence is conclusive. It is a reality. When you look at other departments and the amount of money that was spent on drought relief for farmers and you look at the extra money used to fight forest fires, we've got to look at the big picture here. If we were to do that on annual basis, as climate change affected this province from south to north, it would be advisable to consider the long-term implications of climate change.

Now, members across the way can make light of global warming if they wish, but it's the limited tax dollars of this province that are being used to provide emergency relief to affected areas of this province. And what's going to be next? Water. Water is the big issue. One only has to go into the Rockies, our own Canadian Rockies, our own Alberta Rockies, and look at where the glaciers were when we were teenagers and where they are now. In some American states where the Rockies go down, like through Montana, there are no glaciers in some places where there were snow-capped peaks 20 years ago. This is the reality, and we can't have blinders or blinkers on. You know, perhaps we're hanging out with the horse set too often and we have blinkers on, political blinkers.

Dr. Taylor: Better than hanging out with a horse's ass.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. minister talked about the back end of a horse, and I'm certain that he would be quite familiar with that end of a horse. I can be assured of that, Mr. Chairman.

Now, when we look at Kyoto, we have to recognize that the world hasn't stopped and we are going to continue to be a prosperous partner in Canada and we're going to continue to be a player in the international community. With our wealth comes duty and responsibility, and that duty and responsibility mean showing leadership to curtail global warming. Much to my surprise not a couple of weeks past I saw – and I didn't even have to open the paper – on the front page that Suncor is expressing another vote of confidence in this province and the Kyoto accord by announcing I believe it was a $3 billion project to expand so that they can recover more synthetic crude from, as George Bush calls them, the tar pits. When you think of George Bush and you think of the American economy and you think of just how stable Alberta is when you compare it to Venezuela, which has a lot of economic interest in the Gulf states as far as providing petroleum products – crude exports from Venezuela to the Gulf coast are significant – and you look at the economic chaos in Nigeria and you look at the internal governments of some of the Soviet republics, Alberta is a good place to invest. Hopefully, it's going to continue to be a good place to invest.

Now, with the Kyoto accord that investment will continue, and I think we should look at ways – and this is where the minister's department can play a significant role in the development in this province of technologies that will allow for the economic capture and compression of flue gas streams. That flue gas stream from a coal-fired plant can be utilized for enhanced oil recovery. CO₂ is a commodity in America. It is being imported from America to Saskatchewan by none other than EnCana. I would encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to get from the library and read the oil and gas journals. Some states in America don't have enough compressed, captured CO₂ for enhanced oil recovery. The minister could really show leadership, and we could have a technological revolution in this province that would allow for the export of this technology and another way for us to increase our prosperity and our base.

With those comments I'll take my seat. Thank you.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I expect somebody to answer the questions. Could we have a ruling on what's going to happen in this case? [interjections] Well, he's asked his questions. I'll ask the next set of questions. Mr. Chairman, my next question is on the Tire Recycling Management Association of Alberta, which is a DAO, a delegated administrative organization. The reason I think this question is well answered by the Minister of Learning is because this is a DAO that has buckets of money. I see that the Minister of Infrastructure has raised his head. I know that he, too, likes this particular organization, and if you can't answer the question, I know he can.

This is where our $4 tire fee goes. They've been collecting that money for a long time. The province in co-operation with this organization, this DAO, has done a very good job of getting rid of all the old tires in the province, and we no longer have a surplus. In fact, some companies are importing used tires from other jurisdictions in order to meet the kinds of quotas they have for providing different kinds of products on the market.

My question with regard to this is: now that we no longer have a surplus and now that we see that they've got buckets of money, don't you think that we should turn your auditors loose on them, Minister of Learning, and just make sure we're getting the best bang for the buck?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the estimates are for the Department of Environment.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Chairman, I was just going to add that anytime the hon. minister would like my team of very good operational reviewers to work with him, I'd be more than happy to supply them to him.

Dr. Taylor: Well, I'd like to thank the Minister of Learning for that fine offer. I'd have to ask him: am I going to have to pay him for his fine people? If he will guarantee me that I don't have to provide money for his budget, I've got lots of work for them to do. So we'll talk about that later.

In terms of the TRMA it's an interesting issue because they do have a surplus, as you correctly identified, but they have come back with a program of research largely. I can tell you that I put some pressure on them. I told them that a surplus the size they were running was unacceptable. You need basically nine months to a year's surplus so that if you ever had to close the board down, you'd have that long to close it down, which would be in the neighbourhood, I think, of $6 million to $8 million, going by memory.

So they've come back with a research program. For instance, they're researching adding ground tires to asphalt because in Arizona they apparently get an extra 10 years before they have to resurface the asphalt if the ground tires are in the asphalt. Now, we know that it works in Arizona, but our climate is substantially different. So we have a situation where we've done some in Edmonton; I'm not exactly sure where. I think it was out on the road toward Sherwood Park. I don't know my streets very well because I just don't drive much in Edmonton. Also, in Calgary we're doing some projects. So that's one of the things they're trying to do.

The other thing we're looking at or having some interesting initial discussions on is broadening the mandate of TRMA because we've got problems around electrical recycling. We don't have anybody actually recycling computers, in particular computer screens. I can't remember how much lead, but there's a significant amount of lead, two or three pounds, in every computer monitor, and those are mostly ending up in the landfills right now. There is a possibility to recycle those, but we need to create a recycling program for electrical waste, largely computers. So we're having, as I say, very initial discussions talking about: can we broaden that mandate and have that board develop a broader mandate in terms of waste management, in terms of other recycling issues? That's where we're going with it. Certainly, it's interesting right now for them.

We are recognized, quite frankly, as leaders in recycling with the TRMA, the AUOMA, the Used Oil Management Association, and the recycling of bottles. People actually come in from other jurisdictions to look at how we're doing that, and the TRMA people from around the world have come in to monitor how we do the TRMA, why it works and how it works. Just because things are working doesn't mean that it can't be made better, and we are working particularly with the TRMA to make it better.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I have two questions. The first: is the Minister of Environment going to answer the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's questions?

Secondly, I haven't had a chance to look at the Tire Recycling Management Association's statements recently, but the last time I did, they spent an extraordinary amount of money on fees for lawyers. Can you comment on that? Do you do efficiency audits in any of these DAOs?

Dr. Taylor: I can't comment on the budget line items because their delegated administrative authorities are not included in my estimates. So I really can't. I mean, I can find out, but I'm not that familiar with their actual line items.

In terms of answering the other member's questions, I mean, how do you answer irrational questions and irrational statements? Some of the things weren't even to do with my ministry. He's talking about research that he should properly address to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Talk about Los Alamos should properly be addressed to the Ministry of Innovation and Science. Particular questions on revenues: page 129 of the budget will answer his revenue questions. Page 127 will answer his reclamation questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My next question has to do with Swan Hills. The ticker is still ticking on that in terms of how much money has been spent, more than $500 million. The Minister of Environment, I believe, still funds the provision for the site remediation there, while the rest of the dollars that may or may not be allocated go to SRD. Can you tell us whether there's been any change in the provision that you've got and what your expectations are from that plant from an environmental perspective? Are they operating more efficiently and cleaner than in the past?

Dr. Taylor: We have a special waste management program as part of our budget. My understanding is that if Swan Hills were to close down, it would be cleaned up.

You're going to hear my personal opinion on this now. I think we have to look at Swan Hills very much as a public utility. You know, we pay for our garbage in Edmonton or Medicine Hat. I pay a levy in Medicine Hat, and I'm sure you do pay in Edmonton a levy on your municipal bill. It's all in one in Medicine Hat. The utilities, gas and water and electricity, are all on one bill, but we pay a levy for garbage. I think we need to look at Swan Hills like that. It is a public utility. We need it to get rid of this very toxic material. There's not a lot of it, but we need it to get rid of that very toxic material that we produce in this province. The Minister of Infrastructure could comment further, but it's my understanding that there will be no future operational costs to taxpayers as we go forward on the Swan Hills issue. If that is in fact correct, the Minister of Infrastructure can identify that. I don't know if his estimates have been up yet or not, but when they come up, you could ask him that. It's my understanding that we shouldn't have to put government money into it, but if we do, I would not object because I look at it as a public utility, just as I pay for my waste collection in Medicine Hat or you pay for it in Edmonton.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Three more questions to throw at the minister. The first has to do with the environmental impact assessments for freeway design or for transportation corridors, and I'm reflecting back on comments and a discussion I had with the Minister of Transportation at Public Accounts the other day. The specific issue was this: the Canamex corridor from Grande Prairie down to the U.S. border hits various choke points in Edmonton and Calgary and so on. I know, for example, that design for the Anthony Henday road is changing, but there still are provisions in there for a number of stops along that major arterial. So all the trucks and cars come to a stop and then they proceed, and then they stop and proceed. This is not a facetious question. There are genuine environmental impacts from a massive amount of traffic, a big road like that, well over a hundred thousand vehicles a day starting and stopping, starting and stopping. I'm just wondering if the minister is aware of any efforts under his department to do what amounts to an environmental impact assessment, particularly of the Anthony Henday Drive and the rest of the Canamex corridor.

The second point. This one also is of concern to some of my constituents, the Inland Cement plant in Edmonton. This is an issue that's come up from time to time. If the minister could update our information on the monitoring activities or the policing activities, whatever we want to call them, of emissions from that plant. It's a sensitive spot for many people.

Finally, I've heard some concern raised by farmers in central Alberta about the potential – and it may be no more than a rumour; I don't know – of draining wetlands in central Alberta west of highway 2, probably in the Battle River basin. I'm not sure for what purpose, for access to more water or whatever. If the minister knows anything about that or if there are any provisions for that in the plans here, I'd appreciate that information.

Thank you.

Dr. Taylor: Interesting question on highways, and the best way I can answer that is with an actual development that's happening right now in St. Albert. There's a big highway going by or a ring road – and I don't know the name of it – but it's actually going near a protected area. We've asked the city of St. Albert to provide us with information on how they're going to handle the information on possible or potential damage to the protected area, and we will continue to do this.

I'm going by recollection here, so if I'm wrong, we'll get you a better written answer. Highways don't come under EIAs, but there are engineering regulations, and there are regulations as to appropriate ways to build highways so that they do as little damage as possible to the environment. [interjection] Well, to a large extent vehicle emissions are controlled by the federal government, but one of the things I'm speculating on and have speculated on is that there is technology available that you can put on the side of the road and measure the emissions of vehicles that go by. We've checked with the technology manufacturers in California. Because of the Canadian position on Kyoto we need to measure greenhouse gases as well. The technology won't measure greenhouse gases yet, but they're working towards that. What I would like to do, once the technology gets there, is put that on roadsides, measure your vehicle as you go by, and if you're not meeting standards – and if you don't keep your vehicle in tune, you won't meet certain emission standards – then send you a letter and say, "You know, you should get your vehicle tuned up" – it's not a penalty phase; it's not like photoradar, but it is information and education – and explain to you that you're probably using this much gasoline now and that if you get your vehicle tuned, you'll use this much. So there's an economic incentive to do that.

So in terms of highways that's what we're looking at.

4:50

Mr. Stelmach: More interchanges.

Dr. Taylor: Pardon me?

Mr. Stelmach: Free flow.

Dr. Taylor: Free flow, more interchanges, the Minister of Transportation says, and that certainly would help as well rather than, as you say, stopping and starting. Obviously, when you accelerate from a stop, you're producing more emissions. So the Minister of Transportation is quite correct. I was pleased to see that the Minister of Transportation granted us some money for another interchange in Medicine Hat so we can actually have the free flow and much cleaner air in Medicine Hat.

In terms of Inland certainly Inland has to put on a baghouse, and the baghouse will be put on. They have a time frame to put that on. If they have – I'm going by memory here – more than six or 10 trips in one year, they have to put the baghouse on immediately. Otherwise, they've got 18 months to do it. So the baghouse will go on Inland and will collect the nasty stuff, and there will be fewer emissions coming out of Inland Cement once that baghouse is up and running than there is presently utilizing natural gas. So it will actually be cleaner. There's no doubt about it.

Draining wetlands. If anybody were to drain an existing wetland, they'd have to receive permission from Alberta Environment, and quite frankly communities have zoning regulations around this as well. But if they want to, they'd have to receive permission from Alberta Environment, and we would have to evaluate every situation on its own.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We continually have concerns raised with us from people in the community about, generally speaking, environmental assurance. People say that there aren't enough investigators. They say that there aren't enough inspectors. So if the minister could comment on that. Obviously, there's no more money allocated for that this year again. So you must feel that you have enough people out there in the field, and I know that you've identified that your people in the field know who the good operators are and who the bad operators are and that they focus on the bad operators, but that doesn't seem to satisfy a lot of people out in the community. So could you comment on why you think you have enough?

Dr. Taylor: Well, I believe we have enough inspectors out there. Obviously, you can look at the document I mentioned earlier and look at the fines that have been placed on various people and various companies as we move forward. As I said earlier, you know, fining people, enforcement, is not the preferred way because you already have some kind of nasty effect on the environment. So, once again, you'll see us moving more and more money to environmental assurance, which is education and being proactive, and certainly that's what we want to do. As I said earlier, we will enforce where necessary and we will fine where necessary. One of the high-profile ones we've got going right now is the city of Edmonton.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, we haven't talked about air quality or air monitoring yet. You talk in your business plan about how you'd like to expand and enhance that. What do you expect to do?

Dr. Taylor: Well, right now we're working with the private sector.

We're going to do a southern Alberta air shed. That is just starting as we speak, and we see moving to other air sheds. This is the first one we're doing as an experiment with the private sector to see how it works, because their technology is better than some of the technology that is currently owned by Alberta Environment.

What we've done in the south is we've got all of the communities involved, we've got the private sector involved, and we've got Alberta Environment involved in a partnership. As I say, it's going to be basically from Lethbridge east, a southern air shed plan that's in process right now. If that works, we'll be doing more.

As you know, we have the Fort air shed. We've got one around Edmonton. As well, we've increased our number of monitoring vehicles. We've got one more in Calgary. We're working on one more in Edmonton. So that will give us two more monitoring vehicles in the province.

Ms Carlson: The next question I have is with regard to rapid responses to emergencies and especially with concern about airborne contaminants. Particularly I'm interested in sour gas leaks. We had that one incident this year where a lot of people said that they could smell sour gas, that they weren't notified until after they'd notified the department. That incident was by Caroline. It seemed like there was some kind of a problem. If it was a communication problem or if the emergency response plan wasn't properly conducted or wasn't well enough in place, could you talk about that?

Dr. Taylor: Well, the experience in Caroline is an interesting experience. One of the problems in Caroline is that it was such a small leak. The company couldn't readily identify where it was occurring, but I will say that a follow-up investigation did show that all the emergency procedures went in and the communications did follow the protocol that we have for a sour gas leak. As I say, the follow-up investigation showed that everything was done appropriately in the appropriate time frame. Now, would we have liked to see the leak closed down quicker? Of course we would, but they've got their people and technology there and identified the leak. It was an extremely small leak and difficult to find.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, the one area in this budget that does look like it's getting more money this year is the communications budget within the ministry. Could you tell us what you plan to spend that money on?

Dr. Taylor: Actually, the new dollars for communications reflect the actual cost of the communications department. In the past the costs weren't adequately reflected in the budget, so we moved some money around in the department. What we're trying to do is be more transparent and actually reflect the actual costs of the communications. So overall they won't be spending any more money than last year; we're just showing it under communications.

Dr. Oberg: Because he needs it.

Ms Carlson: Because he needs it. I agree with you, Minister of Learning. Sometimes he does need it. You could talk more rather than less, and it's helpful, like you have this afternoon. Given that the Minister of Environment did lobby me to get home to his Easter chocolate and turkey dinner sooner rather than later and he has been very open with his debate this afternoon and answered the questions with the exception of one of my colleagues, I think that I will now submit the rest of the questions we have in writing and call for the vote.

The Deputy Chair: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Environment for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:
 Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $115,646,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chair, I would move that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following departments.

Main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004.

Environment: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $115,646,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

5:00

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a great week with lots of good progress, particularly in the Department of Environment today. I just want to take a moment to extend very best wishes to those people who are celebrating Easter this weekend as I will be, and to all others who are celebrating something else, may they enjoy a very nice long weekend as well.

That having been said, I would move that we now call it 5:30 and that pursuant to Standing Order 3(4)(a) regarding Easter Monday the Assembly do stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Tuesday, April 22.

[Motion carried; at 5:01 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 22, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/22

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. Dear God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Thy guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Hon. members, would you please remain standing now for the singing of our national anthem, and we'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Would you please join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated. I guess, hon. members, it goes without saying that even with the thunderous voice of Mr. Paul Lorieau, that wasn't enough to allow the local boys to overcome their destiny on Saturday past.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my capacity as co-chair of the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations it is indeed a great pleasure to introduce to you once again a very special guest in our Assembly, His Excellency Dr. Yuri Scherbak, ambassador of Ukraine to Canada. The ambassador is now completing the end of his mandate, and in fact this will be his last official visit to our province. But I would say that as a result of his tremendous efforts over the years that he has served, our government as well as businesses, academic institutions, and numerous individuals in our province have benefited economically, socially, and culturally. Our hon. Premier's historic mission to Ukraine in May 2002, the first ever by an Alberta Premier to Ukraine, was a great success, and that is just one of the many ways in which Yuri Scherbak has assisted us. Alberta is home to nearly 300,000 Canadians of Ukrainian descent, and we all appreciate and applaud the ambassador's many achievements.

[Remarks in Ukrainian] Your Excellency Ambassador Scherbak, we are all deeply grateful for your efforts on behalf of the citizens of Alberta and Ukraine alike. We sincerely thank you and wish you the very best in the future. [as submitted]

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, may I just say on behalf of our Premier and on behalf of our Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations and all members of this Assembly and indeed all Albertans that I express our sincere and profound thanks to Ambassador Scherbak for his incredible role. I see him standing, and now may we all wish him well with our thanks for his services.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great honour to be able to stand and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three people that are the most important people in my life and that are here today. First is my wife, Elaine, my eldest son, Harrison, and my youngest son, Graeme, who are attending the Legislature to see where daddy works. It's great, and if they could have the warm welcome of the Assembly, please.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is my assistant, who is attending with them today, and I'd ask Evelyn Oberg to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly my youngest son, Christopher. Chris is a music teacher at St. Mary's high school in Calgary. He's a founding member of the acclaimed a cappella group the Heebie-Jeebies, who have won four CARA awards and are, I understand, the only Canadian a cappella group to ever make it to the finals in the United States. In his spare time he also directs a large choir and two marching show bands. I'd like him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce some special guests. We have nine people from the community of Crooked Creek in my riding, and the students attend Rosedale Christian school there. They are accompanied today by Mr. Trevor Penner, Mrs. Kathryn Penner, Mr. Arvid Thiessen, and Mrs. Linda Thiessen. They're in the gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It also gives me great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of very well-mannered, energetic young men and women from the Lakeland Country school in Dewberry. They are accompanied today by their teacher Miss Chandelle Isaac and by their helpers the Baergs, the Thiessens, and the Loewens. I would ask them to rise and please accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the members' gallery today I have a longtime supporter and his wife. I want to say that not very many people in this Assembly have driven 400-tonne trucks, but in fact this gentleman is part of securing Canada's energy future by working and driving trucks for Suncor. Bliss Watling has been a longtime resident of Fort McMurray. I'd like to ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 38 students from J. Percy Page high school in Mill Woods. Percy Page is the high school that proves that multiculturalism does work. They're a leader in technology, and it's also the home of the Panthers. They're accompanied by teachers Mr. Garth Hamilton, Mr. Brian Ross, and Mr. James Kosowan. They're in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd have them rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 13 students from Metro College accompanied by their teacher Mrs. Phyllis Townsend. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two constituents of mine who are active on a daily basis helping the elderly and on issues of elder abuse in our province. Lou and Ruth Adria are in the members' gallery, and I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

1:40head: Oral Question Period

Postsecondary Education

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, a well-educated workforce is essential to economic prosperity in Alberta. A study released today by TD Economics entitled The Calgary-Edmonton Corridor states that this government needs to, and I quote: make investments in education a "high priority." To the Premier: given the importance of postsecondary education to Alberta's success why is Alberta's completion rate for postsecondary education in 2000-2001 only 59 percent, a rate below the national average?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, these comments on postsecondary enrollment come from a paper by the TD Bank that also said in regard to the Calgary/Edmonton corridor that this corridor is the "only Canadian urban centre to amass [a] U.S. level of wealth while preserving [a] Canadian-style quality of life." You know, I anticipated this question, and I guess one can only trust the opposition to jump on the negative in what is otherwise an overwhelmingly positive report.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the statistics were out of the advanced education Learning department's budget, not out of that report.

Why has this government let overall per student funding for postsecondary education in real terms fall to a point that only 43 percent of high school students decide to move on to postsecondary education?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't agree with those figures. Again going back to the TD report, an economist in the report is claiming that postsecondary enrollments in Alberta are lagging behind those in other provinces because of tuition fees. I don't know if tuition is a formidable barrier to postsecondary enrollment, but I do know that in recent years Alberta's postsecondary institutions have seen some of the greatest enrollment increases in the country, and that is statistically correct. Between 1994 and 1999 enrollments increased by 5 percent, while the national average increase for enrollment was only 1 percent.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier: how can this government claim that education is a priority when Alberta's high school dropout rate is 13 percent, again a rate above the national average?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that to be true, and the hon. Minister of Learning isn't here. But, you know, for every statistic that the opposition throws out, there is an equally responsive and positive answer. All I know is that according to our statistics we have one of the most highly educated workforces in the country and we have a postsecondary completion rate, maybe not all university, that is second to none in any jurisdiction in the country.

Just over 55 percent, as I understand it, of Albertans have a postsecondary education, making this one of the most educated provinces in Canada. The national average, as I understand it, is 53 percent. Fifty-nine percent of 18- to 20-year-old Alberta high school graduates have taken courses leading to a degree, a diploma, or a certificate. This is especially important: a degree, a diploma, or a certificate. Postsecondary education alludes not only to university but to NAIT and SAIT and Grant MacEwan College and Mount Royal and all of the other junior colleges and technical institutes. Mr. Speaker, by the time they reach 22 to 24 years of age, the proportion is even higher. It reaches 75 percent. Those are not bad statistics.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, again, I was quoting the government's own statistics.

Education Funding

Dr. Nicol: The basic instructional grant given to schools increased by 2 percent in the last budget. This gives an instructional grant for schools of $4,454 per student for next year. To the Premier: how did the government decide that an increase in the basic instruction grant of only 2 percent was enough?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it was based on anticipated enrollment, but I will take the question under advisement and have the hon. Minister of Learning provide a more complete answer when he returns.

Dr. Nicol: Has the government ever costed out what a school can buy with $4,454 per student and whether that is enough to truly give them a quality education in the classroom?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, I guess that depends on how large the class size is, but again I'll take the question under advisement and have the minister provide an appropriate response.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier: when will the government fund education based on a school's actual costed needs?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we do that today, and the budget process anticipates what we must reasonably spend to ensure a good education for our K to 12 students.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, this government has made P3 financing a top priority in its three-year business plan. Unfortunately, this method of financing public infrastructure means nothing more than empty promises and added costs for Alberta's taxpaying public. Despite the fact that P3 financing is more expensive than public financing, this government claims that P3 financing will result in cost benefits. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. How can P3 financing be cheaper for Albertans when private corporations borrow money at a higher rate than the province and include profit margins in the costs that they pass on to the public?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, to say that this is our cornerstone of financing new construction is just totally wrong. The fact is that it is one tool in the toolbox that we're looking at, and I would think that Albertans would be only too happy that we're looking at alternate ways of financing and operating infrastructure, the buildings in this province. The hon. member will see the process that they have to go through when any proposals come forward. The fact is that we will be looking at the lifetime costs, relating that back to present-day value and what it would cost for government to do it, and it will have to show a favourable result or we just simply would not proceed with the P3 project.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the minister didn't answer my question. How can P3 financing be cheaper for Albertans when private corporations borrow money at a higher rate than the province and include profit margins in the costs that they pass on to the public?

Mr. Lund: Obviously, the member wasn't listening, Mr. Speaker, because I clearly pointed out to him that a P3 is not just about financing. If that was the only reason we were looking at it, as a means of financing, then he probably would have a point, but that's not what this is all about.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: can the minister tell this House why such a highly skilled and motivated group of people as the minister's staff are unable to find the same efficiencies as the public sector?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The more questions the member asks about this, the more I'm totally convinced that he doesn't understand it at all. We have never said nor have we ever pretended that if you were just going to use it as a means of financing, it was going to be cheaper, but there are a whole host of other issues that need to be taken into account. For example, when one off-loads all the risk, what is that worth to government? When one looks at the operation over time, what is that worth to government? What is it worth to government to have a facility constructed and in use earlier than if we were going to do it ourselves? All of those things are very, very important variables that will figure into whether a P3 project would proceed.

We're certainly finding extremely interesting results as we move forward on a proposed P3 for the courthouse in Calgary. That's going to be a very exciting project as we move forward. We'll be interested to see how all of these variables play out and how this will work for the benefit of the province and the taxpayers in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Softwood Lumber Policy

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Closed-door negotiations to resolve the softwood lumber dispute are taking place between the U.S. and Canadian governments in which the federal government regularly consults with lumber-producing provinces. Alberta's forest-dependent communities are very concerned that their jobs and livelihoods may be betrayed in exchange for getting softwood lumber tariffs lifted. The town of Hinton recently approved a resolution opposing any change in Alberta's forestry policies without thorough public debate. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Can the minister inform this House as to what changes Alberta has agreed to make in Alberta's forestry policies in order to resolve the softwood lumber dispute with the United States?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, while there have been regular meetings with industry and with the MLAs involved in constituencies with softwood lumber industry and we have followed very carefully the developments that are taking place regarding negotiations with the United States, to this point in time there has been no commitment to any particular change in our forest management policies. Those policies have served us well to this point in time. We realize that in order to keep access to the American market, we will have to make some changes, but that matter is being approached very, very carefully, and to this point in time there's been no commitment to any specific change.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister admit that the government is prepared to consider trading away provincial forestry policies which require companies to build sawmills and other processing facilities in nearby communities in exchange for the right to cut timber on Crown forest lands?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I would not confirm that. That is not the case. There are a whole host of options that we have been discussing in the meetings that I've referenced. We want to get through this difficulty to gain better access to the American market but not at any cost.

I would ask the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, if that's acceptable, to supplement.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, as the member questioning mentioned, forestry continues to be a very important industry in Alberta. Close to 50 communities in Alberta depend on forestry as their major source of income and also job creation. Over 54,000 people work in that industry, so it is very important. We are working very closely with the Alberta Forest Products Association, who represents most of the forest producers in Alberta, and also the industry to try and determine how we are going to make sure that our industry continues to be stable. One of the questions, of course, is the issue of forest management agreements. The tenure of our agreements is a security for our industry out there, and we want to make sure that it remains intact as much as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister reassure Alberta communities such as the town of Hinton that no changes to forestry policies affecting forest-based communities and workers will be made unless there has been thorough public debate and consultation first?

Mr. Jonson: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development may wish to supplement, but as I indicated earlier – and I'll put it a different way – we have been meeting regularly as a group with the MLAs that represent the softwood-producing areas of the province. I'm sure that they have been communicating with their constituents on a regular basis with respect to this matter. The Forest Products Association is not somehow disconnected from the communities that they serve either. They are certainly in touch with their workforce and keeping them abreast of developments that are taking place. So there has certainly not been any secrecy or desire to keep the fact that we do have a major challenge facing us that we hope to work through to the betterment of the industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

EPCOR/Aquila Billing Practices

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over 1,500 Albertans in the Aquila service network have made complaints to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board about their EPCOR bills. Complaints continue to roll in to my office from Whitecourt-Ste. Anne constituents. My question is to the Minister of Energy. How effective has it been for those that have made complaints to the EUB, and have they received credits for their overcharges?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The total number of complaints through two billing cycles, or 700,000 incidents, has been 1,491. That's roughly 213 thousandths of a percent. The number of customers who received an adjustment as well as a $75 credit was, in fact, about 838 customers. Now, that represents 119 thousandths of a percent.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the policy, which included the deficiency regulation, interestingly enough, of the 838 accounts 486 bills were adjusted downwards. Not only did the customer receive a $75 credit, but there was also a downward adjustment. Interestingly enough, there were 352, or about 42 percent, of the bills where, once they were examined, not only did they get a $75 credit, but the bills were in fact adjusted upwards. So throughout this process we have seen about 1,500 files, of which about half precipitated some sort of billing action.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again to the same minister. Still the concerns come to my office about the inaccuracy of the bills. How long will it be before the RRO customers in this network can be sure their bills will be accurate?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that the companies, EPCOR and Aquila, have maintained their work. They've worked with the hon. member and his constituents. In fact, when you take 700,000 bills and they receive .2 percent complaints, that's a 99.8 percent correction rating. So, you know, those aren't bad marks.

Mr. VanderBurg: My last question to the same minister: what's been the cost of these deficiencies even though they're very small?

Mr. Smith: Well, on the deficiencies, Mr. Speaker, it has actually cost the company a substantial amount of money to put this operation in the EUB. The company pays completely for the operation, and none of that money is billed back into the rate base. I don't have an accurate account of the total amount, but given that 58 percent were adjusted upwards and 42 percent adjusted down, it looks like it's pretty close to a breakeven.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Electricity Prices

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each and every year since this government foolishly deregulated the electricity industry, the government has promised Albertans that next year we'll see the start of lower electricity prices. But each time a new year rolls around, Albertans have to figure out how to pay an even higher power bill, including the expensive add-ons called deferrals. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. How could the Minister of Energy state on April 3, 2003, "I also think the introduction of Direct Energy into the marketplace is going to make a difference" when the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board has not yet approved Direct Energy's entrance into the Alberta marketplace?

2:00

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, in the preamble that the member has started with, he talked about foolish deregulation, and then he talked about promising year after year that the rates would go down. I don't recall the move being foolish, nor do I recall promises of the prices going down year after year. Therefore, the preamble is so erroneous that it makes the question hypothetical, and regrettably I couldn't answer a hypothetical question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Energy: if the minister is so confident that Direct Energy will enter the Alberta marketplace, what criteria are being used by the EUB to determine whether or not Direct Energy can enter the marketplace?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member knows full well that the decision over the sale is in front of the EUB. The EUB is a quasi-judicial board; therefore, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on that outcome at this juncture.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Energy: given that electricity consumers who purchased a home in Alberta after electricity deregulation occurred are now being charged on their monthly bills the 2000 deferral rider and the 2001 regulated rate option shortfall, why are these consumers charged for someone else's electricity consumption?

Mr. Smith: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, if he would have just got to the nub of the question earlier, we could have saved the House a great deal of time, but I'm more than pleased to provide detailed information on this final question. In fact, that was realized and brought to the attention of the Minister of Energy and I think it was the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, who through due diligence in his constituency came up with the issue that homeowners, when purchasing, were also picking up deferral accounts and meters.

Subsequent to that, Mr. Speaker, that is the policy that's been associated with the meter, but it's also an item that can then be put into negotiation with the house purchase. In fact, what this government did was it responded to the inquiry from the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and issued a notice to the real estate boards of Alberta, to Calgary and Edmonton, to rural Alberta, to ensure that when this part is identified in closing and adjustments or is identified in part of the negotiation, the transaction of a real estate property in Alberta, that part, that deferral account, for the time that it lasts – and it's important for me to add at this juncture that those deferral accounts with the exception of Enmax will have disappeared off the bill by the end of this year – that information will enter into the appropriate commercial transaction of the buying and selling of real estate in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Federal Tax Deferral on Livestock Sales

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They say that there are two things in life that we simply can't avoid: death and taxes. However, I understand that we can defer the taxes for a while. My constituents have been asking questions about the federal tax deferral on livestock sales due to drought. Well, as you know, last summer many livestock producers in Alberta were forced to sell breeding cattle to keep their operations stable. These producers were eligible for the tax deferral offered by the federal government. My question today is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can the minister explain if and how the federal tax deferral on breeding livestock sales applies to Alberta's livestock producers?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal tax deferral on livestock sales is really intended to be used as a management tool for producers when they experience severe drought. I should just mention to the hon. member and to others that actually in 2001 and in 2002 our entire province was granted the right to use the tax deferral. While we had a major drought last year, we also had a very extensive drought the year before, so all of our province was eligible for the two years. The way it works is that producers in affected areas, in this case in Alberta, can defer their taxes to the first year that their area is no longer prescribed under the tax deferral notice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, my second question is for the same minister. Given that many of these producers are still suffering the effects of the drought, will the government be pursuing another year of tax deferral so as not to put further stress on already stretched producers?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the tax deferral is really a federal government responsibility. It is their program, and it's contingent on the federal Minister of Finance granting a tax deferral status. They base their decisions on recommendations that come from PFRA, Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration, and the indications this year are certainly much better than we've had. We've had some winter moisture, we've had some limited spring moisture, and while we still have some areas of concern, the indications are much improved. So my first hope is that drought is not a concern. However, we do know that in parts of the province in particular pasture recovery can take more than one year, and it would take maybe above-average conditions to allow some of those pastures to carry cattle this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is for the same minister. So, then, what is the process for designating certain areas of Alberta as eligible for tax deferral?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we use a number of reference points, because certainly we work very closely with the PFRA to base a recommendation to the federal Minister of Finance. We have a Drought Management Committee in this province. There are a number of municipal people that sit on that as well as producers. We have extensive weather satellite stations around the province. We monitor those. We look at our forage reports that come from Ag Financial Services as well as our research associations, which are widespread across the province. We look at information from our own field staff, from the agriculture field men that are there, and certainly they give us advice, as do municipal governments. Members would recall in the last two years of drought where our municipal governments in many cases declared their municipalities a drought area.

We take all of that information, Mr. Speaker, and we pass it on to the PFRA. I should say that it is uncommon for the federal government to make a decision on this before fall. Last year the decision was made in July because of the severity of the drought, but I would not anticipate hearing an answer on that till fall.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Toxic Mold in Foothills Medical Centre

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in the U.S. one in 10 hospital-acquired infections is the result of toxic molds. Despite these alarming statistics the Alberta government does not seem to treat mold found in hospitals with the same concern or care as they do mold found in courthouses or schools. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. Given that a school in Sundre was shut down for cleanup for an entire week this winter when toxic mold was found, why has the renal dialysis unit at the Foothills hospital in Calgary continued to operate uninterrupted despite the discovery of toxic mold on two separate occasions?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, it is true that the school in Sundre was shut down for a period of time while there was a complete cleaning of the school. It's not just for the situation with the mold, however. There were found to be some air quality issues that had to be addressed as well as the mold, and those were incorporated at the same time as the cleanup of the mold. Now, you have to realize that in order to get at the mold, they did have to tear apart a great deal of the school, move lockers out, and it would have been extremely disruptive had they tried to do it while the students were in the building.

Dr. Taft: To the same minister: given that an independent evaluator was allowed to conduct air quality tests for toxic mold at the Calgary Court of Appeal, why are the same tests by the same evaluator not being allowed at the Foothills hospital?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to be indicating that it's a function of Infrastructure to decide on who does what in those cases. In the case of the Court of Appeal in Calgary, that is a building that we own and operate. The regional health authority operates the Foothills hospital; we don't. The same situation was in Sundre. We do not operate the school. We provided some assistance, but the board of education that operates the school were the people who were in charge of the cleanup. In fact, they presented the results to the public, and they invited the regional health authority to come in and assess the results before the students were permitted back into the school.

Dr. Taft: Well, perhaps the Minister of Health and Wellness would like this one then. Given that individuals with weakened immune systems are at greater risk of suffering negative health effects from toxic molds, what steps is the government taking to ensure that toxic molds in health facilities across this province are not endangering the health of patients and staff?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not a microbiologist, but I am advised that there are many different types of molds that may appear in a building. The first thing that I would want to say is that I'd caution the hon. member about using the word "toxic" mold. There's no evidence at this point that the renal dialysis unit, unit 27, at the Foothills hospital has any kind of toxic mold. There is the presence of mold, but the regional health authority is taking all required steps to ensure that patients and staff are not at risk. We are working with the hon. minister responsible for occupational health and safety on this issue. I have spoken with the regional health authority about this. I'm assured that they are taking the appropriate steps to determine what kind of mold this is that appears in this facility. But, again, there are many different types of molds, and very few of them would in fact be dangerous to one's health unless you directly inhaled them or stuck them in your mouth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Net Income Stabilization Account

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of the farmers in my constituency are concerned with the new net income stabilization program that's at the heart of the risk management chapter of the agriculture policy framework. Previously Alberta has opted out of NISA because it didn't meet the needs of agricultural producers. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Why are we now participating in the new NISA program when we didn't participate in the previous one?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should say that we aren't participating in the new NISA program, because of course the program hasn't been signed off for implementation. However, we are very actively participating in the negotiations on a new NISA program.

Alberta opted out of the NISA program as a contributor from our provincial revenue in 1996 because the program simply was not doing what it was intended to do, and that was to provide a net income stabilization. We found some very severe lacks in it. One, it didn't deal with beginning farmers and/or developing farmers, who are maybe unable to put up cash in a particular year and couldn't build an account, and secondly, we found it very difficult to support a program where there were hundreds of millions of dollars in it in Alberta, in fact billions across Canada, yet producers were still telling us that they needed assistance. So, frankly, the triggering mechanisms were not working in the old NISA program. Today we believe that at least some of those shortfalls in the program are being addressed, and that's what we're aggressively negotiating now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what will the new NISA program look like, and what are the advantages over the old one?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, any person in the agriculture industry and many of the MLAs in this room will know that you cannot describe the new NISA program in a one-minute answer. However, there are some key points, I believe. The new NISA program is designed to integrate stabilization and disaster coverage into one program. The other key change is that producers would be covered based on a production margin rather than a gross margin, which was the old program. Another significant change, somewhat unpopular, I might say, with some producers, is that government funds would only be accessed when the account was triggered. One of the key elements in it is that government would pick up a higher share of the risk in a disaster situation, but in the lesser risks the producers are expected to cover more of their margin.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you. My final supplemental to the same minister: what kind of support is the agriculture industry showing for this new program?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we've been consulting with the industry in our province over the course of the development of this program, and certainly I know that my colleagues in the government caucus have been asking to be kept apprised of any changes. We had about 60 people from the industry, both producers and commodity groups, in a meeting in Calgary about 10 days ago. I would suggest that they're cautious. I would suggest that they are concerned about the affordability and the effectiveness of the new program. However, many of them are acknowledging that we have to change the way we're doing things and that conceptually they like this program better, but the jury is out until they see the final triggers and some of the costs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Women's Shelters

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. A survey by the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters shows that over 45 percent of abused women cite a lack of affordable housing and welfare support as the main reasons for returning to an abusive relationship. The council's most recent figures show that 8,400 women and over 9,000 children were turned away from shelters last year. My first question is to the Minister of Children's Services. When more women and children are turned away than granted shelter, why is this government not stepping up to the plate and properly funding shelter space?

Ms Evans: Over the last four years this government has consecutively added a million dollars a year. When I took this ministry over, we had about $11.67 million. We are over $15 million per year to support shelters, and it is not the only source of funding, Mr. Speaker, that this government actually provides. Some shelters receive funding through the Wild Rose Foundation. Some receive capital support through Community Development.

Mr. Speaker, in Children's Services we have provided additional supports this year for salaries so that they would be equivalent to others in the sector. We have provided in co-operation with the Council of Women's Shelters some support for the new RCMP protocol, which is helping with the abused women and domestic violence issues at the local level. Through the child and family services authorities we have co-ordinated with their supports and their services additional supports for children who are victims of family violence, the emotional victims as well.

So, Mr. Speaker, certainly, clearly, we're not all the way there yet, but we've made huge strides in the last four years, and I believe that the hon. member actually knows that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. You're going backwards.

To the same minister: given that the statistics also point to a lack of second-stage housing available for abused women, has there been any concrete collaboration with the minister of seniors and housing to implement an aggressive plan to address this?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of partners that are on the front bench here that work with the Council of Women's Shelters: clearly, the Minister of Seniors, who is responsible for social housing, can speak for himself; the Minister of Human Resources and Employment; the Minister of Community Development. I have engaged all of the ministers in dialogue with the Council of Women's Shelters to explore some of the ways that we can actually do that.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of initiatives that have begun. We are looking carefully at their identified plan for a commission so that we can understand better how to serve them through all of the various government departments, but in terms of actual housing supports there have been plans that have been put in place just recently for the women that are entering the Kerby shelter. We've provided $75,000, prompted by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who came forward with the Kerby Centre issues on a very recent basis.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are regularly addressing this issue as well as we can, but we are only one partner. The community is a partner. The federal government is a partner. It takes a whole society. Let's never forget that the one that perpetrates violence is not this government. It is somebody out there somewhere that's putting these women in shelters, and it's abhorrent, and we should all object to that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:20

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Did the department consider the effect upon abused women and their children when the decision was made to raise the SFI rates by only $20 a month?

Mr. Dunford: I think that in the previous answer the Minister of Children's Services was really onto something here. I think that we really have to look to the communities to see if there's not some way that we can bring into play what we've actually tried to do here through legislation.

One of the biggest issues that I have in this whole area is that when we have a husband or a father or a common-law male, whatever the case is, who beats up on the woman in the home, perhaps even beats on the children, why is it that the woman and the children have to leave their homes? I mean, this is asinine the way we do it. Now, I understand from the police services that they can't provide the protection and keep the abuser, the assaulter away from them, but there's got to be a way within communities that we can start to look at this and keep the women and the children in their homes, where we can then look at reasonable levels of support. This has to stop, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Infectious Diseases in Corrections Facilities

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, a recent survey by the federal corrections service found that federal inmates had rates of HIV and hepatitis C infection 10 times those of the general population. If similar rates existed in provincial corrections facilities, this would pose a serious risk to public health, especially when these inmates were released back in the community, unless they were free of these infections upon release. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Does the government monitor rates of infectious diseases like HIV and hepatitis C in provincial correctional facilities, and if so, are they higher or lower than those of inmates in federal prisons?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good question, but I'll have to take the hon. member's question under advice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what safeguards does the government have in place to ensure that infectious diseases do not spread into the general population when inmates are released back into the community from provincial correctional facilities?

Mr. Mar: Again, Mr. Speaker, a good question, but I will take that under advice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I may as well put the third question on record. The minister may take time to answer these. What policies or steps does the government have in place to ensure that when inmates are released from provincial correctional facilities, those who may have been exposed to infectious disease while incarcerated do not pose a risk to themselves or to others?

Mr. Mar: Again, Mr. Speaker, the same response, although I will simply add that I will undertake to obtain some information for the hon. member from the Solicitor General as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton Ellerslie.

Toxic Mold in Foothills Medical Centre

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As has been raised in a previous question, there is concern about a possible toxic mold in unit 27 of the Foothills medical centre in Calgary. My question is actually to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Could the minister tell us what action his ministry is taking to deal with mold at unit 27?

Mr. Dunford: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, we have to take this situation seriously, and of course we are. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. minister does have the floor. As he's indicated, this is a serious matter.

Mr. Dunford: The complaints that we received have been coming from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees and the United Nurses of Alberta. Now, thus far in the investigations, hon. member, we still haven't reached any conclusions about air quality. Until we reach that, we really don't have a definition at this point in time of whether unit 27 is hazardous or even as a matter of fact about the influence of the mold that was discovered. Again, like my hon. colleague the Minister of Health and Wellness, I think it's very important that we be careful about using the word "toxic" at the current time. Right now there's simply no evidence that would support this, and as you might know and I'm learning, there are various types of molds, of course, that appear in buildings, and really only a few of them are harmful and then only if they're inhaled or ingested.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what actual actions is your ministry taking in dealing with the mold in unit 27?

Mr. Dunford: There have been a number of investigations, but also we've really been working with AUPE, with the Calgary health region, and of course our officials, and we've agreed to set up a committee of experts to investigate the air quality concerns that are within unit 27. So that's ongoing. Each of the parties that I've mentioned will of course provide a representative. Our ministry has engaged Dr. Kenneth Yu, we believe a recognized expert from the University of Alberta, to assist us in this work.

Now, one of the organizations that I didn't mention was the United Nurses. They've been invited to participate, of course, in this situation. I think that to date they've just requested a written proposal, which we've prepared and sent to all of the parties. So we're currently awaiting a response from UNA, but in any case we're not holding up the investigation waiting for them. We'll continue to move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: No further questions. Thank you.

Ecological Footprint of the Provincial Government

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, April 22, today, is Earth Day. It's a chance for all of us to consider what impact our actions have on the natural world and to find out what we can do to become more environmentally friendly, but before we can do that, we must first know the nature and extent of our environmental impact today. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Has the minister measured the ecological footprint of the operations of this government?

Dr. Taylor: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, we can talk just about emissions from this government as one of the major ecological footprints that we have, and as you know, our greenhouse gas emissions have declined in the neighbourhood of 22 to 24 percent at the end of 2001. Under the Kyoto targets they were supposed to have declined by 6 percent. So once again this government is a leader across the country in reducing its ecological footprint.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, given that this minister knows that that is only a very small part of an ecological footprint study, how does he intend to manage if not reduce Alberta's footprint?

Dr. Taylor: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, we continue to reduce, as I've said. I can give you another example of how, a very good example thanks to the Minister of Infrastructure. We have said: we will purchase 90 percent of our power from green power by the year 2005. If that's not reducing, if that's not a good step – I even think the member opposite would agree, and I thank you for these positive questions.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, he has a responsibility to undertake a footprint study, and my question to him is: does he ever intend to do so?

Dr. Taylor: Well, I'm not sure what she wants me to study, Mr. Speaker. As I've said, I've given her examples. I can give you many more examples of where the government has reduced its ecological footprint across this province. Certainly, we will continue to do that. We'll continue to put in regulations.

Let me give the member another good example. We've asked the Clean Air Strategic Alliance to come back to this government and suggest what our new levels of reductions in emissions should be for nitrous oxide, sulphur oxides, and greenhouse gases from electrical generation, so we will monitor that as we go forward, Mr. Speaker.

Once again, you know, I think these are positive-direction questions from the member so that we as a government can get out the good news.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy to supplement.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think this is an appropriate time to reflect on the fact that industry without government regulation is doing its job to reduce the industrial footprint on land, to use global positioning techniques for zero impact seismic for reducing the industrial disturbance, for reducing the industrial footprint on environmental lands, and in fact that has paid off with dividends, with even more wells being drilled carefully with good corporate stewardship in environmentally sensitive areas.

University of Calgary Energy Efficiency Program

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased with the announcement over the weekend by our Minister of Municipal Affairs that he is considering a major energy savings initiative across the province. This is because I'd also planned to make a few statements myself regarding the important benefits of energy retrofit programs and highlight some of the success stories that forward-thinking institutions in our province have already achieved and are achieving as we speak in regard to energy saving initiatives.

One such institution is our own University of Calgary, who began working on their energy efficiency program in June of 1996 through a performance contract with Siemens Building Technologies. A performance contract is a form of P3, a public/private partnership, in which a company specializing in energy retrofits and finding energy savings in buildings offers to install and finance energy-efficient technologies in a building at little or no cost to the building owner. Then the company is paid back, including their profit, entirely through a percentage of the energy savings they achieve. If they don't achieve any savings, they don't get paid anything, which is why it is called performance contracting. Building owners benefit by not having to come up with any capital investment. They take no risk, and they can even end up with positive cash flows from energy savings that they might never have achieved otherwise.

At the University of Calgary seven buildings have undergone energy retrofits ranging from lighting retrofits to a roof replacement. Annual savings are now about $1 million. Beyond that, building ventilation rates have improved, laboratory odours have been minimized, and there is improved quality of lighting, temperature control, and reduced numbers of lamps and ballasts to maintain in the future. Also of great significance is the reduction of 25,000 tonnes of CO₂ into the atmosphere that would have been emitted otherwise.

The U of C is also leading the way in building design with their new ICT Building, which has already qualified for the commercial building incentive program from Natural Resources Canada, and the Canadian centre for innovation technology, which is in the application stages, is their latest building. To qualify for this, buildings must demonstrate at least a 25 percent reduction in energy use as compared to the standard Model National Energy Code for Buildings reference case.

Congratulations to the U of C for their major accomplishments in leading the way in energy saving initiatives in Alberta.

Calgary Health Region

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the fatality inquiry into the death of Vince Motta sheds light on the troubled and troubling executive culture of the Calgary health region. The judge in the Motta case blasted the health region for providing minimal effort to assist the inquiry, for treating the inquiry as a public relations challenge, and for providing confusing and possibly misleading information. In fact, the judge went so far as to recommend that the Calgary health region review its commitment to the community of Calgary.

How did the CHR come to this? It has developed an executive culture that struggles with political favouritism, conflicts of interest, and management mistakes. For example, many members of the CHR board and management seem better qualified for their political connections than their health care expertise. Individuals who hold or have held powerful positions in the CHR include the vice-president of communications for the Tory party, a former Provincial Treasurer, a former president of the Premier's constituency association, the Premier's former deputy minister, and the Premier's former chief of staff.

The CHR has also engaged in awkward or dubious business deals; for example, the sale of the Holy Cross hospital for a quarter of its value to a well-connected senior medical official, companies that have contracts with the CHR which are partly owned by CHR officials, a former chairman owning a company holding private contracts with the health region while in office.

There are plenty of other issues with the management of the CHR. In all but one of the last five years the region has run a deficit. Then there was the astonishing decision in the mid-1990s in the midst of a population boom to demolish the Calgary General and sell the Holy Cross and Grace facilities to well-connected investors.

It's time for action at the Calgary health region, and no less than sweeping changes will do. When the culture of a major organization becomes chronically dysfunctional, internal reviews don't solve anything. The province should dismiss the Calgary health region board, appoint an independent administrator, and conduct a fully independent review.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Safe Calgary Initiative

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nestled in the foothills of the Rocky Mountains, Calgary is one of the fastest growing cities in Canada with close to 1 million hardworking and enterprising people with their clear global perspectives. At a ceremony in early April Calgary was the first municipality in Canada to receive two safe community designations simultaneously. The Safe Communities Foundation of Canada presented to Calgary its membership in the Canadian safe community network. The United Nations' World Health Organization presented to Calgary its prestigious designation of the WHO safe community of the world. To date three Canadian communities have received this designation with Calgary being the fourth and the largest municipality in Canada.

The success of the safe community model has been instrumental in mobilizing communities across the country to develop programs to keep residents safe. According to the World Health Organization for every $1 spent on safe communities, society saves $40. The Safe Calgary initiative is comprised of two major players: the Calgary Injury Prevention Coalition and the Action Committee against Violence, whose work spans more than 10 years. The group is also made up of various local partners, businesses, and government organizations that are committed to addressing Calgary's safety issues.

As a Calgarian I am delighted to see Calgary become part of the national safe community network. As an Albertan I am proud to have our biggest city receive the United Nations WHO's designation of safe city of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask our Assembly to join me in congratulating the city of Calgary council, administration and staff, and many safety-oriented organizations for their great efforts and outstanding achievements for our fellow Calgarians.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Brain Injury Awareness Conference

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to congratulate the organizers and participants of the first annual Brain Injury Awareness Conference that was held in Calgary and attended by the Minister of Community Development on April 11 and 12, 2003. This was the first time in Alberta's history that brain injury survivors, family members, and service providers met at a provincial conference, and it was a great success. Over 100 of the 285 participants were survivors and family members.

Alberta Community Development was the principal sponsor of this event, which was organized by the Brain Injury Coalition of Calgary and included individuals from Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and the Northwest Territories. It showcased the great strides that have been made in brain injury research and rehabilitation and gave survivors the chance to share their experiences through personal presentations.

Over the past year Community Development's brain injury initiative has been successful in contracting with community agencies to provide 16 co-ordinators across Alberta, in developing a brain injury survivor guide with a distribution of 2,500 copies around the province, in launching the brain injury provincial training framework, in contracting with community agencies to provide supports for community living to brain injury survivors and their families, and in consulting with communities throughout the province through a community action coalition process that will help build on existing networks of support for brain injury survivors and their families.

Mr. Speaker, I have met with members from the Central Alberta Brain Injury Society who have worked long and hard with their provincial colleagues to help make these initiatives happen, and I know that they are grateful for advances that are being made in helping survivors and their families. It's estimated that about 10,000 – 10,000 – new cases of brain injury occur every year in Alberta with 5,000 of them resulting from an accident and 5,000 from a stroke or other medical condition.

To the participants in this conference we hope you were able to learn something about brain injury research and meet new friends, and to the organizers of this conference congratulations on a job well done.

2:40head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to table two reports from Children's Services. The first is the required number of copies of the Children's Advocate annual report from 2001 to the conclusion of March 31, 2002. This report is inclusive of a follow-up relative to the cases of maltreatment that were acknowledged in the previous year's report.

I provide that, Mr. Speaker, as well as the Social Care Facilities Review Committee report, which has been provided through the auspices of that committee and its chair, Cindy Ady, for the period October 1, 2001, to September 30, 2002. Some outstanding . . . [interjection] Oops. Calgary-Shaw. I do apologize to the House. This is an outstanding example of work done by community members in terms of their analysis of community facilities serving children and families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is from a little boy named Joseph Landy. It's a letter in which he says:

I am in Grade 2 . . . the library aide, is retiring. Who's going to run the library? And I like our teachers a lot. And I don't want any of them to leave the school. Who's going to teach the classes whose teacher has left? Schools need more money.

The second is copies of a letter to the Premier and the Minister of Learning tabled with permission. It's written by Paul and Lorie Grundy, and they say among other things that "the Government is being disingenuous when it ordered binding arbitration but refused to step up to the plate and fund the result."

The final is a copy of a letter to the Premier and the Minister of Learning expressing great concern about "the current situation regarding the funding of public schools in Edmonton, particularly in relation to the teachers' arbitration settlement."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today, one for myself and one for my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands. I'm tabling a letter that was addressed to me by the president of the national organization Mothers Against Drunk Driving, known as MADD. Louise Knox writes in her letter that her organization is opposed to the changes being made in the Insurance Act in the form of the new Bill 33. She says that this organization opposes those changes because they are simply not in the best interests of the victims. So that's the first one.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of a letter written to all Members of Parliament by Brian Payne, president of the Communications, Energy & Paperworkers Union of Canada in which Mr. Payne expresses profound concern about the backdoor negotiations related to the softwood lumber dispute with the U.S. and calls for open and transparent public hearings before the governments decide to move forward in any case.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Seniors

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to present an overview of the ministry's budget and business plan. Generally speaking, we'll see our business plan show that we're going to continue to provide the programs and services and information that contribute to the well-being and independence of seniors and also to the housing needs of Albertans. It also reflects the additional responsibility of the administration of funding for homeless shelters and the office of the Public Guardian. I'll go into more detail on these programs a little later.

For 2003-04 the Ministry of Seniors will continue to target funding to those most in need with over 92 percent of our department budget being used to provide grants and services to low-income seniors and to Albertans in need of basic shelter. For 2003-04 the program expenses are projected to be $354 million, up $30 million from 2002-03. The increase reflects funding for the transfer of the two additional programs I mentioned just a moment ago and for the implementation of the Canada/Alberta affordable housing program. Funding for our traditional programs and services remains constant.

The ministry's business plan supports the government's goal that Albertans will be self-reliant and those unable to provide for their basic needs will receive help. This will be accomplished through our three core businesses: number one, providing financial support and information services to seniors; number two, supporting the management of and enabling the provision of family, special purpose, and seniors' housing; and number three, providing planning and policy development for housing for seniors and Alberta's aging population. Under each core business we have outlined a number of goals to ensure effective program delivery. Our 2003-04 budget identifies the resources to deliver these programs.

With respect to seniors' services under our first core business, to "provide financial support and information services to seniors," we have two goals. Seniors' financial assistance, the first goal, is to ensure that "seniors in need have access to financial supports that enable them to live in a secure and dignified way." The ministry has two major grant programs that support this goal: the Alberta seniors' benefit and special-needs assistance for seniors.

The Alberta seniors' benefit is an income-tested program that provides financial assistance to lower income seniors through a monthly cash benefit for basic needs such as shelter and food. Approximately 184,000 seniors, or 57 percent, receive benefits from the Alberta seniors' benefit program of which approximately 125,000 receive cash benefits and full health premium exemptions with an additional 59,000 seniors receiving partial health premium exemptions. The average cash benefit through the Alberta seniors' benefit is $101 per month per senior or $122 per month per couple.

Funding for the Alberta seniors' benefit program will increase by $1.5 million this year to some 156 million dollars. These changes are to the benefit levels which are going to be focused on the low-income seniors residing in lodges. Over the years the average age of lodge residents has been increasing and is now 85 years of age. This has resulted in increased demand on the kind and level of services needed by these aging residents. Lodge operators are having financial difficulty meeting this increased demand for services and are looking at increasing the lodge fees. The increase in the Alberta seniors' benefit to eligible low-income lodge residents will help these residents pay for the fee increases so that the additional services they will require will continue to be available.

The special-needs assistance for seniors' program is an income-tested program that provides lump sum cash payments to help low-income seniors who do not have the financial resources to fund onetime or extraordinary expenses. The program helps seniors meet allowable special needs such as medical, optical, dental, and the cost of essential minor home repairs. In March the special-needs program was temporarily changed to consider the rising utility costs as an allowable expense under the program. Funding for the special-needs assistance for seniors' program has been maintained at the current level of $27 million. In 2002-03 the program helped over 15,000 seniors.

The second goal, information services, is there to ensure that seniors and their families have access to information and educational material about programs, services, and initiatives that are designed to enhance the well-being of Alberta seniors. To achieve this goal, the ministry will continue to provide information to seniors and caregivers on the programs and services available to them through the provincial, federal, and municipal governments and through nonprofit community organizations. This includes our information line, the Programs and Services for Seniors booklet, seniors information offices, and our web site. The level of satisfaction with our information services continues to remain high, and we'll be striving to maintain this satisfaction level over the next three years.

As I mentioned earlier, the office of the Public Guardian has been transferred from Alberta Human Resources and Employment to the Ministry of Seniors. This transfer enhances the co-ordination of services for dependent adults, approximately 50 percent of whom are seniors. The office of the Public Guardian assists private individuals to obtain guardianship orders for adults who are unable to make independent decisions. It also serves as a guardian for those dependent adults who do not have family members or other interested parties who might apply to become a guardian. In addition, it helps people plan for their future through personal directives. The transfer will see almost $5 million in funding transferred from Human Resources and Employment to Alberta Seniors. The transfer of the office of the Public Guardian will be seamless to the clients receiving the services.

Under housing services our second core business is to "support the management of and enable the provision of family, special purpose and seniors housing." We also have two goals. Housing programs and services, the first goal, is to ensure that provincially owned and supported housing for low-income families and individuals, seniors, and persons with special needs is efficiently and effectively managed, and appropriately and fully utilized.

Currently the ministry supports approximately 40,000 housing units that house approximately 67,000 Albertans who need financial assistance in accessing safe and affordable housing. As noted earlier, responsibility for management of the homeless shelter contracts and the Gunn Centre has been transferred to our ministry as of April 1, 2003. The transfer of resources, which involves over $16 million in funding for 15 shelter organizations, the Gunn Centre, and four client support programs will be seamless to agencies providing the services.

Through the homeless shelter program the government provides financial assistance to community organizations throughout the province to cover operating expenses as they relate to homeless shelters and support service programs. The government also operates the Gunn Centre, a provincially owned and operated facility for homeless men with substance abuse or mental health disorders. The integration of the homeless shelters with other shelter programs supported by Alberta Seniors will provide a more comprehensive approach to addressing the needs of the homeless and near-homeless people in Alberta. The ministry is also continuing to review programs such as rent supplements to ensure resources are directed to those most in need.

Goal 2, housing supply. The second goal of this core business is to ensure that seniors, low-income families and individuals, and persons with special needs have access to a range of housing appropriate to their needs at reasonable cost.

To assist in meeting this goal, funding for the lodge assistance program has been increased by half a million dollars this year to just over $14 million. These funds will be used to assist with the operating costs of new units that were constructed.

Fifteen million dollars in new provincial funding will be provided annually over the next three years and will be matched with federal funds under the Canada/Alberta affordable housing program. Funds will be used to increase the supply of affordable housing in high-need, high-growth areas of the province through the affordable housing partnership initiative and the sustainable remote housing initiative. The $15 million in new funding will be used to leverage additional funding from municipalities, community organizations, and the private and nonprofit sectors to build housing units with affordable rents. The new funding is in addition to the $8.5 million announced in 2002-03 and will further accelerate the development of affordable housing in the province for lower income families and individuals or in areas of the province where housing is in short supply and market rents are high.

The $8.5 million with matching funds from the federal government and private nonprofit sectors has resulted in eight affordable housing projects being funded. The projects will result in 420 new units being constructed in Calgary, Edmonton, Fort McMurray, Red Deer, and Grande Prairie, as well as northern remote communities, including the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. I might add that under that program a project in Grande Prairie will soon be occupied, and the same applies to Red Deer. Construction of new housing through the affordable housing agreements will assist the ministry in managing within the current budget level for existing programs such as the rent supplement program and to support community-based organizations. Overall funding for our housing programs has generally been maintained at the current levels to ensure housing operators continue to provide quality accommodations and services to residents.

The ministry's third core business is to "provide planning and policy development for housing, seniors and Alberta's aging population." The ministry will "continue to partner with Alberta Health and Wellness and Alberta Finance to achieve the objectives and targets of the cross ministry Health Sustainability Initiative." We'll also continue "planning for an aging population, promoting healthy aging and seniors wellness, and examining issues around the care and safety of seniors in their homes." Staff will also examine emerging housing trends, best practices, taxation policies as they pertain to housing, and ways of providing additional rural and remote housing.

In carrying out its mandate, our ministry works collaboratively with ministries across government as well as community and private-sector organizations, to support initiatives that contribute to the government's vision.

We are also working to anticipate future needs in terms of housing and the aging population. As part of effectively planning for the future we need to maintain consistent funding levels for our core businesses. If demands for services increase as expected, increased funding may be required to maintain ministry programs.

That, Mr. Chairman, is a somewhat brief overview of what these estimates are pertaining to, and I would welcome any questions from any hon. members who wish to pose them.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to participate in the budget debate for the Ministry of Seniors, which now also includes responsibility for housing, for homeless shelters, and the Public Guardian.

I'll start out by just asking a very straightforward question, and that is: why was the choice made to move the Public Guardian from Human Resources and Employment to the Ministry of Seniors? I'd just like to hear the thought process that went on behind that as to why it got moved into this particular ministry.

Now, as the minister pointed out, there is about a $30 million increase in the budget, but as I said, we also have those two new areas coming in as well. I was straining to listen to the minister, but I think I did hear him say that the cost of the Public Guardian program was $16 million and had come with the program. If I could just get him to please clarify that and put it very clearly on the record. So we have a $30 million increase from last year's budget for this department to this year's budget for this department, and please explain exactly how much was the additional cost for the homeless program and the additional cost for the Public Guardian. That should leave us with, then, the amount that is an actual increase for the programs that the ministry administered and provided last year and is still providing this year, just so that it's very clear. This minister is fond of accusing me of not getting the numbers straight, and at this point and from here on in any mistakes I make will be entirely up to him. This is his opportunity to put everything on the record and be very clear about exactly where this money is coming from and where it's going to, and I will be reading Hansard carefully to understand exactly what the minister has put forward here. There are a couple of instances where that does get a little confusing, and I will come back to that. I've got notes later on.

So I'm just going to start with some general questions for the minister, and of course I understand that he will endeavour to answer my questions while we're here together in the Assembly. I would ask that he please provide in writing any questions that aren't answered, and I'm sure that with the excellent staff that he has in the department, that will not be an issue. But I will ask if I could please have those answers before we have to debate the final appropriation bill, because that does give me the information that allows me to vote in favour of the motion.

Now, last year's homeless count that was done by the Edmonton Joint Planning Committee on Housing found that there were 755 more people homeless in Edmonton than the last time the count was done, two years earlier, and that included 267 children under 15, which actually, when you think about it, is enough to fill a school. I'm wondering what specific steps the ministry is considering implementing under this year's budget to relieve this homeless situation, particularly when we're looking at the children.

A further general question. By 2026 one in five Albertans is expected to be over 65, and the figure that I've heard is that approximately 4 percent of the senior population can expect to spend time in what we would call a long-term care facility or institutionalized care. We are aware that at this point there are waiting lists. According to the government's own numbers in the first quarter of 2002 884 people were waiting urgently – and that's the government's wording – in acute care or in the community for long-term care services. So given that we're going from a 10 percent population of seniors in the overall population to 20 percent seniors in the overall population, how is the ministry concretely preparing for this doubling in the seniors population over the next 23 some odd years? That's a 4 percent increase over the same quarter from the previous year and 21 percent more people than at the end of the previous quarter.

The third general question. There has been some discussion in the media this year, and I remember it was about a year ago, I think, that the abused seniors' housing shelter that is administered by the Society for the Retired and Semi-Retired here in Edmonton was having to look for additional funding from the minister, which, I believe, he was able to provide to them to keep the shelter running. I'm looking to see whether we can expect consistent funding for abused seniors' residences or abused seniors' shelters. Will that be coming out of this minister's budget? What line item could I expect to find that under? Will this then become an ongoing funded program? Is the minister contemplating moving the funding of that to some other ministry, or will there indeed be any continued funding? I'm really looking for a very clear outline of how this government through the minister of seniors and housing expects to fund the abused seniors' shelters.

I have spoken repeatedly about the need for standards of care and concerns about how to deal with the cases of vulnerable seniors in situations that are not covered by the Protection for Persons in Care Act, specifically in care centres, boarding situations, and private homes. Once again, what is the minister contemplating? What is the philosophy of the department around detecting and stopping, monitoring, evaluating, enforcing elder abuse in these noninstitutional care situations? I'm expecting that as we get an increase in the seniors population, we will have more seniors that are living outside of institutionalized care in these sorts of boarding situations or two or three seniors being cared for in a private home. They are at this point not under any kind of government legislation or monitoring. What is the government's attitude towards this situation? Will it remain hands-off? Will the government be looking to get involved? Is legislation considered? Is any of that anticipated in this current year?

The next general question. We had extended health care benefits that were reduced back in 1994 and then completely eliminated in last year's budget, the 2002-03 budget, and that took away the partial coverage of dentists and denturists and optometrists and opticians as a universal program accessible by any senior in Alberta. There's still access: money to cover some of those services was transferred under the special-needs program. I'm wondering if the ministry has done a follow-up evaluation to see whether this move to only fund low-income seniors is adequate. Are all those seniors that require this able to access the funds under the special-needs program? How much of the money that was transferred from the extended health care benefits program to the special-needs program is in fact being drawn down or drawn out by seniors requiring this money? I'll come back later to another issue that's developed around reimbursement and denturists. It's coming under a different heading for me.

Last year I was inquiring as to whether there was in existence an age-related benefits committee or any committee of the government that was looking at age-related benefits. At the time, the minister responded to me in writing that that was not the case. There was no committee of the government, of any backbenchers, any MLA review committee that was looking at age-related benefits. I would like to put that on the record again this year and see whether any committee is examining that in this fiscal year.

One of the other issues that arose directly out of the announcement of last year's budget was an obvious lack of communication between the minister of health and the Minister of Seniors. I'm wondering: what communication methods or agreements have been put in place between those two ministers in the intervening time? I'm referring, of course, to the Minister of Seniors speaking to several different groups of seniors and saying that there would be no reduction in seniors' programs, and then of course very shortly the budget came out and the extended health benefits program was completely eliminated. It appeared that the Minister of Seniors was unaware of this. Now, perhaps he was aware of it. Well, that's a different matter then, but if he was unaware of it, then in fact there was a serious communication gap between the minister of health and the Minister of Seniors. This continues to raise some eyebrows and cause some concern in the seniors community, so I'm asking the question: what concrete communication methods and criteria or methodology, however you wish to phrase it, have been put in place to deal with that?

I have in many years past commented on the need for funding of seniors' centres, which provide a number of services for seniors. The minister did in fact have an MLA report, Current and Future Roles of Seniors' Centres in Alberta. This report was assembled. I'm wondering whether the minister is acting on the recommendations of this report. I think it was released last May. Will there be sustainable and ongoing funding for seniors' centres? What line item would I find that under? Is it being done? Is it anticipated? If not this year, is it anticipated for next year?

I'd like to again check to make sure that the Blue Cross benefits for seniors are not expected to undergo any change in this budget. I listened carefully and did not hear the minister say that any dramatic changes to the programs and services for income and benefits were being altered in this budget, but I'll put it on the record just to make sure that I don't neglect to ask a question and then be unaware of something that's happened.

The recreation, leisure, quality of life issues. These would appear to come under a number of the goals that are being put forward by the ministry. I'm wondering if there's anything specific that the ministry is contemplating there. There are some other cross-government initiatives like the one coming under health for a healthy lifestyle. Is the minister working with the minister of health on anything like this? Is there funding specific to it in the budget, or is there assistance being offered in any other way, and exactly what way is that?

Now, it appears that the budget for special-needs assistance decreased by a hundred thousand, and I'm wondering how that's possible when there should have been an increased demand upon that from the extended health care benefits program, which is why I asked about whether in fact there was any kind of drawdown or significant drawdown or what kind of monitoring the minister had done on that. Why would it appear that we're seeing a decrease in special-needs assistance? Can the minister tell us how many seniors have applied for help under this program, how many received help under this program, and exactly how much money has been disbursed under this program?

I notice that the budget for the homeless initiative has remained at $3 million. What is anticipated as program delivery under this budget item?

I'm going to just talk about some of the stakeholders that have been in touch with me. I've heard from a couple of seniors' centres, some advocacy organizations, and a couple of individuals who serve as advocates and serve on a number of seniors' associations. The points that they are making and that I would like to put on the record for the minister are concerns again about understaffing in long-term care facilities. With my mother now in a long-term care facility I'm getting to see this on a much more frequent basis. I think that in most cases the staff are very dedicated and are doing what they can, but I do see a shortage. I continue to be concerned about: who makes the rules here? Who is that wonderful someone that has decided that one bath a week is going to uphold a senior's dignity? If they want more than one, they don't seem to be able to get it. They're told: that's it, one bath a week. That's supposed to be all that is sufficient for seniors' hygiene and dignity.

Mr. Bonner: Especially when they spill more and drool.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, they do, because when they're in institutional care, they're more likely to not have complete control. They might have trouble controlling saliva. Certainly, one time I found my mother with a nosebleed, and she bled all over everything she was wearing and the wheelchair and all else. So there is certainly a higher incidence rate of spills and problems with things like saliva and blood. It is harder to keep everyone cleaned up, and it does seem to be understaffing that is a holdup. I mean, no one was cleaning up my mother and hadn't for hours, and I had to try and search out whatever I could in that facility to get her cleaned up, which really shocked me. If I hadn't come that day, how long was she going to sit there like that? I have no idea.

There's real concern about the Dependent Adults Act. There doesn't seem to be an onus on the guardian to ensure proper nursing care. Again, this is around standards of care. I continue to press this minister, working collegially with his colleague the minister of health and any other minister that needs to be involved here, with, I suppose, the Minister of Community Development, who oversees the Protection for Persons in Care Act, to develop and implement clear standards of care for those that are in not only institutional care but any kind of care. Now, whether that's another act or whether the Protection for Persons in Care Act has expanded to cover all seniors, I don't have a bias one way or another, but I think that there is a group of seniors here that is not being cared for. What is the minister's attitude towards this? Are the numbers too small for the ministry to pick up? Are they expecting it to be done by someone else? If so, who? Why is this particular group of people that are not in institutional care but who are still in care not being covered?

There have been concerns raised about the effect of the electricity rates and the natural gas rates for seniors, and I noticed that under the environmental factors the ministry does pick up on this quite clearly, that seniors do not have other ways to make money particularly. Therefore, increasing housing rates and utility rates has a tremendous effect on them. The ministry is unquestionably aware of this, but what else is the minister doing or working with his colleagues on to try and work out something?

Canada's Association for the Fifty-Plus also wanted it on the record to rebuild the public health system, to eliminate health care premiums for seniors. Now, I know that the minister had been supportive of that. The government had even talked about it coming in the last election, and then nothing since then. So I'm wondering where that promise was.

The Liberal caucus has been campaigning for some time to have the Alberta seniors' benefits indexed to the consumer price index. I'm wondering what's happened to that.

I'd like to hear a discussion of home care initiatives from the minister. Now, he's not funding home care, but that's certainly a big part of the aging in place scenario that is promoted by the department. If home care is not available, then we're not able to keep people in their homes, and they do move into the institutionalized care settings.

Has the minister or the government considered financing capital upgrades for some seniors' housing by issuing provincial bonds? This is from the SALT organization. They, again, feel that there's more money needed for medicare. They're asking about the P3 partnerships. There's some concern that this could come out the same way as the deregulation of the electricity and gas systems; that is, the prices just end up going up and up and the consumer, the senior, doesn't see the benefit of it. The other comments from SALT are actually not specific to seniors, and I'll come back to that at the end.

There are some comments that the cutoff level for the Alberta seniors' benefits is too low. Seniors who are a few thousand dollars above the cutoff are still having trouble getting by on their income, and in fact because they pay the whole freight, if they're above the cutoff level, they can end up with less income than those that are in fact covered by the system. Is the minister considering raising the level?

I see that my time is over, and I'll look forward to response from the minister.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll try to answer at least some of the questions.

I believe that in my comments I did indicate that the cost of moving the office of the Public Guardian, the funding for that, was approximately $5 million. I do believe that in my comments I also indicated that the transfer of the homeless shelters and the Gunn Centre and some other programs was accompanied by approximately a $16 million transfer. I did that in my opening comments; I guess the hon. member missed them.

There are a couple of clarifications that I would like to make. You said quite a few things with respect to extended care, and although I have a deep and strong interest in it, extended care is provided and monitored through the health authorities and Alberta Health. One of the things that you made reference to was some very poor care in a particular institution. I would like to know the name of that institution, not publicly here necessarily as it pertains to your mother, or anywhere else. Along with the extended care, if you will, there are some formulas and guidelines for staffing that are expected to be followed. If they are followed, the amount of staffing increases with the acuity of the patients. I certainly don't have all those formulas, so please don't tie me down to that, but I do know that there is an expectation that there is sufficient care for the people.

Now, I've heard comments on that one bath per week scenario, and I found that one hard to nail down, quite frankly, but that's something we might want to look at. I might add that more and more of our lodge facilities, especially in the rural areas, are going for those what we generically refer to as Century tubs to assist in the bathing of the residents. Certainly, the operators that I've talked to don't have a formula of so much per week; it's more as to what is in keeping with the comfort and dignity of the individual. Well, if you have individual situations in lodges specifically where that is not the case, I do want to hear about it, because I've heard this back and forth, and it's very difficult to cut down.

With respect to health care premiums I was on record as being opposed to health care premiums specifically for seniors. I'm still opposed to it. However, I get outvoted periodically, and that's the life that we're in, so obviously I haven't won that go-round.

You were correct, although I wasn't comfortable with it, in your comments with respect to extended health benefits and things being caught slightly off guard last year. You're correct in that assertion, and the minister of health and I have committed to be in a little bit closer liaison so that we don't see these things happening again. I still am committed to maintaining the programs that we have in place for the seniors, so nothing has changed there.

You had a comment or question with respect to special-needs assistance. I do believe that I did say in my opening comments that there are some – I thought I had the number of seniors that received the benefits in the last year in my comments, but I may have missed that. We can get that to you in writing, the amount of money expended, because I don't have those in my head. I do know that there were sufficient dollars in the budget, that we had a good balance there, and we didn't run into trouble with it. The program has been extremely successful, and it's one of the ones that I certainly would say that we should continue.

You asked about changing our programs. I did indicate in my opening comments that we were flatlining our program expenditures. I also said that the increase in costs of needs may drive us to go up in that.

With respect to thresholds you do have a good point, where the people that are just over, in between are the ones that are of considerable concern to us, and we're trying to get a handle on that and see what we can or cannot do with these particular thresholds to see if we can capture more people in it. My feelings, for example, with respect to the health premiums are that that would be, in my mind, a good way of addressing a part of that in any event, but again we have a process where not everybody gets what they want.

You had various references to abused seniors' housing. That's an interesting area, the whole area of seniors' abuse and what and where it is. In Edmonton there is a group that we've met with, spearheaded by the police and various other agencies, that try to address that. I might point out that we have provided all the shelter spaces that they've required through the Greater Edmonton Foundation. We have put some money into it. We don't have an exact formalized program of funding on an ongoing basis because, quite frankly, I have to have a good look and see what it is, where we're going, and how it's going to get there. A lot of problems are associated with this whole area of seniors' abuse, and we, as you well know, have entered into a variety of educational programs pertaining to it, because I'm more interested in people cutting off the abuse before it starts.

You have indicated quite a bit of desire to have more legislation, more monitoring, and I think, quite frankly, that the best monitors are the close friends and relatives of the people, whether they be in individual homes or whether they be in care. It would be virtually impossible for the government: put in all the legislation you want, but if you don't have the tools to go there and see that it works, it becomes extremely, extremely difficult, if you will.

The whole business, however, with respect to abuse: that's a criminal offence, pure and simple. People who are aware of it should report it, whether it be to the ministry or to the authorities. Quite frankly, there are sufficient laws in place now that pertain to all people, not just to seniors, if they are subjected to improper treatment, whether it be emotional, financial, or physical. There is a mechanism to address it. One of the things that the police have indicated to me, one of the problems that they do have, especially when it comes to things like financial abuse, is that the senior is quite often a victim of a relative, and they're very reluctant to do a follow-up, which makes the whole process impossible. We've tried to direct some of our efforts in consultation with the various programs to go against, for example, one that I believe was mentioned by a member in question period last week, with respect to telemarketing as it pertains to seniors. That is a very serious one, and I think that more has to be done there. Just quite how and what I'm not too sure, but that is one that comes at them quite regularly.

The other aspect. In question period today there was reference made to one of the questions that you posed, that I had difficulty in moving a senior out of their residence because of some criminal activity, if you will. The shelter is on an interim basis, yes, but resolving the problem is more where I'm at. Hopefully we'll be looking somehow at that situation not only as it pertains to seniors but as it pertains to any member in society, whether it be the mom with the kids or the senior, whomever is being unfairly victimized.

You also indicated the rationale behind the office of the Public Guardian. Quite frankly, I think the move was a very good one simply because close to half the clientele are within the senior category, and that process has to be parked somewhere. It seemed to us that the logical place to have that was within Seniors, and I'm sure that that will work out well because there are not going to be any great, dramatic changes. However, as with anything else we'll be looking at it, and if it seems necessary to somehow change it or go back to it, we'll be going back to my colleagues through a regular process to see just what can and should be done with respect to that.

You indicated some references to what we're planning for seniors in the future, and I would like to once again state that Alberta is in the forefront of the planning for our anticipated blip in the demographic bubble of the aging to come through. We had the Broda report a few years ago, which had some very good recommendations. We also had the impact on aging study, which again had a series of good recommendations. We also had two housing programs that have sunsetted and may at some point be resurrected – we'll see what happens there – one being the supportive housing initiative program, SSHIP, and the healthy aging partnership initiative, HAPI, through health, which was later transferred to Seniors. Those two programs, I might say, really delivered well. We had 1,650 some odd units put onstream. Although we do have some waiting lists, it's variable depending upon where you are in the province. We have some facilities that do have actual vacancies, and we have some with longer lists. Just trying to get a balance going there.

So we're not hiding our heads on it, and we totally have got the whole business of anticipating and planning for the aging population well in hand, far better than, unfortunately, some of the other provinces around, I might add. We're also in a situation percentage-wise where Alberta's population as a percentage, although numerically rising, is not increasing that significantly simply because of the economic climate in the province. We're attracting in-migration of all kinds, so the balance is there, which again gives you a good look towards the future, because the taxpaying people or the working folks are also coming in. In going to housing conferences and whatnot, that's something that does not seem to be a luxury that all provinces enjoy. The level of housing for our seniors, the kinds of things that we're doing, the rates that they're charged – you might say that our housing rates across the country seem to be quite low although it's variable. It's very hard to put in where you fit in. But the fact that we have the lodge program and the self-contained apartment program for seniors – those are good things, and they work very well.

I think that in my opening comments I referenced some 40,000 units that we oversee in some way, shape, or form that house some 67,000 people in some way that we get involved with. To put that in perspective – I may be a little bit off on this, but to put it into one pot, if we had all the people that we were in some way responsible for through the ministry in housing alone, we'd almost fill up if not fill up the city of Red Deer, and that's quite significant. I'm not saying that we don't have a lot of work to do. We are looking at it. There has been some significant restructuring, I think, in this province. Housing is profiled much higher than it is in many other provinces. Seniors specifically are profiled very highly, and I think there's a lot good to be said to that.

I'm not too sure what you're getting after, the age-related benefits group, but I don't think that there's anything happening there.

We did have a study on seniors' centres through the Seniors Advisory Council, which was a very interesting study, and we've put forward some of the recommendations and found it interesting that the recommendations were asking for logistic support and more communication than anything else. Do I currently plan a program for funding seniors' centres specifically? No. Currently some seniors' centres receive various levels of assistance, as do other organizations, depending upon where they are and what's happening, but to say that we're going to offer a blanket program of funding for all seniors' centres I don't think is reasonable, and quite frankly if we had the money, there are other places where I would have higher priorities for that.

You made some reference to homeless counts, and I find that very intriguing, and it's very much of a challenge. It's something that I guess every major community in the country has to deal with, but it's an interesting observation. The numbers, depending upon how you count and what you count, can go here, there, and elsewhere. All I will say on this is that in the last couple or three years we've increased the number of homeless or transitional housing spots, and that's been by some 1,100 with another couple of hundred to come on stream. The end result of that has been an increase in the number of people requiring them. So I don't quite know what's going on.

I do know that just going out and funding shelter space for the sake of doing it is not the answer. We have to find other mechanisms. Depending upon the calibre of the clientele that are in some of these shelters, perhaps our affordable housing program will have a positive effect there. I'm hopeful of that. But there are other outfits that are involved, as you well know, groups such as AADAC and what not. The imprint on it is very broad. I really don't know what we can be doing there, but I do know that we have to come up with something more than just additional spots here and additional spots there. You have to keep people in out of the cold – there's no question about that – but we are going to be working on and hopefully will be able to develop in collaboration with community groups in the business and other agencies within government and ministries that are involved in it a long-term strategy to decrease the number of people that we would classify as homeless very significantly so that we have only those that truly need to be homeless that you would call such.

Maybe one of the first steps is getting back to the old rooming house concept where you have very affordable, very clean, very good rooms. As you well know, over the past few years, in the rental market at any rate, we've gotten away from that kind of approach to where you have the more expensive, bigger suites that may well not be necessary, because individuals who do have a rather limited income and who are paying rent in some homeless facilities perhaps would be happier and better off with a little bit more privacy in an affordable situation that would give that. We're looking hopefully to get into some partnering with people. On that one, we haven't had too many steps forward yet, but we're looking at that.

I think that in some way I've covered most of your points, and at this point I'll let somebody else in. Oh, one more thing. You asked if $3 million to homelessness is a flat charge. That basically goes out to Edmonton, Calgary, and the other five centres: a million to Edmonton, a million to Calgary, and then $200,000 to each other one. That's seed money put into their various groups; for example, I do believe that Calgary is through the Calgary Homeless Foundation. That's seed money that's done a very, very good job of leveraging. For example, some have carryovers because of projects they're doing. It's not intended as an operational fund. It's more to get others involved in it. I don't intend on increasing that at this point in time in any event. As you know, we've had some excellent support and participation in the provision of shelters through the federal government.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and with that I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to make a few comments, observations on the budget for the Department of Seniors. The minister has already addressed many questions that were asked of him by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. As a starter I think I, too, want to on the one hand commend the minister for taking a position in support of eliminating seniors' health care premiums, but on the other hand I express disappointment at his failure, the second year in a row, to be able to move at all on this. So if he is disappointed, he should know that there are lots of seniors across Alberta and in my constituency who were looking forward to relief at least on this front and basically would be very, very disappointed.

Similarly, the sort of supplementary health care benefits which provided some assistance in the area of vision care and dental services is another area on which I've been hearing a great deal from seniors. They find that elimination of that benefit was a serious blow to them, and they were hoping to see those benefits restored, and that certainly has not happened here.

In light of the fact that two new programs have been moved into the Seniors department, the net increase in the budget is really very, very small, and that shows up, then, in how the moneys are allocated within the minister's budget. It's clear that in housing, homeless initiatives, homeless Albertans really can't expect any improvement in the government's financial commitment to their problems compared with last year. I'm looking at this government estimate for 2003-2004, and on page 327 under other housing services grants I notice that the amounts are not changing from 2002-2003 to the current fiscal year, 2003-2004. For example, the item I'm referring to is 3.5.2, homeless initiatives. The money available was $3 million in 2002-2003 and remains frozen at that amount. Similarly, the special -needs housing is frozen at $4.73 million, the same as last year, and other grants have been cut back from $410,000 to $150,000. I don't know what those grants are about. Maybe the minister can comment on those too.

But the point that really I'm making is that in areas of absolute critical need – you know, we're talking about the homeless and the shelter organizations – groups that provide shelter for the homeless are finding it a real disappointment. I have here some information on the Mustard Seed Church in Calgary, that has been running this Sunalta Shelter for the homeless. This is a shelter that provides about 150 spaces for the homeless night after night in the city of Calgary. They were certainly counting on $650,000 from the new budget in order for them to continue to run that shelter on a year-round basis. They're disappointed that that's not going to be the case, and as a result that shelter is going to be shut down as of the 1st of May.

That's really a serious blow, I think, to the capacity of the city of Calgary's communities to be able to provide emergency shelter beds to the most needy. Many of these people who use this shelter are people who are the working poor. These are not people who are out of jobs. They are in fact doing jobs, but they're unable to find an affordable place where they have a bed that they can use at night. So this group, the Mustard Seed Church organization, is very disappointed with the problem that this freezing of the amounts in the budget under other housing services grants from last year to this year has created for them.

I'm looking at item 3.3.2, rent supplement. That amount hasn't changed, again, in the new budget from the previous year's budget. It stays at $15 million, exactly the same amount as last year. The rent supplement is clearly needed under conditions where the rents are going up. The number of people needing a rent supplement is most likely going up, yet the amount available is frozen at last year's level, so something has to give. Clearly, there'll be people who will be eligible for a rent supplement but won't be able to get it because of the two reasons that I've given: the increase in rents in general resulting from if nothing else the inflationary pressures and the special increases in rents that are reflecting now the spike in the prices of heating and electricity. So there's a problem that I see in this area as well.

The city of Edmonton has seniors living on fixed incomes and still being able to live in their own homes faced with among other things not only heating and electricity costs that have been moving up very, very dramatically but also a property tax increase, thanks to the government's breach of its own promise to freeze the school portion of the property tax at $1.2 billion as the government had undertaken to do in its budget two years ago. So now moving from there to talking about freezing the mill rate in effect means that seniors will be faced with yet another increase, in this case in property tax, for those at least who are fortunate enough to have their own homes.

I wonder if there is any provision in the budget to deal with the desperate condition that these increases will put some homeowners, seniors into where they may not be able to pay their bills. I just was reading a news story this morning, Mr. Chairman, where a senior from Gibbons is faced with a huge unpaid electricity and heating bill, and now she's faced with legal action against her for not being able to pay those increased heating costs and electricity costs. So I'm asking the minister if there's any provision here that will help seniors who find themselves in this kind of desperate financial situation, none of it of their own making.

Some other questions for the minister. The income-based benefits for seniors will increase. The amount that's available will increase by $1.5 million in the minister's budget, but I want to hear the minister to see what his estimate is about the need out there for this and if, in order to meet that need with a budget increase in this category, which is only 1 percent, not even reflecting the rate of inflation here, it will mean that the minister and his department will have to increase the income eligibility levels in order to respond to this increased pressure in the face of scarce dollars that are budgeted for income-based benefits for seniors. That's my question. Will there be a change, in other words, upwards in the income levels for seniors to be able to qualify, making it harder for seniors living at the edge to be able to qualify for those benefits?

Another question for the minister, the question of affordable housing. The minister's business plan talks about the "satisfaction of housing residents with the quality of accommodation and . . . services" as a performance measure, and that's good that those who are fortunate enough to be able to have these accommodations – their satisfaction level I think is a legitimate measure of performance. But this begs the much larger question of how many Albertans are currently without access to such affordable housing, and do we ever pay attention to how desperate they feel, the level of desperation as a measure of the effectiveness of this ministry's performance?

So these are a few of the questions. I'm trying not to repeat the questions that have already been asked to allow for other members to be able to ask some questions.

Seniors special project grants. I wonder what that – there's a very small amount there – is about. It's certainly $100,000 less than last year. Is this a program that's on its way out? Is it being phased out, or what? It's a category there, 2.2.2 in the budget, and I would like the minister to please address that for me. I'm just curious. It's a small amount; nevertheless, I need to know whether this particular program is on its way out.

The last item there, 2.2.3, special needs assistance grants. The amount again is frozen at last year, and I want the minister's explanation for it. Other than saying that there's not money available, does it reflect his assessment or estimate of the real need out there, and if the amount from last year to this year hasn't changed, has the need also not changed? Will this amount be enough, or will in fact the minister find himself making hard decisions? Hard for him but also creating further hardship for people who need special assistance grants. That certainly is a concern that I have there, Mr. Chairman.

The general issue of the shortage of affordable housing in the province is a chronic problem, and I wonder if the minister foresees at all a day in the next few years when we as a province will have addressed this problem more or less in a satisfactory way or if it is something that remains a sort of bleeding ulcer in our economy and in our communities which we should throw our hands up and simply say: we're helpless; we can't do much about it. I don't think that housing is a luxury. Housing is a basic human need, and as a province, as a provincial community, I think we have to have the political will to say that it's not something that can be left unattended. At least if there is a clear multiyear plan that the minister has in mind, I would like to hear about it. I'm sure Albertans would be very, very interested in hearing the minister's answer to what his multiyear plan is with respect to dealing with the need for affordable housing and dealing with the problem of the homeless in the province.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will close. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do appreciate the questions and comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Start off with some comments on housing. Last week I had a housing conference in Winnipeg, and I would like to say for the record that Alberta is well ahead of every other province with perhaps the exception of Quebec, which may be a close second to us. Having said that, I don't want to indicate or minimize in any way that there is an affordable housing shortage in this province. Also keep in mind, though, that we are in some way, shape, or form involved with some 67,000 Albertans in helping them get roofs over their heads. That's not taking into account the number of homeless shelters that we are currently doing. We are funding through the ministry as of April 1 some 14 different shelters. As you indicated with respect – and I'll get back to that in a moment – to Sunalta, with those shelters there are 1,785 spots, either matched or other things that we're funding. I guess the question then becomes: how much is the right amount? I don't know the answer to that.

Getting back to the affordable housing. We are the only province – although we signed on in June, others signed on before us; two provinces haven't signed on yet – that has units being occupied, as I speak, from that program where the money was put in two or three months ago. That is because the officials in my department went ahead and worked with the municipalities, worked with the people who are interested in providing the housing. Some of them front-ended it. I'll be very frank with you.

The criteria is based on need, based on, if you will, the vacancy rates, the size of the rents. Well, affordable housing in Fort McMurray is much, much, much higher than it is in Lethbridge or Medicine Hat or, in fact, in Edmonton. So even to use the term "affordable housing" has its own little problem. An average price of a house in Edmonton, I believe – I heard the numbers the other day – is well over $100,000. In Fort McMurray you could likely pay 50 percent or 60 percent more than that for the same unit. So, then, that says: who can get into them? People in the professions, like policemen, for example, may qualify for an affordable house in Wood Buffalo, but they certainly wouldn't be in that area here. So it's a very difficult target to nail down.

Have we beat the problem? No. When will we do it? I really don't know, but I'd much sooner have the situation that we have where we're trying to play catch-up and the demands are going because of a booming economy than what they have in some of our other places where they are struggling to get moneys not for additional units, just for repairs, where the populations are declining and where their housing stock has deteriorated and they're in dire straights with nowhere to look for any kind of support.

What is our plan? I think that if you take what this province has done in the past two or three years with respect to housing, we started off doing supportive housing and lodges, added 1,650 units there, entered into the Alberta/Canada affordable housing agreement and made sure that it was an agreement that didn't get tied up in red tape. It is the senior officials in Canada Mortgage and Housing and Alberta Seniors that make it run. We don't have to go to Ottawa; we don't have to go here, there, and elsewhere. That was largely due to the efforts of this minister and my officials to ensure that we wouldn't sign an agreement that wasn't workable for us.

Yes, we have to put up matching dollars, and, yes, that means that I have to go to Treasury and wherever else to get those, but I don't mind doing that, because we've now got a commitment. Is it as much as I wanted? No. I want as much as I can get, and I've got a commitment for some 15 million dollars for the next three years. If you double that up, that amounts to $90 million, and we'll be looking at if we can increase that. But currently do I need any more money tomorrow for that affordable project? No, because we're going project by project to ensure that we get the biggest bang for the buck and that those projects are going where they are needed so we don't have the problem that was created before with the cookie-cutter approach where the housing was put in where it really wasn't of the biggest need.

The rent supplement program is a concern, and that's something that, as long as I have any say in it, we will never go into again, because we are left at the mercy of the marketplace. If we go into rent subs, we're going to stay in it. We're not going to back out; I will grant you that. But if we go into rent subs, they're going to have to be capped so that when there's a sudden change in a community of the availability of things, we're not put at the mercy of putting somebody out on the street or upping the rents unrealistically. You know, every dollar that we have has to be targeted to the right place.

What are we doing with it now? Priority is the people who are the highest need or the emergent ones in each community. Those needs are being met. Is it meeting the demand? No. Will it meet the demand? No. Will we have to put more money into it? I don't know. Probably, but it's not something I'm very comfortable with, because of where it's going. I'd much sooner have stability in the marketplace wherever we deal with it. You can imagine the beating that we would take in a community. We had some there with the rent subs that we had going in Fort McMurray. You know what happened to the rents there.

Well, what has happened, again through consultation with Canada Mortgage and Housing, with Wood Buffalo housing corporation, is we got involved in a partnership with them in something called Edgewater Court, where it's generated some 180 affordable units that are already open, and that was not a part of any program. It wasn't announced; it didn't have it all over. It was announced locally. We got together – my ministry, the city of Fort McMurray, the Wood Buffalo housing corporation, and Canada Mortgage and Housing – because in order to support the new units that were being built in Edgewater Court, Canada Mortgage and Housing allowed us to move some of our rent sub moneys that were elsewhere. So we got to reconfigure some of it and help a lot more people. We're doing all sorts of activities in housing across this province of that nature that you never hear about. Sunalta Shelter and the Mustard Seed group that you referred to came to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment and the Minister of Seniors via the Calgary Homeless Foundation and asked for some funding for an emergency to cover their operation from December through April 30. We did that. Now, suddenly there's this: make that a full ongoing program. Will that happen? I don't know. Before we go down that path, I have to be personally and the ministry has to be totally assured that it's needed and that it's appropriate and that there is some sort of significant outcome in dealing with the problems, because we have all sorts of places where we can spend these moneys.

I'm very concerned with respect to Calgary specifically, where 600 and some odd units were added to the homeless inventory in the past two years. That's significant. And what happened? We doubled the waiting list as a result. So I'm not too sure where this is heading, but I want to make sure that we get good accountability, we get a good bang for the buck, and we meet the needs of the people that really need it. That's sort of in the context of where we're heading on that particular aspect.

The utilities and the taxes are of concern. We have been able to give some degree of relief for the utilities to seniors on the lower end through our special-needs benefit program, and I was very pleased to be able to do that. As you know, that happened on very short notice, but it was very, very effective. We got a considerable amount of money out to a good number of seniors. I think well over 5,000 have received cheques already, and I think those who criticize the ministry's efforts of getting it out, saying, "Well, they won't have the cheques until July and August," should give me a written apology so I can read it in the House because those were unfair, underhanded, cheap shots that were unwarranted at the time.

I'm not going to go too much into property taxes, but don't forget that when you freeze a mill rate, you freeze a mill rate. When you have the kind of growth in the province that's going on, the increased need for facilities and everything else, to say that we shouldn't have a mill rate and have an increased amount come in – yes, the province capped it for a while, and I believe the cap is off, but the mill rates, which are the important part, are down. We have to ensure that the municipalities in their assessments and whatnot are acting responsibly.

As it pertains directly to seniors, we've been looking at a variety of approaches that would have to be a collaborative thing between individuals and the municipalities. I've been having discussions with the head of the Urban Municipalities Association, exchanging ideas – it's only in the idea stage, I might add; it's not going to happen yet – about ways taxes can be forgiven or whatnot and applied to the property when the property is resold or something of that nature so the tax doesn't become a burden, either a portion or a part of it, and we'll see where that leads. Like I say, it's just ideas being exchanged, but there are people a lot brighter than I both within the ministry and outside who have seniors as residents looking at this.

The whole area of thresholds and people dropping through the cracks has been an ongoing and constant concern, and quite frankly I don't have an answer. The one thing I would like is to have the rates indexed, if you will, in some way, but you have to be careful with the indexing also. If you have a 3 percent index and it's every dollar, I believe, that we add to a senior's monthly payout – you can do your mathematics – it's well over a million dollars over the year. So if you're just going to index and give everybody two or three dollars, you drive your budget quite hard but you don't really benefit necessarily the people who need it. So we're looking more at targeting, and this time around we're going to be targeting, as I indicated in my opening comments, as much as we can residents who are of lower income who are living in lodges, because as we know, the lodge rents but the resident pays. The resident's portion must increase, and if you're going to increase rents, the people at the lower end of it, who the lodges are directed at, have to have the wherewithal to be able to pay that increase, and we're trying to target some funds into that area. Nobody loses any.

There's one comment that I think you made an error on. I'm not sure whether it was the seniors' benefit program or special needs. You're saying that qualifying for the benefits is harder. That's not true. To qualify for the seniors' benefit program, it's strictly line 150, I believe, in the income tax thing, and we give it there. As a matter of fact, to ensure that people get on it – we use the previous year's income tax statement, and obviously if you turn 65, you don't know – we'll actually accept an estimate. If that estimate shafts us, we sort of look the other way and then go with the real McCoy the next time around and might reduce the benefits, obviously within reason because we're dealing with people on low income. So you're not going to leave much room for much error, if you will, but we try to do that. We don't let them estimate every year because you know what would happen there, so we go back on the line thing. We don't ask for a return of the moneys if we happen to overpay them. We made the mistake; you keep the money. I don't know how you can make it much easier to qualify in a situation like that.

As it pertains to special needs, we've looked at this this way, that way, and the other way to try and see how it works. There are specific items that they qualify for – some I haven't even heard of – even appliances. I don't think there's another province in this country that will buy you a washing machine. If it breaks down and your income is low enough where you can't afford to replace it, we will. We won't buy you three in one year, but we've had requests for a lot of strange things.

With respect to the extended health benefit program, as you know, that was only partial coverage as it pertained to the dental and optical. Was I happy it was discontinued? Of course not. The money going into helping the lower end seniors I think was appropriate, and I would point out that before we took over the lower end seniors, before the money was transferred under Health last year, even at that time we were giving a considerable amount of money – and don't ask me the number, because I don't remember it, but I know it was considerable – to help seniors with the program, to help what they're doing. So we do bend over, and I would say that overall for our needy end we have pretty good programs. Would I like to see them better? Obviously I would, but we have to make sure that it's affordable and that if we do something, it becomes sustainable. The worst thing we can do is start doing programs like that, and I think the people in the ministry have been doing a very good job of monitoring, of keeping track of it, of bringing forward the needs that are there. Again, you know, we'll have to look at the thresholds to see where we're at on that one.

In the last couple of years there have been significant increases, especially on the utility side of it, but so have groceries and other things gone up. So we have to look at that whole thing, and what we want to do is get the biggest return on the dollar, whether it be in the housing end of it or in the seniors' support programs, and make sure that people don't fall through the cracks. I think that on that basis, we've done pretty good. I think people in the province have a pretty good understanding of it. I do believe from discussions with staff earlier on that fully 90 percent of the people who applied for utility support in this temporary program were eligible, which tells me – and the ones that were rejected were not eligible either; they're outside the program or whatever – that the information with respect to the programs out there is pretty good. I think you'd have to agree with that.

I think I've covered most of your stuff. If you have some others, I'll try and get back on it. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I had a number of questions. In listening to the other members and their questions and the minister's responses, many of them have been answered, but I still do have some on my list.

First of all, knowing that there's data and information kept in the department, I'm just wondering if you've seen a shift upward or in any direction – but, hopefully, it would be upward – in personal income for Alberta seniors, say income from pensions, RRSPs, other investments; in other words, less reliance on the Alberta seniors' benefit by seniors. Also, with respect to an aging population I'm always pleased to hear demographics being referred to even though it was clarified that perhaps with our younger incoming population in Alberta, that's maybe being slowed down somewhat presently.

Regarding housing for the lower income seniors especially, for the aging senior have you looked at the cost of personal supports and whether the individual pays for those, or would they be covered by Alberta seniors' benefits? Those are not health related; those are personal supports. Possibly would there be an adjustment considered to the ASB for lower income seniors? Also, I hear about the gap in housing between, say, assisted living, or the lodge living, and, say, long-term care. Basically, seniors don't really want to go to long-term care. Is that something that would be the jurisdiction of the Seniors department, or would that be the department of health?

My comment on cancellation of the extended health benefit program. I understand the background of it, but I'm just wondering whether enough lower income seniors really understand that this new restructured plan through the SNA program is there and it's available for them to access and the benefits are much better than what they had under the extended health benefit program. It certainly fits better with the overall philosophy of the government with lower income seniors. I have to say one thing that I've heard from talking to seniors: it's not all complaints; that's for sure. A lot of it is very positive. The new form works better for them. They can fill it out much easier and quicker, and there is definitely faster turnaround in the payment through the special-needs program.

I couldn't resist making a comment, being a member of the review committee to review the Protection for Persons in Care Act. I think the Member for Edmonton-Centre well knows that the act is being reviewed, has been reviewed, and the report has gone in to the Minister of Community Development, although I certainly appreciated her concerns about vulnerable people, vulnerable seniors in particular.

I just wondered if the Minister of Seniors has considered or would consider the market-basket measure approach to ASB given that there is such a variance in basic living costs throughout Alberta. I know that the other members have referred to the high costs of living, and Fort McMurray has been one of the most common examples.

The hard to house seniors: it's all been said. I just wanted to compliment the minister and the department because I drive by it almost every day when I'm in Calgary at home. On Glenmore Trail they are quickly constructing the Bob Ward Residence for seniors and others with mental health problems. I was there actually for the sod-turning even though it's in Calgary-Elbow. It's close enough to my constituency. They thought it was in Calgary-West, so they invited me to do the sod-turning. I know there was representation from the Seniors department, and that is an excellent collaborative initiative and especially safe for seniors with these needs. I'm just wondering if the minister is looking at any more similar collaborations in other centres.

Also, I think there are many other seniors' issues that are impacted by other departments where it's within that department's responsibility, such as older drivers, the aging workforce. Are we training the older worker? Staffing levels in long-term care were raised, even the importance to many seniors of the grooming of cross-country ski trails. I mean, that's in a department other than the Seniors department. My question to the minister is: is the Seniors department actively involved with other departments in communication, addressing and resolving some of these seniors' issues?

My last one is basically – this is definitely more a personal interest of mine – what about the senior who has sizable assets? That could be a home in the inner city. For instance, in Calgary the value of the asset has increased substantially, but that person is short of income to pay for, for instance, the taxes. I was pleased to hear the minister refer that it's even being looked at as to how we can help that senior stay in his home even though they say they have the asset, but they don't have the income flow. Another approach might be to educate them to use their assets to provide a better quality of life for them and whether we can help out seniors that basically are in need and need some assistance in that way, but it isn't direct government dollars.

Those are all of the questions that I wanted to ask right now. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Yes. I did promise the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. The name that is used is the Mustard Seed Street Ministry. That's the proper term, and I keep slipping on that one also.

Mr. Bonner: Could you repeat that, please?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mustard Seed Street Ministry. Close to church; not quite.

Thank you to the member who brought out the other comments.

With respect to sizable assets and taxes, if we could work out some method where they can stay in there and the taxes get tacked against the assets some way, I'd like that. I am vehemently opposed to do something – and I might as well state it now – like asset testing for seniors before they receive benefits and wouldn't even consider it. Your comment of using an asset to keep them in there in a way with a tax deferral or something I think is excellent, and those are the kinds of things that we are looking at.

With respect to your comments on seniors' issues with other departments: yes, for most departments. For example, Transportation is very good at letting us know. They're looking at driving things and handicap stickers and whatnot. We do have quite a bit of consultation that goes along that isn't, if you will, in the public eye. It's usually at the staff level, but for the most part I'm very pleased with how most of the government departments do interact with us as it pertains to it, and I think the awareness that we have as Seniors ministry has contributed a lot to the consultation, that it is a stand-alone ministry.

I appreciate your comments on the new facility in Calgary for hard-to-house seniors, and, yes, we do have the odd one going on. Yes, we are collaborating on one I believe with Salvation Army. I went to an opening not too long ago under the SSHIP program. I believe it's called Grace Manor. They have some hard-to-house seniors as well as other residents there.

The whole area of the market-basket approach, the basic thought behind it, I agree with the philosophy of it. It's a matter of how we implement it and whether we should or can or not, and the collaboration will be with the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment, who has been bringing that one forward all along, and again that is, I think, a good idea. It's just a matter of how we can get it going.

With respect to your comments on accessing optical and dental emergency care, I don't think there's a lack of awareness of the availability of it, but remember: our program isn't all of a sudden broader benefits, if you will. We deal towards the emergent nature of it, so if you want any kind of esthetics stuff, you won't get it. Well, we focus it on need. Obviously, good oral health is good health, and we certainly take that to heart, but we're not into that line of business, the esthetics of it, and the same with glasses. Obviously, the old program had a lot of faults. I do believe you got a pair of glasses repaired once a year or replaced every three years, and it always begged the question of: what would happen if shortly after you got your glasses you lost or broke them or something of that nature? Well, some people who were able to afford it went into their own pocket. Others would come back to us through the special needs. So that has been there, and I still would like to see some sort of comprehensive health program for seniors, but again you're certainly aware of the problems that we're having.

With respect to the whole area of housing and where people should stay, I personally have a mixed mind on this. I do believe people should stay in their own homes so long as they're comfortable, they feel secure, and they have interaction with people who can monitor them, whether it be a neighbour, a relative, a friend, or whatnot. To just blindly say that they should stay in their own home because it's their own home and send whatever kinds of supports to them, I'm not too keen on it, because one of the things you'll find is that social interaction for people of all ages is very valuable, and if you are housebound for whatever reasons, whether it be fear or lack of mobility, that in itself can become a mental health problem.

I really appreciate your reference – and this is what we are working on with limited success – on the continuum of care as it goes from lodge through to long-term care. This is through the supportive housing initiative and HAPI and through some supportive assisted living, and we have to define the terminology because apparently people are interchanging terms with different meanings to them. The long-term care is totally out of our jurisdiction. Whether or not the housing portion of long-term care should stay in that continuum is something that I think is worthy of a discussion at some point down the road. We do have a considerable amount of work to do with whether you call it assisted or supportive living, of that interim measure of the person and the help they get so they can remain essentially in a lodge even though their needs are a little bit or considerably greater than other lodge residents. Some authorities have done a very, very fine job of filling in that gap. Others rely too heavily on the long-term care component. We are trying to encourage our lodge operators across the board, including Edmonton and Calgary, to get more into that field of providing more services to their residents.

The question of who pays is a good one, and I think that we can work that one out quite good. If health-related additional costs are defined, then obviously Health or the government should pay. If it's strictly a personal thing, then perhaps there should be a higher level of rent for more requirements, again keeping in mind your ability to pay. But I certainly don't have any difficulty with a staggered rent on a lot of things, if your requirements are higher than others. You know, this one size fits all doesn't necessarily work, but considerable work has to be done on that.

The aging population. We're getting more seniors per se, but the proportion isn't going up, so we can't hide behind the percentage, because the problem is coming in, except where we have I think what I would say a better resource base to deal with it. We do feel, although it's not significant yet, that there is a slight creep of more personal income into seniors; that is, as times goes on, we'll, I think, get much better. If you turn the clock back, we're coming pretty close to the time when pensions, when looking after planning for your future, not relying on the government was just starting to be a thing going. So hopefully the ratio of seniors who will require help will decrease. Although even if the ratio decreases, the number is still likely to increase.

I think I've covered most of your comments. If not, we'll try and catch them in Hansard.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to get up this afternoon and make some comments in regard to the estimates for Seniors. I have a few general comments here at the beginning, and certainly those begin with the profile of Alberta seniors. There are currently in the neighbourhood of 318,000 seniors living in the province. This represents about 10 percent of Alberta's population. I look into the business plans for the ministry, particularly on page 338, seniors income, the first bullet under Seniors Income:

As a group, seniors have lower average incomes than most other age groups. Approximately 39 per cent of seniors have incomes low enough to receive cash benefits from the Alberta Seniors Benefit program.

So when we look at this particular bullet and we see the figure of 39 percent of the seniors in the province presently requiring some assistance from the Alberta seniors' benefit program, this amounts to 126,000 seniors. In that number, we have single seniors with an annual income of $18,745 or less and a couple with a combined annual income of $28,530 or less, so we are looking at quite a significant number in the province who do fall into this category.

I can see this also becoming a bigger problem as we move forward because certainly right now only 21 percent of Albertans who retire have an employer-sponsored pension plan. I think as we see the situation which is arising in Alberta right now where there tends to be fewer and fewer union members and fewer and fewer workers that have the opportunity to participate in a pension plan, we will see this number grow even more. I mean, we'll certainly see a greater burden being put on governments at all levels for assistance with seniors.

As well, when looking at the profile and demographic factors – I'm looking on page 339 of the business plan, Demographic Factors – we see that currently on a percentage basis the over-80 age group is the fastest growing segment of this particular society. Again, that in itself presents quite a problem in that certainly as people get older and into their 80s and 90s they do require assistance from someone. So I will be asking the minister some questions in this regard as well.

A big part of our discussion this afternoon has focused on shelter. It's estimated that approximately 75 percent of seniors in Alberta live in homes they own, 15 percent rent their homes, and 4 percent live in continuing care centres. Now, then, in looking at this, we certainly realize that the longer seniors can live in their own homes the more beneficial it is for them as well as for the facilities that we do provide. But we do have a situation in this province right now where we have somewhere in the neighbourhood of 400 acute care beds that are being occupied by people that really require long-term care. The reason they're in those acute care beds is because there is no other place to place them. So, clearly, we do have a shortage of long-term care beds in this province. For the minister. It would seem to me that as our population continues to age we will be requiring more and more long-term care beds. What is the ministry's strategy for providing those long-term care beds, and how many, with our aging population, are they planning to put forward in the next few years?

Now, as well, moving on to housing. Certainly, when we look at housing, there is a shortage of low-cost housing and home supports for seniors, and we have felt a tremendous amount of pressure and seniors especially have felt a tremendous amount of pressure, those that are renting at this particular time, because rental rates reflect the local economic health of the communities. Calgary and Edmonton have had booming economies over the last few years. We've had a great influx of workers, and we've also had, because there is a short supply, a greater demand for low-cost housing. Also, because of the demand certainly the rents continue to increase putting more and more low-cost housing out of the reach of seniors.

As well, for seniors living in their homes or those living in facilities where they're required to pay their own utility rates or taxes, then of course there is greater and greater financial stress on these people. This is a situation that isn't going to go away. As long as our energy rates remain high, as long as our economy remains strong, these are pressures that are going to be put on all levels of government to provide housing. So I certainly would want to see more of a commitment by this government to address those particular needs.

Referring to page 339 of the business plan:

An injection of capital funding is necessary to enable local community organizations to build and manage needed housing. For this business planning cycle, provincial funding will enable the ministry to access up to $67 million in federal funds to develop affordable housing, especially in high-growth, high-need areas and northern, remote communities.

My question regarding this $67 million would be: is this new money that the province is going to put in, or are we using some type of project that possibly could be there? I see the minister is nodding yes, this will be new money. So certainly the influx of $134 million will be quite an added boost to capital funding.

Now, then, as well, the minister and I had the opportunity to attend the opening ceremonies of Rosslyn Place, a gorgeous seniors' facility, one that I visit on occasion. I can tell the minister that all of the comments and hopes that we had about a place for seniors that was comfortable, that was safe, that would address many of their needs – this continues to happen in that facility. The residents are extremely happy to be there. Yet this year for reasons that I've already mentioned many of the residents are getting huge increases in their rent to stay in that facility, again partly because of utility rates, partly because of the requirements of the municipal government that they have in order to fund that facility.

In speaking with some of the people in the capital region housing authority, they were telling me that even though they get a lot of help in building these facilities, they actually are having to spend an additional ballpark $1 million just to help fund those facilities. So if the minister could indicate if there are going to be additional moneys put forward to municipalities to help them in the operation of these facilities so that the rates do not escalate to the point where seniors would possibly have to leave those facilities.

The next area that I would like to look at is goals, key strategies, and performance measures. I'm looking at performance measure 2 on page 341, "Support the management of and enable the provision of family, special purpose and seniors housing." Under your key strategies I see, "Create effective governance structures for the community-based provision of seniors, family and special purpose housing in urban, rural and remote communities," and the second bullet, 2.1.2, "Create effective linkages with community-based housing organizations for the purpose of transferring ownership and management of provincial housing." Again, this is an area where municipalities require more than just the transferring of ownership. If they are in fact subsidizing that type of housing, then their resources are being stretched further and further. They are so stretched right now that they are having a great deal of difficulty, so they do require some type of assistance in this regard.

As well, I was looking at a little paper put out called Alberta Population Projections. These projections are based on the unadjusted 1991 census counts. Projections will be updated after Statistics Canada adjusts census population figures for undercoverage. Now, then, in looking at this, their projections for the year 2003 were 331,000 seniors in Canada, so roughly I guess about 13,000 fewer seniors than what had been projected. I know that these projections have been looked at quite significantly, and certainly we are looking at the projections of the baby boomers that will be coming through the system and will certainly require a tremendous number of facilities. Yet once they move through the system, the potential for vacancies in those facilities is also great, so I can certainly appreciate what the minister has said when he asked the question: how much is enough?

Certainly, we have to look at this very seriously because we don't want an abundance, but at the same time when we have 400 acute care beds that are being used right now for people that require long-term care, when we have the waiting lists for capital region housing at two years, then certainly we have a problem. It's a very serious problem and one that has to be addressed.

Now, another issue I would like to address while I have some time is that according to a 2000 Stats Canada poll 1 in 4 adult Canadians provide some form of care to someone living at home, someone with a long-term physical or mental illness or one who is frail and disabled. Again, many, many caregivers are providing unpaid support for a family member or friend, and certainly as the age of our seniors continues to increase, I can see that there will be a greater dependency on this type of care for our seniors.

As the minister mentioned earlier, we certainly do need some type of monitoring of these people, and right now that monitoring is being done by friends and family. But what happens to those people that don't have either? They are certainly the ones that slip through the cracks. We do see a continued shift in health care from hospitals to community-based care, and I think this is a much more efficient system than people having to be in hospitals if they can be in community-based care, and my question to the minister would be: how is the ministry in their business plans looking forward to this shift more away from hospitals to community-based care?

Another area that we experienced as a family – and I know many people in the province have – is having an elderly parent or friend that incurs a sudden illness and requires hospice or respite care. I know that this was a situation that we encountered last year. The waiting period was nine months, nine months for an emergency situation like this. So the only alternative we had was to put this person in a hospital. Long-term care facilities were not available, so a person that really wasn't sick had to be in a hospital bed for over six weeks. This is extremely expensive. Now, then, I know that there are private facilities out there that will provide respite care to seniors, but this amounts to between $400 and $500 a day. It is extremely expensive. They charge $18 an hour. You multiply that by 24, and that is what it costs if you wish that type of care.

So, Mr. Minister, I would like to see us have an increase in the amount of respite care, and I would certainly like to see a greater number of long-term care beds so that we aren't tying up a very expensive acute care bed. Presently in the province we have about 400 seniors that are in acute care beds because there is no long-term care facility available. This amounts to us taking a hospital the size of the Misericordia out of action for health care. So it is a serious problem, it's an expensive problem, and it's certainly one that has to be addressed and addressed quickly.

Funding in long-term care facilities. There have just been some excellent articles in the paper on people who have loved ones in those facilities, and certainly the care that they get when people have time to get around to those people is very good. Very few times have you ever heard of any derogatory comments towards the staff. Yet we have people who are incontinent, who have to have assistance to get to the bathroom. They ring the bell for assistance, and they are met with either no response or somebody saying to them: "I'm sorry; I'm too busy. I can't assist you right now. Go in your diaper." We talk about protecting the dignity of seniors. There is nothing more degrading than knowing that you have to go to the bathroom and that you can't get to the toilet, so you either have to soil the clothes you are in or have a diaper put on you.

So those are issues that I think, Mr. Minister, we do have to address. Thank you very much for this opportunity to make those comments.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think I want to make it very, very clear that although I have extensive discussions with the minister of health, long-term care is a health thing. I'm not trying to shirk it, nor do I minimize it. The problem that I have with a lot of that is that some people in long-term care should not be there. They should be in a lower level called assisted living, if you will. If we could get the system working right whereby we had enough spots in assisted living, I think there would be enough spots in long-term care. Now, obviously, if we get more people, we're going to need more spots no matter what, but it's a matter of setting it up.

The other thing that I have – and this is very personal – is difficulty with a bed suddenly being occupied by a person who theoretically requires less attention, as in somebody who would be better in a long-term care setting as opposed to a hospital. Suddenly these beds cost astronomical amounts of money. I wonder: if those beds were empty, would the system save any money? That's just a side issue. When you say that it's costing more to put them there – those beds are paid for empty or occupied. Are they appropriately occupied? No.

I also have the thought that if there are situations in the bigger centres, maybe the inappropriate beds should be consolidated into a particular locale as opposed to being sprinkled throughout the hospitals and treated as a long-term care centre within the acute care centre. I haven't seen those things happening. Those are just personal observations that I'm giving to you. Unfortunately, they're going on the record.

I'm glad you raised your reference to the funding of affordable housing. Alberta and, I think, Quebec are the only ones that haven't tried to play the game of: we did this yesterday, so give us credit today. We're fully aware that we do need units onstream. What we have worked out is that there's a $50,000 maximum per door, although we won't be going to a maximum very much, half-and-half between ourselves and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, but it is all new dollars that you go into.

Now, the situation is such that if we get the players involved, as they have been in some instances, that triggers a lot of good activity. For example, in Calgary there's a project, which escapes me – it's about 200 units, with some hard to house and whatnot – that we funded under this in the program in the previous year's dollars, and the city of Calgary came up very, very well to fund it. I believe there'll be very little if any mortgage.

The key to the affordable housing – and I'm surprised that this hasn't happened in the past – in my mind is to have encumbrance-free units so that the income from that can go into the maintenance or go into a reserve to build additional units. What we've had up to this point largely is a small amount and a large amount leveraged, and then you have the mortgage payments on an ongoing basis no matter who the operator is. For example, in our lodge program if some of the facilities didn't have mortgages, they would have a lot easier time managing their cash flows.

So what we're trying to do in working and leveraging, whether it be a municipality or private sector, whomever it is: money is out of this. We're trying to keep the mortgage, through value of equity, low. That translates into a lower rent, and it also translates into something that I feel very strongly about: that these units will in fact be able to become, if you will, self-sustaining as you go, and I think that's the whole key to it.

I believe that some of the other comments were answered in other places. The whole business of respite care is a good one. The thing is, you know, that it's a matter of finding what's appropriate, what balances. Remember that one size doesn't fit all. We are focusing on largely the middle and lower income seniors where we're doing the housing thing. In Edmonton and Calgary, as you well know, there have been a lot of good choices for people who want to expend the dollars on it where they've gone into this whole area of buying personal services and whatnot. It's worked very well, and that's their own choice, and my own hope would be that we would have a higher proportion of seniors in a position to do so.

I appreciate you going through my business plan quite like you did. You see the stats that are in there, and you've sent some of them back to me. They're as accurate a reflection of the reality as we have. Those are the kinds of things that we're trying to work around, again within a limited dollar, and as I indicated in some of my answers previously, we do want to focus on what we're doing in such a way as to get the biggest return and to get continuity.

For example, on the SSHIP and AHPI, that we were able to do earlier for getting those additional supportive housing units on-stream, that was a very well-thought-out program. We've applied a lot of the principles in that program to our affordable housing. On the initial look at the affordable housing, it's very, very well received, but an interesting thing that has happened here is that we broke with the tradition of per capita. It's per project, which means that if you've got the need and if you've got the jam to go about it, you put your projects forward, and you'll be at the head of it. This is good on the one hand, but on the other hand – and I won't go into naming communities – this creates some problems for us in a way, too, where communities that should be coming forward for whatever reasons may not be, and we have to be conscious of that aspect also.

Again, you made references to downloading on the municipalities. I am very conscious of that, and it's a concern that I have. It's a concern in the lodge programs, where we're having a good, close look at it. As you know, the lodge authorities have requisitioning power to a degree, although the municipalities don't have to go with it. We have a situation where there's a municipality that's actually reducing their allocation, which is not very good.

The potential of the people not being able to pay their rent and live in there is really not a concern because one of the rules that we have in the game is that you have to retain I believe $265 of expendable income. Having said that, however, I don't want to be shutting my eyes and saying: well, that's fine; everything is wonderful. That's why we're looking at factoring some more money into the seniors' benefits program to lodge residents, so those that are low there will be able to pick up the increases. Basically, those increases will be flowing to the lodge operators. You hear about the rents. It's about $1,200, I think, that is the average on rent, but it's only about some 700-plus dollars to the resident, which is relatively low. That difference has been picked up by the lodge assistance grants and municipal requisitions. I may be low on it. It may be $1,300, whatever the average is.

So we're trying to get the picture to be clearer. People in lodges are getting good bargains, especially when their lodges, the vast majority of them, are very well operated. They're getting a good return for their dollar, and what we want to ensure is that the requisitioning doesn't fall too heavily on the sponsoring municipalities. At the same time, we have this whole business of them coming forward continually and wanting approvals to build this and build that, and they will put up the money, but again when you're putting it up, it's for a long-term basis. So it's a little bit of balancing and trying to be careful in what we do.

The other one – and you alluded to this. I believe that 2016 is when the bump is expected. If you stop and think for a minute, that's only 13 years away. If we get into an extensive building program now – we have to get the right one – and you start it off and you work towards 2016 and then after that it starts to go like this, what do you do then? We've looked at this too. There may be a dual purpose and maybe a manner of the lodges, whatever, switching over to become some kind of different kind of housing thing. It's not a matter that they're going to be gone.

The other area that is of some concern, although it's not highlighted too much, is that we try to promote people staying in their homes, whether it be a lodge or a home, and in their home communities as much as possible. There's reference made to the Edmonton/Calgary corridor, and a lot of the people are being drawn from small rural places. So we have to be extremely careful there that we don't have a bunch of empty lodges when the current users aren't in there.

So there are a lot of variables in it. On the surface it's whether it is the affordable or the homeless or the seniors. It seems quite simplistic to say: put more money in there. Well, I'll tell you that when we signed the housing agreement in June and we didn't get the moneys going until February, it didn't slow us down for one minute. If we had had the money allocated, we wouldn't have had anywhere to spend it because we wouldn't have had anything to spend it on. What transpired in that period of time: not only do we have some very, very good projects out the gate now, but I'm looking forward to when we have the next cut, that we'll have some more good ones. That isn't by accident; that's by good planning. Like I had indicated a couple of times before, when I was down in Winnipeg last week, I didn't see examples of that good planning across the province. I was quite surprised as a matter of fact. We're doing pretty well there.

I hope I've touched on your comments. If I haven't, we'll try and get back to you some other way on the issues you've raised. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's with great pleasure that I ask our Minister of Seniors a few questions today. First of all, I'd like to thank him very much for the aspects that transpired over the last couple of years, especially in West Yellowhead by getting us more long-term care facilities in Hinton and also looking at the aspect of supportive housing, because I think that, like he stated earlier, is the answer.

Looking through his budget, I was just wondering if he has any funds that he can help us with in West Yellowhead in looking at the aspect of doing feasibility studies on supportive housing in the possibility of the Edson and district area and then the possibilities of doing a needs assessment in the municipality of Jasper so that we can sort of look at that as the aging population is growing.

Looking throughout his budget, if he would go to page 339 under Housing and the second-last bullet on Housing. I'm just wondering: are there any funds available? When you look at his line budget, when you go to his main budget, it's fairly categorized on that one line item. So I'm just wondering: do you have any funds for emergency housing? Then again the other aspect with my colleague from Peace River and my other colleague from Athabasca-Wabasca and my other colleague from Lesser Slave Lake as well as myself: hon. minister, we're certainly looking for some help on the aspect of remote housing.

As you realize, in these areas we have quite a few reserves, and some of the housing needs to be upgraded. I know that a number of years ago we did have a job fair set up and were able to bring some of these up to standard. We're really needing a number of them more in the other areas that I explained as well as in my area. We have a housing authority that is working in the greater Grande Cache area that would be willing to work on a program where we could get a hand up rather than a handout to possibly look at some remote housing on some of these enterprises or co-ops. I'm just wondering if you can shed any light on that for me.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do appreciate your comments, West Yellowhead. Do we have something specific for emergency housing as a line item? No, but most housing, quite frankly, at the moment where we're short is an emergency. I'm not saying that facetiously. I really mean that. About the only place where we will go in emergency is where we have the supplement programs like, for example, rent supplements. We'll look at it if it is an emergent situation to try to get in there.

I appreciate your comments on the northern and remote housing. Just so you know, I believe that about $17 million of this total package that we'll have for affordable housing has been designated for northern and remote housing. There's also word that we received of another bunch of money coming out of Ottawa, and they're going to inform us of where that's going. Some of that may well be directed towards aboriginal housing, but it won't be in the remote areas. It's for urban aboriginals.

You referenced your having the reserves. Although we have a little bit, we don't do housing on reserves, nor will we, because what we've noticed in northeast Alberta is that where there's a reserve, there's generally pretty good housing, and next door where you have the nonreserve native person, the housing is not the greatest.

As I understand it, if your Grande Cache co-ops come up and meet the criteria, they would be eligible for the remote housing. There again the criteria is different from the overall affordable program, but what we are going to insist on, no matter where it happens, is that there is an accountability back for that housing. You're going to have to pay something, whatever you can afford, if you will. It's not going to be in the same manner as it was created about 30 years ago, where it was just given then. There was a lot of conflict and confusion over it. It's not smooth sailing for us. In some areas we have disputes over land ownership. So what do we put in there? It's not, in your case, with respect to the Grande Cache thing, but I do believe that in one area in northeast Alberta Wood Buffalo Housing Corporation, who's responsible for the housing in the whole region and municipality, will be taking on and have taken on a project in one of the remote communities that are within their bailiwick. Whether they will be doing all of them up there or not I don't know, but we'll be working very closely with them on those. Again, I must emphasize that there must be an accountability in it, and there has to be a fair way of allocating, because we're desperately short of homes up there.

The funds for feasibility studies generally are a onetime shot, and I can't give you a definitive answer right now on whether the one that you asked for would or would not qualify. As you know, I believe the Evergreen Foundation received housing from us for a feasibility study on Grande Cache, I think it is. So those are one time only – and I'd best leave those up to department staff – if they can afford them, whether it should be done or whatnot. So I can't give you a definitive statement there.

You mentioned Hinton, and Hinton is a very good example of what can and should be done between partnering, and that was, I believe, the town of Hinton got involved with us in that when the former WestView health authority was in there, Alberta Seniors was in there. That's a supportive housing complex that I believe goes into long-term care also, and it's all under one roof. In the same area, in Evansburg, in the Whitecourt-St. Anne constituency, that place is now occupied. The official opening is coming. Under one roof we've got the continuum of lodge to assisted, supportive assisted, all the way through to long-term care. So we're making, you know, in some places good progress.

With respect to Jasper, given all of the anomalies around Jasper, we would have to have a very, very good look at what is there, what we can predict, and whether we would ask a foundation to in fact go in there and start in that particular business. You know the details of Jasper better than I do, but I know enough about it where I would have to be somewhat cautious to ensure that what we were building there became or remained in fact affordable for occupants, given their particular circumstances. There is, as I understand it, a very close association between Hinton and Jasper. Seniors very often like to be close to good health facilities. Hinton has got the health facility. Hinton has got the airport. Maybe the folks in Jasper should be looking towards something. I don't know, but that's something that if you had a good look at the situation, it could be answered by people more learned than I with respect to what's happening in the area.

With that, I would like to thank all members for their comments, Mr. Chairman, and I'll take my place.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

Mr. Snelgrove: Colleagues, it's a great pleasure to introduce to you today the chief of the Onion Lake band. Chief Wallace Fox has just joined us in the gallery. Chief Fox is here with some people from Los Angeles from the Global Energy Solutions company, that's hopefully going to be bringing some pretty exciting stuff to Alberta in the future. That's Moshi and his wife, Shiomi Kreeneburg.* They're also accompanied by two other members from the Onion Lake band, Mr. Glen Soloy and Mr. George Dill.* I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of our Assembly.

Seniors (continued)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to get just a few last questions on the record, and knowing the time, I'll have to beg the minister's indulgence to answer these in writing. Just a couple of things. One is around the Canada/Alberta agreement on affordable housing, and if I could just get some clarification around figures, please. The minister wrote to the Edmonton Journal this morning, and in it he said that there was $23.5 million in new provincial funding for the development of more affordable housing in Alberta. Later he says that this provincial contribution is being matched by the federal government, bringing the total funding to $52.5 million for the 2002-03, '03-04 years. I'm wondering how he's arrived at the $23.5 million. If he could give me an exact breakdown of how that figure . . . [interjection] Well, he wrote the letter. His name is on it. It was printed in the Journal.

Mr. Woloshyn: Fifteen this year, 8 last year. The total is 23 and a half.

Ms Blakeman: Sir, it's signed the Minister of Seniors with the responsibility for housing and the member's name. It appears in the Edmonton Journal today. It says $23.5 million, and I'm wondering how he arrived at that figure, because when I look at the press release that came out from the government under the section for Seniors it says that the increase includes provincial funding of an additional $6.5 million being added to last year's $8.5 million budget increase for affordable housing, bringing provincial funding for the Canada/Alberta affordable housing program to $15 million for the '03-04 year. In fact, that's not the '03-04 year. The '03-04 year, if I'm reading this right, is $6.5 million. So somehow you're taking last year's money and adding it to this year's money and putting it in as a total. To carry on there, it says that an additional $20.5 million contribution by the Canadian Mortgage and Housing brings the total funding for affordable housing to $35 million for the '03-04 fiscal year. So he seems to be taking money from somewhere else. [interjection] Okay. Extends something over. Eight point five million dollars from last year and $15 million from this year gives us $23.5 million. Well, then, what gives with the press release that came out with the budget? Maybe the minister could break that one down.

Just a couple of last questions and comments, then, from one of the seniors' advocates who's noting the funding formula for the lodge assistance grants to foundations. Now, the minister has talked about money going directly to seniors in the lodge program. I'm still questioning about the differential grant program that exists and pushing the minister to make that more equal, because I find that it's the urban lodges that suffer the most there. He's shaking his head. Nonetheless, I'll continue to press.

The one question from last year I asked is around the SSHIP program. There was a million dollars of money left from the SSHIP program which the minister said was targeted to one or more specific projects. I'm wondering what projects benefited from that money and what stage of development they are in specifically.

Also, leftover from last year and appearing again this year is the performance measurement with a "percentage of seniors provided with the opportunity to apply for the Alberta Seniors Benefit." There's no target. It says, "to be established" and a new measurement. That's the second year that's been applied. I'm wondering what the problem is with that.

I'll just note that there are a number of elder abuse support systems that have sprung up in the community: the elder abuse peer support program at the YWCA, the elder abuse intervention team, which the minister noted, that comes through the city of Edmonton, and the Oak-Net, that I did a recognition on last week.

Also from another seniors' advocate. Making note of the cost of utilities again, the accessibility of health care services in rural regions, and the availability of reasonably priced seniors' housing are noted among their most important items. Again, the lack of standards for the smaller seniors' homes with three to four seniors in them, a lack of standards for seniors' training, and complaints about care received in such institutions.

Finally, from one of the seniors' centres the point is made passionately by the manager that the government have an understanding that volunteers are not free. They provide a very high quality of service, but they're not free. It does cost money to run the volunteer management programs and to provide the incentives, to have the monitoring, to have the appreciation programs in place for them. To quote:

There is a need to reaffirm the value of community voluntary organizations and to properly support and encourage the volunteers and the paid staff who actualize such significant and beneficial community services.

He notes that the "organizations need increased financial support from government with significantly reduced bureaucratic efforts to obtain such funds in order to do their task." I'm wondering if that isn't a reference to something like Wild Rose, where the manager has to go to great lengths to make a grant application to get money to support their volunteer efforts.

I've just heard of something that seems a little odd, but I'll bring it before the minister, and that's an issue that seems to be coming from the denturists, that some seniors in trying to find extra money are getting an estimate for dentures done, submitting the receipts, getting the reimbursement, and then never ordering the dentures or, worse still, never picking them up. If this has come to the minister's attention in the past, this has just come to mine. I don't believe that most seniors would resort to that, but knowing some of the seniors that I've spoken to, I can understand them feeling that they needed to do that, especially around the increased utility costs and the housing costs. So maybe if I can get something back from the minister about that.

Finally, in the seconds that I have left, you know, the minister is the Minister of Seniors, which, in my opinion, goes from 65 to death. I understand that he's not responsible for long-term care; nonetheless, for everybody else that looks at the minister, they see that he is. We need a stronger line of communication and influence happening there. I appreciate when the minister says: well, you know, in these extended care situations there are so many minutes or hours a day of care that are supposed to be given to people. Yes, there is, and it's something like an hour and 45 minutes . . . [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 22, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/22

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Economic Development

The Chair: I would ask if there are any questions, comments to be offered with respect to these estimates and budget.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I expect the minister to get up and give us an overview.

Mr. Norris: Well, Mr. Chairman, far be it for me to disappoint the hon. member opposite. I would love to make some comments about what I feel is probably one of the most remarkable departments in our government, and I will open my comments by giving an introduction and a big thank you to some people who have joined us here tonight. In the members' gallery we have with us from our department Duane Pyear and Assistant Deputy Minister Rick Sloan, if you want to stand up. Mark Erdman, don't stand up; you'll hit the roof. You can stand up. There he is. Deputy Minister Barry Mehr, and next to him is Anthony Lemphers, our finance; Lou Normand, who's involved in our value-added strategy; and of course Colin Jeffares. This is part of the team of Economic Development, which is why we're clearly doomed.

Anyway, I would like to give a brief overview of what our department does and then answer any questions that come forward. I guess that in a nutshell, Mr. Chairman, what we look for in Economic Development are ways to continue the program that was put in place by Premier Klein, which is diversifying our economy, and in order to do that, we've come with a few strategies. Why do we want to diversify obviously is a simple question. We're looking for continued prosperity for this generation and every other generation that follows to continue making Alberta the best place in Canada and certainly the world to live. In order for us to do that, we've taken the resources and energy of this department and come up with a few strategies that I would like to outline tonight and then answer any questions members might have.

The first strategy that I wanted to touch on very simply, Mr. Chairman, is our value-added strategy. That was addressed in the throne speech by Premier Klein, and it looks at ways of getting our commodity-based economy to the highest level of export goods. It's a way that the government can assist not in picking winners and losers so much as understanding what industry's needs are, relaying them back to the government, and making sure that we're doing the best job we can on behalf of Alberta industries.

Of course, we know the key industry in Alberta is oil and gas. That doesn't change, and it's not likely to change in our lifetime, but we're looking down the road past that, Mr. Chairman. Of course, agriculture is a very, very big producer; forestry, tourism, and industrial construction. So when we talk to industry about ways to make this the best business platform to deal with, those are what we're looking at. We're looking at listening to them and working on it.

The second strategy that we're looking at, Mr. Chairman, is a rural development strategy. We're working in conjunction with the hon. Member for Wainwright and the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, and we're trying to identify ways to keep rural Alberta healthy. It's for a number of different reasons, but most obviously is that most if not all of our resources are extracted from rural Alberta, whether it's oil and gas, coal, forestry, agriculture, et cetera. We want to find out what makes rural Alberta strong and keep it healthy so that the incredible growth that's going on in the Edmonton/Calgary corridor can be sustained as well as building on that with rural Alberta. We're working very hard with, as I said, the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. We will have a joint policy hopefully in the next short while to articulate that a bit better.

The third strategy we're working on is an aboriginal framework. For a number of different reasons, Mr. Chairman, this has taken on a great interest and importance to Albertans. As you know, we are dealing with the hon. minister of aboriginal and northern affairs as well as the chairman of the Northern Alberta Development Council as well as the hon. minister of sustainable resources to try and identify how we extract the resources at the least cost to the First Nations aboriginals and how to get them more involved in the extraction of these resources and the development for their own communities and the good of all Alberta.

One strategy that I'm particularly proud to say that we've worked on, Mr. Chairman, is our tourism strategy. As you'll know, we recently announced some additional funding, recognition of our government's understanding that there is some work we can do to help promote this glorious province of Alberta not only to other Canadians, North Americans but to the world. As a result, we want to see our gross receipts from tourism grow dramatically, and hopefully we're on the right track with that. We have identified markets around the world that choose Alberta as a destination over and over again, those being the United Kingdom, Germany, and Japan. So we've set up offices or are increasing our presence there to let the message be known, and we're working with the industry itself, Mr. Chairman, to try and understand how we can get to the next level with them and make that particular industry grow and flourish.

The final strategy that we're working on, Mr. Chairman, is international markets, and for obvious reasons Albertans are some of the best exporters of goods and commodities in the world. We do most of our trade with the United States. We'd like to get away from that dependency a small amount. Of our $150 billion gross domestic product about 87 percent of that is exports to the United States, and we want to identify other markets so that in the event that the United States slows down or that there are some challenges in their economy, we're not held to it the way some other provinces are and find ourselves in the position that they find themselves in. Of course, when we do that, we help expose Alberta businesses to the rest of the world, and we do that internally. As I said, all of this is driven by diversifying our economy, continuing to make it strong, and continuing to make it the envy of the rest of Canada.

One of the things that we've been working on quite vigilantly, Mr. Chairman, is ways in which we can get the Alberta advantage message out and keep the Alberta advantage strong. We define that Alberta advantage as an outstanding place to do business, hopefully low government regulations, broad-based low taxes, identifying why people want to choose Alberta to make that their home. As you know, under Premier Klein and the class of '93 some 500,000 people have chosen since '93 to make Alberta their home, and that has taken our population base from 2.6 million to the current 3.1 million. That comes with some challenges, and we want to make sure that we can sustain that kind of growth.

So those are kind of the main programs we're working on, Mr. Chairman. We want to make sure that we listen to industry, all of them. We want to identify emerging industries and markets that are becoming available to Alberta companies and the Alberta government, and we want to continue to grow what we believe is the best economy in Canada and certainly the world.

So I want to close by saying that I'm very, very proud of what I've learned in this department, very proud of how we've worked with industry and let them know that we will continue to do so.

I'll be happy to answer any questions now, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for your time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm hoping that we can follow the same format this evening in estimates as we have in other instances, and that's where we ask a couple of questions, the minister answers them, and then we can carry on from there with the first hour for opposition and the next hour for everyone who wants to engage in the Assembly.

First of all, I'd like to thank all of the staff that's here. They work hard to make you look good, Mr. Minister.

An Hon. Member: Well fed.

Ms Carlson: And well fed. Yes. A lot of overtime goes into that I'm sure. But I also know that your staff really likes you for some reason, and everyone I've talked to seriously appreciates working for you, so we'll have to work a little harder to find out why that is, but we'll keep at it.

This is a ministry that used to be known as the cookies and pork ministry, and those were in the '93 days that you talked about earlier. It got pared down quite significantly. Now it looks like it might be bloating up a little bit more, so we'll be keeping our eye on the ball here to make sure that we're getting good value for our money.

It's interesting to note that during the cookies and pork time, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora was a part of that team, survived the cuts, and that makes him perhaps craftier than we had anticipated as well, so we'll have to keep an eye over in that corner of the Legislature too.

An Hon. Member: That makes him the cookie.

Ms Carlson: Makes him the cookie. Doesn't look like the pork, but he could be the cookie. That's true.

So we'll watch what's happening here as the money gets added. Where we see the most money being added this year is in tourism areas, and I don't necessarily disagree with that strategy. Certainly we have a huge draw in this province when we take a look at Jasper, Banff, and Calgary, but it seems that we don't get much of a tourism draw over and above that. Now, I know that for a decade, at least, people in Alberta have been concerned about the amount of money that has been drawn into those three target areas and the little amount of spillover there is for the rest of the province both in terms of money spent from economic development and tourism and people who actually visit.

So I'm wondering what the minister has in mind in terms of focusing a little more on northern development and also focusing on something that I've noticed in our travels. When we go to an area that's new – and I'm usually the one arranging for the touring around the area – what happens is that I look for tourist highlights, and then

I look for ways to get to those places. It doesn't matter if it takes one hour or two days; if it's interesting and transportation is readily accessible, then that's what we do.

It seems like when I look at the tour books that are offered or any of the tour guides that you can buy in a bookstore, for instance, what someone from out-of-country would be buying about Alberta, you don't see these kinds of connections obviously. When I take a look here in the advertising that we do, be it through Travel Alberta or any other kind of venue, the roadside stops for tourist information, I don't see those hookups readily. I don't see a bus tour that can take me from Jasper to Lake Louise to Banff to Calgary to Drumheller to Edmonton and then back to Jasper so that I can continue on with whatever my connections are. I'm wondering what kind of a focus the minister is putting on that in addition.

So northern development. I know the mayors in the northern cities are quite happy with the relationship they have with you, but let the Assembly know how much money you're spending, how much focus you're putting on that, and if you're taking a look at making any of those connections at this time.

Mr. Norris: Well, I'd like to thank the hon. member for her comments. I wasn't around in '93 when the pork and cookies were being handed out, but by bloating I presume that you mean the department and not me personally, so I won't take any offence to that comment.

I guess, in answer to your question, that when we're looking at development of any region, it's not sectorized into northern, southern, central, Edmonton, Calgary, et cetera, but we do spend a lot of time on regional economic alliances. The reason we do that is that we've found that when you're marketing a region, it's far more marketable than if you're marketing specific cities or towns in that particular region. So we do have a number of alliances throughout the province of Alberta that receive support from our department: CAEP in central Alberta, Grizzly in northern Alberta, Growth, Hub, Palliser I think is in southern Alberta. They're regional alliances where MDs and towns get together and say: we want your assistance in marketing this region to the world and to other businesses who might be setting up here.

What I've found very fascinating is that there is a large industry of site selectors. Companies no longer take the time to go out and do the work where they go and visit the mayors and the reeves, et cetera, to see what's available. They get online, or they'll go to a conference, and you have to be represented as a region for those site selectors to take interest in your area. We've had a number of good successes, particularly with the international region, which is Leduc/Nisku/Millet, et cetera, where people say: "What's in the area? Are there good transportation links? Are there good resources? Is there good education, good infrastructure? Are there recreational opportunities? Are there arts?" Things of that nature.

When we put all those packages together, that's where we spend most of our time and energy trying to promote the province. So as far as northern development, what we look for in conjunction with my colleague from sustainable resources is to identify what the key industries are there now and how we can help them succeed but also what the region has to offer. We found that to be a good solution.

With regard to the tourism question that you had raised, what we are trying to do overall – and this is fundamental to our tourism industry – is to be competitive with our biggest competitor to the west, British Columbia, and our biggest competitor to the east, Ontario. Fundamentally, what we see is that the role of the Alberta government is to market the province, and that's it. We don't market hotels. We don't market malls. We don't market Calgary Stampedes and Edmonton Klondike Days. We go out to the international marketplace and say, "Here's what you will find if you come to Alberta: pristine lakes, beautiful rivers, mountain vistas, et cetera." Once we get them here, then it's the job of the Calgary Stampedes and the Edmonton Klondike Days to draw them in, and they do that through various ways like you talked about: airports, points of entry, border crossings.

Where Travel Alberta does get involved is that we do produce three or four different guides, which I'll be happy to supply to you. They're all for different regions – mountain, central, south, north, et cetera – and they do outline what is available for tourism opportunities in those particular regions. What we've tried to do is to say that if you're coming to Calgary or Edmonton, which are the two gateways to Alberta, please don't go on through Kamloops and into Vancouver or through the Okanagan Valley to Vancouver, which is really what all the evidence says is happening. Stay and go east, and you'll find remarkable opportunities here in Alberta: Cold Lake, the Lakeland district, Fort McMurray, et cetera.

So we're developing trails, and we're doing this in conjunction with the Minister of Transportation for the signage of those trails. We have the Grande Alberta Trail. We have the Poundmaker Trail, the Dinosaur Trail. What we're saying is: "Yes, if you come to Calgary, please stay and enjoy the Stampede, but don't leave. Go east and see what's in the Badlands area, what's in Drumheller. Go to Rosebud; check out the world-renowned passion play." Where we see our role in our guides is talking about those things. We do it in conjunction with industry, who buy into this and tell us: this is what we really need to be talking about in this particular region. Your comment is a very valid one. There is no simple way to get people out of the main cities and the mountain regions heading east in Alberta, but we are making a stab at it, and we are trying to promote those trails quite a bit more.

The final comment I'd like to make about northern development – and this ties in with the hon. minister of aboriginal affairs – is that we are looking at some kind of tourism destination that would be done in conjunction with First Nations Albertans where it's an historical camp, for want of a better term, where you would go live a day in the life of 1860. It's modeled after the Polynesian theme camp in Hawaii. Unfortunately, we haven't been able to go over and tour it, but at some point we'd like to. As I understand it, the central hub is the Polynesian people, and then you go to the Maori camp, et cetera, et cetera. What's really exciting is that the First Nations elders have now allowed us an insight into a day in their life, so it could take form. We get overwhelming response from German and Japanese visitors that this is something that they'd like to see, and that would clearly be located in northern Alberta. So we're looking at that as kind of a package where you would come into Edmonton or Calgary and then tour around and have reasons to go visit and then tie them into the marketing materials.

I hope that answers your question.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. [interjection] A little friendly competition here.

Mr. Norris: Don't fight, girls. There's plenty to go around.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, dear. That was a mistake, Mr. Minister. This night could be longer than you thought.

There are two issues that I wanted to raise with the minister, both of them around tourism marketing. I listened carefully to what he said about marketing the province – in other words, the natural resources of the province, one presumes – and that once people get here, then it's up to the various sectors to reach out and try and snag that tourist dollar. There are two things here. When the minister appeared before Public Accounts, I pointed out to him that I felt that in the way some of his programs were set up, the access points and the very criteria and eligibility might be precluding the arts community from gaining access to tourism points. As I was discussing this later when I dropped by the Alberta Craft Council, their manager perked up his ears and went: "Well, actually, Laurie, that's exactly what is happening. Maybe you could ask the minister this." So here I am, asking the minister.

The Alberta Craft Council at www.albertacraft.ab.ca has been trying to link with the Travel Alberta site at www.travelalberta.com because they have two things on their web site that are of great interest to people. I don't know what the minister is interested in when he travels, but I know that a lot of people when they travel are interested in local crafts, and we have some very fine craftspeople here in the province. What the Craft Council had put together was a map of Alberta showing where you could find fine crafts. These have been juried in some cases and have a stamp of approval to them, if you like, but it's saying: this is good stuff. They have a map on their web site that shows where you can access these different craftspeople across Alberta, and they also have a calendar of events where there might be craft fairs, for example, or certain days or that kind of thing. So it only makes sense that they could be able to link with the www.travelalberta.com site, and they are getting a big zero. They cannot connect there, and nobody is returning their calls. Nobody will help them. Nobody will interact with them at all. I'm thinking: this doesn't make sense to me.

Maybe the minister knows why Travel Alberta is not willing to work with the Alberta Craft Council in promoting these fine craftspeople across the province. Certainly, shopping is one of the things that tourists like to do, and here is an opportunity where it's being provided for them in colour and on a web site if Travel Alberta would just link with them. So I'm going to put that to the minister. I'll wait for his response, and I can send that back to the Alberta Craft Council. I'm hoping we can make this happen because it's a win/win. It helps our craftspeople, our artists and artisans here, and that money stays in the community. That's new money that's brought into the communities from the tourism dollar and that stays there. So it doesn't make sense to me why this is going off the rails.

To mix my metaphors, not going off the rails but going on the snowmobile tracks, I know that the minister attended the Alberta Snowmobile Association jamboree in I think it was Bonnyville-Cold Lake two years ago and waxed enthusiastic at the banquet and dinner about what a great idea these trails were and the possibilities for tourism. I guess the minister hasn't heard my speech about tourism dollars in snowmobiling, but that's big money. There really aren't enough places to keep me in Alberta. I find myself reluctantly – nonetheless, I do it – crossing the border into either B.C. or into Montana, Wyoming with my tourism dollars and my snowmobile on the trailer on the truck, which of course needs to be gassed up. The snowmobiles need gas and sometimes they need parts, and I'm going to stay in a hotel, and I'm going to buy restaurant meals. There are a lot of tourism dollars that are driving either south or west.

There have been a number of different schemes that different governments have come up with over time, sometimes allotting I think in the States and maybe B.C. as well a certain percentage of the gas tax. I'll tell you that I'm not in favour of that, because I think that as soon as you start designating certain parts of taxes, then everybody wants another little piece of it. When they want more, then the taxes start to go up, and that is not a good way to control that kind of thing. So I'm personally not in favour of it, but there are a number of different schemes.

I'm looking to see whether the minister is either looking inside his own department for development of a snowmobile trail system or multi-use trail system or whether he's been working with his colleague the Minister of Community Development on the multi-use trail system, Alberta Trailnet, which is part of the Trans Canada Trail, or whether he's looking at funding some of these trail developments, whether he's looking at promoting it, whether we can get cross-linkage on web sites, what possibilities. I notice the Minister of Government Services sitting beside the Minister of Economic Development, and he has in his backyard phenomenal snowmobiling in the Crowsnest Pass as a tourism destination, which I've been to, and also Pincher Creek. So we have some pretty wonderful places to snowmobile in Alberta, but we have never really come to terms with it and taken it seriously as a destination even to keep our own Albertans inside of Alberta traveling with their tourism dollars.

Those are my two pet peeves with what's happening with linkages with tourism in Alberta and the structured tourism that's under the minister's department's steadfast refusal to be flexible enough and to – here I go with that hated cliché – think outside the box, to work with both the arts and snowmobiling. So I'll leave those for the minister to comment on.

Thank you.

Mr. Norris: Well, I would like to thank the hon. member for her questions. I think she knows that I have a specific fondness for the arts. In fact, I was a performer in a musical. I was Bud, the singing cowboy, in a Grant MacEwan musical, and they were some of the best times of my life.

This may come as a big surprise, but I do not disagree at all as to what the arts offer for tourism. It makes me disheartened to hear that Travel Alberta has not been responding to such an obvious opportunity, and we will rectify that immediately. In fact, the ADM is here, and we'll discuss it right after this. But you do make a very good point. In certain instances people think you're coming to Alberta for the Calgary Stampede or West Edmonton Mall or the Rockies, but you know we have the Fringe in Edmonton, that brings in some 800,000 people in a 10-day period. It's a remarkable experience. The Big Valley Jamboree, which started in Big Valley and has since moved to Camrose, is a remarkable opportunity, not only an economic driver but bringing people from Saskatchewan, Montana, Idaho, British Columbia. These are cultural events; these are not tourism destinations. You're right: we must recognize what they can offer and look to Edinburgh, Scotland, as the grandfather of all Fringes. The biggest annual tourism draw they have in the country of Scotland is that particular event, and it's a cultural one.

So you'll get no argument from me that we need to look at that. I'm not really sure why there wouldn't be a link or why we wouldn't have access to a link. I have not designed the program myself, so I can't comment on the technology of it, but in principle it's a very good idea, and we will do it. That's a simple commitment I can make to you.

The other comment I would make on culture is that we find in an awful lot of instances that we're crossing with Community Development, so the Minister of Community Development may be working on something that I'm unaware of. We focus on how to make the experience in Alberta that much better for visitors. If it regards shopping or if it's touring around and seeing different cultural events – I mentioned the Rosebud Theatre. You know, we've got the beautiful Fort Macleod down in the Crowsnest Pass area. These are remarkable tourism opportunities. In Lac La Biche there's the original mission, that is attempting to be restored to its original grandeur. You get the sense that when they came down the rivers and they stopped and they found this site and they built it, they were very courageous people, and we should embrace that. So we are looking at ways of funding that, and part of the new dollars that we received for tourism are going into product redevelopment and new product development. If it's a feasibility study that helps that community get it off the ground, so be it. If it's something that they've already got – in the case of the Lac La Biche Mission they have the ability to have banquets, but their kitchen is in the basement. They have no way to get the food up, and they need an elevator. These are simple fixes. That's not a lot of money, and that's somewhere we can help in product development so that the experience is that much better.

So I do take your comment, and I know that my department is noting it as well. I wouldn't be surprised if we don't have that link done, well, clearly before this tourism season. I think it needs to be done. Recognizing other areas that do such a good job of it: people will flock to the New England states in the fall to look at the trees, one of their biggest tourism seasons, to see the turning of the leaves. They have some term for it. Well, they recognize that that's an opportunity, and they hammer on it, and that's something we're going to try and do more through tourism. So I support what you're saying, and you won't get an argument from me on that.

With regard to the snowmobile program, you are talking about one of my favourite opportunities because I'm a sledder as well and grew up in the Pigeon Lake area doing that and love it. I now live in the west Edmonton part of the city, and nothing makes me sadder on a Saturday when I'm out with my kids than to see sleds loaded up heading to McBride and Valemount and Kamloops and taking dollars. They all have Alberta licence plates; they don't say British Columbia. They're all leaving here, and they're leaving here for a number of different reasons. Now, in some cases we have to be quite factual. The snow there is better at certain times. Last year we had a bit of a light snow season, so that's part of it, but another part of it is access to trails and the ability to get on those trails.

In answer to your question, I know that right now I'm working on a joint ministry initiative with the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and the hon. Minister of Community Development to say: listen; we have these remarkable opportunities in the Crowsnest Pass, Kananaskis Country on through Lac La Biche, Cold Lake, those areas. They're virtually tied together now through volunteer work. Volunteers man them. They clean them. They put up huts. They do it all voluntarily. They even produce their own maps. So this year for the coming season I know that Travel Alberta is looking at integrating all the good work that they've done and making sure that that's not overlooked.

One comment that I think has to be made is that there are steps being taken to get there. The Iron Horse Trail, as you probably know, announced just recently that they've now tied up 300 kilometres of old CN rail track, and that is going to be for sledding. That means that you can start at 10 o'clock in the morning and finish at 6 o'clock in the afternoon and not go down the same route twice. It's glorious. We did it last year with the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake and the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. It's a remarkable experience. What they have done is all volunteer, so now we're working with them to get to the next level. Again, I said: maybe it's a feasibility study; maybe it's saying how many dollars are needed for signage. That's a big part of it. Where do you stage? What do you have for staging? Then the town starts to see the economic benefits that are remarkable. They really are. But it's Albertans spending money in Alberta.

Where we have to take the next step, quite frankly, is into Wyoming, Idaho, Montana, where it's a hugely popular pastime. They're going to other places, and we're trying to say: you don't have to. I know that I met with the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod's group down there. I believe they're called the Crow Snow Riders, a great volunteer group, and they're doing exactly the same thing as the Iron Horse does. In theory you could start in the Crowsnest Pass, through K Country, and all the way up into Cold Lake uninterrupted on a sled, which would take three or four days at a minimum, and think of the economic spin-offs of that. So it's just a matter of tying all the pieces together, and we are committed to it. Fortunately or unfortunately, the money for that kind of project doesn't fall under my department. As the hon. member noted, it had a significant budget before. We target more investment and trade. Tourism is one major part of it. With the additional funding we're hoping to get to that level and start building what we see as great opportunities in Alberta.

8:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to follow up on some comments the minister made. He's talked now about two cross-ministry initiatives, one being the aboriginal theme park and now the snowmobiling. So could you outline for us what other cross-ministry initiatives you're involved in and the indicators that you're using to measure the results of those initiatives?

Then just to go back to the aboriginal theme park for a moment, you've talked about this before, and we expected by this budget year to see it really up and running. Given the amount of unemployment, another disadvantage that this particular community has, we would like to see some inroads made here through a number of ministries, including your own. So if you could talk about a time line for that and any other initiatives you might have on the aboriginal side.

Mr. Norris: I can answer the first question. I'm sorry; I didn't quite catch the second. With regard to cross-government initiatives that we're working on right now, I outlined that one of the major ones is a value-added strategy. There are nine other departments that are involved in that. Our ministry takes the lead. I can list them for you: Energy, Sustainable Resources, Environment, Innovation and Science, Finance, Revenue, Agriculture, and Aboriginal Affairs. As I said in my opening comments, that's one where we're looking at not shipping out commodities in the raw form anymore, and how do we do that in any industry? It's not specific to any specific industry but all industries in Alberta.

Another cross-ministry initiative we're working on is a rural development strategy with the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. I alluded to that earlier. The hon. Member for Wainwright and the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake are heading up that committee, and we hope to have a strategy within the next six months, as I outlined, looking at rural development and ways that this government can make sure it ensures its livelihood.

Another cross-ministry initiative we're working on is with the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science. He heads up a body called ASRA, which is the Alberta Science and Research Authority. I head up a body called AEDA, which is the Alberta Economic Development Authority. We have got to a point in Alberta where we have some of the best research and development in all of Canada. There's no surprise about that. I think the University of Alberta was number one in receiving research dollars both publicly and privately, and the University of Calgary came in second. We are developing a number of new technologies every day. There's great news coming out of those research institutions. How do we commercialize on it? I know the hon. member is working on our cross-ministry initiative to come forward with a strategy that says: here's how we think we can do it with government playing a role.

So those are the three major ones we're working on. If there are others, I'll take it under advisement and get you the information on them. The second question I didn't hear.

Ms Carlson: The second question was how you're measuring your performance there. If we take a look at what you've talked about in terms of diversifying value added, it's a great goal, but it's the same goal Peter Lougheed won the election with 33 years ago. So, you know, we need some results. [interjection] Well, I hear some desk thumping, and, yes, it was a great idea. I believe his campaign at that time was: we're going to do it now. Yet we're still sending raw logs out of the country, we're still sending wheat that hasn't been refined into value-added products, and we're still sending crude oil. So we need some performance measures, and I think we need some reporting back on how successful you are. So if you could just tell us what it is that you're using to measure the results of your initiatives.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, obviously, like any small-, medium-, or large-sized business we do have methods of measuring our results. Clearly, they're open to various forms of scrutiny, and we do produce documents on a regular basis. We have a monthly document that goes out about Alberta exports, and we have a yearly document on our international offices called AIMS, the Alberta international marketing strategy, that outlines what we are trying to do and trying to accomplish.

One of the methods that we use is the volume of exports. Have they increased or decreased? I'm very proud to say that because of some brilliant policies put in place in 1993, they have increased every year since then. Our GDP volume has virtually doubled since 1993. It was some $85 billion. It's now $150 billion. So that's clearly an indication of some success. The number of jobs that have been created in Alberta since 1993 are in excess of 350,000. That's people coming from out of province looking for an opportunity in Alberta. So that's clearly a measure of success. The average income for Albertans is the highest in all of Canada.

There are a number of indicators that we look at to say, "Are we successful?" the same way a business would. Do I have more customers or less? Is my volume of sales greater or less? Is my bottom line better? We translate that to the same methodology for the government.

I heeded your comment about our former Premier Lougheed, who embarked on a program of diversification, and would respectfully disagree that it hasn't happened. It's happened in spades. There was a time here in Alberta not so long ago when we would ship carcasses down to Toronto and have them dressed and sent back to Alberta because it was just more convenient to do so. Well, now we have three or four of the best packing plants in all of Canada operating here in Alberta. That was a specific initiative to say: "Why are we doing it? Why are we sending the raw goods out?" A lot of it is market driven. We recognize that it's always going to be that way. It's the industry that's going to tell us what they want to do, but we have made a huge amount of headway.

Our petrochemical industry, for sake of example, is now some $9 billion. Joffre and Fort Saskatchewan are, of course, there for a reason. They didn't just happen. It dovetailed on to the fact that Alberta is blessed with natural gas and oil, and we said: "Well, what's the next step? What's the next logical step?" We're not going to send it down to the Gulf coast, where it'll be transformed into goods. We're not going to ship it over to Taiwan, where it can be transformed into goods.

So there have been successes, but they're measured against what I believe is a market economy, and under the market economy we allow businesses in Alberta to determine where they want to go. I think our job, then, quite simply is to say: well, we would like you to look at this because where value added is is where the dollars are, and it's where the jobs are, and it's the long-term sustainability. Once the raw goods are shipped out, you get a certain dollar value for it. Once you start upgrading it, you get significantly more.

So I'd say the program – you're probably correct. Has it worked a hundred percent? I don't know. I wouldn't say yes or no, but I would say that it gave us a great platform. You mentioned earlier about some of the trips that we take to promote the province. One recent one was to Minnesota to talk to Cargill, and Cargill's next step will be to get the store-ready. They're not at that point right now, so they're producing in-bulk boxed goods. We're saying get to the next stage of value added, which is store-ready. So we aren't there yet, but I don't know when that cycle will ever end, because there are always new technologies coming onstream.

So I guess in answer to your question, what Premier Lougheed started was a brilliant plan. Was it as successful as he might have liked? I'd have to ask him. I don't have that answer, but do we see where we can continue on growing it? Oh, absolutely, and that's what we're really looking at. So it's not that it's stalled or it's not happening. It's just that government isn't going to intervene because that's not the way this government operates. Other governments might do that. If you look to our neighbours to the east, you'll see intervention in every single industry, and you'll see it propped up by huge taxation dollars, and you'll see a bloated debt that they can't support. Well, if you look at Alberta, you don't see that, because we're letting business drive the economy.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. When I take a look at the business plan, there's a big focus this year on the film industry, and it isn't one of the things you talked about in terms of a cross-ministry initiative, yet I know the Minister of Community Development likes to take a lot of credit for what happens in that particular field. We know that your department operates the Alberta film office and that it was created in August of this past year. So can you tell us how the opening of the new office has helped the film industry and what kinds of returns Albertans can expect on their investments in the film industry now and any other details you may have, like how many films were made last year or what the projection is for this year and how that differs from other years?

Mr. Norris: At the outset, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to thank the hon. member for such excellent questions. I believe that at the heart of it we're talking about economic development and diversification. The film industry is a real jewel in Alberta's industries, and you're right. There is a cross-ministry – it's not an initiative. It's an ongoing arrangement with the hon. Minister of Community Development. Under his department sits the Alberta film development fund and under our department sits the commission, two very distinct operations. The film fund is obviously the granting body. The commission is the marketing arm of Alberta film in conjunction with the Alberta producers.

What we saw happening was that in other jurisdictions, regarding the film industry, there were a number of different government interventions: tax credits, flow-through shares, labour credits, et cetera. Well, the government of Alberta doesn't do that, so we established a different kind of fund that is a leveraged fund with industry. That fund started in 1998, I believe – I could stand to be corrected, but I believe it's 1998 – and at that time film in Alberta had hit an all-time low in revenues. I think it was some $75 million.

The industry calls what we have in Alberta God's backlot, and I agree. There's every single form of setting imaginable that you could find, from the badlands to the Rockies to the Cold Lake area to the lakeland country. We have everything that's required for film shooting. We also have a remarkable industry through places such as NAIT and SAIT, where they get their training and then, of course, through the local TV stations, where they earn their wings.

So what we determined that we would try and do is work with them in conjunction with the hon. Minister of Community Development and our department to not direct the industry but to help it grow. Since that fund's inception I'm proud to say that the gross sales have risen from about $75 million to I think just under $400 million this year. It employs a staggering amount of high-tech jobs, which is very, very good for Alberta, and we are getting more and more productions. I think that at this point there are some seven major motion pictures either being filmed here or under way. The most recent, of course, was White Coats, that was shot in the old Charles Camsell hospital. I understand that Kevin Costner is now going to be signing on to do his sequel to Dances with Wolves in the Canmore-Cochrane area. So we're very excited about what's happening in that regard, and we see it as assistance to an industry that is putting it on a level playing field with the other jurisdictions in Canada. That's the most recognizable way to describe building this industry.

Where do we see it going? We'd like to see it as a billion dollar industry. We'd like to see that the people who are employed here don't have to go seasonally to Vancouver when work wraps up on series and short television shows here. We'd like year-round work, taking advantage of everything that we have in Alberta, to keep the people employed here and continuing to live here in Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. We could go on and on on this. It's, as the minister I'm sure agrees, a fascinating topic for discussion and one that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has said has been at the core of political debate in Alberta for more than 30 years.

My first question is a structural one about the operations of the government. Just sitting here, I made a note about the number of different departments and related organizations involved in what I would consider economic development. Of course, there's the Minister of Economic Development, the Minister of Innovation and Science. We have Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, the Northern Alberta Development Council, under the chairmanship of the Member for Peace River. There's Sustainable Resource Development, Community Development, which is responsible for the museums, which are some of the most important tourist draws, Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Then there's a department like Learning, which is responsible for the universities, which are drivers of the high-tech industry in Alberta.

It strikes me that there are too many players here, that it's a very fragmented structure, and frankly there are a lot of government departments. There are more now than there have been in several years. Of course, the risk in that – I think, for example, of people in my constituency doing high-tech work at the University of Alberta, and they end up dealing with many different organizations. They might have the heritage medical foundation. They have the university itself, the Department of Learning, and on and on it goes. I would be interested in hearing the minister's thoughts and his awareness of issues and solutions to the situation in which there are probably just under provincial jurisdiction 10 or a dozen significant players in economic development.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I address your question, I do want to touch on one thing you said that I agree wholeheartedly with: education bodies being huge economic drivers and the amount of economic activity that takes place at the University of Calgary, Mount Royal College, SAIT, which just got a new $12 million aviation facility, the University of Alberta. Certainly all of these things are very, very important to the local economies, and it is something that we have to look more strongly at because as a knowledge-based economy grows, you're going to need those institutions to thrive. It's one of the cornerstones of any good economy, so I appreciate you identifying education. It's something that I think we both agree on.

I guess I'd take you back to 1993 and answer your question. At that point, we found ourselves with deficits on an annual basis and a debt of about some 22 billion dollars. Decisions were made at that point to say: we're going to get these departments focused, and we're going to get them focused in a way that they're going to drive their industries specific to their departments. Economic Development at that point had some 1,200 employees, a $200 million budget, as I recall, and was pared down to focus on marketing: marketing Alberta industries, marketing the province, marketing tourism, and as you note, the tourism department was also wrapped up into Economic Development.

So the powers that be at that time identified that economic development is not a role of a government to intervene, it's not picking winners and losers, it's not giving loan guarantees, but it is a job to help industry market itself to the world. If you think about it, when you have a company, you're identifying your markets and you're looking to grow your business. When you want to step out and you get bigger, you look to where you can grow and you look to maybe where the government can assist you in that program. So I think that was the decision that was made at that point. Where we end up now is we have the departments that you referenced working solely on developing those industries. For instance, Sustainable Resource Development works hard with the forestry industry on their FMAs, how to make them better, what's good about them, what we can change.

Mr. Cardinal: About seven days a week.

Mr. Norris: And sometimes eight.

That's the role of the ministry. The Economic Development ministry then takes whatever information, strategic and other, that these departments feed in and works through our department to go and market that word, and we determine that that's the best way to do it. So if you will, compare it to a large company, say Ford for sake of example. You're going to have a department that's responsible for research and development, you're going to have a department of human resources, and you're going to have a marketing branch. We are deemed to be the marketing branch of the Alberta government in that sense of the word. So we work very closely with the Energy department for obvious reasons, Agriculture, and we go out and talk about what's going on there and what the advantages are of being in Alberta.

I don't see it as duplication in any way, shape, or form. I'm very proud to say that the relationships we do have with the economic driving departments such as Energy, Sustainable Resources, Agriculture are very good ones, and we feed off each other rather than duplicate work, and that allows us to be a smaller department, use less resources, but get the message out in what we feel is a more effective way. So I guess in the old Tom Peters book, you know, we're sticking to our knitting. We do what we know, and we let them do what they know, and hopefully when we work together, the message gets out loud and clear.

I think that's really the response to your question that I would give. We are not trying to duplicate. As a matter of fact, we're trying to eliminate layers to continue to grow the economy.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to spend a little bit of time talking about the hotel tax now, Mr. Minister. In the early part of this month we saw a couple of interesting articles in the newspapers where you talked about in one case that was reported an additional levy on the hotel tax, but it seems like the main theme running through these articles was just dedicating the 5 percent provincial tax on hotel rooms now to marketing industry. I know that's something that the industry has been asking for for many years and certainly as long as I've been in this Legislature. So I would like to ask you how that's going. We didn't see it in the budget, so obviously you didn't get the green light this year. Do you think you're going to in the future? Can you talk about that tax relative to other jurisdictions in terms of how much they charge, what others do, and what you may be projecting as the impact of reduced travel with things like SARS happening and other kinds of risks in terms of distance travel these days. If you could comment on those items.

8:50

The Chair: Hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, the first thing I would like to clarify: the additional tax that you were talking about came out of a comment that was made in Red Deer. That was never part of our program, nor is it my personal desire to do that. There is a hotel tax in Alberta. It's 5 percent, and it generates anywhere from $45 million to $55 million depending on the kind of year we have. That money goes into general revenues, which is then used for other programs.

We had the hon. Member from Edmonton-Glenora strike a committee, and he worked exceptionally hard. The hon. Member from West Yellowhead was on it. I'm looking around for others.

An Hon. Member: Did he work hard?

Mr. Norris: Very.

Anyway, the end result of the committee is that they came back from industry with recommendations, and one of the recommendations was to convert the hotel tax to a marketing levy. That 5 percent would then mean a sustainable amount of money that would go into tourism marketing, in around the $45 million to $50 million range. Now, why did we want to do that?

We have examined very carefully our two biggest competitors, British Columbia and Ontario. They have methodologies of doing this. British Columbia's method is part general revenue, part hotel tax. Ontario's is part general revenue, specific destination taxes – the city of Toronto, for sake of example. We wanted to have a very cohesive plan. What we found they've had happen in British Columbia – and I talk to my counterpart, the hon. minister of competitiveness, industry, and tourism, on a regular basis. They have four tourism regions now. They have Whistler/Blackcomb, the city of Victoria, the city of Vancouver, and now the Okanagan Valley, and they are finding that they're getting an extremely fragmented tourism message. The message coming out of the Okanagan Valley is clearly different than that of Victoria, Vancouver very different from Whistler. So we eliminated that as an option.

What we came back with through the process of our government was to say that we would like to take the 5 percent hotel tax and phase it out and phase in a marketing levy, which the industry supported a hundred percent, and turn that over to them to market. What that would do is put them on par with British Columbia, which spends about $50 million, and Ontario, which spends about $60 million. Currently our spending was $18 million a year, and with the additional funding that we are very grateful to have got, it's now $25 million. I don't think the answer to problems is throwing money at it in any way, shape, or form, but in this particular instance, we're talking about marketing the province of Alberta in competition with British Columbia, Ontario, and to a lesser degree Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

So where we ended up was with an approved program all the way through our process – standing policy, cabinet, and caucus – subject to Treasury Board approval. Treasury Board came back and said – and I think rightly so this year – that our demand for infrastructure, our demand for schools, the ever, ever increasing demands on health care and education, which we hear about daily in this House, take precedence over this particular industry, but the $7 million is a way of showing support for that industry, and we'll continue to try and make that program work. As I said, it's subject to Treasury Board approval.

Will we bring it forward again? I can't say at this time. We're going to consult with industry. I know the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is going to strike his committee again at some point after session and go talk to industry and find out. It's not our way to go back to industry and say: this is what we're going to do; what do you think? So we're going to ask them, and we'll find out what they'd like us to do, and we'll take it from there.

With regard to the comment you made about some of the crises facing tourism, I don't know if you noticed today, but Toronto is now taking even more of a hit because of SARS. It's not so bad that people aren't coming into Toronto; now they're not allowed to book tourism opportunities on cruise ships and the like. A very, very strange situation.

So part of our campaign right now is going to be aimed at the Pacific Northwest. We're using some of the additional tourism dollars that we got to talk to our American cousins and say: "It's safe; it's secure. You can drive here. It's very simple. The Premier was unequivocal on his support during the conflict, and we are your friends, so come visit us this summer." You'll see those ads coming out very soon, and we hope to have a good effect from that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Two questions for the minister. One just comes out of his immediately preceding response and one from his response two questions ago. On your response just now, I just missed it. You referred to a committee being chaired by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who is the very capable chairman of several committees, and I didn't catch which committee it was, and if you could tell us the name of the committee and who's on it, that would be great. I just missed the detail.

My other question goes back to your reaction to my comments on the number of different departments and bodies involved in economics development in Alberta and my concern that there could be unnecessary fragmentation or complexity there. You had indicated that you regarded Economic Development as the marketing branch for the Alberta economy or words to that effect, which is fine, which is good. But it leaves me with a question like this. And I see that the Minister of Energy is here. I don't know if he wants to jump in or not, but fundamentally and over and over – and there was another study released today which drives this home – Alberta is heavily, heavily reliant on the oil and gas industry. If we are to, as this study says, ensure that the tiger's roar doesn't fade, we need to continue to diversify beyond the oil and gas sector. Now, my question is: who is the lead manager, who is the lead minister, for that kind of process? Is it you in Economic Development? Is it the Minister of Energy? Who is it? I need to get some clarity here on that sort of issue. I want to know the point man.

Thanks.

Mr. Norris: Well, that's a pretty broad question, so I'll answer your first question. The committee I was referring to, chaired by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, is a tourism marketing committee and it was struck in September of 2001 specifically to review all aspects of this industry, our fourth largest, employing over 120,000 people and generating some $5 billion in gross revenues, about $650 million worth of taxation to the province of Alberta. That committee had – and I'm going by memory, but I'll get the exact committee structure for you – the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, the hon. Member for St. Paul-Cold Lake, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, and last and certainly not least the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

That committee toured for the summer, as I recall, and into the fall looking at all aspects of how we market tourism, how we respond to the demand for tourism, what we are doing to develop new tourism product, all aspects it was charged with doing, and came back with those recommendations. I believe that the committee wrapped up its work in December of 2001, so that puts us where we are now. We then took that information, put it into a ministerial report, worked it through the system, and put it in for the budget cycle of 2003-2004 and were successful in getting some additional funding, and we're very grateful for that.

So the committee now I understand – we've already talked about it – is going to be struck again to go back to industry and say: "This is what came out of our work. What do you think? What would you like to see us try? Where would you like us to take this? Should we go back to square one? If that's your desire, then that's what we'll do." That's where we're at on that one.

With regard to who's running the show, ultimately the Premier, who most Albertans seem to think does a remarkable job and keeps getting elected with bigger and bigger majorities. So if you're looking for a structural plan, what I referenced at the beginning of the night was our value-added program, and this was referenced in the throne speech. The value-added program is our department's responsibility. We're the umbrella, and under the umbrella feeds those eight or nine ministries. With regard to the development of particular industries, that clearly falls under the Minister of Energy or the hon. minister of sustainable development to work with those industries on a day-to-day basis with the experts in their department. But, again, I get back to the same role that we have: taking that strategic information and then marketing the various industries to the rest of the world. So I think it should be very clear. If it's not, I can give you a written answer.

9:00

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a couple of comments. Then I have a question for the minister.

First of all, a point of clarification to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie: I did not make the cut; I was whacked. I believe that in the early days – I guess it would be '95-96 – the former hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora submitted in this House a list of patronage appointments in the Department of Economic Development. I was on that list, and I was whacked. But he is no longer the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora; I am. So that is just a little point of clarification.

I spent many enjoyable years at the department of economic development and tourism, as it was when I was there. We did a lot of good things, I believe, but the lean, mean fighting machine that they have now and under great leadership – it's great to see some of my former colleagues up there. I think you're doing a fabulous job, Minister, out there promoting this province far and wide. The boss obviously knew what he was doing when he selected you.

I want to move to international offices.

An Hon. Member: Which one do you want to move to?

Mr. Hutton: Let me rephrase that. My question is related to the international offices, and I also want to add a comment to that. I think it's great that the minister has looked at locally engaged people, rather than setting up large, cumbersome offices, and actually finding people that we can inform about Alberta that know the marketplace.

When I was in tourism back in the '80s, we had an office in New York, and we had a tourism representative. I mean, in those days at the Statue of Liberty they'd say: "Don't be a baby, lady. Just be a lady, baby." Those were wild times in tourism. Is there any opportunity for the ministry to go back into that marketplace from an investment standpoint or look to use it as a listening post for Economic Development? That's my question.

Mr. Norris: I would like to thank the hon. member for his comments and inform him that his cheque is clearly in the mail. Thank you for that. It is an honour to work in this department. I appreciate your comments, hon. member.

I would reference the international offices this way. They play a very significant part in our diversification strategy. It's not good enough to produce some of the best goods in the world if nobody knows about it. What we have found through those international offices is the ability of the Alberta government to open doors, no more and no less. I think you hit the nail right on the head: they're very lean operations. Our Premier has directed that they be collocated with the Canadian embassies, which we found to be a remarkably good opportunity not only for savings in rent but to share strategic information with that level of government, and it works out extremely well. Where we see these offices going is identifying market opportunities and relaying back to those markets the opportunities coming from Alberta.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

Obviously, trade and investment is a big part of how we grow our economy. We do need foreign dollars to come into Alberta and help develop some of our great resources, and they are coming at a remarkable pace. Most recently we were in Japan visiting with a Japanese petroleum company who has invested some 300 million dollars in Hangingstone in SAGD technology to get oil sands out. They were very proud to tell us that their program has worked. They're going to now invest some 300 million more dollars to go from I think 5,000 barrels a day to 20,000 barrels a day on their program of economic self-sufficiency. That's a great thing that took place through the Department of Energy and through the international office in Tokyo. So they do play a very significant role.

What we do to keep them as strategic and lean as possible is we have a government of Alberta employee who has to have a minimum of five years of trade and investment experience and must speak the language if it's a country that is foreign to us. Then they go and employ one or two locally engaged people to work with them in that office. We found it's a very successful model. It's the one we use in Germany, in Mexico City, in Japan, et cetera. Some of the offices are a little bigger than the other offices for obvious reasons. Japan is one of our biggest markets, so we felt that we would need a bit more support staff. We're hoping that Germany and Mexico City will grow to that, but we didn't start them at that level.

I thank you for the question, because the international offices do play a very significant role in our continued efforts to get the Alberta advantage message out and promote this great province of ours. Thanks.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to stand to address the estimates of the Department of Economic Development, and I have a few comments and a few questions to direct to the minister.

One of the concerns that I've raised before – and I'm not the only one who raises the concern – has to do with the export of natural gas in its raw form and essentially the impact that that has on the petrochemical industry. I'm thinking particularly of the Celanese plant, which is just across the river from my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands. Many of my constituents are employed there. A number more had been employed there in previous years. Now, the policy has been changed with respect to the Alliance pipeline. Where previously the liquids, I believe, had to be extracted from the natural gas before it was exported – so what was exported was more or less pure ethane for heating purposes, and the chemicals useful for plants such as Celanese had to be extracted – that policy changed with the Alliance pipeline.

The other aspect of the Alliance pipeline that's troubling is that it exports natural gas at a very high rate from the province, so a number of years of proven reserves of natural gas in this province have declined precipitously. The last figures I saw were that we have in the order of nine years of proven natural gas reserves left in the province. Now, of course, that's offset by the rate of new discovery and so on. Maybe the minister can enlighten me on that. But particularly the concern is: what about industries for which natural gas is a key feedstock? What is the prospect for those industries? I would assume that those industries in particular have a tremendous value-added potential, and the decline of those industries ought to be of great concern not only to me, Mr. Chairman, but obviously to you and to others who have those industries located in or near their constituencies as well. That's really the concern. What's the future for the petrochemical industries in Alberta that are based on natural gas?

A second question that I'd like to have the minister address is the impact of rising electricity prices on small and medium-sized businesses. I know that when we do ask questions in question period, the minister is quick, when he gets a chance, to jump to his feet and enumerate all of the other advantages that exist in Alberta for business. I will acknowledge at the outset that there are some, in the hopes that the minister will concentrate on the aspect that I'd like to address, which is the price of energy and particularly electrical energy for small and medium-sized businesses.

I have here, Mr. Chairman, a report from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and it's called Still in the Dark. It's a look at the impact of electricity deregulation and pricing on Alberta's small and medium-sized businesses. Now, it's interesting. This report indicates that a majority of the companies who responded to the survey, slightly more than half, used less than 250,000 kilowatts per year. Only a small fraction, 2 percent, consumed more than a million kilowatt-hours. Interestingly, most of them used a regulated rate option, and the second greatest number used the fixed price contracts. Now, the dissatisfaction was very high in rural areas among firms responding: 28 percent were very dissatisfied, and 31 percent were somewhat dissatisfied. In urban areas it was a little better: 17 percent were very dissatisfied; 24 percent were somewhat dissatisfied. It found, for example, that the dissatisfaction was highest in central and southern Alberta, that it was lowest in Calgary. Dissatisfaction was persistent in all sectors, the highest being manufacturing, then wholesale, then agriculture, then construction, retail, and down to educational and social services.

According to the study rate increases were higher in at least 65 percent of the businesses. On the magnitude of cost increases, a majority, just about 50 percent, were 24 to 49 percent higher, 27 percent were 25 to 49 percent higher, 17 percent were 15 to 99 percent higher, and in 7 percent of the cases electricity costs were 100 percent more than they had been. So the small businesses, at least those responding to this survey, indicated a fairly high level of dissatisfaction with electricity prices and felt that it was a significant impact on their costs.

Has the minister identified the extent to which electricity prices are hampering the competitiveness of small business in this province relative to other jurisdictions that have retained a regulated model? I know that this minister is not responsible for electricity, but I am interested to know whether or not his department receives complaints, concerns, whether it monitors that situation, whether it's done any analysis of the impact on small business, and whether it has any programs to offset the impact of those increases.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat and await the minister's response.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would have expected shorter questions from the hon. member, but I'll try and muddle through that dissertation and give some answers. It really did tend to ramble, so I found myself engaged in other thought processes. I'll try and do as well as I can.

I think his first topic of discussion was natural gas and the export of natural gas, if I'm not mistaken. I guess I'd have to say at the outset, Mr. Chairman, that like everything this government does, it's market driven. We're not going to intervene. We're not going to set up regulations. We're not going to make rules for producers in order to either hamper or grow that industry. That is exactly the same for the natural gas industry. What I think the hon. member is alluding to is that he believes the Alliance pipeline was put in with the blessing of the Alberta government to export natural gas with valuable liquids through to the Midwest of the United States. What the hon. member is not realizing is that a lot of that natural gas comes from British Columbia, where it's not our jurisdiction to do anything anyway, and travels through Alberta in the Alliance pipeline into the Midwest.

But having said that, this government would never, ever mandate to the producers where they have to sell their goods, whether it's natural gas, whether it's agriculture, whether it's forestry. It makes no difference what the industry is. That's not a principle we operate on. What we do operate on is setting up the best business environment for those operators, and they're some of the best in the world. The hon. member has alluded to the riding of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. You're right: they are some of the best in the world. They are working in that area because of some foresight. The Hardisty hub comes to mind, where a lot of the natural gas and oil that's extracted from this province ends up, and then it's a market-driven cost. Now, is it cheaper in the Louisiana gulf? Yes, it is. They don't have the transportation costs. It's a spot price commodity. It goes cheaper. But in Alberta we've taken away the provincial sales tax. We have a low, broad-based corporate tax. We have low income taxes, a highly skilled workforce so that they choose to operate in Fort Saskatchewan and Joffre and the various places around the province on a market-driven model, and that's what we're going to support.

Now, how are we going to ensure that those industries keep growing? That ties into the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora's question: our international markets. Currently we are producing by-products from natural gas that are shipped by the trainload to Taiwan to be processed into the final commodity, which is clothing, and then shipped back in many cases right to Alberta. So our value-added strategy is saying: why are you doing that? Why would we not convert those polymers and chemicals into the products that we can make here? Plastic bottles come to mind. We want to identify why that's happening. It's not for the government of Alberta to go to the producer of the commodity or the end user and say: this is how you will do it. That's not what we're talking about. We're saying: why aren't you doing it? We feel that that's a better model.

The natural gas liquids that you are talking about are sitting in huge abundance in Alaska, and our understanding is that that will be developed when it's economically feasible. Now, that means that the $10 billion or $12 billion that it costs to build that pipeline, which will come right into the Hardisty hub, northeast of Alberta here, will happen, and it'll happen in our lifetime, and that is where we believe the sustainability of that industry will come from. Also from the tar sands. There is a massive amount of by-product from that mining extraction process, and there's a good possibility to use the liquids that are produced there in the production that you're talking about. So there are a number of opportunities, but not one of them will be mandated by the provincial government as a way you must operate. That's the simple answer to your question.

I think your second question went on to electricity deregulation, and I want to take you back to a preregulated model to answer this question. The overwhelming evidence was that with a regulated model and a fixed profit, et cetera, there was no new generation coming onstream. There was some expansion to existing plants, but the real need for Alberta, which ranged from about 7,500 kilowatts to 9,000 at that time, was not being met. As a matter of fact, like you're seeing in Ontario and other provinces, there were chances of brownouts and, indeed, blackouts. So the government recognized that to get new power generation, there have to be incentives, and since the deregulation has taken place, we've see some 2,200 megawatts come onstream.

The really exciting part of this – and I'm sure the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands will appreciate this, given his philosophical bent – is that a lot of it is green. A lot of it is not done from extracting carbon-based resources. It's done through wind. It's done through biomass. It's done through the use of wood chips. People are starting to say that if there's an economic incentive for us to get involved in this business, which there is because they can now plug into the grid, which they couldn't do on a regulated model, they can produce enough energy to support what they're doing and sell power into the grid. The absolute best example of this – and I know the hon. member will want to go out and tour this with me because of his love for agriculture – is a pig farm in the Viking area. That farmer has gone with worldwide technologies and is now trapping all his pig manure and putting it into a vat, heating it up. Methane rises out of that. It's trapped in a bubble. He fires a generator, powers up all his needs for his farm, and puts enough back into the grid to get $300,000 into his jeans. So he's gone from a net user to a net contributor, and he's paying for the thing in four years. That all happened because of deregulation.

So has it been as wonderful as it could've been? Probably not. When you say statistics in business like 28 to 31 percent dissatisfied, to me, when I had my own business, that's standard. You're going to have five guys that really like what you're doing, you're going to have two or three that are okay with it, and you're going to have two that don't. That's just standard. What we have to do is get to the next level. When the deferral accounts come off in December – and I know you know all about this because you talk about them routinely – we hope that natural gas, which is a world commodity price which is used to drive a lot of our power generation, comes down, and it will. Those things combined will see power bills get lower.

But what we cannot forget that's happened in the meantime is that the new generation – and I know the Minister of Energy will know more about this than I'll ever forget – has allowed Alberta to consider when all our needs are met and the costs come down maybe being a net exporter like British Columbia, Manitoba, and Quebec, who make several billions of dollars a year exporting their power because they've gotten to that point. It's clean power. It's hydro-power. Alberta is not as blessed with the hydropower that we'd like, but we are dealing with it. We're looking at new ways to do it.

9:20

The final comment I'd like to make to the hon. member – and I know he'll love this – is that the Alberta government just signed an agreement that now, I believe, and I could stand to be corrected, 90 percent of the power that the Alberta government uses – and we are a huge power consumer, as you can imagine, with all the buildings around the province – is now produced by green. That's something that I don't think would have happened under a regulated model.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to pose a few questions to the hon. Minister of Economic Development. First of all, I must compliment him on his passion for the way he carries out his business in Economic Development.

I guess the one thing I'm wondering about is your goal 3. Then if you look at the different impact measures that you're having, in light of what's transpiring now with the SARS episode and the increase in our tourism dollars of the $7 million, how do you profess that we're going to uphold some of these numbers? I guess the one that I look at is on page 116, 3.2, where we have the aspect of Europe, Asia-Pacific, United States. I think we would more or less concentrate on that because what's transpiring now with a lot of wonderment, especially in one of my areas – namely, the municipality of Jasper – is they're really concerned with the aspect of what's going to transpire this summer. Of course, you know, they've really worked hard on the British market to bring them over because they've proved to the British that they can ski in Jasper cheaper than they can go to the Alps, and the experience is just as great. So I'm just wondering how he's going to change those factors or how those factors in his performance measures are going to work out in light of what's transpired in the world today.

I guess the other thing that I wanted to talk about was the added value, especially in the lumber business and what we're doing now with the softwood lumber embargo that we have with our neighbours to the south. I'm just wondering what aspects he's looking at within his department to make sure that we're looking at some niche markets that we can review and try to help some of these other companies now that are trying to get into new products to ship down to the United States or to other markets. I guess what I really look at is: how are you working with the secondary manufacturers? As you realize, for anything that they buy, they have to pay the full price from the primary manufacturers to make any commodities that they are looking at to enhance or value-add to move into other places within Canada or within the United States or abroad.

So if you could answer those few questions, I'd certainly appreciate it. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Well, thank you. I would like to thank the Member for West Yellowhead for his questions and also his endless and enduring passion for not only tourism but for coal. Recognizing that his riding is in the heart of both the major parts of the coal industry and tourism in Alberta, he has his hands full and does a remarkable job.

What we are trying to do with the added dollars that were granted to us in the last budget go-round is to identify the markets that we have been building on. You rightly determined that the United Kingdom is one of them. We also know Germany is a huge destination for overseas visitors, as is Japan. Our message quite simply is that Alberta hasn't changed. The experience you'll get is a friendly one, a hospitable one, a very, very value-conscious one, and experiences that you will not find in any other part of the world.

When we talk about what's happening in the world right now, I want to make one thing abundantly clear: Alberta is not in a vacuum as to what's happening with tourism. SARS is a worldwide epidemic. The campaign on terrorism is worldwide. So it's not limited to Alberta. While I sympathize greatly with the tourism operators in Alberta – and we are doing everything we can to mitigate these situations – it needs to be said that it's not Alberta alone that will suffer.

So have we in response to that taken our numbers down, taken our goals down? No, we haven't, and we haven't done it for a couple of reasons. I know that the hon. Member for West Yellowhead is a big fan of the Olympics, like me, and I know that he probably gets as frustrated as I do when athletes say: well, we'd like to finish in the top 15. Well, that's to me not the way to do it. Either you're going to get a medal or don't show up. So we acknowledge that in Alberta our targets are very high – they're remarkably high – but we know that we have the best tourism operators in Canada, and we know that we've got a program that we believe will work. So we're not going to adjust down. We're going to keep the goal high, recognizing that there are many forces in the world right now that may affect that.

So our overall program quite simply will be to keep going straight ahead. We've now taken some money out of the budget that was not allocated previously for our Pacific northwest campaign. We're hoping to leverage that with the Canadian tourism council and industry to get a significant amount of money to target that to help offset some of the cancellation of the tours that are happening but recognizing that that's not a problem specific to Alberta.

The other part of the equation, too, is that we continue to diversify our market to where we're going. We have campaigns going now in Illinois, in the Houston area, and in Los Angeles. We found that while they might not have direct flights into Alberta – in most cases they do – those are really good markets. Minnesota is another one, and that was part of our trip recently, to talk to some of the airlines and say: do you know that if you have a direct flight from Minnesota to Edmonton, for sake of example, it will more than likely be sold out on a regular basis, three times a week? We're hoping that they'll take heed of that and bring in new tourists so that while one market, who are international travelers, might be decreasing, hopefully the rubber traffic and the direct flight markets will increase.

Do I have the answer as to whether that's going to mitigate the loss? No, I don't. My gut feeling tells me that we're going to have to work very hard, and I know our department is sitting here listening with much anticipation because we are going to do it as a team. With the industry in Alberta I think we're going to get over the hump, but we are in for tough sledding. There's no doubt about it.

With the response to your value-added question regarding lumber, the hon. minister of intergovernmental affairs is obviously the lead on that file. I know that's a more Canadian issue because of all the lumber that is produced. I believe 67 percent of it comes from Quebec and British Columbia, and Alberta accounts for some 12 percent of the national total. So as go Ontario, Quebec, and British Columbia, so goes Alberta. That's the common wisdom.

Could we have a made-in-Alberta strategy? That doesn't work in industry-specific areas such as forestry, so we're hopeful that the issue will be resolved by the federal government, who is dealing with this file. It's gone on longer than anybody would want. There has been a lot of pain in the Alberta industry. We know that, and part of the reason we're going down to Washington at the end of this week is to address those issues with the people there. We're trying to get meetings with, I believe, the secretary of industry to talk about this from an Alberta perspective and maybe let them know that these tariffs are not only not right, but they're hurting an industry when their belief system is incorrect. They believe they have to do this because they think the Alberta government and others are unduly subsidizing that industry. Well, I think the hon. Member for West Yellowhead and others who are involved in the forestry industry know that's not true. It's a very fair commodity price, but they have targeted that, and I think that in some responses to antiquated mills in the North Carolina/South Carolina region they don't want to upgrade. As a result, they're trying to protect that industry, which is wrong, but it goes through a process with the World Trade Organization, and it's very lengthy.

What we are doing, however – and I'm very proud of this – through Forintek, which is a federal/provincial and industry-driven body that operates out of Vancouver, with an office here in Edmonton, is looking at new ways of taking wood products and taking them to the next level of value-added so that products that used to be maybe waste would now be good for particle board or any number of things, oriented strand board. We're doing that through a granting mechanism through our department, through the department of western diversification through the federal government, and industry. They're doing some remarkable things, and they're becoming industry leaders in saying: you don't need to do this with wood specifically; you can treat it this way or that way. And it's working very well.

The other thing that I'd like to point out – and, again, it ties back to our international offices – is that we are trying to identify new marketplaces, like China, for sake of example, and Japan, who typically do not use stick-built homes but are now looking more to that. As the market economy of their country explodes, they're looking for housing. The traditional cement and cinder block won't do, so they're looking at other ways, and they're now saying: well, maybe wood is one way to go. If we can target that market and get out there first, which I think we're doing a fairly good job of through our offices, and there does become that demand, then you diversify away from the United States and you get those new markets and you start growing that business. So that's really how we're dealing with that situation, hon. member.

Ms Carlson: I would like to remind the Minister of Economic Development that it's been a Liberal policy for at least a decade that the hotel tax should be dedicated marketing dollars for the industry, and we've always supported that. So we would be very supportive of that coming forward in some future budget, and we're looking forward to having seen that happen this time.

I just want to go back to the regional development strategy for a moment of two. You have generally talked about it and talked around it a little bit, but we see that in your business plan you talk about that as a focus. I would like to know how the value-added program fits into this. Do you actually have a copy of the regional development strategy, or is it just something within the department? Are there regional goals and priorities, and is there an action plan? So if you could just expand on that a bit.

Mr. Norris: Well, at the outset, Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the hon. member in advance for her, no doubt, positive comments when we are successful with the hotel tax. It's now on record, so I can only assume that it'll be a joyous day for all Albertans when that takes place, and thank you for that.

With regard to the regional development strategy, yes, that is part of our business plan, and what we look at is growing the regions with the particular areas. I referred to some of the groups that are ongoing. At this point there are some seven that have now gone through the process, which is forming a corporation, defining what their parameters will be, submitting to us a business plan, and then signing on with us in the form of a grant that is used to implement their business plan. In the case of the international region, which is Leduc, Nisku, Millet, et cetera, their business plan called for getting a world-class web site that accesses every particular piece of property and opportunity there. We were in Nisku last week to launch it. It's a brilliant opportunity, and it works very well.

So each region has different opportunities and goals, but they set them out in their business plans in conjunction with our department. We don't go to CAEP, the central Alberta partnership, for sake of example, and say: this is what you must do in the Red Deer and central Alberta area. They come to us with a business plan and say, "Does this fit in with the overall strategy?" and we say yea or nay. As I said, to date there are a number of them. There's Grizzly in northeast Alberta. There's GROWTH in north-central Alberta, PREDA in the Peace River area. There's a new one forming in the far northwest part of Alberta called REDI. Palliser in southern Alberta. On and on it goes.

There is a strategy to get the province sectorized into marketable regions, and once we accomplish that, then the marketing of those regions becomes very simple. We say: "What are you looking for? What is it? Lots of sunshine for growing? Is it access to water? Is it rail links? Is it close to the Canamex corridor? What are your needs? What are your parameters? What kind of property are you looking for? Is it large, small, et cetera?" And that's the whole process, but it's not so much government driven as it is government assisted with the regions.

Working with the municipalities has been remarkable. At the outset of this program there was a lot of fierce rivalry, as there is, for sake of example, between Edmonton-Calgary over sports, et cetera, and what we've seen happen over the period of time is that these towns and villages are putting away those rivalries and saying: "Yeah, we agree. It's better to market this region, so that's what we're doing." Our eventual goal is to have the whole province sectorized into regions that they determine, not us.

The most unique one that we signed on recently was Wetaskiwin-Millet, and it's unique because the riding is Wetaskiwin-Camrose. As you would imagine then, you would think the economic region would be Wetaskiwin-Camrose, but it was determined by those people, not my department, that Wetaskiwin had more in common with Millet, and that's the region. We let them determine it. We let them sign it on. It's an ongoing thing. It's a business plan that's reviewed, and it's working.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to just question the minister on the aspect of coal. As he realizes, the coal industry in Alberta has changed dramatically, and as we realize now, we only have a couple of players. Basically, in the thermal coal we have Luscar Ltd. and Sherritt International, and of course the Ontario teachers' pension plan is looking at the aspect of thermal coal. What transpired in my region just recently is in the neighbourhood of 495 people being laid off before the first week of May, and I'm just wondering what his department is doing about looking at markets in the area. I realize that we have strong competition from China now.

Then on the metallurgical side, of course, we've got new players there too, and the big thing we're looking at now is with Cominco Teck as the operating company, and then we have the aspect of Fording Coal/Canada Trust holding the rights. I'm just wondering what we're doing with these corporations to sort of overall look at trying to merchandise their products with the different international offices we have now in the different areas. As you realize, it's certainly helped, especially in West Yellowhead, but I know that my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod has people in the Crowsnest Pass area that have been hit quite hard. So I'm just wondering how we're working that type of a mechanism so that we can sort of give an upper hand to them to try and look at helping these companies merchandise and possibly open some doors so that we're able to merchandise these two types of coal.

The other thing, too, is that we're working with Grande Cache Coal Company in Grande Cache to reopen the old Smoky River Coal mine there, and I'm just wondering if we've done any preliminary work there on the aspect of working with them in looking at metallurgical coal. Then that would be the only one now in Alberta that would be able to be in operation. As you realize, the other consortium of Fording Coal/Canada Trust decided to shelve the Cheviot project for now, and basically they've stated that it's not if Cheviot is going to go; it's when. So basically what we're looking at is only one metallurgical coal operation that can operate in our province. So if you could give me some insight on what we're doing in that line, I'd greatly appreciate it.

Thank you, sir.

Mr. Norris: Well, I guess I would at the outset say to the hon. member that his premise that the coal market has changed is indeed correct, and it comes with a lot of challenges and a lot of heartache. Quite frankly, there's a changing industry, and there are people that are not working in the industry where they used to work, and that's of grave concern not only to this department but this government as whole. As you know, the target of full employment is really what we're looking for in any industry, and the sad reality is that in some industries you can't find labour and in other industries it's changing dramatically, and this happens to be one of them.

At the outset a lot of our market was driven by requirements overseas. Certainly, Japan was a huge user. Two things have happened to that. Obviously, Japan's economy has suffered immeasurably over the last few years – whether they're going to get it back or not is anyone's guess – and we were undercut by Australian markets, who developed their markets and went and targeted our clients, and because of the cost of shipping and the closeness and all those things, we lost out in that marketplace. We do hang in there because we still have some of the best meth coal going, but it is a challenge; there's no doubt about it.

I guess what I'd like to direct your attention to, in our efforts to deal with this, would be under our value-added strategy to look at clean coal. I think the market has changed remarkably. If we're not supplying the mills and the coking and the producers with the coal, what are we going to do with it? Well, as the hon. Member for West Yellowhead knows better than I ever will, the supply of coal in Alberta is some 700 years based on current market demand, and we are fortunate to power a lot of our electricity through coal. So that demand is going to stay strong, but that's for a specific kind of coal. I think what we have to look at as the Alberta government – I know the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science has put some money into this, as has ASRA and AERI – is to get to a stage where we do have clean coal, where we get to a technology where it is acceptable to talk about coal as a source of efficient, Kyoto-friendly power. Our department now, under our value-added strategy, is working with the Minister of Innovation and Science to get that process sped up. I believe that is going to be one solution. It's not going to go away. That resource is still under our feet. It's still going to be required for the generations out at Wabamun and Sheerness and Keephills, et cetera, but you're talking about a more global situation, and it has to be dealt with with the reality that the global marketplace for coal is not that great right now, and what do we do about it?

As I said, I think clean coal is one solution, and I know that our department, through a man you've worked with an awful lot, is looking at other markets and trying to increase our penetration back into those markets. But as I said, if it's competing with Australia or China, which is coming on great gangs and the cost of transportation and the distance of transportation is that much less, we have a problem. One bright spot in that, though, of course is the port at Prince Rupert. We are now doing some work with the government of British Columbia and the federal government to say, "Listen; that's one of the last deepwater ports on the west coast, and it's totally underutilized." It's completely underutilized, and the Alberta government has a good stake in seeing that utilized more so that we can cut shipping time and costs down, and maybe that's part of the solution as well.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I need to first of all respond to some of the minister's comments on electricity deregulation. It's fundamental to the economic well-being of this province, to our economic development. Alberta's low electricity prices used to be trumpeted, in fact until 1999, I think, or even 2000, by the Department of Economic Development as a reason for businesses to locate in this province. We have lost that advantage. The minister has cited some examples of benefits from electricity deregulation, but I just need to challenge his history before I move on to my question.

Alberta developed a fabulous supply of power generation under a regulated system through the '70s, when annual demand for electricity was rising at 10 percent a year, double what we've seen in the last few years. A regulated system responded very effectively, ensured adequate supply and competitive price. We had an entire power generation and distribution system that worked extraordinarily well, was profitable for the utility companies, low cost, high reliability under the regulated system. There were problems with deregulation. There are problems with deregulation. I would argue vigorously and I'm sure that the minister would argue back vigorously that the costs of deregulation have far outstripped the benefits. Our own calculations suggest that at least $5 billion has been lost to Alberta consumers through far higher power costs because of deregulation. Check your history. There were very good things happening under regulation. My strong suspicion is that improving the regulated system would have been far preferable than what has happened.

My question to the minister is not on electricity however, but it is on related sorts of things. It's on the theme that I started at the beginning, which is responsibility and the lead players, the lead ministers for different areas. I am referring again to a report that I think should be mandatory reading for every MLA, the one released today by TD Economics. Lots of good news in it, absolutely. But there are warning signs in it. One warning sign here, page 19: "Shortages of natural gas and ethane pose a major challenge to the Corridor's recently-burgeoning petrochemical and refining industries, as well as related-services businesses." My first question to the minister is: among all the different ministers in this government, including the Premier, who is the minister responsible for the Public Affairs Bureau – but let's not pass the buck to the Premier – who in the government is responsible for watching in the long term on behalf of the welfare of all Albertans the supply of feedstock for the petrochemical industry? Is it an Economic Development issue, is it an Energy minister's issue, or somebody else's?

My second question is on the same theme. I refer to the same report, this time page 24, and I'm going to quote a couple of paragraphs.

The province's high productivity performance has been a major driver of living standards in recent years. But, a closer look reveals that it rests on a shaky foundation. Specifically, if the highly-efficient oil and gas sector is stripped away, average productivity in Alberta is only slightly higher than in other Canadian jurisdictions and below levels recorded in the United States.

The same kind of question again, and all I'm trying to do from an organizational perspective is make sure that the tail is pinned on the right donkey here. You like metaphors, Mr. Minister. So who in the government is, if not leading the charge, at least minding the issue of productivity? Is it Economic Development? Is it somebody else? I want to know that somebody over there goes to bed at night thinking: I'm the lead person with that problem, and I better focus on it.

Mr. Norris: Well, you know, when you talk about pinning the tail on the donkey and you talk about bloating and all these kinds of things, I'm going to get hurt feelings here. I'm not sure where you're going with this, but, you know, where's the love? What's the deal here? You had, like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, a rambling bunch of comments, so I'll try and pick through what I thought I heard you say and answer the questions as best I can.

Electricity. Your comment was that you would disagree with my premise, and your premise was that under a regulated model we would be better off. Well, we're not going to have that discussion because we're not under a regulated model anymore, and we're not going back to it. As Minister of Economic Development one of the joys that I have on a daily basis is seeing the untold success stories of Alberta, and I always ask the question when people say that, and I did when I had my own business: if it wasn't here, where would you be? Why have 500,000 Canadians since 1993 chosen to make Alberta their home? Why has our small business rate and our big business rate risen faster than anywhere else in Canada? I'm not going to go on because you've heard me do this before, but you have to ask yourself: fundamentally, why are people choosing this jurisdiction?

Now, is electricity one part of that? Sure it is. Nobody would deny it. But does it put Albertans and Alberta companies at an unfair disadvantage the way it is now? No, it doesn't, because you're not factoring in having no provincial sales tax. You never factor in the fact that we have the lowest capital gains tax, lowest corporate taxes, and lowest payroll taxes. So you add those things up. I talk to industry on a daily basis. I travel around and I ask them, and they say: boy, are you guys in Alberta getting it right. Are we getting everything right? No. Who does? I go home every night and I'm told how much I get wrong. That's just the way it is, but that's my wife, and that's a different story.

Anyway, the bottom line is when you analyze things in this context, when you pick out one piece of it and say: what about this? Yeah, you're right. Has it changed? Sure it's changed. Has the Alberta advantage been diminished by it? I would say no. I would argue that it hasn't, and I will undertake to give you statistical data that backs up what I'm saying because I see it on a daily basis.

But I'd also ask you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, who I presume owns a house there, and Edmonton-Ellerslie and Edmonton-Centre, have you seen your property value go up? Have you seen your wages go up? Well, we've all changed jobs recently so that might not . . . All the indicators that we look at that nobody ever talks about. You're building a life for yourself here in Alberta that's better than anywhere else in Canada. Are there concerns? Yes. We've never denied it. Has the Minister of Energy ever said that it's been a smooth road? No. I think his term is that there are midcourse corrections. But at the end of the day I keep asking myself when I hear these things: why are people coming here if it's so bad? So I'll leave you with that comment.

With regard to the lead player on who's watching the store, I think you said, or watching the future, I don't think you understand the process of this government, so I'm going to try and share that with you. The process of this government is team, and I'm not going to be aggressive or abusive and say there's 74 of us and seven over there. We don't operate with me saying: "I'm in charge of this, so nobody else look at it. I'm in charge of signage, so, Minister of Transportation, don't come looking at it." We don't do it that way. That's why I was trying to explain that under our overall structure in Economic Development we touch all departments because, really, they all have something to do with it.

Who's the lead on looking after feedstock? Great question. If you want me to say that I am, I will, but I know that our department works on a daily, if not hourly, basis with the Minister of Energy's department to ascertain where things are going. I know that the Minister of Energy works with the Minister of Finance to predict where the prices are going. I know that Sustainable Resources works with Environment to find out our policy. It's a question, hon. member, where I could make up an answer and say, "Well, he's Minister of Transportation responsible for roads; the Minister of Sustainable Resources is responsible for forests," but that's not accurate. But it's also not accurate to say that we don't work together. If you're worried about feedstock, I can tell you that there are at least three departments that work on it. If you wanted to point to a lead department, you couldn't, but that's not a bad thing. That just says that our departments are talking to each other.

On the other comment that you made, about the TD Waterhouse report that came out today, I would respectfully disagree. You said that it was good news. I read the report. I thought it was absolutely great news on so many different levels. What it did do was reaffirm that the class of '93, which deserves our respect, and Premier Klein went on the right course and created a business environment that's second to none in Canada, and the growth of that corridor that they were referring to is mirrored all over all Alberta. There's no denying it.

Now, what it did point out is that if you were a business owner and you had a consultant come in and say, "Where are you going 10, 20, 30, and 50 years down the road?" these are some things you would look at. Your labour force is getting old. Well, fine; I'll look at ways to address that. And we have. We've increased spaces in SAIT and NAIT. We're looking at increasing spaces in Grant MacEwan. I know the hon. Minister of Learning is working on programs with apprenticeships. We're dealing with that, but you have to identify the concern before you can find the solution. Otherwise, it doesn't work.

So what I think I would comment to you is that the TD report confirmed what we thought was right and pointed out where we might get better. That's not a bad thing. What we have to do with that report, if we take it under advisement – there are a number of reports. The Pembina Institute comes out with a report every other week lately, so we could factor those ones in. What do we do with them? Do we listen to everybody, or do we stay the course? I think as a government we're going to stay the course because we're on the right track.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This question is one that I would like answered in writing. Then I'm hoping that the minister will agree to accept the rest of the questions we didn't get to in writing, and after putting this on the record, we'll call for the question.

This one has to do with the business plan again where the department talks about supporting

Alberta companies pursuing capital projects financed by International Financial Institutions (IFIs) by promoting an awareness of Alberta within [these] IFIs, providing market intelligence on IFI opportunities, and building . . . awareness of IFIs' role in investment and trade.

We'd like to know those IFIs you're dealing with – there must be a list that you're targeting specifically – and the strategies you're using to promote them to Albertans and also any support that you're supplying to the companies in terms of coaching them on proposals or whatever you might be doing. If you could give us that information and why you chose that route instead of taking a look at developing a local venture capital market. If we could get that. Then I've got some other questions we didn't get to, to be answered in writing.

I would call for the question.

The Chair: The question has been called. After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Economic Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense $54,934,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report the estimates of Economic Development and beg leave to sit again at a later date.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following department.

Economic Development: operating expense, $54,934,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

head: Second Reading

Bill 18

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate April 16: Ms Blakeman]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I'm glad I was able to be here to continue debate on second reading of Bill 18, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. I have a number of hesitations with this act, and I'm unsure if I can support this in second reading, in which we're looking at the principle of the bill, because there seems to be a number of things that are being ventured here without clarity. So I'm looking forward to the debate in Committee of the Whole because I am hoping that there would be some additional explanation that can be provided. I have gone back and read the introductory remarks from the sponsoring member and am looking forward to additional background.

Essentially what I see here is additional power being given to the minister, and I'm a little cautious about that because it's around energy statutes and, based on experience with Bill 19 and Bill 3, that hasn't been a particularly happy experience, I think, for people in Alberta. So I'm cautious about more power and more regulatory power being placed in the hands of the minister.

Part of what I'm sensing from this, but it isn't so much spelled out in it – and I didn't hear it from the introductory comments from the sponsoring member – is that this is about some uncertainty or trying to create some uncertainty without actually doing it around coal bed methane. There's too much being left behind the usual closed doors. "Trust us, and we'll do everything behind closed doors, and it'll all work out." I don't have a lot of reason to trust the government.

So I've got a couple of questions. How exactly is it anticipated that this act will improve how mines and minerals royalties are collected? I'm interested in how the government views that.

We also see a number of amendments, particularly sections 38 and 39 of the Mines and Minerals Act, that provide for changes to the calculation of royalty rates, but it's not clear how these changes will improve the royalty regime, and of course that's really the royalty regime that benefits all Albertans.

Now, as everyone here knows, I am an avid reader of the Auditor General's report and in fact keep a second copy underneath my desk for handy reference. The Auditor General has made a number of recommendations with respect to the royalty reduction programs that are offered by the Department of Energy. In particular, he is claiming that the Department of Energy does not disclose the costs of these programs. So another of my questions to be answered is: how will Albertans be able to determine if the royalty calculation section proposed in this act is fair? How do we know it's fair before we support the bill? I want to know that it's Albertans that are really going to be gaining from the changes that are being proposed here. I'll come back to the coal bed methane later.

Why do I see the minister being given the power to determine the application of payments? Under the current Mines and Minerals Act the order in which the money is received from the Crown will be applied. The current system provides clarity and fairness for all of the stakeholders, but that same clarity and fairness are not carried forward into the proposed section 11, so it is making it difficult for stakeholders to plan and to budget accordingly if the order of payments is left to the minister's discretion.

Now the coal bed methane. Why is coal bed methane being included in the Mines and Minerals Act when the department, as far as I've seen – I've seen no press releases; I've seen no reports; I've seen no traveling MLA reviews – has not completed a plan for coal bed methane? Now, this is new. This is not something that we have a long history with. We have some examples that we can look to in the States. We know that there are a number of problems around coal bed methane. We know that there are issues around the high density that's required, the number of wells that are required in a small land mass to draw this up. There are questions about water use: how much water is used, what's done with the water that comes out, how much water is going to come out and whether it's saline water or fresh water, how to make sure that the two kinds of water are not mixing in the aquifers. There is a whole issue around water and coal bed methane and long periods of flaring that can precede the commercial capture of the methane gas. So there are a number of issues here around coal bed methane that are new issues, if I can call them that.

I haven't seen a plan from the government on how they anticipate dealing with any of this. Therefore, why is it being included in this act when we don't have a plan anywhere else? This doesn't make sense to me. I think we need to see what's being anticipated here or what the plan is before we put it into legislation like this. I would like to see an action plan from the government around this new technology before it's incorporated into legislation in basically a piecemeal fashion, essentially ad hoc, a little bit here, a little bit there. I'm not seeing an overall approach to this, and it needs an overall approach.

I guess that having said all of that, the answer is that I'm not willing to support this act in principle because there are too many questions outstanding. Now, obviously, with the overwhelming majority the government is going to pass this through second reading, so I'll just be sensible and say that I want to hear the answers to these questions when in fact we come back to revisit this bill in Committee of the Whole, when there's more of an opportunity for a give-and-take and some longer explanations or repeated explanations from the mover of the bill.

So those are my concerns on the record around this bill. I am not willing to support it, and I look forward to further answers being supplied by members of the government. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have an opportunity to add my comments on Bill 18, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, at second reading. I, too, read what the sponsor of this bill had to say and read the bill, took a look at it, and decided that this is exactly the kind of bill that I most detest seeing in this Legislature and one that tends to have me hold this government in less than high regard. It's another one of these bills that slides in as kind of a package deal where the government is positioning themselves to take a power grab, where we're going to see a lot more regulations made behind closed doors, where the sponsor of the bill can say: "Oh, you know, it's just minor. There are just a few little things, legislative clarity, effective rules, and enhancing collection practices." That sounds very nice, but in fact that isn't what's going to happen here when you scratch below the surface. So far we haven't seen any of our questions answered, so there's absolutely no way that I can support this in principle, particularly around the coal bed methane process that's now being included in here.

I will absolutely support any coal bed methane recovery process that is environmentally friendly, that uses state-of-the-art techniques, and that is subject to a reasonable taxation process.

Ms Blakeman: How would you know that based on this bill?

Ms Carlson: We would never know that based on this bill. That's very true, Mr. Speaker. Those are the kinds of questions that we need answered.

This bill is premature when it comes to coal bed methane. We know that there are a couple of test cases happening now in the Minister of Environment's riding, but that has just started to happen. It's not six months old in terms of a process. There's a great rush to the bottom now in terms of coal bed methane because we need the gas. Prices are spiking. It's a wonderful cash cow opportunity for both business and for governments, but where it has been practised so far in other jurisdictions in North America, there have been huge environmental issues around it. It's been poorly handled, and if it isn't properly planned out in this particular instance, the same thing can happen here. In fact, we could have some worse problems than they have in other jurisdictions because we don't have the same kind of base for the coal bed methane to come up through. There is no pool of sand for the methane to settle in and be nicely recovered from. They haven't figured out yet how to fracture the coal beds and capture the methane from the venting, so the potential for environmental risk at this stage is high.

We've heard the Minister of Environment talk about water recovery processes that they're thinking about and talking about and going to be planning and studying and looking at in the future, but there is no process in place right now. If that saline water gets mixed into the aquifers, we're going to have some serious problems in this province, a province that already has less potable water than any other province in this country. When we take a look at even what they technically call the clean water or the fresh water that comes up from these sites, it isn't really fresh. It's contaminated with a number of minerals and other kinds of items like arsenic and mercury. How are they going to clean that up? Where are they going to put it? Where are they going to store it? What are all the management practices around that? There's a lot of information to be had before we're at the stage in this province where the government should be taking a look at bringing in this kind of a bill.

So we'll see if the sponsor answers some questions, and I'm hoping that when we get to committee, the Minister of Energy will also stand up and put his remarks on the record about why he thinks this particular bill is a good idea. As it stands so far, it doesn't look too promising. It doesn't answer the basic questions we have to ask of legislation when it hits this Assembly. Is it going to make the province a better place for people, for the environment, and for the economy? No, it isn't. If you mess this up and have environmental spills or have venting of methane, it's going to be horrible for everybody involved, for the communities, both the environmental communities in terms of the land and water and air base and for the people.

So those are the kinds of issues that need to be properly addressed up front rather than after the fact when the government goes once again: "Oh, well, there are some minor corrections happening here, but, you know, it's all going to be fine in the future. Don't worry; we'll fix it up by regulation behind closed doors." It isn't good enough, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly not good enough for me to support the bill at this stage.

Mr. Mason: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie how much freedom she believes this bill may give to the minister and the government to proceed in a nonsustainable fashion with coal bed methane extraction.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. As it stands and as it reads here, this bill gives the Lieutenant Governor in Council additional regulatory power and additional power to make regulations regarding taxation. We haven't talked about coal bed methane taxation yet and everything they can do behind closed doors. We don't have to see more legislation in here. We'll just hear announcements and press releases saying: oh, this is what we're doing with coal bed methane now, and this is why it's such a great idea. But, really, they won't provide us any scientific data or any background or any studies that they've done to prove that the way they're moving forward is good. We know that some of the research being done is being done well, and there are really good, positive options open, but we have absolutely no guarantee that this government will proceed in that kind of a fashion. If their huge mess and bungling of deregulation is any indication of what happens when this government races to the bottom, we could be in big trouble.

The Deputy Speaker: Further comments? Questions?

Mr. Mason: So, Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member actually believe that this could be as bad as deregulation?

Ms Carlson: It won't be a $9 billion boondoggle, Mr. Speaker, but it could be an environmental disaster. If that methane escapes into the air or we see spills on the land base or unrecoverable water cleanup processes, we can see contaminated land for a long time, and the cleanup in those kinds of situations is significant. Some of it you never properly recover from. So I'm also wondering in terms of that kind of cleanup about the kind of liability that landowners will be facing when they allow this government to go forward with those kinds of processes on their land if we don't have the proper framework put in place to begin with. I'm wondering if this class action legislation that we're seeing in this Legislature may be just in the nick of time for some landowners in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: No further questions?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow to close debate.

Ms DeLong: I just wanted to say a few words to some of the questions that have been posed over the several days that this bill has been in second reading. I just wanted to let you know that most of it will be addressed during Committee of the Whole.

I did want to just give a little bit of comfort. There's some uncertainty here, I guess. There are concerns about coal bed methane. All we're doing at this point is looking at the difference between exactly who owns the methane that's in the coal, whether it belongs to the person who's mining coal or whether it belongs to a different formation down below. It has nothing to do with the royalty regimes, as you were talking about. This is not dealing at all with royalty regime changes. Essentially, what we're dealing with is collection methods, but we'll get into all those details during Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a second time]

Bill 12

Financial Sector Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate April 7: Ms Carlson]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I recall, I had just barely gotten started on Bill 12 last time mostly because we hadn't had a chance to get the feedback from stakeholders at the time that it was introduced. We've had a whole whack of legislation introduced in a short period of time without in many cases good briefings from the sponsors of the bills, and this would have been one of those. [interjection] It is so. So we can't get any information out of this government. We know that they like to do everything by regulation behind closed doors and what legislation they do bring in is quite closely held in terms of sharing information.

So what we see as one of the interesting questions on this bill, Mr. Speaker, is that it amends the Alberta Treasury Branches Act, and then it talks about other regulatory guidelines for ATB, and it amends some of the stuff in the credit unions system. Then plunked into the middle of this bill we have also a proposal to exempt employee benefit plans covering medical, dental, prescription drugs, and disability benefits from the Insurance Act. So our question is: why have you lumped a benefit program in a bill that's dealing with financial institutions – it doesn't seem to be very logical – or the consequential amendments to the Cemeteries Act and the Funeral Services Act? There must be some rationale for why these things are all in this bill. I can't see it here, and we hope that somebody will explain that to us when we get into committee.

We do have a few questions with regard to this bill that haven't been answered in the opening comments that we heard, so we would like those because subject to how the answers to the questions are given, this may be a bill that we will support because some parts of it sound like it's a good idea. We do need the financial institutions in Alberta to be strengthened, and we do need them to be able to compete on an international scale if we want to retain any kind of Canadian ownership, I believe. With globalization there are some things that are better on a larger scale and some things that are not, and I prefer to keep my money here in Canada with a Canadian company if possible, and I know that that sentiment is shared by many people.

There are definitely a number of issues that have to be more closely examined before it's passed. So I'll put some of these questions on the record now, then hope that they are answered at the beginning of the committee debate.

Generally, we believe that these changes are significant because they affect the operations of the financial institutes. The concerns with the ATB and the credit unions we think are somewhat different and would be more properly addressed in separate legislation in small bills. It's never been my experience that a credit union wants to be compared in the same breath to the ATB or vice versa. So we're wondering what the rationale is for including them both in this particular bill.

It's almost like an omnibus bill that we see sometimes in miscellaneous statutes which we would not agree to when it has these kinds of significant changes. Someone needs to explain to us why we should agree to it here. We've known for a long time that omnibus legislation creates more problems generally than it solves, and we've seen that time after time here in the Legislature. So we need to figure out why the government is doing that, and it really helps if they just tell us. [interjection] Yeah, well, it's likely that we have to guess, but, you know, omnibus legislation, particularly dealing with financial institutes, can never be a good idea, seems to me.

So what other options did the department consider to bring this legislation up to date? Why didn't they go to little separate bills that would be very easy for us to pass in a speedy fashion? Who did the department consult about using this kind of omnibus legislation? Tell me that the credit unions are happy; tell me that the ATB is happy. I doubt it very much.

In terms of the ATB we see that now the ATB Financial will be able to serve as a financial leasing corporation and own insurance brokerage subsidies. Has the department done any analysis to determine how the bottom line of ATB Financial will be affected by this act? Clearly, it's going to increase. By how much? Have they done any surveys on how this is going to impact existing providers? This has been a hugely controversial issue. You walk in the door of these institutes and often you're a captive market. If investors are not sophisticated or have the time to shop around, ATBs will, I believe, perhaps have an unfair advantage. So how does the department address this?

We hear every two or three years rumours floated that the ATB is up for sale again. How's that going? Will these amendments make it more attractive to outside markets? If they could answer those questions. How do you see the ATB financial services improved for customers with this legislation?

To some extent the same questions apply to the credit unions. We like the credit unions to have the insurance brokerages within them. They've been asking for these changes for a long time so that they can stay competitive, and it's nice to see them here. But still a few questions, and one of those is that in one part of this bill credit unions are going to be allowed to use any means to contact the owners of unclaimed accounts. What exactly does that mean? Are there any limitations? What processes do they expect to be used? Why was it worded like this in the bill? It sounds somewhat negative in the manner that it's presented here. What are the rules and regulations under FOIP in terms of personal information? Does it have to be an employee of the credit union? Can they farm this out to somebody else? All those kinds of questions we'd like to have answered.

Now, it also talks about in this bill the credit unions being allowed to operate as any prescribed business, and there's no definition in the bill that I could see of prescribed business. Can they tell us what that is? Does that then meet with the original purpose of credit unions in this province, or is it starting to broaden their mandate to a point that takes them outside the original intent of having credit union services?

I think those are the two key issues, the credit unions and the ATB, that I wanted to talk about. I have some questions around the Insurance Act and public-sector pension plans, but perhaps we'll see what kind of an overview the sponsor of the bill gives us in committee, and perhaps those questions won't need to be asked.

So those are my comments at this time, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

Bill 28

Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate April 15: Mr. Lukaszuk]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Thanks for an opportunity to speak in principle on – I'm not sure if it's for or against – Bill 28, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003. Now, I know that this is partly the memorial bill for the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

An Hon. Member: What?

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, well, this was the one where he was very keen on getting into the newspaper for going up against one of the parking companies who was able to access home addresses and send their bills out through it, and this got him a lot of press in the summer a couple of years ago. So that's why it's a memorial bill for him or commemorative or however you wish to put it, but I don't think that's enough to be approving of this bill.

There was an entire freedom of information and protection of privacy road show that happened. I'm sorry. It was actually called a special select FOIP review committee, not a road show, and I was expecting much more of the work that was done by that committee to show up in this bill, which is part of the problem that I'm having with it, that there are a number of areas that should be in here and aren't. So why aren't they? What was the hesitation? The work was done by the committee. It was brought forward in their report, tabled in the House. Where is it? It's not in the bill. Why not? So the member should be able to tell us that.

Once again I'm assuming this will get passed into Committee of the Whole, and then we should be able to get some pretty clear answers about what happens there. I mean, I had looked for there to be some improvements with FOIP, particularly around people's access. This was supposed to be enabling access, and some of the common means that are used, mandatory and discretionary sections that are used to get out of providing people with information I expected to be reduced, and I'm not seeing that particularly here.

There were a couple of things that I was pleased to see. One is right in the beginning where we're talking about including biometric information under the definition of personal information. I think that's excellent, and I was looking for that, and I'm really glad to see it here. Essentially, what that's doing is specifically saying that things like fingerprints and blood type, genetic information, those kinds of distinctly identifiable sort of DNA kind of information bits about somebody are going to be covered under this and included as personal information, which is a good step, but some of the other things are a little confusing, so I'll look for some clarification on that.

The registry is being clarified by what is meant as a registry, but then it goes on and talks about "authorized or recognized by an enactment." So I'd ask the sponsoring member to please table in the Assembly as part of the debate on this bill a list of exactly all the registries that would be captured by this amendment, because to just say a registry is "authorized or recognized by an enactment" – how or what? Somebody is supposed to plow through every single amendment that exists under the province to find out whether or not the registry is captured or not? It's not clear enough, and it needs clarification. So table the list or amend this so it's clear exactly what's being contemplated.

Also a little confusing is the section where it talks about the elections. Now, I don't know if this was anticipating the minister of health's decision not to hold further elections of the regional health authorities or understood that at that time the minister was going to disband the elected bodies and just go with appointed ones. It's just not clear what's meant in this section. I'm asking for an explanation on it because it's talking about an election. But if a board of an agency elects an executive, does that count under this definition? It's probably that they meant to be talking about citizens in a community electing it, or maybe they meant under the Local Authorities Board. It's just not clear, and under FOIP that's not good enough. This has got to be clearer, so let's have that nailed down.

We also have this odd phrase about "in the prescribed manner" which is appearing. It's talking about: the third party has in the prescribed manner consented to or requested disclosure. What exactly is the prescribed manner? What's being contemplated here? Is this going to be made clear in regulation? I hope not. I hope that it's spelled out clearly in the legislation, because otherwise this gets pretty darn confusing. So I need the sponsor of the bill to commit to share with the Assembly exactly what he understands this to mean, or maybe the chairperson of the special select FOIP committee could expand on that.

There also needs to be some clarification around: providing the notices must be given to. Does that mean the third party has to have received the notice? Will that impede giving notice in compelling circumstances where, for example, time is of the essence? In a different section there is a definition of what's meant by given to a person, but it's not clear if that's what's being intended in this particular bill. There seem to be four different ways that notice can be given, but you start cross-referencing with some of the others and then it gets confusing. So I'm asking for clarification around that as well.

This should be a very useful bill to many people, and without having to work very hard, I've already come up with half a dozen areas that need pretty clear clarifications. I'm going to ask that we get that kind of clarification from the sponsoring member and that some of these new definitions, particularly in the beginning sections, are spelled out and we get the examples that I've asked for, that we get the tablings brought forward and tabled in the House so that this is clear to everyone. This is a piece of legislation that we all use. It's now going to be expanded to the business sector. There's certainly been a plea that we please get on with it because the business sector is waiting for this, but it has to be clear. We cannot do this to people when there's that kind of uncertainty around the definitions in this bill. So I'm going to ask that some additional work be done on this and that the explanations be provided.

At this point I want to support this, and I can't. It's just not good enough. So with that, I'll see if I can get some responses that are enough to make me change my mind. Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to participate on Bill 28, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003. I sat on this committee with my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar as Official Opposition members, and this committee actually tops the list of worst experiences on committees in this Legislature. It used to be that Public Accounts was at the top of that list, and now this committee is there.

When I take a look and reflect back on why they were horrible experiences, they're process issues. In this particular case it was because of the chair of the committee. I seriously considered sending him Robert's Rules of Order for Christmas, but I didn't think he'd read it, so it would just be a waste of everybody's time and effort. We had some really horrible experiences on that committee in terms of interpretations.

An Hon. Member: And just making stuff up.

Ms Carlson: Yeah. Well, that's true. Exactly right. That's what happened sometimes. Information was just made up. [interjection] It was absolutely that kind of committee, I'll tell you.

I try to get along in all-party committees, and for the most part that really works well. Some of the committees, like sitting on the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee, which I have done for a long time, maybe eight years now, have been very interesting experiences and enjoyable experiences, and some good work has been achieved as a result of that. But when you have a committee where the chair for some reason has his own agenda . . . [interjection] Well, there you go. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands was also on that committee, and I'll tell you it was an experience to remember, and his comments are accurate. It was an unbelievable experience. Things that should have gone smoothly just totally blew up, and he had even his own members very upset with him at a variety of times, and we could have only wished that the deputy chair would have taken over any number of times so that we could have processed . . .

Mrs. Jablonski: Well, thank you.

Ms Carlson: Yes. Well, it's a compliment well deserved.

It was an experience, and I hope that in this Legislature I never see that particular member chair another committee, certainly not an all-party committee, because it was painful for everybody involved, including support staff. You know, I expect that when we're in these all-party committees that we talk in the committee, go away, the department works on some stuff, and it may or may not come back looking exactly like what you talked about in the meeting, and that's fine. That's the process, and the information at the end of the day looks relatively like what we had talked about in the meeting with some exceptions, and all that's fine. But the day-to-day workings of committees have to go smoother than that, and we certainly expect that in this Legislature and particularly in committees where there is a high participation by department staff and by the general public.

Ms Blakeman: And now the business community.

Ms Carlson: Now the business community. Exactly right.

I particularly hope that that experience is not repeated here again. I've sat on lots of all-party committees over the years with very excellent chairs who were government members and who follow procedures and processes well and are open to discussion and debate, and the outcomes are excellent. This committee took way longer than it had to. We could have been done this work a lot sooner even allowing for the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to do grandstanding whenever he felt like it. That could have all been accommodated, but I have to tell you that this was an experience.

So for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to save my debate on the content of the changes for later. I am going to oppose this bill in principle at this time, and I'm going to oppose it because of the conduct of the chair, and I want that to be on the record.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a second time]

Bill 29

Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate March 27: Dr. Taft]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to speak in second reading on Bill 29, Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003. What it looks like here is that the highlights of this bill are that it ensures that providers of mortgage default insurance have the ability to sue borrowers for any balances owing when they default on a high-ratio mortgage. I don't actually understand why this is required, because I thought that this was already something that was available. Maybe I misunderstood. It looks like this is looking for leveling the playing field for mortgage default insurance providers by ensuring that they have the ability to sue borrowers.

We all know in this province about CMHC, the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation, who provide high-ratio mortgages. You pay a premium on your mortgage for the insurance that they provide if you default on a mortgage, so I guess now what they're looking for here is for other people to move into the market. So I'm wondering why this government would be doing this at this time. The CHMC does not fulfill its stated objective of leveling the playing field, they state, when you talk to the company that wants to come in, which is GE Mortgage Insurance Canada. I don't see in this bill particular reasons why we should support this, and we haven't even got an opinion from the Canadian Bankers Association on this. So why does the government have to get in the middle of this?

It's been a system that's worked quite well, and there is now a process in place where you can't assume mortgages without qualifications, and what's also being asked for here is an amendment to this bill that allows people to do that. So what would happen, then, is that if that second person defaults on the mortgage, the original mortgage-holder is still on the hook. Well, who's going to agree to do that, Mr. Speaker? I don't want the liability for some other fool who can't make his mortgage payment. They need to assume that liability on their own, so I certainly won't be supporting that kind of amendment, and I haven't heard any good reasons for us to be taking a look at, in what is actually a very small market in Alberta, making this change at this time. I want the sponsor of the bill to tell us what the Canadian Bankers Association says and to tell us what CMHC says about this as well.

So waiting for those comments, I'm going to withhold my support on this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a second time]

Bill 31

Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate March 27: Mr. Graydon]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be following the debate on this particular bill with some interest because it cuts to the very heart of the functioning of democracy in our society. There are portions of this bill which deal, for example, with ballots and particularly special ballots. It deals with the work of returning officers. It deals with the nitty-gritty mechanics of how elections are held, and as mundane as some of those details may seem to most people, ultimately they can determine the outcome of an election. We've seen no more dramatic example of that than the American election of two or three years ago, which was plagued with all kinds of problems. So we can take our balloting and our voting and our democracy for granted, but we do so at our peril. This particular act will influence exactly how that process works. As a result, I hope it's an act that all members in the Assembly study and consider and debate. While the principles at stake here appear mundane, as I said, they are ultimately profound.

Those are really the only comments I'm going to make until we move into committee, where we can actually talk about the mechanics: what's going to happen in regulations, what's specifically provided here. At that time, we will be bringing in, undoubtedly, some examples of where questions have needed to be raised over balloting in Alberta elections and in other elections. Who knows? We may even bring in amendments, but for now I'll let this go through second reading and look forward to debate in committee.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really have to get on the record on this particular bill, Bill 31, the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2003.

It's a good idea, I think, that after the elections the Minister of Municipal Affairs gets feedback about the process and how it can be improved. Some of the recommendations we see in here are good, but I have to talk a little bit about the special ballots process. That's really, really a problem as it's laid out in this particular bill. The problem is that in the last election the process for special ballots was too loose as it was. [interjection] Too loose and inconsistent. That's true. There were lots of allegations and concerns and discussions with returning officers about what was happening.

What would happen is that candidates and candidate teams could take the special ballots and get them signed by a constituent and then turn them in. The complaints that came to a number of offices were that people thought that they had voted because they'd been told that they'd voted and they'd signed a piece of paper, but they hadn't actually written in anybody's name or marked an X or a check mark or whatever process they wanted to use. Then when ballots were counted, many of them looked like they were filled out by the same hand at the same time. So that's a serious problem. We had a number of returning officers very concerned, mostly in urban centres, to be quite frank, Mr. Speaker, and to my way of thinking that's a process that needs tightening up, not loosening up.

I really agree with special ballots. There are circumstances where people are not able to get to the polls on election day: they're out of town; they just got out of the hospital; they're not very mobile; they don't speak the language. There are lots of really good reasons to have a special ballot process. What I would like to see happen is that when campaigns encounter someone who is a candidate for a special ballot, they contact the returning officer, give him or her the name, and have the returning officer go to the constituent to have the ballot filled out. So it maintains a level of impartiality in the process and doesn't call into question the count at the end of the day or perhaps have a smear against the name of any particular camp or any particular candidate.

This is an issue of particular importance. What this bill looks at doing is giving more ability to campaigns to use special ballots, and I think that that's a flawed process. I know that it increases the cost marginally of running the offices and puts a little bit more work on the returning officers during the writ period, but those officers, I think, are certainly up to the task. I had this discussion with the returning officer in my riding, who has been the same returning officer for all three elections and who, by the way, does an absolutely outstanding job there, I think. I have to tell you that at the first election I had some concerns because he is the cousin of the person who ran against me for the Conservative Party in the first election, but from that very first day of the writ dropping, he was very impartial, very fair, very reasonable, and continues to be that way in all elections. So I have to say that any fears I had were misplaced. He has done an excellent job, and I have heard the same said of many returning officers in this province. I truly believe that they operate with a very high degree of integrity, and I would have absolutely no qualms about them handling this special ballot process from beginning to end.

I have no end of qualms when that process is handed to campaign teams. Candidates and teams have the best of intentions, but things happen in elections, and it's easy for them to get out of control. We really need to make sure that the fences around this process are fair and reasonable. In my riding we always have contentious issues. In fact, in the last election one person at a street number and a particular avenue voted in my riding and then voted in the riding he actually lived in, which had the same street number and avenue, which happened to be in the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek's riding. These things happen. He was given the benefit of the doubt. [interjection] Well, they're not supposed to, and I brought it to the attention of the returning officer for the province.

The returning officer in my riding bumped it right out of his jurisdiction immediately. Apparently this person was talked to and apparently said that he made a legitimate mistake. Once he voted at the early voting station and then once on election day. I know the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek's riding and my riding. You know, we have 20 or 30 people voting from one house. I don't know how that happens, but it happens. They're not always big houses, I have to tell you. So you can imagine the kind of difficulties that happen in some of these ridings. [interjection] Some of them aren't three storeys. Some of them are little tiny houses. He's laughing because he knows this is true. This happens.

The special balloting process is something that is much more controllable with the right kinds of fences built around it. I definitely do not want to see campaigns or other individuals have access to the management of those particular ballots. I definitely want to be able to call the returning officer and say, "Here's a candidate; please look at this," and have some process for having those people being able to exercise their franchise. But I sure don't want to put it in the hands of any practices that maybe come into question, and we had several of those in the last election, and that was several too many for me, Mr. Speaker.

So I'll vote against this in principle, and I'll look forward to seeing an amendment come in in committee.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. I just briefly want to talk a little bit on the same issue, and that's around the section in Bill 31, the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2003, around the special ballots. Special ballots are really important in Edmonton-Centre. We have a large number of frail seniors or shut-in seniors or, depending on the weather, just people that would have difficulty with mobility problems. We also have a number of citizens who have a physical disability. So the potential for the use of a large number of special ballots is certainly there. I have not experienced, at least to my knowledge, the same number of questionable circumstances around special ballots, but I'm certainly aware of the capacity for that, and I am concerned that we make sure that we deal with this issue while it's possible to do so, while we have a bill like this in front of us. So although this is local authorities and wouldn't necessarily affect us for a provincial election, nonetheless what we're setting out here is likely to be used in other places, and I think it's important that we get it right.

What's possible now, as my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie mentioned, is to have campaign workers filling out or assisting constituents to fill out the special ballots. I agree with her that I think this needs to be done by a staff member under the direct control and supervision of the returning officer for that particular area. Now, that may well require some additional staff because in some areas I think you would end up with a number of special ballots. Nonetheless, I think we need to look to that, because we cannot have the results of elections fall under the same sort of disarray as we saw in the States. I mean, it made those elections a laughing matter, and I think it's really important that that not happen to us. So there's a potential to follow through here. We have the ability to deal with this with this bill that's in front of us, and we need to do that. I won't belabour the point. I just want to make sure that it will be dealt with here and with the assumption that those same sections could be carried on to other acts that are affecting elections in Alberta.

So until this can be dealt with and tightened up, I have hesitations about supporting the bill, but let's see what the sponsor of the bill has to say about it. Thanks very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a second time]

Bill 32

Income and Employment Supports Act

[Adjourned debate April 15: Mr. Dunford]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 32 consolidates and updates existing legislation, integrates income and employment training programs, increases accountability for training service providers, and builds on Alberta's success in helping people prepare for, find, and keep jobs. The Income and Employment Supports Act brings three income-supported programs – supports for independence, widow's pension, and skills development program living allowances – together into a single integrated income support program.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 32 is a bold step forward for Alberta and takes us even further away from old approaches to welfare that simply did not work. They trapped people into ongoing dependence on government handouts instead of giving them the hand up they need to live independent and productive lives. Bill 32 shifts the focus from programs to people. It will make sure that programs work for people instead of trying to fit people into programs that often do not match their needs. The new approach will put the right building blocks in place and tailor supports directly to what people need to become as independent as possible.

With that, I would move second reading of Bill 32.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be candid: I need to give substantially more thought before I can get into a detailed debate on this issue. I do know, as the minister undoubtedly knows as well, that these are sensitive programs. Fundamentally, people's lives hang on these programs in a way that people's lives don't hang on very many government programs. I'm sure that all of us as MLAs have heard from constituents and family members and so on the concerns about the supports for independence programs and the training programs and the whole package that comes along with them.

There has also been a prolonged and vigorous lobby for improved benefits under these programs. Frankly, I'm sympathetic to some of those lobby efforts because there's a point at which being economical and being tight with money crosses over into being mean, and I do feel at times that as a government that has happened. We've somehow from time to time lost the sense of the humanity of truly poor people in this province. I think we all would like to regard income support programs as simply temporary measures while people perhaps for whatever number of reasons are caught without work and without income and need a bit of support until they get back into the workforce. The great majority of people who use these programs, I believe, use them on that basis. It's a pretty short-term support that keeps a bit of food on the table and keeps them from becoming homeless until they get their feet under them again. So that kind of mechanism is important, and obviously in principle it's one we agree with. This bill rearranges the administration of these programs, the mechanics of these programs, yet I'm not convinced from the information I've got that they will improve some of the fundamental issues of human dignity that are brought up by questions of absolutely bare minimum payments, supports under programs like supports for independence.

So, again, as with previous bills, when it comes to committee we'll have had time to look at these more closely. I'm sure there are good things. I'm sure there are issues where we will disagree with the government. We will be looking forward to an informed debate with the minister as typically we do have with this minister.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'm done.

Ms Blakeman: I'm not. I'd like to address a number of different areas around what's being proposed in this bill. I'd like to talk about the effect of the bill or the result of it around abused women and their children, I'd like to talk about what happened with the widows' pension program, I'd like to talk about the training concerns, I'd like to talk about AISH, and I'd like to talk about the hand up.

I asked a question in question period today, and part of that question was directed to the minister. I do have real concerns. Where we have women with children that are trying to escape abusive situations, they are often women who do not have any financial resources. If they did, they wouldn't be in such dire circumstances. They could pack up, get into their SUV, and drive to a hotel. It's less of an issue then. But for women who don't have resources, perhaps they don't have control of the family finances, perhaps they don't have a bank card or don't have access to the cheque book or don't have the ability to easily get their hands on cash, then being able to access SFI becomes their lifeline. I have real concerns that we are not doing everything that we can to help these women and their children get away from the circumstances that they find themselves trapped in. Part of this is connected to the last category that I was talking about, the hand up. I understand what the government is trying to do when they say that we're trying to give people a hand up, not a handout.

My point in all of this is that you have to be pretty low in life circumstances to be below that hand so that it is giving you a hand up. With the criteria and eligibility around this program you've got to be really destitute to be eligible for it; therefore, when we have abused women and their children that are on this program, they're in pretty dire straights.

I could hear the frustration in the minister's voice during question period this afternoon about: why are these women even needing to be on his program? We're obviously not dealing with the issue where we need to be, which is where the violence is starting in the homes. We're not dealing with the issues around the women and children having to flee. There was, in fact, legislation that was originally proposed by the then member for Edmonton-Highlands which turned into the bill that was sponsored by the then member for Currie, which was the family violence protection act, which does in fact allow for women and children to stay in the home and for the police to remove the aggressor from the home if it was felt that violence was imminent. But it's not doing enough. We still have women and children fleeing in the middle of the night in their pyjamas and then trying to access some of the programs that are available here.

The minister did put together and had an MLA committee to review low-income programs last year. I know that they brought forward a number of recommendations. Primary among them was that there be more money, and that's part of my concern. I know that the SFI program already makes some extra allowances for women who are fleeing abusive situations; for example, being able to apply for and under special circumstances get damage deposits, which is something that is not available to most people on the program. So I understand that there are already some things that are being done, but that amount of money is not enough for a mother and her children to stay out of an abusive relationship, generally speaking, and we need to work to that. I'm not going to let the opportunity go by to make that point.

Secondly, we've got the issue around the widows' pension program, and honestly I can't even remember when it was put together, but a long time ago.

An Hon. Member: Eighty-four.

Ms Blakeman: Nineteen eighty-four. Okay. Oh, that's interesting.

What we had was a challenge where a group of individuals who were divorced or never married went to the Human Rights Commission and said: this is discrimination based on marital status. People who are widowed are able to access this special amount of money, and frankly the money was more attractive. A single person on supports for independence now is around $402 a month for a single male, I think. We're looking at a couple getting $772 on SFI, a child and an adult getting around $819, and then medical benefits would be above and beyond that, I think. On AISH we've got recipients getting about $850 a month, and the widows' pension recipients were receiving up to $880 a month plus medical benefits. It did look better than SFI, frankly, and that's why it was attractive to a number of people.

We also know that we've got a demographic out there, and specifically that was women between 55 and 64 who chronically have been unable to be successful in re-entering the labour market. I think that we will see that demographic slowly disappear. I expect that with the women from my generation, for example, it just won't be an issue. We've worked since we came out of school, whether that was high school or an institute training program or university. We expected to work our whole lives, and we have. So I don't think we will find ourselves in the same situation.

But several generations of women in advance of me did not have the advantage and the access to postsecondary training for those kinds of career opportunities that would pay them a better living wage, and when they found themselves widowed, the likelihood was they hadn't been in the labour force ever or possibly not since before they were married with some sort of minor administrative or retail or service experience that did not translate well for them 20 or 30 years down the road. So they were in need of this assistance, and in fact they got it when the program was instituted in '84. That program has now been challenged because there were women who were divorced or who were never married who were also suffering the same problem between 55 and 64. That's a demographic where it was very difficult for those women, just given their life experience, to get back into the labour force.

The programs that we, in fact, had like Options for Women did not translate well coming from underneath the funding from the federal programs. When we had the labour market programs come together with the provincial government, it didn't translate well. Options for Women did not get further funding, and they closed. So even organizations that were there to help women that were in that particular age bracket did not make the transition into the provincial government funding. I think it's a great loss because that was a particularly excellent organization, but it's gone.

We had the widows' pension program challenged by other women – and their only difference was based on marital status – and, not surprisingly, they won. I knew they would, and I also knew that the government was not likely – in fact, it probably couldn't, if we're realistic about things – to open the program up. Instead, they're going to end up shutting the program down. They have given more time than I expected for transition on the program, but it will be phased out. No question.

I'm hoping that as we work to improve the status of women in Alberta, aching slowly based on comments I've already heard in this House tonight, as we continue to work on the status of women, in fact, as I said, we wouldn't need this program in the future. But I know that there will be a number of women for whom this is a really frightening experience, to be told that this program is closing down and that they will have to transfer into the SFI program. I've already mentioned the numbers here. Some of them could be looking at a drop in their income by 50 percent, down to sort of $400 a month. Now, try to imagine being a single woman under 65 trying to live on $400 a month in this world. How safe do you think you're going to feel? What kind of accommodations do you think you're going to find to live in? Pretty scary stuff because those kinds of accommodations that you're going to find for the $400 mark are not going to be in great areas of town. So just think of yourself as being a fairly proper widow, who's perhaps just into her early 60s, who could be looking at that kind of drop in income. It's going to be pretty frightening, and I look to the minister to help make that transition. I don't see how it could possibly be positive but at least less frightening than without some of the transition. That's possible for the minister to do.

I continue to be concerned that we did not see an increase in the AISH program, which I think really needs to be addressed, and we did not see it coming along with this low-income program review that we expected to see. It becomes a question about: what kind of a society are we? There is a long-standing argument for – what's it called? – a pension for everybody. Everybody gets a certain amount of money no matter what.

An Hon. Member: A guaranteed minimum income.

Ms Blakeman: Guaranteed income. Thank you very much.

And there are a lot of very positive, good arguments for that. I don't see that happening in Alberta, and I'm realistic enough to see that it's not going to happen, so I'm not even going to argue for it – I'm wasting my breath here – but I think that there are some of the existing programs, though, that we need to look to. Of course, one that affects an awful lot of my constituents is AISH, and I'm really concerned about the levels. We've got a serious housing problem, access to housing. The private landlord program is frozen at the same level. Rents are finally going up, so for the last couple of years private landlords have been able to increase their rents and recoup the money that they claim they weren't making in previous years. Housing and adequate housing, especially for people on AISH, has really become a problem.

A lot of the people in my constituency who are on AISH are not necessary physically disabled. A lot of them are mentally disabled: brain injury and mental health problems. So specialized housing becomes really important for them, and 850 bucks a month is not a lot of money, especially when you're looking at other things to ease the pain in your life. Over-the-counter and alternative treatment, for example, that are not covered by the medical benefits, again, become really important. So I cannot say enough how disappointed I am that there was not an increase in AISH and that the increase that I see for SFI is painful.

Finally, the concept of the hand up. As I said, you have to be pretty low down to be below that hand that's going to be up. You know, just given the assets, the expectation that you really have nothing before you're qualifying for these programs, I struggle with. I know that this government isn't going to be any more generous than they are, and I think a number of government members probably feel they're being very generous with these programs. I disagree, and I would do more, but I'm not in government right now.

I think the other area I want to talk about here is training – it's just the one that I've skipped over that I listed – and again I look to the Auditor General for advice here. In the time that I have sat on the Public Accounts Committee, and I'm now in my seventh year, the training programs are a real problem. Just looking very quickly at my notes, going back to the '96-97 annual report, the Auditor General was identifying problems with the training programs, with the monitoring of it, with ensuring that what was being paid for was in fact being delivered. I don't see that that is being sufficiently dealt with in what's being brought forward in this bill. There's a lot of money that's paid out to try and get people on these training programs. I think there are real questions about whether the training programs are successful, and I think that there's still a huge issue in the department about the monitoring of these programs to make sure that we are getting value for money.

There has been work done by the department – I'm not saying there hasn't – but there is much more that needs to be done, so I'm struggling to support this bill in the shape that it's in.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very productive evening, and I would move that we now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:17 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 23, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/23

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O God, grant that we the members of our province's Legislature may fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all our people. Guide our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Dénes Tomaj, ambassador of the Republic of Hungary. He is accompanied today by his wife, Ildikó Tomaj, and Mr. Bela Balaz, the hon. consul general for Hungary in Alberta. Mr. Balaz's wife is accompanying him as well.

Hungary is a close friend of Canada and a NATO ally. Hungary is at the forefront of the reforming economies of central and eastern Europe, and its location at the crossroads of Europe makes it a gateway to a huge market area.

The ambassador was only recently appointed to be his country's representative to Canada, and this is his first visit to Alberta. I would like our honoured guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of gentlemen who participated in a fund-raising auction held in the constituency of the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. The auction item purchased by our guests was lunch with me and a visit to question period. Visiting the Assembly from the Alberta Society of Engineering Technologists are president Randy Doherty, past presidents Glen Horne and Ron Paulson, and executive director Tim Schultz. They're seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 23 visitors from Chipman school seated in the members' gallery. They are led today by teacher Mr. Allen Dubyk, assisted by Mrs. Brenda Lesoway, parent helper Mrs. Shelly Christoffersen, and of course conveyed here by Mr. John Stribling, a bus driver and longtime serving councillor in the village of Chipman. I would ask all of the students and helpers to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like every parent it's an honour and a privilege for me today to introduce to you and through you my two sons, Gavin and Travis Masyk, in the public gallery. They worked very hard on my campaign, going door-to-door, folding folders, at a young age. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the MLA for Little Bow I would like to introduce to you and through you two of the member's constituents. Elaine Hall has driven from Vulcan, Alberta, to Edmonton just to bring her granddaughter Lindsay on a tour of the Alberta Legislature Building. They live on a farm just outside of Vulcan, and Elaine wanted to be sure her granddaughter had the opportunity to see firsthand a little of what goes on in the Alberta Legislature and to tour the Legislature Building to see her government in action by taking the afternoon to see the legislative proceedings. I'd ask them to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very special guests. The first is Lloyd Cenaiko, who just happens to be the brother of our colleague from Calgary-Buffalo. He doesn't want that held against him either, although the Member for Calgary-Buffalo told him that he might be older, but he's better looking. Lloyd is the president of the Humanitarian Aid Response Team, also known as HART. This group serves disadvantaged individuals in eastern Europe, countries like Ukraine, Russia, Siberia, and Romania, by providing critically needed aid such as food, clothing, and medical care for orphanages, street children, invalids, hospitals, the elderly, those in prisons, and the desperately poor. Our Premier and I had the privilege of meeting Lloyd last May during the Premier's historic mission to Ukraine, where the HART group assisted a school for special-needs children in Lvov, which is in western Ukraine, with a new play system for their playground. Lloyd is accompanied by his lovely wife, Ulyana. The newlyweds are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to please both rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

For my second introduction, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very special individual, my one and only sister, Mary Tachynski. Accompanying her is my nephew Michael Tachynski. They're seated in the members' gallery, and they're here to observe the proceedings of this House. I would ask everyone here to join with me in warm applause.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of weeks ago I had the privilege of introducing to you my oldest son. Today I have the honour of introducing the rest of my family to you and through you to the members of the Assembly. Today my wife, Bev, has traveled in from Vermilion. She's accompanied by our second oldest son, Jamie, Kyle, my 13 year old – no more needs to be said – and last but certainly not least my youngest son, Blake. I would ask my family to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you three guests. The first, Ms Hana Razga, is a constituent of mine who has been working down east for some time and is back home for a bit of a spring break. She is hosting my other two guests for the next week. They're visiting from Igloolik, a very small northern island with a population of 1,200 and the site of the production of the film The Fast Runner, which won six Genie awards including best director. Ms Katarina Soukup is the communications director for Igloolik Isuma Productions, the production company involved in the making of this film. Jason Kunnuk is the nephew of The Fast Runner's director, Mr. Zacharias Kunuk. Ms Razga, Mr. Kunnuk, and Ms Soukup are here to observe proceedings, and I would ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As uncomfortable as it makes the Premier, the 2 percent increase in the basic instructional budget will result in school cuts: programs will be cut, teachers will be cut, and class sizes will grow larger. My first question is to the Premier. Does the Premier support the larger class sizes that will be a result of the 2 percent basic instructional budget increase?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion that I'm uncomfortable is false. I'm not uncomfortable at all. I'm very comfortable with the budget that was presented by our Minister of Finance.

The increased amount for schools under Learning was deemed to be acceptable in terms of our overall budget priorities. Relative to the specific question, I will take it under advisement and have the minister provide a more detailed response.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: does the Premier support the cutting of programs that will be a result of the 2 percent basic instructional budget increase?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. Minister of Learning I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance respond, but before I do, I would like to point out that there is under way right now a Commission on Learning to examine all aspects of learning in the province including classroom size and pupil/teacher ratios and all of the factors involved with education. I would invite the hon. member to wait and see the results of that commission's findings and how the government responds to it before jumping to conclusions.

Now, relative to the amount allocated to Learning through this year's budget, I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to say that Alberta has accepted the responsibility of Learning to the tune that we actually fund Learning to the highest per capita of anyplace in Canada. This year we increased our funding to Learning by 4.7 percent, or $219 million, bringing us up to $4.9 billion in education funding for this year. In the year 2005 we will be spending over $5 billion a year in the Learning budget.

Mr. Speaker, what's also very important in this fiscal year is that the Minister of Learning has introduced a new fiscal framework so that funding allocations can be made at the local level to meet local needs. This is a very important element within the business plan of the Learning department.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that budgets are being set now for next September, not after the commission reports, does the Premier support the hundreds of layoffs of teachers that are going to be a result of the 2 percent basic instructional increase?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that question is purely speculative and is hypothetical at its absolute worst. You know, if there are no layoffs whatsoever, will this hon. minister – this hon. member; God forbid he ever becomes a minister. Will this hon. member stand up in this House and apologize? Of course not. It's just terrible that they would stand up and through insinuations, speculation, and innuendo and fear mongering make these kinds of statements. It's purely speculative and does not deserve an answer.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Nothing would make me happier, Mr. Premier.

Hinton Schools

Dr. Massey: The government's solution to crowded classrooms in Hinton is for the Catholic and public school districts to swap schools thereby creating even more crowded classrooms in the public system. The problem is not solved, and the result is spreading frustration and anger among parents. My question is to the Premier. Why does the government continue to pursue a policy that puts the needs of infrastructure before the learning and the social needs of children?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, the preamble to that question is so erroneous, so wrong, so false. We don't put the needs of infrastructure before the needs of students. The two go hand in glove. You know, students need to have a good environment in which to learn, and that involves infrastructure, good, solid infrastructure, and we try to balance the instructional opportunities and processes that take place in the classroom with the up-to-date and needed infrastructure to accommodate a good environment for instruction. This hon. member should be able to understand that. Everyone else does.

Dr. Massey: Again to the Premier: why does the government continue to pursue a policy that pits neighbour against neighbour in the provision of school space? These parents from Hinton want to know, Mr. Premier.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we don't pit neighbour against neighbour. We do not pit neighbour against neighbour. As a matter of fact, we leave it up to school boards to decide on a day-to-day basis how their schools shall operate. In my neighbourhood I don't have any problems whatsoever with my neighbours over schools, nor do I get a lot of cards and letters and phone calls from neighbours who allegedly are pitted against neighbours over the issue of education. There are occasions from time to time when situations arise where there are disputes over school closures and decisions of various school boards relative to the delivery of education, but overall and generically throughout this province I can tell the hon. member, because he doesn't seem to travel the province as much as government members do, that there is no pitting of neighbours against neighbours relative to education.

Dr. Massey: My third question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. When will the government provide the funds already promised to build a new school in the Catholic school district in Hinton?

Mr. Lund: There never have been funds allocated to build a new Catholic school in Hinton. The fact is that in Hinton the school population is declining. There is excess space in Hinton if you take the total area that's available for schools. Simply, in Hinton what we did is we allowed the Catholic separate board to take over one of the schools that was underutilized in the public system. In the case of Edson the boards that run the Catholic and the public systems in Hinton also run the schools in Edson. In Edson the public board was shutting down a school, so we simply moved the overcrowded Catholic situation and solved that by having them go into the school in Hinton that was being shut down by the public board. It's just something that I'm sure the taxpayers of Alberta will be very, very happy about, that we are able to look at the broader picture.

As far as pitting neighbour against neighbour, there are always situations where one person doesn't like it because their neighbourhood school is now going to be governed by a different board. That happens, and it's certainly not something that we relish, but to do nothing also created a problem.

Private/Public Partnership

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, I hope all members were listening yesterday when the Minister of Infrastructure told this House that P3 financing is more expensive than conventional finance alternatives, something the Official Opposition has been saying for months. The minister has instead decided to justify the government's use of P3s by saying that they download risk to the private sector, could operate the facilities more cheaply over time, and will get facilities up and running faster than the government could. To the Minister of Infrastructure: how can private corporations manage risk more efficiently than government?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that all the members on the government side were listening yesterday, and they clearly heard me say that financing was not the main reason for going down the P3 road. I made that very clear. The fact is that off-loading the risk is one of the things that happens. It is worth a certain amount, and the fact that we get a building up and operating earlier is another issue. The opposition continually focuses on a corporation that might be involved in a P3 and that somehow that's a terrible thing to have happen, but the fact is that we have a number where it is even municipalities being part of this solution.

A very good example – and I won't identify which area it's in. Currently we have two municipalities working together. They're looking at building a recreation centre that would be used by the schools, be part of it. They'd use a single mechanical. They'd use a single parking lot. Win/win for everyone. As a matter of fact, if they would just go and take one look at what's happening in Grande Prairie, thanks to the former mayor of Grande Prairie that started this, and have a look at what's going on up there. An $85 million to $90 million project is going to save the taxpayers of Alberta a considerable amount of money because there are two high schools connected with it, and they're using the common mechanical and other services and other buildings. Just a perfect P3.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that one of the Ps in P3 is "private," what benefit is there to having private firms – and hopefully the minister is listening – operate public infrastructure when the public will have to pay for all of the costs of operation through the company plus – plus – an added fee for the firm's profit margin?

Mr. Lund: I'm sure the next thing the hon. member is going to be telling us is that another of the Ps is "profit." Unbelievable. Mr. Speaker, of course, now I've got a bit of an indication of where the member is coming from, because P3 may be two public entities working together: public/public partnership. That works too.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why should private firms be able to get public infrastructure up and running any faster than this province's highly skilled and motivated public service? Why should private firms be able to do that?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we are extremely proud of the people that work in Alberta Infrastructure. They're highly skilled, they're very well motivated, and they do an excellent job. One of the things, though, would answer the member's question. I know that the Liberal way is just to go out and spend, spend, spend even if it makes absolutely no sense – they love to tax, tax, tax and spend, spend, spend – but we in the government don't believe in doing things that way. We would much sooner manage the affairs of the province in a most efficient manner. The fact is that at times we don't have enough funding to move forward immediately, and the private sector could assist in some situations like that. But the important thing to look at is the lifetime cost and how that's going to relate back to the cost of us doing the structure, and as I indicated, there are some other very important factors that have to be taken into account.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Calgary Health Region Review

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Calgary health region appointed a corporate lawyer to do an internal review into the failure to co-operate with the fatality inquiry into the tragic death of Vince Motta. This appointment is a continuation of the CHR's familiar pattern of stonewalling and whitewashing instead of taking meaningful action to address serious, systemic problems. My question is to the Minister of Justice. Why should the Motta family and Calgarians put any faith in the findings of a person handpicked by the appointed chair of the Calgary health region when what's really required is a full and open public inquiry?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I've had a number of conversations with Mr. David Tuer, the chair of the regional health authority in Calgary. I want to assure members of this House and members of the Alberta public, particularly those individuals in the city of Calgary, that the regional health authority is very concerned about dealing with the learnings that come from His Honour Judge Delong's report. They will be going through some 25 recommendations line by line. Mr. Tavender, who has been asked to conduct an independent review of each of these recommendations, is a litigator of the very highest calibre and the very highest integrity. I'm assured by the regional health authority that he will have complete, unlimited access to whatever records are required in order to review the recommendations put forward by His Honour Judge Delong, that they will come back with his report by the 24th of June of this year, in time for a public meeting of the regional health authority with respect to their response to His Honour's work.

Now, I should also say, Mr. Speaker, that it's not the job of the Department of Health and Wellness or the provincial government to micromanage what is going on in Calgary, but what we do also want to do through the learnings from this important report is see how it will apply to emergency rooms across this province. We are committed as a government and as a department to continuous quality improvement in the delivery of health care to Albertans. We're interested in issues relating to patient safety. Now, we have a good health care system. That is not to say that it is perfect, but we do want to continuously improve the system. Judge Delong's report is an important step to going in that direction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm sure Mr. Tavender is a reputable solicitor. I would like to ask the minister who exactly he is going to be independent of, given that he is appointed by the Calgary health authority and will be reporting to them. What independence is he actually talking about?

Mr. Mar: I think that anybody who is familiar with Mr. Tavender's record in his practice would recognize the integrity of the individual who has been asked to do this job. As I said, it's not just Mr. Tavender who will be working to prepare a report for the regional health authority, and it's not just that he has unlimited, unfettered access to whatever it is that he feels he needs from the regional health authority.

It's also the fact that the Department of Health and Wellness is also looking at each of these recommendations for the purposes of determining how we can improve our overall system. I should say that the regional health authority has already taken steps to try and improve its processes within the region on how it deals with patients who are waiting in emergency. One example is that as it is now, since Mr. Motta's death, there has been a change in the manner in which triage nurses actually call back patients who are waiting in the waiting room to update them on their condition while they are waiting in the emergency room. So that's one improvement. Another improvement, Mr. Speaker, is that the regional health authority in Calgary has reduced its wait times in emergencies by some 28 percent.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, as a government we are working on the 44 recommendations set out in the Mazankowski report, which included recommendations related to improving primary health care so that unnecessary visits to emergency rooms would be diminished, and we now do have a 24-hour Health Link line in Calgary, and that Health Link line will be available throughout the entire province by the summer of 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Does the Justice Minister, who has the legislative authority to appoint public inquiries, agree that an internal CHR review is not an acceptable substitute for a public inquiry into the financing and delivery of health care in Calgary as called for by Justice Delong?

The Speaker: Opinions are not a matter of question period.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Sunalta Shelter

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like many of my Calgary colleagues I've recently received over 600 e-mails from volunteers, staff, workers, people that are very concerned that the Sunalta Shelter, which was established as a temporary winter emergency shelter, will be closing its doors next week due to a lack of funding. Now, the Sunalta Shelter is operated through the Mustard Seed Street Ministry, and the Seed provides sleeping arrangements as well as hygiene services for up to 150 men, and half of these men, I understand, are working. So that's raised questions amongst the staff, and the questions are: why should the shelter be closed, and where will these people go? My question today is for the Minister of Seniors. The question is: are there enough spaces available on an immediate basis for 150 men to be accommodated with these same services next week?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last two years some 660 additional spaces were opened for the homeless in Calgary. In spite of these efforts last winter in November a request came forward for interim emergency shelter spaces from three different organizations, one of which was Sunalta. As a result of that, funding was provided very clearly for the period December through April 30. That time line is obviously quickly approaching.

I had hoped that the request in itself would have been the end of the issue and we wouldn't have the requirement at this point. However, that appears not to be the case, and there has been very, very recently the desire to continue with the spaces in Sunalta. Currently the ministry is reviewing the homeless situation in Calgary. Before I can give an answer as to how much space is or is not available in Calgary, I must have the results of that particular review to ensure that I know what spaces may or may not be there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there's a review, that the minister has mentioned, that is being undertaken, what criteria will you use, then, that would close this centre while supporting other centres?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, we have some 16 different shelters that we fund: some for single men, for single women, for hard-to-house seniors, for single men with addictions and health issues, for single men and women, including those who may or may not be intoxicated. As I mentioned, single men, single women, women with children, women without children, so we have all sorts of categories in there. Nowhere did we have any reference to working homeless, which are also in the system. So the criteria that we have to use is to determine if in fact the spaces for this particular clientele that are housed in this particular shelter are in fact required.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister: given the urgency, Mr. Minister, of this situation, will you consider short-term funding for the Sunalta Shelter while you're making your decision following this review?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, yes, with the time line limit that I'm prepared to fund it on a short-term, temporary basis, May 1 through May 31, until the review of the situation in Calgary is completed and we can react properly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

H.R. Milner Power Plant

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2001 the Balancing Pool on behalf of consumers assumed management of the H.R. Milner power purchase arrangement, and a negotiated settlement agreement was reached between ATCO and the Balancing Pool. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. After the termination of the H.R. Milner power purchase arrangement, how much money was paid in compensation to ATCO?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's a detail which I do not have, and we can take it under advisement. I know the Balancing Pool has published that in public reports, but we'd certainly be pleased to provide it to this House.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: in the event that a sale of the H.R. Milner power plant is not completed, what will happen to that very same power plant?

Mr. Smith: I'll take the question under advisement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that under the terms of the negotiated settlement agreement the cost of decommissioning, including site restoration and environmental cleanup, will be paid by the Balancing Pool, what will the total cost to Alberta electricity consumers be?

Mr. Smith: Well, either total cost or total benefit, Mr. Speaker, will be a matter of public record.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Gambling-related Crime Prevention

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Alberta Gaming Research Institute released a study that analyzed gambling-related crime in Edmonton. My constituency neighbours, the Enoch First Nation, have applied for a casino licence. As their application is now in step 5 of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission's eight-step licensing process, this report renewed fears that a casino will bring crime to their streets. My first question is to the Minister of Gaming. Can the minister please tell me what the government is doing to ensure that crime in casinos does not become a problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question. The question calls into account the integrity of gaming in Alberta and also ensuring safe communities within Alberta, both of which are primary goals of this government. With respect to this particular report I can advise the hon. member that we're currently reviewing it to ensure that what we can learn from it will be taken into account, and we'll get some information on that in the next little while.

As it relates to the issue of the Enoch application, one of the primary aspects of the review is to ensure that there is integrity with respect to those who are putting forward the proposal, that there is due diligence with respect to the proposed operators, the proposed financiers, and that the issues of safety not only within the casino but also within the community are taken into account by the AGLC and the board, who are responsible for reviewing the application.

On a broader issue I can tell you that the AGLC has an investigation unit that is comprised almost entirely of former police officers. They work very closely with police forces in the major centres – Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge – the RCMP, Alberta Justice to ensure that there is a continuity of crime fighting, if you will, not only within the casino but also in the community. It might be of note to your constituents, hon. member, that that report you referred to referred to the gaming investigation team that I have just outlined and called it an innovative crime prevention initiative.

So we are very much concerned with respect to this matter. We have been dealing with it, and we intend to continue dealing with it going forward.

Mr. Maskell: My final question is to the Solicitor General. Constituents are very concerned about that casino proposed for the Enoch Cree Nation land bordering the communities of Lewis Estates and the Grange, and particularly they're concerned about the crime that will undoubtedly occur should this proposed casino open for business. Can the Solicitor General tell me how she is dealing with this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleague for raising this issue. I, too, am concerned about the potential impact of casino-related crime on our police services and in regard to keeping our communities safe. Our government has taken the threat of organized crime very seriously, and we've been working with our police partners to combat the threat. We will continue to do so, and our police will be as vigilant as ever.

As my colleague mentioned earlier, we have put together the gaming investigation team, and they're working together with the police and the Alberta Gaming officials. My department is working with police services, the federal government, and Alberta Gaming to address the policing issues related to gaming and organized crime. Under the provincial organized and serious crime strategy my department provides $2.4 million annually to CSIS, and we will continue to monitor the situation very closely.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Ghost-Waiparous Recreation Area Access Plan

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ghost-Waiparous area is a wild and beautiful region west of Calgary that has become a popular destination for nature lovers and vacationing Albertans. Unfortunately, this area has become infamous for drug dealing, alcohol abuse, littering, all-night partying, and other irresponsible recreational use. The Official Opposition is happy to see that an access management plan is being developed but worries that until that plan is ready, the abuse will continue. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: given that it's graduation season for students, what is the minister doing to ensure that parties are controlled in the area?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question, and the timing is right for a question like that because we always have concerns this time of the year when there are graduations and parties. It's a challenging area. It's not easy to manage and develop, but you can be assured – and I've given assurances to the public and to our government – that we will have an access management plan along with the monitoring tools, along with time lines for performance measures to ensure that as we move forward in the development of the plan, we deal with issues like this.

In the meantime all we can do is work very closely with other departments, work with the RCMP, work with the municipality, work with the MLA, and other people that are interested to ensure that we minimize conflict in the community like that. It is very hard also for the enforcement officers to go into an area when you have 500 people at one party. You can see the challenges we are faced with, but, you know, in the long run once we develop that access management plan, those issues will be dealt with.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, when is the access management plan going to be ready?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I have given assurance like with the Bighorn backcountry access management, which was just recently completed and adopted by this government and where we do have an ongoing monitoring process and recommendations to develop, because once you've developed a management plan, it's not finished. It's just the start of the plan, and this is exactly what's happening. We're using the same process with the Ghost-Waiparous. Some of the same members, in fact, will sit on the committee to develop a plan, so they do have experience already. We're targeting fall of this year to complete that plan.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, between now and when the plan is ready, what is the minister doing to ensure that the extensive ecological damage caused by off-road vehicles doesn't continue over the summer? It could be a huge problem.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, you know, this issue has been around for a long, long time, and we just started working on it in relation to developing an access management plan in fact just in the last couple of weeks, and we will complete it early this fall. But in the meantime we'll work very closely with Community Development, with the municipality, the MLA, and the committee we have in place, of course with Environment also and other departments to ensure that we minimize damage to the area and minimize the number of casualties that may happen in the area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Licensee Liability Rating Program

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past few weeks I've received a number of concerns and phone calls plus a meeting from small oil companies regarding the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board's licence liability rating, hereinafter the LLR program. My questions are all to the Minister of Energy. I'm concerned that this program is unfairly penalizing small oil and gas producers. My first question is: could the minister please explain why the EUB implemented this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. Since Turner Valley, oil and gas has been produced in this fair province and has just in the last three years delivered some $23 billion in royalty revenue to the province.

Following the discovery of Leduc No. 1 in 1947, over 14 billion barrels of oil have been produced by this province. As that happens, you have an infrastructure that starts to age, and you have some 80,000, 90,000 wells out there that get old. The facilities age. Pipelines have to be abandoned. There has to be reclamation, and this leads to the potential of these facilities being orphaned, Mr. Speaker, or left without someone to pay. It is not the responsibility nor is it intended to be the responsibility of the Crown to in fact reclaim these sites, so we wanted to ensure that a program was in place to protect the taxpayers from paying for abandonment, decontamination, and reclamation of orphaned facilities. This program does increase public safety, does provide the important stewardship for ongoing environmental protection as its aim is to reduce the number of orphaned energy facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of the energy companies I've spoken with are complaining that they do not have the financial ability to meet the standards of the LLR program. Could the minister please explain how this program works and how it would affect the stripper well program?

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, this is important because one of the great things about the Alberta oil and gas industry is that we've been able to have Albertans participate in this industry for a great number of years, and in fact small participants with limited amounts of money can participate in the development of this asset.

In detail, the licensee liability rating program is an approximate assessment of a company's ability to address petroleum facility abandonment and environmental reclamation liabilities; in other words, the total cost that would occur after revenues have ceased to accrue from the production of either oil or gas from these particular wells. When deemed liabilities exceed deemed assets, at that time the program collects security deposits from companies. Now, the deposits in today's world of electronic funds transfer and lines of credit and letters of credit are not necessarily cashed but in fact can be letters of credit. These deposits, Mr. Speaker, are then returned to companies when their assets again exceed their liabilities or when they have addressed the abandonment of environmental liabilities in an appropriate and acceptable manner.

Mr. Masyk: My final question, Mr. Speaker: can the minister tell the Assembly if the EUB carried out any consultation with the industry before the LLR program was implemented, and is there any possibility for future amendments if they're needed or required?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you. I did hear from an hon. member from the government side that it is a good question, and in fact, Mr. Speaker, this program was a manifestation of extensive consultation. Consultation is a key word in the orderly development of the oil and gas industry in Alberta, and this consultation period started some time in October of 2000.

The principles of the program were put together in conjunction with the EUB; CAPP, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers; the Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada; and Alberta Environment and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development. Mr. Speaker, the vast majority of those players in the industry not only agreed to the program but are also in compliance with it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Photoradar

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. An inconsistent practice of not including a copy of a photo with a photoradar ticket exists in Alberta. We have a situation where a photoradar ticket was sent to an owner whose trailer was the subject of a speeding violation. However, the trailer was stolen from him and reported stolen before the violation occurred. To add insult to injury, the victim of the theft has been told that he must pay the speeding ticket. My first question is to the Minister of Transportation. Given that people are being photographed speeding, why is it that some communities are not supplying a copy of the picture along with the photoradar ticket and others are?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of this particular issue, but there are fairly stringent rules as to how photoradar is deployed in the province, so we would of course take this question in consideration and check it according to the rules that we have implemented for photoradar.

Ms Blakeman: My next question is to the Solicitor General. Why is there no policy to deal with situations where stolen vehicles are caught on photoradar speeding and the photoradar ticket is sent to the owner to pay? Why are the victims of crime paying for thieves' infractions?

Mrs. Forsyth: Again, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure of the exact situation that the hon. member is mentioning, and certainly we'll look into the situation. Like the Minister of Transportation said, we have strict guidelines and policies in place for photoradar, and I'd be pleased to look at it for her.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the Minister of Transportation: will the minister institute a universal format for photoradar tickets always including a copy of the photo taken at the time of the infraction when the ticket is sent out?

2:20

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are rules that the enforcement agencies have to follow in terms of deployment of photoradar. We made substantial changes a few years ago to make sure that photoradar is accepted as an enforcement tool in the province. I believe the enforcement agencies have come a long way in following those particular rules, and in this particular situation if I can just get the facts, the situation, we can investigate it and ensure that those rules are followed. Without having the privilege of knowing the facts, the location, nor even the enforcement agency – it's pretty difficult to give an opinion on something without all the necessary information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, a report that was released yesterday by TD Bank concluded that if Alberta is to maintain strong, dynamic economic growth, it must invest more in education at all levels. That is what makes the government's failure to properly fund education in this year's provincial budget so inexcusable. To illustrate this point, Alberta's largest school board, the Calgary board of education, has crunched their numbers and are facing a $32 million deficit in their budget next year. My questions are to the Premier. Will the government at least follow the advice of corporate Canada that is urging this government to immediately increase investment in education at all levels in order to maintain our province's prosperity and growth momentum?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, certainly our commitment to education is strong, perhaps stronger than any other jurisdiction in the country. A nearly 51 percent increase in funding for education in the past seven years while enrollment has grown by only 6 percent I think is significant, but I said yesterday – and this was directed at the Liberals – that be it for the Liberals to pick out anything negative in a report. I should have added the NDs as well, and I will today.

First of all, the report says that we must take action now to ensure that the tiger's roar doesn't fade. In other words, the report says that this is the most incredible piece of economic real estate that exists anywhere in North America, that corridor between Calgary and Edmonton, and we have to do what we can to protect it and make sure that we sustain its economic viability. It also says that businesses and individuals have flocked to the region to take advantage of the considerable market opportunities, [to take advantage of the] low taxes, [to take advantage of the] low business costs, vast wealth of natural resources, low crime and poverty rates, a high-quality education system, and a clean environment. Add to this the long list of recreational and cultural options, and there is little wonder why the Calgary-Edmonton Corridor has been able to create the "buzz" that [any] other urban areas can only aspire to.

That's what it says.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if this Premier will explain to Calgarians why this government has provided only a 3.4 percent overall increase to the Calgary board of education next year when the CBE says that this is only about half the minimum 7.6 percent increase required for them just to maintain current service levels.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance supplement because it was she who presented the budget. Learning budgets are predicated on anticipated need and anticipated expenditures for the coming year, and after due consideration and weeks and months of consultation it's deemed to be an appropriate amount, but I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I'd like to say that our commitment to learning in this province is not matched anywhere else within Canada. We are the number one lead per capita of financing for learning within Canada, and once again I will say that this year the Minister of Learning has embarked on a new funding framework that will deal with issues at the local level, and when the budgets from the local school boards arrive in the Ministry of Learning sometime in June, then he will work with those school boards to deal with the funding pressures.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is passing the buck here, so let me ask him the last question. Why is the Premier prepared to place Alberta's future well-being at risk by leaving Calgary's board of education and many other school boards like it no choice but to either incur a huge deficit or make deep service cuts next year?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, neither assertion is true: entirely speculative. If any school board finds itself in difficulty in this province, we have a very competent and very capable Department of Learning, that would be more than happy to work with school boards to see them through their difficulties. But I would remind the hon. leader of the ND opposition that our priority in this government is education and to make sure that we have an educated workforce in the future to sustain the marvelous economy alluded to in the TD report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twenty-one Calgary MLAs in particular are very well aware of the tragic death of Vince Motta two years ago and of the fatality inquiry report into his death, which was released last week with harsh criticism given to the conduct of the Calgary health region during the inquiry. Part of Calgary region's response has been the hiring, as announced yesterday, of a lawyer to investigate the region's actions during the inquiry process. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Instead of focusing on its conduct during the inquiry, why is the Calgary health region not investigating its conduct while Mr. Motta was waiting in emergency?

Mr. Mar: I think that if one reviews His Honour Judge Delong's report – there are some 25 recommendations contained in that report – you'll find that His Honour spent a good deal of time looking at the specific issue of what happened while Mr. Motta was in the emergency room. So to spend additional time and resources on trying to determine what happened on that particular day in the emergency room would not be a particularly productive use of time. It would simply be repeating the relatively extensive work already done by Judge Delong. Mr. Speaker, the value of this report should not be lost, and I am satisfied that the regional health authority in its response to this report will be interested in looking at each of those recommendations, some of which they've already acted upon in order to try and improve their emergency system in the city of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is also to the same minister. The judge's comments singled out access to emergency services as a concern in Calgary. Is the minister concerned that changes in access to emergency services today due to an increase in population will impact the results of the CHR response?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, of course, the increased number of people in the city of Calgary is a legitimate challenge that the regional health authority has to face. As it is now, Mr. Speaker, there are some 250,000 people who use emergency rooms in the Calgary health region, and of course one of the things that they'll need to do is try and reduce the number of unnecessary visits to emergency rooms. That's why the Health Link line, which has been spoken of in glowing terms by many members of this Assembly in many different venues, continues to be an important priority for the regional health authority and for this provincial government, to ensure that that goes up throughout the entire province by the summer of this year.

Mr. Speaker, I will say again and I will repeat in any venue that we have a good health system, and what we want to do is we want to continuously improve it. We want to ensure that matters of patient safety continue to be paramount. So the value of this report will not only be to the regional health authority but to all of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go on to the next order of the Routine, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly 94 guests from l'école Dr. Brosseau school in Bonnyville. Accompanying these bright and enthusiastic students are the following teachers and parents which I'd like to recognize: Mrs. Michelle Drapaka, Mrs. Camille Cory, Ms Liz Felix, Mrs. Janice Watson, Mrs. Lorraine Gaugler, Mrs. Frances MacDonald, Mrs. Monique Wagner, Mrs. Sara Wanner, Mrs. Lynda Rodger, Mrs. Thérèse Richard, and Mrs. Gisèle Gagne. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them please to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Ann Lewis

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to recognize Ann Lewis, executive director, Alberta Ballet. Ann Lewis assumed the administrative leadership of Alberta Ballet in January 2002 after serving the organization for six years as a fund-raiser, board member, and board chair. The company was in a challenging financial position, carrying a deficit for the first time in nine years. With the support of the staff and board, Ms Lewis took action immediately to meet this challenge. By restructuring to maximize efficiencies and by introducing best business practices within the not-for-profit setting, she succeeded in retiring the deficit within six months.

A passionate dance lover and a strategic businesswoman, Ms Lewis is dedicated to running a sustainable, fiscally responsible company without compromising artistic integrity or excellence. Community outreach is central to her vision. She believes in building strong networks, alliances, and partnerships between the ballet and its stakeholders, including audiences, public funders, foundations, sponsors, donors, fellow arts organizations, and other nonprofits.

Thank you, Ann Lewis, for your contribution to the Alberta Ballet and Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Canada Book Week

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to recognize today Canada Book Week, April 21 to 27. This weeklong celebration reaffirms for all Canadians the importance of ensuring the continued vitality of Canadian literature and, in doing so, celebrates Alberta's authors, publishers, booksellers, and I'd like to say most specifically libraries because Alberta libraries are to be congratulated for their support of Canada Book Week by providing activities that reflect community priorities and proudly define the spirit of our province and the strength of our communities. Alberta's authors, booksellers, and book publishers are also to be applauded for the important role they play in bringing Albertans and books together not only during Canada Book Week but every week of the year.

We all know that books transport us to the past, connect us to the present, and help us to embrace the future through imagination and knowledge. I'd like to commend everyone who enjoys reading a book.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Ernest Hokanson

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge a very generous donation that was recently made to the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology, NAIT. This acknowledgment is on behalf of Edmonton-Norwood, Edmonton-Calder, and on behalf of all Edmonton MLAs.

This very kind donation came from a family who has long been associated with dining in the city of Edmonton. Mr. Ernest Hokanson spent his life in food service. His wife, Irene, recently said that food was always his passion and feeding people was a very big part of his life.

Ernest Hokanson got his first job at the age of 15 in the kitchen of the Hotel Macdonald. He served as an army cook in World War II, and his last venture was with H.G. Catering.

Ernest Hokanson passed away two years ago. Now Ernest's son John Hokanson has donated $1 million to the renovation of NAIT's food service building. Construction of the new kitchens and labs will begin next spring, and the proposed new centre will appropriately be named Hokanson Centre for Culinary Arts. In addition, NAIT's dining room will be named Ernest's in honour of Ernest Hokanson.

The generous gift from Mr. John Hokanson is only the second donation of its size in NAIT's history, and the new centre will create a legacy for the chefs of tomorrow.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Way of the Cross Easter Walk

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise today to recognize more than 1,000 people who made the commitment in Edmonton on Good Friday to pray and walk the outdoor Way of the Cross in an effort to draw attention to issues like peace and poverty. This year's Easter walk, symbolizing Jesus Christ's path to crucifixion, was designed around the theme of Creating Home in a World of Fear. The theme was inspired by the release of a local homeless count in October that showed that 1,915 are homeless in the city of Edmonton. Included in that are 267 children under the age of 15. Since September 2000 755 more people don't have a place to call home.

Fortunately, there are compassionate people like the organizers and marchers who helped bring much attention to these issues through the 24th Way of the Cross, which is affiliated with the Edmonton and District Council of Churches.

Thank you.

National Poetry Month

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, April is National Poetry Month.

I could think of things worse
Than to honour the verse
And to pay homage to a sonnet
With lots of rhyme on it

So sit down with some paper,
Grab a bottle of ink
Compose yourself an epic that Makes them all think.

It might be a ballad that tells a long tale
Or a limerick that makes the Nantucket one pale.
It could be a couplet or a sonnet that rhymes
It really doesn't matter – any poem is fine.

No need to rehearse
If you're writing free verse
But line up all your P's and all your Q's
If alliteration is what you choose.

No matter the form
No matter the pentameters
April is National Poetry Month
And that's all that matters.

Now my time is Done
So wake up from your napping
Next week at this time
I'm going to try rapping.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

VoicePrint

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to recognize VoicePrint, which is operated by the National Broadcast Reading Service. It is a not-for-profit registered charity established in 1989 to enhance access to news and information for blind, low vision, and print restricted Canadians.

Licensed by the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission, or CRTC, VoicePrint is available across Canada by cable and satellite in 8.4 million homes. Alberta's target market is 250,000. Almost 300 Calgarians are volunteer readers for VoicePrint, filling in for families and friends 24 hours a day for those who can't find the time to read aloud to loved ones. In fact, our Premier was the first Canadian Premier to read for VoicePrint.

Currently VoicePrint has a licence renewal application before the CRTC, and public support is needed to show the CRTC the importance of VoicePrint and their renewal initiatives. I would encourage everyone in this Assembly before May 1 to go to www.voiceprint.ca to send an e-mail of support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Edmonton Oilers Hockey Club

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am a huge Oilers fan, and the season cannot be over for me until I recognize the Edmonton Oilers Hockey Club. The Edmonton Oilers organization is a small market Canadian team competing in the NHL, yet every year they provide exciting competitive hockey to the fans of Edmonton. Their success is in large part due to the great leadership of their community-based owners, the management team led by president Patrick LaForge and general manager Kevin Lowe and his coaching staff led by Craig MacTavish, and of course I cannot forget the seventh player, Joey Moss.

The contribution that the team, the owners, the management, the alumni, the Copper Jackets, and the Oilers foundation make to this region on behalf of charities and community organizations is extraordinary and with little fanfare. I recognize the Edmonton Oilers today, and I will be loud and proud next year. Go, Oilers, go. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:40head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition duly vetted and signed by about 600 residents of northwestern Alberta that urges the Alberta government to “consider continuing the funding for the Applied Forest Resource Management program at Grande Prairie Regional College.”

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a document signed by 156 Calgarians petitioning this House to urge this government to do the following three things:

1. To immediately withdraw the draft management plan for the Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area and revise it so as to disallow any further commercial or residential development of the Kananaskis Valley;
2. To redesignate the Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area and adjacent unprotected public lands and expand as a Provincial Park;
3. To maintain Kananaskis Country in natural state that provides high quality wildlife habitat and nature-based recreational activities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got one tabling today. It's a news release by the Calgary board of education dated April 16, 2003, regarding the provincial budget. So that's the document.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter dated April 16, 2003, from the United Nurses of Alberta to myself, and it's signed by the president of the United Nurses of Alberta, Heather Smith. It is indicating that “UNA is dedicated to reaching a new agreement through negotiations” with the health regions. They're working hard at it.

The second letter that I have that is a tabling this afternoon is dated April 7 of this year, and it is to the hon. Minister of Learning, and it is from Sheila Boucher from Fulton Road in Edmonton-Gold Bar. Mrs. Boucher is indicating that “schools need more funding to provide a quality education.”

The third tabling is also concerning funding for public education, and it is organized by the grade 5/6 students of room 21 in Strathearn school. They have signed this letter indicating that they believe there is a “dire need” of more adequate funding for public education.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table five copies of petitions and letters from residents of Hinton who are frustrated and upset over the government's school utilization formula and its effect on their community schools. Citizens are watching their education system being ripped apart by a utilization formula that doesn't take into consideration the educational, emotional, and social needs of their students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, both relating to education concerns. The first is a copy of a submission from the Aldergrove school council outlining a sad situation of staff reductions both last year and this year and expressing a request that these issues be raised by government MLAs in the Legislature.

The second is a copy of a letter that I table with permission. It's to the Minister of Learning, again expressing grave concern.

Recently my husband, an oncologist, with excellent clinical and research credentials, came to the University of Alberta Hospital.

When we moved to Alberta our children left an excellent [school system].

It goes on to express concerns about what's happening to the school system in Edmonton.

Thank you.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: Good afternoon. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Finance

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to this budget estimate? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to be here to present the Ministry of Finance estimates for 2003-2004. I'd like to begin by introducing some of my staff who have been involved in putting together our budget and business plan. With us today in the members' gallery are the Deputy Minister of Finance, Peter Kruselnicki; the senior financial officer, Bonnie Lovelace; our senior manager of budgets, who puts Finance's budget actually together, Richard Shelast; our manager of business planning, Juliette Blair; and my executive assistant, Tim Wade.

Mr. Chairman, as the Minister of Finance I'm very proud to say that our province still has the lowest overall tax load in Canada. There's no general sales tax, no capital tax, and no payroll tax. A typical one-income family with two children earning $30,000 a year pays approximately 85 percent less in taxes and health care premiums in Alberta than the average in any other province. To put this into another perspective, Albertans and Alberta businesses would pay almost $5 billion more if they had to pay the taxes under the system in British Columbia, over $5 billion more if we had to pay the taxes in Ontario, and over $9.5 billion more if we had to pay Quebec's taxes.

We continue to reward Albertans' exceptional spirit by reducing corporate taxes and by enhancing Alberta's reputation as the ultimate destination to do business. This year's tax cuts will save Alberta businesses roughly $94 million in this fiscal year of 2003-2004. On the personal side since the introduction of the single-rate tax, Albertans are paying over $1.5 billion less per year in personal income taxes. In addition, Albertans will pay about $130 million less as a result of the inflation-proofing introduced in 2001.

I'm also very proud of the fact that our province's accumulated debt has been reduced by nearly 80 percent since 1994-95. The accumulated debt less cash set aside for future debt reduction is forecast at $4.8 billion by the end of this fiscal year. Lower debt means lower debt-servicing costs, and as a result of our debt reduction efforts $1.3 billion in annual debt-servicing costs have been freed up for Albertans' program priorities and lower taxes. Alberta's debt-servicing costs for 2003-2004 are $458 million. Alberta has by far the lowest debt load per person of any province in Canada.

Before we start the highlights of our budget and business plan, I would like to give a quick review of the key roles of the ministry. The department itself has four main areas, including the office of budget and management; pensions, insurance, and financial institutions; Treasury management; and corporate support. The Ministry of Finance also includes the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, formerly known as the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation; the Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation; ATB Financial and its subsidiaries; the Alberta Insurance Council; and the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation.

Alberta Finance's vision is "a province that is innovative and globally competitive with a fiscally sustainable and accountable government." Our mission is to "develop and implement the government's fiscal framework and financial policies."

One of the recommendations the government accepted from the Financial Management Commission's report said: ministry business plans were too long, too detailed, and too operational. They were right, so we made some changes. We have included a "what it means" section in our goals because it is important for people to understand what we are trying to do.

We are focused on only the high-level strategies to meet our goals, and these strategies include "re-engineering Alberta's fiscal framework"; working with other ministries to assess the economic impacts of the Kyoto protocol; developing enterprise risk management "to identify the sources of risk to all major components of the province's revenues and expenses"; assessing the issues facing the automobile insurance industry "including a review of compensation for automobile injury claims and related premium increases." Pension plan governance and regulation: "Finance will continue to monitor the financial health of pension plans." The governance of the LAPP and other public-sector pension plans will be reviewed. That doesn't mean we'll stop doing our day-to-day job of managing the province's finances. All we are doing is highlighting the key initiatives of the new business plan.

Finance has six goals to accomplish the mission for 2003 to 2006. Goal 1, "A financially strong, sustainable and accountable government." Our key strategy is to "oversee cross-government implementation of accepted recommendations" from the Financial Management Commission. Some of the recommendations include the new fiscal framework and capital plan. By 2005-2006 virtually all the FMC recommendations will be implemented.

Goal 2, "A fair and competitive provincial tax system." Albertans currently enjoy the lowest provincial tax load for a family of four in Canada. We have the highest personal exemption levels in Canada; that is, the amount of money a working individual can earn without paying provincial personal income tax. Our targets in this area are to have the lowest tax load in Canada for both personal and corporate taxes. We currently have the lowest personal tax, and we are the second lowest for the corporate tax.

Goal 3, "Effective management of financial assets, liabilities and risks." Finance will manage the Alberta sustainability fund and capital fund. It is important that we manage any potential risk that might arise due to the complexity and size of this government's financial assets and liabilities. Our target is to have a government decision by the end of 2003-04 on whether to proceed with an enterprise risk management strategy.

Goal 4, to ensure "confidence in provincially regulated financial institutions and insurance companies." "Alberta's regulatory environment for financial services must be fair and efficient to encourage the availability of comprehensive, reliable and competitive products and services." To do this, we are carrying out a policy review of compensation for automobile injury claims and related costs of premium increases. We are also working with industry and consumer groups to complete phase 2 of revising the Insurance Act. A year ago phase 1 of the new Insurance Act updated the previous one and modernized many of the provisions. Phase 2 will deal with more of the contractual provisions of the act, and we anticipate it will be ready for implementation in 2005. We will work with stakeholders to harmonize financial sector legislation while keeping unnecessary regulations off the books.

Goal 5, "Pensions that deliver on promises."

Pension Plan members need to be assured that their benefits are secure. Employers and other plan sponsors need to know that pension regulation is fair and even-handed. The Superintendent of Pensions focuses on assessing private sector plan compliance with legislative standards and ensuring the 'at risk' plans take action to comply with regulations.

As a trustee of most of Alberta's public-sector pension plan assets I want to ensure that they are sound and secure for members of the various plans. We also need to make sure that those plans deliver on promises. Our measures and targets both reflect making progress on issues like LAPP independence and reaching specific satisfaction targets with stakeholders. In addition, we continue to reach for having our private-sector plans meeting minimum funding requirements.

Goal 6 focuses on making sure financial services are available to Albertans and Alberta municipalities. "Alberta's dynamic economy and entrepreneurial spirit requires readily accessible and technologically advanced financial services and products." ATB Financial and Alberta Capital Finance, formerly AMFC, are "key components of the financial servicing sector." ATB Financial will continue to develop their commercial banking capacity and wealth management services. Our targets include specific measures to reflect our position as owner of ATB Financial. We have targets for the Alberta Capital Finance Authority to maintain the lowest borrowing costs for Alberta municipalities and local authority satisfaction with ACFA policies and efficiencies.

That was a quick look at where we are going in 2003-2004, Mr. Chairman. Now I want to give you a few highlights of our budget and our estimates.

Ministry revenues. Our ministry revenue is projected at just over $816 million, a decrease from the $1.2 billion forecast in 2002-2003. Our investment income for 2003-04 is $26.5 million lower than the 2002-2003 forecast primarily due to reductions in the Capital Finance Authority investment income due to lower interest rates on new loans. We'll also see a decrease of more than $238 million for internal government transfers that represent contributions from the lottery funds to my department for the contingency allowance or sustainability fund. The net income from our commercial operations is projected to be $47.5 million lower than the 2002-2003 forecast. This is because Alberta Treasury Branches' net income is expected to be below last year's forecast, mostly related to the West Edmonton Mall settlement. The $96.5 million decrease from the 2002-2003 forecast in other revenue is attributed to the transfer of $100 million from the Alberta Capital Finance Authority's retained earnings in 2002-2003.

On the program expense side in terms of program expenses we're estimating it to be almost $435 million. This is a decrease from just over $451 million from 2002-2003 forecasts. The decline is due to a drop in interest costs on the money borrowed by the Capital Finance Authority to lend to local authorities. As I mentioned earlier, our debt servicing costs for 2003-04 are $458 million.

I'd like to take a couple of minutes, Mr. Chairman, to highlight a few of the areas within our estimates that I think you will find interesting. Capital investment. Our total capital investment for 2003-04 is estimated at $4.6 million. This includes $80,000 for the department to support the debt management system and for network service. Capital investments for the Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation are budgeted at $4.4 million this fiscal year for its new system to manage pension plan payments.

Another area that we're always interested in looking at is the full-time equivalents. Overall the ministry has increased its staffing by 27 full-time equivalents to 379. The increases are in the department, Alberta Pensions Administration, and the Alberta Insurance Council. The department's staffing levels will be 175, two more than last year. In Alberta Pensions Administration there are an additional 25 full-time equivalents, primarily for the additional IT resources formerly outsourced and to handle the growing volume of retirees. The Alberta Insurance Council staffing levels will be 20 full-time equivalents, no overall change, again, from this year.

Mr. Chairman, this is really a quick overview of Alberta Finance's business plan and our estimates for 2003-04. I look forward to hearing the questions and comments from the members, and I will undertake that if I haven't answered all of the questions during today's deliberations, we will get back to them. But I would ask that when members are asking questions, if they could reference the page from the business plan and the budget so I could determine where they're getting their numbers from.

Thank you very much. I look forward to the questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the minister for her opening comments as we undertake the review of the Finance estimates. Also, I'd like to thank all of the staff members who are here. They do a good job of making the minister look good and I know work very hard and do a pretty good job, I think, although we do have a few questions on how the priorities and so on are set.

My habit in the budget debate is to ask a question or two, get the minister to answer, and back and forth like that so that it isn't a lot of rhetoric but we get some good information. Hopefully, that's the process we can follow this afternoon for at least the first hour until all members of the Assembly are involved.

First of all, from an overview perspective I'd like to talk about: if the responsibility of the Finance department is to be the gatekeeper of the expense side of the government, then could you explain to us how you set the priorities for spending? We don't actually know the process and neither do Albertans in general. I'm assuming that ministers come to you looking for money, the pie is only so big, and there's a process that you have for determining what those priorities are: who gets more money, who gets less money, how you establish how much money you think you're going to have for the year. So if you could go through that process for us, we would appreciate it.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, thank you very much. I really appreciate the question because it's a very lengthy process that we do go through on an annual basis. It starts really the day after the budget has been filed: we start on the next year's business-planning process. Like most corporate entities we set up a schedule and we follow through on it. We hear from the people. We listen to what Albertans talk to us about. I think that clearly this budget that we filed this year is reflective of what people said. We needed to have a balanced approach to come forward. We heard what they said and we listened and we delivered that product.

The difficulty comes, then, when you get into specific ministries. The process starts with our standing policy committees, who sit down and hear representations and presentations on different issues from members or ministers, chairs of this group or that group. We have public presentations and then start cataloguing that into what will become the business-planning process.

We establish some priorities through our caucus deliberations and debate, which is lengthy and is reflected at the standing policy committee meetings. They can be cumbersome and long, and our chairs of the standing policy committees have a job to move issues forward and to deal with a number of ministries and set priorities. The feed-in through presentations from people outside as well as our own members is lengthy, and it starts to evolve into some priority areas. Then we have a caucus retreat. We debate again those issues and the priorities that have come up throughout the year, and there are several presentations, and our caucus debates issues, comes forward with some priority-setting. We have a cabinet retreat, and we take the views from the caucus retreat and feed that into, again, priority-setting for ministers to focus on, and then they actually present a business plan in draft form to the standing policy committees. They debate those back and forth. They try to capture the priorities they've heard, and if they haven't, I can tell you that the caucus members certainly help them with the restructuring of the priorities very readily and straightforwardly.

They often are back three or four times to debate issues, and finally some draft business plans are put together at the standing policy committee process. In the meantime, the Treasury Board looks at the projections of what the finances will look like, and we determine the forecast for revenues based on a lot of information, again gathered from outside and from our own economists inside, and we ask outside advisors to come in and give us some long-term trends.

I know that last year when there was so much volatility in the process, when I went to New York on the first trip, I asked them what a reasonable price would be for crude oil for the year, and they said, "Well, Pat, anywhere between $15 and $30 a barrel," and I thought, "Holy crow. And I'm trying to put something around money into a health budget or an education budget.” You know, a full range from $15 to $30 was huge. When I went back later in the year as there was the threat of war looming, I asked them again, and they said, “Well, the price we’d have is a range from $6 to $60,” and I thought, “Perfect. This is how you can build a budget with a lot of certainty.” So the volatility was very, very difficult. That was one of the things that was beneficial, particularly this last year, when we implemented the recommendations from the Financial Management Commission.

So all of that fed into the Treasury Board at the same time the business plans were being developed at the SPC level of looking at the targets for the budget. Preliminary targets do go out to the various ministries, and based on those dollars and allocations and the priorities that have been set by our caucus, we allocate spending targets and they try to fit as much of the priority into those targets that are allocated. Then they come to Treasury Board and they’re reviewed, each ministry with their targets and their plan, and the SPC chairs attend with the ministries to make sure the reflection of the meeting is there at the presentation. Then they go back, and of course everybody has wishes that are beyond the targets, which is understandable, and the Treasury Board has some difficult choices to make. Then we go back to our standing policy chairs again and ask them to set priorities, and they do that. Then we come to a final determination of putting the budget together, which, again, is always a tough balance.

From what Albertans have told us, we believe that this year we’ve met the priorities. We’ve heard from groups throughout the province, and we did some focus testing to make sure our priorities were in line, and they in fact were. We came forward with a budget that I think is well balanced and one that is the result of a lot of work from this caucus and our standing policy committees and our Treasury Board members that are just committed, along with our ministry staff, to put a document together to run an over $20 billion operation.

It’s a huge process that takes a lot of work. I don’t think a lot of people realize the extent of what’s involved with it, Mr. Chairman. Every caucus member has been involved in this in one element or another and some of them in several. Some of our caucus members have attended every standing policy committee meeting that we’ve had on budget preparation, and that’s a lot of commitment and a lot of time, so I commend them for their effort. They certainly have spoken up on the priorities that they have heard from constituents and throughout the province.

So it’s a very long process, but at the end of the day it does come together and it comes into one document that I have the privilege of presenting in this House. It involves all 74 members from the government side in many, many forms.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’d like to thank the minister for the detail in that answer. It helps us to understand the process of developing the operational side of the budget, but there’s another level that we need to understand, and that’s the long-term planning and the long-term strategic goals. We see and we understand very well on this side, too, the competing interest for dollars in any given year, and $20 billion sounds like a lot of money until you start dishing it out to the various ministries. Who decides what the long-term strategic plan of the government is – so I’m talking five, 15, 25, 50 years out – and how do you tie the operational side into those goals?

3:10

Mrs. Nelson: That’s a really, I think, critical question, and I appreciate the question coming forward, because one of the recommendations – I think it was recommendation 12 – from the Financial Management Commission was that we had to develop a longer term strategic plan, that focusing on one or two or three years wasn’t going to be sufficient as we went into this new century. We had to go beyond that, and we had to start thinking strategically. They had said that our business planning had got too far down in and should be a little less operational and more high-level and more strategic in the process, and we agreed.

As a result, we set up a strategic planning group, and again this came as a result of our caucus and cabinet retreats of how we would put this together and the idea of: based on the best futuristic economic view, what do we believe the province of Alberta will look like 10 years out or 20 years out? If you start to visualize what that structure could be like, then you have to determine: how do we get from year 1 to year 20 and have the same success level that we experience today in Canada and North America 20 years out? Look at things such as the changes in the demographics. What will Alberta look like at that point? If we can come to some conclusions based on, again, some good expertise that is helpful for us, then we can craft a strategic plan.

That plan has to be a living plan because factors change, so you have to have the flexibility to be able to continually add on more information as data becomes available to you. If you take the very basics of that strategic planning process, then you can create somewhat of a critical path to get from today to 10 years out and 20 years out, but you have to be able to do like you do with the budget. I think that sometimes we get a negative for doing quarterly updates, but quarterly updates just tell the people of Alberta that we’re dealing with the reality of the situation. We’re not sitting there with a fabricated plan that doesn’t deal with the reality that’s occurred within the world, and that’s the benefit of strategic planning: you’re able to look longer term, deal with the knowns today, but adjust for the uncertainties that do occur along the way.

So, again, we have put in place a strategic planning process that goes through and has formed part of this budget process this year to look beyond the three-year business plan to try and visualize where we’re going to be. Part of the key of the recommendations from the Financial Management Commission was to look at some sustainability. Someone asked me: why don’t you call it stabilization? I didn’t want to call it stabilization because I didn’t want to take away from what it really is: sustainability. Sustainability is the long-term strategic environment where you put in place core programs and you put in a mechanism that will sustain those programs throughout those years. It’s not a mechanism to cover up poor estimates on revenues and operating costs in a given year or drop on a fund; it’s to sustain the core essence of what the government is responsible for, like health and education, into the longer term, and strategically you’ll be able to think into those out years.

That’s what it’s for, and nothing more than that: so you don’t have peaks and valleys and volatility within those very key systems. You can’t run a health system without some predictability built into it and therefore some sustainability so they can maintain core programs particularly in areas – health and education – which are core.

The long-term strategic planning is very, very important. We’ve embraced that, and we’ve changed the way we do things and the way we’ve put our planning, I think, forward. Is there a way we can improve on it? Yes. But when you really think, Mr. Chairman, how fast we moved to put in place a group to give us an alternative to the way we were doing things, that showed us the peaks and valleys, volatility, into something that provided sustainability and some predictability, it was May 27 last year that we put together the group for the Financial Management Commission and asked them to bring forward some recommendations to us. They brought that forward.

In the summer we went through it. We had some problems with a couple of the recommendations, but we took it through our whole caucus planning process, our whole caucus approval process, standing policy committees, put our budgets together and implemented it and put it in this budget.

That's got to be probably a record turnaround for the government to stay so focused on the timetable. We laid out a timetable, and we never wavered from that timetable. We said: this is the date; we're going to do it even if it takes hours. This is the next date, this is the next date, and we moved it along – bang, bang, bang, bang – to put in place a plan that will take us out into those 10- and 20-year futures. That's critically important.

It's an excellent question, and I thank you for it.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, to do that long-term planning, the minister must have made some key assumptions, things like an aging population, the bulge in health care costs, what the inputs to revenue would be, what happens on the education side, what happens in long-term infrastructure funding. Could you share with us any of those assumptions that you made?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can get far more detail for the hon. member, but one of the things I often look at is our aging population. Right now we have just over 300,000 seniors in the province. In a very short time we'll have over 700,000 seniors in the province, doubling with our population base not increasing. It becomes critically important for us to be able to put in place programs that our children can afford to sustain because there won't be as many of them working to support the programs that we will require, and placing a burden on them would not be wise because that would defeat what we've worked so hard to avoid. So the key on the programs is to make sure that they are sustainable and they're at a level that our kids can afford to have. I think that's an important element to look at.

One of the things that we did do – and we accepted the recommendation from the Financial Management Commission – was get away from the volatility with the resource revenue, to look at the numbers that we've had over the last 20 years and determine what would be a normal level of resource revenue to come into the province that would be supportive of our regular operations. As you know, we chose $3.5 billion as a normal stream of revenue from resource revenue. We picked that number because we felt that that was the norm.

Now, we've said time and time again that over this first three years we'll monitor that. Now, if that number should be $3.4 billion or $3.3 billion we'll come in here and say that we were a little high. If it should have been $3.6 billion or $3.7 billion we'll do the same thing, but we believe that $3.5 billion is the sustainable number year after year after year, and that will provide predictability for our regional health authorities, our school boards, our municipal governments so they can do some long-term planning alongside of us. There's no point in having us do long-term planning if our partners can't do long-term planning. They have to deliver the frontline service, so they have to be part of the equation. We have to provide the predictability for them so they can do their job effectively alongside us.

There are a number of factors. Growth patterns. How is the province going to grow? What's the industry base going to look like? Are we moving into knowledge-based industries? Are we able to get into that? Working with our postsecondary institutions becomes critically important as to: what does the next generation look like? The feedback from them has been phenomenal. They've been very, very co-operative. Having these partnerships with volunteer groups from the private sector and from our postsecondaries to come in and give us advice and help us has been critically important in this long-term planning, and it will have to continue on. It's not something you do just for one budget. This has to continue year after year after year and say: we don't have all the answers. We have to go to the people with the knowledge and pull them together, and they've been exceptional in coming forward, so we'll keep on with it.

The aging population, the dynamic of the industry base, the resource revenue have been some of the elements that were key on the trends within the country. The growth patterns. There's an expectation that our growth will continue to be there, that it will be sustainable well above 3 and half percent. That's the number that's there today – the economists tell us that – so we're quite pleased with that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. One of the criticisms of this government in the past has been the stovepiping of the ministries, and I know that over the last couple of years there's been an attempt to flatten out the process and have more cross initiatives between ministries. We heard last night how the Minister of Economic Development is working with a variety of ministries, and what it sounded like to me was that there was some issue with who was actually in charge and whether or not there was some overlap and duplication. So if the minister could comment, first of all, on how far you think you've gotten away from the stovepiping, how the cross initiatives are working, and your interpretation of who would be in charge to lead a particular project, how that decision is made.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, normally the only people who think there's a problem with cross-ministry initiatives are the opposition. We work as a team on this side of the House, and we work as a team not only as ministries, but we have joint standing policy committee meetings that make determinations on a number of issues if they tend to cross over the ministries that those SPCs deal with. So the crossing over of boundaries occurs right through our entire caucus and our cabinet. How we determine who is the lead – there has to be a lead somewhere – and who's going to report back is usually a determination where the ministries and the Premier will say, "Well, why don't you lead that off?" and the rest of us work as a team, because we are a team over here.

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

You know, I've often been able to pinch-hit and help out with a project in Economic Development, but I'm not the lead. The Minister of Economic Development is the lead on that because it makes sense to do that. So it's usually whoever makes sense to be the lead that is chosen. It's a process – I don't know – that just falls into place. There's never been a debate over here.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank the minister for her comments and for her report to the Assembly, and I have a number of comments and questions as well.

I'd like to start with the estimation of resource revenue over a period of time. According to my math, in the last eight years revenue as a whole has been underestimated by $21.2 billion in total. I know that when we've asked the minister about this before, she's talked about the importance of being conservative and not being caught by surprise, but I wonder if she could comment on the magnitude of that and also on the consequence. The consequence, Mr. Chairman, is, of course, that the unanticipated surpluses up until quite recently were put 75 percent against the debt, so it has meant that more money was put against the debt than would have been the case had the estimates of revenue, particularly resource revenue, been more accurate.

Now, there was a recent article in the Edmonton Journal with Mel McMillan, who is a University of Alberta economist, and he indicated that the recent increase in payments by homeowners for the provincial property tax is due primarily to the flat income tax rate, which was introduced by the previous – or was it two previous? – Provincial Treasurer, who went on to be the Leader of the federal Official Opposition for a short time. So Dr. McMillan is arguing that, in fact, we've had to change the policy with respect to provincial property tax.

On that point I'd like to ask the minister when the change was made and how the change was made and if that change was publicly announced when they moved away from the brief policy two years ago of freezing the take from provincial property taxes as opposed to freezing the rate. We've brought to the minister's attention the statement in the provincial budget two years ago and one of the supporting documents that indicates that they would let the rate of property tax fall by freezing the amount so that when the property values increased and when the number of properties increased, the amount that people actually had to pay individually would fall, and the rate would fall because they would freeze the take. Now they've switched the policy and are now claiming that they are freezing the rate on provincial property tax. So I'd like to know when that occurred and why because I think that's something that's quite interesting.

According to the city of Edmonton, a typical Edmonton home assessed at $159,500 would translate into an 8.9 percent hike in the education portion of the property tax. I think that's properly termed as the provincial portion of the property taxes. My understanding is that it goes into general revenues rather than being specifically earmarked for education. I know that the previous Provincial Treasurer, not the one that went to Ottawa, had made a commitment to reduce the provincial government's take on property tax in order to leave more room for municipalities because there's an ongoing issue with, of course, Alberta municipalities wanting to have greater access to their own revenues. So I'd ask the minister if in fact that is still the long-term policy of this government, to gradually vacate the property tax field and leave it to the municipalities and increase the funding of education based on the general income tax and the general revenues of the province. That's something that I think municipal governments are quite interested in.

Now, I want to talk about corporate taxes for a minute. Revenue from corporate taxation has decreased significantly. Since 2001 there's been $435 million in corporate income tax reductions, and that, of course, results in a shift, relatively speaking, from corporate income taxes to personal income taxes and health care premiums, oil royalties, lotteries, and provincial property taxes. Corporate income taxes fell from 13 to 12.5 percent and from 4.5 to 4 percent for small businesses. At the same time, the eligibility cutoff for small business was increased to $400,000, which is not a bad thing. Now, has the government looked carefully at the advantages of cutting taxes on the corporate side as opposed to the personal side? I know there have been reductions in both, but of late the reductions have been primarily on the corporate side, and there are, I understand, a couple of years of reductions on corporate income taxes that are still to come.

With those questions and comments to the minister, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat and await a reply.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member made a comment about the negative impact of being conservative on the estimates for the resource revenue over a number of years, and as a result we did the unthinkable thing and paid off debt. I can tell you that the result of reducing the accumulated debt of this province by 80 percent by accelerating the debt retirement has brought our debt-servicing costs down to just over $400 million a year. It saved us $1.3 billion of debt costs on an annual basis that could go clearly into core program delivery such as health, such as education on an annual basis, year after year after year. Were the estimates conservative? Probably they were, but far better . . . [interjection] Are you debating somewhere else?

3:30

Far better that they were conservative than to have to go in and pull programs back out of those core deliveries. That would have been tragic. With the volatility that's been there in the marketplace, I remember – for five years I had to do the estimate on energy – how difficult it was to go up and down like a roller-coaster ride and give someone an exact number to deliver core programs in health, in social services, in education, and in transportation, all of those areas, and say: "That's the number. That's the number."

Well, it was difficult, so you had to be relatively conservative to make sure that you didn't all of a sudden have to pull the money back from those core areas. That would have been tragic. We had a law that said that you could not run an operating deficit any longer in this province. We were running over a $20 billion debt in financing it. Financing costs were very expensive. We had deficits in this province of well over 3 and a half billion dollars on an annual basis. We were bankrupting the province. We were bankrupting our children's future. Were we guilty of accelerating the debt retirement? Yes, but thank goodness we were. We've given our children a future, one that is not burdened with debt that they did not create. So we assumed the responsibility of parents and adults that we needed to, so the young people aren't burdened with that.

Do I feel guilty about it? Not in the least. I did my job as a parent and a responsible citizen and a ticked-off taxpayer, who was paying exorbitant taxes and seeing the debt increasing. So what did we do? We paid off the debt. We lowered taxes. We did things that were right, and as a result we are the envy of every place in Canada, the result of having the best fiscal framework in all of Canada in this province. So if we were guilty about something, it was dealing with trying to make budget estimates on a volatile marketplace.

How do we correct that? Well, this year, because of recommendations and the help again from the private sector, the Financial Management Commission gave us some help to put in place something that was predictable, so the volatility is out of the mix now. We've replaced volatility with predictability so that we're through with those roller-coaster rides.

I can remember looking at the forecasts that were coming in from 15 to 18 different groups outside to help us pin the number for energy. Every one of them was different; none of them were the same. We used to take an average of it and say: "That's the number. We'll take the average. We'll be on the low side to be safe because the market could be a lot more volatile than what we know."

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

In my opening comments, that unfortunately you didn't hear, I said that last year when I went to New York on the first trip, I asked, "What's the number for oil?" Well, $15 to $30 a barrel. That's a big swing to forecast a budget on. When I went later in the year when there was concern about the war, it was $6 to $60. So you have to have something that you can pin a budget on. That's why having a predictable number – and taking the number of $3.5 billion became critically important so that there can be some predictability for the people out in the community and the municipalities and the school boards and the health authorities, so that they have an opportunity to do that.

Property tax. Last year we said that we would take the mill rate and we would reduce it by one point and maintain it at that level, but we would have to recognize somewhere that there was growth occurring within this province. You could no longer hide your head in the sand and say that the 50,000 or 55,000 people a year that were moving to this province didn't exist. That was silly, particularly when there were pressures on education. So we had to say: look; here's the new reality. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie asked me about a strategic plan. You can't hide behind that. If you have to recognize the realities, you recognize it in your business plan, and we've said so many times, hundreds of times, that when people come to the province – and we want them here – they don't bring their hospitals and their schools and their roads with them. So capturing growth is only smart. People come here because they see opportunity, and if you freeze the mill rate and you capture the growth of people coming in, then that's your objective.

Are some households going to have additional costs? Yes. If the market value of their home has gone up, then they will pay more. If it has stayed the same, they will pay the exact same. If it has gone down, they will pay less. Now, if someone's house is re-evaluated and it has gone up in value, then their equity position within that house can be deemed to have gone up as well. That's a positive. If it's stayed the same, then they aren't going to physically pay more. If it's gone down, they're going to be disappointed because their equity in the house has likely gone down as well. So while they may not pay more tax, they may not be happy with their equity going down. So, again, it's a balance that occurs.

When someone says to me, "Oh, you raised the tax," no, I didn't. I maintained a mill rate that was absolutely flat. Yes, we captured growth. Yes, we're going to take in more dollars. When more people move here and pay more taxes, you're going to see that we captured growth. The same with personal income tax. Well, we've lowered personal income tax. There are more people paying personal income tax – it's because they've moved here to the province – plus salaries have gone up. But the rate has stayed the same. We have not raised taxes, but we get more revenue volumetrically. So that has occurred. That's not a negative.

When people move to a location, they expect to participate in the cost of the community. They're not complaining that they're participating in the cost of the community, and they're also not complaining, Mr. Chairman, about the contributions to education. I can tell you that from the Minister of Learning's budget 80 percent of the increases in education is going to the classroom. That's a huge benefit for our kids. That's supporting our kids in the classroom, and that to me is very important.

You also made a comment about the dollars collected on the school property tax assessment, that those dollars weren't dedicated to the Learning budget. I can tell you that they only make up a very small portion of the dollars that go towards Learning, but every dollar that Learning receives is from the taxpayers in one form or another. We don't have dedicated revenues per se, but I can tell you that that is just the bare minimum to start on the funding of Learning.

For $1 from the school property assessment, another $3 are from other revenue bases to support Learning in this province, something we're delighted to see happen because quite frankly with Alberta's choice we clearly have identified that the kids are Alberta's choice. They are our future, and as a result we're focusing in on Learning with a 4.7 percent increase. So we have moved on it.

Corporate taxes are something that we would dearly like to make sure – we don't have the number one position in Canada right today. One of the things on the long-term strategic plan that Edmonton-Ellerslie asked about is: how do we compete not only across Canada, where we lead the way, but how do we compete in the international market with our trading partner, the United States? It's one thing to be competitive with the neighbours on either side, but if you're going to have the marketplace with such a small population, you have to have a competitive tax model that carries you throughout North America. That's the strategic planning that you have to be thinking of all the time.

Our move of lowering our corporate tax rate is to make sure that we have a framework that is conducive to continued investment and development, a place where people want to move their businesses, establish it, create employment opportunities, create a future for our kids. That's the whole goal, and you do that by having a government that recognizes that their structure has to be competitive and in the number one position. That's our goal. Quite frankly, the reports that have come from every financial institution – I know that the members opposite thought they were negative – say that Alberta is the place to be. You guys are the only ones that don't recognize that. Everybody else is coming here. They're coming here in droves because they want to raise their kids here. They want to build a business here; they want to have a future here. This is the place to be. Look around you. Where else would you want to embark on a business? In Alberta. No other place or jurisdiction has what Alberta has to offer.

We will remain competitive. We will make sure that we have a competitive advantage from our fiscal structure within this province, and we'll do it on a continual basis to make sure that Alberta stays number one. We owe that to our kids.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A handful of questions. I won't throw too many at once at the minister, but we will go through some of these issues for sure.

The first one. I'm looking at page 163 of the collection here of ministry business plans. This particular paragraph refers to automobile insurance, which links to goal 4: "Confidence in provincially regulated financial institutions and insurance companies." The particular paragraph says, "The costs of automobile (commercial and personal) insurance are rising steeply throughout Canada and this trend is making its way to Alberta." I would say that it's arrived in Alberta.

I agree completely with the issue, as would every Albertan who drives a car, I'm sure. My concern is that the connotation or the implication of this paragraph suggests that the review of insurance may be a bit one-sided. The last sentence of the paragraph says, "The department will seek input from the insurance community and Albertans." Conspicuously absent there is the legal community, which typically represents claimants against insurance companies.

So my first point here is: in this review, which indirectly at least affects every Albertan, how can we be sure that the consultation process is going to be a balanced one? Will it be very actively consulting with the legal community? How public is the process going to be, and how public will the results be? There are certainly compelling arguments to be made that it's the insurance companies' own fault that premiums are rising so steeply, that they have lost enormously on stock portfolios in the last two years, and that to compensate for that, they are jacking up premiums. Headlines seem to paint settlements with claimants as exorbitantly high. Often once you get into the details of those settlements, they're actually quite sensible and justified. I'd hate to have claimants penalized through this process when it's really the insurance companies' fault. What reassurance can you give me that this is not just going to be an issue of defending the interests of the insurance companies?

Mrs. Nelson: Insurance costs have been on a rise. There's no question. In fact, we have a bill before the House right now, Bill 33, that is under debate. I believe it's at second reading right now. In fact, it is at second reading, Mr. Chairman. That is the start of not trying to move prices down but to try and stop the continual increase until a longer review can take place.

The cost of insurance, not just automobile insurance but business insurance, home insurance, has gone up for a number of factors, and I think it's really wrong to try and say: this is that person's fault or that person's fault. The fact is that the consumer at the end of the day is experiencing high costs in insurance, and each group tends to point the finger at the other guy. My way of dealing with this is: everybody stop, park the scud missiles at the door, and sit down and figure out a solution. I don't like pointing fingers back and forth because that accomplishes absolutely nothing.

A number of years ago I had the privilege of touring the province and doing a report on premium stabilization within the industry that actually didn't go very far. Sometimes these reports come back to haunt you or come back to reality, and a lot of the things in that are prevalent again today as they were back 11 years ago. We're moving forward on some of them. One of the recommendations was a graduated licence program – it comes into effect on May 20 – that I believe is a help for all new drivers. Not just young drivers but all new drivers would experience a graduated program. So there are some things that are moving forward that have been agreements reached by the industry and the government. Our role, with the superintendent of insurance reporting through this ministry, is to make sure that the industry is operating well, that the legal requirements are put out there, and to look at what can be done.

The second stage of what I said we would do in a review would of course involve everyone. There's no point in leaving people out, or you end up with a flawed system. They may not agree, and that's okay, but the onus will be on the groups, as I say, to come forward with solutions. I've often said: you are the people with the expertise, so come forward with something that works, or you're putting me into a position where I'll have to come forward with recommendations for policy. It's much better when the stakeholder groups become part of the solution in my view. Now, they may not like everything that comes forward – usually people don't – but a solution has to be reached for the increases in insurance costs. There's no question on that. So that will be a task that is going to proceed on, and I'm sure it will be a tough one.

I really do think it's wrong for people to point fingers at the other guy. You accomplish nothing by that, so I don't buy that. I quite often think that's escape from having to deal with the issue in the first place, so we don't put up with that.

Dr. Taft: My point on that particular goal is that I think it is crucial that not just the insurance industry but the legal industry and the claimants be listened to carefully.

Moving on through the business plans a couple of pages to page 166, there's a goal here, goal 3, which relates to risk management. "Effective management of financial assets, liabilities and risks" is what goal 3 reads. Over the last year I have become substantially better informed of a very significant risk that is underestimated in Canada, and that's the risk of asbestos litigation. A number of the largest corporations in the U.S. are now bankrupt because of asbestos litigation. Johns Manville Corporation, W.R. Grace, Kaiser Aluminum: they're gone. They're gone because they didn't properly manage the risks relating to asbestos.

I am asking the minister now if under Key Strategies, number 3, "develop an enterprise-wide risk management program for government consideration," consideration is given anywhere in that to asbestos as a significant risk to the stability and the financial solvency of the government of Alberta. Behind that question is the awareness that directly or indirectly this government is responsible for a very large number of buildings and that many, many of those buildings do have asbestos in them. I suspect that we are on the brink in this country in the next five years or so of asbestos litigation rising to the level at which it is in the U.S., in Britain, which places it in the U.S., for example, just behind tobacco as the number one litigation issue. So is any consideration being given to the asbestos issue in this risk management profile, and if not, would you consider doing that?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you. I appreciate the question. Risk identification, risk aversion, and risk management are all key in a long-term strategic planning process. In fact, under some of the Securities Commission's requirements on environmental issues – I forget the number now – there's a percentage that if there's an exposure that has potential there beyond 15 percent I think was the number – it used to be, and I'm not familiar with the current one – then there had to be an identification of the exposure within the prospectus being presented on the marketplace.

What we have done through our strategic planning is try to identify some of those risks that could be facing our government. I know the hon. member has a specific question as it pertains to asbestos, and I know he's been asking various ministers questions during question period, so I'll leave that particular element to question period.

But I will say that on the strategic planning process, risk identification is absolutely key because you have to provide for or be aware of potential downward trends, or provisions have to be built or put in place to deal with those kinds of risks that may evolve down the road, or there has to be a plan of action to deal with them. That's all part of the long-term strategic planning that has to take place. Each ministry is responsible for that long-term planning in their own development of their management of their portfolio and to bring that together. It's a good identifier, and we clearly have that in our sights on our long-term strategic planning. Each individual element: we would ask the various ministries when their plans come forward what they're doing on those.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to continue on with my questions. I just wanted to put on the record for the minister that there are many of us in the opposition who don't think that stovepiping is a very good idea either. We are much happier to see the departments working together. Of course, we always have to be vigilant to ensure that we're getting the best bang for the buck, and I think that this is still an ongoing process and will always be an ongoing process.

With those comments I'll move on to my next question, which is with regard to some of the comments that you made to begin with. You talked about the ATB again. Periodically we hear talk of a sale of the ATB. I hear that rural Alberta isn't very thrilled with that idea. We see some new legislation in here that looks to outside people who judge these kinds of things that you may be getting ready to sell the ATB. Could you give me your comments on that particular issue?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, I think that what I can say quite clearly is that the management team and the board of ATB have done an exceptional job of reshaping, redesigning, expanding the horizons in servicing Albertans. They are a very effective group that reaches every outlet within the province. There's legislation allowing for those expansions of services to take place, and they're quite successful.

What we did say last year when I extended the regulation – it was a motion to carry forward another I think it was five years for ATB. I'm looking it up because I can't remember if it was five or 10 years. The motion, when we debated it in this House, was that if there was a change to occur, naturally we would have to have a policy debate. It would be extensive not only within ourselves but in this House. With the performance that is there, we haven't had that debate. We haven't felt that the need was there. The satisfaction level of the customers and the people of the province has been very high on ATB, so it is business as normal. That's the position we have on it.

Ms Carlson: Thank you for that answer.

Now, on regulations you talked about eliminating regulations whenever possible. How many have you taken off the books in the past year, and how many do you expect to have reduced in the coming year?

Mrs. Nelson: I don't have the exact number on that, Mr. Chairman. I will ascertain to get it, but I can tell you that the one I'm quite pleased that we got rid of, which I thought was one of the dumbest ones we ever had, was the one that said that on March 31 at midnight everything had to stop in government and everything went to zero, and then at one second into April 1 you started all over again. The March madness – somebody labeled it the March madness – of people spending the money before it was gone is over because now you can carry forward money on the capital side from one year to the next. I couldn't find where that regulation came from. Somebody invented it. I have no idea why. It didn't make any sense whatsoever. It was totally out of sync with reality, so that to me was a big one to just get rid of.

I think it will be very helpful for, again, our partners in the municipalities, in the school districts, and the health authorities so that they aren't pushed to make decisions on capital expenditures when it's not the right timing. They can do it when it makes sense. So they can do some strategic planning on their capital themselves, and it made sense.

But on the other one, the number, I would have to get the staff to get back to you on that because I don't have that with me. I'm sorry.

Ms Carlson: That's good. Thank you for that.

You talked about some of the IT in your department previously being outsourced. Do you have figures on what the cost savings are now of doing it in-house, and were cost savings the only rationale for doing that? What were the other reasons for making that move?

Mrs. Nelson: I'll have to get back to you on that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Two or three further questions. More specifically, one relates to an issue that's come up several times at the Public Accounts Committee, and it came up again this morning. It has to do with the accounting principles of the government in which assets under $15,000 are expensed rather than capitalized, so they don't count as assets. They're paid for in the one year, and there's no amortization. The effect of that, as I expect the minister knows, is to exaggerate the expenses and reduce the appearance of assets. Does the minister know the issue I'm talking about?

Mrs. Nelson: Yes.

Dr. Taft: Yeah. So in discussions of the Public Accounts Committee the Auditor General has said that he's hoping that that will be resolved in this fiscal year so that the government's accounting practices are brought more in line with generally accepted accounting practices. I guess my first question is: are you as the Minister of Finance the lead person for this process, or is your department the lead department for standardizing this process, and if so, can you give reassurance that by the end of this fiscal year we will have that practice fall in line with generally accepted accounting principles?

4:00

Mrs. Nelson: Well, the recommendation has come forward. Again, there's probably an issue of materiality as to what level you do capitalize and what level you do expense, and I guess that's the debate. What we clearly have said is that we will follow the generally accepted public-sector accounting principles, and we'll undertake to take that transition as a part, again, of the transition under the Financial Management Commission.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Well, that will be nice when that's sorted out and we don't have to keep going back at it in Public Accounts.

My next question is based on page 143 of the estimates this time, not of the business plan. The question relates to line 1.0.4 under Operating Expense, which is communications, and the minister's communications budget looks to rise from $286,000 last year to $385,000 this year. So it's a hundred thousand dollars in a large budget. I understand that perspective, but it is also a 30 percent increase in communications. So my question to the minister is twofold. One is just explaining the increase of that expenditure and, secondly, explaining why it is that your department, Finance, has a communications line and the Public Affairs Bureau also, I assume, has a communications line for your department. Do you have communications staff of your own and Public Affairs working together?

Mrs. Nelson: Yes. In fact, we do work together very closely with the Public Affairs Bureau on the communication link, but we do have staff as well, and the $99,000 increase over last year is represented by an additional communications officer, who started part-time partway through the year, but also salary increases for four full-time equivalents that are in that sector. There's also the cost of the production of the two budgets that went through and promotional items such as budget communications that go out to people.

There's an element of responsibility this year that I took particularly – someone asked me: why are you putting out information on the budget? Well, you know, we're spending $20 billion of taxpayer ers' money. They have the right to know where that money is going. I couldn't believe the question. Someone asked me about this communication budget to put information out. I thought: well, let's not keep people in the dark ages; let's tell them where their money is going. So we did. We sent out information, and people were able to pick it up off the web site. There were a couple of newspaper ads. We actually did a lot better than most places across Canada at putting the financial information out, but we are one government that does update Albertans on their money on a regular basis, and we said we would do that. We'd be open and transparent, and we would communicate with them, and that's exactly what we've done.

So it's an additional person plus the normal salary increases that go through plus the extra communication link that causes it to go up.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My next questions are around managed spending and management styles within the government. I would like the minister's comments on efficiency audits, putting in a process in the government where you would have efficiency audits. Now, the Auditor General audits the budgets of the various ministries and the overall government in accordance with the approval that they get from the Legislature, but efficiency audits would take a look at analyzing the detailed operations of the department to see that you get value for your money, that they're well spent. They look for things like top-heavy management structures . . . [interjections]

The Chair: If you want to laugh loudly, please do so outside.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

They look for things like top-heavy management structures, extra employees. They examine contracts for everything from consultants to computers to ensure that there's efficient spending with public dollars, and they determine unit costs for every kind of service being delivered and then are able to compare those to other departments. So then we would see an AG report that would have more comprehensive recommendations as to how the department's operations could be more efficient and then giving the minister time to respond and take action if they choose to do so.

I'm not saying that from a strictly opposition perspective. I'm saying this from a perspective of improving the operations of government. We all know that $20 billion is a lot of money, and we all know that even in very small operations there are always efficiencies to be had. So far no one in government is tasked with this particular responsibility, and it seems like this is a very good idea whose time has probably passed having been needed, and we should take a look at that happening from a purely positive perspective in improving the management style of government. Could the minister comment on that?

Mrs. Nelson: Instead of an efficiency audit I think the key is to make sure that the performance measures of each ministry are in fact real measurements of the efficiency and the effectiveness of delivering core programs and they fit in the overall business plan of the government. The business plan document clearly has an identification of the overall corporate plan plus, then, all of the individual ministries attached to it. That is reviewed on a regular basis at the standing policy committee and at the Treasury Board process. This year, though, if members would notice, we did streamline and update our performance measures to bring them in line with, I think, a more current process, particularly with the advent of the cross-ministry initiatives. Those become very, very telling in that you have to always be diligent to make sure that you don't have two ministries performing the same task or duplication or an overlap or a redundancy of a functional responsibility. Having good performance measures that actually test the performance of the ministry – I call them the internal performance measures as opposed to the external ones that the global economy is accomplishing – becomes critically important. So that kind of evaluation on the performance measure we took very seriously this year and reshaped those performance measurements to be reflective of, I believe, a more current business planning process that brings us into today's time frame.

So I wouldn't go for the concept of what was called efficiency audit. I think that's kind of out of date, to be quite honest with you. I think performance measurement is probably key provided it deals with the reality and the expectations of the department and not just what's happening outside, something that you can actually measure to see if, in fact, the effectiveness of the department is really being felt not only in the government but by the shareholder who is paying for it. So it becomes a little more rigid than what we maybe had before. It's not the high-level blue sky stuff. It's down into the hard details. You see some tougher performance measures in these business plans than what we would have had before, and I think where you get your best audit is: did you meet the expectations? If you did not, then the standing policy committees are going to say: why not? So you have to explain why you didn't meet those performance measures not only to your own colleagues but then also to the outside community, and I think that's very important.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Madam Minister. I agree with the minister that we need stronger performance measures and that they have to be actually measuring tangible results within the government and the department. That's the strategic planning side. But efficiency audits are still very effective on the operations side of any department. In a corporation you would be streamlining your operations to build a widget. In government you're streamlining your operations to provide a service at the lowest possible and most effective cost. Generally speaking, it's services that you're providing, but it's the same process. So, yes, you have the performance measures actually measuring the long-term strategic goals and whether or not each department was able to effectively achieve those, but you're only doing half the job if you don't look at the cost of providing the service.

That is something that is an integral part of business planning for corporations and an integral part of the management style. If you don't have an internal operations audit system within your own structure, then traditionally it would be outside auditors who would be contracted to come in and do that. So either the minister could develop that process within her own department or she could get the Auditor General to do it, but I still think it's something that the government really needs to take a look at to get the best bang for their buck.

We know that every time we build a bureaucracy, we build inefficiencies over time, at least, if not initially. People want to protect their jobs. They empire build, particularly in a government where we don't have specified sunset clauses for programs, which I would also like to see initiated. Sometimes people are doing redundant kinds of work or providing services that aren't streamlined. So that's where I'm going with this. It doesn't have to be an outside entity that does it. It could be an internal one, but you're probably wasting lots of money. I won't assume any kinds of numbers, but the smallest business will find at least a 5 percent efficiency by doing that. A 5 percent efficiency on $20 billion is a lot of money. Would the minister consider moving to something like that?

Mrs. Nelson: I think this is an excellent question that's come again from Edmonton-Ellerslie. An inefficient allocation of human resource allocations to any kind of a structure will cause absolute chaos within the system. So I agree that having an efficient allocation of human resources and nonhuman resources becomes effectively important for the government.

One of the ways that we are dealing with that to try and address those issues so that we don't have that built-in redundancy and inefficiency within our system and the inherent growth within the bureaucracy is the cross-ministry initiative. You have ministries working together, IT projects coming together to make sure that the systems can actually talk to one another so you're not buying systems that are incompatible, to have a co-ordinator who is working, the Public Affairs Bureau, who co-ordinates the communication links throughout. While you have an allocation out to your department, you still have a co-ordinated approach, so you don't overlap and duplicate positions within the government.

These are throughout. That's how the Ministry of Innovation and Science evolved, a coming together, bringing together the research and technology enhancements under one umbrella that still deals with the elements within the forestry research, within agriculture research, with energy research, with biological research. All of those types of research that were done before in individual departments are now co-ordinated and brought together.

Do you have to audit the effectiveness of that? Yes. That becomes very important, and that's a tangible measure of the effectiveness of the cross-ministry initiative. That's where our deputies meet and have to go back to look at the performance measures to make sure that they are effectively co-ordinating their efforts so there isn't a duplication. They're challenged on that, and they have to come forward with a report on how they have done.

You know, the shared services concept, again, is another. Every department doesn't have to have its own accounts payable clerk. That should be able to be done through a shared entity. It doesn't have to be in every department. Reinventing government every 35 years is probably not a bad plan. We have done that through this whole process. [interjection] No, no, no. We've done that through this process. Now, it didn't happen in one year. It's been dubbed the Klein revolution, and I believe that the success of it has brought us into a position where we're holding our operating costs to 4.9 percent. Is that the ultimate goal? No. I would like those to be lower than that, again through efficiencies, to be almost tied to our growth patterns. So we're striving for that end result.

I think we've come a long way to keep our costs in line. We're not there yet, but again through the strategic planning process we're identifying areas where we can in fact reshape that to bring some reality into it. An ineffective allocation of human resources is just a dreadful situation for a corporate entity like the government. We have to be really, really vigilant to make sure that we don't get into that, so our performance measures coupled with our cross-ministry initiatives are the key elements to watch on that.

One of the things that I will tell you a little funny on is that I learned very quickly in the Treasury Board processes to ask: how many warm, breathing bodies come through the door on a daily basis? I didn't rely upon the acronyms that were there and found out that I had to check that at the Treasury Board table. So when someone tells me they have X number of people, I want to know: is that the warm body coming through the door? I don't care how long they're there; they're on a salary of some sort. So you learn in a big hurry. I came from a different sector that didn't have that kind of concept, so you learn. You learn what to watch for, and I have to admit that the bureaucracy in this government is very, very effective. They're very conscious. They're very cost-conscious, and they recognize that if they keep doing what they do well, they'll be applauded throughout the country, and that's what they're getting right now. They have done a tremendous job in streamlining this process and delivering core programs, so we're very pleased with them.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I want to spend a moment talking about natural gas rebates. The trigger point for rebates to kick in was $5.50 in the last year. Is that going to stay the same this year? And if you could talk about the parameters of anything you're putting in place to help promote conservation on the natural gas side.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, the hon. member is correct that we have a piece of legislation in place that has been debated in this House a number of times this session, and the trigger is $5.50 a gigajoule before it triggers a rebate. I believe that they're going to review that later on, but it is in place, so it's there.

Ms Carlson: Sorry, Mr. Chairman. Are you saying that $5.50 is the price again for this year?

Mrs. Nelson: Yeah.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

4:20

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. A series of questions. I'll ask them one at a time. On page 149 of the estimates the very first line under Revenue is internal government transfers. I'm not sure if this has come up yet. If it hasn't, it needs to be brought up. There's a very significant change. The forecast amount for 2002-03 was $334 million, and the estimate for '03-04 is $95 million. It's a drastic drop in internal government transfers. I'm wondering if the minister could please explain that. [interjection] Okay. Well, if you did it in your speech, could you do it again in two sentences for my sake, please?

Mrs. Nelson: Yeah. I will. Just give me another question, and I'll get the exact numbers.

Dr. Taft: Okay. In a related kind of question, on the following page of the estimates, page 150, the revenue from Alberta Treasury Branches drops considerably – I would guess about 20 percent – from the forecast amount for the last fiscal year to the amount for this fiscal year. So that's on page 150 under Revenue, the line that says Alberta Treasury Branches. The estimate for this year is $152 million. The forecast amount for last year is $199 million. Can the minister fill us in on that one, please?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Chairman, instead of the hon. member going line by line, I could just go over the overall decline in the revenue that's shown on that page, from the $1.2 billion to the $816 million. Instead of you going line by line, would that be alright?

Dr. Taft: Well, the details are of some interest. There are two or three lines that are particularly significant.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, I think they're all significant.

Dr. Taft: Well, then, sure. You could do each line. I don't have to stand up each time.

Mrs. Nelson: The overall projected revenue is $816 million, which is a decrease from last year's revenue of $1.2 billion. Our investment income for '03-04 is $26.5 million lower than in '02-03. This is primarily due to the reductions in the Capital Finance Authority investment income due to lower interest rates on new loans. That used to be called the AMFC. The interest rates are down, so we'll see a decline in the revenue base. There will also be a decrease of $238 million for internal government transfers that represent the contributions from the lottery fund to my department, and the net income from our commercial operations is projected to be $47.5 million lower than was forecast in the previous year. Then there's the Alberta Treasury Branches net income, and it's expected to be below last year's forecast mainly due to the onetime gain last year related to the West Edmonton Mall settlement, so that comes down. The $96.5 million decrease in other revenue from the 2002-2003 forecast is attributed to the transfer of a hundred million dollars from the Alberta Capital Finance Authority's retained earnings in 2002-03. If you remember, that was called AMFC. It's now the Alberta Capital Finance Authority. So that accounts for the difference between the $1.2 billion and the $816 million in revenue.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview?
