The libraries. There has been, as the minister noted, a small increase to both the systems and to the individual libraries. It has not gotten us back to where we were. It has not restored us to where funding would have been if we'd continued with regular funding. What is the plan that the minister has to get us back to some operating level of not adequacy but excellence over, let's say, the next five-year period?

The next question is around the effect of the bingo changes. I'll come back to that one.

I've had a request to raise the issue around the Grant MacEwan interpreter training programs. There has been a proposal to restructure the ASL/English interpreter program through Grant MacEwan Community College. They were approaching my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar for assistance in advocating on their behalf. They believe that the ASL/English interpreters are helpful in better integrating deaf and hard-of-hearing people into the inclusive mainstream, and as the interpreters are better trained, more deaf people have easier access to pre- and postsecondary educational institutions. They would like to keep an interpreter program in Edmonton. Now, I understand that this is probably not the minister's area of influence, but anything he can do to support this program is appreciated.

The legacy grant program. When the minister was talking about the $25 million, can I just confirm that he was talking about the $25 million that is in fact under infrastructure? Could he please confirm that there are no additional funds aside from the infrastructure funds that are under his department currently? I'm questioning that because we are two years out from this celebration. There does not seem to be any money, or any specific grant pot of money, for those organizations that were looking to do activities that were non brick and mortar and that were looking for financial support for those projects. Can the minister please confirm this or, if I'm wrong – and I hope I am – tell us where this money is and how they apply for it, under which department, what deadlines are involved, et cetera?

I'm also looking for philosophically, if there is no additional funding, if there's just the bricks-and-mortar infrastructure funding for the legacy program, why the government has made that choice. With the 75th anniversary there was provincial funding to support communities doing historical books on their area. They weren't large grants, but they were helpful to communities as an impetus, if nothing else, to do the project. I'm curious as to why there is nothing specific that seems to be available this time around for the 100th birthday. We're only two years out. That's not a lot of time.

I'm moving on to women's issues. I hear what the minister is saying around gender analysis, which I find very interesting. When I first raised that in this Assembly seven years ago, I was laughed at. Now it rolls off the minister's tongue. How interesting. I'll take it as a good thing that we've moved through to that. I am interested in what the gender analysis is that the ministry has done on the programs that are available that are offered by other government departments. I continue to be concerned that there are systemic barriers in place that are not being identified that are stopping women from accessing other programs in government, and I would like to see a comprehensive analysis done by the staff people under the ministry to check that the government is being as accessible as possible.

In just doing some cleanup in the few minutes that I have left here, I'm wondering what the minister is looking at doing around sports and the funding of the snowmobile trails and whether there would be any increased funding in support of a trail system or whether the minister has approached his colleague the Minister of Economic Development and tourism for these multi-use trail systems or specific to a snowmobile trail system. Right now they are looking for a stand-alone trail act. They feel that they're dealing with 23 different legislative acts and would prefer a one-window approach. They're also looking at a mechanism to protect the trail base through some disposition of some kind for recreational corridors so that the development and maintenance investment is protected and the trail is secure from year to year. I'm wondering: could we get an update, please, from the minister on the Alberta Trail Net system and where negotiations are for that trail system progressing through Alberta and linking to the Canada trail system?

Where is the province in developing a mechanism to limit liability to not only trail operators but landowners for recreational purposes – I think this is occupational liability that they're looking at – to have the province develop consistent trail guidelines and standards across the government and to acknowledge and support the trails which are established along secondary highway right-of-ways so as not to sever the connectivity of established trails? The Snowmobile Association is feeling that they're under threat for existence because of the outrageous insurance premiums or unattainable insurance coverage for volunteers because of the programs they're trying to offer, and they're looking for support to do that, especially legislative mechanisms. That's a larger topic for the minister, and he may want to respond in writing on that one.

I think I'm within seconds of losing my time, and I've covered almost everything on the list. I'll have to come back on the bingo changes and some of the specific financial questions, but I know that others want to get a chance to get up.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much. I remember the hon. member's opening comments about the school of fast talk or whatever it was, and she has certainly put a lot on the record here. I'll address some of it now and perhaps will follow up in writing on some of the others.

The first issue was with respect to the four cultural industries. I would agree that overall they're doing not too badly. The film industry in particular is doing very, very well, as we know, and this injection of dollars there will help them a lot. I should say, hon. member, that that increase in funding came about in part because of an economic impact analysis that had been done, and it showed them and us and everyone else exactly what that impact was not only from an economic basis but also from a cultural, artistic, and development basis. That's one reason why when the Alberta Recording Industry and its president, Garry McDonall I think at the time, came to me a couple of years ago and said, "We really need to do something in this area," – well, being of musical background first and foremost myself, I'm very sensitive to that area – I agreed. So we studied it for about a year or so and tried to figure out how to do it, and we put about $30,000 toward an economic impact study in the recording arts industry, and that will help them.

I have said publicly that the next one I'll be looking at is what can be done in the magazine and periodical publishing side as well as in the book publishing side. I'm not sure what we can do there, but I am willing to take a look at that particular point.

The other issue is with respect to the competition of dollars that I referenced and then I think the hon. member rereferenced. I realize that there are many, many different projects that require different types of funding, but I think that specific to the health care area, where our provincial contribution is now over $7 billion, which is about a third of our total budget, we need some corporate partners to help accomplish some of the projects which they are bringing to the table.

One excellent example of that is the Alberta Heart Institute. Now, I was in the Sikh community here, as I have been almost every weekend, not long ago when this particular project was talked about, and the Alberta Sikh community is now doing a specific fund-raiser for the Guru Nanak Dev healing garden, which I know the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona also knows about. Perhaps others do as well. So they will be looking for dollars from the community for that project, and it's a good one. But, again, there are only so many dollars available. The same thing can be said for the bone and joint centre of excellence that'll be coming up in Calgary, the Stollery children's centre, and the list goes on and on. So these are all excellent projects, but it does create a healthy competition; I would agree.

The issue of capping of $75,000 in the CIP program, or the community initiatives program, that the member referenced. I realize there is a cap there, but by the same token the Minister of Gaming, as I recall, will have some review of your comments, and I think he's going to have some flexibility to take a look at some additional projects and perhaps lift that cap where it might be appropriate. I don't know what his exact intentions are, but I'll certainly raise that point for him.

The other point that the hon. member mentioned was with respect to NHL teams, and I want to just comment that the Alberta NHL team initiative, which appears in the ministry estimates, Mr. Chairman, on page 74, does in fact reflect flow-through-type dollars. To answer the member's question, it's Alberta Revenue, or specifically the Minister of Revenue, who actually collects the tax that is levied on NHL players for games played in Alberta.

The $5.75 million that appears in the estimates is really the projected proceeds that we expect will be split evenly between the two dynamic hockey teams that we have, those being the Edmonton Oilers and the Calgary Flames. The proceeds less a small amount of administrative costs will help these two teams remain competitive in what we call a small-market environment until the NHL and the players sit down and do their collective agreement negotiations, which I think is coming up in 2004-2005. So in the first year what you'll see, because it's a new program being set up, is probably in the order of about a $350,000 to $400,000 administration type of deduction off that flow-through amount, and in the next year it'll be less than that. We have some putting together to do in the first year; there are a lot of setup costs, in other words. So that's a comment on the NHL teams issue. I don't know if there's anything else specific to what the hon. member mentioned in terms of the line item. I think she cited 2.2.4. Is that right, hon. member? So I think that sort of covers it, but if not, I'll review your comments and see if there's more fleshing out that needs to be done.

With respect to the World Masters Games I do share the member's passion for wanting to include a specific component for the arts and culture segment of society within those Masters Games. I think I answered this question in the House for the hon. member before, although I don't remember vividly exactly what it was that she was asking. I think it was similar. But I will assure the member that there will be a strong arts and culture component to the World Masters Games. I think it will appear in the contract, as you indicate, and since I am sitting on that board of governors, I will ensure that there is a portion that goes toward helping out that particular sector as we did with the 2001 Worlds too. It was the same type of arrangement.

I should tell other members of the House who are interested in this particular issue that for virtually all of the major sport events that we as a province participate in and fund through the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation, we also build in by contract a cultural component, and we provide money from the Alberta Foundation for the Arts for that component, be it whatever percentage amount. So we do that very consistently, and I see no reason not to do it with the World Masters Games event as well.

The issue of health and wellness that was mentioned and the struggle that adult sporting groups have with respect to accessing casinos and bingos is an issue I've spoken directly with the Minister of Gaming about. I've spoken with the Minister of Justice about it, and I've raised it at the FPT tables. I can't remember; where were we for the last sport one? Was it Ottawa or somewhere? Quebec? Bathurst? Thank you. Bathurst, New Brunswick. We got stranded, in fact. I'll remember it better next time. I did raise this issue, and it seems to me that there is some degree of complication with respect to the fact that that particular industry is regulated. I think it's under the Criminal Code of Canada, if memory serves me correctly, and as a result I have to deal with it at the federal level more so than at the provincial level.

I have received a very powerful lobby from some local groups and organizations here. The Alberta Sport Council I think is the one in particular. I took their exact argument and their exact notes with me to the federal table, and I have to tell you, hon. member, that I didn't get a very warm reception, because I couldn't get it on the formal working committee agenda yet. But it is coming for a larger discussion. Again, I don't know what the outcome will be, but I was quite passionate about it because it seems to me that under the current rules we have the ability to provide for casino licences and bingo licences and whatever else for the one- to 17-year-old crowd. Then we start again at the 65-year-old-plus crowd, if memory serves correctly, but we lose this huge opportunity of that major group in between.

The rationale for it is: well, most people over 18 or 19 are now working for a living, and they don't need these kinds of casinos and bingos to support them. Well, I would argue that a little bit differently. I think we lose on the continuum of a good habit that gets started that sometimes gets lost. Some of us are able to stay active better than others, and some of us wouldn't mind a little bit of encouragement. So I did put that agenda item forward. I don't have a response yet, and I'm not sure what success I'll have, but I just wanted the member to know that I have referenced it in that context.

The issue of board development facilitation. I agree with the member. We do have a lot of expertise through Community Development, specifically through the Wild Rose Foundation and the community services volunteer area within that department, and we are frequently asked to help facilitate a number of different board development programs and/or in the case of government of Alberta projects things like the various summits. I remember vividly the Alberta Future Summit, which I had a very large role in working on. Our staff did an incredible job, as they have done in many other areas. I'll try and find out an exact number for your answer as to how many staff members we have there. I don't recall how many, if it's one or two or three. We don't have a whole bunch of people doing it, but the people we do have are very dedicated and committed. Nor do I have an exact number of how many different types of development facilitations we may have done over the last year or two.

I would now turn quickly to the issue of human rights in the province, and I know the member had indicated that she'd likely be pursuing this. The thing that I would tell you before I get into the specific answers, hon. member, is: what we've noticed with the complaints that are coming in is that they are becoming more and more complex, I'm told, and the legal nature of the human rights work that is being presented is also becoming more challenging. As the member will know, the Alberta Human Rights Commission is totally independent from government. They are very arm's length, so I don't have the ability to exercise any ministerial prerogative, if you will, over the decisions that they make. Nonetheless, the most frequently cited area, as I recall, is employment.

For the number of complaints that were opened and closed in 2002-2003, those statistics go like this. The commission opened 835 complaints in 2002-2003, which is about 63 more complaint files that were opened in that time frame than for the previous year. It's 151 more complaint files opened than the average number opened in the previous four years, in fact. The basic complaints are very wide-ranging in nature and affect individuals with disabilities, and some of them have wound up in higher courts of appeal, as the member knows. Harassment and violence and all kinds of other things are tied in here. It's a very sensitive area, obviously. Nonetheless, in terms of the cases closed in the 2002-2003 year, which is the latest statistic I have, hon. member, 835 were opened in '02-03, and 772 were closed in the same year. So that left us with about 63 ongoing files that had varying complexities.

I should tell you, hon. member, that I received some information on this. I know that we have about 40 full-time staff working there, and we have a very low staff turnover in that area. It's a very dedicated group of people who serve there. But here's the point I wanted to make if I can find it in my notes here. There were something in the order of 10,000 or 11,000 hits to the web site for a given month, with an average time spent of about 10 to 15 minutes. It tells me one thing. Well, it tells me a lot of things. It tells me that there is an increased awareness of human rights in this province and perhaps an increased need for human rights investigations and so on, but I think that's a good thing. I think it's a very good thing for people to take advantage of that. As I indicated, about 80 percent, which is the majority by far, of the complaints coming in are employment related.

Now, there are other questions that I think the hon. member asked. I couldn't do the shorthand fast enough; otherwise, I'd provide the answers. But I'll look at it and take a look at what the specifics are and get back to you.

On the issue of human rights visibility, or the commission's visibility I think you mentioned, as the hon. member probably knows, we have the Human Rights Commission, which investigates, reviews, and decides on complaints, and then we also have the Advisory Committee on the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Education Fund, which is a grants-making body separate from that one, but they sort of work together on a lot of these ideas. The visibility piece is a good one that the member mentioned, and I think you will see some increased visibility relatively soon on the multiculturalism education side. I'll talk to the commission people through the deputy about what they might or might not be able to do with increasing the Human Rights Commission side of that visibility. We've received quite a few calls and inquiries from our multicultural/ethnocultural community with respect to the same issue, and that is the visibility of it. So we are going to be doing something about that very soon. I'm working with the chair of the Advisory Committee on the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Education Fund, the Member for Calgary-Montrose, on a new initiative that will be coming up very soon which he is championing, and that's a good thing.

One other thing that is doing a lot, hon. member, to help increase the visibility, as you say, or the awareness of the Human Rights Commission is that they recently partnered with the Alberta chambers of commerce. I don't know if you're aware of that, hon. member, but you know the awards that we used to do down at city hall? We'd have a gathering and typically, not to criticize, we'd get 60 or 80 people out. It was a good group of people who care a lot about human rights, but it wasn't getting out far enough into the community. So I compliment the Human Rights Commission in Alberta for taking that initiative of the awards ceremony and working it through with the Alberta chambers of commerce to have those presentations done in the presence of and with the co-operation of the chamber of commerce groups. As we all know, those are largely our employers. So it seems to be hitting the nail squarely on the head for the type of stuff you're talking about, and it ties in very well with what I said earlier, that about 80 percent of the complaints we get are employment related. So what better audience could you want? I think that is a very key point, and I congratulate them once again for doing it.

On the McDougall house designation, as the hon. member knows, it's a good question she's put forward, but there is a process in place with the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, and I'm sure that they will read through Hansard and see what can be done about considering that place for possible designation. I'm not aware of exactly which house it is that is being referenced. I certainly know the McDougall story in part, and I've met some of the offspring from the original McDougalls, but I don't know anything about the province necessarily owning it or necessarily putting it up for sale. We'll try and track that down. If the staff who are listening could undertake to jot that down, we can follow up on it.

The issue about libraries. What has been restored, hon. member, is the per capita rate. It was $4.29 back in 1993, and it was cut to $4.03 for the operating grant part of public libraries. What we were able to do this year with our own moneys in Community Development is restore the per capita grant for public libraries' operating costs from $4.03 back up to $4.29, and we're also using 2002 listings, so that makes a very large difference to those communities.

Now, some are benefiting more than others. For example, I think the public library in Edmonton will be getting something like $245,000 more or thereabouts, and the Calgary public library will be getting probably slightly more than that because they have a larger population. Nonetheless, that's a good thing.

The Grant MacEwan project for the benefit of the deaf and hard-of-hearing community. I knew that the member would be asking this. Actually, I was expecting Edmonton-Gold Bar to ask it, but I was pleased that the Member for Edmonton-Centre asked on his behalf. What I can tell you is that I did speak with the Minister of Learning about this a week or two back when it was first brought to my attention, and my staff did a little follow-up in the meantime. We are continuing our commitment to help our government improve our communications with Albertans by providing quality, co-ordinated, and as cost-effective as possible communication services with the transfer of the responsibility for deaf and hard-of-hearing contracts from PDD boards directly to our department.

Now, that doesn't speak to the education piece, which I think is what the hon. member was asking about. That part I will refer to the Ministry of Learning for follow-up because in regard to sign language studies at Grant MacEwan College, I believe it's the Minister of Learning that is responsible for it.

I know that there's a need to continue bringing onstream trained, qualified individuals who have that particular skill. At many functions that I go to now, I see sign language interpreters. In fact, we had one in the House this afternoon, just behind the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and up in the gallery, who had a group for whom she was interpreting. It's an exhausting job, it's a highly skilled job, and I would certainly support anything that we can do to continue . . . [Mr. Zwodzesky's speaking time expired]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to be able to rise this evening to ask a number of questions, actually, of the minister as well. Clearly the minister may or may not be able to answer them fully this evening, perhaps just a few comments, but perhaps he could get back to me later on some of the more complex issues.

First, I'd like to start by thanking the minister for the hard work and dedication that he's shown in this department. I do get a lot of positive comments, actually, from constituents and other people. The minister has built quite a reputation in a difficult and very diverse portfolio. When you cover everything from special places and parks to the arts community to sports, human rights, and the list goes on, clearly it's a difficult portfolio with a lot of demands and a lot of people asking for money and obviously a very limited supply of money.

The first question that I'd like to put to the minister is in regard to the arts. Of course, we've heard quite a bit about the Victoria school for the arts in Edmonton, a proposed $60 million in funding and quite an exciting project for Edmonton. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark of course has been quite involved in that. I'm wondering what role, if any, Community Development might be able to play because, obviously, with all the publicity that Edmonton is getting with this exciting project, there are many in Calgary asking why Calgary doesn't have a similar project, and why can't we start something, and would the Community Development portfolio have anything to do with fostering that or perhaps helping promote or get something started there?

This subject of course has been bantered around for years. As alderman for ward 8 on city council, part of ward 8 was Victoria Park, which has a Victoria Park school not dissimilar, in fact, to the Edmonton project, a beautiful old sandstone that was closed by the school board, lots of exposure, right at the front door of the Stamped grounds. It's been proposed that it would make a great school for the arts. Or better yet, I guess, from my perspective now, King Edward school, which is located in Calgary-Currie, again a beautiful sandstone school recently closed by the school board.

That actually brings me to a third question that I'm wondering about in terms of centennial projects, because in addition to looking at King Edward school as perhaps a great location for a school for the arts, there is a question about the fact that there's no proper bell in the bell tower at King Edward. Never has been; a little bit of historical trivia there. When Bible Bill, William Aberhart, was the first principal, a bell was ordered for King Edward school back at the turn of the century, and it was ordered from a foundry in England. Unfortunately, that bell was shipped on a ship called the Titanic, and consequently Bible Bill didn't get his bell. So a lot of people have been talking about a potential centennial project and were wondering whether funding is going to be available or not in that area.

My third question. Because some of the headquarters of the film development industry in Alberta of course are currently located in Calgary-Currie as well, I do get questions about funding for the film and movie industry. Particularly, the recent announcement of a potential $25 million cutback from the federal government is causing considerable consternation within the industry across Canada. I'm wondering if the minister's department has thought of if it actually occurs and if there is some fallout there, would there be any opportunities, I guess, for Alberta? Is there any way we can look at that as potentially drawing people to Alberta that maybe have been located elsewhere in the country? Toronto, for example. While it's bad news overall, sometimes there's a silver lining in the clouds. Have we looked at whether or not there are any opportunities there? Has the department looked at that?

The fourth issue, certainly of major interest to us in Calgary right now as well as people in Edmonton, is the centennial program, which includes the upgrading of the Jubilee auditoria in Calgary and Edmonton. Now, I know that the funding for centennial programs is found in Alberta Infrastructure for this project, but my question here focuses on the refurbishing which is going to be managed, apparently, by Community Development. I'm wondering if the minister can explain to us any significant change or changes that might take place that would affect current users and audiences. Of course, there's been a good deal of concern from some of the current users as to where they might go in the interim during this period of refurbishment because it may be financially ruinous to them if they do not find a suitable location to be able to go to.

I guess the final thing I might ask the minister to comment on – he may not be fully prepared to lay out the whole program – of course is the issue of the finishing of the special places and parks across Alberta and the recreational corridors review committee which recently turned in its report, one which was ably chaired by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul and which I also had the pleasure, along with my colleague the Member for West Yellowhead, of turning in a report on. We're wondering if there's been any progress, direction, or where more work needs to be done in that regard. If the minister could perhaps comment on that as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll move through this as quickly as I possibly can. The first question from the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie pertained to the Victoria school of the arts and the upgrades that they're getting with the $60 million grant that was undeferred recently and what role Community Development can play in that regard.

Well, we don't play any role with respect to those specific moneys, but I'll tell you what we do through our Alberta Foundation for the Arts that impacts that whole area of artistic development. We'll be providing about $29 million this year for arts overall, including the film component. Here's what's critical to know about that. It's where those grants are going and the impact they're having which in turn helps feed and bolster what Victoria school for the performing arts is doing. I have a great affinity for it because I used to teach there, and I happened to teach languages and music and drama and so on. So I was there when the television program started, and I'm very tuned in with what they're doing.

The types of grants that we provide through the Alberta Foundation for the Arts courtesy of lottery dollars provided by the Ministry of Gaming include study grants; operational assistance grants; festivals, which I talked about earlier; specific project support grants; commissions – we buy artwork and stuff like that; we give out awards such as literary awards, which will be given out this coming Saturday for example; various competitions we fund; and we fund summer schools. So there's a lot of that, and much of it is youth oriented.

We also have a fairly active program, the name of which just escapes me right now, where touring groups are able to go to different schools with their productions. I recall seeing the production of Snow White by the Alberta touring alliance or something close to that name. That's not the proper name; I've just lost it momentarily here. Now, we provided them some grant funding, and they take that production and tour it out to all the schools, and we're talking anywhere from about grade 4 up. So they have a tremendous impact through grant dollars we provide, and that does impact students who get interested in it and will perhaps go on to the Victoria school of performing arts. Why isn't there one and can't one be done in Calgary is a good question. I don't know the answer to that, but I do know that we have a centre of performing excellence here in the Victoria school.

I can't help you, hon. member, with the King Edward school bell. I don't know that project, but the simple answer to whether or not centennial funding would be available in the coming year is: not at this time. We don't have any capacity for additional dollars yet, but there are a number of people who are asking me that question, so I will put the question forward through our process and see what happens.

I appreciate that Calgary-Currie is the headquarters for many, many film and video companies. I have been there. I have toured the site on a couple of occasions. I am very impressed with what's going on there, and I'm devastated, as you are, with the rumoured cuts to the Canadian television fund by the federal government. What I would tell you in response to your question, hon. member, is this: if they cut that $25 million out, we will lose six of the seven major television projects that were scheduled to occur in this province, and that's why we're fighting very hard. That will have an economic impact of somewhere between $10 million and $20 million in dollar terms.

It'll have a far greater impact on eroding the delicate and fragile and highly mobile film infrastructure community of crews which we rely on not only for our own indigenous productions but that a lot of offshore companies rely on when they come here. It's not only the mountains and the badlands and the beautiful long, sunny, clear days that we offer here that attract these film producers from around the world, whom we do not fund by the way, but they come here because it's economical for them to do business here, and they can pick up a crew – a sound, film, lighting, et cetera, crew – like that. But we have to do what we can to ensure that that infrastructure remains there, and that's why I've written to the federal minister asking her to rescind, and I hope that she's done that.

The Jubilee Auditorium upgrades. I've answered part of that before, but I would just tell you very quickly that the two Jubilee auditoria, based on what I last saw from the architects, have confirmed that they're going to provide a better house handling system for air flow. They'll be reraking; in other words, reinclining the theatre space where the audience sits for better sight lines. They'll be improving the acoustics. They will be improving the foyers that abut the viewing area and a number of other things.

Anyway, they've really got quite a lot in mind, which is why we have to close both places down for an extended period of time, likely about a year, to get it all done. It's not something we could do piecemeal. We looked at trying to do that. It's nothing we can do in a phased-in approach of a month here, a month there. It has to all be done at once, and we've reviewed that thoroughly.

My final comment is with regard to special places, and I was getting to that when the time ran out and I was trying to answer the Member for Edmonton-Centre's questions in that regard because she did reference snowmobile trails. I will give her a longer answer in writing on this.

I know that the Recreation Corridors Legislative Review, that was done by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, who chaired it, along with the Member for West Yellowhead – and I believe the Member for Calgary-Currie was also involved – did an outstanding job, had consultations throughout the province with hundreds of groups, including letters, e-mails, phone calls, and so on. They've dealt with a lot of very sensitive issues impacting the whole issue of recreation corridors. I can't remember the exact number right off the top of my head, but it seems to me that we have about 15,000 kilometres of trail already throughout the province of Alberta. Some of them are better linked than others. There are gaps in a few places, and I know that they are looking at how to address that while also bearing in mind the very highly charged and sensitive concerns that a lot of individuals have in some of the other areas.

It's not a huge problem for us in the larger urban centres, and it's not a huge problem in places like the trail that goes from St. Paul, maybe, to Elk Point. I just forget. Iron Horse or something like that it's called. It's a wonderful trail because it's built on an abandoned railway line, as I recall. I toured that one; we drove it, actually. It was fantastic, absolutely incredible. We went through all the fences, locked them all up behind us and so on.

I am impressed with what the committee has put forward. I'll have the report coming onto my radar screen very soon, and I'll be responding to that and taking it through our process.

Suffice it to say that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre mentioned the need for more snowmobile trails. I would agree. I think we do need some of those. They have to go in areas where they are permitted to go, and there is an upkeep factor there that we look for local groups to help us out with. But I want to go on record once again saying that we are not going to be looking at or helping out with trails or whatever in those areas where a local municipality hasn't first given the okay for them to occur. That is something that currently exists as a right within the Municipal Government Act, I believe it's called, the MGA. That right will remain that way. It is not our position as a provincial government to overstep what's in municipal legislation. Those people wanting trails in different areas will need first to have the approval of the local municipality in the instances that apply.

With that, hon. member, I think I will take my seat so that others can ask any questions they might have.

Dr. Taft: I will quickly get some issues up about PDD, which, after all, accounts for a good majority of the minister's budget, and there will be other questions which we will provide to the minister in writing because we have many other issues to cover, shall I put it that way.

I'm on page 91 of the estimates, funding for PDD boards. One of the problems with PDD boards in the past has been that in fact what appears in the budget is not what finally gets provided to the boards, and it's a parallel problem to what happens to the regional health authorities. Their planning process is behind the fiscal cycle. Can the minister explain to us whether these current estimates are really what's going to finally be provided to the PDD boards, or if not, when will those figures be finalized? Indeed, what is the budgeting and planning process for the boards, and how does that fit into the budget cycle? I think it's the case that some boards don't get their budgets and business plans finalized until well into the fiscal year, which in my view is poor management.

Last year a number of PDDs were concerned about deficits. The funding levels this year rise by about 8 percent, but that's about what they rose by last year, and last year they had deficits, so I'm concerned that this year they may have deficits again. So how many boards are projecting deficits this year, based on their plans right now? Interestingly, how many are taking on new clients? More importantly, what is the net number of new clients? In other words, each PDD board loses and gains some clients as the year goes on. What's the net increase in clients expected to be? Will PDD boards be allowed to run deficits this year? Is that a possibility for them? If not, what direction does the minister expect to give PDD boards if they are projecting deficits? I'm trying to go very quickly here because I know the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has some issues he'd like the opportunity to raise as well.

When it comes to waiting lists for PDD services, which have come up in question period a couple of times recently, what is being done to streamline the intake process for PDD clients? Is the assumption there that this process is as efficient as it could be, or could we perhaps improve that, streamline it and speed it up?

I will send a number of other questions to the minister in writing, but one other set concerns the Eric Cormack Centre, just a few blocks from the Legislature. There are plans or rumours of plans going around that the Cormack Centre may be phased out or closed down. What are the future plans? The minister is shaking his head. Either he's puzzled or he's just saying no. Anyway, perhaps he could provide it in writing so we don't consume too much time here. What are the future plans for the Cormack Centre? How does it fit into the long-term plans of PDD?

The rest of the questions here I will submit to the minister in writing, and I'm sure, in fact, that he will respond in writing. I'd like the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to have a chance too.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. minister, I've got about four or five other people on the list.

Mr. Zwodzesky: I just want to say that I will provide the answers in writing, and I'll defer to the next member.

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thanks, Mr. Chairman, and I appreciate this opportunity, to the minister. The minister recently announced along with His Worship Mayor Bill Smith that Edmonton would be hosting the 2004 Junos. Will the minister explain how this fits within the ministry's business plan and how the provincial contribution is being funded?

If I may add also, the Community Development budget includes a $19.8 million increase from the Alberta lottery fund for the arts, recreation, sports, human rights and citizenship, education, cultural diversity, volunteerism, and heritage programs. In the Community Development business plan one of the challenges identified is "increasing demands generated by community needs within the arts and culture, sport and recreation, and voluntary sectors." How is this ministry going to address these challenges?

Thank you.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Again, Mr. Chairman, just for the record and in deference to time and other members who have questions, I'll undertake to respond in writing to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, and I thank him for those good questions.

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, followed by Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. Edmonton-Ellerslie: yes, okay. I've just got a question mark, so you're in there.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to start by complimenting the minister for his diligence in answering questions and his agreement to answer questions in writing if they're submitted, if he can't put them all on the record now. I want to thank him also for a detailed answer that he gave to one of my written questions some months ago. I appreciated that. That had to do with the Human Rights Commission's waiting times.

I may put three specific questions on the record now, and the minister can answer them along with others that may come from me in writing. Minister, one of your responsibilities, of course, is to preserve and protect the cultural and natural heritage of Albertans. I presume this includes sites of heritage value in urban areas as well. In my constituency is an area that's come under increasing pressure from the university's expansion eastward, and the community league has been very, very concerned about the potential for university encroachment and, therefore, in the long run the disappearance of this historically very, very important area of Edmonton, Alberta. I wonder if the minister can let me know what kind of help Garneau community residents can expect from his department as they make attempts – and they've been doing it for a long time – to protect the area because of its heritage value and historical significance. So that's one.

The second quick question, again about the Whyte Avenue damage by fire some months ago. You're aware of it. I was in Montreal just about two months ago, and someone stopped me on the way and said: "I saw you on the TV. You are the MLA for that area that got burnt. Oh, my goodness." So, again, are there any resources available from your department to help the community and the property owners there to restore the area that was burnt down so that the general significance, both commercial and cultural, of Whyte Avenue can be restored and preserved? There's the second question.

The third one, Mr. Minister, has to do with a natural area that needs protection. I have been presented petitions here from Calgarians in the hundreds over the last month and a half. The area in question is the Evan-Thomas provincial recreation area, and the petitioners of course have been asking that this area plan be revised so as to disallow any further commercial or residential development in and around it, including the Kananaskis valley, and to redesignate this Evan-Thomas provincial recreation area and adjacent unprotected public lands and expand them as a provincial park.

So I hope that you'll be able to address those questions specifically because they have become my concern. Two of them come from my constituency. The third one is, of course, that Calgarians have been sending us lots of petitions on it.

I will cede my turn to some other members who might want to just raise questions, and I'll be forwarding some questions to you in writing.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Once again, Mr. Chairman, I'd be happy to undertake to provide those in writing. I have the answers. I know the answers, as I did to the previous questions, but so that others can get their questions on record, I'll cede the floor to them.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Minister, we know that your department is responsible for the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities and has been very receptive to the discussions that have taken place over the last while, especially about the Alberta disability strategy that council members put together over a period of several years, actually, and then released back in December of 2002.

The disability strategy, as you know, identifies eight major objectives that the council members believe the community has expressed as their priorities to move forward as soon as possible. Briefly describing them, those priorities would be to increase awareness and to ensure that their daily living needs would be met. The removal of physical barriers is important. They would like to see a streamlined appeal system. They feel that there should be more individualized support, something that the community has termed a community supports model.

In addition, improved access to education at all levels and the need to separate income support from disability support. One of the aspects of this that's probably most poorly understood by members of the general population is that not only do members of the disability community need those income supports, but they in fact need additional supports, depending on their disability, to get going in the morning, get off to work, just even to get started on their day, and those requirements may consume a large portion of any funding that they may receive.

Then the eighth priority that the council members believe needs to be addressed is employment support. It's been said many times in this House that the best social program is a job, and that certainly applies to the members of the disability community. The goals of the community are to attain full citizenship, and full citizenship is a platform which stands on four different legs, four different pillars, those being . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates unless there are no members who wish to speak prior to the conclusion of the two hours, I must now put the question on the proposed estimates for the Department of Community Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$633,497,000
Capital Investment	$1,262,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's been a very electrifying evening so far. I have no doubt it'll continue that way. However, I would move that the House now rise and report the estimates of Community Development.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following department.

Community Development: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $633,497,000; capital investment, $1,262,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Would all those who concur in this report please say aye?

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: The motion is carried.

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 29 Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to ask the sponsor of the bill, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, if she has had an opportunity to address some of the issues that were raised by me in second reading.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, as the sponsor of Bill 29 I'd like to make some comments, and perhaps I would commence by just restating the purpose and the effect of the amendments in Bill 29. Quite simply, the main purpose of these amendments is to level the playing field for the mortgage insurance business in Alberta. The amendments are designed to ensure that the two mortgage default insurers operating in the province at the moment, being the Canada

Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which, as we all know, is a federal Crown corporation, as well as GE Capital Mortgage Insurance, Canada, which is a private-sector company, will operate under the same foreclosure rules under our Law of Property Act.

Our Law of Property Act, Mr. Chairman, sets out amongst many other rules governing property transactions in Alberta the statutory authority for lending institutions on property foreclosures. The general rule is that lending institutions can't sue a borrower for any shortfall on a residential mortgage once the property goes into foreclosure, and the lender is restricted to the property only, regardless of the value of the property and whether or not there is a shortfall. But there is an exception to this general rule, and that exception favours CMHC on all of its mortgages. So the intent of these amendments in Bill 29 is to extend this same exemption that CMHC enjoys to GE Capital Mortgage Insurance, Canada or any other mortgage insurance provider that might enter the market in Alberta for high-ratio mortgages only.

As members may recall, the definition of a high-ratio mortgage will be determined at a later date by regulation after further consultation with stakeholders and various other industry players is conducted. I can add that under the Bank Act a high-ratio mortgage is currently defined as a mortgage where more than 75 percent of the value of the property is financed, and that may well be the definition that is adopted in Alberta for the purposes of these amendments.

So we have, Mr. Chairman, a double standard operating in the province in a two-company industry where the legislation favours one company over the other, and in this province certainly the philosophy of this government and, I think, most Albertans is that we do not like to see a government agency having a competitive advantage over a private-sector competitor.

I'll now try and respond to the questions that were raised during the debate at second reading. It's my recollection that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview wanted to know some data on the mortgage delinquency rates in Alberta and was wondering if those rates were higher in this province than in other provinces. I can advise that according to data received from the Canadian Bankers Association, the delinquency rate for Alberta residential housing in 2002 averaged .4 percent of all residential housing in the province. This percentage was the third lowest in Canada, behind only Quebec at .3 percent and Ontario at .3 percent as well.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview had also wanted to know the reason for people defaulting on their mortgages. This is the best information that I've been able to obtain, and this comes from GE Capital, its experience with defaulters in 2002. Of those cases where the cause of default was known – and I'm sorry that I don't have the total number – 80 percent of those defaults resulted from misrepresentations made by the borrower at the time the mortgage was granted. I would expect that that would largely relate to ability to pay and not being straightforward on that point. This means, then, that only 20 percent of GE's known defaults resulted from true hardship cases such as unemployment, death, illness, marital split-up, and those types of reasons.

The hon. member also wanted to know what the impact of our existing legislation had been on GE Capital as it operates in the province, and it is the belief of GE Capital that some borrowers are choosing their company based on a negative selection process, meaning that some mortgage brokers, lawyers, and other financial intermediaries are actively promoting the deficiency judgment protection on GE Capital insured mortgages to borrowers. So this has resulted in GE Capital insuring the higher risk, higher ratio mortgages, contributing to GE Capital having a higher delinquency rate in Alberta than it does in the rest of Canada.

The member also wanted to know about CMHC's policies when people have lost their capacity to sustain a high-ratio mortgage and defaulted on the mortgage. We approached CMHC on this, and they advise that through their approved lenders they have a comprehensive program that provides advice and financial assistance to borrowers experiencing financial hardship, the object being to keep borrowers in their homes of course and to resolve any real or potential default. While CMHC has the ability to pursue or sue on the covenant or debt, the decision to proceed is made only after careful review of both the circumstances leading to the default and the financial capacity of the borrower.

Even after the decision has been made to pursue the debt on the covenant and judgment has been obtained against the borrower, CMHC's collection policies require an ongoing review of the borrower's financial circumstances and their ability to repay the debt. GE Capital advises that it has a similar policy. It has a default management program called workout, which allows lenders, borrowers, and GE Capital to work together to try to keep borrowers again in their homes after falling on hard times. Some of the workout program options include arranging for a partial payment, increasing the amortization period, arranging for an interest rate buy-down, and deferring payments.

I believe that the last question the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview raised was: is it likely that the proposed amendments will result in GE Capital lowering its interest rate? I'd have to advise that that is not likely insofar as CMHC and GE Capital offer the same mortgage default insurance rates across Canada regardless of the region. Currently GE Capital is experiencing a higher risk for less reward in Alberta. GE Capital would need to offer the same interest rates as CMHC in order to compete with CMHC, but as GE Capital is incurring a higher risk in Alberta, it is incurring a higher risk in Alberta because it can't sue for any outstanding balance.

I believe I commented in second reading that leveling the playing field would certainly introduce competition, and it will. We don't anticipate that it will lower the interest rates for the reasons that I've mentioned, but it will in all likelihood cause new products to be introduced in the marketplace which will benefit consumers. There has been previous evidence of this because prior to 1995, when GE Capital entered the Canadian market, CMHC had a virtual monopoly at that time. When GE Capital entered the Canadian market, it did introduce two new products, which CMHC subsequently also introduced, and that was the very popular portable mortgage insurance program and the default management program, that I spoke about a few moments ago.

Because of the amendments which are proposed and should they be adopted, which we hope they will, GE Capital does plan to offer all of its products that it offers in other places in Canada. It plans to offer them in Alberta on the same loan-to-value ratio used in the rest of Canada. If the amendments are not adopted and don't come into force in Alberta, it's quite likely these products may never be offered in Alberta, or if they were, they'd be offered at a lower loan-to-value ratio than in the rest of Canada.

The two new products GE Capital plans to launch this year and hopefully will launch in Alberta are the home equity line of credit product, which allows borrowers to use their home as security to get a high-ratio mortgage that acts like a line of credit, which will reduce a person's borrowing cost by only being charged standard mortgage interest rates rather than the rates associated with the typical unsecured lines of credit. The second product is known as the second home product, and it allows borrowers to obtain high-ratio financing on a second home.

That, I believe, in a general way covers the questions raised by the members for Edmonton-Riverview and Edmonton-Gold Bar. I believe Edmonton-Ellerslie stated that she didn't understand why it was necessary to make these amendments because she thought the level playing field was already available, and I hope I've been able to establish that it isn't unless we make these changes.

Those would be my comments for now. I'd be willing and pleased to answer any other questions that hon. members may have.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have one question for the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, the sponsor of the bill. The point of this bill, the Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003, Bill 29, is ostensibly to level the playing field. My question has to do with whether or not CMHC and its competitors, in this case GE, really operate in exactly the same markets to start with, and I'll put it in the form of a question because I'm not entirely clear about whether or not my understanding is sound.

GE Capital Mortgage Insurance as a private-sector operator I think has the freedom to reject clients if it feels they are too risky. Naturally, as a private business it makes decisions based on the degree of risk it's willing to take. CMHC, on the other hand, may not have total freedom with respect to basing its decisions entirely on the level of risk involved. If that, indeed, is true, then it would seem to me that CMHC and GE are really not comparable. When we ostensibly attempt to level the playing field, what will it exactly mean if the companies operate in slightly different markets and have a different market structure in which they operate? So will the bill really serve the purpose of leveling the playing field, or will it in fact tilt the advantage in the direction of GE? That's the question.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. While it may well be true that CMHC and GE Capital don't have exactly the same business, they certainly do compete in the residential, high-ratio mortgage business, which is what these amendments are designed to address, the double standard that exists there. So when you say, "Does CMHC have the same freedom to reject borrowers as GE Capital would?" it's my understanding and my belief that there are lending guidelines and a formula for determining whether a borrower qualifies for financing. It is my understanding that they're very comparable for both companies, but there is certainly no requirement that CMHC must accept a borrower unless they meet the lending guidelines. These two companies are competing in the same markets, so I would expect their guidelines are very comparable. I hope that helps answer the member's concern.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a brief comment. Usually when we hear a bill that proposes that we allow private-sector companies to actually compete and allow a level playing field for private-sector companies trying to compete against a government monopoly, there's a huge hue and cry in the opposition and so on. I think it speaks volumes about the popularity of CMHC that so many seem to be in favour of this bill. I certainly strongly support it. I hope all members will. I think it will prove to be a very big success for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[The clauses of Bill 29 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Acting Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Chair: Carried.

Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise this evening and take this opportunity to speak on Bill 34, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2003. I'd like to take this opportunity to correct some fairly glaring errors brought up by the opposition in second reading, not about the act under discussion but about the diversified livestock industry as a whole.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was quite critical of the consultations that we did with the industry concerning what became Bill 34. Mr. Chairman, there were many hours spent ensuring that this met the needs of the industry and of those affected by the industry. The hon. member is correct about one thing. The Canadian Wildlife Federation was not consulted on this legislation. Instead, the following Alberta-based groups were consulted: Alberta Fish and Game Association, Canadian Food Inspection Agency, Métis Nation of Alberta Association, Alberta Sustainable Resource Development, Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, Alberta Professional Outfitters Society, Alberta Elk Centre, Alberta White-tail and Mule Deer Association, and Confederacy of Treaty 6 First Nations.

The member is right again. The Canadian Wildlife Federation is a strong critic of hunt farms, but Bill 34 is not about hunt farms. In fact, it reinforces this government's stance against hunt farms at the current time. On more than one occasion the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie incorrectly referred to deer and elk farms, the focus of this legislation, as hunt farms. Now, the hon. member opposite should know that hunt farms are illegal in Alberta. These are domestic cervid farms, not hunt farms. Domestic cervid farms.

The changes to the legislation specifically allow only the registered owner of the farm to slaughter the animals and only for personal use. We want to make it easier for diversified livestock producers to provide deer and elk meat to their families without going through the involved process of transporting deer or elk to an inspected abattoir that handles these animals.

For the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to continue to confuse hunt farms, which are, as I said, currently illegal in Alberta, and diversified livestock operations is misleading. Let me reiterate. Previously deer and elk could only be slaughtered at licensed abattoirs in accordance with the Meat Inspection Act. This created considerable hardship for deer and elk producers who wished to slaughter their animals for their own personal use. However, it did ensure that all animals were slaughtered in accordance with the rules governing slaughtering and processing of carcasses that were going to be sold. The changed legislation will now allow the person who is the licensed operator of the cervid farm to slaughter the animals on his or her own farm for personal use, which is to say, the same privilege that is given to all other livestock producers in the province.

I would like to clear up a couple more misleading statements made by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. She seemed confused about the changes that are being made to LIDA in regard to penalties for diversified livestock producers who allow their animals to escape into the wild. While there hasn't been a single case of an Alberta diversified livestock producer releasing their animals into the wild, these penalties are being strengthened, not weakened, in order to prevent something like that from happening in Alberta, Mr. Chairman.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie also mentioned that the Alberta government has paid millions of dollars to game farmers as compensation for the eradication of their animals when they get diseased. Well, this is plainly not true, Mr. Chairman. Although we have experienced CWD in the province, we have been able to isolate and control it, which is a huge credit to this industry.

Not only that, as the hon. member should know, animal diseases and compensation fall under the mandate of the Canadian Food Inspection Agency. That is a federal Liberal agency. If – and heaven forbid it happens – there is an outbreak of any animal disease in Alberta, the Canadian Food Inspection Agency is responsible for compensation, not the province of Alberta.

Now, the majority of changes that are being made to the Livestock Industry Diversification Act are administrative ones that will make it easier for diversified livestock producers to do business in Alberta. These include allowing cervid farm operators to submit their records and reports to Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development either electronically or through hard copy. This amendment fits in with the Alberta government one-window approach and makes it easier for producers to keep their paperwork in order and to do business better with less operation time and expense, Mr. Chairman.

There have also been changes to the eligibility for a licence to operate a cervid farm and allowing ribbon branding of the carcass. As I said previously, the carcass is ribbon branded with ink to identify it and ensure that the provincial and federal approval stamps are evident. Now, current levels of inspection and food safety standards provide adequate levels of protection to ensure that meat from wild big game does not enter the meat market unlawfully.

I disagree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a number of issues, but most glaringly, Mr. Chairman, I disagree with his misinformed assessment of Bill 34 and its effect on the cervid industry. Bill 34 is a step in the right direction for an industry that deserves our support, and I know that this industry is working hard to meet any challenges they face.

I encourage all members to support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Chairman, the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar tried to be a bright bunny, but all he did was extend the speaking time on this bill significantly because now, of course, I have to challenge all of the very silly statements he was making.

Let's talk about whether this is a bill that introduces hunt farms or not or dresses up a hunt farm in a legislatively acceptable manner for people who own these cervids on their property to get rid of them, to slaughter them.

Ms Blakeman: It's mutton dressed up as lamb.

Ms Carlson: It is mutton dressed up as lamb; there's no doubt about that.

And if the minister of health thinks that he is going to sit here and try and get me to shorten my comments otherwise, I won't. It absolutely is not going to make any difference to me at all to have him sitting here on the Liberal side of the House, where he actually belongs.

That was a pretty quick vacating. Come on. You could've lasted for a couple more lines. I was just getting warmed up.

Well, let's start at the beginning, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

An Hon. Member: In the beginning.

Ms Carlson: In the beginning, absolutely.

An Hon. Member: Adam and Eve.

Ms Carlson: Well, that's what they tried to do with these hunt farms. They tried to create a new industry in this province, but the problem was that it was a snake directing all of the activities, hon. minister, and they made a huge mess of it in this province. What happened was that we had friends of many government members who wanted to participate in this particular industry with the hopes that they were going to make big, big dollars, and many people have actually talked about this industry as having participated in something very similar to pyramid schemes.

What have we got at this stage? We have an industry that doesn't have a market. Now, what's happened is that the animals, particularly the elk, who used to be very valuable for velvet and other interesting body parts, had the market fall out from overseas countries, and there hasn't been the same kind of demand. So what's happened is that all these people are growing these . . .

An Hon. Member: The other body parts.

Ms Carlson: The other body parts. Yes. [interjection] Would the minister like to participate in that part of the discussion? Perhaps. Well, that'll be interesting to get her perspective on it.

At any rate, when the market falls out, we've got now many hunters who've got investments in these animals, and they've got investments in property and building structures and so on, and the requirements for investments on their properties have significantly increased. Why? Because of chronic wasting disease. It's become a big problem in some other provinces, not so much here so far but in other provinces, so the regulation in terms of how to ensure that these game farm animals are kept separate from wild animals has intensified.

If anybody knows the industry, they'll certainly know that deer and elk can not only run fast but can jump high and are able to jump over many of the fences. The problem with that is that if these game farm animals get mixed up with critters in the wild, chronic wasting disease gets transferred. It's controllable on game farms, but it's very, very hard to control once it gets into the wild, and this has been a particular problem in Saskatchewan. So as a result of that, these farmers who've had the prices drop out of their market are now facing increased costs.

In addition to that, they have herds that are aging. So they don't know what to do with these animals, because they can't sell them to anybody like they used to. There used to be quite a high and interesting market for breeding purposes of some of these older animals, and now they don't know what to do with them. What they wanted to do was start hunt farms. There was a big kerfuffle about that in this province. I went to a lot of those meetings, and those were very interesting meetings to go to. At the end of the day that wasn't allowed in this province.

So, then, how to still help out these friends who have this surplus of product and have nowhere to go? Well, in the short term the solution was to slaughter the animals and have them tested for CWD, and what that does is that that kicks you into a number of rebate programs for animals. What did we have happen last year in this province? In 2002 4,984 animals were tested, which is a fourfold increase from the year before. Testing for chronic wasting disease became mandatory in August for any dead elk or deer on a game farm. So this is one way of culling the herds, and the next way that we're taking a look at is exactly what this bill has introduced doing.

So while it may not be a hunt farm specifically designated, Mr. Chairman, it specifically defines and creates legislative action over the keeping, slaughtering, transporting, and selling of cervids. The Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor says: only for family use. Well, I don't know how many elk you can eat in one year, but I come from a family of 10 people. You know, if we went through two cows and one wild animal, like an elk or a moose, a year, that's all we could eat, and those were in the days when people had big servings of meat every day. So there aren't 4,984 families in this province for killing all of these cervids. Who killed them, and where did the meat or the other body parts or the antler pieces go? That's the question, that this is the beginning of a hunt farm process just dressed up and called another name.

Ms Blakeman: Mutton dressed up as lamb.

Ms Carlson: It is absolutely mutton dressed up as lamb.

So, then, in addition to just these ones, the 4,984 animals we're talking about here, there were another 1,057 animal heads submitted last year by hunters participating in a voluntary program to check for chronic wasting disease among wild deer and elk. So now the problem is even getting larger. They need a way to legislatively, legally introduce a way to cull the herds and get rid of these animals. It has nothing to do with providing just enough meat to put on the plates of the families. As much as you would like to mislead this House into saying that that's the case, it isn't the case.

What's the cause of this? It has nothing to do with meat on the table. A lot of it has to do with drought. If there isn't any feed, if you can't sell your animals to anyone else for breeding purposes, if there's a lesser need for body parts, what are you going to do with them? Well, if you can't continue to rip off governments by subsidizing the slaughter of the animals, then you need some kind of legislation that will allow you to do it. So that's exactly what we're seeing happen in this particular case, Mr. Chairman, in spite of what that member who introduced this bill would like us to believe.

Is this the right place and the right way for this market to go? Well, it's a very questionable situation because chronic wasting disease is not going away, Mr. Chairman. Alberta had its first two cases of this disease detected last year, an elk from a ranch northwest of Edmonton in the spring and a white-tailed deer from a ranch in the same region last fall. So it's there, it's spreading, and how are they going to manage it? If it spreads any more than this, there could be a huge panic in the regions, and that would be a problem.

I remember when the announcement was made that CWD was found. They wouldn't tell us where. Now, you've got a lot of hunters, you've got a lot of outfitters out there taking a look at bagging wild animals, and they don't know if they're guiding people into an area where chronic wasting disease has become apparent. So that was a real issue for us last year. We heard a lot about that from outfitters in the region, and to this time we haven't heard that there's any actual source for the disease in either of these cases. So we would look forward to having that answer. Perhaps the hon. member who's got all the other answers has that answer too, and it would be very interesting to hear.

Chronic wasting disease is a very bad disease to have in animals, Mr. Chairman. It's a fatal infection. What it does is destroy the brains and the nervous systems of animals in the deer family, which of course includes elk. It's in the same family as mad cow disease, but so far it's not been shown to spread to humans. Now, we can just begin to think of the implications of a disease that's very like mad cow disease if it takes hold in this province. What will that do to the meat industry as a whole? What will it do to the budding wild meat industry being sold and becoming more acceptable in retail outlets and in restaurants and so on?

What does it do to tourism? It has a significant impact, I would suggest. Who wants to go to England with mad cow disease everywhere and be worried about walking around, tramping around on the grounds for walks or hikes or whatever kinds of activities you might be pursuing. They're not going to come to Alberta either. Alberta is just starting to really work on increasing the number of dollars generated by tourism. We've been relatively steady for at least the past decade in that area, and we're starting to see the numbers climb for a lot of good reasons, not too many that the government can actually be responsible for but for a lot of good reasons, not the least of which is that Alberta is a wonderful place to go, and many people are finding that out.

But what happens if we see more outbreaks of chronic wasting disease and people start making a more verbal link to it and mad cow disease? It could completely decimate our tourism industry, and given the fact that we're going to be competing with West Nile disease and some of these other diseases that we've heard about recently, we certainly don't need to add this to the list. That would be truly a disaster for this province. We don't want everyone who leaves the borders of this province to have to clean their feet off in airports and as they cross borders. That would be remarkably hard on tourism and economic development in terms of all of the kinds of different conventions that we have here throughout the province. The problem is that these farms are all over the province; they're not just located in one area. While we've only seen the disease in this one area, it certainly could be in the locations where the other hunt farms are. So that's a real problem.

People think that a way of culling their herd, so a way of getting rid of almost 5,000 animals just from these hunt farms in a year, is to take them in and have them tested for chronic wasting disease. It's a huge burden on the system, the government labs, to complete the testing. So it's a manpower issue; it's a money issue; it's a resource issue from how the labs are backed up and has become quite a problem. Generally you get the results on testing an animal within eight to 10 days, and that's been something that farmers have been complaining about. They think that they need the results faster than that, Mr. Chairman, but with the kinds of resources that are dedicated to this right now, that's all they can do. The provincial labs are not prepared at this time to speed it up, and that could be a problem. If we see more cases of chronic wasting disease, in eight to 10 days the spread of the disease could be phenomenal. You know, what happened in England is that they just moved into the farms and quarantined them and started burning. We don't want that to happen here.

So definitely we need to see a speedier testing process be developed. The U.S. has got one. This province likes to copy a lot of the things that the U.S. does, so they should be in contact with the Department of Agriculture and find out about the improved, quicker forms of testing for CWD and then put in some sort of a screening process so that we don't see another 5,000 animals tested this year. The question is, Mr. Chairman: if they just have to take in a part of the head when they do the testing, what happens to the antlers, and what happens to the other interesting body parts that there's a market for? Do they keep them until the animal has been tested and cleared and then look to market them elsewhere, or are there any kinds of restrictions on that? Can they just send those parts off?

One thing we don't have the answer to is the question of how affected the antlers are by chronic wasting disease. Are those separate and distinct in terms of the disease transfer? I don't think that question has been answered in here. The tests we have now can only be done on dead animals, so we need to develop some sort of criteria to determine whether we need to test as many as were done last year. One out of 100 of a herd? One out of 10 of a herd? Every one that you want to cull out? Is there an age requirement? We haven't heard any of that information. Those specifications have not been developed now.

I'm sure, Mr. Chairman, that people in this Assembly will be very interested to know that there is the possibility of a live test for deer, and they have to test the deer's tonsils. So it's theoretically possible to do live tests on animals, but I just can't see those labs moving into these ranches and somehow immobilizing the animal so that they can test their tonsils. Currently in Alberta the only option is really on dead animals.

The source, like they said, remains a mystery for this particular farm, but the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar says that he knows the answer, and that could be because the farm is in his constituency. So maybe he can clarify that. While we're at it, maybe he can clarify what has happened in Saskatchewan and if there's been any spread here. [interjection] No. You don't think there will be? I don't think there will be either because I don't think he has those answers. I think some clever researcher wrote him a very nice speech for this evening, but I don't think the member himself has the answers.

Alberta has 192 deer farms with a total of just over 11,000 deer, and it has 460 elk farms with almost 43,000 elk. Alberta and Saskatchewan are now home to most Canadian game farms, which is a change from a few years ago when the majority of game farms used to be in the States. After taking a look, what they actually had there were combination hunt farms and game farms. They would raise some of the animals to use the body parts and the antlers, but there was also the potential to have a hunt farm there. Because of the hue and cry from the general public and the spread of disease on those farms, they have been virtually eliminated in the States, making Saskatchewan and Alberta home to most of the game farms not just in Canada, Mr. Chairman, but certainly in North America.

So far chronic wasting disease has been found at 40 Saskatchewan farms and in seven wild deer in the province. So we certainly hope that that particular disease doesn't spread here. That's been one of the excuses that we have heard for why these particular herds have to be culled in the way they are, but the better answer and the cheaper answer for the government, Mr. Chairman, is to bring forward Bill 34, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2003, and that's what we see here tonight. Then we also see the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar talking about the reasons why he thinks this particular bill should be justified. It's a problem I see as he has introduced it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, because we are in committee, what I'm going to do is do a section-by-section analysis of the bill.

Ms Blakeman: No. No. You've done such a good job.

Ms Carlson: Oh, yeah. Well, we haven't even got there. You know, the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar has just challenged me to participate fully in the debate tonight, Mr. Chairman, and I'm very pleased to do that. [interjections] Well, maybe because of the desperate pleas of my own colleagues, I'll just put a few questions on the record that we hope that he answers in third.

Section 5: why the time change for registering the cervids? So if he could answer that. Section 9: why is the change happening here, and what circumstances does the minister see making provisions for the setting free of animals? Section 12: will the minister's registration period in section 5 be sufficient to ensure that these animals are registered before they're sold? If he can answer those questions in a short and succinct fashion now or when we get to third reading, then I'll be able to hold my colleagues back from all fully participating in the debate at third reading, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do thank the hon. member for her questions, and, yes, I will take her up on that offer. I will try to clarify some of these issues in third reading. Thank you very much.

Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. During second reading there were some questions raised specifically and mainly dealing with special ballots, and I would like to put on the record some information I asked for and received from the Chief Electoral Officer.

Now, the reason I went there is that the provisions that we're proposing in this act mirror the provisions of the Election Act that govern the rules that we conduct elections by for provincial elections, so I thought that that would be a good place to go for some information and ask if there had been any problems experienced during provincial elections with special ballots. The Chief Electoral Officer's staff replied that they found the special ballot process to be very effective, to facilitate the voting process, particularly for electors working, traveling, or studying away from home or electors who are hospitalized or incarcerated and electors who find it physically difficult to travel to the polls and electors who are involved in the election administration or campaign processes.

The Chief Electoral Officer also reported very good results and positive feedback from those people using the special ballot process. Usage continues to increase as people become more and more aware of the availability of special ballots in provincial elections. The staff also claim that the process is easy for electors to follow, that the secrecy of the vote is protected. There is an element of security in that documentation is retained which verifies who voted, certainly not how they voted, but there is a record of who filed a special ballot, so it's verified who did vote. The system is also very transparent in that the voters' names are added to the list of electors, and that list can be viewed by candidates following the election.

So, certainly, the changes that we're proposing bring it, as I mentioned, in line with the Election Act, which we operate under provincially and has proved very successful in those elections, and that's why I think that they will prove effective as well in local authority elections.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. I appreciate the sponsoring member making some attempt to address the concerns that were raised around special ballots and making good use of provincial resources to go and check with the Chief Electoral Officer, but certainly the concerns that were raised around some of the experiences – I think it was Edmonton-Glenarry that raised the issues – came out of a provincial election, so the issues we were raising with concerns around special ballots were springing from a provincial example. So although we certainly value the special ballot process provincially, there are some concerns here, and I think we're making the same mistakes or not repairing them in what's being brought forward under Bill 31, the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2003.

A couple of things specifically. The way people are able to request the special ballot needs to be fairly narrow and focused; in other words, either in person or in writing but not to get to, sort of, Internet or e-mail, because it's difficult to verify and record the identity of the person making the request. What you don't want and what we have seen in some cases or where the concern was expressed was that there were a number of special ballots that were controlled by one individual or a group of individuals; right? So you want to be verifying and recording who requested them. I think you want to have a situation where you can ask for identification to be provided and recorded, like a driver's licence or a passport.

The provision that an application must be made between the notice of election day and the closing of polls on election day I think is probably not giving enough time for the ballots to be sent and received. Section 35 of the original act allowed that not much more than seven days' notice be given of an election, and this is clearly insufficient time for a special ballot to be sent and received internationally or even domestically, and one of the categories of electors that the member mentioned special ballots being particularly helpful for was electors who are temporarily out of the jurisdiction.

There's an added section that says that the elector must write "in legible printing in the space provided, the name of the candidates of the elector's choice." This I think is indicating that there will be no boxes to X and not necessarily any names on the form, and I think that there should be a provision that makes the special ballot conform to the same standards as a regular ballot and include the names of all of the candidates and the space beside each candidate's name to mark. So, in other words – I have to be careful that I'm not intimidating more than I mean to here – you wouldn't want to sort of mass produce these with the names already filled in of whoever your candidate is. I think you need to conform as closely as possible to what the actual ballot is looking like.

I've looked at a number of the other sectional analyses for this. In a lot of cases there's clarification being offered, which I think is good. You know, things about the oaths and the statements. That's all fine.

In sections 9 and 14 one of them is talking about the option of mailing or delivering notice of nomination day. Section 14 talks about notice of election day to every residence at least one week before the day instead of at least two weeks. I think this could still be problematic, and I'm wondering if there are additional arguments to support the amendment of shortening the time line there because it's still mailing or delivering; it's not talking about e-mail. So I think there are problems there.

We've got clarifications in sections 11, 12, 13, 14, 16. I mean, I think most of these are fine.

A couple of good ones. Seventeen: allowing the returning officer to give a candidate a specifically prepared list of electors after the last day on which nominations may be withdrawn, and I think this is good. It's proactive in preventing people from submitting nomination papers to gain access to a list of electors and then withdrawing their nomination. Excellent. Well done.

Also, section 18: a person cannot obstruct access to an enumerator, candidate, or campaign manager who has produced identification provided by the elected authority indicating their role to each residence in a building containing more than one residence. Now, this is a huge issue for the candidate's access provincially and particularly in my riding and I think in other downtown ridings. So I think we need to be really careful about that one. The issue is not excluding people from buildings but making sure that they get access and that access is enforced by the electoral officer because with very short election periods and the chance that you can have a candidate that is barred or removed from a security building, you have to have very quick action by the electoral officer to enforce that the candidate has access to the building. Otherwise, we don't have democracy. There's unequal access to people.

Section 22. I think that if I might suggest to perhaps clarify that, the "deputy" to whom these new powers are devolved is designated as the presiding deputy because we're not talking about having two deputies in place there and new duties. Which one is supposed to get them? I think you might want to designate one as a presiding deputy, and then we know who's responsible for what.

There was a clarification around allowing minors into the ballot booth with the parents. That's fine. A clarification in section 24 allows interpreters to read the statements and any question necessary for a person who is illiterate. Fine. Allowing more leeway to individuals wishing to vote at advance polls: I think this is fine. I think it actually does encourage more people to vote, and I'm okay with that. I've already talked about the special balloting that's appearing in section 27 and on.

So those were just the sectional analyses that I wanted to do while I had the opportunity to do that sort of line-by-line discussion while we're in Committee of the Whole. I'm certainly for the most part in favour of what's being proposed here, and I'm happy to wait until third reading to get the answers back.

Thank you.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Ombudsman Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to move third reading of Bill 21, the Ombudsman Amendment Act, 2003.

However, before I take my seat, sir, I'd like to answer a couple of questions that were posed in Committee of the Whole. One question was: why is the definition of agency expanded by regulation rather than by changing the act? Regulations, Mr. Speaker, can be updated more easily than statutes can. By allowing the term "agency" to be expanded in the regulations, the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman can be updated in a timely and responsive way. If the definition of agency was left entirely in the act rather than in regulation, then it could only be amended when the Ombudsman Act was opened up for review, which, as we know, doesn't happen very often.

The other question was: how do the Ombudsman Act and the Health Information Act interplay with each other? Mr. Speaker, Bill 21 adds a provision to the act that clarifies that the Ombudsman, when conducting an investigation under the act, is not subject to the provisions of the Health Information Act. The Ombudsman will be able to access all of the information he needs to do his job without such a restriction. It should be noted, though, that in no way does this mean that the Ombudsman can interfere in the health commissioner's role and duties as legislated in the Health Information Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in third reading on Bill 21, the Ombudsman Amendment Act, 2003. The goal of this legislation is to update the Ombudsman Act to include the provincial Crown agencies, committees, boards, and professional organizations and flows directly out of repeated recommendations coming from the Ombudsman Act. I can go back. In the 2001-02, 2000-01, '99-2000, and even back as far as the '98-99 Ombudsman annual report the officer has been advocating for the change in legislation.

It does include a few new jurisdictions for which the Ombudsman would have investigative powers, and this is partly what the member referred to here, the patient concerns resolution process of the health authorities, cancer boards, and accounting agencies. We're in favour of this and think that it's a good idea overall. It's also allowing the Ombudsperson to receive special warrants for funds in fiscal years that lie ahead. Now, this was a recurring problem that was happening. If a special warrant was required and was granted to the government, it would not cover this particular office just because of the way the legislation was written. So this is correcting that. If a special warrant is sought and received, moneys would be able to be advanced to this particular office to carry on its business.

I've spoken in favour of this bill a number of times, and I'm happy to speak in favour of it in third reading. Thank you for the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise to speak in support of Bill 21 in third reading. I think it's a good bill. It does expand the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman and allows the Ombudsman to review or access third-party information. I think it's a bill that reflects the recommendations made by the outgoing Ombudsman. His experience indicated a need to expand his jurisdiction, and I'm glad that the bill, by and large, embodies those recommendations based on that experience.

So with the fact that the bill will now expand the Ombudsman's jurisdiction to include the patient concerns resolution processes of regional health authorities and the Alberta Cancer Board and the Alberta Mental Health Board and other delegated authorities which do provide services and work on behalf of the government of Alberta, the bill has built-in flexibility to include new delegated authorities, whatever have you, and certainly will serve, I guess, the interests of Albertans who may want to take complaints against their treatment at the hands of public agencies in this province.

So I support the bill, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a third time]

Bill 16
Agricultural Dispositions Statutes
Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 16, Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, for third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have another opportunity to wrap up on this bill. This is a bill that used to be very controversial when it was first introduced last year or two years ago, and subsequently the government did some consultations. They split the bill into two parts, and the part that was less controversial we see before us as Bill 16.

I would like to thank the minister for the briefing that I got from his department, which took us through the most significant issues that we had. Subsequently the additional questions we had were answered in committee. So while I have still a few reservations about this bill, we are pleased to support it at this time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak to Bill 16 in its third reading. Our caucus continues to be unhappy with this bill as a replacement for Bill 31. Bill 31 was brought into the Legislature with a great deal of fanfare in 1999. It was passed by this Legislature. Unfortunately, it was never proclaimed. Bill 16 replaces that Bill 31, which we then supported. Unfortunately, Bill 16 really is a very severely gutted Bill 31. Much of what was treated by us as the strengths of Bill 31 are absent in Bill 16.

The most important part of Bill 31 that made it such a good piece of legislation had to do with the ability of the government of that time to claim, and rightly so I think, that Bill 31 strove to strike the right balance between the interests of leaseholders, industry, recreational users, and the people of Alberta, who own the land. It's precisely that balance that has been thrown out of kilter now by Bill 16.

So the ND caucus opposition is opposed to this bill primarily because it will mean that the whole question of the leaseholders' payments for leasing the land and the money that they receive as compensation from oil and gas developments on grazing lands – the difference between the two amounts is quite considerable, $35 million, $40 million a year. Bill 16 simply does not include any relief on that issue. It doesn't address that question at all, leaves it out. So Bill 31 dies. With that dies the attempt to bring into the public treasury, into the general revenue fund $35 million to $40 million extra, and that remains the primary reason why therefore we oppose Bill 16.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a third time]

Bill 15
Forest and Prairie Protection

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for West Yellowhead I move Bill 15, Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2003, for third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a bill that is mostly good. It clarifies portions of the act that were too vague with regard to forest and prairie protections and primarily fires. It gave more power to forest officers and fire guardians, which is a good thing. But the part about this bill that we still haven't had the answers to is the part that deals with increasing the amount the government can recover from people who are responsible for fires. Yes, we believe that people who start fires should be held accountable for their actions. There's no doubt about that. But then where does the liability begin, and where does it end? If your teenagers are out at a bush party for the weekend and a fire starts, are you responsible for paying for the cost of that fire? Let's remember that fires in this province cost hundreds of millions of dollars. So how much do they recover, and who do they recover from if it's a minor who starts the fire? Those questions were never adequately answered for me. I can see in all cases that there would be some sort of a token amount like a fine – a $5,000 fine, a $500 fine, a $1,000 fine – but if we're looking at total cost recovery and we're looking at who proves what, then I think there are some questions that need to be answered.

There also wasn't a full debate about what causes liability when a fire starts. There are cases of very dry times when just using a vehicle in a dry area can set off a spark and start a fire. So those were questions that weren't answered either. Generally we're in agreement with this bill. Hopefully, we'll get these other issues cleared up over time, but at this point we will support the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a third time]

Bill 14 Securities Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: On behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I wish to move third reading of Bill 14, Securities Amendment Act, 2003.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise this evening. I would like to speak a little bit, if I may, on Bill 14, the Securities Amendment Act, 2003, make a few comments on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, as well, and answer a few questions that were raised previously.

As previously mentioned during earlier stages of this bill, the amendments in Bill 14 will provide greater protection for investors, allow Alberta business improved access to capital markets, and make the current regulatory environment more efficient. It will also lay the foundation for improved security laws as further reforms are made down the road.

Also, I'd like to comment briefly on some of the questions raised by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar during Committee of the Whole. His first question was whether this bill provides the greatest amount of protection possible to investors. I'm assuming that he means the greatest reasonable amount of protection possible, because the only way to reduce risk to zero, of course, would be to prevent people from investing in the first place or investing at all, and I'm not sure they would appreciate that much protection. Certainly, the answer to the question is, yes, Bill 14 will provide greater protection for investors.

Mr. Speaker, recent events in U.S. markets highlight the need to examine similar regulatory reforms in the adoption of new protection for investors across Canada. Without these reforms investors and issuers may bypass the Alberta markets in favour of safer and more responsive markets. Our task is to tailor regulations to the needs of Alberta while maintaining an appropriate level of investor protection. A number of the amendments in Bill 14 are measures to streamline and simplify the current regulatory framework in Alberta.

At the same time, Bill 14 will provide for improved investor protection in four significant ways. First, new improved disclosure rules will ensure that investors have more timely, reliable, and useful information when making an investment decision. Second, there will be a renewed emphasis on timely and relevant education programs to deliver investor awareness education messages to many Albertans. Funding will come from moneys received from administration penalties. Third, the addition of a new prohibition against unfair practices will address inappropriate sales techniques frequently employed by unregistered salespersons in the exempt market. Finally, extending investors' right of action for damages for a misrepresentation in an offering memorandum will include directors, promoters, and any other person who signs the offering memorandum. Mr. Speaker, this government wholeheartedly agrees with the importance the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar attaches to enhancing investor protection in Alberta. Bill 14 is deserving of the support of all members of this Assembly in this regard.

I would also note that the bill provides for the adoption of corporate governance rules similar to those considered in other jurisdictions.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar also asked if Bill 14 allows improved access to capital markets for Albertans, and he requested further explanation on how this bill would accomplish that. As the member is aware, the erosion of investor confidence in the wake of highly publicized corporate scandals in the United States has left security regulators grappling with how best to respond to the loss of investor confidence. These events have made it even more difficult for issuers to access the capital markets for financing, particularly the small cap issuers, who make up the majority of Alberta and Canadian issuers.

Mr. Speaker, these issues have been relying in large part on a new harmonized capital-raising exemption rule developed by the Alberta and B.C. securities commissions to make it easier for issuers to access the exempt market in both provinces. The four new harmonized exemptions in the rule adopted last spring have proven to be so popular with issuers that seven other jurisdictions are in the process of adopting them. Bill 14 contains a number of amendments designed to complement these new capital-raising exemptions. The passage of Bill 14 will ensure that Alberta issuers have another tool to maximize their access to capital markets across the country during this period of market uncertainty.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar also talked about the ongoing work among securities commissions across the country in an effort to harmonize Canada's regulatory system. He wondered if this bill represented the initial phase of these changes, and if so, why are we heading in that direction? He also wanted to know whether there was an interest in working more with the federal government in this regard. Mr. Speaker, I would refer the member to comments made by the Minister of Revenue in this Assembly on March 27. Those comments were in response to questions put to the minister regarding the federal and provincial committees reviewing Canadian securities regulation. As the minister stated in his response, the provinces, not the federal government, have jurisdiction over securities regulation, and therefore the provinces and territories must lead initiatives dealing with securities regulation reform. Under the leadership of the Minister of Revenue all the provinces and territories have unanimously agreed to develop a work plan by September 30 for improving the securities regulatory framework in Canada.

While this review process is under way, we must continue to respond to the needs of Alberta markets. The amendments in Bill 14 will complement a number of harmonization initiatives either recently adopted or currently under development by updating or repealing Alberta requirements that differ from the new uniform rules. For example, the adoption of harmonized capital-raising exemptions and resale rules concurrently with other jurisdictions means that two different and sometimes conflicting sets of requirements have to coexist until the amendments in Bill 14 are passed. It is too confusing for investors, issuers, and the market to allow this situation to continue until the review process has been completed.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was also curious about how many new investment vehicles might be affected by Bill 14. He wanted to know how much, if any, enhanced protection there might be for Albertans investing in income trusts and whether Bill 14 is going to encourage American investment in these trusts. Mr. Speaker, the member asked a series of questions relating to how this legislation would affect income trusts. Income trusts are an increasingly popular investment vehicle. The short answer to these questions is that Bill 14 does not affect them directly. As the member may know, there has been an ongoing discussion in corporate Canada about income trusts, whether there should be limited liability for investors as there is for investors in corporations, and corporate tax policy generally.

Several provincial governments including Alberta have been approached about this issue by trade associations and groups representing income trusts such as real estate or royalty trusts. At this point there is little I can relate to the member about this issue other than to say that these groups have been heard, and the government is assessing their presentations. I understand that the government of Ontario announced in its budget that it is introducing legislation to limit the liability for investors in these trusts, and it will review government standards for publicly traded trusts.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that that answers the questions that have been raised by the member, and with that, since it has been moved, I'll take my chair. Thank you.

Dr. Taft: Well, I appreciate the brief comments from Calgary-Currie. There were a number of questions, as the member has mentioned, raised in committee, and between his efforts and the efforts of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, they've been reasonably well addressed. We do have some concerns remaining, but we will in fact be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a third time]

Financial Sector Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill to move third reading of Bill 12, Financial Sector Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks for the opportunity to speak in third reading to Bill 12, the financial sector amendment act, 2003. Now, we did note a number of concerns at committee, but overall we're supportive of this act in that it's trying to update the legislation and keep it current. It's been a complaint of mine, anyway, that we're not reviewing enough of the legislation. It becomes very archaic and less useful, so it does need some sort of constant updating program, and that's what's being contemplated here. Not all of the concerns that we raised were addressed, but at this point I'm certainly willing to support this attempt to update the legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to briefly comment on Bill 12.

An Hon. Member: Support it.

Dr. Pannu: And support it. Yes, that's true.

The bill is essentially of a housekeeping nature. It does amend several existing pieces of legislation and does allow credit unions and ATB to be able to engage in providing services and engage in business activities that were previously available only to federally chartered banks. I think that's fine. We're supportive of those changes. Some of these changes were requested by credit unions themselves and by ATB. Thus there's no serious objection that we see coming from any of the interested parties to this bill, so we are happy to support it.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a third time]

Health Information Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 10.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This piece of legislation provides a genuine dilemma for me as the critic. Unquestionably there are good components to this bill, one that we actually advocated in the fall be included in miscellaneous statutes. It instead is in this bill.

A completely different component of the bill addresses the issue of consent for having patient information recorded and shared electronically. I'm torn – I'm truly torn – on the issue, but ultimately I am going to stand in favour of an active safeguard for people's privacy, and that's a safeguard that this bill will be removing. So I'm going to oppose the bill, recognizing that there are undoubtedly some very good components to it. It's truly a dilemma for me.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that it's late, past 11:30 p.m., and I just want to briefly applaud the dedication of all members for being here so late.

I also want to salute the dedication of my staff who were here earlier tonight and in particular Darlene Andruchuk, my director of financial services, who has worked for the government of Alberta for over 30 years. In spite of the fact that it is her 36th wedding anniversary – and I know that she would much rather have been elsewhere – she did come here tonight. I think all members by their cheering, which I hear, salute her in that regard, so thank you.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 11:32 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 7, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/05/07

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Though we as legislators of this great province and its people are taken from among the population and selected by You to be architects of our history, give us wisdom and understanding to do Your will in all that we do. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly His Excellency Eric Hayes, ambassador for the European Commission in Canada. Traveling with His Excellency is Mr. Frank Deeg, principal adviser at the EU delegation office in Ottawa.

Trade with the European Union plays a vital role in Alberta's economy. The EU is Alberta's third largest trading partner after the United States and Japan. The relationship extends beyond trade as many Albertans trace their ancestry back to one of the 25 countries that will soon make up the new, larger European Union.

I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly, and I wish our guests a very successful trip to Alberta and continued good work on behalf of all concerned.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 50 very special visitors from the home of the Sutters, the community of Viking. They are seated in the members' gallery, and they are accompanied by teachers/group leaders Mrs. Muriel Hill, Mrs. Norma Pon, Mrs. Ev Merta, by parent helpers Mrs. Penny Hammer, Mr. Jim Wood, Mrs. Lina Wood, and Mr. Arnold Hanson. I would ask all to rise and receive the traditional warm wishes of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly another special visitor from the home of the Easter egg community of Vegreville, a very dedicated family man and a very, very busy community volunteer, a lawyer by profession. I would ask Mr. Peter Dobbie to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to stand and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 12 special guests from Providence Christian School in the county of Lethbridge, which is in the southwest corner of our riding of Little Bow. With the 10 students from Providence Christian today are their teacher, Mr. Chris Heikoop, and Mrs. Sjaane Heikoop. I'd ask that they please rise. Have a safe journey home, and I hope you enjoy your stay here.

Mr. Maskell: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the Alberta Health Facilities Review Committee. The mission of this hardworking committee is to assist in maintaining quality care, treatment, and standards of accommodation in health care facilities throughout Alberta. The committee, chaired by yours truly and vice-chaired by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, consists of 10 private citizens who possess varied backgrounds, expertise, and work experience. They're seated in the members' gallery: Hildegard Campsall, Peace River; Nada Chelvam, Edmonton; Don Clarke, Edmonton; Barry Costello, Calgary; Barbara Hay, Lacombe; William Malcolm, Lethbridge; Dorothy Patry, Medicine Hat; Ada Rawlins, Chestermere. Two members unfortunately weren't able to be here today: Glenna Bell, St. Albert; Gary Severtson, Innisfail. They're accompanied by three staff members: Pauline Michaud, executive director; Irene Sinclair, administrative assistant; Alissa Messner, writer/editor. Would you please rise and accept the warm traditional welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly seven guests. They are seated in the public gallery. They are from Edith Rogers junior high school. Four students – Aron Badre, Trace Letendre, Shelby Sigouin, and Jesse Richardson – are accompanied by two of their hardworking teachers, Holly Isert and Ryan Nouta. The mother of Aron Badre, Jette Badre, is also with them. I'd now ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a very hardworking constituent. She has committed herself to doing a fine job of leading the educational system in our area and making an excellent system even better. I'd ask Lori Briggs Benner, the chairperson of Parkland school division, to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, it's a real pleasure for me today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of the House Marc Slingerland. Marc is a student at the University of Lethbridge. He's in Edmonton this week attending a math/biology seminar. I'd like to ask Marc to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the office assistant for the summer in my constituency office of Edmonton-Riverview, Karen Diepeveen. Karen is a resident of Edmonton-Riverview. She's just completed her third year at Dalhousie University, honouring in political science with an emphasis in Canadian studies. Now, Karen may be familiar to some of you here because she worked as a page in the Legislative Assembly in 1999. She was recently elected as academic vice-president of Dalhousie Political Science Society. So I welcome Karen and ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

Electricity Deregulation

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier admitted that electricity deregulation in Alberta, and I quote: has not gone well. End quote. That is the understatement of the year. Three years of industry chaos, skyrocketing power bills, and a transmission crisis demonstrate that electricity deregulation has been a complete and total failure in providing low-cost power to Albertans. My question to the Minister of Energy: will the minister unplug deregulation given that the uncertainty in the marketplace is sending investors running?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the investors are not running, and if they were, it would only be from a distortion that would be led through the opposition. In fact, what the member has omitted are also comments from the Premier at the same time that said: we are not going back. Deregulation is here in Alberta to stay, appropriately so. No one said that it was going to be a bed of roses; no one said that it was going to be an easy journey. We are now most of the way through that journey.

We have the three points. We've completed the export policy principles that allow first of all for Albertans to be served first; secondly, for an appropriate outlet; thirdly, that we have a price-setting mechanism that does not allow foreign markets to establish our price. Next we have a market policy that puts on a level playing field EPCOR, Enmax, all the players in front of the EUB. That market policy is very important. It also establishes the Alberta independent system operator. Lastly, Mr. Speaker, we have a transmission policy that is the same as it was before deregulation. Deregulation never did affect transmission policy. It is still a regulated natural monopoly and will remain so.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Minister of Energy: will the minister unplug deregulation given that yesterday the Premier described deregulation as, and I quote: a proverbial pain in the butt.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I've heard the Premier describe many things as a proverbial pain in the butt.

Deregulation has not been easy. Just as in 1993, '94, and '95 when it was found out that people wouldn't build new generation, when it was going to take 14 years to put new power into this marketplace, when it was found out that it took 14 years to get Genesee from approval to the first switch – Mr. Speaker, without deregulation there would have been no healthy wind power industry in this province. We would not be using natural gas cogeneration the way we are today. The government would not have been able to sign the largest green power contract in the history of North America without deregulation.

Dr. Nicol: I hope Albertans weren't believing that, Mr. Minister.

To the Minister of Energy: will the minister unplug deregulation given that more add-ons such as your new transmission charges will keep power bills higher than they should be?

Mr. Smith: Well, I want to thank the member for that question, Mr. Speaker, because these new transmission charges are not new transmission charges. Transmission has always been a part of a regulated network. What happens is that when transmission is needed, they apply to the EUB. The private company spends the money, and they own the lines. Then they come to the EUB and they ask for depreciation, the cost of running that transmission, operation and maintenance, and a return on capital. In fact, this has been going on since transmission lines were first built. It will continue like that.

What we have said with real and true clarity with respect to transmission is that this will allow access of low-cost generation to come onstream and serve Albertans with lower priced electricity.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope Albertans didn't believe that either.

Electricity Transmission Development Policy

Dr. Nicol: A regulatory regime has to be apolitical, and the Minister of Energy's policy change with regard to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board's ruling on transmission politicizes the regulatory process. This is a fundamental violation of how we should govern and regulate industry. To the Minister of Energy: will the minister withdraw his overruling of the AEUB transmission decision?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope Albertans didn't believe that preamble.

What happened is that the EUB had the transmission administrator, which is a group hired by the Alberta government, a for-profit group, to deliver transmission operations and policy in Alberta. Secondly, Mr. Speaker, they then realized that there was a problem getting up transmission or power through an already busy corridor. Remember that while this deregulation was going on, Alberta continued to grow, Alberta continued to have new jobs, Alberta continued to have an increase in disposable income, Alberta continued to thrive, so the problem continued to exist. What we needed to do was change through Bill 3, that members were all present for in discussion here in March, that establishes an independent system operator – that system operator said that with a transmission policy that offers open access for generation, there's no need for congestion management. If there's no need for congestion management, there's no need for the EUB decision.

Dr. Nicol: Will the Minister of Energy admit that his actions create uncertainty to the point of creating chaos in the province of Alberta in terms of the electricity industry?

Mr. Smith: Well, I'm actually pleased to say the absolute opposite, Mr. Speaker. In fact, this does create certainty because now we have a three-part program. We have an export policy that delivers power outside of the province if it's not being used by Albertans. Secondly, we have a market policy that puts everything in front of the EUB, out-front public hearings, an open inquiry every time somebody goes to the EUB. Anybody can go. These members are more than welcome to go. Lastly, we have a transmission policy, a transmission policy that allows our unique Alberta resources, low-cost coal and low-cost natural gas, for cogeneration. We can add thousands of megawatts onto this grid, deliver cheaper electricity, and not increase anything in the level of pollution. We can have good, cheap-priced power in a good, thriving industrial market, and consumers, residences who use about 11 percent of all power generated, will benefit from this ample generation.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, cogen could have come on if they had done it right under the other one.

Finally, will the minister submit his resignation so that someone who will do the right thing can take his place in dealing with putting in place a usable electricity system in Alberta?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I've always had the privilege of doing is not only serving Albertans through being a member of Executive Council but serving Albertans through being an elected Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Calgary Board of Education

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the Calgary public board of education paid down its debt, it balanced its budget each year, it closed down schools, and now the government is rewarding the board by giving them $32 million less than they need and the minister is attacking their budget planning. To the Minister of Learning: why does the minister claim that reduced enrollment is to blame for 225 teacher layoffs when enrollment only impacts, at the most, 25 teachers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Calgary public yesterday brought out their preliminary budget. It's the first blush at the budget that the school board will have. Included in that is the potential for 197 fewer teachers in the system. It is hoped that the majority of this would be through attrition. What the hon. member has not said is that the amount of dollars for Calgary public has increased by $17 million this year and that indeed they are projecting anywhere from 500 to 700 fewer students. Over the past three years we've seen a decrease of very close to 2,000 students within their school system, yet their amount of funds has gone up very close to 20 percent.

Mr. Speaker, we will be working with the Calgary board to take a look at some of the line-by-line items. In all fairness, we have only seen the very macro budgetary items, and we'll be working with them very closely.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Minister of Learning: why does the minister attack the board for budgeting an extra $19 million for teachers' salaries when $5 million alone is due to teachers moving up the salary grid and the rest is a direct result of last year's arbitrated settlement?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I did not attack the board. Quite frankly, what I said was that I question, when we're laying off 400 positions, why their salaries have gone up $19 million. That quite simply is a question, and that's what we're looking at.

Dr. Nicol: Is the minister planning to do anything to prevent other school boards from delivering bad-news budgets, or is he happily just sleepwalking into another crisis like he did last year?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, that doesn't deserve an answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Energy minister's inability to separate fantasy from fact has made him the Baghdad Bob of energy deregulation. Even the Premier has stopped believing the creative fiction of the Energy minister. The state of California has embarked on a no-holds-barred review of all aspects of deregulation resulting, to no one's surprise, in the cancellation of deregulation itself. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Instead of the usual whitewash, will the minister heed the Premier's call and launch a no-holds-barred, fully independent commission on the failure of the government's power deregulation scheme?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think there was a movie once where it was asked: what about Bob?

Mr. Speaker, deregulation is a serious topic. It's been a topic that's been around Alberta for a great, great length of time. It has delivered 3,000 megawatts' worth of new generation. It has delivered in some parts of Alberta lower prices than they had under regulation and in some parts higher prices. It has also delivered new investment and alternate ways of powering up Alberta: green power, wind power, cogeneration. It recognizes the unique fabric of Alberta. This is a competitive, open market process. It is subject to inquiry every day. Any independent inquiry, any suggestion from anybody, any suggestion even from the opposition is listened to. I mean, why not? This is an open process.

Mr. Mason: Then, Mr. Speaker, why is the minister refusing to listen to groups like the Rural Utilities Association, who are telling the government that deregulation has failed, is driving up costs, and that it's time to reverse course?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll be meeting with the rural electrical associations on the 14th. I've met with the rural gas co-ops. We have worked very hard and the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky and the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs have worked for two years on issues with respect to rural electrification. These REAs use 54 megawatts in an 8,000-megawatt grid, but they still do it better than anybody else and should be recognized for that.

As I say, this process is ongoing. There are lots of ways to have new debate, new discussion, and it's being done in an open, transparent fashion as we put forward the three pillars of electrical policy in Alberta: an export policy, a market policy, and now a transmission policy.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, what does the minister have to say to the REAs, rural municipalities, and gas co-ops who told the standing policy committee yesterday that there are 24 new bureaucracies which have been created to try to make deregulation work and are in fact driving electricity prices even higher?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act, took the number of regulations from 38 to 22. That reduction is consistent with this government's priority of reducing regulations. We have also consulted throughout this process. There has been the business advisory group. They have been an important part of the group. The EUB has had an electrical advisory group. This government has had an electrical advisory group. There has been substantial, meaningful monthly consultation. There's active consultation on the web site, active consultation on the Power Pool. In fact, at the end of this year the price of electricity, if it remains the same in the Aquila network, with the same regulated rate option, will drop 50 percent when the rate riders terminate for the purchase of 2000 and 2001 electricity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Early Learning Programs

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new Medicine Wheel Early Learning Centre in Calgary, which I visited Friday, prepares native and Métis children aged three and a half to six for entry to elementary school. Learning centres ensure that children, especially those at risk, are ready for grade 1 and that they will be reading by the end of grade 3. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. Would the minister tell us if this type of program, early learning centres, will be expanded in Alberta for all at-risk children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Medicine Wheel Early Learning Centre is a program that is funded by Health Canada and Children's Services. It is in the experimental phase now, but the actual results are looking extremely promising. We will be looking at whether or not these can be extrapolated into other areas of the province, but the initial understanding is that it is very good.

Thank you.

Mr. Maskell: Mr. Speaker, my supplemental question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Would the minister tell the House how this initiative ensures that our aboriginal youth get the right start in life?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, successful early learning is critical for any child and more specifically aboriginal children to find their own place in aboriginal society and society generally. This government is committed to promoting and supporting lifelong learning and opportunities for aboriginal people. Recognition of an aboriginal child's culture is important to the understanding of their personal identity, their roots, and of course the cultural community. Such recognition in respect of a child's culture can actually only lead to an increase of their self-esteem and dignity, and that's why this specific program was really important, because it's unique. It actually teaches the language of Michif, which is Métis and a language that has been sort of outdated. So this is very important, because the kids learn their own language, and it's only through language that we learn our culture.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Eight billion dollars squandered on reckless electricity deregulation while the Calgary board of education is forced to cut programs, teachers, and increase class sizes: it just doesn't make any sense. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Will the minister explain to parents in Calgary why they must lose their early literacy teachers?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, what the Calgary board of education is looking at is decreasing the number of teachers in their particular jurisdiction through attrition. Whether or not they will be able to do that is very difficult to say at this time. They have put forward a preliminary budget, and indeed in their preliminary budget they have stated that there is a shortfall of $32 million. This is on top of the $17 million that we have put into the system. This is on top of a decrease of 500 to 700 students that are presently within the system. We will be working with them to ensure, as the hon. member has asked, that programs such as early literacy, which are very good programs, very essential programs, are not affected by what they do. I know that the chairman of the Calgary board of education as well as the total board is one hundred percent committed to education, and I'm sure that they will be able to find a way to deal with it.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will the minister explain to those students in one Calgary high school how losing 15 of their teachers will improve their learning? Fifteen of them.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, again, it's very hard for me to say specifically whether there are 15 teachers or whatever from whichever high school he is talking about. Again, it is up to the Calgary board of education to determine what will happen within their school jurisdiction, and that's what I respect.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: will the minister explain to continuing education students at Chinook College why their programs are under threat?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, that's a very interesting question because the Chinook College does not have a mandate under the Colleges Act to run courses for adults. Under the School Act it is not permitted, so we are looking at this exact thing. As a matter of fact, there will be some legislation tabled a little later on this week that will deal with the usage of the term "college," for example. On the difference between Chinook College and Metro Community College in Edmonton, which are both doing a similar thing, my understanding, which again is very preliminary, is that Chinook College is actually running at a profit of about $500,000 per year. So we will have to take a look at this very carefully and see exactly what is happening there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Highway Maintenance

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I received a complaint and a few suggestions from a constituent of mine about his experience on the highway after the snowstorm of the weekend before last. Given that road maintenance is directly related to the safety of Albertans and also to an economic flow of goods and services, my question today is to the hon. Minister of Transportation. Can the minister explain how he ensures that the road maintenance program, particularly the snow clearing on highways, is administered efficiently and effectively?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The highway maintenance in the province is administered through maintenance contracts. There are nine specific areas. Essentially, what happens is there's an agreement between the contractor and Alberta Transportation to carry out various maintenance duties, including snow removal, through the contracts. These contracts are monitored by Alberta Transportation personnel. As well, part of the responsibility of the contractor is to monitor not only weather but the road conditions with their own personnel, and then there's a clause in the contract that within the hour they're to have their snowplow trucks out on the highway as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. In the case of very bad weather conditions what measures does the minister have to restore the transportation flow?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a very good question with respect to a test that we've been put under in this province with this previous week's snowstorm and especially the stubborn system that refuses to move. We rely on a number of individuals to provide information as to when the proper time is to close a highway. We consult with the RCMP, our maintenance contractors, and also our own staff monitor the situation, and it's up to us to make the call.

In respect to the situation that we faced, we're going to be consulting with all of the individuals involved to see if we perhaps waited too long to close certain sections of the road. I know that what happened in the first instance is that there were too many vehicles on the road that impeded the movement of all of the maintenance equipment and, as a result, backed up a fair amount of traffic from one community to another. So we're going to again reassess the situation. We're going to learn from it.

In terms of the equipment out on the road and the number of pieces of equipment compared to what we had prior to taking over all of the secondaries, the amount of equipment is greater in number, but it's a matter of ensuring that that equipment is at the right place at the right time and also finding a good, quick, easy policy as to when to shut a highway down appropriately for safety reasons.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, random acts of political tinkering make for a fragile investment environment in Alberta's deregulated electricity market. The proposed Alberta transmission development policy nullifies the regulatory process stakeholders have been engaged in over the past four years and appears to be a resounding vote of nonconfidence in the AEUB. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. What are the total transmission tariffs on an annual basis that will now be recovered from customers across Alberta?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I don't see any reason why it would be any different than what it was before, but if he wants an exact dollar number, we're more than pleased to take that question under advisement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that an additional $266 million will be added annually to the bills of customers, how much more will be added to their bills to pay for any new transmission infrastructure?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the type of speculation that occurs that makes it impossible for this issue to be easily and clearly understood by the public. In fact, if a transmission line is to be built, then that transmission company goes to the EUB and they apply for the right to build a transmission line. This is determined by the new Alberta independent electrical system operator. The EUB then rules on it, and then the company, ATCO, AltaLink, would start to build the transmission line.

Once the line is constructed and interconnected with the grid, then an application is made to the EUB to include the costs in the rate base. At that time, the EUB assesses the cost and approves the reasonable costs into the rate base. Then the ISO, independent system operator, adjusts the tariff to all its direct serve customers, including distribution companies. Distribution companies adjust their tariffs to end customers. Customers, consumers, do not start paying until the line is constructed and included in the rate base. So if the Energy and Utilities Board gives approval to build a 500-kilovolt transmission line from Edmonton to Calgary and the line is not completed until 2008, customers do not begin to pay for it until the year 2008.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will the Department of Energy be reimbursing all those who spent millions of dollars of their money in research and time as intervenors before the EUB now that you have overruled the decision from last November regarding the transmission policy in Alberta?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the member has not listened to the response that I gave in Hansard a week ago Thursday. He has not listened to the questions that I answered yesterday. He did not listen to the discussion of the estimates that I gave for some two hours plus yesterday. This government has not overruled an EUB decision. This government has reflected a change in transmission policy that makes it exceedingly clear and exceedingly easy for consumers, generators, and all Albertans to understand that we want to do three things. One, we want to have an export policy that allows new generation. Once it's used in Alberta and there's a surplus, there's an exit portal. Secondly, a market policy that ensures fairness and transparency in electricity marketing and consumption in this province. Lastly, a transmission policy that allows the lowest overall cost generation, which is four to five times more expensive than transmission, to be able to come into service and to service Albertans at a low-cost best electricity service – no blackouts, ample supplies of power – in this marketplace.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Gun Registration Prosecutions

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Manitoba recently confirmed its prosecution policy directing Crown attorneys not to prosecute any firearm registration offences issued under either the Firearms Act or the Criminal Code. Manitoba's Attorney General, Gord Mackintosh, has stated, "It is not in the public interest to prosecute offences that are trivial in nature and do not enhance public safety." My question is to the Attorney General. How closely does this reflect the Alberta government's position?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that the Alberta government's position is very close to that taken by Manitoba in April. Alberta has very strongly opposed gun registration laws from the federal government right through the piece, including leading the charge and taking it to the Supreme Court of Canada. We do not believe that the law is effective. We believe that there are better uses for the money, and if we want to reduce the use of guns in the commission of offences, we could use the resources that the federal government is wasting on the gun registry far better with enforcement through the police on true crimes and by taking things through a court system that would be enhanced and made more effective with the use of more resources.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, my first supplementary to the same minister. Manitoba has also clearly stated that the federal government is responsible for the prosecution of these offences, and if the federal government declines to prosecute, Manitoba will stay these charges on the basis that prosecution is contrary to the public interest. Is that the position of the Alberta government?

Mr. Hancock: Well, our position is very close to that, Mr. Speaker. We, in fact, wrote to police agencies across the province in January indicating to them that if they were to engage in enforcement of the gun registration laws, we would prefer that where possible they lay any charges under the federal Firearms Act rather than under the Criminal Code. We further expect that the federal prosecutors, the federal government will handle any prosecutions relating to their federal Firearms Act, and we would expect that they would handle any prosecutions with respect strictly to registration offences under the Criminal Code. We have, however, indicated that where a charge was laid in conjunction with other criminal offences, we would be prepared to prosecute in that circumstance.

Mr. Snelgrove: My second supplementary, to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, Mr. Speaker. "The primary responsibility of Manitoba Conservation is the management of the province's natural resources, not to waste time and energy enforcing ineffective federal laws," said Manitoba Conservation minister Steve Ashton. "Manitoba Conservation officers will not administer . . ."

The Speaker: Hon. member, are you making a statement, or do you have a question?

Mr. Snelgrove: Oh, I have a question. Sorry. "Manitoba Conservation officers will not administer or enforce long gun registration laws. Officers checking firearm users in the field . . ."

The Speaker: Thank you very much. Thank you very much.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, reducing wait lists for MRIs is not simply a matter of spending more; it's also a matter of managing demand. Earlier this week the Minister of Health and Wellness indicated that "we have to be asking whether or not [MRIs are] being used properly, and that is something that we plan on investigating." The minister said that two committees could be involved in this process: the expert panel and the utilization and outcomes commission. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell us if clinical experts on MRIs are advising these two committees, and if so, who are these experts?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, work has not yet been commenced by either of these committees on this important subject. We've had a number of other issues to deal with, but it would be my intention at some point to retain the advice of experts in the area of what would be an appropriate scan rate for important diagnostic tools. For example, we do have a diagnostic imaging committee that is providing us with some advice. There are, of course, radiologists on that committee. They would also accept advice from other health care professionals.

I should say, Mr. Speaker, that if an individual needs an MRI on an urgent basis, that's not an issue in this province. They get it immediately, but I think that there are appropriate questions to be asked for less serious requirements for MRIs and whether or not such an MRI in fact provides any diagnostic information that is important in the treatment of an individual's condition.

Dr. Taft: The minister has touched a key point here. Given that radiologists who are investors in private MRI clinics are heavily marketing their MRIs to physicians and patients, can the minister tell us who is responsible for ensuring that this marketing does not needlessly drive up demand for MRIs?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think it's entirely appropriate that individuals who are experts in matters such as radiology should be on the committee. I think that these individuals are professionals. I think that they have the best interests of patients at heart. I think that it is entirely possible to look at the information which is available objectively, and if the instructions given to them are to do so on the basis of sound information for what actually helps, they can do so without any reference to their own personal interest.

Dr. Taft: The minister is going to lose control on this one.

Will the minister ensure that those individuals who are responsible for ensuring that MRIs are utilized appropriately are not also involved in private, for-profit diagnostic companies? Conflict of interest is not acceptable.

Mr. Mar: I can say, Mr. Speaker, that whoever has been selected for any of our committees are always people of the very finest character.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Calgary board of education outlined just how devastating the sorry Tory budget will be for a hundred thousand students, nor is the CBE alone. In the next few weeks school board after school board across the province will outline the same grim scenario. To the Minister of Learning. I ask the minister what CBE chair Gordon Dirks asked yesterday, namely:

How can it be that the Provincial Government which dramatically cut education funding ten years ago, and is now in the best fiscal position in decades, would so under-fund the CBE that it will again have to implement massive cuts?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago, in 1994 I believe it was, the budget for education dropped approximately 4.3 percent. If you remember the time frame, all the other budgets in this government dropped anywhere from 10 to 20 percent, some even a little bit higher. Education was spared at 4.3 percent. Since that time in 1995 we have seen a 57 percent increase in the amount of dollars that have gone into education. We have seen a corresponding increase of about 6 to 7 percent in actual enrollment. Even when you add in inflation and cost of living, we're still about 19 percent above what those two figures show. Again, when it comes to the Calgary board of education, they are receiving $17 million more than they did last year for roughly 500 to 700 fewer students.

Mr. Speaker, when you take a look at what is happening across Canada, we're probably the only jurisdiction in Canada that is putting that much money into their education system. We've put in large amounts over the last four years and will continue to value education by putting amounts of money in. But it is not an endless purse where you simply write a cheque and the amount of money comes through.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another question from Mr. Dirks to the minister: how can the provincial government state, on the one hand, that excellence in learning continues to be a top priority and, on the other, make decisions that result in a dramatic loss of teaching and support staff in CBE schools?

Dr. Oberg: Again, Mr. Speaker, the budget at the CBE is preliminary. I'll say it for the fourth or fifth time today: they received $17 million more for 500 to 700 fewer students. It's a significant amount of dollars. We're going to work with the CBE and find out exactly where those dollars are going and what they're choosing to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental to the minister. A question from Mr. Dirks again from yesterday: why would the provincial government make budget decisions that have a massive negative impact on the CBE before it receives the Commission on Learning report?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the funny thing about this Legislature is that you have to table a budget. In this budget we saw the second highest increase in dollar amounts of any department in this government. We increased by approximately 4.9 percent. My total budget was increased by that amount, which is quite dramatic. It's quite a large amount of money. The K to 12 system alone went up by some 171 million dollars.

Just to remind the hon. member, those dollars are not made in a back room; those dollars come from taxpayers. We have to be good stewards of taxpayers' dollars, and we have to be prudent when it comes to giving out taxpayers' dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Electricity Rate Riders

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents continue to express concerns about the charges appearing on their electricity bills, in particular rate rider charges. It is my understanding that rate riders were not collected in 2000 and 2001 due to a price collection limit put in place by the government, but they have since been approved by the EUB to recover the shortfall in deferred electricity account balances. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. How can customers avoid having deferral charges on their bills, and how long can customers expect to see rate rider charges on their bills?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's an extremely good question. Rate riders are a throwback from the old regulated system. After the passage of Bill 3, when people go to EPCOR, Enmax, or Direct Energy, they can buy contract electricity. When they make those contract purchases in the competitive market model, they will not be subject to rate riders. So in the future the majority of rate riders in the unregulated market system will be gone forever.

With respect to the specific member's area, I would advise the member that under the regulated system in the year 2000 for residences and for farms there was about a six and a half or seven-tenths of a cent rate rider added to the bill for electricity used in the year 2000 and not paid for. In 2001, Mr. Speaker, the rate in the member's area was 2.5 cents for residential and 2.48 cents for farms. These represent about half of the charge of electricity on your bill today, because his regulated rate is about 6.12 cents.

So these rate riders are on the bills until the end of 2003, December of 2003, five or six months from now, at which time there will be the end of rate riders on the EPCOR/Aquila bills as we know them today.

Mr. Jacobs: To the same minister: how are the amounts of these rate riders determined?

Mr. Smith: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, it's a throwback to the regulated system that we have left. There is a regulated rate that Aquila and EPCOR applied to the EUB for. That was approved. That regulated rate, then, in excess electricity priced above that rate is collected a year after. So if you have a contract, if you have a long-range agreement, you will not be subject to a rate rider. The rate riders are then calculated through the EUB. With Bill 3 passing, any rate riders will go through the EUB, whether it be Cardston-Taber-Warner, Calgary, or Edmonton.

Mr. Jacobs: My final question to the same minister: what is being done to reduce these rate rider charges?

Mr. Smith: Again, an extremely important question, Mr. Speaker. In the future once consumers decide to purchase electricity on a contract basis, on a long-term basis, or however they feel they want to purchase it, they can do so and then avoid any rate riders. This is the great option that a deregulated market gives customers. It gives them their own price discovery. They can in fact negotiate agreements where they can combine gas and electricity. They can combine perhaps furnace cleaning services with it. So they can budget, and they can determine what's affordable for them and how they want to pay for it.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund Investments

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, on March 19, 2003, the United States Federal District Court ruled that a lawsuit brought forward on behalf of the Sudanese against Talisman Energy will stand. As a result of this decision, Talisman Energy may be responsible for hundreds of millions of dollars in damage. As of March 31, 2002, the heritage fund held over 245,000 shares in Talisman Energy Inc. that were valued at $16 million. My questions are to the Minister of Revenue. Given that this lawsuit against Talisman Energy may result in the value of our fund declining, why does the heritage fund still have Talisman shares?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to our investments, we have consistently maintained as a policy of investing that we do invest in the broad markets. The indices, for example, the TSX: Talisman would be one of the major companies listed on that, and as such we would hold shares of Talisman. Talisman continues to meet all the regulatory requirements. They are a reputable company. Actually, we have done quite well with respect to the Talisman investment.

Mr. Bonner: Some would say that this is blood money, Mr. Speaker.

Why won't this minister protect Alberta's heritage fund given that Talisman Energy could stand to lose hundreds of millions of dollars over this lawsuit?

The Speaker: That's highly speculative, and I don't know how anybody can respond to a question on the future of the market, so please proceed with your third.

Mr. Bonner: It would be risk management, Mr. Speaker.

My final question to the minister: what checks does this minister have in place to ensure that the heritage fund is not involved in risky investments like the one with Talisman Energy given that the heritage fund has billions of dollars invested in thousands of companies?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to first mention that all of the preamble was based on a lot of assumption, a lot of speculation, a lot of ifs, whereas the facts have all demonstrated over time that this company has continued to meet all the requirements.

Remarks such as "blood money" I find quite slanderous really. As I've said many times before, it's easy to take a company and make slanderous accusations, innuendos, and not have any evidence to actually bring forward. If they have some evidence, please bring it forward through the appropriate securities regulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

American Sign Language Program

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans currently suffer from hearing impairment, and Grant MacEwan College offers the only program on the prairies where individuals can be trained to perform deaf interpretation. My questions are for the Minister of Learning. Has a decision been made regarding the future of the deaf interpretation program at Grant MacEwan College?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is true that Grant MacEwan has recently requested that the sign language program be canceled within their institution. I want to assure the students that are in the existing program that their courses will be allowed to finish. They have looked and seen that the amount of enrollment has gone down quite significantly. Another issue has been that the number of students from outside the province of Alberta has increased in proportion. We are currently taking a look at exactly whether or not this program will continue, but Grant MacEwan has done a very good assessment of the program and have concluded that they do want to get out of this program.

Mr. Rathgeber: To the same minister: as there are no other available programs in the prairie provinces, where does the minister expect deaf interpreters to be trained?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are programs available at the University of Alberta, at Medicine Hat College, as well as at Grant MacEwan in part-time courses, in evening courses, and indeed including some noncredit courses. As with any program the enrollment has to be there and particularly with this program. So we are looking at other alternatives. We realize that it's something that is extremely serious, but there does have to be the interest from students to take this program in order for it to continue. We cannot just have a program with very few people in it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise what consultation, if any, has been made with the deaf community regarding the decision to cancel this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I cannot advise directly, but I will say that I will talk to Grant MacEwan specifically on this project. Grant MacEwan is the one who has done the consultations. They forecast that in the future the enrollment is going to decrease even more. I believe that Grant MacEwan has consulted the deaf community, but I will certainly take it upon myself to find out exactly who in that community they have consulted with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Municipal Policing Review Report

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few weeks in Edmonton we had several gang-related murders, and unfortunately the last one took place in front of children playing. I'm not surprised that it happens, as a majority of Alberta's parolees and almost 50 percent of Alberta's high-risk offenders are released in Edmonton. My questions are to the Solicitor General: when do you expect to implement the recommendations of a recently published policing review report, which addresses many of the issues relevant to improving municipal police operations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the hon. member's questions. In the member's preamble he talks about the high number of parolees that we are seeing in our communities, and the member is absolutely right. Edmonton seems to attract these high numbers of parolees because of the federal institutions that we have in our area. I'd like to let the member know that we recently have done an initiative with Edmonton police where we are providing them with a full-time probation officer from our department working with the department's high-risk program that they have established. We have also been very diligent on pushing the federal government to provide us with two full-time parole officers.

Mr. Speaker, the member alludes to recommendations from the policing report, and I think the one he's referring to is one that relates to Alberta communities wanting equitable funding. Yes, I support that concept outlined in that recommendation, but equitable policing does not mean equal. Each community has a very different policing need. Yesterday I told the hon. member from across the way that policing is a very complicated and complex matter, and there's no consensus about equitable funding that can be achieved, with the issue of balancing local autonomy with who pays and addressing the policing needs of that particular community.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned yesterday, I have met with the AUMA and the AAMD and C, and I have asked them to work with my department and consult with each other and come back to me with recommendations on how we can achieve this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental for the same minister: will any of the $2.4 million that are now dedicated from her department for Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, also known as CISA, find its way to local police departments for the purposes of eradicating organized crime?

Mrs. Forsyth: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. We've done that in the past, and we'll continue to do that in the future. More important is that all of the $2.4 million that we provide to CISA is used to combat organized crime, and organized crime has no boundaries. CISA gathers, analyzes, and shares criminal intelligence among the police services, and it helps fight organized crime both locally and across the province by funding joint-force operations in organized crime. They have had a number of successful joint-force operations against organized crime in Alberta, and they are now before the courts. CISA also provides equipment and technology to help police services conduct joint-force operations.

Mr. Lukaszuk: My last supplemental, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Will the Solicitor General implement any measures aimed at eliminating duplication of services and lack of collaboration between local municipal police services?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, yes, we will. One of the things that we're doing now is through CISA, which we talked about previously. We want to eliminate silos and the duplication of services across this province by co-ordinating the efforts of police services across this fine province of ours. Another aspect of duplication of services is in the area of training. I'm looking at recommendations to establish a centre of excellence in police training. We're also in the final ends of developing common police standards in this province. I think it's important to get the police partners talking about opportunities for co-ordination and sharing the successes that they've had in operations, sharing them across this province with other police departments.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce today community members from communities that were involved in a notification program development northeast of Edmonton. With us in the gallery today are Ken Hodgins, mayor of the city of Fort Saskatchewan; Brian Parker, representing Strathcona fire department; Helmut Hinteregger, Sturgeon county; Roy Bryks, Lamont county; Bill Nimmo, town of Gibbons; Fred Pearchuk, town of Lamont; Calvin Eyben, chair of the Northeast Region Community Awareness Emergency Response; and Dave Onuczko, the executive director of the Northeast Capital Industrial Association. They're in the members' gallery. If they would rise, please, and be recognized by the Assembly.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

The Computer Shop

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize yet another success story in Calgary-Currie. The Computer Shop, located in the Marda Loop, is the oldest retail computer store in the world. It was first opened back in 1976 when they'd barely invented pocket calculators by two rebels named Austin Hook and Garry Haggins, who wanted to bring microcomputer use to the masses, thus wresting control away from the technological priesthood of those days.

These days the Computer Shop mostly operates in cyberspace, and thousands view Austin and now his dot-com gaming guru son Andy Hook as virtual computer gods. This is because Austin is at the very forefront of one of the new millennium's most intriguing intellectual battles, which is pitting the energies of thousands of worldwide independent programmers against the new dominant corporate monopolies of our times. Austin is one of the leaders of the Calgary-based worldwide project known as the OpenBSD software movement, which has developed the world's most impregnable operating system and is being used by 30,000 institutions worldwide, including the U.S. military. Microsoft, look out. History is happening every day in Calgary-Currie.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

National Hospice Palliative Care Week

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Every Canadian has the right to die with dignity, free of pain, surrounded by their loved ones, in a setting of their choice." These words by the executive director of the Canadian Hospice Palliative Care Association are words to live by. Here in Edmonton we have a long and proud leadership in palliative care.

The week of May 5 to 11 is National Hospice Palliative Care Week, and this week it focuses on the volunteer caregiver. Right now one person in 10 is caring for someone with a long-term illness, and before long one in four baby boomers will be dealing with end-of-life issues and offering support to a loved one who is dying. Caregivers need to know that they are not alone and that support does exist for them. One agency in Edmonton is the Pilgrim's Hospice Society, which is this city's only voluntary freestanding hospice. It operates currently without any government funding. Eighty percent of us want to die at home, so help to make hospice palliative care the final gift we can offer our loved ones.

Thank you.

Safety Call-out Program

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today in this Legislature to acknowledge a joint initiative involving more than 40 organizations in nine municipalities. It's a program that improves safety communication with residents about industrial activities by providing a call-in information line and a call-out notification system. This innovative program combines the best of technology with a common set of guidelines to help industries and municipalities meet the information needs of the public. The call-out system can simultaneously telephone hundreds of residents.

Two organizations, the Northeast Region Community Awareness Emergency Response and the Northeast Capital Industrial Association, worked with the following mayors and reeves to make this happen. They are Ken Hodgins, city of Fort Saskatchewan; Vern Hartwell, Strathcona county; Lawrence Kluthe, Sturgeon county; Roy Bryks, Lamont county; Dave Calder, town of Bruderheim; Bill Nimmo, town of Gibbons; Fred Pewarchuk, town of Lamont; Lloyd Bertschi, town of Morinville; and Brian Brigden, town of Redwater. I would ask all members of the Assembly to join me in recognizing this program, the first of its kind in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Armenian Genocide

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, Adolf Hitler said, "Who remembers the Armenian genocide?" and then proceeded to methodically exterminate the lives of over 6 million people. Every year on April 29, Holocaust Remembrance Day, we remember these innocent victims.

On April 24 of every year another genocide is recognized, the massacre of over 1 and a half million Armenian men, women, and children by the Turkish government. While many justly condemn the horrific acts of extermination, I want to take a moment to remember and thank the Turkish people who chose to protect innocent Armenians from the brutal soldiers and their butcher battalions. My Armenian grandmother survived this genocide because of a Turkish family that raised her with love and kindness after her family was murdered. Mr. Speaker, our world survives these periods of terror because of just and kind people who have a great capacity to love one another.

Today I ask everyone to remember so that we can prevent future holocausts. And should another person in history ask, "Who remembers the Armenian genocide?" we can stand up and say, "We remember."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Dave Rodney

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fifty years ago Sir Edmund Hillary was the first man to ascend Mount Everest, the world's highest peak. Sir Ed, however, would rather be known for his extensive charity work in Nepal over the years. He is referred to as Godfather amongst the Sherpas.

Hillary's torch has been picked up and carried by many others, one being Dave Rodney, an Albertan and a constituent of mine in Calgary-West, who is the first and only Canadian to summit Mount Everest twice. Dave is a former educator on three continents and is now a professional speaker, filmmaker, writer, and humanitarian for numerous causes from local to international. Dave and his wife, Jennifer, have just returned from Nepal after successfully guiding 23 trekkers from six countries to Mount Everest base camp and beyond. The trekkers returned home with indeed some incredible life experiences, stories, and pictures.

Their second reason, though, for returning to Nepal was to do some work for their Top of the World Society, which is currently focusing on the Sherpa people who have also become very dear to them. Sherpa children will receive scholarships to become a doctor, dentist, teacher, or pilot and then return to their valley to benefit their own people.

Congratulations, Dave Rodney, for giving back to those who were an important part of your Everest success. Thank you.

Morinville Art Club

Mr. Broda: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize the Morinville

Art Club. The club was formed and incorporated May 18, 1978. Since then fall, winter, and spring courses as well as workshops have been presented throughout the years. This past weekend the club celebrated its 25th anniversary. I was most impressed with the quality of local artists' productions as well as guest artist sculptures by Eduino Sousa and clay works by Mary Fetherston. Congratulations and thank you to president/treasurer Jeannine Chalifoux and all club members for their commitment to the arts and their community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Postpolio Syndrome

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For most Albertans the polio epidemic of the 1950s has become a thing for the history books. However, for hundreds if not thousands of people in Alberta, the lasting effects of polio are still a concern. Many who once had polio are now suffering from what is called postpolio syndrome. Postpolio syndrome is a condition that can strike polio survivors anywhere from 10 to 40 years after their recovery from polio. Symptoms include fatigue, slowly progressive muscle weakness, muscle and joint pain, and muscular atrophy.

Many postpolio syndrome sufferers in Alberta have looked to the postpolio clinic at the University of Alberta hospital for help, but because of a lack of funding and support this clinic may be closed as early as next month. Postpolio syndrome sufferers are scrambling to find new sources of revenue. It is our hope that those sources can be found. It is important that polio sufferers not be forgotten. While the disease may have been virtually eradicated, the long-term effects have not.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. First is a response to the MLA for Edmonton-Glengarry on a question.

Second is a response to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a written question.

Thirdly is to table the 2002 annual report of the College of Alberta Professional Forest Technologists.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to file the required copies of Motion for a Return 9 regarding the Department of Infrastructure's policy on its contracting management process.

Motions Under Standing Order 30

The Speaker: Hon. members, before proceeding to Orders of the Day, I wish to make a statement with respect to the notice requirements under Standing Order 30. This will be of particular interest to the three House leaders. Standing Order 30(1) states in part:

Any member may request leave to move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance of which written notice has been given to the Speaker at least two hours prior to the sitting of the Assembly.

The chair interprets this provision to mean that the member must provide the Speaker's office with notice of the subject matter of urgent public importance, not just notice that the member will be raising some as of yet unstated or undetermined matter that afternoon.

The chair expressed some concern about inadequacy of notice in respect to notice from the then Leader of the Official Opposition concerning a Standing Order 30 application on November 14, 2000, at page 1845 of Hansard for that day. The defect in the notice on that occasion was corrected before the matter was raised in the Assembly.

This interpretation of the notice provisions is in keeping with the interpretation of the similar Standing Order in the Canadian House of Commons. Marleau and Montpetit at page 585 state:

Any Member, be it a private Member or a Minister, who wishes to move the adjournment of the House to discuss a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration must give the Speaker written notice of the matter he or she wishes to propose for discussion.

Given that the chair must rule on whether the application for leave to set aside the business of the Assembly is in order, it only makes sense that there should be some indication as to the subject of the purported urgent and pressing matter.

The chair gives fair notice to all members today that in the future not meeting the requirement of sufficient notice will cause the application to be ruled out of order before it is presented.

Thank you.

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to present the estimates for the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development this afternoon. I look forward to questions from my colleagues in the Legislature.

I would like to take this opportunity to introduce some of my very, very talented staff in Alberta Agriculture. Maybe they could just stand as I introduce them, and people that aren't familiar with these fine people could meet them. So I'll start with Brian Manning, our deputy; Faye Rault, executive director of administration. Faye is not brand new but relatively new. Les Lyster, well known I think to most of us, assistant deputy minister for sustainable agriculture; Ken Moholity, Super Moho, assistant deputy minister for planning and competitiveness, and if you don't know why I call him Super Moho, come over to the department when we have our next fund-raiser and you'll see him. Brian Rhiness. If you come for a fund-raiser you may see him in one of his roles as assistant deputy minister for industry development, particularly for the hog industry, and Brian looks very good in pink. We have Krish Krishnaswamy, who is vice-president of finance, Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. We have Terry Willock, director of communications; Jeff Haley, a special policy adviser from my office; and I believe that Maureen Osadchuk, whom many of you know, will join us when she returns from the dentist.

I'm pleased to have this opportunity to very quickly review some of the activities of the department. The past two years have been quite interesting for our industry. We've suffered the effects of extensive and severe drought. We've had other challenges, but the hard work and very smart business decisions on the part of our industry, along with some support from various levels of government, I believe have helped the industry position itself for a full and complete recovery.

I will remind our colleagues of the value of this industry to our economy and to our rural landscape. Last year the primary and value-added sectors contributed $8.2 billion and $9.8 billion respectively to the provincial economy. Of course, our long-term vision many of you have heard now, 20-10 by 2010, is $20 billion in value-added activity and $10 billion in primary production by 2010. Obviously, when we're at $8.2 billion, the $1 billion is probably not as hard to achieve over the next years. Last year's drought put a little bit of a blip on our radar screen maybe on the value-added, but we know that this industry will do everything it can to achieve this opportunity, and 2003 will be a year of opportunity for our industry.

We're going to focus in our department on the business development needs of agriculture, ways to help our producers and our processors become more profitable. We're going to of course increase our focus on value-added ag entrepreneurship and attracting investment into our province, and we're working very closely with industry partners to implement the agriculture growth strategy and a very important initiative, the agricultural research and innovation strategy, to help our industry position itself for the future. There is no question that research has assisted our industry in the significant growth it has enjoyed.

The rural development initiative has been very well received across the province. I want to applaud my two colleagues, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and the Member for Wainwright, for the commitment they have made to covering this province as much as possible to listen carefully to communities as to where they see their opportunities and to identify challenges to reaching their full potential in this industry. Certainly, we're well on our way to completing a rural development strategy, and we're working with our other provincial ministries as well as the federal government on this initiative. There is no question; nobody would, I think, debate that small business and the agriculture industry are very strong contributors to our provincial economy, maybe especially in rural Alberta, but when we're in the capital region, as we are today, we could be reminded that there are about a hundred companies in this region who export food products to over a hundred countries in the world, and that is just this particular area here.

Ag Financial Services have done an outstanding job in working with our producers and our industry through these challenging times, and they will continue to build on the synergies that have been created by merging their operations with Alberta Opportunity Company. I believe that merger has gone very smoothly. They have worked very hard to ensure that all of the customers and potential customers understand that it is continuing to offer commercial lending where it's appropriate, to deliver very meaningful and unique financial services that are not readily available from alternate sources, and of course they will maintain and increase the emphasis on small business development in rural Alberta.

I almost hesitate to bring up the word "drought." People are starting to get a little edgy on all of the moisture we've had; however, I regret that the moisture is not as widespread, even yet, as we would like to see it. There still are areas in the northeast of our province that have not had a significant amount of moisture, in fact probably at the top of half an inch, which isn't enough, but – but – we're very, very grateful for the moisture we have received over a large part of the province.

Our agriculture drought risk management plan that was implemented last year certainly continues to provide very timely and accurate assessments of drought to us. We thank all of the people who work on that, who are looking at ways to mitigate drought issues on a long term, and certainly the way to do that is to have a good drought risk management plan. A lot of people have put a lot of effort into that, including our municipalities, producers, and, of course, staff. We are thankful to have the good work of the PFRA in assisting us in that plan as well.

We did in January announce some very significant enhancements to our crop insurance program. I could say to members that our hay and pasture program grew by at least three times the number of contracts, a significant increase. The deadline for crop insurance was the 30th of April. We don't have all of the information on that, but the indications are that we would have a number of new contracts in that area as well. We still have more work to do to help producers better manage their risk with broader insurance options, but the enhancements we have to date undoubtedly offer our producers the most innovative and comprehensive program in Canada and, if they avail themselves of those programs, help protect their farming operations against the volatility of weather and commodity prices.

Food safety will continue to be a high priority for us. We will continue to work very closely with our processors on initiatives such as HACCP. For those who don't know what HACCP is, it's the hazard analysis critical control points training. We're going to continue to work with groups to support on-farm food safety programs as well, and we think that this industry partnership will and does result in high-quality, safe food for domestic and export markets.

Environmental sustainability will continue to be a priority for us as well. We are very conscious of how agriculture impacts the environment both in a positive and sometimes in a negative way. We know that is a concern of both producers and consumers. Farmers live off the land, so its sustainability is of paramount importance to them. We have been very proactive in developing initiatives to help our industry enhance its environmental sustainability, and we have provided funding to the Alberta environmental sustainable agriculture program, and that has embarked on a number of initiatives such as technology transfer, water and soil quality monitoring programs, some work that is being done on farm environmental programs.

The Agricultural Operation Practices Act, of course, was introduced and put into place. It has operated a full year plus a bit, and we will be doing a technical review this year, as we committed to when we introduced this legislation, to make sure that the air, water, and soil is protected and ensure that this act is doing the job that we intended it to do and that we can see sustainable growth in our industry without jeopardizing the quality of our air, soil, and water.

The ag policy framework has occupied a great deal of time for the ministers of agriculture across this country but mostly our staffs' time, and our deputies and assistant deputy ministers have put a great deal of time into developing a very strong framework. It's an important process. I have been a supporter of the process. I have been critical of some of the points in it and have worked hard to make sure that Alberta's interests are reflected and protected in these agreements, but I applaud the federal minister for bringing forward a five-year plan for agriculture, the first that I can recall, with a sustained amount of funding over those five years. Probably it isn't enough money, as we've heard in many quarters, but it is what the minister has, and I have been a strong proponent of getting on with the job.

We've seen some evidence of that in our crop insurance improvements. I think we are getting close to agreements on NISA, with still a few outstanding issues. We continue to dialogue with our industry to make sure that the program reflects their needs for risk management. We're very pleased with the work on the other four chapters of that area, and of course Alberta has been quite ahead in a number of those areas, so it hasn't been a big problem for us to match the federal funding, in fact no problem at all.

The budget, I think, is clearly outlined in these estimates. The program expense for 2003-04 is $808 million. That's an increase in funding of $137.3 million when you compare it with the budget for 2002-03. Of course, a large portion of that is for crop insurance, and that increase has allowed the major enhancements such as spring price endorsement insurance, revenue insurance coverage, improved pasture and forage insurance, and altering the forage and crop insurance deadlines. We are out of the business of ad hoc assistance. We've made it very clear that we are committed to strong safety nets, to safety nets that are responsive to industry and that will allow them to choose them as a risk management tool. So as we expected, of course, our contracts in that area increased.

You will see no allocation under restricted expense for the Dairy Control Board. I'm very pleased that the operations of the Dairy Control Board were privatized to Alberta Milk in August of 2002, and that is going along very well.

Our budget, of course, is based on a number of assumptions. One is that commodity prices won't decline further, that interest rates will remain stable, and that we won't experience a disastrous year of claims under the farm income disaster and crop insurance programs. So those assumptions mean, as always, that achieving our plan is subject to risks. If you were to have widespread crop production losses due to poor weather conditions including drought, as we did last year, if we were to have a major livestock disease outbreak such as foot-and-mouth, which I believe through excellent management and work with the CFIA was averted just over a year ago, if we saw further declines in global commodity prices, particularly in crops, or changes in the economy such as increased interest rates or the stronger Canadian dollar which we're seeing now, these things could, obviously, affect farm income dramatically and in turn impact indemnities that are paid out under our programs. So we're anticipating a much better year, as the industry is, but as we've said in the past, we've put the best plan forward and our best knowledge into developing this budget.

I want to in conclusion just assure all hon. members that the prosperity and sustainability of our agriculture industry remains a priority of this government. The changes that we've made to our safety net programs, the continued focus on business development needs of agriculture will enhance the positive impact agriculture has on this province. The industry is growing and changing rapidly, and we know as a department that to respond to a growing industry and to help its development, we have to change and grow with it. I think we've concluded the reorganization of our department. I think it reflects well the opportunities in this industry into the future.

I want to just comment on one change that has been very, very positive, and that is the call centre that is located in Stettler. It is the 1-800 call centre, that has been received extremely well by the industry. We have found that thanks to the very talented people that we have manning that call centre, over 90 percent – I think it's up to 92 or 93 percent – of the calls can be addressed immediately and the others can be referred very quickly. The satisfaction rate is extraordinarily high, and I know that Brian Rhiness, our assistant deputy minister, who went through a difficult period of reorganization, and my deputy join me in thanking the very talented people who have made a commitment to that call centre of being a very, very important service centre to our industry.

I thank you for your time, and I look forward to your questions. Those that we can answer this afternoon, we will, and I will make a commitment that for those that we can't answer, you will have the answers by Monday. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Madam Minister, I just want to start by also thanking your staff. I think they do a real service to the ag industry in Alberta, and I can tell you and pass through to them that even though a lot of people come to me with questions about agriculture, the questions are never a reflection of anything other than full commitment by your staff. As I cross the province, there's never any question about the dedication of the staff in terms of the interest of agriculture and the promotion of a good agriculture industry. So, again, on behalf of all Albertans thank you to the staff.

What I'd like to do is just kind of start a little bit almost where you ended in the sense of reflecting on your overall budget. You talk about the fact that our budget is going to be down this year significantly over the last two years', and the question that comes up is that a lot of that was related to the farm income and crop insurance components. I guess that what we have to look at then, as we start budgeting practices, is: what have you done to in effect try and reflect a long-term stable budget? Obviously, with two very bad years right now we can't just say that the $808 million is wrong, because you had $1.7 billion last year and $1.1 billion the year before, almost $1.2 billion the year before. Have you done any kind of long-term almost actuarial-type estimates on risk management needs by the ag industry? We need to judge whether or not the $808 million is a fair budget.

I'm not asking you to get up and give us all that information right now, but I do appreciate your offer to answer that later. If we're going to judge what is a long-term, reasonable budget for the department, it has to incorporate that actuarial aspect of the risk management programs. If it doesn't, what in effect we're doing is we're hiding in the stability fund process now, because one of the triggers for that stability fund is disaster in Alberta, so any kind of a disaster payment could be triggered out of that stability fund. We don't want to in effect be hiding money in that stability fund when every year we trigger money out of it. I look at the fact that the insurance and the farm income support total just slightly over $600 million this year compared to in excess of a billion or almost a billion two years ago and in excess of a billion last year. So we need to make sure that we're dealing with something that's a long-term sustainable budget from that perspective.

In the other areas I think there are some specifics that we have to look at in terms of how especially some of the administrative costs seem to have gone up higher than the program costs.

Mr. Chairman, if I might ask the minister: do you want me to ask a couple of questions and then give you a chance to respond, or do you want me to talk for 15 or 20 minutes and then give you a chance to get up? I probably would enjoy it better and get more out of it if I could ask three or four questions and you could respond to them as long as they're kind of in the same area, and then we can go on to a different area.

Dr. Nicol: That would be more appropriate for me. I don't expect an immediate response on that actuarial information associated with the budget, so we'll just kind of assume that that will be a Monday or future date payoff.

The issue that really comes up in terms of the overall expenditures – and you began talking about that early on in your overview – was the real effect of risk management on the industry. I guess that when we look at that now, it gets to be a really complicated issue, because not only do you have the option to deal with the changes you've implemented in the crop insurance, but you also have to deal with it now under that framework of the ag policy framework that's being developed with the federal government.

I guess that the question that would come up in terms of all of that is: how much effort is being put into dealing with a comprehensive program that wouldn't in effect deal with commodities as much as it would with farm income or farm costs? This has been a debate that farmers bring up quite regularly. When you look at risk management, if we're dealing with commodities, you end up then with farmers playing programs off against each other for commodities' sake, but it also doesn't encourage diversification to the same extent that a comprehensive cost or income program would encourage. You know, it would put more of the management decision-making onto farmers if we didn't deal with specific commodities. I would like to have a sense of how that's working out under the ag policy framework.

The NISA is there. When it first came in, I was still teaching at the University of Lethbridge in the ag policy course, and we started talking: wow, conceptually this has got a great opportunity. But when you actually saw the operational part of it and the triggers and how to get in and how to get out, you know, it became a nightmare. So what we need is that kind of opportunity for farmers to deal with income stabilization and risk management but make it so that it truly is a usable program rather than a frustration. I guess I would like reaction to how that's being built into the ag policy framework from the administrative point of view, because it could change both how we fund it out of the budget and also how we deal with it administratively. What reflections are there to make that work?

The other aspect of that, I guess, in terms of the policy framework. It's good to see that you emphasized in two or three different places in your business plan, you know, that ad hoc programs are things of the past. We'll see. Anyway, a specific question on it. Some of the farmers that have asked were led to believe at the time the support programs were introduced last summer that there would be an up-front 85 percent payment with 15 percent coming later. A couple of people recently have said: well, where's the other 15 percent? So they're kind of still expecting another cheque in the mail based on last year's claims. I think the idea is that we need to get out there and explain to them where that is or why it is not in their mailbox right now, because that's something that a number of farmers have raised in terms of what was their understanding of the program and how it fits with what they've actually seen.

I guess the other thing is: has the minister done any work in connection with this ag policy framework and the stability risk management components that look at how the enhanced NISA is going to contribute? Will it in effect reduce some of the requirements for the price stability part of the enhanced crop insurance that was introduced this year? In effect, if the NISA is working right, then the farmer doesn't need the price enhancement component of the crop insurance. It's almost like because NISA isn't working, we've got the enhanced price component. So how would that overlap? I would appreciate some comments on those kinds of things.

Mr. Chairman, those are the kinds of overview questions that I've got on risk management and stability. If the minister wants to make some comments in response to that now, then I'll ask some of my other area questions following that. Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: Sure. On the long-term stable budget I'm as interested as is the Finance minister as is every other member in our government and I'm sure across the way in having a budget that you stay within. Certainly, the last two years that you mentioned were extraordinary. Two years ago, of course, low commodity prices, increased costs, assistance being offered in other areas of the country, increased assistance in the U.S., one of our major markets and competitors, led to a response in that area. Last year, of course, our budget looks a little bit odd because of the extreme drought and the response there.

I know that the hon. member is very familiar with the crop insurance program, and I know that he would know that two years ago we spent some 288 million dollars in crop insurance claims. That was a record in the 40 years of the program. Well, this year's claims will be 700 million plus dollars probably, growing to perhaps $800 million. The good thing is that we do have an actuary on that program. The good thing is that when we had to pay those funds out this year, we were able to do it because we did have funds built up. You would recall that early in the year we were getting calls to give the farmers back their money, to give them a 30 percent reduction in premiums. I explained to them that because of the high payout the year before there wasn't any interest being built on the particular fund that we had been doing the 30 percent reduction out of, so we wouldn't be doing it. That kind of fell on deaf ears. But I think that in hindsight we all will say now: thank goodness we didn't do that and that we could pay out those claims this year. I am comfortable with the actuary that is set up on crop insurance. It's measured often, and over the 40-year history I think that program has worked.

Of course, the latest U.S. farm bill I think threw us all for a loop. Not that there was any more money put in that – in fact, I think it's somewhat less than they had paid out the year before it was introduced – but what it did was put into law their disaster funding and introduced some new areas such as beans, pulse crops, which to our producers was quite devastating, especially when we're all trying to work to reduce subsidies. So that was a difficult issue for us and certainly, no question, had some bearing on my discussions with my staff on the new crop insurance program. It was obvious to me that we had to protect our producers in some way on the costs of growing a product when we're in this unfair subsidy world. It's my hope that with the new NISA when we get it right – and I believe we will – that will in fact negate the need for those types of programs. But we can't continually leave our producers out hanging while the other countries, our competitors, come in and support theirs. To me a better way to support them is through an insurance program, a risk management program where they make the decisions as to purchasing it, rather than to just throw in ad hoc programs. Everybody is a little skeptical as to whether there'll be more ad hoc programs. Certainly, I don't believe there will be, because I do believe we have what we need now.

Will there be a whole farm program? Because this is a nationally negotiated tripartite agreement, it's a difficult one, because there is a fair amount of resistance in the agriculture industry in some parts of Canada to doing the whole farm program. So that's going to take, I think, some work, but certainly there is a commitment to get more activities into NISA.

The 85 percent payment, the 15 percent remaining. I think there are two things there. I don't think there's a question as much on the 85-15. The 85 percent was sent out immediately so that people would get their cheques, and indeed the first farmer did get his cheque in nine days. For the ones that you heard had a problem that were passed on to me, we thank you for that. To all of our members here who did that, you usually found that there was a reason. The land was accounted on two different bills, and the Auditor General frowns on us paying for the same piece of land twice. So then, after those were all sent out, the 15 percent started to be done, and that was when you did that period of thorough assessment of claims. I believe that is completed. All of that is done.

What isn't completed in people's minds is the bridging, and I think that's what they're confusing when they talk 85-15. It was really 60-40. If you recall, the federal government committed 60 percent – $600 million was really what it amounted to, so you could say 60-40 – and we as provinces had the opportunity to make a contribution to that and make it more. Because they changed the formula and we of course suffered in the change, our contribution under the formula that they use would have amounted to some $80 million to $88 million to $90 million over this last year and this year we're in now. We made the decision that rather than trying to distribute what would amount to one or two dollars to each producer in addition, rather than pass it through the NISA accounts – we didn't agree with the federal government doing it that way – we would use those dollars to enhance our crop insurance and pasture and hay insurance, our safety net programs.

It is bridging money, and the best bridging for our producers in my view is to get them a program that works in the long term. So, frankly, that's how we used the bridging money. When you hear that from producers, it's very understandable that they might be confused. We've had so many things out there. Whether it was the 85-15 or what we called 60-40, it was really $600 million from the feds over each of two years and a 40 percent contribution by provinces.

That is the money that they're wondering, I believe, if they're still getting. We've tried to get the message out clearly that we made a decision here to use those bridging funds that we committed to enhance our risk management programs. So that is what it will be.

NISA. Like you, I was here actually – you were teaching; I was here – when we introduced NISA, and I had great hope for that program, and I was very disappointed when we had to make the decision as a government of pulling out of it in 1996 because it simply was not working the way it was intended to work. I keep reminding producers when we have conversations about this that it is the net income stabilization account, and that is what it is intended to do: stabilize income. When you have billions of dollars in NISA accounts across Canada, over $800 million in Alberta, and you have producers coming to government and saying, “We need help,” you know very well that that risk management program is not working very well.

Part of it was triggers. Very difficult to trigger money, very tempting not to trigger it, because there was a government contribution going in matching and there was an interest bearing on it. The interest enhancement will be gone. I think that's probably appropriate. Under the new plan as it's rolling out, the government contribution will come in when the trigger occurs. It is not an entitlement. It will be used to stabilize income. The money that the producer puts in will be their money; they do not lose it. But it won't be matched in an entitlement type of program. That's the way it's anticipated. So if it's truly to be risk management, probably producers would rather it was the other way, and I don't blame them. I mean, who wouldn't? But I think they understand that as a risk management tool, which is what it is intended to do, this is fair.

The issue of triggers is still being worked on, and we're gathering information I'd say daily from producers on triggers. Any information that you gather from people you talk to and pass on to our department through our deputy or Ken Moholityn, our ADM who's in daily, evening, and weekend conversation with our colleagues across the country on this issue, would be much appreciated, because I think that is absolutely critical to NISA working. If people are going to invest their money in a stabilization program, then they want to be able to trigger that money when it's appropriate for their operation, not determined by some bureaucrat in Alberta or Ottawa or somewhere else. So that's the critical part. That's what we're really working on now, and I think that producers are understanding now that while they cover more of the risk at the top end for the minimum changes in their income, government will pick up a far larger share of what would be catastrophic. I think they're much more comfortable with that now that they understand it.

So we'll continue to work on those, and I'll say again that it is certainly our intention to present a very concise set of risk management tools to producers and say: “You look at this. If you need to protect your operation, consider these, because there will not be ad hoc programs in the future when we have what we think is an improved program to help you manage risk on your farm.”

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, Madam Minister. That gives me some answers that I can take back to the people when they raise them.

I guess the only question that would come up is that you mentioned the fact that there was difficulty with the whole farm component because of some areas of Canada not wanting it. I would hope that you're strongly suggesting that how you define the whole farm concept can be done regionally so that in western Canada – because of our different agriculture we don't have the same stability developed through the marketing boards for dairy, poultry, et cetera, that eastern Canada does – we might operate it a little differently.

Some of the other issues that do come up as we go through it. You mentioned environmental sustainability and the work that's been going on under the Agricultural Operation Practices Act. I guess the question that comes up a lot, especially in southern Alberta and central Alberta where a lot of the intensive livestock activity is going on, is: when is it that people could expect some area around the air quality component as opposed to the major issues that seem to have been addressed on water quality? The approval process now for the operations seems to have addressed a lot of the issues that affected potential water contamination – runoff, lagoon seepage, all of that – but there are still a lot of questions being raised about how to deal with the air quality. I know you made a comment the other day that it's hard to measure because it's a nuisance as opposed to a direct contaminant, but if we're going to make sure that agriculture and the community cohabitate, if you want to call it that, with so many nonagriculture people now residing in rural Alberta, we have to start dealing with that air quality component as well.

On some of the other issues that come up about the sustainability or the environmental components of the ag sector, I guess a lot of it deals with some of the issues of salinity which still keep coming up. What's going on with the irrigation rehabilitation? How successful is it? Will the funding continue to finish out some of those rehabilitation programs that are in place? That kind of approach is asked quite often because, you know, the program seems to be committed to, but there are still some questions about appropriate funding, long-term funding, to finish that out. I think some kind of a policy statement or such would in effect commit to it but also make sure that the irrigation districts and irrigation farmers themselves know that once this program is finished, there will be renegotiation of responsibility. How much should the provincial taxpayer be responsible for in what in effect is a regional management issue? So we need to look at that and make sure that the irrigation farmers especially but also others that have salinity problems are aware of how that program would carry on.

I guess there are some other little questions that came up. I had a couple of meetings with rural groups in the last four or five months since the new year, and every now and again one of the farmers gets up, and I've been documenting their questions. So I'm going to give them to you now more than anything else.

One of them had to deal with gopher control, the reasons that come up now about the access to appropriate gopher control, what is available. I guess the help that the department gave to Alberta farmers last year on grasshoppers has made people now say: well, if you're helping with one insect or one nuisance, one environmental infringement on the growth of plants, why won't you help them with another one? I guess a lot of them are really saying: what is available other than strychnine, which is now getting to be less and less available because of who knows what? Are there other effective ways to control them?

The other area that came up at one of these meetings was the program that you have to support local research, kind of almost the applied – I'm sorry, Madam Minister; I've forgotten the title, the acronym that goes with that. It's the regional extension applied research program. People have been asking how to get the funding for it. I know that you and I dealt with a case coming out of Lethbridge where they felt they should be getting support for it, but they had the research station and a couple of other mechanisms there to use instead. I've also had a couple of inquiries from communities that aren't directly adjacent to or don't have easy access to other research facilities, and they were wondering about: when they send in what they had thought were fairly well-documented requests, they don't end up with full funding. How do they carry out the project if they don't have the appropriate funding to do it? Their suggestion and the way one of them put it to me was: you know, if the project is viable and appears to be able to contribute to the community, let's fund that project instead of trying to fund half of two projects. I guess that issue needs to be addressed a little bit.

I guess the other is that in connection with that, they've been talking a little bit about how to deal with the extension. I guess that as Leader of the Opposition or as the ag critic for the opposition as well the comments that come to me are always from the people who feel they didn't get the right answer. So, you know, you talked about the success of the 1-800 line. The only ones I hear about are the failures of the 1-800 line. What people have asked through that 1-800 line is if there is an option or a possibility of more local content. In many ways some of the individuals have felt that the answer they get may be totally legitimate but not really relevant for their particular community. So there needs to be more of a sense of localization of the answer to meet the needs of some of the people who are using that number. They want to see it better reflect that kind of approach.

They also are interested in how they go about getting information on new technologies that they've heard about, but they don't have access to the background material. The 1-800 number on a number of occasions hasn't been able to help them on that. So are there mechanisms for a broader based information retrieval system for international or cross-country research programs?

That's a series of questions. I'll let you answer some of those, and then I've got some that are going to deal with the resource base and how we deal with some of those. But I'll get to those after you've had a chance to answer.

Mrs. McClellan: We'll probably deal with some of the specifics on some of the programs in a written component in the interests of getting all the questions out today, but I'll just deal with a couple.

I think the review of the confined feeding operations, the Ag Operation Practices Act and how it's operating, is a technical review that is going to be really important to answer some of those questions.

I think I heard you say that you felt that we have addressed mainly the issues around water quality and protecting it and soils, I think, as well. The air quality will continue to be an issue. The Farmers' Advocate is dealing with that, trying to mediate with communities. There is no question that the operator of the operation has a responsibility to be a good neighbour as well. You know, I've said this over and over again. I live beside a very large hog operation, and it has quite a large feedlot attached to it as well. I'm upwind one mile, and life could be pretty terrible. I like to enjoy my yard and sit outside when the mosquitoes aren't biting.

An Hon. Member: Have a beer or two.

Mrs. McClellan: Maybe that too.

You know, over time they have worked very hard to introduce new technology, a new way of doing things, a new way of managing the manure so that it isn't an issue with us. Thank goodness, because these are long-time friends, and neither one of us wants to move. You can do it.

I believe I and my department are pretty tough, saying to our producers: you know, you have a responsibility to take the appropriate measures. There are many new technologies, and there are some that are very reasonable: straw covering your lagoon, taking it out from the bottom instead of the top. There are just so many ways that you can manage this: injection, of course, rather than surface spreading. If you surface spread, follow it with a cultivator; don't leave it out there airing for three or four days. And I think there's a valid question on the health side if it's too bad. So we have a responsibility to improve that, and I think this review will help.

The rehab program. There is always that concern, but I think history shows that we have a strong commitment to irrigation rehab. We understand the value of it not only to production but to the domestic, industrial, and recreational needs of those communities. There are at least 50 communities in southern Alberta that totally depend on irrigation water for their domestic needs. I tell people that there isn't a natural lake in southern Alberta. There isn't. Chestermere Lake is a bulge in an irrigation canal. MacGregor Lake, which is very hot for recreational use, is an irrigation body of water. Lake Newell, which is a wonderful example of recreation, wetlands, all of those things, is an irrigation body. So irrigation contributes an awful lot to the whole of the south, not just to agriculture. It's important for us, I believe, to commit to keep supporting in what I think is a reasonable way the provincial share of that support to rehab. Certainly, as long as I have any opportunity for input or influence, I will continue to encourage support to our rehab, to completing those projects and making sure that we maintain a good infrastructure there.

Gopher control. Boy, you know, it's interesting that when you do things for environmental reasons, you upset something else. I truly believe that this lower strength strychnine plus drought has contributed significantly to this getting out of control. Of course, we've received notice from the federal government that they're going to end the use even of the reduced-potency strychnine at the end of June. I've written to Minister McLellan and said: "Please consider one more year. We're starting to get a bit of a handle on this thing. Let's try and get it under control." With returning to some natural, more normal weather patterns, you will not have the devastation. It's like grasshoppers. When there's a limited amount to eat, they compete for it, and they get ahead of us and win.

There just doesn't seem to be another poison or bait or method of control of gophers. We've all heard the interesting ones of vacuuming them up. I've heard of gassing them. We've heard of all sorts of things. We go back to what we did when we were kids: poured water down one hole and hoped that we knew which hole they came up. Maybe a bounty again of 5 cents a tail. A nickel was a lot in those days; I don't think it means much now. But it is a real problem for our producers. So I'm hoping that for this year at least we'll be able to manage to continue to have even that limited strychnine, and perhaps this year, then, we can get a handle on this. They are a natural part of our landscape. We're not looking at eradicating them completely, but anybody who has been in an area where they have taken over knows that it's absolute devastation.

The issue of applied research associations. We have some marvelous research associations in this province. Having had all of the good direction from the ag summit process, the Agrivantage reports, looking at the direction that we want to go certainly with local interest as well, though we want to assess research projects and make sure that they are in the same direction as the industry is going – we have asked for business plans and three-year plans. It's not an entitlement. You make the case that you have the best project. It's a new process in many ways, and it's tough. We had some come in that weren't bad. I mean, it wasn't that they were bad; it's just that they absolutely did need some more work, and we're working with them to improve those. This is sort of the first year of this, and I think that next year it'll be better. More of them will be more knowledgeable about how to do it. If there is a concern that we don't have enough local needs in it, we're willing to examine that and look at it with them, because really that's what is first.

The information on technologies is really an important one. It doesn't matter how much good research you have, no matter how many new technologies you develop, if you can't transfer that knowledge and those technologies, you almost might as well just leave it. One of our strengths has been a good technology transfer. ARI, of course, the Ag Research Institute, does put all of their research projects on-line, which is a great improvement, so people can access that. Ropin' the Web has some great information for people to access. Certainly, if there are better ways, we'll try and improve how we get that information out, so any ideas that you have on that. Maybe a better – I shouldn't say "better" publicity of Ropin' the Web. It's actually won awards.

It was interesting to me – and somebody will shake their head up and down, yes, or sideways, no. I think it was 27 countries outside of Canada that had accessed that web site. Terry is saying yes, so I'm not wrong. Just a huge number of inquiries to it. I found it so interesting that it was well enough known that people from outside of Canada accessed it as well. So we'll look at improving how we transfer that technology. We're having conversations with our partners at the research stations in Lethbridge, of course, in Lacombe, our crop development north, crop development south, the universities. Very proud of the partnerships that we're developing with them.

Also, there's an area we don't want to forget, and that's the projects that CARD is participating in, from cows to fish – I am finding a lot of interest in the riparian projects – where the industry gets together with the people who like to fish and hunt and enjoy the outdoors and look at how we can improve those watersheds. I think this is amazing, and these people should be recognized. I was able to visit the Rosebud Creek group and another one and see the displays of actually what they have done to change those watersheds, and those are great programs. A lot of volunteers are putting an awful lot of hours into doing that, and a lot of people want more information on that. They want to know how they achieved it and where they got the technology, and there's no sense inventing the wheel twice. If somebody else has done it and it worked, they want to be able to use that. So it will always be a challenge but one that we should work hard on to make sure we transfer technology.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Nicol: Just a few more, Mr. Chairman. Some of the other issues that I hear about quite regularly as I travel around the province and I guess one of the things I'd put out is that under the ag policy framework there's a component about sustainability of the sector, intergenerational transfer types of issues, and people keep raising the question about how they compete with the non-ag bidders for agriculture land. I know there's no answer to that, Madam Minister. I'm not asking for an answer right now, but more than anything make sure that that becomes part of the discussions that go on under the ag policy framework. How do we deal with whether it's absolute, stronger ag zoning laws or whether it's some kind of a split title? You know, who knows? Development right versus production right. Those kinds of things. I think it's time that we start entering into that debate. At least, this is what Alberta farmers are telling me, that they really can't expand their operation to be competitive because the productive value of the operation can't justify the competitive bid from someone who is looking for an acreage but has to buy a quarter section to get their acreage, and they want ownership as opposed to a rental situation.

The other one I skipped over when I was talking about the environmental sustainability issues. I guess there are some questions now about these environmental management plans that are beginning to be required of farmers. Over the next number of years most farmers are going to have to have these, so farmers are starting to ask questions about them: what would be an acceptable environmental plan, what things they have to include in it. I keep telling them that, well, you know, the directions are there, the prototypes are there, but they still feel that it's not enough to give them the background that they need to in effect complete theirs. So maybe some prototypes could be circulated.

Your comments on Ropin' the Web. While you were answering, I thought to myself: you know, when farmers are asking and they say, "Well, I don't have a computer," what we should be telling them is that this is all available through a computer at the local library. So thank you for triggering that in my mind. It gives me another answer for them.

As we go through some of the more individual issues that are in the budget document, I guess an issue that comes up all the time is how the performance measures relate back to, you know, the actual expenditures of the ministry. I went through this discussion with you last year as we talked about some of the performance measures and whether or not they really reflected the efforts of Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development or whether they were just industry driven, international business cycle driven. I think that I would just kind of conclude my comments at this point by saying that I still would like to see a better relationship between the performance indicators of the ministry and some of the issues that really reflect on: are the dollars that we're spending as a public really achieving a result for Albertans that we put into our business plan, into our mandate?

I guess the ones that I'll comment on a little bit today are those on page 69 in the business plan, where you're talking about the performance measures associated with the farm income risk management programs, crop insurance, et cetera. You put a performance measure there, the "percentage of primary producers surveyed experiencing a disastrous reduction in income," and you get 95 percent of them. I think last year almost every farmer, except the example that I've given you a couple of times about my own, would say yes to that, but whether it's truly a disastrous reduction in income to the point that they truly believe that the public should be stepping in needs to be more closely tied into that. When does the farmer really believe that the public should be supporting them, and when should they be doing it themselves?

When we get into the second one on that same table, when you're asking the recipients of funding from the safety net programs if the safety net program enabled them to continue their farming operations through a year in which they experienced a disastrous reduction, I guess the relevance there is: did it help them to the point that had they not received the public dollars, they would have ceased operation? So what I'm trying to say is that the question is a little bit too open-ended in the sense that we're not really finding out: is it truly disaster support for them in the sense that it allowed them to stay farming when otherwise they would have been out of farming? That's kind of the accountability that I'd like to see for us if we're going to try and be able to go out to the public, because more and more I hear from nonfarm people saying, "Well, why are we giving all the farmers that much money when we're not giving it to..." and they list off their particular special interest or their sector of interest. You know, it's hard for us to justify it if we can't give them data that truly talks about that critical decision point.

I guess that just a little bit illustrates the kind of performance measures and the evaluation of those performance measures that I put on them as I go through them. There are a number of them that I think just still reflect too much of a generalized sector performance. If we look at the ones on the sector growth and the sector incomes, the fact is that for the economy the downturn caused by both climate and price impacts last year was very severe in our province. It's not a direct impact or a direct result of government policy, but it does give us a benchmark of, you know, what the sector is contributing to our provincial well-being. From that perspective, I don't say to take it out. I just say that it needs to be interpreted a little differently.

Mr. Chairman, with that, I think that's kind of where I'll close. I think our hour is just about up from the perspective of the Official Opposition. I want to just again thank the minister and her staff for all the support they give when I have questions. They're always very willing to work with me to make sure that the farm community gets the answers they need. So again, Madam Minister, thank you for the support.

Mrs. McClellan: I'll just make a few quick comments because, as I said, we'll answer some of the questions in a more complete way in writing.

The ag policy framework intergenerational transfer and the competition for agricultural land is a very, very real issue. We had a number of discussions about that around our tables here, and of course there was a very large land use conference held in Edmonton a year ago January. People from all over the world came to it, which says to me that this is a pretty important subject. The question, of course, with much of our agricultural land is: is the value in agricultural production, or is it in real estate? I do think those are going have to be discussions that are held in the future.

The environmental farm plans. There is a workbook. We've been working very hard in our province to make it a voluntary thing, to make sure that producers want to do it, that they see a benefit to their farm to doing it, that it's not a big hammer, that it's in their best interests. AESA did a great deal of very good work in developing those with a reluctant minister. I was somewhat skeptical and said: you know, if you've got good environmental laws and everybody conforms to them, then you've already got your good environmental farm plan. But they convinced me that this was a very good thing to do, provided the leadership, and I think they've done some good work. Your suggestion of prototypes that could be circulated if people want them is a good one. And I certainly should've remembered that they could go to their local library to use the computer because, of course, I proudly was the minister when we put computer access in every library in this province and indeed had two years of free Internet use contributed by one of our companies in this province.

Performance measures are something that we always struggle with. I do believe that now that we have concluded the work on the ag summit, now that we are well into working on the recommendations through the Agrivantage teams and have a pretty clear direction for where we see the industry going, now that we have the new ag policy framework in place which has the areas of sustainability, food safety, renewal, and so on in it as well as risk management, we can do a better job on performance measures, with all of that information.

Always a question to us when we're developing our performance measure is: is this our performance measure as a department, or is it the industry's? With such a partnership it is difficult, but I think we can and will. I think there's an improvement in our performance measures this year. There are some easy ones, and one I want to get on the record is "number of new processed food products produced at the Ministry's Leduc Food Processing Development Centre," which I think is just a jewel in this province. Of course, in 2002-03 the forecast was 110 new processed food products developed by Alberta entrepreneurs at that centre, and our target is 120 for next year. I think those are good, positive targets.

I don't think a good target is the number of producers that get a claim out of crop insurance. That says that we've had a bad year, but that isn't really anybody's fault. But the ability to respond to those is a good performance measure. Of course, on the satisfaction, one that we've measured closely is on the ag information centre, and I, like you, hear from the 5 percent who didn't get their full answer, but I've also had a number of clients who've said: it does work; we like it.

I think it's easier on some of those beginning farmer loans. There's a good performance measure; at least it tells us if there are new entrants into the industry and that we are meeting the needs of those. But some of them are pretty tough, and I like performance measures that you can actually quantify and hold up and say: this was an industry goal, this was our department's role in getting to that goal, and we achieved this or we didn't. Then you don't stop there; you do what you need to do to make that goal achievable. So we'll continue to work on that with some good advice, some good suggestions.

I do believe that the new NISA program will be far better to justify to the public because of the producer carrying more of the minimal risk and government coming in in a catastrophic or a significant way. FIDP, 70 percent probably was the right figure. After that, it's probably catastrophic in today's world and today's margins, but I do believe that if we get the new NISA program up and running and continue to improve it – if we find some warts on it, don't leave them like we did the last time – that could go a long way to providing a good performance measure that the public will support.

With those, I'll look forward to more questions and comments, and we'll respond to some of those areas more fully in writing. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else have any questions? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I would just like to say that I've appreciated very much the minister and her staff and the way they've handled the issues that I've presented to them the last couple of years. As the minister knows, agriculture is a very important segment and industry in the constituency I represent. We have a lot of diversified agriculture. We have intensive livestock. We have cow/calf. We have backgrounding operations. We have grain operations. We have specialty crops. So it is tremendously important. The value-added industry in Alberta has certainly received contributions from producers in Cardston-Taber-Warner, especially from Taber and the eastern end of the constituency where they produce a lot of specialty crops like potatoes, which have made huge contributions to the value added.

I would like to raise a couple of issues with the minister today that I think are important. The hon. Leader of the Opposition has raised many good issues, and there are a couple of others I would like raise. I touched yesterday on an issue in question period relative to the feeder cattle importation from the United States, and I'd like to expand on that a little bit today. The importation of feeder cattle is very important to our intensive livestock people in southern Alberta, in Feedlot Alley and in other areas. Right now they happen to be a little bit short of feeder cattle in Alberta and in western Canada because of drought and because of prices and because of reduction in the numbers. They're actually a little bit down in their numbers in their feedlots and are even looking harder now to Montana and Idaho and other states to receive cattle. They are somewhat frustrated with the protocol and with the challenge that's been put up by our federal government which frustrates the importation of feeder cattle. Although many cow/calf people probably aren't too excited about bringing in more cattle from other places, to me it's a matter of fairness. We expect as Albertans and as cattle producers to send load after load of our finished cattle across the border, and that market has been very good for us and has certainly benefited our producers. So to me, you know, if we expect to export cattle, we should certainly be willing to import their cattle for backgrounding and finishing.

It seems to me, Minister, that there is a relationship between the issue of country of origin labeling and importation of feeder cattle, and we do have serious concerns about the country of origin labeling legislation and protocol, which now seems to be coming to our neighbour to the south. I'm wondering if there's not a negotiable point there. If we were able to import their feeder cattle year-round on a market-driven basis, would that not actually add incentive to them to not proceed fully with this country of origin labeling? I don't understand why they would want to deny access to their own cattle which originated in their states, came here for four or five months to be backgrounded and finished, and then have to go down there as Canadian beef rather than just U.S. product. So I think there's an issue there that we can maybe exploit, and on behalf of our intensive livestock people and those who feed a lot of cattle, I know they are concerned about this issue and do want us as a government to do all we can to open up that border.

I was very pleased to hear you say, Minister, that more people have enrolled in the crop insurance and forage insurance programs. I think that's important, and having been privileged to spend some time with two of my colleagues from the Legislature touring Alberta a little bit last summer and talking about crop insurance and forage insurance and hearing some of the frustrations that existed, I'm certainly pleased that more have chosen to enroll.

I would like to raise two other issues today. I know the minister understands the importance of what we've done the last couple of years to be able to try to control rodents such as gophers, and to lose the ability of our producers to be able to use strychnine poison certainly, if we can't get that reinstated, is going to be a blow to our producers who still, I think, will see large numbers of gophers this year. So I would certainly commend the minister for her actions and ask that she continue.

The last issue I'd like to raise is an issue which I don't hear talked about much, but I hear it in my constituency a little bit. I think it's an issue that we need to be aware of, and that is the issue of the challenge of the survival of the family farm in Alberta, especially in southern Alberta, where, you know, it is getting more and more difficult for family farms to survive. Many of them are selling their land, selling their farms to large operations, to other groups or individuals, and the farms are becoming larger. Ranches are becoming larger. The price of land is becoming more difficult for young people to get started. Many young people are frustrated by the challenges of agriculture and low returns over the years and simply don't care whether they get into agriculture or not.

I think it's important to note that the family farm concept in Alberta and in Canada has contributed immensely to the excellent food that Canadians eat and the fact that they eat it very, very cheaply compared to many other jurisdictions in the world. I would submit to the minister that the family farm is probably the most efficient producer of farm produce that exists. They do a great job of production, and I'm not sure what we can do to help their survival and their viability, but I sense that it's becoming a problem and a challenge, and it's an issue that's raised to myself by groups when I mingle with people in my constituency and when they talk to me. There are probably some tax things we could do. There may be some other things we could do.

I raise the issue today as one that I think certainly is important. I wouldn't like to see the total demise of the family farm. I would like to see us incorporate the value-added concept, continue to incorporate that, but I would like to see us try to make it work for family farms also, because if we lose the concept of the family farm, we will be losing something that may detract from the efficient production of food in western Canada, in Alberta.

Again I'd just like to commend the minister for her efforts and her love and championing of agriculture. I appreciate that very much and would just like to get those few issues on the record.

Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, quickly on a couple of them. The importation of feeder cattle. Of course, you know, there was a lot of pride in the development of that program. I think it was a really great example of co-operation with our partners in the northwest United States. Some of the difficulty we have is that in some cases we have much stronger testing and conditions in Canada. We also have an excellent identification system, which isn't common everywhere. There always is the concern of introducing a disease that we don't have. I think the pilot project for a designated feedlot in the vector season, if you wish, for bluetongue and anaplasmosis will be an important testing. I do hear – and I'd be interested to hear from the hon. member if he's hearing anything about this – there is some concern of the question of only one pilot area and some of the requirements that may be placed on that, which would have an additional cost per animal to be fed, and some concern as to whether we will get the type of participation that's required to really tell whether it was going to work, but the CFIA really has the last word on this. We've given conditional support. We've got some questions we need answered, but we're prepared to work with them to get it in place.

Definitely, country of origin labeling is a big issue. We discussed it at the tri-national accord meeting with our U.S. counterparts. It is their legislation. I don't think the legislation is going to change, but we have until September of 2004, which is just a little over a year now, to work with the retail and I think the primary sector in the U.S. to see how we can make this thing work. It's an important market to us.

I think they understand now that the 270,000 cattle that came into Alberta for feed from the feeder program under this new protocol would go back as Canadian cattle: come in as U.S., go back as Canadian. I'm not sure that that was anticipated when they went into this. They are holding listening sessions over this month and part of next month around the various states to get input from the retail and the producer sectors there, and it'll be interesting as to what type of response they get at those, and we'll certainly be interested in what kind of feedback they get there. Maybe after that, we'll have a better idea of where we go from here, but I do compliment the industry in Alberta and in Canada. They've been working very hard with their counterparts in the U.S. to try and deal with this issue.

I did mention the tremendous take-up in the hay and pasture program, and it was quite a task for the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, the Member for Dunvegan, and the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner to go around this province and listen to producers. I was asked by one or maybe all three of them if I was expecting them to go out and sell the program. Knowing the three of them, I wouldn't have asked them to do that anyway, but I said: "No. What I'd really like you to do is to go out and listen. Come back to us with ways that we can make this program work for producers." Well, you've done a heck of a fine job, because the take-up was just amazing.

Gopher poison. I covered some of this before. I'm really hoping that the federal minister will see fit to allow us another period of time. They give us a short time for the poison, and then you can't get the strychnine. It comes from, as I understand it, India. For the first year we had trouble with it being somewhere on a ship – nobody knew where – delays in getting it in, and then you've missed the season. You need to get rid of these before one gopher becomes 14, so this is a problem.

The whole discussion around the family farm and the challenge of maintaining it is one that's discussed in a number of areas. The encouraging thing for us in Alberta is that there's only about 1 percent of our corporate farms that are held by a major shareholder. Most of the corporate farms in Alberta are formed a corporation of a family. So they have gone to a corporate farm as a number of family members probably for a number of reasons that we drive them to for taxation, business reasons that make it better.

I'm always encouraged, as I say, with the number of young farmers who are entering the industry. I applaud Ag Financial Services and the program that we have for beginning farmers. I think it's there to help them through the first years and make sure that they do have a chance to be successful. I don't disagree. We provide quality food products in this country, and we have always had very, very cheap food. In Canada we spend far less of our disposable income on food than any other country, perhaps than the U.S.

We're hoping that our rural development initiative may come up with some intelligence as colleagues travel the province as to barriers, things that we as a government can do differently, that we can change some of the policies that we have that may be prohibitive to them. We'll keep working on that. The number of farmers is relatively stable in our province, and that's encouraging.

So with that, I'll look forward to more questions or the vote.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to add my voice to this auspicious debate in the House today and make a couple of comments and then a question to the minister. Certainly, I would echo the comments of my colleagues that this is a remarkable department challenged with running one of the biggest industries we have in Alberta, and they're doing a great job, and I can attest to that on a number of trade missions that I have had the pleasure of going with the agriculture department on. Certainly, I see several members of the team up in the gallery, and I wanted to pass on to them our department's sincere thanks for the joint effort, because it really is Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and Economic Development, and it's been a good, good relationship.

But we have a couple of challenges, and I'd like the minister to comment if she could. I know that the hon. members for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and Wainwright were charged with a rural development initiative, and our department has come to the conclusion that this is a vital initiative for a number of different reasons and would like to get the minister's thoughts on that rural development initiative and where it might be and where we might see that moving ahead. Clearly, a healthy rural Alberta makes for a very healthy urban Alberta.

The second comment that I wanted to make that I think your department has taken a leadership role on, Minister, is on value added. At this point Alberta clearly is still a commodity-driven economy, and commodity prices fluctuate on a world market, and in order for us to avoid that and get over that level, we in Economic Development believe that we have to have a strategy in place. I know your department has referenced 20-10 by 2010. I wonder if you could maybe elaborate on that and let us know how that's going to get us to the value-added position that we want to be in and in what kind of time frame your department sees that transition taking place.

A final closing comment would be that I think your department has positioned agriculture as one of the most important industries in Alberta, and I think that any kind of program or plans in place should continue along those lines with the support of our department and I'm sure all the colleagues in the Legislature. So thank you for that.

Mrs. McClellan: I'll be brief in my comments because I know there are other members that want to add to this. I thank the minister for his comments and applaud him because this really is a team effort, and we appreciate working so closely with Economic Development. There isn't an either/or. There isn't any competition between our departments. It's fully a joint: let's get the job done; we'll provide the product; you sell it. And it's working well.

I think the challenges in the rural development initiative are being met by my two colleagues. They're certainly getting great advice from communities that they're meeting, and I'm as impressed as they are with the number of communities that have come together as a block and said: we can do things as a region. There is the communities of opportunity group. There are a number of them that have just said: if one of our areas is better, we'll all be better. So that's great. We're pleased that we're going to be part of the cross-ministry initiative with Economic Development.

One of the things that the Minister of Economic Development and/or I, I think, can really applaud is the ag tourism group. I was able to go to their third conference with the minister at the wonderful Reynolds Museum in Wetaskiwin earlier this year. What an enthusiastic group. They are just so interested in growing that, and what an amazing statistic to me when I read in some information that one in three vacations in this province included an ag experience. Isn't that really quite amazing? So they are looking at improving that and growing it, whether it was the bed-and-breakfasts, whether it was a number of areas that they're doing. So they're doing a great job. They're enthused. They're all volunteers.

Value added. I really erred when we were talking about the Leduc processing centre. While I mentioned that they had produced about 110 new food products – these are our wonderful entrepreneurs – I neglected to mention that a week ago today we kicked off the incubator project there. It was rather a neat little experience. AVAC, the Agriculture Value Added Corporation, partnered in this, and the chairman of AVAC has a lot of experience in incubators, but they're always chickens. So it was a great event. We had our research partners from the University of Alberta, many from our applied research, crop development north, from many areas there. It was a full house. Our Premier kicked it off. The MLA for Leduc, who is always a strong supporter of what they're doing at the food processing centre, of course participated, and we were so proud to have the Premier recognize the value of the value-added industry.

That incubator is really key, in my view, to moving this value-added industry to the 20 billion dollar mark. I likened it to the Leduc processing centre being termed a school, and the incubator is our graduate school of that enterprise. Sometimes companies just need a little bit more time to establish their markets, their financing to be ready to go into the national, provincial, or world market. This incubator will give them that opportunity. Statistics show that 80 percent of companies that go through the incubator experience are successful, 80 percent that don't have some difficulty. So it is a great initiative, and I think it'll go a long way to helping us achieve our $20 billion in value added by 2010.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you. Finally. Two things that you didn't have a chance to talk much about. One was the value-added industry with the de-hy plants, and there are a few of them across Alberta. The one in particular that I have deep concern for is the alfalfa plant in Mayerthorpe, in my constituency. Difficult times, you know, the last couple of years for the plant. The input costs have been very high, the utilities being the highest, but low yields have really caused the local plant some problems. I'm just wondering about some of your thoughts on what the future of these plants is here in Alberta.

The second one and the good-news story is Horse Racing Alberta. As you know, Alberta-bred horses are becoming well known all across North America, and I applaud you and your staff for making the commitment to this industry. Too often we hear negative comments, especially in this House, on this industry. I thank you for your support, and I'd like to hear some comments about where your department is going with the new Horse Racing Alberta team.

I'll leave that for now. I know there are others that would have some comments as well. Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: There's no question that this has been a very tough, tough year for our de-hy plants. It's been a tough year for a number of our processors. Whether it's finishing in feedlots or processing that product or de-hy crushing, all of these areas have really suffered from the drought and the spin-off effects of it. What we can do for those that we are involved with: through Ag Financial Services, certainly, looking at ways that we can help them through with good financing information and plans; continuing to look for more markets, anticipating a great year this year, because for that industry this is the type of weather we need to get going. Probably the best news that the alfalfa, well, any hay sector has had is this spring moisture, but it's going to be a tough year until we get some production on for those plants. There's no question that they do a great job. There are markets out there, but when you don't have product, it's pretty difficult to get through the year.

Horse Racing Alberta, a new entity taking responsibility entirely for how their operation is managed. I know that the Minister of Gaming would share my compliments to them on doing what they said they would, taking over the management of this industry. The equine industry in this province is very important. We have the majority of horses per capita in Canada, and the industry here is a complete industry. We have show jumping. Spruce Meadows is now the number one show-jumping venue in the world, which brings international visitors to our province on many occasions. They operate at least four major meets, one of which is coming up in June. I encourage anybody who has not visited Spruce Meadows to go, but if you have the opportunity to go during the Masters, it is like being in a totally international world. So there's the show-jumping sector. There's, of course, the working horse. Horses are used a great deal, whether it's in our feedlots checking animals for disease or illness or on ranches. There are a number of ranches in our province where no vehicle travels. They completely manage their cattle with horses. Of course, there's the pleasure sector, and we have examples of that right here in Edmonton with the great stables just down the hill. So it's important that we maintain the whole of that. It's part of the tradition and culture of our province, no question, but it's also a good economic generator for us. Each part of this industry requires the other for support, so we're far better off to have the total industry.

I believe personally that the breeding program offers a lot to our province. Our horses that are bred for the racing circuits are in demand from other countries like Ireland, the United Kingdom, the U.S., and others for sale because they're a strong horse. So our breeders have an opportunity there. In the cities and in small cities where horse racing operates, it offers some tremendous job opportunities to people. If you ever have the time, rather than to just simply criticize what happens, go down and spend a little time in the backstretch right over here at Northlands and talk to some of those people about the pride that they feel in the job that they do, people who might not have a job if it weren't for that industry being there. If you look at the total contribution that it makes to the economy of the community that it's in as well as the communities around it, then it was worth listening to them and supporting them in gaining their independence. One thing I want to make very clear: the only way that Horse Racing Alberta gets an increase from the government of Alberta is by performance. You know, that's just not a bad way to have it. If you work harder, you gain more. If you don't, you don't. If we had that in a lot of other areas, I don't think it would be such a bad idea.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 7, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/05/07

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

International and Intergovernmental Relations

The Chair: Are there any questions or comments to be offered with respect to these estimates? We would call on the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Jonson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to discuss the estimates for the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations and the 2003 business plan. First of all, though, I would like to introduce some people from my ministry who are with us this evening. If they might stand when I go through the list: Gerry Bourdeau, Deputy Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations; Garry Pocock, assistant deputy minister, Canadian intergovernmental relations; Wayne Clifford, assistant deputy minister, international relations section; someone that is not yet here this evening but is here in spirit, I'm sure, Helmut Mach, Alberta trade representative in our trade policy section; Susan Cribbs, director with the Canadian intergovernmental relations section; Lori Sajjad, director of corporate services; Kathryn Wieggers, communications director; and Douglas Mills, my executive assistant.

I think, Mr. Chairman, it's worth noting that I have just introduced more than 10 percent of the staff in my ministry. I think it is safe to say that we are a small organization with the capability of doing good things. Examples are the important role my ministry played and continues to play in security, Kyoto, softwood lumber, and international travel. The mandate of the ministry is to provide leadership in the management of Alberta's international and intergovernmental relations. Much of our work is policy related and strategic, not program delivery. IIR works closely with frontline ministries to negotiate important agreements. We also plan conferences and missions for the Premier and other ministers.

IIR is a source of information and advice to departments on managing the relationships with key players. We take the lead departmentwise in trade negotiations, on national unity issues, and discussions at first ministers' meetings and Premiers' conferences. The ministry also leads the development of governmentwide strategies and policies for Alberta relations with other international governments, organizations such as the World Trade Organization, and federal, provincial, and territorial governments.

There are three goals, Mr. Chairman, in our overall business plan. The first goal focuses on relations within Canada by "promoting the interests of, and securing benefits for, Alberta as an equal partner in a revitalized, united Canada." We see Alberta effectively participating in a Canadian federal system that better serves the needs of Albertans. We believe that Alberta can provide effective leadership that supports a strong, united, and secure Canada.

The ministry's second goal focuses on "promoting the interests of, and securing benefits for, Alberta from strengthened international relations." IIR works on intergovernmental relationships that facilitate the two-way flow of goods, services, people, and investment between Alberta, the United States, and other trade partners. We also take a strategic approach to Alberta's international relations to effectively promote the province's interests and priorities to foreign governmental decision-makers.

The third goal of this ministry is "promoting the interests of, and securing benefits for, Alberta from greater trade and investment liberalization, domestically and internationally." Mr. Chairman, we do this by working to expand trade liberalization and foreign market access for Albertans through international trade and investment agreements. We also support expanded Canadian internal trade liberalization to promote the free flow of goods, services, capital, and labour across the nation of Canada.

IIR's three goals support goals in the government of Alberta's business plan that state that Alberta will have a prosperous economy and Alberta will have . . .

An Hon. Member: They can't hear you.

Mr. Jonson: They can't hear me?

The Chair: Hon. members, apparently we're having some difficulty hearing. With this wonderful, marvelous technological ear aid I'm able to hear the hon. minister, but apparently no one else is. So we would invite those who wish to converse very softly to do so and those who can't to go out to the outer parts of the Chamber.

We're sorry for this interruption, hon. minister. If our technology is failing us, you could speak louder.

Mr. Jonson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've lost my touch since being a high school principal, so I'll have to crank it up a bit.

Mr. Chairman, part of our work is ensuring that Alberta will have a financially stable, open, and accountable government and a strong intergovernmental position in Canada.

My ministry is divided into three sections: Canadian intergovernmental relations, international relations, and trade policy. I will now take a few minutes to discuss the key initiatives in the year ahead for each of these sections.

The Canadian intergovernmental relations section works with other government ministries to co-ordinate relations between the province and the federal government to ensure that Alberta's interests are promoted and protected as an equal partner within Canada. The section takes seriously its responsibility for ensuring that federal initiatives respect Alberta's constitutional roles and responsibilities, including federal activities in key areas such as health, environment, and social programming. This section will continue to work with other government departments to develop strategies in place on a range of federal/provincial issues, issues such as the fiscal imbalance, Senate reform, and the three initiatives identified recently by the Premier. These are regularly scheduled annual first ministers' meetings, a guaranteed provincial role in international agreements in areas of provincial responsibility, and Senators appointed from a list of provincial nominees. Implementation of these suggestions by the federal government would begin to address the concerns not only of Albertans but of western Canadians as well.

The climate change issue also remains at the forefront. After winning important concessions from the federal government to mitigate the economic impact of the Kyoto protocol, we will hold Ottawa's feet to the fire, at least figuratively, to ensure that they live up to their promises. Canadian intergovernmental relations will continue to provide support to the Ministerial Task Force on Security. As well, this section will continue to provide strategic support to the Premier at first ministers' meetings, Premiers' conferences, and other federal/provincial meetings.

In the year ahead we will work hard to ensure that Americans understand that Alberta values their friendship and will continue to welcome them warmly. Continued emphasis will be placed on our membership in organizations such as the Alberta-Alaska Bilateral Council, the Montana-Alberta Bilateral Advisory Council, the Council of State Governments – West, the Alberta-Idaho Task Force, and the Pacific Northwest Economic Region. We will enhance Alberta's profile in key international markets by developing mutual relations, including further developing Alberta's nine twinning relationships and revitalizing our relationship with the Mexican state of Jalisco. The section will also work to renew international governance projects in Ukraine, South Africa, and Mexico to help them establish effective management systems in their governments.

The trade policy section also works with a variety of Alberta ministries and with other Canadian governments. It helps develop provincial policies on Canadian international trade agreements such as the agreement on internal trade and the various agreements that are dealt with at the World Trade Organization. The section coordinates the province's involvement in national or international trade disputes. They advance trade opportunities for Albertans by working to remove barriers to trade. As well, the trade policy section provides analysis on trade figures and the economic factors that affect trade.

Our trade experts will continue working with their provincial and federal government colleagues to find a long-term, durable solution with the United States on the softwood lumber dispute. As you know, the Alberta government is very concerned about the impact of the U.S. trade actions on the Alberta forest industry. The Alberta forests section has been kept up to date on the process and continues to support our approach to this issue. While progress has been made, significant differences remain, Mr. Chairman. The same can be said about the wheat dispute between Canada and the United States. While we work in co-operation with the federal government and the other provinces in developing agreements, let me be clear that the province actively represents and promotes our own provincial interests.

Staff will also continue to work to ensure that Alberta's interests and priorities are clearly represented during the newest round of World Trade Organization negotiations this fall in Mexico, especially in the areas of agriculture, trade remedies, and services. At upcoming international trade negotiations the trade policy section will work to ensure the free flow of goods, services, capital, and labour within Canada.

I will now, Mr. Chairman, move on to the topic of the ministry's budget and staffing levels. We are a small ministry in terms of budget and staff. The 2003-2004 budget of $6.468 million has increased by $384,000, or just over 6 percent, from last year. This is the first increase in several years. The increase allows us to respond to three main financial pressures: first, the 2 percent governmentwide salary increase for staff; two, continued support for the Canadian Intergovernmental Conference Secretariat, based out of Ottawa; three, increased travel costs for international business missions.

I would like to take a moment to touch on these increased travel costs. If you've taken an airplane anyplace in the past little while, you certainly know how ticket prices have gone up because of increased security, fuel costs, and a number of other factors. Travel by the Premier, cabinet ministers, and Alberta government officials is vital to expanding trade and bringing foreign investment to Alberta. Alberta is a global player, with 40 percent of our jobs coming from exports. It is important for Alberta and the Alberta government to be an active player in the world economy in support of our private sector. Expanding international trade is only one benefit of international travel. Relationships that Alberta builds with other jurisdictions around the world through international travel allow the Alberta government as well as Alberta's public and private sectors to share and learn best practices. They also result in stronger and more enriching cultural and educational ties.

As for staffing in my ministry, IIR has 53 staff, and that, Mr. Chairman, is unchanged from the previous year.

Finally, a brief outline of how we measure the ministry's performance. Since the ministry outcomes are often long term or depend on external factors, they are quite frankly difficult to present as quantitative data. We solicit input from a variety of government ministries and other sources to help us measure how we're doing and to identify areas in which we can improve. We measure our performance through client surveys, secondary economic and sociodemographic indicators, and polling results. The ministry takes all of these measures and provides a detailed narrative record of our achievements, activities, and documents such as our annual report. We also do assessments on key initiatives after major conferences, trade negotiations, or international missions. These documents help us track our progress in meeting our goals in both an effective and efficient manner.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my remarks on the estimates for International and Intergovernmental Relations. Our new business plan and budget lay out how we will meet these priorities for the province in the year ahead. I would be happy to answer any questions or hear comments from my Legislature colleagues. In advance, I would like to commit to answering any of the questions in written form that I'm not able to address tonight.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Happy to be able to participate in the debate tonight on International and Intergovernmental Relations. I, too, would like to welcome all the minister's staff that are here this evening and thank them and those who aren't here tonight for the work that they do. Over the years I have had some opportunity to work with some of them and some staff from other departments who have been attached to IIR on various trips and events that they were organizing, and they've always been very friendly, very easy to work with, and certainly very good at their work. So thanks to all of you and to those from the department that aren't here.

Most of my remarks tonight will focus on issues as opposed to the budgetary amounts because as the minister says, it is a small department in terms of dollars. Mostly I'm happy to see that there's a bit of an increase there because I think it's been squeezed a little bit over the last couple of years. Nevertheless, they need to be accountable as all other ministries are, and we will be asking some financial questions.

My first comments tonight are going to be about PNWER, the Pacific Northwest Economic Region. Mr. Chairman, it's been my honour over the years, for many years, to have gone as the opposition representative. I've been here for 10 years. I think I've gone there for nine years, attended nearly every conference, and have been quite supportive of the mandate of PNWER and Alberta's leadership role in that organization over the years. I'm sorry to say that I won't actually be participating any longer. [interjection] Well, there's been a real change in direction in terms of how that all-party committee has been organized and presented.

In the past, particularly under the leadership of the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, opposition members have been warmly welcomed and encouraged to become involved. In fact, in those days it was not unusual for opposition members to chair committees and to take a really active participating role in a variety of functions. When I go to conferences or am a part of any kind of a committee, I go to work. I go to bring something to the table, not just to warm a seat and not just to be the token opposition representative. Especially when I've been involved with an organization for years, I believe that I have something to offer, to bring to the table, and I have always worked in a very co-operative fashion and tried to meet the goals of what the Alberta mandate is and work to that end. Even in the early days of PNWER, when there was sometimes a question about whether or not it was supportable, I certainly held the line on the government position and gave it some time, and I think that it was proven to be an accurate assessment of what was going on.

But this last time at PNWER proved to be not quite such an interesting experience. I certainly experienced what it's like to become a token opposition member. At the conference I was very interested in getting actively involved in the committee that was dealing with invasive species. I participated in those discussions, talked to our PNWER chair, and I believed at that time was given some direction that I would take a part in meeting the role for Alberta on the invasive species discussions over the winter and getting ready for the next summer session. In fact, I mistakenly believed that I would be the Alberta chair for that. Subsequently, I had some correspondence and discussions with the departments and people who are from Agriculture who are working in that field who I have worked with for many years on invasive species, getting ready to pull some information together, only to find out that meetings had been called and a chair from Alberta had been appointed, and of course I was conveniently left out of any discussions or any information. [interjections]

Now, I can hear a lot of members groaning about that, but you know it's very important, I think, if you're going to say that you support all-party committees on a national level or an international level, that in fact you put your money where your mouth is and do something more than just straight token representation. So I figure that my time is better spent other places where I can actually make a difference and make a contribution. So I will no longer be supporting any activities with PNWER, and I do that regretfully because I think that it was an interesting experience. Even though it was time away from my family and at a time of the year when there are many other things that you could be doing, I found those experiences. . . [interjection] I don't care where it is. It's abysmal that people could be invited to participate and then completely left out of the loop when the discussions are had.

So, at any rate, I won't be participating. Given the small numbers we have on this side and the lack of interest that the government has shown, I doubt very much if we will in the future have opposition members participating at that level. I will be quite happy to tell anyone who's interested why I'm no longer involved.

Mr. Lund: Because Liberals are an endangered species.

The Chair: Minister, you'll get a chance to speak later.

Ms Carlson: Yes. The Minister of Infrastructure is correct. In this province there is no doubt that Liberals are an endangered species, and I have some knowledge with regard to them being both an endangered species and the kind of invasive species that the government members might represent and so really had an opportunity to bring something to the table there. [interjection] He agrees with that statement, Mr. Chairman, and I'm happy to see that after all these years we finally find something that we can agree on. Nevertheless, that's the end of that role for me, so I'll share that information with the minister and his department, and they can do whatever they want with it, which is probably nothing.

My first question for the minister is in terms of lawyers' expenses and involvement in international disputes. Can you tell us how much you budget in a year for legal fees, a percentage, or how you decide what the projections might be for what the expenses can be on international disputes – and particularly I'm thinking of things like softwood lumber or countervailing duties – and then also how you choose the legal firms that represent you? Is it on a historical basis? Do you choose by tendering? Do you choose by area of expertise? Do you bring in more than one law firm sometimes to be able to expand the knowledge? Do you choose from the north and the south or alternate or both? Whatever information you can share with how you make those decisions. So if you could answer that question first for me.

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Chairman, first of all I would just comment briefly on the member's first topic. Certainly, as far as PNWER is concerned, we have valued the opposition members' – and I'm talking about plural over the years – participation in that particular organization. Perhaps, as it is noted, it is not the place tonight to go into the specifics of your concern, but I did want to put on record that if there are certain approaches that have to be corrected in this regard, I will certainly undertake to look into it.

With respect to lawyers, Mr. Chairman, this is an item that I think will be best answered with a written reply, which I undertake to give to you. Three different directions that we have with respect to lawyers. With respect to major, long-term assignments such as that which Claire Reed has with respect to the softwood lumber file, as I understand, she is on retainer, and then according to the amount and intensity of the actual product which she's expected to perform, there would be additional compensation.

With respect to much of the ongoing activity of this department, however, we do have the Department of Justice. As far as I know, they're not billing us directly yet, and that is our major source of expertise. Then it is quite true that on specific items – for instance, with respect to the analysis that was done on the Kyoto issue – lawyers who were deemed to be expert in that field and the law that surrounds that issue of international agreements were retained. That's as far as I think it would be useful to go tonight, and I'll provide a more detailed reply to you.

The Chair: Before I recognize the hon. member, I wonder if we might as a committee agree to a brief reversion to Introduction of Guests.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Many members in this Assembly may be of the opinion that I am the expert on issues of low-income benefits such as AISH and SFI. It's time to come on the record because the man who actually did most of the thinking for the low-income review committee is today with us in the members' gallery. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House Mr. Vasant Chotai, who is an employee with the Human Resources and Employment department and indeed one of our utmost authorities on issues of low-income benefits. I would ask him to rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before I start my comments again, because the minister has a soft voice and because lots of people are talking, we're having a really hard time hearing him. I mean, I'm only sitting 10 feet away, but also some of our other members, the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, can't hear him either.

An Hon. Member: Earpieces.

Ms Carlson: Yeah. You know, there are no more. They're ordering one now, but in the meantime we can't hear the responses to half the questions. Just to put that on the record.

Okay. So thank you very much for that, and I look forward to your written answer in a little bit more detail.

Now I'd like to talk a little bit about the countervailing duties on durum wheat. What's the Alberta government's position on this? I think that it would be my understanding that you take a slightly different position than the Wheat Board, so can you tell me what your position is and what you plan to do over the next year with that dispute?

The Chair: The hon. minister, who is going to practically shout into the microphone.

Mr. Jonson: Well, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the trade dispute regarding wheat, this is a matter that rests with the Canadian Wheat Board in terms of the preliminary decisions that have been made with respect to an alleged subsidy in the marketing of wheat. Our role provincially, which is very, very minor, is that in the preliminary determination it was stated that there may be some subsidy involved in the historic ownership of grain cars through the heritage savings trust fund by the government. I think the calculation of the damage or the hurt that was alleged to be experienced was something in the neighbourhood of .3 percent or something, and that is something that we will oppose as this case works its way through. We do not feel that the determination really is justified, but that is something that we will have to carry forward on behalf of government and work on that part of it. But I'd just like to emphasize that the major case is one with the Canadian Wheat Board, and the Canadian Wheat Board is in a formal sense a creature of the federal government.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Mr. Minister, for that answer. Can you explain to us in a little more detail the mystery of how you actually work with the other departments in the government? We know that your mandate is to provide strategic direction, but it's hard to actually follow the process through to know when you take the lead on it and when other departments would take the lead on it. So generally do you have attached specific people to specific departments? Is there a kind of benchmark when you withdraw from an issue and just let the department handle it? We don't really understand the process.

I think it's good what you do. I think strategic direction is very needed, but I don't really understand how you decide to lead an issue or to work on an issue and when to withdraw and how people are assigned.

Mr. Jonson: The simple answer is that we did it a number of different ways depending upon the circumstances. First of all, one model would be that that was shown with respect to the creation of our security task force. In that case, I served as chair of that particular interdepartmental initiative. The people of our staff who were most familiar with that area served as support to the ministerial task force. Very key, of course, was Municipal Affairs and their people in that area. The Solicitor General was extremely important as well, and a number of other departments were involved. We led or co-ordinated the overall effort, worked on making sure the goals were there and they were pursued, but a great deal of co-operative effort took place and the staff were assigned accordingly.

With respect to the G-8 – this is another example – again it was a multidepartment effort, particularly involving ourselves and the Solicitor General's department, and of course there we worked with the officials, particularly the city of Calgary but also the surrounding jurisdictions, in terms of bringing that to fruition. A major part of that was the area that Mr. Clifford was involved in in terms of intergovernmental relations, and he did a great deal of work co-ordinating, organizing, identifying problems or gaps in the overall plan that evolved between ourselves and the federal government.

That is a general description of two different cases that I can provide for you this evening.

Just one other thing. We'll take the whole area of trade in which we work very closely with the Hon. Mark Norris's department. We have on staff an individual such as Helmut Mach, extremely well versed in the whole area of international trade, and he works with that particular department on the various issues that come up in the whole area of trades disputes, whether it's softwood lumber or whether it's some aspect of promoting Alberta. If he's called upon, he's there as probably one of our best people in that particular field.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. So if I understand it, it's like identifying a consulting project, sending a team out to work with the other organizations and pulling together the targets and meeting the objectives. Okay. That's good. Thank you.

Can you tell us, Mr. Minister, how many dollars you've got tied up in your budget with the feds for the next year working on joint projects or subjects? One that comes to mind might be any work that you're doing with the U.S. Department of Commerce. Could you list what they are and tell us how much money you've got involved?

Mr. Jonson: I would have to indicate, Mr. Chairman, that I will provide that to the member. I cannot pull together a figure in my mind this evening to answer that properly.

The Chair: Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to that. It's a more detailed answer, anyway, that you could give in writing than this evening, and that would be helpful.

In this spring session, I think it has been, we heard the Energy minister musing about joining OPEC. Are you doing anything on that? Would you lead that charge, and how would you move forward? Who would pay in that case?

Mr. Jonson: Am I am correct that you said OPEC? Well, I do not recall that remark, and if the Minister of Energy said it, he can answer the question.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Chairman, reluctant as I am to speak on another minister's estimates, I do feel compelled to correct the record. At no time had the Ministry of Energy nor the government of Alberta ever contemplated joining OPEC. What simply occurred, through the courtesy of the minister of energy for the state of Venezuela, was to express interest in us attending as an observer. This is not unusual, unique, nor would it be a first time for the province of Alberta. So to ensure distinct clarity, no musing was ever done by this minister with respect to joining OPEC.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, unfortunately, I didn't bring the specific reference with me this evening, but the Minister of Energy can be sure that I will, and he can answer that question in the House, then, at some future date.

I'd like to talk about Kyoto now just a little bit. I think, first of all, some general information. How is it progressing from your perspective, and what happened to lead you to the decisions where the provincial government has somewhat softened their stance? Now, you briefly talked about some concessions that you had negotiated with the federal government. If you could give us more detail on that and anything else that may be relevant to that particular discussion.

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the overall Kyoto initiative or Kyoto topic I'd like to emphasize that we still have on record as a government the overall approach that the government felt was the responsible way to go; that is, we said that we would develop an Alberta plan. The Premier made this statement very clearly, but a very, very important statement that was made by our Premier was that we want to sit down with the federal government. We have the Alberta plan. We want to work step by step with the other provinces and territories and the federal government to come up with a reasonable, workable, practical approach to environmental protection generally and the whole area of greenhouse gases in particular. So that is the overall position and still remains, as far as I know, the position of the government.

However, the federal government did move ahead with what we regarded as a very tight timetable. They insisted upon ratifying it. We're all familiar with the efforts that were made in Parliament, particularly by Mr. Mills, the Member of Parliament for Red Deer, to try and bring some sense to this overall debate in the rush for ratification. The federal cabinet did ratify the accord, and we are faced with having to deal with the reality that the accord is going to go ahead in some form or other. It was only reasonable that the government, particularly led by the Minister of Environment, would be involved in working hard to make sure that when the accord began to be implemented, we were having our input, having our say, and I think it is fair to say here this evening that we do feel that we have influenced some of the decisions that the federal government appears to be moving ahead with in a favourable manner.

So our overall concern is still out there. There are still problems with respect to it, but the interests of Alberta have to be taken into consideration as ratification moves ahead, and as the Minister of Environment has indicated, we are moving ahead with legislation on a thoughtful, measured basis, and this legislation will be necessary for our ability to protect Alberta's interests and to have the least possible negative impact on Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thanks. I'll just finish up with one more question and then give someone else a chance. Thanks, Mr. Minister, for that broad overview. I know we have more detailed questions on Kyoto, but I'll let someone else ask them.

My last issue is on Kyoto, but it's in reference to an article that was in today's Globe and Mail. I'll just give you a little background on it. It was about "Insurers turn up Kyoto heat," and it was about what's happening in Europe.

Big Europe-based insurance companies are considering denying some coverage to companies that aren't doing enough to reduce output of the gases believed to be contributing to global warming.

Amid fears of shareholder lawsuits against emitters of so-called greenhouse gases [some insurance companies plan to start mailing out questionnaires that] will ask customers of directors-and-officers insurance what they are doing to prepare for imminent government restrictions.

So, then, depending on what the answers to the questionnaires are, they're going to decide whether or not in fact they're going to cover them. They say that if "a client isn't doing enough, it may consider refusing the company directors-and-officers liability coverage when, in a few years, [some] countries begin implementing those rules." It's an interesting article. Maybe I'll photocopy it and send it to you.

My question from this is that I think this is something you're going to have to put into the process for decision-making. So, then, what process will you co-ordinate with the federal legislation and your legislation so that shareholders or directors or owners of companies won't get caught between two sets of legislation or . . .

The Chair: I interrupt this to let you know that there is a problem with the PA system. In a few moments some loud noise will occur, and then we wait for a minute, and they're going to retry it. Just don't be alarmed at whatever noise is made and know that ultimately it will be in our best hearing interests.

Anyway, in the meantime, Edmonton-Ellerslie, please continue.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. Really my question is that perhaps you haven't considered this as a possibility at all, but it seems like what's happening there may be considered at sometime here in the future, so could you give any initial comments on it, and will you build it into your process? When I take a break here, I'll take a photocopy and send it to you.

Mr. Jonson: Well, I would invite the member, certainly, to send me a copy of the article, and I must indicate that the first that I'd heard of this specific activity of the insurance industry in the EU was brought to my attention today at the luncheon that we had with our guest that was introduced here in the Assembly. We will undertake to follow up on what may be going on there, but that's as much as I know about it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak to the International and Intergovernmental Relations estimates this evening and to ask a few questions of the minister. I'd like to ask some questions, if I might, about Kyoto. The minister has made some comments about the Kyoto protocol, but I'd like to ask: what was the role of the department vis-à-vis other departments? Did they provide logistical support? Just exactly what other departments were involved with the Kyoto protocol reaction?

What steps, I guess, is the department taking to address Kyoto down the road? What are the plans for the future with respect to the agreement? Is the department involved in helping Alberta meet the targets under the Kyoto agreement? If that's the case, what strategies has the department developed to deal with the federal government with respect to the protocol now that it's been passed? What options were developed by this department regarding negotiations between Alberta and the federal government in putting together a plan on Kyoto? Were there economic impact studies relative to Kyoto? Were they done by this department, or were they done elsewhere, does the minister know? Is information from those studies available for the general public? So those are some questions about the Kyoto protocol.

I'd like to also ask the minister about the task force that is headed up by former Premier Peter Lougheed with respect to advising the government on the Kyoto protocol. Could we have some information with respect to the cost of that committee to operate? What is the status of the committee right now? What's it doing? Could we have, I guess, a bit of a report on the activities of the committee, the number of people involved, and the kinds of resources that are being put at their disposal and the kinds of outcomes that the government is looking for from that committee? Again, is there a time line for tabling the information from that committee? What is going to be done with respect to letting Albertans know about the work of the committee and the kind of progress that they might hope that that committee would be able to report?

There have been a number of international trips by various MLAs in a variety of government departments over the last year or two.

Maybe if the minister is willing, I would stop, Mr. Chairman, and see if there is some reaction to the first two topics, the Kyoto protocol and the Lougheed committee.

The Chair: Before we call upon the hon. minister to respond to those questions, I wonder if we might just take a momentary break while the audio engineer does whatever magic he or she may do. So if we could just wait for a moment, please.

I think we're now ready to operate, so we'll call upon the hon. minister to respond.

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, first of all with respect to the question about the funds involved, I do not have those dollars and cents before me, but certainly we would be prepared to provide you with answers in that regard.

Secondly, I think it's important to just think back to the time that this whole Kyoto issue, to put it politely, blossomed forth as one of the major issues before the nation of Canada but also specifically Alberta, and we felt that it was important to look at the whole situation regarding the possibility of implementation and to bring together a cross section of people very knowledgeable in the various aspects of dealing with industries that emit greenhouse gases. So we had an individual on the committee from labour, we had people who were directly involved in the oil and gas industry, we had people involved in some of the organizations of petroleum and industrial business, and if I recall, it was about a 12-person committee. It was chaired by Premier Lougheed, and I attended, and normally the Minister of Environment was there as well, and we just went through what were going to be the implications of Kyoto and how we could best constructively but forcefully respond to what was happening at the federal level with respect to its implementation.

The current status of the committee is I think you'd say – "on hold" is probably not the best term. It's still there. We still will look to it for advice if there are additional issues that come forward with respect to the whole matter of Kyoto implementation. Another area in which they provided advice was with respect to the structuring of Bill 37, I believe it is, which is before the Legislature but not planned for passage until the fall.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd started on some questions about international trips by various MLAs and cabinet ministers who go abroad with the legitimate purpose of promoting the interests of the province. Sometimes I don't think that we're fully informed or even fully appreciate the value of those trips and what has been gained by the members being involved in them, so I wonder if the minister could tell me if there is any sort of overall co-ordination governmentwise of international trips, or is each department responsible for their own plan? Is there sort of a standard expectation?

For instance, I know that when we go on parliamentary trips outside the province, when we come back we're expected to submit a report of some kind, not usually extensive, but some sort of report to indicate what was learned or what the benefits of the trip were, particularly to taxpayers. Is there any such requirement, and is that requirement standard across departments? Is there ever any follow-up in terms of the efficacy of the trips and whether we're really getting good value? Are we going to the right places? Is there, as I said, a co-ordinated approach? Is there any co-ordination between International and Intergovernmental Relations and the Public Affairs Bureau?

In terms of the trips themselves, who is the one that ends up deciding that they should be undertaken? Is there ever a comprehensive reporting of the trips in one place, or are they sprinkled throughout the departments?

So any information about the trips and the co-ordination and the reporting that comes from them. I know that particularly when ministers are going, there's usually a press release saying that this is where the minister and his staff or the entourage are going, this is their itinerary, and this is what we expect to accomplish. Again, is that standard across government? Is that something that we can expect for every trip? When the Premier travels – for instance, when he was in New York in the latter part of last year – it gets reported that the Premier is there, usually in the media. Again, in terms of the outcomes of the trip we often aren't privy to the longer range goals that have been achieved, so I wonder if that's dealt with in any way by the department or within government as a whole?

I'd like to talk just briefly about the Senate. I wondered if steps have been taken to advance the elected Senate? Now, the minister made some comments about it, but just where are we? I think they're poised to appoint a new Senator for the province. Is intergovernmental affairs involved in that appointment in trying to influence the actions of the federal government? Just what is the state of discussions with the government over that?

Just one, maybe two, areas and then I'll leave the questioning for a few minutes, Mr. Chairman. In terms of exporting water, which department is being consulted on this issue? Again, it's an interest of several departments, so what is the role of International and Intergovernmental Relations in the export, and what background work has been done examining the issue? Is there a policy that's being developed? We hear statements every once in a while, but is there a comprehensive rationale for the position that the government is going to take or has taken on water export?

The last topic for now that I'd like to ask some questions about is the whole business of counterterrorism. Can the minister give us some idea of who the department is consulting with and the kind of crisis management plans that are in place should something untoward happen? The border was closed in southern Alberta for a while. When that happens, what kind of protocol is in place to assure that that's done orderly and the interests of Albertans and Canadians are protected?

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Jonson: If the member doesn't mind, I'll go backwards in answering the questions. With respect to counterterrorism and the role that we have through our overall security task force, as I believe the Solicitor General has indicated a number of times in this Assembly and at other locations, we do depend upon the Canadian intelligence service, CSIS, and the RCMP for advice and updates and the provision of information as needed in their judgment.

Of course, in terms of the overall counterterrorism plan, as you call it, we are also organized in such a way through the security task force that we call upon all of the law enforcement agencies in the province to fulfill their roles as provided for in the plan. I think, however, it's important to appreciate that the counterterrorism effort has to be something that is well planned, well organized, only used when necessary, and otherwise out of sight, out of mind, not becoming a subject for the reporting of details sort of day by day. That's the nature of this type of an initiative.

With respect to water export, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the member has some specific concern here. I'm quite sure – and I was just reviewing it a short time ago – that the policy of Alberta is no bulk water sale, transfer, et cetera. I know that particularly in time of water shortage this always starts coming up, sometimes in a positive light and sometimes in a negative one, but the policy is still there in terms of out-of-country bulk water transfer.

Travel. We have a process in government whereby travel is co-ordinated through the Premier's office. Our department is very much involved in commenting and helping and facilitating where needed or where requested. We do, as you've indicated, provide usually a preliminary news release as to what the purpose of the trip is, where it's going, what the objectives are. Then, in all the cases that I'm familiar with, any major type of trip is reported on in terms of its results or what was accomplished through a news release as well. I would not say that that is true in 100 percent of the cases because there are trips that occur every year. Perhaps there's nothing significant to report. It's just business as usual, and on we go. But, yes, we do report on our travel. It's not secret in terms of where we're going. If there was an inquiry as to what the specific cost of a given trip was, we could provide that. We don't normally go into those details, but it's not something that we're in any way hiding.

Dr. Massey: Just one follow-up, Mr. Chairman. I understand the crisis management. I mean, for the plan to be effective, parts of it have to be private. I guess the trick is: how do you assure the opposition and Albertans that the plan is there, that if there are problems, there is a good plan in place to react to that? I'm not sure there's an easy answer, but at some point there has to be some accountability to people just to make them feel secure.

Mr. Jonson: Well, I take the member's comments seriously, and I'll see if there's a better way of us being able to try and give that assurance without in a negative way affecting the potential effectiveness of the overall plan.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have just a few questions for the minister, and these are in regard to the business plan. I'm referring first to page 271, your key result 1.3 strategy. This goes on to say: "Develop policy recommendations and strategies on national unity and other related issues as they emerge." My first question in regard to this strategy is: what policy recommendations has International and Intergovernmental Relations developed on national unity? Along the same theme, given the recent strain in relations between Alberta and the federal government, what steps is International and Intergovernmental Relations prepared to take to alleviate this current strain?

I think we all realize that we have to have a good working relationship with the federal government, and the animosity that certainly appears to occur has to be diminished. We're certainly not pointing at one side or the other here, as in the majority of disputes it's rarely totally on one side or the other. So if the minister could please inform us about these relations. Also, has extra funding been provided to International and Intergovernmental Relations to deal with this current strain in federal/Alberta relations?

Continuing with the business plan on page 271, again with key result 1.3 strategies, I'm looking at the bullet:

Work with the federal government, other provinces, the private sector and other key stakeholders to update and strengthen coordinated policy responses to issues relating to the security of the province and people of Alberta.

If the minister could please inform us: which stakeholders is the department working with? Who in the private sector has been assisting International and Intergovernmental Relations on matters of security? Again, just to reinforce the issue that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods had brought up, I think that Albertans certainly are more aware and certainly more concerned about safety since the events over the last two years have occurred.

As well, on page 272 of the business plan – and I'm looking at key result 2.1 strategies – it goes on to say: "Take a leadership role on issues of Canada/U.S. integration (including harmonization of standards, common perimeter, border crossing)." If the minister could please tell us if his ministry has consulted with any outside business groups or industry stakeholders on the issue of Canada/U.S. integration. If there have been some consultations, if he would please provide us with a list of those who have been consulted.

On the same key result 2.1 strategy, what strategies have International and Intergovernmental Relations employed to take a leadership role? In other words, is there any proof the minister can provide that we have taken a leadership role as the bullet indicates that we would do? As well, how has International and Intergovernmental Relations helped to keep goods and services as well as people flowing across our border during the past year? We certainly know that because of international events security at the borders has tightened up and the flow of traffic certainly has slowed.

Continuing with the business plan, again under the key result 2.1 strategies, it goes on to say that we will "provide intelligence and policy advice to Alberta stakeholders on U.S. issues and developments." If the minister could please tell us: who is this advice provided to? How does one access this advice? Do you have to be in big business, small business, or what? Who has the availability to this information? If he could also tell us: what form does this advice take?

So with those few questions, I'll take my seat and listen to some responses. Thank you.

Mr. Jonson: Well, Madam Chairman, first of all with respect to the matter of the provision of advice the question is: do we offer and provide advice to the private sector? Yes, we do if they're looking for advice as to how to make contacts with respect to a certain type of business in a country where they would like to have the doors opened in terms of opening up business. We're not the only department, however, that works in that particular area. Economic Development, the Hon. Mark Norris's department, is very much involved when it comes to providing or facilitating business connections and agreements and trade back and forth between our province and other parts of North America and the world.

You mentioned the whole issue of cross-border activity. We have participated as a province through our department in the CanAm cross-border alliance, I think it's called. I guess you'd have to say that it's a formal organization which involves representation from the United States and from Canada. There have been a number of meetings held. One was a major conference in Calgary, that I remember attending, where we had very, very good representation from the United States. There has been back-and-forth discussion about the various security issues that exist at the border. Also, it's been very, very useful because the emphasis there on both sides of the border is that we want to keep trade going, that we want to see tourism keep going, that we want to see individuals reasonably treated, but on the other hand that cannot be done in a manner which jeopardizes the safety of, you might say, the countries involved. So that particular initiative is still going forward.

You raised a question with respect to our partners in terms of developing our overall security plan, and they are industry, local governments. Local governments, of course, have always been very, very key to our overall disaster preparedness program, and they are linked into the overall security initiative in the province. The energy industry was early identified as one which could possibly be a target of terrorism, and the energy industry has been, I think, very co-operative in terms of working towards a good plan in this province. I can go down the list. There are certain things with respect to other industries such as agriculture that have to be looked at as well. Of course, Alberta Health and Wellness is very much one of the players that potentially would be needed in having a good security and disaster response program.

Now, what did I miss here? I think I missed one topic in the middle there, Madam Chairman.

Mr. Bonner: I do have an additional question just on the security and disaster services. Obviously, when we look at this whole area, there has to be some co-ordination with the military, whether it be security or disaster services. They do play an important role, particularly when we look at these events of a larger, major disaster. If the minister could please tell us how his ministry works with either the military or with the reserve, whoever it may be, and just expand a little on what our role is in working with those two organizations.

Mr. Jonson: I think, Madam Chairman, all members realize that the command of the armed forces and the command of the reserves is under the auspices of the federal government. I think the best way to describe the relationship is that if in the course of some development it is identified that there is a threat so significant that it would require, in the judgment of our overall leadership in our security plan, the help of the federal government through the RCMP or through the armed forces, then we would have to make that case. But I think that what you're asking, you know, is: is the plan the type of plan where it's a given that they'll be involved in whatever potential threat is identified? They're not under our command; that's what I'm trying to say. We have to identify through the protocol that's involved in the overall plan the justification for their use.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I wanted to rise to talk for a moment to the minister about the effectiveness of his department. As some of the hon. members opposite alluded to, our departments do a lot of work together, and it's an honour to work with them. I see several of them sitting up there who I've traveled with, and for the amount of work that goes into arranging those trade missions, which I think are vital to Alberta's future in exports, they should be commended, and the minister should be commended for the work that he does in that regard.

To that end, I did have a couple of questions for the minister regarding plans for the future. We talked about . . .

Ms Carlson: Point of order, Madam Chairman.

The Acting Chair: Yes. Would you like to elaborate?

Point of Order Questions by a Minister

Ms Carlson: This is a question of explanation. I'm not sure what the citation is. Traditionally in this House ministers have not asked questions of ministers during budgetary debate. The time is restricted for all private members, and there have been former rulings in this House.

Mr. Norris: No.

Ms Carlson: Yes. And there have been some discussions with the House leaders about this. So I want a ruling on this, please. I think we need Parliamentary Counsel involved.

The Acting Chair: Are your remarks just about concluded?

Mr. Norris: They are, but I think that as a member of this Assembly I have every right to talk to the minister on any case. We're allotted specific time, and I'd like to use it to ask the minister some questions. But in the essence of goodwill, Madam Chair, I will get to my questions, as you have discussed. [interjection] Well, you're just wasting time.

The Acting Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, unless you can quote some authority for why the hon. minister can't make a comment – I don't know if he has any questions – I don't think you've made a meritorious point of order. After the first hour in estimates there is no restriction on government members speaking, so I don't find that you've made a point of order.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Could I just make a comment then? We'll take this under advisement, and I'll follow this up at a future date.

The Acting Chair: Very good.

Hon. Minister of Economic Development, continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Madam Chairman, and to the House. I appreciate the indulgence in hearing my comments. As I was saying, the hon. minister is responsible for the international trade portion and the office representation, and our department, as I said, has worked closely in the trade aspect. We have seen recently a number of events federally that have caused us to think that we might need a position in Washington, D.C., or Ottawa, Ontario, for more intergovernmental and less trade, and we recognize that the expertise that your department has is really where that should lie. So I'd like to get some sense from the minister as to if there are any plans to open some form of office in Ottawa or Washington or both. If so, how will that be staffed, and what role would IIR play in that?

The other question that I had is with regard to the ongoing trade negotiations that we have in the United States. Would an office in Washington, D.C., with somebody from your department facilitate quicker responses to those concerns?

Mr. Jonson: Madam Chairman, first of all I'd like to emphasize that our relationship with respect to the United States has always been one of IRR's and the Alberta government's priorities in terms of making sure that it is a positive one and that we continue to be supportive of our great neighbour to the south and hopefully work to make that be a reciprocal arrangement as well.

In direct answer to the minister's question, right now we're working hard at building on existing multilateral and sectoral relationships and arrangements that exist between the two countries. We're looking at a number of trips or missions to the United States dealing with various topics of mutual interest, and as a long-term initiative we're giving consideration to more formal representation in Washington, D.C., than we currently have. So the initiative that the minister has asked about is one that is in the thinking and probably before too long the formal planning stage.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I have a few more questions on the business plan for the minister. I'm referring to page 272, key result 2.2, and the statement goes on to say:

Provide information and advice to clients and partners (Alberta offices, Canadian posts, foreign embassies and consulates) so they can help promote Alberta's economic, political and social strengths internationally.

So if the minister could please provide us with a list of which Canadian posts, foreign embassies, and consulates the department has been in contact with and how the department interacts with these various agencies abroad. As well, if the minister could also provide us with what type of information is usually provided to these Canadian posts abroad, whether it's economic information on Alberta, tourism, whatever else.

I have one last question for the minister, and this would be from the business plan on page 275, Approval Ratings: Intergovernmental Relations. According to the graph the approval rating for intergovernmental relations dropped from 73 percent in 2001 to 64 percent in 2002. Can the minister explain this drastic drop in the approval rating?

Thank you.

Mr. Jonson: Well, first of all with respect to the approval rating, Madam Chairman, I'm pleased to report that it's gone up again. So I think that probably with a number of the troubling issues in the world during that particular year along with the dispute over Kyoto implementation and so forth and perhaps what might have been judged as less than ideal progress with respect to dealing with some of those issues, the measures may have dropped a bit, but they have certainly rebounded. I think that that is an indication that the department and all sides of government have been working effectively to deal with those issues that were current in that particular year.

The member has asked for what amounts to quite detailed information on – I expect what is required is the various missions that we've taken and what the goals of the missions and so forth were, and we would undertake to provide a written answer with respect to that, Madam Chairman.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I think I just have one more question left, and that's on the issue that we hear the Premier occasionally muse on, and that's the separation issue. How does your department deal with this situation when it comes up, and have you taken any steps to address the issue from any perspective?

Mr. Jonson: Well, Madam Chairman, certainly this particular term, separation or separatism, comes up periodically in the history of Canada. It seems to have been a recurring phrase; it's not just the province of Alberta that is sometimes thought to be the originator of such comments. I'd like to state very, very strongly that Alberta wants to be a participant, a province, a very significant part of this great nation of Canada, and we are not involved in considering separation. The Premier has very clearly articulated that we want to be a province. We want to be a participant in a renewed and strengthened Canada where there is a better balance in terms of the allocation of the funds that are collected from the nation, in terms of its application to the provinces. We want to certainly see the whole area of the Senate discussed and hopefully a plan for improvement developed there. We have as a province a number of initiatives that we feel strongly about.

I expect that we'll be into a time right now with the new government of Quebec where there have been indications that the newly elected Premier, Mr. Charest, has some ideas about how to strengthen the nation of Canada to develop a better balance in terms of powers and access to revenues within Canada to make sure that the jurisdiction over programs and responsibilities within the nation of Canada that are clearly the responsibility of the provinces is respected by the federal government. So we are taking the initiative under the leadership of our Premier of looking for a renewal and an improvement in the overall relationship between the provinces, particularly the western provinces, and the federal government.

Ms Carlson: Madam Chairman, we thank the minister for his questions tonight and look forward to the more detailed written responses. That concludes our questions on this department.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill 28
Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move an amendment to Bill 28, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003. The House amendment that is being circulated to Bill 28, the FOIP Amendment Act, is necessary to clarify the powers of the Privacy Commissioner in reviewing the decisions of the motor vehicle registrar to release information from the motor vehicle registry. Section 16 of the FOIP Amendment Act requires . . .

The Chair: Thank you for moving it. We will call this amendment A1, and we'll now await copies to arrive at the desks of hon. members.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll just make a few comments relevant to the amendment that has just been circulated in the House. The amendments are minor in nature; however, section 16 of the FOIP Amendment Act requires a change so that the request for the commissioner to review a decision of the registrar can only take place on the initial decision of the registrar for a specified purpose. Also, the amendment for section 24(b) is just for clarification. Section 25 is amended to have section 24(b) come into force on royal assent so that the necessary regulations could first be put in place. And last, the net effect of the amendment is to make it clear that people can only appeal the decisions of the registrar that are set out in the notices.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That should summarize the amendments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This amendment strikes me as being quite typical of the whole problem involved with this committee and how the bill evolved. This should have been something that was figured out before the bill was submitted to the Assembly.

Mr. Smith: Agreed.

Ms Carlson: Well, I see that the Minister of Energy agrees with me.

There are enough staff and resources, and there was enough time for this committee to bring forward a good, quality bill. This specific concern around the disclosure of information from personal driving and motor vehicle information was a key concern that was heard from times prior to this committee having even met, so it's amazing that the government couldn't get it right.

I have a question about this amendment that I'm hoping the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs can answer before we have further debate, and that's in A(b) where it talks about: in the proposed section 74.3(2) by striking out "person asking for the review was given notice of the decision" and substituting "date the notification of the decision was published." Could he give us some information on what the expected publication process is? Where? How often? Who is going to see it? Could he clarify that for me, please?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Certainly. Mr. Chairman, the parameters would be outlined in the regulations, and part of this amendment is to allow the cabinet and the council to develop regulations for it. So the parameters for that particular question, in answer to the question of the member, would be contained within the regulations, so it would be premature for me at this point to comment on the parameters as they will be set forth by the cabinet in the forthcoming regulations.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Chairman, that makes me hate this amendment even more. Why does everything have to be done by regulation behind closed doors? Why can't we just have a process where the decisions are made and set out and people reading this amendment and seeing it will know what the process is? We just want to know where the information is going to be published. Maybe the minister could add some light on this particular issue.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I am sad to hear that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is not pleased with the bill. However, I must assure you, Mr. Chairman, that our primary concern was to satisfy Albertans and not the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. However, the reason that some of the decisions are being put into the regulations and not into the act itself is to allow the legislation more flexibility. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie will appreciate that this is a rather fluid piece of legislation. She will appreciate that this particular act is not reviewed every half year or so but rather in much longer periods of time, so there is a requirement to have flexibility built into the act. Now, having parameters for such things as notification in regulation will allow the minister and the department more flexibility, and they will be able to adjust them to satisfy those who actually utilize the act, which may very well be, quite often, members of the Official Opposition.

Thank you.

9:40

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs what . . .

Mr. Smith: Is that the guy who called me Baghdad Bob?

Mr. Mason: The Minister of Energy asks about question period today, and I can tell him that I sat bolt right up in bed last night at 4 a.m. with that brain wave. I had a hard time getting back to sleep. I was so excited, Mr. Chairman, just that I woke up in the middle of the night with an idea. Who hasn't had that happen to them before?

The Chair: Hon. member.

Mr. Mason: The chairman quite rightly calls me back to the subject at hand.

I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs what happens in the interim before this section is proclaimed and the regulations developed? What happens then? Perhaps he could answer that or maybe the minister responsible could.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, we're not talking here about a long period of time. We anticipate that this piece of legislation will be proclaimed sometime around the 20th of this month, and the regulations will be developed prior to that. So there is not a long gap of time that we're looking at.

Mr. Mason: What happens in the meantime? Does it mean that people have no protection against their information being transferred for commercial purposes in the interim?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is aware of the fact that we are not now in a situation where we don't have an act that's in effect. We have FOIP legislation that's in effect and in power right now, so the powers entrenched in that act will prevail up until such time that the new legislation is proclaimed and regulations developed.

The Chair: Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for your flexibility, Mr. Chairman, on this point. My concern is this – and I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs picked up on a good idea in the committee – and that is that people give their information for motor vehicle purposes for specific reasons: for the registration of their vehicle and that it can be insured and all of the legal aspects that go with the regulation of motor vehicles. Yet what happens is that this information is provided to commercial operators that have no relation to those functions, specifically parking lot companies, insurance companies, and so on. They use this information for commercial purposes, but the information was not collected from people for that purpose.

They are not informed that this information will be used for those purposes, and quite rightly the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs along with some others of us in the committee thought that this was a problem, but of course it steps on the toes of some pretty big interests who are used to getting this information so that they can operate their businesses. So the committee brought forward the reports.

Now, what my concern is here – and if somebody can lay this to rest, I would very much appreciate it – is that there's no necessity on the part of the government to ever proclaim this section. My concern here – and I could be wrong, and I'd be happy to be corrected – is that this particular section might not ever be proclaimed and therefore just not be in the bill. That way the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, who made this motion in committee, looks good, doesn't lose any face, but the government doesn't have to step on the toes of commercial operations that have come to depend on this information, and that's what my fear is about this amendment, Mr. Chairman. If somebody can set my concerns to rest so that I can sleep soundly through the night, then I would be very happy.

Thank you.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Chairman, let me answer this question so that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands can have a restful sleep with both eyes closed and not one eye open. The provisions in the act itself that are unrelated to this particular amendment that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is bringing forward on the amendment – the select committee of the Legislature put into the report that criteria should be developed for developing access standards, and we are developing those access standards at this point in time through a steering committee between Transportation and Government Services. Those access standards will be put in the form of regulations that the very legislation we're discussing here tonight is enabling to happen. So I will have to proclaim the act to make sure that the regulations are abided by. Let me reassure you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, that that is going to be proclaimed just as soon as we possibly can. The transport safety act is going to be proclaimed on May 20 of this year, so it's going to have to be done before then. Basically, that's the same answer to Edmonton-Ellerslie's question earlier.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I just want the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to confirm that what he really intended to say here tonight was that this is a fluid piece of legislation.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, I'm not sure what connotations or denotations the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is trying to derive from the term "fluid." What I'm saying is that this piece of legislation is enabling legislation allowing the minister and the cabinet to develop the parameters and the scope of the regulations which will be attached to the act. So, in that sense, indeed, it is fluid because it is an enabling piece of legislation allowing for regulations.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is certainly interesting to see Bill 28, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003, work its way through the Legislative Assembly. It was a learning experience for this hon. member to be a part of the same committee that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs served on that led to Bill 28. There were certainly a lot of issues brought forward by various groups from across the province, and some of those issues were reflected in the report that came before the Assembly and some were not. There were many matters discussed, and there were many opinions expressed.

Certainly, when one looks at this legislation, we are going to respond to the request of Mr. Cliff Chatterton of the War Amps, and we are making clarification regarding financial information, whether it's bank accounts, credit card information that should not be disclosed without the individual's consent, and we are establishing criteria for bringing public bodies under FOIP in regulation, not policy, and allowing the Information and Privacy Commissioner to refuse to conduct an inquiry under some circumstances.

Now, when we look at FOIP and the FOIP laws in this province and how they have developed in the last 10 years, I think certainly it has been unsuccessful in bringing open, transparent government to the public. We have seen a continuous narrowing of the disclosure requirements. We see excessive fees being charged. Information is unaffordable, and I think that is very, very unfortunate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are some very good things about this legislation, but there are also some issues that have to be addressed before this bill can be supported. The number one concern from this member is, of course, fees, and if we look at section 93 and the whole issue of fees and who is to pay and what, high fees should never be a barrier to citizens receiving information from their government.

There is an ongoing historic case between myself as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the Globe and Mail, and the Department of Justice. This is an important case because it is one of the very few times that the Privacy Commissioner has had to have been excluded for one reason or another, and an adjudication inquiry pursuant to section 75 occurred, and in this case the Hon. Mr. Justice T.F. McMahon became the adjudicator, a Court of Queen's Bench justice from Calgary. It is interesting to note not only what the hon. justice has had to say about FOIP but what other individuals have had to say about FOIP as well.

Mr. Justice McMahon in a decision that was made public last spring states among other things:

(26) In decision No. 96-002, the Commissioner in Alberta described two principles to be considered when determining whether a record relates to a matter of public interest under the Alberta Act. The first is that it was intended to foster open and transparent government, subject to the limits provided. To that I would add accountability. The right of the people to require that government account to them is fundamental to a strong democracy. It is with our consent that we are governed by others; that consent is given conditionally upon good government. The decision to continue or withdraw that consent requires that the people have the information required to make an informed decision. Access to information legislation is a means by which people get that information from sometimes reluctant government hands.

(27) The second principle identified by the Commissioner is that the user should pay. Whether this is a "principle" of access to information legislation is doubtful. In any event, it begs the question of who the "user" really is. As well, this Act expressly provides for several exceptions to that "principle", one of which is central to this review.

That expresses a lot, Mr. Chairman.

Also, one must consider the Supreme Court of Canada. Now, in the decision by Justice McMahon:

(25) The Supreme Court of Canada in Dagg v. Canada (Minister of Finance) . . . considered the federal Access to Information Act . . . [Justice] La Forest . . . although dissenting in the result in that case, described the legislation's purpose in these terms at para. 61:

The overarching purpose of access to information legislation, then, is to facilitate democracy. It does so in two related ways. It helps to ensure first, that citizens have the information required to participate meaningfully in the democratic process, and secondly, that politicians and bureaucrats remain accountable to the citizenry. As Professor Donald C. Rowat explains in his classic article, "How Much Administrative Secrecy?" (1965) . . .

Canadian Journal of Economy and Political Science at page 480, . . . Parliament and the public cannot hope to call the Government to account without an adequate knowledge of what is going on; nor can they hope to participate in the decision-making process and contribute their talents to the formation of policy and legislation if that process is hidden from view.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we consider this case and the fact that there was a substantial reduction in FOIP fees, in one case from roughly $60,000 to $2,500 for the national newspaper the Globe and Mail and $500 for the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, that is a significant change, and I'm very anxious to see that this case replaces the commissioner's ruling that we have been using since 1996 in decision No. 96-002. Certainly, that indicates that the second principle as identified by the commissioner, "that the user should pay," is not really that accurate. It is described by the hon. justice as a doubtful principle.

So in the course of debate on this bill, hopefully we will get the answer. The hon. Minister of Government Services could perhaps provide that. This decision is a clear case, an indication that all is not well with our current FOIP legislation, and citizens, whether they're Official Opposition members, whether they're citizens from any region of the province, should feel comfortable approaching their government to seek information, and fees should not be a barrier to that information.

Now, when we look at Bill 28, section 2 is generally positive by expanding the definition of personal information to include biometric information. Section 3(a), as I understand it and as I recall, is housekeeping, and section 3(b) is more significant since it clarifies what is meant by a registry. A registry henceforth will only be one authorized or recognized by an Alberta statute or regulation. If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs could table a list in the Assembly for all the registries that would be captured by this amendment, I think that would be beneficial. Otherwise, Albertans would be put to reviewing thousands of regulations and hundreds of statutes looking for provisions creating or enabling a registry. Now, I believe that the hon. member may have been attempting that with the amendment. If the hon. member could clarify that, I would be very grateful.

Section 3(c) deserves some explanation. While we know what happened to the regional health authority elections, the future of regional health authority elections is still unclear. It is hard to think of an objection to this change, although it is not clear what election means. Now, if the members of a board of an agency hold an election and the board members elect an executive of one or more officers, is that not an election? Does it mean an election under the Local Authorities Election Act? One can only assume that they are talking about an election by citizens in a community, but this is not clear.

Section 4 certainly has merit since it reduces marginally one of the broadest and most cited exemptions to disclosure, namely section 16.

Now, section 5 invites the question: what is the "prescribed manner?" Prescribed by regulation or by government policy? Will the sponsor particularize now or at least commit that the regulation, if that is the means of subscription, will be shared with the Assembly before it becomes law?

In section 5(a) the wording is changed to more generally provide that the notice must be "given to." Now, does this mean that you have to prove that the third party must have received the written notice? Will that impede giving notice in compelling circumstances where time is of the essence? Not likely, since if you refer to section 83, there is a definition of what is meant by "given to a person." It sets out four different ways that notice may be given to a person. You must cross-reference section 17 of Bill 28 here since that amends section 83. The explanation has not been given that I'm aware of, Mr. Chairman, of why section 17(2)(d) is being deleted. Now, presumably the deletion of section 17(2) is due to the Health Information Act, and if that could be clarified before we proceed, I would be grateful.

Now, the new section 29(1) seems innocuous although one may be able to make the point that there is no qualification in section 29 that the fees be reasonable. There continues to be concern that if a public body announces that it will sell, for example, hospital utilization rates but at a high cost, say $10,000, they can refuse to honour an access request under part 1 of the FOIP Act.

The amendment to section 30 makes some sense and reduces some burden on public bodies, I believe, without compromising the purposes of the act.

Now, section 10 of the bill and the proposed change to section 37 clarifies what was always intended with the FOIP Act. It is individuals who may request correction.

Section 11 of the bill is a positive change. It mirrors an exclusion from the definition of personal information in the federal Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act, PIPEDA. It does not, however, allow the disclosure of e-mail addresses, but this is seen as more of an oversight in that statute.

Section 11(b) clarifies the intention of the provision and warrants support.

Section 12 of the bill would allow the release of personal information for any purpose if the other qualifications are met. You will note that the existing provision in section 43(2), that requires a postsecondary body to have a written agreement with certain elements, will be eliminated. What explanation does the province have for removing these privacy safeguards? How does it justify them? Can the government provide particulars of concrete problems posed by the existing provision for postsecondary educational bodies?

Now, section 13, Mr. Chairman, could be problematic. If you appoint an independent officer of the Legislature, you want that person to have a term sufficiently long that they are not under pressure to worry or fret about reappointment. If the term is, say, only two years, is the commissioner not likely to feel less secure than with a five-year term? We certainly don't need a commissioner who is constantly fretting about whether his decisions will irritate government and possibly jeopardize his reappointment. A longer term at least reduces that type of distraction.

Section 14 clarifies that the powers under the Public Inquiries Act are available to the commissioner for any of his adjudicative functions.

Section 15 is significant. It dramatically expands the power to refuse to hold an inquiry. It does not detail the kinds of conditions or circumstances that should be addressed in making such a decision. As a result, this decision is at the sole, unfettered discretion of the commissioner. It would be more appropriate to have the legislation indicate the conditions that should be assessed by the commissioner in making such a decision. After all, there is no right of appeal from the commissioner.

Now, in light of that, I believe this is as good a time as any, Mr. Chairman, and at this time I would like to propose an amendment to section 15 of Bill 28. I'm going to provide the chair with the signed copy and an additional 89 copies, I believe. I will take my seat until the amendments are distributed. Or can I read it into the record now, please?

The Chair: This amendment will be known as amendment A2. In the 42 seconds remaining, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you'll move it and explain.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 28, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003, be amended in section 15 in the proposed section 70 by striking out clause (b). That would certainly alleviate the concern that I just expressed, Mr. Chairman. It would reduce the expansion of the powers to refuse to hold an inquiry. This legislation as it currently exists does not detail the kinds of conditions or circumstances that should be addressed in making such a decision by the commissioner. I don't think that the commissioner needs those powers at this time.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs on amendment A2.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in his amendment is requesting that section (b) be struck out, a section that allows the commissioner to refuse an inquiry if in the mind or opinion of the commissioner the circumstances warrant refusal to conduct an inquiry.

Mr. Chairman, I must point out for the record that the commissioner is an independent body. His office is independent of the government. He is an officer of this Legislature and therefore nonpartisan, and he has been appointed as a watchdog, as a steward of the independence of this particular piece of legislation.

Now, we have chosen to have this office present and to have an individual with this capacity to hold this independent office. It would be very difficult to understand why we wouldn't then trust the individual to make a decision on whether circumstances warrant or do not warrant conducting an inquiry. If we trust in his learned judgment to make a decision, a decision that is final on matters of inquiry, why would we not then trust him to make an equally sound and educated decision on the matter of whether circumstances warrant or do not warrant an inquiry? Removal of this particular subsection of the act would create a situation where the commissioner would be forced, compelled to conduct an inquiry in the most frivolous of requests and have no opportunity to use his own judgment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll certainly be brief because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has expressed an interest in participating in debate as well on amendment A2. However, I would like to point out to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs that section 70 in the current act is adequate. I don't think we need to dramatically expand to the commissioner the power to refuse to hold an inquiry. The commissioner may refuse to conduct an inquiry pursuant to section 69 as it is now. My research indicates that section 70, the current section 70, refusal to conduct an inquiry, has only been used twice in seven years. So why do we need to expand the power of the commissioner any further?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am going to support this amendment. I think it's well done. I respectfully disagree with the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs in his interpretation. There is no doubt that the commissioner has been given the mandate to make these decisions, but as my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar said, it has been very seldom used in the past. So we certainly wonder why those powers would be required to be expanded at this particular date.

I don't recall in the meetings that we've had hearing any strong argument to increase the circumstances where the commissioner would have the ability to refuse to conduct an inquiry. If we take a look at the legislation before the amendment, it seemed to be quite comprehensive. The commissioner could refuse to conduct an inquiry pursuant to section 69 if in the opinion of the Commissioner the subject-matter of a request for a review under section 65 has been dealt with in an order or investigation report of the Commissioner.

So that's a pretty wide latitude as it is now. To add any more latitude in that particular regard begs the question of what kind of circumstances they're anticipating. We should have heard that debate through the committee at the time when the committee held its hearings or in some sort of submission, and I really don't remember seeing anything in that regard.

I would urge all members in this Assembly to support this particular amendment put forward by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, for the reasons previously stated, I would urge all members to vote against this amendment, and I would call for the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I move that we adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I'd move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports progress on Bill 28. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 23

Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move third reading of Bill 23, the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act.

The bill will result in historic legislation for this province. The Children's Services ministry responded to families of children with disabilities and other key stakeholders who expressed concern that the unique needs of children with disabilities were not being sufficiently addressed within the provisions of the child protection legislation. Through this bill the ministry will provide distinct and separate legislation for children with disabilities and their families. The Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act will provide a spectrum of proactive and family-centred services and supports that will preserve, strengthen, and empower families of children with disabilities.

Bill 23 reflects the recommendations of two committees the ministry established to develop the new legislation. Under the new act the resources for children with disabilities program will focus on early intervention, family-centred supports, as well as better co-ordination and integration of services. As soon as the bill is passed, regulations stemming from the new legislation will be developed in consultation with parents and other key stakeholders.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the proposed Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. The new legislation will ensure greater consistency in services for children and families and will also ensure that families and children receive appropriate services based on their assessed needs. A family's capacity to promote their children's healthy growth and development will be preserved and strengthened through this new act.

I urge all members to vote in favour of Bill 23.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to make some comments this evening about Bill 23, the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. I think we'd be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if we didn't put on the record the opposing views on this bill. There are those individuals and parents who enthusiastically support the legislation and are happy to see it here at third reading this evening, but we also heard some concerns raised about the bill. Those concerns were raised when we were in the committee stage of examination.

Just briefly, there was a concern that the bill might medicalize disabilities and that in that way it might be a step backwards. There was a concern that the definition of disabilities was extremely narrow and another concern that there were provisions in the bill for income testing. Now, those were, I think, the three major concerns that were raised with us. As I said, the supporters of the bill were very pleased, and we consulted with a number of the interest groups and, again, found only one of those groups opposed to the legislation.

We supported it all the way through, Mr. Speaker, and are pleased to support it this evening. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 23, Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. This will replace provisions in the Child Welfare Act for handicapped children's services, and it will provide a framework by which service plans are developed in consultation with the family and agreed upon.

The Alberta Association for Community Living is strongly supportive of this act and have made a number of good points as far as the types of improvement that it represents. They indicate that this legislation recognizes the inherent capacity of families and that many families only want and need limited assistance in order to ensure their children with disabilities have the opportunities for a life comparable to children without disabilities. In addition, families and children with disabilities who require greater assistance will also have access to the supports they require.

Mr. Uditsky, the executive director of the AACL, says:

Not a single child with disabilities should be left without the support he or she needs to be sustained within a family. Too many children with disabilities end up in the child welfare system because their families did not receive the support they required.

He believes the legislation will help to ensure children with disabilities can look forward to a future where their inherent need to grow up as part of a loving family is sustained.

So on balance, Mr. Speaker, the New Democrat opposition is prepared to support this act. However, there are some reservations. Of course, in this act as in many others the devil will be in the details. The content of service plans and agreements regarding support and therapeutic care will be entirely determined by regulation. Well, what else is new? There is a role for regulation, but it is still, I think, a flag of caution that we should be aware of. It may be necessary in order to cover a wide range of possibilities, but there is very little in the act itself which describes in any detail whatsoever what services a family may expect.

I think it's useful in terms of appeals that there will be an appeal committee, people appointed by the minister. The major concern that we foresee from some parents of children with disabilities is that therapeutic service plans, support agreements, and so on, do not provide sufficient funding, and these are likely to be the most common basis for appeal. So much will depend on not only the regulations but the programs, policies set by the minister, and who in fact the minister appoints to the appeal body. If they're not favourable to these types of appeals, then we may again find a significant buildup of people who are not receiving all the support they need.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, the concern again arises that these types of programs and levels of support under these types of programs have in the past been set according to factors that are not entirely related to the appropriate level of service that people should be receiving but can be affected, of course, by the government's fiscal planning or lack thereof. So I hope that we will see these programs designed first and foremost and funded to a level that is dependent on the needs of those children and their families that are required.

So all in all, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to speak long on this bill but indicate that with those reservations we think that it is a positive bill and commend the minister for bringing it to this Assembly, and we are pleased to support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Helen Keller, due to a severe illness before the age of two, was deprived of sight, hearing, and the ability to speak. Her courage, faith, and optimism in the face of such overwhelming disabilities had a profound effect on all she touched. The accomplishments of Helen Keller stand as a symbol of the potential in all of us. Helen Keller said: "I thank God for my handicaps for, through them, I have found myself, my work, and my God." Perhaps with the help and support that Bill 23 proposes for families of children with disabilities, they too will accomplish all they are meant to accomplish in this life.

I'm pleased to close debate on Bill 23, the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act.

The Deputy Speaker: I wonder if we might have agreement from the Assembly to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two people who have traveled at length in time to arrive at this moment. They have waited for over 25 years for the legislation that we will pass tonight in Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003. They are among the 44,000 adoptees, siblings, and birth parents who signed a petition in 1992 urging the Alberta government to open adoption records. Thanks to the Minister of Children's Services, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, and their very competent team, adoption records in Alberta are very close to being opened.

My constituent from Red Deer-North, Mrs. Sandra Ladwig, has been working for 25 years on behalf of adoptees and birth parents to help them find their birth families and to have adoption records opened, and Mrs. Marg Wood has been searching for 22 years for her birth mother. They are here tonight, even though the roads are closed between Calgary and Lacombe, to witness the passing of third reading of Bill 24, a very momentous event in their lives and the lives of many. I would ask Sandra Ladwig and Marg Wood to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move third reading of Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003.

I am proud and honoured to support this bill. It has come about as a result of a lot of hard work and consultation with Albertans.

During Committee of the Whole a concern was expressed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods about the change in terminology from "protection" to "intervention." The change in terminology from "protection" to "intervention" does not change the fundamental test for determining whether child welfare involvement is warranted. Intervention services as defined in the bill include both protective services, the services provided in situations where children are removed from parental care, and family enhancement services, the services provided to support and preserve families.

Before either form of intervention service is legally authorized, the child's survival, security, or development must be in danger. There was a suggestion that the definition of neglect and specifically the reference to the guardian's failure to provide essential medical, surgical, or other remedial treatment should be based on information from a medical professional. The director of child welfare cannot simply make a determination regarding a parent's failure to provide essential medical or surgical treatment without information from or a recommendation by a medical professional. All interventions based on a parent's failure to provide necessary medical or surgical treatment require the involvement of the medical professional, and indeed most if not all of these cases are brought to the director's attention by medical professionals.

A clause authorizing intervention when the condition or behaviour of a child prevents his or her guardian from caring for the child is being repealed. The repeal is being done because the grounds for intervention on this basis have been inappropriately used by parents to relinquish responsibility for their children in situations where there is parent/teen conflict. This approach is not consistent with the fundamental philosophy underlying the act that parents and families are responsible and accountable for their children. Under the Alberta response model support can be provided to families experiencing these difficulties.

The hon. member was concerned with the wording in section 2.1 that states, "A director, when it is appropriate, must inform a child of the child's procedural rights under this Act." Inclusion of the words "when it is appropriate" is necessary for two reasons: one, to inform a child of their rights that pertain to their particular situation; and two, to provide flexibility for the director of child welfare to provide only such information as is appropriate in the circumstances. This flexibility is necessary when dealing with young children who may lack the capacity to understand their rights.

Regarding the elimination of the role of the Children's Advocate to investigate complaints, removal of the investigatory role of the Children's Advocate reflects the concept of advocacy in a collaborative and supportive manner. Systemic issues identified by the advocate will continue to be referred to the Children's Services department and addressed through enhanced quality assurance processes.

Concern was raised over the removal of a parent's ability to apply directly to the court for a permanent guardianship order. One of the fundamental principles underlying this legislation is parental accountability and responsibility. Allowing a parent to abdicate their guardianship responsibilities is inconsistent with this principle. If a parent is experiencing difficulties in dealing with a child, supports to the parent may be available through the Alberta response model. If the child is in need of intervention and permanent guardianship is the appropriate response to the child's needs, the director of child welfare will make the application to the court for a permanent guardianship order.

The confidentiality provisions in this act are as stringent as ever. They have been redrafted to align with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and continue to protect the privacy of families while at the same time enabling the director of child welfare to share information in an appropriate way when disclosure is in the best interest of the child.

An issue was raised that provisions for shortened cumulative time in care will simply process children into the adoptive stream sooner and lessen the government's financial obligation for these children. Mr. Speaker, one of the goals of this act is to achieve earlier permanency for children who are under the guardianship of the child welfare director. The purpose of legislating cumulative time in care is to ensure that a child does not languish in the child welfare system.

The need for early permanency was a major theme that emerged from the public consultation process. Research shows that the accelerated pace of development for young children increases the need for stability and the opportunity to form a permanent bond in the early years. The shortened cumulative time in care will be facilitated and supported by other changes in the act. In particular, concurrent planning will strongly emphasize early efforts to reunify the child and the family.

Changes to the secure services provisions reflect a conceptual shift in the purpose for confinement. The basis for placing a child in a secure services facility will be crisis intervention. Child welfare workers have experienced some success in stabilizing the behaviours of a child. However, they do not have the necessary expertise to perform mental health interventions. If a child requires treatment for a mental health issue, they are best referred for treatment within the mental health system.

In regard to changes in the private guardianship provisions, we must remember that private guardianship is an important permanency option for children in the care of the child welfare director. The private guardianship provisions have in fact been strengthened to ensure that only those individuals who are capable of providing proper care to a specific child can obtain private guardianship status with respect to that child. Support will certainly be available to families who choose to take on this important responsibility.

In regard to the issue of adoption the move toward open adoption records, as reflected in the proposed amendments, is responsive to stakeholder feedback on this issue. With respect to existing adoption records the legislation strikes a reasonable balance between the rights of an adopted person to access their information and the interests of birth parents who may wish to maintain confidentiality.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Bill 24 reflects what was heard from Albertans during the lengthy review of the Child Welfare Act. The amendments in the bill not only preserve the rights of parents and children but also enhance them. The government's obligation toward older children who are transitioning to adulthood has been enhanced in the new part of the act dealing specifically with youth. I am confident that Bill 24 will amend Alberta's child welfare legislation to better the lives of children, youth, and families and will also strengthen the way Alberta Children's Services is able to support our most precious and vulnerable citizens.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a long journey through a very long bill with a lot of changes to where we are this evening, ready to approve it in third reading. I do take exception to the comments about the Children's Advocate. It's a bunch of poppycock. What's happened to the Children's Advocate in this bill is that he's been emasculated. To say that the advocate cannot investigate and now must be in a supportive role is a disservice to the children in this province. I'm upset that that's the view that's been taken. The Children's Advocate should be an independent officer of this Legislature, and this bill I think takes away some of the powers that the advocate now enjoys.

A further comment I have is the fact that we won't see the regulations, and I still feel that it's the obligation of the government to put those draft regulations in place before we pass bills in this Legislature. We've had the example where that was done by the Department of Energy, and I think it served all of us well. As the Minister of Children's Services has said: the devil's in the small print; what the large print giveth, the small print taketh away.

Those regulations with respect to this bill are particularly important. I think we'd be remiss if we didn't, before the bill is approved finally this evening, hear from the minister maybe once again about the amendments that we passed last week, amendments that I supported with respect to adoption. Since we passed those amendments, there's been some concern raised, not just locally but from a network of individuals across the country and internationally. I think it might be appropriate for the minister to make some comments with respect, again, to those amendments.

With that, I conclude my comments. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to a couple of the issues that the hon. member opposite requested, and in doing so I'd like to just pay a huge tribute to the efforts of my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo, who has gone through extensive consultation on this bill. It's been a pleasure to work with him in that regard as it was a pleasure to work as well with the hon. Member for Red Deer-North on the previous bill.

Mr. Speaker, one of the comments that has been made this evening and has been made twice on bills 23 and 24 is the concern about regulation and the development of that regulation and to make sure that in the interval following the passage of these bills, there's proper and due consultation relative to the formulation of regulation on absolutely every aspect of both bills. There will be consultations continuing as they did before the bills on the regulation and the framework for that regulation. It's been very clear to me that that's the only way that we will get the right product, and I can assure the hon. members opposite that we will do a very thorough and meaningful consultation. We've already spoken to a number of people that will be involved, that were heavily involved in their commitment to the bills in their present form.

In terms of the amendments that were passed last week relative to adoption, I would like to put it this way. While the adoption records have been concealed, a very scant few, a very few exceptional circumstances have come across the minister's desk for release. Those have been predominantly those situations where medical information on ancestors was necessary to save lives. It was a very excruciating and a very narrow window of opportunity for anybody to be passed out, if you will, to have their adoption records released.

The amendments that have been passed by this Legislature, I'd like to comment, would in fact assure that almost no records but an exceptional few would ever be held back. Those would be held back predominantly if the adoptive family knew of some particularly excruciating and extenuating circumstance that would necessitate a sober second look by the minister prior to any release of those records. We could identify incest, date rape, or some other particularly heinous situation that may well cause that adjudication by the minister to be determined to be in the child's best interest to retain and enclose that record until such time – and the amendment goes still further – that if the adult adoptee chooses to ask for release of those records because they have determined that they were adopted, have found another circumstance that alerted them to that fact, then they would be able to make that choice themselves. It's a window of opportunity for the minister to judge that some circumstances could be completely held private, but the vast majority of all of those records prior to the proclamation of this bill would be available and would be transparent and would be released as per the intent that we discussed in the original draft of this bill in this House. So I give that to the hon. member opposite.

One final concluding comment on the Children's Advocate. Although I hear the hon. member, I have a much broader view of what the advocate is doing, particularly on the natural advocate side. We're still looking at some of the opportunities for the advocate's expanded role in terms of delivery of service, and I do hope that in the final disposition of this there will be some satisfaction that the words from the hon. member opposite have been heard relative to the importance of the independent adjudication of Children's Services by the advocate.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would stand down but with the hope that this Assembly will acknowledge the very strong and positive work that's been undergone at some considerable length on this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to conclude debate.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to now close debate on Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 24 read a third time]

Bill 32

Income and Employment Supports Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs on behalf.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise and move that Bill 32 be now read for a third time.

Too often people are skeptical about consultations and reports and wonder if any actions will come out of it. As chair of the MLA Committee to Review Low-income Programs I know that Bill 32 indeed is the proof that the process works. Government listened to the voices of hundreds of people who participated in the review process. We have listened to stakeholders and people who work on the front lines with clients, and we are also taking action, action that also stems from numerous hours of consultation with hundreds of clients.

The MLA committee proposes a new integrated income support program with the flexibility to meet people's unique needs and circumstances. The Income and Employment Supports Act responds to this key recommendation by bringing three income support programs – those being supports for independence, otherwise known as SFI, widows' pension, and skills development program – and living allowances together into a single integrated income support program.

Bill 32 also enables a new benefit structure that will help people meet their basic needs such as food, clothing, and shelter and will provide additional building blocks to support and respond to people's unique circumstances, whatever they may be. That might mean access to short-term or part-time training programs to upgrade and expand people's skills. It might mean providing health benefits to some people who leave the program and find employment, and it might mean help getting child support.

With Bill 32, Mr. Speaker, we make a direct link in legislation between income support and employment support. Instead of having two parallel tracks, we will integrate them into a new approach that focuses squarely on people and helping them have the skills they need to contribute to Alberta's growing economy and meet some shortages in the labour market and support themselves and their families. There will also be building blocks of support for people who are unable to work. We must not lose sight of the fact that even with Alberta's strong economy there are some people who are not expected to move into the workforce. They simply have barriers to employment that cannot easily or at all be overcome.

Mr. Speaker, with the approval of Bill 32 in this Assembly our plans are to proclaim the act in early 2004. Our goal has been to continue to be a new income and employment support program that will help Albertans lead more independent and productive lives, and Bill 32 is a major step forward to achieving this goal.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Bill 32, the Income and Employment Supports Act, certainly on the surface may look like an improvement, but one has to be very cautious because this bill could be used to further privatize the delivery of social benefits in this province.

Now, it's very difficult to support this bill, Madam Speaker, because it is attempting to expand an already flawed system without fully addressing its shortcomings. Alberta's Auditor General in the annual report from 1999-2000 stated that "there have been problems with the controls over funds spent on training and employment support programs." Going back to the 1996-97 annual report from the Auditor General, it also identified that problems existed with the integrated training pilot, the ITP program, administered by the former Alberta Advanced Education and Career Development, that can result from inadequate program development, contract definition, and contract managements and that there have been public allegations of inappropriate practices relating to services provided by a certain company, Career Designs Inc., under the ITP program.

In the same report the Auditor General also identified deficiencies in performance measurements in two training and employment support programs; namely, the ITP and the skills development programs. In his 1997-97 annual report the Auditor General commented on considerable progress made by AAECD in addressing previous concerns, but the following year he identified instances of inadequate monitoring by AAECD which resulted in a risk that external providers of employment training under certain programs receive payment for services not fully rendered. There have been many examples of this recently. Now, the Auditor General wrote that risks associated with the administration of training and employment support programs where reliance is placed on external service providers are significant and require careful management.

So I think we should proceed very cautiously with this bill. I think the first thing to do and the right thing to do would be to increase benefits, the benefits that we discussed at committee. The benefit rate of $20 a month that's coming in June for some of the clients or the recipients is certainly not adequate.

Madam Speaker, in the Auditor General's 2001-2002 report he again recommended that "Human Resources and Employment improve the procedures to monitor compliance by training providers with the terms of the Skills Development Program," a recommendation he had made the previous year.

Now, again, "during the 2001-2002 year, the Department spent $132 million on the SDP, $30 million of which was reimbursed by the Government of Canada under a cost-sharing agreement." The Auditor General advised that "the Department should have a plan, based on a risk assessment of the training providers, to review training providers' compliance with the terms" of skills development programs.

There are many other examples, as I mentioned before, why one would proceed with caution to initiate the further privatization of program delivery, but there are other questions that I would like to certainly get on the record, Madam Speaker, at third reading. I'm still waiting for a response from committee.

When we're discussing Bill 32, will those who are able to receive training and employment have access to a telephone so that a future employer may reach them, or will there be certain criteria that have to be met before telephone service is available? Hon. members should consider this and attend a few public meetings. This is a big issue with Albertans who are receiving social benefits. A telephone is a basic necessity these days, and some cannot afford it, certainly, on the rates that they're getting. What justifies an individual having a telephone? Would it be children, or would it be an illness? Would it be a specific condition? What about a single man who has fallen on hard times or is in seasonal labour and cannot afford a stable residence or is moving to where the jobs are? Telephone and service costs don't seem to figure into any available information when we talk about Bill 32 and the market-basket measurement. Now, I believe that we are all aware that the friendly next-door neighbour in some situations is no longer available.

Also, Madam Speaker, when we consider transportation in all of this, is the hon. minister prepared to negotiate reasonable bus fees for low-income families and also make sure that the busing services are readily available to ensure that employees can look for work or get to a new job on time? There are many examples in this province where busing services are totally inappropriate for accessing employment. In those cases, will the minister be providing vehicle allowances to ensure the hand-up system will be a hand up and not a smack down by the employer because the worker can't get to work on time?

Again in regard to these measurements, will the minister ensure that individual incomes are sufficient to access reasonable, easily accessible, and safe child care so that these employees can concentrate on either their education or their new job and not on the problems of dealing with poor child care situations?

Now, there are other items that need to be discussed in regard to these proposals. We heard from the hon. minister the other night on some of those federal child tax credits, but presently if a parent files an income tax form and files for the child tax credit, the provincial tax claws these funds back and puts the money in general programs for children. At this time I have to ask: does this provide assistance to the individuals to achieve a hand up? The federal government is subsidizing the province, and consequently no individual in need gets ahead. Child maintenance support programs fall under the same practice. Dollar for dollar these funds are clawed back to feed the general coffers. Again, the very people who were to benefit end up subsidizing our social assistance system.

Is Bill 32 going to provide social programs that work for people? Can we expect people to take personal responsibility when it appears they are punished? How will the people that participate in this study really know that what the government heard is not being amended behind closed doors to some unrecognizable form that continues to keep poor people poor? How does the average Albertan gain ongoing knowledge of these changes in the system so that they can be monitored for effectiveness?

Again with Bill 32 who will be ensuring that benefit levels support the smooth transition into the workforce, and what about the benefits continuing when the small to average business employer does not provide health plans but expects each employee to carry their own?

Now, the whole issue of accountability here, Madam Speaker, is an issue that I feel we should address as well in the time that we have. Will there be opportunities for an ombudsman system to ensure that what was heard from the individuals themselves and those who work with the families and the individuals in need has been listened to, heard, and acted upon beyond the infrequent reviews? What was heard? Fairness, an integrated income support program, access to information. Who interprets? What policies tie the hands of those most able to assist clients, social workers in that case, and who has the authority? The government uses the big-stick method because they think the people who end up on social assistance are lazy, selfish, or stupid, and these are stereotypes that I think we need to eliminate. Who are they to judge or who are we to judge until we walk in someone else's shoes?

Will this government also acknowledge that they are continuing to create low-income families and perpetuate the circle of social assistance or welfare by their own government policies? They expect all family members to contribute, yet they also want students to do well in school and achieve to get an education. When will the government scratch its “take a job, any job” policy and its “go on student loans” policy?

Now, the average debt load for a student is often $25,000 and up, and there’s often no job relating to training or education. This has been referred to as the fast-food syndrome. If the youth members of a family have to contribute to the family income and not through an educational fund, how does this policy stop the welfare or the social assistance loop from continuing and continuing and continuing?

When, Madam Speaker, will the government concentrate on job-generating industries so there will be jobs for the newly educated and debt-ridden Albertans? Now, we know there are jobs certainly being created, and I hope that continues. I really hope that continues. But there have to be jobs for the individuals that are leaving the training-on-the-job programs, and this just can’t be a circle where you go from one training program to the next training program, from one private little school to the next private little school set up to provide the perpetual training programs with no positive results at the other end.

When will the government produce widely available labour market information in regard to how successful past programs have been? I don’t have to use FOIP to see how things are working out, but if I have to, I will, and I’ll be patient. Hopefully, I will get at least some information from Human Resources and Employment because these are tax dollars either from the federal level or from the provincial government, and taxpayers have every right to know how their money is being spent.

In conclusion, in regard to Bill 32 I would again caution this House and its hon. members that if we’re going to further privatize the delivery of these services through this bill, I do not think that is a step in the right direction.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I urge all members to give Bill 32 their full support, and I move third reading of the Income and Employment Supports Act.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: You’ve closed debate, hon. member?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Indeed. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: The Committee of the Whole is called to order.

Bill 28

Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I’d like to make a few comments in connection with the bill. As members know, I participated in the all-party committee that considered this particular piece of legislation, and I think that despite a number of difficulties in the operation of the committee it made some small progress on the bill. I think the report reflected some things that were positive, but I want to just indicate to you and to members of the Assembly some of the difficulties that exist in obtaining information under the system that will not be affected by the changes we have here.

I’d like to talk about our experience recently in seeking to obtain information with respect to the arrangements that were made between the Alberta Treasury Branch and West Edmonton Mall and the Triple Five Corporation in connection with settlement of the financial issues that were there. Just by way of background, what we had in this case was the Alberta Treasury Branch officials claiming that one of their former officials had been bribed by Triple Five officials in order to give a very, very favourable financing arrangement on the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall. Now, this is a most serious situation, and in fact there was and I understand still is an ongoing police investigation in connection with this matter. So as the Treasury Branch is essentially the public’s bank and as the Assembly is responsible for oversight of the Treasury Branches, we naturally think that it’s a very important matter for us and for the public to try and find out what happened.

Now, just by way of background, the suggestions of bribery surrounding this company and public officials go way back to the mid-1970s when an alderman on Edmonton city council claimed that he had been offered a bribe. The result was that there was a judicial inquiry that was called. It was the Morrow inquiry, Mr. Chairman. I have read that report and have copies of that report, and I can make it available for anybody that would like to read it. It was a very interesting report. Of course, the justice studied the matter in some detail but was unable to show any conclusive proof that anyone had been bribed, but he did not say either that there was clear evidence that no one had been bribed. He was just unable to show that this had occurred or to make any substantive case that this had occurred.

Now, there have been subsequent to this a number of allegations made from time to time, and in fact in at least two civil cases that have been brought before the courts suggestions were made that this sort of activity was continuing. However, the courts have been very, very liberal, not in the capital L sense, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, in the granting of actions to seal evidence and to impose gag orders on people who have something to say on the matter. So there is a long history of this issue percolating around this province, and for a number of reasons all of the facts relative to this situation have never come out, Mr. Chairman, but many people in our society have some degree of knowledge of these events. Nothing, however, has ever been proven in a court of law.

However, we have the situation where officials of the Treasury Branch, in trying to settle the matter of the refinancing provisions for West Edmonton Mall, made the claim that their previous superintendent had been bribed in order to make these things. Those are all on the public record. Then when that person was tracked down, because he disappeared and was tracked down somewhere in the United States I believe, he indicated that he would be suggesting that there was political interference in the matter by people in the Alberta government. In fact, Mr. Bray, I believe, also indicated similar sentiments. It was at that point, Mr. Chairman, that suddenly a deal was made. A deal was made on the question of the lawsuit, and the lawsuit was settled. Of course, there are confidentiality provisions in that agreement, so we may never know what actually transpired and what the deal was, and of course the bribery allegations have disappeared along with everything else.

We as the New Democrat opposition have made a sustained effort to try and bring this to light. We think that's our job, we think that's the job of the Assembly, and we have been pursuing this through the FOIP legislation. It is, in fact, very difficult. We made our first application under FOIP on January 3, 2003. In early February the public body, in this case the Alberta Finance department, asked for an additional 30-day extension, which we granted. Then in early March the Finance ministry asked for a second 30-day extension. The second extension has to be approved under the legislation by the information and privacy office, which did grant the extension without explanation to us. We did ask for clarification from the information and privacy office, and that was then provided to us. Finally, we received a response to the original request on April 9. The response made no specific reference to the financial and settlement agreements that we had originally applied for other than that they were being denied on the grounds that they constituted privileged information or policy advice from officials.

As it turned out, they claimed that there were only 209 pages of records responsive to the request. So, Mr. Chairman, the question we ask, one of many, is why did it take 90 days to find 209 pages worth of records? Second, of those 209 pages of responsive records, we received copies of the release agreements with the Ghermezians and with Elmer Leahy which we had not even requested in the first place. So it looks like we're going to appeal, but the appeal will likely not be heard for several months. There we have it: a real-life experience with the legislation that we now have dealing with information and privacy and clearly something which is a major issue.

However, the broad categories, which are advice from officials and anything that the government cares to sign of a legal nature that has a nondisclosure element to it, cannot be disclosed automatically even if they should be, Mr. Chairman. This is the inherent weakness of this because it puts the government firmly in the driver's seat with respect to the release of information. In this particular case, the government apparently has signed an agreement with nondisclosure clauses which suppresses information related to allegations of bribery by a former senior official of the Treasury Branches, which is an organization responsible to this Assembly. So members of the Assembly cannot find out what happened, the public cannot find out what happened, and this in my view is the fatal flaw in the legislation that we have.

The amendment act proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs does not affect this fundamental power of the government to essentially hide anything of substance that they wish. They have these abilities to do it, and fundamentally the legislation both before and after this act will still reserve those powers to the government. So if you want to find wrongdoing, if you believe there's wrongdoing, the interesting thing is you can't use the FOIP Act to find it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to follow up a little bit on something that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands talked about, and that's to finish my comments on the difficulties of the operation of the committee.

I went into that committee expecting that we would see the kind of decorum that we had seen with regard to the FOIP Act by a former member of this Assembly, and that was Calgary-Buffalo, Gary Dickson. Gary Dickson was the proudest man in this Assembly when the FOIP Act was passed. He had worked for years to try and bring freedom of information and protection of privacy into this province. While he wasn't completely satisfied with the way the government brought it in, it was in his estimation, as I understand it, a step in the right direction.

He put a huge focus on the balance of the committee that both were equally important: freedom of information so that we could find out what was happening with the balance of the protection of individuals' rights and privacy. He always pursued any issues on this particular act from that perspective, always maintaining the highest of ethics and holding everybody accountable to those same kinds of ethical standards.

That was the kind of behaviour I was expecting on the committee, and from the members we got it, Mr. Chairman. The chairman of that committee was a different kettle of fish though. I had thought that because he was a lawyer, we would see some hugely ethical behaviour as a chair. Imagine thinking that, but I did because that's what I had seen from Gary Dickson and had expected the same to happen. Instead, we had a chair who somehow didn't really know how to chair, and when he got called on the record on it got very offensive, very defensive, and derogatory whenever possible. [interjection] It's on the bill, Mr. Chairman, with regard to how important it is as we bring in pieces of legislation that people on that committee had a fair chance to speak and represent their views and that we see them represented in this bill.

I would put it before the Assembly that that is not the case, in fact to such a point that I attempted to bring up a point of privilege against the chair of that committee and put it on the record and then wrote a letter to the Speaker. Well, of course, it turns out you can't do points of privilege when committees are struck. It's certainly in the Standing Orders. But it was very important to put the kind of information that happened there and the kind of deliberate manipulation by the chair to not have people bring forward their views that would then be incorporated into this act that we see before us.

The Chair: We have a voice over here that's being heard, and it's from a place that they ought not to be if they wish to raise their voice.

Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I hear the comments too, wondering about the relevance of this, but I would put it to you that it's extremely relevant when we talk about the process of being able to bring in information on bills and we talk about all-party committees where the members from those parties other than government parties actually come with the intent to get some serious work done and to have a fair and equal voice. That didn't happen in this situation.

As a result, we had some disruption in the committee and the subsequent results. We see some of the consequences of those results being talked about here this evening when the government has to bring in amendments to clean up their legislation, and we see my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, who was also a member of that committee, bring in amendments to try and clean up areas that hadn't been, we don't feel, properly dealt with because of the stifling effect that the chair tried to have on the committee and the kind of language that he used, including things like saying "a deliberate attempt by certain members to hijack the chair's agenda," "a deliberate attempt to overtake that agenda," "attempts at chicanery," "attempted coup," that kind of language. I will table the required numbers of copies of the information we have here in terms of my concerns about this chair's conduct in that assembly.

The good news, Mr. Chairman, is that I'm not afraid to persevere on issues that I find are important not just to myself but to members of this province who otherwise might not be heard. However, it does have a debilitating effect on committee members and on the progress that they can make in any situation. As a consequence, we see here, Mr. Chairman, a bill that is not the best that it could possibly have been. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands referred to that when he said that some success was had in the committee but perhaps not as much as we might have otherwise seen.

I wanted to ensure that we had those particular points on the record because what I see as an outcome in this particular bill is a heavier focus on the protection of privacy than on the balancing of freedom of information. Edmonton-Highlands I think made a very eloquent speech just prior to my speaking about that particular problem with regard to Alberta Treasury Branches. We see that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has recently experienced this same situation when trying to access information on the risk management fund and other former dealings with Stockwell Day and the huge amount of money that taxpayers ended up paying out there.

We see more examples like that than we do see freedom of information examples. The protection of privacy seems to have been given a higher degree of balance, and that's disturbing particularly because of the length of time it will be before this particular legislation gets reviewed again. Now, I know that members of the committee were generally in favour of lengthening rather than shortening the review time process for this particular bill primarily, I believe, because of the unpleasant experience of being on that particular committee with that particular chair, but I think that that's a mistake, Mr. Chairman.

I'm looking forward to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, that hopefully has an amendment coming forward that will speak to shortening the time period that we will see between reviews of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act because I am hoping that we do not have legislation coming forward that is fluid, as the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs said. I don't think that that was ever the intent of the legislation. That more should be done outside of regulations and within the legislation than what happens within the regulations hasn't been the practice of this government, but we would hope that that's what we would see as we proceed. So I look forward to seeing what other amendments come forward on this piece of legislation this evening.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I listened to the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie with a great deal of interest and would concur with her view.

Now, Mr. Chairman, unfortunately, the first amendment, amendment A2, that was presented to the Assembly this evening was defeated, but I would like at this time to propose another amendment. I would ask if it could be presented to the table.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Is it appropriate to label this amendment A3, please?

The Chair: Yes. This amendment will be referred to as A3. You would like to move it, hon. member?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Mr. Chairman, for the record I would like to move that Bill 28, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003, be amended in section 16 in the proposed section 74.6 by striking out clause (b).

It's very similar to amendment A2, and I thought earlier that A2 would be accepted by the Legislative Assembly. It was a mistake on my part. But, also, in regard to section 74.6 I don't think that the commissioner needs this dramatic expansion of his powers – or his or her powers; who's to say? – in the future. I don't think this is warranted nor is it needed. I think sections 70 and 70(a) are sufficient. I don't think we need and I would urge all members of this Assembly to again reconsider and repeal or remove the section (b) from this act because certainly we do not know the details nor the kinds of conditions or circumstances that would be addressed in making such a decision to not conduct an inquiry. In light of the fact, as I said before, that there has been very, very limited use of section 70 to start with, I don't really think that this is necessary, and it is giving in my view too much discretion to the commissioner.

Thank you.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, similar to my comments to the previous amendment this is the second amendment in a row that is aimed at stripping from the commissioner his ability to independently decide whether indeed there are bonafide reasons to conduct an inquiry or not. Again, I don't see any reason why the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar would have so little regard or trust for the independence of the commissioner's office, and I would urge all members to vote against this amendment.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Chairman, you know, I can't let that pass. The idea that removing discretion from the commissioner's office to refuse outright a circumstance has been portrayed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs as almost an insult to the commissioner's office or a lack of respect or regard for that office, and that characterization is most unfair. We're debating policy here, and the hon. member has put forward a policy position that says that this particular clause is not in the best interest. That's his view, and I would point out that under the current legislation the commissioner's office does not have this jurisdiction and must initiate an inquiry if one is requested. So, you know, to suggest that wanting to make this change is a slap in the face in some way to the commissioner is just wrong and is not a good argument against the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly before I continue with debate in committee on Bill 28 I must say that in this Legislative Assembly the price of natural gas certainly is not a concern, because the heat is turned up in this Assembly at the moment. If there's a thermostat here . . . Wow. It's warm.

However, Mr. Chairman, with regard to Bill 28 and with specific regard to section 18 and the proposed amendment to section 87 of the FOIP Act, the current section 87(7)(b) imposed an obligation on the minister to "publish and distribute, at intervals of 2 years or less, supplements or replacements to keep the directory up to date." The Alberta directory was published in 1995, and our research indicates nothing since. I have to note at this time that it is my view that the government is in violation of this provision. If someone should try to suggest that some kind of supplement has in fact been produced but it's just not been widely circulated, I'd have to point out section 87(8) and ask why they're not being sent out to respective MLAs' offices, public libraries, and provincial public buildings and offices. That's contemplated and required by law.

Now, if you look at section 18 of the proposed bill here and the proposed section 87(1), that is a positive development and mirrors an obligation of the privacy act. If we go through to section 19, it looks and appears to be housekeeping only, but section 20 is particularly important from the opposition perspective since it addresses the single most formidable obstacle to public accountability and transparency in government, and this is fees for access. This proposed amendment is not itself objectionable, but it provides yet another example of the negative impact of high fees. Now, we're going to get to that a little later, Mr. Chairman.

Section 21(a) is housekeeping, and 21(b) is interesting. I would like to know and to ask at this time exactly how many bodies have been deleted since 1995 when the FOIP Act went into force. Will the sponsor, in this case the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, or minister provide such a list in regard to section 21(b)? Certainly, whenever we consider FOIP legislation, we always have to consider and take into account the wise words by the former Member for Calgary-Buffalo, Mr. Gary Dickson. Mr. Dickson was very interested in FOIP legislation and was very enthusiastic and knowledgeable in questioning the government. The number one rule, of course, of FOIP is to provide an openness and an accountability to the citizens for their actions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at this time I think it is very important that we consider section 22. We are here taking an amendment to section 97 of the current act. If you look at the current act, we're talking about a review of the act, and I was not satisfied with the review last summer. I attended every meeting, but I certainly wasn't satisfied with the process. It was the first time I had an opportunity to sit on an all-party parliamentary committee, and to say that I was disappointed is being polite.

Now, if we look at a review of the act, section 97 says:

A special committee of the Legislative Assembly must begin a comprehensive review of this Act by May 18, 2002 and must submit to the Legislative Assembly, within one year after beginning the review, a report that includes any amendments recommended by the committee.

In light of the age of this legislation, in light of the fact, Mr. Chairman, that the FOIP legislation is relatively new to Alberta – it is a work in progress, so to speak. But when we consider that the current act came into force on June 1, 1994, and now with this amendment, Bill 28, we are contemplating going eight years without a review, I think that is far too long a time, particularly with privacy issues relating to federal legislation and privacy issues relating to personal information. This is changing all the time, and I think it is wrong to have in my view an inadequate – and this is my view – review last summer and then to go eight years before we're going to have another review. I think this is a mistake, and I am going to try to correct that mistake now with another proposed amendment. I would ask again that these amendments be taken to the chairman's table.

Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat until these amendments are distributed. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In regard to amendment A4 I move that Bill 28, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003, be amended in section 22 by striking out "July 1, 2010" and substituting "July 1, 2006."

Now, again, I think it would be advisable to this House in light of the changes that are going on with FOIP legislation and issues of privacy, issues of electronic transactions, biometric information – eight years is too long a time period before we review this act. I think it should be incorporated into the statute that we strike another committee to look at issues surrounding FOIP and FOIP legislation and that that committee be struck no later than July 1, 2006. When we consider the principles of FOIP legislation, it is very, very important that this act be reviewed. We have a government that has been in power for 34 years, and it is very important that everyone in this province have an opportunity . . .

Mr. Mason: Next to Cuba it's the longest running regime in the world.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, the hon. member has stated that next to Cuba this is the longest running government in the world. I don't know if that is fact, but it certainly is very interesting.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge all members to consider this amendment. We certainly will need to review this legislation before eight years. I think four years is a suitable time frame, maybe at some time in the future. When you consider that this legislation is only nine years old and has only been applied for nine years, I think that at this point in our history to eliminate the need for a review every four years would be improper and inadequate when you consider the importance of this legislation for all citizens to utilize to keep the government accountable.

With those remarks, I would urge all members to please support amendment A4. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of comments. First, I think it's an unusual provision in an act to have the date specified as to when a review must be undertaken. Secondly, I think that the choice of the time period in the act has not been adequately defended. Thirdly, I think the amendment itself, if this provision is going to be part of the act, is really a minimum in terms of what we might expect. So I think that for those reasons, as I said, if there's going to be this provision kept in the act and the provision isn't going to be removed, the minimum time requirement that my colleague has proposed makes sense.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Now, as we proceed through with this analysis of this bill, we briefly spoke a little earlier about fees and how high fees have become a barrier for citizens in acquiring information from their government. Fees are excessive. Earlier we talked about Justice McMahon, the decision on reducing fees from somewhere around $60,000 to $500. I can't imagine how many Albertans are just turning away in frustration after they get a letter from a government department that indicates that they want $15,000, $20,000, $25,000 for these documents. Now, Justice T.F. McMahon said that "the second principle identified by the [FOIP] Commissioner is that the user should pay" and then went on to say that this principle of access is "doubtful" and that it "begs the question of who the 'user' really is."

If we look at FOIP photocopying fees that are charged, you're always charged the maximum by the government, the charge of 25 cents. FOIP photocopying fees are higher only in Quebec, at 33 cents, and the province of New Brunswick has the lowest, at 10 cents. Speaking of 10 cents, the public pays 10 cents a copy at the Legislature Library, one floor below us. It's quite interesting to note, Mr. Chairman. It just shows the contradiction of this government's FOIP laws and fee schedules when you look at rates for copies down in the Legislature Library. There are no charges to the MLAs, MLA staff, Assembly staff, or Alberta public servants for work-related copying. All other copies charged are according to these rates: 10 cents; double-sided, 15 cents. This is for an eight and a half by 11 inch sheet of paper. Now, that is in direct contradiction to what is always charged the Official Opposition. The maximum is charged. We're always paying search fees, and it's not fair.

Justice McMahon certainly has made a definitive statement in regard to this, and I'm not going to go any further into that at this time, but in 2001-2002 the Alberta government collected around $54,000 in FOIP fees for 2,200 and some odd requests, and only a thousand and fifty dollars in fees was waived. Now, this is a government that has taken a defensive position with high FOIP fees, and it has to stop. This has to be made accountable for all the citizens.

I could go on at some length, Mr. Chairman, but I'm not going to suggest for a moment that there's a conspiracy here and that that thermostat is turned up to make people sleepy.

When you look at general information requests, whether they're from business, the general public, elected officials, media, interest groups, academic researchers, we need to ensure that everyone can afford to have access to information, and fees should not be a barrier.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at this time I would like to propose another amendment, amendment A5, to Bill 28, and this is one, I'm sure, that will be passed by the Legislative Assembly. I'm quite confident. But I will take my seat until it is circulated.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to move amendment A5.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In regard to amendment A5, I would like to move that Bill 28, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003, be amended in section 20 by adding the following after clause (c):

- (d) by repealing subsection (6) and substituting the following:
 - (6) The fees referred to in subsection (1) must not exceed the lesser of
 - (a) the actual costs of the services, or
 - (b) $25.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is laughing, but this is certainly not a laughing matter. High fees are preventing citizens from having access to government information. What has the government to hide behind high access fees? This is not a laughing matter. It's a sign of a government that does not want to have a two-way communication with the citizens. There are enough discretionary and mandatory exemptions if the government has information that they consider to be . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, we do have one person who is recognized. The rest of you may be recognized in a way that you don't anticipate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on your amendment A5.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are enough exemptions or probably too many exemptions already in the act, but we need to ensure that in a solid, comfortable democracy . . . Now, there may be another member there clumping paper, getting ready to throw it this way, but that's fine. If it's going to be 25 cents a sheet for that piece of paper, then the government could claim cost recovery on that.

This issue of excessive fees has to be addressed, and $25 is a solid figure no matter the size of the request. Many people are quite willing to co-operate, and now their request doesn't seem to matter. Fees are seldom waived, and in a comfortable democracy the government should be willing to communicate with the citizens. Why does this government persist in always charging the maximum, 25 cents, a sheet for FOIP photocopying? Why is this done? No one seems to have the answer. It outlines, in my view, that this is just a money grab by the government, and it wants to hide the truth by the use of sky-high fees.

Now, when you look at some other provinces and the federal government, the federal government charges $5, and you look at search and preparation fees in this province, they are $27. The federal government is $10. Newfoundland is $15. Manitoba is a little bit more; it's $30. Photocopying charges are much less in some provinces – much less – but what we have here is the consistent use of high fees to discourage citizens from accessing information, and I want it to stop. That's why at this time I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to support this amendment. Let's make information as readily available to the citizens as is possible. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would urge all members to have a good look at this and support A5.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think that the response by some hon. members across the way to the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar shows that we have some way to go in terms of getting a benevolent understanding of some of the elements of freedom of information, so I will therefore avail myself of the opportunity in this Assembly to speak further to the amendment.

You know, Mr. Chairman, there is a real concern here with cost. The purpose of the act has always been to give the citizens access to information of their government. It is their government, and what the government does is done in their name and with their money. They have a right, and this has been recognized in this legislation at least on the surface, at least in the stated intent of the legislation. So there's nothing that's particularly radical. In fact, I think it's clearly the kind of principle that would appeal to true Conservatives. True Conservatives philosophically would believe in the right of the individual to have information with respect to the government as a tool against oppression by the state. I'm sure that that is not misrepresenting some of the Conservative principles.

The act falls considerably short in practice of that theory, and as I outlined earlier in my comments about why in fact the bill did not work in key areas such as the serious allegations in the Alberta Treasury Branches case versus West Edmonton Mall and other cases, the practical application of the act is of the utmost importance. So it's not good enough just to have high-sounding egalitarian principles and then not have an act that works to implement those effectively in practice.

In my view, if you're going to charge for photocopying, Mr. Chairman, first of all you ought to photocopy it in the cheapest possible way, and that means using up-to-date technology. The costs, as I personally know, of even the kind of photocopier that is routinely used, is well below 25 cents a page. All government departments have or ought to have photocopiers that can produce copies at well below that cost. So why is the government, then, supporting legislation that will allow it to charge a lot more than the actual costs of photocopying? So that's a very minimal position that I think everybody should accept. Further, this can in fact be a serious impediment.

There are ways to reduce costs, but I'm not sure that the real intention here is to reduce costs. Mr. Chairman, I hate to say it, but I think that the real intention here is to provide barriers against people that want to dig into the operation of the government, to actually limit the practice so that it does not conform with the high-sounding principles that most of us in this Assembly would ascribe to.

So in this case I believe that the amendment is probably a good one and is consistent, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has said, with the practice in other jurisdictions. So, again, it's not a dangerous precedent or anything, and it's actually something that's practical. If there are costs that are borne by the taxpayer in the pursuit of freedom of information for its citizens, Mr. Chairman, I would say that it is money well spent.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 8, 2003 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 03/05/08
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

As we pray, let us also commemorate Victory in Europe Day with the words of Winston Churchill, given in London on May 8, 1945:

God bless you all. This is your victory! It is the victory of the cause of freedom in every land. In all our long history we have never seen a greater day than this. Everyone, man or woman, has done their best. Everyone has tried. Neither the long years, nor the dangers, nor the fierce attacks of the enemy, have in any way weakened the independent resolve of the British nation. God bless you all.

Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have the great pleasure today of introducing to you the Hon. Ted Staffen, the recently elected Speaker of the Yukon Legislative Assembly. Mr. Staffen is accompanied by his sister Anne and brother-in-law Reg Bukowski from St. Albert, and they're seated in the Speaker's gallery.

Speaker Staffen was first elected to the Yukon Legislative Assembly in the general election of November 4, 2002, and was elected Speaker on February 27, 2003, when the first session of the 31st Legislature convened. Mr. Staffen is the 22nd Speaker to serve in the Yukon since the Yukon Territorial Council became a fully elected body in 1909. He represents the constituency of Riverdale North in the Legislature on behalf of the Yukon Party.

I'd ask members to join with me in welcoming the hon. Speaker Staffen to our Legislature.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 20 students from the Countryside Christian school, located near Edberg in my constituency. They are accompanied by Mr. Chester Isaac, teacher, and board members Mr. Ralph Thiessen and Mr. Randy Friesen. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Berhanu Demeke. He is a recent graduate of Grant MacEwan College in public relations. He's currently doing an eight-week practicum in my department's communication division, where he's involved in a variety of projects. Berhanu is originally from Ethiopia and has lived in our great province for 10 years. He is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Loughheed: Mr. Speaker, in the members' gallery today is Jason Yaremchuk, whom I'd like to introduce to you and to members assembled. Jason will be working this summer with the Legislature's information systems. Jason is accompanied by Greg Pelletier, who also works with information systems. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the vice-president of corporate affairs for Eli Lilly Canada, Mr. Terry McCool, and Mark Patton, the Alberta manager of government affairs. Eli Lilly Canada was born of a collaboration with Canadian research heroes Banting and Best to bring insulin to the market. Since then the company has launched powerful antibiotics, introduced Prozac, and pioneered drugs to treat such desperate conditions as cancer, schizophrenia, and osteoporosis. They are in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two summer STEP students, Natasha Dhillon and David Wheeler. Natasha will be working at McDougall Centre in Calgary. She is an energetic University of Calgary student who just finished her third year studying international relations and religious studies. Natasha speaks both French and English and is active in campus volunteer activities.

David will be working in my constituency office. He is currently pursuing a degree in political science at the University of Calgary. David speaks both Spanish and English, is an active skier and hockey player, and is a member of the political science students' association.

Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to have these two fine young Albertans join my staff for the summer, and I know that they will find the experience both rewarding and challenging. I would ask that our honoured guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Medicine Hat, who expressed to me his sincere regret at not being able to make the introductions himself, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members a number of guests who have joined us today. Please join me in welcoming approximately 100 students, teachers, and parents from Crestwood school in Medicine Hat who have made the six-hour bus trip from Medicine Hat to join us in the Leg. today. Despite the tremendous amount of work and organization involved, Crestwood school has a tradition of having its grade 6 classes visit the Legislature every year. They are seated in both the members' and the public gallery, and I'd ask that they rise so that they may receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, if I could, I'd also like to acknowledge that St. Louis school from Medicine Hat also had grade 6 students visit the Legislature this morning but were unable to join us this afternoon. The Member for Medicine Hat asked me to let both groups know that he looks forward to joining them at their respective schools in the very near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Mr. Douglas Combs. Mr. Combs, who is present in the public gallery, is an employee in the security industry and has taken the time from his busy schedule to come to the Legislative Assembly to view the proceedings of the House. I would now ask Mr. Combs to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to introduce to you and through you today my STEP student. I believe she's in the members' gallery, and her name is Jen Smith. She just returned from a year at Brigham Young University and hopes to be a teacher some day. I know that the constituency of Calgary-Shaw will be well served by Jen this summer. I'd like her to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a constituent of mine in Edmonton-Highlands. Her name is Carmen Macklin. She's here to observe the proceedings today, and she is seated in the public gallery. I would ask her to rise and receive the warm greetings of this Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Alberta's Economic Outlook

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to talk about some great Alberta economic stories, specifically about the great cities in Alberta, and today it's Calgary and Edmonton that we'll be talking about. The Conference Board of Canada says that Alberta's overall gross domestic product will be 5.5 percent this year and 4.9 percent in 2004, which outpaces all growth in other provinces in Canada. As a result of this, employment growth will benefit from the Alberta population growth, pushing unemployment rates well below 5 percent.

Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Economic Development in Alberta I have met with entrepreneurs, international exporters, and business leaders from across this province who have made the Alberta advantage work for them and continue to do so in their communities. The economic success that we have enjoyed today is a tribute to all those hardworking and dedicated Albertans.

At the same time, the outstanding performance of Alberta's economy is also a tribute to the leadership of Premier Klein. Over the past decade Premier Klein has laid the foundation for outstanding growth in Alberta with a number of programs that have continued to give the Alberta advantage to the business community in ways that are now producing huge dividends. Alberta's increasing growth in manufactured goods and business services has reduced the effect of commodity prices and led to an increasingly diverse economy. Today Albertans look upon the entire world as their export market for Alberta goods, and Alberta has become a most attractive investment destination. In short, Alberta is claiming its place on the global economic stage.

Now for the really great news, Mr. Speaker. The Conference Board of Canada ranked Calgary, the great city to the south of us, as the number one growth city in the country of Canada for this year and for the next three years running. That growth is closely followed by the great city of Edmonton for the years 2004 to 2007.

I would like to offer my congratulations to all Albertans in the business community and to this government for having the dedication to understand that business fuels this economy and will continue to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition is also pleased to hear that the Conference Board of Canada projects that Alberta's GDP will continue to grow in the immediate future. However, it is important to remember that there is another side to this story about Alberta's economy.

The Minister of Economic Development and this government need to start taking into account all the factors that contribute to Alberta's economic well-being. For years consumers and businesses alike have been struggling under the weight of outrageous energy bills caused by this government's deregulation boondoggle. We are now seeing the postponement of upgraders, deferrals, and a general economic slowdown. Deregulation is turning the Alberta advantage into an Alberta disadvantage.

Education is the key to future economic prosperity in Alberta as it fuels economic growth. However, a recent study conducted by TD Economics highlights the deficiencies in Alberta's education system. Years of inadequate funding for education has led to large class sizes and some of the highest tuition rates in the country for postsecondary students. Action must be taken now to restore Alberta's education system so future generations of Albertans don't have to suffer. Through chronic underfunding, this government is creating a social deficit that is affecting our quality of life and our capacity to attract and retain individuals and industry.

Yes, we are looking at a short-term gain, but the real questions are: will it be sustainable, and what will our long-term quality of life be?

The Speaker: Hon. members, it appears that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands would like to participate. That will require unanimous consent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I would indeed like to thank members of the Assembly for the opportunity to respond to the ministerial statement that we just heard. I regret, however, that I cannot join in the cheerleading and apple-polishing, because it seems to me that the Minister of Economic Development has glossed over a number of problems plaguing Alberta's longer term economic prospects.

For example, the TD Bank has highlighted Alberta's underinvestment in education resulting in participation rates in postsecondary education below the Canadian average, which threatens our future competitiveness and prosperity. Other commentators express concern that Alberta is ill equipped to deal with the inevitable decline in our natural wealth of oil and natural gas resources as a threat to our future economic well-being. Then there is the botched energy deregulation scheme, which has transformed Alberta from having the lowest nonhydro electricity rates in North America to having the highest electricity costs of any Canadian province.

We're indeed fortunate, Mr. Speaker, to live in a beautiful province endowed with so much natural wealth, but we must do a better job of conserving these resources, safeguarding our air, land, and water, and educating our youth if this prosperity is to be secured for future generations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Before the next item in the Routine a comment will be made at the conclusion of the Routine about the violation of the rules presented by the first speaker. We'll do that at the end.

head: Oral Question Period
Electricity Deregulation

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is commissioning yet another study on electricity deregulation despite the fact that he already has at least four reports by four different committees collecting dust on the shelf. To the Premier: why do we need another report to tell us what the report of the Advisory Council on Electricity has already told us? There is a lot wrong with electricity deregulation.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there's not a lot wrong with deregulation per se. There is something wrong with the way in which some companies in some areas of the province bill. Indeed, there has been in place for some time an Advisory Council on Electricity, and this advisory council has tremendous knowledge about the energy industry. It has been in place I think for something like two years and is the best group to conduct this review of consumer concerns, not deregulation. We are not going back on deregulation, but if the Liberals want to go back to a totally socialized, regulated format, then let them stand up and say so.

What we will do is expand the mandate of the committee to look at some of these consumer issues, and to do that, we will be adding two Members of the Legislative Assembly to that committee. The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and the hon. Member for Leduc will be added to the committee to represent consumers and to get to the bottom of why there are billing discrepancies throughout the province. It has nothing to do with deregulation. It has a lot to do with billing practices and maybe some other matters that may be deemed fit by the advisory committee to review.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: so this commission will not be looking at the issues that you've created in this electricity deregulation that in themselves are contributing to higher prices for Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is an assumption that I believe is entirely false. Deregulation – and the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition knows this – has brought many benefits, but it's so typical of the Liberals not to talk about the benefits and only to talk about the negatives. That's why they have seven and that's why we have 74: because they only want to talk about the negatives. We've never said that deregulation would be easy, but we have said that its long-term effect would be positive for the province.

Now, I'm going to tell you, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the opposition Liberal leader, that deregulation has brought many benefits to electricity consumers, including about 3,000 megawatts of new power, an increase of 30 percent with no debt to the taxpayer; another 5,200 megawatts of new power being planned, representing an investment of about 6 billion private-sector dollars, again with no debt to the taxpayers; security of supply for today and for the future; and growing availability of new product options and packages for retail customers as more marketers come onto the Alberta scene. So we do need – and I hope the Liberals will agree with us – a free and competitive market to create new electricity generation in Alberta, or we run the risk of brownouts or blackouts. Under the regulated environment that we had before . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Please. Let's go on to the third question here.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier: will you admit that this commission is not going to look at the problems that your regulatory changes, your flip-flops on regulation are causing, increasing the price on deregulation as well?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the commission has had the authority all along, for the past two years, to look into many aspects of the generation and the transmission and the selling of electricity. The committee will be expanded to include issues such as why some parts of Alberta are paying higher prices than other areas, billing practices of utility companies, fairness of all line items on the bills, consumer accessibility to competitive market options, long-range forecast for consumer prices, realistically and independently, current and future benefits of deregulation for consumers, impacts of government and EUB decisions on consumer prices, and other consumer issues identified by the council.

Now, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what the Liberals try to portray about deregulation, the bottom line is this. Martha and Henry out there in Alberta do not generally understand power pools. They don't understand electrons. What they understand is the bottom line on their bill, and when they see an unreasonable bill, they want to know why, and we want to get to the bottom of it.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, if they wanted to get to the bottom of it, they'd give that commission the power to deal with all of the issues that are affecting the price of electricity in this province. Mr. Premier, why are you not allowing the commission to look into all of those issues?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, they have that already. The committee has that already. All we are doing is expanding the mandate of the committee.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: why is it that this committee has made many recommendations to this government and you've yet to act on them?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is an assumption that I believe is incorrect, but I will have the hon. Minister of Energy respond.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely wrong. One recommendation from the Bolger commission, or the advisory council on electrical issues, that was struck in the first quarter of 2001, was to deliver transmission that delivered overall lowest competitive generation in the province. We did that. They didn't like it. I mean, are they opposed to the commission?

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: given that the Minister of Energy has made such a mess of deregulation, why does he still have his job?

Mr. Klein: First of all, Mr. Speaker, he has a job because he has done a good job with deregulation under very difficult circumstances and with, I believe, undue and unwarranted and unsolicited, certainly, criticism from the Liberal opposition.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Transmission Policy

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the 2001 election campaign the Premier when discussing electricity deregulation looked up from his briefing notes and shrugged, quote: I have no idea what all this means. End of quote. Customers across Alberta certainly know what this means. It means sky-high power bills, expensive, unreliable service, and they want answers. They want electricity deregulation unplugged. My first question is to the Premier. Given that now consumers are faced with at least an additional $3 billion – that's $3 billion – in transmission costs in the next 10 years, where will these costs now appear on consumers' power bills?

Mr. Klein: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, for the record he has added $2 billion. I know that they don't think $2 billion is significant the way they like to spend, but $2 billion, albeit Canadian, is a very significant amount indeed. It is $1 billion, and when spread out through the province and all the consumers of the province, both individual and industrial, it is very little considering that over the long term deregulation will bring about and has brought about many benefits, and I've already alluded to those benefits: 3,000 megawatts of new supply, an increase of 30 percent with no debt to the taxpayer. That's important. I know that perhaps they admire the socialist framework that they have in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and perhaps they even admire the huge debts that have been accumulated in those provinces, but we don't.

So no debt to the taxpayer; another 5,200 megawatts of new power being planned, representing an investment of 6 billion private-sector dollars; again, no debt; security of supply. This is important. Yes, there are some billing problems, and we're going to look at that, and those billing problems exist in certain areas of the province. But the one thing that needs to be mentioned – and this is what I was going to mention, Mr. Speaker – is that under the totally regulated system we were in danger of brownouts or blackouts because the EUB decided when new power was to come onstream. That was the regulated portion. It was entirely up to the EUB. The power companies were not allowed, without the decisions of the EUB, to bring on new power, so there was a critical shortage of power. Now we have security of supply. Albertans can rest assured there won't be blackouts or brownouts, and that is important.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that electricity deregulation may cause brownouts, it may cause blackouts, but it's also going to cause a PC political wipeout.

The Speaker: I'm assuming, hon. member, that that was the question.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, in his dreams. In his dreams. The people of this province, albeit not understanding all the intricacies – and I know that this hon. member doesn't understand all the intricacies of power generation, distribution, and sale; it's a highly complex issue – understand one thing. They understand entrepreneurship, they understand free enterprise, and they understand the ability of being able to think and plan for themselves rather than having government do it for them.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: what circumstances have changed between November of 2002, when the EUB made the decision to share transmission tariffs equally between generators and customers, and now that enabled the Minister of Energy to completely change government policy and pull the rug out from underneath the EUB? What circumstances have changed to allow that to happen?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister supplement, but the simple answer is that the consultants who were retained to make that recommendation are no longer consultants.

Perhaps the hon. minister can respond.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, absolutely true. I mean, the member has been here now since Thursday a week ago, Thursday of the week past. He's read the speech on Monday. He's been in the House Tuesday and Wednesday. He's heard that we've responded to the report of the advisory council on electrical issues. We're doing this in the interests of Alberta consumers, because there would be certain consumers paying more for transmission in Alberta than others. This is a province of 3 million people. We want everybody to be treated the same on transmission. They will not be paying twice. They will not be paying a billion dollars over a week and a half, as the member would like to say. These are preposterous distortions that are in effect going to come back and land squarely on that member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans don't want minor tinkering with the Tory deregulated electricity system, that is rotten from the ground up, nor do they want a phony review designed to buy time for the government and distract attention from the shockingly high bills consumers are paying. The Tory solution to all of this is to add two Tory MLAs to an existing council. My questions are to the Premier. Why won't this council have the authority to fully examine deregulation and the possibility of a return to a regulated market?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing stopping this committee from making those recommendations, but I doubt very much if they would be adopted, because it is the policy of this government, supported by the Liberals at least through legislation, to head down the path of deregulation, and we're well into deregulation. As I said in my media scrum yesterday, there are some bumps along the road. We want to smooth out those bumps. Whenever you try something new, there are going to be bumps.

You know, Mr. Speaker, this government has always prided itself on having the courage to try something differently. Unlike the Liberals both provincially and federally we are not stuck in the box, and we don't think that the way to solve all problems is to simply throw money at them. We like to think things through. I often allude to 1993-1994, when it was deemed unconventional or, indeed, un-Canadian for provinces to operate without a deficit. The Liberals were screaming at that time, "Oh, you can't do government that way." My God, they were organizing protests and everything else. "You've got to have deficits. That's the Canadian way."

Dr. Nicol: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Klein: Well, we eliminated the deficit, Mr. Speaker. We got this province on the road to financial prosperity because we were prepared to think differently.

The Speaker: There was a point of order raised by the Leader of the Official Opposition during that last exchange, and I would ask that the Premier remain for the point of order.

The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that jurisdictions like California have moved away from deregulation, why does the Premier stubbornly cling to a policy that will cost consumers billions and has driven Alberta to have the highest cost power in the country?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. I wasn't addressing the Liberals. I was addressing the NDs. It was the NDs that were doing it, not the Liberals, I think.

Dr. Nicol: I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. Klein: It was the NDs because it was certainly ND and socialist thinking that you have to borrow, borrow, borrow, and borrow more – right? – to sustain government spending.

Mr. Speaker, I forgot what the question was.

The Speaker: As I understand what transpired there, the Leader of the Official Opposition has now withdrawn his point of order.

Dr. Nicol: Yes, Mr. Speaker. He clarified the accusation as being against the NDs and not the Liberals. It's not a point of order.

The Speaker: This is rather unusual, but we'll go on to the leader of the third party for his third question.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, my second question is gone? I'm surprised. Why am I getting punished for it?

The Speaker: Well, considering it's Thursday, hon. member, please proceed with your second question.

Dr. Pannu: Oh, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that jurisdictions like California have moved away from deregulation, why does this Premier stubbornly cling to a policy that has cost consumers billions already and driven Alberta to have the highest cost power in the country?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy supplement, but as I explained to previous questioners, the main reason we went to a deregulated environment is to provide consumers with more choices but, more importantly, to ensure that we get needed generation onstream, and that indeed has happened.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the member continues to distort, so let's just put it in perspective. The Aquila/EPCOR network is the area that he's talking about. If he'd looked at the ATCO network, he would find that those prices after deregulation were in fact lower than what they were before deregulation. In fact, if he looks at Enmax and EPCOR, he'll find minor changes.

Now, if he talks about the California example, Mr. Speaker, he'll find that California has a hundred billion dollar budget with a $35 billion deficit. That's socialist heaven. If you look at Ontario, they took a $38 billion debt, froze electricity prices, and what happened six months later? They added another billion dollars to that $38 billion. That's good socialist thinking.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the Premier: given that it was this Tory government who gave us deregulation and high-cost power, how does the Premier expect his advisory council to be believed by Albertans that Tories will investigate themselves fully anyway?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I take great exception to the allegation that these individuals are Tory hacks, so to speak. Len Bolger is the chair, a well-respected individual who's connected to the Alberta Research Council and ASRA; Dan Astner, the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations; Jim Beckett, representing an investor-owned utility; Fred Gallagher, a small independent power producer; Jack Hayden, the president of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties; Robert Hemstock, a retailer; Karl Johansson, a large independent power producer; Jack Joys, the Alberta district Direct Connect Consumer Association; Albert Klapstein, yes, the MLA for Leduc and a special appointee and, I'll say, a very, very strong and committed advocate for the consumers in his constituency; Rick Kline, no relation, Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta; John McGowan, Alberta Urban Municipalities Association; Dale McMaster, Alberta independent system operator; Norman Mills, a large industrial consumer; Robert Nicolay, a municipally owned utility; Stan Schellenberger, a public member; Mike Smyth, a public member; George VanderBurg, again another committed MLA representing not only his own constituents but, indeed, the people of this province; and Jim Wachowich, who, by the way, has been highly critical of government policy, representing the Consumers' Association of Canada. That is the list. I can't think of a broader and more representative section of Alberta society than these people listed previously.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to a Member by Name

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, would you kindly advise the members of your caucus what the rules are with respect to names and the use of names in the Assembly.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development has advised me in written form that his speech writer will be fired later this afternoon, and perhaps there's some advice there for others as well.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Agricultural Industry

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are curious about the agricultural industry's potential goal of $20 billion in value added and $10 billion in primary production by 2010. My first question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given that Alberta is still recovering from the worst drought in recorded history, what steps are we taking to help the industry meet this goal?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it is true that Alberta endured the worst drought in recorded history last year, but it's also true that agriculture has played an important role, does play an important role, and will continue to play an important role in this province's prosperity. Unquestionably, things are looking brighter – at least they will when the sun comes out – with the moisture we have had over much of the province, although I would say that there are still some areas of concern.

Mr. Speaker, we are fortunate to have had a review of the agriculture system in this province through the ag summit. We are fortunate that industry leaders have taken a leadership role in providing us with recommendations for growth in this province. We are fortunate that we have a very, very positive relationship with the Ministry of Economic Development, which will sell the products that our Alberta entrepreneurs produce, and we are fortunate with initiatives like the incubator program at the Leduc processing centre, which will assist our entrepreneurs to produce that high-quality, much-sought-after food product and get it out into world markets.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental, also for the minister of agriculture: in light of the agricultural industry's production goals, what is the minister doing to ensure that Alberta's economy is not negatively impacted by Alberta's unpredictable water supply, especially in southern Alberta?

2:10

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly, my colleague has hit on a very key point: Alberta's quality of life and, in fact, life itself depend on having a healthy and sustainable water supply. The hon. Minister of Environment has embarked over the last year on a consultation process with Albertans on a water strategy for our province. We have a history of exceptional water management, both on managing the supply of water and the quality of that water, but I think it is clear that today with demands on our system we have to manage our water on a watershed-by-watershed basis. I think the review, the consultation that will continue under that process that the minister has outlined, is imperative. I encourage all Albertans, whether they be commercial, domestic, or recreational users of water, to be involved in that. It is probably the most important initiative that this government could undertake with Alberta sitting on the largest supply of fresh water, indeed, in North America.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that Alberta producers are subject to the volatility of energy prices, what can they do to manage the cost of electricity and natural gas?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, we're talking about a lot of opinions here now.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me just say, then, that our agricultural community in Alberta understands how commodities work better than anybody else in the province. They deal with it every day. They're subject to the commodities price swings, and they know that natural gas is a commodity, in fact, which is produced on much of their land, that is subject to price swings, as is electricity. They are in contact with their utility companies. They're watching the marketplace as it unfolds. They are going to have more choices, more options about leveling their costs, about being able to buy hedged power, and about being able to take control of the price of the commodities of natural gas and electricity.

Holy Cross Hospital

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Liberal opposition has learned that a building once recommended for demolition at Calgary's Holy Cross hospital will now be leased to the Alberta Cancer Board. As the Premier knows, the Holy Cross was sold to a company owned by well-connected Tories for one-quarter of its value just a few years ago. That company is now facing several charges in court for endangering workers' safety through asbestos contamination. To the Premier: how does the Premier justify the Alberta Cancer Board doing business with a company that is in court for exposing workers to a cancer-causing agent as dangerous as asbestos?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, one has to assume and, indeed, one has to take for granted that the people who are responsible for the administration of the Cancer Board, particularly the board, are intelligent, good-thinking people, and the last thing that they would do would be to put in danger the lives of those who are already in some danger through disease. So they're acting in the best interests of the patients. They're acting in the best interests of the taxpayer, and if the deal is a good deal, I would assume that the Cancer Board made the deal on the basis of what is good for the patient and what is good for the taxpayer.

Dr. Taft: Given that this same individual who chaired the disposition committee that sold the Holy Cross is now a director of the Cancer Board, that is leasing it back, will the Premier ask that this deal be suspended until a full, independent review is done?

Mr. Klein: No, Mr. Speaker. We don't get involved in the business of the Cancer Board. If the hon. member wants to go back to former members, there's a sitting MLA who is a former member of the disposition committee. When the disposition was made, it was made on the basis of the best business case being made. This has been thoroughly investigated, and there was deemed to be absolutely nothing wrong. Everything was totally aboveboard relative to the disposition of that site. The only person who for some reason, perhaps political, is making a fuss over this is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Given that the Calgary health region disposition committee assigned zero value to the specific space in question when it was sold – they gave it away – will the Premier finally admit that the sale of the Holy Cross was nothing less than a rip-off of the Alberta taxpayers?

Mr. Klein: Of course it was not a rip-off – was not, and I underline and stress “not” – for the Alberta taxpayers. Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member pointed out, this hospital, this site, was earmarked for demolition. Now it is a fully active site. As I understand, there is an adjunct campus for Mount Royal College to study certain aspects of medicine. There is a long-term care centre at the site. There is a wonderful library for alternative medicine at the site. There is an ophthalmology clinic. I believe there are numerous other medical clinics at the site. The site is being fully utilized. Now with this deal that apparently was made between the Holy Cross Centre and the Cancer Board, there will be even further utilization of this site.

Casino Wait Lists

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, a group from Strathcona county who would like to do some fund-raising by working a casino are very frustrated by the three-year wait that exists at the St. Albert casino. They're very frustrated, of course, and they have questions that they would like me to ask of the Minister of Gaming. How come the wait list is so long for the St. Albert casino?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as you know, in Alberta we have a unique charitable gaming model which allows charities and not-for-profit groups to make application to the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission for a licence to run casinos. Generally speaking, those groups which receive licences are allocated to a casino within their area. In the case of Strathcona county, as we know, there is no casino, and as such they are allocated to the closest casino, which in this particular case is one located in St. Albert, which is designated as a rural casino. That allows for the least travel time for those groups. The casinos located in Edmonton are available for the not-for-profit groups that are licensed within Edmonton proper and also for the provincial groups that offer services throughout the province.

Mr. Lougheed: Well, Mr. Speaker, then the question that I would like to ask: would the boundaries be adjusted so that Strathcona county groups could be allowed to go into the Edmonton region, or as new casinos are being added, will we see those boundaries adjusted?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that the hon. member has mentioned new casinos. As of March of 2002 we lifted the moratorium with respect to the expansion of gaming within the province. Since that point in time several expressions of interest in or around the Edmonton area and also in the central Alberta area with respect to new casinos have come forward. If some of those receive ultimately a licence to operate a casino, there's no doubt that that will offer some assistance to those who are waiting.

The fact is that the reason there are waiting lists is that each day the AGLC receives approximately five new applications for licences, and there are far more applicants who are seeking licences to operate casinos than there are available within a given year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: could he let us know how long the wait lists are in other casinos around the province as compared to the St. Albert casino?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this point in time in Calgary the wait list is approximately 21 months, in Edmonton 24 months. In Red Deer it's somewhere in the vicinity of 21 to 24 months. Lethbridge is about 27 months. So in all areas throughout the province the wait lists have been going up, once again, as a result of growing interest by charities. I can say that the AGLC, in considering new applications, will be looking at wait lists in the areas in question as one of the important considerations with respect to new casinos.

There is some positive with respect to this wait list for the charitable groups. In 1995 slot machines were added to the casino mix. As a result, the take by the charitable groups has increased. In 1994-95 the aggregate amount for the charitable groups was some $19 million, whereas today it's $114 million. That would mean that over that eight-year period the charitable groups who run two-day casinos will be receiving today as opposed to '95 approximately twice as much.

Edson Schools Amalgamation

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon's constituency question comes from the parents in the town of Edson. These parents are concerned that the school planning process in both the public and separate school systems has been disruptive to their children and has gone ahead without proper consultation. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why weren't parents consulted before this minister ordered the transfer of Jubilee junior high from the public to the separate school system?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the closure of schools, the school board has the authority. The situation in Edson was one where if you looked at the overall school population, if you looked at the capacity in the schools within the town of Edson, there was enough capacity to handle all the students in the town. The problem was that there was overcapacity in the public system and not enough capacity within the separate system. The public school board passed a resolution that they would close Jubilee school. We do not get involved in the issue of whether in fact a school board is going to close a school. In this particular case, when they decided that they were going to close the school, it just made all the sense that we in fact would then allow the separate board, who incidentally was running in excess of 110 percent in their current facility, to take over Jubilee, and that would accommodate their needs.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Learning: does the government have a long-term plan for the students at A.H. Dakin school who are still using a facility that was officially closed two years ago?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What happened in Edson and Hinton was essentially an amalgamation between the public and the private systems. What we saw there was a very difficult situation in Hinton where we had students that probably for the last three or four years were actually being schooled in the ice arena. What the Minister of Infrastructure and I did was take a very careful look at what was happening.

The Minister of Infrastructure is absolutely right. In Edson Jubilee school, I believe it was – and I may or may not be right on the name – was set to be closed by the public board, and there was a new school to be built for the Catholic board. It did not make sense to close one school, on one hand, and build another school, on the other hand. So they were subsequently amalgamated. I understand that there were a lot of misunderstandings in the community over that, but I believe that the majority of it is straightened out. It was done in the best interests of the students of Edson, and we really feel that it will work out in that manner.

The Speaker: To supplement?

Mr. Lund: Yes. Specifically dealing with the A.H. Dakin school, it's true that it was officially closed a couple years ago. It has continued to be used, and now with the situation we will be upgrading and modernizing and expanding Pine Grove and also Parkland high school. A.H. Dakin will stay open until the modernization and expansion have occurred. At that time it will be closed, and the board will dispose of it.

Dr. Nicol: The final question is again to the Minister of Learning. These parents would like to know if the minister and your colleague the Minister of Infrastructure will join them and listen to their concerns before going ahead with further changes to the school; in other words, go out and visit them.

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, what happened in this particular case was that shortly after the budget was announced, the Minister of Infrastructure and I went to Edson to deal with these issues. We felt that it would be relatively easy because, on the one hand, they were closing the school and, on the other hand, we were stopping construction. We amalgamated the two, and we thought it would be fine.

From my personal point of view, I have no problem in talking to the people of Edson about what happened. I understand, though, that it has been resolved. Perhaps the Minister of Infrastructure can allay those concerns, but I would have no problems with going up again and talking to them.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have said that we will be prepared to go and meet with a representative of the parent or school councils and make sure that the transition will occur with the least amount of disruption. It's always the situation when a school is closed that people have some misgivings about it, but I believe that in the overall picture both the operation and maintenance of the public schools will be well served by the plan, and the separate board will now have the capacity to handle their students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Youth Sport, Fitness, and Recreation Programs

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently there have been a number of articles and reports that show that children are becoming increasingly more obese because they lack the proper amount of physical activity in their daily lives. In fact, many reports state that there's a serious problem in Canada with childhood obesity that needs to be addressed. Becoming involved in sport is a great way for children to not only become active but have a lot of fun at the same time. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. What steps is the minister taking to get children more involved in sport in this province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that the Department of Community Development works collaboratively with a number of other government departments such as Learning and Children's Services, certainly Health and Wellness, and even Infrastructure on facility capacity expansion. Through those amalgamations and consultations we've developed some specific programs that address specifically what the hon. member is asking.

For example, we have the Ever Active program for young people, which occurs through and with the collaboration of the health department right at the school level. We have the Live Outside the Box campaign and program, which is also focused around younger members of our population. Tomorrow I'll be announcing the launch of the annual Summer Active program at St. Kevin school. I'll be joined by an Edmonton Oiler, who will serve as a great role model, I'm sure, to help promote activities among our youth that are focused around fitness, recreation, and sport.

We also provide a number of funding opportunities through our Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation that help enable young people to participate in things like the Alberta Summer Games, the Western Canada Games, the Arctic Games, and so on and so on.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister: what approaches have been made to the federal government concerning bilateral agreements to develop sport in Alberta?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, in fact I have written recently to the Hon. Paul DeVillers, who is the secretary of state in Ottawa responsible for sport, fitness, and recreation programs, and asked that he consider a possible bilateral arrangement, an agreement as it were, between the federal government and the province of Alberta that would help address increasing our programming and our activities for young people primarily and, at the same time, also would look at some of the underrepresented groups who are for whatever reason not participating to the level we would all like. Young girls, for example, are underrepresented. Indigenous individuals and aboriginal people are underrepresented in our participation levels, as are disadvantaged individuals, as are certain segments of the disability community. That would be very consistent with our national sport policy, the national sport program, which ministers responsible for sport across Canada recently endorsed, and I believe it's also consistent with some of the recommendations that have been put forward by the task force that was planning the Alberta sport plan. So there are a number of things of that nature that we're trying to get going with the federal government, and we are having some success in that regard.

Mr. Johnson: My final question to the same minister: what are you doing to address the physical activity concerns as referenced in the Mazankowski report?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Mazankowski report and the discussions that ensued after it certainly pointed to the fact that if we could increase participation levels primarily by young individuals at an early age, they would retain those habits perhaps as lifelong habits, and the result would be probably a savings of about $5 billion to the health care costs that are currently facing Canadians. We only need to increase physical activity by about 10 percent to get there. In the Mazankowski report that section isn't vivid in my mind right at the moment, but I think it focused more on the wellness side and the aspect of getting good habits started earlier.

In fact, from our side, just in the budget that was approved here for Community Development two nights ago, we increased funding for the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation by something like 2 and a half million dollars, for a total budget now of almost $20 million. As a result of that increase, Mr. Speaker, ongoing programs will be continued, and we'll see a tremendous amount of increased activity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Electoral Boundaries

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will soon see legislation introduced which would make the proposed changes to the electoral boundaries of Alberta permanent. This government claims that they support an independent process in redrawing the electoral boundaries map. However, offers have been put on the table to allow individual pleadings for changes to the boundaries, which potentially could lead to gerrymandering. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview stated in his speech on Government Motion 13 that there is "a process in place where we can ask for small changes to our constituencies by applying to the Justice minister." My question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Where can individual Albertans pick up application forms to apply for these minor changes?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that no one applies for amendments to a bill in this House, but there are processes whereby in the discussion in committee on any bill that comes before the House members of the House can bring forward amendments. The hon. member would also know, at least I assume that she would know, being a member of a caucus, that before any amendments are brought before the House by an individual member of a caucus, they would probably discuss them with members of the caucus.

The hon. member would also know that on an informal basis I approached the Liberal caucus and indicated, as I do on all bills before the House, that if they had amendments for bills that they wish to have the government consider during discussion, it is useful to know about them ahead of time. If they would give them to me as House leader, I would make sure that the minister involved with the bill or the sponsor of the bill would consider them and, if prepared to accept them, would bring them to caucus for caucus approval so that they could be appropriately discussed in the House. They rarely avail themselves of that opportunity, but it is an opportunity that's open to them as well as to any other member of the House.

So in specific response to the question about electoral boundaries, all citizens of Alberta know that we debate bills in this House, that we have opportunity in Committee of the Whole for amendment of bills. The electoral boundaries act is a little different than other bills in that the bill that comes before the House comes out of the Electoral Boundaries Commission report, but it's open for amendment in committee, and I as the minister who's responsible for the act have received submissions from many Albertans, certainly from many communities across the province who are concerned about certain aspects of the bill. In response to every single one of those people that have contacted us, we've written back and said that when the bill comes before committee, we'll be considering amendments and will consider their submissions.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: is there a process where the citizens of Edmonton could apply to have the seat that is being taken away put back?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, when we're bringing forward a bill to put in place the boundaries proposed by the Electoral Boundaries Commission and when the House has actually approved the report of the boundaries commission by a resolution of this House, one would assume that amendments that come forward would have to be within the scope and the philosophy of the report. The adding of a seat would require either the amendment of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act itself to add another seat to the number of seats that we have, in other words taking it up one seat, or would require a very, very significant change to the philosophy of the report that was brought in by the Electoral Boundaries Commission and adopted by a resolution of this House. So it would not fall within the normal scope that one would expect.

Any member of the House, obviously, can bring forward any amendment that they want to bring forward, but it would be hard to see how an amendment to add another seat to Edmonton, as much as I agree with the concept, would be in keeping with the report that the Electoral Boundaries Commission brought in and that this House approved by resolution.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, will this minister tell the House, then, how many of the agreements with regard to the boundary changes have been made and who they have been made with?

Mr. Hancock: Well, it's for this House to determine whether there's any agreement with amendments that are being brought forward. The process which I have undertaken is to hear from anybody who wants to raise an issue with me as the carrier of the bill and to recommend to caucus when I think the proposed amendment fits within the scope of the Electoral Boundaries Commission report, whether the adjustment meets a test of reuniting communities that perhaps ought not to have been split; whether the shift in population, if there is a shift in population, leaves the resulting constituencies within the range and scope that the Electoral Boundaries Commission set out for cities, for major urban areas, for urbanized areas, for rural areas; whether the representatives from those constituencies affected would agree with the changes; those sorts of tests to determine whether or not, prior to recommending any amendment to the House, it falls within those scopes.

So there's no agreement with respect to any amendment. There is simply a process whereby towns have written to me as the minister responsible for the bill, where municipalities have written to me with respect to concerns that they have. I've raised those concerns with the respective MLAs, or they've raised them with me, including in fact members of the Liberal caucus. If there is agreement that an amendment could be made which would fall within the scope of the commission's report, I would bring forward those amendments to the House at the appropriate time. That's the process we've followed. The appropriate time has not come yet because the bill itself hasn't been introduced, although I anticipate introducing it today. Certainly, for anyone who has any suggestions with respect to appropriate amendments which would fall within the philosophy and scope of the commission's report as accepted by this House by resolution, I would be happy to make recommendation to the House with respect to amendments of same.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Practices

The Speaker: That last series of questions was a most unusual series of questions and had absolutely nothing to do with government policy, but as there is leave for notice to introduce a bill on the Order Paper, Bill 42, which has not been introduced yet, the chair decided to allow those three questions to go, not knowing what they would be. But the clarification should be very obvious now to everyone in this Assembly on what the process is.

This is not in the normal course a government bill that will be coming. It will be a bill caused by, in essence, the Constitution of the province of Alberta. This Assembly passed a motion after it had created an independent commission, and the process will be that the bill will be introduced and should follow the results of the motion, and there will be an opportunity, as through the course of any bill, to have amendments brought to the Assembly. It's only coincidentally that the Government House Leader is the minister talking about this particular bill, and there has to be someone from the government to introduce a bill, pending some other alternative solution. So not a normal course to have this series of questions discussed here, but it was good clarification for everyone.

Members' Statements

Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month

Mrs. Gordon: May is MS Awareness Month. Canada has one of the highest rates of MS in the world, with Alberta having the highest prevalence in all of Canada. Where I live, a neurologist practising in Red Deer estimates that between eight and 10 residents are diagnosed with MS each month. My neurologist in Edmonton, Dr. Mary Lou Myles, estimates that her busy practice is 98 percent MS related.

Although the cause of MS is unknown, its course unpredictable, and its cure as yet undiscovered, many exciting strides have been made. We now have many exciting new drug therapies that are helping many afflicted with relapsing/remitting MS. The Alberta division, which is part of the MS Society of Canada, has sanctioned many fund-raising events across Alberta this month and next for fund-raising: bike tours, Super Cities Walk tours, golf tournaments, and of course the annual Carnation Day campaign. The central Alberta chapter is excited and appreciative as once again this year the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has enthusiastically agreed to participate in their annual bike tour, cycling some 76 kilometres from Lacombe to Sylvan Lake and back again on June 22. Last year he raised over $2,200. This year's goal is $3,500.

I would also like to take this opportunity to publicly thank the MS Society of Canada, Alberta division, for presenting me with the 2002 Maureen Allen Social Action award. I am and was truly honoured. MS lives here. Can we count on you?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative government's power deregulation scheme lurches from one disaster to another. The latest turn on this tortured road is the Energy minister's unilateral decision to stick electricity customers with the total cost of new transmission lines instead of the 50-50 split between generators and consumers promised earlier. This is simply the latest in a long list of broken promises and betrayals.

The most pernicious defence of deregulation is that this province has gone too far down the road to turn back. By this logic, if you are driving down the highway right into the path of a semitrailer truck, you should just keep right on motoring along. Why is it that other jurisdictions like California and Texas are able to reverse their disastrous experiments while Alberta cannot? Why should Albertans trust this government when it says that reversing deregulation is too expensive when every other promise made about deregulation has ended up being wrong? Only a truly independent, no-holds-barred public review in which deregulation itself is put on the table can answer the question of why deregulation has failed and how much it will cost to return to sensible regulation.

Adding two Tory backbenchers to an existing committee just doesn't cut it. This rewarmed committee fails the test of independence that the Premier himself acknowledged earlier this week was necessary. This committee will not provide the answers Albertans are seeking on why deregulation has failed. Rather, it is designed to limit the political damage to the Tory government, not the financial damage to Albertans' pocketbooks. The government needs to set clear terms of reference for this so-called review and table them in this House before it adjourns for the summer.

Six months ago, Mr. Speaker, we asked Albertans to send us their power bills before and after deregulation. Many responded. In every case their bill went up sharply, in many cases doubling. We've held several public meetings throughout Alberta and will hold more. The blunt message from these Albertans is clear: we need to pull the plug on deregulation.

Ranking of Schools

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm critical of the Fraser Institute and other organizations that rank schools based on the academic performance of students. Ranking schools is one of many ways the focus can shift away from the factors which are really important for student achievement. Academic success is, I believe, a result of three factors: the ability and effort of the student, the support and encouragement of the family, and the skill and commitment of the teacher. When these three factors converge, students will have considerable academic success.

I believe there's more harm than benefit to be found in school rankings. These rankings speak more about the school's program offerings and management decisions than they do about predicting academic success for prospective students. In fact, even the ranking methodology is subject to criticism. For example, one criterion is the difference between the school-assigned mark and the diploma mark. Since the differences above and below are average for the school, the marks of one teacher who evaluates well above could balance off the marks of another teacher who evaluates below. The result is a good score for the school even though the Fraser Institute criticizes teachers who mark too high or too low relative to diploma exam scores.

Learning can be better served by focusing on what's really important instead of being distracted by school ranking, which tallies up student test scores to see which school attracted the most high achievers. Many other factors do influence student achievement, but class size, homogenous grouping, the physical setting, technology, curriculum fit, and quality of textbooks are lesser determinants of academic achievement than are the student, the family, and the teacher.

Thank you.

Mental Health Week

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, May 5 to 11 is Mental Health Week in Canada. The goal of Mental Health Week is to promote awareness and understanding of the prevalence of mental illness and to combat the shame associated with it. The effects of mental illness are staggering. Approximately one in five Canadians will experience mental illness at some point in their life, and almost every Canadian will be affected by mental illness either through a family member, a friend, or a loved one.

While mental illness costs the Canadian economy $14.4 billion per year, the cost to our physical health and personal well-being is immeasurable. Being a healthy individual is more than just taking the right medications or eating the right foods. It's also about looking after our spiritual and mental well-being. Nowhere in this country is that a more important lesson than right here in Alberta. According to the Canadian Mental Health Association, Albertans have one of the highest rates of anxiety and depression in the country.

Albertans with mental health problems and mental illnesses need better support and treatment within their own communities. Over the past decade Alberta's mental health services like all health services in our province have suffered from unstable funding and erratic policy leadership. It's time to put things right.

Stable funding and long-term planning need to be restored to mental health services. This should include a community-based system of treatment and support with renewed emphasis on income and employment support, appropriate housing, and adequate crisis response. With better support people with mental illness can lead fuller, happier, and more productive lives.

Thank you.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As deputy chair of the Select Special Ethics Commissioner and Ombudsman Search Committee I would like to table part 1 of the committee's report recommending the appointment of Mr. Donald M. Hamilton as the Ethics Commissioner for the province of Alberta.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 178 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to “not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize health care.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition as well today. It has over 270 signatures from around Alberta. They are urging the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the government to “immediately withdraw the draft management plan for the Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area and revise it so as to disallow any further commercial or residential development of the Kananaskis Valley.”

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Normally I’d be rising at this time to move a motion of notice regarding questions and motions for returns possibly standing and retaining their places on the Order Paper, but there being none, that motion is not required. I thought I should advise the House of that eventuality nonetheless.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 40 later this afternoon I plan to move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to deal with the following motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

The Speaker: At this time it’s only important to give notice.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request leave to introduce a bill being the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

As is normal, Mr. Speaker, with miscellaneous statutes the contents have been circulated to the two opposition caucuses. The contents of the bill reflect only those that have been agreed to by all three caucuses.

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

2:50 Bill 42
Electoral Divisions Act

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As was of course given a precursor during question period, I request leave to introduce a bill being the Electoral Divisions Act.

Bill 42 encompasses the report of the boundaries commission with a few sections that are normally in the act, that are standard with respect to all electoral divisions acts, and then the schedule which lists all of the 83 constituencies and boundaries as provided for in the boundaries commission’s report as approved by a motion of this House earlier. I anticipate that during committee there may be amendments brought forward.

[Motion carried; Bill 42 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I have six copies on the fisheries to table, the appropriate number of copies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a minority report, a dissenting opinion of the special select Standing Committee on Legislative Offices signed by myself and the Member for Edmonton-Centre. It expresses strong concern with the process around that committee.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I table the appropriate number of copies of four letters that I’ve been asked to table. The first is from Darlene Vinge, who is really upset with the funding for education in the province and the lack of purchasing power that the lack of increases has brought about.

The second letter is from Ruby Stone, who urges the province to do the right thing and fully fund the teachers’ imposed arbitrated settlement.

The third letter is from Brenda Lemoine, asking the Learning department to provide the additional funds to schools to cover the shortfall as a result of the teachers’ arbitrated settlement.

The fourth one is from Victor Dorian, again very concerned about the situation at Westglen school and the cuts that are going to, as he indicates, greatly harm both children and teachers at that school.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling. It’s a letter that I received from a constituent of mine dated May 7, 2003, regarding the deregulation of the electricity industry. Like thousands of other Albertans she wishes to convey this message to the Premier: “Deregulation was a mistake. Admit it, correct it, and move on.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m tabling a letter from Mr. Tim Belec of Westrose, Alberta, dated the 7th of May 2003. He says in terms of electrical deregulation: “I feel it is time to cut our losses and re-regulate. Some public services just don’t operate to the public benefit in the free market. Electricity is one of those services.”

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to table the 2002 annual report of the Premier’s Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. The hon. Mr. Cardinal, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, returned to order of the Assembly MR 5 requested by Ms Carlson on March 10, 2003.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would ask the Deputy Government House Leader if he would share next week's projected business with us.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be very happy to do that. We are projecting the following government business for the week of May 12 to May 15. On Monday afternoon we will be dealing with the private members' business, of course, and should there be any written questions and motions for returns, followed by Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders. In the evening on Monday we will deal with Motions Other than Government Motions, unless otherwise agreed to, followed by Committee of Supply, who will consider Aboriginal Affairs. Then we will revert to Introduction of Bills and introduce Bill 40, which would be an appropriation or main estimates act, followed by second reading of Bill 42, Electoral Divisions Act, followed by third reading of the following: Bill 18, Energy Statutes Amendment Act; Bill 20, Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2003; Bill 25, Class Proceedings Act; Bill 26, Corrections Amendment Act, 2003; Bill 28, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003; Bill 29, Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003; Bill 31, Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2003; Bill 34, Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2003; Bill 35, Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003; and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, May 13, 2003, in the afternoon we will deal with Government Bills and Orders and Private Bills in third reading as follows: Bill Pr. 1, Sisters of St. Joseph of the Province of Alberta Statutes Repeal Act, and Bill Pr. 2, Forest Lawn Bible College Act. Under second reading we will deal with Bill 39, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, and Bill 40, Appropriation Act, 2003. Under Committee of the Whole we will do Bill 42, Electoral Divisions Act, followed by third reading of bills 18, 20, 25, 26, 28, 29, 31, 34, and 35, and otherwise as per the Order Paper. On Tuesday evening we'll deal with Government Bills and Orders and Government Motion 20, which would be concurrence in the Legislative Office's report regarding the Ethics Commissioner appointment, then second reading of Bill 40 and Committee of the Whole on bills 39 and 42, followed by third reading of bills 18, 20, 25, 26, 28, 29, 31, 34, and 35, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, May 14, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders we will do third reading of Bill 39 and Bill 42 and as per progress that likely will be made on Tuesday and as per the Order Paper. On Wednesday, May 14, in the evening we'll proceed with Government Bills and Orders under Committee of the Whole Bill 40 and third reading of Bill 39 and Bill 42 and again depending on the progress from the afternoon preceding that. We will also deal with Government Motions.

On Thursday, May 15, in the afternoon we will deal with Government Bills and Orders including third reading of Bill 40 and also Government Motions.

I believe that concludes our projected and estimated business for the following week.

The Speaker: The chair must admit that he was getting rather tired just listening to this work schedule for the next several days. Hon. members might like to know that you have already spent more hours in this Legislative Assembly in the year 2003 than you did in the spring session of 2002. So you will be adding significantly more according to this very enriched schedule.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly some guests that are seated in the public gallery. These ladies are representatives of the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada, Alberta division. Today they are here with their carnations, and I wish to thank them. Carnation Day is an annual event, and it does raise significant dollars that go towards MS, and we hope someday those dollars raised could well blossom into a cure. Earlier today they met with the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. I would like to introduce them. Wanda Dannelly is the director of public relations and social action; Adeline Blumer, director of client services; and Suzanne Deschamps is from Bonnyville and will be biking in the bike tour coming up in June. She told me earlier that thus far she's raised $10,000. So thank you very much, ladies. Would you please give them warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the point of order raised today by the Leader of the Official Opposition was withdrawn, so that covers that matter.

Admonishment was given to violators of our often-violated rule about naming people. That admonition was given to the Minister of Economic Development, and advice was given to the Government House Leader with respect to conveying this message of the rule to other members of his caucus.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

The Speaker: So now we're left with only one application. That's the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a Standing Order 40 application.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. Mason:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to conduct an immediate and thorough public review entirely independent of government and industry into the failure of electricity deregulation to deliver fair and reasonable electricity rates for individuals, farms, businesses, municipalities, and public institutions.

Mr. Mason: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I understand that I may make a few brief comments relative to the urgency of this matter, which with your permission I'll now begin to do. This is urgent both in the sense that it is vitally critical for Albertans and that it is time sensitive.

Let me deal first with the importance of this issue. Electricity deregulation has become one of the most expensive boondoggles in Alberta's history. Estimates of what it has cost Albertans range from between $5 billion to $10 billion. Mr. Speaker, this will continue to cost Albertans individually hundreds and thousands of dollars for their homes and businesses, and it is urgent that this Assembly deal with this quickly and before it adjourns for the summer recess. Given the government's actions today and the announcement of the review, it is clear that it will not meet the test set out in the motion.

Mr. Speaker, it's very important that this review be both independent of the government and of industry and that it deal with the root causes of the problem of high electricity prices, and that is deregulation itself. What the government has put forward today does neither, and therefore it is urgent and pressing that this Assembly deal with this matter this afternoon.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, I want to congratulate the hon. member for succinctly following the description of the word "brief." That is very helpful. Approximately a minute to a minute and a half. That's very commendable.

Now, this application requires unanimous consent of the Assembly.

[Unanimous consent denied]

head: Orders of the Day
head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I wish to call the Committee of Supply to order. First, I would like to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre before we begin the actual discussions.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to clarify my remarks during debate in Committee of Supply for the estimates of Community Development on Tuesday evening, May 6, 2003. The event I was trying to remember was the 2001 World Championships in Athletics, and the reference for that is on page 1476 of Hansard.*

Thank you for the opportunity to clarify.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04
Sustainable Resource Development

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions with respect to these estimates? The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be here today to talk to you about Sustainable Resource Development's 2003-2004 budget. Before I start, I'd like to introduce some of the staff that are sitting in the members' gallery: Dr. Bob Fessenden, our deputy minister; Crystal Damer, executive assistant to the deputy minister; Ray Duffy, director of budgets, forecasts, and financial statements; Daphne Cheel, executive director of policy and planning; Donna Babchishin, director of communications; Susan McManus, assistant director of communications; and Donna Ballard, my executive assistant.

I'd like to take one moment before I get to the details of the budget just to thank the staff for all the hard work they do throughout the year. I'm not that easy to work with, I know. I have a policy that has a 24-hour return on most of the stuff that comes through my office. So if anyone ever tells you that it's at the minister's office, it's not true. It might be at the deputy's office or the ADM's but not the minister's. So keep that in mind. They do a heck of a job.

At Sustainable Resource Development, Mr. Chairman, our job is to ensure that Alberta's natural resources are sustainable for future generations. There are a number of economic, recreational, cultural, and social activities on our public lands, and through the hard work of department staff, of course, we maintain a balance between activity and conservation.

We have a variety of programs and services in our ministry, and there are basically five core businesses: one is, of course, a very important one, forest protection; forest land and resource management; fish and wildlife management; rangeland management; and land use disposition management. As well as the Department of Sustainable Resource Development our ministry also includes the Natural Resources Conservation Board and the Surface Rights Board and the Land Compensation Board.

At SRD our job is to ensure that Albertans benefit from the development of their public lands and renewable resources both now and for the future. The work our ministry does in a changing and growing Alberta is so very important, and indeed Alberta is a very quickly growing province. For instance, since 1991 our population has increased by about a half million people. Now we have a population of more than 3 million in Alberta. So, of course, there is a need for increased services for Albertans.

Increasing population means more Albertans require more of our services and are using the resources that are in the ministry's management. For example, 98,000 hunters participated in the 2002 hunting season, about the same as in 2001. These hunters bought more than 250,000 different licences. There were about 217,522 sportfishing licences sold for the 2002 angling season. Currently there are about 565,000 active wildlife identification number cardholders. These are the WIN numbers. This is about 58,000 more than at this time in 2002.

This increased interest, of course, by Albertans in recreational hunting and fishing is very positive for our province. However, we need to have the proper system in place to deal with these increases, and this means that our staff and ministry need to have the resources to do this. Therefore, we are pleased that this year's budget remains stable and that we will continue to have the necessary staffing and monitoring programs in place to take care of our fish and wildlife resources.

Another area where we have seen a great increase is in the number of land dispositions provided by our public lands division. For instance, during last year's fiscal period over 176,000 dispositions were provided by this division for agriculture and industrial dispositions. This is quite a large number and speaks to the volume of work that our ministry is able to turn around on a daily basis.

Another highlight in delivering increased services to Albertans is the Natural Resources Conservation Board. The year 2002 was very busy for the Natural Resources Conservation Board, the first year it assumed responsibility for regulating confined feeding operations. Business conducted in 2003 so far indicates that the board will also be busy in 2003.

In 2002, its first year of responding to complaints related to livestock operations, the NRCB received a total of 981 complaints relating to 431 separate operations throughout the province. NRCB inspectors issued a total of 36 enforcement orders, and an additional 122 operators received a verbal directive, a warning letter, or notice of noncompliance. In 2002 the NRCB received 169 applications for confined feeding operations or manure storage management facilities. It issued a total of 70 decisions, that included 60 approvals and 10 denials. The board is awaiting additional technical information on another 67 of the applications received in 2002. Overall, the number of complaints the NRCB received during the first three months of 2003 was up 30 percent over the same period in 2002. So you can see, Mr. Chairman, that the additional $2 million we are providing to the NRCB this year in their budget will ensure that they can fulfill their mandate to Albertans.

The last area I wish to speak about in terms of increased services to Albertans is certainly in the forest protection area. As all members here today know, we have had a very busy fire season the last number of years. In fact, just to give you context of what we consider busy, we had over 1,450 fires last year and wildfires threatened over seven communities and forced the evacuation of thousands of Albertans. Most people don't know that 40 percent of fires in this province are human caused and that the rest are from lightning. We need to get this number down, and we're committed to doing that through our work in the community and through public education processes.

Industrial, residential, and recreational demands are also increasing on Alberta's lands and resources. We are working with Albertans to find the right balance between economy, environment, and the community. We consult extensively with Albertans about issues affecting natural resources. Consultations continue to be critical in our work to manage Alberta's fish and wildlife, for example through the Endangered Species Conservation Committee and groups such as the conifer management group in west-central Alberta. We've involved stakeholders recently in three very successful recovery efforts of piping plover, swift fox, and the western blue flag.

We consult Albertans regularly on things such as allocation and fisheries management. This contributes to our important work on species at risk as well as our management objective of our other species. Many of you are aware, for example, of the province's excellent work on the new recovery team for grizzly bear management.

In the area of public lands we have held consultations to develop access management plans for the Bighorn backcountry. We are currently asking for public input on plans for the Ghost-Waiparous area located just northwest of Cochrane, an area of about 1,500 square kilometres, just one and a half kilometres outside of Calgary. So there's a lot of pressure for the area. The Ghost-Waiparous access management plan will provide government-approved direction for recreational off-highway vehicle use as well as other uses. We will be working with stakeholders and Albertans to achieve a balance that protects the environment and provides opportunities for recreational uses in the area.

As another example we continue to work with the industry to integrate planning and reduce impacts. Industry is responding favourably as shown by more joint planning and partnering agreements. A monitoring process is also being established to ensure that local involvement in future decisions about the trails and the backcountry happen.

It is no secret that Alberta's forest sector is also facing some very serious challenges. The current softwood lumber dispute, of course, with the United States is having a significant negative impact on our forestry here in Alberta. Industry and government have been very busy working on allocating the financial resources that are necessary to defend forestry practices here in Alberta. At the same time the industry has had to deal with near record low commodity prices. These factors have let uncertainties and doubts into the marketplace. These issues make it more important than ever that government and industry work together as a team to address today's challenges and to look at the future.

During this challenging period I am proud of the leadership that the Alberta Forest Products Association and the Alberta forest industry continue to show. Despite these challenges this industry continues to show their commitment to innovation. They have introduced new technologies and leading-edge practices that allow them to do their job more effectively, efficiently, and with concern and sensitivity for the environment and wildlife. The forest sector truly shares the concern of Albertans that our forests are sustainable.

Through this period the forest sector continues to play an important part in diversification of our province and the prosperity that all Albertans enjoy. Forestry is more than trees. It's about people. It's about the nearly 54,000 jobs that forestry creates in Alberta. It's about the more than 45 communities in Alberta that depend on forestry as their primary industry, and it's $8.4 billion revenue for the province.

A healthy forest is critical to our future for the environment and the economy. Our department realizes that there are many challenges to be faced, but thanks to our careful planning and the dedication of our staff we are prepared to meet these challenges.

Our total budget remains quite stable this year, close to $192 million, which is up by $8.5 million from last year. The increases are quite simple. We need to put funding in those areas that need additional support. For instance, I spoke earlier of the $2 million increase to deal with heavier demands being placed on the NRCB. As well, an additional $2.2 million will be for existing staffing and the cost pressures there. The majority of other funding will be spread through the ministry to support other key service areas and programs that Albertans expect us to deliver.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank all of you for your attention here today, and I will be open for questions now.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you to the minister. I'd also like to thank the staff that joins us here today and the rest of the staff in the department. They are immensely helpful when I have questions. We don't always agree on the direction that the ministry should take, but then we don't agree on the name. Sustainable Resource Development in my mind should be just sustainable resources. That leads us down a path of different opinions on some issues, but it is very helpful to have the frank and open discussion that we have and the many briefings that are available to us through the minister with this department. So I thank them all for that.

I also would like to acknowledge that this department offered to brief us on the budget, and we just didn't have enough time this week to get there. So perhaps we can organize that next year. That would be great.

I'd just like to put on the record in advance that if we don't get through all of our questions, we'll submit them in writing and ask for those back.

For my first questions I'd just like to deal with a couple of issues. The first one is the grizzly bears. Mr. Minister, in your comments you talked about a recovery plan for the grizzlies. There's been lots of pressure to put them on the endangered species list at some level. Can you talk about why you are resistant to that idea and what is actually happening with the recovery plan?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Chairman. You know, we had formed the committee to look at that specifically and develop a recovery plan. Of course, the other thing that I've changed in that particular area is reduced, in fact, the hunting of the grizzly bear to a manageable size. You know, we reduced the number hunted here in Alberta by 20 percent, I believe. When you look at the map of the hunting areas, zone 1, zone 2A, 2B, 3A, 3B, 4A, 4B, 4C, 6, and 7, in some of those areas, like 6 and 7, we've reduced considerably the number hunted because there's added pressure in those particular areas.

You know, when you look at the number of licences provided to hunt grizzly bear, we've reduced from 129 to 101 in 2002 and also changed where the hunting will take place. Only about 15 are taken out each year. On the other hand, you know, you look at the government next door to us. B.C. actually in this year is allowing the hunt of 200 to 250. So, you know, when you look at both B.C. and Alberta, there's only a boundary not noticeable by grizzly bears, so they could move around.

I think what we're doing is probably reasonable at this time. I think we've done a lot of work in grizzly bear management, research, monitoring, and monitoring the problem bears also. Our grizzly bear management objective in Alberta is to maintain a healthy grizzly bear population, following up, of course, on the recommendations the member mentioned of the Endangered Species Conservation Committee. Alberta took immediate actions and steps to deal with the issue, and I mentioned earlier that at my request the department established the recovery team to evaluate the current grizzly bear management and identify areas for improvement as well as a technical committee. I have also requested that the department look at options for increasing poaching fines, for an example, for poaching grizzly bears because that is a concern, so we're definitely looking at that.

This year, again, I said that we restricted grizzly bear hunting in fact even further especially to protect the adult female population in some areas. The Endangered Species Conservation Committee believes that Alberta's grizzly bear population is fairly stable. Our data reports that information even with the current mortalities. The committee also identified that the current regulated hunt is not a primary concern for the mortality of the grizzly bear.

Habitat issues will likely be the greater concern for the future well-being of the grizzly bear in Alberta. We have a challenge, Mr. Chairman, you know, to always keep the balance because a grizzly bear is definitely not a friendly animal. One of the things we find is that more and more animals are becoming urbanized, and they start to go into towns and communities and also parks where there are a lot of people. There always seems to be a conflict either between a grizzly bear, especially, but also the black bear, the elk, the deer, the cougar, and the coyotes and the wolves, so there is always the challenge of ensuring that these wild animals remain wild. To have some form of a hunting season, I believe, maybe keeps the animals healthier than not to hunt them at all because, really, a grizzly bear does not fit into a town or a hamlet setting. They're not a safe animal. On the other hand, they have their environment that sometimes we interfere with, so it's a challenge.

Definitely, that is a very good question; it's a very important one. As a government we will continue working very hard to ensure that we try and recover the population. After this year's hunt again we'll review the targeted hunting areas and make the necessary adjustments that are required so that we can ensure that the population of the grizzly bear is sustained, at the same time keeping the balance between keeping the animals wild and protected, and of course the protection of people is also important. If you do walk into a grizzly bear if you're out hiking or out hunting or out on your trapline, in most cases it's either you or the grizzly bear. There are no ifs or buts. They're a little different animal than the black bear or the cougar. A grizzly bear will actually hunt out a person that's out there, so we have to be very, very careful in how we manage that in the future. There has to always be a balance.

Ms Carlson: To follow up on this line of thought, Mr. Minister, we've had some concerns from the southwest foothill regions that they're seeing greater numbers of predators, particularly wolves and coyotes, and that they're concerned that this is going to cause or is currently causing a decrease in elk and deer and other animals that outfitters normally would hunt. So can you comment on that? Are you doing any studies? Are you hearing those concerns as well, and do you have any plans to deal with this issue?

Mr. Cardinal: That's another very good question that ties in quite a bit with the first question. Definitely we have been informed of that, and we are dealing with it. The problem we have here is of course to ensure that we do proper monitoring, that we're not off when we monitor the actual numbers of wolves, for an example, and other animal species, that we keep that balance. That's how our allocation is done in most cases for hunting – you know, the bear, hunting the wolves, and also elk – is monitoring the population and trying to determine, keeping a healthy balance and a healthy growth of animals and at the same time reducing the populations of certain species where it is required to keep that balance. It's a challenge, but we need more work on that on a constant basis. It's a good question.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I'd now like to speak about invasive species for a moment if we can. We know that there's the ongoing problem with the beetle infestation in the forests between the B.C. and Alberta borders. What's the status of that right now? How is it being managed? Does it look like it's going to be controllable? In addition to that, what other species are you looking at as being invasive, particularly with regard to our forests, for this coming year?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much. The mountain pine beetle infestation is an important forest management issue for Alberta, like B.C. B.C. has I think a serious problem in some areas. You know, this problem will potentially cost the province millions of dollars, affecting potentially the sustainability of our forests. I believe that in British Columbia, from what I understand, it's already cost over $9 billion in damages to the provincial economy. So it is serious. It's right next door to us. Pine forests in Alberta are getting older and are vulnerable to mountain pine beetle outbreaks. Banff national park is currently experiencing a mountain pine beetle outbreak, and the department will continue to work closely with forest companies and other agencies, including the national parks, to manage the mountain pine beetle problem as effectively as possible.

Sustainable Resource Development, of course, has an effective beetle monitoring and control system in place, and we will continue to play a key role in minimizing the effects of mountain pine beetle through early detection and control of new infestation. If you go on highway 1 past Cochrane and west towards Banff, you will see areas where there was some clear-cutting done to try and separate the movement of the pine beetle into new areas in the forest. It is a challenge because, from what I understand, if the right wind or the wrong wind comes up, the beetle can be carried a long way into a new direction and therefore continues to be a challenge.

So, yes, we're aware of the problem. It could potentially be a serious problem, but we will ensure that we have the necessary financial and human resources to work with other jurisdictions to ensure that we manage that problem.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd now like to get an update on the Carseland fish ladder if we can. Initially we had the problems with the ladder having to be repaired during a spawning time, and then there was a huge outcry in fact from that area to us about the screen that was on the top of the ladder. I know the minister has said that the fish were able to spawn downstream, but those actually managing to get up the ladder and then hit the screen had the potential for being damaged and not being able to spawn downstream. If the minister could tell us if that problem has been resolved and what practices you may be putting in place to ensure that that doesn't happen again in the future.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yeah. Thank you very much. In fact, I understand that the screen has been removed now. The fish ladder beside the Carseland weir is operational, and the fish are able now to get to the river on the upstream side of the weir. Of course, high water levels are delaying total completion of the ladder project. For safety reasons the water levels need to subside before work can be completed. Further, the contractor is waiting for some components to be delivered so they can be installed by the end of May. Conditions caused by some of the unfinished work may be making it more difficult for the fish to find openings in the river. However, I guess nothing at this time impedes their eventual passage, especially with the screen being removed. I can give you assurance that in the future we will ensure that the work that needs to be done is co-ordinated with the spawning season of our fisheries. It may be necessary to try and do it late fall or later on in the summer not to, you know, hit the spawning season at the same time.

So that is a very good question, and I know the Ministry of Transportation continues to work with us closely on that, and you can be assured that we will be looking after that. Again, I'd just like to say that even with some of the difficulties we had with the screen and the inability of fish to move certain portions, they still were able to spawn below the weir and also above. If there is damage done, no doubt it will be very minimal, but in the future we'll definitely monitor it a lot closer.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now I'd like to talk about woodland caribou for a few moments. It's a species that we don't actually spend a lot of time talking about in this Legislature, yet their numbers are diminishing at a rapid rate, in fact perhaps faster than other endangered species like rhinoceroses and those kinds of animals. Woodland caribou are starting to gain an international reputation. They are diminishing in this province not only because of a lack of mature forest area but because there's more human presence in their habitat, particularly in the wintertime with the larger numbers we've started to see in high-country winter activities like heli-skiing and so on. What's your department doing to address this particular issue?

Mr. Cardinal: We do have, again, a good monitoring program and a plan. In a lot of areas we work with industry; for example, in my constituency, Alberta-Pacific, who holds a large forest management agreement. Within their forest management agreement are, you know, natural grounds for the caribou to be, and in fact Al-Pac jointly with us have collared some animals to track the movement and try and count the number of animals and what impact their forest-harvesting may have. They seem to be reasonably stable, but it's a challenge, again, to keep the population strong.

It is not a food source for aboriginal people. I don't think it ever was here in Alberta. I think that maybe there are a few people that hunt, but very, very few hunt caribou, so it's not a food source for the aboriginal people. The threat of opening roads and right-of-ways for oil and gas and forestry development in relation to aboriginal hunting of the caribou is very, very limited. It's almost nonexistent, maybe one or two throughout the winter, at least in the north.

The biggest challenge, of course, is the wolf population. That's their main food source, between that and deer, and of course the wolf population has grown. We estimate a fairly high population, and wolves are really wild. That's one animal that remains wild. They're a wild animal; they remain wild. In fact, there are people that trap 60, 70 years in northern Alberta and may not see a wolf ever, maybe once or twice in their whole lifetime. They do remain wild in certain parts of the province, and they're hard to trace. It's hard to track the numbers. On the other hand, we have to keep trying to monitor and count the number of wolves out in certain areas where there may be caribou and also keep track of the caribou, again to try to keep the balance. It may be necessary to make some adjustments on the wolf population in order to deal with the situation of the caribou. So we're working on it. It's a challenge; it's not easy. But you can be assured that we'll try our best.

The Chair: Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We continue to hear about and experience from an economic perspective the impact of oil and gas on forestry practices, and I particularly hear from forestry companies who are very concerned still about the amount of timber the oil and gas companies are taking out of the forests and how that impacts inventory. Now we're starting to hear a number of independent studies also coming back with recommendations that there should be better co-operation, that the forest practices in this province are archaic, that they need to be revised. I've heard from the industry for a long time that those issues need to be addressed. Can you tell me what progress you're making on that and whether or not you're going to move beyond any voluntary compliance by the oil and gas industry to just manage their cuts in a more sustainable manner?

Mr. Cardinal: That's a very good question, a very important question for Alberta. Sustainable Resource Development, of course, continues to review and improve forest and land management practices in Alberta. Alberta forest products and the oil and gas industry do work together to co-ordinate activities on the landscape, resulting in of course a smaller environmental footprint and fewer impacts from activities such as road construction, seismic line, and pipeline activities. Forest company management plans incorporate into their plans protection of sensitive wildlife habitat, biodiversity, and so on. New forest management planning guidelines are being developed to strengthen these requirements, and, again, some of it is at the request of the industry and municipalities.

Of course, as you're aware, each year we plant about 75 million seedlings in Alberta. In Alberta of course we determine the volume of timber available for sustainable harvest according to what we'll grow, so we always have to keep that in mind as we harvest our resources to ensure that proper co-ordination and proper management of our public lands in relation to oil and gas, forestry, tourism, and other developments takes place.

We manage over a hundred million acres of public land, and I believe 85 million acres of that is in the green area, or the protected area. Therefore, whatever you do as far as oil and gas activities, forestry, agriculture, tourism, and other activities, they will have some impact on the environment. We are working hard to minimize that. In fact, I believe that in the eastern slopes, for example, about 75 percent now of the oil and gas activities are low impact, which means that there's a lot less damage to the environment. In fact, I believe we've reduced some of the seismic lands, if I remember right, from 10 metres down to 4 or 5 metres now. Some of them you can't even see. In the foothills I've flown over where there was some seismic activity, and the only thing you can see is a small line through the bush, which really you can't drive on because it's just a line that's cut, and of course the exploration that takes place is done with a helicopter. So we are working hard.

In other areas, of course, Al-Pac with their forest management work very closely – the forest management agreements have to have a long-range plan. One, they have to have a 10-year plan, which the ministry approves, and they have to have an annual operating plan, and those annual operating plans have to be done through a public hearing process. What happens there, of course, is that there is co-ordination now between the oil and gas industry and the FMA holders to ensure that they co-ordinate the development of a road network, for example. In fact, they try to co-ordinate even the work plan for each year, because some of those FMAs are large and they could have two or three different areas that they harvest their wood from each year and those could be different from what the oil and gas industry plans. So they try to co-ordinate the activity so that they can be in an area at the time and maybe in fact use the same roads even to access the resources that they want to develop.

So it is a challenge, but I think it's something that we have a good handle on.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to join in the Committee of Supply debates on Sustainable Resource Development. I'll refer the minister to page 368 of the business plan book for the Alberta 2003 budget. I'm looking under goal 2. It seems that the annual allowable cut may be starting to decrease, as projected by the 2003-06 target appearing here, and I'm wondering if this is a trend. Does it indicate the declining viability of our forest resources? I mean, you're dropping from 24 million cubic metres to 23 million cubic metres.

Now, can the minister explain the goal 3 outcome measurement for species at risk, which is the next goal appearing on the same page, 368? What does "percentage of species at risk" mean? Is this the number of all species at risk over the total number of species in Alberta? Also, can the minister release a more detailed breakdown of this measurement, please? Why is the ministry expecting the percentage of species at risk to go up, and what are they doing to make sure that this doesn't happen? I'm also wondering why there is no output measurement for goal 3. I see output measurements for goal 2; I see output measurements for goal 4. I don't see any output measurement for goal 3.

Now, why are there fewer and fewer rangeland leases in good standing? What exactly does it mean for a rangeland not to be in good standing, and what is the ministry doing to change this trend?

How does the ministry hold the Natural Resources Conservation Board to account for its spending habits and the achievement of its stated goals?

The Surface Rights Board, the SRB, has a reputation for being very pro oil and gas. I'm wondering what steps the ministry is taking to ensure that the SRB delivers totally equitable and unbiased decisions. What steps is the ministry taking to improve the reputation of the SRB among landholders? Can the minister also tell me – actually, probably in writing; these are pretty detailed. What are the caseloads for the NRCB, the SRB, and the LCB? How have these numbers varied over the past few years, and why would there be a variance? Where does the minister expect these numbers to go in the future?

My next series of questions for the minister are related to the Auditor General's report and specifically to the section dedicated to Sustainable Resource Development starting on page 245 of the annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta, 2001-02. Now, there is a numbered recommendation here, and the numbered recommendations are the ones we are taught to pay special notice to. They're numbered because the Auditor General wishes to make a point of them and is also expecting a response from the government as to exactly how the government plans on responding to them. So I know that this is recommendation 48:

We [the Auditor General] recommend that the Department of Sustainable Resource Development improve:

1. the planning, documentation, and reporting of results for its timber production audit group.
2. the timeliness of its timber production auditing.

As a bit of a background here, with the province owning most of the forests in northern Alberta, it does allocate those forests to private forestry companies through dispositions. The companies are expected to manage their dispositions on a sustainable basis . . . [They do] pay timber royalties and fees to the Department based on the volumes of timber harvested.

Timber royalties and fees are the largest source of revenue for the Department. To ensure prompt and accurate reporting by forestry companies, the Department's Forest Management Branch conducts timber production audits.

The Minister of course knows all of this. I'm really reading this into the record for other people that are following along with the debate.

Therefore, the Auditor General notes that the purpose of a timber production audit is to verify that correct volumes of timber are reported and that the correct royalties and fees are paid. Accurate timber harvest volumes are also important in ensuring that forest use is sustainable.

So it's of some concern when I see this recommendation that improvement is needed in the planning, documentation, and reporting of results and the timeliness.

The Auditor General is finding that the timber production audit group successfully met five of the eleven criteria.

So they didn't even hit 50 percent.

Timber auditors understand the forestry business that they audit, as well as the legislative and contractual requirements that govern forestry operations . . . However, six of the criteria were not met.

They go on at length on pages 246, 247, and 248 on the implications, risks, and findings of the inability to meet that numbered recommendation.

There's also a reservation of opinion for consumable inventory. Following corporate government accounting policy, consumable inventory has been expensed when purchased and has not been recognized as an asset in the accompanying statements of financial position. The value of consumable inventory not recorded at March 31, 2002 is estimated to be at least $4 million. As a result, net assets are understated by the same amount.

There's also a concern – actually, this is a pretty standard reservation of opinion on capital assets, because the department is immediately expensing acquisitions under $15,000 instead of amortizing them over their useful lives. That concern actually appears in a number of departments.

I'm looking to see what specifically the ministry is doing in this fiscal year under discussion in this budget to address these problems and what progress has been made. I would also like to see a time line of exactly when the ministry anticipates all these issues that have been raised by the Auditor General being resolved. This is a fairly substantial comment from the Auditor General. As I sit on the Public Accounts Committee, I have opportunity to see about 50 percent of the ministries that we examine in any given year. We don't have time to examine more of them. The concerns being expressed under recommendation 48 are substantial. So I am expressing some concerns about how the ministry plans to address those concerns.

In fact, I don't have it with me, so maybe the first question the minister can answer under that is: has the government accepted that recommendation and made a commitment to address it? I'm sorry I don't have the government's response back on those ones, so I'll just have to put that up front and ask specifically if the government has responded favorably to doing this, in which case the rest of my questions flow. If for some reason the government has said that it will not be willing to accommodate this recommendation, then I would like a very thorough explanation of why not, because this is pretty serious. We're talking money, but we're also talking use of resources, and we're also talking sustainability.

So thank you very much for the opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to bring those concerns forward under this debate. I look forward to either an oral response or, I suspect, given some of my questions, perhaps a written response to some of my questions.

Thank you.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Chairman, because some of those questions require numbers that I probably would not have with me here, my staff will review Hansard and respond in writing to most of the questions, because there were a lot of detailed questions asked in relation to numbers and performance measures and caseloads and stuff. We will provide those.

One area I can address offhand right here is in relation to the timber allocation and the annual allowable cut. The member mentioned that we do have in the province an estimated 44.5 million cubic metres in annual growth in our forested public lands. The total net allowable cut within the green area is about 24.1 million cubic metres. So although we are almost nearing the point where all the available annual allowable cut is allocated, each year the growth is greater than what we take out. It's a challenge, again, but I think the industry continues to do reasonably well.

We are of course looking at possibly allocating some more of our timber that's available or that may be available possibly in August. There is a working committee of northern MLAs that will look at the balance, what is unallocated, and that's aspen and coniferous also. It's not a whole lot, but there's some. Instead of calling for new projects in the allocation of the balance of the wood we have available, we want to allocate that to stabilize the existing companies that are out there. Rather than bringing in new companies to go after the same resource, it's probably wiser at this time, because of the limited amount that's available, to allocate that somehow, keeping in mind the challenges we have with the softwood lumber agreements or lack of agreements, that we do proper allocation to stabilize the existing companies.

You mentioned a number of areas: the NRCB, the Land Compensation Board, and the Surface Rights Board. As far as caseloads, I talked about some caseloads during my opening comments but definitely not enough to cover what you've asked for, so I'll ask my department staff again to look at Hansard and ensure that we give you as quickly as possible the answers to the questions you have in those areas. The same with the Auditor General's reports and some recommendations. You can be assured that as a ministry we try to deliver as quickly as possible on as many as possible of the recommendations made by the Auditor General as we go forward. You can be assured again that we'll review the Hansard, and I will get my staff to provide the necessary information you require.

In addition to that, we talked about performance measures. There again we will provide the appropriate information to you in writing in relation to performance measures to satisfy some of the concerns you have.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is certainly always interesting to have a discussion with the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. The hon. minister, as I've said in this House in the past, is the closest thing the province of Alberta is ever going to have to a minister of fisheries. Certainly, it is with a great deal of interest that I listen to the exchanges between the hon. minister and the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie in regard to fish stocks in this province. I would encourage the minister to do his best to ensure that fish have access to all areas of our streams. I'm very interested, and I'm sure the minister will tell me how he's going to monitor the situation. I'm sure that there's monitoring going on in all areas of the province in regard to fish stocks and their access to streambeds. I am quite confident that that monitoring will continue into the next fiscal year.

Certainly, whenever we look at the breakdown of expenses by core business in millions of dollars for this department, whenever we look at reporting agencies, the public lands management, the fish and wildlife management, forest land and resource management, forest protection, policy and information management, and the ministry support services, there is a significant amount of tax dollars here. We look at total ministry expense for 2003-2004, and it's estimated to be $208 million as opposed to the forecast for 2002-2003 of $449 million. This is a decrease of $246 million.

However, one should know that the ministry does not budget for large fire-fighting costs, that have resulted in hundreds of millions in supplementary supply requests in the past. We will look for money to be requested in supplementary supply once the fire season starts, and hopefully we're not going to have the fire season this year that we've had in the recent past. Certainly, it almost seemed to be a rite of late spring and early summer in this province that unfortunately we had some large fires to deal with that took up all the resources, whether they be men, women, or machinery, to fight those fires at enormous expense for, in my view, a resource that is diminishing, and that's our wood fibre. I certainly hope that this year will be a little bit different. The weather seems to be co-operating. We can have more moisture content in the forest and the forest floor, and hopefully fires will not be as extreme or severe as they have been in the past. I wish the minister and his department well in preventing through public education large forest fires from happening and, if they do start, in getting a handle on it right away so that hopefully they will not expand.

Now, we also have to deal with the government and lottery fund estimates, Mr. Chairman. Will the minister please table a document that explains each line item and identifies exactly which programs are funded through which line items? I'm talking about program 1, ministry support services. The budgets for both the minister's and the deputy minister's offices are increasing by $20,000. Why has this new money been allocated to these offices? What is the manifest need for this money? The human resources budget is being increased by $50,000, and this would appear to be the addition of an extra member of the staff. Is this true, and why is this extra staffer needed? Is it to monitor the fish streams? What sort of monitoring is this extra staffer going to do?

The strategic corporate services budget is increasing by approximately $450,000. Why does this line item require nearly $500,000 in funding? What will these extra funds be used for? Also, what is the breakdown of the $770,000 in the minister's and deputy minister's office budgets for 2003-2004 by salaries for the permanent positions, salaries for the nonpermanent positions, the salaries for the contract positions, the travel expenses, advertising, telecommunications, and hosting expenses? How much was spent on bonuses last year, and how much is anticipated to be spent on bonuses this year? What was the amount of the largest bonus given out, to whom was it given, and for what reason was it given? Where did the budget for legal services go? There was $67,000 for this two years ago.

Now, in program 2, policy and information management, the policy and planning line item is increasing by 86 percent, from $2 million to $3.8 million. This is nearly a doubling of money for this line item. Will we see policies and planning from the department that are twice as good? What planning activities is the department undertaking such that it needs twice as much money? The Official Opposition has brought up many ideas about how policy and planning could be improved. Are these going to be implemented with this huge injection of money? Some of the ideas were from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

The ministry is spending nearly $4.2 million on regional offices. Is this funding to continue the operations of the offices or for acquiring new offices? How many regional offices does the ministry operate? Has the ministry undertaken an internal audit to see if a reduction in the number of regional offices is possible? We saw a reduction in the number of I think ag offices last year, a little over a year ago. Is the same deal applicable to the Department of Sustainable Resource Development?

Now, the ministry is spending $350,000 more on information technology this year than last. What information technology resource does the ministry employ? Why do they require more than $1 million per year to use this information technology? What is the reason the ministry needs $350,000 more for information technology?

Forest protection. We discussed this a little earlier, Mr. Chairman. The organizational framework is receiving an extra million dollars this year for operating expenses. What is this extra million dollars going to do, and why is it needed there? Now, wildfire operations are budgeted for $18 million this year for operating expense, but $270 million was spent last year. That's for fire stations and fire crews and things like that, I would understand. But why does the ministry not budget for wildfire operations a little more realistically so that budgeted figures more closely approximate the actual amount of moneys spent at the end of the year? The ministry's budgeting procedure in this regard is rather appalling and would cause economic havoc if it weren't for this province's surpluses from oil revenues, and I certainly wouldn't consider these surpluses as endless. Conventional oil production is declining, and synthetic crude production is increasing. One has to be very careful that we manage that nest egg to the maximum advantage of all Albertans.

Now, there is an organizational framework that is getting an extra

$1.75 million this year for equipment and inventory purchases and an extra $1.25 million this year for capital investment. Exactly where is this extra money going and why? Should we expect this increase in funds to remain in future budgets as well?

Program 4, Mr. Chairman, the forest land and resource management. The forest operations budget is being cut by $1 million. How is this going to affect the ministry's work in this area? What specific programs will suffer cuts as a result? What steps is the ministry taking to ensure that critical operations are not severely affected by this cut? Forest policy and business will receive an extra $1 million this year. Where is the extra money going to? What was the specific need? What convinced the ministry that $1 million is better spent in forestry policy and business rather than in forestry operations? What exactly is meant by nominal sum disposals that the ministry is spending $2 million on this year?

In program 5, fish and wildlife management, the policy and business management is receiving an extra $1 million for operating expenses this year. What new programs are being developed or what product will Albertans see that justifies the expenditure of an extra million dollars under this last line item? How will this extra million dollars be monitored to see if it's spent well?

Wildlife management is being cut back by $400,000. There is evidence that wildlife management needs more resources to do its job properly. Why is the ministry cutting back on this crucial program? What parts of the wildlife management program does the ministry plan to take this money out of? What does the ministry anticipate the effects of this cut will be? Will any staffers lose their jobs?

Now, fisheries management is also being cut back by about $400,000. Given the problem the ministry has in handling the Carseland weir problem with spawning trout, doesn't the minister think that this line item needs more money rather than less? What parts of the fisheries management program does the ministry plan to take this money out of? What does the ministry anticipate the effects of this cut will be? Will any staffers lose their jobs?

Enforcement field services is getting an extra $600,000. How exactly will this new money be allocated to enforcement programs? What was the nature of the need that the ministry is trying to address with the specific allotment of funds here?

Policy and business management will receive $400,000 for equipment and inventory purchases. They didn't receive anything for this last year. Where is this money going, and should we expect this money to be allocated on an annual basis?

Public lands management, program 6. Land policy is getting approximately $700,000 more this year for operating expenses. What projects are increasing the costs for this line item? What is the need for these programs? Will there be extra staff hired?

Land dispositions and technical services will receive an extra $1.1 million this year. Where is this extra money going? What is the justification for this?

Resource data has been cut by $750,000. What programs does this line item include? What specific programs are being cut? What effects will this cut have on the entire public lands management section?

Now, land use operations and rangeland management are both getting budget increases of half a million dollars. To what specific programs or what projects is this extra money going? What is the justification for these new or expanded programs or projects? Rangeland management is receiving $200,000 this year that it didn't receive last year for equipment and inventory purchases. What is this money going towards? Is it a onetime expense, or will this be a reoccurring expense?

Reporting agencies, program 7 of the budget. The Natural Resources Conservation Board went significantly over budget last year, incurring a loss of $1.6 million. What is the reason for this board going so far over budget? What was the caseload of the NRCB last year? How did this compare with previous years? The NRCB is getting a budget increase of $1.7 million over what it spent last year. Why will the NRCB need so much more money to operate next year? Is the ministry anticipating many more cases? The Surface Rights Amendment Act was supposed to take more appeals out of the courts and put them before the Surface Rights Board. Is that the reason for the budget overrun?

The ministry is anticipating $2 million less in transfers from the government of Canada this year. Why will the ministry not receive these revenues? What is the ministry doing also to solicit more funds from the federal government?

The ministry is expecting half a million dollars more this year from investment income. Can the minister please explain the justification of this number? What assumptions are being made to make this prediction, Mr. Chairman?

The ministry budget shows that it is expecting $10 million more next year in revenues from premiums, fees, and licences. This is expected to come primarily from timber royalties and fees. Why would timber royalties and fees be increasing by $10 million this year? What assumptions has the ministry made to come up with this number? Will any fees, premiums, or licence costs be increasing next year? Which ones, and how much?

On page 357 it shows that the ministry received $64 million in other revenue last year, when only $7.5 million was budgeted, and only $5.7 million was received in 2001-02. Where did this windfall of other revenues come from last year? Why will the ministry not be receiving these funds again this year? Why was it that the windfall of revenue received last year was not anticipated and thus budgeted for? Is this same thing happening this year?

On page 357 of the estimates there is listed under Expense forest protection, base, and forest protection, extended. Will the minister explain the difference between these two lines items, please?

Environment statutory programs is budgeted to get $6.6 million when it only used $4.5 million last year and $4 million the year previous. What is included in these statutory programs? Why is $6 million being budgeted for these programs when they don't seem to be costing more than $5 million per year?

The estimates state that the ministry expects a net gain of $4 million on the disposal of capital assets this year. What capital assets is the ministry divesting itself of that are worth $4 million? How will these divestitures take place? What decision-making process was used to decide which capital was expendable and which capital was not? Did the ministry consider that some of the capital they divest themselves of may have to be repurchased at a later date for much more money? What has the minister done to prevent this contingency from occurring?

On page 359, Mr. Chairman, of the estimates insurance proceeds of $55 million are listed. Are these insurance proceeds from wildfire insurance? The insurance company said that it wanted to audit the province, as I recall. Did it? What was its conclusion? What is the ministry's stance on this issue? Will the ministry be trying to get wildfire insurance for this year as well? Does the ministry think any company will give insurance to them after the huge payout they got this year?

Environmental protection and enhancement fund, statement of operations. Investment income is listed under revenue for the fund. What investments does the fund make that earn it $3 million a year? Can the minister please explain the variations in this investment income over the past several years? Should this fund really be in the investment business? I don't know. Probably not, Mr. Chairman. The estimates state that the fund expects $3.7 million in revenue from various sources under the Other category. What are these other various revenue sources? What does money from the line items forest health and intercept feeding and fencing go to?

The Natural Resources Conservation Board's statement of operations also is of interest. The NRCB showed a deficit last year but no government funds to cover it. Who is going to pay for this, and where is this line item? The NRCB has more than tripled its budget in three years largely because of the confined feeding operations review. What is the confined feeding operations review? Why has this program ballooned in size? Why was this not anticipated? What is the government doing to make sure this program doesn't continue to hemorrhage more and more money? There are some that would say that the confined feeding operations occur only on Wednesdays and only occur within short distance from the Legislative Assembly and that one can travel there in a minivan.

Under revenue for the board investment income of $11,000 is listed. What investments does this fund make that earn it $11,000 a year? Can the minister explain the variations in this investment income over the past several years? And I'll conclude, Mr. Chairman, with: should the NRCB really be in the investment business? Again, probably not.

If the minister would like to answer these questions in writing at a later date, that's fine with this member. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Of course, those questions are on line budget items that require correct information that I may not have at my fingertips here. I will of course get my staff to answer most of them.

The one I would like to give you some briefing on here while I have the information is in relation to the question of fisheries and fish stock and monitoring. You can't monitor forever. It's nice to monitor, but there are times when you have to take action. When it comes to fisheries improvement for Alberta, I guess we've taken some action to improve that.

Just a little bit of history. You know, Alberta has one of the highest ratios of anglers to lakes in Canada, so we have right off the bat a lot of pressure: over 300,000 anglers and just over 1,000 fish-bearing lakes. So we do have a challenge in front of us. In addition to that, of course, there's also growing pressure from aboriginal, commercial, and sports fisheries to better meet their needs. My department is committed to improving Alberta fisheries through a variety of methods. This includes a reduction in the number of commercial fishermen in Alberta from 800 to 200 fishermen. Eight hundred fishermen right now have access to about 34,000 100-yard nets, and we want to reduce that from 34,000 to 18,000. So it's a challenge, but I know we will meet the challenge.

Licence sales are starting to respond positively. I guess it's partially due to new programs such as National Fishing Week, the free fishing day, and the urban fishing program. This upcoming fishing season we will be expanding fishing opportunities for harvest of walleye across the province. The department has applied an adaptive management approach to select lakes for opportunities. The walleye harvest initiative is building on the Calling Lake pilot project by spreading angling pressure across other lakes in Alberta.

We are expanding monitoring. We will look into how this initiative achieves the balance between meeting angler expectation for a limited harvest and establishing of course a sustainable fish population. The department plans to update the walleye management plans this year to reflect new knowledge and greater experience and further understanding of the information that is needed.

As part of the monitoring and part of the action we are taking, we've opened 17 lakes and reservoirs in Alberta where you can catch and keep some fish. The seven reservoirs are in southern Alberta: Keho Lake, Horse Fly Lake reservoir, Fincastle Lake, Little Bow Lake reservoir, Spruce Coulee reservoir, and Forty Mile Coulee reservoir; in addition to that, we also opened up the Milk River Ridge reservoir, where you can keep some walleye.

Four lakes in northern Alberta are open now, including Calling Lake, where you can keep walleye, where it was catch and release before, Long Lake, Spencer Lake, and Vincent Lake. Six other lakes in northwestern Alberta are also open now: Hutch Lake, Sturgeon Lake, Wadlin Lake, Snipe Lake, Haig Lake, and Winagami Lake are also open.

So we are definitely moving forward with not only a good monitoring program but also a good program that's action oriented to try and have sustainable sports and commercial fisheries in Alberta. I know that we will achieve our goal. We're being very innovative. We're getting support from the municipalities, we're getting support from the First Nations, and the Alberta Fish and Game Association supports a lot of what we're doing. We will ensure that we do the right thing.

Because a lot of the other items were very good questions and require detailed, accurate information in relation to dollars, measurements, and performance measures, I will get my staff to answer those in writing.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and talk about the minister's estimates a bit and ask a few questions. Maybe I can start with the minister's favourite program, the walleye, and how his plans and programs are going with respect to protecting the species and making sure that it grows. Perhaps there's an opportunity to review the Calling Lake model that he tried last year and look at whether it worked or not, that line in the water that he drew, whether or not the fish actually recognized and respected that border. That's just a reminder that the minister does have responsibilities for very, very important areas related to the health of our forests and renewable natural resources, so his responsibilities certainly impinge directly on both the economic health and the protection of resources for future generations where that's applicable.

A few questions here, Minister, in the area of forest protection if I may start with that. In 2002 85 fires were caused by industry, and another 438 were, I guess, human-caused fires within Alberta's forest protection area. In the business plan the target for 2003 is under 60 and under 300 respectively I guess for this year. What actions are planned? What changes have been made in previous practices to make sure that human-caused fires are lowered as desired here? Any specific actions in this regard? Any resources committed to it both in terms of preventing such fires, and where they do occur, to make sure that there's some sort of plan for cost recovery in fighting those fires, which are unnecessarily caused by human inattention or deliberation?

The second question that I have related to forest protection has to do with – the percentage of fires reported within five minutes or less was 98 to 100 percent in 2002 according to the business plan, and that target for this year, 2003, is lowered to 90 percent. I just wondered: is the forecast different from the target, and why is the target lower than last year's target? Shouldn't the target be in fact higher, showing improvement?

Forest lands and resource management is the second area. Could the minister elaborate on the forest sustainability measure being developed? What stage is that at? Can we expect the measure to be implemented or available for implementation during this fiscal year?

The second and more important question in this area of forest land and resource management has to do with softwood lumber. We raised some questions in the House over the last several weeks with respect to the dispute that we have with the U.S. on softwood lumber and softwood lumber duties that have been introduced by the U.S., which has the serious potential of hurting our industries here. Alternatively, if we respond to that pressure by changing our policies, that might have consequences for the future of industry in the communities that depend on those forest-related industries.

So the question specifically: is the government considering eliminating all references to mills, communities, lumber production, and processing facilities as requirements in the long-term contracts? Are there pressures that the ministry feels and the government feels to move in that direction, and is the government preparing to respond to those pressures by eliminating those references in the contracts? That's a very simple, straightforward question. What would be the impact on Alberta's forest industry and communities in Alberta that presently have the mills and the processing plants in those communities, the impact of such a change, if it were to take place, on Alberta's economy, on the industry, and on Albertans working in forestry?

Third, has the minister analyzed the effect of changes to forestry practices in B.C. on the industry in Alberta? I understand that B.C. is moving ahead with succumbing to the pressure coming from south of the border and has, in fact, three or four different pieces of legislation that are going through or have gone through the Legislature there, which will indeed amount to substantial changes and in effect eliminate all those references that we presently have here and, I think, that B.C. had too, conditions for these long-term leases and tenure leases where there were conditions for processing raw lumber in and around the communities and the areas in which those forest activities are taking place. So the question was: has the minister been following the developments in B.C., and is any consideration being given here by the government or by the minister in charge for moving in the same direction as B.C. has apparently decided to move?

Other observations, Mr. Chairman, for the consideration of the minister. Rapid oil patch developments in the north threaten to wipe out old-growth softwood in a generation according to a study published in Conservation Ecology. The study predicts, based on research in forest management agreements of Alberta-Pacific Forest Industries and the considerable estimates of the continuation of current practices, that the impact of those are as follows: they will lead to elimination of old-growth softwood stands; lead to a decline in species sensitive to human disturbance, such as woodland caribou habitat, expected, according to this study, to decline from 43 percent of the study area to 6 percent. Caribou is already listed as threatened, so it's a serious issue.

Another impact that the study draws attention to is increased soil erosion, the disruption of water and fish movements, access by humans hunting and poaching. The next one: negative socio-economic repercussions due to a shortfall of softwood on communities in the areas, and yet another one, that petroleum companies will pay tens of millions for timber damage to forest companies. "This is a lose-lose situation in that the economic loss to the petroleum industry does nothing to restore the forest in the areas that are disturbed." I'm using these words, you know, right from that report. The report continues. It says, "The current system also ignores potential credits that could be gained by petroleum companies for maintaining carbon stores on the landscape." So if the minister would either now or later perhaps address some of these questions or respond to these observations of this scientific study on the impacts that it talks about.

This study concludes that "the current system of forest management in Alberta is a relic of earlier times," and these are the words of the study. It is unchanged since the 1950s despite increased density of industrial operators and the development of ecological objectives due to shifting public values. The question is: is the minister considering to follow the recommendations of the study and implement "meaningful stakeholder involvement, integrated planning, and an assessment of how current management decisions will affect the forest of the future"?

Then on fish and wildlife management, another important area that's under the minister's responsibility. How many fish and wildlife officers does the province have in its employ at the moment? That's a simple question of numbers, I guess. Is that sufficient to monitor, the minister's favourite word, hunting and fishing? Can the minister share with us the information of what percentage of poachers is caught? What's the total number of poaching incidents? How many get apprehended, stopped, or caught?

Another interesting little factoid in the business plan on page 368: the percentage of species at risk dropped from 2 percent to 1.4 percent between 1996 and the year 2000. The question this raises is: why is the target raised to 5 percent for 2005? If we've already achieved rates of species at risk which are as low as 2 percent and 1.4 percent, it raises the question of why accept the rate of 5 percent over the next two years? Why raise the risk level, and what's the thinking behind it? Maybe the minister can respond to that.

Alberta was once home to 9,000 to 16,000 grizzly bears, but there are now at most, according to the best estimates available, about 1,000 left. Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society's estimates, I guess, are the ones that I am drawing your attention to, Minister. Grizzlies are very sensitive to impacts of human activity. The Endangered Species Conservation Committee recommended to the minister that the grizzly be listed as threatened. The minister has refused. I understand that this is the first time the minister has refused such a recommendation.

The legal listing of a species as threatened under the Alberta Wildlife Act triggers not only the establishment of a recovery team and a recovery plan; it also legally commits the government to providing ongoing funding for the recovery team and for the implementation of their plans. So that's why the minister's refusal is significant and has substantive ramifications. If the minister were to in fact designate this species as threatened, then he would be obliged by the laws of our province to take further action. Will the minister commit, therefore, to following the recommendations of his own committee and listing the grizzly as threatened?

The next point. The government's management plan for the Kananaskis Valley would allow expansion of recreation facilities into elk, bighorn, and grizzly habitat. What action is the minister contemplating taking to protect wildlife in the area if such developments are to proceed? I hope they don't. I hope the minister can give me assurance on this.

Wolf modeling shows that the future of wolf populations in the central Rockies looks bright provided that wolves continue to immigrate from neighbouring areas. Wildlife management cannot be dependent on a few protected areas. CPAWS indicates that the regulations for trapping and hunting wolves are very liberal. I don't mean liberal in the sense that my neighbour might take it. What action is the minister taking to tighten up hunting regulations in this area? There's a concern expressed again and again by CPAWS. I remember being in Canmore last year, and the CPAWS representative came to see me and put these matters and their concerns to me, so I have this opportunity. I hope the minister would address this.

A few more questions, Mr. Chairman. Can I go on for five more minutes or so?

The Chair: You have four.

Dr. Pannu: Okay. Four minutes. I'll try to race through it then.

Rangeland management, another area that's under your control. The percentage of rangeland leases in good standing has been steady at about 96 percent. This is what the business plan says on page 368. Why does the target drop to 90 percent? Again there's a lowering of the target.

The Natural Resources Conservation Board, another important agency that the minister has responsibility for. In 2002 the NRCB received 981 complaints involving 431 confined feeding operations, CFOs, or ILOs as they are now called. Only 36 enforcement orders were issued, one-third involving releases or potential releases of contaminated manure. Lisa Bechtold of SERLO, Society for Environmentally Responsible Livestock Operation, has criticized NRCB for having insufficient operators to enforce regulations. The process, of course, is complaint driven, as you well know.

Questions to the minister. Are there random inspections of these operations? What happened to the many complaints which were made but do not result in enforcement orders? Are current regulations that are requiring manure storage lagoons or outhouse technology, according to rancher Sherry Brock, sufficient to prevent contamination of water supplies? Can the minister make some comments on it and give assurances one way or the other?

Some ILOs are incorporating filter strips, aerobic composting, or high-temperature anaerobic digestion to prevent harmful bacteria from entering ground or surface water. Has the minister considered requiring these improvements on all factory farms?

So those are some of the questions, Minister. You can answer some now and others perhaps a little later in writing. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Because of timing I will answer a few of the questions and the rest we will do in writing.

Very quickly, because I've mentioned this project before, the Calling Lake pilot project. You know, basically our department is committed to improving Alberta fisheries overall, and of course we're trying a variety of ways of doing that. One of the many things we are doing is the Calling Lake pilot project, which we established in the spring of 2002, and what we're doing is we're trying to balance the harvest and also the conservation at the same time. What we're doing with that lake, as a lot of you are aware, is that anglers can keep some fish caught only from a part of Calling Lake. One-half of it is closed and one-half you can fish, and we will monitor very closely. We're doing it jointly with the Alberta Conservation Association. We've done a lot of work through the past summer, and in fact the biologists have just completed a report which will be available in the very, very near future to people that may be interested. So it is definitely innovative and seems to be working quite well.

The other area I'll just briefly touch on, because I've touched on some already, is in relation to the wildfire fighting and control and some of the changes that we may be doing. Our objective is early detection of fires, early detection to improve that. So we can, for an example, improve our system of the towers we have out there and the communication system.

Then the other one, of course, is early response. At one time if, for an example, a fire started at, say, 9 o'clock in the evening, because of the policies we had in place, the water bombers wouldn't actually get there till 10:30 the next morning, somewhere in there, because the pilots could only fly a certain amount of hours in a day. What we did was we made sure that there was always a backup pilot in the future. Now if a fire starts in the evening by lightning, for an example, we will have water bombers on that site, if they're required, by 4:30 in the morning. That's part of the early response.

Of course, the other one is public education. We've been working with communities across the forested areas to try and make sure they're aware of the hazards of a wildfire and how they may in fact improve their own surroundings alone in order to reduce the danger of wildfires.

The other one we just announced between the Minister of Municipal Affairs and my department is a municipal wildfires assistance program, which has come into effect April 1. It is now in place, and what that will do is assist municipalities in the firefighting costs because most municipalities are not equipped to fight wildfires. They're more equipped to fight house fires, you know, building fires, and stuff like that but not forest fires. So we have a detailed plan which will come out publicly very shortly as to what that program is structured like. So I think that's an improvement.

The other one you touched briefly – and I'll be very brief on it – is the softwood lumber agreement or the lack of agreement. Although I'm not the head negotiator for that – the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations is the chief negotiator for Alberta in that agreement – I can make a few comments. We do have regular meetings, and we want to make sure that the industry in Alberta is looked after. There are three major areas. One is the large multinationals in some cases that are diversified companies that are out there. Then there are the others that are small, companies that produce less than 5 million board feet per year, loggers and sawmillers. There are about 125 of those, and that has, you know, a major impact across the province. So far we've managed to have those organizations exempted from the softwood lumber negotiations.

The area where it's really touchy is the mid-size companies, the companies that are, say, Alberta or Canadian owned. They're here. They're mid-size companies, and there's a real challenge if we have to change some of the plans that are brought forward by the U.S. One is tenure. They don't like to see the 20-year forest management plans. They like to see more public auctions of wood, and that would definitely have some impact on the sustainability of our forestry operations.

Although, you know, B.C. you mentioned is moving forward quite rapidly. I think they're in a little different situation. Fifty percent of the whole Canadian exports come from B.C. On the other hand, of all the exports in Canada we're only 7 percent. So we're reasonably small players. But it's about 1.1 billion board feet or 500 to 600 million dollars' worth of lumber we export to the U.S. So it does have some negative impact. We will have to work very closely with the industry, you know, with different levels of government, and of course other governments across Canada. So that's a real challenge.

I'll sit down now and will of course do the rest of the questions in writing to you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have a couple more questions, and then the rest we'll put in writing for the minister because I'm anticipating that we'll end debate at about 5 o'clock this evening. So if the minister could talk to us a little bit about what's happening with the cross-ministry initiatives. Particularly, I'm interested in the aboriginal policy initiative. How long was this in the works for the planning stages, and when are we going to see some tangible outcomes and any other information you'd like to share?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yeah. Just very, very briefly on that. On the aboriginal issue there are some challenges in that area. I think most people would like to access jobs that are out there, regardless of whether you're aboriginal or not, and that's something, of course, our government supports to ensure that people have job opportunities. Although the cross-ministry initiative involves a number of ministries, a number of department staff, it is a process that just started. There is another lead minister in that area, and therefore it is only fair that we will do that in writing for you to ensure that you get proper information, updated information, because it involves more than one ministry.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We have quite a few outstanding issues and questions around intensive livestock operations. In spite of the changes we've seen in the confined feeding operations, I guess, as they're called now, there still seem to be some issues. They're really issues about assessments of lagoons, about how it seems like there aren't very many standards in place, how in some cases we still have lagoons being built near aquifers and water sources. So what we're looking for here in this regard are stricter enforcement standards on the environmental side. The feedback that we're getting from the community is that the NRCB is essentially rubber-stamping some of these projects and not doing adequate investigation, particularly around the water supply. Then, on the other side of the coin, we don't seem to be seeing strict monitoring and action on tough standards either from a water or an air perspective. So that's a pretty big concern.

Also, in terms of intervenor status on these ILOs, we're seeing that the municipalities are given affected party status but other people may or may not be, so we think the affected party status needs to be reviewed and probably reviewed quickly.

Also, we've heard lots of concern about manure-spreading guidelines. Is there any expectation for changes to be made there? Certainly, I think we've progressed to the state in this province where the spraying that we've seen as being a traditional method in the past and the majority of the ways that this process was done are gone. I think we're into composting, I think we're into in-vessel kinds of separation of fluids and gases and solids, and we'd like some information on that. I'll ask the minister to provide some background on that in writing to us, and we'll submit the rest of our questions in writing as well and look to a slightly early conclusion this afternoon.

Thank you.

Mr. Cardinal: Just very briefly, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to take the opportunity to thank my staff for their continued work throughout the year. They come here to work with the other 1,900 staff we have out there, and I'd like to thank them for all their work throughout the year. Also, I'd like to thank the Official Opposition and the third party for their positive critique on our department and their good recommendations. We are a team, and I'm sure we have challenges, but we'll meet those challenges.

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. O God, grant that we the members of our province's Legislature may fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all our citizens. Guide our deliberations this day. Amen.

Hon. members, would you please remain standing now for the singing of our national anthem. Please participate in the language of your choice. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased today to introduce members of a delegation from the Northwest Territories whom I met earlier this morning. They're here to attend the Meet the North Conference and Exposition as well as to extend a significant agreement. The governments of Alberta and the Northwest Territories signed a memorandum of understanding in 1998 as a way to advance co-operation between two important neighbours. We have now agreed to extend the memorandum of understanding for co-operation and development for another five years, to the year 2008. Alberta and the Northwest Territories have been able to work together on various initiatives related to such subjects as tourism, transportation, and skill development. I can tell you that we're looking forward to continuing our very positive relationship.

Our special guests are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and as I introduce them, I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. With us is the Hon. Vince Steen. Mr. Steen is the MLA for Nunakput, and he is the Minister of Public Works and Services and also the Minister of Municipal and Community Affairs. Also with him is the Hon. Jake Ootes, Minister of Education, Culture and Employment and the MLA for Yellowknife-Centre. With them are their deputy ministers Peter Vician, Department of Transportation, and Loretta Foley, Department of Education, Culture and Employment; Doug Doan, the assistant deputy minister of Resources, Wildlife and Economic Development; Gerry LePrieur, director of Tourism, Resources, Wildlife and Economic Development; Kat Nicholson, executive assistant to the Hon. Vince Steen; and Bernie Hughes, senior policy analyst, intergovernmental affairs and strategic planning, Department of Executive.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four visitors who are seated in your gallery this afternoon. Visiting our Assembly today are the Hon. Steven Bamwanga, Member of Parliament for the Republic of Uganda, and his daughter Hazel Mbabazi and niece Joelle Inashaka, and nephew Steven Kizito. The latter three are in secondary studies here in Alberta. Mr. Bamwanga represents the constituency of Ndorwa County West, Kabale, an area of Uganda that I had the pleasure of visiting some years ago. As you may recall, I visited the Parliament of Uganda last September and was graciously hosted by Speaker Ssekandi. Mr. Bamwanga and family are in Alberta. He will be touring the Legislature Building later this afternoon. I would ask all hon. members to extend them the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to introduce to you once again and in turn through you to all members of the Assembly a very special constituent of mine, Dr. Pal Singh Purewal, who is seated in your gallery. Following many long years of research and writing, Dr. Purewal created the first ever Nanakshahi calendar, which as of April 14, 2003, has been accepted by the highest authority managing Sikh Gurdwaras in India as the official calendar, standardizing significant religious dates for Sikhism, which was an enormous task, to say the least.

For this unique achievement Dr. Purewal has recently been recognized with special tributes in San José, Baltimore, New York, Washington D.C., India, and also in the United Kingdom in Southall, Hounslow, and Derby. While in the United Kingdom Dr. Purewal received a very special honorary doctorate for his significant accomplishment. This past weekend I personally had the great privilege of honouring him further with the presentation of a Queen's golden jubilee medal, symbolizing our recognition of his great work. Dr. Pal Singh Purewal is a very proud Canadian, an esteemed Albertan, and a truly invaluable Edmontonian, which he has been since 1974. [remarks in Punjabi]

May the complete blessings of the Gurus be upon you! A million congratulations! [as submitted]

He has now risen, and I would ask that his lovely wife, Gurjit, and their lovely daughter Virendra Delhon also rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a thrill, an honour, and a privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Sandy Jacobson, the fastest woman marathoner in Canada, another reason to call Edmonton the city of champions. Sandy is seated in your gallery. Yesterday morning in Ottawa Sandy ran a 2:33:51, which is the fastest time in Canada in a number of years. Sandy will be competing in the Worlds in Paris, France, and then on to the Olympics in 2004. This champion and I ran thousands of miles together when she was just very good, and now she is an extraordinary world-class athlete. She has excelled in her sport while working full-time and raising her son Jessie.

With Sandy today is her boss, Dr. Robert Steadward, founder and director of the Steadward Centre for Personal & Physical Achievement. For those of you who don't know, the Steadward centre assists people with disabilities to lead more active and productive lives. I would ask Sandy and Dr. Steadward to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today, and I'm very proud to be able to introduce these two different groups. The first is the government members' research branch, which I'm very honoured to have under contract through my office. I'd like to begin with the senior researcher, Mr. Jason Ennis, who is actually originally from Airdrie and has been working in Edmonton for the past three years; Mike Simpson, one of our drama guys as well – not only is he a great researcher, but he also writes plays – Dan Hanson; Andrea Hennig, the only lady we could find strong enough to work with all these guys; Eric Taylor, who is just brand new in our branch; Emir Mehinagic from Bosnia; Bindoo Mangat; Frank Ostlinger, who is originally from Sweden, and we introduced him a little while back; Greg McFarlane; and Matt Steppan. I'm very honoured to have them here working for our 49 private members and government in general. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, I have a second introduction, and I'll just be very brief. It's the three guys that make it all possible in the whip's office for me to do my job and for this caucus to actually function. I'm very honoured to work with Jason Zwarg, Bartek Kienc, and David Michalchuk, our caucus director, who in fact is responsible for almost 40 contracts for staff for our 49 private members. They do a wonderful job for all of us. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly a friend who has joined us from our beautiful neighbouring province of British Columbia. Sheila O'Brien has come to see firsthand the workings of our Legislature. She has been kind enough to bring the sunshine with her and has assured me she will be leaving it here so we can enjoy it. I would ask that Sheila rise to accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly nine wonderful students and two accompanying adults. Mrs. Deana Ford and Mr. Harry Kulak are here with some students from the Minburn-Innisfree area. They attend Innisfree Delnorte school. Would they please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you today a student from the University of Alberta, science and engineering, Mark Ruhl, a resident of Sherwood Park working in the Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan constituency office this summer. Mark has risen. Would we please welcome him with the traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. Daniel Garsonnin, who is attending the Assembly today. He's a resident of St. Albert. He's an aviation enthusiast, and he spends a great deal of his time attending classrooms and enthusing students about aviation and has been in the classroom of the wife of the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. I'd ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 12 enthusiastic summer support staff who will be working in various caucuses and branches of the Legislative Assembly Office. They are: Terris Schultz, Michelle Lo, Michael Buuman, Niyam Sandhu, Sandra Anderson, Jason Yaremchuk, Jessica Labbé, Nick Fowler, Vincent Tong, Chelsea Reid, Sonia Nadeau, and Robyn Westbrooke. I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me today to rise and introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly an individual, a Grande Prairie-Smoky constituent and longtime resident of the Grande Prairie area, certainly no stranger to many Albertans in the agriculture business. Mr. Gilbert Balderston has spent innumerable hours working on behalf of all Albertans on a number of agricultural committees, and I would ask Gilbert to please rise at this time and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today – and it seems a very appropriate time coming one day after Mother's Day – to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a person very special to me. My mother is here today. She was born Constance Leora Mattie in New Norway, Alberta, and I won't say how many years ago, but she did marry my dad some 55 years ago. She was an incredibly dedicated school-teacher for most of her career. She started the Lakedell Public Library and raised seven kids on the homestead, all at the same time. Now six of them have university degrees, leaving me the bum in the family, so she's often wondering when I'm going to get a decent education and a stable job. She's in the public gallery, and I would ask her to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. member did not indicate whether or not Mommy was proud of him, though.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to be able to rise and introduce an extension of Mother's Day for me, my oldest of four sons. His name is Justin Ady. He's home for the summer, just returned from Brigham Young University, where he's studying neuroscience. That would make him the oldest grandson of a past hon. member, Jack Ady. If Justin would rise, I'd ask that you would extend the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly 27 polite, intelligent students from Forest Heights elementary school. They're visiting the Legislative Assembly for the entire week as part of their class, and they are led today by their capable and hardworking teacher, Ms Amanda Burnett. They're in the public gallery. I would now ask them to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I have the greatest pleasure of introducing to you and through you to members of the Assembly some very special guests that are in the members' gallery. There are about 50 of them from Roland Michener secondary school. They're led here by their teacher, Ms Tracey Crain, and parent helpers Mr. Rod Pryce, Mrs. Elana Campsall, Mrs. Penny Yachimec, Mrs. Sindy Gryschuk, Mrs. Anita Robinson, and Mrs. Marcia Walker. They are all seated there. I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What an honour today to rise and introduce two very important family members particularly important to Sarah Monkman, one of our pages. Her mother, Cheryl Monkman, and her oma, Nellie Schenk, are in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they please rise and that we give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you another special constituent of mine, who's just arrived in the members' gallery. His name is Orest Porayko. He's a keen follower of things public and things political, and I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of all members.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly two gentlemen who are seated in the members' gallery. Mr. Darshan Kailly is president of the Transportation Training and Development Association and is also president and CEO of Canadian Freightways Limited. He is here today with Dr. Cliff Soper, who is executive director of the Transportation Training and Development Association and a prominent constituent of Lacombe-Stettler. I will add that he is also my past organic chemistry professor. I had the opportunity of meeting with these gentlemen this morning and signed an MOU to implement a professional drivers' training program in Alberta that is strongly supported by both the transportation and busing industries in Alberta. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Electricity Deregulation

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, last week in a ballroom in Banff the Minister of Energy announced that the cost of transmission would be added to already high power bills. This decision, which was made behind closed doors, marks an abrupt change in the government policy and has created uncertainty for electricity consumers and power companies alike. To the Premier: how many more key decisions about electricity deregulation will be made behind closed doors before the new Electric Utilities Act comes into effect on June 1?

Mr. Klein: None that I can think of, Mr. Speaker, but when the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition talks about behind closed doors, I would remind the hon. leader that his caucus meets behind closed doors. They strategize with their constituents behind closed doors. Our caucus meets behind closed doors. Our cabinet meets behind closed doors. In some cases standing policy committees meet behind closed doors. In some cases they don't meet behind closed doors. What's good for the goose is good for the gander. [interjections] Well, if they're going to stand up and say that their caucus is wide open for everyone to hear and everyone to judge and everyone to participate, then we'll have to reconsider our caucus as well.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: what programs have been put in place to encourage power companies to invest in Alberta given that the stable and predictable regulatory environment necessary for investors has been lost?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the preamble is not true. Indeed, deregulation, when it's complete, when everything is final, will provide stability, will hopefully through competition provide lower prices, will ensure that we have an adequate supply of energy, and indeed we're already experiencing some of these things. We will have tremendous capacity to generate that electricity for the needs of Albertans and maybe sometime down the road to give the electrical companies the opportunity to export if there's a surplus of electricity or electricity that's surplus to Alberta's needs. So I don't agree at all with the preamble to the question.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier: why is this government now picking favourites among power companies by changing regulations when the new Electric Utilities Act was supposed to level the playing field?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is talking about when he says, "Picking favourites." Perhaps the hon. Minister of Energy can supplement.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are so many inaccuracies and so much misunderstanding over there, I'm surprised that the member has been around for the discussion on this. It's very clear that transmission has never been deregulated. The deregulated part was the generation side and the ability to compete for customers on the retail side. Transmission is a natural monopoly. It's been around forever, and all that we're doing is reinforcing the policy that was in place before a transmission administrator came up with the policy of congestion management, that in fact was rejected by government.

So, in fact, Mr. Speaker, if the member would go back to "behind closed doors" and the Bolger commission, the Premier's advisory council on electrical issues, which posted their report on the web site for the Department of Energy, of which the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is an active, seeking member, one of the kids from the Kremlin, what happens is that the policy is straightforward in the Bolger report: "Develop a comprehensive policy on transmission that will encourage transmission and generation to compete for the overall lowest cost." We've listened, we've reacted, and that's the policy today, and we're going through consultation.

Dr. Nicol: But he changes his mind all the time.

Last week the Premier admitted that deregulation has not gone well, but the Premier still won't unplug deregulation to bring lower power bills to Albertans. Instead, the Premier expects Albertans to be satisfied with another committee just studying the problem. Why is the Premier deliberately telling Albertans that deregulation can't be unplugged when both California and Ontario have unplugged theirs?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I guess deregulation can be unplugged. I guess you can try to undo almost 10 years of hard, diligent work to bring about a deregulated environment. I guess you can say to Albertans that we no longer believe in entrepreneurship and free enterprise and that we want to go back to a socialist, state-owned system, but I don't think that Albertans want that, and we certainly don't want that.

Mr. Speaker, what I did say is that we are not going back on deregulation, but, yes, as you try something new, when you have the courage and the commitment to go out and try to make things better, there are going to be a few bumps along the road. The electrical advisory committee will have its mandate expanded to look at some of the billing issues, some of the issues that affect consumers, and hopefully we can get some of those problems smoothed out as we forge ahead with electrical deregulation.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier: how can unplugging deregulation possibly create any more uncertainty than has already been created by you continually changing the rules?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we don't continue to change the rules. The fundamental principles have always remained the same; that is, to deregulate generation, to get more generation onstream, which is happening, on the retail side to bring more retailers into the market, to provide competitive situations to bring the price down. That indeed is happening. There are some areas of the province where problems are being experienced, and that is what, among other things, the expanded membership and the expanded mandate of the electrical advisory committee is required to look at.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: do you not see problems for Albertans with the fact that you've shifted from an averaging of cost-based generation to the highest bid pricing system for electricity?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, relative to how the Power Pool deals with pricing, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, again we'll try to throw some clarity the member opposite's way. One, it's important that he know that transmission has been regulated, that in fact 3,000 megawatts of new generation came under the existing policy of transmission, and that's why it's going to stay the same. It's worked, and it's working well. It brings on low-cost generation. It brings on coal-fired generation as they're building new, cleaner coal-burning technologies for generating electricity. It also brings on the ability to deliver new power from the oil sands, where those turbines can be installed where the steam is already being generated.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, if we were to listen at all to the member opposite's discussion about changing the rule, don't change the rule, bring on low-cost generation, put in high-cost generation, none of it would work. So when he comes up with a reasonable thought on transmission, we'd be more than pleased to listen to him, as we have in other cases.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, exporting electricity from Alberta will drive up demand and further increase the price of electricity for Alberta's already besieged consumers. During the last election the Premier promised that any new power to come onstream would lower the price of electricity for Alberta consumers. This promise, like so many others made during the last election, has been broken by this government. To the Premier: why does this government continue to develop an electricity export policy behind closed doors, far from the scrutiny of the besieged consumers, who, we learned last week, are going to be forced to pay the entire costs of transmission tariffs and construction of new lines?

Mr. Klein: The construction of new lines relates to the construction of lines in Alberta, and actually this is a good thing, albeit the opposition would not consider it a good thing, because anything that is good, they consider to be bad, and anything that's bad, they consider to be good. That is simply the nature of the opposition. If we say that it's day, no, it's night to them, and if it's nighttime, of course they say that it's day.

But, Mr. Speaker, the simple fact is – and this is the good part of the situation – that the new transmission capacity is required because of new generation, and new generation is a good thing. New coal generation at Wabamun is a good thing. New cogeneration at the tar sands is a good thing. New wind power in southern Alberta is a good thing. These things wouldn't have happened without deregulation. There was no desire to invest in the generation of new electricity unless there were massive government subsidies. This is really quite true, and they know it. They just don't want to admit it, because when we're right, they're normally wrong. It's like day and night: we're right; they're wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: given that the Premier allowed a bad ideology, which is electricity deregulation, to be followed by further bad public policy, when will this government hold a series of public hearings across the province to allow citizens a say in determining Alberta's electricity export policy given that exports of electricity will increase power prices for domestic consumers in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is a faulty and very dangerous assumption, but, you know, the Liberals are known for making dangerous statements, inflammatory statements. The export policy is clear. Only when the needs of Albertans are met will utility companies be allowed to export, and they will be allowed to export surplus power only. Any lines that are to be built south of the border or outside the confines of Alberta will have to be paid for by the utility companies, and how they pay for those lines is entirely up to them. If they want to charge the consumers in those jurisdictions, that is entirely up to them.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier. Conservatives are known for breaking their election promises. Now, can you please tell us how the Power Pool is going to reduce prices for electricity in this province in the next year? How is the Power Pool going to lower prices?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if it's going to happen in the next year, but I can tell you that the price of electricity has come down. The price of electricity has come down. They are only telling part of the truth. The total bills have gone up, and these billing practices, as we understand it, are due to a number of other factors, factors other than the actual price of electricity: various service charges, peak demand charges, franchise fees, and so on. We want to get to the bottom of those extra charges. The price of electricity has gone down. We want to investigate some of their billing practices, and that's why we have added to the Advisory Council on Electricity the MLA for Leduc and the MLA for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's third largest school district, Calgary Catholic, has launched an advocacy campaign asking parents to urge the Tory government to cover a projected $9.5 million shortfall in its next year's budget. I'll be tabling Calgary Catholic's advocacy action plan later this afternoon. Like other big school boards Calgary Catholic is facing a huge budget shortfall in September unless the province comes through with adequate funding support. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How can the minister justify the deep program cuts, staffing reductions, and increases in class sizes that his budget is forcing on Calgary Catholic and many other school boards across the province come September?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the Calgary Catholic school division received an increase of about 3.36 percent, or about $8 million, this year. Eight million dollars is a significant number. Included in that is a drop in enrollment. They are anticipating a slight drop in enrollment. This year, as the hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly know, the amount of increase to the K to 12 portion of my budget went up around 4.9 percent, which is a significant amount of dollars. It's $191 million that went into the K to 12 system. There's been a huge amount of money that has been put into the system over the past four years.

I had the opportunity last week of talking to the chair of Calgary Catholic, Mrs. Lois Burke-Gaffney, and we discussed some of their issues. One of the issues was operations and maintenance. We also discussed a few other things. Mr. Speaker, it is a preliminary budget. They're going to be working on it. They felt it was their obligation to send home to their parents exactly what was going on within the school district. She also told me that they encouraged the parents to contact their local MLA, and that is what the hon. member is now seeing the consequence of.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: how can the minister defend restricting school instructional grant increases – I'm talking about the school instructional grant – to only 2 percent when the inflation rate in Alberta over the past year is 7.6 percent?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member fully well knows that the instructional grant is just one part of an overall package of funds that goes to the school system. Included in this year, starting September 1 of this year, is the ultimate flexibility in how these people can use the dollars. The only things that are basically enveloped anymore are administration, AISI funds, student health, technology, and the SuperNet component of it. So they have the flexibility.

To say that there was only a 2 percent grant is absolutely wrong. Two percent was used to calculate exactly the amount of the per student grant. Included in that, obviously, is the number of students. Included in that is the 3 percent transportation grant. Included in that is an 8 percent severe special-needs increase. All of these things combine to give the actual pot of money, so to speak, that the school districts will receive, and in Calgary Catholic's case, assuming a slight decline in enrollment, the actual amount of dollars that they have received is 3.36 percent, or very close to $8 million.

Dr. Pannu: My final supplementary to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given the alleged political cloud of the Calgary Tory caucus and the ineffectiveness of the Edmonton Tory caucus, will the minister guarantee that any future financial adjustments benefiting Calgary school boards will also be provided on exactly the same terms and conditions to Edmonton school boards?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the preamble was one hundred percent hypothetical.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

WCB Policy on Fibromyalgia

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Appeals Commission for injured workers' claims posts their decisions and rulings publicly on the Internet, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Human Resources and Employment on implementing this open system. I have received many positive comments from injured worker constituents regarding this open posting. According to a constituent, decision 2003-66 by the Appeals Commission, dated January 30, 2003, accepts fibromyalgia as a work-related injury. It states: "There is a causal relationship between the worker's diagnosed fibromyalgia condition and his December 11, 1995, compensable accident. Therefore, the WCB does have responsibility for fibromyalgia." My question today is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, responsible for WCB matters. Could the minister help to look into this and follow up the subject of fibromyalgia with the WCB?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, yes, we will. There's a point that I feel particularly pleased about in the preamble of the question, and that is that with the appeal system in Alberta we now have a more open and accountable system in the sense that decisions are being posted on the web site. What I'm not entirely convinced of, though, is that there has been a decision exactly as might have been indicated, and of course we'll look into that on behalf of the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this decision or ruling by the court suggests recommending that the WCB as public policy should review other cases relating to fibromyalgia, I would like to ask the same minister if WCB policy on fibromyalgia has already been reviewed or if any changes have been made?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I've been briefed on this matter in the sense of the review, and I'm pleased to report that it was last updated back in June of 2001 and might note for the record that this was done as part of WCB's initiative to review the research on a periodic basis as it relates to different kinds of occupational disease and discomfort.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is dealing with these claims. How would an injured worker who is in a similar situation as in those cases deal with the WCB right now?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, under the legislation the WCB would be responsible for reviewing any kind of evidence that was forthcoming regarding a particular situation. I might add that there's no time limitation on any of that evidence. So, again, the Workers' Compensation Act has provided the operating board and the administration with the responsibility of dealing with evidence as it comes to them. I think now in light of the more open and accountable system that we have with WCB and with our Appeals Commission that more information is likely, then, to be available to all workers here in the province, particularly workers that have experienced an injury, and hopefully this new information and this information that's available will attempt to shorten the time that's required on many of these cases.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Estimates are that at least 800 teaching positions provincewide will be lost as a result of the latest instructional budget. The minister's response seems to be: don't worry; most of these will be covered by retirements or resignations. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How are junior and senior high schools losing math and English teaching specialists supposed to cover this loss?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would certainly hope that if there are teachers lost, if there are teachers that are not rehired next year, they would have the ability to pick and choose which teachers are laid off, which teachers are not going to be back, and I would certainly hope that math and science and some of the English teachers are some of the ones that they keep.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thanks. Again to the same minister: with over 80 percent of kindergarten children and 90 percent of first graders already in classes of 17 or more students, what's going to be the effect of not replacing primary grade teachers?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the average kindergarten class size in Alberta is 19. The average 1 to 6 class size in Alberta is around 23. There are lots of different alternatives that school boards can do with their budgets, and that's currently what is happening with many of the school jurisdictions. They are going through their budgets and seeing what is the best way that they can keep within it.

I must reiterate, Mr. Speaker, that there was not a budget freeze. There were not cuts to the budget. What we were looking at was anywhere between a 3 and 4 percent increase, on average, to the school boards.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the minister: what does the projected impact of losing 800 teachers mean to class size in this province? Has he done the projections?

Dr. Oberg: Again, there are a considerable number of wild cards in that scenario, and I will give you one right now. They are anticipating in Edmonton public, for example, the hours of instruction. A simple six minutes a day made a huge difference to the amount of instructional time, the amount of dollars that were saved within Edmonton. A lot of school boards are looking at instructional time. I don't need to explain to the hon. member that if the instructional time goes up, the class size does not go up. So these are some of the options that school boards are presently looking at.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When Edmonton public school board projected a 13 and a half million dollar shortfall for 2002 and 2003, the Minister of Learning announced that his department would conduct an audit of the board. Earlier this week the Calgary board of education spoke of a potential $32 million deficit. My questions today are to the Minister of Learning. Since the circumstances between these two school boards appear to be similar, why is it that you are not conducting an audit of the Calgary school board?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In all fairness, the circumstances are anything but similar. For the year 2002-2003 you had Edmonton public coming out and saying that they were going to have a 13 and a half million dollar deficit. Calgary public was balanced this year. Also, Calgary public in their preliminary budget came out and said that they were $32 million short of what they felt that they needed. So we will not be conducting an audit. In Edmonton's case, it was done about six or seven months through the school year, at which time we were notified of the existing year.

Mr. Speaker, Calgary public has been very forthcoming in their books, and indeed we actually have been working quite closely with them since October of last year, so we will continue working with them. We have to find out exactly what is going on with their budget. I will tell the hon. member that I had a brief opportunity to talk to Gordon Dirks, the chair of Calgary public, on Friday, but we will be having a conversation this week where we will sit down and go over their budget in much greater detail, and hopefully that will happen this week.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second and final question to the same minister. The Calgary board has highlighted that full implementation of the new funding framework would benefit them. Will Edmonton public and Catholic also see benefits from that framework?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the new funding formula is an excellent funding formula, and I would say right off the bat that I feel that the metro boards probably would be helped. One of the riders in the new funding formula is the number of aboriginal students. Up until now the aboriginal students have not been funded separately. We also have in the new funding formula almost an economy of scale rider which basically states that there is a cost of doing business in some of the larger boards. Very important for Calgary is the cost-of-living adjustment. This is the first time that a cost-of-living adjustment has been put into a funding formula.

So overall, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the new funding formula would benefit them. I think that for every school board the flexibility that is included in the new funding formula is something that is extremely good and should benefit all school boards, not just the four metro boards.

Air Quality at Holy Cross Hospital

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, in recent years toxic mold has led to the closure of the Calgary Court of Appeal building, the closure of parts of the Rockyview hospital, and the closure of Children's Services offices in Calgary. Now the Liberal opposition has learned that tests were conducted in the summer of 2001 for mold at the former Holy Cross hospital and that the results of these tests should be of concern to the public. However, they were never released. To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that exposure to toxic molds can lead to headaches, nausea, respiratory illness, bleeding of the lungs, and cancer, why have tests for mold at the Holy Cross never been made available to the public?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I think it's very important that we put this whole thing in context. Back in 2001 we were looking for a site to house the Court of Appeal in Calgary. There were a number of sites being looked at at the same time. One of those was the Holy Cross hospital. One of the things that we needed to do in all locations was have an indoor air quality examination. It's true that there was at least a start on that particular process relative to the Holy Cross. The Holy Cross did not measure up in some other areas, so in fact I'm not even sure if the study was ever completed on the air quality, because there were other issues that determined that in fact that wasn't a suitable location for the Court of Appeal.

Dr. Taft: That's an amazing confession.

Mr. Speaker, given that there are 42 long-term care residents as well as dozens of nurses, doctors, and other support staff at the Holy Cross, will the minister immediately release all test results for mold at that site? It seems the site failed the tests.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just indicated that before the testing was completed, we had abandoned that site as a possible site to house the Court of Appeal. The fact is that we sold the building back in the late '90s, so the only reason that we were asking for an indoor air quality examination was to see if in fact it was suitable to house the Court of Appeal. But other issues came up, and it was determined that it was not a suitable place. I'm not even sure that the air quality report was ever completed, and if it was, I'm not sure where it's at.

So if the hon. member thinks that there is something there that he needs to know and that the public needs to know, there's a process for doing it, and he can put in a request under freedom of information. That's very simple. It's straightforward. If the commissioner determines that it's something that needs to be out there in the public, he will get it.

Dr. Taft: To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that a variety of publicly funded health services, like long-term care and eye surgery, are provided at the Holy Cross, can the minister assure Calgarians that the Holy Cross is a safe environment?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the Holy Cross facility does provide certain services that are used by the public, that are publicly paid for services provided under contract to the regional health authority. As I've indicated in the past, the regional health authority takes the safety of its employees and its patients as being a number one priority, and in cases in other public facilities where the issue of mold has come up, they have not only done what they've needed to do. They've gone beyond that which is required to ensure that there is safety for both patients and staff. I'm assured by the regional health authority that that would be true also when the regional health authority accepts services from a private surgical facility under contract to provide services to the regional health authority, that they still maintain the importance of the safety of their patients, in that particular case, as a top priority and that the regional health authority will take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that safety of patients is not jeopardized.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Education Property Taxes

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following Calgary's and Edmonton's implementation of the market value assessment in 1999, the province decided to address concerns about significant increases in education property taxes in municipalities experiencing high growth. Therefore, the province enacted the mitigation formula. Now the city of Edmonton will see a whopping 8.9 percent increase in the education tax this year. My questions are for the Minister of Finance. Why are school property taxes increasing by 8.9 percent in the city of Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, due to the mitigation program that has been put in place, no requisition for school property tax in this province will exceed 8 percent. In the case of the city of Edmonton, the suggestion that it is 8.9 percent includes a 1.3 percent adjustment from prior years, so the actual requisition this year is 7.6 percent for the city of Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: does the provincial mitigation formula favour some municipalities over others?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the mitigation formula is put in place so that there is a balance across the province, to make sure that school requisitions include components like capping and averaging so that we have a more uniform basis across the province. This is very important so that you don't have huge jolts from year to year occurring within the requisition process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the province planning to continue to implement a mitigation formula in future years?

Mrs. Nelson: I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this formula process has been successful, and we would continue on with this process. Let me just say one thing. Since 1999 – and I know the hon. member is representing his riding, as all Edmonton MLAs are doing, and there is a concern that has been expressed here – there has been an increased growth in assessment in the city of Edmonton of about 35 percent, but at the same time the requisition amount went down by 3 percent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Jubilee Auditoria Renovations

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The anticipated renovation of the Jubilee auditoria will result in the destruction and elimination of the Kaasa Theatre in Edmonton and the Betty Mitchell Theatre in Calgary. There are no plans to replace these spaces, resulting in the loss of two theatres from the province. The Minister of Community Development recently defended this by noting that putting the air conditioning units in another place and sparing the Kaasa would result in the loss of spaces in the parking lot. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Why did the minister okay the permanent loss of two much-used, prime, medium-sized theatre venues in Alberta?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that both Jubilee auditoria are approaching about a 50-year age bracket, and there are a number of improvements that have been cited both by audience goers as well as by theatre users, renters, and by the major performing groups who utilize the theatres. Now, in both Edmonton and Calgary the circumstances are such that a new ventilation system is required, a new acoustic design is required, and in order to accommodate the elimination of severe drafting and other problems associated with discomfort of all users, we need to look at how to bring in a completely overhauled ventilation system. In order to house that system, it will have to take place underneath the raked part of the audience chamber and some of the staging.

I should say, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a new revelation. These have been under discussion for quite some time, and I know that the Department of Infrastructure, that is working on this, has done a lot of work in researching and providing other background information to see how best to bring about those changes with the minimum amount of displacement. Unfortunately, in order to do them the way they have to be done to create a state-of-the-art facility in the long term, this short-term pain is necessary, and I do regret that two theatres are being demised in the process. It's just simply how it has to be.

Ms Blakeman: It's not short term. It's permanent.

To the same minister: given that Alberta's share of the federal cultural spaces program is $13 million, why did the minister not take advantage of this matching program to replace the two theatres?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, some of those cultural spaces dollars were already allocated, and I'm not sure at this moment if there are any dollars left. The Jubilee auditoria, as I say, have been under discussion for at least three or four years. We sought the best advice from the major user groups, who use primarily the main stage areas, and we sought advice and received a lot of input and feedback from audience goers. There were a number of complaints about sight lines, so we're going to be reraising the audience chamber to accommodate those particular difficulties.

I would reiterate that in the end these are two of our provincial performing icons. They need some upgrading, and we're providing that now as part of a longer term plan for the betterment of the performers and the betterment of the audience goers, and that's where that's at.

Ms Blakeman: You didn't even apply.

My final question to the minister: what is the minister's policy if the arts companies which are now made homeless from the Jubilee auditoria suffer deficits because of the hiatus or jeopardized funding through the arts stabilization fund? What's the minister's policy? Will he consider interim assistance?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is totally clued out on this issue. You know, I'll tell you. [interjection] No. You listen now. You listen. Okay? The fact is that we have in Calgary one performing arts company that rents that space exclusively. It's unfortunate that they have to be displaced, but they will be displaced. They've known about it for quite some time. We are simply making it official. We have also offered help to see where they can be relocated.

In the case of Edmonton we don't have one permanent renter. We have a number of theatre groups, and we have some seminar groups, workshop groups who use that space. They can be more easily accommodated elsewhere. In the end there is no shortage of space around that can be looked at.

I do not have any reinstatement dollars for replacement costs, and unfortunately that's how it is. What I do have is an increase in the arts area of $2.6 million, which all those groups are very happy about, I can assure you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The advisory committee on electricity issues has been given the most narrow of mandates to look at the what the government calls consumer issues. Apparently, the government is willing to look at all possible sources of high power prices for consumers in Alberta except the real source, which most Albertans now clearly understand to be deregulation itself. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. How can the government insult Albertans' intelligence by calling the massive increases in power bills a bump in the road?

Mr. Smith: Well, because the member's statement is incorrect, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: That's the kind of answer Albertans are used to getting from this minister, Mr. Speaker.

Will the inquiry be allowed to investigate why as part of the so-called unbundling of services the government scheme has added rate riders, transmission charges, delivery charges, and service charges to consumers' power bills?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, this is all regulated. None of this has anything to do with deregulation. It was around before. When the member sat on the EPCOR board, he knew how they regulated.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The minister knows that I was never on the EPCOR board.

Why is this so-called inquiry being permitted to investigate "current and future benefits of deregulation for consumers" but not anything which, God forbid, might actually have happened to be a negative impact on Albertans of deregulation?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, this province has brought on 3,000 new megawatts of generation under this program, and that 3,000 megawatts have come on. People have been served reliably. They have been served with real-time pricing. In fact, none of the bogeymen that occur when you're in a regulated market, like all the things he mentioned in the second question along with massive, massive provincial debt, are going to accrue to Alberta consumers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Workers' Compensation Board

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Workers' Compensation Board is not accountable to anyone, not to the courts, not to the public, and certainly not to the government. WCB employees up to and including the CEO can violate their own policy with impunity. Many injured workers and their families find out that the unaccountable and yet monopolistic WCB can be very abusive. I would like to direct my question today to the hon. minister responsible for the WCB. When a WCB case manager does not follow WCB policy, who is the case manager accountable to?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is discussing the operations of the WCB. I think it allows me the opportunity, then, to once again perhaps clear up a misconception that many Albertans have, and that is that the WCB is somehow a department of the government. Of course, it is not. It is funded entirely by assessments to employers throughout the province. There is a board that is appointed by order in council, so there is certainly a government involvement in that sense, but the Workers' Compensation Act itself contemplates, then, that the operation of the insurance system known as workers' compensation will be done by administration hired by the board of directors, and of course it would be their responsibility for such operation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the same minister again. When a case manager and the Claims Services Review Committee do not follow the WCB's own policy, who is the Claims Services Review Committee and the case manager accountable to?

Mr. Dunford: The claims services review has been mentioned by the hon. member, and of course this is one of the recent changes that we've made within the WCB. We've gone to what we believe to be a new and more open system of those appeal situations. Now, of course, what is being discussed here in terms of a general approach is in fact probably referring to a specific case. In that kind of sense, then, again it is something that is the responsibility of the operations of the WCB, so it would be the hierarchy of the governance model inside that organization and again not the purview of the Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that the CEO of the WCB is responsible for enforcing his own policy, when the CEO himself does not follow WCB policy, who is he accountable to, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Dunford: The chief executive officer of the Workers' Compenssation Board is responsible to and accountable to the board of directors of the workers' compensation system, and if there are issues that are to be dealt with, then it would be those bodies that would do that.

Whaleback Area

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, the Whaleback area near Pincher Creek in southern Alberta is one of the most exceptional pieces of undisturbed wilderness in Alberta if not in Canada. Even the Premier said in 1999 that this area is an exceptional undisturbed landscape. But the Whaleback's ecological integrity will be disturbed if proposed sour gas activity takes place there. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. Will this minister call for a complete environmental impact assessment of the proposed sour gas well development for this region?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that the exact sour gas well the member is talking about is in what we refer to as the formal section of the Whaleback area. However, suffice it to say that we are looking at a lot of issues to do with the Whaleback. In fact, I was down not long ago with some colleague members to meet with some of the ranchers. We talked about their concerns with respect to grazing permits and grazing leases, and very shortly we'll have a larger answer for the member and for the ranchers and farmers in that area.

As far as the sour gas well goes, I think it's just outside that area. I could stand to be corrected.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, it is just outside of the area, but the impact falls right directly into the Whaleback area.

Why did this government even bother to protect the Whaleback if all along it was going to allow industrial development of this kind that really does threaten the area's ecological integrity?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no question that the Whaleback area is highly unique and it's a very special area, and that's one reason why it deserves protection. But I think that what the hon. member has to recognize is that when the special places program was undertaken, there were commitments given that any existing commitments that were already there would be honoured, regardless of what they might have been for.

Now, I'm not sure if the issue of the sour gas well itself that the hon. member is referencing isn't before the EUB at the moment for consideration. It may well be. So we'll wait to see what answers they can provide.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, my third question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What has this minister done to protect the rich variety of plants and animals, in particular elk, who use this area as a critical feeding and calving area in the Whaleback from this kind of industrial destruction?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question, a very important question, and we take it very seriously. Any development that takes place, any protection of public land that takes place is done in a very balanced way, and we'll continue doing that. In fact, I toured the area and met with ranchers also, along with the hon. member that spoke before me, along with the MLA, and we are working with a group from that area, and I am planning to go back. I met with the MLA today. I'm going to go back there to look at another project, and I have an opportunity also to tour that site while I'm down there, and that will happen within a month.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling upon the first of seven to participate today, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's, indeed, a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and to this House one of Edmonton's most significant business builders, a community builder. His brothers and their family have brought a strong entrepreneurial spirit to this city, and indeed their efforts can be seen and felt in a number of different projects, most notably and recently the children's hospital. All Edmontonians are proud of this gentleman. Of course, he happens to be the brother-in-law of our beloved Lieutenant Governor. I'd ask that Mr. Jim Hole please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House today.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce two folks from Dow Chemical in Fort Saskatchewan. They're here representing Dow Chemical and to be present for the recognition later. I'd ask Will Vandeborn and Barb Koral to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Daniel Garsonnin

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give recognition to a resident of St. Albert and an individual suggested by the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. His name is Daniel Garsonnin. He is a volunteer who is exceedingly worthy of recognition.

He passionately loves all things aeronautical and spends his time sharing that passion with grade six students in up to 50 schools per year in the Edmonton area. Each year he visits many classrooms and spends three sessions with each class. Bringing his many models the first day, he flies them in the classroom and stimulates the students' interest and curiosity. The second day he spends about three hours with the students sharing his tools and his expertise and patiently guides them in building individual free-flight planes. On the third day, after the planes have been painstakingly constructed, he comes and sets up the ER in the gym, and students do practice flights with many repairs and adjustments before the big contest to see who can achieve the longest flight.

I do want to recognize the volunteerism of Mr. Garsonnin. He is, indeed, a person who is a mentor and a wonderful teacher to our young students in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Naval Museum of Alberta

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are just so many things to be proud of in Calgary-Currie. Who else can say that they actually have a fully commissioned battleship in their riding? We have the HMCS Tecumseh, which serves as a naval recruitment and training centre, and located right beside the Tecumseh is the second largest and finest naval museum in Canada, one of Calgary-Currie's and Alberta's best hidden diamonds.

Congratulations to the many volunteers who since 1984 have put together this incredible museum, including current chairman, Jim Cowie; president, Bob Orthlieb; his wife, Laraine; and Norm Holden, who took me on a great tour after the Battle of the Atlantic ceremonies last weekend. The museum is open to the public, and displays include naval guns up to 15 tons in weight, naval aircraft, including a Hawker Sea Fury, and thousands of other fascinating artifacts collected from all over the world, including the John Burgess library, which contains one of the most extensive records of naval historical documents in Canada.

I wish the museum people all the best in their expansion and fundraising plans, and I would invite all to come and see the Naval Museum in Calgary-Currie.

Dow Chemical Donation Fort Saskatchewan Recreation and Arts Centre

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, it's with great pleasure that I rise to recognize a $1 million donation made by Fort Saskatchewan's long-standing corporate friend Dow Chemical. On May 2 the CEO of Dow Canada, Vince Smith, announced at a groundbreaking ceremony that the Fort's centennial activities centre will bear Dow's name.

Now, for those members who don't know, the CAC is a premier recreation and arts centre. In addition to a 550-seat performing arts theatre, the centre will have an indoor ice surface, an indoor soccer pitch, gymnasium, fitness area, and jogging track. Funding for this $19 million facility will come from individuals, industry, and government, including the province. This donation is among the largest ever made by Dow in Canada. In addition to the donation of cash, Dow is donating the Styrofoam insulation for the facility.

Fort Saskatchewan is very fortunate to have great corporate neighbours, and Dow certainly has been one of the best corporate contributors to the Fort Saskatchewan area. The city predicts that there'll be close to a million visitors to the CAC, and Dow's contribution represents a sizable investment in the quality of life in the community.

I'd ask all members to recognize Dow for their great contribution.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

National Nursing Week

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and recognize today the nursing profession, the heart of health care in our country. May 12 to 18 is National Nursing Week, and we recognize the tireless efforts of nurses, who devote themselves to public health and patient care. Nurses daily place themselves in harm's way in caring for patients with infectious diseases like SARS.

Like nurses everywhere Alberta's nurses are on the front lines of health care. We ask them to work evenings and weekends. The ongoing nursing shortage is placing increased stress on nurses to work overtime, thereby sacrificing personal and family time.

Instead of attacking nurses through a million dollar ad campaign, this government should be improving working conditions so that we can retain the nurses we do have and attract more young men and women to the profession. Nurses deserve recognition not only during National Nursing Week but every day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Jean Laniuk

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize one of Edmonton's finest teachers, Jean Laniuk. Jean has dedicated her career to instilling a love of music in the hearts and minds of many young Edmontonians, and after 40 years of service, sadly, she is retiring.

Last Thursday I had the opportunity to celebrate Jean's career with many former colleagues and students and to witness firsthand the immense, lasting impact she has had on our community. Jean's energy, enthusiasm, and passion have driven her students all over Alberta and everywhere from Disneyland to the CFL western final. Her drive for excellence has propelled her choirs to a great deal of success at both provincial and national levels. By Jean's outstanding commitment to developing the potential within each of her students, she has not only given them the gift of lasting memories but also the lifelong gift of an appreciation and understanding of the joys of music.

Our community thanks Jean for the exceptional dedication and commitment to learning she has demonstrated over the past four decades.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Wetaskiwin-Camrose Athletes

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to recognize some outstanding athletes from my constituency. First, Justine Bouchard, an 11th grader, led the Wetaskiwin wrestling team and won her third national championship in the juvenile 60 K weight division. Second, I want to recognize the Camrose Kodiaks, who brought home the silver medal from the Royal Bank national junior A championships, which concluded yesterday in Charlotte-town.

Justine Bouchard is considered to be a powerhouse in her division, and she has another year to try to make it four national titles in a row. Another wrestler, Natalie Jaburek, who was competing in her first nationals, brought home the silver medal for her weight class. As well, Caleb Greenwall collected silver in the heavyweight class.

Today Camrose is celebrating the return of the Camrose Kodiaks, who after a long and very competitive national tournament brought home the silver medal after the final game yesterday won by the Humboldt Broncos. The Kodiaks are a group of very deserving young hockey players having previously won the Alberta and B.C. championships. The city of Camrose and I'm sure all of Alberta is very proud of them.

I congratulate all of the athletes, coaches, managers, and sponsors on their outstanding success this year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Drought Assistance

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and bring attention to events that helped hundreds of farmers through one of the worst droughts Alberta has ever experienced. Organized by Navan, Ontario, farmer Wyatt McWilliams, Hay West saw donations from more than 1,800 eastern farmers which were loaded onto railcars and trucked by more than 1,500 volunteers. More than 800 farm operators each received about 15 tonnes of hay, and as an example of Albertans' generosity about one out of every four recipients of the Hay West donation shared their hay with his or her neighbours.

The Alberta government donated $200,000, most of which was used to harvest standing hay. As well, Jackie Rae and Greg Thomas of CFCW organized two fund-raising concerts and a provincewide radiothon that raised more than $2 million, and it was used to fund the cost of 76 railcars and assistance to Alberta Farm Animal Care Association and feed for 4-H. Finally, Drought Aid, through donations made at any Alberta Treasury Branch, has raised $270,000, which was used to help fund the Alberta Animal Farm Care Association and the Alberta Mental Health Board. In total, more than $6.7 million was raised.

It's impossible to recognize every individual who helped out in this time of crisis, so I'd like to extend my thanks to everyone for their help while we faced such a severe drought.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a petition containing the names of 464 Albertans asking the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the government of Alberta to deinsure abortion.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Bill 43 Post-secondary Learning Act

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to request leave to introduce Bill 43 being the Post-secondary Learning Act.

Mr. Speaker, this bill combines four existing acts – namely, the Colleges Act, the Technical Institutes Act, the Universities Act, and the Banff Centre Act – into one piece of all-encompassing legislation for postsecondary learning. If this bill is not passed in the spring session of the 25th Legislature, it will be hopefully passed in the fall session and will allow time for input over the summer.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 43 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table the requisite number of copies of the special areas trust account audited financial statements as of December 31, 2002.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 13 petition letters; one letter from Tracy Patience, the president of the Alberta Avenue neighbourhood patrol; and one e-mail from a resident in Mill Woods, Mr. Edward Campbell, who is actually seated in the members' gallery this afternoon; all supporting Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five brief tablings today. I have the requisite number of copies of four studies relating to homelessness and the mentally ill, including the 2002 Calgary homeless study.

My fifth tabling is very interesting. It explains a medical discovery allowing stem cells to be turned into both egg embryo cells and sperm cells. This may lead to an exciting development for infertile couples, and it also opens the possibility of gay male couples having true genetic children. In fact, one man could theoretically become both mother and father genetically. This will no doubt lead to some lively discussion in this Legislature in coming years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first one is a copy of a petition organized by the Faith in Action group. There are over 200 Albertans from all over the province who have signed this petition urging the hon. Premier to take action in regard to funding for those in need, particularly those on low-income programs in Alberta. The current benefits do not meet the needs.

The second tabling I have is a copy of a petition. "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to reinstate natural-gas rebates immediately." This is from citizens around the Leduc area. Not only do they have problems with electricity but also with their natural gas bills.

The third tabling I have this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is a copy of correspondence I received dated May 9, 2003, and this is a tabling with permission from Linda Louise Meyer. It is her story of how difficult it is to get by on a fixed income when utility costs are so high.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail that I received as an open letter to the Premier noting that a decision made by the government to consistently underfund Alberta universities and the subsequent move by the U of A to cut sessional contracts in half has made future deliberations for this doctoral candidate unnecessary. She's going to have to leave Alberta to find work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview I table five copies of a letter from Melanie Shapiro to the Premier. Melanie has enclosed a copy of the Small Class Size Project conducted in Edmonton showing how small class sizes benefit children. She makes a plea that no more teachers be lost from the system because that would make small classes even less likely.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. The first is a document from Calgary Roman Catholic separate school district No. 1. This document is entitled Financial Implications of Provincial Budget for 2003-2004 and indicates that the provincial budget for the district falls very short of needs, the renewed funding framework must be implemented immediately, and Alberta Infrastructure funding needs to be increased.

Mr. Speaker, the second tabling is a letter from Dr. John Wodak, dated May 4, 2003, addressed to the minister of human resources.

In his letter Dr. Wodak points out the continuing inadequacy of the monthly AISH benefit rate, the lack of support for dependent children of disabled persons, and the lack of proper consideration for income earned by working AISH recipients.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first tabling is a letter from the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, dated March 10, indicating that their power bill had just about doubled in the past two years.

The second tabling is a letter dated April 8, 2003, from Mountain View county, whose power bill had increased from $56,000 in the year 2000 to $79,000 in the year 2002.

The third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Beaver county, dated April 10, 2003, indicating that their power bill had also doubled in the last two years.

The fourth tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a government of Alberta news release dealing with the consumer electricity review, which indicates that current and future benefits of deregulation are to be studied by the group but not negative benefits of deregulation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm tabling in the House today a memorandum to all members concerning a process for possible amendments to Bill 42, the Electoral Divisions Act. Members will be receiving their copy shortly.

head: Orders of the Day

[Mr. Shariif in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a honour to begin debate in Committee of the Whole for Bill 206 this afternoon. I understand that this sort of legislation isn't normally debated in the Assembly and it usually isn't debated as a private member's bill, but I would like to remind members that vehicle seizure is not new and has been in practice in this province for years.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would like to talk about section 173.1. This section obviously generates the most concern and anxiety from members who currently may not be fully supportive of this bill. I would like to take a moment and talk about the support for this section of the bill.

Often this Assembly hears how private members' bills may not be as sound as government bills. I understand that many members may be a little wary about supporting private members' bills, that may not have a great deal of official support or even community support. I agree that input from stakeholders, the public, and other government departments is extremely important before any legislation is brought forward. I also agree that passing laws is serious business, and it is extremely dangerous to be lax with the legislative process. Mr. Chairman, I'm confident that a great deal of work has been done that justifies vehicle seizure, as proposed in section 173.1, and I'm convinced that this section is a move in the right direction to help improve the well-being of many vulnerable Albertans.

This part of the bill is not a knee-jerk reaction to street prostitution and has been studied and applied in other provinces. The original idea for seizing vehicles from johns or sex trade offenders, proposed in section 173.1, came from a constituent in Calgary-Buffalo, a senior by the name of Ray Franklin. We had discussed this on numerous occasions even prior to the last election, discussed the growing street prostitution problem in our area and what the government of Manitoba had done in the late 1990s to address the issues in Winnipeg. I felt that it was a great idea and brought it forward as Bill 212 last session, Mr. Chairman.

Having a bill far down on the Order Paper turned out to be a blessing in disguise because the idea of the bill received a cooler reception from government departments, police services, and several MLAs. Some were concerned that vehicle seizures would punish entire families who depended on transportation rather than just the sex offender. Another concern was that police officers would be overburdened with seizing vehicles, which would then take precious time and resources away from other initiatives. Others believed that street prostitution wasn't a serious problem and should be left to municipalities. These were important and valid concerns that I was able to address because Bill 212 was unlikely to reach debate in the House. By not rushing this proposed legislation through the Legislature as Bill 212, I was able to spend more time ironing out these concerns and addressing problems with my colleagues, members, and members of the public who had some concerns with the bill, including the seizing of vehicles from sexual predators, as proposed in section 173.1.

I met with the Calgary and Edmonton prostitution vice units from the respective police agencies, who believed that vehicle seizure could be effective as long as they could use it during their undercover sting operations. I also introduced several members in this Assembly to vice unit detectives working here in Edmonton and Calgary. This meeting was an excellent opportunity for both sides to express their concerns with the effectiveness of vehicle seizure and why it was so important to support it.

Mr. Chairman, I did receive many calls from constituents. I've received hundreds and hundreds of letters from people around the province, not just from the inner cities of Calgary and Edmonton. People in places like Three Hills, Strathmore, Viking, and Sherwood Park care about the safety of people living in the inner city. I've received letters from the mayor of Calgary, the mayor of Edmonton, Edmonton city council, and the Calgary and Edmonton police services fully supporting this bill. Community groups have organized letter campaigns to generate support for vehicle seizure. Other community groups have passed resolutions supporting vehicle seizure. School principals from inner-city schools have sent letters urging me to carry on with this legislation.

Before members brush off the broad support for vehicle seizures proposed in section 173.1, I'd like to offer them a challenge: drive through an inner-city community. Take two short trips. The first time go during the day. Drive around, and you'll see small houses, apartment buildings, schools, and community halls. Basically, it will look like any other neighbourhood. You'll notice a number of young families and quite a few children. Playgrounds may not be full of children, but everywhere you go you'll see young people. Then take a trip in the evening. Go to the exact same areas, and you'll see the same apartment buildings and schools, but I know you'll see something else. There will be a lot more women on the streets and vehicles moving very slowly. You may see fighting; you'll probably hear yelling. You'll definitely see drug deals taking place and cars turning off major roads and disappearing down residential streets. The differences between night and day in this area will be just that.

Then I'd like to challenge you to consider the fact that young families living in these areas do not have the option of driving home where life is much safer. As we heard in second reading, residents have to make sure that their children don't pick up and play with dirty needles and used condoms. Overall, Mr. Chairman, these people would tell you that their neighbourhood is not a bad place to live. The residents just want something done about street prostitution.

The problem with johns or sex trade offenders is becoming worse. I've heard inner-city residents describe instances where johns try to pick up in broad daylight innocent women who are residents of the community. The vehicle seizure proposed in section 173.1 will help inner-city residents feel safer in their own homes and force johns to reconsider their deviant behaviour through an alternative measures program.

Mr. Chairman, I must concede that there are other issues with section 173.1 that have been addressed but have not been fully resolved. The major issue with this bill is that it may be vulnerable to constitutional challenges. As we heard in second reading, both Saskatchewan and Manitoba have similar legislation and no one has challenged this law since 1998, but this does not mean that a legal case can't exist. The presumption of innocence seems to be overlooked at first glance, but vehicle seizure is not new in Alberta and is in fact entrenched in the Traffic Safety Act. Furthermore, the seizure of the vehicle isn't a given and is conditional on the offender agreeing to an alternative measures program as described in section 3(c). Also, this bill is no more or less vulnerable to constitutional challenges than seizing vehicles from impaired drivers because there are several avenues that people can use to have their vehicle returned.

Based on what I've heard from other jurisdictions, it is highly unlikely that a sex offender would take this to court. Doing so would reveal to the world that he has taken part in an illegal activity and actively seeks the services of young girls for his own pleasures. Not only would he be subjecting himself to a great deal of shame but also his family, including his wife, sister, mother, brother, et cetera. It would be far easier, cheaper, and faster to take part in an alternative measures program as described in section 3(c) rather than subject their loved ones to embarrassment. Education versus total embarrassment and enforcement. The emotional, financial, and social expenses simply are not worth the cost. Sex trade offenders in Saskatchewan and Manitoba have realized this, and I believe these offenders will do the same.

Vehicle seizure, proposed in section 173.1, could help inner-city residents live in safer neighbourhoods by deterring sex offenders from cruising their streets. I urge all members to vote in favour of Bill 206.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to finally get a chance to speak to this bill. I wasn't able to do it in second reading, so Committee of the Whole is my first opportunity. I'm encouraged to see the amount of debate that has gone on around this bill. I find it encouraging that people are willing to rise and actually put forward the issues that are brought forward under this bill because there are issues that are raised by it.

It is an imperfect bill. It is trying to do something really good and noble and helpful for a community, but the way it chooses to do it raises concerns for people who feel that it's important that people have their day in court, feel that there needs to be a process that is followed that is consistent from individual to individual and in how it's applied from day to day to day. All those issues have been brought up and put on the table by what's being proposed under Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003.

I am the MLA for one of the communities in Edmonton that feels strongly about this bill. My communities that are considered inner city and that have prostitution and prostitution-related activities in them feel under siege. They feel that outsiders, tourists come into their community and threaten their safety and the integrity of the community, and they want some control back. They want to be able to have their children feel safe. The women want to be able to just walk to the store or walk to the community league or walk to the bus stop without being harassed and literally treated like a prostitute. There are other people that have spoken very eloquently prior to me about what prostitution does to communities. I don't have to go into this at great length. The communities feel strongly that they need some additional tool to be able to control what these interlopers, these johns, these tourists into their community are doing to their community.

The flip side of this is a balance because what is suggested in the legislation – and I think the part that distresses me the most and causes me the most concern about whether or not I support the bill is the discretionary power that is delegated to the on-the-street officer to be able to accept an argument from a john that the vehicle is needed for their family or needed for their ability to earn money and provide for their family. Now, let's stop right here. Let's remember, please, that the legislation is only talking about seizure of vehicles in second and subsequent apprehensions. It's really important that people remember that this is not going to happen the first time somebody gets caught – really important. Okay. This is not slapdash. This is approached with some caution. So this only kicks into play when someone is (a) caught soliciting prostitutes, (b) it's the second or subsequent time – third, fourth, fifth, tenth, twentieth, whatever – that they have been caught doing this. There's no possibility here for someone to have the argument: "Oops. Took the wrong turn, thought I was going to the Capilano freeway." We're talking about people that have already been apprehended on this sort of a charge before. So that's a good thing, that the sponsoring Member for Calgary-Buffalo has set the legislation up in this way. It's not about the first time. We are dealing with people who are quite committed to coming into communities and procuring sexual services, usually from women. They are committed to doing this.

I have an issue with an individual, professional though they are, as a police officer having the on-the-spot discretion to say: "Right. Okay. I can see the baby carrier in the back seat of your car, and I hear your argument that, you know, you're a primary breadwinner for this family and losing the car would affect your ability to transport your kids and to do your job. Therefore, okay. Fine. We won't impound your car." I have the utmost respect for the training and the integrity of police officers, but I am always going to be nervous when there's that kind of discretion given to an officer, whether it's a customs officer, whether it's a police officer, whether it's a tax officer. I am uneasy about having one individual, who could have had a bad day or a really good day – they could be in a big hurry to do something or have all day, whatever. Those circumstances change an individual's life, and I really struggle when we delegate that kind of discretionary power to an individual to either make something like this stick or make it go away.

That's one of my big hesitations in supporting this bill. On the one hand, I have my community saying: "Help us get some power back. Help us get some control over our communities to stop these tourists coming in, these men coming into our communities and threatening our integrity and our safety. Give us a tool in the toolbox to help us look after ourselves, to empower ourselves." I've heard that example raised a number of times. That's a good deal of why I sought election, Mr. Chairman: to help communities empower themselves, to come up with creative solutions on how they could be better functioning communities and contribute more to the fabric of Alberta. So of course I'm going to put a lot of weight on my communities asking for that and on the neighbouring communities. Just because it happens on the other side of the street and that's no longer my constituency, of course that affects my constituency. Perhaps the individuals live in my constituency or they work there or their brothers or sisters work there or their children go to school in my constituency.

So to say: oh, it's in another constituency; it's not going to bother me. Of course it is. We have an inner city in Edmonton that we have all been working hard to rebuild, to fill in that doughnut, to make an attractive place to live. We've got affordable housing stock there. It makes it possible for people to buy a house and start a family or move their family there and be part of a community and not live in an apartment building but actually have a house and a yard and join the community league and then get involved in all those kinds of activities. So that's really important to me, and I put a lot of weight on that.

In the middle is the issue around the day-in-court argument, that, you know, people want to either be able to get their day in court or not be able to get their day in court and that whole issue of justice that's been raised by members, like the Member for Calgary-Montrose or the Member for Edmonton-Calder, and how important that justice is and whether it's in fact just or reasonable before somebody's actually been convicted of something to say: we're going to punish you in advance just in case, as a precaution, as a prophylactic if you will. We're going to punish you first, and then you go to court and we'll find out if it's true or not or if it's reasonable or not or if the charge is going to stick or not. A lot of people have trouble with that.

What I see is this government, or private members who are members of the government – this is the third time I think I've seen an implementation like this. We've got the impounding of cars around drunk driving. We've got the impounding of vehicles around poaching and things, vehicles and rigs and ATVs and everything else that goes with it if you're caught poaching, and now we're talking about impounding vehicles around the issue of solicitation for the purposes of prostitution. So I am concerned that this becomes commonplace, and every time we do this, there's more of a precedent.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to join debate and speak to Bill 206 at the committee stage today. I believe that this bill is a good step for us to take in the fight against prostitution. This bill goes after the main problem with prostitution, and that is the johns. I don't think that the prostitute is fully to blame for the problems we are having with street prostitution. Yes, they are part of the problem, but the severity of the problem can be dramatically reduced if we can get rid of the buyer. Without a buyer, we will have no seller. That is why this bill is particularly good and positive.

Johns are highly problematic in the prostitution business. As a government we do not have enough programs or laws that target the john. We have plenty of programs aimed at prostitutes, but rarely do we have sufficient strategies in dealing with the other half of the street prostitution problem. I feel that Bill 206 is a good strategy for us to use.

Mr. Chairman, section 173.1 of Bill 206 outlines the strategy that will be taken. If a person is caught in the act of soliciting prostitution, they will have their car taken away. It is as simple as that, and I believe that it will be an effective tool against the illegal sex trade.

Of course, we all know that this bill will not eliminate the problem completely. There will always be sick individuals who wish to pay for sex. We cannot pretend that this will take care of all the problems, but it will at least curb the amount of prostitution that is outside on our streets and in our communities, and it is that kind of prostitution that creates the most problems for communities around Alberta. There are many communities that have to clean up their parks and streets after streetwalkers and johns have made their way through. Many people find used condoms, needles, and other paraphernalia that are related to the sex trade near their home. If we can keep the trade away from our communities, we will keep the disgusting trash of the trade away from our children.

Some of you may be wondering how this bill could possibly affect my rural constituents and how they would be in favour of this bill. Well, the answer is quite simple. As was discussed in second reading, many johns travel into cities from rural areas to look for prostitutes. If this bill is passed, we may put a stop to that activity because if the rural john is caught trying to buy sex, he will get his car taken away, creating a problem in getting back to his hometown, of course.

With this proposed new legislation word will be spread about what happens if one gets caught, and johns will be reluctant to find a prostitute from the street. Again, we know that this will not stop the problem, but it will drive the trade more indoors and off our community streets. That is the main goal: to get prostitutes off the street, where there are too many dangers. We could think of this as actually an attempt to protect the prostitute. Again, if the buyer of sex is eliminated, then the seller has to change how business is done, and hopefully the seller will give up the trade altogether. Of course, that's the ultimate goal.

Mr. Chairman, prostitution is a dirty, despicable, and immoral activity that should be eliminated, and we should be doing everything we can to get it off of our streets. Bill 206 is the step we need to take to help eliminate the problem. We've done a lot in the past few years by creating programs and legislation like the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act to eliminate the trade. As I mentioned already, these are mainly aimed at the seller of sex, not the buyer. If I am not mistaken, this might be our first step towards trying to effectively eliminate the buyer.

I believe that this legislation will work, and I believe it will be successful. It is that next step for this government to take in eliminating streetwalking prostitution, and I urge all members to vote in favour of Bill 206.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I always forget that private bills are only 10 minutes.

The other thing I want to discuss around this bill is that I feel obliged to point out that we're not dealing with one of the most obvious problems, and that's the issue of poverty and particularly poverty of women. This bill is taking another approach to it, and that may well turn out to be a very successful approach to dealing with this issue, but let's face it: I think the reason that we end up with women in the sex trades is because they are trying to get money. Whether they are trying to get money to support a drug or an alcohol problem or whether they're trying to get money to somehow support their families, either way it's about an economic incentive, and this bill does nothing to deal with that.

Maybe that's perfectly fine. Maybe it will have the same effect or a better effect by taking this particular route to it, but I can't let this discussion go by without dealing with the obvious, which is that these are women who are prostituting themselves for money. Besides that is the whole issue of who's really getting that money in the end and the control of women through pimps.

We came into this because we were trying to address the ways for communities to take control and take back some safety and integrity for their neighbourhoods. Upon review and looking at the issues which I've outlined previously around the balance between putting in place a tool like impounding of vehicles versus an individual having their day in court and being convicted and found guilty before you administer a punishment and, secondly, looking at the issue of individual discretion with an ability to hear an argument literally on the street and decide not to proceed with the impounding of a vehicle because there's a hard-times argument that is put to the individual officer, both of those I think are very troublesome. We need to be vigilant in the implementation of this bill, if passed – and I think it will be – that it doesn't become commonplace that we would punish someone before they're found guilty, that it only exists in extraordinary circumstances like communities struggling with prostitution, and that we are very, very careful and impress deeply upon the individuals who are making those decisions of individual discretion how delicate that is, how necessary it is to maintain a careful balance.

For me, balancing those two against the needs of a community coming forward with suggestions on how to empower themselves and with groups like Immigrant Neighbourhoods and the Community Action coalition and the group that Mr. Walters is working for that has brought forward so much of this, the Community Action Project, I think that it's important that I do support this bill. I'm willing to do that on behalf of my communities, but I felt that it was important that I also put those cautions, those arguments, those concerns on the record, and I will continue to be vigilant in my turn to make sure that this legislation when passed is implemented as is anticipated and as we have heard from the arguments that have been brought forward in this Assembly.

Thank you very much for the second opportunity to speak and complete my remarks. I appreciate it.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak in committee on Bill 206, Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. I would like to commend the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for introducing this private member's bill.

Mr. Chairman, I see a friend of mine in the gallery, Detective Len Dafoe, whom I've known for many years and who has worked very, very hard in the past in regard to prostitution issues. It's officers like Detective Dafoe who believe this would be a valuable tool in their belt to deal with prostitution.

Prostitution is degrading, and prostitution is dangerous. The fact that young women and men trade their bodies for money in our communities and in our provinces diminishes all of us. We as a Legislature have the duty to send out a very, very clear message: the use of prostitution is not acceptable. We cannot turn our backs on this problem. If we did, we wouldn't be doing our jobs. Hollywood and musical videos glamourize prostitution. Even our language softens its reality. Prostitutes are called hookers, they're called ladies of the evening, they're called painted ladies, but believe me: there is nothing delicate or glamorous about prostitution. Prostitution is sometimes referred to as the sex trade. Mr. Chairman, prostitution is not a trade. It's not like being a welder, and it's not like being a carpenter.

I will always remember a mother I met several years ago. She called me to say that she had a problem and wanted to know if I could help. Her young daughter was working as a prostitute. I went with that mom to a street corner to try and get that little girl off of the street and away from the sexual predators prowling the night. Tragically, we weren't successful. So I've seen the tragedy of prostitution firsthand. Out of that experience came the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, that has done so much to protect our children from any form of child abuse.

As Solicitor General I have met with community groups to hear their concerns about crimes in their neighbourhoods, and one of the most common problems they face, especially inner-city communities, is prostitution. It isn't just the woman or even the men hanging out on the street corners. It is the traffic problems associated with the johns as they cruise around and around the neighbourhood. People become trapped in their own homes. They're afraid to go out or even take their children for a walk. They're afraid of being approached by the johns driving by on the street.

Imagine being a mother out for a walk with your child and having to explain what is going on. Imagine being a young girl heading off to school and having to run a gauntlet of perverts approaching you offering to buy sex. Imagine taking your children to the playground and having to deal with or try to explain to your inquisitive five year old about dirty needles or dirty condoms. There are also the spin-off effects of prostitution. Prostitution spawns all kinds of crime as people lose pride in their communities and their neighbourhoods begin to deteriorate.

Mr. Chairman, I'm sure there will be those who say that by seizing the cars of johns, we will only force them to go elsewhere for sex or that it will create an increased demand for massage parlours or escort services and that it will embarrass and create hardship for the families. I'm not so naive as to suggest that Bill 206 is the ultimate solution. Bill 206 is one step towards dealing more effectively with a problem that has been with us for a very long time. It does give police one more tool they can use in their battle against prostitution and the other crimes associated with it. If this bill forces customers to look elsewhere, we will then be able to focus future efforts on those areas.

Others may suggest that this bill somehow will violate the rights of the people by taking away their cars. I'm not aware of anything that says that owning a car is a right in our society. If you use your car to infringe on the right of people to enjoy their community and to take advantage of people who are in such dire straits that they have to sell their bodies, you deserve to lose your car. Mr. Chairman, we have laws that allow the cars of poachers to be seized. Why would we not want a law that allows the cars of johns to be seized? If we can take away someone's car because they are carrying illegally caught fish in it, we should be able to take away someone's car for cruising a neighbourhood looking to purchase sex. I strongly support Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Chairman, let me leave you with a powerful memory I have of graduation for a 15-year-old child who could have been in one of those cars until I helped rescue her from the street. At her graduation she read a poem that she had written, which she dedicated to all of those that had helped her. It goes like this.

I have met angels that have saved my life.
I have met angels that once black are now white.
I have met angels from the pit of hell.
Who now stand beside me sober and well.
These angels are beautiful and bright.
They have given me the wings that have helped me in my flight.

To me that says it all.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I urge everyone in the Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is with great pleasure that I rise this afternoon in the Assembly to join the debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003.

The purpose of Bill 206 is to grant police officers the ability to seize vehicles that are involved in prostitution-related offences. The vehicles are seized when prostitution-related charges are laid. The seized vehicles would then be sold but only following a conviction or a guilty plea, although police officers would also have the discretion to return a vehicle to the owner if an officer discovers that it negatively impacts other family members or if the individual agrees to take part in an alternative measures program.

Mr. Chairman, prostitution and its effects are not pleasant subjects. It is easy to discount street prostitutes as delinquents, but we must keep in mind that it's disadvantage that drives women and children into street prostitution initially. These women and girls – and I must stress that the majority are girls – are victims of serious abuse and violence. They confront problems in relation to drug dependency, homelessness, and mental and sexual health. These females are economically and socially disadvantaged individuals in our communities, and I could give evidence of that. This is from a number of years ago when I was a guidance counselor in the Calgary public board of education system and particularly when I was at Bowness high school. It was more than once over the period of time that I was there that one of the young girls, usually in grade 10 or 11, was not at school, and the word was that she had disappeared downtown. As this was basically out of our jurisdiction in our work, we were not able to really follow up directly with that, but I can tell you that in experiencing the sudden disappearance of these to us rather normal, everyday girls, I can only tell you of the feeling of helplessness in knowing of that reality and what you are unable to do in some circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, as I've said, in my mind I think of most street prostitutes as young, vulnerable girls. The average age, we know now, of children involved in prostitution in Alberta is 15 to 16 years old, and that's only the average. However, I know that police and social workers have dealt with children as young as 12 years of age. These girls are taken advantage of by johns, who exploit their desperation and mostly, I think, their vulnerability. Street prostitutes need treatment and assistance, and johns are most definitely not part of the solution. They only create further problems, obviously, and a dependency.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I would now like to highlight section 173.1 of the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003, as I feel that this is a valuable component of the bill. The amendment allows for the charged individual to be eligible for and consent to be dealt with by way of a program of alternative measures. These programs are often referred to as john schools. They work to raise awareness and possibly change attitudes. The program is used as an alternative, a tool that can be used when dealing with street prostitution. It is a way of helping communities that have pockets of sex trade workers. This program is only one part of the solution, but it is an initiative that addresses another angle of the problem, the johns.

I would say specifically to members who live in Calgary that they may remember when the street trade was very alive and well in downtown Calgary. It was where the area of Eau Claire is right now. In the '80s it was located in the bus barns. At that time, I was working out of Shell Centre, so when I had to go get my car, I certainly had to walk my way through all kinds of interesting things. Again, though, I do remember, with the construction and development of Eau Claire, the relocation eventually first to Inglewood and then to the Victoria Park area. So, again, I certainly refer to my experience in this area or my knowledge of it, not direct experience.

The Alberta government provides shelters and programs to help children that are involved in the sex trade, but Bill 206 concentrates on another aspect of the problem. This bill deals with deterring and educating johns. The alternative measures programs are developed as an option rather than prosecution. They could be used as a deterrent to prevent the event from occurring initially or as a rehabilitation instrument to prevent the event from happening again. These programs as rehabilitation tools may also raise the awareness of the problem to johns. I must highlight that the option to attend the programs and have their vehicles returned are only offered to first-time offenders.

The schools are intended to educate johns about the problems inherent in street prostitution. These seminars are information sessions regarding, for example, how the participation of johns can compound earlier abuse endured as well as the victimization suffered by street prostitutes. They also receive information and firsthand knowledge from an array of different perspectives as well as from those who have been involved with the problem. For instance, prosecutors and police officers speak about the law and consequences of their actions, while medical professionals talk about health risks associated with prostitution and sexually transmitted diseases. Survivors of prostitution tell their personal stories of what life was like on the street and discuss some of the dangers that sex trade workers often face. Residents and business owners in the community also have an opportunity to express how prostitution affects their neighbourhood. Through alternative measures programs johns not only learn about street workers but how they contribute to the larger scope of the problem, such as sex trafficking, associated criminality, inherent fear, and health diseases and disorders. Psychologists are also present at these programs to provide information on sexual disorders, which could raise a john's awareness that he may have a problem and needs to seek treatment.

This gives johns easy access to programs that can assist those with potentially dangerous behaviour. Some john schools provide voluntary testing for sexually transmitted diseases. The tests are available to johns to find out if they have contracted a disease and if they are putting their family at risk. This is where I think it's a very sad area with this whole issue. In some cases wives of johns speak at the session about how their husbands' actions of engaging in relations with prostitutes have affected their lives. Women that have contracted diseases from their husbands explain how johns' activities can affect their entire family.

Mr. Chairman, these programs prove to be an effective instrument. Only a very small number of those who participate in john schools actually reoffend. It has become apparent that many johns do not realize the impact of their behaviour on the community and on the lives of many others. Those that participate in the program come to acknowledge the problems and the disruption it causes to everyone involved, from the sex trade workers to the surrounding community and mostly to the family members of johns. John schools are definitely an alternative to prosecution. Therefore, they could possibly decrease the number of charges, reducing the pressure on the court system.

Mr. Chairman, street prostitution and the sale of sex acts are not pleasant topics, but these are issues that are afflicting Alberta urban communities. Section 173.1 of Bill 206 will reduce the harm to inner-city neighbourhoods and prevent violence towards prostitutes. The activity we are trying to prevent is happening in public places: on our streets, in our parks, and in schoolyards in urban centres. It is bad enough that these actions are occurring on our streets or in our communities, but now they seem to be obtruding into families' backyards, driveways, and front steps. These are not the types of things that individuals and families want to come home to. Granted, this type of activity is occurring most frequently in specific communities, as I said earlier, historically and even now in Edmonton and Calgary, but this is an abhorrent problem, not an issue we should turn our heads from just because it doesn't directly harm our own community. Regardless, these are areas where families live and children are being raised. Do we really want to let this type of activity continue?

Some communities deal with the upsetting effects of prostitution on a day-to-day basis. Residents and their children are exposed to litter from the sex trade and intrusion onto their private property. I feel that this bill is about much more than seizing vehicles. It is about protecting our communities. Street prostitution co-opts the street. It turns the community into a place where women and young women are for sale rather than a place where individuals live and work. It visibly labels communities as harmful or destructive places. Street prostitution infringes on other citizens' rights to have neighbourhoods without condoms in the streets, women safe from being solicited, and children free from viewing half-naked women in front of their homes.

As I have said, street prostitution comes with dangerous and disgusting garbage.

The Chair: Hon. member, your 10 minutes are up.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today and offer some of my comments with regard to Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. I believe that this legislation will help Albertans accomplish three very important goals: reduce and curb the spread of street prostitution within the province, help and assist those involved within the trade, and protect our communities and our children from the dangers associated with street prostitution.

I would like to begin, Mr. Chairman, by reiterating that the purpose of Bill 206 is to amend section 173 of the Traffic Safety Act, which will allow peace officers to seize or immobilize vehicles belonging to individuals involved in prostitution-related offences. I believe that this measure will help with the amount of such offences within our province. Some of the latest data seems to indicate that Albertans have a serious prostitution problem on their hands. According to a study administered by the University of British Columbia, Alberta ranks second only to Saskatchewan with regard to prostitution-related crimes on a per capita basis. What is worse is that similar studies seem to have indicated that this problem is not decreasing but increasing. As a result, many of our urban communities will continue to face further economic and social degradation, our children will continue to grow in unsafe and dangerous environments, and the young street prostitutes will keep getting abused by dangerous sexual predators.

Mr. Chairman, the throne speech spoke of Alberta's Promise. The second of the five promises spoke of "safe and healthy communities for our children's growth, education, and development." This bill will help us to keep the promise of safe and healthy communities.

Now, Mr. Chairman, Alberta's prostitution problem seems to have increased as our economic conditions have improved. During the mid-90s Alberta ranked fourth in the country with regard to prostitution-related offences on a per capita scale while currently we sit in second place. Our economic expansion, which started during the early and mid-90s, has had some unfortunate side effects, which in this case have found form in the proliferation of prostitution on our streets and within our communities. The key factor in the proliferation of prostitution in Alberta has been the increasing number of sexual predators who prey upon young, desperate, and vulnerable street girls, many of whom become too caught up the trade's vicious cycle before they can get out.

Bill 206, Mr. Chairman, aims to remedy at least a part of this problem by focusing on one of the main problems associated with street prostitution, the johns. More specifically, the bill proposes to amend section 173 of the current Traffic Safety Act by adding clause 173.1(1), which will allow officers to "seize or immobilize" vehicles which are used by johns to pick up street prostitutes. Furthermore, Bill 206 would further amend section 173 of the act by adding clause 173.1(3), which would allow the provincial government to hold onto and dispose of such vehicles once their owners were convicted of committing a prostitution-related offence.

While some Albertans may find that this punishment is a bit too harsh, I would like to point out that there are numerous other offences within the Traffic Safety Act that warrant temporary and even permanent vehicle seizures. As an example, Mr. Chairman, the act currently allows peace officers to seize vehicles of individuals involved in various criminal acts such as drinking and driving, dangerous driving, driving without a licence, driving without insurance, smuggling, and many others.

Prostitution, Mr. Chairman, is also a serious criminal offence under the Criminal Code of Canada.

Just as drinking and driving is an act by which an individual puts the lives of others at risk, individuals who purchase sexual services from young and vulnerable street girls are also posing an enormous risk to our society. By partaking in the prostitution trade, johns not only put themselves and their families at risk, but they also jeopardize the lives of the prostitutes and their families, the welfare of people living in the neighbourhoods and the communities in which the trade takes place. They also act as an agent in the proliferation of the deadly cycle of prostitution. Broken families, sexual abuse, alcohol and drug addiction, sexually transmitted diseases, and shattered lives are the components of this lethal cycle. Johns help sustain the motion of the cycle by providing the necessary fuel and money. Therefore, not only do johns put the lives of young street girls at great risk, but they also fund the very cycle which eventually destroys them.

By amending section 173 and permitting our peace officers to seize the vehicles of those involved in prostitution-related crimes, I believe that Bill 206 will send a strong message that this government cares about those who are the most affected by the prostitution trade and that it will continue to punish the individuals who thrive upon the misfortunes of others. Also, Mr. Chairman, by adding clause 173.1(3), which would allow the province to sell or dispose of vehicles belonging to johns, this bill will help provide further incentive to such individuals to cease their criminal and dangerous activities. It is my hope that if the seizure of their vehicles does not provide enough incentive, then their disposal would. I truly believe that this bill makes johns think twice before they sexually exploit another human being. This would be a good start in our battle against street prostitution.

As I have previously said, Mr. Chairman, some Albertans may say that seizing and selling vehicles belonging to individuals involved in the prostitution trade may be too harsh a measure, especially against those who commit the crime for the first time. Bill 206 deals with this very issue by promoting an alternative measures program which is designed to educate and inform johns about the dangers of prostitution and the detrimental effects they as participants have upon the lives of young street girls and our provinces' communities.

One such program is the prostitution offender program, which was launched in '96 as a joint venture between Alberta Justice and Edmonton city council. The program, which is popularly known as john school, is based on an initiative which is used with great success in San Francisco, where johns were given presentations and classes regarding the dangers associated with the sex trade. Alberta's prostitution offender program is available only to first-time offenders, who must pay a fee to attend the presentation and consultation sessions. The participants spend one full day listening to various presenters, who range from ex-prostitutes, parents whose children are involved in prostitution, police officers, sexual health educators, neighbourhood residents, and many others.

The purpose of these sessions, Mr. Chairman, is to show first-time sexual offenders the other side of the picture, that many of them hardly ever get the chance to see. It gives them the opportunity to recognize the consequences of their actions. It gives them the opportunity to see and realize that these are real people, real families, and real communities that they are hurting. It helps them recognize that they are a major part of the problem and that they have to change in order to help our society reduce the threat of prostitution in Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, two years ago a constituent came to me to tell me of her granddaughter, who was first introduced to drugs, hooked on drugs, and then, after being totally addicted and unable to afford the drugs, was told by her kindly friend how she could afford to pay for these drugs. This granddaughter was 14 years old. When this child tried to escape the world of drugs and prostitution, her pimp told her that he would kill members of her family one by one. That child has no future. She's dead.

These are the realities that johns need to hear about. Since its inception in '96, Mr. Chairman, the john school program has proven to be extremely successful. A testament to its achievement can be seen in the fact that since '96 1,026 men have gone through the program and only nine have gone on to reoffend. Similar programs have been used in Manitoba and Saskatchewan and have proven to be extremely helpful in reducing the number of prostitution-related offences. One of the most important aspects of Bill 206 is that it not only would allow first-time offenders to attend the sessions provided by a program such as the prostitution offender program, but it would also permit the province to return the seized vehicles to those individuals who have chosen to attend these sessions. In a way it can be said that Bill 206 gives first-time offenders the benefit of the doubt and gives them a second chance.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, Bill 206 puts the onus of responsibility on the johns, and it gives them the opportunity to reform their ways, keep their vehicles, help us curb the threat of prostitution, and keep our streets safe for our families and children. In the spirit of this, I urge all of my colleagues today to vote in favour of Bill 206.

Ms DeLong: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak against Bill 206. The purpose of Bill 206 is to amend the Traffic Safety Act to allow peace officers to seize vehicles involved in prostitution-related offences. The vehicles would be seized when prostitution-related charges are laid and would be sold after a guilty plea or a conviction.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that one of the central parts, one of the most important parts of our society is believing in the assumption of innocence. What this bill does is go a little bit over into this area of assuming guilt.

We've had lots of people here who have talked about how serious this problem is, and it really is a very serious problem. You know, we've heard this afternoon descriptions about the effects on neighbourhoods, the effects on people's lives, the effects on children that have been brought into prostitution. These are real problems that we do need to address, that we do need to work on. Okay? But I question whether this is the way to do it.

I think that there are other possible ways that we could deal with the problem. For instance, in terms of the process that we're setting up here where we're looking at the possibility – what we would have to have is a police officer that is pretending to be a prostitute, and we would have to have staff there to help with the arrest when that undercover agent was in place. So we've got to put that investment in anyway to be able to deal with this problem, and that is the investment that we actually need to make to make sure that those people are out there enforcing the law. But to take this next step, where we take a vehicle away and we assume guilt at that point, I think is a very dangerous step to take, and I don't especially believe that it's even necessary. At that point, the suspect has not spent one second with his lawyer. He has not spent one second learning about how this should proceed through the legal system. We have courts to determine guilt, not police officers.

When the Manitoba amendment was first passed, public awareness was such that it was very effective in reducing the traffic in certain areas. However, over time and because of cost and time constraints the police are not consistently enforcing the provision. So what we're doing is wandering over into this area of assuming guilt without actually solving the problem. I think it's a very dangerous direction to go in.

Some of the other things that we've done in the past such as the work that we've done with the Protection of Children Involved with Prostitution Act – I mean, that was fantastic work that Alberta did in that area and really highly commendable, and I think it's been very effective. The work that we've done with the john schools, where we've given people the option of going to a john school, has also been very effective. What we've found is that there's hardly any recidivism with the people that go off to the john schools. Now, what if instead of seizing vehicles, we give them the option after they've talked to their lawyer of going to john school or proceeding with prosecution at that point, and then we also take the next step: if they get convicted, we put their name in the paper. Okay? We have that ability. There is no reason why we can't do it. It would be just as effective, but it would assume innocence, which I think is so important in our society.

So I ask everyone to please consider defeating this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for giving me the opportunity to take a few moments to make remarks on Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. In particular I want to compliment and thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing this forward as he did experience the devastation of street prostitution through his career as a Calgary police officer, and I respect him very much for bringing this forward.

The issues that Bill 206 confronts are issues that affect us all whether we like to admit it or not. Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, this may be one of the most important bills to come before this House in quite some time. Why do I say this? Well, the impact of this bill once implemented will be felt on so many fronts. Individuals will benefit from the bill, families will benefit from this bill, and society as a whole will benefit from this bill.

So it was with some concern that I heard some of the objections raised with regard to Bill 206. For instance, one of the issues that was raised several times had to do with whether a law based on Bill 206 would pass constitutional muster in the event that such a law was ever challenged or if similar, already-existing legislation in Manitoba and Saskatchewan were ever challenged. Specifically, these concerns have focused on section 6 of the bill, whereby the arresting officer would be given the authority to order a john's vehicle to be seized.

I must say, Mr. Chairman, that I am a little concerned that some of the strongest objections to Bill 206 have their origins in this particular provision. After all, the seizure of vehicles isn't a new measure by any standards. To the contrary, we already do this in a number of areas. For instance, those who are caught poaching routinely have their vehicle seized. Moreover, if you are caught driving under the influence, there's a distinct possibility your vehicle will be seized too. So from my vantage point this ought not to be a major concern. It is already being done, albeit under different circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, in the bill before us at this time we have the opportunity not only to improve lives but also to save lives. Here I am talking not only about saving lives in the sense of preventing death from occurring. What's of no less importance is that this bill has the ability to save lives from becoming experiences of misery, abuse, disease, and being ostracized from society.

I'm not sure that it is possible for someone who has not found herself or, as in this case, maybe himself as a prostitute to understand just what an ordeal this is. For some being a prostitute means to support themselves and any dependents they may have. For others it is a way to finance their drug habit. I am sure that there are other reasons why someone would wind up working the streets, but I am just as certain that none of them involve choice, enthusiasm, or job satisfaction, things that the rest of us take for granted.

Either way, Mr. Chairman, the people who would most stand to benefit from Bill 206 are prostitutes themselves. To be quite literally stripped of dignity, self-preservation, and security several times a day just to survive would make anyone an easy target for the elements of our society who prey on the weak and the vulnerable. This is not a way for anyone to live and certainly not children. Yes, I said children. Some of the women who sell themselves on our streets are not women but girls, young girls. Some as young as 12 years old ply their trade on our streets. These are girls who are engaged in what we may call adult behaviour but who nonetheless do so with a child's mentality and perspective. Is that what we want? No, I submit it is not. So what are we doing to fight this scourge? What should we do but to fight tooth and nail to put an end to the children and adolescents working in situations that are adult in every sense of the word.

On other occasions the age of consent in Alberta has been a heated topic of debate. At the present time it is 14. Some have argued that this age limit is too low. This is neither the time nor the place to reopen that Pandora's box, but if, as we have heard here, the average starting age for prostitutes is about 14 years of age, then by dint of logic some must begin when they are younger than 14. This would amount to nothing less than child molestation of the worst kind. Having a child of no more than 14 sell herself on the streets to men who are two, three, or four times her age has to be among the most heinous and vile offences that can be committed against a child in our society today. It is child abuse pure and simple, and if this were a case of child abuse on a videotape or in the hands of a violent parent, we would do our utmost to put an end to it.

That's why laws against such reprehensible acts are already on the books. Yes, solicitation of prostitution is already illegal in our province, and so is child abuse, be it sexual or otherwise. However, if prostitution persists in spite of the already existing legislation, if there are children involved at any level or phase – and please note that I have not spoken of children that are sometimes the result of these liaisons and who sometimes grow up in the midst of prostitution - then obviously the legal means we have at our disposal are inadequate. We must do more.

This is where Bill 206 becomes such a valuable addition to the continuing battle against prostitution and the havoc it wreaks on individuals, families, and our society. Our society is one that is highly dependent on the automobile. Our cities are designed for automobiles, and in rural areas having a car is, quite frankly, something of a necessity. Take away a person's car, and you take away his or her mobility. Take away their mobility, and you hit them where it hurts. That is the point; is it not? If you want to have an impact, you must sometimes resort to what some may call drastic measures, and I would argue that whenever a child's well-being and long-term health are at stake, there is no measure that's drastic enough that we shouldn't attempt.

Another concern that has been raised is that if johns' and suspected johns' vehicles start being seized as a matter of routine, it could amount to a vastly different punishment for a john driving around in an old, beat-up Chevy Nova than for a john who is caught soliciting prostitutes in a brand-new, still-under-warranty luxury car. This to me is another nonissue. It shouldn't matter if the value of the car is the value of scrap metal or a luxury vehicle. Using that kind of logic, should different fines be handed out for traffic violations based on the kind of vehicle the predator drives? I can see it now: you are speeding in your family car, that's $500, but speeding in a sports car, because the car is meant to go fast, is only a hundred. In the eyes of the law, a car is a car whether it's got but a few miles on the odometer or it's rolled over completely.

Mr. Chairman, going back to the previous examples of situations where vehicle seizure is already a distinct possibility, neither poachers' nor drunk drivers' vehicles are seized on different terms when they are caught for their respective offences. Whether you've shot and killed an endangered species or some other animal out of season or run a red light at 60 miles an hour in a residential neighbourhood while driving under the influence, it's all but a foregone conclusion that you will be walking for a while. Surely we do not assign a lesser standing to some of our society's weakest and most vulnerable members than we do to those who turn their cars into deadly weapons or those who willfully and without regard for others think nothing of poaching.

What has also been mentioned as a source of concern is that Bill 206 would put in jeopardy the very cornerstone of our justice system; that is, the presumption of innocence until proven guilty. Mr. Chairman, while this is always a concern to me when new legislation is being considered, I am satisfied that Bill 206 will not encroach on such presumption of innocence. As far as I can tell, section 2 of the bill provides several release mechanisms for situations where it can be shown that a vehicle should not have been seized. Having said that, this still begs the question: what business other than solicitation would someone have for using a car to pick up a prostitute? Why would someone drive around an area known to be frequented by prostitutes if not for the purpose of buying sex? I think there's little risk of confusing a john with a delivery guy from a pizza joint, and if against all odds a guy delivering pizza should be mistaken for a john, I'm sure it wouldn't be long before the situation would be rectified.

Mr. Chairman, this is an issue that affects us all, whether we like to think so or not. It is not an issue of concern only to residents of Alberta's major urban areas; all Albertans are at risk directly or indirectly. Recent statistics show that as many as 25 percent of all johns live in rural Alberta and solicit prostitutes when they visit the cities.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I hope everyone supports this bill.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to speak on Bill 206 in Committee of the Whole. I believe that this bill has the potential to act as a deterrent for people who may be interested in picking up a sex peddler. As well, I believe that Bill 206 both gives an antiprostitution tool to law enforcement officers and also sends a message that street prostitution is something that this province will vigorously fight against. I want to say that I strongly support Bill 206 in its attempt to prevent, contain, or eliminate the social ills from spreading into our healthy Alberta communities.

I'll admit that my remarks today will seem highly two-sided in the sense that I see many strengths to Bill 206 but I also have some issues similar to the ones raised in second reading regarding due process and civil liberties. Today I'd like to discuss some of the more detailed points of Bill 206 and run through some scenarios in which the bill works and possibly needs to work better. I want to present these implementation issues for the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to consider, making the law workable and respected.

Many of the questions I raise take in the reality that many families and many johns have more than one car, and many johns may not be using a car that they own. These concerns centre around section 2 of Bill 206. As well, I will raise a few issues regarding the bill's reliance on the Criminal Code of Canada, which is set by federal legislation. Members will notice that sections 2 and 6 of Bill 206 both refer to the Criminal Code. Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss some of the concerns expressed in second reading, most notably the concern that in taking away a john's vehicle, we are violating his rights in some regard.

On my first point the members for Airdrie-Rocky View and Edmonton-Calder both expressed concern that the penalty for two different johns would be different, either in terms of real cost of a vehicle being taken away or in terms of different relative costs that the vehicle may hold for two different johns. However, I want to take a different tack here. I ask the member how he would respond to the concerns raised by the members for Airdrie-Rocky View and Edmonton-Calder and, two, the concerns that this bill would mean a different penalty for johns with only one car versus johns with more than one car. Obviously, we are looking at a special case here. It is true that this different situation exists with other punishments as well: taking driver's licences away from drunk drivers or assigning similar fines to people of varying income levels. However, like the two members, I believe that this case is unique and that we could have a situation of different fines for the same action or similar fines for the same action that affects two people in different ways. It would be beneficial for the sponsor of Bill 206 to address these concerns.

As well, on a related point a larger concern has been raised in regard to taking a vehicle that is not one's own. I know that there are provisions against seizures of a stolen car, but I also wanted to note the provisions that would protect the owner of a car should a person with access to the car take it out cruising for sex peddlers. For example, let's just say that a 19-year-old son borrows his mother's car for the weekend and gets caught in a sting while attempting to pick up a prostitute. Obviously, it is unfair to keep that car from the young man's mother. This is why under section 2 we have subsection (3)(a) and (b), which state that the car would be returned to the owner, the mother. Or take a different scenario: a husband takes a car registered in his wife's name and gets caught in a sting. It would also be unfair in this case to keep the car from the perpetrator's wife.

Others may choose to look at this second scenario in a different light. They may suggest that a loophole has been found: a man cognizant of the fact that if he doesn't use his own car, then no vehicle will be apprehended may use the cars of other friends, of family members, or even taxi cabs. I suggest that this is one of the loopholes to get around the law that the hon. member sponsoring the bill should pay attention to.

However, I've asked the sponsor whether or not he has considered this loophole, whether he thinks there is a way of seizing a john's own vehicle in the event that he has used someone else's to pick up a hooker. Is this at all possible? My point is that if a john has two cars or if a family has two cars, it doesn't seem as though life is going to be altered at all if all he has to do is use a different car. Shame, of course, may go a long way in terms of forcing someone to respect the law, but it may not go far enough. I would also note that the point of the bill is twofold. On the preventive side we want the prospect of either shame or inconvenience to work as a deterrent. On the punishment side we want to inconvenience johns so that they are unable to easily pick up a sex peddler. If we are only marginally inconveniencing a john, then I tend to wonder how effective the punishment side is.

None of this is to make light of the seizure of an automobile as a significant penalty; it's only to suggest that if a person can drive a car, whether it be his or another person's, he can pick up a sex peddler. Maybe the question should be: why not suspend the john's driver's licence as well? It would seem that by taking a john's car away and making it illegal for the john to continue driving until he has agreed to go through an alternative measures program, we would strengthen the deterrent to picking up a sex peddler. Further, we would reinforce the idea that driving is a privilege, not a right, and that by taking part in an illegal activity while driving, you are in essence forfeiting your right to drive. This is something that undoubtedly can be applied to johns and is something that I believe most Albertans would support.

With my second set of concerns it is clear that Bill 206 references the Criminal Code of Canada and, as such, renders itself dependent upon federal legislation. I understand the need for this. It is the federal government which sets the Criminal Code. However, I would ask: what other source of alternatives has the member considered that would have the same effect yet would not render us dependent upon the federal legislation? My concern is that any changes in the referenced section of the Criminal Code would undoubtedly affect the way that Bill 206 would be administered in Alberta and possibly not for the better. So a question to the sponsor: is there any risk of a change in the federal legislation requiring a change in the Alberta legislation should Bill 206 become law?

Finally, I want to address the concerns related to due process and civil liberties. They are important concerns, especially when you are dealing with criminal acts. We have to make sure that due process is part of the equation. However, we should be careful to note that with Bill 206 we are taking street prostitution out of the Criminal Code for those johns who choose to go to an alternative measures program instead of fighting the charges in court. In short, a deal is cut. If a john agrees to john school or another alternative measures program, then he gets his car back. If not, he does not get his car back. Something seems strange about this arrangement. For instance, what about circumstances when the deal isn't agreed to and if the suspected john argues that he is in fact innocent and he would like his day in court? So I would like to ask the members to consider these points.

I urge all hon. members to support this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 206. This is an extremely important piece of legislation. During second reading a number of members raised concerns about Bill 206. I would like to briefly address these concerns and state why the fundamentals of Bill 206 supersede these concerns.

The main objections to Bill 206 from members from both sides of the House had to do with issues surrounding constitutional vulnerability, due process, and unequal punishment under section 2(b), or the seizure of possible johns' vehicles. Some hon. members have addressed some very important issues during second reading. They questioned whether Bill 206 would stand up to a constitutional challenge because it encroaches into jurisdiction of the Criminal Code of Canada. Members also raised concerns of unequal punishment, explaining that vehicles range in value and also that vehicles even of the same price range range in real-life value from one person to another.

Dealing with the first issue of a constitutional challenge, we must look to Manitoba and Saskatchewan. In both of these provinces, where similar legislation has been adopted, we have yet to see this sort of law struck down by the courts. Frankly speaking, Mr. Chairman, even if Bill 206 is struck down in court, I believe it is a worthy risk we have to take as a government that is committed to being tough on street prostitution. A constitutional challenge should not stop us from pursuing the right objective.

My response to the member's second concern of unequal punishment is a simple one. Alberta is a province that prides itself on individual responsibility. Individual responsibility is at the core of Bill 206. Johns will be well aware of the new legislation before they make the conscious decision of obtaining the services of a street prostitute. Mr. Chairman, it is time that johns take responsibility for their actions. This is the Alberta way. We do not expect people to put blame on others or claim ignorance when they are guilty of a crime. Because of section 2(b) johns, no matter the value of the vehicle, will have to face and accept the consequences of the actions.

The third concern of Bill 206 raised by some hon. members is that it does not allow for full legal due process to take place. The members disagreed with the argument that police vehicle seizures of drunk drivers could be related to vehicle seizures of johns, because johns do not pose a direct threat to society. What nonsense. I'd disagree with this assertion strongly, and I believe johns, through the spread of disease, namely HIV, directly endanger not only their and the prostitutes' lives but society in general, not to mention the high rate of violence that street prostitutes face at the hands of johns. The indirect consequences of street prostitution of poverty, drug addiction, and family destruction cannot be forgotten when thinking of how this bill will deter johns.

Another precedent of vehicle seizure, or section 2(b), in this province is when people are caught for poaching. In these cases, vehicles are taken on the spot when someone is suspected of poaching. Even though there is no perceived direct threat to society, this action is taken.

At first glance Bill 206 may seem a bit excessive, but after talking to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I believe that Bill 206 is an effective way to help protect inner-city residents, and if we consider the consequences of not doing anything to help these people, then Bill 206 becomes even more important. I understand that the number of street prostitutes in Edmonton and Calgary has declined, yet the problems caused by johns and street prostitutes remain.

We have heard and will continue to hear reasons why the threat of vehicle seizure is a justifiable way of ridding Alberta streets of prostitution. Well, one of the major arguments against this sort of legislation is that it may be seen as excessively strong punishment. After all, prostitution is often referred to as the oldest profession and affects a relatively small number of Albertans, but I think that this bill has the potential to be very detrimental to people who rape and exploit young women.

Some may say that vehicle seizure hasn't eliminated other crimes such as drinking and driving and will not work for prostitution. I would agree that both street prostitution and drunk driving are complicated issues with no easy solutions. I also do not believe that seizing vehicles will be enough on its own to eliminate street prostitution.

No one believes that this bill is a simple solution to a complex problem. However, I do have a simple, inexpensive solution for sexual predators who feel that their constitutional rights have been violated by the presumption of guilt because their vehicles were taken away from them. If you don't want to lose your vehicle, don't pay young girls to satisfy your deviant needs. I'm sure these men don't want to explain to their families what happened to the family car, but they also shouldn't risk the chance of getting or transmitting a sexually transmitted disease.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that johns either stay home or find another hobby. I'd also urge johns to stay away from these women. Leave them alone, and let them try to get themselves off the streets, away from a life of sexual abuse and drug addiction. I think this is very simple advice, but it is also advice that hundreds if not thousands of Albertans strongly encourage johns to consider. If I believed for a second that johns would listen to my advice, then we wouldn't be debating the importance of Bill 206 in the first place. If johns listened to reason, then teachers wouldn't have to pick up dirty condoms from inner-city playgrounds. You know, the monkey bars are meant for the kids, and at my last assignment in a school I had to put a 10-foot fence around the playground because it was in the inner city, and wasn't that unfortunate when the kids in the neighbourhood couldn't play in the playground after hours because we had to protect the kids at the school?

If johns truly understood the consequences of their so-called harmless actions, then young women wouldn't be found frozen and strangled in a farmer's field.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to talk about the use of this bill by street prostitution vice units. We should keep in mind that police officers may use this tool frequently, sparingly, or not at all. Nowhere in this bill does it say that police must use vehicle seizure. The goal is to help them reduce street prostitution and improve the safety and well-being of inner-city neighbourhoods. This bill is only another tool that singles out the john or the customer of this illegal act.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, there are concerns with Bill 206; however, we are a government known for making hard decisions and being tough on crime for the best interests of all Albertans. Voting in favour of Bill 206 will be another example of our strong resolve to make Alberta safe and secure for her citizens. On that note, I urge all members to support Bill 206.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. It's my understanding from reading the bill and speaking to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo that the purpose of Bill 206 is to amend the Traffic Safety Act to allow peace officers to seize vehicles involved in prostitution-related offences. The vehicle would be seized when prostitution-related charges are laid and would be sold after a guilty plea or a conviction is reached. Fees for the seizure and storage of the vehicle would become the responsibility of the offender. If the suspect is acquitted, however, the fees become the responsibility of the Alberta government. Vehicles would be returned after an acquittal or if a first-time offender pleads guilty and participates in an alternative measures program, which includes education or community service. The seized vehicle would also be returned if someone other than the registered owner, such as the spouse, shows that the seizure is causing undue financial hardship to the family. Other exceptions include if the vehicle was stolen from the actual owner or if the offender borrowed the vehicle without the owner's knowledge of the intended offence. Some of the concern that I've heard expressed in this debate revolves around how and when the vehicle would be seized. A peace officer who on reasonable grounds believes that a motor vehicle is being operated in the course of committing a prostitution-related offence may seize the operator's vehicle.

Now, I've heard quite a few people express concerns thus far that suggest: what if they're just driving around the neighbourhood for awhile looking for somebody's house or driving around looking for things? What if they then get their vehicle seized because they're in a neighbourhood near a stroll? Well, Mr. Chairman, from my understanding I don't believe that a vehicle can be seized in that circumstance. It strictly and expressly says that reasonable grounds have to be achieved, and I find it very difficult to believe that a police officer is going to seize a vehicle just for driving around the neighbourhood for 15 minutes looking for a convenience store or looking for a neighbour's house. You have to have reasonable grounds.

I also have heard people say: what if I'm driving around and I get lost and I pull over to ask somebody for directions and it happens to be a prostitute? Mr. Chairman, if it's a prostitute who is an undercover police officer trying to trap individuals, I'm sure that if you ask for directions, the police officer will give you wonderful directions. They will not seize your vehicle for something so subtle and unrelated to prostitution. The police have much better things to do than to try and catch people who are looking for a place when they're lost.

Mr. Chairman, I'm never in favour of doing something that creates a black market, that pushes something underground, any sort of activities, because that never solves the problem. It only deals with the symptoms of a situation rather than trying to create a solution, but it's a commonly known fact that prostitution is already underground. It's already illegal, and this won't be driving it underground. The purpose of this bill, as sponsored by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, is not to drive it underground but to drive it off the playgrounds, off the street corners, and out of the backyards of communities where families are trying to live and raise children.

Whatever goes on behind closed doors, Mr. Chairman, and in the bedrooms of citizens is not the business of this government. It's not the business of any government, and it never has been. This bill is going to attempt to take whatever is out on the streets where we're raising children – in people's backyards, on street corners, and on playgrounds – and it's going to put it back behind closed doors, off the street, back in people's bedrooms where it can be dealt with appropriately between consenting adults, and then we can deal with the crime and activities of prostitution in general. This bill is not designed to stop prostitution. It was never intended to stop prostitution. It is strictly designed to clean up our streets.

I have one other concern that I've heard expressed that I wanted to address, and that's that when a vehicle is seized, the punishments could be very difficult. Somebody who owns an extremely valuable $40,000, $50,000 vehicle as opposed to someone who owns a $3,000 vehicle – seizing those two vehicles does not seem like equitable punishment for the same crime.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to point out that if you get pulled over for drunk driving and your licence is seized, the justice system doesn't consider or evaluate the value of that licence to you. If you're a truck driver and you make $4,000 a month from driving a truck and you lose your licence, that licence could be much more valuable than somebody who drives a vehicle once in a blue moon and usually takes light-rail transit or a bus or something and doesn't really have need for a vehicle. We don't measure whether or not the value of the punishment is equal in those two circumstances, so I don't consider it a necessary argument that could defeat this entire bill.

As I said before, Mr. Chairman, its entire purpose is to clean up our streets, and I'll support anything that helps to clean up our streets, and I ask all members to support this bill.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm glad to be able to have a chance, just for a couple of minutes, to try and clarify, I think, some of the things that I was saying the other day when I spoke against this bill. I appreciated my colleague for Wainwright's comments. I still do have a concern, however, when we pass a law or agree to pass a law that could very easily be challenged on a constitutional basis. I think that we need to be very responsible as lawmakers when we're working on things like this to make sure that we know exactly what the upside and the downside of things like this are.

I also think that there is an issue when a punishment can be unequal in a system that is supposed to be about justice. When you talk about somebody going to prison for two years less a day for theft over so many thousands of dollars, if somebody steals $2,000 more, do they go to jail for two years more? I don't think the answer is yes; I think the answer is no. So there is supposed to be something in justice that actually means justice and not just, you know: let's go get him and take him down.

I don't approve of prostitution, but I am not naive enough to believe that bringing this law through will in fact change prostitution. It's been I believe known to be one of world's oldest professions. I don't think that anybody has been able to figure out a way in the last couple of thousand years to make it go away, and I'm equally confident that this won't make it go away. However, if it helps to save lives and to clean up neighbourhoods, then I see merit in that idea. I'm not opposed to any of the upside benefits that we may glean from this bill, although I think that I would have had an easier time supporting the bill in its original form before, I believe, it got watered down. I think that now when you say to people, "Well, we're going to take your car, but we'll give it back to you when, you know, you go to John school," well, we can already make them go to John school, so why do we need to involve the vehicle?

I just think we need to think about what we're doing. I have great respect for my colleagues, and if they believe that this is a good bill, then I'm willing to go along with that. I just think that some of the things that we have done on the child welfare side on the side of the child prostitution act were profound bills. They truly gave us the tools to make a difference in these children's lives. I fully and totally support what my colleague the Solicitor General did as a private member bringing it forward.

I support the 118 ranch, that's being constructed and is just now being opened in my riding, where we can take some of these young children, 11 to 15 years old, off those streets. Once they go through a drug program, we can put them onto this ranch where they can learn how to be students again so that they can go back into the school system, and we can help them deal with some of the shock and horror that they've gone through.

I had a really profound moment in my life a few years ago, and believe it or not, I was door-knocking in a constituency inside Calgary. We were asked to go out with some children from AARC; that was the rehab for kids that were involved in drugs and street prostitution as well. I met this marvelous young 14-year-old girl who had been on the streets for two years and had now been 11 months in this program. She had been in the program long enough to be a mentor for another young person that was coming off of drugs and off of the street.

I don't think I've ever met anybody that had a bigger impact on me in such a short period of time as this very young girl. Nothing would make me happier than to think that we could prevent more young girls like this from ever being exposed and subjected to the horrific things that she was involved with. What a wonderful child that could come through that and be such a totally cool person to talk to. We were soaking wet door-knocking in the snow for two and a half hours, and it was just the best two hours of my life from a learning point of view. I'm constantly amazed at what children get exposed to but how there are other great people in society that can help them deal with those issues later and come away a stronger, better human being and somebody that's willing to not only help themselves but indeed try to help other people, which she was doing at such an incredibly young age.

I have great empathy for what you're trying to do. I'm not prepared to vote against your bill, again, because of the harassment that I got after the last time, Member for Calgary-Buffalo, but I want you to know that I don't think it's the appropriate thing to do. I think that you need to deal with prostitution on a whole other level. I really believe that we've got to stop pretending that we can beat this out of society, and maybe we need to start dealing with it on the basis that it needs to be cleaned up. It needs to be controlled. At least anybody that's involved in it needs to be health tested, and they should bloody well be paying taxes. I just think it is time to grow up and deal with it on a whole other level, but we're not there today.

I want to thank you for the opportunity to speak on this. I hope that anybody that does hear this leaves the little kids alone. I think that it's an adult issue, and we need to be able to deal with it as adults, for adults, by adults but not when it comes to messing with kids.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank all the members that spoke this afternoon and as well the last two speakers, the hon. Member for Wainwright and, lastly, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, for their comments.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to just address a couple of things that were brought up in this afternoon's debate. One was regarding the issue of seizing vehicles and the time allotted to seize vehicles, when that might happen. One issue that I want to raise just as a reminder is that, again, these actions or the ability to seize a vehicle would only rest with the police when in fact an undercover operator posing as a prostitute was in communication with a sex trade offender. I want to just explain that this wouldn't occur while somebody was driving down the street asking for directions. There would in fact have to be communication for the purpose of having sex for money with an undercover operator.

The policy regarding seizing of vehicles, what they're going to be doing. Those are issues that have to be dealt with by the policing community. The policing agencies in the province will have to make their policy regarding how they'll be seizing the vehicles, where they'll be towed, where they'll remain in a lockup facility but as well ensuring that the ability to release that vehicle to the registered owner or person authorized by the registered owner, which is included in our bill, would be there for them.

One of the other issues that was brought up, Mr. Chairman, was: why doesn't the media provide the names of convicted johns? The media is provided with the names. I know for a fact that the Calgary Police Service provides the names of convicted johns, of their offence and their penalty. That is provided by fax to all the media outlets in Calgary. It's the media that has made the decision to not publish that in the paper. So I wanted to advise the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow that that has been done and is being done. It's the media that isn't publishing it.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, I just want to review the highlights again of Bill 206. This bill will create safer and healthier communities for children and families. It assists young females and males in prostitution, removing them from the street through the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. As well, it reduces sexual assaults and physical abuse of women and children trapped in a world of drug and alcohol abuse. It provides a deterrent that is strong enough to make the offender think of his actions and the criminal offence he's about to commit. It provides an alternative measures program to educate sex trade offenders of the realities of the sex trade industry. It provides the community with an opportunity for offenders to help clean up the very community they've committed the criminal offence in.

It provides for the release of a vehicle if the seizure created a financial hardship to a family including the mom or a child. It provides a strong and harsh deterrent in the seizure of one's motor vehicle on second or subsequent offences. It provides the policing community with another tool of enforcement. It provides community associations or leagues with the ability to partner with the police and the Crown prosecutor's office in removing the sex trade/drug industry from their communities. Again, it creates safer and healthier communities for our children and families to live and reside in.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the question now be called.

Bill 208
Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users)
Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move second reading of Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003.

It gives me great pleasure to rise in the Assembly today and sponsor and begin the discussions and debate on Bill 208. The intent of Bill 208 is to reduce the current level of liability that landowners and occupiers owe to visitors on their property. This bill reduces the burden, as recreational users would be treated the same as trespassers pertaining to liability. The variety of rural lands which would be affected by this bill include agricultural land, deeded land, leased land, community pastures, and designated recreational trails. Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 removes the present common duty of care given to recreational users on the previously stated types of land. However, I must stress that occupiers and landowners are still and should be held liable if they display willful or reckless conduct in their course of action towards visitors.

The Occupiers' Liability Act currently in place in Alberta leaves an occupier liable for injuries or damages that are sustained by visitors while on that property. It is the liability factor which cautions many private landowners to refuse access to visitors onto their lands for recreation purposes. Liability is a risk that landowners take when permitting visitors onto their land.

Mr. Speaker, I have personal experience regarding the issue related to this bill which I feel will highlight circumstances which could occur. I had a hired man that worked for me on the farm for approximately four years, and one fall he was cultivating the field as per my request and pulled up some rocks in the process. He then was assigned to go back to the field with a rock picker and remove all the stones that had surfaced. However, inadvertently he left one of the large rocks behind and never went back to remove it. During the winter the same individual asked if he could snowmobile on my property. He had just bought a new snowmobile and was very anxious to try it out in the open field. Well, most naturally, I said that it was okay. I knew him well, I knew he was familiar with the field, and I believed he would respect the property. While this man was cruising across the field, he encountered the rock he left behind a few months previous. The individual not only destroyed his machine but, worse, got hurt.

Following the accident, this employee contemplated holding me liable. However, he was the one operating the snowmobile at excessive speeds and without total awareness of his environment. He hit the rock, which he was aware of in the first place, one that he neglected to remove. I was left solely liable because it is my land and I had given him permission.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to recreational users on their property, landowners are concerned about liability. A lawsuit could mean that rural Albertans could lose everything they have worked so hard to achieve and acquire. I don't think anyone in this House could blame them for not wanting to take that risk. The Occupiers' Liability Act, which was established in 1973, outlines the liability relations between landowners, trespassers, and visitors as well as the provisions for lawful entrants and trespassers. An occupier or owner of land under the legislation must provide a duty of care to visitors. It is defined in section 5 of the act as taking care as in all the circumstances of the case is reasonable to see that the visitor will be reasonably safe in using the premises for the purposes for which [he] is invited or permitted by the occupier to be there or is permitted by law to be there.

To put it more simply, the common duty of care can be described as safety precautions that a reasonable person would provide to a visitor. Under this duty each and every visitor would be granted the assurance that precautions have been taken to ensure that recreational users are safe from harm and completely knowledgeable about the property he is about to enter.

Mr. Speaker, I must stress that it is extremely difficult to isolate all potential dangers, because what may appear to be completely normal farming practice may be construed as negligence to others. Some farmers store their cultivators in the field over the winter. Many acreage owners have barbed-wire fences on their properties. Some farmers have dugouts in the pastures as a water source for their cattle herd. A normal procedure or even a natural alteration within a farming or acreage operation may seem to be an obstacle for somebody else.

The common duty of care is definitely favourable to the recreational user because it places no burden of responsibility on them if they get injured. However, let me be clear. This bill does not disregard landowner and occupier liability. If passed, liability will be reduced to the same level granted to trespassers. If an owner or an occupier exhibits willful or reckless conduct towards a recreational user, they are still liable. Bill 208 will amend the current legislation by removing the common duty of care provision and will provide property owners and occupiers the ease of opening their lands to recreational visitors without worry of potential lawsuits.

Individuals using lands for recreational pursuits and the liability that is owed to them have created a challenge for communities' cohesiveness. This has resulted in the retreat in granting land entry. However, Bill 208 will protect landowners and give them the option without current potential risk.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend a few moments noting what has happened in other jurisdictions in Canada with regard to the occupier and landowner liability. Some provinces have similar legislation to Alberta, but they differ in that they include stipulation for recreational users. Ontario contains a section in their Occupiers' Liability Act which provides occupiers with reduced liability towards recreational users and their activities. The user assumes all risks when entering the property if provisions are met.

Manitoba includes a provision in their Occupiers' Liability Act specific to off-road vehicles and their relation to duty of care. In British Columbia occupiers and owners that allow individuals on their property for recreational purposes are not liable. The user assumes the risk while on the premises if specific conditions are met.

In Saskatchewan liability is governed by two acts outlining provisions for hunters and snowmobilers. The Wildlife Act outlines that landowners do not owe duty of care to hunters. However, they can display willful and reckless actions. The Snowmobile Act limits the liability of landowners and the occupier from injuries, loss, or damage suffered by an owner or occupier. They cannot be negligent in their conduct.

Other provinces have recognized the need to incorporate legislation to govern the liability of recreational users. A much-needed initiative in Alberta, Bill 208 will amend the Occupiers' Liability Act, shifting responsibility and liability to the recreational user for their own actions.

Mr. Speaker, most landowners and occupiers want to allow recreational users on their land, but they have reservations, usually due to liability. With the passage of Bill 208, there is an opportunity to make prescribed rural Alberta lands more readily available to welcome visitors. Bill 208 is a much-needed initiative in this province that would provide some protection to the landowner or occupier. This bill does not force anyone to admit recreational users onto their property, but it does give them the choice without assuming all of the risks. It allows the option of opening up the land without worrying about being sued.

I look forward to the discussion and debate as well as all the points raised by my hon. colleagues on this matter. I encourage all of the members of this House, whether you are from a rural riding or an urban constituency, to weigh the merits of this bill when you vote on it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for your time and indulgence.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to offer some of my comments with regard to Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003. Before I begin, I would like to commend my colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul for bringing forward such an important piece of legislation, which I believe will be of great benefit to our rural communities.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 addresses an issue that has been on the minds of many Albertans, especially those living in rural Alberta. This concerns the fact that the Occupiers' Liability Act in its current form does not reflect some of the realities for landowners and occupiers in rural Alberta. As my colleague has already mentioned, the act places the burden of responsibility on the landowners, leaseholders, and occupiers for the actions undertaken by recreational users. More specifically, under the present provisions of the act the landowners, leaseholders, and occupiers are liable for any injuries sustained by those individuals who have been granted permission to use their property.

The trouble with this aspect of the Occupiers' Liability Act is that it is counterproductive and unfair to assume that the farmers, ranchers, and acreage owners should assume all the responsibilities for injuries incurred by recreational users. The reason why I say this is because many farmers are quite content to allow other Albertans to use their land for recreational and enjoyment purposes.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that Alberta is a large and beautiful province, and her landscape and environment are ideally suited to those who lead active lifestyles and who appreciate the outdoors. The natural wonders of our province are some of the main reasons why so many people from other parts of Canada and the world choose Alberta as their tourism destination. Our farmers and landowners recognize this outstanding quality and therefore are quite willing to permit recreational visitors to enjoy their property as long as they're careful and not reckless in their conduct. However, what makes many farmers and ranchers very nervous is that under the Occupiers' Liability Act, if one of those individuals is injured while on their property, the farmer is left liable for the injury suffered by that individual.

The trouble with this aspect of the act is that it is out of touch with the present-day reality. I say this because many of our landowners have large properties which they cannot monitor at all times of the day and night. It is simply impossible for them to know exactly what is happening on their land at all times, and it is unreasonable to expect them to be aware of all the potential hazards which could lead to an injury of another individual.

To illustrate my point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to use an example of a farmer who has dug a small, narrow ditch on his property for irrigation purposes. For whatever reason he or she was unable to cover the ditch, and in the meantime winter arrives and the ditch is covered in snow. If a recreational user who the farmer allowed onto the property falls into the ditch and breaks his leg, the farmer is automatically liable for the injury suffered by this individual. The issue at stake here is: should the farmer be liable for this injury? If the farmer dug the ditch for the intent to injure another person, then it is reasonable to assume that he or she would be liable, but in this case the farmer was simply undertaking a utility project which did not get completed before winter. Should the farmer be liable in this case or in other similar instances? I think not.

The end result of the current provisions of the Occupiers' Liability Act is that the farmers and ranchers are becoming extremely hesitant to allow recreational visitors onto their property for fear of a potential lawsuit if an injury or possibly death were to occur. This state of affairs, Mr. Speaker, hurts not only our province's community spirit in the sense that everyone is free to enjoy Alberta's natural landscape, but it also creates an atmosphere which discourages tourists and other visitors from coming to Alberta.

I believe that all of my colleagues can clearly see that the Occupiers' Liability Act has to be amended to reflect the present-day realities. I believe that Bill 208 will remedy the shortcomings of the Occupiers' Liability Act by shifting the burden of responsibility from the farmers, landowners, operators, and leaseholders toward recreational users and visitors.

Bill 208 will accomplish this task, Mr. Speaker, by making owners and occupiers liable only if they knowingly undertake reckless actions and measures that could lead to injury and death of another individual. In this case, the amount of liability owed to recreational users will be dropped to the same level as that of trespassers. I believe that amending the Occupiers' Liability Act is in the interests of both farmers and recreational users, because by reducing the burden of responsibility, the farmer would be more inclined to allow the recreational user access to his land.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, it is in no one's interest to see the situation where the farmers and ranchers are not allowing recreational users on their property for fear of being sued for possible injuries. Furthermore, Bill 208 will not only reduce the likelihood of frivolous lawsuits by individuals who take advantage of the current provisions of the Occupiers' Liability Act, but it will also make recreational visitors more reasonable in their actions while present on somebody else's land. Quite simply, Bill 208 promotes responsibility and safety awareness among the recreational users because it takes away their right to sue if they are negligent in their conduct.

It is very important, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 208 address the issue of liability not only with regard to agricultural lands but also regarding deeded lands, leased lands, recreational lands such as golf courses when not open to playing, vacant or undeveloped premises, and forested and wilderness premises. In my constituency there are many individuals who own or lease what is referred to as recreational land. Some of these plots of land have trails which are used by people operating snowmobiles and ATVs. The problem with some of these vehicles is that they are relatively fast, and depending on the driver, they can be very dangerous and even lethal. Every year we hear of countless accidents involving snowmobilers, many of whom operate these vehicles with undue care. If one of those individuals were to hit something like a protruding rock while snowmobiling on a trail located on private or public lands, the owner or the occupier of this property would be liable for the damages and injuries incurred by this individual.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for landowners to be aware and keep track of all potential hazards on their property. Therefore, I believe that it is unreasonable and unfair to hold landowners and occupiers responsible for injuries suffered by recreational users unless these hazards were put out purposely by the landowners with the intent to injure another person. In this case, Bill 208 will remedy the liability problem by placing the onus on recreational users such as snowmobilers and ATV operators to be more responsible for their actions and more careful when they are traveling on somebody else's property. If it is established that the landowners are being reckless or negligent in their conduct towards a recreational visitor, then they will be prosecuted accordingly.

Apart from addressing the issues of liability, Bill 208 will also resolve a legislative matter which until the introduction of Bill 16 has been in limbo for almost four years. In May of 1999, Mr. Speaker, this government passed Bill 31, the Agricultural Disposition Statutes Amendment Act. As many of my colleagues know, this act was never proclaimed, and some of the requirements of this act never benefited the people of Alberta. The reason I mention Bill 31 is because at that time I was involved in the regulatory process of the bill, and I was keenly aware of some of the great benefits that this piece of legislation would have for our province. One of those benefits is directly echoed by Bill 208, more specifically the aspect dealing with the issues of liability. Section 11.1 of Bill 31 stipulated that leaseholders would be liable for injuries suffered by recreational users only if the injuries resulted from the occupiers' willful or reckless conduct.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 closely resembles section 11.1 of Bill 31 with the exception that while section 11.1 of the bill deals specifically with matters concerning leased lands, Bill 208 addresses the liability issues concerning private and leased lands. The main problem with Bill 31 is that it was never proclaimed into law, and as a result the outdated aspects of the occupiers' liability continues to be unresolved. Bill 208 serves to accomplish at least one of those goals outlined in Bill 31 by focusing primarily on issues of liability. I urge all members to support Bill 208.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003. Before I explain why I support this bill, I would like to commend the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul for bringing forward this important piece of legislation. As a member that represents rural Albertans as well as urban Albertans the issue of recreational land use is very dear to me and my constituents. Therefore, I'm not only supporting this bill because I believe it's the right thing to do but also because many of my constituents have expressed support for Bill 208.

Alberta is a province that is founded on the fundamentals of strong community roots and neighbourly cohesion. Bill 208, by relieving landowners of the burden of liability to recreational users, would greatly increase these fundamentals of Alberta society. When a landowner refuses permission to a recreational user to enter the land because of the fear of liability of any possible accidents, the basic fibres of our open and gracious culture are eroded. Fears should not overcome a landowner every time he or she is contacted by a recreational user. Albertans should want to share the beautiful landscape with their fellow citizens.

However, Mr. Speaker, in this day and age when people are filing a countless number of frivolous lawsuits and passing responsibility of their actions on – and I say this very loosely – to those legally responsible, it is time as elected officials to protect those individuals who play an integral part in maintaining our core values. Individual responsibility is a quality that is declining in today's society. It's disheartening to watch individuals pass responsibility from themselves to other citizens or the government. Alberta is a province that prides herself on strong individuals who take responsibility for their actions. I strongly feel that Bill 208 will help restore this core belief that founded this great province.

Alberta is a province that endorses and supports actions of entrepreneurship, free spiritedness, and risk taking. However, when these actions are taken, our culture in Alberta reciprocally feels that the onus is on the individual to take full responsibility for his or her actions. Many of our government social programs are designed to help Albertans be less dependent and make individuals take responsibility for their lives. The policies and philosophy of this government for a number of years have been that individuals are given the utmost freedom to develop their lives, and with that freedom a duty of responsibility must be taken. Albertans over the years have accepted this philosophy, and our outgoing, independent-minded spirit is revered across the country. Bill 208 matches our already existing policies and cultural mind-set. Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 will not only help restore Alberta's community spirit; it will help increase and build neighbourly relationships and leave landowners without the sense of fear and reservation that comes every time requests by recreational users are made.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to take this opportunity to switch gears a little bit and discuss what other provinces are currently doing in the area of occupiers' liability. I believe it's important to look at other jurisdictions to see what works and how we can adjust our own legislation. It's interesting to note and, frankly, a little disheartening to know that British Columbia, Ontario, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and Saskatchewan all relieve landowners of liability of damages incurred by recreational users who are granted permission to use land. All of these provinces still make landowners responsible for not creating dangerous environments with the intent to do harm to the recreational user or damage to their property. This is an important part of our own legislation, and I'm pleased that it is remaining constant in Bill 208.

In Saskatchewan there is legislation governing the liability of occupiers to hunters and to snowmobilers. The Wildlife Act states that an occupier of land owes no duty of care to a person who is hunting on the land. The Snowmobile Act has a substantial section limiting the liability of landowners, the Crown, any minister of the Crown or any employee, officer, or agent of any of them for any injury, loss, or damage suffered as a result of, arising out of, or stemming from a person using or being towed by a snowmobile. I'm not suggesting that Albertans need different legislation for each type of recreation occurring on private land. However, I do believe it's important to point out that some provinces have taken direct action to protect landowners, and it's time that we do the same.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a province that prides herself on openness, community spirit, and individual responsibility. Bill 208 addresses and builds on all three of these core fundamentals. This legislation is logical and rational and is in the best interests of all Albertans. Therefore, I strongly support and urge all of my colleagues here to support Bill 208.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to see this bill presented to the Legislature, especially considering the message of personal responsibility that it sends to Albertans who use the lands of others for their recreational pursuits.

The bill makes a key change to the way that we look at occupiers' liability for recreational land users in the province. The bill requires that for rural lands, such as agriculture lands, vacant or undeveloped lands, forested or wildmess lands, golf courses after hours, utility rights-of-way, and recreational trails, recreational users be treated the same as trespassers as far as liability is concerned.

Now, as the law currently stands, if a recreational user who is on lands either with expressed or implicit permission injures himself, such as in the story from the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, then the liability more often than not falls to the landowner. The landowner is thus responsible for the safe activity of recreational visitors on his or her land, which – let's face it, Mr. Speaker – is near impossible. So to me this seems unfair. The current law fits into a whole host of namby-pamby sorts of legislation where we assume that people cannot take care of themselves and we assume that if someone hurts himself or gets himself in trouble, then it must be somebody else's fault.

Now, I don't think this makes any sense, Mr. Speaker, especially not in Alberta. Alberta is a province where we say to our youth: if you want to be successful, you have every opportunity to take the bull by the horns and run with it; you have every opportunity to make good choices which will help you to earn your keep. But we also say: if you screw up or if you make a bad choice, well, then, you have to live with it and, in fact, you better fix it and you better get yourself back on the right track. As parents we tell our children – and we live by the same motto – that if they are going to use their freedom wisely, then they better have a sense of responsibility. They better learn how to take care of themselves.

Now, these messages make sense, Mr. Speaker. They provide the foundation for the life of an individual who takes his actions and responsibilities seriously. However, juxtaposed against this message are laws like the one Bill 208 proposes to change, wherein we tell individuals that they are not responsible for the decisions they make or for the harm they bring on themselves. Someone has to be liable though; right? And if it isn't the recreational user, then who else could it be? Well, of course, it's that poor landowner or occupier. Again, I fail to see the logic of this. Did the landowner implore the recreational visitor to use his land? No. In most cases the visitor requests permission to access the land. As this is the case regardless of whether or not someone has received permission to be on another person's land, that person ought to be held responsible for any of their actions, be they good or bad or whether they affect himself or the land.

This is why Bill 208 makes so much sense to me. It asserts that unless someone has paid for the use of land, the person assumes a certain amount of risk when they enter onto the property. Now, it would be one thing if we were talking about commercial recreational areas in which business owners make a profit from people who enter their land. Those owners do have the responsibility to keep their land free of debris and big rocks and hazards for paid recreational users. However, we're not talking about commercial recreational lands. What we are talking about is ordinary Albertans who graciously allow others to hunt or fish or go ATVing or hiking on their lands.

Now, if someone wants to engage in recreational activities on someone else's property, then he should do so at his own risk, but the landowner shouldn't be penalized for letting someone else on their land if that person happens to get injured or if their ATV is damaged or whatever. In a sense, then, the principle of buyer beware holds. Although we're not talking about commercial transactions, we are talking about user beware. So if you are going to enter someone else's property, you've got to assume that they will be using it for their own purposes and therefore might be altering the landscape or might have their own machinery on the land. You've also got to assume that naturally occurring contours of the land may be hidden by snow or water or foliage or whatever, and if you're using this land, you've got to be aware of all of these things. If you injure yourself or damage your ATV or your snowmobile, well, then, it's your own fault, not the fault of the man or the woman who was nice enough to let you access the land in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, this goes to a larger point. It isn't as though landowners are out there pleading with people to come on to their land. I don't know of too many individuals who would want a whole bunch of people walking or riding over their land. However, many Albertans do let others use their property because it's the nice thing to do and because they want to be good neighbours and fellow Alberta citizens. Really, I mean, many Albertans are fine with others using their land. They only ask that the people who do use it treat the land with care and respect.

What this current law does is makes Albertans think twice about letting people on to their land. There are a countless number of horror stories about landowners who are held liable because another injured himself while using the owner's or occupier's land. We almost heard one today. What the status quo is doing is causing Albertan landowners or occupiers to just say no when someone requests to use their land, and who can blame them? As a legislator I don't want to see more fences up around a person's land. I want to see Albertans living together in a manner that is respectful and responsible, and I want to see goodwill between neighbours, owners, and recreational land users. On this point I want people to take care of their land. It's incumbent upon landowners or occupiers to ensure that they practise due diligence on their land, and if they're going to allow others to use their land, then, yes, they ought to ensure that they take care to either warn the users of any trouble spots or take care of these spots to a certain extent before allowing others to access the land. However, I also want recreational land users to recognize that every Albertan has the right to do what they please with their rural lands, and it is the recreational user's responsibility to take that into consideration when accessing another's land.

Mr. Speaker, I think most Albertans do take both sides of this equation into consideration. When they step on to another's property, they understand the risk, but more importantly they understand the privilege that they are granted in being able to use someone else's land, and they are truly thankful for the opportunity. However, there are some who aren't. There are some who are careless with the land and with themselves, and these people are likely to injure themselves. When this happens and they turn around and sue a landowner, they undermine the goodwill that generally exists between landowners and recreational users. It's unfortunate that this happens. However, to ensure that it does not continue to occur, we must make the changes that are set out in Bill 208. If we don't make these changes, problems with the current legislation will continue.

A lot of key questions are raised with the law as it is beyond the ones I've already noted. For example, is the landowner responsible to keep his land in top-notch condition all of the time just in case someone wants to use it? If we keep things status quo, then he is responsible, unless he wants to act like scrooge and keep everyone off his property. Does the landowner have the responsibility to go out and mark every gopher hole or ditch on his land, or can he assume that users will be mindful? These may seem like somewhat silly questions, but they are questions which are legitimately asked by landowners under the current legislation.

The current legislation needs to be changed, Mr. Speaker, and it needs to be changed in the manner proposed in Bill 208. So I ask all members to support this legislation so that we can bring some more common sense to the Occupiers' Liability Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and join debate on Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. I would like to begin by thanking the hon. member for introducing this amendment that would allow the Occupiers' Liability Act to better reflect the issues we are and will be dealing with in the 21st century. The passing of this legislation would lead to landowners and occupiers opening up their land and making it more accessible for recreational users. By reducing landowner liability, you reduce the fear that landowners have when it comes to allowing public use of the land for recreational purposes.

There is a growing interest in outdoor recreational activities. Our provincial and national parks are packed, but not everyone is able to or interested in traveling to a park just to enjoy Alberta's great outdoors. Some users also prefer to conduct their recreational activities in a more private or secluded environment. Alberta Health and Wellness is currently promoting an active, healthy lifestyle for all Albertans through its Healthy U campaign. The campaign encourages all Albertans to participate in activities of stress endurance, strength, and flexibility, while deterring activities that encourage sitting for extended periods of time. It is my opinion that Bill 208 complements the Healthy U campaign quite well in that it provides security for landowners who allow individuals to use their land for the purpose of enjoying an active, healthy lifestyle. Those activities can include horseback riding, snowmobiling, hiking, cross-country skiing, camping, biking. I could list numerous activities that can be enjoyed in the great outdoors of our wonderful province.

My point is that many Albertans don't always want to be constricted to urban dwellings when participating in their favourite healthy-living activities. I'm fairly certain that most Albertans would prefer to conduct their recreational pursuits while enjoying the beauty and fresh, crisp air of Alberta's rural environment, somewhat of an escape from the urban drylands they dwell in. Also, Mr. Speaker, as a fast-food nation much like our friends to the south it would seem that we are basing our lives on drive-through family values and couch-potato games.

The trend, in my opinion, seems to be heading toward somewhat of a not-me attitude when it comes to taking responsibility for our own actions. It would seem that society is basing its reasoning on lawsuits such as too-hot coffee being served at restaurants and pleading ignorance to the effects of an overwhelming number of hamburgers per day. My point is that there seems to be a very contagious attitude brewing that promotes blaming others for one's own indiscretion. Mr. Speaker, the actions that a person takes are their own. Should that person feel that someone else or something else somehow forced their hand to commit a reprehensible action or forced their mind to think a reprehensible thought, that is when one has to seriously sit back, take a deep breath, and rethink a few things.

I'm not going to stand here and rant for 15 minutes about taking responsibility for one's actions, but I'm going to stress a very critical position. Bill 208 promotes the view that it is not the landowner's concern to post signs throughout his or her land that warn public users about gopher holes, rocks, dirt mounds, or fence lines. All appropriate land issues including possible hazards are hopefully discussed and taken note of by the user before use of the land commences. When was the last time anyone went running wild, arms flailing, in a dark room when they were uncertain of what obstacles or obstructions awaited them? That is exactly what is happening now.

It is important to remember, however, that this is a two-way street. The users as well as the landowners and occupiers need to take responsibility when it comes to land use. The user needs to be certain, when asking permission to use the land, that all hazards and possible danger zones are pointed out to ensure safety, and the landowner needs to be sure to pass on all critical safety information about the premises to the user. Individuals may be uncertain of the land but still ride their snowmobiles, bikes, or participate in any other healthy lifestyle activity on the land. However, when there is an accident, it should not automatically be assumed that the landowner or occupier is at fault because it is his or her property. Mr. Speaker, dollars for doughnuts, had the individual been careful and courteous to the land he or she was using, the occurrences of accidents would decrease dramatically.

To tie these two points together, it is absolutely necessary to promote a healthy, active lifestyle, but, at the same time, if we are going to promote an increase in the number of individuals using the land, whether that land is public or private, with the landowners' or lessees' permission, the individuals using that land need to take responsibility for their actions on the premises.

Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of changes in our world since 1973. Those changes include the way society treats liability issues. After all, no one wants to be at fault for anything with a negative outcome. I'm sure that in 1973 when this act was first proclaimed, it was up to the landowner or occupier and user to decide who was at fault for the accident, and more often than not the guilty party stepped forward and took responsibility for the action. Now, in 2003, I see more lawyers stepping forward to say that the individuals they represent had nothing to do with the accident, stating that it was the other party's responsibility.

Picture this. Joe is driving his pickup truck down the back roads of Alberta. In the distance peacefully grazing in the tall grass is the buck of Joe's dreams. He has been waiting for this moment his entire life. The land that the buck is grazing on is Bob's. Therefore, Joe proceeds to Bob's residence to ask permission to hunt on his property. Bob grants Joe permission to use the land and lets him know that there are no unusual hazards or obstacles on the premises. Joe thanks Bob and proceeds across the grazing ground in the hope of finding the buck of his dreams still grazing along the tree line. All of a sudden, Joe, not paying attention where he was walking, steps in an unmarked gopher hole, subsequently twisting his ankle, tripping, and falling onto his gun. As a consequence of the fall Joe shoots himself in the leg. I ask the Assembly: who is at fault? With the legislation as it is, Bob would be at fault, even though he never tripped Joe or pulled the trigger.

I could stand here for hours and provide examples of the most obscene incidents in which a landowner or occupier would be held responsible for the reckless endangerment of an irresponsible land user. Some may argue that the answer is to simply not allow anyone onto your land. I'm sure that most landowners would agree that accidents can happen to anyone, whether it be a friend, neighbour, or stranger. You can't predict these incidents, only do our best to protect the innocent. We all know that accidents can happen. All we are trying to do is promote a system in which the landowner is not held responsible for the negligence and carelessness of others. However, the landowner or occupier should still be held responsible for his negligence or reckless conduct.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that this is the strongest argument for an amendment to the Occupiers' Liability Act. However, previous attempts at similar legislation have been made in the past, and there is an unproclaimed amendment from 1999 waiting in the wings. This act needs to be brought up to date to better reflect the views of Albertans. I'm certain that the majority of Albertans believe in taking responsibility for their actions. Therefore, I find Bill 208 necessary legislation and fully support it. I would also like to commend the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul on his resilience on the issue and his push to have a 30-year-old act brought up to date to reflect this century.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 208 at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that in view of the hour we now call it 5:30 and reconvene at 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:26 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 12, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/05/12

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated. Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a privilege and an honour to introduce my son, Brayden Maebry Masyk, to the Legislature. I've talked him into coming out and watching a little bit of debate and democracy at its best. Braden has already risen, but I'd like him to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Full-service Gasoline Stations

510. Mr. Masyk moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation requiring every gasoline service station in Alberta to have at least one full-service bay to improve accessibility for the disabled and the elderly.

[Debate adjourned May 5: Mr. Maskell speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to continue what I had started last Monday. To put it quite simply, Motion 510 deals with matters of fairness and safety. As has already been stated, the purpose of Motion 510 is to enact legislation that would require all gas stations in Alberta "to have at least one full-service bay to improve accessibility for the disabled and the elderly."

Mr. Speaker, while our province has one of the youngest populations in Canada, Alberta is experiencing an aging trend much like the rest of the country. The number and proportion of seniors in Alberta have increased steadily since the mid-1980s, and currently about 303,000, or 10 percent of Albertans, are 65 years of age and older. By 2026 it is predicted that Alberta seniors will more than double to 750,000, or about 20 percent of all Albertans. I guess I won't be worrying about gasoline for my car in 2026. However, as our population ages, as we age, two things should come to the forefront of our attention: fairness and preparedness. We need to ascertain that our society creates equal access for all our citizens and that we take steps to be ready for when circumstances change. No one here, I am sure, needs a reminder that when it comes to aging, there are no exceptions. We will all get there in one way or another.

How we age is, of course, something that will vary from person to person. We all know, I am sure, one or two senior citizens who don't look anything like senior citizens. In spite of their advanced age they both look and behave as if they were much more useful than ourselves. Others show the signs of age quite clearly. This is not necessarily a bad thing, and I'm certainly not speaking in a pejorative manner here. However, the fact remains that as we age and our bodies show the signs of aging, we may need a little more time to complete tasks or we may need assistance where previously we needed none. This is a natural progression, like it or not.

To assist our seniors, then, we have come to view it as a societal responsibility to remove barriers that prevent senior citizens from participating as actively and as fully in society as they once were able to. Contemporary society is far more sensitive to the impediments and barriers that the aging and the disabled may face on a daily basis than was the case, say, 50 years ago or even 25 years ago. We see the signs of this increasing awareness throughout society. Buses, sidewalks, and doorways are but three examples of how everyday life has been made more conducive to the needs of the aging and the disabled. This I think is good, and I'm not surprised that Alberta Seniors supports a barrier-free society too. After all, that would seem to be one of the foremost reasons why we have a Ministry of Seniors; would it not? Supporting a barrier-free society would certainly be in harmony with the ministry's vision, which advocates "a vibrant province where seniors and other Albertans live with dignity and experience the best possible well-being and independence."

Mr. Speaker, imagine my surprise when I heard that there are some who oppose Motion 510 on the grounds that, and I quote once more: it is inappropriate for the government to interfere with business decisions. In general, I would agree that we should let free enterprise be just that: free. Government need not and should not take too active a role in how business is done. As it has been said before, government has no business being in business. This, however, does not mean that government should never under any circumstances play a part in how business is conducted. Quite obviously, this is not how things are done now even in our own province. Several examples of instances or situations where government does regulate and thereby interferes with business decisions come to mind: the sale of liquor, Alberta registries, and a variety of smoking regulations. These are but three examples of government regulations that do interfere with business decisions. Put differently, we have established certain parameters within which businesses can operate within our province. Therefore, I am not particularly impressed with the idea that Motion 510 should be rejected because it interferes with business decisions.

It has certainly been done before mainly because the greater public good has stood to benefit from the implementation of regulations of some kind or other. What does impress me and what guides me to support Motion 510 is that it would help the Alberta government meet the recommendations put forward by the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities set out by the Alberta disability strategy. Of the three high-priority ADS recommendations that apply to Motion 510, one stands out.

A commitment should be made to . . . universal accessibility and a process put in place to remove physical barriers from public spaces so that all Albertans can fully participate in all community, employment and business activities.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that Motion 510 presents us with a wonderful opportunity to translate the ADS recommendations into direct action.

What's more, I think that while any new regulation will require an adjustment on the part of those affected by it, this is not necessarily a bad thing. I see opportunities here for everyone involved. Indeed there may be some costs involved, but please note the word "may" as these costs are by no means a foregone conclusion. I think there is a distinct possibility that mandating that all gas stations maintain at least one full-service pump will actually allow gas station operators to tap into a new market segment. As advances in technology have been made, the very concept of operating a motor vehicle has ceased being wishful thinking for many aging, disabled Albertans. Instead, it is now something that thanks to science and innovation is within the realm of possibility. Motion 510, therefore, is very timely as it allows us to take a very important step toward making driving more accessible for persons with disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, one of the cornerstones of our society is equality for all citizens regardless of their race, gender, creed, background, or abilities. In theory this is true in Alberta as well as throughout Canada. In practice, however, we know that inequalities persist in some areas and that as a result our society is not always as fair as we would like it to be. In the case of the disabled, equality does not exist for Alberta's half million disabled. They cannot go everywhere in the province and expect to always have ready access to buildings, offices, transportation, or public facilities. Similarly, many of our senior citizens, while not disabled, would benefit from assistance in situations where mobility and dexterity are necessary. While voluntary initiatives are always welcome, we cannot expect that they will be made. A case in point: if we could reasonably be assured that voluntary efforts would always be made, we would not be here tonight debating the merits of Motion 510.

At the present time, then, the services provided by the private sector are not regulated under any legislation to meet the needs of the disabled or elderly. Mr. Speaker, with this in mind, it would behoove us all to pass Motion 510. To think that the problems will solve themselves would be unwise, and Motion 510 will I believe allow us to take a significant step forward.

I therefore urge all members of this House to join me in supporting it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just rise for a few brief moments to speak to Motion 510, which reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation requiring every gasoline service station in Alberta to have at least one full-service bay to improve accessibility for the disabled and the elderly.

I have been listening to some of the debate on this issue, and as well I serve as critic for persons with developmental disabilities boards, and I am inclined to support this motion. I think that it is a step in the right direction for helping people with disabilities to remain independent, and I note, of course, that there are many causes for disabilities. The motion specifically talks about the disabled and the elderly, and it's a danger to assume that the two always overlap. There are many disabled younger people, and there are many fully able-bodied older people.

Regardless, anybody who needs help in putting gas in their car or needs the proper facilities for putting gas in their car should be provided with those facilities, and I don't think it's unreasonable to ask the service station industry to be required to provide at least one set of those facilities at each service station. Now, undoubtedly we would hear a lot of complaining from the industry about the costs of this particular service, but I think that's just par for the course when we move forward on these kinds of issues. For society as a whole if this kind of a service allowed people to remain independent longer or, for example, allowed disabled people to obtain and operate a car so that they could keep a job or do their shopping, then I think it would be a huge step forward for our society as a whole.

It seems to me like certainly a well-intentioned motion, one that has many merits, one that will make our society a more fair, accessible society, one that supports the independence of individuals. So I for one will be supporting Motion 510, and I'm pleased to be on the record saying so.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the Assembly this evening to participate in the discussion and debate on Motion 510, which calls on the private sector to enhance gasoline service stations. I would like to first of all thank the Member for Edmonton-Norwood, to commend him for all his work on this initiative.

This motion certainly for me raises some important concerns regarding service accessibility and equality for Albertans. Motion 510 is an important initiative because it aims to improve accessibility for the disabled and the elderly. Mr. Speaker, it has become apparent that fewer and fewer gasoline service stations have full-service pumps and that most drivers are now used to certainly pumping their own gas and certainly prefer it that way, but this can be a problem for the seniors and persons with disabilities. This motion urges the government to implement legislation that would require all gasoline service stations across the province to have at least one full-service bay. This motion could possibly shield the elderly and disabled from the inconvenience and the difficulty of having to pump their own gas when their physical limitations make the task very awkward and probably in many cases very painful. I would venture to say that for some it may ultimately limit their transportation possibilities. With a declining younger population to act as caregivers in the future, more seniors will need to be able to drive themselves to doctors appointments, shopping, and social events and be able to maintain their independence as long as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the underlying intent of this motion is to instill greater equality for elderly and disabled individuals in Alberta by enhancing their accessibility to important, necessary services. I think that with the government of Alberta there is no doubt that we're committed to supporting those living with disabilities. We've shown that support through a wide array of different programs and initiatives. These programs enable those with disabilities to live, work, and participate in their communities. However, we should do all we can to make certain that these individuals have access to as many essential services as possible that would certainly enhance their equality, their independence, and thus quality of life.

I have to at this time share with you an incident of an aunt of my husband, Mary Livingstone. She is turning 95 this year, this November, and she had to give up driving about eight years ago. Actually, the family was questioning whether she was a capable driver. She was determined she was, so she went to take a driving test, and she failed it. She had to give up her car, and the next year she had to give up her apartment, where she cooked all her meals, cleaned it, and was totally independent, and she had to move to a lodge, where all this is done for her due to a health condition, keeping in mind that at this time she was about 87. She's since admitted more than once that the hardest thing to give up between the two was her car, not her apartment.

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to shift my remarks and spend a few minutes talking about seniors. I agree with this government's philosophy to ensure that seniors have the services they require to experience well-being and independence. The government does recognize the vital role that seniors have played and continue to play in communities across the province through their service and their volunteerism, and as both members across the way have said, currently we recognize the demographics. Today 10 percent of Alberta's population are seniors, and actually as of April 1 this year over 323,000 seniors live in the province. The seniors population continues to grow in size as more seniors move into Alberta rather than out of it. Statistics continue to show that more seniors migrated to Alberta compared to all the other provinces. On average Alberta receives 721 new senior migrants per year.

It's clear that seniors make up a significant portion of the population. This number will continue to increase as more seniors arrive and the baby boomers age. Again, by 2021 a full 20 percent of Canadians will be seniors, especially Albertans, and by 2031 the seniors population will have risen to 25 percent. So I think it's very important that the Alberta government continues with initiatives to enhance the accessibility of services for this growing portion of the population.

Mr. Speaker, it must be stressed that services provided by the private sector are not currently regulated, however, to meet the needs of the disabled or elderly. The government certainly encourages private-sector service providers to increase accessibility to both groups. However, service providers have the choice, meaning this is a voluntary decision. The senior friendly approach has been widely recognized by many businesses and services, and they have successfully incorporated it in banks, grocery stores, and other services. However, gas stations have not yet implemented this approach. Implementing Motion 510 and its basic concept would be an important first step in enhancing service stations with them becoming senior friendly.

As much as I feel accessibility of services is important for the elderly and the disabled, I also have some reservations and concerns, though, regarding this initiative that I would like to briefly highlight. By requiring gas stations to have full-service pumps, this motion has the potential to impose on service stations and dictate the way they run their business. These intervening stipulations do not concur with the business policies of this government. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government does not interfere with the business decisions of private industry. It's committed to free enterprise and economic development. It is the policy of the government to create a positive business climate which allows private businesses to compete successfully without interference. So basically I have a concern with a suggestion to legislate a mandatory compliance with the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, this motion may also increase the labour costs slightly, which are picked up by service stations, as more gas attendants are needed for the full-service bays. Realistically, this increase in labour costs would likely result in increased fuel charges to customers. But, you know, some days I treat myself to a full-service gas bay, and I'm especially pleased to even have my windows washed, and I am then quite agreeable to a small tip. In fact, I remember the good old days. They didn't necessarily get a tip, but they filled it up and they washed your windows and they chatted with you.

Mr. Speaker, the reasons just stated are the source of my concerns and uncertainties with the potential requirement of service stations to provide full-service pumps. However, a reality is that our population is aging, and I do believe that we need to make certain that these services and others, like checking the air in the tires or the oil level, are available and accessible to the elderly and the disabled.

In essence, I truly support the intent of the sponsor of Motion 510, but I would encourage a serious look at the wisdom of the proposed legislative approach. Thank you.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make some brief comments about this motion based on my experiences as the chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, which has given me a good opportunity to more fully understand the concerns and the issues that exist for persons with disabilities. I think this motion speaks mostly from my perception of the frustration of persons with disabilities. To be unable to access the gasoline pumps to fill their cars so they can proceed with whatever activity they'd like to get on with is only a tiny bit of insight into the huge issue of access for members of the disability community.

Their frustration is much broader than simply not being able to refuel their cars. Their frustration exists in all aspects of community life, whether it be access to education or access to employment or access to recreation or even access to buildings, the physical access that's often denied because of poor structures, even the washrooms that are built poorly and in outmoded building techniques. Their frustration is even further challenged because of issues with the building codes when, in fact, the code may exist but there are exemptions granted in circumstances that would ultimately put people with disabilities at a disadvantage.

It's been interesting to hear some of the debate which talked about the disability community and the seniors both facing mobility issues. Certainly, as we see the proportion of seniors increasing in the population, those mobility issues are going to be more and more critical, and what's good to increase the access of persons with disabilities will also be good for people in their senior years.

We should also note that the disability rate – although it's only 3 or 4 percent at birth – rises to about 50 percent once people attain the age of 65. So those people in their senior years will be looking at a 50 percent disability rate. These access issues will become more and more important not just because they're seniors, but also because they have increasing rates of disability.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to say that I support the spirit of this motion because it emphasizes the access issues that the disability community members face; however, I do have some reservations about the implementation. I don't think that the disability community would expect every single service station in every circumstance to be a full-service station or have one bay that's full service, but there has to be a recognition of this need, this access issue, and there certainly could be accommodation made not necessarily through legislation but as an awareness issue. The disability community seeks to have their issues more front and centre in people's minds in the general population, because even if somebody with a disability was to pull up to a service station where there wasn't a full-service bay, it should be recognized that somebody in there could go out and lend a hand and accommodate those individuals.

Those are access issues. They're important to people with disabilities, and in that vein I'd support the motion. Certainly, the spirit of the motion is important. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood to close debate.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to thank everybody who spoke in favour of it and also otherwise. Last week when there was snow on the ground, I actually went to one of the hospitals, got a wheelchair and filled up my truck and made my way to a service station. I went up the ramp, and there was a bunch of shovels and squeegees and different things, so I had to actually get out of wheelchair and walk around it, move my chair again to the other side, and go and pay for the gas. I'm not a pro at it, and I hope I never have to be, but I was actually spinning. You know, it was fairly difficult. I wouldn't want to wish that on anybody full-time. If I would've done that first before I actually introduced it, I probably could've chosen a different pile of words to introduce the motion. But the motion will do at least one thing if everybody passes it. It'll carve out a road and it'll pave the way for some legislation, and we may combine it with others to develop an act for people with disabilities and for seniors.

I'm always of the attitude that seniors are people that we have to stand on their shoulders. We have to know where we come from in order to know where we're going. I would like to say that I lobby on behalf of people with disabilities. I would like to say that I represent them, even though it's a small number in all of Alberta. I like to say that I'm a champion for the disabled people in Alberta.

Gasoline stations. Unless you've tried it in a wheelchair, unless you had a bunch of impediments in order to get gas like I went through with the shovels and squeegees and the oil display, you wouldn't really know what it was like. I wouldn't want to be in a strange city trying to fill up my tank with all these barriers in place, and that, Mr. Speaker, was only for a few minutes.

I would ask all the members to see their way clear to support this motion. In light of the industry I would like all the members to know that I don't accept that, and I dismiss it, and so should you if you're thinking that way at all.

Mr. Speaker, people are people and feelings are feelings. I think we should honestly draft ourselves into the situation of somebody who's disabled or a senior and has these barriers to get a simple thing like gasoline. As we forge ahead, we may find other needs for people that are less fortunate by way of disabilities or age.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I would like all the members to support this motion as a way to look into the new future. Thank you very much.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 510 lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Association for Former MLAs

511. Mr. Johnson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly institute an all-party former members' association of the Legislative Assembly to focus on the interests of the membership and the good of parliamentary precinct, history, and process.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a pleasure to begin debate on Motion 511, which asks this Assembly to create a former members' association in Alberta. I would like to briefly begin by talking about some of the other former members' associations in North America, their success as advocates for the democratic system, and the benefits that a former members' association could offer to Albertans.

Last fall I had the privilege of participating in a parliamentary conference in Quebec City involving present and former parliamentarians from parts of Canada, the United States, and even other countries. It was sponsored by the association of former parliamentarians of the province of Quebec. Through this conference I was introduced to other projects and activities of the association of former parliamentarians of Quebec and the Ontario Association of Former Parliamentarians, who also had members attending this conference. To date the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and B.C., Canada's federal government, and the United States Congress have created former members' associations through legislation, all with similar objectives. For example, the B.C. association objectives are summarized as follows:

(a) to put the knowledge and experience of its members at the service of parliamentary democracy . . .

(b) to serve the public interest by providing non-partisan support for the parliamentary system of government . . .

(c) to foster a spirit of community among former M.L.A.s,

(d) to foster good relations between current and former M.L.A.s, and

(e) to protect and promote the interests of former M.L.A.s.

Canada's former members' association of parliamentarians has several successful programs as does the United States Association of Former Members of Congress. These groups have been active since the '80s and '70s respectively. Younger associations such as the British Columbia association and the Ontario Association of Former Parliamentarians aren't as large but are growing every year. The Canadian and American former members' associations are great examples of established associations that do a great deal of fund-raising for political science and public administration scholarships, have an active speakers' bureau that tours high schools and university campuses, and can be full-time hosts for visiting delegations such as those from other countries.

There are several advantages to forming a former members' association with the official support of the Legislative Assembly. Legislating a former members' association offers an instant legitimacy and makes it easier for former members to access the Assembly and its current undertakings. Former members' associations have grown into major advocates for the parliamentary system because their origin has been in the Legislative Assembly.

Over the years this Assembly has heard debate on direct legislation, enacting different forms of referenda, introducing citizen initiatives, and replacing the electoral process with proportional representation. All of these debates were an attempt to add, to tweak, or to adjust Alberta's parliamentary system of democracy. I think it's important to keep an open mind and to look at ways to improve Alberta's legislative system, but I think it's just as important to recognize the success and efficiency of the current system. The success of Alberta and Canada is not an accident. The parliamentary system may not be perfect, but there is no denying that it has played a large role in the creation and development of this great country and our province.

We must also remember that this Assembly is a member of several nonpartisan associations. For example, the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association fosters understanding and co-operation among parliamentarians from Commonwealth countries and promotes the study of and respect for parliamentary institutions. The Legislative Assembly of Alberta also meets regularly with the Parliamentary Assembly of French-speaking Peoples, the National Conference of State Legislatures, the Pacific Northwest Economic Region, the Canada/Ukraine legislative exchange program, and the Partnership of Parliaments. So you see, Mr. Speaker, there is ample precedence for establishing this sort of association.

I'd like to make it very clear that the association would be for nonpartisan purposes. As MLAs we wear our party colours and adhere to our loyalties and ideology throughout our time here in this House, but based on what I've seen and heard from other former members' associations, I do not see many potential problems for people abusing the association for partisan purposes. I am confident that former MLAs in Alberta would be no different than former MLAs in other provinces and would respect the overall objectives of the association or not participate at all.

One concern some may have with a former members' association in Alberta is the cost to the taxpayer. Again, by using other former members' associations as a model, the cost to the province would be minimal if any. These associations do not need money from the government. Funding for the association would be generated through an annual fee and in some cases a subscription to a former members' newsletter. However, a former members' association would need an office equipped with a phone, a fax machine, a computer, and a desk. Such an office would incur very limited expense. The Legislature Annex, for example, has a few empty offices, old desks that aren't used, and phone lines with no phones. A fax machine, a telephone, and a computer would be the only added expense, which could be quite modest. The Ontario government covers these costs for their former members' association, which works out to be approximately $12,000 per year, as I was told. The B.C. association incurs no expense to their government.

I can see a former members' association of Alberta pursuing several objectives including fostering a spirit of community among former parliamentarians and maintaining good relations between the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and former parliamentarians. Mr. Speaker, based on what I have seen from other former members' associations, I think the biggest advantage would be the former members' speakers' bureau, similar to the United States Association of Former Members of Congress, who are very active in this area. This would provide two benefits to Albertans. First of all, the speakers' bureau could effectively promote the parliamentary system face to face with Albertans. This would be a great way to add interest to the lessons in a class and concepts in a textbook.

It's also important that the members consider the possibilities that former members could provide the public. These men and women could provide an incredible learning opportunity for high school and postsecondary students. As a former educator I know how effective it would be to add a human face to an institution as big and complex as government. Schools currently welcome presentations as long as the content is beneficial and relevant to the students' education. I think it would be great if a teacher could instruct a class about government and then bring in a former MLA who could freely answer questions and provide an insider's view of how government really works. A former members' association could certainly facilitate making these arrangements. I realize that MLAs currently sitting in this Assembly already visit classrooms and talk about their work to students, but a former MLA could work closely with the teacher for a much longer period of time.

Creating a way to promote the parliamentary system may help people, especially young people, understand the role and process of government. This could improve public participation through voting to increase the number of people running for elected office.

What Motion 511 is proposing is not without precedent and not without purpose. A former members' association would be to the advantage of former MLAs by tapping their knowledge and insight for the benefit of Albertans. I would urge all members of this Assembly to support the creation of a former members' association in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise and speak to Motion 511, establishing a former MLA association, and I want to thank the sponsor for bringing this forward.

Mr. Smith: Would you like to join next week?

Mr. Bonner: I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity is looking at this very closely and is also going to take his spot there very soon, and, yes, I would like to join with him. It would certainly be fun to get together with him and talk about the Hounds from Notre Dame or the NHL playoffs along with other things that we do. It would be very good, Mr. Speaker, to have those opportunities.

Certainly, for an association of this nature there are plenty of precedents. I think more important than the precedents for an association of this nature being formed is the fact that we do have a need once we leave this establishment and this phenomenal growth opportunity that we've all experienced in here. To have that terminated, whether by retirement or not getting re-elected, certainly leaves a void.

In speaking to ex-members, I know that they thoroughly enjoy getting out to the Speaker's Cup, where they get the opportunity to meet and talk with former colleagues of the Assembly. I know for myself, on a personal note, that it's always good to get together with my former MLA Bob Dowling, out of Jasper, a man that's always a pleasure to see and certainly represented his constituency very, very well. He was a Conservative, and we liked him. He was a good man, and we have nothing against good people that represent us. I'm sure that the Coppotts from Calgary-Varsity would say the same thing about their MLA. In fact, they think so much of him, they sit on his boards.

We do have the best of both worlds with an organization of this nature. As well, there's certainly a wealth of knowledge that can be put to use, and when it's put to use in a nonpartisan way, it benefits everybody. I think that when I look at what's happened here in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, the programs that have been initiated and instituted to try and bring the awareness of the MLA to the general public, it has been very, very good. I think, you know, of programs like School at the Leg. or being an MLA for a day, and they certainly help us connect with the larger body of people out there. I can only think that in doing a little reading on this particular subject – the United States Association of Former Members of Congress established a Centre for Democracy and Citizenship – it's certainly one of those areas that would give us an opportunity to reach out to the community and improve the image of MLAs in the community.

I see other things that can happen here as well. With this tremendous amount of knowledge that we do have amongst members in the Assembly, it would give us a great opportunity for professional development in regard to others, and as well I think that there is a need to protect the rights of former MLAs. Certainly, we have seen both sides of the equation, from those that had served prior to 1989, the types of pensions they got, compared to members who have been elected since 1989, what sort of benefits they can look at. One of the things we did have the opportunity to discuss when we were on our trip to study the Legislatures and the Parliament of Great Britain was how they treat their MLAs, how they treat their elected representatives, and certainly how they treat them once they are no longer in office. I think this is an extremely important area that we have to look at and one that since 1993 we have been seriously lacking. I would think that an independent group that is not playing any partisan politics would certainly be able to give a lot of insight into the benefits and the rights of former MLAs.

Now, then, as well, the member was indicating that there would not be a great financial burden on anyone to have an association of this magnitude, and certainly I look forward to that. I had the opportunity to belong to a number of alumni organizations, and it seems that everybody there either wants you to work a bingo or wants you to work a casino, and I am not in favour of fund-raising in this particular fashion. As well, I certainly like the membership rules which would allow all former MLAs to become members of this association in accordance with its bylaws.

So, again, I would like to congratulate the member for bringing this motion forward. I think it's an excellent motion, and I think that the Member for Calgary-Varsity sees a need for this as well, and I'm sure that he'll be up on his feet to speak in support of it right away.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to join the discussion this evening on Motion 511, sponsored by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. I'm pleased to see this motion before the Assembly. Last fall I had the opportunity to attend a former members' association meeting in Quebec along with the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose and touched base with many members from different Legislatures across the country as well as members of the House of Commons and former members of the House of Commons. Not only were there former members there, but there were several current members there as well, and I think the advantage in attending that meeting was the experiences that we had as current members and being able to bring those back and perhaps utilize that information in different places in our own Legislature. We came away from that meeting recognizing that a former members' association would be of value and that it would be an opportunity for former MLAs to gather together, engage in discussion and debate, and perhaps come forward with a few ideas about what the current situation is and how it might be improved.

Just to comment a little on that meeting in Quebec, the meeting centered around the question asking what the factors were that lead to a decline of the parliamentary system in Canada, and there was quite a bit of discussion about how that kind of decline was commonplace across the country and how things could be changed to reverse that decline or to at least slow it down or arrest it in one way or another. There was a great deal of discussion about the role of the media. There were panel discussions for every topic, and they had experts from all across the country and even overseas as well.

One of the other factors was the use of the Internet for some kind of a world government kind of discussion talking about the number of elected members that exist all across the world, something in the order of millions – I can't remember what it was – and how they could be connected through the Internet. It seemed a little beyond what I would have really wanted to be involved in, but it was a topic of discussion.

I remember, as well, that Claude Ryan was one of the people that came to the forum and was one of the panel members for one session. It's really interesting to see the reception that he received in that Quebec Legislature and how well regarded and respected he was. He talked quite a bit about representation. I asked him during the question period what his view was of proportional representation, that being the idea of whatever percentage of votes you received in the general election, that would be the percentage of members you would have in the Assembly. He went on at some length talking about how when he was a member, he had held the view that that would be appropriate, but upon reflection over the past several years, being out of the Legislature and being able to think more about these things, he had come to the conclusion that he was not convinced at this time that proportional representation was what he would support.

That was a little bit of flavour of the meeting. I found it interesting that the hon. member who spoke last talked about improving the image of elected members, and that was the essence of the entire meeting that we had in Quebec. It talked about the decline of the parliamentary system and what the reasons were for that decline in image, and of course we were quite free to express our opinions as were especially the former members who quite happily engaged in the debate.

Let's talk a little bit about the potential value some former members could contribute to the situation in the province and how an association would benefit Albertans. Certainly, we have all realized since being elected that this is a very unique position to hold. The experiences are unique, the relationships that are formed are very important, and the jobs that we have to do are very important to the people we represent. When we leave this Assembly and are no longer part of the decision-making process, that does not mean that the experiences gained could not contribute to the service of Albertans in a format such as the one we experienced in Quebec, where there's open discussion and seeking to resolve some of the issues that currently are faced by parliaments everywhere. Certainly, as well, once the MLAs no longer have those political constraints that they may be under at the present time, they can be free to debate and contribute to parliamentary democracy.

One of the important points to remember about existing former member associations is that they need to grow considerably before making a major impact on the province. It would take time for that membership to grow. It would take time to fund-raise to get the funding necessary for the association to have programs such as scholarships up and running. Over time it could be a very productive relationship that could be formed.

A former members' association could best serve the public interest through that nonpartisan support, and they could put their knowledge and experience of parliamentary democracy into practice. It's a common theme of other former members' associations. I think it's important that we do the same. Although some former members may not share the same political philosophy, they must share the same responsibility of promoting our system of governing.

Now, we all understand that not many people who have not been in this position understand the issues that are faced by representatives as individuals as well as the other politicians do. There aren't many people that understand the sacrifices, the time spent in meetings, traveling, being away from family, but we all recognize the amount of adjustment that's required.

I think a former members' association would be useful to help tell Albertans about government from the perspective of a person who had been there, who had sat in this Chamber and been a member of this Legislature. I think that educating the public, especially young Albertans, the people who will replace us in the future, to talk to them about the virtues and the importance of the parliamentary system could diminish some of those negative connotations associated with politics and with government. This could be an opportunity to increase voter turnout, reduce apathy, and reduce skepticism towards the legislative process.

Mr. Speaker, there's a final point in support of Motion 511. As I said before, I think former MLAs could provide a unique service to the members currently sitting in the House. In an indirect way I think that the men and women who used to serve in this House could help strengthen Canadian provinces. Alberta's Premier and the new Premier in Quebec have expressed interest in strengthening relations among Canada's provinces. It's believed that increasing cohesion among provinces will create a stronger unified voice to lobby the federal government on provincial issues, but as we all know, different regions have different concerns, and we'd be kidding ourselves if we denied that there might also be disagreements between the provincial governments. Therefore, work needs to be done to iron out disputes between governments before provinces can improve respect from and for the federal government. I think a former members' association in Alberta could effectively work with associations from other provinces to spread goodwill and to help break down barriers.

There are four former members' associations in Canada, and there's talk of two possible additions. I think that Alberta could be part of a strong coalition that could build a national branch that could be at the service of Canadians and build strong relationships with other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support Motion 511, and I would urge other members to do the same. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and speak in support of Motion 511. I attended a parliamentary conference with several other members of the Legislative Assembly including the MLA for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, who has moved this motion. While there, we learned about the associations in some other provinces and federally for former members of Legislative Assemblies and the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be brief. I would hope that this motion could be passed this evening. I think that there are a number of beneficial outcomes of having such an association.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members. Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, according to our Standing Orders anybody wishing to rise on a point of order needs to be in their own place. Are you rising on a point of order, sir?

Mr. Smith: No, I'm not.

The Acting Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was anticipating a point of order by the hon. Minister of Energy, but I guess it's not to be, at least on this motion.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I think that there are lots of advantages of such an association, and it allows people who have gathered tremendous experience, valuable experience to continue to put that experience at the disposal of the people that they formerly were elected to represent. You know, I think we all learn a great deal by participating in electoral politics. It's not necessarily marketable experience. It's not necessarily that you can go out and get a job because of your political experience. In fact, in my view it's undervalued in the job market, but there is a strong desire on the part of almost everyone who participates in electoral politics to contribute to the community. That desire does not end when one is defeated or one retires, and the experience and the desire to assist the community doesn't die with the political career.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think this association provides an outlet for that experience and that desire to serve, and I would recommend this motion to all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very brief. I'd like to rise and speak on Motion 511, that's been sponsored by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, and urge the Assembly to establish an all-party former members' association. Since I really only have a very short time, I'd just like to talk about the fact that I have benefited from the knowledge of someone that sat formerly in the House, my father-in-law, Jack Ady. I've walked into his den many times and seen pictures on the walls of some of my colleagues when they were much younger, much, much younger.

An Hon. Member: And better looking too.

Mrs. Ady: No. I'm not saying better looking but much younger.

It's always interesting to me to hear him talk about the time that they had in the Legislature and been very beneficial to me as I've asked him questions about why certain policies were done and how they came to life, and I have found it to be of great benefit.

I think that this motion is a wonderful idea, and I'm highly supportive of it. I know that all the decisions they made in the past were good decisions, and they've proven to be good decisions. I think that we as a Legislature could benefit from that same kind of advice. So I'm happy to support the motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to rise today and offer my comments with regard to Motion 511 sponsored by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. As my colleague has already stated, the purpose of Motion 511 is to create an all-party former members' association whose purpose would be to promote and provide support for the parliamentary system of governance here in Alberta and also in the rest of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that creating an association made up of former Members of the Legislative Assembly would be a highly important and valuable development which would not only benefit former members but all Albertans as well. I say this for two main reasons. My primary motivation behind supporting this motion has to do with the fact that a former members' association would be a perfect organization for encouraging and educating the general public and especially our young people about our parliamentary system and how it works in real life. Former Members of the Legislative Assembly are in an ideal position to share this kind of knowledge because unlike active MLAs they have more time to dedicate to this cause, and they have the luxury of space to properly analyze and reflect on our system of governance.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

9:00head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know that it's late, and

I know that we want to get done, so I'll be very brief, but first I would like to introduce a few members of my department who are here with me today. First of all is my deputy minister, Paddy Meade; my assistant deputy minister, Ken Boutillier, and all of you guys know him; Lori Sajjad; Thomas Droege; Cynthia Dunnigan; Peter Tadman; Martin Hanly; Tom Baldwin; and of course you all know this guy, Jim Kiss, my executive assistant.

I'm pleased tonight to present Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development's 2003-2004 estimates. [some applause] Thank you, thank you.

This is the ministry's third budget. I know that you're interested in discussing how we have moved ahead since last year, and I look forward to answering your questions. For 2002-2003 our plan was focused on integrating the divergent parts of the ministry – notably aboriginal, land, and northern issues – into a coherent whole. We have made significant progress in this regard, and this year's budget reflects our efforts through our funding to core businesses, goals, strategies, and performance measures. I want to thank everyone who has contributed to this process because we have received helpful input and advice from many sources, including the Auditor General, aboriginal business and community leaders, and many of you here tonight.

We have a budget of $31.6 million. A large portion of this is for legislative funding requirements, otherwise called statutory funds, which are provided to the Métis Settlements General Council pursuant to the Métis Settlements Accord Implementation Act. The act requires payment of $10 million per year to April 1, 2006. As well, under the legislation we are required to provide funding through the matching grants replacement agreement, otherwise known as the MGRA. The grant amount for 2003-04 is $5.3 million. This brings the total for Métis settlements legislative requirements and governance efforts to $15.3 million.

Also under the Métis settlements governance we have the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal, which receives $930,000 for its operation. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars is budgeted for the Métis settlements land registry and $450,000 for the now-operating Métis Settlements Ombudsman's office. This leaves $14.6 million for two program areas. For the aboriginal affairs aspect of the ministry I've allocated $12.6 million. The Northern Alberta Development Council, chaired by my colleague the Member for Peace River, receives $1.9 million, and he will speak to NADC's efforts shortly.

Six million dollars was announced earlier this year to be shared by six ministries. Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development receives $1.2 million for our part. The strategies, of course, are cross-ministry. We take into consideration a number of other ministries. Sustainable Resource Development is receiving $1.7 million; Justice, $1 million; Energy, $938,000; Environment, $623,000; and Community Development, $410,000. Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development will use our allocation to build human capacity, and we hope to have representatives out in communities doing consultation as quickly as we can. Ongoing consultation expenditures include legal research, including document collections, supplies, travel, administrative services, and litigation management if needed.

We have 77 full-time employees: 55 in the ministry, 15 with NADC, and another seven assigned to the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal. We have three shared service agreements: the first one with the Alberta Corporate Service Centre, the second one with Alberta Learning for human resource planning and programs, and the third with International and Intergovernmental Relations for other administrative and financial services including the senior financial officer and the chief information officer.

We have a challenging mandate. There is pressure on the Alberta government to address aboriginal and northern issues in a timely manner and to look to the longer term. Some needs are tangible and can be addressed with basic prioritization, planning, and funding. Other needs are less tangible and dependent on co-operation, openness, patience, and effort by a variety of individuals, organizations, and governments.

Our vision is an Alberta that includes full participation of aboriginal and northern Albertans in the province's opportunities and prosperity. We hope others share this vision. It'll take willingness, dedication, and a unified effort to make it happen. We welcome the role of developing and co-ordinating cross-ministry policies, strategies, and initiatives. As a small ministry we are not in the business of program development. We are in the business of building and strengthening relationships to address issues. Our mandate is to work with aboriginal and northern people, communities, and organizations; Alberta ministries; other governments; and the private sector to respond appropriately to aboriginal and northern issues. Our greatest strength is that we are always making sure that we can facilitate. We recognize the constitutional rights of aboriginal people and work to fulfill legislative commitments and resolve unsettled legal matters. We facilitate cross-ministry and federal, provincial, and aboriginal initiatives. We advance sustainable northern resource development with other ministries and northern stakeholders.

In all of our activities we strive to ensure organizational excellence. The ministry has four core businesses, which are compatible with its goals. Our first core business is aimed at improving the participation of aboriginal people in Alberta's social and economic opportunities, and we do this by serving aboriginal people and communities through the implementation of the aboriginal policy framework. Eighty-three percent of ministry plans continue to include reference to the aboriginal policy framework, the aboriginal policy initiative, or at least one strategy that relates to aboriginal people or issues. This is a demonstration of major progress since the adoption of the aboriginal policy framework in September of 2000. The aboriginal policy framework sets out the long-term structure of our existing and new government of Alberta policies to address First Nation, Métis, and other aboriginal issues in Alberta.

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development supports the government's goals towards people, prosperity, and preservation and is uniquely tied to goal 5, which is: "Aboriginal communities in Alberta will be effective and self-reliant." Effective and self-reliant communities have the capacity to set their own priorities, manage their own affairs, develop a sustainable economic base, and participate in partnerships with governments and the private sector. Our staff are working directly with aboriginal organizations to enhance their planning and performance measure capacities and improve accountability mechanisms. The Métis Nation of Alberta and the native friendship centres are two organizations taking part in these efforts.

We lead the aboriginal policy initiative, or API, and work actively on three other cross-ministry priority policy initiatives: the health sustainability initiative, the Alberta children and youth initiative, and the economic development strategy. Our participation in all priority policy initiatives provides further opportunities to co-ordinate Alberta's responses to aboriginal and northern needs and issues.

Our second core business is to fulfill our legislative commitments to Métis settlements. Much of this core business is administrative and technical in nature, but there are other, observable activities occurring. Upon the recommendation of an independent panel I have appointed a former Alberta Ombudsman, Mr. Harley Johnson, as the Métis Settlements Ombudsman. The establishment of the ombudsman's office is indicative of ongoing efforts to move toward greater transparency and accountability. We hope that the settlements will move to integrate the idea of an ombudsman into their own governing structures.

Our third core business is to manage "the Province's legal and constitutional obligations with respect to First Nations, Métis and other Aboriginal people." To do this, the province helps the federal government to meet its treaty obligations by transferring land and minerals. In 1986 we contributed to 11 treaty land entitlement settlements for Indian reserves owed under treaty. We recently reached an agreement in principle on another case which we anticipate will be finalized within this business year, bringing the number to 12. These settlements have provided First Nations with resources to increase their participation in the Alberta economy and have reduced uncertainty for industry and government in the development of the province's resources. The land and legal issues section of AAND is responsible for the settlement of land claims. This is also the section of the ministry that will be linking with other ministries to address consultation of First Nations resource development on Crown lands, at least at the moment, because I intend to make sure that we deal with that in a different structure.

The aboriginal policy framework commits Alberta to a proactive, made-in-Alberta consultation process, and Alberta is now in the process of drafting overall guidelines and implementation strategies. These guidelines and strategies will assist departments in managing their consultations with First Nations.

Our fourth core business is: "promotes and facilitates initiatives to advance the development of Northern Alberta." Essentially, this means that we advance sustainable northern development with other ministries and northern stakeholders. At this time I would like to turn my time over briefly to the chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council, the MLA for Peace River.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and minister. As the minister just said, the role of the Northern Alberta Development Council could almost be summed in one line, and the first line of the fourth core business of the department is: "promotes and facilitates initiatives to advance the development of Northern Alberta." The Northern Alberta Development Council is continuing to work with the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and many other stakeholders in our northern development strategy. As the minister noted, we try to focus on strategic priorities.

Economically, there is much to consider in the north for the long-term sustainability of the Alberta advantage. The oil sands development is always at the forefront, but the importance of adding value to other northern resources, especially in the areas of agriculture and forestry, has to be recognized. [interjection] There's a strong supporter.

We meet regularly with northern municipal governments as well as industry, aboriginal communities, and many other of our stakeholders. A key part of the business of NADC is to connect our north to local, provincial, national, and even international opportunities. Northern highways corridors are absolutely essential for trade and economic connections and remain a primary focus for our council.

We've been actively promoting the development and use of the northwest corridor, which is a key rail link to the west coast ports, particularly the port of Prince Rupert. Delegates to the recent Challenge North Conference in Fort McMurray spent a lot of time discussing the various opportunities to advance the northern economy. There's no doubt that the opportunities far outweigh the challenges, but these challenges also have to be addressed. Skill development remains at the top of the list and is the key focus of our plan. Recruitment, training, and employee retention are the greatest barriers to realizing the full potential not only of northern Alberta but of all of northern Canada. People are becoming increasingly more aware of the importance of northern resources to our overall economy. What is less obvious, however, is the input required to develop and exploit these resources. Getting that message out is one of the jobs of NADC.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on, but I know that many members want to ask questions. After the minister finishes her opening remarks, I will be more than glad to participate in the Q and A session.

Ms Calahasen: Just to conclude, Mr. Chairman, we're focusing on strategic relationship building. The title of the aboriginal policy framework is Strengthening Relationships, and that's part of the corporate culture that we've been trying to achieve in all our efforts. So the vision of participation and prosperity is achievable, and we need every available resource to get there. Strategically we're playing our part in the bigger picture of benefiting Alberta as a whole by strengthening its parts. The importance of building partnerships and working together will be measured by a change that will be unmistakable. We're already beginning to see it happen. Aboriginal people and organizations are having a positive impact on our communities. As a government we have an opportunity to tap into that energy, and this budget plan brings us one step closer.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Appreciate the comments from both the minister and the head of the Northern Alberta Development Council. Appreciate the presence of her staff here, who have been helpful to me from time to time. I note that although this is the last department to be debated or discussed in estimates, it comes first in the list of business plans and I'm sure first in the hearts of all MLAs. By budget it's a small ministry but by its potential impact a very important one. It directly touches the lives of actually I don't know how many Albertans, but it would be a few hundred thousand Albertans, which makes it a very important department indeed. Of course, through its connection with the Northern Alberta Development Council it has influence over the economic prosperity and future of half the geographic area of the province and a part of the province that includes a good portion of Alberta's most valuable resources: conventional oil and gas, forestry, and of course heavy oil.

When I bring my attention to this particular department, there is a handful of issues that come to mind first and foremost, and those are health, justice, education, and poverty. Perhaps that's not fair. That's of course leaving out many other aspects of interest and concern, but those are the ones that come first and foremost to my mind. I suppose I would like to add to that the cultural richness that the aboriginal community provides to Albertans and I hope provides much more of in the future as we work more closely with the aboriginal population of the province.

I'm going to just begin getting really specific on my questions to help the discussion move along. When it comes to aboriginal health, I'm most interested in the sharing and the co-ordination between this department and the Department of Health and Wellness, and I know also of course the federal department of Indian affairs has a large role here. In particular, I've looked from time to time for a particular position somewhere in the provincial civil service, whether it's in this department or in Health and Wellness, for somebody with a job such as aboriginal health co-ordinator or director of First Nations health issues or some title like that, somewhere where I could see in the civil service sort of a point person for co-ordinating health issues, health delivery, health planning with aboriginal people across the province. I've never found that particular position. If it does exist, I'd be interested in where I would find it, or if it doesn't exist, maybe the minister hasn't felt that it's necessary.

With justice – I'm just leaping around here a bit – a tremendous amount of time and man power, or person power, and money goes into negotiating the settlements and the arrangements between the First Nations and the provincial government. One of my questions, since we're focusing on the budget specifically here, is this. When it comes to legal advice on First Nations issues, I'm wondering how much of that is provided in-house through the provincial government's own staff lawyers and how much of that is provided through contracts with firms. I know the federal government has a very large number indeed of lawyers on its own staff who do nothing but work on aboriginal affairs questions. I'm wondering if we through the Department of Justice or aboriginal affairs are developing that same expertise internally or if we are relying first and foremost on contracts with firms. Whether it's done in-house or through contracts, I'd be interested to know the value of the legal services provided for issues relating to First Nations.

As I have looked through both the estimates and the business plans, while from time to time there is some mention made of communications, there is no line item that I could find in the estimates for communications. That's a common line item in many ministries, and I'm wondering if the minister – and you can do this in writing; that's fine – could provide the figure in terms of dollars and full-time equivalent staff for your department's expenditures on communications and, further, how much in addition to that is provided through the Public Affairs Bureau. The Public Affairs Bureau might provide one or two or three or 10 staff to supplement those of the ministry. I don't know. Those are some details I'd be interested in.

Still just jumping around a bit here. From my responses to the minister's comments the minister referred specifically to what I think is an excellent initiative, which is the creation of the Ombudsman for the Métis settlements. That Ombudsman has been appointed. It's a man with tremendous experience as an Ombudsman, having previously served as the Ombudsman of the province, and I failed to see in the estimates a specific cost allocation for that very important job. So I would be interested to know: how much are we spending on the Ombudsman? That would be the total budget, obviously, not just for the Ombudsman but for his staff.

Now, moving my way through the business plan here, it's laid out pretty clearly, but I have some concerns. I'm looking, for example, on page 55 of the business plans document of the entire government. This one covers goals 1 and 2. I've learned from my colleague for Edmonton-Centre to pay some attention to the nature of the performance measures that are presented for the business plans because after all these are the benchmarks by which the success and failures, the progress of the department are measured. So they're very, very important.

When I look at the performance measures under goal 1, they read, “Report on the results of the objectives and targets, identified in the cross-ministry Aboriginal Policy Initiative for 2002-03, which show improvements for Aboriginal people.” I'll stop with that one for now. Frankly, I find that to be a very vaguely written performance measure. Perhaps it simply means that the minister is going to be reporting on the results, but it doesn't give any sense of how we might measure success there. Indeed, it doesn't really tell me anything. It's so vague as to in my view be almost meaningless as a performance measure when I compare it to some performance measures in other departments or even one or two in her own department. I find this one to be quite meaningless, to be blunt.

The second one under this same goal, which reads, “Maintain the government's public approval rating on Aboriginal Affairs higher than British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario government averages,” raises all kinds of questions to me. Are we using exactly the same measure for every province west of Quebec? Surely the issues are different. We want to be measuring different things here than, say, in B.C., where the situation is so different, or in Ontario, where the situation is so different. Frankly, “maintain the government's public approval rating” really runs the risk of simply boiling performance down to a public relations exercise. If everybody in the public has a good impression of this department, then by this performance measure it would suggest that they're succeeding when in fact what's being done may not be satisfactory at all. So this dwells far too much on image management and not nearly enough, in my view, on substance.

I won't go through every performance measure in that detail under the other goals, but I do in general feel that these performance measures could be improved, could be tightened up and made more specific.

Now shifting to my specific list of questions, having gone through the estimates and the business plans, it would be useful for the record – I'm sure she's done this elsewhere – for the minister to explain once again the $32 million that was spent last year on land and legal settlements. I'm on line 1.0.4 of the estimates. It was $32 million. It was unbudgeted last year. It was spent. It's not budgeted again this year. I don't expect the minister to do this right now, but any details of those land and legal settlements would be useful.

With the line 2.0.1, the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal, there's a $930,000 expense, and I'm wondering if that's simply for administration of the panel or if there is some other use served by that number. That's on page 22 of the estimates.

Moving ahead a couple of pages, the Métis settlements funding has dropped almost exactly a million dollars, a fair bit of money. That's about probably 15 or 18 percent of the budget. I'd be interested to have an explanation of that and an itemization of who audits the spending of the Métis settlements. Are those audited in some cases by the Auditor General, or are they audited by outside firms?

I notice that on page 29 the number of full-time equivalent employees in the department jumps by 15. I assume – but I could be wrong on this – that's because the Northern Alberta Development Council staff are brought into that count. I think there are 15 staff in the Northern Alberta Development Council. I'm getting heads nodding there, so that answers my question on that.

The $6 million committee that was discussed in this Assembly a few months ago to address the concerns and the disputes between Northern Oilfield Contractors and the aboriginal bands – if the minister could tell us what the status is of that committee's work. Where is the cost of this committee listed in the budget? I'm not sure what line to look for, where that $6 million would be. And what's the time line for the committee's work? Is this a committee that's going to want another $6 million next year and $6 million the year after, or is it something where we will see it wrapped up?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member?

Dr. Taft: You want me to keep moving? Okay. I'm just trying to screen out the most important of my questions here.

One of the things this government has made a lot about has been its work on business plans, three-year business plans, and the goals for each year are laid out, and then they're updated from year to year. It's been interesting to go through various departments and compare the goals from one year to the next and the budgets from one year to the next, and it seems to us that the goals have changed quite a lot for this ministry for this year compared to last year. I guess that one thing under that would be an explanation of why the significant changes, and of course it's some recognition of a concern that when goals change like that, it becomes pretty hard to measure from one year to the next. If your goals are one thing last year and something quite different this year, then how do you really steer a department in the long term?

Actually, Mr. Chairman, I'm just going to check some of my other notes here, but I think that for now that covers the first round of my questions. I don't know if the minister would like to make a few comments now or would like to respond later.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, would you like to respond?

Ms Calahasen: Well, maybe what we'll do is we'll get another person in, and then that way we can put them together and I'll hit the highlights, as many as we can.

Dr. Taft: Sure.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's with interest that I rise this evening to participate in the estimates debate on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Certainly, at this time I have some specific questions in regard to the department and the efforts that are being made – and perhaps this is a collaborative effort. There was mention earlier of developing strategic relationships with aboriginal communities and organizations in Alberta. It's an unfortunate fact that the unemployment rates that the majority of Albertans experience are not the same on First Nations reserves, and I think we need to work very hard to overcome that. There is a high level of unemployment particularly with younger citizens on First Nations reserves. What efforts are being made to correct this?

Certainly, when we look at aboriginal policy initiatives, all these are well meaning:

- improve the health status and well-being of Aboriginal people;
- support life-long learning opportunities for Aboriginal people and promote appreciation of Aboriginal cultures;
- increase the participation by Aboriginal people in the Alberta economy; and
- clarify federal/provincial/Aboriginal roles and responsibilities.

Well, when we look at increasing the participation of aboriginal people in the Alberta economy, just precisely how is this being done? Are we encouraging First Nations individuals to actively participate in the long term in the oil and gas industry? I'm not talking about slashing crews on a seismic line or general labour on a pipeline. I'm talking about ensuring that these individuals get enough education so that they can go to work for some of the larger corporations that are exploring and developing our natural resources, and they can have lifetime employment possibilities for themselves and their families.

The statistics, I believe, whenever you compare it to the rest of the province, as I said earlier, are deplorable, and I would like to know what initiatives are being considered to improve the economic well-being of so many First Nations people. Also, is there any consultation or any further development in regard to partnering? For instance, Syncrude has an agreement with the Fort MacKay First Nation, and that seems to be working very well.

Also, Mr. Chairman, at this time if the hon. minister has any information she can share with this member and with all hon. members of this Assembly in regard to what initiatives are being made to ensure that there is an opportunity for First Nations businesspeople to participate in the development of our natural resources, particularly in the north. They're certainly not affirmative action policies, but what is being done to ensure that First Nations businesses are being provided with an opportunity to participate in the economic prosperity that seems to be all around? Unfortunately, they do not seem to be participating fully in those economic opportunities.

With those questions, Mr. Chairman, I will either await a written or an oral response from the hon. minister, whatever is at her convenience, and I will cede the floor to another colleague. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A handful of other issues since we're raising them here. A great deal of the efforts of this department are focused on Métis settlements and northern affairs and issues relating to bands. As we all know, urban aboriginals or Indians or Métis or First Nations people are growing rapidly in number and have very great needs. The number of students in Edmonton public schools in the next decade who will have some First Nations heritage is expected to soar, and in general the number of First Nations people living in cities is expected to climb very rapidly. It's already very high. These people face many very different problems and opportunities from those living in rural Alberta and on Métis settlements and on reserves.

I would be very keen to see some explanation of the long-range strategy for urban First Nations people for this province from this minister. What in this budget can give me reassurance that we're paying attention adequately to the long-term future of First Nations peoples in Alberta cities, whether it's education, housing, employment, cultural opportunities, health issues, justice issues, all the same issues that all the rest of us face but which have their own particular complications for First Nations people in urban areas? I'd like some reassurance that as a government we are paying sufficient attention to that issue, because it's going to become a larger and larger issue as the years go by.

I would also like to direct some questions to the Member for Peace River, who serves as chairman for the Northern Alberta Development Council. One is quite specific, and it relates to the dispute between the oil field contractors and the bands. I'm wondering if the Northern Alberta Development Council has any role or involvement in helping resolve this dispute. If so, what is that role? If not, why not? There may be excellent reasons for staying out of the issue, but on the face of it it would seem to be one of some real potential interest to the council. So any comments from the chairman on the council's involvement in that issue would be helpful.

I also have looked through the summary of the Northern Alberta Development Council's activities provided in the annual report. I believe that there's a $1.9 million budget for the council. I'm working from memory there, but I think $1.9 million or thereabouts.

Is that right? I would like some description of where the chairman thinks the most important contribution comes from that council. One point nine million dollars is quite a lot of money when I look at the key activities of the council being things like roundtable meetings and stakeholder meetings and a newsletter and a forum and, beyond that, feasibility studies into intensive livestock operations in the north, looking at tourism possibilities in the north and also educational issues for the north. I'd be interested in the chairman's view of what is the highest priority and what is the most valuable contribution that the Northern Alberta Development Council makes for its $1.9 million budget.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll certainly be brief at this time. In the past it has been reported that there have been contingent liabilities and that the province as represented by the Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development has a contingent liability in respect of 35 claims concerning aboriginal rights, Indian title, and treaty rights. Now, as I understand it, in most cases these claims have been filed jointly and severally against the province of Alberta and the government of Canada and in some cases involve third parties. Can the minister give this House and the citizens of Alberta an update on those claims? How many of them are on disputed territory in regard to the contentious issues that were discussed earlier in regard to the oil industry and certain First Nations bands? In a synopsis, can the minister update us on any of these claims and how they're affected by those ongoing disputes?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do have a few questions here for the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Last year when we were discussing the same department, we did talk about a number of very serious issues that are occurring with First Nations children. Certainly, one of those that we talked about at that time was the number of suicides on reserves, so if the minister could please update us. I know she had programs in place and was certainly working to decrease the number of suicides. If she could please update us on how successful the programs that she's instituting have been.

Now, then, as well, I think that one of the areas we have to look at is the services that we supply First Nations children off reserve. It's my understanding that the treatment is very, very poor. Again, I think it's partially to do with the whole idea of whose jurisdiction it is or with people passing the buck and saying: well, no, that's a federal responsibility, it's provincial, or it's at the municipal level. Unfortunately, what happens is that when a number of First Nations do move off poor reserves, we get the poverty moving from the reserve to the urban centres. It's a vicious cycle and one that I know they would like to break. Certainly, in that regard I think we could say that to date the programs that have been put in place by the municipal and provincial levels of government have failed quite badly. If the minister could please update us on programs at the provincial level that are going to be dealing with the urban poverty of First Nations.

I was also quite startled to see that only approximately 8 percent of aboriginal teens finish high school, that 20 percent of aboriginal students in public schools graduate, and only about 50 percent of aboriginal teens even start high school. It was quite interesting to note in a recent meeting we had with the Edmonton public school board that they could predict that almost 100 percent of the students who arrived in high school that could not read at a grade 10 level would not complete high school. That was quite a startling fact to me. So when we have that type of information that indicates that we have to have students prepared for high school – and these are not only aboriginal students; these are all students – it certainly indicates that we do have a long way to go in order to have students prepared for high school.

Now, then, I know that all parents, whether they be First Nations or others, certainly want to get good jobs, want to raise healthy families, and they want to do everything they possibly can for their children, but we do have an enormous problem of aboriginal poverty. We have a higher child mortality rate. We also have family breakdowns. I think the solution has been identified by many that in order to give First Nations youth an opportunity, what we have to do is we have to be able to develop their skills, to give them training, to give them hope and vision so that they can get good jobs and raise healthy families. If the minister could please outline what early intervention programs we do have and how these are being monitored and as well if we can see any type of success in this particular area.

As well, I think that in order to help tackle some of these problems, we have to start with First Nations children at an early age. If the minister could please outline what programs are available for mothers in the area of prenatal care and counseling so that they will know how to certainly be able to provide the best opportunities for their children. As well, this is a huge problem that I think can be addressed partially by the regional health authorities. If the minister could please outline the resources available to the regional health authorities to deal with these issues and if we can see the progress and the development of those plans as they move along.

I was noticing that there were quite a number of cuts that were made after the 9-11 disaster, and, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has already indicated, there is a million dollar drop in the budget this year. Are there adequate resources to do the things that have to be done in order to not only maintain but to expand programs for First Nations families? As well, what new programs are being instituted in order to assist First Nations mothers, and what resources are there?

So if the minister could please answer those either now or later, it's fine. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar would also like to ask more questions here. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have one more question at this time for the hon. minister. It has to do with some of the activities that have occurred in the minister's department over the years, actually over the last two years because it was part of the expansion of the cabinet: the Northern Bachelor of Social Work Council of Stakeholders and the Northern Distance Bachelor of Social Work Planning Circle. Now, these groups are supported by the ministry, and students, as I understand it, can now enroll in a social work degree program in northern Alberta.

I was also interested to know if the minister is considering – and if not, why not? – promoting this sort of distance learning for registered nurses. Certainly, we know that northern Alberta contains 60 percent of Alberta's land mass yet only 10 percent of the province's population. I understand that there's a great deal of difficulty in recruiting and retaining nurses and nurse practitioners to Canada's and Alberta's north. What is the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development doing to ensure that there are nurses and nurse practitioners willing and able not only to go to work in the north in isolated communities but also stay there? What initiatives is the department taking to alleviate this problem? Our research indicates that it's a huge problem.

Thank you.

Ms Calahasen: Are you guys okay? Are you finished?

Dr. Taft: That's good. Thank you.

Ms Calahasen: Okay. Well, maybe I'll highlight some of the bigger ones, and then whatever I don't answer tonight in terms of specifics, we'll put in writing, if that's okay with you.

Then we'll start off with health. Edmonton-Riverview, you were asking something relative to health. We do participate in health sustainability, a cross-government initiative, and Health and Wellness has dedicated positions for aboriginal health. That basically falls in Health's area. However, we are involved in a cross-ministry initiative. Therefore, what we do is we make sure that we facilitate that with Health and ensure that we are at the table whenever anything is addressed relative to the aboriginal issues. We don't do programs. Other departments do that, and basically we're there to make sure that we bring the issues to the forefront. Then, with that, we make sure that they're addressed in a program way with the various departments. That's why we have cross-ministry initiatives. So that's basically what we do with health as well as with education and the same even with justice.

In terms of the Justice question that you asked, we have three in-house lawyers, and we work with Justice. We can supply costs in writing, I think, in detail relative to that. That will take a long time for us to be able to go through that.

In terms of the goals that you were asking about in your speaking notes and in my speaking notes actually, we changed due to new ministry evolution and changes to government ministry business plans to streamline and align with the budget. We try to make sure we do that. This is also a dynamic area, and we must continue to adapt. Other ministries are working with us to make sure that we continue to try to go into taking a greater role.

We're developing an urban strategy. You asked about the urban strategy, and I think this is really important. The urban strategy is an important one. I just pulled it out of my briefing book earlier, but the northern strategy is an urban strategy that we've been working on with urban aboriginal people in Alberta. We are actually one of the lead provincial departments under the western economic partnership agreement. I don't know if you know that one, but it's otherwise called WEPA. It provides funding support to the Calgary urban aboriginal initiative. The purpose of this Calgary urban aboriginal initiative is to co-ordinate an overall strategy for accessing and improving the delivery of programs and services to aboriginal people living in Calgary. We have committed approximately $25,000 under WEPA. An official from our department sits on the steering committee. We have a similar Edmonton urban aboriginal initiative, which was developed to assist aboriginal people residing in Edmonton. However, that initiative did not work due to structural problems, and my department has been working with the federal government and other stakeholders to develop projects that will improve the delivery of programs and services to aboriginal people in Alberta.

We also have annual funding to friendship centres in Calgary, Edmonton, and small urban centres for programming as well as to the Métis Nation of Alberta. They develop the programs. They deal with the programs; we don't do that. So we do a number of things relative to the urban aboriginal issue. But that was a really good question. I thought that was excellent.

Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal. You were asking about that. You were asking actually: $930,000 on what? We have been spending that amount. It's on the administration of a quasi-judicial body. It's making sure that we have staffing, because they do have staffing costs, and it's preliminary investigations and hearings that are set by that group.

In terms of the auditors of the Métis settlements, our corporations are required to have audited statements done. They are done yearly, like any audited statement, so that's something that's really important that we continue to do.

How much for the Ombudsman? Four hundred and fifty thousand per year. The Ombudsman is provided an allocation with an agreed-upon budget, and those allocations are $150,000 as of April 1, $100,000 in August, $100,000 in November, and $100,000 in January. It operates as independently as possible, because that's why we have him there. So they report on finances on a quarterly basis. We have an annual report as well so that we continue to see what's happening there with our money.

There were some questions relative to: what is occurring relative to economic initiatives and economic participation of aboriginal people? I just want to give you an idea as to what's been happening, examples of successful partnerships with First Nations. We've got oil and gas. We've got the forestry industry. We also have the energy industry and a number of fronts where the First Nations have been partnering with various corporations. I'll just give you an example: the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation. What they've done is that the Aqua Jetters and Aqua Sonics business venture uses a new ultrasonic wave method to remove bitumen. In the aboriginal community the Athabasca First Nation has been involved on a partnership basis in that respect. The other one is the AWN, otherwise known as Aseniwuche Winewak Nation. They signed a guiding principles agreement in March of 2001 with Chevron Canada and Burlington Resources. In this they set out guiding principles in the areas of land stewardship, project consultation, education and training, employment and business opportunities, as well as community development. That's in the oil and gas industry sector.

Now, as an example in the forestry industry, Weyerhaeuser Canada Ltd. has relationships with Little Red River Cree, Horse Lake First Nation, and Sunchild/O'Chiese for various forestry contracts, an agreement to promote business employment training, education, and communications. So basically what we're trying to do is encourage First Nations to work with corporations and industry to see if they can come up with partnerships.

Another example which I thought was really interesting was the other one in energy. Weather Dancer 1, Alberta's tallest wind-generating turbine, is an example of world-class technology with a 72-metre tall 900-kilowatt turbine in a joint venture between the Peigan Indian Utilities Corporation and EPCOR.

So we've got a number of initiatives that have been going on where we're trying to make sure we encourage the development of aboriginal people to be involved in the economy. Those are just examples. I can send the list to you in my written submission if you want that.

There were a number of other questions that you were asking relative to consultation. As you know, the $6 million that we have received has been divided by various departments so that we can ensure that we begin to develop the guidelines within our departments and work on a consultation basis with First Nations and the industry to develop consultation and work on that basis. So we're just now putting that together, as I indicated in my opening remarks, and that will continue to be developed. We want to make sure that we do a proactive strategic approach to aboriginal issues and the resources developed and approved for implementation by the seven ministries that are involved. The approach involves four strategies: improving relations with aboriginal communities; increasing aboriginal participation in the economy, particularly the resource sector; implementing consultation procedures in areas such as fish and wildlife, forestry, oil and gas, and major projects; and enhancing provincial legal capacity. So what we're trying to do is make sure that we have the strategic approach to be implemented, and a number of ministries are establishing consultation capacities. So we'll continue to work in that vein and ensure that we do that.

An update on the northern contractors. Alberta has clarified our position, in fact indicating that the province has jurisdiction over Crown lands, and companies with leases and permits have a valid right to conduct their businesses without interference. The situation has been reviewed with K Division of the RCMP, and both industry and the contractors have been encouraged to report any evidence of criminal activity. A cross-ministry and early response team has been established to deal with blockades in a more timely and co-ordinated manner, and several potential blockade situations have also been resolved. Meetings have been held with the parties to find a basis for a negotiated resolution. As a matter of fact, our negotiator, John McCarthy, has been appointed as facilitator to work with legal counsel to the contractors. As well, the contractors themselves have hired a counsel, and the two are working together. The ministries are beginning to develop those guidelines, as I indicated earlier, on the consultation process, so we're making sure that we make every attempt to work with First Nations, industry, and the subcontractors.

I'll have my colleague answer some of the northern development questions, and then I'll come back if you think you want me to answer any more. If not, I certainly would be willing to answer in writing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There were a couple of questions asked regarding the role of NADC. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview asked about, first of all, the involvement of NADC and the issue of the dispute between aboriginal communities and oil field contractors, but I believe the minister answered that. NADC isn't that directly involved in that end of it, but we do get involved to the extent of promoting business employment opportunities and skill development because a lot of these issues are more a matter of maybe communities that don't have access to some of the training. You know, if you don't have the first-line opportunities to compete, maybe some of the less desirable activities take place. I think it's very important that one of the programs that we do get involved directly in is specific training. We encourage industry and postsecondary institutions to get into specific training for things like heavy machine operations, the kind of industry that's very much in demand in the forestry industry, also heavy equipment operation and such. I think we'd like to believe that we take a proactive step in helping those folks in the remote communities that need that kind of a boost.

You also asked about the budget and made reference to conferences and meetings and such. Certainly, these activities are very much a part of awareness of what NADC does and getting communication out to the stakeholders, but the biggest part of our budget goes to skill development, which is probably the single highest priority of the NADC. In that regard we have the northern bursary program, which includes a return service agreement for people who want skill development and to work in the northern communities. We also have the youth apprenticeship program, which probably could be described as an early intervention apprenticeship program.

Our Northern Links program assists predominantly high school students but also junior high school students in making decisions on what postsecondary opportunities might exist. It also delves into the field of keeping people in the smaller communities interested in high school, at least completing that portion, and taking away the fear, if you want, not being aware of what it means to go to another community and probably larger towns or cities, that in themselves are a bit of a cultural shock to many young people in smaller communities, leaving your family, leaving a place you're comfortable with, and going someplace to not only establish a residence that's completely foreign to what you might be used to but getting into classrooms where you have, say, college classes or university classes that are numbered in the dozens or hundreds of pupils per class when you're used to being in a high school where your entire high school might have 30 kids in it. So we try and give opportunities for these kids to get out and see what it means to get involved in postsecondary education, what the challenges are, and most importantly what the opportunities are, what you can get into once you've developed that skill.

We also work with the northern colleges through a partnership that's known as the northern labour market information clearinghouse, that brings educators and employers together to identify the training needs and the skill development needs, again particularly for young people but also people who are already in the job market but need upgrading, and instead of having to leave a job and move away for a few months or a year, we make sure that those opportunities are offered as ongoing learning. We also spend a lot of time working with industry and our educational institutions in many areas, making sure that the courses that are offered are the most appropriate. Industry also is very involved in a partnership way in our bursary program.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked about training incentives and particularly mentioned the nurse practitioner program. When I talked a minute ago about skill development being a goal of NADC, our bursary program is probably primarily directed toward health care professionals and probably is one of the most needed and, unfortunately, one of the more difficult skill groups to attract. The nurse practitioner program has been for quite a number of years a well-accepted program in many of the northern aboriginal communities. There was a pilot program established in the early 1990s in the town of Rainbow Lake and in Red Earth to see what would be involved to improve the skills of a super-qualified nurse to work in the communities and see what kind of services could be delivered. We recognize that there are limits to the level of service that can be delivered in a small, remote community, but we think it's essential that the highest level of expertise possible is still recruited, and recruitment is one of the challenges that we're faced with.

NADC is highly involved in a northern awareness program that helps employers, in this case health care employers and regional health authorities, to allow potential employees to find out what it's like living in the north, what the opportunities and, you know, without sugarcoating, what the challenges are of being a pioneer in some of our communities, and secondly, as I mentioned just a few minutes ago, ongoing training, because that's very important to many professionals. You don't want to become stagnant at a particular level of training. If you can remain in a job that you might enjoy but need some assistance in getting some ongoing training, that would be one of the areas that we're working with.

So I think that answers the questions that were addressed to me, Mr. Chairman. With that, I'll turn it back to you.

Ms Calahasen: We'll answer in writing all the questions that we haven't been able to answer.

The Deputy Chair: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense $21,603,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following department.

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: operating expense, 21,603,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, as previously discussed with opposition House leaders, I would seek unanimous consent of the Assembly to revert to Introduction of Bills to allow for the first reading consideration of Bill 40, the appropriation of main estimates.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Bills

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Bill 40 Appropriation Act, 2003

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 40, the Appropriation Act, 2003. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of the bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 40 read a first time]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 18 Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move third reading of Bill 18, Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill 18, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003: there are still a number of questions I have outstanding in regard to this legislative initiative, and until those answers come forward it would be very difficult, impossible as a matter of fact, to support this bill. There are many, many questions left, certainly, whenever one considers that past headlines suggested that in the province of Alberta the laws and the regulations are top of the field as far as attracting investment to this province for resource development.

When one compares this legislation to the similar piece of legislation that was introduced earlier in the Legislative Assembly of British Columbia and that research indicates has become law, the B.C. legislation certainly addressed the ownership uncertainties surrounding coal bed gas, or coal bed methane as we know it. If the purpose of that legislation in the sister province of B.C. was to promote economic activity in that province by removing any uncertainty that surrounds entitlement to coal bed gas underlying both Crown and freehold lands in the province, I think we should have done the same here, and I'm not sure that this legislation has achieved that.

I certainly had many questions in regard to this at committee, and I'm astonished that there was no attempt made to answer those. I can only contemplate why, but we need to ensure that we have an investment climate that is going to attract players to this province with coal bed methane development in mind. Now, I don't know why these questions could not have been answered. I think they were valid.

I understand that in the recent past there were in this province many landowners and some rural politicians that called for a greater openness in the development of what they considered was Alberta's newest, biggest, brightest energy source, but they were surprised that a major conference on the subject of coal bed methane had been declared off limits to the media. The media had been barred, and some members of the public had to pay at least $1,700 to attend the conference.

I think the province of Alberta government has to step up to the table or at third reading here and present the facts in regard to Bill 18 and how it's going to affect in one way or another the development of the coal bed methane industry in this province. It is astonishing. The future is, I think, very bright for that industry. As I said earlier, Mary Griffiths, a Pembina Institute policy analyst, is working on a report. Certainly, I think that in a timely fashion that will be made public. She estimates that there could be potentially 10 times as much coal bed methane in the plains and foothills regions of western Canada as there is in the remaining established reserves of conventional natural gas as we know it in this province. There are many people from all across this province that are very anxious to see this industry develop and develop in a sound way. The questions that the Official Opposition put forward in committee are not answered and at the same time this legislation is going to become law. I would at this time, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion be very anxious to know when this act will be proclaimed and when these laws, or this lack of laws in this case, are going to be promoted.

Now, with that, Mr. Speaker, there's not much else we on this side of the Assembly can do but express our disappointment. In conclusion, again I would have to hold to this view, maintain this view, that Bill 18, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, is not what the coal bed methane industry needs at this point in this province, and I would fully expect that the answers to my questions should be part of the public record.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow to close debate.

Ms DeLong: Yes. I would like to say, first of all, that yes, Alberta does have a very positive future when it comes to coal bed methane, but please remember that coal bed methane is just the sexy new expression for natural gas that happens to be in coal. The really interesting part is over on the scientific side of things in terms of the possibility of putting CO₂ down there and being able to get lots of coal bed methane or what we've always known of here for 20 or 30 years as natural gas. It happens to be in coal beds instead of in sandstone or something else like that. In terms of us getting natural gas out and the possibility of getting revenues into the pockets of Albertans, yes, it's an exciting new future, but I'm afraid it's just natural gas. The royalty system that we've set up will apply to it, so there isn't any special thing here that has to be done in terms of our royalties.

I move that we now vote on third reading of Bill 18.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a third time]

Bill 20
Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation
Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Hlady: Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of Bill 20.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments on Bill 20, the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2003. This is primarily a housekeeping bill. It does update the act, which was first introduced in 1956 and hasn't been updated since 1980. It certainly allows the corporation greater flexibility to fulfill its mandate, and it allows it to engage in loans without the purchase of securities from local authorities.

So with those few comments, I think it's an excellent bill. It modernizes the bill, and I would encourage all members to support this bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm afraid that I can't concur with my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry. I think that there are in fact many beneficial aspects to this bill, but the concern that I have – and it ought to be a concern to the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry as well given his strong performance in challenging the government's plans for P3s in question period; he's been very consistently going after the Minister of Infrastructure on that particular point, and we agree with him – is that the Municipal Financing Corporation, which has been established to provide low-cost, reliable financing for municipal governments, may in fact be asked to extend provincial financing of P3s to nonmunicipal sources.

I'm not alone in having that concern, Mr. Speaker. AUMA and other stakeholders have expressed concern that sections 1(e)(i) and (ii) appear to open up the possibility that private companies through P3s could borrow from the same pool of money that's supposed to be set aside for public projects only. The alderman from St. Albert, Mr. Burrows, said: in my mind, it's a private-sector subsidy, and I don't think we should support it. Mayor Plain of St. Albert said: the amendment puts the fund and its low interest at risk because of the potential for failure on the part of private-sector companies. That was reported in the St. Albert Gazette.

This is a serious concern as far as we're concerned, Mr. Speaker. Mr. George Rogers has written expressing concern with the lack of consultation that urban municipalities received prior to the introduction of Bill 20, and it says that they're particularly disappointed in their "exclusion from consultation given our specific request to Alberta Finance last year to have the structure and governance of AMFC reviewed and discussed with our Association." This letter was sent to the Premier on the 31st of March of this year. So it may be, Mr. Speaker, that some of these points have been addressed in debate earlier and I have not picked them up from Hansard, in which case I would ask some hon. members to rise and set the record straight for my benefit, but it is a serious concern.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation has been an excellent institution in this province and has contributed in a tremendous way to all sorts of wonderful things in this province that have been developed by municipalities. It has been a very, very effective tool for municipalities in order to build the kinds of structures, infrastructure, and so on that have provided a high quality of life for their citizens. It's an institution that needs to be protected and strengthened and safeguarded, and I trust that the government is committed to doing that as well.

Now, if some hon. member can set the record straight with respect to the potential use of this source of financing by private organizations in the P3 program, then I'll be happy to support the bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to close debate.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to clarify for the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview had asked during committee the same question. At that time, I had answered that the proper understanding of that particular situation is the fact that, no, private corporations would not be able to borrow under that even though that concern had been raised. The reason that that won't be allowed is because you have to be a shareholder of the corporation, and those are the public bodies that are named in there, being regional health authorities, being schools, being the municipalities themselves. Those are the organizations that can, and under regulation it will be controlled that a private corporation could never be a shareholder; therefore, it would never have the right to borrow from the corporation. So it's protected that way, and the private sector will not be able to ever raise any capital through AMFC.

I hope that clarifies it for the member, and I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a third time]

Bill 25
Class Proceedings Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I move third reading of Bill 25, the Class Proceedings Act.

This act will allow class actions to be allowed under the Alberta Rules of Court, where multiple plaintiffs can file one action with one representative plaintiff, thereby freeing up the courts from dealing with multiple cases on the same cause of action. There having been no amendments proposed at any stage of this bill or constructive criticism of this bill either in second reading or in committee, I would ask that all members support Bill 25, the Class Proceedings Act.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I noticed with interest that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder had spoken that there had been no constructive criticism of this particular bill, but certainly there have been concerns expressed not only in the course of debate in this Assembly but by Albertans as well. There are those who think that this new bill will stifle access to justice.

Now, we in this province certainly can use a form of class action legislation. There's no doubt about that. We discussed earlier in debate the whole issue of pine shakes and how people had to address their concerns through representative action. Certainly, Bill 25 will enable people to engage in class action lawsuits here instead of having to go to another jurisdiction to do them. B.C. was a choice location for citizens who were contemplating class action. There was a small cottage industry in the legal profession that had been established there to deal with class action lawsuits.

One only has to consider this province and what's going on with some of the frustrations that have been expressed with regard to the intensive livestock operations. It's in yesterday's New York Times. It was quite an interesting article about how American landowners adjacent to the same sorts of setups, these ILOs, were launching class action lawsuits. Hopefully that won't happen here, but certainly a bill like this would give citizens that opportunity or, as the government members so fondly say, give them that choice. It's another choice; it's another option that they can exercise. But there are several parts of this bill that I think warrant comment at this time in third reading.

Now, when you consider that we've been waiting for this form of legislation, Mr. Speaker, for quite some time – the former Member for Calgary-Buffalo had been asking for class action legislation, and the current Member for Edmonton-Centre, the justice critic, had been asking the government to implement class action up through 2001 – we on this side of the House would really like to support this legislation, but certainly there are some outstanding questions on the bill as presented.

Whenever we look at the bill, one of the most contentious parts – and perhaps this can be further explained – is that when we consider that costs are awarded under the rules of the courts, that means that in Alberta costs can really only be recovered in a meritorious outcome. Now, this could be a problem for some people. Many experts have commented on this legislation. Certainly members of the Alberta Law Reform Institute have expressed the feeling that there is no basis for some of the concerns, but for others there is. Now, we can only wait, as I understand it, and see what happens with this legislation.

In conclusion – and this gets back to the whole issue of pine shakes and where those citizens would have to go – Alberta does have what is called rule 42 representative actions, and that is winding its way through the court. However, this has been interpreted as not being sufficient for dealing with class action type lawsuits, and this is why this bill at this time may be a step in the right direction, but we will certainly see how it works out as far as access for Albertans goes. Bill 25 will allow for citizens to sue for costs similar to other actions which are present in Alberta, but it should be noted that B.C., who has no cost scheme, is actually looking at getting out of the process, and perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder could update the Assembly on that.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude at this time my remarks on Bill 25, the Class Proceedings Act. I can only hope that this works out in the best interests of all citizens, and certainly I hope that this bill will not limit access to justice, as some have expressed that concern.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak at third reading to Bill 25. This is a potentially good piece of legislation that has in fact been ruined by some of the details contained in the bill, which renders it quite useless for many of the purported purposes that the legislation has. Now, it is certainly a positive thing to allow for class action suits. There are many cases when large groups of people have had some similar negative effect by someone and would benefit by taking action either as a group or some individual or individuals on behalf of a much larger number of individuals who have been affected negatively in some way. That should give them recourse in the courts. But the devil is in the details, and of course the financial arrangements in undertaking lawsuits of this kind have a significant effect on who is able to do it and when, and in this case it is not people with modest means who are advantaged.

Now, despite recommendations from the Alberta Law Reform Institute to the contrary, Bill 25 allows costs to be awarded against representative plaintiffs; that is, the individual who initiates the action and with whom other plaintiffs join. Given that these suits are very often against large corporations or the government, the defendants are likely to expend significant dollar amounts in their defense, and it is unreasonable to expect that individuals of modest means would be prepared to risk bankruptcy in the face of having to pay such significant costs. Allowing cost awards against a representative plaintiff would therefore deter any such action from being initiated in practice. So the government through this act has created the situation where in principle, in theory, individuals can initiate lawsuits on behalf of significant groups of individuals in the hopes that they will all adhere and benefit by the action, but in practice, Mr. Speaker, the financial risks rule it out and make the beneficial aspects of the legislation unavailable.

There have been news articles suggesting that the government is protecting itself and its big corporate friends by bringing in this piece of legislation. For example, on March 9 an op-ed piece by Mindelle Jacobs of the Edmonton Sun says:

If the province is truly interested in promoting a user-friendly justice system, it will revamp its embarrassing class-action bill.

The goal of such legislation is simple – streamlining the process by which large numbers of people with a common complaint can sue an alleged wrongdoer.

Instead of numerous plaintiffs bringing separate suits over the same matter against a defendant, one person acts as a representative plaintiff in a collective case.

This is “not a revolutionary concept,” she says.

Ontario and Quebec brought in such laws years ago. More recently, B.C., Saskatchewan, Newfoundland and Manitoba have followed suit.

Now [apparently] Alberta has jumped on the bandwagon.

She continues, and I think this is the important point, Mr. Speaker:

Unlike the other provinces that allow class-action suits, Alberta plans to force plaintiffs who launch the collective suits to pay all the costs of litigation.

It means that Joe Albertan, a representative plaintiff who might win a couple of thousand dollars in damages if he’s successful, could be on the hook for, say, $100,000 if he loses.

The province’s legislation ignores a major recommendation by the Alberta Law Reform Institute (ALRI), which wanted a no-cost process.

In a lengthy report on the issue in 2000, the ALRI recommended that losing parties not be liable for costs unless there has been frivolous conduct, unnecessary applications to delay the proceedings or exceptional circumstances.

The bill, as it is currently written, will effectively scare off anyone thinking of starting a class-action suit. We might as well have no class-action legislation at all, for all the assistance it will provide . . . plaintiffs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar raised the question about the thousands of Albertans who’ve tried to sue the government over rotting pine shakes, but individual lawsuits are still dragging on. Here’s something interesting. Clint Docken, the head of the Calgary law firm that handles such cases, says: what person in their right mind would put forward a claim if they are facing the possibility of paying a huge cost award well beyond what they stand to gain by winning? He continues: they’re wasting their time if they make representative plaintiffs liable for costs.

Mr. Speaker, this is a fatal flaw in this piece of legislation. It stacks the deck against plaintiffs and makes it clear that the chill that exists over this legislation will be similar to the chill felt by thousands of Albertans turning down their thermostats and their electricity use in order to survive high energy prices in this province. I think that the government wants to have it both ways. It wants to have a situation where on the books there is some seemingly progressive legislation allowing for class action suits and in practice they and their friends are well protected from the practical threat of class action suits. The people of Alberta are not well served by legislation that is structured in this way, and unfortunately I cannot support this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to close debate.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in committee, the reason that Bill 25 does not have a fund provided for plaintiffs is that the general practice in Alberta is that costs follow the cause. Successful plaintiffs are able to recover their court costs from the unsuccessful party. Similarly, successful defendants who fend off a lawsuit, be it a class action or otherwise, are able to recover their court costs from the unsuccessful plaintiff. This is the normalcy in Alberta, and Bill 25 does nothing to change the normal provision for costs. Also existing in Alberta is the discretion of a judge to not award costs if it would be unduly hard on the plaintiff, so there is that discretion.

I think that this is good legislation. The reason we chose this model is that the last thing we want is a cottage industry for frivolous or unmeritorious lawsuits. So this is the model that we chose. Costs follow the cause, and I ask all members to vote in favour of Bill 25.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a third time]

Corrections Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Solicitor General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Solicitor General I’d move Bill 26, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2003, for third reading.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have very extensive comments on this bill, but I’ll keep them to myself tonight. I don’t think this bill is going to achieve what is intended, what the hope is. I mean, I will end up supporting it and I know the critic from Edmonton-Centre will support it, but I think we all recognize that it’s not going to have the impact that’s desired. There’s no real provision within this legislation for harm reduction within the prison system, the provision of things like bleach kits or needle exchanges or condoms or provisions that accept the reality of life, as it’s explained to me, in prisons. Having never been in prison, I can only go secondhand and hope that it always stays that way.

My understanding is that zero tolerance policies have been attempted in many jurisdictions and that one way or another the drugs get past the prison guards and around the prison walls, and we end up with abuse in the prison system, which raises all kinds of health problems. While we can make efforts at zero tolerance – and we should make a best effort at that – the prison system is porous, and nobody that I know of has been able to plug all the holes that allow the flow of drugs into prisons. So zero tolerance alone isn’t going to work.

We should be looking realistically at other provisions and taking other steps, and those are not taken in this bill. They’re not provided for in this bill, nor are any steps provided in the bill to recognize that because of the relatively short stays that most prisoners have in jail, if they are addicted to drugs when they go in, they’re going to be still addicted when they come out. They may only be in a very few weeks, and especially if we’re not providing drug rehabilitation programs, they will not have recovered.

So this bill I suppose is an admirable gesture, but it’s surely going to miss the mark. We’ll support it for its effort, I guess, but not for its likely success.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 26, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2003. This bill is misguided. This bill is directed, much like the previous Solicitor General’s decision to take away colour TVs from inmates, not at correcting anything or assisting anything behind the walls of the prison system but is in fact directed at the public and is playing upon the prejudices that exist with respect to people who are offenders.

The problem with the punitive approach that the government takes, the prescriptive, directive approach, is that it doesn’t produce the results that are promised to the public. When the government talks tough about people behind bars, it probably helps its popularity, perhaps considerably, among many sections of the population, but I think if the population had a better understanding of some of the aspects of corrections policy, they would be much more critical of what the government is doing.

Now, for a number of years, Mr. Speaker, I chaired a committee of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities that dealt with corrections policy. It was co-chaired by a deputy commissioner of Corrections Canada and included representatives of municipalities across the country as well as Corrections Canada and the National Parole Board. During the course of this committee's work we toured a number of federal corrections facilities including the Edmonton Max, where we got to witness a riot, not caused by our attendance that day; the Kingston Max; the women's prison; several of the new, modern women's correctional facilities; Stony Mountain prison in Manitoba; and a number of others as well as observing parole hearings and so on.

It's clear that almost everybody that goes into prison, Mr. Speaker, comes out again and rejoins the community. It is also clear that an enlightened harm reduction program pays far greater benefits than this kind of approach, which is not designed to actually improve the health conditions and the rehabilitation potential within facilities. It is rather designed to win votes.

It's clear that corrections staff that are engaged in and aware of what's going on within the particular institution and have connections and interactions with the people confined there on an ongoing basis know more of what's going on and have more ability to control things. However, it's clear that even in a maximum security penitentiary people are not monitored and cannot be monitored every second of the time that they're there. There are many, many activities that take place that are out of the view of corrections officials, unless individuals are placed in solitary confinement, and that is virtually the only way that these things can be controlled.

So here's the misguided element of the bill: it believes that just by getting tougher in a prison, you're going to be able to change prison behaviour which is well established, and persistent attempts like this over many, many years have failed to change it. So what's happening here is simply an attempt to repeat the same things that have been tried over and over again and expecting different results. Well, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that they're not going to get different results.

So, at best, this legislation is going to be ineffective. If it's ineffective and if there are better, more enlightened ways of reducing the incidence of HIV and addictions and other diseases that spread in the prison population, then we can reduce the impact on the outside communities when these people are inevitably released.

The government is missing an opportunity. There are programs, particularly in European countries, that have higher rates of success than what is being proposed here or certainly better rates of success than you have in the United States, for example, which has one of the worst prison systems in the industrialized world and incarcerates more of its citizens than virtually any other country in the world.

So in attempting to replicate in a knee-jerk way the American approach, we're going to very likely get the same results as their system. That means higher rates of HIV, higher rates of drug use, higher rates of other diseases, and correspondingly greater impacts on the community as individuals are released. I believe that what the government is doing here is in fact going to rebound upon them and, unfortunately, rebound upon Albertans, because they have such a poor approach.

Here are some things, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has been ranked 14th out of 16 Canadian jurisdictions for measures taken to prevent the spread of HIV and hepatitis. I think that if the government wanted to have more positive programs to help people deal with their addictions and adopt safer practices, then these would have a much stronger effect and a more positive effect on the communities in which these institutions are located.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate that I will not be supporting Bill 26, because I think that it takes an outdated approach, an approach that's been tried repeatedly and has produced results opposite to what the government claims for this bill. So on the face of it it would seem that the government is not serious about the goals that this bill purports to have, and I would urge all hon. members to oppose Bill 26, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2003.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Solicitor General to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a third time]

Bill 28

Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Coutts: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs I'd like to move third reading of Bill 28, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in Bill 28, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2003, there are some worthwhile legislative initiatives, but when one looks at what has happened with FOIP legislation in this province since it was passed on October 1, 1995, to say that it has fostered openness and accountability would be an embellishment.

Now, if we look at some of the amendments that were proposed at committee by this side of the Assembly, if they had been incorporated into Bill 28, then it would be, I believe, acceptable because we would be dealing with first and foremost the issue of fees, which this government expresses no interest in dealing with. If we look at section 20, it is particularly important from the perspective on this side of the Assembly that we address the single most formidable obstacle to public accountability and transparency in governance, and that is fees for access. The fees are far too high. When one looks at the negative impact of high fees, this impact is not only felt by opposition members but members of the general public, members of the media. This is not what this legislation was designed to do. One can only go a short distance from here to the Legislature Library and just see how ridiculous this fee schedule is that is presented in the back of the act. Why are always the maximum amounts in the fee schedule charged?

We look at the Legislature Library in April 1995. This bill became law in October, yet in the Legislature Library copying is 10 cents, no charges for MLAs or MLA staff or Assembly staff or Alberta public servants for copying related to work. All of a sudden we have with this act a government that's using high fees, and they're using the fee schedule to increase these fees to the point where people just get frustrated and walk away. It is simply wrong.

Mr. Mason: Similar to the class action bill.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands said, "Similar to the class action bill." In a lot of ways I believe the hon.

member is certainly correct in that observation and that comment.

When we look at the committee that worked on having another look at the freedom of information and protection of privacy laws in this province, why is the government now prepared to not implement all the recommendations of the Select Special FOIP Act Review Committee, the final report which was tabled in the Assembly last November?

Now, there are some recommendations outstanding that include the following, and I think that at third reading it's very important that we mention these. These are not all of them, but certainly there was a discussion in that committee on the designation of delegated administrative organizations, affectionately known by the government as DAOs, as public bodies. There were certainly discussions regarding the inclusion of the RCMP as a public body so that Albertans in communities like Red Deer and Grande Prairie have the same information rights as Albertans in Edmonton, Calgary, Medicine Hat, and Lethbridge. It is noteworthy that Red Deer and Grande Prairie still use the RCMP, the Mounted Police, as a municipal police force.

We had a discussion in the Assembly recently in regard to the denial of registry information to private parking lot operators. Harmonization with the Health Information Act and the new personal information protection act: these were issues that were discussed at that committee. Also that the issues relating to the collection, use, and disclosure from public registries be revisited with new private-sector privacy legislation. There was also a discussion on the review of guardian by the information management and privacy office. There was also the discussion to have a review of fees, but where is this going? Certainly, no one has enlightened this Legislative Assembly if one looks back into Hansard to see where that review is going. I hope that issue has not been dropped and now we're going to have to wait such a long, long time, to the year 2010, before another similar committee is going to be struck to look at this. If the amendment that was proposed at committee had been accepted, it would have been 2006 when we could have at least another look at this.

There was also a discussion around the development of a database of access requests similar to foilaw.net. I don't know what happened to that and why it's not included in this Bill 28. Again, there was a great deal of discussion around this issue: why do we continue to give special, preferential treatment to private universities, private colleges, and private schools by exempting them from FOIP? At this time in committee, Mr. Speaker, those are some of the issues that were discussed at the select special committee, yet I don't see them anywhere in this bill.

Now, if we look at how important freedom of information is to Albertans and how often it is used, it covers 1,500 public bodies. There were 2,200 requests in 2002, and that was up slightly from 2001. There were 1,250 requests for personal information and 950 requests for general information. Only 15 percent of general requests were granted fully; 9 percent of personal requests were granted fully. The province collected $54,000 in fees last year, and the province dismissed $2,800 in fees last year, waived them. Recognizing that the application fee for general information is $25, I thought we could perhaps set that as the bar and limit all searches to that cost, but that wasn't how members opposite saw this. Now, 81 percent of requests were responded to in 30 days, and that at first glance would seem to be a significant achievement, but that's just basically generating a letter. Some of these requests go on and on and on for long periods of time.

It is interesting to note that the Department of Environment is the most targeted department for general information. Not the Department of Energy or the Department of Health and Wellness but the Department of Environment. That indicates to this member that citizens have a concern. They want to use FOIP legislation to hold their government accountable, and they are concerned about the direction that we are going as far as environmental protection is concerned in this province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important for all hon. members of this Assembly to again have a look at the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science: How Much Administrative Secrecy? I would like to quote at this time.

Mrs. Nelson: Please don't.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Bill 28 now.

This is a quote that all hon. members could consider.

Parliament and the public cannot hope to call the Government to account without an adequate knowledge of what is going on; nor can they hope to participate in the decision-making process and contribute their talents to the formation of policy and legislation if that process is hidden from view.

Now, this applies, unfortunately, to this government's attitude towards FOIP. I can't understand why this government doesn't live up to the promises that were made in regard to FOIP and allow all citizens, including the opposition, access to information. It would certainly make our job easier, and it would make this government better because we would be able, Mr. Speaker, to hold them accountable. There are a lot of tax dollars at issue here, and we need to ensure on behalf of the public that that money is being well spent.

Mr. Speaker, at the urging of my colleagues Bill 28 is unfortunately unacceptable in this form. For one to say that this is an improvement of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act would be wrong. Certainly, there are merits, as we discussed earlier, in regard to this legislation, but Bill 28 does not update access and privacy issues. At this time I would be derelict in my duty if I were to support this legislation in this form.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to close debate.

Mr. Coutts: I call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a third time]

Bill 29

Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed I'd move Bill 29, the Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003, for third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time, third reading of Bill 29, the Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003, there are some issues that I would like to get on the record, but first the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed has been quite gracious with her time in regard to this bill. It seems like months ago – actually, it was the third week in March – when this bill was first introduced to the Assembly and we debated it.

To level the playing field for mortgage default insurance providers by ensuring that all providers have the ability to sue borrowers for any balance owing them when there's a default on a high-ratio mortgage is the object of this bill, but in light of some of the questions that the Official Opposition had in regard to this, to say that the answers have been satisfactory certainly would not be true. There are still some outstanding questions surrounding this legislative initiative. There have been stakeholders who have expressed some cautions about this, and at this time I think it would be inappropriate to support this legislation.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader to close debate?

Bill 31

Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 31, the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2003.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments on Bill 31 in third reading. I didn't get these on the record earlier, so I'd love the opportunity this evening. I would hate to think that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had more to say on a bill than I did.

Mr. Mason: We shudder at the thought.

Mr. Bonner: Right. So do I.

I want to first of all thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for the opportunity to sit down with him and discuss the bill. It was appreciated. He did address the concerns we had. Certainly, this bill will allow more access for people to vote.

One of the concerns we had and I think we still have is in regard to special ballots. Our concerns there, of course, are that we would like to see more accountability on behalf of the Chief Electoral Officer or one of his polling officers to verify exactly that the person who says they are voting is voting, that that person is verified as the person who is voting and has marked the ballot.

I think this is a bill that will address some of the universal issues that we do have with elections and the voting procedure, and I would ask all members to support this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti to close debate.

Mr. Graydon: I don't have anything further. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a third time]

Bill 34

Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and take this opportunity to move third reading of Bill 34, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2003.

During the Committee of the Whole discussion of this bill the hon.

Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie referred to the 4,984 cervids that were sent for testing for chronic wasting disease, or CWD, as we will call it. This was a fourfold increase from the previous year, so I commend the member for her excellent research. Mr. Speaker, this increase in animals sent for testing is a direct result of the increase in the demand for deer and elk meat both internationally and domestically. The testing process only pays out compensation once a positive result is found. Testing doesn't provide any incentive to any producer other than allowing for increased confidence in the industry. This industry has done a great deal of work to develop markets for alternative meats, and they've done a great job. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie knows that all domesticated cervids that die on farms and all cervids that are slaughtered for meat sales in Alberta must be tested for CWD. It is the law here.

Similarly, if – and forbid it happens in Alberta – there is an outbreak of CWD, the federal government through the Canadian Food Inspection Agency is responsible for the control of the outbreak as well as any payments to producers for loss of their animals. CWD is a very serious disease, and I sincerely hope that it never gets a foothold in this province.

The hon. member had some questions about particular portions of the act, which I will answer briefly now. The changes to section 5 will allow a cervid producer greater flexibility to manage their herd. We're also eliminating a portion of legislation that cannot be adhered to nor enforced as an animal cannot be registered until it has been identified.

As far as the changes to section 9, the minister will not be making provisions for setting animals free. These changes simply allow producers the ability to take a young animal, before it is registered, to see a veterinarian.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the changes to section 12 mean that all animals must be registered and identified before they are sold. The inventory system in Alberta is such that each animal is tracked and inventories conducted to ensure that only domesticated cervids are bought and sold.

Let me reiterate in closing, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of the changes that are being made to the Livestock Industry Diversification Act are administrative ones that will make it easier for diversified livestock producers to do business in Alberta.

So, Mr. Speaker, Bill 34 is a step in the right direction for an industry that deserves our support, and I know that this industry is working hard to meet any challenges they face.

I encourage all members to support this bill. Thank you.

Dr. Taft: Well, I'd like to thank the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for cranking up the noise level and waking everybody up here, but despite his valiant attempt at convincing the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and, through her, the rest of us to support this bill, we're going to be opposing this on a variety of principles. Better luck next time.

Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a third time]

Bill 35

Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on the third reading of Bill 35, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003. As previously mentioned in the House, the proposed amendments in this bill would strengthen controls regarding the purchase and sale of tax-exempt tobacco at duty-free stores, over the Internet, and through the Alberta Indian tax exemption program. These changes will help level the playing field for all businesses that sell tobacco.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to say that there are no further points raised during discussion in Committee of the Whole. As such, I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 35 because I know that in addition to the points just mentioned, it will also further discourage smoking, making Alberta a healthier province in which to live.

As the objective of this bill is simply clear, I would like to request that all the hon. members of this House allow me to call the question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. That was a fine introduction to third reading here. This bill really does just close some loopholes, and it hopefully will further reduce the number of smokers in Alberta. It's pretty tough to argue with a bill that closes tax loopholes and reduces smoking, so I think we'll be wholeheartedly supporting this.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort to close debate.

Mr. Cao: I would like to close the debate and call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a third time]

11:30head: Government Bills and Orders
head: Second Reading

Bill 42
Electoral Divisions Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move Bill 42, the Electoral Divisions Act, for second reading.

The bill that's being presented to the House is in accordance with the motion, which was approved by the House earlier in this session, accepting the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. While many members of the House have expressed misgivings about certain aspects of the report, I think that by passing the motion, the House indicated that while we can all address boundaries in our own individual ways and find better ways to do the job, it's a difficult job. The boundaries commission did go through the process, held the hearings, and did the job that was asked of them, and the House concurred in that job. It is then incumbent on us to introduce the bill in the form that the Electoral Boundaries Commission recommended.

As I indicated earlier when I moved the bill for first reading, there will be amendments brought forward in committee. The amendments that will be brought forward in committee will be within the parameters of the report, within the context and philosophy of the report, and will be simply related to changes of name or amendments which don't move boundaries significantly outside the ranges that were set by the report but serve to unite communities which ought to remain united or otherwise deal with minor issues but issues which are of major concern to the localities involved.

I've had some discussion with members of the opposition to let them know the types of amendments that we'll be bringing forward and to invite any of those similar types of amendments from them to be included in a package of amendments, and we'll look forward to discussing same in committee. But for second reading the bill as it is presented totally complies with the Electoral Boundaries Commission report, which was accepted by resolution of this House.

I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 42 at second reading at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:33 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 13, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/05/13

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Dear God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Thy guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Agnieszka Wyka, who is employed in my office here at the Legislature as a summer student. She is seated in the members' gallery. I'd like her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce and welcome a very special and distinguished group seated in the Speaker's gallery. They are called the CCAF Fellows and are participants in a nine-month international fellowship program based in Ottawa. They are visiting us today as part of a tour of western Canada. The fellowship program is a collaboration between the office of the Auditor General of Canada, the Canadian Comprehensive Auditing Foundation, and the Auditor General of Quebec. The program is sponsored by the Canadian International Development Agency and is designed to expand knowledge and understanding of public-sector accounting and auditing as practised in Canada to help participants address auditing issues in their home environment.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce Mrs. Maria Guevara from Chile; Mr. Steven LaRocque from the Dominica; Mr. Hewa Samarawerra from Sri Lanka; Mrs. Mukda Kaiyarit from Thailand; Ms Narjess Sellami from Tunisia; Mrs. Donna Bigelow, program co-ordinator, international affairs, office of the Auditor General of Canada in Ottawa; Ms Kimberley Speek, administrative co-ordinator with CCAF in Ottawa; and Lori Trudgeon, communications co-ordinator for the office of the Auditor General of Alberta. Again, they are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we've simply been invaded today by a group of wonderful young school kids from Kitscoty, and they inform me that their teachers have offered to take them camping for three days after their visit here, so school isn't like it used to be. They're accompanied today by their teachers Mr. Kim Aitken and Mrs. Eleanor Parr and their parent helpers Mr. Wayne Cundliffe, Mr. Jason Simpson, Mr. Donald Kent, Mrs. Sharon Williams, Ms Chris Reimer, Mrs. Suzanne Hutchinson, and Mrs. Maxine Jones. I would ask the parents and the students to all rise and please accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members two employees of the government here in Edmonton. I would just say that basically life is certainly always full of changes, including for my colleague MLA for Vermilion-Lloydminster and myself, but I'm very pleased to introduce to you Warren Chandler, who has been our assistant in the Legislature for the past year and a half. We've certainly enjoyed working with him, but he's now moving to a new position with the Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

I'd like to very favourably introduce Leah Ritz, our new assistant, who is a recent graduate of Carleton University who majored in marketing and minored in psychology. She has worked in the House of Commons for Stockwell Day, MP for Okanagan-Coquihalla, and I would say that there certainly is political blood running through her veins. Her father is Gerry Ritz, MP for Battlefords-Lloydminster.

I would like to invite these two young people to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly three friends and co-workers who are seated in the members' gallery. They are Amy and Campbell Mackenzie and Laura Harrison. They are co-workers in many ways, and I would like to ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with a very special introduction. Several weeks ago a young boy in grade 2 wrote me a very nicely printed letter expressing his concern with staff losses at his school. He was concerned about the fate of his teachers and especially of the school's librarian. I was so impressed with the letter, I presented it to this Assembly, and today I'm able to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the boy who wrote it. His name is Joseph Landy, and he is in the public gallery. Would you please stand, Joseph? Thank you. With him are his parents, Francis and Bennett. Would the rest of the family and his guests also rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Doreen Vanderstoop. Doreen is a parent advocate with PACE, Parents Advocating for Catholic Education. She's part of the group that was here earlier this morning to present the letter of letters, and it spread from one end of the mall to the other. Doreen is in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask her to stand and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two introductions today. I'm very pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a strong supporter of public education who traveled up from Calgary this morning to join with other parents at 11 o'clock on the steps of the Legislature to make a statement on the underfunding of education in this province. She is here now in the Assembly to watch it work. Carol Bazinet is a concerned parent and president of Calgary Association of Parents and School Councils and a longtime advocate for children and public education. I would now ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I am truly delighted to introduce two very special individuals this afternoon. They are my constituent Mike Kalisiak and his proud dad, Stan Kalisiak. Mike has just completed his MD program, so I guess we can call him doctor now, and he will be pursuing his further training as a dermatologist. His proud dad, Stan, has come all the way from Poland to celebrate Mike's graduation. These guests are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to now stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two guests today, Jaime Kochan and Michael Buurman. Jaime is a recent graduate from the Faculty of Education at the University of Alberta, and she has become disenchanted with the prospects in her profession in the province at the moment and has thus opted for a job in the United Kingdom.

My second guest, Michael Buurman, has completed his third year at the University of Alberta in political science. This summer, I'm happy to say, Michael will be the STEP student for the New Democrat opposition caucus. I would now ask that both Jaime and Mike stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce two people that I see sitting in the members' gallery. One is a nice young lady from Edmonton here, a bright, energetic, and very talented flautist.

Mr. Norris: Like all Edmontonians.

Mr. Coutts: Like all Edmontonians.

She's doing a few days' temporary work in the offices of Government Services here in the building this week. I'd like to introduce Sara Kalke.

Sitting beside her is a fellow that needs absolutely no introduction to the Assembly at all, Brian Hlus, who is a familiar name and a familiar face around here. They're both sitting in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them both to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today and introduce to you and through you some special guests from the town of Hinton. I have 59 great young people from the Gerard Redmond school along with their parents, helpers, and also two teachers, Ms Best and Miss Dawson. At this time I'd like them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Education Funding

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, today Edmonton public schools announced the layoff of 450 teachers. That's 10 percent of the teaching staff. Cutting the teaching staff by 10 percent is expected to increase class size by 10 percent. To the Premier: why should parents take the news that their children will have class sizes 10 percent larger next year, and what can they do about it?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't blame parents for asking what's going on. Indeed, a lot of people are asking what's going on. Since 1996 – and the Liberals know this – funding for the Edmonton public board has grown by 53 percent, almost eight times greater than the enrollment rate. Funding has grown by eight times the amount of the enrollment rate. So something is going on. What is happening here? That includes a substantial portion of increased dollars this year at a rate much higher than enrollment . . .

An Hon. Member: Keep reading.

Mr. Klein: Yes, I'm going to read it. If you would open your ears and listen . . .

Enrollment is flat. Funding is going up.

An Hon. Member: Why can't you manage?

The Speaker: The Premier has the floor.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, they have a problem managing. They have a problem listening.

The management is the school board. We have given them a 53 percent increase since 1996. Enrollment has gone up 8 percent. Enrollment this year is flat. Increased funding has been given. That is managing on our part.

Mr. Speaker, I understand from the Learning minister that this budget is preliminary. The final budget won't be handed down until June. I understand also that the Learning minister will work closely with the board to have a look at the budget to determine what is the problem here. What is the problem here with a 53 percent increase – 53 percent – when enrollment is only 8 percent? All these educated people over there can't seem to understand it. They should perhaps go back to school and learn that 53 percent does not relate to an 8 percent increase in enrollment. You know, that is simple mathematics. Some of those people are professors. They should be going back to elementary school.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: I'm going to recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition. Also, I know that there is some tradition of heckling that does go on in the parliament, but we have a large number of school kids here in the Assembly as well. So I'm going to ask for a greater attempt at decorum.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In constant dollars, there's been no increase.

To the Premier: is there any limit on how big classes can get before this government will do something about funding?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, in constant dollars, there has been an increase. The reality of the situation is a 53 percent increase since 1996. Those are real dollars. Those are not paper dollars. Those are not dollars on paper. A 53 percent increase in dollars including a fairly substantial increase in education funding this year, with enrollment this year remaining flat and enrollment generally over the last six or seven years being about 8 percent. That is constant. Those are real dollars.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition knows as well that we have struck a Commission on Learning. That Commission on Learning will report, I believe, in September. It's to study and to make recommendations to government on all aspects of education including governance, including the union situation, including classroom size, including sparsity and distance, including transportation. Virtually every component of education will be examined, and there will be recommendations apropos to the various components of education.

Hopefully, we will be able to bring about through those recommendations sustainability in education, Mr. Speaker, because that's what we all want to achieve. We want to make sure that Alberta students are getting the best education possible. We want to make sure that Alberta taxpayers are getting value for their dollars in the school system, whether they're property tax payers or whether they fund education through the general revenue fund. We want to make sure, most of all, that the system is sustainable for the future. Our approach is simply not to throw more money at the system and create deficits and debt. That is the Liberal way. That is not the Conservative way.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Learning: given that teacher layoffs in Calgary and now in Edmonton are a concern to all Albertans, why aren't they a concern to this minister, and what are you going to do about it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. They certainly are a concern to this minister, but so is our budget. So are taxpayer dollars. So is assuring that taxpayer dollars are spent in the best possible fashion.

Mr. Speaker, today at around lunchtime Edmonton public put out a scenario that I believe is the worst case scenario. They have an increase in their budget this year of $17 million for zero percent, flat enrollment. They're actually projecting about .02 percent, or about an increase of 20 students, so they're talking $17 million for an increase of 20 students. They're also talking about another $25 million that they say they're short. So $42 million for essentially the same enrollment, no new students. They've talked about closing schools, and indeed they have looked at closing some schools, which, again, will save them some money.

I had a meeting with them about the audit, yesterday morning as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, and they told me some very good things that they were doing. They were looking at their school-based budgeting. They were looking at moving those schools. They were running 92 and 94 percent on salaries down to 85 percent. But the bottom line is that there's a significant amount of dollars that are going in there. I will be working with Edmonton public over the next few weeks before they finalize their budgets, and we'll be seeing exactly how those dollars are being spent.

Postsecondary Education System

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the government broadened its attack on education to include postsecondary students. Bill 43 attacks the legitimacy of student governments. Under this act it will also remove what little protection there has been for students against skyrocketing tuition fees. To the Premier: why under Bill 43 has this Premier taken away even the small protection that postsecondary students used to have against rising tuition fees?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, absolutely nothing has been taken away. Legislation is being contemplated to make sure that that legislation is fair and equitable to the students and indeed that the 30 percent of operating cap is the right cap. If it needs to be adjusted through legislation, it will be adjusted.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm absolutely shocked at that question from this member. This is a person who is employed by the University of Lethbridge who has been actively lobbying to change the tuition fee policy. As the hon. member adequately knows, as he fully knows, the University of Lethbridge and the Lethbridge Community College, in his community, reached the 30 percent cap by doing a lot of efficiencies, by running a very good ship. The University of Lethbridge, I believe, has had a freeze for one or two years on tuition. Lethbridge Community College has had a freeze for three years when it comes to tuition. They were in the position where they were looking at things that they would have to do because the dollars were not coming in and their tuitions were significantly – significantly – lower than the rest of the system.

So, Mr. Speaker, what we are doing in the proposed legislation that is now before the Assembly, that will not be discussed further probably until the fall sitting, is we will be looking at the tuition policy. We will be looking and seeing exactly how we can fix the tuition policy so that your institution – your institution – can benefit from this, so that the institution you work for can benefit from this. What I fully anticipate is that there will be no change in the 30 percent cap, that there will be some kind of situation made for those ones that have already reached the 30 percent cap through good management. The student groups are fully aware that they will be consulted on this. They're fully aware that they will be part of the decision-making and indeed will be part of the decision-making.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. But he takes it out of legislation and puts it into regulation.

To the Minister of Learning: is it democratic for this minister to give himself the power of removing elected members of a students' union?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, one of the issues that was brought before me by the colleges and technical schools was a situation where if there was a student association that was not doing the job, if there were issues with the student association, there needed to be something done about that. We have done what the colleges said, but again the reason behind introducing the bill yesterday is so that it can sit over the summer. I talked to a representative from CAUS yesterday afternoon about this situation, and we will certainly look at it. We are open to amendments. This is to get the discussion out on the floor, get the discussion going about what is happening in postsecondary institutions right now. We will be deciding over the summer. If there are any issues from anyone in this Assembly, including the opposition, I would welcome their input on this as we continue to look at the bill over the summer.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, it's too bad he didn't consult with them first.

Is it democratic for this minister to ban strikes by faculty or graduate students or support staff at universities?

Dr. Oberg: Again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is not talking to his own institutions in his own backyard. He fully knows – he fully knows – that they were one hundred percent consulted and were in favour of this bill prior to it being brought in. I think it's about high time that the hon. member started talking to his own institutions.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 19 I asked the Premier how many more bad-news stories he had to hear before the government adequately funds Edmonton schools. In his response the Premier said: "This is . . . shameful. It is not the truth. There are no budget cuts." Only an hour and a half ago, Mr. Premier, Edmonton public announced that 450 teachers will be cut, not laid off. They were told in their schools yesterday that they will not have a job in September. Four hundred and fifty of them. My question is to the Premier. Given the cuts to teachers in Edmonton public, does the Premier still stand by his statement that there are no budget cuts?

Mr. Klein: Stand by it? Mr. Speaker, I more than stand by it. I stand up for it. How can this person, this individual who is a university professor, construe a 53 percent increase in funding to be a budget cut? How can he construe a substantial increase in funding this year - increase in funding this year – to be a budget cut? If he is representative of the kind of teaching and the kind of math being used in universities today, then those institutions or at least the teachers in those institutions need to be examined.

Dr. Massey: Again to the Premier: how can the Premier tell Edmonton parents who are losing their teachers that there are no budget cuts? How can you tell them that, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can tell them precisely this: there has been a 53 percent increase over the past six or seven years. A 53 percent increase is not a cut. That is elementary, sir. A 53 percent increase is not a cut. A cut would be a 53 percent decrease. You understand that? A decrease is when you remove money and it goes down. An increase is when you add money and it goes up. You've got that? Do you need a chalkboard? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has the floor.

Dr. Massey: If you can't see the teacher, the teacher has been cut.

My third question is to the Premier. Given that the government interference in the teachers' collective bargaining created this crisis – you started it – will the government do the right thing and end the crisis before September by adequately funding those school districts, not just Edmonton public but three other boards in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there was adequate funding provided. I understand the settlement cost them $36.8 million. We provided I believe it was $41 million.

Mr. Speaker, I take great exception to the assertion that we interfered. Indeed, we proposed an arbitration process that was through consultation with the union, with the Alberta School Boards Association. Indeed, the arbitration process involved the ATA, the teachers' union, appointing their representative, it involved the ASBA appointing their representative, and it involved the government appointing a representative. So this was not an arbitrary, dictatorial decision on the part of the government. This was a decision that was reached through consultation and with participation of the three parties involved.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Well, now it's clear, Mr. Speaker. We now know that the Tory government doesn't care about education and is content to sacrifice a generation of children at the altar of a political grudge match with teachers. School board after school board is sending teachers packing, increasing class sizes, and axing important education and community programs. The Learning minister plays the fiddle and the Premier cheers on while a once proud education system burns. My first question is to the Premier. Given that students, parents, teachers, and school board officials all agree that this government has created a crisis, when is the Premier going to stop pretending that everything is dandy, stop blaming everyone else, and acknowledge that his government has failed Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again coming from another university professor who obviously can't do his math but is either very, very shortsighted or totally blind, because there happen to be 74 of us here, and there are only two of them there.

Mr. Mason: Not for long.

Mr. Klein: Not for long? He says, "Not for long." He's absolutely right. There will be zero sitting there.

Mr. Speaker, we do our very, very best for education. A 53 percent increase over the past six or seven years is not bad. An 8 percent enrollment to be covered by a 53 percent increase I think is responsible.

I have in front of me – and there's not enough time – page after page after page of success stories, wonderful stories coming from Alberta's education system of students who are making remarkable achievements, of teachers who are making remarkable contributions, of schools that have embraced and developed tremendous spirit and camaraderie. Mr. Speaker, when I look at the students in the gallery today, I see bright, shining students, good examples of the education system.

It is so typical of the NDs and the Liberals to focus on the negative. They have absolutely nowhere else to go, so they only talk about what is wrong. But the normal Albertan, Mr. Speaker, understands what it is to try your darndest to do the right thing for Albertans. That's why there are 74 of us, and that's why there are only two of them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is either misinformed or he's out of touch. Does he really expect us to believe that parents, students, teachers, and school boards are wrong and he is right?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's not a matter of who's right or wrong. We try to do the best we possibly can. We set our budgets based on the best projections that are provided to us by the school boards and by the administration of government.

Dr. Pannu: Listen to school boards.

Mr. Klein: We do listen to school boards. As a matter of fact – and

I don't have the letter with me – it would give me a great deal of pleasure, if someone could retrieve the letter for me, to table a letter received from Don Fleming, the chair of the Edmonton public school board, right after the budget congratulating in no uncertain terms a particular MLA for bringing in such a fine and responsible budget. To paraphrase the letter, it said, "Good work; keep it up," something to that effect, and that was from the chair of the public school board. So, Mr. Speaker, people don't take it when he says that we don't listen to school boards, especially when the chair of the school board acknowledges that, indeed, we listened to them and responded to their concerns.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the Premier: how can the Premier deny that education will suffer when hundreds of teachers are being let go? How does he explain that?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. minister respond, but the budget that has been tabled is an administrative budget. I understand that the final budget won't be tabled until June. Between now and then the minister and the people in his department will be working with the school board to find out what has gone askew, particularly in light of increased funding and flat enrollments.

I'll have the minister respond as to what he intends to do.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think there needs to be a couple of things said here. First of all, the hon. member is questioning our commitment to education. In this budget what you see is a 4.9 percent increase in all of learning. You see, for example, in Edmonton public $17 million. The other point that I will make is that my personal budget for my department actually went down $4 million, so there has been less than a zero percent increase in my budget because I put every cent that was available out to the schools, out to the school boards, out to the postsecondary education institutes.

What we will be doing is working with Edmonton public. The numbers from them are just not adding up. We will be working with them over the next couple of weeks with respect to their final budgeting procedure to determine exactly what they're doing. To sum it up, they received $17 million, no new students, and they're $25 million in the hole. Mr. Speaker, there's something really wrong with that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

School Operations and Maintenance Funding

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Infrastructure. All three school boards in Highwood are experiencing great difficulties in meeting this year's school operations and maintenance budget owing to high fuel costs and low provincial allocations. The Department of Learning has a per student formula for the learning costs. Why couldn't an operations and maintenance formula which factored in the varying costs of heating fuel and electricity be part of the infrastructure formula for the operations and maintenance of our school buildings, which are under your charge?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently we do use a formula. The formula is based on so much per square foot, and that's the major component of the formula. That is to take into consideration the cleaning, the very minor repairs, the fuel, the heating, the electricity, and those types of things. Then we also add to that, based on the utilization, the second most important component, starting at a base level, and that's figuring the utilization in at 50 percent and then escalating as you move up to an 85 percent occupancy, which is considered to be a hundred percent. Then there are some other factors that come into the whole formula as well relative to distance from the shop and a few other situations.

Now, there have been suggestions – and perhaps this is what the hon. member was suggesting – that, in fact, you'd have one component that would be only for the utilities operation. We believe that school boards would much prefer to have the whole operation and maintenance rolled into one bulk sum, as we do today. There are a number of reasons for that. In fact, if you have a number of new schools, they're probably much more efficient than old ones, so to make the formula fair, you'd have to take that into consideration. We're also very anxious to encourage better utilization of the dollars as far as utilities are concerned. So unless we hear a lot more, we intend to stay with the current way where it'd be a block fund.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the Minister of Infrastructure. Mr. Minister, what plans and policies do you have in place to help school systems avoid canceling the programs for summer grounds maintenance and canceling their summer building repairs and maintenance programs in order to financially balance their overstressed operations and maintenance budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're aware that, in fact, a number of school boards are having some difficulty because of the escalating costs in utilities. I recognize that there's really not a lot of extra money available in that operating and maintenance component of their budget. We are asking all school boards to let us know what the additional costs are so we can analyze that and perhaps move forward with something in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Electricity Transmission System

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier stated that the increases for additional transmission costs for electricity would be minuscule. This government's disrespect and neglect for electricity consumers, unfortunately, continues. Last week consumers learned that they're going to be hit with another costly $2.6 billion bill over 10 years on their monthly power bill, and that does not include the construction costs for new power lines. To the Premier: who would be responsible to pay for the Alberta section of transmission lines from Fort McMurray to the U.S. border built solely for export purposes?

Mr. Klein: I don't think it would be solely for export purposes. Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy respond, but I can't see in my wildest dreams why a generator of electricity and a company responsible for transmitting would build a line here and a line there, one for Alberta and one for export to the United States. An electron is an electron is an electron, and it moves down the same wire. I'll have the hon. minister respond, but I just don't see how it would make economic sense.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I want to correct the preposterous distortions of the member that he continually makes. I don't know who's writing his questions, but he knows full well that consumers will not be faced with a transmission increase charge until, one, the EUB has determined there is a need for the line; two, the transmission company builds the line; three, they go back to the EUB and they ask for a rate of return, cost allocation, customer service. This guy is so out to lunch. There is hardly any reason at all to answer his questions – they're so preposterous – but in the interests of serving the House, as has been common knowledge for just about the last 12 months, no transmission cost will be associated to consumers in Alberta for export, period. If there is a cost on the line, it will only be for the proportion that customers use.

When he refers to consumers, Mr. Speaker, it's most important that I correct him that it is all consumers. It is businesses. It is industry. It is commercial enterprises. The residents use 11 percent of the power in Alberta. Power is four to five times more expensive than generation, so it only makes sense to have transmission that is used for the benefit of Albertans. This is to put downward pressure on electricity costs.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier: given that this government is considering joining the Regional Transmission Organization West, which is a step toward further integration with the Pacific Northwest grid of electricity in the United States, what advantages and disadvantages are there for Alberta consumers in joining this Regional Transmission Organization West?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if that question is for me, it's a question that, obviously, involves a lot of detail in its answer, and I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, RTO West is the regional transmission organization for the western United States. This is a part that British Columbia is also looking at being involved in. It's also looking at: where could Alberta fit? Are we considering joining that organization? The answer is no. The answer is that they haven't even responded with saying: "Can we get involved with it? Should we get involved with it?"

What we're looking for, Mr. Speaker, in the export principles is: firstly, do Albertans get served with the cheapest amount of electricity generation? Secondly, if more generation is produced than what is consumed, do people have an outlet for it to get it to other markets? Just as we created a tremendous supply of natural gas through the postage-stamp transmission model, we then found ways to export it by building a new pipeline. The policy in Alberta is no different. The association with other groups and RTO West, a different transmission organization, is nothing more than conjecture or speculation.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: can the Premier tell Albertans how much their electricity bills will increase each month so that they can pay the $2.6 billion additional over 10 years that they have been downloaded with as a result of the Minister of Energy's decision last week? How much every month?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister pointed out, the preamble to the question was preposterous to say the least. The increase is not predicated on that figure at all, and I'll have the minister once again explain the facts.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, if only in this House could we have the rule of Pinocchio that when you tell a mistruth, there's a physical change, this guy's nose would be over his desk.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

EPCOR/Aquila Billing Practices

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents are continually astounded at the high charges on their electricity bills when the cost of electricity is supposed to be going down. Customers have been seeing higher costs and new charges on their EPCOR/Aquila bills. Now when energy rate riders are supposed to expire at the end of this year, many of my constituents are being told by EPCOR/Aquila that their rate riders will extend through 2004. My question to the Minister of Energy: can the minister explain why and how this is happening?

Mr. Smith: In fact, what we do know is that the concept of deregulation works because in the service areas not served by Aquila/EPCOR we have seen positive downward pressure on electricity prices. We have seen the increase of some 3,000 megawatts of electricity without adding any consumer debt, as is the case across Canada. In this particular service area there have been commercial failings, Mr. Speaker. That has resulted in 12,500 customers falling between the cracks out of a total population of 350,000. That's EPCOR's responsibility. They have applied to the board, and they have received permission to charge that. I'm in the process of phoning EPCOR today and saying: folks, if you really want to compete in the marketplace, maybe you can do something for the customer for a change and forgive those rates.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, also to the Minister of Energy. Insofar as what you've said, could I just further ask you: is this decision by EPCOR and the EUB appealable or reversible?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, this is a process that was in place under the regulated rate option and under the regulated rate system. In fact, when people get the opportunity with the passage of Bill 3 to make choices on how to buy electricity, to buy it combined with their gas, to make these contract decisions, they won't have to worry about a utility coming back and asking them for more money. They'll get one contract, one rate, and one level of consumption.

Is this appealable? I don't know. We're into the middle of that, but I think EPCOR should just do the right thing.

Air Quality at Holy Cross Hospital

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Infrastructure admitted that tests for toxic mold had been conducted at the Holy Cross hospital. Despite our request that this information be released immediately, the minister refused to make the test results public. To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that it is well known that toxic molds can lead to serious health problems up to and including bleeding of the lungs and even cancer, what policies does the Department of Infrastructure have for responding to buildings that test positive for these molds?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that we once again set the record straight. The fact is that back in 2001 we were looking for a place to house the Court of Appeal in Calgary. One of the things that we had to do as we were looking at any location was do an indoor air quality examination. At one point we were looking at four sites. One of them was the Holy Cross hospital in Calgary. The process started. There were a number of factors taken into consideration, not just the air quality. The decision was made as far as the Holy Cross that it was not a suitable location, not necessarily to do with the air. As a matter of fact, when you look at a hospital, it has an air exchange that exceeds a normal commercial building's. We do know that the process started. I don't believe it was ever completed. We do not have in our possession, as far as we can determine, any final results relative to the testing on that site.

As far as molds are concerned, Mr. Speaker, there are over a thousand different varieties of mold. Just a small percentage of them are toxic. So just because you would happen to find a sample of mold in a building doesn't necessarily mean that it's toxic. There have to be a number of other tests done before that determination can be made.

Dr. Taft: He completely sidestepped the question, Mr. Speaker.

Given that there are 42 long-term care residents as well as doctors, nurses, and other support staff at the Holy Cross, can the minister assure Calgarians that all appropriate steps were followed when the test results were obtained from the Holy Cross?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, we cannot find any final results. As a matter of fact, as I said earlier, there has to be a lot of testing done in order to determine if there is a toxic mold. Clearly, under freedom of information if in fact there is in a building that we are responsible for – and that is a very important point. The fact is that that is not one of our buildings. We were looking at that building for one very specific use. If in fact it is a building that we own and operate and it is found through tests that there are toxic molds that could be injurious to health, we would release the results.

Dr. Taft: Your department did the tests. I hope they haven't lost the file.

Given that sitting on the results of the tests for mold at the Holy Cross vastly increases the legal liabilities to this government, why has the department chosen to sit on the results, or have they simply been lost?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I very much take exception to the comment that the department did the tests. That is absolutely false. The department did not do the tests. As a matter of fact, as we were doing all of these buildings, I said that there was always the need to do an indoor air quality test, and the hon. member keeps on coming back and saying that in fact we were testing for mold. No, it's a total package of indoor quality tests.

As far as this building was concerned, we never completed because there were other issues that came up that ruled out this particular building. We do not own the building. We do not operate the building. So why would we continue to go in and determine what the air quality is when we were not going to be renting any part of it?

Aboriginal Youth Suicide

Mr. Maskell: Mr. Speaker, my question relates to my longtime concern about the high percentage of suicide among aboriginal youth. During my many years as an inner-city high school principal I saw too many aboriginal youth arrive already caught in the failure cycle. In spite of our best efforts, it was often too late to help them find a way out. Tragically, too often they choose suicide. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. What is the government doing to address the high rate of aboriginal youth suicide?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right to be concerned about aboriginal suicide among youth. It's eight times as high as suicide among nonaboriginal children, and that's a tragedy. Eight ministries are currently working on it through the Alberta children and youth initiative. We are developing a strategy of working with communities, broadening our knowledge and our training, broadening our research capacity, and also coming forward to involve communities in solutions. We are on the threshold of providing our standing policy committee with a first look at that draft, and very shortly that will be part of our public policy discussion.

Thank you.

Mr. Maskell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that answer, but it begs another question, my first and final supplemental. Would the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development tell me how such a strategy by itself will solve the tragedy of young aboriginal people taking their own lives in such high numbers?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the subject that we're talking about is a serious concern to all of us. As a matter of fact, I received some questions last night from the opposition as well on this issue. The youth initiative that the Minister of Children's Services just described represents another step in addressing native youth suicide and, of course, the heartache that it brings to families. It just adds another tool to help curb the high rate of aboriginal youth who reach such a state of despair and hopelessness.

The cross-ministry initiative that was just described will better connect communities into existing provincial programs, such as wellness programs, so that we can begin to see those that are culturally specific. Mr. Speaker, it'll also help the leaders of aboriginal communities take positive steps to address this issue. The ideal is to make sure that we create the conditions for hope and health among aboriginal youth, and we can do that by making sure they have jobs in the future and making sure they have a healthy atmosphere to work in.

Nitrous Oxide Engine Modification

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the glamour of street racing will return this summer with the release of a new movie in theatres, 2 Fast 2 Furious. In the movie nitrous oxide engine modifications are used to increase the power of engines by up to 300 horsepower. These nitrous oxide modifications are available in Alberta and are invariably used to propel racers to dangerous speeds on Alberta's streets and highways. To the Minister of Transportation: why is it legal to buy nitrous oxide engine modification kits in Alberta when these devices are used almost exclusively for illegal activities?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if it's within the mandate of the Department of Transportation to monitor sales of various products through stores in the province of Alberta. However, when it comes to safety, we do have fairly rigid rules in place monitoring and controlling various activities on Alberta highways. If a person was to put one of these kits in a vehicle and speed down the highway, of course they'd get caught for speeding, number one, and, number two, starting on Tuesday, May 20, would pay significantly increased fines for that kind of behaviour.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will the minister promise to restrict the vending and installation of nitrous oxide engine modifications to only those cars used exclusively for track racing?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does bring a good point with respect to some of the modifications on present vehicles on Alberta highways, and that is actually a point of consultation that we are undertaking with respect to a number of regulations under the Traffic Safety Act. One of those discussions is, of course, with the car rebuilders in the province and some of the modifications occurring to some of these vehicles, not only cars but motorcycles, where we find that some of the speed on these vehicles is excessive. Again, if done on the provincial highways, it's illegal. If done on some racing strip, fine – I mean, you take your life in your own hands at that speed – but on provincial highways it's definitely illegal behaviour.

Mr. Bonner: To the minister: will the minister introduce legislation which will restrict the use of nitrous oxide engine modification kits in Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, no. You know, to say to this House that the first thing on our schedule, at least in Transportation, is to introduce legislation prohibiting – no. Although we are looking at the feedback from various parties that we're consulting with on a whole bunch of issues including modifications to vehicles with mufflers, with lights, all changes to frame, and raising the back end of vehicles, et cetera, also equally dangerous. So there are all these discussions that are ongoing.

However, Mr. Speaker, I will say that this matter was raised in estimates by the hon. member, and I did indicate to that hon. member that I will be getting back to him in writing once we have answered all of the questions that were raised in estimates a couple of days ago.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Throughout the entire spring session the Minister of Learning has continued to assure this Assembly that there is no crisis in Alberta's education system. Now with teachers being laid off by the hundreds, schools closing, class sizes ballooning, and programs being cut, the minister's credibility is as low as an ant doing the limbo. My question is for the Premier. Given that Albertans are beginning to realize that while they have a popular Premier, they also have a lousy government, will the Premier explain why he just sat there while his minister painted a false picture for this Assembly?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not – did not – paint a false picture for this Assembly, and he doesn't have to shrink to the level of an ant to get under a limbo stick. I would venture to guess that he's far more limber than the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands in mind and body.

Mr. Speaker, the minister is highly regarded throughout the province and indeed is highly regarded by the chair of the public school board here in Edmonton, who wrote on April 29, not so long ago, to the minister expressing his sincere thanks and appreciation for the significant role he played in the government's decision to provide – and this speaks to the issue of reduced classrooms and so on – $51 million to support Edmonton public schools. "Your support for our district and for public education in Alberta is appreciated," wrote Mr. Don Fleming. "I am also grateful for the efforts of the Capital Region Caucus, and have expressed my appreciation to individual members directly."

To me that doesn't sound like a lack of appreciation. This is a letter that I'm about to table from the chair of the Edmonton public school board. Now, how can this hon. member reconcile a letter of commendation with his remarks that the minister is not appreciated? How can he possibly reconcile that?

He goes on to say: we are confident that the funds are sufficient to create an exciting and revitalized Victoria school of the performing arts and that we can also address other district needs; we look forward to further acknowledging your contributions once the projects are complete.

Mr. Speaker, this is a letter of commendation. This is a letter of appreciation for the minister entirely contrary to what the hon. member says, that this minister is not appreciated. He is indeed appreciated, and this letter is only one, I'm sure, of many, many letters that the minister receives and that I receive commending the minister for his initiatives.

The Speaker: There also was a point of order raised by the hon. Government House Leader on that last question.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the letter the Premier refers to is actually directed at the Minister of Infrastructure for capital funding, how can the Premier justify misleading this Assembly once again about the crisis that's leading to layoffs of hundreds of teachers? Why would you get a letter of commendation for that, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, indeed, the letter is addressed – and I alluded specifically to the capital component because in his preamble the hon. member alluded to capital relative to schools. He alluded to a lack of classroom spaces when, indeed, we're adding $51 million to build more capacity for, and I might add, fewer students.

Now, to speak to the issue of funding, I've spoken to that issue already relative to questions from the Liberal opposition. Again, here's a university educated individual who should be able to understand that a 53 percent increase is an increase, an increase in funding. A 53 percent increase is an increase. An 8 percent increase in enrollment is a much, much smaller increase. Mr. Speaker, what we are saying is that we have given a large amount of money to accommodate a very small increase. Comprehend?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that unlike some of my colleagues I'm not a professor, just a humble bus driver, can the Premier please explain to me why the government is giving so much money to school boards and they're still laying off hundreds of teachers? Why is that?

Mr. Klein: You know, Mr. Speaker, that is a good question to ask of the school board, and that is precisely the kind of question the hon. minister will be asking of the school board. This, I believe, is what has parents confounded. How can you be talking about laying off teachers when you get a substantial increase in funding for a flat enrollment on top of a $51 million bump in funding for school infrastructure? How can you possibly get an increase in funding, a decrease in enrollment, and talk about laying off teachers? This is precisely what the minister will be talking to the school board about.

Business Revitalization Zones

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to rise to say a few words about business revitalization zones, one of Alberta's great little success stories. About 20 years ago this province enacted legislation to allow small business owners to get together, get organized, and get active in revitalizing their communities. Since that time, dollar for dollar BRZs have done more good for more people for less money than just about any other single initiative I know of. It is unfortunate that so few Albertans know much about BRZs.

My own involvement began in 1985 when I became founding chairman of the South Calgary Business Revitalization Zone, almost the first BRZ in the province. We promptly renamed the area the Marda Loop, and the then mayor of Calgary, now our Premier, officially cut the ribbon for us at the very first provincial BRZ promotion, the Marda Gras summer festival, which I'm proud to have helped initiate as well. Later I became chairman for the Federation of BRZs, the umbrella organization representing some 5,400 small businesses in some 40 different BRZs across the province. I also managed to help initiate the Victoria Crossing BRZ, and those people were very instrumental in resolving the 30-year expansion battle between the Calgary Stampede folks and the Victoria Park community.

Now, having been so involved over the years and watching how small business entrepreneurs put aside arguments, ideology, egos, and grandstanding to arrive at intelligent, commonsense, pragmatic solutions to just about every community issue they face, I am personally of the opinion that if we just funded BRZ small business-people and put them in charge of solving lots of local issues, we'd get the biggest bang for our buck of all. These people are truly champions of innovation combined with pragmatism. They never would have survived in the small business environment if they weren't really good at problem solving.

So I congratulate all the many hundreds of BRZ volunteers across this province over the past two decades for all their accomplishments in transforming and revitalizing their local communities and main streets, solving local issues, and once again proving that small business is the backbone of our community and our quality of life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Queen's Golden Jubilee Medal Recipients

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2002 when MLAs were asked to submit their recipient lists to the Minister of Community Development for the commemorative medal for the Queen's golden jubilee, my level of enthusiasm was at best lukewarm, but knowing that MLAs should always welcome opportunities to recognize individual achievements, I complied with the request. Months later the recipients package arrived and with the help of my creative and practical-minded constituency assistant, Lisa Hofmeister, we planned a special ceremony that truly was a personal highlight of my MLA career to date largely because of the true importance of the occasion to the recipients and their families.

On Saturday morning, May 3, a student of the bagpipes stood outside the constituency office door and roundly welcomed seven worthy recipients of the commemorative medal for the Queen's golden jubilee and their families and friends to the Calgary-West office. By 10 a.m. there were 25 proud recipients, families, and friends crowded into the recently tidied, vacuumed, and dusted constituency office.

During a special ceremony, which I emceed, seven Calgarians of all ages were individually honoured: Wilbur Griffith, centenarian, Alberta and Calgary pioneer, and very successful businessman who will be long remembered for his Griffith Woods legacy to Calgarians; Doris Griffiths, posthumously, community activist; Kelly Kryczka, silver medalist Olympian in synchronized swimming, member of the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame and Museum, and presently an international masters gold medalist in synchronized swimming; Dave Rodney, teacher, humanitarian, and the first and only Canadian to summit Mount Everest twice; Jamie Sorenson, a young entrepreneur and political activist; Bert Sparrow, community volunteer and chair of Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board; and Dr. Barrie Strafford, entrepreneur, humanitarian of Third World countries, founder of two chairs at the University of Calgary, in geriatrics and in Alzheimer's, and a honorary doctorate from the University of Calgary.

In closing, we served tea in my mother's English china teacups, set out the china teapot and lace tablecloth, and the recipients stayed to share stories and special moments with each other and all of us. It was truly a very proud, special occasion for all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Karalee Derksen

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give special recognition to Karalee Derksen, a very talented 12-year-old student at Banff elementary school. Karalee's eloquence and thoughtfulness have made her this year's winner in the junior essay category of the National Literacy and Poster Contest, which is sponsored by the Royal Canadian Legion.

Karalee's essay was part of a class assignment last fall for which students created poems, posters, and essays. Karalee's poster and poem won her regional awards, but it was her reflections on war that won her national attention. Her essay is entitled Remembrance Day and is certainly worthy of sharing with the members of the Assembly this afternoon.

On Remembrance Day, we wear a poppy to show that we remember those who died, fighting in war.

War is a terrible thing. It is not fun with action figures or toy guns. It is not a game. War has killed millions and millions of people.

In Flanders Fields, many soldiers fought and died. The graves represent the war and those who died for us. The poppy, growing out of the grave, represents hope. Because of those men and women giving their lives, we can have life. The poppy is a new and vibrant life growing out of the sacrifice of others.

These soldiers had such courage that they deserve to be honoured. But let us also remember those who survived and live with horrible memories and frightening images that time can not erase.

In both 1914 and 1939 young men all across Canada sacrificed future dreams, relationships with those they loved and personal ambitions to fight for their country. Some returned, but many did not. In both 1918 and 1945 those who returned came home with minds and bodies in pain.

In so much darkness, pain and loss, the only light was the bright red poppy. This poppy shows us that our friends died so that we could have life. Their sacrifice was not in vain.

Why should we wear a poppy on Remembrance Day? So we can show the world how these soldiers gave up their lives for our freedom and our country.

Mr. Speaker, I think members will agree that Karalee is well deserving of our recognition today, and I ask everyone to please join me in congratulating this young and gifted Albertan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

2:40 Public Education System

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our province has always been blessed with citizens willing to stand up and take action when the interests of children and youth needed to be furthered or defended. At one time parents could appeal to their local school board and when needed involve themselves in school board elections to have their concerns for schools addressed. Unfortunately, the government has financially emasculated school boards, centralizing control and wiping out any real autonomy over their financial resources. The past decade of changes and underfunding of public education has stirred parents to action as never before in the history of our province.

So with the voice of school boards muted parents have raised theirs. When class time for kindergarten children was cut, a group of Glenora parents came to the fore and spoke up for those young Albertans. A past president of the University of Alberta made a personal plea to each member of this Assembly to have kindergarten funding restored and eventually won the day. When budget cuts resulted in larger classes and fewer classroom resources, the Edmonton parent group SOS, Save Our Schools, was born and launched a provincewide petition campaign.

In terms of constant dollars Alberta schools haven't seen an increase in school allotments since the early 1990s. The chronic underfunding has fired up parents to a degree this province has never seen. Their voices have been raised in the interests of children and excellence in public education. The Calgary Association of Parents and School Councils, APPEAL, PACT, Edmonton advocates, the Whitemud Coalition, the Riverview Coalition, and PACE, Parents Advocating for Catholic Education, are all speaking out.

These parents deserve our thanks and our support. More importantly, they deserve the ear of the government as well as a swift and adequate response to their complaints about the erosion of public education in this province.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I give oral notice of the following two motions, which will be on the Order Paper for use if necessary. The first motion reads as follows:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 42, Electoral Divisions Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

The second motion, Mr. Speaker, reads as follows:

Be it resolved that when an adjourned debate on third reading of Bill 42, Electoral Divisions Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration at this stage of the bill, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 40 later this afternoon I plan to bring before the House a motion to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to deal with the following motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

The Speaker: You can read it at the time.

Dr. Pannu: All right. I'll do it later.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 41, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2003.

The amendments in this bill will introduce the third phase of the corporate income tax deductions as announced in Budget 2003. This bill will make Alberta's corporate income tax rates for both small business and general business the second lowest among all provinces in Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 41 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is the Alberta Law Enforcement Review Board 2001 annual report being tabled in accordance with section 14 of the Alberta Police Act. The board is the appeal body for complaints concerning police officers. During the period covered by the report the board dealt with 34 appeals, down slightly from previous years.

Mr. Speaker, my second tabling is the Victims Programs status report for 2001-2002. This annual report shows that over 1 and a half million dollars in grants was provided to 78 victim assistance programs. These programs reported handling over 30,000 new cases, over half of those involving assistance to victims of violent crime.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of some materials that have been developed by the Alberta Forest Products Association for an information campaign that they have launched. This campaign tells a story about forestry, a very important industry in the diversification and prosperity of Alberta's economy. I will make sure that all MLAs receive a copy of this great information package, which provides some very good news.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the Law Society of Alberta annual report 2002. The mission of the Law Society of Alberta is to serve the public interest by promoting a high standard of legal services and professional conduct through the governance and regulation of an independent legal profession. As Minister of Justice I meet regularly with the Law Society to discuss issues and obtain their feedback. The relationship between the Law Society and Alberta Justice is not only very strong but most valuable as we work together to improve justice for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter received from a constituent of mine, Mrs. Lois Bell, in which she shares with me her concerns regarding education funding.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of six different reports all relating to California's electrical system, which I believe has great relevance to Alberta's electrical situation. The first is a report, Energy Efficiency Leadership in California, outlining an unprecedented energy conservation program which is saving $12 billion and helped California dodge the bullet of major blackouts.

The second is a report from the World Nuclear Association discussing opportunities in California where almost no generation had been built in 15 years, leaving them to have to import 25 percent of their electricity, which they are still doing at a time when Alberta is discussing exports.

The third is entitled California's Dreaming.

The fourth is Electricity Reliability Issues in California, talking about how policymakers tried to shield consumers from higher power bills by overregulating and gave them rolling blackouts in years of shortages and imports instead.

The last two are Power Politics and Retail Electricity Deregulation: Demonstrating the Benefits of Choice by Nobel laureate economist Vernon Smith, discussing how California never actually attempted deregulation. What they did at best was worse regulation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings today. The first is from a constituent, a young dedicated teacher, writing to me with her concerns that although she's been teaching for two years, she thinks she may be forced out due to the conflicts with the government in the funding of education. Given the announcement today, that's quite likely.

The second set of tablings are two published documents. These are put out by Changing Together, A Centre for Immigrant Women. The first is A Handbook for Employers of Live-In Caregivers in Alberta, written by Caridad Bernardino, PhD, with Denise Spitzer, PhD. The second is A Handbook for Live-In Caregivers in Alberta, prepared by Idalia Ivon Pereira and Denise Spitzer, PhD.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today.

The first is from Alvin Reib, a senior in my constituency who is very concerned and upset with how the medical system treats seniors these days.

The second tabling is an addition to the petition I tabled last week. That petition was signed by 358 Albertans urging the Legislative Assembly to stop development in Kananaskis Valley, but about 50 of those names were out of order for the petition, so I am tabling their names today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today, the first being a document from the Edmonton public school board titled Response to the Minister of Learning regarding Alberta Learning's Operational Review of Edmonton Public Schools dated May 2003. This document addresses the board's position on the district's deficit and related issues.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Alberta Federation of Women United for Families dated April 17, 2003. In the letter to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General the federation has asked the minister to make the necessary changes to legislation so grandparents may maintain ongoing contact with their grandchildren.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would like to table the required number of copies of a letter written to the Premier from a school council in the Premier's constituency – Leslie Newton, Barb Homer, Wanda Watson, and Liz Hagerman – urging the Premier to “take leadership and properly invest in public education.”

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings today. The first is a news release from the Calgary Association of Parents and School Councils dated March 19, 2003, questioning the Minister of Learning's decision to close five CBE schools and open another charter school in Calgary.

The second tabling is a letter from Liz Greenaway of Edmonton dated March 18, 2003, regarding the government's policy of making schools dependent on casinos.

The third tabling is a letter from R.H. Foerger of Edmonton dated March 5, 2003, addressed to his MLA, who is the Minister of Community Development, regarding the underfunding of his children's school.

The fourth tabling is a letter from Cindy LeClerc of Hinton dated March 20, 2003, addressed to the Minister of Infrastructure asking him to change the school utilization formula.

The final tabling today is a letter from Brenda Davidson of Edmonton dated March 21, 2003, addressed to the Premier regarding the continuing degradation of education in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased again to table five copies of a new brochure that's produced, and I think all members will find it of considerable interest. It's titled: Page Biographies, 25th Legislature, 3rd Session, Spring 2003. It's a fitting tribute to the young pages that work with us. A copy will be forwarded to you momentarily.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk by the hon. Mr. Mar, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Regional Health Authorities Act, Mistahia health region 2002 annual report; by the hon. Dr. Oberg, Minister of Learning, Research Technology Management Inc. financial statements 2000 to 2003; response to Written Question 9 asked for by Dr. Massey on March 17, 2003; Alberta Learning 2002-2005 business plan; school jurisdictions' audited financial statements, sections 1 to 3, for the year ended August 31, 2001; public postsecondary institutions' audited financial statements, including public colleges and technical institutes for the year ended June 30, 2001, and universities and Banff Centre for Continuing Education for the year ended March 31, 2002; pursuant to the Advanced Education Foundations Act the University of Alberta (1991) Foundation financial statements for the period ended November 7, 2000; the Arctic Institute of North America financial statements, March 31, 2001; the Olympic Oval financial statements, 1999 to 2001; Public Colleges Foundation of Alberta financial statements 1998 and 1999.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order
Parliamentary Language

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I haven't often risen on points of order in the House. We're drawing to the end of this session possibly, and the language, in my submission, is deteriorating. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands in his questions, while often giving colourful examples, this afternoon went way too far in the language that he used, and I would request that you find the language unparliamentary and ask for an apology.

Specifically, under 23(h) of our Standing Orders, "makes allegations against another member," and 23(j) "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I would also refer to 485 of Beauchesne, "Unparliamentary words may be brought to the attention of the House either by the Speaker or by any Member," and 491:

The Speaker has consistently ruled that language used in the House should be temperate and worthy of the place in which it is spoken. No language is, by virtue of any list, acceptable or unacceptable. A word which is parliamentary in one context may cause disorder in another context, and therefore be unparliamentary.

I would also refer to both your memo to House leaders early in the session as well as the other sections in Beauchesne, 488, 489, 490 and 491, relative to unparliamentary language.

The exchange which I'm referring to is an exchange in which the hon. member accused the Minister of Learning during a question directed at the Premier of painting a false picture for this Assembly throughout the spring—now, I may not have the exact words; I don't have the benefit of the Blues—and later on in the next question, of misleading the Assembly.

Often we've heard language in preambles to questions which have been, in my humble submission, unparliamentary but unfortunately or fortunately not directed at any particular member and therefore difficult to draw forward for sanction. We've had preambles which are grotesque in the extreme with respect to how they try to change and adapt what the government's position is in order for them to put forward a question which they can characterize. But I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in the framing of this particular question, the hon. member has gone too far. He has in essence accused the Minister of Learning of lying to the House. That is unparliamentary.

The language is going too far, and we ought to draw back and, in the words of rule 491, be cognizant of the fact that language "should be temperate and worthy of the place in which it is spoken."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While I listened with interest to the hon. Government House Leader's point of order, I would submit that in fact the language contained in my question today was not in contravention of the rules. Indeed, it was quite consistent with normal parliamentary practice. He indicated, for example, that one of the statements which I was purported to have made, that the House had been misled, is contained in expressions ruled unparliamentary by Speakers of the Legislative Assembly, according to a document provided to all members by yourself.

With respect to the implication contained in the question, that the minister had "painted a false picture for this Assembly," I would maintain that that is in fact a correct statement, Mr. Speaker. On a number of occasions, the government and particularly the Minister of Learning has denied, in response to questions put to him in this House, that there was in fact any crisis in our education system. It is my view that layoffs across the province, increases in class sizes, cuts to programs are all matters of fact which can be verified by anyone who wishes to contact any number of school boards in this province. It is this member's opinion that these facts taken in conjunction do in fact represent a crisis. So it is the opinion of this member that the minister, in denying that there was a crisis, has in fact painted a false picture for the Assembly. The real picture, in my opinion, is quite different than that suggested during question period during this spring sitting of the Assembly by the Minister of Learning to the Assembly.

So I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that there is in fact no valid point of order. Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: Other participants?

Hon. members, one can suggest and it's made very, very clear that the operative words with respect to this are the phrase, "will the Premier explain why he just sat there while his minister painted a false picture for this Assembly?" That's what was said.

The words "false," "falsehood," "false statements" are words that have in some instances been found to be unparliamentary but not on all occasions, and hon. members can refer to Beauchesne 489 and Beauchesne 490. The key citation, however, with respect to this particular matter is Beauchesne 491 for the point that a word may be unparliamentary in one context if it causes disorder but not necessarily another context, which, again, doesn't help clarify, but the context is extremely important.

One should also be governed by citations from Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j). Now, in this case, painting "a false picture for this Assembly" would suggest to the chair some intent or deliberateness and would seem to be akin to an assertion of deliberately misleading the House.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands indicated that the debatable point with respect to crisis was in his opinion, and he used the terminology "in his opinion" on several occasions, which would not suggest a suggestion of factualness necessarily: an opinion. So this would seem to me that this would be unparliamentary, and in fact I'm going to rule that it is unparliamentary. I'm going to rule that it does not uphold the dignity of the House nor the member himself. I'm going to ask the hon. member to withdraw those statements.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to withdraw those statements. I appreciate your ruling, and I would also wish to apologize to the Minister of Learning and all members of the House for my transgression.

Thank you.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a Standing Order 40 application.

Education Funding

Dr. Pannu:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to adjust school board operating grants to fully fund the arbitrated teachers' settlement, cover rising school utility costs, and remove the cap on grade 10 credits.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, with your permission I would like to make a brief set of arguments for urgency. Speaking to the urgency of this motion, in two days' time the spring sitting of the Legislature is likely to come to an end. As we return to our ridings, what we would be leaving behind is an education system in crisis. This is a school financial crisis unprecedented in its scope and severity. The dire financial position of school boards stands in stark contrast to the province's fiscal picture and outlook, which couldn't be rosier.

Last week the Calgary board of education announced it was cutting 400 staff in total, including the loss of 300 teachers. Today Edmonton public schools announced the loss of 450 teaching positions alone. Calgary Catholic has announced it's facing a $9.5 million shortfall. Nor is this fiscal crisis, Mr. Speaker, restricted to Alberta's two big cities. It's much more generalized and affects lots of school boards and regions of our beautiful province. School board after school board is giving the same three reasons for acute financial crisis that they are already facing; namely, government's failure to fully fund the arbitrated settlement with teachers, two, its refusal to assist school boards with skyrocketing utility costs, and, three, the government's decision to impose a cap on the number of credits it will fund for hardworking grade 10 students.

As legislators we have the responsibility to deal with this acute school funding crisis now, not leave it to the whims of the executive branch to act or fail to act based on its own political needs. As the stewards of public dollars what could be more important than debating the crisis in our schools in this Assembly this afternoon? Speaking to urgency, Mr. Speaker, we need to debate this motion this afternoon because there's no other option available to us for expressing the will of this Assembly on this matter. As an opposition member I'm not able to amend the appropriation bill to adjust operating grants to schools. The emergency motion I'm proposing provides the opportunity for us as members to express our collective voice in urging the government to fix the financial crisis in our schools that government itself caused.

I therefore urge all members to support the request to debate this emergency motion this afternoon. Thank you.

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 39, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, for second reading.

As indicated earlier, prior to introducing Bill 39 to the House, we followed the process that is always followed with respect to miscellaneous statutes and circulated the proposals to both opposition parties, about a month ago sent the final draft version – I think it was April the 28th – to opposition parties with respect to the final version of the bill, and had approval to introduce it in the form that it's in. I would ask the House to approve it for second reading. I would advise the House that there is now a suggestion that there may be an amendment at committee, which in my view is most unfortunate and certainly should have been avoidable given the process that we go through. However, we'll await committee to see how we deal with it at that point in time. I'd ask the House to approve it for second reading now.

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a second time]

Bill 40

Appropriation Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I'd move Bill 40, the Appropriation Act, 2003, for second reading.

The Appropriation Act is merely, as the House knows, an encapsulation of what we've been discussing in this House for the last 24 days of Committee of Supply, and we have completed Committee of Supply with respect to each of the departments and had the votes on the estimates in Committee of Supply for each of the departments. I would ask the House to approve now the Appropriation Act so that we can get on with paying the bills.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to the Appropriation Act, 2003. Now, we've had a great deal of debate with respect to the appropriations and an opportunity to question the ministers on the budget, which is now contained within this act. So it's clear that the Assembly is being asked to provide its endorsement of the government's spending plans and requests for funding from the taxpayer in order to support their program.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of serious deficiencies with respect to the government's plans for the coming budget year. The foremost among them is the failure of the government to deal with the education crisis that is now upon us. You know, it's interesting listening to the twists and turns of the government on this issue when they're questioned on it in question period, and certainly they have a great deal of flexibility in whether or not they answer questions or whether or not they simply just go on the attack against opposition members based on their occupation or facility with arithmetic or whatever it is that the government may seem to think is relevant.

What I think the people who pay the taxes think is relevant is why the government is in a position where it repeatedly claims that it provides more funding for education per capita than any other province and why it is that we're faced with significant layoffs, school closures, program cuts, and a lot of unhappy parents and teachers and students. The government seems to think that everybody is wrong except them. The government always measures any increase in funding from the point of the lowest level of funding, which was following the cuts in 1993-94, so they measure any funding increases from that point. Of course, it's generally acknowledged now, Mr. Speaker, that the government cut far too deeply and far too quickly and with far too little foresight at that time. In fact, the Premier a couple of years after admitted that the government did not have a plan when it came to the health care cuts.

But in the area of the education situation there are three significant contributing factors to what has happened. First of all, of course, was the teachers' settlement, Mr. Speaker. Now, the Minister of Learning repeated over and over again before the teachers' strike that they were being extremely generous and they were allocating 4 percent and 2 percent, which he habitually called 6 percent, and that the teachers would have to be satisfied with that.

Then the strike occurred, and the government set in place an arbitration process that clearly was different from most arbitration processes in that it was stacked against the teacher. There was an additional person on the arbitration panel that represented employer interests. Nevertheless, this arbitration process gave the teachers considerably more than the minister had allocated in the previous budget. In fact, the teachers' settlement was similar to settlements that had been reached voluntarily with the government before the last election; for example, with medical professionals, including nurses.

Then the government refused requests to provide the additional funding to meet the settlement, and that left the school boards in the situation they're in now. They have to find the money to pay the teachers' increase from existing programs. That means that even though the government is correct technically in saying, "Well, we gave, you know, 4 percent more," what happened is that the costs of the school boards rose much more than 4 percent because most of their bill goes to salaries. So that's one very significant piece that the government doesn't like to talk about when the opposition questions them in question period. They just go back into their message box and keep repeating the same old stuff.

A second piece is, of course, high utility costs. Like all public institutions and like all medium and small businesses and all homeowners and farmers in this province, school boards are faced with massive increases in their electricity bills, another sterling example of this government's enlightened and competent administration of public affairs, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Taft: You might want to point out that that was sarcasm.

Mr. Mason: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview wants me to point out that I had my tongue in my cheek when I was talking about the competent and enlightened administration of our province's affairs, and that's in fact the case, Mr. Speaker.

Then there's the question of the natural gas prices which the school boards have to meet, and again there's no corresponding increase in their budget from the government in these estimates to cover that. Of course, the third factor that's common to most school boards across the province, Mr. Speaker, is the cut to credits for grade 10 students.

So those are the three elements that make up the current financial crisis facing education in this province today. The government's estimates don't deal with them, Mr. Speaker. They simply don't deal with the financial reality that school boards face. The irony of the thing is that all three of these things are of the government's own making. The arbitration process to settle the teachers' strike was the government's process. The high utility bills are the direct result of deregulation of electricity, and of course the cap on credits for grade 10 students is a policy of the Minister of Learning. The government has set three things as obstacles to the school boards' path to financial solvency and then has refused to fund it, and they have the nerve and the Premier had the nerve today to say: "You know, we don't know what's going on. We keep giving them more money. You know, the school boards just can't manage." He had really no answers, but it didn't stop the Premier from really insulting the intelligence of the Assembly and of the people of Alberta. I believe that the people of Alberta know exactly why we have this crisis in our education system now, and they know exactly who's responsible.

I think it would be a wonderful thing if the government would stand up and say: "You know, listen; we've kind of messed up with the teachers' settlement. We've kind of messed up with electricity deregulation. We've kind of messed up with the cap on grade 10 credits, and, you know, we've kind of messed up because we haven't covered these things in this budget. So let's take the budget back, and let's meet again after the long weekend. We'll bring back a budget that actually deals with these things so that we don't have to lay off teachers, so that we don't have to cut programs for students," including even at the postsecondary level where they're cutting the program at Grant MacEwan on sign language. That's one of the very few programs in the entire country, and it's a leading program. So those are the kinds of things that are getting cut.

Young graduating teachers are leaving the country, leaving the province to teach elsewhere because school boards can't hire them, people are losing their jobs, and children's education is suffering, and the government keeps giving money to horse racing, Mr. Speaker. Not only that, but we heard the Minister of Revenue stand in the Assembly just this afternoon and introduce a bill that brings in another tax cut for corporations. [interjections] Yeah, and the Minister of Economic Development applauds that move, and that's no surprise to me, because he thinks that we should be investing in companies and not in people, or at least that's my view of his position.

So, Mr. Speaker, the government's priorities are clearly wrong, and this bill reflects those distorted priorities, where you put the thoroughbred ahead of the grade 3 student, where you put Shell or ATCO ahead of teachers or the health care system. Particularly on the education side I think there's a real problem with this bill before us. I think that the Assembly should vote it down, and I'd urge all members to vote against the Appropriation Act, 2003.

You know, I think there are a number of areas where we could do more except that when the Minister of Revenue has finished with his next act of cutting taxes for corporations, the government's revenue situation is going to be even more dependent on oil and gas revenues than it already is. I think that that's a real problem. It's also going to be another situation where the government is more dependent on gaming revenues, and we now have lottery fund payments of nearly $1.1 billion, Mr. Speaker, that come straight out of the pockets of people who in many cases just can't afford it. So it's another way of avoiding taxing people who can afford it, and that's another long-established principle of this government.

I want to indicate that we have seen an increase in infrastructure investment in this province, and I do want to indicate overall my support for that direction. Infrastructure has incurred a significant deficit over the years, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting that the government has placed so much focus on the financial deficit, but at the same time any Auditor General could tell you that they've been building up a significant deficit within the capital infrastructure of the province, because if it's not replaced in a timely fashion, then we have a situation where you have to replace it later. You have to spend the money. In fact, you have to in many cases spend even more money. It's a little bit like putting off your oil changes because you can't afford the cost or you don't think you can afford the cost of the oil. When you eventually get around to changing your oil, you may find that there's wear and tear on the engine, and the costs are very much greater than had you just paid for the oil at the right time. That's the kind of planning on the infrastructure side that this government has been doing for a number of years, and now they're trying to correct the situation by throwing a lot of money at it. I think that had they funded it adequately on an ongoing basis, they probably would have had less draw on the taxpayer than we have here. So it's another example of how the government is not running the province well.

I want to come to the question of resource revenues. Here is what saves the government time and time again, Mr. Speaker. I think we all know that they can mess up in a worse way than governments in other provinces and avoid being punished at the ballot box because they have enough money to fix the problem just in time. I think that was the case certainly before the last election with electricity prices, where there was $2.2 billion in various rebate programs that were thrown at that particular mess of the government's own creation. We have seen a continuing pattern of underestimating the amount of resource revenue that comes their way so that they post on a regular basis massive surpluses.

It provides a number of political advantages for the government to do it that way. For example, the government in the last 10 years has underestimated total revenues by a cumulative total of over $23 billion. It boggles the mind, Mr. Speaker. During that time, the government has underestimated its own budget surplus by a cumulative total of over $20 billion. The government is thereby able to keep pleading poverty right into June every year until it's too late to do anything with unbudgeted surpluses other than apply it to the provincial debt. Now, the rules around that have been loosened just this last year, but the government has been able to use this strategy in order to defer and deflect demands for education funding, for example, or many other important things while they are amassing massive surpluses. Then they can put that towards the debt, and, you know, surprise, surprise, they have a lot more money than they have said all along, and I think Albertans are beginning to see through that.

In fact, we're wondering whether or not history is going to repeat itself next month when the minister reports that the 2002-2003 budget surplus may be $1 billion to $2 billion higher than previously forecast in the third-quarter update, and we think that that's very likely given the prices of natural gas, which have remained stubbornly high notwithstanding the fact that winter is over, and that, of course, is one of the main drivers of government surplus revenues.

We know that the government claims that the cupboard is bare when it comes to teachers, that there is no more money for schools. All the while, average oil prices in fiscal 2002-03 were slightly higher than two years earlier, but the government is still forecasting $700 million less in crude oil royalties than it actually brought in in 2000-2001. So where is the consistency, the science in this, Mr. Speaker? I don't understand how the government does this forecasting. It doesn't seem to have much to do with actual oil and gas prices. It seems to have more to do with how the government wants the balance sheet to come out and how the surplus has been tucked away out of sight. Given that the government is reaping a multibillion-dollar windfall from natural gas prices that remain more than 50 percent higher than forecast in last month's budget, I'd like to know whether or not the government was going to hoard this windfall or if they're prepared to invest a small portion of the windfall in the province's children.

I am assuming that that bell meant my time is up, and I would like to thank all members for their patience and urge them to vote against this Appropriation Act. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of comments on this particular bill. I was listening to the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands with some interest and generally found them to be pretty sound as an analysis of the situation we're facing here today. I have a number of points of my own to add to that. Fundamentally, I find that the entire process through which this government forms a budget is seriously flawed. The budget was introduced eight days into the fiscal year. It will be approved – what? – seven weeks or six weeks into the fiscal year. There's no reason in the world that I can see that we couldn't rotate the entire process back through the calendar year so that we were actually approving a budget in advance. After all, a budget is a plan, and there's not a lot of value in planning for events after those events have unfolded, and that's what we're doing right now, today. In fact, the process gets worse, because once the budgets are approved for the various government departments, then that ripples on through the time line so that the regional health authority business plans and budgets are approved even later in the year, as are the business plans and budgets for the persons with developmental disability boards, for the children's authorities, and in fact, as we're seeing played out today, even for the school boards.

We certainly had situations last year where regional health authorities went through more than half the year without their business plans and budgets approved. Just unacceptable delay in proper management, a real violation of any fundamental business or public finance organization. On its very fundamental process, I'm struggling with this document today, and I would strongly encourage the government to rearrange the entire process that we are approving budgets before the beginning of the fiscal year. That is possible; it's simply a matter of political will.

There are a number of specific areas that I need to touch on. Most dramatically, most timely for this very date is the education budget. The events that we've seen today in which 450 teachers appear to be losing their jobs in the Edmonton public school board and hundreds of other teachers and other school board staff across the province are losing their jobs makes it clear to me that there is a fundamental problem in the education budget. The facts are pretty clear. The government mandated a settlement process which resulted in a 14 percent increase in salaries for teachers to be provided over two years. Having found that to be mandatory, instead of ponying up and providing adequate funding for that, the government has failed in its responsibility and instead has forced the school boards to lay off literally hundreds of teachers. That is to me the single most urgent and immediate crisis we see in this particular budget, and it is a shame. It's a tragedy, in fact, that that's not going to be addressed here.

[Mr. Lord in the chair]

Gaming revenues are equally a problem for this budget or a concern for me. We are seeing in this budget a 14 percent increase in gross gaming revenues in this province. At that rate the total gaming take in Alberta will double in less than five years. We are already in a situation where the gross amount gambled legally within this province is more than double the total amount spent by this government on health care. Imagine that. Albertans gamble more than twice as much, legally within the boundaries of this province, as they spend on health care. Five years from now, at the rate it's increasing recently, that amount spent on gambling will double. It's a very, very serious concern. I think all members of this Assembly and all citizens of Alberta should be asking themselves: do we want a gambling-based economy? This government is pulling in substantially more now from gambling revenues than it does from conventional oil and heavy oil combined. That is to me a frightening indication of how the economy of this province is being rearranged. Do we want to go there? I know that I for one don't, and many people in my constituency don't either.

Health premiums. Another aspect of this budget that I'm deeply opposed to is the health premiums. In principle, health premiums in my view should be abolished. The party of this government, the PC Party, has in fact passed resolutions calling for their abolition. Many backbenchers are calling for their abolition. Let's call a spade a spade: a health care premium is a tax, and it is a regressive tax. When you combine the flat tax regime with the health care premiums, the most heavily taxed people in this province are the working poor. They're paying taxes at a higher percentage than millionaires. Surely that is unfair. It is absolutely true. [interjections] I'm getting heckled by members of this government. But the people paying the highest percentage of their income in taxes to this government are the working poor. That would be an abomination in any other province – it's certainly not true in any state in the USA – and it should not be accepted in Alberta. Health premiums should be abolished.

The oil sands royalty regime is another area of concern. Over the last couple of years the so-called generic oil sands royalty regime has come in. The provincial government's revenues from oil sands have dropped significantly. Now, the logic of this maybe is defensible on paper. The logic is that providing low-cost royalty rates during the capital construction phase and early operational phases of these plants and allowing the companies to recover those costs before royalties rise to 25 percent of net level will encourage the construction of all kinds of heavy oil plants.

The problem is becoming clear. In reality, the problem is that it is such a generous regime that it has stimulated a flood of investments into the heavy oil sands of Alberta. The effect of that is not good. The effect of that has in fact been self-defeating. Costs have soared. Labour shortages have soared. Inflation has soared. Bottlenecks have soared. Infrastructure is overtaxed. The hospital system in Fort McMurray, for example, is completely inadequate. The highways to Fort McMurray are inadequate. Rather than a carefully thought through, phased-in regime that maximizes the direct public benefit of the oil sands development, we created a kind of gold rush at public expense, which in fact is becoming self-defeating. We are seeing now because of the problems created by this gold rush serious delays in capital investment in Alberta's heavy oil sands. So there are serious, serious issues to be raised around the oil sands royalty regime.

We tally these kinds of things up, and I find we're looking at a government that does not in fact have anything like the management record it claims to have. I suspect that they're going to see unfold the same problems in education and teaching that we saw unfold in nursing and health care professionals over the last several years.

Five, six, seven years ago thousands of health care professionals were laid off. Within three years Alberta was facing a drastic shortage of health care professionals and had to provide a 22 percent increase in salaries to health care professionals to keep them from fleeing the province and to try desperately to attract new people back into this province. As a result, the contribution to health care expenditures soared.

We are now seeing the same thing occur in education. We're losing hundreds and hundreds of teachers. The average age of the teaching profession is going to rise. Two or three or four years from now we're going to see a shortage of teachers, and teachers will be able to demand even more generous wage settlements, driving up the tax bill. So we're going through all of this kind of instability for no gain whatsoever. It's all pain, no gain. Poor, short-term, self-destructive management.

[The Speaker in the chair]

So, Mr. Speaker, I find that there are a host of reasons to challenge this particular bill, a host of reasons to oppose it, and a host of reasons to wish that this government would get its financial management act together. There is one thing only that saves this government from gross embarrassment, and that is the generosity of our natural resources. If it wasn't for the revenues generated by those, this government would have collapsed years and years ago.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 40 read a second time]

Bill 42 Electoral Divisions Act

[Debate adjourned May 12: Mr. Hancock]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I made a few remarks last evening when I introduced Bill 42 for second reading, and I just want to add a couple more thoughts before the floor is open for other members.

In bringing forward Bill 42 in the form that was proposed by the Electoral Boundaries Commission, I indicated that during the committee stage of the debate I would be bringing forward some amendments relative to matters which have been proposed by communities or by members of the Assembly to me as being within the context and philosophy of the report. Unfortunately, there are some communities that have put forward proposals, and there are some areas in the report that cannot be fixed by amendment in this House.

I just want to speak briefly about, for example, the situation with respect to Edmonton. The boundaries commission in doing its numbers and putting its maps together indicated that Edmonton would lose a seat, and that became a very substantial issue for all of us in Edmonton, for all members representing Edmonton, and for the community of Edmonton because in some way that was seen as a loss of pride, a loss of position, and a loss of place. But, Mr. Speaker, we felt – and I think this House concurred by passing the resolution – that it would not have been appropriate to send the commission report back, to ask a new commission to draft a new report, because the numbers and the circumstances were not sufficient to suggest that any new report would come back in a different fashion than the first commissioned report came. One ought not to turn back a report prepared by an independent commission when in fact they have taken into account the factors which are set out for them in the act. They have followed the guidelines, and there was no egregious error to be pointed out.

That doesn't mean that we have not stood up for the city of Edmonton in terms of trying to point out why the seats should be there. But the reality is that when you go through the numbers, the city of Calgary has grown more in absolute numbers than the city of Edmonton. Other parts of the province have grown as well. While one doesn't have to agree with the Electoral Boundaries Commission report, one can't fault them for the logic that they employed, and therefore it would not have been appropriate to send it back.

The resolution having been passed by the House, the bill is now before us, and we do have the opportunity for minor amendments in committee. I might be anticipating and I expect that we'll hear from the opposition that members from Edmonton haven't stood up for their city and that we haven't fought appropriately and that we're turning our backs on the city of Edmonton, and nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, members of this Legislature from the city of Edmonton went to the boundaries commission. Our constituency associations made representations to the boundaries commission. In fact, when the interim report came out and the mayor of this city was exhorting citizens to call their MLAs, I spoke to the mayor and said: if you're going to engage in a campaign relative to this, now is the time to do it, prior to the final report being completed and the final hearings, and to encourage Edmontonians to go to the second round of hearings and to give the commission their views on the report. Unfortunately, they chose to hold off that process until the final report came in at a time when there was very little that could be accomplished from that stage.

Even the submission that was made by the city of Edmonton to the boundaries commission was based more on the concept of a loss of face and a loss of place for the city than on actual numbers. In fact, in looking at it, there were not actual numbers given to the commission to show that the growth of the city somehow outpaced growth in other areas and substantiated an argument for keeping the seat.

So I just wanted to add those comments to the record prior to this bill being passed for second reading because I feel that it's always a very emotional subject when you're talking about representation; it's always a very difficult subject. Each of us in this House know our communities exceedingly well and, when asked, would know exactly where to draw boundaries for at least our particular area. I'm not talking about in self-interest here; I'm talking about in the interests of our communities. Each and every one of us, whether on the government side or the opposition side or the third party, interrelate with our communities, know our communities well, know how they interrelate with each other and could in fact be the best authors of boundaries relative to our communities with no self-interest involved.

When it comes to putting all of those communities together into the larger map, whether it be of the city or the province, that becomes a much more difficult task, and I can tell you that over the last two months I've had that task of trying to deal with issues and anomalies out of the report, and it's not an easy task to be able to try and put those together. So having the experience in the last two months in dealing with, as I say, some of the anomalies in the report, I have a much greater appreciation now for the job which the commission had to go through in holding the two sets of hearings, hearing the many diverse views that were brought to them, and trying to draw maps that make sense.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask that the House approve this act for second reading.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Government House Leader works pretty hard to inoculate himself against any political damage that may fall out of being the ringleader of pushing this bill through the Legislature. To say that rejecting the original report or rejecting this bill and then having a new commission assigned would not actually bring forward a different result is to prejudice people whom we would all expect to be very competent at doing their job and taking a look at the boundaries given the discussion we've had on the motion that passed against our wishes in this Legislature and a new bill that we would see being brought forward. We are very concerned with this bill. We do not like it. We do not like one bit of it.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I will now put forward an amendment.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amendment is that second reading of Bill 42, Electoral Divisions Act, be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 42, Electoral Divisions Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

Mr. Speaker, we think that six months will give this government the opportunity to see that this bill is completely flawed and that it did not meet the original mandate, the directions given to it, or the wishes of the people of the province. The three major flaws with the bill are that first of all common community interests and existing community boundaries were not met in the recommendation brought forward by the commission and not met in this bill, that the matrix used to make all the decisions was flawed, and, most importantly, all of the concerns that were read into the record regarding gerrymandering.

We have to remember in politics that the perception of what is happening can be as important as the reality, and this was addressed by the Government House Leader in his original comments on this particular bill on April 8 in Hansard where he stated:

In fact, we separate ourselves logically and realistically from redrawing boundaries and give it to a commission because in the history of parliamentary democracy there have been accusations of gerrymandering when governments or Legislatures or individual members of Legislatures attempted to draw their own boundary lines for themselves.

What do we see falling out of this particular bill when it comes into the Legislature but the Government House Leader actively involved in the very thing that he said he wouldn't do and that he sent out a commission to do. He has actively involved himself in the process. In fact, for the past several weeks we have seen him running around in common sight, huddled over boundary maps with various members of this Legislature deciding exactly where they want these new boundaries to be.

Now, even before this happened, we saw government members themselves – in fact, it was the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, who said on April 8 as well: now, Mr. Speaker . . .

Mr. Hancock: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Under section 23 the member has just made an allegation against a member, which is (h), and (i), imputed false motives. The hon. member well knows that I have not been going around gerrymandering boundaries, that I've talked with all members of the House or their representatives through the House leaders putting forward a process by which amendments to this bill can be handled in a decent manner, respectful of the process and not one of gerrymandering or doing the things that she's suggesting. She's imputing false motives to me, and it's absolutely scandalous. [interjections]

The Speaker: Okay, everybody. Settle down. This is a point of order. I will recognize first the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the point of order.

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If the Government House Leader listened closely to my remarks, I said that the perception of what is happening can be as important as the reality, and in fact if it looks like a duck . . . We have seen him repeatedly in this Legislature over the past week with the map spread out over his desk. In fact, in committee the other night the chairman couldn't see him; we couldn't see the person speaking. There have been huddles of little meetings in this Legislature for a very long time. If the perception of changing boundaries – this Government House Leader himself stated in this House that politicians shouldn't get involved in that process, and that is exactly what has been happening here. That perception is as important as the reality. There is no point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that on this point I'm going to take the side of the Government House Leader because I believe that he has been carrying out adjustments according to a set of principles that are quite principled, and I believe that he has done that fairly and equitably to all parties in the House. I've seen no attempt on his part to advantage his party at the expense at least of ours. I don't know of his work with the Liberal opposition, whether or not he's huddled with them over their boundaries or not, but I certainly have seen no indication that the minister is engaged in gerrymandering.

The Speaker: I want to remind all members that we're currently in second reading of Bill 42, Electoral Divisions Act. I have the bill in front of me. The bill is simply a technical bill with respect to the geographic location of boundaries. That's the bill.

Secondly, we currently have before us an amendment which is a hoist amendment, and there's a certain procedure with respect to a hoist amendment. The amendment says, “. . . be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.” So I'm going to confine the debate to the amendment. I'm going to confine it because this Assembly has already had an opportunity to discuss the motion that came out of an independently adjudicated board that has basically presented to the Assembly a report. As a result of the motion that this Assembly approved, it is the responsibility of one member of Executive Council to bring forward exactly what was approved and recommended in the report, and one is assuming that's what it is.

Now, in recent days the chair received copies of a memo that was sent from the Government House Leader to, I believe, the opposition House leader and the third party House leader – I'm paraphrasing now because I don't have the letter in front of me – basically saying: if there's an opportunity that you wish to avail yourself of making or dealing with amendments, please convey some thought process to me. Any member at any given time can stand up and propose amendments with respect to the bill itself. That would normally come under committee. So I think that one has to be very, very tempered with the language. I intend on staying here as much as possible.

I do not, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, subscribe, I have never subscribed as an individual – I have no idea where anyone can logically use the argument that perception is as important as reality. That may be the case in some nomenclatures, but we deal here with absolutes, and reality is more important than anybody's perception.

Secondly, I have no idea who has what on their desks right now. I have no idea if somebody is hiding behind a computer on their desk or hiding behind a piece of paper, but one thing I will never do is read other people's mail. I subscribe again to the time-honoured tradition that gentlemen and gentlewomen do not read other people's mail. So I have no idea what's going on.

So one had better be very, very cautious about ascribing motives to anybody else, and language had better be tempered with respect in this. It's very clear what we're doing there. It's a very specific bill, and there's a very specific process. It may be the 44th day of this session and we may already have been here longer this year than we were all of last year and it may be springtime and everything else, but there is a process. It's a legitimate process, and courtesy and temperance in language is extremely important.

What we have before the Assembly now is debate on an amendment – that's very clear – introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. It says, “Bill 42, Electoral Divisions Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.” Let's hear the argument for reading it a second time this day six months hence. That's the debate subject.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important that this bill be put aside for six months so that there can be further consultation from the communities, so that a new commission can be struck and they can take the debate that has been discussed in this Legislature and build it into a new framework for bringing forward boundaries that will more fairly and accurately represent those required in this province.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if I may request a point of clarification on the rules, my understanding of a hoist motion is that when the hoist motion is put to a vote, then the vote on the main motion follows immediately thereafter. Is that correct?

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, for clarification, only if the hoist amendment is defeated.

Mr. Mason: Like I said, Mr. Speaker. All right. I will try and insert myself into the debate in accordance with your ruling.

I would like to support this motion because I believe that there are serious flaws with this bill, and six months would give time for members on the government side to reconsider what is happening, to take some responsibility for what is happening, and put in place perhaps some changes to Bill 42 that would deal more equitably with the situation, particularly as it pertains to the city of Edmonton.

The Government House Leader has indicated that he believes – I take it that he believes – that the city of Edmonton has been fairly treated and that his government caucus from the city of Edmonton has done due diligence in protecting Edmonton. Now, it's not just a loss of face that is at stake, Mr. Speaker, but it is a loss of influence. It is a loss of political capacity, and as such it's very significant. We take it very seriously. Hopefully, if this were to be passed, we would in fact be able to reconsider that, and perhaps government members could realize the importance of the seat for Edmonton.

I just want to review briefly a little bit of the chronology here. When the commission was first appointed, interestingly enough the third party was supposed to have been consulted by the Official Opposition with respect to the opposition appointees. The government side appoints two, the opposition on the advice of the Leader of the Official Opposition but on behalf of all of the opposition recommends the other two to yourself, and of course, Mr. Speaker, you appoint the chair. That was not done, and as a result the appointments by the Speaker of the two opposition members were withdrawn. There then occurred the process that should have occurred in the first place, and that is consultation with our party in this matter. Nevertheless, after the consultation did occur, the same appointments were made.

So it should be borne in mind that throughout this discussion by the commission two of the five members were appointed by the Official Opposition. One of those I think did an excellent job standing up for Edmonton, and she did submit a dissenting report, but the other person appointed by the Official Opposition of course supported the recommendation to take a seat away from Edmonton.

We need to have some balance in our analysis of what happened, Mr. Speaker, and the facts are that at the very first meeting of hearings that the commission held in Edmonton, I appeared on behalf of our party and argued quite strongly that if the commission followed its particular matrix that it had set out, it would lead to the loss of one and possibly two seats from the city of Edmonton and put forward very strong arguments at that time against Edmonton losing its seat. Neither representative of the other two parties in this Assembly appeared and made that evening forceful arguments around the issue.

Subsequently, of course, Official Opposition caught fire on the issue and I think have done a good job speaking out for Edmonton. I wish I could say the same for the Edmonton caucus of the Conservative Party, who've been divided on the question, some saying that, yes, it's a problem and others saying: well, you know, it's just a fact of life. So I think, Mr. Speaker, that on balance one would have to say that the New Democrat opposition has been the most consistent defender of the city of Edmonton on this entire matter. I think that it is a matter of some significance, and I believe that as a result of that, we should take the six months and take another look at this.

I do believe that it is quite possible, if there's the political will on the part of the government, to revisit this issue and find a way that Edmonton does not have to lose a seat. The leader of the New Democrat opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, did in fact put forward a motion at the time that we debated, the resolution that would have seen the seat retained for Edmonton without an increase in the size of this Assembly. That's been our position all along. We don't need a bigger Assembly – it's perhaps too large as it is – but we certainly do need to have adequate representation for Edmonton. That's what we fought for, Mr. Speaker. That's what we're going to continue to fight for, and we think that we have perhaps the most consistent record in that respect of any of the parties in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak against the amendment because at the very least I think that what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has done is proposing a little mischief. At the very worst I think it's almost deceiving the House.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please, with all due respect, I just finished cautioning the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for using intemperate language. The same message now applies to the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try and make my point. The motion to hoist this particular bill I find is at the very least mischievous because there's no process that exists in this House, in this Legislature, to read it again six months hence. The hon. member knows that even if this motion passed, there was no way of bringing it back six months from now. So I guess, then, I would read what this particular motion says, and if it's not possible to do it, then is it not deceiving the House to make a motion like this and ask for us to pass it when we know that it's not possible to bring it back? For that reason, I'm not going to support the amendment.

The Speaker: Others on the amendment?

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 39 Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is a most unusual event for this Assembly. Bill 39, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, is, as its title disposes, miscellaneous statutes. The process we use for development of miscellaneous statutes – and it's not always followed completely, I would have to indicate to the House – is that when a minister brings forward a proposal for a minor change to an act that is not considered to require the full need of debate in the House because it's in the nature of a correction or a small change that is noncontroversial, the minister normally would speak to the opposition critic with respect to the matter and make sure that it was noncontroversial and then, having done so, would bring it forward for approval.

Then sometime mid to late session we send a formal package of proposed amendments to each of the opposition House leaders requesting their consent. They have the option of taking out of that package anything that for any reason they do not think should proceed. In fact, this spring we followed that process, and the opposition did indicate a number of items which were being proposed for miscellaneous statutes and requested that those items be removed, and in fact they were taken out. So when this bill was presented to the House, I had to take great pains to assure the House that all the normal processes with respect to miscellaneous statutes were followed.

Normally, miscellaneous statutes are not debated. Normally, miscellaneous statutes pass with no comment, although in the last two sessions, I think, it's been my experience that there has been some modest comment at one stage in the bill made by one member of the opposition at a minimum.

So it's a very unusual circumstance that I would rise in my place to move an amendment to the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, but in fact we have received a request from the Official Opposition that section 4 of the miscellaneous statutes act relating to the amendments regarding the Surface Rights Act as proposed by the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development be excised from the act, be in fact taken out of the act and not dealt with at this time because there may be issues which the opposition wishes to debate or discuss relative to those amendments.

Now, it is extremely unfortunate that the process wasn't followed and that these were not taken out prior to the bill being printed and being brought before the House, but again I assure the House that the entire process was followed as is normal, and I'm given to understand that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development spoke with the Opposition House Leader as a matter of fact, who's the critic for his department, in February of this year with respect to this amendment and had a belief at that time that the amendment could go forward. We forwarded the amendments to the opposition on April 28, I believe, of this year – so that's some three weeks ago – and subsequent to that time got an acknowledgment that, well, as I say, a couple of items were taken out and others were approved to go forward. So that process has been followed.

It is now up to me to move an amendment, an amendment which, I want to assure the House, is not one that's of my doing but one that's being requested by the Official Opposition related to removing section 4. The amendment is being circulated. I would move that the bill be amended as follows: in part A section 4 is struck out.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the amendment is being circulated, and we shall refer to this as amendment A1.

Hon. minister, you may proceed.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would hope that this does not become a precedent for us in the House. I think the vehicle of miscellaneous statutes has proved to be a very useful vehicle for the Legislature and for the House. There are always small items which come forward which ought to be dealt with. In this particular act, for example, the School Act amendments put in a clause relative to protection from liability. That's something that everybody acknowledges ought to happen. It's something which can be dealt with in the vehicle of miscellaneous statutes, and I'd hate to see us lose this vehicle as an appropriate way to deal with those minor items that can be dealt with quickly and succinctly. So I'm hoping that this will not become either a breach of the convention that we normally follow nor a normal process but that we engage in this in the rarest of circumstances.

I have to say that I understand from the opposition that having seen the final, printed form of the amendment and having circulated it to stakeholder groups, they have had some people come back and comment on it. It's their desire to have a closer look at it, perhaps further debate on it, so I can understand the rationale at this time for asking that it be deleted. Nonetheless, it is a significant and unusual change to our process.

With those words, I would ask the House to consider the amendment.

4:40

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I generally agree with the comments that the Government House Leader made. His feathers are a little ruffled, so he's a little more aggressive than he might otherwise be in these circumstances, but generally speaking, what he said is accurate.

This is an unusual circumstance for us. It is true that the Minister for Sustainable Resource Development brought this particular amendment to me early on in the year, and it seemed to be fine. Our process with miscellaneous statutes once we receive them is to send them out to stakeholder groups and get the feedback. Generally, there is no problem. The time lines are always tight, though, because miscellaneous statutes tend to come at the end of the session. The government needs to get them to the printers; they need to get distributed.

In this particular instance, we had two particular groups come back to us with very, very aggressive comments. One of them, that I have before me, is in fact nine pages long, and part of it was also circulated with the Minister for Sustainable Resource Development. This person's concerns are very significant, are legitimate, and need to be heard. It would have been negligent on our part to say to them: okay; after we asked for your input and you gave it to us, we can't speak to it in the Legislature because we have this agreement with the government. If the concern had been minor, we still might have done that, Mr. Chairman, but in this case, for this person and this other group of people who have contacted us, their concerns are very significant. So it would be better if we see this come as a stand-alone bill that can be debated within the Legislature and recirculated with the concerns outlined to others. It is not our expectation that this would happen again in the future. There have been cases in the past where we've had minor statements being made in miscellaneous statutes, but even that I don't like to see happen very often.

The intent here is for legislation to come forward that is very minor in nature and that has unanimous consent in this House. It is my expectation that that's the process that will be followed. The House leader is completely correct when he says that we have the right to have pieces withdrawn prior to printing, and we often do. In this case, we had two. It was just because of the timing of the stakeholder input that came back that we are now asking for this amendment to be brought forward.

We thank the government for bringing the amendment forward, and we hope for a speedy passage of the rest of this particular bill.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 39.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports the following with some amendments: Bill 39. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Ethics Commissioner Appointment

20. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the May 8, 2003, report, part one, of the Select Special Ethics Commissioner and Ombudsman Search Committee and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Donald M. Hamilton be appointed Ethics Commissioner of Alberta for a five-year term.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the search committee has had a very significant process and job under way, that there were numerous applicants for this position, and that they have met diligently to make a recommendation to this House, and it would be normal that this House would concur in that recommendation.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Before leaving the debate, however, on the motion, I would just want to add a couple of words of thank you to our retired Ethics Commissioner, Bob Clark, who has served this Assembly and Albertans very well over the course of his tenure as our Ethics Commissioner and, indeed, for that matter as our Privacy Commissioner. When the role of Ethics Commissioner was first set up and Mr. Clark was selected to that position, he brought to the position a great degree of understanding of the political process having participated in it somewhat thoroughly from a young age, so a good solid knowledge of the House, of the role of members, of what we do and how we do it, and a very good commonsense approach and understanding of the process together with an affinity for the issues that come under the concept of an Ethics Commissioner. We can only hope that the individual who is being recommended by the committee and who I'm asking the House to concur in his appointment will serve as diligently and as well – and I'm sure he will – as our first Ethics Commissioner. So while commending the report to the House and asking the House to pass this motion directing Executive Council to make the appointment of a legislative officer for the Ethics Commissioner role, we also at the same time acknowledge with respect and appreciation the service of Bob Clark as our first Ethics Commissioner in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that we approve the motion.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Government House Leader to close debate?

[Government Motion 20 carried]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure I rise to introduce the mayor of our fine town of Vermilion. Thank goodness I was awake in my chair when she came in so that the stories won't get back home about my normal actions here. It's with a great deal of pleasure that I introduce Her Worship Judy Woyewitka, the mayor of Vermilion. I would ask her to rise and please accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Treasurer.

Mrs. Nelson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to introduce someone who's visiting us, a former member of the Legislature who sat here for a great number of years and contributed plenty to the mix here, Alan Hyland. I'm delighted to see him. He's from, I'm going to say, Bow Island. I probably have the wrong constituency name because we keep changing them. I'd like all hon. members to afford him the welcome of the Legislature.

The Deputy Chair: We'll call the committee to order.

4:50 Bill 42
Electoral Divisions Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have provided the table with copies of an amendment, and I would ask that we proceed to circulate the amendment at this time. As I promised members of the House both in debate on the motion and on first and second readings with respect to the Electoral Divisions Act, I have put together a package of amendments based on some parameters that meet the criteria and the context of the act, and so I would like to . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, just as the amendments are being circulated, I'd like you to give due courtesy to the members of this Assembly for a minute or so while the amendments are being circulated. We shall refer to this amendment as A1.

Okay. Hon. minister, you may proceed.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Yes. I was just going to speak generally to it until it was circulated and then move it.

A change in electoral boundaries, Mr. Chairman, can be a very sensitive political issue, as we've seen already in exchanges in this House. In our tradition and by our legislation these matters are directed to a commission that operates within a set of guidelines and that is tasked with determining the fairest distribution. The process is generally nonpartisan and independent of government. Moreover, once a commission reports, very little is usually done to change the report. As members know, the Legislature approved the 2002 Electoral Boundaries Commission report in principle on April 14, and the bill is now before the House.

Basically, what I have advised all members of the House – and it's up to members to proceed as they wish. Because the bill is a very technical one in nature and there are some times in the process when the commission can draw boundaries and perhaps from time to time not have the detailed knowledge that they might need of a particular community or spot, there are times when a boundary is drawn in an area which is quite inappropriate; i.e., it winds through a neighbourhood, separates neighbourhoods, those sorts of issues. So as part of the normal process there are, indeed, minor amendments that are made to Electoral Boundaries Commission reports, but in putting forward the process to government caucus and as I also indicated to both opposition caucuses, I was prepared to recommend to the House amendments which were consistent with the context, parameters, and philosophy of the report and which were respectful of the averages and ranges it provided in the report.

I would like to now move the amendments that are being distributed in the form that's been provided to the table. These amendments are being brought forward where communities have requested them to reunite communities which were split unnecessarily or inappropriately or where population ranges could be respected. For example, there are situations in Calgary where lines wandered through communities. I'll just briefly run through the proposed amendments, and I have provided the opposition members with copies of a synopsis of the changes that were being proposed so that we don't have to actually look to the detail in here, which I can assure all hon. members has been drafted by Parliamentary Counsel and reviewed by the chief electoral office with respect to the intricate details of the amendments.

What we're proposing is to change the name of several constituencies; for example, the electoral division of Edmonton-Jasper Place, so-called in the report, has been proposed to be changed back to Edmonton-Meadowlark. The constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark hasn't been changed a great deal in the report from the existing constituency, but for some reason the name Edmonton-Jasper Place-Meadowlark crept into the interim report and then just Edmonton-Jasper Place in the final report. In fact, the old town of Jasper Place in Edmonton is not within the confines of this proposed constituency. So the proposal was to change the name back to Edmonton-Meadowlark.

The second one is the change of the name of Dunvegan to Dunvegan-Central Peace. Again, this is one of the special constituencies which can vary in size and be over the plus or minus 25 percent. This is a very large constituency, and while Dunvegan is a well-known historical bridge and place in northern Alberta, Dunvegan-Central Peace more accurately describes the total area that is covered by the constituency, and in the interests of making sure that people have some context the change is being proposed.

In the constituencies of Calgary-Lougheed and Calgary-Shaw the community of Shawnessy was split somewhat in half, and the proposal was to reunite that community into one constituency, and the logical place to do that was in the constituency of Calgary-Shaw. The population reduction was not so significant as to take Calgary-Lougheed out of the range that the commission had set out, and in fact Calgary-Lougheed is a high-growth constituency in any event, so that should not pose problems now or in the future.

Calgary-Fish Creek, as well, shared Lake Bonavista with Calgary-Egmont after the boundary commission had finished drawing their boundaries, and it was proposed that the Lake Bonavista community ought to be together and in one constituency, so the proposal suggests that it be joined in the constituency of Calgary-Fish Creek. That removes some population from Calgary-Egmont, but there was another community, the community of Riverbend, which was closely aligned with Calgary-Egmont but not at all aligned with Calgary-

Hays, where the other half of it was repositied. So the proposal is to bring the community of Riverbend back in the constituency of Calgary-Egmont. That leaves the constituency of Calgary-Hays of relatively modest size for an urban constituency. That could have been a problem with respect to this, but members have done some research, and it's been demonstrated to me that Calgary-Hays has in fact engendered huge growth even since 2001. So while it would appear on the surface that this would be a small constituency, actually as of today's date it's probably one of the larger constituencies in the area, so that should not cause a problem. It's not outside the parameters, I would submit.

In Calgary-Mountain View and Calgary-North Hill the community of Renfrew was cut in half, and in fact the boundary sort of meandered through the community of Renfrew, so it would be very difficult for someone who is a member of the community to really know where they would be voting or which side of the boundary they were on. It made sense to reunite Renfrew in Calgary-Mountain View and use the boundary of 16th Avenue, which is highway 1, and Deerfoot Trail as the true delineating boundaries of that constituency. It does make Calgary-Mountain View probably the largest constituency in Calgary, but again if you look at the ranges that are accomplished, we can stay within the size of the range that the commission set out. Calgary-North Hill becomes slightly smaller than one might expect a core constituency to be, but again it falls within the range, and therefore it was a change which could be accommodated within the parameters which I had to put forward.

We have a similar situation in Calgary-Montrose. Two pieces were added to Calgary-Montrose: one from Calgary-East and one from Calgary-Cross. Again, in both of those circumstances the boundaries were just slightly moved to pick up a piece and add some population to Calgary-Montrose, but in reviewing it, it would appear that it makes more sense for the communities to be together, so we reunited the community of Forest Heights in Calgary-East and reunited the community of Pineridge in Calgary-Cross, and by making those modest changes, there's a modest population shift, but again the constituencies stay within the range.

In Edmonton there were a number of anomalies that could have been dealt with, but one of the parameters that I set out was that the members representing those constituencies had to agree to the change, and that wasn't accomplished. So the only change that we're proposing in Edmonton is to move a small portion, really what would be one poll, from the proposed Edmonton-Manning to the proposed Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview constituency. There were a lot of communities in that area that were very concerned about the changes being made and about the communities being separated, but the change was too big to be accommodated within the context of what we're talking about, so the only change that could be made was that one small movement of a poll.

One of the most significant changes that's being proposed, Mr. Chairman, is with respect to the town of Millet and the surrounding area. When the boundaries report came out, it was immediately clear that the town of Millet and the surrounding area would be moved from the Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency to the Drayton Valley-Calmar constituency. There's no connection between Millet and Drayton Valley-Calmar; Millet is on highway 2A. There's no common area, and the town, the county, and the city of Wetaskiwin were all quite vociferous in their representations about the need to keep that area together. The member for that area did a considerable amount of work to see how it could be accomplished with the populations, so the proposal in that area is to move Millet and region back into Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

The Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency as drafted had reached down to encompass the four First Nations in the area, and the proposal is that two of those First Nations would stay within Wetaskiwin-Camrose and two would go into Drayton Valley-Calmar in order to accomplish the population shift. A small piece would come out of the Lacombe-Ponoka constituency to provide a connection. So that is quite a shift but one which was really insisted upon by the communities and one which could be accomplished and still achieve the goals of the report. That then meant that there didn't need to be a name change to Calmar-Drayton Valley-Millet, so we are proposing to leave the name as it was, Drayton Valley-Calmar.

The area of Lacombe-Ponoka is one of the controversial areas, Mr. Chairman. Obviously a constituency was collapsed in this area, so two constituencies were put together. The town of Blackfalds was moved into Red Deer-North. Again, we had considerable representations from the town of Blackfalds and from the county location there, and people in that area were very vociferous that they were not part of Red Deer-North, that they were part of the county and region, so considerable work was put in to see whether that could be accomplished. In fact, with these changes we can move the boundary back to the boundary of the city of Red Deer and put the town of Blackfalds back into the Lacombe-Ponoka constituency. An additional change in that area is to add into Lacombe-Ponoka a small piece that was proposed to go into Drayton Valley-Calmar. That's a trading area into Rimbey. There are very few people in that area, but it's an important area.

I'm going to run out of time fairly soon. Those are the critical changes: a community in Red Deer moved from Red Deer-South to Red Deer-North because it's north of Ross Street, again a natural boundary, and it helps make the population numbers work. I spoke to the Wetaskiwin-Camrose one. There are some changes to move areas north of Athabasca into the Athabasca-Redwater constituency from Lesser Slave Lake because, again, there's no connection to Lesser Slave Lake, no road directly across, and they fit more closely in that constituency. Lesser Slave Lake is accommodated by moving it north to pick up Tallcree First Nation, which is now in the constituency of Lesser Slave Lake, so there is an affinity.

Small changes like Garden River, a small community in northern Alberta on the west side of Wood Buffalo national park, was included in the report in the Wood Buffalo constituency. It has no connection. There's no access; there's no way of getting there. In fact, it relates to the Peace River constituency, so it makes sense to move it into that area.

Those are the changes, Mr. Chairman. There's one in Grande Prairie, again, that just realigns some of the city population and some around Cold Lake, which again respects the question of access and where people relate. For example, the Onion Lake First Nation relates to Lloydminster. It was moved into Cold Lake. There's no direct access to Cold Lake. So those are the types of changes.

I have to say quickly in closing, Mr. Chairman, that there were a lot of changes which were recommended which didn't fall into the parameters, so we couldn't do them; for example, the Member for Highwood on behalf of the towns of Turner Valley and Black Diamond and in fact much representation from those two towns to be moved from Foothills-Rocky View into Highwood. We looked at that very closely, but it would have left Foothills-Rocky View as a constituency that was way too small, and it would also have left issues with respect to, for example, the town on the north end of that constituency, Crossfield, which would also have the same kind of comment about association, so it couldn't be accommodated.

So we've done the best we can to make the changes which the communities have asked for, and I think it's a package which makes sense. I would commend it to the House.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I've just been reminded that you still have four minutes left. It was the wrong clock that beeped. So if you want to finish your remarks, I'll recognize you.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I don't have much more to say, but I rushed that last bit. I did want to explain that numerous communities wrote. People have written saying that they want changes made, but in every case they were looked at by myself in terms of: did they meet the tests? Did they stay within the ranges? Were they changes which could be supported by the members who represented the constituencies affected? They're the closest to the community and understand their community. Does that leave the report intact?

I was using the example of Black Diamond and Turner Valley, where they made very good, compelling arguments about their business association with High River and Okotoks and the municipal arrangements that they had together, but when it came to the final analysis, it left the Foothills-Rocky View constituency too small and left it open to the same question with respect to Crossfield and its desire perhaps to stay with Airdrie in the Airdrie-Chestermere constituency.

So, Mr. Chairman, not an easy task to take a look at the report, to ask members to look at their own communities to make sure of the fine detail that can come from the expertise that individual members of the House have in knowing their own communities and knowing how they relate together – again, done entirely, I might say, on a nonpartisan basis without any discussion about the politics of it but merely a thorough discussion about reuniting communities where it was possible, making those changes that made sense because the communities wanted them changed and the population numbers could be accommodated and the changes could be accommodated in the context of the philosophy and the direction that was given to us by the boundaries commission.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Official Opposition has very, very grave concerns about the process by which this amendment hit our desks this afternoon on this particular bill. The principle being violated here is that politicians don't draw boundary maps. In fact, the Government House Leader himself said that the process should be nonpartisan and independent of government. The instant he brings in an amendment that moves constituency boundaries, the whole process becomes partisan and becomes dependent on government.

Mr. Chairman, the Official Opposition will not be a part of that process.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 carried]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports the following with some amendments: Bill 42. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this day for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears that we have made excellent progress today with respect to the matters that were before the House, and therefore we cannot proceed further without unanimous consent with respect to the appropriation bill. Rather than ask the House for unanimous consent, because some members might not be expecting it, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 14, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/05/14

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. O Lord, we give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen. Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have the great pleasure today of introducing the Hon. Tony Whitford, Speaker of the Northwest Territories, who is seated in the Speaker's gallery. Speaker Whitford was first elected in a by-election in 1988 and again in the general election of 1991, representing the Yellowknife South constituency. He was elected in the general election of 1999 to represent the constituency of Kam Lake and was elected as Speaker on January 17, 2000, for the 14th Legislature. Mr. Whitford is a graduate of the University of Calgary and does have a southern home in Cochrane, Alberta. I'd ask all members to join with me in welcoming the hon. Speaker Whitford to our Legislature.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise to introduce to you and through you some special guests in our gallery today. As you know, this is Crime Prevention Week, a time when many individuals and organizations are working hard to increase awareness of what all of us can do to make our communities stronger and safer. Last Friday I had the privilege of hosting the 12th annual crime prevention awards, which recognized 14 groups and individuals who have put their hearts and souls into preventing crime in their communities. In the members' gallery we have some of the award recipients, and they are: Kayla Penteluk, Drumheller Students Against Drinking and Driving; Adrienne Yellowdirt, Yellowhead Tribal Community Corrections Society; John Fuga, Strathcona County Crime Watch; Nick Semeniuk, Stony Plain Crime Prevention volunteer; Shannon Ross Watson, Inglewood prostitution reduction project; and a group recipient named Chicks in Charge, which is a group from Morinville that informs teens about sexual assault and dating violence. Two members of the Chicks in Charge are with us today – Solange Rivet and Megan Thiel, who is here with her father, Ed Thiel – and the group's sponsor, Melonie Dziwenka. Congratulations to all of you. Would you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Alberta Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce a group of students with their parents from Duchess, Alberta. They are led by teacher Mrs. Joyce Evans with parent helpers Brenda Watt, George Berg, Sherri Neely, Jodi Bradford, Sherry Charlton, Alyce Wickert, Marlene Robinson, Danette Plumer, and Tracey Palaschak. There are 26 students with them, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a rare event that in one week I get to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly some really great visitors and guests. Specifically, with us today are 50 excited students from Roland Michener secondary school in Slave Lake. They're joined by their teacher, who is one of the greatest teachers I know, Tracey Crain, and parent helpers Susan Moore, Teresa Sinclair, Teresa Bath, and Elaine Ulm. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you 50 students from Erskine school, located in my constituency. They are here today to see the Legislature and to sit in on question period and are accompanied by teachers Hank Boer and Sharon Fischer. The students are very enthusiastic, and it was good visiting with them. They're seated in both galleries. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two of Edmonton's really exciting theatre artists. My friend Chris Craddock is an award-winning playwright and actor and the artistic director for Azimuth Theatre and the playwright for the hit show Boy Groove, which is being held over at Azimuth Theatre until May 25. With Chris is Aaron Macri, the composer for Boy Groove and a cofounder of Ribbit Productions, which is the cosponsor for the play. They're both seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my distinct pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly a very distinguished guest, Dr. Kay McFadyen, who volunteers in our legislative offices over at the Annex on a regular basis. Dr. McFadyen has a background in education policy and has taught over the years at the University of Alberta. We are pleased to have her volunteer with us, and I'm grateful that she offers her assistance to us on a regular basis. I would now ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two wonderful and capable individuals who are presently working in my constituency office. My first guest, Mary MacKinnon, is a registered social worker who is working in my office during the spring session. Mary is doing a terrific job at the Edmonton-Highlands office taking care of the casework and generally running the office in a very capable way. My second guest, Meghan McMaster, will be going into her second year in the Grant MacEwan music program, and she is the STEP student at the Edmonton-Highlands constituency office this summer. So I'd ask both Meghan and Mary to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

I have a second introduction, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly members of Edmonton's deaf community and members of Edmonton's interpreting community. They're here today because they're very concerned about the closure of the American sign language interpreter program at Grant MacEwan Community College, which is the most highly recognized interpreter training program in Canada. The loss of this program will have devastating effects on the deaf community. The accessibility of Alberta's deaf community is at stake. I would ask, as I read their names, that they stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly: Helen McLeod, Tracy Hetman, Linda Hollewa, Carl Pickett, Caroline Fritz, Susan Madill, Erin Madill, Janice Keller, Grant Underschultz, Terry Williams, Lori Strelzyck, Angela Stratiy . . .

An Hon. Member: Slow down. She can't sign that fast.

Mr. Mason: Okay. Sorry. . . . Donna Korpiniski, Leanne Walls, Geoff Chiasson. Geoff is here from B.C. to express his concern. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Education Funding

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the government is saying, "Don't panic," but cuts in education that Edmonton public school board was forced to make yesterday will have a real impact on the lives of 450 teaching professionals and thousands of students. One student, Haley Grundy, told the Official Opposition that this school year she has been in classrooms with more students than desks and she expects the situation to get worse next year when her school cuts 10 teachers. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that his government's policy is directly hurting students in this province?

Mr. Klein: No, I won't admit such a thing. Mr. Speaker, as I explained yesterday, the goals and the objectives of the government are to make sure that Alberta students are getting the best education possible and, at the same time, make sure that taxpayers are getting the best value for their dollars in the school system – that's very important – and through the Commission on Learning and the recommendations that will be forthcoming, to ensure that the system remains sustainable for the future.

Now, relative to the assertion in the preamble, Mr. Speaker, where the student claims that there are more students than desks, I will have the hon. Minister of Learning investigate that particular situation.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier: how will the Premier's idea of wage rollbacks encourage those young teachers who are planning to leave this province to stay and become teachers in our province?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is what comes about when the opposition gets all their information from headlines, not the story but the headlines. I understand that the headline in the Edmonton Journal today read, "Cut wages to save jobs." I read through the story, and I read through the story, and I read through the story. Finally, I got down to the 11th paragraph, and when you reach that paragraph, what you find is that I was accurately quoted: the Premier "acknowledged wage rollbacks or tinkering with pension rules might be something the ATA could consider." Underline "might." The idea is that if the ATA wanted to look at these options, we wouldn't object. Now, that's not saying that the Premier is suggesting wage rollbacks. Not at all.

I don't know if the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition got down to the 11th paragraph. I suspect that he and his researchers read nothing more than the headlines, and that's unfortunate.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, I was at his press conference yesterday.

Why has the Premier suggested that teachers alone should take wage rollbacks to solve the schools' financial problems when public schools are the responsibility of all Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Indeed, public schools are the responsibility of all Albertans. That's why we have a Minister of Learning to represent education throughout the province, Mr. Speaker. I don't know what point the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is trying to make. Perhaps the Minister of Learning . . .

Ms Blakeman: Why do teachers have to bear the brunt?

The Speaker: Please. Please.

Mr. Klein: Well, now, someone over there, a mouth, asked the question. The teachers don't have to bear the brunt, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Learning is fully committed to working with the Edmonton public school board to find out what can be done to overcome some of their budget problems.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Transmission Policy

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year a stakeholder coalition for the economic transmission policy, which included Enmax Energy, Fording Coal, and Calpine Canada plus six consumer organizations such as the Industrial Power Consumers & Cogenerators Association, whose members use 50 percent of Alberta's electricity, warned that consumers should pay only for transmission that is for reliability or that will lead to lower overall costs. Instead, this government has stuck consumers with an additional $4 billion in transmission costs over the next 10 years. To the Premier: why did this government not encourage investment in generation in southern Alberta, which could have made transmission upgrades unnecessary, saving up to $2.5 billion instead of adding $2.5 billion to already . . .

The Speaker: Hon. the Premier, there was a question.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, yesterday it was $2.5 billion; today it's $4 billion. This simply goes to prove how inconsistent and how uninformed the Liberals actually are on this matter.

When they talk about electricity generation in southern Alberta, perhaps they don't get down to southern Alberta outside of the hon. leader of the Liberal Party, because he lives there and represents a constituency in Lethbridge, but all one needs to do is go to the Pincher Creek area and to see the literally more than 100, perhaps up to 200 windmills in operation on Cowley Ridge and other areas to see that indeed electricity is being generated. Some of that electricity was indeed subsidized under the small power producers' program when we had it in place. So we're doing our part to make sure that alternate forms of electricity come onstream.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Infrastructure recently announced that the Alberta government was going to purchase about 90 percent of our energy electricity requirements from so-called green power, which would include biomass, cogen, and wind.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why did the government choose to ignore the advice of the stakeholder coalition when they appeared before the standing policy committee in February of last year and told this government that, quote, they should not pick winners and losers by having consumers pay for transmission that is unlikely to lower overall costs, end of quote?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't at the standing policy committee meeting in question, and I don't know if the hon. member was, but I'm sure the Minister of Energy was at that particular meeting and perhaps can provide an answer.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've done exactly what the member suggests. We've reacted to the Premier's council on electrical issues. We've reacted to extensive stakeholder input. We've reacted to bringing a commitment to bring the lowest possible power generation prices to Albertans that we can.

Mr. Speaker, if the member in his spare time would choose to check the web site of the Alberta Department of Energy, under the Premier's council on electrical issues he'll see a statement on transmission that says: "Develop a comprehensive policy on transmission that will encourage transmission and generation to compete for the overall lowest cost." That's what the policy does. In fact, if you look at this policy today, which is the same policy as it was six months ago, that transmission has delivered 3,000 megawatts of new generation at a savings – a savings – to the Alberta rate base of some 5 billion to 6 billion Canadian dollars.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: what programs is this government considering putting in place to help consumers pay their power bills once transmission costs have increased by as much as 250 percent because of your electricity deregulation policies?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is a ridiculous, unwarranted, unfounded, stupid assumption, and I'm not going to answer it.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the secret draft report from the government's P3 subcommittee on schools has verified what the Official Opposition has been saying for months: this government has no justification for P3s, no objectives, no plans, and no policy. Further, the report states that this government plans to sell or lease municipal reserve lands to fund school construction. To the Premier: how does this government plan to use reserve school lands to pay for school construction when those are municipal lands?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, these are the kinds of things that would have to be worked out between school boards and municipalities, depending on the ownership of the lands.

Mr. Speaker, speaking to the concept of public/private partnerships or alternative forms of financing public works projects, there is indeed a plan, notwithstanding what the hon. member stated in his preamble. The plan is to have a proper adjudication of those projects that might – underline "might" – be candidates for alternative financing proposals. This adjudication committee is just now getting up and running, and if there are ideas for a P3 project that could involve inner-city schools – and it could. I use this as an example, and I use it as a "might," and I underline: could, maybe, might. Not that it's going to happen, perhaps, but an example would be an inner-city school site in Calgary or Edmonton – we'll use either one of those cities – where there's tremendous value attached to the land, where the school is totally underutilized, where there is some thought about maybe closing the school but where perhaps there is a need for, say, K to 3.

To redevelop that same site, if there are some historical components that need to be preserved, a portion of the land could still be set aside for public reserve, but the other part of the land could be redeveloped into commercial, residential, and/or public-sector uses. This in turn could generate money for the school boards, could accommodate educational and community requirements and at the same time provide much-needed housing in an inner-city area. So, Mr. Speaker, if it makes sense, then the adjudication committee will make that judgment and make recommendations to the government.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. These are municipal lands. Shouldn't the municipalities get the revenue, not the province?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is an assumption. There is a mixed ownership, as I understand it, of school board lands. In some cases the province owns the land, in some cases the school board, and in some cases the municipality. So all of these things would have to be figured out and determined, and there would have to be concurrence on the part of the school board and the municipality before any of these projects would proceed.

Mr. Bonner: To the Premier: why were P3 policies, processes, objectives, and frameworks not developed before the government committed the province to this P3 debacle?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, what we have committed ourselves to is the principle of pursuing financing alternatives, one of which is the public/private partnership concept. Outside of the Calgary courthouse, none are under consideration yet by the committee, which was just established and I think confirmed by cabinet on Tuesday, yesterday, as a matter of fact. So there's hardly been time for this committee to get up and running, never mind considering projects. There are no projects before the committee at this particular time, at least as far as I know.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his desperation to escape the blame for the school crisis, the Premier is casting about for scapegoats. He blames school boards. He blames parents. He blames teachers. He blames the big bad feds. Well, the buck stops with the Premier. It is about time that he started showing some responsible leadership. My question to the Premier: why is the Premier pointing fingers and pinning the blame on school boards and teachers when his government is entirely to blame for the crisis in our schools?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there are so many false assumptions and statements in the preamble that I don't even know where to start. I haven't blamed anyone. I haven't pointed fingers at anyone. There is no crisis in education, none whatsoever. Of course, it's natural for the ND opposition to blame the government. What they will say is that the government should simply throw more money at the situation. The NDs, you know, dream in greenbacks. They see this money just falling from the sky, and they just say: lookit; gather it up in wheelbarrows and just throw it at school boards and throw it at health and throw it at municipalities. It doesn't matter where it comes from. If it comes from banks, well, that's okay with the NDs. You know, the more you borrow the better. The more you go into deficit, the more you go into debt, the more you hamstring the future citizens of this province, the young people of this province, the more they like it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these cuts and layoffs are being announced by school board after school board across this province, is the Premier suggesting that there's a conspiracy between school boards to make him and his government look bad?

Mr. Klein: No. Not at all. Mr. Speaker, we really want to work with school boards, and we want to work with the ATA – I indicated that in my scrum yesterday – to achieve sustainability. We want to work with parents. We want to work with students. That's why we have established the Commission on Learning: to determine what can be done over the long term. We are not short-term thinkers like the NDs. We are long-term thinkers, and we want long-term solutions to achieve sustainability and to do what is right. [interjections] We're getting a lot of noise here from the peanut gallery across the way.

Mr. Speaker, we want to achieve sustainability, we want to do the right thing, and that's why we're taking our time to really receive as much public input as we possibly can through the Commission on Learning to properly put in place the programs that will ensure affordability and sustainability for future generations.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the Premier: then how can the Premier have the sheer audacity and gall to pin the blame for funding shortfalls on school boards and teachers while his government sits on a secret $3 billion surplus in last year's budget?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if I heard the leader of the third party correctly, he said: a secret $3 billion fund. If he knows about a $3 billion fund which I don't know about, then he knows of a secret that I don't know about. How he found out I have no idea, but perhaps he'd like to share that with us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Supportive Housing and Homeless Shelters

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my view that a very superficial pop culture book called One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest has helped convince our generation that the best thing for the institutionalized mentally ill people is to set them free into the community. My observation is that a significant number of these people are now semipermanent residents of institutions such as jails and homeless shelters, not to mention park benches and riverbanks, where they often come to harm and are certainly not able to get much of the proper help or stability they may require. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors. Given that reports indicate that the mentally ill may comprise 25 and maybe even 35 percent of all homeless shelter residents, what better options exist to provide more stable housing for these people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a concern that a large number of our residents in the homeless shelters are in fact having mental health problems. What we are currently doing is trying to address the need for more supportive housing, and I do have to say that the various nonprofit organizations across the province are accessing our funding through the provincial homeless initiative, also through the Canada affordable housing program.

2:00

More specifically, Mr. Speaker, some examples – and although they may be quite insufficient, they are a good start. In Edmonton the Salvation Army recently opened a long-term supportive housing residence for men with multiple barriers to living, these kind of people. Grande Prairie just announced the opening of Willow Place, I believe it is, which was through the affordable housing program. In Calgary the Bob Ward centre is currently being built. Also, we do have something called the Gunn Centre operated by our ministry, which is also focused on these people and is doing a very fine job of dealing with it on a long-term basis.

Do we need more spaces? Definitely. Is our goal to limit the number of semipermanent residents with these problems in the shelters? Most definitely.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have only one supplemental question. Could the minister tell us: what are the general costs per mattress on the floor of homeless shelters such as the Sunalta Shelter in Calgary?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Sunalta Shelter is a big warehouse. It's a very big, open building, very clean, very well maintained, supplied by the city of Calgary for the last couple of seasons, I believe, as a temporary, short-term – and I stress “temporary, short-term,” that being about five or six months – accommodation. The city of Calgary picked up the cost of providing the building, the utilities that go with it, and also the busing, bringing the people from downtown to the shelter. Our contribution if we followed the request that's currently going forward – and, quite frankly, hon. member, I don't know if we're going to go this route or not. We are having a good look at what the appropriate actions are to be taken, but it would cost the ministry approximately $380 to $390 per mat per month to house these people in a wide open space with about a foot between the mats on the floor.

Livestock Feeding Industry

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, as a consequence of the drought Alberta is the highest feed cost region in North America. As producers are forced out of business, our livestock feeding industry is falling behind other producing regions. The flaws in the income disaster program and the Alberta disaster assistance loan program plus the inequitable 2002 acreage payment program fall short of addressing the crisis the Alberta livestock feeding sector faces. My questions are to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Is the livestock feeding industry still important to this government?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the livestock feeding industry is incredibly important to this government, and I believe it contributes about $5.4 billion of the value-added processing industry in this province. There is no question that 2002 was one of the most challenging years that the agricultural industry as a whole has faced in this province. I am very proud of the resilience of that industry, and I'm very proud of the support that this government was able to provide to it through the various programs from the provincial government with some support from the federal government. It amounts to about $1.4 billion, and that includes the livestock feeding industry.

Dr. Nicol: To the minister: will this government acknowledge that the $1.5 billion spent on agriculture in 2002 was not equitably allocated and excluded many in the livestock grain feed industry?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I would not acknowledge that in any way. First of all, the program that was put in place was to support the feed industry for part of it, and it did that. We lost a very small percentage of our breeding herds, which was our aim. Producers spend years and years and years building up a herd, and there was a great danger of at least 25 percent of that herd being sold elsewhere or slaughtered.

Mr. Speaker, it was successful. We had 5.4 million head of cattle in our province in 2001, and our 2002 count shows 5.2 million head. That's the foundation for the feeding industry. There is no question that the feeding industry is under stress. There is no question that about 450,000 calves went south for feed this year, but our producers are optimistic. We've got a good start on this year. We hope our feed supplies will be back in place and the industry will continue to be a very strong part of the economy of this province.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the minister: when is the government going to help and step in and bridge the gap before the Alberta livestock feeding industry erodes beyond repair?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me just give you an indication of where we do fill the gap and where we have stepped in. First of all, we have the farm income disaster program, which is a program where, whether you're in the feeding industry or the grain industry or any other part of the industry, if your income falls below 70 percent, that program is there to respond. We have a farm disaster loan that was started at the time of a crisis of low prices in the hog industry. That was continued. In fact, that program was changed this year to respond to this very issue, and the amount of the loan was raised to $200,000, and the quick-cash aspect of it, which was $20,000, was raised to $50,000, and that $50,000 can be accessed on a promissory note. There are a number of programs in this province that respond. I would repeat that at least $1.4 billion was provided in support primarily from this provincial government to the industry.

Mr. Speaker, I probably meet with three or four industry groups a year. I think I could count on one hand the number of times that I have been at a presentation where I haven't had people get up and profusely thank this government for their support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Softwood Lumber Policy Bulletin

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The future of the softwood lumber industry is important to communities in the West Yellowhead constituency and the forest-based communities. People in my constituency have heard about the draft policy bulletin that was worked out earlier this year by government and industry negotiators from Canada and the United States. My constituency and community leaders in the area were of the understanding that this draft policy bulletin could pave the way towards a long-term solution to the softwood lumber dispute. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Could the minister advise the Assembly of the status of this policy bulletin?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge that the hon. Mr. Pettigrew, who has referred to this policy bulletin, has certainly worked very hard on behalf of the softwood lumber industry. However, I think the comments that have been reported perhaps are somewhat optimistic because there are still a number of outstanding issues needing to be addressed, such as the gap between what Canada and the U.S. see as a reasonable export tax rate and what should be done with the duties that the U.S. has already collected. Alberta would not support an export tax unless there is a clear indication before the tax is put in place of the conditions under which it would be removed and it was clear that this export tax was an interim provision before a solution would be reached.

Mr. Speaker, we are still waiting for the U.S. to publish an official policy bulletin which might set the stage for long-term solutions to the dispute. After the U.S. publishes its draft bulletin, there is a 30-day public review period. Then the U.S. would make appropriate changes to its bulletin and publish a final version. We will then study the final policy bulletin and consult with the Alberta industry. Only then will we be able to be in a position to work with the forestry industry further and make a counterproposal or agree to this final policy bulletin.

I'd also like to indicate by way of an update that NAFTA and WTO challenges are continuing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister advise the House how his department is looking at responding to the policy bulletin that is supposed to be coming from the U.S. Department of Commerce?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. Once the policy bulletin is in its final form and is published, the Alberta government, of course, will study it to try and determine as to whether it provides the means for Albertans' best interest in relation to the countervailing and antidumping to be revoked or not. So, yes, we will be studying the process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm looking at a question to the same minister: how would the softwood lumber dispute impact the local community timber program that exists throughout Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, this is going to take a bit of time, but it is very, very important to the member and others. The community timber program is very important. There are about 128 small sawmillers and loggers . . .

Dr. Taylor: How many?

Mr. Cardinal: About 128. About four to five communities, in fact, depend on forestry as their major source of income and also for job creation. We've managed in the last two years throughout the negotiations to keep separate the companies that produce less than 5 million board feet, Mr. Speaker, because most of the product they sell is used domestically and not exported, so we've managed to do that.

West Nile Virus

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, recent evidence from other provinces shows that human illness from West Nile virus is more widespread than originally thought. Even worse, the Canadian Medical Association Journal reports that the effects of the virus are more severe than expected, in many cases requiring long-term intensive medical treatment. To put this in perspective, there were more cases of West Nile virus in humans in Ontario last year than there were of SARS this year, and there is little doubt that West Nile will hit Alberta this summer. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that the Canadian Medical Association Journal emphasizes "the need to provide adequate resources for diagnostic laboratory support," can the minister explain how labs in Alberta may be expected to test hundreds of possible cases when they did not receive an increase in funding?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that previously when it came to matters as it related to West Nile virus, we had to use a federal laboratory that was in Winnipeg – and it is a very, very good laboratory – but in an effort to speed up access, we do have our own Provincial Laboratory that's being set up here in the province of Alberta. So for those cases where it's suspected that there may be West Nile virus, those tests will be done right here in Alberta as opposed to Winnipeg.

Dr. Taft: To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: given that legislation requires workers to refuse to work in unduly hazardous situations, what steps will employers be required to take to protect outdoor workers from the dangers of contracting West Nile virus? Will his department issue a bulletin?

Mr. Dunford: Actually, I'm not aware, as the question is asked here today, regarding the plans that workplace health and safety has for the summer season. So I'll take that question under advisement and certainly get back to the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. minister of health to supplement?

Mr. Mar: Yes, sir. Mr. Speaker, I should say that it will be important not just for workers but for all Albertans who are out of doors this summer. We will have an education program to indicate to Albertans how best to avoid being bitten in the first place. I would expect that people who are in areas where there are large numbers of mosquitoes, particularly the three species that do carry West Nile virus, would take additional precautions and wear baggy, long-sleeved and long-trousered clothing and wear a repellent that contains DEET. So we do have a plan in place with respect to West Nile virus. It will involve the monitoring of mosquitoes; lab testing improvements, as I've already indicated; physician education so that physicians are aware of what the symptoms are and what to look for; and a public awareness campaign that will again advise members of the public how to best avoid getting bitten in the first place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: has the minister considered the impact on the WCB of workers making claims based on the possibility that they contracted West Nile virus during the course of their work?

Mr. Dunford: Those kinds of discussions, I think, as you would know, Mr. Speaker, and as other members would know, start in the area of the experts that we have on staff. As yet, nothing has come to me for a particular decision in that particular area, but we're meeting with officials this afternoon on other matters, and I'll bring this one up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Telehealth

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A constituent of mine spoke with me recently about telehealth and relayed to me the benefits that the program could have on the health system here in Alberta. While the average Albertan may not be aware of the potential of telehealth, regional health authorities are increasingly using the technology to enhance health care in our province. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell us how the development of telehealth services in Alberta is progressing and what he is doing to advance the service?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I should say first of all that the reason for our strong support for telehealth is to enhance access to clinical services for Albertans, and in order to do that, we have to put some significant resources into this area. The department has already spent close to $15 million in the early stages of development of telehealth in the form of base funding and grants, and an additional $800,000 was recently committed to support development of clinical services within telehealth.

Mr. Speaker, one only needs to look at today's Edmonton Journal to see a story of an excellent demonstration of how telehealth works. A young girl, six years old, whose family lives in Athabasca previously had to come into Edmonton a number of times a month in order to see a speech pathologist. Now through telehealth that family can avoid that two-hour drive, and the six-year-old girl still gets access to a speech pathologist through telehealth, which dramatically improves the access of delivery of service to this young person.

So, Mr. Speaker, improving access to services is one aspect of telehealth. The second aspect, of course, is the cost savings associated with ensuring that patients don't need to drive or travel, that specialists themselves, who may reside only in Calgary and Edmonton, need not travel outside of their centres, where their homes are. We are also able to provide tremendous rural physician education through using the some 225 different videoconferencing and teleradiology systems that are throughout the province, making it one of the largest such systems in the world.

Mr. Johnson: My one and only supplemental is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. What effect will SuperNet have on telehealth?

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister of health referred to the exact same article that I was going to refer to to illustrate the advantages of remote distance therapy. The issue that most small communities face is a lack of bandwidth to be able to provide those kinds of advanced technology services in a health application field. What SuperNet does is it delivers that required bandwidth to most of the rural communities across Alberta to enable access for every citizen in this province to these kinds of health services, education services, information services. SuperNet is going to make a huge difference in a lot of areas.

Mosquito Control Program

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, the West Nile virus is expected to claim its first victims in our province this year, and the problem is only expected to get worse in the future. In spite of this fact, this government refuses to work to prevent the disease's transmission. The Centers for Disease Control have said that mosquito control is the most effective way to prevent the transmission of West Nile virus. To the Minister of Environment: why isn't this government going to protect its citizens by introducing a mosquito abatement program?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Until the early '90s – it might have been the late '80s but in that time frame from '88 to '92 – the government worked with the various communities on mosquito abatement programs, and at that stage the municipalities took over the programs. This year there are eight municipalities that are involved with mosquito abatement programs, so we are in fact encouraging the municipalities. My own community of Medicine Hat is certainly involved with the mosquito abatement program, and I would like to congratulate them for that.

Ms Carlson: Why hasn't the Minister of Environment explored environmentally friendly alternatives to mosquito control like BTI, a microbial larvicide?

Dr. Taylor: Once again, Mr. Speaker, certainly, the mosquito abatement program, as I've said, is the responsibility of the municipalities. If any municipality wishes to ask for information on the particular biological controls, we're certainly willing to investigate that with the municipalities. But as we move forward, this is a municipal issue. We will work with municipalities on these issues.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, given that municipalities in the province simply can't afford mosquito abatement programs because of this government's downloading policies, when is the Minister of Environment going to push for provincial funding for a province-wide mosquito abatement program? Lives will be at stake over this.

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, municipalities can afford it. As I've said, there are six or eight municipalities that are doing it. If they couldn't afford it, they wouldn't be doing it. So they can afford to do it. They are doing it.

As the minister of health has quite clearly defined in an earlier question, we have good educational programs out there as to how to prevent West Nile virus. For instance – the minister of health didn't mention this – Environment works with communities on standing water, because it's obvious that the mosquitoes are breeding in standing water. Unfortunately, or perhaps fortunately for the agricultural industry, from the West Nile side of it there's going to be a lot of standing water in southern Alberta this year because of the snowfall and the amount of rain that we've had.

So it is a serious issue. We do take it seriously, and we will continue to work with the department of health on our abatement policies and continue to provide educational programs as to how Albertans can prevent themselves from getting this illness.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to supplement.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I only wish to challenge one statement that was made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, and that is that we need to keep in mind that the risk of contracting West Nile virus in Alberta remains low. We are vigilant about the risk that is associated with it, but the risk remains very low. We do have a plan right now that is based on environmental and biological factors that are specific to this particular province. Practices that may exist in other jurisdictions, while we can learn from them, are not entirely transferable to this province. If the circumstances change, there may be a possibility that our response will change as a consequence of that, but we do have a plan in place that is the right plan for the particular circumstances that we currently face.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier seems to have trouble coming up with a logical and consistent explanation for the crisis in education. In fact, the Premier toggles back and forth between blaming school boards and teachers for the crisis and denying that the crisis exists at all. To assist the Premier, I have prepared these questions for him today. Question 1: is the proof of a school crisis (a) teacher layoffs, (b) school closures, (c) program cuts, or (d) all of the above?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, for a well-educated person he is very, very sloppy in the design of his questions, because he left out one important answer, and that is: none of the above. That's the one I would take.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Question 2: is the main cause of the school crisis (a) the government's refusal to fund the teachers' arbitration, (b) high utility bills, (c) the cap on grade 10 credits, or (d) all of the above?

Mr. Klein: Well, again sloppiness in question design, Mr. Speaker, and for that he gets an F. I would say: none of the above. Not all of the above but none of the above.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's the Premier that'll be getting the F, I suspect.

Number 3: are the consequences of the school crisis (a) shortchanging our children, (b) loss of qualified teachers, (c) angry parents, (d) fewer Tory seats in the next election, or (e) all of the above?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if there's anything below an F, he would get it because he gets sloppier and sloppier. He forgot to include one important answer, and that is: none of the above.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last number of weeks many horse owners have taken the added precaution of protecting their animals against West Nile virus by vaccinating them. However, there are a number of horse owners and horse associations that have taken the stance of asking the government to compensate them for any horses that may die as a result of this disease. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What is the province's policy on this?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there is no provincial compensation program for the loss of livestock from infectious diseases including West Nile, and I'd just like to give three or four points as to why. Owners are not compensated for any infectious disease such as anthrax or for a horse that dies from sleeping sickness or animals that die from any number of diseases. The CFIA, the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, is the lead agency in Canada for determining when compensation should occur, and that generally occurs when animals are destroyed to avoid contagion with other animals or to control or eradicate a federally reportable disease. It is important for horse owners to understand that West Nile virus is not contagious from horse to horse. As the member indicated, there is a licensed vaccine in place for West Nile virus in horses, and certainly we are recommending that horse owners speak to their veterinarians about prevention.

Another point I would make, Mr. Speaker, is that insurance is available to horse owners for their animals. The last thing I would say on this is that West Nile virus is a reportable disease in the designated communicable disease regulation in Alberta, and we are a part of the West Nile plan and are working very closely with the ministries of health and environment on surveillance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental – and it will be my last question – is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Could the minister explain what his department is doing to monitor and detect the early presence of West Nile virus in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm quite pleased to report as to how my department monitors for this virus. Our monitoring includes gathering of crows that have recently died – and most are submitted, of course, by the public – and then examining the birds and forwarding them to local Alberta labs for testing. If we do get a confirmed case of West Nile virus, our staff will promptly notify the provincial officers of health for further action.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Aids to Daily Living Program

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seniors and other

Albertans who rely on the Alberta Aids to Daily Living program are nervous about how this government's plan to make health regions responsible for the program will work. They are concerned about how the change will affect their benefits and whether the program is in jeopardy. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is the minister going to envelope the money for the Aids to Daily Living program for the regional health authorities so that it can't be spent on other areas?

Mr. Mar: Yes.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: will the minister set a minimum standard of service and equipment that must be provided by every health region through this program?

Mr. Mar: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Given the experience parents are having with the devolution of the speech therapy program to the RHAs, what safeguards will the minister put in place to make sure that this is not the first step towards eliminating or curtailing the Alberta Aids to Daily Living program?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think that she really asked that question in the first two. We will envelope the money to ensure that the 70-some million dollars that currently go to the 76,000 people in this province for Aids to Daily Living will continue to be spent in that area and that appropriate standards will be put in place by the province, and it will be our expectation that regional health authorities will meet those standards in delivering the program. It is important that we do move this important service to the regional health authority level, where it is closer to the people that are actually being served, and that just makes good sense, that decisions are made at a level where they are closer to patients who are using this important service.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, today we have seven members who are going to be participating in Recognitions, but I'm going to vary the routine just a bit and call on the Deputy Speaker first.

Page Recognition

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The deputy chairman and I would like to draw to the attention of all hon. members that we are going to lose seven of our wonderful pages when this session ends. They are Nicholas Fowler, Erin Weisgerber, Paul Groch, Stephen Michalyk, Craig Chupka, Megan Lau, and Sarah Monkman.

These fine young people will be leaving their duties in the Assembly following the close of the spring session, and I would ask you to join me in recognizing the great efforts of our pages who daily show patience and understanding of our many demands. They carry out their tasks with attention to duty and with good humour. So on behalf of all the hon. members here I ask our head page, Nicholas Fowler, to give each retiring page our gift and take with it our best wishes to each and every one.

We were honoured to have had you work with us in the Alberta Legislature. Thank you very much and good luck. [applause]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I received a letter today from the seven pages in question, and it's addressed to you, and I'd like you to listen to what they have to say to you.

Dear Mr. Speaker,

It is said that a teacher affects eternity; they can never tell where their influence stops. As we 7 who now graduate from our woefully short term as pages, reflect on our time with this Legislative Assembly, the truth of this saying has never been more clear.

Through the experiences we have had in the last few years, we have gained a unique insight into the parliamentary system and a fond understanding of the foundations on which it is based. Everyday as pages we have had the rare opportunity to view the integrity of 83 men and women, as they stand up for what they believe in, fighting to make our province a better place. It is hard not to look on with admiration when these men and women stand unafraid to voice their opinions and belief, representing the people of Alberta with examples of honour and class that we can only one day hope to attain. We have seen first hand the inner workings of the democratic process, the bad days and the good days, the disagreements and the co-operation. Through it all we have grown and learned more than can be expressed, from the 83 members from across the house, through the dignity and respect they have shown one another in what is often times a difficult process.

And now as we near the time that we will be closing this memorable chapter of our lives, we would like to express how truly grateful we are for having been given this opportunity. In more ways than can be explained, you have taught us, through your actions and through your words and helped us to grow perhaps a little more mature than when we began. Though we may not pursue a life related to politics, the lessons we have taken from within these walls will carry through to the rest of our lives. We can only hope that we too will grow to be people of the same level of dignity, integrity and understanding that you have proven yourselves to be. Thank you sincerely to all members, officers and staff of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. You have given us more than you will ever know.

Thank you from Nick Fowler, Erin Weisgerber, Paul Groch, Stephen Michalyk, Craig Chupka, Sarah Monkman, and Megan Lau.

ACT Foundation

Mrs. Gordon: The ACT Foundation is a national nonprofit organization dedicated to helping high school students across Canada implement a core curriculum CPR program for youth. They have recently established a partnership with the two school divisions in my constituency, Wolf Creek and Clearview. Students from Lacombe composite high school and William E. Hay composite high school in Stettler will be working on this. All youth will be taught the early warning signs of developing medical emergencies, how to react, and the practical skills of CPR, also the Heimlich manoeuvre.

Recognition and thanks go to the STARS Foundation of Alberta, who will be donating mannequins and paying costs related to teacher training and other needed teaching materials; the Stettler Independent for donating the printing of student manuals; and corporate health partners AstraZeneca and Aventis Pharma and Pfizer Canada, pharmaceutical companies who willingly provide core funding to the ACT Foundation. By working together we are empowering teens to save lives.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Seniors' Week

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During Seniors' Week 2003 from June 1 to 7 special events will be held across Alberta to recognize the importance of 327,000-and-growing seniors in our communities. Seniors' Week is a very wonderful time for seniors, but all year-round there are hundreds of seniors' organizations in Alberta who represent seniors in numerous ways.

The Canadian Association of Retired Persons, or CARP, and the Canadian National Institute for the Blind are but two national organizations. The Alberta Association of Meals on Wheels, the Alberta Senior Citizens' Housing Association, or ASCHA, the Alberta Senior Citizens Sport & Recreation Association, the Alberta Council on Aging are four of the many provincial organizations. Locally there is the Picture Butte Happy Oldtimers, the Redwater & District Pioneer Club, the Spruce Grove Golden Age Club, the Bow Cliff Seniors 50+ in Calgary, and the Jewish Family Service of Calgary. The Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta is a government-appointed body of citizens chaired by an MLA appointed by the Premier. It consults with seniors and those who represent them on issues of importance to seniors. Indeed, Alberta seniors are fortunate to have a multitude of organizations working to keep them vital, active, and involved.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

St. Paul RCMP Regimental Ball

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency was honoured to host the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Giuliano Zaccardelli, at the RCMP regimental ball recently held in St. Paul.

Commissioner Zaccardelli served his first recruit posting in St. Paul in 1972 and became the 20th commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in 2000. Commissioner Zaccardelli's brief visit to Alberta included a stop in Edmonton, where he spoke with the RCMP staff relations officers on the future direction of the RCMP and to a group of DARE instructors.

Staff Sergeant Jim Fell, noncommissioned officer in charge of the St. Paul RCMP detachment, and staff are to be commended for their role in the success of this visit and their commitment to the protection of our community.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Gerri Cook

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a pleasure to have the opportunity to recognize my good friend Gerri Cook. Gerri was the very deserving recipient on April 5 of the Alberta Motion Picture Industries Association 2003 Friend of the Industry award. She was honoured for her dedication to the field of animation and children's programming.

Gerri has more than 25 years of experience in the Canadian television industry working as a project developer, award-winning scriptwriter, producer, investment fund creator, manager, mentor, and role model. From being a founding director in the 1970s of the Alberta Television and Film Institute to her leading edge, three-dimensional animation show that also won an award on April 5, Gerri has been a dedicated supporter of the Alberta industry. She has worked hard to ensure that the Alberta industry is innovative, producing quality product that is globally competitive.

Gerri and her husband, Steve Moore, who has worked side by side with her over the years, have made a real difference to this industry and the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Museum of the Regiments

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to recognize the Museum of the Regiments, another great Calgary-Currie institution. Certainly among the finest military museums in all of Canada the museum honours such famous regiments as Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, Lord Strathcona's Horse, as well as other western Canadian regiments and naval forces. It is a definite must-see for military buffs, tourists, and residents alike.

Soon it will have the largest library collection of Canadian military history in existence and very appropriately so since Calgary-Currie does indeed have a very proud military history. In fact, our riding is named after General Sir Arthur Currie, popularly known as Guts and Gaitors to his men during World War I.

Congratulations to the many hundreds of volunteers and veterans whose efforts have so successfully built the museum these past many years and all the best on their fund-raising and plans for the future. Thanks to them future generations of Albertans and Canadians now have an outstanding opportunity to learn about Canada's proud military past and to ensure we never forget how hard it has been to keep freedom alive in this world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Shawna Churchill

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to salute Shawna Churchill of Medicine Hat, winner of the 2003 Norm McLeod Dream Weaver award. This award was created by the PDD Provincial Board to commemorate the 35-year career of Norm McLeod, its former CEO, and his commitment to promote community inclusion for people with developmental disabilities.

As adviser for the self-advocate program in Medicine Hat Shawna has made a positive impact on countless people in the Medicine Hat region. She has inspired them to believe and to succeed. Because of her selfless dedication she regularly goes above and beyond what is required. Shawna also spends time supporting her colleagues in developing their skills and in educating other professionals about the needs and the rights of people with disabilities, their challenges and their opportunities. As one of Shawna's nominators stated: there are a lot of people that are working in the community because of Shawna's belief that we can do anything we put our mind to.

Congratulations, Shawna, and thank you for your outstanding work with and for persons with developmental disabilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ron LaJeunesse

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to recognize and celebrate this year's recipient of the Grant MacEwan literary award, Ron LaJeunesse, for his book Political Asylums. This book traces in very concrete, unsentimental terms Alberta's short history of government-supported care for people with mental illness.

I can't recognize Ron's tremendous support without also recognizing the unique program which allowed him time to write and supported him during a year's sabbatical from his work with the Canadian Mental Health Association. That program is the Muttart fellowship program, which is designed to develop research and other materials to benefit the charitable sector and to provide senior managers within the social services sector with an opportunity for a sabbatical year to recharge and renew. We all gain from this program and Mr. LaJeunesse's work.

Mr. LaJeunesse was presented with the Grant MacEwan literary award and the $25,000 cheque, which is funded by Community Development, at the May 10 gala jointly sponsored by the Writers' Guild of Alberta and the Book Publishers Association of Alberta.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 133 Albertans, mostly from Calgary, which reads:

Whereas grandparents in Alberta often experience access denial to their grandchildren, which is contrary to the best interests and rights of children, including their support, development, and well-being.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to make the necessary changes to legislation and enable the grandparents to maintain ongoing contact with their grand-children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one petition to present today, and it's from the concerned parents of Grand Yellowhead regional division wanting the Grand Yellowhead regional division No. 35 board to review their plan for the school space in Edson, signed by 132 people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by 1,052 Albertans petitioning the provincial government to "establish a provincially subsidized monthly transit pass program for low income Albertans that would apply to all municipalities with a public transit system."

head: Notices of Motions

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I would seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to consider the circulated document relative to Senate reform, found on all members' desks, as being oral notice and as read into the record.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I think what you're seeking basically is unanimous consent for oral notice of the motion, not the latter part.

Mr. Jonson: Both.

The Speaker: I will be guided by the intent of the House with respect to this, but I want to provide a caution with respect to this matter. An hon. member standing up asking for oral notice – at this point in time the chair does not know what the oral notice is about. Presumably, a document has been circulated. The House has no record of such a document. If there is a procedural problem with the motion later, the chair might find himself at a disadvantage in having to deal with a procedural question with respect to whatever might be in the motion and not having seen the motion, not having heard the motion, being unaware of what the motion is. But the request was made for unanimous consent. We'll be guided by the decision of the House.

Request for unanimous consent for the oral notice side. The second side had to do with the reading of the motion, and I think it would be very, very important that the motion should be read into it. So for oral notice, unanimous consent would then allow the minister to go forward with the reading of the motion. Okay? Clear? So it's unanimous consent to provide . . . [interjection] No, no. This again, very clear – okay? – from a procedural point, because I sense by the body language of the House that everybody understands, but I want to make sure that nobody does not understand.

The request here is for unanimous consent for oral notice for the minister to proceed. That being given, the minister will then read the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Well, it's not given.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: On a point of procedure, Mr. Speaker, and for clarification, I believe the hon. member is entitled to rise and give oral notice without the unanimous consent of the House. What he was asking for unanimous consent of was to have it considered; in other words, to deliver to Hansard this written notice, which all members have, so that he didn't have to actually read it into the record. It would be printed into the record as though it was read.

So he is entitled to proceed but now to give oral notice by reading this to the House as the House has asked for.

The Speaker: Well, I think that's correct, and perhaps I did not provide the clearest clarification. The chair basically understands that this can be proceeded with by way of oral notice. [interjection] That's not required anyway, the unanimous consent. It's the reading of the thing.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: If unanimous consent is given for oral notice so that the minister doesn't have to read this, does unanimous consent also have to be given by the House before the motion can be introduced? That is my question.

The Speaker: No. There is a point later, hon. member, where that would have to be given. Right now we're just given the notice. The only thing the chair is saying is that it sure would be helpful if it was also read into it. In order to proceed with it, there will be another section later in the day that would have to be dealt with under Orders of the Day.

Mr. Mason: With unanimous consent?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Mason: Thank you.

The Speaker: Right now we're just on the oral notice side. I presume that assurance has been given to the hon. minister to proceed? Is it agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: I'm assuming it has. Proceed, hon. minister.

2:50

Mr. Jonson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and my apologies for contributing to that delay.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to give oral notice on the following motion.

Be it resolved that given that the current process of appointing Senators offends Canadians' democratic values, has deprived that House of political legitimacy and efficacy, and has prevented the Senate from being effective in protecting the interests of the provinces of Canada, the Legislative Assembly directs the government of Alberta to consult with Albertans on reforming the Senate through the following constitutional amendment; namely, by repealing sections 21 to 34 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and substituting the following:

21 (1) The Senate shall consist of elected members called Senators.

(2) Each Province shall be represented in the Senate by 6 Senators.

(3) Each Territory shall be represented in the Senate by 2 Senators.

22 (1) Subject to this section, the Senators representing a Province or Territory shall be elected by the electors of that Province or Territory.

(2) The legislature of a Province or of a Territory may make laws relating to the election of Senators representing that Province or Territory, including the method of election and the procedure for the election.

(3) Except in the case of by-elections, and except in the case of the first election held pursuant to this section, the election of one-half of the Senators representing a Province or Territory shall be held in conjunction with the general elections of members of the legislative assembly of the Province or of the Territory.

(4) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (6) and unless the office is sooner vacated, and except in the case of a Senator elected in a by-election, the term of office of a Senator representing a Province or Territory continues until the official announcement of the results of the Senate elections held in conjunction with the second general election in that Province or Territory after the election of that Senator.

(5) The first election held pursuant to this section in each Province or Territory shall be for the election of all the Senators representing that Province or Territory.

(6) The term of office for one-half of the Senators elected from each Province and Territory at the first election held pursuant to this section in each Province or Territory continues until the official announcement of the results of the Senate elections held in conjunction with the next general election in that Province or Territory.

(7) In relation to the Senators representing that Province or Territory, the legislature of a Province or of a Territory may make laws establishing which Senators subsection (6) applies to.

23 (1) Subject to this section, a person is qualified to be a candidate and to be elected Senator if the person is eligible to be a candidate and to be elected as a member of the House of Commons.

(2) A person is not qualified to be elected as a Senator or to remain a Senator if the person

(a) is a member of the House of Commons or of the legislative assembly of a Province or of a Territory, or

(b) is a Minister of the Crown

(3) If any question arises respecting the qualification of a Senator, the question shall be heard and determined by the Senate.

24 (1) A Senator may resign his or her seat by delivering a resignation to the Governor General.

(2) When a Senator resigns his or her seat in accordance with subsection (1), the seat immediately becomes vacant.

25 (1) A by-election to fill a vacancy in the Senate representation of a Province or Territory need not be called if

- (a) the vacancy occurs during the last year of the legal life of the legislative assembly of the Province or of the Territory, and
- (b) the term of office of the Senator who vacated that seat would have expired with the announcement of the results of the Senate elections held in conjunction with the next general election in the Province or Territory.

(2) The term of office for a Senator elected at a by-election shall be for the balance of the term of the Senator who vacated the seat.

26. The Senate may establish its own procedure for the election of the Speaker of the Senate and for the conduct of the Senate's business.

27. Subject to section 53, bills proposed to the Parliament of Canada may originate in the Senate equally as in the House of Commons.

28 (1) Where a bill is presented to the Senate after being passed by the House of Commons, if the Senate

- (a) votes against passing the bill,
- (b) passes the bill with amendments that are not acceptable to the House of Commons, or
- (c) fails to vote on the bill within 180 days after it is presented to the Senate, the bill may be brought before the House of Commons and if again passed by the House of Commons, with such amendments made by the Senate as are concurred in by the House, the bill may be presented to the Governor General for assent, and when assented to has the same force and effect as if passed in that form by the Senate.

(2) In a bill presented to the Governor General under this section, the words of enactment shall be amended by striking out any reference to the Senate.

(3) An alteration to a bill to give effect to subsection (2) is deemed not to be an amendment of the bill.

(4) This section does not apply to a bill referred to in section 30.

29. If the Speaker of the Senate or of the House of Commons rules that the subject matter of a bill is wholly or partially within section 94A or 95, the bill may be repassed by the House of Commons under section 28 only if

- (a) the percentage of the members voting who vote to pass the bill is greater than the percentage of Senators voting who voted to reject the bill or pass it with amendments, or
- (b) the Senate fails to vote on the bill within 180 days after it is presented to the Senate.

30. Where a bill is presented to the Senate after being passed by the House of Commons and the Speaker of the Senate or of the House of Commons rules that the bill

- (a) directly affects in any way, including by taxation, the natural resources of a Province,
- (b) authorizes the expenditure of federal funds in areas of provincial jurisdiction under sections 92, 92A and 93,
- (c) is binding on a Province, or
- (d) declares a local work or undertaking to be of the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more Provinces

if the Senate votes against passing the bill or passes it with amendments not acceptable to the House of Commons, no further proceedings may take place.

31. Appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada and to the Federal Court of Appeal have no effect until they are ratified by the Senate.

32. No treaty shall be ratified by Canada unless the Senate has authorized Canada to ratify the treaty.

And be it further resolved that given that the Constitution establishes Canada as a federal system of government in which the sovereign powers of the Crown are divided between two separate but equal orders of government and that the federal Parliament is comprised of two Houses, the House of Commons, which is designed to reflect the democratic principle of representation by population, and a Senate, which is designed to reflect the federal nature of Canada, and that Canada is a parliamentary democracy that has constitutionally enshrined the democratic right of every citizen of Canada to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons and of their Legislative Assembly, the Legislative Assembly directs the government of Alberta to initiate discussions with the government of Canada and the governments of all other provinces and territories leading to the reform of the Senate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development on behalf of the hon. Minister of Government Services.

Bill 44

Personal Information Protection Act

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Member for Livingstone-MacLeod to request leave to introduce a bill being the Personal Information Protection Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 44 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

3:00

Bill 45

Family Law Act

Ms Graham: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave this afternoon to introduce Bill 45, the Family Law Act.

After chairing the MLA review of the maintenance enforcement program and child access in 1998 and more recently the Unified Family Court Task Force, it is indeed a pleasure to introduce this bill. This bill will consolidate provincial family law under one act while updating it to reflect current legal practices and the current needs of Albertans. It will make it easier for Albertans to understand family law.

This bill follows extensive work done by Alberta Justice to review all provincial family law and to consult with the public, the legal community, and other stakeholders. I'd like to recognize the members of the family law reform project team from Alberta Justice. They are John Booth, Averie McNary, Marleen Poon, Ronda Goulden, Nolan Steed, Clark Dalton, and Earl Evaniew, who drafted the legislation. This legislation, Mr. Speaker, incorporates recommendations from the before-mentioned MLA review committee, the Alberta Law Reform Institute, and the input received through Alberta Justice's family law reform project.

Mr. Speaker, apart from consolidating Alberta family law, this bill also proposes amendments to a number of areas including guardianship; parenting, which was formerly known as custody and access; contact with a child; and spousal and adult interdependent partner support. This bill will be held over until the fall sitting of the Legislature to provide Albertans and the legal community with the opportunity to review the bill and provide further input.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 45 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 45, the Family Law Act, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development I wish to table today the 2002-2003 inspection report of animal facilities at the three Alberta universities using animals in research and education, as required under section 52(5) of the Universities Act. I'm pleased to say that all of the requirements were met under the Canadian Council on Animal Care guidelines.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table responses to questions raised during the Committee of Supply for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on May 7, 2003.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, this morning a function was held announcing a joint initiative of Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, the University of Alberta, and the Alberta Research Council; namely, Agri-Food Discovery Place, which is being built at the U of A to aid in making Alberta's food supply safer. I am tabling with the House the news release filed in the appropriate numbers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and table the required number of copies of the Compliance Assessment & Enforcement Initiatives annual report. There's one statement in here that says: "By raising the level of awareness about Alberta Environment's compliance objectives, and by fostering a spirit of stewardship for the environment by all Albertans, the department seeks to prevent non-compliance through a heightened awareness of environmental responsibilities." This is a report about non-compliance, so in some sense industry has failed, and in some sense we have failed because we haven't done our job well enough yet. But we are working on it, and we are getting better as we go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the news release and backgrounder describing a landmark agreement, the first of its kind in Canada, which was signed today by Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, the University of Alberta, and the Alberta Research Council, which I represented as chair. The agreement establishes the Institute for Food, Agri-Industrial, and Agricultural Sciences, Alberta. The founding members will pool resources, staff and facilities valued at over $750 million, to collaboratively manage and deliver ag research, product development, and education programs to benefit Alberta's producers, processors, and consumers and to attract new private and public investment to our important agricultural industry.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. First of all, I have the required number of copies of about 40-plus letters from people in my constituency regarding reducing the cost of WCB.

The second tabling is a letter to the editor of the Western Review in Drayton Valley just commending the good work of the people of Drayton Valley-Calmar constituency as well as their MLA with regard to advancing the Alberta agenda, which today's motion speaks to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've got three tablings today. The first one is addressed to the hon. Premier from the concerned parents of Grande Yellowhead regional division re their plan on closure and transfer of schools in the Edson area from Grande Yellowhead regional division No. 35 to Living Waters Catholic regional division No. 42. The second one is to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure with the same concerns, and the third one is to the hon. Minister of Learning on the same subject.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the required number of copies of correspondence signed by 42 of my constituents with regard to the Condominium Property Act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of four letters to table today. Three are from constituents, and one is from the village of Cremona, all in support of the Didsbury hospital becoming part of the Calgary health region.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of documents signed by 71 Albertans requesting that the government of Alberta take immediate steps to address funding issues affecting Our Lady of the Assumption school in the Calgary-Bow constituency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview and is a submission signed by 131 individuals expressing their concern about the crisis in education, reductions in teaching staff, large class sizes, and the elimination of programs like music and special academic programs. There are five copies of that.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of a submission to be made to the Standing Policy Committee on Health and Community Living next month entitled Creating Protections for Better Lives of Vulnerable Seniors in Care Today and in The Future. It's prepared by Families Allied to Influence Responsible Eldercare, also known as FAIRE.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a document signed by 872 Albertans that represent many cities and towns throughout the province. They are urging the government to acknowledge that the maintenance and construction costs of schools, hospitals, and roads are part of the provincial debt and to consider splitting the budget surplus between the monetary debt and the infrastructure debt.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first one is a petition signed by 77 citizens of Alberta, most of them from the city of Calgary. These citizens are calling for “an immediate increase in AISH . . . and SFI . . . rates based on the feedback received during the government’s low-income review.”

The second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of The Stakeholder Coalition for Economic Transmission Policy, which was a presentation to the Standing Policy Committee on Energy and Sustainable Development on February 25, 2002.

The third tabling is a copy of a letter that was received by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East and also by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. It is a letter to the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General dated May 14, 2003, and it’s from the mayor, His Worship Bill Smith. This is in regard to Bill 42, the Electoral Divisions Act, and the mayor is imploring us in this Assembly “not to ignore the opposition to Edmonton’s loss of voice” with the redistribution.

Thank you.

3:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I’d table five copies of two e-mails from Bonnie Dani, a teacher who is going to be affected by the cuts in Edmonton public, who states in part that she feels that she’s being “forced out” of the profession and is having great difficulty understanding why the government doesn’t fund the arbitrated settlement with teachers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’ve got two tablings today. The first one is a letter addressed to me about two weeks ago from one of my constituents – the name of the constituent is H el ene O’Connor – who is looking forward to going to the University of Ottawa for her medical degree in French, the second language. On completion of her degree Miss O’Connor would be returning to Edmonton and offering services in both official languages to Albertans. However, she is concerned with the rising cost of medical education and requests that some additional financial support be provided to her and other Albertans like her who are pursuing their studies for good reason outside of Alberta.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a set of six letters out of more than 40 that my office has received over the last little while. These letters are from members of Edmonton’s deaf community, interpretive students, parents of deaf children, and deaf associations, all concerned about the sudden closure of the ASL interpreter program at Grant MacEwan College. I’ll quickly read the names of the writers. The first letter is from the president of the Edmonton Association of the Deaf; the second one from Dr. David Mason, a professor and deaf activist; the third one from the president of the Canadian Cultural Society of the Deaf; the fourth one from the Alberta Cultural Society of the Deaf; the fifth from the president of the Alberta Association of the Deaf; and the last one is a letter from the mother of a deaf child who reminds this House and the government that accessibility for a deaf child means having qualified interpreters to make day-to-day events such as going to school or going to the doctor possible for her.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m tabling a letter today from William Daly dated April 11, 2003. This senior is concerned with the ever increasing utility costs and inflation in Alberta and says that it’s forcing many seniors to go without prescriptions for false teeth, glasses, and hearing aids because they can no longer afford them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of one report relating to electricity prices. It discusses how people are being misled by inflation into thinking that long-term electrical prices are going up when in fact they are going down in real dollars. It outlines how California electricity prices before the attempted restructuring were nearly 14 cents per kilowatt-hour expressed in Canadian dollars and how average U.S. residential prices across the nation in 2002 were about 13 cents per kilowatt-hour in Canadian dollars, apparently the lowest price in 30 years in real dollars. The report is titled Electricity Retail Price Fact Sheet from the U.S. Department of Energy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

Sauv e of Edmonton regarding the distribution of funds from the Alberta lottery fund; responses to Written Question 13 and Written Question 14 asked for by Ms Blakeman on April 28, 2003.

head: Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would seek unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 61(2) to allow for third reading of Bill 40, the Appropriation Act, 2003, on the same day that it's reported out of Committee of the Whole.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I also seek unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 38(1) requiring notice to allow for debate on the government motion introduced by oral notice this afternoon by the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, the Senate resolution, on the same day as oral notice was given.

[Unanimous consent denied]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I now call the Committee of the Whole to order, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has indicated he wished to speak before we say what we're going to do.

Point of Order Gestures

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I regret to inform you and the Assembly that the Minister of Economic Development, to express his dissatisfaction with the exercise of our duties in this House, saw fit to give us a single-finger salute, if I may put it delicately, and I know that other members on this side have also witnessed this event. This follows a similar situation in the Ontario Legislature just yesterday, which resulted in quite a severe response from the Speaker there. So I would suggest that the hon. member is behaving in a way that is unparliamentary and, although it is unspoken, falls afoul of section 23(j) of our rules: "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I would argue, in fact, that given our guests today and the issues raised about sign language, the minister spoke volumes in a most insulting fashion for the exercise of our democratic rights in this Assembly, and I would ask that you would so rule.

Thank you.

3:20

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Yeah. Mr. Chairman, I have glasses. I've had them since I was 11 years old. I have a habit whenever I sit down of doing this, and they are adjusted on my face on a regular basis. Mr. Chairman, you wear glasses, as do many members. I know that on a hot day like today they have a tendency to slip down on the bridge of your nose.

If that was the indication that you got, I apologize, hon. member. That was not the intent whatsoever of my sitting down and going like this. So I would apologize to the hon. member if he misinterpreted that gesture, but having glasses, which God willed me to have, I run into that problem all the time. I will attempt not to let that happen in the hon. member's direction in the future.

Thank you.

The Chair: I don't really propose to go on debating this particular item. There is a problem in that this has been raised in committee and it's an allegation of something that happened in Assembly and so would have to be dealt with in Assembly. That's the technical way out. The member has apologized for any misinterpretation, whatever gesture was made to adjust glasses or other, that it be noted as just that. But the chair is in an awkward position in saying that it did not occur in committee, so committee cannot deal with it. We're into it before we know. So I think we'll just let it be there. If you wish to bring it up again, hon. member, in Assembly, I guess you could. I think we've had enough debate on this. Have you had enough debate?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

The Chair: If you wish to raise it again or if you wish to accept the apology, fine and dandy. I'm not recognizing either individual. We're in committee, not in Assembly, and committee has no right to make judgments on what happens in Assembly. I can honestly say: I did not see any action like this while in committee.

Bill 40 Appropriation Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to be able to comment further on the budget as it appears in Bill 40, the Appropriation Act, 2003, in Committee of the Whole, which allows me to go a bit more in depth in discussing the budget that's brought before us as this appropriation bill. There are a number of different issues that I would like to address that have been brought forward to me by constituents and other Albertans who've asked me to either ask questions or put some comments on the record, and I'm happy to do so at this point in time.

The first area is around the budget for Learning and some concerns brought forward. The specific questions are: has the department monitored teacher time off over the last 18 months? My constituent felt that there needed to be close scrutiny of whether there had been an increase in stress leave or time taken off for health reasons related to stress, particularly by examining statistics around whether there had been reported cases of cancer, hypertension, strokes, or heart attacks as reported by members of the teaching and administrative staff employed in the education system from K to 12. Her concerns were particularly raised after she had attended the budget speech.

I should point out that she is an Australian and still has other members of her family living in Australia, adult brothers and sisters. She notes in an e-mail to me that both mother and father are working very hard and giving up some of the luxuries that we enjoy here in Canada because their public education system has deteriorated to a point where they feel that it's necessary to pay to put their children through a private system. Her concern is that the stress that we are putting the education system under could lead us to the situation that they have in Australia. I made note of this because I know that this government has in the past brought forward as a fine example of government a number of the decisions made by the Australian government and a number of the policies that they put into effect, and this government has been happy to follow those, although I have to say that I don't think that many of them have been very successful. Her concern overall is that we have a good education system here that has been built up through investment over a number of years, that in fact we have built up an equity, if you wish, over those years, and that we have been eroding it since the cuts were brought forward in the '94-95 year.

Now, the Premier likes to talk about a 53 percent increase to the education budget, and indeed that is true if you compare it to the very lowest funding year, which was the '95-96 year. Compared to that, yes, there has been an increase of 53 percent. You actually can get figures through the Department of Learning itself that show different ways to interpret the numbers, and if you factor in things like inflation and other economic factors, we find either 3 percent or an 11 percent increase in funding to education, and that's not balancing it against any increase in enrollment.

So there is a concern that we have a very good system and that we are poised and, some would say, well down the road toward eroding that, and I have to say that that's my take on the system as well. As the child of two teachers, both of them now retired, the differences I see from when they were teaching until now are fairly significant, and I don't want to see us lose any of our standing that we have nationally and internationally, but I think that is a possibility.

This may be a performance measurement that we can look at that tells us whether we have increased stresses that are placed on our staff that are supporting the education system, and I would be interested in whether the department has been tracking that time off, been tracking illnesses as I described. If I could get that information, I think it would serve as an interesting performance measurement. Okay. That's the first issue that was raised with me.

The second issue is around employment standards. I've had an interesting, long-standing issue raised with me by a constituent, and although he doesn't expect his particular situation to be addressed because it's too long ago, he notes that the very situation that caused him grief has not in fact been improved. That's around the ability through the Employment Standards Code to enforce actions against the board of directors of a company.

3:30

So, for example, if the employees are – he uses more colourful language; I'm trying to make it more parliamentary – on the short end of the stick because of an action of the board of directors of a company, that individual employee can't charge the directors with a breach under the Employment Standards Code. It's too difficult to prove that any one of them individually committed the crime or the breach. His case was 13 years ago, and nothing has changed from there. He's suggesting that the Employment Standards Code offences be made strict liability. So if the directors were held jointly and severally criminally liable under the code for acts of the corporation, then the Alberta boards of directors would have their moral and legal concentration focused considerably.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

I think there's a lot to that because we know that although wages and Revenue Canada are supposed to be the first money out from a corporation that has declared bankruptcy or been forced into bankruptcy, often there are others that get in there and in fact the employees never see the money. In the case where a company knows that it's treading on eggshells, they may well start to lay people off and not give them severance. Well, then, when those employees try to chase down their legitimate severance paycheques, the company by then has gone under two or three weeks later and the employee gets nothing and is not even on a list of current employees at the time that the company closed its doors or was forced to close its doors.

That's the sort of context of the situation that we're talking about here. So I'm interested in whether the minister has ever heard of this issue before or the difficulties around being able to make individual directors criminally liable and the difficulty of employees trying to do that and whether any of his staff has ever looked at or investigated the possibility of changing the Employment Standards Code to reflect the situation I've just described.

The next situation is a health issue that was brought to me, and I think that what I'm going to do is just write to the minister about this. She had asked me to raise it in the budget debates. The problem is that this woman had breast cancer. She was able to get breast reconstruction, and of course all of that was covered under health care. Then what's happened to her is that the healthy breast needed to be lifted, and that's not covered under health care, and she was not able to get any kind of funding under that and of course can't afford to do it herself. So the good intentions of the breast reconstruction that was covered by Alberta health care is not able to be followed through because she can't get the additional surgery for the healthy breast. So I will write more details on that one to the minister.

The issue of AISH and what's happening with AISH is of great concern to a number of my constituents. I want to commend the minister and his staff and whatever MLA committee there was that was looking at this one for not combining AISH with the existing programs. We had Bill 32 go through, and thankfully AISH was not included in that, and that was very important to my constituents and, I know, to others. But there continue to be additional stresses that need to be addressed; specifically, removing the medical benefits from the income support, so detaching the medical benefits from the income support.

The point is made that some AISH recipients could earn higher salaries, but they're forced to choose between their medical benefits and earning more employment income, and of course at that point they're always going to opt for the medical benefits. Now, if they could be confident that they could keep their medical benefits indefinitely and return to income support if necessary, some AISH recipients, not all by any means, would move more freely into the workforce, and this is being brought forward by the Alberta Committee of Citizens with Disabilities. The argument I've just made appears in their February 2003 Action Notes. It's certainly an issue that I have seen and dealt with in doing casework for my constituents.

They really need those medical benefits because it can be a lot of money out of pocket for them, particularly if they're trying to find some other kind of holistic approach or they've got over-the-counter medications which are helpful but not covered under the medical benefits. They really need those medical benefits, and they will give up trying to earn a higher income in order to secure those. So I think we're being penny-wise and pound-foolish here. Certainly, I would always be advocating for choice, but I think there's a possibility here to allow some people that are AISH recipients to move more into the workforce if we were able to offer them these medical benefits indefinitely.

The second issue is raising the income exemption levels. British Columbia just raised their exemption levels to $300, Ontario allows $160 plus $140 for work-related expenses, and I think even in Alberta the Premier's council just recommended $500 a month. I haven't seen any of those changes happening, so I'm hoping that in the context of this budget and in the context of the three-year budget plan that we've just had put before us from the Department of Human Resources and Employment, the minister can be addressing those three issues, and I look forward to hearing that from him.

The next issue also falls under the Department of Human Resources and Employment, and this is around an experience that a constituent had with the on-the-job training program. Two things in particular he found puzzling, one of which was that they were given a number of forms which were either filled out for them or they were told exactly how to fill out. When they asked why they were doing this as part of this whole job retraining program that was offered by a private provider, they were told that they just had to have this stuff in their files in case the government decided to do an audit.

Of course, that pricked up my ears because the whole issue around private providers providing these job training programs has come under scrutiny I think every year for the last five or six years by the Auditor General exactly for these kinds of reporting problems, tracking, accountability problems. The government has not been strict about monitoring the money that was going out and whether in fact Alberta's citizens were getting value for money in what was being paid in contracts. I think that we all really want people that are going through these programs to be able to get the best benefit from them and re-enter the workforce. We don't want to see money that's misused in any way. So that caused some curiosity from my constituent.

The second part of that is that they asked where the particular program that they were in applied, and they were told: Edmonton and vicinity. Well, it turns out after some investigation by my constituent that that program is offered by different private providers all the way across Alberta, but in fact this particular private provider only offered the program in Edmonton and vicinity, and therefore that's what they told that class. Now, any of those individuals that wanted to move somewhere else in Alberta now believed that they couldn't take the rewards of that class or the references from that class and put them in place anywhere else or they couldn't transfer a file anywhere else in Alberta, which is fairly restrictive and I think by the record was deceptive.

So I think a couple of things. My constituent suggests sending the staff to the sessions incognito to monitor and check that everything is done as it should be and also requiring each provider to give a list of contacts for the training on the job program by community or area and to make sure that these companies mention that any given program is available throughout the province. So that's the issue from that constituent.

There were some questions I did not get the time to ask during the budget debate on Community Development, and I'd just like to put those on the record now. I understand that my time will run out on me eventually, and I'll just try and get another opportunity to speak if I can.

The money to protect and present Alberta's history and culture is up only 4 percent, and this does not reflect an increase for the actual dollars spent in years past. I'm wondering why that is. I think that in some cases the numbers differ if you're going from the forecast or from the actual. Nonetheless, it's not reflective of what has happened in the past.

Under Ministry Support Services, which appears on page 73, the minister's office is getting about a $70,000 increase. Could I please get the details on what that money is being used for? Is it staff? Is it decorating of the offices? Is it an increased communication budget? Is it supplies? I'd like the details, please.

I also note under Ministry Support Services that the deputy minister's office is getting a $13,000 increase. I'd like details on what that $13,000 is being used for, please.

Strategic corporate services is up by $1.2 million. Could I please get details on what this increase is for? Again, is it staff; is it supplies and services? I'd like to know exactly what this money is being used for.

Under Cultural Facilities and Historical Resources, on page 77, program support is down by $17,000. Could I get an explanation as to why this budget has dropped? Was there something extraordinary done the year before that inflated that budget so that in comparison this year appears to have dropped? Why is it reduced? Heritage resource management is up by $1.4 million, and I'd like to get a breakdown of what the additional money is for.

Now, funding for assistance to the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation is up by a million dollars. In the forecast for '02-03 there was also a line item for $3.7 million for cultural facilities and historical resources grants, but this does not appear in this year's budget, so could I get an explanation for that? I think we're looking specifically at vote 5.2.2 and 5.2.1, two different votes there but two different things happening. A million dollars up on 5.2.2, but the resource grants have disappeared from vote 5.2.1.

Historic resources fund is down $1.3 million from last year's budget. That's appearing on page 82. Could I get details on that cut, please?

Of the 23 performance measurements for the department 16 have not been met. Agreed, some of them were not met by a fairly small percentage. Nonetheless, they were not met. The response from the ministry, it appears to me, has been to just rejig the measurements based on a three-year average of the actual results. So, as always, I have some questions about the performance measurement in this department. It doesn't seem to have found a successful solution to this. Almost every year I think they've either changed or there have not been targets set, so we can't measure against it. There's been a different excuse every year I've been examining this budget over seven years, so there are some stresses happening there.

I can't hear, so you're going to have to wave at me.

The Acting Chair: Hon. members.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Centre is expressing concern that it's difficult to hear in the Assembly, so please give her the due courtesy. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry. I have to clarify: it's not them; it's me. My ears are plugged because my cold is so bad. So, frankly, even if they were talking, I couldn't hear them. No, it's not the rest of the members. It's myself.

The last issue that I had was on school funding, and I had taken a look at the Oliver school council submission to the Alberta Commission on Learning, and they had been raising a number of issues which I haven't seen particularly discussed or coming forth. One of the issues they had raised was that they feel that we need to teach our students social skills and group skills, noting that the main reason why people are dismissed from positions is not about their inadequate skills but literally their inability to work with other people. So part of what we need to be addressing is getting along with other people, and that needs to partly come through the school system.

Developing a passion for learning in students, encouraging them to ask the right questions, and integrating the arts and physical education . . . [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the budget debate on Bill 40, the Appropriation Act, 2003. At this time there are many issues as one goes through this bill portfolio by portfolio, and I can't help but think that at one time there were 16 portfolios. Certainly, it has grown much larger than that, to 24, even larger than that. At a time when hundreds of teachers, close to a thousand across the province, are being laid off, it's ironic that we still have this large Executive Council expense before us. The last time there were going to be layoffs or retrenchments in this province, there was a reduction in the size of cabinet, and this does not appear to be happening at this time, and I find that quite odd. I suppose it could be summed up by government members as: that was then; this is now.

Particularly in the Learning department there have been issues raised by this hon. member in regard to funding for apprenticeship training at SAIT and NAIT and at various other locations across the province. There is talk of a shortage of young people entering the skilled trades, and I would like to know how much of the $3.5 billion is being used to ensure that there are classrooms for instruction to take place for those individuals, that there are instructors hired, that the instructors are compensated. Certainly, from what I'm hearing, there have been not only layoffs at the elementary and high school and junior high levels, but there have been retrenchments as well at some of our technological institutions. I would like to know at this time what is being done by this government to ensure that our young people are getting all the training they need to make a positive contribution to the economic well-being of this province with a trade qualification.

Also, if one looks at Community Development, certainly there are still many questions to be answered there. Why did the minister not utilize all of the money budgeted last year for parks and protected areas? There are many ways the extra money, Mr. Chairman, could have been used, like park maintenance and extra park monitoring. Why wasn't the extra $5 million used in this way? There's a lot of monitoring going on by this government, and I don't know how far the monitoring has gone on in the parks. In parks operations under Community Development funding has increased by roughly $1.7 million, and where is this money going to, and will this funding increase be permanent? Now, parks operations spent nearly $1 million less than was budgeted for. What was the reason for this? What spending took place under the line item nominal sum disposals? Why was the nominal sum disposals budgeted for $4 million last year but nothing was spent? What capital was purchased last year for parks and protected areas for $1.4 million? What capital is to be bought this year for $1.3 million?

Also, with the Community Development and the budget, Mr. Chairman, we are indicating here that parks operations revenue is anticipated to increase this year from $2.8 million to $4.4 million. What is the ministry anticipating will increase their revenues this much? What assumption is this number based on? Will this be from increased fees or increased attendance? If it is from increased fees, how is this expected to affect attendance? If it is from increased attendance, what marketing or communication plans are going to be used to accomplish this? Are particular parks expected to have more growth than others, and if so, which ones?

The mission for the ministry states that it strives to preserve Alberta's natural heritage, but there are many examples of the ministry allowing its destruction, such as the Whaleback and the Bighorn. Can the minister reconcile the ministry's mission with its actions?

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

Now, certainly, we've heard much in the past about the business plans and how they're going to be reflected not only in various portfolios but being specific again to Community Development. On pages 92 and 93 the ministry faces the challenge of high demands for up-to-date and sophisticated exhibits at various ministry-run centres. As well, it states that the ministry faces the challenges of integrating new information technologies and upgrading or building new infrastructure. What is the ministry doing to face up to these challenges, and when will the process to investigate, identify, and implement steps to increase self-generating revenues be in place? What is the minister's attitude toward increasing user fees at parks and protected areas? Would the department or the minister please elaborate on the performance measures on page 96 of the business plan and explain how visitor satisfaction was determined?

Mr. Chairman, there are other issues which I certainly want to get to in Community Development, and I think I will continue with that, but I have a lot of questions in regard to Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. It is one of the top spending departments of this government, but there are other questions on Community Development that I believe warrant attention.

Now, there have been strategies stating that the Ministry of Community Development wants to "develop an updated parks system plan and strategic direction." This is very similar to what we heard last year in their strategies, to develop a provincial strategy for managing an expanded parks and protected area system with reduced funding. What was the product of last year's strategy? How was last year's strategy different from this year's? What does the ministry mean when it states that it wants to develop a "strategic direction for the management and protection of Alberta's parks and protected areas"? What assumptions will this strategic direction be built upon? What legislation needs to be updated to facilitate management and protection of parks by the ministry? What changes will be made to these pieces of legislation? What new legislation will be brought forward?

Also, the ministry indicates that it wants to go on an education, interpretation, and marketing campaign. Some would describe it as a binge, but I'm going to be gracious and say that it's just a campaign. How much does the ministry plan to spend on this measure? What groups does this ministry plan on targeting for its campaign, and what will be the basic messaging of the campaign?

Also, with Community Development the department wants to make available more volunteer opportunities in the parks. Will these volunteers be replacing paid staff, and what proportion of volunteers of all park staff does the ministry see as being an optimal level?

The budget also indicates that there are going to be priority parks and protected areas. What criteria do priority parks and protected areas meet? Does this mean that the ministry views these parks as more important than the rest? Which areas are viewed by the ministry as being priority? Do priority areas receive more funding and also more attention?

Also, there is an indication that there's a need for a new strategic development for contracting facility operations in parks and protected areas. If the ministry wants a new strategic direction, what is the old strategic direction? What does the ministry plan on changing? What is currently contracted out? What does the ministry wish to contract out in the future? What safeguards has the ministry put in place to ensure service levels are high from contractors, and what type of contract tendering system does the ministry have, and what it is going to do to change it?

Now, I certainly hope I don't have to read about these questions at some point in the future in an Auditor General's report, whether it's the one coming out this fall or the fall after that, but those questions in regard to Community Development, Mr. Chairman, I think are timely in light of the fact that there is close to $634 million consumed there.

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development in Bill 40. [interjection] An hon. member said: let's waste more time. I would certainly disagree with that, Mr. Chairman. This is an appropriate time to have one more look at how this government is spending money. When citizens realize that there has been such a large increase in funding by this government, a 50 percent increase in funding by this government in roughly five years, they want to know that the money is being spent wisely, and the time in this Assembly discussing how tax dollars are being spent is not time that is poorly spent. I think we wouldn't be in the problems we are today with public education and public health care and deficiencies in our energy deregulation schemes, whether they be for natural gas or electricity, if this Assembly spent more time actually debating issues and the merits of issues, the merits of budgets. When one considers that in this session alone we had closure on Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act; we had closure on Bill 19, an act to deal with natural gas pricing and distribution; we had closure on Bill 27, to deal with labour relations with some of our most precious human resources, and that's our health care professionals; and to add insult to injury, now we have closure on Bill 42, to change the electoral map of this province – so to say that debate in this Assembly is a waste of time is certainly incorrect. [interjection]

Now, if the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont would like to participate in debate, then I would welcome that and sit and listen quietly to his opinion.

The Chair: Hon. member, he has not indicated to me nor have I heard him at this short distance say that he wanted to enter into the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, it's quite clear in the time that I have left that this year's budget is representing a retooling in the way the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development is delivering services. It is reflective of the announcements earlier this year that there would be a shift away from ad hoc programs to insurance. Certainly, the department is one of the top spending departments of this government. Actual spending in 2001-2002 was $737 million, and the 2002-03 forecast is expected to top over $750 million.

Alberta's agricultural industry has taken many hits over the past few years – there's no doubt about that – several years of drought in many areas of the province, grasshopper infestations, and extraordinary losses in the livestock sectors. There have been international concerns over foot and mouth disease and mad cow disease, and there have been safety concerns expressed with regard to chronic wasting disease on Alberta's game farms. Farmers have also faced international trade issues and sanctions. Last year the U.S. farm bill created many concerns with regard to subsidization of farmers. European countries are very heavily subsidized all the while commodity prices are in significant decline, and this is reflected in, I guess you could call it, farm gate incomes, Mr. Chairman.

Now, when we look at the budget for agriculture, the minister's office is getting a $19,000 increase. At this time I would like an explanation of this. Are the offices of the minister being renovated this year? Certainly, we look at some of the district ag offices. A little bit over a year ago it was realized after that budget, Mr. Chairman, that some of those were being closed.

Now, the Standing Policy Committee on Agriculture and Municipal Affairs is getting a modest increase, a $2,000 increase, for a total of $104,000. When are we going to see openness and transparency in this process so that Albertans can tell whether or not their money is being well spent? Or, you know, is that $2,000 the price of muffins and stuff like that – has that gone up? – that is on the table there whenever one enters the standing policy committee meetings? Certainly, not only do the government members get to attend those meetings but members of the public, and there are always muffins and juice and coffee and stuff there. But, now, I don't know what goes on at the closed-door standing policy committee meetings. I don't think it would be any different. Surely, there's no catering of full-course meals going on there.

Communications is getting a $34,000 increase this year, bringing the total up to $263,000. Could we get a breakdown of what this increase entails?

Now, the Alberta farm fuel distribution allowance has remained constant over the past few years at $33.5 million. The Alberta farm fuel distribution allowance is a program which reduces the cost of marked gas or marked fuel by 6 cents per litre. If the line item has stayed the same for the past few years while the number of qualifying producers has changed, is the department looking into reviewing the rate or the total dollars allocated?

A new line item has been added for the farm water program. This is a program that will give farm units up to $5,000 for projects which increase water supply or tap into new sources of water. How many applications have been received, and how many have been approved, and what areas of the province are the majority of these applications coming from, Mr. Chairman?

Also, the farm income assistance program is one that is designed to pay out a certain dollar amount per acre, per beehive, or per square foot of covered crop to a producer. There was a budgeted amount for this program in 2001-2002 and actual payout amounts of over $280 million. Although there was no line item amount in the 2002-03 budget, there were payments under the program last year. It is forecasted that over $333 million, Mr. Chairman, was paid out. This is one of the ad hoc programs that really needs to be evaluated. This year's budget contains no allocated amount for this program. Has the program been scrapped due to new changes in insurance? If not, what is the future of this program going to be? Will it be scrapped in the future? Will we be seeing this again in supplementary estimates later this year? I would imagine that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre will have a great deal to say regarding supplementary estimates.

Now, industry development, Mr. Chairman. Gross dollar amounts for two areas, pork, poultry and dairy and diversified livestock, are down from the 2002-2003 budget slightly. Why? Is the government looking to end the diversified livestock portion of industry development, which includes game animals?

I hope to get a chance to talk about sustainable agriculture in a few minutes in committee as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to make some comments and ask some further questions as we consider Bill 40, the Appropriation Act, 2003. When we were in committee, I didn't make any comments or suggestions about some portions of the budget, and I would like to do that now.

The budget has really placed the K to 12 education system under great stress. We've heard in question period for the last month or so the implications of the budget: what that budget is doing to classrooms across the province, what it's doing to class size, and what it's doing to the complement of teachers across the province. It's of real concern. One couldn't sit at the press conference held by Edmonton public yesterday and not be distressed by how the budget now is being played out in that school district. We've heard, of course, from two of the other three larger urban districts who are going to be facing if not similar problems to Edmonton public problems that are very close.

I think that one of the unfortunate things that has happened has been the failure of the Department of Learning to establish any standards with respect to class size. I've heard the arguments of the minister, yet against the minister's arguments I put the experience south of the border where almost every state has instituted some form of class size standard, particularly with respect to the primary grades, grades 1 to 3. I think that if those standards had been in place and the resources had been planned to follow them, then we wouldn't have had the kinds of problems that this budget has resulted in.

The whole business of classroom conditions was a huge problem and a huge part of the issue behind the provincewide teachers' strike. Certainly, wages were also an issue, but really it was classroom conditions, as I traveled across the province, that I heard from teachers and teacher group after teacher group that were the driving force behind that strike. The arbitrated settlement looked after the wage concerns but did nothing to address the underlying concerns for classroom conditions. This budget is making those classroom conditions worse for teachers, and more importantly it's making it worse for children to receive the kind of education in the kind of context that we would all wish for.

With respect to Edmonton public I think that this budget actually turns the clock back a number of years, a decade, and wipes out any progress that had been made with respect to the reduction of class size. It's a budget that also draws into question the moves that the government made close to a decade ago in restricting the financial ability of school boards. In the past we wouldn't have found ourselves in this position. Local school boards would have had the ability to find the resources to keep schools operating at least at last year's levels if not improving them. I know that there were some difficulties with discrepancies and inequities across the province in the way that the financial resources for schools were allocated at that time, but it was really a $30 million problem that could have easily been solved. By taking away any possibility of boards adequately funding their schools and centralizing that authority with the Department of Learning and the government, I think that that action has led to where we find ourselves today. I think the underfunding across the last decade, too, has been a factor, and I think that we were coming to this financial crisis at some point and that the teachers' arbitrated settlement really hurried that climax along. It's going to be very, very stressful.

The budget allowed for a 2 percent increase in the basic instructional grant, and the reality of school board life these days is that grid creep, the amount of money that boards require each year just to pay for the movement of teachers up the grid, amounts to almost 2 percent alone. The other thing that the boards are faced with is that the arbitrator has wiped out the lowest category for beginning teachers, so that has bumped those teachers up. The result is that the 2 percent in the grants is almost used up before the boards ever start trying to cover the cost of experience increments for teachers. Then to try to accommodate other expenses, to try to accommodate inflation, to try to cover the arbitrated teachers' settlement has just placed them in an impossible position.

I think that the other thing that the government built into the projections for the 2003 calendar year was a 3.7 percent increase due to inflation. If you look at inflation in this area and across the province, inflation has run much higher than that. There was a report from Statistics Canada this morning that inflation in the Edmonton area is now approaching the 9 percent level. Again, that inflationary increase really puts boards who have been given a much lower grant level than that at a serious disadvantage in trying to maintain levels of service that they have and makes it virtually impossible to do anything in terms of improving service.

The transportation grant has increased by 3 percent. Again, the cost increases with respect to fuel – and those cost increases generally exceed the rate of inflation, and it places the boards in an impossible situation. I think that what it does too, Mr. Chairman, is point out the need for a funding formula that looks at the actual costs of delivering service, and that is something that hasn't been done. We seem to be in sort of a judgmental model that each year the Department of Learning looks at the pot of money that might be available and then sits down and writes a budget that fits that. Often, as it was this year, tragically, that pot of money that they've guessed at bears no relation to the real costs that are being faced by school boards. In the case of Edmonton it resulted in 450 teachers being cut.

There is a difference between being cut, Mr. Chairman, and being laid off. The chairman of the board at the news conference yesterday made it abundantly clear that these are not layoffs, that these are teacher cuts, and these teachers will have no contractual connection with the school board as of the coming year, September 1. It's a tragic loss, I think, for the city. I remember the boards when they were talking about hiring new teachers saying that they were going out looking for the Gretzkys of teaching, and here we are seeing the Gretzkys of teaching being left without jobs in the coming year. Again, it's retrograde. It's backward. It's so unnecessary in a province that is as wealthy as we are and has the capacity for doing much better planning.

Another concern with the line item for the Learning department is the concern for children with special needs. I think the budget includes an increase of $17 million, but that is used to cover the additional costs associated with providing educational services to a growing number of students with severe special needs, and it doesn't provide for any additional per student funding beyond the 2 percent that's there for the basic instructional grant. We all know the huge pressure that has been on boards and on schools in trying to provide adequate service for children with severe special needs and, in fact, all special-needs children, and it's a huge pressure. For parents, if you have youngsters with special needs, it seems that your life is a constant battle with the local schools and school boards trying to marshal and make sure that your youngster gets the kinds of resources that he or she needs, the kind of program that the youngster needs. Even when they get it, even when they have an IPP that meets their needs, that still doesn't guarantee that youngsters will get what has been specified in that plan.

So for special-needs children and their parents this is a budget that again is bad news, and the cuts to classrooms, the increase of classroom size are only going to lead to more difficulties for those youngsters. We're back, I think, to the situation that has been complained about time and time again in this province, that in many cases special-needs children are being warehoused, that they're being placed in classrooms and that's about it. The resources that they need to provide them with adequate programs are just not there.

There is $17 million for teachers' salary enhancement, and that money is the fund that is used to fund the 2 percent teacher salary enhancement line that was in the budget two years ago from the end of the fiscal year, March 30, 2003, to the end of the school year, August 31, 2003, and it doesn't represent any new funding.

The technology upgrading fund of $20 million is a continuation of the grant that we've had of $43 a student, and if you look across the continent at other jurisdictions and what they're providing in terms of technology for students, this looks very meagre indeed, Mr. Chairman. I looked at some states that are adjacent to our country where $143 American are being set aside per student to meet the technology demands of schools, the purchase of hardware and software to try to address the evergreening problems that schools have.

There is $6 million to accommodate enrollment growth, and the key word here is enrollment. It's based on the assumption that enrollment growth will not exceed 0.25 percent, and again it doesn't provide for any additional per student funding.

There was $20 million in onetime funding for the purchase of textbooks and learning resources, and this is the money that was announced in the throne speech. Again, it really is a credit towards the purchase of materials at the Learning Resources Centre, and in the words of many schools it's not adequate to do what needs to be done.

There is an attempt again to get back and to try to handle the capital spending, and I think it's with relief that the capital spending announcements have been made by Infrastructure. But it's again a problem when you talk to school boards. Since school buildings have been parceled out to the Department of Infrastructure, boards complain that they really find themselves now having to make pleas to two ministries and that actually it has ended up doubling the work. I think it raises the whole question of whether school buildings should be in the Infrastructure budget or whether they should be in the Learning department budget, where the connection between programs and the kinds of buildings that are needed to house those programs can, I think, best be made. It seems that again it's been an unnecessary increase in bureaucracy and a slowing down of the process. You wonder whose interests are being served by having those decisions made in the Department of Infrastructure.

I think that if you listen to some of the school board complaints across the province, most of them and certainly three of the four large urban school boards would define the situation that we're in as a fiscal crisis. The Public School Boards' Association has estimated that there is a shortfall of about $250 million to the base funding for K to 12 education, so that base funding is about $250 million short. There has been another figure used in terms of what would adequately allow the boards to make some progress, and that figure has ranged from $350 million to $400 million. So there's a huge shortfall in this budget with respect to what school boards need to carry on, and it is, as I said, leading to a real fiscal crisis in education.

I'm concerned that the approach to this budget, the reaction to what it has meant to schools, has been the calling in of auditors and the promise of the ministry to work with school districts, and I'm not quite sure what that means. Is working with school districts a code for making them toe the line and to deliver services that meet the money that's available? I think that it's something that boards are nervous of.

That being said, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to make a few comments and ask a few questions with respect to comments that the Auditor General had raised in that report. There are still difficulties with the career and technology studies programs with respect to four areas: that the student performance is not being adequately or appropriately assessed, that the access to instruction may not have been provided, that in some cases duplicate payments have occurred, and that in some cases student transcripts were processed and reported with errors. This has been a problem that's been raised previously. The Auditor General indicates that the steps that have been taken by the ministry and by schools still haven't rectified the problem. The problems surrounding this, I think, have to be straightened out. They are causing schools great difficulty and uncertainty with respect to funding of the CTS programs. The department, I think, made the suggestion that the documentation from the school be made abundantly clear.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[The clauses of Bill 40 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report Bill 40.

[Motion carried]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Tannas: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 40.

The Speaker: All members of the Assembly who are in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: All opposed, please say no. Concurrence is provided. Thank you very much.

Point of Order Gestures

The Speaker: Before moving on to the next business, when the House moved from its regular format to committee, the chair was in his office and was listening to what had transpired. Right into the committee there seemed to be a matter of some importance raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and the chair also heard the hon. Minister of Economic Development and also heard the ruling given by the Deputy Speaker, who very correctly said that whatever incident there was did not occur in committee, so it should be dealt with in the House per se. In the interregnum period the chair has had a brief discussion with the two members who were just identified and would now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands for a brief statement, and then we'll call on the hon. Minister of Economic Development for a brief statement.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rose in committee under section 23 of our Standing Orders, specifically subsection (j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I felt that the gesture directed towards the members of the third party after we had failed to give unanimous consent for the motion with respect to the Senate of Canada to be discussed today was insulting, and I did not accept the explanation by the Minister of Economic Development that he was merely adjusting his glasses. It certainly didn't seem to be a plausible explanation at all, and having discussed it with other members who observed the incident, I think they would agree with me on that matter. So that was what I raised.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development for clarification.

Mr. Norris: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to go on record as saying that I understand the hon. member's concern and that if he understood any of my gestures – physical, verbal, or hand gestures – to be of an offensive nature, I would sincerely like to apologize to him. I would qualify, as I said, that this is an activity where I did not intend to offend him, and I would offer an apology based on that.

4:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that that apology is acceptable. I appreciate it from the hon. minister, and henceforth I will simply view his action as an indication that he believes that I am number one.

The Speaker: Thank you very much to both hon. gentlemen.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 39

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will move Bill 39, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, for third reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a third time]

Bill 42

Electoral Divisions Act

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 42, the Electoral Divisions Act, for third reading.

It's been a long process starting last year with the appointment of an Electoral Boundaries Commission with the members being designated by yourself based on nominations as provided for in the act. The commission itself has had I think a difficult task as always with electoral boundaries because there are many passions involved. Communities have concerns; everybody wants to be well represented; everybody brings those passions to the commission. They held the requisite hearings, and I want to take this opportunity to thank them for the job that they did in bringing forward the report. While each and every member of this House – and we've had discussions in this House both on the resolution affirming the report and now, in second reading, in committee on the bill – can have a viewpoint as to whether or not the job that the commission did with respect to their particular area was appropriate. Each member of the House will have viewpoints with respect to whether the allocation of seats was appropriate. The difficulty is that we each were not on the commission and we each didn't have the obligation to sit down and take into account the 2001 census as the commission was obliged to do and then consider the other factors which they were required to look at and then take into account any other factors that they may have taken into account.

I can personally recount, Mr. Speaker, that I think I have attended on four boundary commissions and made representations, and I can also accurately recount that in each case I've been disappointed that they didn't take all of my arguments and utilize them in drawing boundaries. This one is no different. The boundaries, had any one of us been on the commission, might have been drawn in different places, but we have to thank them for the work that they. They did their work diligently. They did what they were asked to do. They did it within the context of the parameters that we gave them through the act, and we have to live with the result. The House has addressed some amendments where minor changes could be accomplished within the context of the act and within the ranges of the act and I think have served to improve the result, but I would ask the House now to pass the act on the understanding that it comes into effect on proclamation. In the normal course the act would be proclaimed at the time that the writ was dropped for the next election.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to get the opportunity to speak against Bill 42 in third reading. I have to say with respect that I disagree with most of the comments that the Attorney General and Minister of Justice has used as his reasoning behind these changes, and I think it's important to get on the record why I won't support Bill 42. This is about a principle to me. In reading and reviewing and listening to the live audio, I heard the minister say that we should concur with the report, but I would say that the actions that are inherent in the amendment brought forward put the boot to that concept. There is not concurrence from this government with the report. Either you accept that what was in the Electoral Boundaries Commission report is what is there and it is what it is as written and as put forward or you don't.

Certainly, at the time that we had Government Motion 13 in front of us, a number of members said, "Well, we weren't entirely happy with what was happening," but they were going to accept it. I think some even said that they weren't happy, but they would hold their nose and accept it. Okay. Then accept it. If you don't, then do something about it. Since the Electoral Boundaries Commission itself is dissolved the moment that it presents the report, you can't send it back to that same group of people. You would have to amend the legislation to create a new Electoral Boundaries Commission and refer the report back or ask a new commission to relook at it or do it over again.

So what I see this government doing is having its cake and eating it too. I know that with 74 seats it can do that. Okay. Fine. But I don't think that makes it right, and I can't let this go by without commenting on the record about it because to appear on the surface to concur and then to make significant changes – and in just trying to go through the amendment that was brought forward yesterday and passed, you know, there are something like nine major amendments affecting 27 some odd electoral divisions, and that's just dealing with boundary changes. Then I think there are three or four additional changes around names. So that's not small. I know that in some of the comments that were made, it was: well, we're just going to make minor changes. I think it was talked about being a block or two that could be changed. Well, that's not what's happened here. I mean, in some cases boundaries have been moved significantly, entire communities gained and lost and moved and kilometres involved in other cases. This is not minor. This is not by a block.

So what the government has done is said: "Oh, yes. We accept what the Electoral Boundaries Commission has said except for that we want a whole bunch of changes, but we're not going to call those actual changes. We're going to call it something else, and we're just going to slide them through." That's just wrong to me. I don't think that these are minor changes. I think that if you feel strongly that those changes need to be made, then do the right thing. Go back, amend the legislation, establish a new Electoral Boundaries Commission, and refer the report to them. But don't pretend that you are upholding what the Electoral Boundaries Commission delivered to this House, because you're not. You've made, as I've just described, 30 some odd changes, and it's not by just a block. They are not minor changes. Thirty some odd changes.

Now, it was put to us by a number of people speaking in favour of this bill and of the amendment that these MLAs were supporting the wishes of their communities. Well, that may well be, but I'm sure it didn't hurt the MLAs either, and I would have to say at that point that okay, then we had a number of individual MLAs satisfying their needs and their communities but not taking a step back and saying: what's the best thing for all of Alberta? Or, more specifically, as an Edmonton MLA: what's the best thing for Edmonton? What we've got here are changes that are almost exclusively, with one exception I think, in Calgary or in rural Alberta.

Mr. Hancock: Because you didn't co-operate.

Ms Blakeman: I'm not going to co-operate with this, because this is a perversion of accepting the report that was put in front of us. If the report was fine, then accept it and accept it in its entirety. I think it's a perversion of the process to accept it and then to make 30 some odd changes that are not minor changes, and I won't play that game. I don't think it's right.

You know, I even heard arguments used to support both sides. The Electoral Boundaries Commission was not allowed to consider changes that happened in the population after the 2001 census, but as I listened to the Attorney General and Minister of Justice with his arguments to support the amendments yesterday, for one of the amendments he used the argument that rapid growth was justifying the changes in the boundary. Well, you can't have it both ways. If the Electoral Boundaries Commission wasn't allowed to accept that argument and use it in a number of cases, then what makes it okay and acceptable to use it in one case? If you were going to allow it in the one case, then you have to go back and allow it in every other case and send it back to the Electoral Boundaries Commission and go: "Okay. We do accept the argument that there's been significant population change, and you need to take it into account."

But that's not what happened here. We had individual changes happen, lobbied for by individual MLAs. That, frankly, is when you come down to the concept of gerrymandering, and that is what happened here. We had MLAs making changes to boundaries. There were lots of arguments when we first heard Government Motion 13 to accept the Electoral Boundaries Commission report that it's not up to MLAs to change boundaries and that if MLAs were changing boundaries, then it was gerrymandering. Then – what is it? – a month later we have MLAs changing boundaries and agreeing amongst themselves to change boundaries.

So my position is, as I've stated, that if you were not going to accept that report in its entirety, then you should send it back to do the right thing. What I've seen is individual MLAs gaining here, but I have seen Alberta as a whole lose and particularly Edmonton as a whole lose. So I saw successful lobbying from the Calgary caucus, successful lobbying from the rural caucus. I have to assume it was not successful lobbying from the Edmonton caucus because there were no changes about it losing a seat for Edmonton. I didn't see a campaign – now, obviously it was behind closed doors – mounted to keep that seat in Edmonton, and I just frankly think that's wrong. [interjection]

Well, once again I'm being heckled that we lost. The government has 74 seats. The opposition has seven plus two in the third party. Yeah, you can keep throwing that argument at me. You're reflecting 90 percent of the vote in the seats that the government caucus has, and that does not reflect the popular vote. So right there you've got a problem.

I think that if that many changes are required, then the report itself is flawed and it should be rejected. I don't think it's given to the government caucus to play behind closed doors with maps so that the Calgary caucus and the rural caucus MLAs get what they want and Edmonton doesn't and doesn't have a strong voice there.

I have to also say that I'm really disappointed in the timing of this. There was informal notice given during the week of May 5 to 9 that this was being considered with all of these changes. The Official Opposition caucus received a formal letter dated May 7 asking for changes by May 12, and included in that was a weekend. That's not enough time to go out to all the communities in Alberta and everyone that we talked with. I mean, for heaven's sake, the Electoral Boundaries Commission itself spent something like seven months consulting in Alberta, and all of a sudden now there's going to be a five-day turnaround, which is really only three working days. That's just not acceptable.

I mean, I believe that the government has gerrymandered here. I think it has taken advantage of its large majority. I vehemently reject the arguments that I've heard in support of these boundary changes. They are not minor, and if there were that many of them needed, then the Electoral Boundaries Commission report should have been rejected because it was obviously not acceptable.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In regard to Bill 42 and the amendments to Bill 42 that have been presented to the Assembly for various areas of the province, to say the least it is interesting, but at the same time I would view these as certainly not just housekeeping changes. I don't understand the process. There was a community organization, in this case the Francophone community in the areas of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Edmonton-Mill Creek, and Edmonton-Strathcona, who certainly expressed an interest in having the community represented in this Assembly, as much of it as possible, in one constituency. That was not done. It's not that this member wouldn't do it. This member did not want to participate in the process that, quite frankly, is, to say the least, a poor reflection of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act. It's certainly a poor reflection of that when one hears sitting in the Assembly that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview states – and it's on the record, Mr. Speaker – that if anyone has any concerns regarding the bill, Bill 42, please take those concerns to the hon. Minister of Justice and the provincial Attorney General.

Now, when we look at that process and the suggestion that occurred in the Assembly some weeks past and we look at the public hearings that are suggested in the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act, the commission must hold public hearings before its report is submitted to you, Mr. Speaker, and certainly after its report has been made public “at the places and times it considers appropriate to enable representations to be made by any person as to the area and boundaries of any proposed electoral division and that “the Commission shall give reasonable public notice of the time, place and purpose of any public hearings held by it.” There were no public hearings involved in these amendments, at least not that I’m aware of. There was certainly notice, if we can call it that, given in the Legislative Assembly, but there was no notice given to the public. Certainly, there would be other groups that would be interested in the proposed boundaries, but were they given their chance? I don’t know.

In the last couple of weeks I’ve certainly seen electoral maps in the Assembly. I’ve seen various members with the interim and the final report to the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of the proposed electoral division areas, boundaries, and names. I don’t know what went on. Mr. Speaker, when we consider what has happened here and we consider what has happened to the city of Edmonton, I would like to bring to the attention of the Assembly the letter that was copied to the Leader of the Official Opposition – I tabled it earlier in the Assembly – and this is a letter that was sent to the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General on May 14 from the mayor of the fine city of Edmonton, His Worship Bill Smith. This letter states:

I was advised today that Bill 42, the Electoral Divisions Act, received first reading in the Legislature on May 8, 2003. I urge you to reconsider adopting the boundaries as established by the Commission. Edmonton’s influence will undoubtedly suffer as a result of passage of this legislation. The Commission’s recommendation for the seat distribution is clearly flawed as it does not reflect the population increase in Edmonton, nor the continuing growth of Alberta’s major urban centre.

[The hon. Premier] is on record as stating that “I don’t know if we can come up with anything better.” The 21st Century will see urban centres as the foundation of economic growth in a global economy, and this reality should be a priority for the Commission in boundary distribution. To have the loss of a seat in Edmonton is totally contradictory to this principle – any other seat distribution that reflects this would be better. Since the future of the Alberta economy will be contingent on the strength of Edmonton and its urban priorities, our political voice in the Legislature is imperative.

The Premier’s decision not to allow a free vote on the recommendations of the Commission suggests the divisiveness of your own caucus, and should therefore reflect the fact that your caucus is not comfortable with the boundaries as drawn up. I implore you not to ignore the opposition to Edmonton’s loss of voice.

Yours truly,

Bill Smith

Mayor [city of Edmonton].

4:50

When we look at Edmonton and Edmonton’s population, it’s been recognized in this Assembly and outside that it has grown substantially since the 2001 census and will continue to do so for the foreseeable future. In eight years, when the act states that the next Electoral Boundaries Commission sits, there will be dramatic changes that will have to be made to Alberta’s electoral boundaries. Now, according to Economic Development Edmonton, in 2001 the population grew by 4.5 percent, exceeding Conference Board of Canada forecasts. This is in addition to the 8.7 percent growth reflected by the 2001 census.

The argument has been made inside and outside this House that the boundary commission is confined or restricted or limited by the 2001 Canada census results. Page 6 of the final report to you, Mr. Speaker, states:

In determining population, the Act (Section 12(1)) requires the Commission to use “the most recent decennial census of population referred to in section 19(3) of the Statistics Act (Canada)” plus other measures, it goes on to state. But that’s the census that has to be used.

Now, the 2001 Canada census resulted in an Alberta population of slightly less than 3 million, but here we have the proposed amendments to the Electoral Divisions Act that have been presented to this House, and the same that restricts Edmonton does not apply, unfortunately, to the city of Calgary. We look at this three-column document that was presented, and the proposed amendments to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission shift the proposed boundary between Calgary-Hays and Calgary-Egmont so that the entire community of Riverbend falls within Calgary-Egmont. Affected constituencies, naturally, are Calgary-Egmont and the new constituency of Calgary-Hays. The rationale for amendments in this case reunites the community of Riverbend into one constituency. Calgary-Hays is a new constituency with a low population but has grown by 4,500 homes since 2001.

So why is Edmonton being penalized for the growth that’s occurred since the 2001 census? This does not seem to apply anywhere else. Forty-five hundred homes, Mr. Speaker, is probably close to 8,000 if not 9,000 voters, maybe even greater than that. Who’s to say? This growth has been identified since 2001 in this three-column document that’s been presented by the government here. I just think that it flies in the face of what is in the interim and in the final report. If one city has to stick to the 2001 census, why does not another area of the province have to follow that as well?

I will be surprised, Mr. Speaker, if Bill 42, the Electoral Divisions Act, does not at some time wind up challenged in the courts. This process has developed, and it has been followed. I don’t think it is in the spirit or reflection of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act. It remains to be seen whether it will satisfy the interests of all Albertans, not only those in Edmonton who have lost a voice and, in my view, have a lost a voice unfairly in this report. Certainly, we’re going to have to live with this report. There have been significant changes to the electoral map in this city. There have been significant changes to the individual map of Edmonton-Gold Bar. But I cannot see how this whole process can be called fair to the voters and to the citizens of this province.

Calgary because of their economic growth certainly warrants and merits three constituencies. There’s been dramatic growth there – no one is denying that – but Edmonton does not deserve to lose a seat. In fact, if we look at population data like is being looked at in the three-column document in regard to Calgary, then Edmonton should have 20 seats, not 18.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) does take effect now. If anyone wants to participate before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods – unless he’s choosing to participate under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments at third reading of the Electoral Divisions Act we have before us, Bill 42. If you go back to the legislation that governed the report that we had in the Assembly, I think it’s clear from the legislation that there has been an attempt to rule out politics and the influence of political parties and politicians in drawing the electoral boundaries. That attempt is consistent with what has happened historically. In the 19th century I think it was pretty well the pattern that legislators controlled and drew up the electoral boundary maps. Since that time the reforms have been in the direction of removing politics from the redistricting process, and the powers of the Legislatures have been drastically or dramatically cut. In most countries, I think, the history or an examination would tell us that the Legislature plays only a very limited role or in fact no role at all in redistricting or redrawing boundaries.

Some, like ours, still require the plan, once it's put forward, to come back to the Legislature for approval, but others don't require any such process and, in fact, once they're completed, are law. Some countries and some jurisdictions allow debate, as we do, and some delay, but in most of those jurisdictions they are not allowed to in any way modify the plan. I think that that is one of the major reasons why we're upset with the bill.

The other and most important one, of course, is that the city of Edmonton lost a seat, and there seems to have been no way in the process for that part of the plan to be revisited or to be amended so that that didn't occur. We've made those arguments previously in the House. So I guess at third reading, when we're looking at the principles, we have to ask how consistent we have been with respect to not having the Legislature or politicians interfere with the plan. It's the view of our party that the amendments that were introduced and passed violate that principle and move us in a direction that is not consistent with what is happening elsewhere and, I think, is not consistent with the view of most Albertans. Just the mere fact that we allow our Legislature to accept or reject a plan creates some question and opens the whole process up to the charge of political bias. Again, I think that's unfortunate. Not only having that authority but also having the authority to amend it, as was done yesterday, the day before, in this Legislature really does open the door to that criticism that there is interference politically with the report.

There have been a number of schemes that have been put in place to try to handle the problem, and I think it also should be noted that simply ignoring politics doesn't mean that you end up with an unbiased report, even when they are prepared by independent commissions. There have been instances where they unintentionally ended up favouring one political group or another. So having a nonpartisan, independent group do the boundaries doesn't guarantee that they are going to be unbiased, but the likelihood, I think, of them being unbiased is more likely to happen if it is done by an independent group who make the final plan and that plan has to be accepted.

I think that with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude. Again, it was unfortunate that the amendments that were brought forward were allowed to proceed. I think that it weakens the report. Certainly, in the eyes of many Edmontonians they will see this as a bias against the city where their concerns over the loss of a seat were not dealt with but where concerns elsewhere in the province were handled through an amendment process, even with the restrictions that were supposedly put on that amending process.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, hon. members. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We all know when it personally affects a person on electoral boundaries. However, the fact does remain that, you know, the process and the show must go on. The citizens of Edmonton will actually speak in the next election by where they're going to put their X at the poll, and if they don't accept that deeply about losing a seat, it'll be reflected in the election. If we don't do our jobs as MLAs, we won't be elected. It doesn't matter what party you're in.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I think that the Electoral Boundaries Commission, in my opinion of course, could have done a better job. However, the majority of the people will vote, and we'll accept it and live with it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: For clarification, the hon. member was participating under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Masyk: Right.

The Speaker: Okay. The chair just wants to make sure that no additional member wants to participate before calling on the hon. Government House Leader.

The hon. Government House Leader to close the debate.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. speaker. Just a few comments that were elicited by the speeches this afternoon. Edmonton-Centre commented on the Electoral Boundaries Commission not being allowed to use numbers other than the census. Of course, that's entirely incorrect. The Electoral Boundaries Commission has to take into account the census numbers but then could take into account any other factors that they thought were relevant. So if other numbers had been presented to them that were credible, they could have taken them into account. They were under no compulsion not to take into account other numbers, so that statement has to be corrected.

The question that the hon. member was trying to suggest that some members were more successful in lobbying than other members totally ignores what's happened since the Electoral Boundaries Commission came into effect and their report was tabled, and that is that many communities then started writing to say: when the bill is considered, we want you to consider these concerns. MLAs didn't start that process. Communities started that process, as is normal after a boundaries commission reports. Some of those concerns can be taken into account, and this House took those concerns into account because they were within the philosophy and the context of the report. It wasn't in this House's hands to change the report, but it could take into account those minor changes. Now, the fact that the Liberals chose not to assist their communities in some cases by taking a look at that – for example, in Edmonton-Gold Bar there was a concern . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, are you rising on a point of order?

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Ms Blakeman: Yes, I am. I'm standing on a point of order, and that would be under 23(h) and (i).

The Speaker: Okay. Please proceed.

Ms Blakeman: I think that just to make the assumption, the leap to make the allegation towards members of the Liberal caucus that we were not willing to come forward for our communities is erroneous. None of us have ever stated that. As a matter of fact, a number of us have spoken on the record of our concern for our communities. So under 23(h) to make the allegation against the Liberal caucus that we weren't concerned about our communities is erroneous. In addition, to put any kind of motive upon us as to whether we were willing to come forward or not on behalf of communities – again he has no information on which to be basing that.

The Speaker: On this point of order, the Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry if I've offended the hon. member by bringing it too close to home. I will withdraw those remarks and rephrase them.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, would that be appropriate?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. I accept the withdrawal.

The Speaker: The matter is closed. Continue your debate.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I proceed, might I ask – and I don't want to cede the floor, so if I have to cede the floor to do it, you can tell me that – for unanimous consent of the House, in the event that there's a standing vote and we go past 5:30, to be allowed to come back after that to move a motion of adjournment so that we can adjourn to 1:30 p.m. tomorrow instead of to 8 tonight, as we normally would?

The Speaker: The hon. member has 15 minutes maximum to participate in third reading. Twenty-two minutes shy of the clock the minister has already spoken for a number of minutes, and he anticipates that he'll be going beyond 5:30?

Mr. Hancock: No, but I don't want to lose the opportunity.

The Speaker: Well, okay. This is in great harmony because it's the 14th day of May. The floor will not be ceded. The Government House Leader still retains his position on the floor. He's asked an interesting statement. We'll deal with it because it's harmony and it's May 14. The request is that should the procedure go beyond 5:30, we will ignore the clock. That is essentially the question. We will require unanimous consent to do that, but one would have to have some understanding that we're not talking about just letting the clock go till 12:30 or something. Just to conclude the normal business. I say that because once I asked for unanimous consent as minister of the environment. It was given to me, and I spoke for two hours, and I got in a lot of trouble after that.

So would the House consider providing unanimous consent for the procedure to continue should it go past 5:30?

[Unanimous consent denied]

Mr. Hancock: We may end up coming back at 8 o'clock.

An Hon. Member: Well, sit down, and then we don't have to.

Mr. Hancock: No. I can't just sit down, because there were some comments that were made that are inappropriate from my perspective.

There are communities which did want to have the opportunity to have minor adjustments in Edmonton. Unfortunately, we were not able to accommodate that because one of the criteria was that we sit down and concur with the process, and some members of the House would not sit down and concur with any processes, and I'll leave it at that.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar read a letter from the mayor of the city. I just want to make sure that it's on the record that in September of 2002 I had a conversation with the mayor of the city after he was advocating, after the interim report, that Edmontonians call their MLAs about electoral boundaries. I had a conversation with the mayor, and I indicated to him that it was appropriate for Edmonton city council and the mayor to ask Edmontonians to go to the commission before the final report and make representation to the commission, and I encouraged him to have an advertising campaign at that time to encourage Edmontonians to do that. The Edmonton city council and the mayor did not do that, in fact waited for the final report before they started advertising and wasting my money as an Edmonton taxpayer at a time when it wasn't effective. So I needed to have that on the record.

There are many other comments that I could refute with respect to the debate from the opposition, but the fact of the matter is that the process has been fair. It hasn't always had the result that everybody wanted, but we have a result. The concept of doing minor adjustments – and I believe they are minor adjustments – to reunite communities was appropriate. Everybody had the opportunity to participate; some chose not to. It wasn't a closed-door process. It was entirely open, and I asked all members of the House for their participation long before May 5. Those that chose not to participate in that process didn't participate in the process, but they can't complain about not having had the opportunity.

The other thing I'd like to say quickly is that there was mention of the Francophone community, and that was brought to my attention. I tried very, very hard to put together an amendment which would work, but it would have required a significant change. It could have still been accommodated if all members who had an interest in that area were prepared to sit down. At my invitation one, the person who brought it to my attention, did not, and therefore I could not accommodate by bringing forward an amendment of that nature, but that member could have if he'd so desired.

So, Mr. Speaker, with that, I would ask that we have a vote and move on.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 15, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/05/15

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, keep us mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work give us strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a woman who is familiar to all of us. She is seated in your gallery. Joan Gabert served as a police constable with the Edmonton Police Service for over 25 years, and then she came to the Legislative Assembly security staff in 1996. She's retiring; today is her last day with us. She and her husband will be splitting their time between Vancouver Island and their home in Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta. I know that all hon. members wish them well. Joan, we thank you for your good work in the service of this House. I now invite Joan to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is also my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly Mr. Gordon and Meldia Weisgerber. They are the proud parents of page Erin Weisgerber, who is unfortunately leaving this Assembly and I'm sure is going on to bigger and brighter things as she progresses with her education. I would now ask the proud parents to please rise in the Speaker's gallery and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this bright spring day it's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce 75 equally as bright, intelligent, and hardworking students from the Percy Baxter school in Whitecourt. Accompanying them are eight adults, and they're seated in the members' and public galleries this afternoon. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have some visitors here today sharing their visit with the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky and myself. We have Trenton Perrott, who is the manager of the Prairie Gallery in Grande Prairie; Derek Hall, who is with the Grande Prairie Live Theatre; and Lisa Ryan, who is with the Grande Prairie Public Library. They're in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 34 of Alberta's brightest and best from the heart of my constituency, 34 children from John Wilson elementary school, the grade 6 class. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Pederson, and parent/teacher helpers Mrs. Hill, Mrs. Douglas, Mrs. Young, and Mr. Harsch. I would like them to all stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure today that I rise to introduce the Official Opposition's incredible research team. They've done an excellent job for us this session, and I would like them to rise as I give their names: David Schaaf, Laurence Miall, Kirsten Odynski, Aaron Roth, Alex Ragan, Rachel Peterson, Elaine Jewitt-Matthen, and our summer STEP student, Kevin Elliott, and our student with the Quebec/Alberta exchange program, Sonia Nadeau. She's studying political science at Laval University. I would ask all members of the Legislature to recognize these young people who have contributed so greatly to the democratic process in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly four fine individuals: Master Lin Ho, a leader of our Buddhist community in Castle Downs; her brother Mr. Chee Liaw; Mrs. Yun Liaw; as well, all the way from France, Chanmaly Kasisavanh. I would ask them to rise and receive the usual warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a distinct privilege to rise on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, the Minister of Community Development, and introduce his constituent Mr. Harcharan Dhaliwal, along with two guests from India, Lali Sandhu and Uday Sandhu, who are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask if they would please rise and we would share our warm welcome with all of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first is Ms Lorie Grundy, who is seated in the public gallery. Ms Grundy is a registered nurse. She worked many years at the Cross Cancer Institute. She has four daughters, one of whom is studying in India and three who are still in Edmonton. They are exemplary citizens and fine students.

The other introduction is Lorie's daughter Hayley Grundy, who is becoming well known to many people in this province as a real advocate for public education. I would ask Lorie and Hayley to please rise and receive the warm welcome of all members here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm truly delighted to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly two of my constituents. Dwayne Van Straten is a teacher at T.D. Baker junior high school. Last Sunday, May 11, he was in Spain to participate in the world long-course triathlon championship held in Ibiza, Spain. There were over 900 participants from all over the world, 40 of them from Canada. This triathlon included a four-kilometre swim in the Mediterranean Sea, a 20-kilometre bike ride, and a 30-kilometre run. While biking, Dwayne was pushed off the road by another competitor and sustained fairly serious injuries. In spite of all that, he picked up his bike, repaired it, and continued. He finished the triathlon ranking fifth among Canadians and 150th internationally and 20th in his age group in spite of this accident. His wife, Sharon Gingara, is accompanying him today, and she is an accomplished athlete in her own right. She just finished her first marathon in Vancouver about 10 days ago. Both of them are, I think, seated in the public gallery. I will now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, with your permission is of four parents from the Mill Woods area: Cheryl Depeel, Evelyn McGill, Jennifer Henneberry, and Joni Schootstra. These parents are very concerned about the continuing underfunding of their children's education. In addition, they are likely to lose the nonprofit day care at Grant MacEwan Community College in Mill Woods because of the same cuts. I'll ask these visitors to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Emergency Services Personnel

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to talk about the importance of emergency services in Alberta and what the government has been doing to recognize our dedicated Albertans. Many of us in this House just came from the inaugural presentation of the Alberta emergency services medal, which took place during the lunch hour right outside here on the Legislature steps.

The Alberta emergency services medal was established to pay tribute to proud Albertans, outstanding full-time, part-time, and volunteer members who have committed 12 or more years of their careers to emergency services in Alberta. This medal is the first of its kind in Canada. This medal also recognizes emergency services that have never, ever before been formally recognized by our province.

The eight disciplines that were recognized today are the Alberta Fire Fighters; EMS, Emergency Medical Services; the fire service dispatch; Emergency Medical Services dispatch; Search and Rescue; Emergency Management Alberta; the Alberta fire commissioner's office; and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development. So as you can see, in addition to recognizing the frontline personnel that physically come to our aid during emergencies, this medal also honours those individuals who make things work behind the scenes, the dispatchers who handle emergency phone calls calmly and professionally. Their work goes on many times unnoticed. It also recognizes local directors of Disaster Services, who shoulder much of the responsibility for making sure their communities know how to prepare for, respond to, and recover from major emergencies. It honours our provincial staff who, among other things, develop fire safety programs for children, help communities establish municipal emergency plans, and protect our province's forests and wildlife.

Today we recognized 350 exceptional individuals and true Albertans for helping to protect others. In the selfless dedication that they have demonstrated in their careers and in their volunteer contributions they have made an impact on lives each and every day. To these men and women commitment means always being on call, always being available when they are needed, and to them it means doing the best you can possibly do every call every day. It means going the extra mile and giving your all. For their 12 or more years they were recognized today as individuals that have been protecting our families and our friends, asking for nothing in return other than the satisfaction of knowing that they've helped others.

I was pleased to see so many members of this Assembly here today recognizing those very true Albertans, and I want to say, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all Albertans that we thank Alberta's emergency services personnel and their families for working selflessly every day to maintain a sense of safety and security for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today's ceremony honouring 350 staff members of Alberta's emergency services was a most fitting recognition of the efforts of some of Alberta's finest citizens. These men and women are never far when Albertans need their help most. Whether they are fighting fires, tending to the injured, or performing silently behind the scenes, these people represent the best facets of humanity: bravery, commitment, integrity, and compassion. While most Albertans wouldn't know these people by their proper names, they do know them by another name. They call them heroes.

On behalf of all Albertans I would like to congratulate all medal winners on their achievements, their commitment, and their selfless dedication to others. To all emergency services personnel I say: well done and thank you.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I would request unanimous consent from the Assembly in order for us to respond to the ministerial statement.

The Speaker: Hon. members, and for those who are viewing, every time this procedure comes to the floor, my office gets questions as to why we have to go through this. Well, the reality, for all the people in television land who happen to be watching question period, is that in order to be a recognized political party in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, you must have a minimum of four seats, and the request now comes from a representative that does not have that. So in order to participate in Ministerial Statements, there must be unanimous consent granted by the Legislative Assembly.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank members for their courtesy in allowing me to add my thanks to Alberta's dedicated and hardworking emergency services workers. The medal recipients are indeed deserving of their awards. At the same time, these deserving recipients would be the first to acknowledge that they would not have been able to receive these awards if not for the efforts of their coworkers. Emergency response services are the very epitome of teamwork. Only by working together and being able to rely on other members of the team are emergency response personnel able to do the courageous work that we as a society call upon them to do. Whether it is running into burning buildings to rescue a trapped child or even a pet, attending victims at an accident scene, or dispatching an ambulance to the home of a frail senior citizen, we depend on these dedicated professionals.

On behalf of my caucus colleague and New Democrats across the province I salute all of today's award winners and the dedicated work of all emergency response personnel across the province. Thank you very much.

head: Oral Question Period*Electricity Deregulation

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, even though most recent changes to deregulation were just passed in this House a month ago, the Minister of Energy is pushing to have them implemented by June 1 of 2003. Rapid change will create uncertainty in the marketplace, and consumers still haven't been told what these changes mean for them. I didn't think it was possible, but this government's deregulation boondoggle is about to go from bad to worse. To the Minister of Energy: why is the Minister of Energy recklessly rushing to implement the new Electric Utilities Act by June 1 when it was passed in the House just one month ago?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, Bill 3 was a combination of two and a half years of strident consultation with involvement from every party involved in the electricity discussion. This also included the Member for Edmonton-Highlands being placed on an Internet notifications group. This bill has been consulted on widely. It has been consulted on throughout the industry. It is a result of stakeholder input. It's a result of the Premier's council on electrical issues, their extensive discussion and their extensive input.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a surprise to anybody in Alberta, and in fact what we have done over the past two and a half years is we've consulted, as I've stated, and we've put in the three pillars that deliver a market model. One is the export market policy, that ensures that Albertans are benefited by exports and that they are not harmed by either having to pay for transmission costs or for power that they could otherwise use. They must be served first. Secondly, the market policy clearly puts a level playing field into Alberta, has facilitated the entry of another competitor, delivers clear and transparent regulation to the market model. Lastly, the transmission policy. The transmission policy is, again, an outcome of the Premier's council on electrical issues. It is critically designed to ensure that Albertans have open access to the lowest overall cost generation.

So it's a plan. The policy course is there. The pillars are up. The next step is an extensive consumer education program.

Dr. Nicol: To the minister: when is that consumer education program going to start so that consumers can find out what their rights are when they're faced with marketers?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I was just on a telephone call regarding that campaign before question period, at 1 o'clock, and we can assume that we'll have something out earliest toward the end of May and certainly in June and then reappearing again extensively in the fall season. The folks in Alberta trust the government for their information, and we want to ensure that they get it.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the minister: how can the minister expect Albertans to provide informed input into your regulations for the new act when you're only giving them three to five days for turnaround on their responses on those new regulations?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the regulations are simply an embodiment of the legislation. They have been discussed with the group since the act was assembled last October, November. I have not received any specific complaint relative to the regulation process.

Education Funding

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, in 2001 the horse racing industry asked the government for an investment of $87.1 million over three years. Over the last three years the government has given that horse racing industry $87.9 million, more than what it asked for. The government has defended this move as an investment in Alberta's economic development. To the Minister of Economic Development: in the long-term development of this province is it more important to invest in horse racing or in education?

Mr. Norris: Well, you know, clearly, Mr. Speaker, the question being asked is posing two different streams, but I'd like to answer the question in this way. Without economic drivers creating any kind of wealth, other than government intervention we don't have the money that we need to spend on the policies and the planning and the education and the health care that we so cherish in this province. So I would answer the question in this way to the hon. member. If you don't focus your business on generating revenue, you end up having none to spend. Clearly, in this province we have generated a massive amount of revenue through these programs, very worthwhile industries, so that we do have the best health care system and the best education and the best roads in the country. I would support anything that invests money in developing new revenue sources so that we can continue providing Albertans with the best services in Canada.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Learning, Mr. Speaker: what do parents have to do to get the same commitment in their children's schools as this government gives to the horse racing industry?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, in the K to 12 system this year – this year – there was a $191 million increase.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Finance: how can the minister justify to parents in Edmonton and Calgary that they will be paying more in property taxes and still lose teachers?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, you've heard our Minister of Learning talk about the concern of Edmonton and Calgary and all school districts day after day in this House. He's also said that when their budgets come forward, he's prepared to work with the school boards to deal with some of the pressure points. The opposition is bent on trying to make a case that there isn't a co-operation between the two entities of the school boards and the Ministry of Learning. That is just, quite frankly, not the case. We have heard what Albertans have said. We put a 4.7 percent increase in our budget this year. In 2005 we will spend over $5 billion in Learning in this province for a population of just over 3 million people. We are committed to education, as we have exemplified in our budget planning process. We've brought a balance into this province which I believe is the right balance, and I would really ask the opposition to support the government in working with the boards to make sure that we look after the children for the future.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary public, Calgary Catholic, Edmonton public, Grande Prairie public, Red Deer public, Elk Island public, St. Albert Catholic: all school boards from across the province in financial trouble and letting teachers go. Yet all we hear from the Minister of Learning is: don't worry; we'll talk to them. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How many more school boards must sound the alarm before the minister stops talking and takes some action?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I believe there has been a good example of what has happened with the passage today of the Calgary Catholic budget. For a school system that has roughly 45,000 children within it, they announced today that there would be a decrease of 11 teachers. Obviously, any decrease is certainly significant, but it isn't to the same magnitude as when we're talking 450 teachers, which was announced here. I think the obvious question is: how can Edmonton Catholic do it with no teacher layoffs, with exactly the same amount of dollars? How can Calgary Catholic do it with 11 teacher layoffs? These are some of the very critical issues that we are talking about and asking the school boards.

Again, Mr. Speaker, there are two ways that you can govern. You can just say quite simply, "Here's the money; go do with it as you wish," or you can actually ask: "Are you spending prudently? Are you spending in the right place?" Those are some of the questions that we're asking school boards.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister: given that the minister claims that boards are adequately funded, why are so many boards reporting just the contrary?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, what happened in this year, as everyone in this Assembly knows, is that there was roughly a 14 percent increase in arbitrated costs. There have been some other costs, and indeed one of the things that I certainly have told the school boards that we will have a very important look at is the operations and maintenance costs, things like that. So we are talking to the school boards. We're hearing their side. For example, I had a meeting with the two Lethbridge school boards, who were concerned because their surpluses were going to be eaten up next year.

So, Mr. Speaker, the situations are different all around the province. What we're attempting to do is help each individual board make its way through this 14 percent settlement that was done last year, and hopefully we'll have positive results from that.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why is the minister trying to convince people that things are going to get better when school boards are laying off and cutting teachers right now?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I go back to what I had said previously in this House. The budget of Calgary public is preliminary. I understand that the final one is going to come down next week. The budget for Edmonton public was announced. Interestingly enough, in Edmonton public's budget there is a balance, but there's no mention, for example, that they took their AISI funds, fired the teachers that were on AISI, and put AISI into professional development: 9 and a half million to 10 million dollars. So there are a lot of large questions that still remain. We could just simply settle, as the hon. member is asking, and say: okay; well, that's what it must be.

Mr. Norris: Not good enough for Alberta.

Dr. Oberg: You're right; it is not good enough for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the opening of the spring sitting on February 18, Albertans have been hoping for solutions to two pressing problems: the school funding crisis and sky-high, skyrocketing utility bills. Yet here we are three months later with the budget debate behind us, and Albertans are worse off now than they were then. As evidence of this, the president of the Alberta School Boards Association is telling this government that all 62 school boards will be facing cutbacks and deficits come next year. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. With oil and gas revenues sending the budget surplus to the $3 billion mark, why was the minister not able to find the financial resources necessary to avert a crisis in Alberta's classrooms?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, this year in my budget there was a 4.9 percent increase, and that increase was all to things to do with learning. To give an example, the teachers' pension fund went up by a little over 10 percent, very close to 11 percent, included within my budget. The K to 12 system went up about $191 million. The postsecondary system went up around $45 million to $50 million. So there has been a significant amount. Even in Alberta $191 million is still a lot of money. Those are taxpayers' dollars.

There has been a significant amount of money that has been put into the education system. Over the past four years we've seen a rise of anywhere between 25 and 30 percent given to the school boards, so there's a tremendous amount that has been given. What we have to recognize is that in Alberta we have the highest paid teachers. Our students do the best of any place in the world, and I believe that those are two very important things that Albertans are asking us to continue. Mr. Speaker, as a government that believes in some of these, that believes in the outcomes of our children, I believe that this outcome will certainly continue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How is this minister able to stand in this Assembly day after day saying that all is well when the reality of school board after school board announcing deep cuts to programs and staff should be moving him to take immediate action and take it now?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, there's a bit of a fallacy out there about 62 school boards going to be in a deficit position. Quite frankly, in the last two and a half months I've met with some 20 school boards. Sure, things are going to be tight, but part of being a school board trustee, as well, is to manage a budget, manage taxpayers' dollars, and that's what the school boards are doing. Many school boards are making some difficult decisions, but on the whole they are making their decisions with the best interests of students in mind. I fully expect and I fully know that they will continue to make their decisions with the best interests of students in mind.

Dr. Pannu: My final question to the minister, Mr. Speaker: how much larger do class sizes have to grow and how many more young teachers have to leave Alberta before the minister steps outside his message box and realizes that there is a financial crisis in our schools?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, when it comes to a financial crisis, I'll just reiterate a little bit about the money that's gone in. I talked about the $191 million. We also put in $60 million to pay the teachers' unfunded liability this year, $60 million that by definition went directly into the classroom, directly to the teachers. This year alone $191 million dollars went into the K to 12 system in my budget. There's been probably about a 25 to 28 percent increase in funding to school boards over the last four years. This year alone the hon. Minister of Infrastructure announced 27 school projects. Twenty-seven school projects. There are six new schools in Calgary alone. There's a $51 million school going to be built just down the road in Edmonton. So there's a tremendous amount of dollars that are going into education, going into learning.

I will say that we continue to work with the school boards. Many school boards have put forward their fiscal issues, and I'm not belittling their situation at all. Many school boards are tight, but we're working with them to ensure that they will make the decisions that are in the best interests of all students.

Bingo Industry

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Many volunteer groups rely heavily on proceeds from bingo to sustain their valuable activities. However, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission is currently proposing revised terms and conditions to the bingo industry which would guarantee a return of 15 to 24 percent to the sponsoring charities. My question is to the Minister of Gaming. Is the minister not concerned that many bingo associations will find this guarantee impossible to meet and will therefore cease operating?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2001 this government accepted a recommendation that charitable groups that work at our bingo association halls receive a guaranteed return for their effort. This past January the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission started a review with the bingo association halls and the charities of draft terms and conditions regarding among other things the charitable return criteria.

The charitable return criteria in the draft terms and conditions, Mr. Speaker, is based on sales which recognize and deal with attendance, player spend, and prize payout. According to the 2001-02 statistics 17 associations are in the range of meeting the criteria as drafted with an additional 16 associations within 2 percent of the range. If associations were in compliance with the 65 percent prize policy on regular and special games, 35 associations would be in the range of meeting the criteria as drafted with an additional nine within the 2 percent range.

At the end of April the consultation with the bingo associations came to an end. The AGLC is currently reviewing the feedback, and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in any event the AGLC, as we go forward, will be working with the bingo halls to ensure that they improve their returns.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you. My only supplemental is to the same minister. Given the valuable work that charities perform with bingo proceeds, why is the minister proceeding without the endorsement of the volunteer bingo industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this particular case I think it's agreed between government and the representatives of the bingo associations that it's very important to ensure that the maximum return is received by the charities that work at the bingo association halls. We have done a substantial consultation. In fact, I would suspect we have probably heard from pretty much every charity that works at the bingo halls at this particular point in time. There is not unanimity within the associations. However, the AGLC will be making its preliminary recommendations and reviewing that again with the bingo associations before there is a finalization, and that will occur in the weeks ahead.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the important thing to remember about this is that this ministry through the AGLC is responsible for establishing policy and for regulating the bingo industry and for managing and controlling the electronic gaming. We are committed to working with our stakeholders, but at the end of the day the decision must be made by this government through this ministry and the AGLC with respect to those matters.

Natural Gas Prices

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although it is the middle of May and the weather has warmed up, many Albertans are still trying to pay last year's astronomical natural gas bills. Just yesterday the president of ATCO Ltd. told Albertans to prepare for the worst because, quote, the natural gas bubble has burst, leading to higher gas and electricity bills for everyone, end of quote. My first question is to the Minister of Energy: why is the government's natural gas rebate program triggered by a provincial election instead of the price of natural gas that consumers see on their monthly bills?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member knows full well the history of the Natural Gas Price Protection Act. He knows all about it, and to make this kind of preposterous leap is just his usual character.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: will this government's review of the flawed Natural Gas Price Protection Act involve input from the public, or will it be conducted again behind closed doors like so many other energy policies that have already failed consumers in this province?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, there will be the usual, a good, diligent review of this act, as has been stated in the House and as will be carried out by this government.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. I hope that review is not conducted in a ballroom in Banff.

What is the minister telling Albertans concerned about high natural gas prices? Is it going to be double the seasonal average now that the price is that high, or is it simply going to be the advice that it's too warm to wear a sweater?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, when someone's character is called into question, it's difficult to respond. However, given this House and the respect that I have for it, I will try and answer the question as I perceived it to be asked. We do live in a North American market-place. We have seen the tremendous benefits from the increase of natural gas prices from royalty collection, and we also know that it hurts homeowners.

We also know, Mr. Speaker, that it hurts seniors, and we know that these increased utility costs hurt low-income Albertans, so one of the things that was responded to, and responded to very clearly and appropriately, in the past was the program for seniors and for low-income Albertans. Not one of those particular individuals who were in need or who needed the assistance of this government failed to receive that assistance. I think it's a hallmark of this government that it sees areas where there's true need and it responds appropriately, and it will continue to do so despite the insults and the usual catcalls from the opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Postsecondary Education Participation Rates

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The benefits of postsecondary education are well documented. As education levels rise so does economic prosperity and quality of life. Statistics Canada suggests that 80 percent of new jobs require postsecondary education, so it is clear that higher education is essential to our young people. Despite the stated policy of our government that we are committed to helping Albertans achieve higher education, our participation rates for postsecondary education are significantly below the national average. For example, the January 2002 HRDC/Stats Canada report At a Crossroads, which I will table later today, showed Alberta to have the lowest postsecondary participation rates in Canada for 18 to 20 year olds at 42 percent. My questions today are to the Minister of Learning. In a progressive and prosperous place like Alberta how does the minister explain why more students in our province don't pursue postsecondary education?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is an excellent question. First of all, I think there are a lot of reasons why students out of high school, 18 to 20 year olds, don't necessarily go to a postsecondary system right off. In a very hot economy, as we have in Alberta, what I often see and what we see here is that many students go into the job market first and subsequently come back. I will say that Alberta has the highest percentage of people with university degrees and postsecondary degrees of anyplace in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I have not read this report, but usually and typically what happens is that when they talk about postsecondary participation rates, they always forget one thing. That one thing is very important here in Alberta, and that's apprenticeship. In Alberta we consider apprenticeship as postsecondary. We have 40,000 students that are employed in the apprenticeship industry each and every year. It's extremely important. We have 10 percent of the population and 20 percent of the apprentices in Canada.

So I believe, to make a long answer short, there are a lot of factors: first of all, the hot job market; second of all, the reporting mechanism that is here; but most importantly and most significantly we continue to push our students for postsecondary education, whether it is apprenticeship, whether it is degrees, whether it is diplomas. It's extremely important, and I would encourage all grade 12 students, all students in our K to 12 system to look at a degree or a diploma or an apprenticeship for their upcoming careers.

Ms Graham: Mr. Speaker, given that I will be tabling the report later today – and perhaps the minister will have a look at it – I'm wondering what steps he has taken to ensure that our young people do enter studies at the postsecondary level.

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the important things that we do is on the student finance side. What we do on the student finance side is we ensure that those students with the highest needs have accessible dollars to attend the postsecondary system.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we did is we looked at the number of students that were turned away from the top six institutions in Alberta, and what we found is that by far the majority of students who had the marks were accepted into other institutions. What had actually happened is that these students had applied to more than one institution. There's a very, very small percentage of the students who had the marks that were not admitted into our postsecondary system.

So there are a lot of things that are happening in Alberta from the financial point of view, varying programs in Alberta to ensure that students are attracted, and I will say that our postsecondary system is absolutely, one hundred percent second to none in Canada.

Ms Graham: I have a final supplemental, Mr. Speaker. Given that, as the minister mentioned, affordability of postsecondary education is so very important to prevent barrier to access, are you, Mr. Minister, prepared to act on my motion, Motion 506, which was passed in this Assembly this spring urging government to find new and innovative ways to help students finance their postsecondary education?

The Speaker: One of the honoured traditions in a parliamentary system is that members should not be pressured into voting in any way, either directly or indirectly, so I think we'll pass on that question.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the draft report for the minister's symposium on schools says with respect to P3s, and I quote: Alberta's experience is marked by modest success and spectacular failure. It goes on to say, and I quote again: the province should adopt a coherent policy on P3s. But in spite of the spectacular failures of P3s in the past and the total absence of P3 research, policy, and planning that this report identifies, this government has committed itself to using P3s to the tune of $1.4 billion. To the Minister of Infrastructure: shouldn't this minister have conducted his research and fully developed his P3 policy before he committed Alberta taxpayers to spending $1.4 billion on these projects?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where on earth this member is coming from. To say that we're committing taxpayers to $1.4 billion or $1.9 billion or whatever number as far as P3 is concerned is just absolutely false, and I wish that they would quit these kinds of misleading comments and creating nothing but a problem out in the communities. The fact is that there's not even one – there's not even one – P3 project since we started talking about this new system before us today. There are some P3s that are working out there in the health care system, have been there for years. There are other examples of P3s, but the kind of nonsense that he talks about relative to a P3 is probably the kind of P3s that would not pass the test. The fact is that we are setting up and have set up a very good outside committee that would be assessing any type of alternate financing, which would include all P3 projects that we might talk about. When one comes, we will then have something to talk about, but certainly to say that we've committed the taxpayer to over a billion dollars is just totally wrong.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what assurances can this minister give the people of Alberta that his P3s aren't going to be just another spectacular failure?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we've gone through this many times, but maybe I'll try to do it more slowly today. We have consistently said that if there is a proposal that comes forward, we will assess it. We have a committee within the department that will assess it. We then turn it over to an outside committee that will go through the total package, will bring the lifetime cost back to present-day values, compare that with what it would be if in fact we did the project ourselves.

There are a number of things in a true P3 that I'm sure that the member would have great difficulty understanding but I know that Albertans won't have any problem understanding, and that is relative to things like having a project started and completed more quickly, having the risk off-loaded to the private sector, to have the ability to have people that are experts in operating structures do the operation, and some of those kinds of things that will have to be figured in when you look at the total cost. That's why the Treasurer has set up an outside committee that has expertise in all of those fields to make absolutely sure that the deal is the best for the taxpayer.

Mr. Bonner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly don't have any trouble understanding all the comments in the minister's draft report.

To the same minister: when is he going to develop his own research and policies on P3s, or is he simply planning to drift into a disaster like our electricity deregulation?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the only people that are drifting into disaster are right over there. The fact is that on the report that the member is referring to, back in December of 2001 we conducted a school symposium. Out of that school symposium, which some 450 people participated in, we developed a group of subcommittees. The report he's referring to is just one of the reports from a subcommittee, and it's a draft. I haven't even seen it yet because I believe it's maybe even today and tomorrow that the committees are working on the draft, and then there will be a final report coming to us. But the fact is that we have been working and doing a lot of research on P3s, and when – when – a proposal finally comes to us, we will be ready to report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Health Care Services

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is for the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Many of my constituents have expressed concern about difficulty in obtaining health care services. In spite of yet another large increase in health care spending by the province this year, wait times in emergency departments seem to be getting longer, and the time it takes to get an appointment with a family physician is also growing. Since more money, more frontline staff, more physicians are not helping the situation, what is the minister doing to deal with this very important concern?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, over the last eight years we've doubled our health care budget to some 7.3 billion dollars. Currently we are spending $20 million a day on health care, and notwithstanding these significant amounts of investment in health care, there continue to be issues with respect to access. Now, we've said all along that money alone will not solve access issues. There are a number of different solutions that need to be taken in tandem in order to have an effective solution. We have worked with the Department of Learning in terms of increasing the number of seats relating to health care professions in our province. We currently have some 12,000 seats in postsecondary institutions for various health care professions. We have recruited aggressively with respect to physicians, as an example. Over the last three years we have had a net increase – a net increase – of 600 physicians in the province of Alberta, bringing our total to nearly 6,000.

Emergency wait times continue to be an issue notwithstanding the best efforts of both the Capital health region and the Calgary health region, the two largest health regions in the province. Between the two of them they deal with some 600,000 emergency room visits each year. But because of the need to deal with other ways of delivering primary health care and not relying simply on emergency rooms to do that, we have made significant efforts and invested significant moneys in primary health care reform, Mr. Speaker. Just last month some 16 million dollars was announced by the government for primary health care initiatives that will reduce the number of unnecessary visits to emergency rooms by providing individuals with another access to primary health care other than emergency rooms. Also, of course – and I've spoken about this many times in the House – the Health Link line, which will be made available throughout the entire province by this summer, has demonstrably reduced the number of unnecessary visits to emergency rooms in those areas where it has been implemented.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a large percentage of those people who visit hospital emergency rooms do not really require hospital care, what is the minister doing about increasing the number of 24/7 medical clinics and thereby reducing the pressure on hospital emergency departments?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of ways of helping to address this issue, some of which I've already talked about. Certainly, expanding primary health care through the $16 million that I announced late last month will go a long way towards doing that. Improving access in rural areas will go a long way to helping relieve the pressure that exists in large urban centres. Helping Albertans prevent disease and injuries and promoting wellness will help reduce the overall demand upon our acute care system. Doing a better job of dealing with chronic diseases – and people will be well aware of the announcements that were made with respect to a provincewide diabetes strategy earlier this month.

So, Mr. Speaker, all of these elements will be a very important part of improving our emergency room wait times. There's no single fix for this, but the focus on the promotion of wellness, training of more professionals, finding better ways to deal with the issues relating to access to primary health care will all be a part of the solution to this important issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister mentioned the Health Link line, some of my constituents called me and told me that they had to wait 25 minutes to get an answer. Could the minister address this situation?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly Health Link has demonstrated itself not only to be very effective for providing 24-hour access to doctor approved, nurse delivered advice; it has also proven itself to be very popular among Albertans. Last year the Capital Health Link line received close to 400,000 calls, over a thousand calls a day. In Calgary the Health Link line has received up to 800 calls a day. The number of calls will continue to grow as the program is expanded throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, as at April of 2003 seventy-one percent of all the calls to Health Link were answered within two minutes. By June 2003 that response rate will improve so that 80 percent of calls will be answered within two minutes. In order to achieve that, we are training 10 to 12 new nurses each month, and we are increasing the number of full-time equivalents providing that important service.

Air Quality at Holy Cross Hospital

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, my questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. Will the minister inform this Assembly what he has learned about his department's testing for toxic mold at the Holy Cross hospital?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I've learned is that that member has been trying to mislead Albertans, mislead this House, and in fact it looks to me, what I think has happened, that he's even misled the privacy commissioner of . . . [interjections] Whatever.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

Mr. Lund: The fact is that I told the member on Monday and I told him again on Tuesday that the testing that was started in the Holy Cross hospital was never completed.

The Speaker: There was intervention there on a point of order. There was use of a certain word three times. This is going to lead to a major flare-up at the conclusion of question period.

The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's just very important that we get this all on the record.

To the same minister: does the Department of Infrastructure have in its possession any lab results that speak of toxic mold at the former Holy Cross hospital?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I really take exception to this member continually trying to discredit the staff in my department. Yesterday he made comments like: has the department simply lost them? You'll find this on page 1621 of Hansard. What this has done is it has created a great deal of hardship as far as the department staff is concerned, and I think that member owes particularly one of our staff, Sandy Fisher in Calgary, who was in charge of trying to find a place to house the Court of Appeal – in fact, the person that started this testing just yesterday sent an e-mail to us, and I will read the one very important sentence: "Sandy Fisher is aware that I did not complete our report for the Holy Cross Hospital as the decision was made for the Court of Appeal not to move into this building."

The Speaker: I will ask that that be tabled, please, at the appropriate time.

The hon. member.

2:30

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If people read carefully, they will see that he did not answer the question, so I will repeat this for the record. [interjections] Could we get order, please? Thank you.

The Speaker: Order will come, hon. member, when the hon. member recognizes: no preambles on supplementary questions. The question, please.

Dr. Taft: Is the minister saying that his department has never had possession of positive tests for toxic mold at the Holy Cross hospital? Yes or no will do.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, once again I will put on the record what has happened. The fact is that when we were looking at locations to house the Court of Appeal, the Court of Appeal asked Mr. Tang Lee to do an air quality test, and clearly, as this shows, the tests were never completed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today the spring Legislative Assembly will come to a close. During the session gas bills went through the roof, and electricity deregulation continues to rob customers blind. Energy consumers will look at this session with its three months of speeches and wonder why it is that they're worse off than ever before. To the Minister of Energy: after three months of debate, petitions, letters, and hard-luck stories, how come consumers are still stuck with record-high energy bills?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the bills that are being sent out in Alberta today reflect real-time pricing. They reflect the marketplace of the day. There is no debt attached to those from a Crown basis. We're seeing policies: an export policy, a market policy, a transmission policy that continues to bring on new generation. We also see ourselves in a time, in an era, where, as the chief executive officer of ATCO reported yesterday, natural gas is at an all-time high.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, can the minister produce a single power bill of an individual Albertan whose costs for electricity are lower today than at the beginning of this session?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, we don't get into the habit of collecting power bills that are higher or lower. We haven't even gone out and asked for them. I'm sure they're around. In fact, I've seen bills that are in fact lower than they were prior to deregulation. What this member seems to conveniently forget is that prior to 2001 power was at 19 and a half cents a kilowatt-hour as opposed to the 4 cents and 6 cents that it is now.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, can the minister identify a single municipality with lower power costs as a result of this government's efforts during this session of the Assembly?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are 384 elected jurisdictions across Alberta, and we've listened and talked to them. They haven't come up and said: gee, could you compare one against the other, pit municipalities against each other? We think that this is one great province with one great government, and we'll continue to look at it from a broad Alberta perspective.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Education Property Taxes

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a recent seniors' conference held in my constituency where the hon. Minister of Seniors and I were invited as guest speakers, my constituent seniors asked me to bring to the government's attention three points. Senior citizens have no objection to paying education taxes. While incomes of seniors are effectively fixed, their education taxes keep increasing alarmingly because it is based on increasing market values of their own residences. Number three is that our government's health care policies encourage our Albertan seniors toward aging in place in their own homes. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Learning. Could the Minister of Learning look into the increase in education tax creeping up against the fixed-income seniors?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, when it comes to municipal taxation, my department is involved in the setting of the mill rate. This year the mill rate was frozen, which meant that if you had a $100,000 house this year and if you had a $100,000 house last year, you would pay exactly the same taxes. If your house value went down, you paid less. If your house value went up, you paid more. When I set the mill rate, it is a type of thing that is set for the whole province. It is not set for one particular group of people.

Mr. Speaker, I would believe that the hon. Minister of Seniors could probably answer that question more accurately as it specifically applies to seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the hon. Minister of Seniors. Given that my constituent told me that her pension increased 1.6 percent this year while the city assessment of her property increased by 10 percent for property tax and education purposes, could the minister look into this increase in property taxes and cost of living affecting fixed-income seniors and develop a better aging-in-place policy in tandem with the Minister of Health and Wellness?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to hear the member reaffirm that seniors have been and are still willing to pay their fair share in this society. Having said that, as I've mentioned previously in this House, I'm very concerned with seniors close to our thresholds who are succumbing to the increasing costs of rent, property tax, utilities, health care, and all sorts of associated items.

In direct response to the property tax issue, I would like to have discussions with the AAMD and C and the AUMA to either freeze taxes as they apply to seniors or find some method to ensure that the increases aren't escalating at the rate that they are. I know how taxes are set, and I do know that property taxes, both municipal and sometimes the education portion, are accelerating far beyond the ability of the seniors to absorb it in their budgets.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we wind down, it's really a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a special mayor, from the town of Picture Butte, who has come up here to do some work with the AUMA today. Mr. Jon Stevens has an extensive financial background with the banks and after his retirement from the bank became a mayor for the town of Picture Butte. His nephew Jason has brought him over to the Legislature today, and if you look about five or 10 feet to the left, you'll see maybe some familiarity, a family face. Mayor Jon is the brother of Barney Stevens, who is one of the staff with our Sergeant-at-Arms. I would like to ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Constitutional Reform

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have never been shy about discussing and questioning our place in Confederation. Albertans have never been shy about proposing changes to our Confederation for the benefit of all Albertans and indeed of all Canadians. However, often our eagerness for positive change has fallen upon deaf ears, upon wary and unconvinced provincial governments and an uncaring and unconcerned federal government.

However, Mr. Speaker, the winds across the country are starting to blow in a different direction, and they're blowing in our favour. Recent events have presented a window of opportunity for Alberta to be a bold leader and reach out to our colleagues across all of Canada and try to bring about necessary and beneficial changes to Confederation not only for our own interests but for the interests of all of the provinces and of all Canadians. While each province may have its own specific interests, a common frustration is developing. The provinces are sick of federal encroachment in areas properly under and affecting provincial jurisdiction. The provinces are tired of federal policies such as the Kyoto protocol, the federal gun registry, and the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Speaker, in Newfoundland and Labrador we now have cod fishermen soon to be out of work because an inept bureaucracy in Ottawa felt that it knew how to best manage that province's resources. The Premier of Newfoundland and Labrador has now called for constitutional change to give that province more control over its own resources. In Quebec the election of a new federalist Premier has afforded us the opportunity to work with a powerful leader and friend, one concerned with changing Confederation for the better rather than running away from Confederation, as his predecessor did. We are likely to soon be graced with a new Liberal Prime Minister in Ottawa, one who at least acknowledged that provincial and regional alienation is real and has at least expressed an interest in change, however timid that interest might be.

With these developments in mind, now is the time, Mr. Speaker, to reach out to our colleagues. Now is the time to persuade our colleagues why we need Senate reform. Now is the time to show why the provinces need a say on treaties that affect provincial jurisdiction. Now is the time to start meeting regularly, formally or informally, with our colleagues to build a consensus. The time for constitutional renewal is now.

Democracy in Alberta

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the people of this province treasure democracy as a pillar of our society. From Medicine Hat to High Level, from Fort McMurray to Waterton, Albertans have spoken loud and clear that the principles of democracy, transparency, and accountability are staples of our system of government. Yesterday the government introduced a motion which would propose to create an elected, effective, and equal Senate for our country. Let there be no doubt that the Alberta Liberal caucus, the Official Opposition of Alberta, fully supports and endorses a triple E Senate for our country, but while the government promotes democracy to others, they are also sending the message to Albertans and all Canadians: do as I say, not as I do.

We have seen stunning examples from this government that there is indeed a democratic deficit in our province. Under this administration elected bodies such as school boards have been fired by the government, not by the people who elected them. Regional health authority elections were scrapped barely a year after they occurred, and the members of the boards who were elected were fired, not by the citizens of Alberta but by the minister's office. Now democratically elected students' unions face the chopping block of this government with Bill 43.

Shell legislation is brought forward in this Assembly which allows the details of government policy, which affects all Albertans, to be made in the back rooms and behind closed doors. Standing policy committees, who receive in excess of 600,000 taxpayer dollars, are largely affairs which are closed to the public and nongovernment representatives. There is no lobbyist registry in our province. Neither is there whistle-blower legislation. I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. This government has created a democratic deficit. If we are going to advocate to others that democratic government must be revitalized, we must ensure that our own backyard is taken care of as well. Otherwise, no one will take the effort seriously.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is truly blessed with the splendour and richness of the land, with the positive, can-do attitude of its citizens, with the free enterprising spirit of its businesses, and with a high quality of living. I must say that all of these do not just happen. Many other jurisdictions and places around the globe having similar or even better geography cannot achieve what Albertans have. The question is: why? To me it is the positive leadership in government, in businesses, and in families. It is the dedication of the government to take on challenges, to make changes for an even better Alberta. When other jurisdictions are rowing through rough waters, Alberta is hovercrafting calmly over the waves.

Our public mortgage debt came down from around $22 billion a few years ago to around $4 billion at the moment. Now Albertans can easily visualize the mortgage payoff day. Alberta has successfully for the last 10 years stayed the course of spending within its means. I still remember standing in front of the Legislature with my colleagues witnessing the symbolic cutting of our province's credit cards. Those are the outstanding achievements of the past. Most recently, in our spring session I saw another landmark, the Alberta sustainability fund, which provides steady and reliable sources for public funding.

Talking about funding, where else in the world but in Alberta does public spending keep increasing, from about $15 billion a few years ago to $20.8 billion this coming year, for a population of just under 3 million? If anyone thinks or talks about government budget cuts, they are not talking reality. Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a spending problem; more specifically, sharing the public dollars. May I say that Alberta has pizza-sharing syndrome. Indeed, our Alberta pizza keeps growing from 15 inches to 20 inches, but those partaking in the pizza still see their own slice as small.

Thank you.

Role of the Opposition in a Parliamentary Democracy

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, an outburst by a member on the government side of the House claiming the opposition is always negative, a government member who complains publicly that all the opposition does is criticize, and the outright hostility that meets opposition questions when those questions make government members uncomfortable demand that this Chamber take a serious look at the role of the opposition in our democracy.

The devaluation of opposition activity is a grave concern, for without an opposition democracy disappears and authoritarian governments take over. As Gerald Schmitz notes in his article on Opposition in a Parliamentary Democracy, the roots of our system go back to Athens. Self-government was based on the notion that the minority could by peaceful means seek to persuade the majority to their point of view and that citizens are both the rulers and the ruled.

Much has changed. For example, now elected representatives speak for the population. What is constant, however, is the principle that government only governs with the consent of the governed. Once that is accepted, it follows that the minority accepts the right of the majority to make decisions as long as there is respect for the minority to disagree with these decisions and propose alternative actions. That is what seems to be so difficult for some members to understand. Our democratic system exists only as long as Albertans are able to speak both through the government as well as through the opposition. The very legitimacy of the majority is made possible through the existence of a voice for the minority.

Prime Minister Lester Pearson captured well the argument I'm putting forward. Speaking of the opposition, he said:

They rightly insisted on their right to oppose, attack and criticize, to engage in that cut and thrust of debate, so often and so strongly recommended by those concerned with the vigour and health of Parliament and the health of democracy. I cannot forbear to add, however, that the application of this procedure has, in the past, been occasionally resented by those who are cut and thrust at.

Last fall the Premier of Alberta also acknowledged these comments. We would like to see some changes in this Legislative Assembly this fall.

Sessional Statistics

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go on to the next point in the Routine, we're currently in the 25th Legislature, and I thought the hon. members might appreciate some of these statistics.

In the First Session of the 25th Legislature, which was the spring session of 2001, the Assembly sat on 25 different days but also 17 evenings for a period of 42 sittings and during that time accumulated 9,152 minutes in the House, or 152.53 hours. In the spring sitting of 2002, which was the Second Session, the House sat on 37 days but also 26 evenings for a total of 63 sittings and sat in the House for 12,395 minutes, or 206.58 hours. In this current spring session, the Third Session of the 25th Legislature, we are now on our 46th day, but we've also sat 31 evenings, for a total of 77. In terms of the total hours, to last evening at 5:30 it was 252.83 hours, a total of 15,170 minutes.

So in the First Session, 2001, a total of 42 sittings; in the Second Session, 2002, 63 sittings; and in the Third Session, 2003, to date 77 sittings.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I present on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry an approved petition with 860 names of Albertans who are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to acknowledge that the maintenance and construction costs of schools, hospitals and roads are part of the provincial debt and to consider splitting the budget surplus between the monetary debt and the infrastructure debt.

Thank you.

2:50head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice of a motion that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

There being no motions for returns, there are none to stand and retain their places.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Lund: I'm really happy to table this e-mail from Tang Lee.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of the report At a Crossroads by Human Resources Development Canada and Statistics Canada, January 2002, which is a comprehensive survey of Canadian youth 18 to 20 years of age as at December 1999 as to their educational participation, their completion rates, and their labour market participation. This report at page 46 suggests that Alberta students of this age group have the lowest postsecondary participation in Canada at 42 percent, which was the basis of my questions to the Minister of Learning today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the required number of copies for a tabling on behalf of the hon. Member for West Yellowhead requesting the Minister of Learning and the Minister of Infrastructure to meet with the concerned parents of Grande Yellowhead regional division No. 35 over the school building space in Edson, signed by 132 concerned constituents.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of six different reports, all relating to mold. The first one is entitled Mold Neurotoxicity: Validity, Reliability and Baloney. It is a meticulous and detailed debunking of the latest and fastest growing fad in the personal injury litigation business, that being the toxic mold scare. It's authored by noted debunker Dr. Paul R. Lees-Haley. It's taken from the Quackwatch web site.

The second article is entitled Experts Taking Issue with "Toxic Mold". It's along the same line as the first report. It takes issue with the words "toxic mold," which it calls an "alarmist term originally propagated not by scientists but by either the news media or trial lawyers."

The third report is from the Toxic Mold Resource Center. It talks about toxic mold such as penicillium and advertises that there are "numerous toxic mold testing companies, that provide a wide range of results."

The fourth is from the Environmental Law Advisory, a monthly update on law policy and strategy, outlining how exposure to mold is one of the fastest growing areas of litigation, how it's being blamed for everything, how mold is everywhere from bread, cheese, wine to penicillin, and that despite conflicting and incomplete scientific data, juries are handing down verdicts anyway.

The final two, Mr. Speaker, are on a new technology called electro-osmotic pulse technology, which for an operating cost equivalent to one 60-watt light bulb is easily and dramatically drying out large government buildings, basements, and other institutions, thus solving the problem. If I could, Mr. Speaker, a fast quote from the fifth article: "Clammy, smelly, dank, and unhealthy. But enough about politics. We're talking basements here – specifically, a new way to keep them dry."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I have my answers to the questions from yesterday in question period.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a copy of an announcement that Pro Coro Canada's executive director, Miki Andrejevic, has received one of the Queen's golden jubilee medals.

The second is another release, on Bottom Line Productions, which was one of Edmonton's first independent arts management and public relations firms. They're celebrating their 10th year in the arts business in Edmonton.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. I have three tablings, Mr. Speaker. The first is at the request of the author of the letter, Gerald Zagrosh, who runs the Pain Elimination and Tissue Regeneration Clinic. It's a letter that was sent to many MLAs in which he explains his theory and approach to eliminating pain.

The second: the appropriate number of copies of the teachers' arbitrated settlement agreement, which was never tabled in this Legislature and which I've been asked to table. It's the one that has led to the current situation with funding and teacher layoffs in the schools, and it says among other things that it will be up to the provincial government to determine how to deal with the reality of this arbitration as it makes its funding decisions for that year and beyond.

The third is at the request of the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry: 388 people who have signed a petition urging the government to acknowledge that the maintenance and construction costs of schools, hospitals and roads are part of the provincial debt and to consider splitting the budget surplus between the monetary debt and the infrastructure debt.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon. It is copies of a petition that was organized in the Manning district. This petition states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to acknowledge that the maintenance and construction costs of schools, hospitals and roads are part of the provincial debt and to consider splitting the budget surplus between monetary debt and infrastructure debt.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got one tabling. It's a letter from Kelly Duffin, president and CEO of the Canadian Hearing Society, that is dated May 14, 2003, and it is addressed to the Minister of Learning. I've been copied on this letter. The society is requesting the minister to intervene with the president's office of Grant MacEwan College to reconsider his decision to close the American sign language English interpreting program.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling pages 36 to 38 of a Calgary Catholic school district document, the 2003-2004 district operating budget, showing that the district's utility bill has doubled.

The Speaker: Hon. members, annually 12,000-plus people visit the Legislative Assembly in the capacity of visitors, and many of them do not have English as their first language. So to accommodate them and to make them feel a little more familiar and comfortable with the Assembly, we've created a new booklet called English as a Second Language: Field Trip Guide to the Alberta Legislature. I'm tabling copies here and will have one provided for all members. Members, there's a test included in the booklet.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am rising to ask the Government House Leader if he's bringing us back next week to deal with those bills that are still on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It depends on progress this afternoon as to whether we come back next week. If we do come back next week, the Order Paper outlines a number of bills that would be available to us. We have very important bills like the Family Law Act, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2003, the Personal Information Protection Act, the Post-secondary Learning Act. So if we're here next week, we can anticipate dealing with those bills.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did rise on a point of order. I reference Beauchesne 489 and would also as an additional reference use the memo that you send at the beginning of each session to all members outlining decorum in the House and specifically language that is unparliamentary.

Beauchesne 489 specifically does reference language that's been ruled unparliamentary since 1958. In the exchange between the Minister of Infrastructure and the Member for Edmonton-Riverview this senior minister in the government, who has been here way longer than me, who very well knows the rules, used the term "mislead" or "misleading," as you correctly pointed out earlier, three times in his very first response to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Mr. Speaker, that is unparliamentary language, and we would ask him to withdraw those comments.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think what has happened this week relative to comments from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is the issue that he's been raising over toxic mold, which we acknowledge and believe can be a serious issue. However, as far as I'm concerned, leaving an impression that in fact we had done testing at the Holy Cross hospital and that we had found mold and that we did not disclose that I was finding very offensive.

3:00

As a matter of fact, it started on Monday, and we'll find that in the Monday afternoon edition, May 12, of Hansard on page 1569. I'm not going to read all of his comments, but I do want to show how this has progressed to a point where I'm not sure of the motive. It is really concerning to me. He starts off by saying:

Now the Liberal opposition has learned that tests were conducted in the summer of 2001 for mold at the former Holy Cross hospital and that the results of these tests should be of concern to the public . . .

To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that exposure to toxic molds can lead to headaches, nausea, respiratory illness, bleeding of the lungs, and cancer, why have tests for mold at the Holy Cross hospital never been made available to the public?

That very statement would seem to indicate to me that there was mold found and that because it is harmful – and we're not arguing that situation – somehow we were allowing the public to be exposed to it.

Later in the same day he said:

Mr. Speaker, given that there are 42 long-term care residents as well as dozens of nurses, doctors, and other support staff at the Holy Cross, will the minister immediately release all test results for mold at that site? It seems the site failed the tests.

Well, Mr. Speaker, once again that would indicate to me that we were failing and that, in fact, there was a danger to the people that were in the facility, that their health was in danger.

In my answers to the member on Monday I clearly indicated to him that I was aware that there had been some air quality examinations proceeded with but not concluded to the best of my knowledge. I did not on that day have absolute proof that it had not been followed through to completion, but from memory I was remembering that, in fact, before we ever got very far down the way, for other reasons we had abandoned that site.

Then on Tuesday, May 13, on page 1620 we find in the first question to me the comment, "Yesterday the Minister of Infrastructure admitted that tests for toxic mold had been conducted at the Holy Cross hospital." I did not say that, Mr. Speaker. I did not say that there had been tests for toxic mold. Knowing full well, I explained it once again to the member that the tests were not completed. I knew by Tuesday that they had definitely not been completed.

He goes on with the second question: "Can the minister assure Calgarians that all appropriate steps were followed when the test results were obtained from the Holy Cross?" We did not receive any tests, because they were not completed. There were some samples taken and sent to a lab, but clearly there has to be much more work done to find if, in fact, there's anything that is injurious to health.

Then we go on the next question, and he says, "Your department did the tests.” That is absolutely false. Our department did not do any tests. As a matter of fact, the way the process was working, for every building that we did an assessment on to see if, in fact, the Court of Appeal could be housed there, the Court of Appeal hired a person by the name of Tang Lee to do some tests. We didn’t. [interjection] Somebody over on that side said: we paid for them. Well, the fact is that after the testing was done, we got an invoice. The test would’ve been sent to the Court of Appeal.

Then he says, “I hope they haven’t lost the file.” It’s very discouraging to think that he would insult our good people that work for the Alberta government, our employees who are very conscientious and good, and to have a person stand up in the House and make those kinds of comments. He goes on, “Why has the department chosen to sit on the results, or have they simply been lost?” Once again, an insult to our staff that he would make those kinds of comments.

I can also tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the owners of the building had another independent group come in, and we do have a letter from them saying that in the results from their tests there were no toxic molds in the Holy Cross hospital. That was not of great interest to me, because the fact is that we were not going to go into that facility anyway, but I have since found that.

Now, this whole exchange in here for over two days has caused a great deal of concern for me and for the department. If there was something, then we wanted to make absolutely sure that it was cleared up. So you will see from the paper that I’ve filed today that we sent an e-mail to Mr. Lee and asked him that if he has any results, could he give them to us because we need those. He writes back, “Sandy Fisher is aware that I did not complete our report for the Holy Cross Hospital as the decision was made for the Court of Appeal not to move into this building.” That’s what I’ve been saying on Monday; I’ve been saying it on Tuesday.

So if my verbiage today created some great disorder on the other side of the House – perhaps I should’ve said: in my opinion, it misled me. If using the whole Assembly, then I apologize for that. But I really have difficulty when someone would stand in this House for two days and make comments that would make me believe that he is now casting an aspersion over me and my department and, in fact, out in the public, creating a real concern about the facility being safe.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, like I say, if it was a problem with my using the strong language that I used, I will say that I should’ve been more careful and said that I feel that I was misled. I find this just so offensive that we would have this kind of performance in this Chamber.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, do you have a comment with respect to this or not?

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, this issue is far from over, but I do understand the minister’s comments. I accept his apology, and as far as I’m concerned, that’s fine.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is one of those situations where the usage of the words almost come to a draw. Beauchesne 489 very, very clearly says that certain words are unparliamentary, and then in the next section, section 490, it basically says that the expression is parliamentary. In terms of the documents that I provided to all hon. members, there are many, many examples where on some occasions they are ruled parliamentary and on other occasions they’re ruled unparliamentary, and everything has to do with the context.

I let this go because I think it was worthy of that. The bottom line is that the hon. minister has basically said that he apologizes for the usage of the words in their context. He may or may not have had to do that depending on whether there would have been a ruling in this case. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview accepts it. The one bottom line for me is that context means everything and that decorum is all-important.

I’m sure we’ll have a great opportunity over the next number of months, so I’m going to provide an assignment called homework to all hon. members: read chapters 10 and 11 in Beauchesne, please.

Now, if my eyes are correct, we have a visitor in the Assembly today who is one of the great parliamentarians of this country. I believe that that’s the Hon. Mitchell Sharp. If so, he has distinguished this country for decades in national and international work. Mr. Sharp, you honour us with your presence.

Senate Reform

23. Mr. Jonson moved:

Be it resolved that given that the current process of appointing Senators offends Canadians’ democratic values, has deprived that House of political legitimacy and efficacy, and has prevented the Senate from being effective in protecting the interests of the provinces of Canada, the Legislative Assembly directs the government of Alberta to consult with Albertans on reforming the Senate through the following constitutional amendment; namely, by repealing sections 21 to 34 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and substituting the following:

21 (1) The Senate shall consist of elected members called Senators.

(2) Each Province shall be represented in the Senate by 6 Senators.

(3) Each Territory shall be represented in the Senate by 2 Senators.

22 (1) Subject to this section, the Senators representing a Province or Territory shall be elected by the electors of that Province or Territory.

(2) The legislature of a Province or of a Territory may make laws relating to the election of Senators representing that Province or Territory, including the method of election and the procedure for the election.

(3) Except in the case of by-elections, and except in the case of the first election held pursuant to this section, the election of one-half of the Senators representing a Province or Territory shall be held in conjunction with the general elections of members of the legislative assembly of the Province or of the Territory.

(4) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (6) and unless the office is sooner vacated, and except in the case of a Senator elected in a by-election, the term of office of a Senator representing a Province or Territory continues until the official announcement of the results of the Senate elections held in conjunction with the second general election in that Province or Territory after the election of that Senator.

(5) The first election held pursuant to this section in each Province or Territory shall be for the election of all the Senators representing that Province or Territory.

(6) The term of office for one-half of the Senators elected from each Province and Territory at the first election held pursuant to this section in each Province or Territory continues until the official announcement of the results of the Senate elections held in conjunction with the next general election in that Province or Territory.

(7) In relation to the Senators representing that Province or Territory, the legislature of a Province or of a Territory may make laws establishing which Senators subsection (6) applies to.

23 (1) Subject to this section, a person is qualified to be a candidate and to be elected Senator if the person is eligible to be a candidate and to be elected as a member of the House of Commons.

(2) A person is not qualified to be elected as a Senator or to remain a Senator if the person

- (a) is a member of the House of Commons or of the legislative assembly of a Province or of a Territory, or
- (b) is a Minister of the Crown.

(3) If any question arises respecting the qualification of a Senator, the question shall be heard and determined by the Senate.

24 (1) A Senator may resign his or her seat by delivering a resignation to the Governor General.

(2) When a Senator resigns his or her seat in accordance with subsection (1), the seat immediately becomes vacant.

25 (1) A by-election to fill a vacancy in the Senate representation of a Province or Territory need not be called if

- (a) the vacancy occurs during the last year of the legal life of the legislative assembly of the Province or of the Territory, and
- (b) the term of office of the Senator who vacated that seat would have expired with the announcement of the results of the Senate elections held in conjunction with the next general election in the Province or Territory.

(2) The term of office for a Senator elected at a by-election shall be for the balance of the term of the Senator who vacated the seat.

26. The Senate may establish its own procedure for the election of the Speaker of the Senate and for the conduct of the Senate's business.

27. Subject to section 53, bills proposed to the Parliament of Canada may originate in the Senate equally as in the House of Commons.

28 (1) Where a bill is presented to the Senate after being passed by the House of Commons, if the Senate

- (a) votes against passing the bill,
- (b) passes the bill with amendments that are not acceptable to the House of Commons, or
- (c) fails to vote on the bill within 180 days after it is presented to the Senate,

the bill may be brought before the House of Commons and if again passed by the House of Commons, with such amendments made by the Senate as are concurred in by the House, the bill may be presented to the Governor General for assent, and when assented to has the same force and effect as if passed in that form by the Senate.

(2) In a bill presented to the Governor General under this section, the words of enactment shall be amended by striking out any reference to the Senate.

(3) An alteration to a bill to give effect to subsection (2) is deemed not to be an amendment of the bill.

(4) This section does not apply to a bill referred to in section 30.

29. If the Speaker of the Senate or of the House of Commons rules that the subject matter of a bill is wholly or partially within section 94A or 95, the bill may be repassed by the House of Commons under section 28 only if

- (a) the percentage of the members voting who vote to pass the bill is greater than the percentage of Senators voting who voted to reject the bill or pass it with amendments, or
- (b) the Senate fails to vote on the bill within 180 days after it is presented to the Senate.

30. Where a bill is presented to the Senate after being passed by the House of Commons and the Speaker of the Senate or of the House of Commons rules that the bill

- (a) directly affects in any way, including by taxation, the natural resources of a Province,
- (b) authorizes the expenditure of federal funds in areas of provincial jurisdiction under sections 92, 92A and 93,
- (c) is binding on a Province, or
- (d) declares a local work or undertaking to be of the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more Provinces

if the Senate votes against passing the bill or passes it with amendments not acceptable to the House of Commons, no further proceedings may be taken on the bill.

31. Appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada and to the Federal Court of Appeal have no effect until they are ratified by the Senate.

32. No treaty shall be ratified by Canada unless the Senate has authorized Canada to ratify the treaty.

And be it further resolved that given that the Constitution establishes Canada as a federal system of government in which the sovereign powers of the Crown are divided between two separate but equal orders of government and that the federal Parliament is comprised of two Houses, the House of Commons, which is designed to reflect the democratic principle of representation by population, and a Senate, which is designed to reflect the federal nature of Canada, and that Canada is a parliamentary democracy that has constitutionally enshrined the democratic right of every citizen of Canada to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons and of their Legislative Assembly, the Legislative Assembly directs the government of Alberta to initiate discussions with the government of Canada and the governments of all other provinces and territories leading to the reform of the Senate.

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, the resolution signals Alberta's intention to engage in consultations on meaningful Senate reform. Previous measures the government has suggested for Senate reform have been dismissed by some as halfhearted and piecemeal. We have taken these criticisms seriously. As such, we have included a proposal for a constitutional amendment within the body of the resolution. Previous measures we have suggested did not contemplate amending the Constitution to reform the Senate.

The resolution calls for the Assembly to direct the government to engage in consultations with other provinces, the federal government, and Albertans on how to reform the Senate based on the constitutional amendment proposal in the resolution. The constitutional amendment proposal is based on the report of the 1985

Alberta select special committee on upper House reform and a draft prepared by Alberta officials during the 1992 constitutional negotiations. Simply put, Mr. Speaker, the proposal calls for a triple E Senate, one that is equal, elected, and effective.

Mr. Speaker, in our federal system the Senate was designed to represent the provinces' interests in Parliament. The current Senate lacks a democratic foundation and therefore is not performing its function. Under Alberta's proposal Senators would be elected and not appointed by the Prime Minister alone. There would be six Senators representing each province and two representing each territory, and a reformed Senate would have veto power over any legislation affecting the powers of the provinces.

Some might wonder why we are introducing this resolution at this time. We need to look back no further than Quebec and its idea for a council of the federation or Newfoundland, where a royal commission is examining that province's place in Confederation, to realize that provinces continue to feel frustration with federal institutions and federal/provincial relations. The federal government has failed to recognize this continued disenchantment and has not accepted its proper leadership role in addressing these issues. Mr. Speaker, if it takes opening up the Constitution to achieve a better functioning Confederation, then we should do it.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, the government will be advancing the three intergovernmental initiatives the Premier has been advocating for, those being annual first ministers' meetings, involving the provinces meaningfully in negotiations over international agreements, and appointing Senators from provincial nominee lists. We will bring these ideas as well as this resolution forward for discussion at the Western Premiers' Conference in June and the annual Premiers' Conference. I will be advancing the resolution at the intergovernmental level as well with my colleagues across the country.

This resolution gives Albertans, Canadians, and governments the opportunity to seriously consider comprehensive reforms of the Senate. A reformed Senate, one that is elected, equal, and effective, would provide a balance to the House of Commons and force the federal government to make better decisions on a day-by-day basis. However, this is not going to be an easy task, but with respect to such an important issue, Mr. Speaker, the effort – every effort – is certainly worthwhile and needed to be put forward.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would at this time adjourn debate on this motion.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 40
Appropriation Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to move third reading of Bill 40, the Appropriation Act, 2003.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, just on a point of order or perhaps you could provide some guidance. On the motion of the government that was just adjourned, it has no force and effect as the policy of this Legislature unless it's ultimately passed. Is that not correct?

The Speaker: The debate was just adjourned. We're coming back to it on Monday.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak this afternoon to third reading on the Appropriation Act, 2003. I just have a few comments in terms of a summary of the process and the allocation of dollars that we've seen as we went through Committee of Supply and second reading on the appropriation and committee on the appropriations.

The thing that I reflect back on as I followed the debate and participated in some of it is the idea that we need to be more explicit on how we develop our budget processes on a needs base. I don't mean here that we just have to go out and give people or give agencies what they ask for. What I'm talking about when I say that we need to make sure that the budgeting process is needs based is I'm suggesting that what we have to do is look at, in effect, modeling expenditures in each one of our departments where the costs are built around how we deal with putting together appropriate delivery systems for those services. We have to make sure that these delivery systems are targeted toward a particular degree of efficiency or effectiveness in carrying out the mandate of that department.

I'd give an example in the sense that we've heard the minister as recently as question period today talk about how some school boards seem to be making due with their budget and some can't make due with their budget. Well, what are the characteristics of those school boards that can and the ones that can't? These are the kinds of things that need to be brought into the budgeting debate.

Hopefully, the education commission will address some of those when it reports this fall, but that's the kind of thing that we need to be more transparent about when we talk about our budgeting process so that Albertans understand what the base of the expenditure pattern is rather than just that it's up 9 percent or it's up 2 percent or it's down 5 percent from last year. That's not enough for Albertans if we want to be able to go out and say that these are the criteria and this is the basis under which the budget was put in place.

I guess the other thing that we have to look at is how we deal with the budgeting process in terms of stability. I want to really congratulate the government and the minister this budget system for putting in place their stabilization mechanisms. It's important that as we go through this process, we look at some of the terminology we use, and I think that for Albertans' sake we need to kind of standardize some of that terminology that we're using so that they understand what we're talking about. If we can make it so that it fits with common usage, then we would be better off as we talk about all of our different funds, the function of those funds, like how they're going to be used and what they'll be used for and what their purpose is. This is one of the things that when we look at the new fund that was created this year called the sustainability fund, in effect it's a stability fund. It's not a sustainability fund. Sustainability has got to do with the ability to continue a trend as opposed to taking out the ups and downs of a cycle.

This is the kind of thing that we have to make sure that we build in because in the context of the questions that have been asked by Albertans this year, Albertans do not see the education budget as sustainable. Yet when they look at it, funding for that education budget, especially in the last six years, has been rather stable. It's been growing without a lot of cycles in it. So this is the kind of thing that we need to make sure that we work out.

I guess the other comment that I want to talk a little bit about in terms of the budget is: how do we measure the process we go through here relative to Albertans in setting our priorities? One of the big things we've heard as the Official Opposition as we've gone through the budgeting process this year is that there doesn't seem to be an appropriate priority given to funding for education. Mr.

Speaker, I will say that that has been by far the biggest area of concern in terms of the actual dollars for the budget because it's the one where we really see significant threats of cutbacks from the status position. If we look at it, you know, in terms of what Albertans are telling us, they see that education funding as really providing appropriate opportunities for all youth, and they see that as we limit the system, the perception is that young Albertans that learning doesn't come quite as easy to are the ones that are suffering; they don't quite get the full support in the classroom that they should be getting. So they're asking: what is going on there?

In the health care area the only real concern that's been expressed regularly to me anyway has been the issue of access. Once they're in the system, most Albertans are reasonably pleased with the care, but they still see the waiting lists as being an access issue. So that's another priority that we need to start to address.

The other area of concern that's come up with the budgeting process this year that a number of Albertans have talked to us about is: how do we develop a sustainable infrastructure program? I think the new program that's here now, especially with the catch-up money that's been put in over the next three years and if we can manage to keep the budget in the billion-dollar range in the Ministry of Infrastructure, should be sustainable as long as we have the catch-up dollars in the other areas. I think that if we can get that message to Albertans, that will help. It may take a number of years for the catch-up to occur, but we've heard a number of people submit petitions that have asked for some kind of a public statement that if we do have surpluses, there'll be some allocation, and they're suggesting 50-50 between catch-up on the infrastructure and pay-down of our fiscal debt. I think we have to look at that, especially in terms of the fact that some years more of our debt matures, some years less of our debt matures. To put an absolute on it, we need to make sure that there's a trend there that reflects where we're going and that we're willing to commit to the fact that that infrastructure debt has to be caught up.

I guess the other thing that we need to look at in terms of some of the budgeting processes is: how do we deal with uncertainty? How do we deal with risk? I know the sustainability fund that the government has created this year is kind of a reserve pool for unplanned risk, but if we're going to make sure that that is manageable over time, I would ask and suggest to the Minister of Finance that next year in the business plans we may have some actuarial data on the real risk items that are in the budget like the ag programs, like forest fires, like the disaster payments, support for municipalities, say, in extreme weather so that we can, in effect, see where and whether or not the long-term stability and workability of that budgeting process is in place. I think that's kind of where we need to go on that.

The other one is that if we're going to continue to build our budgets, we need to in effect make sure that Albertans understand how we do that budgeting process, how we come up with the numbers that are given to ministers. I am not a real fan, Mr. Speaker, of the idea of saying: well, it's just a 10 percent increase over last year. That leads to percentage expectations. You know, you gave us 10 percent last year; you should give us 10 percent this year. We've got to be able to make sure that our budget changes are based on true economic factors like indexes of appropriate costs for that ministry, demographic changes that affect that ministry, economic cycle changes that affect that ministry. I'd like to see some of those things built into the budget planning process for next year and the business plans for next year.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, in a way what I'm talking about is sending signals about what we'll be looking for next year in the budget as opposed to making strong comments about the adequacy or inadequacy of this year's budget. When we get to third reading on the appropriation bill, we all know that there's not too much more we can do to change a line item in the budget.

With that, Mr. Speaker, my caucus told me that if I took my 90 minutes, they were going to walk out on me. So with those few comments, I would like to say that I think we've all enjoyed the debate that went on for the budget process. We've really brought out some differences of opinion about where public expenditures should be, and we'll see over the next year how Albertans react to that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We would hate to see another walkout of the Liberal caucus, especially if it was initiated by the Liberal leader.

Mr. Speaker, in the hopes of keeping people glued to their chairs, I would like to rise and speak to third reading of Bill 40. There are many aspects of this bill, I think, that bear quite a bit of close scrutiny. I'm going to restrain myself, as the Leader of the Official Opposition has well, in terms of going over them in any great detail, but I do want to raise a number of points, and then I'd like to come to the most significant point, which I believe has got to be the education issue.

Now, if you look at the priorities contained in this budget, Mr. Speaker, you'll see that in fact there's real disconnect between what we believe are the priorities of Albertans and what the priorities of the government are. So, for example, this budget contains $95 million for corporate tax cuts, and we already have some of the lowest corporate taxes in the country. You know that it reminds us of one of the old songs "how low can you go" and still be able to adequately fund those services that Albertans hold dear.

You also have an increase in property taxes of $64 million. Now, it is correct to say, as the Minister of Finance has said in question period, that this is not a change in the mill rate for the provincial tax and is due to an increase in the overall assessment and that it is an increase in property values plus any new property that is developed that produces this increase, but of course it is in direct contradiction to something contained in the budget a couple of years ago that said that not the mill rate but the total take from provincial property taxes would be frozen. This is a promise contained two budgets ago that has been broken. Now the minister is saying: well, we're freezing the mill rate. Well, that's not what she said two years ago. So the result is that because of rising property values, people's property taxes are going up this year, and that increases the revenue of the government. It is in any reasonable person's assessment an actual increase in taxes contrary to the Premier's promise made repeatedly, including in this Assembly, that taxes in Alberta were going nowhere but down. Well, they just went up, Mr. Speaker.

3:30

Of course, another government priority is the $37 million for horse racing, and the government likes to talk about, you know, the importance of this for agriculture and so on and so on and all of the poor people that are employed by this industry and so on, but, Mr. Speaker, you don't see that kind of subsidy for other industries in this province, and you don't see this kind of program to provide income support for low-income Albertans in any other area.

McDonald's Corporation pays lots of people lots of low wages, and it's apparently in some financial trouble, yet you don't see the government rushing to give direct financial support to the fast-food industry. I need to be careful. I don't want to give them any ideas, but I think I want to just make it perfectly clear that I oppose direct financial support for McDonald's just as I oppose giving $37 million for the horse racing industry. This is a direct contradiction of a fundamental promise that the government gave many years ago that they would not be financially supporting business, that they would get government out of the business of being in business and they wouldn't be picking winners and losers. Well, they picked one here, and horse racing is the winner, but lots of other Albertans are the losers because that money could have been spent on things that are actually important to people.

The government has broken another promise, Mr. Speaker, in that they have changed their policy on transmission lines. Now, the Minister of Energy has pointed out correctly that this was a decision made by the AEUB, that the cost of new transmission in this province would be split 50-50 between consumers and the industry, and he's overruled this decision. He made the announcement in Banff, not in the Assembly, and the AEUB read about it in the papers, and that's not a good way to do business even if there is a good reason for a policy change. The minister has I think confused the issue – let me put it that way – by suggesting that the cost would be only a billion dollars and that it would be spread over 20 years, but the reports that we've produced and tabled in the Assembly show that the cost may be as high as $3.5 billion and may be paid for in as little as seven years.

The minister has also confused the issue by suggesting that the consumers will pay for the full costs in any event, and that's not correct either. It's not correct. In a regulated industry, as transmission still thankfully is, application needs to be made to the board for those costs that would be included in the rate base. The regulator then makes the decision about which costs are allowed and which are not. If the costs are allowed, they are added to the rate base that is paid for by consumers. If they are not allowed, then they cannot be added into the rate base. The rates do not go up to cover those costs, and the company making the application must pay those costs out of their own pocket.

So to suggest that his decision makes no difference in the end, that consumers will pay everything in the end, is categorically untrue. It is false, and it is something that I think the minister should be ashamed of himself for suggesting to this Assembly and to the people of Alberta because he as the Minister of Energy needs to know how regulation works. I know he doesn't like regulation, but I certainly think that it's incumbent that he know how his own system operates. All of this has allowed rapidly rising utility rates in the province, Mr. Speaker, so these are all priorities that the government seems to have.

Now, let's look at what we think the priorities of the public ought to be. Well, certainly public education is an important one. I'm going to come back to that one, Mr. Speaker, but I also think that lowering tuition in this province is an excellent idea, and that's not included in the budget. It ought to be. Only 65 percent of Albertans are satisfied that postsecondary education is within the means of most Albertans. A tuition freeze at this time, in our estimation, would cost only about $40 million.

One of the government members today in I thought quite a good set of questions to the Minister of Learning talked about the lack of participation of Albertans in postsecondary education. We have the lowest rate in the country, Mr. Speaker, and that is not, as the minister would like to indicate, just because we have a hot economy. It is due to sky-high tuition fees in this province, and I think that that's something that the government, again, needs to admit.

Another thing that we would propose, Mr. Speaker, is the elimination of health care premiums. We've costed that. That would be $913 million to do that. That's certainly of more value to Albertans, I think, than some of the corporate tax cuts and subsidies for industry that have continued.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before I go any further – and maybe my clock could be stopped – I would like to introduce an amendment to this budget, and I'll make that available now if someone would like to distribute it. [interjections] What?

Dr. Taft: We are delighted. We're laughing with delight.

Mr. Mason: Are you?

Mrs. Nelson: Are you serious?

Mr. Mason: Yes. We would have been happy to do this yesterday.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I have a copy of the amendment. Read it into the record and proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then I will move that Bill 40, Appropriation Act, 2003, be not now read a third time because the Legislative Assembly believes that inadequate provision made for the education of children will result in a crisis in schools.

I see we have some divine support there. Mr. Speaker, I am getting indications all over the House that I'm number one. May I proceed?

The Speaker: The hon. member has never been interrupted. As far as I can understand, two minutes have been lost in the hon. member's speaking time, so please proceed.

Mr. Mason: Oh. I'm sorry; I thought that my clock would be stopped.

The Speaker: Oh, no. The member has the floor.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for that information at this point.

Mr. Speaker, what I want to indicate is that we do not believe that this budget should be passed. We believe that this budget fundamentally fails the children of Alberta. It fails schools, and we have seen the widespread evidence of a crisis. We have teachers being laid off by the hundreds and not just at a couple of school boards but in most school boards. We have all kinds of indications that important programs are being cut. Even in Grant MacEwan the signing program for the deaf is being cut, and it's one of the very few in Canada. We see schools being closed. We see every, every indication that there's a fundamental crisis in education, and this budget doesn't address it.

The Minister of Learning has talked today. He admitted there was a 14 percent increase in wage costs, which make up the greatest portion of school board costs, and his department has only given a little bit more than 4 percent in the budget. So, obviously, there's a huge gap between what the government has provided to the schools and what the schools require. Then on top of that, they have to pay these soaring utility costs, which are entirely the responsibility of the government. They've created a crisis for almost every sector of Alberta's community with their asinine deregulation of electricity that they refuse to admit is wrong and go back on. Then there's the cap on grade 10 credits. So, fundamentally, Mr. Speaker, this budget does not mean that the interests of Albertans are being addressed in the key policy area, the priority for the people of Alberta.

We consider this amendment, Mr. Speaker, a motion of nonconfidence in this government, nonconfidence in their policies with respect to education, their absolute failure to deal with the real issues facing people, and their reluctance to admit mistakes, which is a characteristic of this government. We need to send a clear message to this government, and I hope members of the Assembly from all sides would vote with us so that we can have a new government in this province, one that actually puts forward the interests of students and recognizes the fundamental importance of education to the future economic development and prosperity of this province, something this government has absolutely failed to do.

So, Mr. Speaker, on that point, I will be pleased to take my place and urge all members to vote with us against this budget and have a new government. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the amendment.

Please remember, hon. members, that at this stage in the proceedings relevancy of contents is extremely important.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In regard to the amendment that is being presented to the Assembly by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, certainly whenever one looks at the state of public education in this city and across this province, when we consider that up to a thousand teachers may be laid off in this province in the next number of weeks as school boards prepare for their September budgets, I think all members of this Assembly should take another look at Bill 40 and see if something can be done for public education. Certainly, something has been done for the horse racing industry in this province in the last three budget cycles, and not enough, in my view, has been done when one considers public education.

To be brief, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, let us please remember that teachers have one of the most important jobs in all of our province, and that's transmitting the collective knowledge that has been gathered and assembled for generation after generation to our young citizens, who someday are going to be not only running this province but – it was put so well on a CBC radio interview yesterday afternoon by a former minister of education of this province when he stated that when he is 85, the students who are currently in the public education system will be looking after his interests, whether it's his financial interests or whether it is his health care or developing social policy. They will be the leaders of tomorrow. It's important that we heed the words of the former minister of education, and I believe the gentleman was also representing the district of Edmonton-Highlands at one time. I heard that conversation on CBC radio, and I thought it was most appropriate.

So I would urge all members of this Assembly in the interests of public education to support this amendment as presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Thank you.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to strongly speak in support of the amendment to Bill 40 that's just been introduced and spoken to by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Highlands. There have been many disappointments in this session with respect to the government's legislative agenda on deregulation of electricity and natural gas and in designing and pushing through the Legislature special bills to ease Direct Energy and other companies into the market while it's been ignoring the real challenges that Albertans face with respect to the declining opportunity for postsecondary education and the declining quality of education for the K to 12 children in our schools.

Even on the government side there's a recognition but behind closed doors that there's a problem in the area of education, that the underfunding is causing serious problems. Mr. Speaker, I just want to read into the record a letter written by one of the government backbenchers that he wrote to the chair of Edmonton public schools. It's dated May 6, 2003. The member is Edmonton-Castle Downs. With your permission I'll just put it on the record of the Assembly.

Dear Mr. Fleming:

I had the pleasure of meeting with the Riverview Coalition. The meeting started at 8:00 pm, and ended just after 11:00 pm. This group represents 18 schools in the Edmonton region. They were unanimous in determining that the following issues negatively affect the ability for children to learn.

Staffing: Teacher and other staff layoffs are looming, and many have been told not to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. I do believe we've got a point coming up here. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Point of Order Relevance
Imputing Motives

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of points. First of all . . .

The Speaker: No. What are we doing? Do we have a point of something here or what?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Yes, Mr. Speaker. A point of order based on relevance, based on Beauchesne 459.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Also, under Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j), Mr. Speaker, imputing motives to a correspondence and misquoting a correspondence out of context to the members of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, we're dealing right now with a budget which has very little or nothing, I would suggest to you, to do with any and all correspondence that I may have sent to the chairman of the Edmonton public school board. Even though I have interrupted his reading of the entirety of the correspondence, I have allowed him to read far enough to indicate that I say in that correspondence that I have met with a group who feels in a certain manner about our learning system, and in no part of this correspondence does it indicate that I also concur with the thoughts of that particular group. So that is something that ought to be on the record.

However, notwithstanding the fact of what the letter may or may not say and how the member chooses to interpret or, particularly in this case, misinterpret the letter, it has no relevance whatsoever to the amendment that is before us at this point. It has no bearing on the budget of this government. It has no bearing on the policies of learning in this government. I am not a minister of the Crown. Therefore, any of my correspondence to any chairman of any board has no bearing whatsoever on the finances or the policies of our Department of Learning. Hence, the member is definitely out of order in proceeding with that line of speaking.

The Speaker: On the point of order, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would make the point, first of all, that we are not dealing just with Bill 40. We are, rather, dealing with an amendment to Bill 40 which says that we not read it a third time because the Assembly believes that inadequate provision has been made for the education of children and will result in a crisis for schools. So with respect to the hon. member's point on relevance I would argue that it is clearly relevant to the motion. Beauchesne 459 says that "relevance is not easy to define," but in this case, clearly, I would argue that it was directly on the point.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker . . . [interjections] I'll just wait for the hon. members' conversations. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has the floor on a point of order.

3:50

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Section 23(i) says, "Imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." I didn't hear the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona do any such thing. He merely was reading the letter completely and not misrepresenting it in any way as representing the personal views of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. So I would argue that there clearly is not a valid point of order here.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are currently in the debate on an amendment to Bill 40. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has the floor to speak on an amendment. The chair was listening very attentively to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the subject that we're dealing with proceeded to quote from a letter in his possession, a letter that appears to have been signed by another hon. member in the House. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona proceeded to read the letter, as I understand it, at which point in time the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs stood up on a point of order and summarized what the letter said and basically talked about imputing motives. He didn't know what would be coming.

Well, the difficulty that the chair has is that the chair has no idea what's coming. All the chair knows is that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has the floor. He has a legitimate right to speak. He wants to quote from a letter in his possession. As uncomfortable as it may be, we all sign our names to letters, and if other people read them, well, so be it. There's nothing that the chair sees here at the moment that would raise or cause a point of order. There may be later if certain motivations or imputations may be given, at which point in time the hon. member who feels that he has been impacted, affected, injured may rise on a point of order, but at the moment the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has the floor.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I resume reading verbatim the letter precisely because I was afraid that if I tried to summarize it, I might be accused of misinterpreting. I leave it to the House to interpret the letter, so I will proceed. I think I was interrupted when I started talking about staffing, so I'll start there.

Teacher and other staff layoffs are looming, and many have been told not to expect positions for the next term. Some libraries are being staffed by parent volunteers, who have a lack of experience in running libraries. Library staff in schools have had their hours cut, and are not able to cope with work demands. Some staff are required to teach classes that they do not have experience with, i.e. phys ed teachers teaching mathematics, etc.

Textbooks and course materials: Many textbooks contain extremely outdated information and are being photocopied, or students must sign up to borrow them. There are no financial resources for photocopying and/or paper. Classes such as drama are cutting back on the number of students, due to lack of funds to operate a larger class. Technology resources such as computers are cost prohibitive to purchase and to operate.

Space and Infrastructure: There is not enough physical space for students; and a lack of desks in some classrooms. There are also significant repairs required in some schools, for which there is no money available. In some schools, the situation is so bad, that the health and safety of the children may be compromised. Increasing vandalism in some schools is a consistent problem, and raises costs as well.

Fundraising: Parents are finding an increasing burden of fundraising. Many of the funds from these ventures are being used to purchase items such as computers, software, band instruments, and library books, which are viewed as necessities and not luxuries. In one instance, fundraising money is being used to pay the custodian salary.

Classroom size: Class sizes are increasing rapidly. Many classrooms with special needs students do not have teaching assistants. Split grades are becoming more common, and in one particular case, they are now discussing whether to have triple split, such as K-3. Their solutions to the funding problem were interesting, to say the least, and are as follows:

- increase property and other taxes.
- have each school identify their funding needs, instead of having the school board determine the funding needs.
- use surplus funding.
- have a one time bailout for those boards which carry a deficit.

They believe that the Learning Commission report will be too late to prevent dire consequences for education in Alberta.

There were other issues that were also discussed. However, I have covered the general picture that was painted to me last night. I have agreed to meet with them again in September, to discuss any updates and changes to their concerns.

It is signed by the member that I mentioned before, Mr. Speaker.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, again, based on Standing Order 23(i), I must reiterate that this member is imputing motives to a correspondence that is being taken totally out of context, and I find that to be offensive. What this member is reading is a correspondence that was sent to the Premier of this province, our Minister of Learning, and then also copied to the chairman of the board upon his request which is a summary of what this member, myself, had heard from a group of interested parents. At no time do I ever agree with the content of what they believe. At no time have I ever validated anything that they have stated that they believe. All I have done is simply reiterated what it is that I have heard, without editorializing it at all.

In his preamble to reading this letter, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has indicated that there are some backbenchers in the government who also agree that there are problems with our learning system. I don't have the benefit of the Blues, so I'm relying on my memory right now. He substantiates the fact that there are some members in the backbenches of government by reading this letter. That is simply false. If one reiterates what one hears without agreeing to it, one cannot be then construed to be in agreement to it. He is misleading this House, and he is imputing false motives to myself.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, I think it's best to hear from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. This seems to be something going back and forth. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, basically the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs believes that you're imputing his motives.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, we are faced with strange circumstances. I want to reiterate the fact that I read the letter precisely because I didn't want to implicate any new meaning into it. This is a report about a meeting. Parents' concerns are listed here, and I want the House to have the benefit of information on what parents think, and that's all this letter is used for from my side, not to impute any motives to anybody or to imply any agreement on the part of the writer of the letter with the concerns expressed by the parents.

These are the concerns of the parents. These are not concerns of parents who come only from these 18 schools. These are concerns of parents all across this province. That is the point to be made, that there is a genuine sense of crisis felt by parents, by teachers, by school boards with respect to the problems caused by continued underfunding and insistence on the part of the Minister of Learning and of the Premier of this province to say: everything is fine; there's no problem with this.

This motion before us, Mr. Speaker, speaks to that very crisis and is an attempt to give the government another opportunity to fix the problem before this House votes on the budget itself. It's a reasoned amendment. It's an amendment to fix the problem. I want to assure the House that we, my caucus and I, will be very happy to come back next week, two weeks from now if the government is willing to take this particular direction back from this House, fix particularly the education part of the budget, and come back and seek the approval of this House. We'll be very happy to come back and oblige.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:00

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you. On the amendment . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's not going to be a filibuster on points of order in this Assembly this afternoon. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs stood up and very clearly made a statement. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona stood up and clearly said that he was not imputing any motives to anybody and basically said that he was only reading the letter for information and ascribed nothing to anything. That was stated. That's what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs asked to have clarified. That's what the chair heard the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona give, that there was no imputation of anything. There was no agreement considered that the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs was agreeing with what he had written, that he was just simply giving a report on what had happened. That's what the chair heard the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs say and ask to have clarified. That point escaped us.

We're now into the amendment, and the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View has the floor.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the amendment and reasons why we should in fact not read the third reading of the appropriation bill, which I find absolutely astounding after spending a month and a half on the budget – we're on the last day, the last gasp for the last air on this, and now we're playing this game.

So I want to go back, and I want to talk about the Learning budget, because we have in fact out there at this time a Commission on Learning, that has been gathering information from one end of this province to the other. Absolutely everybody that wanted to have had an opportunity to appear before the commission, to answer questions in a workbook, to do it on-line if they so chose, to send it to their MLAs and have the information come forward to the commission through their MLAs. The commission is currently in the last stages of their work, which is to come up with consolidated recommendations that will in fact be presented to government later this summer and will find their way coming back through the standing policy processes, through cabinet, through agenda and priorities, through all of the areas of government that will impact the future budget next year.

In the meantime let's talk about this year, just for those people who aren't actually aware of the magnitude of the money that is going into Learning this year. Excellence in learning continues to be a top priority of Albertans and their government. Base program spending by the Ministry of Learning will increase by $219 million, or 4.7 percent, to $4.9 billion in 2003-04. By 2005-06 Learning's base program spending will reach $5.2 billion, a $542 million, or an 11.6 percent, increase over the next three years. That was in the budget documents, you know, the ones that we've already debated for a month and a half.

The renewed kindergarten to grade 12 funding framework will provide school boards with flexibility to address student needs and local priorities. Alberta's Commission on Learning is consulting with Albertans on improvements to ensure that our basic education system maintains excellence into the future. The commission provided a status report in February 2003, and the final report is expected later this year.

The postsecondary system is implementing the Campus Alberta vision that will improve co-ordination among institutions to address the continuing need for a well-educated workforce in Alberta.

Base program funding for public and separate school boards will increase by $147 million, or 4.9 percent, in 2003-04 fiscal year and by 3.6 percent and 3.9 percent for the following two fiscal years. By the 2005-06 fiscal year program funding to public and separate boards will reach almost $3.4 billion, a three-year increase of $388 million, or 12.9 percent, over that same time frame. School boards operate on a school year basis that runs from September to August, and over the past two school years school boards received significant funding increases to help pay for teachers' salary settlements and other board priorities.

For the 2003-04 school year base program funding for public and separate school boards will increase by 3.7 percent, and that includes a 2 percent increase in basic grant instruction, a 3 percent increase in student transportation grant funding, funding for estimated increases of .25 percent in overall enrollment and 8 percent for students with severe disabilities, $29 million for school technology upgrading as part of a three-year $61 million commitment.

In addition, a onetime $20 million allocation is being provided to school boards in 2003-04 to purchase classroom resources. Basic instruction grants are targeted to increase by 2 percent per year for the following two school years. Contribution to the teachers' pension plan will increase over the next three years by $54 million, or 22.4 percent, to $294 million – remember; this is for the teachers' pension plan – because of increases in teachers' salaries and lower than anticipated investment returns on the pension fund.

Over the last three years $1 billion has been provided for school facilities under the new century school plan, and the Ministry of Infrastructure will support a further $450 million in capital projects over the next three years including $226 million for school expansions and new schools and $224 million for school preservation. I really just wanted to make sure that you were aware that these provisions for this year are in here now.

Are there problems in education under the learning system? Yes.

I believe that there probably are some, which is why in fact I totally supported and endorsed the fact that there's a Commission on Learning out there studying this now to come back with recommendations for government on ways that we can not only deal with education issues but also make sure and ensure for the future that it is in fact sustainable, because that is part of what matters here. If we wanted to talk about areas where I think we should be dealing with something, I would hope that we could find some money in the next year, more money for infrastructure because we need more schools in a province that's growing. That's my pet peeve. We all have them in here.

I happen to have a riding with over 50,000 people. It's growing at an extraordinary rate. One part of my riding is growing at 18 percent; another part is growing at 6.5 percent. It is very difficult to even anticipate what schools we need and where we need them, because nobody knows who's going to move into the eight new subdivisions that are being built right now. Are they going to be old or middle-aged people with no children, or are they all going to be in their mid-20s having children? So it's difficult until people actually move into those houses to know what we need. We're always behind on the construction side in my riding.

Mr. Lund: Thirty-three percent of your . . .

Ms Haley: Well, 30 to 35 percent, Mr. Minister, are in portables, and, you know, that's stressing me out just a little bit. So, yeah, I'd like to see some changes too, but it is hard to do everything for everybody all of the time at exactly the right moment in time.

When my sons were in school, going back a few years, there were problems and issues at that time, and we're kidding ourselves if we say that there weren't. There will be issues. If you went back and looked at headlines 10 years ago, health and education were the big ones, 20 years ago health and education were the big ones, and 20 years from now it's going to be health and education, because nothing is ever going to change. No matter what we do, we're always going to be just a little bit behind where people think or need us to be, but it's not because you don't try. We try endlessly.

As an MLA I take my role very seriously. I try very hard to represent the needs of my constituents, whether it's the public education side, whether it's the Catholic education side, whether it's the needs of the private school people, whether it's needs of the home schoolers, needs of the virtual school. I take it all seriously. To come up with what I believe honestly, member, is a frivolous amendment at this point I find horrendously offensive. This is a $20 billion budget. Which part of it would you like to not have go forward? You want something more for education, but at the same time you're willing to risk everything on Infrastructure, Transportation, Learning, on Community Development, changes to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, and I'm willing to bet that they wouldn't be very happy with you today if this budget were tabled for another six weeks or eight weeks and they couldn't get their increases. Which other ones would you like to blow off? Maybe Aboriginal Affairs, Seniors? Have you got a pick? You know, maybe we should deal with Economic Development and not have any more economic development engines in this province.

Frankly, it's 10 after 4 and I'm tired. Okay? I've had three months of this stuff, and I'm tired of it. I want us to be serious about this. It's a serious budget designed by serious people who are trying very hard to do the very best job that they can for all Albertans. So I'm going to suggest to my colleagues that perhaps we should just defeat this amendment, vote on the budget, and let's go home.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you are under Standing Order 29(2)(a) and (b) now, the question and answer period. Five minutes under the rules of the House.

4:10

Mr. Mason: Okay. Given that the hon. member is tired and ready to go home, I won't put this as a question but as a comment. Further quoting from the letter from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, because the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View made a great deal about the Commission on Learning and how it was going to solve all these problems, the parents, according to this letter, say, "They believe that the Learning Commission report will be too late to prevent dire consequences for education in Alberta." I just wanted to put that on the record.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Haley: It's my shot back. You know what? We've done an awful lot of consultation with Albertans, whether it was the Future Summit, the agriculture summit, which now is rolling out programs designed by people in agriculture. We had a school symposium. We had health roundtables years ago. We have done our very best to consult with all Albertans from one end of this province . . . [interjection] You started this, buddy. We've tried very hard to make sure that Albertans' viewpoints are represented and heard throughout this entire province.

Now, this Commission on Learning. Whether you want to trivialize it or whether there's a comment in here that it's not going to be quick enough for dire consequences, let's try and remember, hon. member, that we're spending close to $5 billion on education right now. It's not chump change. We've got over $7,000 per student inside schools right now. Maybe just once in a while we need to be asking the school boards: excuse me; are you sure you're adequately putting those resources in areas where you need them? Maybe as a province we have too many options. Maybe there are not enough kids in some classrooms. I don't know all the answers. That's why we've got a Commission on Learning out there, to try and come back with those kinds of answers, with serious recommendations so that we can seriously try to do a better job for all of our children today and into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the question and answer period.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View: would the hon. member consider it appropriate to reduce the $37 million that's been set aside for racing industry renewal in the Gaming budget and put that money into public education?

Ms Haley: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again we manage to find ways to mix apples and oranges. As I last recall, if you were on the racing track and you were actually participating in games going on and you were playing slot machines or the Sega games or you were betting on horses, that is the only way that the horse racing industry can actually access this money: if people go there and actually spend it there on the basis that it is for horse racing renewal in this province.

I would like to remind you, just for the heck of it, on an agriculture side that there are hundreds of thousands of horses in this province. It is an enormous industry all by itself; ask somebody who has owned and managed and lost money on quarter horses for decades in this province. I can tell you that horse racing is a renewable resource in this province.

The way that this was set up was not to take away anything from anybody but in fact to enhance the revenues coming in to the racetracks so that they could then disburse that money back out and we could have better horse racing, better barns, better everything for an industry. So if you've got a problem with that, then perhaps you also have a problem with money from bingos going to charities, because in a lot of ways it all balances out. At the same time, we have over a billion dollars in revenue coming in from gaming of all kinds in this province that benefits health, benefits education, benefits commercialization of technology. You name it, it's there for it, and I think we should be really happy that we have a system that allows for this kind of diversity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: On the amendment.

The Speaker: Okay. No additional questions?

Dr. Taft: I didn't see anybody else stand up.

The Speaker: That's true. On the amendment.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't take long, but it is I think crucial for me to stand up and speak in favour of this amendment. I've listened to the comments that have gone on around here, but I know that in my constituency no issue comes close to the concerns that I'm hearing every day about the loss of teaching positions at schools, about the decline of school buildings, about the concerns that parents bring to me every single day about what they see as a deteriorating education for their children. These are urgent issues. Sure, we can listen to the Commission on Learning, but by the time they report, hundreds and hundreds of teachers across this province will be out of work. It will be too late. The crisis will have hit. So this is a matter of urgency. We need to deal with this now.

If we look at the causes of the problem as laid out in this budget, we have a 14 percent arbitrated settlement for teachers' wages, an arbitrated settlement, legally ordered. Fourteen percent is up. Four hundred and fifty teachers losing their jobs is down. Up and down. So we have a gap in between. We have 450 teachers in one school board losing their jobs. They have been named. They know their names; they've been given their slips; they're gone at the end of this school year. This is a very, very serious problem.

So I think we do need to support this, and I think we need to revisit this budget on this particular issue. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the question and comment segment.

Mr. Mason: Questions and comments, Mr. Speaker. I would like to just briefly make a comment. I appreciate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's support of the amendment and just indicate to members of the House that when the government knew that there was a 14 percent arbitration award for teachers and that teachers' salaries make up the bulk of the school boards' budgets, it was clearly an indication of lack of planning on the government's part to come up with a 4 percent amount for school boards. The government easily could have anticipated this problem. As a result, I believe that the government should not enjoy the confidence of the House and that this amendment should be passed and that we should deal with things from that point.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on the question and answer segment, sir.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Following from Edmonton-Riverview's comments and as commented on by Edmonton-Highlands, one would be led to believe that there was a 14 percent increase in teachers' salaries which was met by a 4 percent increase in the budget, which is of course patently wrong. The 14 percent increase in teachers' salaries operated over three years. The last increase was 2 percent, which came into effect either March 1 or April 1 of this year; I don't remember exactly which date. So there's a 2 percent increase for this year on teachers' salaries with a 4 percent increase in the budget.

But as the Minister of Learning has explained several times in this House, over the last three years, over the context of that arbitrated award, 4 percent plus 2 percent on teachers' salaries alone, 3 and a half percent, 3, and 2, on the global budget. The overall context, as the Minister of Learning has explained, adds up to more than the 14 percent that they're talking about. So the comments should be clarified to say that no one should be under the illusion that there was a 14 percent increase this year and only a 4 percent increase in the budget.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, just a comment on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's very strong support for the amendment. Perhaps rather than asking a question, I'll just make an observation. I think the Minister of Justice really again, as is the case with the Minister of Learning, is playing a numbers game here. It's clear that 4 and 2 percent . . .

Speaker's Ruling Question and Comment Period

The Speaker: Hon. member, this whole intent was to have a question and answer with the original member who was last talking, and that was the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. The option for the hon. Government House Leader was to ask a question of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. So it would probably be more appropriate for you to ignore the hon. Government House Leader at this point and focus on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Debate Continued

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is: is it not the case that the 4 and 2 percent that the Minister of Justice talked about was not adequate to meet the 14 percent increase that the arbitration award gave to the school boards? As a result of the fact that that 14 percent increase was much larger than 4 and 2 percent would have provided to school boards, the school boards have gone into a serious deficit situation. Would you agree, hon. member?

4:20

Dr. Taft: Yes. I'm happy to respond. Am I out of time?

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. It confuses the chair. Repeatedly, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview said that he would participate in the question and answer period. He's changing his policy today?

Dr. Taft: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I changed my policy some weeks ago under unrelenting harassment from the Member for West Yellowhead, who drove me over the edge. I had to respond to his questions. Having broken my rule, I'm sunk now.

To the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the fact is that we can debate here and play the numbers games however we want. The hard reality is that in the classrooms, in the big cities at least, hundreds and hundreds of teachers are losing their jobs. In fact, in Edmonton public my understanding is that it's 450 teachers plus a significant number of other support staff. The reality out there in the classrooms is that parents are feeling a crisis in Edmonton and Calgary that the teachers are gone. The teachers are leaving in substantial numbers. So, yes, I think the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is quite right in his point.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just wondering if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is aware that Alberta Learning has provided . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member, but the time for this segment is now over.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:22 p.m.]

They each represent groups with a strong interest in the Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003, which will be discussed later. I'd like to introduce Steve Hull, managing director of the Alberta Conservation Association, and also Darryl Kublik, co-ordinator of the provincial Report a Poacher program. I'd like Steve and Darryl to rise if they're here yet and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly some guests that we have seated in the members' gallery. I'm sure that you will agree with me that the lifeblood of any political party is committed youth, youth that are not only committed but enthusiastic in their commitment. It's my pleasure to introduce to you today the president of PCYA, the Progressive Conservative Youth of Alberta, Mr. William McBeath. Joining Mr. McBeath in the gallery this afternoon are two members of his executive, Mr. Jeff Duncan and Mr. David McColl, as well as the executive director of the PC Association of Alberta, Mrs. Marilyn Haley. I had the pleasure of having lunch with all four of these people today, and I can assure all members that they are working extremely hard on behalf of the government that they support. I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm recognition of all.

Mr. Speaker, if I could have your indulgence for one more introduction, I see seated in the public gallery a constituent of mine who has joined us for question period this afternoon. I'd like to introduce to you Mrs. Karen Charlton, a trustee from Medicine Hat school district No. 76 who has joined us this afternoon. I see she's standing, and I ask members to recognize her as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to the members of this Assembly some good friends of mine. They are the board members from the Fort Vermilion school division. They are here in Edmonton to wrap up the Alberta School Boards Association conference. Those in attendance today are David Steer, the chair of the board, Grace Dimond, Tom Hoffman, Alison Batt, Keith Lambert, Lena Neudorf, and I believe that Ken Dropko, the superintendent of the school board, is here as well. I believe they're all standing. I would ask the Assembly to show them our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you two representatives from the county of St. Paul. The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you two special family members that are here visiting today: my mother, Kitty – the grandmother and great-grandmother of many of your constituents, Mr. Speaker, so pay attention to this lady – and, of course, my wife, Liz.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions here. First, I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House two registered nurses, dedicated professionals who are proud of the work that they do and the service that they provide to patients in Edmonton hospitals. They are Gwyneth Foster-Newell and Sherry Stone. Both of them are sitting in the public gallery. They have already risen, and I would ask the Assembly to give them a warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is of a group of 26 grade 6 students from King Edward elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona. This school really represents a truly professional learning community. Teachers, principals, administrators, and parents work together collaboratively to provide the very best quality of education to young boys and girls in this school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Jim Kaiser, and parent Mrs. Sheila Brinton-Atrens, who has accompanying her her young baby, Paxton.* I'll ask all these guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to introduce a school group from my constituency that will be joining us in approximately 10 minutes or so. They are currently on a tour of this great building, but as they come in, perhaps you could wave to the Thorsby high school students. There are 34 of them. They are going to be accompanied by their teachers Mr. Andy McKee, Mrs. Trish McKee, and Mrs. Lorraine Kuzio. So as they come in, please welcome them.

Thank you.

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to make two introductions today. Both people are seated in the public gallery and will be watching the procedures today very closely. The first is Melanie Shapiro, who I'd ask to rise. She's a mother of schoolchildren at Windsor Park school in my constituency, a very active education advocate, and closely involved with the Riverview education coalition.

The second guest is Susan O'Neil, who has children at Lendrum school and will be serving as editor of a new publication called Commission Watch, which promises to very actively support the implementation of the recommendations of the Learning Commission.

So I ask you all to welcome these two guests. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the other members of our Assembly Elena N'Apora. Elena is a member of the Edmonton Friends of the North Environmental Society, and she's here today to observe our Legislature in action. I would ask all members to join me in giving her a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Kieran Leblanc. Kieran is a member of APPEAL, Albertans Promoting Public Education and Learning. APPEAL is a provincewide advocacy group, and many of the parents in APPEAL have been working for over 10 years in the best interests of children. Kieran is in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask her to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and to members of the Assembly Iris Rathschlag, who visits us from Germany. Iris has completed her BA in international business management and is currently completing her final year in German business. She's here to observe our legislative process and improve her language skills. I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I understand, although I have not seen them, that Shirley Barg, Brett Bergie, and Melanee Thomas from the CAUS and ACTISEC student associations are in the gallery. I would like to have them rise and receive the extremely warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly if they are here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have another wonderful school in the public gallery, Delton elementary school. I paid many visits to this school as a guest. It's led by teacher Mrs. Sutherland – Mrs. Sutherland has 28 wonderful students – and parents Mrs. Hamilton and Mrs. Rivas. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Edmonton Eskimos

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to have this opportunity to stand and extend sincere congratulations on behalf of all government members and all Members of the Legislative Assembly and all Albertans to the Edmonton Eskimos. Needless to say, these congratulations are extended to the Eskimos for their outstanding victory in Regina on Sunday.

You know, the Grey Cup is an exciting event bringing together Canadians from across the country in a real spirit of unity and national tradition. I had the pleasure of being part of the celebrations in Regina this year and witnessed the Eskimos' victory in person. I can tell you that it was a hard-fought win.

Mr. Norris: Right on.

Mr. Klein: It was. The Eskimos played extremely well, and Edmontonians and all Albertans can be very proud of the team's performance. This is the 12th Grey Cup win for the Eskimos, and it is a real testament to one of the most successful franchises in the Canadian Football League, not only in football but in all professional sports.

The Eskimos have served the city of Edmonton well for many years and continue to be a real asset for the city. The team contributes to the community in countless ways. My face-to-face chat with team members after they won the Grey Cup demonstrated to me that no matter where they play, the Eskimos are great ambassadors for their team, their city, and their province. This team deserves our admiration and also our thanks.

I want to also extend my congratulations to the people of Regina and Saskatchewan. They organized and hosted a first-rate Grey Cup week. It was really moving there. It was moving and shaking, once again proving that no one knows how to host a Grey Cup like western Canadians do.

Again, congratulations to the Edmonton Eskimos on an outstanding performance, and congratulations to the people of Edmonton.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Leader of the Official Opposition to participate.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton Eskimos. I can remember that when I was a little kid, I used to argue with my brothers as we huddled around the radio and listened to the greats like Jackie Parker, Johnny Bright, Normie Kwong. My team usually came out the winner. Today I rise again with great pleasure to congratulate the well-fought victory of the Edmonton Eskimos in the 2003 Grey Cup. For 91 years the Grey Cup has brought the country together to celebrate Canada's best in football. Also, Regina, who hosted this year's event, should be commended for its efforts and great organization to make the Grey Cup memorable for all Edmontonians who traveled there and, indeed, for all Canadians.

The Eskimos handily triumphed over the Montreal Alouettes with a final score of 34 to 22. Under the leadership of quarterback Ricky Ray and his high pass completion percentage and his ability to avoid the Montreal defensive blitz, the Eskimos were unbeatable. Jason Tucker, a receiver for the Eskimos, played a fantastic game with seven receptions and 132 yards and two touchdowns. Mike Pringle, the running back for the Eskimos, showed that a second chance always pays off.

I join today, Mr. Speaker, in thanking the team, the staff, and in fact all those associated with the team for their commitment to the sport of football and to the community of Edmonton and in fact all of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, unanimous consent would be required to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to note the very warm support by the Premier for my ability to stand up and say a few words.

Were the traditions and the rules of this House to allow me to don this cap as I'm paying tribute, I would certainly do that, but I guess it's not appropriate for me to do so. So on behalf of the New Democrats, the opposition here, I wish to add my congratulations to the entire Edmonton Eskimo organization for their outstanding game and their victory in the 2003 Grey Cup championship game in Regina.

Edmontonians and other Albertans were proud to be represented by the Eskimos, the flagship franchise of the CFL. Indeed, the support from more than 50,000 fans in attendance at Taylor Field showed the support that this outstanding team receives and enjoys from across the country. The city of Regina and the province of Saskatchewan, the NDP government of Saskatchewan, and the people of Saskatchewan deserve congratulations as well for their outstanding job in hosting this year's Grey Cup.

By returning the Grey Cup to our city for the 12th time, the Eskimos Football Club showed that Edmonton truly is the City of Champions. My congratulations to the Eskimos team.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal and Official Opposition.

Premier's Travel

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, in Alberta drivers are paying among the highest rates in Canada for auto insurance, deregulation has driven the cost of utilities through the roof, the government's Bill 43 has made enemies of postsecondary students, and the Premier has chosen this time to leave the province. To the Premier: how will you solve the auto insurance crisis from London given that your government can't find a long-term solution that will lower rates?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the last time I looked and the last time anyone else looked, I'm here. You know, I'm here answering his questions. I'm not out of the province. I'm going to be leaving the province, but I'm here right now. So I wish the hon. member would correct that statement. To say that I'm not here is . . .

An Hon. Member: It's wrong.

Mr. Klein: Well, it's wrong, but it's ludicrous.

An Hon. Member: He's not all here.

Mr. Klein: I am all there. They are not all here.

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, please. Come on now. This is the start of a fall session, and we can have civility and courtesy in this Assembly.

The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is really concerned and committed to telling the people of Alberta what this government has been up to, then he would find that the list of achievements, the list of activities is a very impressive list indeed. You know, we may accuse – and I read the headline in one of the newspapers today about the government drifting and not having a co-ordinated response to major issues such as auto insurance and deregulation and school funding. The hon. leader alluded to all of them.

The truth is that this government has been very active and we have been very busy since the end of the spring session. We have been listening to Albertans and acting on issues they tell us are important. That includes BSE, or mad cow disease, schools, auto insurance, utility prices, forest fires, and many other issues that come to us on a day-to-day basis. They don't go to the opposition because nobody speaks to the opposition and for good reason: we are the government. Therefore, we're challenged to contend with numerous, countless issues.

The Speaker: Mr. Premier, we'll come back to that.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: how will you solve the crisis you've created in postsecondary education from Ottawa?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there is no crisis in education. As a matter of fact, I'll have the hon. Minister of Learning speak to it.

The education system is a good system. We record some of the highest achievement results not only in the country but in the world on the education front. Just today, only a few hours ago, the Minister of Learning announced more than $60 million in additional funding for schools, and that was in response to the first comprehensive review of the K to 12 education system done in 30 years. Alberta's spending on education continues to be the highest per capita in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I know that a member introduced someone in the audience who represents an organization to watch our action on the Learning Commission. Well, I can tell that individual right now that we will take the recommendations contained in the Learning Commission under the most serious consideration because we have identified education as our number one priority.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier. Mr. Premier, your own advisory council has said that deregulation is a failure. Why don't you stay in Alberta and help deliver lower cost utility bills to Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, my going to Ottawa tonight to speak in Toronto the following day is hardly going to deal with the whole issue of deregulation and energy prices. My going to London to promote economic development and tell the people in London about the great investment opportunities and what a great province this is is hardly going to do anything relative to electricity prices. But why would we want to do anything? We're now experiencing falling electricity prices. We're experiencing more generation than we've ever had before in the history of this province. We're seeing more competition coming onstream relative to the retail component of electricity and more choices and competitive prices being offered. The only crisis exists in the minds of the opposition because they can think of nothing else other than crisis, conflict, confusion, confrontation, and chaos. That's what they survive on.

Automobile Insurance Rates

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's insurance team still hasn't scored a long-term solution in the auto insurance crisis. Meanwhile, drivers in B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba are paying far less in premiums than Alberta drivers. The Premier's only solution is to freeze rates at a level that is already unaffordable to many. To the Premier: why don't you roll back premiums by 15 percent and save Alberta drivers over $400,000 a day?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is not true. What the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition said is not true. It is not true.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know how old the hon. leader is. I'm 61 years of age. I suspect that he's about 59 or 58, and I also believe that he's had a good driving record. I would say that he's paying about the same rate as I'm paying, which by the way is about the same rate as I'd be paying in Saskatchewan or Manitoba or British Columbia, about the same rate. I pay about $600 or $700 a year in car insurance; that's PL and PD and collision combined. I believe that the hon. member pays about the same. Those are comparable, very comparable to the rates that he would be paying in those jurisdictions. To say that we're paying more is wrong. It is a falsehood.

Where the discrepancy lies is in the extraordinary amount that young drivers with good driving records are paying and older drivers are paying and also as it relates to younger drivers, young males in particular. What we want to do is deal with that component mostly.

But, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to tell the truth, because what he is paying, assuming that his driving record has been good, is no different, no more or no less, than he would pay in Saskatchewan or Manitoba or British Columbia. So tell the truth.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the average premium in Alberta is higher than it is in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, or B.C.

If the Conservative government in Nova Scotia can roll back insurance rates, why can't you roll back insurance rates in Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we are not Nova Scotia, thank God. We're a province where we have no deficit, where we've almost eliminated our gross debt, where we have no net debt, where we have the highest standard of living in the country. We are not Nova Scotia. We are Alberta, a have province, a proud province.

Dr. Nicol: It wasn't much of an answer, Mr. Premier.

Why hasn't your government even considered public auto insurance given that it costs less?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we are not socialists on this side of the House. I know what they are on that side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the system works, and it will work a lot better as a result of some decisions we made today, the details of which will be announced tomorrow. The system will work, and basically it will achieve three things. It will offer good drivers – good drivers – reasonable insurance rates. It will punish bad drivers, and I don't think the opposition can argue with that, that bad drivers should be punished and good drivers should be rewarded. If they disagree with that, stand up and say so.

It will fairly compensate those who are injured. If they disagree with that, stand up and say so.

Thirdly, it will end the discrimination, not completely but most of the discrimination, against young male drivers and senior drivers in this province. Nothing wrong with that, and if they think there's something wrong with that, stand up and say so.

Education Funding

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the government announced that they would make a delinquent payment on a long overdue education account. The mismanagement of school funding has left classrooms jammed with students and parents across the province, as we see in the gallery, organizing to take political action. My questions are to the Premier. Why did the government stand by last September while class sizes were increased only to take very limited action today, some three months later, too late, after school has started? Why the delay?

2:10

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the action taken today is very substantive; it's not limited action. I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Learning Commission came down and said that we had put $298 million into education in the past two years. The arbitrated settlement was set at $260 million. Other increases in salaries over the two years were $37.8 million. They did say, though, that the inflation, estimated at 2 percent per year, was not funded, which was approximately $20 million. That was put in today. That was put back into the system today.

Mr. Speaker, they also came and said that for children with severe disabilities there was a shortfall in funding of approximately $23 million. This is something that has been in our business plan. We have been attempting to increase the amount and indeed have done a very good job, increasing the amount of severely disabled funding at a rate of about 10 percent per year. However, they ascertained that there was a shortfall of $23 million for those children that had severe behavioural disabilities, and subsequently that was put in today.

The third element, Mr. Speaker, was grade 10 credit enrollment unit funding. As the Legislature remembers, there were a lot of interesting things that were being done with this. We suspended grade 10 CEU funding two years ago to get an accountability framework in so that we could ensure that it was being put back in the right place, and subsequently we put that back in this morning as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thanks. Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Premier, given that if every dollar were used to hire teachers, we would still have 1,000 more students and 150 fewer teachers than we had a year ago, given today's announcement, why do you continue to underfund education?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we don't continue to underfund education. We try to strike the best balance to maintain what we think is probably one of the finest education systems in the country, notwithstanding some problems in certain areas, and they don't exist in all areas. Some schools, yes, might experience a problem. Other schools are doing extremely well.

Mr. Speaker, what the opposition doesn't understand and what those who say that education should get all the money, those who say that health should get all the money, those who say to spend more on infrastructure perhaps don't realize is that we're spending in excess of $20 billion. Twenty billion dollars. Instead of focusing on what we don't have, maybe we can talk about what we do have in this province.

I remember attending the opening of a new health facility at the Red Deer regional hospital, the expanded emergency services and the third floor of that hospital. The MLA for Red Deer-North was saying that she was about to embark on a trip to Bangladesh, and her doctor told her that she should get all the shots and medical attention she could because when she goes to Bangladesh, she will find that in the major city there is not even one hospital. There is only a clinic and in the whole country one doctor for the whole country, never mind a province of the country. We don't want to be Bangladesh. We aren't anywhere near Bangladesh, but I'm saying that we spend more in this province on services than many countries of the world, far more per capita on health and education and infrastructure.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I would like . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. Perhaps we'll be able to get back to this. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier: given that the Auditor General found 65 million education dollars and today the Learning minister found $60 million in a contingency fund, will the Premier shake the Minister of Learning by the ankles and see how much more money might be available for our schools?

Mr. Klein: You know, money, money, money, money. That's their answer. That's how they think they get money: you turn the minister upside down and shake him. That's how they think. If that doesn't work, then they look to the sky and they say, "Oh, money; O God, give us money," and they expect it to fall from the sky. That is their approach to money, Mr. Speaker. What more can I say?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning, if you want to shake this one.

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly take that opportunity, but turning upside down really gets me very dizzy, so I won't do that at the moment. I do, however, need to address the $65 million that was raised by the Auditor General.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is fully aware that each and every time there is an appeal in assessment, each and every time there is a hardship case in small communities or, indeed, large communities like Edmonton, money comes from somewhere, and where that money comes from is that $65 million fund. A few days ago or a week ago I held in abeyance the payment to municipalities. That was $8 million. That is what that fund is used for. It is a onetime fund. We have agreed with the Auditor General that the fund should be lower, down to $35 million, and indeed $30 million of the ASF funds will be included in my next year's budget. So this money is for education; it's for assessments and appeals. I don't believe that the hon. member would say that you should not have any money so that no one – no one – could appeal their assessment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last spring the government announced to great fanfare that it was going to get to the bottom of sky-high power bills by appointing an advisory council to look at the problem. Although the advisory council was not allowed to consider the real problem, which was high bills caused by deregulation, it was allowed to look at the real problem for the Conservative Party, which is angry voters. So it's no surprise that the report's recommendations boil down to no more than a public relations campaign and another round of electricity rebates just as an election comes close. To the Minister of Energy: when will the government actually get down to business and lower power bills by restoring a sane, regulated electricity market instead of trying another round of bribing consumers with their own money?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member has been for the last six months, but in fact electricity prices have been coming down. In a recent ruling by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board they reduced the transmission charge from the Aquila service network by 8.1 percent. EPCOR has made an application that has been accepted by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board that will decrease bills by 14 percent. Deferral accounts will fall off at the end of December, which will mean a net difference of about 25 percent in customer bills.

So, Mr. Speaker, not only have we been adding generation – in fact, Alberta is the largest green power generation province in the dominion of Canada now – we've seen the price of electricity come down, we've seen the price of transmission start to come down, and we're starting to see even further decreases occur on the 1st of January to the point where prices will in fact be about 10 to 15 percent different from what they were in the year 2000.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that power prices have doubled since deregulation, can the minister explain why for every problem faced by Alberta consumers, the government's solution is a PR strategy and a rebate cheque before the election?

Mr. Smith: Well, you know, as the Premier said earlier, it's just more falsehoods from the opposition, more prevarication, more mistruths, which we've come to expect, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the consumer market has asked for consumer protection. That was taking place in an immediate response to the Advisory Council on Electricity with the placement of the consumer advocate housed in the Department of Government Services. On top of that, the group have asked for more consumer information. We're embarking on a consumer information program. Lastly, the folks in the small business market said: we don't have enough information to make decisions about this upcoming change. That change was then postponed till July of 2006.

So in each and every case where the consumer has asked for something specific from this government for the management and handling of electricity restructuring in this province, we have responded. We have responded positively. Prices continue to go down, Mr. Speaker.

We still at the end of the day have not blacked out. We have delivered dependable, safe, reliable electricity at a time when we've seen Ohio and eastern Ontario black out in some 90 million homes. Italy blacked out for 57 million homes. That's not happening here.

2:20

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister's own task force report says that rebates may be the way the government wants to go to fix high prices, can he tell the House how many billions his government intends to spend on electricity rebates this time to secure the government's re-election instead of fixing the problem?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I'm not sure that's a question.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Contrary to what we've heard in here this afternoon from the opposition, I know that there are at least 74 members of this Legislature who want to applaud the Minister of Learning for his good-news announcement this morning. From the phone calls I've already received, Albertans are pleased to hear that their government is providing immediate additional dollars to support kindergarten to grade 12 education in support of the Learning Commission recommendation. It is a great start. I just have one question for the Minister of Learning: is the funding announced today the ongoing increase in investment the commission was looking for, or is it onetime funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What was agreed to today and what was announced today was seven-twelfths of $60 million, which takes us to the fiscal year of April 1. That, extrapolated, is $60 million over the school year. In keeping with the hon. Speaker's need for brevity, yes, it will be ongoing.

Energy Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, at a standing policy committee this August Alberta Scan quoted the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor as saying this in regard to skyrocketing electricity prices:

That is bound to happen if we don't get these power bills down by the next election. What will happen is a Liberal government will be elected and they will take back the power industry.

[interjections] Laugh at your own member if you want. My questions today are to the Premier. How does the government expect to manufacture consumer confidence in energy deregulation when you can't even convince the members of your own caucus that it's a good idea?

Mr. Klein: Well, you know, there's one thing I can convince members of my own caucus of. I can convince them that the Liberals aren't going to be the government; I'll tell you that for sure. You don't need to be a rocket scientist to figure that out, Mr. Speaker.

The reason they aren't going to get elected is that they feed Albertans a lot of misinformation. Misinformation. Their whole platform, again, is predicated on what I call the five Cs, those kinds of things that create anxiety. They try to create an atmosphere of crisis. They try to create an atmosphere of conflict. They create an atmosphere of controversy and conflict and confrontation and chaos. That is their whole strategy.

Mr. Speaker, if the truth be known, electricity rates are falling. More competition has come onstream. As I said before, we've had more generation than we've ever had before. We have cogeneration projects that we've never seen before. Just west of the area where the hon. Leader of the Opposition lives, in Pincher Creek, we see the emergence of wind power, probably one of the largest wind farms, if not the largest wind farm, in Canada. In the north we see cogeneration in the area of the petrochemical plants around Joffre and Prentiss.

We see tremendous cogeneration. We see cogeneration starting to develop now as it relates to agriculture. We see the development now – very intense, and it's going to be very, I think, topical and perhaps controversial – of coal bed methane and the amount of power that we'll be able to generate from that gas. Clean coal technology is now being developed to generate more power.

Mr. Speaker, those are the good stories, and that is the kind of information that the Liberals in their absolute desperation to get us fired refuse to tell the public. Instead, they depend on misinformation and untruths.

Mr. MacDonald: Speaking of misinformation, why is this government continuing to spend $3 million of consumers' money on a propaganda campaign from the Public Affairs Bureau to convince us that energy deregulation is what we want when in reality we know that it has not worked and will not work?

Mr. Klein: I would rather spend no money at all, but sometimes you have to spend money to combat the absolute misinformation – the misinformation – and the untruthful propaganda that's being put out by the Liberals. Mr. Speaker, I don't like to spend this money, but they force us to through their program and their aggressive campaign of conflict and controversy and confusion and chaos. We don't like to do that. If they would start to tell the truth and be responsible, then we wouldn't have to spend those kinds of dollars.

Mr. MacDonald: Then to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: would it not be cheaper for the Premier's office to click onto altaliberals.ab.ca to see what a real electricity policy looks like instead of spending valuable tax dollars going to London to try to find an affordable and reliable electricity policy because the government knows they currently do not have one?

Mr. Klein: It is precisely their web site that is the problem. That is the web site that is full of propaganda, that is full of misinformation, Mr. Speaker.

Those seven people over there have no policy to develop. They have no responsibility for the development of policy. All they do is sit around and dream up ways of trying to frustrate the government. They are so desperate, Mr. Speaker – so desperate – to do something to get recognition, to get noticed. When you ask who any member of the Liberal Party is, the majority of Albertans couldn't name any of them. So they are so desperate that they put up web sites, that they spread misinformation, that they issue press releases. They do everything that they possibly can to discredit the government. Well, guess what? The people of this province elected 73 of us and only seven of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The final report of Alberta's Commission on Learning identified an existing shortfall in funding . . . [interjections] Obviously, the opposition is not interested in education, but I'll continue.

The report has identified a shortfall in funding for Alberta's kindergarten to grade 12 education system. The commission recommended that the province invest an additional $90.6 million to meet the current needs. Today the government announced that this recommendation has been accepted and acted on. We know that there will be priority funding for education. That's a definite step in the right direction. My question is to the Minister of Learning.

When can we expect this additional funding to be available and making an actual difference in the system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for asking that question. Earlier on this year, in July, there was $30 million that was put into the operation and maintenance budgets for school jurisdictions. This was part of the dollars that the Learning Commission had identified. Today I had the opportunity to make an announcement that seven-twelfths of $60 million would be put in, which is in keeping with our fiscal year, for a total of $60 million for the school fiscal year, which starts September 1, for a total of around $90 million. Also what was recommended by the Learning Commission is that the funding formula be enacted. I am taking that through the processes in our business plan, and I hope to have announcements on that in the spring.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is also to the Minister of Learning. When will the minister be addressing the Commission on Learning's other recommendations, for example classroom sizes?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member fully knows, we take it through our processes. It has been through standing policy committee, and a significant number of the Learning Commission recommendations have been agreed to. There were two that were thrown out, and there are about another seven or eight that have been looked at that need more review. Class size was one of those that was looked at, and hopefully we'll be able to have announcements on that soon. But it does have to go through our process, will have to go through cabinet and caucus, and then hopefully we'll be able to make some final announcements.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question, also to the Minister of Learning: will additional dollars be made available in implementing these recommendations?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, there are a considerable amount of dollars that are needed for the Learning Commission. The Learning Commission has estimated close to $600 million over the next five years. We are looking at this in terms of our business planning process, and I anticipate that many of those dollars will actually be included in our business planning process, and I'm working towards that end.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Long-term Care Accommodation Rates

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Seniors. If a fee increase for long-term care was so desperately needed for so long, why didn't this government raise it during the budget debate or before the end of session?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, the fee increase was needed, was implemented at the appropriate time, and was arrived at when the proper discussions were held between the government, long-term care associations, and other operators. So whether it was during the budget debate or at any particular time is quite irrelevant.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that Alberta legislation requires landlords to give 90 days' notice of a rent increase, how can the minister justify raising rents more than 42 percent in most long-term care centres with only 44 days' notice?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, the point of the matter is that about 10,000 of the 14,000 people in care are on some form of government program or other. The people who are on the seniors' benefits plan received their supplementary benefit cheques in the mail prior to them needing to forward the increase. The particular process that we're using ended up ensuring that seniors in long-term care facilities, most of them, the ones who are on the program, would now have the same kind of residual income which the lodge occupants have. That process was not in there before. We also ensured that they had free cable as part of the package, that they had incontinence supplies, unlimited bathing, and laundry bracelets. After the increase we are still the provincial jurisdiction with the second lowest rates in the whole country. Only Quebec is lower.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My final question to the same minister: what is this government going to do to defuse the financial bomb that has caused major damage to middle-income seniors with this increase?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, a part of the process was also the assurance that no individual, senior or not, would lose their right to be in the facility, would be unnecessarily transferred. We've implemented a process whereby any individual who is impacted unfairly would first go to the operator, and if they can't resolve the situation with the operator, then they come to Alberta Seniors and we intercede on their behalf. This process has been working very, very well. The operators have gone on to work with the families to ensure that the people are working within their income limits. I must repeat that nobody, senior or not, who is in a facility was moved unnecessarily or was impacted to the point that it was unfair, and if they do have a problem, I'd ask the member to ensure that they forward their problem to us, and we will work with them to resolve the issue with the operators.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Methamphetamines

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Police across Alberta are warning that the spread of methamphetamines is a growing threat to our communities. We have increasing reports of meth busts and meth-related crime. The drug is said to be showing up with greater frequency, and police and others blame meth use for increased violence and rising crime in our areas. My questions are to the Solicitor General. A dark picture is being painted about this drug and its effects. What kind of threat does this province face from this illegal drug?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member brings up a good question and one that he is well aware of, suffering from meth in his own constituency and as the chair of AADAC. Yes, meth is a problem in this province, and it's an increasing problem. It's not only hitting the urban areas, but we're seeing it in rural areas such as the hon. members' ridings, Drayton Valley, Wetaskiwin, all sorts of areas. Meth is a very highly addictive drug, and we need to get on this problem.

I recently came back from the States, and I have come back with some really good information in my mind on how to deal with the situation. Prior to going to the States, Mr. Speaker, I put together an intergovernmental working group that brought together representatives from Health, Environment, Children's Services, Agriculture, and Learning, and we are well ahead of the problem. The States was very, very impressed with how far ahead we are instead of behind on the particular problem.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. I have critics saying that not enough is being done to confront the drug problem, so what plans and strategies are in place to tackle it?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my first answer, Alberta is ahead of the problem. In our visit to the States they indicated to us that they felt they had been hit by a huge truck when trying to deal with it and playing mental gymnastics in their brain all the time. As I explained earlier, we have put together an intergovernmental working group, and it is working very well. We've got all the ministers responsible engaged, and we're also meeting with the College of Pharmacists on Friday and trying to deal with the situation on some of the drugs. We are also pushing the federal government to make some changes to legislation federally and get on top of the situation.

Mr. Johnson: My final supplemental. Can the minister tell us what controls there are on buying crystal meth ingredients, including common cold medicines and other products, in drugstores?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, another good question. I think one of the things that we have to be conscious about is the chemicals that are used in the production of meth, and they can change all the time. As I indicated, I'm meeting with the College of Pharmacists to discuss some of the things that Australia is doing that are very innovative in regard to the control of Sudafed and some of the things that the States is doing.

I'm looking forward to the meeting with the College of Pharmacists. My idea in meeting with them is to listen to what they have to say about how we can deal with the situation. They're best in the know about that. We need to have the federal government again step up to the plate and put some restriction on the precursors that go into the making of meth, and we need to be on top of this because the ingredients can change just like a cook can change a recipe.

Health Care Labour Relations

Dr. Taft: To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will he tell Albertans how many health care dollars that could have been spent to shorten waiting lists or to fund MRIs are instead being needlessly spent by the provincial health authorities to run TV, print, and radio ads opposing the nurses?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, what I can speak about is remarkable things that have happened in our health care system in the last 12 months. We have worked on all aspects of the Mazankowski reform. We've improved accessibility. We're working hard at improving access. We have the first electronic health records in the country. We have electronic wait lists on the Internet. We have our Healthy U campaign, that has resulted in part in educating Albertans on how to look after themselves, how to improve their health habits in terms of their eating and their exercise. Our tobacco reduction strategy has resulted in 44,000 fewer smokers in the province, including the Minister of Energy, and 11,000 fewer youth smokers. We've got an AMA agreement that's moving forward on primary health care. The accomplishments are numerous within the last few months. We're moving forward on it.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, regional health authorities have their responsibility to deal with nurses in their negotiations. I expect them to do so in a fair and appropriate way. Nurses are not restricted either from making public advertising for the position that they wish to bring forward. It's only appropriate that the employer have the same opportunity.

Dr. Taft: The answer completely avoided the question. Maybe he didn't hear it, so I'll repeat it. Will the minister tell Albertans how many health care dollars are being spent by provincial health authorities to run TV, radio, and print ads opposing the nurses?

Mr. Mar: Same question, same answer, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Taft: It's an attitude that's going to lead to confrontation.

So to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: has this government made any preparations for the possibility of job action on the part of nurses over the current contract dispute?

Mr. Dunford: The nurses and the employer in this case both act professionally, and we expect them to continue to do so, Mr. Speaker. The issues are there on the table. They've been directed to go back to the negotiating table. In the meantime, I have completed my responsibility in terms of the minister in reacting to an application for a compulsory arbitration board. So we have those situations in place. We all hope, of course, that none of that will be required, that the two parties will get to the table, the two parties will find an agreement that's acceptable to both of them, and then we just move forward in the reform of health care, which is so necessary in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Tory government forced school boards to lay off more than 1,000 teachers over the summer, resulting in overcrowded classrooms throughout the province and the withdrawal of services and programs needed by high-needs children. Today, approaching the halfway point of the school year, the minister expects school boards to repair the damage that the government caused by its refusal to properly fund education. My questions are obviously to the Minister of Learning. How can the minister justify waiting until almost halfway through the school year to announce some additional funding when he knows the damage was already done and it will be difficult for school boards to rehire the 1,000-plus teachers they were forced to lay off just a few short months ago?

Dr. Oberg: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member should take a look at the school calendar, which consists of 10 months. They have been there for about two and a half months, almost three months, so there certainly is a considerable amount of time.

Quite frankly, the school boards are the ones that have the greatest interest. The hon. member was there, and, Mr. Speaker, you know, I could have been mistaken, but I think they even gave a standing ovation for this announcement today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why did the government ignore all year long the pleas of school boards, teachers, parents, and others for properly funded schools only to act today like a knight in shining armour rescuing the damsel in distress?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the interesting thing about this economy in Alberta is that we have received more dollars in our economy because we've been very fortunate with oil and gas revenues. Treasury Board gave me the ability to make some announcements today because we did manage to have some extra funds available, and I thank Treasury Board for doing that.

I believe that putting this money back into the education system at this time is a huge step forward. The school boards applauded it, and there was a considerable amount of excitement at the school boards' convention today, Mr. Speaker, and I think that we're looking forward to some absolutely great things happening in the school system in Alberta.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, my third question is to the Deputy Premier. Why is it that as we get closer to an election, the vast majority of problems the government is trying to fix are the very problems of its own making?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there really was a question in that. I think it was an assumption which was very clearly unfounded and erroneous. On the various issues that the member has referred to, this government has responded in a number of ways. On the issue of education we made it very clear – and in fact I believe it was this government that set out the Learning Commission. I think it really was. It was this government, and we said that when we received the report from this Learning Commission, we would respond in an appropriate way. When we received the Learning Commission report, the minister very clearly said that this is an important document, that there are some very important recommendations in it, some 96 or 98 recommendations, and that we would give all of those recommendations very serious consideration. I use this as an example of this government responding.

Today the Learning minister responded to the most urgent of the funding areas and gave the assurance to the ASBA that we would continue to consider those recommendations and respond in an appropriate time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Anthony Henday Drive

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the southeast leg of Edmonton's ring road, the Anthony Henday road, is being built using the private/public partnership model. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Could the minister please tell this House why that P3 model is being used for this very important project rather than the normal way of financing a ring road or a project of this magnitude?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The stretch of ring road which the hon. member referred to as the southeast portion goes from Calgary Trail north to connecting highway 216, and that particular stretch has many structures. There are a few railway flyovers, a number of interchanges, and just the sheer complexity of that particular stretch of road is conducive to a good P3 project because it will enable the industry to apply all kinds of innovation to this particular stretch of road.

Mrs. O'Neill: My second supplemental is to the same minister. I also understand that the contractor who will be responsible for the construction of this road will have control over it for the next 30 years and will essentially recoup his or her costs over the 30 years through the payment by the government. So my question, again, is: is the P3 model simply another way of long-term financing under a different format?

Mr. Stelmach: The model put forward is to design, build, finance, and maintain for a 30-year period. Very clearly, there will be a contractual obligation to the successful proponent of this particular project over a period of 30 years to repay the costs put in by, I would say, a group of different companies that have come together to fund and maintain this particular stretch of road. There's nothing hidden here with respect to the obligation we have. That will be duly recorded, just like any other obligation we have, by this government.

Mrs. O'Neill: My last supplemental is to the same minister. What assurances can you give this Assembly that there will be some cost savings in this project?

Mr. Stelmach: The process, Mr. Speaker, is twofold. One, we go through what is called a request for qualification. That essentially is where companies interested in this particular proposal will for a fee of $250 have a look at the proposal, the plan, and they will come forward by the end of December, the beginning of January. We will assess whether the proposals coming forward have merit and that the companies are sufficient to carry this project through. Once we shortlist that through Treasury Board, which the outside committee chaired by Mr. Tim Melton will review, we will decide on who will then go to the next stage, which is a request for proposals. Upon that, we will assess the proposals, and as I said many times before, if the project brings about savings, which I believe it will, then we will go ahead with it. If there are no savings, then we won't go ahead with it, simply put.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in thirty seconds from now I'll call upon the first of the hon. members to participate in Members' Statements.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

2:50head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a constituent of mine, a registered nurse who lives in Thorsby, Alberta, and practises in the great town of Breton, where I lived for many years. I would ask that Anita Ashmore please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

head: Members' Statements

Hazel McGregor

Mrs. Gordon: Today I stand before this Assembly to recognize a longtime, well-known resident of Lacombe, a great lady, Hazel McGregor. Hazel was recently presented with the Doreen Befus award as this year's most outstanding self-advocate for adults with developmental disabilities, an award sponsored by the PDD Central Alberta Community Board.

Hazel exemplifies in her daily life many of the same wonderful qualities that Doreen Befus, a former resident of Michener Centre, possessed. Hazel has a zest for life equal to none. Always smiling and happy, she enthusiastically embraces her various volunteer tasks with zeal. She has long been a mentor for persons with developmental disabilities and is without a doubt one of Lacombe's most active volunteers. She assists regularly with an exercise program at the Lacombe senior citizens' lodge and always helps out with the many special occasions they hold: Valentine's Day, Easter tea, et cetera.

Hazel has now lived independently and proudly in her own suite, her home, for over a year, and it is no surprise that she has become a natural support for many of her neighbours within the building. She continually offers her time, providing companionship and emotional reassurances to those experiencing difficulties. Hazel has a phenomenal memory. She can remember the most interesting things about people: where they're from, telephone numbers, addresses, and birth dates; no problem. She knows everyone, and most know her.

Thank you and congratulations, Hazel. You are most deserving of this award. Lacombe and the people who live in Lacombe are much better off because of you. Allan and I are both very proud of you and feel privileged to call you a friend.

Family Violence

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, what do you say to a little boy who tells you that his daddy is going to kill him? Daddy had said that many times before, and it was not considered to be an imminent threat. On Friday, September 26, of this year three-year-old Alex Fekete told a friend that his daddy was going to kill him and his mother. On Sunday he and his mother, Betty Fekete, were murdered by his father in the lobby of their Red Deer apartment. Josif Fekete then killed himself. This is a tragic story of family violence. Even more tragically, there are other stories like this one. Last November Grant Harder killed his two-year-old son, Cole, and himself. This is the horror of family violence.

Family violence is everybody's business, and that is why this government has dedicated itself to stopping all forms of family violence in Alberta. Earlier this month the hon. Premier of Alberta announced the family violence roundtable. The roundtable will take place in the spring and will involve representatives from numerous interested parties.

Statistics show that this roundtable is necessary. Twenty-five percent of all women in Alberta have experienced partner violence or abuse in the past five years. This is the highest rate of all provinces in Canada. Children are victims in 23 percent of all assaults reported to police. In 25 percent of these, family members commit the offence. While nine of 10 victims are women, we cannot forget abuse towards husbands and fathers and elderly family members.

Family violence is about power and control, aided and abetted by drugs and alcohol. It eats away at the health and well-being of victims. It erodes the foundations of our communities, and it destroys lives. Family violence is our business, and we need to do all we can to stop it. This Assembly must encourage Albertans to take steps to stop family violence.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Stu Hart

Ms Kryczka: Mr. Speaker, on October 16, 2003, Stu Hart, Calgary patriarch, wrestling legend, and a constituent of mine in Calgary-West, passed away at the age of 88 years.

Stu was born in Saskatoon in 1915. He played football for the Edmonton Eskimos and in 1940 became dominion wrestling champion. Stu then served in the Royal Canadian Navy and later embarked on a truly successful wrestling career. In 1948 he married Helen Smith of New York City. They moved to Calgary in 1952, raised 12 children, founded Stampede Wrestling, and contributed to numerous charities throughout western Canada.

Desiderata, included in the funeral program, was written in 1927 and describes Stu so well.

Go placidly amid the noise and the haste, and remember what peace there may be in silence.
As far as possible without surrender be on good terms with all persons.
Speak your truth quietly and clearly, and listen to others, even to the dull and ignorant;
they too have their story.

Stu was inducted into the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame & Museum and in recent years was a proud recipient of the Order of Canada and the Queen's golden jubilee award.

Also from Desiderata:

Take kindly the counsel of the years,
gracefully surrendering the things of youth.
Nurture strength of spirit to shield you in sudden misfortune . . .
And whether or not it is clear to you,
no doubt the universe is unfolding as it should.

Stu will be fondly remembered by his 10 surviving children and their spouses, by 35 grandchildren and one great-grandson. He was predeceased by his dear wife, Helen, two sons, Dean and Owen, one grandson, Matthew, and son-in-law Davey Boy Smith. He will be sadly missed by his pets and all whose lives he touched.

To Stu's family and friends who are mourning the great loss, remember Desiderata.

Therefore, be at peace with God, whatever you conceive Him to be.
And whatever your labors and aspirations in the noisy confusion of life, keep peace in your soul.
With all its sham, drudgery and broken dreams, it is still a beautiful world.
Be cheerful.
Strive to be happy.

Rest in peace, Stu Hart.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the government reported another multimillion dollar budget surplus in June, pink slips were being handed out to more than 1,000 teachers across the province. As students returned to the classroom this fall, these 1,000 teachers as well as hundreds of other support staff were missing from Alberta's classrooms. These missing teachers and staff can mean only one thing: overcrowded classrooms and fewer services for children with special needs.

The Edmonton public school board recently reported its class size numbers, and the results are frankly shocking. Over one-quarter of K to 3 children are in classes of 25 students or more. When you consider that the Learning Commission recommended an optimum size of 17 students in K to 3, this government's Learning ministry should hang its head in embarrassment.

It's not like the government wasn't warned. Throughout the spring Legislature session the New Democrats along with school boards, parents, teachers, and students themselves warned that the government's refusal to properly fund our schools would have devastating consequences. The Tory government ignored these warnings, and the unfortunate results are now plain to see. Six weeks ago the Learning Commission put a lie to the government's repeated claims that schools are not being underfunded. The commission identified $90.6 million of shortfalls which, until then, the Minister of Learning had denied even existed.

Today, literally at the 11th hour, this government underwent a conversion on the road to the ballot box. While the dollars announced today are desperately needed, much damage has already been done to our children and the education system. This damage will be difficult to repair and should never have occurred in the first place.

This government has much to answer for, Mr. Speaker. Albertans will not soon forget its callous disregard for the well-being of our children in our K to 12 education system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition signed by 1,003 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to "introduce legislation declaring a moratorium on any future expansion of Confined Feeding Operations, with a view to phasing out existing operations within the next three years."

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Hon. Opposition House Leader, on October 8 I received correspondence from the Leader of the Official Opposition advising that he was going to be rising today under Standing Order 30. Do I take it that this is not forthcoming now?

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That was withdrawn.

The Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a Standing Order 30 notice.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the announcement this morning by the Learning minister that the government is providing school boards with some additional dollars to at least partly repair the damage caused by its earlier refusal to properly fund education and given that members of this House will have an opportunity to debate the supplementary estimates when they come before this Assembly, I'm withdrawing my Standing Order 30 request for an emergency debate this afternoon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on a notice.

Dr. Taft: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I give notice – you can help me here – of a point of privilege against the Minister of Infrastructure.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Bill 49

Public Lands Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 49, the Public Lands Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments will allow our government to deal swiftly and effectively with instances of noncompliance on public lands involving industrial roads and respond to increased demand within the agricultural industry to allow some bison grazing on public land.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 49 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 49 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Bill 50

Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 50, the Wildlife Amendment Act, 2003.

These amendments will make the act more effective in a number of areas including enforcement and administration. These additional enforcement tools will help discourage illegal activities to better protect and manage wildlife.

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 50 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 50 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Bill 51

Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce the Natural Resources Conservation Board Amendment Act, 2003. I'm bringing this act forward on behalf of my colleague the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Amendments to the Natural Resources Conservation Board Act are needed to clearly separate the quasi-judicial function of the board from its administrative function. Changes are also needed to clarify financial controls, membership of the board, and the unbiased nature of the appeals.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 51 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 51 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in my capacity as the minister responsible for sport in Alberta and as a proud Edmontonian to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter of congratulations that I've sent to Hugh Campbell and the 2003 Grey Cup champions, the Edmonton Eskimos. Congratulations to all of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I'd like to table five copies of the 2002-2003 annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling five copies of a petition with 5,255 signatures that states:

Whereas the Michener Centre Administrative Building is a beautiful old landmark with provincial historic significance, and
Whereas despite the recent fire it is still structurally sound,
We the undersigned request that the building be repaired and restored.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, please. I have five tablings today, Mr. Speaker. I'll go through them quickly. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a postcard campaign from the summer called Stop Picking on Seniors, around the long-term care rate increases.

The second tabling is five copies of a letter from Mrs. B. Kay in Edmonton protesting the government's increase of long-term care facility fees.

Next is an e-mail from Margaret Griffith, who has a mother in care in rural Alberta. She herself is working in the U.S. and has seen firsthand the devastation of seniors becoming bankrupt from paying for long-term care.

The next e-mail is from Deanna Summy, who took her husband out of long-term care and brought him home but is concerned about the lack of respite care available to her.

Finally, a letter from a constituent, Michael James, who writes with some passion about the situation of teachers and classroom overcrowding in Alberta and notes that the government is playing with people's lives.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first one is a letter and a following petition from the Social Justice Commission to the hon. Premier of the government of Alberta. This is in regard to the level of benefits for persons on SFI, AISH, and other income support programs, and they indicate that it should be raised a minimum of 20 percent in the budget for 2003-04.

The second tabling that I have this afternoon is five copies of a document that I was delighted to get earlier in the fall, and this is the Alberta Public Affairs Bureau request for proposal 03-02. This is this campaign that's going to convince Albertans they should like electricity and natural gas energy deregulation.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. The first one is appropriate copies of a document showing huge increases in class sizes in Edmonton public schools due to this government's failure to properly fund education.

3:10

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is a news release issued by the Greater St. Albert Catholic Schools dated November 13, 2003, regarding the discovery by the Auditor General of surplus funds in Alberta Learning's account and calling for immediate distribution of these funds.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I am tabling a secret leaked draft report of the Advisory Council on Electricity dated September 2003 showing that the only answer the government has to higher power bills is more spin and rebates.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a letter from a constituent, Nancy Hamilton, in which she raises several observations concerning the Learning Commission.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Chief Electoral Officer for the calendar year 2002.

Pursuant to section 46(1) of the Conflicts of Interest Act I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Ethics Commissioner that covers the period April 1, 2002, to March 31, 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on a Standing Order 15.

Privilege
Contempt of the Assembly

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I should begin by distributing some material to the members.

I rise today under Standing Order 15(2) on a question of privilege or further and in the alternative contempt of the House. Mr. Speaker, the issue involved with this case of contempt goes back to the spring sitting and largely to the question period of May 15 and my exchange with the Minister of Infrastructure. In fact, the particular Hansard is on everyone's desk right now, and they can follow along on page 1674.

May on page 108 defines contempt.

Any act . . . which obstructs or impedes . . . any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

There are certain instances which have historically been identified as issues of contempt. One such instance is misleading the House. May on page 111 states, "The Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt." The word "deliberately" protects the occasional lack of up-to-date information a member might have. However, this is not the case on this issue.

When questioning the Minister of Infrastructure, as outlined in Hansard, I asked, "Does the Department of Infrastructure have in its possession any lab results that speak of toxic mold at the former Holy Cross hospital?" The minister's answer did not directly deal with the question I posed. He quoted a specific line instead and an e-mail which he had in his hands, and he then seemed surprised when he was asked by you to table this e-mail. The e-mail is on the top of the documents that are being distributed. I hope that you have been given some of this material yourself, Mr. Speaker.

It was at this point, after he was unexpectedly asked to table the e-mail, that I asked the supplemental question, "Is the minister saying that his department has never had possession of positive tests for toxic mold at the Holy Cross Hospital?" In response the minister replied, "The fact is that when we were looking at locations to house the Court of Appeal, the Court of Appeal asked Mr. Tang Lee to do an air quality test, and clearly, as this shows, the tests were never completed." And the "this" in his quote was referring to the e-mail that he was holding in his hand.

Well, Mr. Speaker, as everyone here who has that in their hands can see, attached to the e-mail and referenced in its text were two attachments. The first was the test results for bacteria, and the second was test results on fungi and bacteria. The e-mail stated, and this was not mentioned by the minister: "Enclosed is the report from the Microbiological laboratory that was completed on October 24, 2001. The XL file is for bacteria and the Word file is for the fungi and bacteria." It is absolutely clear that the minister did in fact have the test results at his disposal. In the words of the e-mail, "The report from the Microbiological laboratory . . . was completed on October 24, 2001," completed a year and a half before I asked the question. The minister's response that "the tests were never completed" was clearly an attempt to mislead the House. They had been completed for over a year. The documents that I have tabled today will bear this out and show that the department had full knowledge that the tests were completed.

I am mindful of what Maingot stated on page 234 of his work: "It must be shown that the Member was obstructed in his work relating to a proceeding in Parliament." Mr. Speaker, the infraction occurred in question period. The document which is leading to the raising of this case of contempt was tabled under the daily Routine. The entire case occurred within the proceedings of this House, and it involves a simple but crucial statement of fact: what did the minister know, and when did he know it? If members of this Assembly can't have confidence in this sort of answer, our work is indeed profoundly compromised.

Mr. Speaker, I now wish to draw to your attention additional corroborating evidence. As you've suggested, copies have been available to all members, and I invite them to follow along. This is correspondence involving the Department of Infrastructure specifically on the issue of toxic mold testing at the Holy Cross. I've selected only a few examples, and I will move through them quickly. I ask members to follow along.

The cover is the e-mail that was tabled by the minister confirming, as you can see with the attachments, that, in fact, the test results were included. The next page is an e-mail from Sandy Fisher of the government of Alberta to Tang Lee simply arranging a meeting and a tour of the Holy Cross. There's an important time line at work here that unfolds the story of this case, Mr. Speaker. The next page, numbered 7 at the bottom, is from J.A. Fruman, Adelle Fruman, with the Department of Justice – this is the government – to Tang Lee, CCed to the Department of Infrastructure. I will not read it all, but it does emphasize the importance of this issue.

Dear Sandy:

Thank you for showing Justices Conrad, Paperny and me the leasehold space in Holy Cross Hospital today.

Then she goes on to describe her reaction to the toxic mold. She says:

I would like to document my health concerns about the premises.

During the visit today, I suffered respiratory and other problems: my throat closed, I had chest congestion and pain; I experienced a bad headache; my eyes burned and my vision was blurred; and I became dizzy. More than 12 hours have elapsed since the visit, and I continue to suffer from a number of these symptoms.

She goes on to say:

I appreciate that Professor Lee will conduct extensive air quality testing, mould speciation and laboratory analysis over the next 4 weeks, to determine whether the Holy Cross . . . has superior air quality.

Moving on to the next page, July 15, 2001, correspondence from Professor Lee to the Department of Infrastructure. It's a long document. I'll just draw members' and your attention to points 7, 8, and 9, which outline, in fact, the detailed plans for the testing of air quality and molds, and actually it subsequently explains: "Our examination of the building will commence on Wednesday, July 18. Air samples will be taken including those requiring laboratory tests."

We'll proceed a couple of more pages to the one numbered 10 at the bottom, dated July 15, from Tang Lee to somebody who was working with him on the tests. He says in the first sentence, "I just sent a proposal to Sandy Fisher about conducting an air quality assessment on the Holy Cross" and goes on to explain that.

The next e-mail, July 17, 2001, again from Professor Lee to Adelle Fruman of Alberta Justice. He says:

I sent our proposal to Sandy Fisher this last weekend on examining the Holy Cross Hospital site. Not hearing from him, I arranged a meeting with Sandy this morning to discuss our involvement. At this meeting, he assured me that I will obtain permission to proceed with the examination . . .

And he continues.

A couple of more pages, numbered 17 now on the bottom right-hand corner, to Tang Lee from one of his staff, July 24, 2001. Then it also involves one of the staff actually doing the testing. You'll notice the subject: bacterial report and Holy Cross update.

The analyst is about half way through the bacterial reporting. She should be able to finish it off later today. The Aspergillus identification should be coming through today as well.

Then he goes on and says:

Also, we have cleared out the HPC strips for your [Holy Cross] project. There are a lot of TNTC strips.

That means "too numerous to count."

It appears that what is growing on the . . . strips is primarily mold - which is fairly common when you encounter areas with high mold concentrations.

We move on to correspondence again concerning these tests, July 25, 2001. I'd just refer to the final sentence from Professor Lee: I e-mailed the previous too numerous to count results to Sandy Fisher, who is with Alberta Infrastructure, about Holy Cross.

3:20

The next page, numbered 19, from Tang Lee to a staff member of Alberta Infrastructure. Subject: preliminary lab results. "As requested, I am sending a quick note to you that I received from the microbiologists that there are a lot of mould spores at the Holy Cross hospital." He goes on: "With this preliminary result, I am concerned about the air quality and its suitability to the sick occupant of Court of Appeal.

The next page, numbered 20, from Tang Lee back to Adelle Fruman. Subject: Holy Cross mold spores. Tang Lee says in this e-mail:

I was asked by Sandy Fisher to keep him posted as to any preliminary findings on the Holy Cross. As such I just sent him this brief note from the microbiologist. It appears there is a lot of mould spores in the hospital . . . and that they are growing so rapidly on the samples that the microbiologist cannot even count them. The mould growth is covering each other as it fights to grow in the nutrient solution.

Moving on, a quick response from Sandy, an employee of Infrastructure, to the professor re preliminary laboratory results: "Thanks Tang."

Moving on. August 26, 2001, from Tang Lee to Sandy Fisher of Infrastructure: "Hello, Sandy. We just received the microorganism . . . results and the Holy Cross has a lot of moulds including Stachybotrys . . ." which is a very dangerous mold ". . . in the kitchen area."

It goes on. I will summarize very briefly here: "The other areas also have moulds and we expect that the fungi genres would turn out to be species with associated mycotoxins." I will not go through the rest of the page except to draw your attention to the bottom where the staff person from Alberta Infrastructure wrote on August 24, 2001: "Hi, Tang . . . I am looking forward to seeing your report and recommendations particularly on the Holy Cross. I'll call you next week. Kind regards."

Now I've moved to page 35. From Tang Lee to Sandy Fisher, Department of Infrastructure. Subject: interim summary. "Hello Sandy. Here is an interim summary of our examination." This is a very long e-mail, so I will move people ahead two more pages to that numbered 37, the lower part, to (4) Holy Cross Hospital Southeast wing, the second paragraph. Remember that this is an e-mail going to Alberta Infrastructure. It says:

It is clear that there are mould spores throughout the facility including Stachybotrys, Penicillium, and Aspergillus. We expect that the fungi genres would turn out to be species with associated mycotoxins, but we did not receive authority to proceed with the next level of species identification.

Then on the following page, numbered 38, it says: "Mould samples inside the exterior walls were so concentrated that it overgrew the samples. The mycologist wrote TNTC (too numerous to count) on several samples."

Page 39, from Alberta Infrastructure to Tang Lee, August 30, 2001: "Hello Tang. Thank you for this. It confirms my own expectations. Sandy." The subject was the interim summary.

I'm near the end, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your patience. Page 41, e-mail correspondence concerning the testing to Tang Lee from The Stookes, which is an e-mail account of somebody working on the testing: "Hello Tang. I am still not sure from Sandy's reply if we are proceeding to speciation on the Holy Cross site." Remember that Sandy works at Alberta Infrastructure. It's important to note here that they already knew the genus of the mold.

The next page, 43, is again from one of the people working on the test to Tang Lee. Subject: interim summary.

Hi Tang,

I reached Mike and he will proceed with speciation to a max of $2000. I asked him to do a mix of speciation on the ground and 7th floors [at the Holy Cross] and to concentrate on only the Penicillium and Aspergillus genres (and of course the Stachybotrys).

It seems clear from this e-mail that they were given the go-ahead.

The last page, page 44, from Tang Lee to the owner of the Holy Cross, Mr. Peter Wong. Subject: air quality.

Hello Peter:

I just received the microorganism results back from the microbiological lab and received permission from Alberta Infrastructure to proceed with speciation to go beyond the genus.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all our time is short. I have got far more detail than this which I don't need to bring forward. It seems absolutely clear to me, black and white, that this department and this minister's department knew of the lab test results, had them in their possession at the time I questioned him, and probably had them in his possession long before that.

So, Mr. Speaker, let me wrap up by saying this: the evidence is compelling. The Department of Infrastructure did indeed have detailed evidence, including lab test results, confirming dangerously high levels of toxic mold at the Holy Cross more than two years ago. I can come to no other conclusion than that the minister misled the Assembly on an important question of fact.

My request to the minister is simple. First, will he please admit that his department did in fact have laboratory results showing unacceptable levels of toxic molds at the Holy Cross, and second, will he please apologize to this Assembly for his actions? Barring that, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to move a subsequent motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Infrastructure, are you prepared to make a statement today, or, in light of this information forthcoming, do you want to wait until tomorrow?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, since I wasn't able to follow the rationale, if there was some, from the hon. member, I'm going to take the advantage of getting Hansard and reviewing the whole thing and will respond tomorrow.

Dr. Taft: A point of clarification, Mr. Speaker. The minister's office was provided yesterday with all the material that members have had.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I take it then, hon. minister, that tomorrow you'll be prepared to be in the House.

Mr. Lund: That's affirmative.

The Speaker: Am I advised there would be any other members wanting to participate in this? Okay. Come back tomorrow then.

Hon. members, just before I call Orders of the Day, today was a unique day in the history of this Legislative Assembly, when for the first time anybody who had the Internet could receive a video feed of the Alberta Legislative Assembly, anywhere in the world, to watch question period. Now, there appear to have been a few little technological glitches, but get this: the technological glitches came from overload of a high number of accesses to the web site. So considering that there's absolutely no makeup in this Assembly and everything is live, this must make good television for some.

Bill 36
Environmental Protection and Enhancement
Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate April 28: Mr. Broda]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will move forward, then, with my comments on Bill 36. I had expected someone from the government side to proceed.

This is a bill that's been on our Order Paper for some time, and we see some minor kinds of changes coming forward.

3:30

The key objectives of the bill are allowing for electronic reports of substance releases. It adds specific references to codes of practice in the act, which has long been an issue that's been debated inside and outside this House. It eliminates the 25-year limit to issuing environmental protection orders for sites that have been granted reclamation certificates, and there is some general housecleaning. This is a bill that we will be supporting, Mr. Speaker. While these changes are quite different in how they amend the act generally and they have to be dealt with, I believe, separately, generally speaking, they improve the legislation.

When we talk about electronic reporting, currently what happens is that if a person releases a substance that may cause an adverse effect, it must be reported to the director "in person or by telephone." Of course since that legislation was brought forward, the electronic age has taken over most of our lives. There is no allowance for them to report by manner such as e-mail, so the amendment attempts to include that, and we support that. It's a good idea.

The second is the codes of practice. Many people have concerns about these codes of practice. The bill defines them as documents "governing an activity or activities or a portion of an activity or activities that is adopted or incorporated pursuant to section 38." What that means really for us is that there will be codes that prescribe standards for common practices. According to the ministry these codes of practice have already been used for some time, but they are included this time, specific references to them in the bill. We hope that the intent is for clarity's sake, but what we have found is that there has been some concern over time that the codes of practice are not strict enough or don't have to be adhered to, that, in fact, often it would be better if we had regulations instead of codes of practice.

Before we get to committee, I'm hoping that we can get some answers to questions that I've heard outside this House and that really should be answered at this point in time. The first is: what is the compelling reason for moving this particular amendment at this time? Can the minister or some designate tell us what the substantive difference is between what can be achieved with regulations and what can be achieved with the code of practice? This is an answer that I would like to be quite specific so that we can send it out to a number of people who have been asking us this. In more detail can they give us what the specific advantages of a code of practice are in this circumstance over regulations? It does need to be clarified, I believe, for the purposes of this bill.

One of the other parts of the bill is the limitation to issuing the environmental protection orders. According to what we've heard from the ministry the current regulations indicate that an EPO cannot be issued longer than five years after a reclamation certificate has been issued. What this does is it releases the person or the company responsible for the site from all environmental liability after five years. That's, I think, obviously to all of us in this Assembly not long enough. We recurrently find cases where there are problems with reclamation sites after a five-year time period. So can we know why the minister has decided that 25 years was not a good period of time? We just would like to have clarification there in terms of why the time change.

I think I will keep my sectional analysis on this particular bill until we get to the committee stage and until we have some of the answers to the questions asked, but unless something unusual comes out of those answers, this looks like a bill, Mr. Speaker, that we will be supporting at this particular time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) we now have five minutes available for questions and answers to the just-heard-from speaker. So will there be questions? I take it that there are none.

Then to recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to put a few comments on the record on Bill 36, Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2003. Over the summer break I received a very thoughtful but impassioned letter from a young constituent who was really concerned about pollution and environmental controls and what was being done to keep the planet safer. It brought home to me that we have a new generation coming up who accepts without question that the government is responsible for ensuring environmental protection of land, water, and air. They don't expect to have to argue with the government to get it; they expect the government to provide it and to be a steward and an overseer to make sure that that's happening.

This bill is certainly not going to solve all of those problems, but as my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie has already mentioned, it does bring forward a couple of things that are useful, like the electronic reporting for substance release, the references to the code of practice, and eliminating the 25-year limit for issuing environmental protection orders for sites that have been granted a reclamation certificate. That's the one that interests me most in the context of this young man's concerns.

I continue to look and to press the government to be vigorous in monitoring and evaluating our environment. Part of my long-standing complaint was with the downsizing of officers whose very job it was to do that, to be out there on the ground, so to speak, in water, testing the air to make sure that all was going as it should and that the environment was protected to the full extent and doing the evaluation if it wasn't. I think what we have learned in the last 50 years or so is that environmental damage has a very long, long half-life, and for that reason I'm pleased to see a limit being lifted. Frankly, I don't think we fully understand how long it can take various kinds of poison to be worked out of, for example, water or earth. So the need for vigorous environmental protection is, I think, obvious to me, and certainly it was to this young guy.

We've had an imbalance in this province where there was a bias in favour of what the industry wanted and what was convenient for the industry. I think that is slowly, aching slowly being corrected, and we're moving back towards a balance between a fairly free rein for industry to operate as it chooses and some reasonable limits that are placed on industry, particularly where it comes to environmental protection.

So I appreciate the work that is being done, and I continue to say: you need to do more. On behalf of the young man that wrote to me, I'm glad I was able to raise those points and continue to raise those expectations with the minister.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2) is available to all members.

Then I take it I should call on the Minister of Environment to close the debate.

3:40

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. members opposite for their support, and I'll try to answer a couple of their questions. One was that five years is not long enough for a reclamation certificate to be in effect and that after the five-year time period it would revert to the owner of the land and the government of Alberta, so we are moving to 25 years. In fact, I will bring an amendment in Committee of the Whole that changes the time that companies are responsible from five years to 25 years. So we're moving in that direction, Mr. Speaker, and once that amendment comes forward, I hope the House will agree to it and we'll move forward. We have discussed it with industry over the summer, and industry is in agreement with it. We had some persuasive discussions with them, and they have agreed, particularly the oil industry.

In regard to moving from regulations to a code of practice, what we're talking about there, Mr. Speaker, is moving from a regulatory approval process to a code of practice. We're not moving away from regulations. Codes of practice will be in the regulatory process, but what we are saying is that for certain common practices – for instance, a gravel pit, you know, outside a watercourse, there's a code of practice that can apply to that because it's the same kind of development whether it happens in your constituency or in my constituency.

So what we want to establish are codes of practice which will be a regulation that says that if you're going to develop a gravel pit, these are the steps that you must take. Rather than going through the complete regulatory approval process, which takes the company a lot of time and money and Environment a lot of time and money, we'll have a code of practice that in regulation says: this is how you develop; these are the steps you have to do to develop a gravel pit. As I said quite clearly, that would not be in a watercourse but just on dry land.

We've got a number of these common practices that up till now have had to have a long regulatory approval process, and we are moving these common practices to codes of practice. I want to be very clear again, Mr. Speaker, that they will be governed, they will be monitored, and they will be part of our regulatory system.

As I said a minute ago, we will be bringing some amendments forward at Committee of the Whole, and at the present time I'm pleased to move second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a second time]

Bill 37

Climate Change and Emissions Management Act

[Adjourned debate April 28: Mr. Broda]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to be here this afternoon and reopen debate on Bill 37, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. In my discussion today I would like to begin by touching on the Kyoto protocol and the need for a made-in-Alberta plan when it comes to tackling the issue of emissions reduction. While this government has committed itself to reducing greenhouse gases and tackling the problem of climate change within our province, we have also clearly said that we do not believe that the Kyoto protocol is the right solution for Alberta, Canada, and the environment.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Kyoto protocol in its current form requires Canada to undergo a 30 percent reduction in the current output of greenhouse gas emissions by the year 2012. Without a doubt, committing to such unrealistic targets and deadlines will have an extremely negative impact not only on the economy of Alberta but also of Canada as well. The approval of the protocol, Mr. Speaker, will undoubtedly result in our resources and products becoming less competitive on the global market due to rising prices. Furthermore, our energy-consuming industries would face increased prices, which in turn would make them uncompetitive, and unreasonable emission targets could render the oil sands projects economically uncompetitive.

Current and future investors will no doubt be discouraged by the new restrictions placed upon our economy and will choose to invest their capital in Alberta's major energy competitors such as the U.S., Venezuela, Saudi Arabia, Nigeria, and Mexico. Unlike Canada none of these nations is bound by the rules and regulations of the Kyoto accord, thus giving them a comparative economic advantage over Alberta and, ultimately, Canada itself. As a result, Mr. Speaker, Canada could experience a loss of 450,000 jobs, a substantial rise in income tax rates, a hundred percent increase in electricity costs, a 60 percent increase in natural gas costs, and the price of gasoline reaching over $1 per litre.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but Canada would also have to purchase $2 billion to $6 billion worth of credits each year, resulting in not only higher energy prices but also no significant reduction of global emissions. The reason for this is because some of the biggest sources of credits under the protocol will be to the nations of the former Soviet Union, which are currently still some of the biggest polluters in the world. The reason for this discrepancy is because when the Kyoto was negotiated in the early '90s, the economic output of these nations was far greater than it is today, which allows these nations to have a surplus of credits. Under Kyoto Canada will have to purchase the emission credits from these countries while no reduction of current levels of greenhouse gas emissions will actually take place. Furthermore, the protocol is not a fair or equally binding agreement. Even though Canada puts out only 2 percent of the world's greenhouse gas emissions, the economic risk to Canada would be four times that of the European Union and 10 times that of Japan.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we can do much better, and this is why this government has introduced Bill 37. This bill embodies the initiatives outlined in the Albertans and Climate Change: Taking Action plan, and I believe it to be a credible and superior alternative to the Kyoto protocol. It represents a made-in-Alberta environmental strategy which is designed to address the issues of climate change in a manner that is environmentally effective and economically responsible. Our strategy focuses on improving energy efficiencies, enhancing how our current technology is used to control industrial emissions, investing in new and economically friendly sources of energy, and improving our emission management for today and the future.

The people of Alberta have entrusted this government with the task of the management and protection of our province's environment and natural resources. Bill 37 will reinforce Alberta's jurisdiction with regard to these matters and will help us to challenge the federal government if the Kyoto protocol threatens to erode our jurisdictional rights. Furthermore, this legislation is only the latest in terms of a long succession of many sound environmental policies pursued by this government.

It is important to note that over the past decade Alberta has established itself as the leader in the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions in Canada. Up to this date studies estimate that we have been able to cut greenhouse gas emissions by 22 percent compared to 1990 levels and that we were also on our way to reducing our emissions by a further 26 percent below 1990 levels by 2005. Unlike the Kyoto protocol, Mr. Speaker, Bill 37 enables us to continue these efforts by focusing on real reductions in realistic time frames, investing in our domestic technology and research, working with our stakeholders and partners, seeking out new and improved energy efficiencies and conservation strategies, and leading by example.

Even after the plan is implemented and approved, the province will continue to work in partnership with other provincial governments, the federal government, industry sectors, municipalities, other energy-consuming sectors, the academic community, and all Albertans. Unlike the Kyoto protocol Albertans and Climate Change: Taking Action is not a rigid and inflexible strategy. It is inclusive and flexible and remains open to new ideas others may have, leaving us room for continuous improvement.

The intention of this plan is to balance the economic and environmental goals of Albertans and all Canadians as well. It will accomplish these challenges by focusing on reducing emissions per unit of output rather than on absolute reduction as outlined in the Kyoto. Alberta's strategy focuses on achieving realistic and rational targets for emission reductions. More specifically, under the plan Alberta expects to cut its emissions by about 20 megatons per year by the year 2010. By the year 2020 Alberta expects to cut up to 60 megatons, or 50 percent, of greenhouse gas emissions below the 1990 levels.

This government has committed itself to meeting the long-term challenges in the field of greenhouse gas emissions. Bill 37 represents only the beginning of a 50-year initiative designed to dramatically decrease the output of carbon emissions in this province. We'll continue to improve the energy conservation and efficiencies in our province by leading extensive initiatives including municipal building and streetlight retrofits, energy labeling, adoption of new technologies, and reducing barriers to low-input power generation.

This piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, enables us to work with industry, including the oil and gas sectors, in order to establish effective new ways of measuring, monitoring, and verifying carbon emissions in our province. Bill 37 will also allow us to establish a framework for an emission trading system which will enable the industry sectors to trade emission units while working to reduce their greenhouse gas outputs. In order to ensure compliance within the various industry sectors, the Alberta government will create financial and other types of penalties for nonparticipation.

It will also enable us to introduce a provincial management fund which will help our industry sectors reduce their emissions and invest in our province's energy conservation, energy efficiency, and technology. The significance of this fund is that it will allow us to retain and utilize our funds to achieve far more tangible and long-lasting results, funds which under the Kyoto protocol we would have to spend on a bogus emission credit system.

In conclusion, unlike the Kyoto protocol Alberta's approach to emission reduction is far superior because its emission figures are realistic, the time frame given to the industry or industry sector is reasonable, and the plan is flexible and open to new and up-to-date ideas. Unlike the Kyoto protocol the Albertans and Climate Change: Taking Action plan will not be looked upon as another NEP but as another intelligent and successful initiative by a government which is in touch with reality, a government which cares about the wishes and the well-being of its people, the economy, and the environment. As a result, Mr. Speaker, I urge all of my colleagues today to vote in favour of Bill 37.

Thank you.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, in response to Bill 37, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, which is really a remake of the old Bill 32 that we saw in the year 2002, there's so much silliness involved in this bill and in the first speaker's response to it that I hardly know where to start.

Every once in a while we see bills come through this Legislature that are real propaganda pieces on behalf of the government, and this is one of those kinds of bills. This bill should've been, I believe, withdrawn over the summer and, if required at all – I never believed in the first instance it was ever required – remade in a way that kept up to date with the changes that we've seen over the past few months, and we saw that emphasized by the comments from the Member for Redwater. He's two steps behind the rest of the world on where this issue has moved to, and it's really unfortunate. I believe he needs to get a new speechwriter, someone who can update his material as required.

We've seen lots of changes happen with regard to federal legislation and with regard to what this government could or should be doing at this particular time with regard to climate change and emissions. You know, industry has moved forward on this particular issue. These guys are being left in the dust as legislators. Even their own departments have moved forward on this particular issue and have had brought forward and come up with many good ideas and solutions and ways to easily be able to implement the targets, not just barely or maybe meet the targets. But not this government. They like to hide behind all these old, archaic ideas and bash and bash and bash instead of taking a look at how they could be facilitating and moving forward on the issue.

You know, a good example of how out of touch they are is that when we first started talking about climate change and how to reduce CO₂ emissions, I brought into this Assembly the 10 easy steps that everybody could easily accommodate in their everyday life and certainly got laughed at for most of them. Since that time period, about two years ago, we have seen many of those steps now promoted by the Minister of Environment and several other ministers in this Assembly and national programs go out that have moved the whole nation forward. Not the least of those and probably the easiest is to turn your car off instead of letting it idle in a variety of situations: when you're picking up the kids from school, when you're sitting at a long red light, when you're caught in a traffic jam, all those kinds of instances. We have seen, after bringing that forward into this House and having all of these government members laugh at it and say how silly that would be, that it's been instituted by many people in this province and is a very, very positive step forward. It's one of the ways that this government could have been showing some leadership instead of bringing in more cumbersome legislation that doesn't really address the issues.

What we see here with Bill 37 is really just a remake of the old Bill 32, where they've crossed out a few of the table of contents items and got rid of some of the most offensive whereas and then just dusted off that bill and brought it back, and in fact it was never necessary to do. We had many organizations give us feedback and give the government feedback on how any changes that needed to be done with this particular bill could have easily been done within the framework that's already been established within the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. Nearly every element that they wanted to achieve could have been done there. Of course, the one problem was where the government asserted that their natural resource ownership gave them jurisdiction over climate change, and we all know that from a constitutional law basis that was a hollow argument and really wasn't going to go there.

We had expected with Bill 37 that we would get some clear and explicit recognition that environmental protection would be the primary goal of this government, but that's not where they went with this. They talked about toying with the amount of participation there would be by this province, which is a silly thing to do because they have the ability to bring in policy development and implementation with respect to areas that would move us forward, such as emission reduction tools, such as an emission trading system, such as sectorial agreements, and such as programs that we in the Official Opposition brought forward into this House as really solid, good ideas that would help the critical area in meeting the emission targets, and that's on the consumer side.

We talked repeatedly about seeing some kind of a management fund that would address retrofits, and addressing retrofits at both a government standard and an industry standard and a consumer standard meets the targets for us. That's what we need to do, and it also has many, many other spin-off benefits. What we do by retrofitting all these buildings and homes is stimulate the economy on the labour side. We then see an active participation of tradespeople coming in and working on the retrofits, and that would be a positive place for this province to go, but they chose not to do that.

What we did see is government taking care of itself in terms of taking a look at government retrofits in the government buildings, and I hope that as they proceed with that, Mr. Speaker, they will give more than simple lip service to the legislation and practices they have in terms of fair wages legislation. We expect to see in these government retrofits tradespeople being hired at fair wages, wages that include things like benefit packages and the kinds of compensations that have been negotiated and agreed to by unions in the past rather than bringing in substandard labour. This is a case of you get what you pay for, and if we want long-term viability in this particular instance, then that's certainly something we have to take a look at.

So the government recognizes the value of retrofits because they're doing it in their own public buildings. But what about access for industry and for individuals? Not everybody has a handy $20,000 or $100,000 in their back pockets to do these retrofits. We talked about how it's very easy to facilitate them. In fact, every state in the United States of America has a retrofit program that addresses both consumer needs and industry needs. Where's ours? It's easy to put one in place.

It doesn't have to be a granting program. It can easily be a loan situation where you get interest-free loans, but let people retrofit their homes. Let them be able to bring their houses up to a standard where they can cut down on coal-burning fuels, save themselves some energy costs, save our natural resources, employ people in this province, and, as a consequence of that, lower CO₂ emissions. Now, wouldn't that just be too easy for this government to do? No. Instead they decide to bring this kind of legislation forward.

There is more work that can be done in areas that should have been addressed, and with this one it's particularly the fault of Alberta Energy that it hasn't happened. We know that for a very, very long time CASA and other organizations – industry organizations, environmentalists – have tried to work to reduce gas flaring in this province. We know that there is scientific evidence, that there is conclusive anecdotal evidence that gas flaring causes all kinds of problems, environmental and health hazards. CASA has been working for a long time, for about 10 years, to be able to make those changes, with the goal of eliminating gas flaring in this province, and we're getting closer. We're getting closer all the time. If I remember correctly, over the past 10 years gas flaring has been reduced by more than 50 percent for sure, maybe more than 60 percent, but we need to have that final push happen to have it reduced.

So how does that relate to climate change and CO₂ emissions? It's quite significant. What we find is that the emissions given off by the flares are at least, by anybody's standards, 21 times worse than general CO₂ emissions into the atmosphere. So if you could reduce those emissions to zero, then you would be well on your way to making a substantial contribution to our targets in this province for CO₂ emissions, plus we would make a substantial contribution to health concerns and environmental concerns associated with gas flaring.

What's required to make that final push? It's very simple, Mr. Speaker. All we need is for the Department of Energy to agree to very small rebates for these companies that have the flares occurring, and they're saying that they're not prepared to go that extra mile for these companies. To get that extra 40 percent reduction in the flaring, the companies are going to have to bring in costly equipment with maintenance factors and recovery factors, things like that. So they're looking for some kind of financial incentive to push in the next wave, not one that makes the money, just one that's cost recovery based, and Alberta Energy won't do that. I can't understand why, because the spin-off benefits even from their perspective are substantial if we put these new practices in place. We're employing people in an industry, we're recovering the flared material, we're reducing CO₂ emissions and meeting our targets, and we're improving the health of Albertans.

Sometimes it's more than the initial loss of funds that the government would receive. You have to take a look at what the reciprocal benefit is in other industries making money and being taxable and the other health benefits and long-term environmental benefits for our province. Instead of the Minister of Environment aggressively pursuing that with the Minister of Energy, we see him spending his time bringing in a bill like this. So I say that that's really too bad and that is time not well spent and energy not well spent, and it's not where we want this government to go.

We want this government to take some leadership. We want them to be bringing forward a program that is achievable, a program that can be endorsed and accepted by the federal government as they bring in their targets. They can do this in a leadership role. They have the opportunity, but for some strange reason they're choosing not to, so we would like to see the Minister of Environment respond to that and tell us why.

We've seen a lot of documentation between the two departments, Environment and Energy, over the years that says that it's very easy to meet these targets by just putting a few practices in place instead of this particular bill. I would like the Minister of Environment to stand up and tell us why he still needs this legislation, why they did not do this through the EPA framework, why he has not moved forward on really good ideas like retrofit programs for everybody, not just government buildings, and why he is not more aggressively pursuing the Department of Energy on those small concessions for the gas flaring companies so that they can reduce those particular emissions to zero, which has always been the long-term objective of CASA and industry in this province.

I think I will keep my remarks to those issues at this particular time because we have access to the Minister of Environment this afternoon, and I'm hoping that he will be able to easily answer those questions.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. Any questions for the hon. member?

There being none, the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. I want to raise just a couple of comments in second reading of Bill 37, Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. You know, Mr. Speaker, I can tell that we're kind of having a slow start to this fall session, because we just had the member sponsoring the bill, I'm sure – I am positive – carefully plod his way through last year's speech about this bill, and it didn't kind of get the updates that have happened since the last time we were in here, and not many people seemed to have noticed that as we all sat here. It contained the same old tired factoids that have long since been disproved and aren't being used again, and it's like, yo, come on; let's get with it.

A couple of things strike me about this bill. In the preamble it talks about certainty, that this bill will bring certainty to the process, yet as I go through it, what I keep seeing is a lack of certainty. Once again this has to do with this government's incredible penchant for putting everything into regulations, which they can control out of sight of the public and out of public scrutiny. So we want to have some certainty in the bill, where anybody can go on-line, download the bill, read it, and know for sure exactly what the government intends because things are actually in the bill, but no. We have things that are going to be decided later if they want or by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, Executive Council, much of which the public never gets to see, or maybe in regulations, which are more difficult to see. That happens in quite a few areas, and as I go along further, I'll come back to the specifics on that.

The second part of this. This was about ratifying Kyoto, and this is this government: we don't want to do that, so we'll give you a replacement. [interjections] The Minister of Economic Development once again is preferring to heckle me while I speak rather than actually using his time to get up and debate on the record. So a pretty typical fall session so far, Mr. Speaker.

What's wrong with this is that I still think that Albertans do want to see very strong commitment to Kyoto. You can poll as many darn times as you want. Frankly, I don't put a lot of faith in polls. This government, sure enough, have enough resources that they just kept polling and polling and polling until they in fact got the results that they wanted, which told them – and they are more than happy, I'm sure, to repeat this – that Albertans were not in favour of ratifying Kyoto. I disagree, respectfully, but I disagree because I think they are in favour of ratifying Kyoto. I think they are in favour of much stronger regulations, and I spoke about that when we were debating Bill 36.

Here's an example of this. I think people are willing to do things in their personal life to commit to something, a larger picture like the Kyoto protocol. But what we've learned as we've come along is that individuals are kind of, well, lazy, and until it's made really easy, we tend not to take advantage of things. But knowing that and knowing the history of that, why aren't we taking advantage, with this government version of their response to Kyoto, to put some of those processes in place that make it easy for Albertans to help contribute to this? One of the arguments that was often used a year ago when this first of all really came to a head was that it didn't matter what industry did, it didn't matter what the government did, that it was such a drop in the bucket it really wouldn't change until every single person stopped driving their car or until individuals severely curtailed the use of automobiles and internal combustion engines essentially, because that's what was really contributing.

Okay; let's take that as a premise then. If that's really how we're going to achieve this reduction or, as I prefer, elimination of greenhouse gases and if we believe that this is all about individuals driving their cars less, then why is there nothing in this bill? Why is there no promotion from this government for the things that would lead to that? Let's talk about how much money is going to municipalities in support of their transportation and infrastructure budgets. Has there been an increase there? Has there been assistance there? Big fat no. No way. Yet if we want people to drive their cars less, wouldn't we need more public transportation? Wouldn't encouragement of that be helpful? Of course it would. But do we see that kind of commitment? No. Not from this government. No, no. Yet that's the very argument they use with me, that nothing they do would make any difference, that it's up to the individual.

Okay; then let's look at helping the individual to drive their car less and use public transportation more or, heck, walk. We've had a $3 million ad campaign come out of the Department of Health and Wellness about how people should be healthier and should walk more. Do we make it more attractive for people to walk around, especially in the urban areas? No. Do we have any support from the government that comes forward in support of an initiative to help the municipalities to upgrade or enhance or have more walkways and parkways for people to get out and do that? No. Nothing beyond what we've already got and no more initiatives for it. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Centre has the floor. In a few minutes there will be an opportunity for you to ask questions or make comments. Please respect her time to speak today. Thank you.

Hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, a former colleague always advised me, "Try and engage them, Laurie," and I'm always pleased when I see that, in fact, I have managed to engage people. I see that as a positive sign. So thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That colleague, of course, is the former Member for Calgary-Buffalo, whom you all remember with great fondness. He engaged you all so often.

So do we see the government offering any of the positive steps that could be taken in supporting their argument that it's really not them? Not the ones that we've talked about. Not a real help to the municipalities as far as public transportation and changes in infrastructure that make it easier or more attractive for people to buy into some of that.

My colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie spoke at length about retrofit programs. There's another thing. Okay; the onus is all supposed to be on the individual. If you buy the government's argument, industry has nothing to do with this. Individuals have got to do it all. Okay; where's the retrofit program? Could people be doing something to retrofit their homes, their cabins, their rental properties? Of course they could. Do they want to? Yeah, I think they probably do want to. But how difficult are we going to make it for people? Are we going to give them any incentives? Are we going to give them any certainty that if they invest in that, in fact they would reap some sort of benefit from it?

Well, now I'm wandering close to a debate about electrical deregulation, which is a perfect example of the need for people at this point to conserve, to do whatever they can in their home lives to conserve use of energy, to insulate as far as gas prices are concerned so that their gas bills aren't as high. Anything there? Nope. Not from this government. So all the onus is placed on the individual, and then that's it. Walk away. Wash your hands.

But do we get any certainty from the government in this bill? No, we don't. Let's look at some of the areas where there's no certainty. There's no incentive for people to try and buy into this one. Do we get any sort of certainty around definitions? A key point here is that the meat of the bill is revolving around emissions per unit of GDP, yet is there any kind of certainty there? No, there isn't. We're in second reading here, so I'm talking about the principle of the bill. I don't want to go into the word-by-word analysis, but when we come to Committee of the Whole, you know, there's a place that we can look.

Once again, definition is not in the bill. It's in regulations, or maybe sometime the minister might feel like doing something, and possibly we might all hear about it. That doesn't give certainty to anybody.

What about areas where we have the preamble of the bill, which of course, as we know, is not enforceable? It's a context. But what's said in the preamble of the bill is not something that you can follow up with and say, "You didn't do this," because it's not in fact part of the actual bill. It is a preamble to the bill. But it's telling. It's very telling.

We have things like: "the Government of Alberta recognizes that the management of emissions of carbon dioxide, methane and other specified gases will serve to protect the Alberta environment." Management, not reduction. Management. And as I read through this, in a number of places where we should be talking about reduction or elimination, we talk about management. It's like: okay; we're going to have you drive off a cliff, but instead of not having you drive off the cliff, we'll have you drive off the cliff at 50 miles an hour instead of at 100 miles an hour because that's going to manage the situation. Or we're going to poison you, and you're going to need so many parts per millilitre or whatever in your system. Instead of giving you the total fatal dosage all at once, well, no, no, we're going to manage this situation à la Bill 37. We're going to drip it through your IV so it takes you much longer to get poisoned. We're going to give it to you at, you know, 20 parts per millilitre per hour instead of much longer.

So they are interesting choices that the government makes about how they will attempt to find something that's supposed to be as good as the Kyoto protocol, because that's what this is all about.

Somehow the government is going to manage all of this for us. It doesn't mean eliminate. It doesn't mean reduce. It means manage. Well, I haven't had great faith in government's management of many other things; for example, electrical deregulation or auto insurance have not been good examples of government management. Rather, it's been crisis that has been unable to be accomplished, and is that what we are creating here with Bill 37?

The concept of being able to accomplish this but putting a proviso in place that says "without impairing or impacting economic growth": well, that's ridiculous. Any progression forward in anything you're going to try and do is going to consume some resources that one could argue could have been put towards the existing thing. I mean, if you're going to look into any kind of research – and we've got a whole ministry here of research and information and technology and science and whatever. If we don't move forward and invest resources in that, we just stay behind, and eventually that really impacts our – what's the wording? – economic growth. So, of course, you have to invest in things like that, and to say that you're not going to invest in it I think will hold Alberta back.

When we were debating Bill 37, I was talking about the need to balance what has been the freedom for development that's been given to the industry against the needs and protection of the health of Albertans. I do not see that coming into play with this bill.

We have: "Let us keep doing what we're doing, and we're going to manage this, and we won't reduce it, but somehow we'll hurt you slower. We'll hurt you at less speed. We'll hurt you over a longer period of time." This doesn't mean that you're going to be reducing anything. You know, I'm just disappointed. I thought there was more brainpower over there. I thought, certainly, there's lots of resources in this government. Good heavens; you've got a Public Affairs Bureau that's got a multimillion dollar budget and 210 people on their staff, as far as I know. All they do and their whole job is to make you look good. I would have thought that they could have given you some more help here.

Dr. Taylor: They did a pretty good job with 74 of us and seven of you.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, yes. Well, again from the Minister of Environment is the old and getting very tired: oh, well, we won 74 seats, so that must make us best. Well, I think the proof of the pudding is always in the eating. There's another election coming, and frankly it's bills like Bill 37 that are really going to help me. Again, the proof of the pudding is in the eating, so the minister and I will have this discussion in another – what? – 18 months, and then we'll see whether things like electrical deregulation and auto insurance and overcrowded classrooms and a refusal to adhere to the Kyoto protocol will help or hinder.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in. Any questions or comments for the Member for Edmonton-Centre?

There being none, does anybody else wish to speak on this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and participate in the debate on Bill 37, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. It was certainly interesting to listen to speakers on this side of the House and the speaker this afternoon from the government side of the House.

Before I forget, I think initially I would have to note for the record, Mr. Speaker, that this government talks about the cost to the provincial economy and the cost to the province of the Kyoto protocol. I believe still on the Alberta government web site is a statement that the protocol would cost Alberta over $8 billion and thousands of jobs per year, while electricity deregulation, another policy of this government that is under a great deal of scrutiny and a great deal of suspicion by Albertans, has cost consumers of this province $8 billion and counting.

One has to be very careful. Last year in the debate on the Kyoto protocol, if one was to listen to certain individuals, the economy here was going to grind to a halt. That, I'm pleased to note, has certainly not happened. I hope we have many, many years and many generations into the future of positive economic growth. But our prosperity is dependent in a lot of ways on our relationship to the rest of the world. When you look at Alberta and you look at our boundaries, air sheds and weather patterns don't stop at the border. We in this province are a part of a much bigger world, and we have to participate and we have to co-operate with others in this bigger world.

When you look at some of the recent weather-related events in this province, there are certain . . . [interjection] The hon. Attorney General and Minister of Justice is talking about climate change and weather patterns, and the hon. minister is absolutely right. These issues are connected, Mr. Speaker. When you consider, for instance, our recent droughts and how they've affected our agricultural community, how they've affected our forest products industry, and we look at the significant amount of tax dollars that have gone into providing financial assistance to the victims of those natural disasters, we have to start taking climate change seriously. There could be a day when we have no money to finance these programs.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Look at what happened in British Columbia this summer. The interior of B.C. had one of the driest summers on record. You look at the change in weather patterns and rainfall in Vancouver. Who would ever think that there would be the debate in the city of Vancouver that they would have to ration water? But they actually entertained that this summer. So whether it's our neighbours or whether it's ourselves, we are all affected by this.

Is this bill the right way to go? We're part of the bigger world, and we have to recognize that. We have to make some changes. We look, for instance, at our tourism industry. Snow pillows, as people describe them in the Canadian Rockies: how will the snow pillows change with our changing climate? How will that affect the ski industry, for instance? Will it shorten the season and, as a result, reduce the economic prosperity of this province? There are many things to consider.

We can also look at reducing greenhouse gases. Perhaps in the near future we could use the sequestration of CO₂. The technology around that could be an export of this province. I know that the hon. Minister of Economic Development is looking for ways to have economic diversification in this province, and I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, to that hon. member that his department pursue this. Many American states are using sequestration of CO₂ as a means for enhanced oil recovery. We have our coal-fired generators here. Perhaps we should be looking at capturing and compressing the flue gas stream and using it to have enhanced oil recovery in the Leduc oil field, the Bonnie Glen oil field, the Pembina oil field: some of the aging oil formations that are still producing in this province.

So Albertans and climate change could be a very positive thing. It doesn't necessarily have to mean that our economic well-being is going to come to an end. The world is always changing, and I think, Mr. Speaker, it would be prudent of us to participate and change and come up with some good, solid ideas and perhaps sell those ideas to the rest of the world.

When we look at the main questions that surround the whole ratification of the Kyoto protocol debate – and there has been an expression across the way that perhaps it's not true, but is global warming and climate change a real issue? Mr. Speaker, it certainly is. And is global warming and climate change a result of greenhouse gas emissions? Well, how do we reduce our greenhouse gas emissions? Other speakers have talked about some of the challenges and some of the suggestions that were made to do this. They certainly have ideas on how we can tackle the issue and reduce climate change or global warming without sacrificing our economic viability.

Now, there seems to be a general consensus in the scientific community, in the popular communities on the first two questions on global warming, and there's a recognition that it is a serious issue and it is a primary cause of environmental change. Some of the organizations that have been contacted in regard to Bill 37, it is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, are the Pembina Institute, the Parkland Institute, which is another crackerjack outfit, the Environmental Law Centre, the Alberta Federation of Labour, and Albertans for Ratifying Kyoto.

Now, each and every individual or group of individuals is expected with an issue like this to make a presentation, and we should respect all opinions because all opinions in a democracy, Mr. Speaker, matter. When we have only one side of the issue promoted, then perhaps there is not a balanced debate. A year after we had this emotionally charged debate on the Kyoto protocol – it wasn't a year after; it's getting close to a year – things have quieted down, so to say, on the western front. There is a realization that we have to work with the rest of the world to solve this problem, and I think that deep down this government is willing to co-operate and to work with other jurisdictions to ensure that generations in the future have a climate that is suitable, and some scientists are talking almost in alarming terms about how much more rapid climate change is than they first anticipated.

I hope that when we support the whole scientific notion of climate change, we not only have a look at this bill but its cousin, Bill 32, and consider our place not only in this country, in the western part of the continent of North America, but also in the world and recognize that this bill does not achieve any of the meaningful progress that we need to make on reducing the level of greenhouse gas emitted from Alberta. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I am wrong, but I'm suspicious that this will allow emissions in Alberta to continue to increase.

Now, other speakers have talked about the legal framework that is needed for action and whether or not in their view it is reflected in this bill, but there appear to be virtually no specifics in the bill that allow an evaluation for the efficiency of this bill in reducing Alberta's greenhouse gas emissions. Again, I see the habit here of delegating so much authority to regulation that a lot of this will be done by cabinet and the respective minister to operate without any public scrutiny.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to take my seat. I thank you for the time to get those concerns about Bill 37 on the record, and I will cede the floor to another colleague. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there are five minutes available under Standing Order 29(2)(a) should members wish to take advantage of it.

Will there be additional speakers, or should I call on the Minister of Environment to close the debate? The Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do wish to make some comments. It is precisely because there is a policy vacuum in this country right now that we need this bill so that Alberta can retain its leadership on climate change action, and I'll talk about that in a minute.

Right now this government, industry right across the country, all the various provinces don't know who is running the federal government climate change plan. Is it NRCan? Nobody knows. Is it the Department of the Environment? Nobody knows. Is it the PCO, Privy Council office? Nobody knows. Is it the Prime Minister's office? Nobody knows.

An Hon. Member: Which Prime Minister?

Dr. Taylor: Well, the old Prime Minister, not the new Prime Minister. It's perhaps nice to have two Prime Ministers in the country, but hopefully we'll soon get to one. But nobody really knows.

Now, I hope that with the advent of the new Prime Minister this will all change and there will be a very clear direction – [interjection] well, it's Christmastime, member – that the direction will change and with the new Prime Minister there will be actually meaningful negotiations with the province. So that is why, Mr. Speaker, we need this bill.

I'll give you a couple of examples. In our climate change action plan we talked about an emission intensity target for industry, and originally that wasn't acceptable to the federal government. Now we hear the current Prime Minister and the second Prime Minister, the new Prime Minister, both talking about emission intensity as a reasonable measure. In our climate change action plan that we introduced in May of 2002, we talked about investments in technology. Now we hear the federal government and their various agencies talking about investments in technology. If you look at what the federal government and the various groups that are speaking – as I say, we're not sure who controls their plans in the current federal government, but if you look at what the various agencies are saying, you can almost take it word for word out of Alberta's action plan on climate change.

Mr. Speaker, as I say, there is this policy vacuum in Canada right now, so by us being the leader, once again we have the chance and the opportunity to influence the federal government. Particularly as there is a change in leadership coming, we have a real opportunity by going to Mr. Martin and his colleagues now and saying: "Look; Alberta is ahead on this. We've led the country not only on planning for climate change, but also we've led the country on actions." I'm hoping that Mr. Martin will pay attention and Mr. Martin will actually ask the provinces, all provinces, not just Alberta, to sit down with the federal government and have a meaningful discussion about climate change, to sit down with the industries involved and the federal government and have a meaningful discussion about action plans on how to reduce greenhouse gases.

We need to be very clear on this. If we look at the forestry industry for instance, the federal government recently signed an MOU with the Forest Products Association of Canada. Now, the Alberta Forest Products Association was opposed to it, but it was signed anyway. What happens, Mr. Speaker, is that the federal government has signed an agreement that affects provincial management of forest lands. I don't think they're going to let people cut in Banff national park.

An Hon. Member: You wouldn't think.

Dr. Taylor: You wouldn't think, so it obviously has to be related to the provincial lands, and who controls forest management agreements in this province? Not the federal government, not the department of energy, not the Department of the Environment in the federal government, not the PCO or the PMO, Mr. Speaker, but the government of Alberta. For them to sign an MOU without ever consulting the government of Alberta, whose land they're having an effect on or our forest management practices, is totally inappropriate, and I hope the members opposite will stand up and say that as well, that it is a totally inappropriate procedure.

Now, what we're asking for and what we're hoping for with the new Prime Minister is, as I've said, that he will include all provinces, not just Alberta but all provinces, on any future action and any future discussion on MOUs or agreements with industry.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are taking leadership. We are saying that we're the only government in the country that's thought this out. We're the only government in the country that's prepared not only to talk about leadership in forms of legislative action but take and commit financial resources to leadership. It's not well recognized perhaps even by the members opposite and not well recognized in the country that we have taken more action as a provincial government than any other government in the country. We are spending more money on climate change initiatives than any other government in the country, and that includes the federal government. The federal government has said that they're going to spend this, that they're going to spend that. They had one minor announcement where the federal Minister of the Environment announced like 10 programs. I think he had 5 million bucks to spend on 10 programs. So we are very clearly leaders.

I'll just give you some examples of how we are taking action. We have the municipal energy efficiency trust program, that was developed through the good graces of the Minister of Finance and Municipal Affairs and the Department of Environment, a $100 million commitment to do exactly what my critic from the Liberal opposition has asked for. It allows for municipalities to upgrade or plan new buildings that are energy efficient.

Mr. Speaker, we've allowed a CO₂ royalty credit to energy companies – and this is out of the Department of Energy and the good graces and the wisdom and forward-looking Minister of Energy – that allows energy companies to have a CO₂ energy credit if they deal with CO₂. We have allowed companies to invest. The good Minister of Innovation and Science, excellent minister that he is, has allowed and created the Alberta Energy Research Institute to look at reductions of CO₂, to look at using it for enhanced oil recovery. The member obviously doesn't know that we, this government, and other organizations including the federal government are working in Weyburn, Saskatchewan, right now using CO₂ for enhanced oil recovery. So we are doing that.

Through Innovation and Science – and perhaps the Minister of Innovation and Science would like to speak about it – we are looking at clean coal technology, and in fact Don Lowry, the head of EPCOR, has said recently that they expect to have clean coal technology in Alberta plants within seven to 10 years. Mr. Speaker, we're part of a North American clean coal coalition, and what we will do is we will reduce greenhouse gases from thermal electrical generation through the clean coal coalition. This is because we are spending money in R and D, we are spending money in research, and we are partnering with jurisdictions and companies to do that.

Another thing I would point out, Mr. Speaker: green power. This government through the good vision of the Minister of Infrastructure has made the largest purchase of green power in North American history. It was hundreds of millions of dollars, and that comes into effect in 2005, not 2010, not 2020 but in 2005, the largest purchase of green power. We are 9 percent of the population. The federal government can't come close to our purchase of green power, not even close. In fact, our purchase of green power is so large . . .

An Hon. Member: How big is it?

Dr. Taylor: Hundreds of millions of dollars, Mr. Speaker. Two hundred and fifty thousand megawatt-hours. Ninety percent of the power that this government utilizes will be green power in 2005. Forty-five percent of that is wind power – and that has nothing to do with this Legislative Assembly. We are creating a huge wind farm in southwestern Alberta just to supply the province, our needs, with wind power. I believe it's 150 windmills.

An Hon. Member: You should see them. They're beautiful.

Dr. Taylor: A member on this side has recognized the beauty. It's like a work of art to drive out there, Mr. Speaker. I would encourage all of you from northern Alberta who haven't seen that work of art to come and see it. It's a wonderful thing to see.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, 45 percent of the power is going to be biomass. We have created a biomass industry, the first one in Canada, in this province by this provincial government stepping up to the plate and saying: "Yes, we will be leaders. We will have green power in this province." The first biomass plant is being built as we speak in Grande Prairie, I believe, or the northern Alberta area. [interjection] I was just corrected: it is Grande Prairie.

Vegreville is coming as well. [interjection] Excellent. The minister from Vegreville just pointed out that the Hutterite colony in his area is using biomass to generate all their electricity. If one wants to see a creative product, a creative process, one can go out to the minister's riding. I'm sure he'll take them to – I'm not sure of the name of the Hutterite colony – the Viking Hutterite colony. He will take you out to that Viking Hutterite colony and show you how progressive and how we can work with biomass.

So, Mr. Speaker, this government is the leader. We're far ahead of any jurisdiction in the country, including the federal government, not only in planning, which we need to go for, but taking action. Also, monitoring. We continue to monitor the process and what companies are doing and asking companies to go forward with the reduction of greenhouse gases. In fact, about 18 months ago I asked CASA, the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, to generate new standards on coal-fired or thermoelectric generation as well as natural gas, and it's my understanding that within several weeks or perhaps a month at most I'm going to get a report from CASA which sets out those new standards. So once again the federal government has not set new standards on thermoelectric generation. Alberta is in the lead.

Now that I've enlightened them, I encourage the members opposite to support this bill, to stand up at Committee of the Whole and say: "Yes, the Minister of Environment has convinced us. Yes, we will support this bill."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, this certainly is an interactive place.

Bill 38

Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move second reading of the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2003.

The intent of this legislative amendment is to prevent potential adverse consequences for dependent children of a deceased worker. Under the Workers' Compensation Act as amended by the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, both legal spouses and interdependent partners are eligible for pension benefits upon the death of a worker. The pension is payable to the spouse or partner for the benefit of the spouse or partner and the dependent children of the worker who were all living in the same household both prior to and after the death.

This is where the problem lies, Mr. Speaker. If for some reason the children do not live with the partner or spouse after the death but go live somewhere else, let's say with the grandparents, then it's the spouse or partner who gets all the benefits. That spouse or partner may choose to share the pension benefits with these children, but the partner is not legally obliged to do so. There is a chance that the children will receive nothing.

In most instances children continue living with the spouse following the death of the worker, but this may not be the case with partners or with spouses who are nonbiological parents or step-parents. A partner or spouse may not retain custody of the children after the death, or the child may not want to live with his or her parent's partner or spouse. So if the children go to live elsewhere, they lose the benefit of the WCB pension. As it stands by law, that pension can only be guaranteed to benefit the children if they continue living with the surviving partner or spouse. This new amendment is similar to WCB's current authority to divert worker benefits to the spouse or children of a worker where that worker is not honouring the terms of an alimony or maintenance order.

This amendment also is intended to fix a potential problem. It will allow the WCB to divert some or all of the pension from partners or spouses to the children. It will ensure that the dependent children of a deceased worker are looked after financially.

Mr. Speaker, this is an opportunity to ensure financial protection for all dependent children of a deceased worker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise at this time in regard to the debate on Bill 38, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2003.

First, I would like to express my gratitude to the hon. member and also to the minister and the department that are in charge of the WCB and the Appeals Commission, the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. We certainly were grateful for the opportunity to review this legislation, and after the review and the explanation by the minister it is certainly legislation that I think is very easy to support for the obvious reasons that were outlined by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. Whenever we are looking at ensuring that dependent children of deceased workers will receive Workers' Compensation Board pension benefits, Bill 38 is certainly legislation that needs to be supported.

From this side of the Assembly in regard to Her Majesty's Official Opposition I would like to say at this time in conclusion that this is worthwhile legislation. I hope that all members of the Assembly endorse it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, some days it just pays to come to work in this place because good things happen, and Bill 38, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, is one of those things. So I'm glad that I came to work today so I could be here and participate in the passage of second reading of this act.

Mr. Strang: Question.

Ms Blakeman: You know, I'd actually like to hear the Member for West Yellowhead debate sometime instead of just commenting from the back row. Just being here isn't enough. You've got to engage.

But the point is that the world has moved on, and there were some assumptions in the existing legislation that assumed a sort of nuclear family that still exists, certainly, but not in the percentage numbers that it used to, and we have a variety of families now. This Legislature has passed the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, which recognizes different kinds of families and partnerships, and this act incorporates that and updates the Workers' Compensation Act to take those other kinds of living arrangements into consideration.

Unfortunately, this is no longer a society where you're always going to have two parents that are together with the children. I mean, often the children are living with one parent or another. Occasionally you've got this joint parenting where they're with one parent for a week and another parent for a week. So this legislation, which is ensuring that if the children lived with a deceased worker prior to the death but don't live with a surviving spouse or partner or adult interdependent partner afterwards, the children are still going to be looked after, as will the spouse, which is excellent.

Now, one of the things I am interested in is that it indicates in the act that this amending act comes into force on the coming into force of Section 81 of the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act. If I could just get clarification: as soon as this act is passed, do we have this in place then? When the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act was proclaimed, there were a number of acts that were tagging behind where it wasn't possible to put them into play at the same time, mostly to do with situations that would come up when we passed through an election process or an income tax year-end, that sort of thing. It was waiting for other things to evolve in a natural process, and I'm just checking that this would come into effect as soon as it's passed, then, given the reference to the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act. So that's the only question that I have with this.

I'm pleased to see this kind of forward thinking. I don't see that from this government as much as I'd like to, so when I do see it, I think I should be encouraging the government to do it more often. So thank you for bringing this forward, and I'm pleased to support it in second reading.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 is available.

Additional speakers? Shall I call on the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan to conclude the debate at second reading?

Mr. Lougheed: Question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a second time]

5:00head: Government Bills and Orders
head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 6 Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move an amendment, which I believe you have at the table, with respect to Bill 6, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, and would be prepared to speak to it as it's circulated or after it's circulated, at your pleasure.

The Deputy Chair: Just hold for a minute while it gets circulated. Hon. minister, you may proceed now.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm moving the amendment, which I presume would be amendment A1, to the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, Bill 6. It essentially has two pieces to the amendment. The first piece would be to strike out section 1(2). Members will remember that in Bill 6 we had proposed to make an amendment to the Judicature Act to delete the requirement or the section which provides that "the Judicial Council may (a) consider proposed appointments of persons as masters, judges and justices of the peace."

In speaking to that, I'd indicated that I was hoping to consolidate the process where we have Provincial Court judges appointed from a list nominated by the Provincial Court Nominating Committee. The process as it currently stands is that people apply, they are screened by the Judicial Council, and they go onto a list. Then when we go to an appointment, we ask the Provincial Court Nominating Committee to review the list and to essentially shortlist and nominate six applicants, and then we choose from that list of six.

The only concern that has been raised over the three years that that committee has been in place has been that it's a dual process, with two interviews instead of one. The concept was to merge the two committees into one for the purposes of doing that nomination. In discussions with the courts – and they were supported by the Canadian Bar Association – there seems to be some concern about the so-called independence of the committee in that on the Judicial Council there are more members on the council who are there by reason of their position than by reason of appointment by the minister, and on the PCNC there would be more people there by reason of appointment by the minister than by reason of their position. That caused some concern.

Rather than engage in any concern of that nature, I've agreed to withdraw that amendment and to continue with the two-committee process rather than a one-committee process, and that is the rationale for the amendment that's being brought forward, to essentially leave the status quo. We will accomplish what we desire to accomplish in terms of having all of the viewpoints at the same table by expanding the membership of the Provincial Court Nominating Committee.

With respect to the second part of the amendment there are in the Justice Statutes Amendment Act amendments to the Petty Trespass Act and the Trespass to Premises Act. After circulating the bill, putting the bill on the table last spring, we had a number of consultations with police, with individual citizens who have taken the time to write and provide their viewpoints, and other reviews. So we're bringing in a couple of amendments to react to the consultations that we've had and to the input we've had from the community to increase the proposed penalty to $2,000 from $1,000, essentially to change the process and really the whole concept.

I won't go through the amendments in detail, but it's to change the whole concept so that an individual who knows or ought to know that they're trespassing on land is subject to a charge and a penalty under the Petty Trespass Act or under the Trespass to Premises Act and so that a landowner is entitled to have charges laid under the act with respect to that type of trespass.

Now, in order to make certain that people are aware that this is not intended to in any way change normal practices, there's an amending clause which provides for a person entering onto the land using a normal walkway for the purposes of gaining access to a house and those sorts of provisions, just to make it clear that we're not talking about the normal, everyday actions of normal people's lives. Really what we're trying to do is to strengthen the Petty Trespass Act and the Trespass to Premises Act so that landowners do not have to put up with people going on their land, perhaps cutting their fences or damaging crops or in some other way interfering with their normal use and enjoyment of the land, without having some recourse.

I would commend the amendments that we're proposing to the House. I think it clearly strengthens both of the those acts, makes them more accessible to the people who were intended to use them and I think will address the concerns that were raised by members of this Assembly with me last year, which we've attempted to remedy with Bill 6 and now are making yet better given the feedback that we've had.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to engage in this debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill 6, Justice Statutes Amendment Act. I noticed in reviewing my comments from second reading of this act way back in February that the very section that I had raised a concern about, the very item that I felt needed to be worked on or be subjected to a second thought or a second look is, in fact, the very one that is included in the amendment that the minister has brought before us today. So there you go. It's always worth while being an opposition person getting up and putting that on the record, because sometimes it happens.

I'm sure I can't take full credit for this. I'm sure there were many other people who were raising concerns about it. Nonetheless, it's part of my process to check with the stakeholders, and in fact that was the information that I'd been given, that there was a concern about removing the Judicial Council from the process for appointing Provincial Court judges and masters. I did raise that on February 25, and obviously while we have not been sitting in the House, the same points have been made to the minister. Congratulations to him for having understood the concern and for taking moves to correct it.

Oh, my goodness. That's twice in one day this government has done something good. Oh, my goodness. I hardly know what to say. They might be on a roll. We should sit all night. The legislation might get better. I live in hope.

Since we are in Committee of the Whole, I'm wondering if I can ask the minister who was driving the request to change the Petty Trespass Act. Is this just a long-standing irritation that has escalated or something that's been on the books to be addressed for a long period of time? I'm just wondering who drove this. I don't have any problems with the changes that have been made, and in fact I'm particularly supportive of increasing the fines for first offence to $2,000 and for second offence to $5,000. I think we have to get people to understand that privacy is very important to people and that if they contravene that, if they come onto their land, there are consequences for refusing to obey the law.

As a snowmobiler this will concern me. [interjections] My colleague the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is going to get up and talk about snowmobile fatalities later, I'm sure.

This is exactly the kind of situation that I would find myself in, and I've always been more than willing and felt it appropriate, actually, to approach a landowner and say: may we snowmobile on your land? You know, you have to understand that they have plans for that land. You don't know what's on it. You don't know if there's anything special about it. You need to go and ask their permission. That's just common courtesy at the most basic. But lots of people don't adhere to that, and that's why we need the law.

I think if you're going to have the law and you mean it, then you need to put in place both the carrot and the stick, and you need to have a big enough stick that it's worth while, that people understand it. So I'm quite happy to see the $2,000 first offence and $5,000 for a second offence brought in as an amendment.

The issue about understanding that something is private land I also think is worth while spelling out. That's an argument that I've heard used in the past: "Oh, well, it didn't look like it was private land, so we didn't look for anybody to ask permission of." But, you know, in this day and age I think there are a number of signals that you can pick up, if you pay attention, to understand that something is private land: it's under cultivation, it's being used as a woodlot, there's been some sort of construction on it, there are some roadways, there are fences, not to mention the posting of signs. So I don't have any problem with that.

As well, many different ways of posting it now. I'm thinking that, yes, there's another $2,000 fine if someone removes, damages, or defaces any of the posted signage. Again, I think you've got to make it so that people understand you mean business. So that's a perfectly appropriate amendment to be bringing in.

I had spoken at length in second reading on the other bills that are included in this because in fact Bill 6 amends the Judicature Act, Petty Trespass Act, Trespass to Premises Act, Young Offenders Act, Youth Justice Act. I think that was all that was in here originally. I had spoken at length then, and as I say, the only real issues I had were around the removal of the Judicial Council from the process. I think good arguments have been made, the minister has listened: enough said.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Hancock: Just briefly, one of the questions that I heard in the member's debate was how this was brought forward on the Petty Trespass Act, and I'm delighted to say it was in response to requests from members. In particular, the Member for Little Bow approached me a little over a year ago, I think, or perhaps a little longer, indicating that there was a problem that a constituent had brought forward and was having trouble figuring out how to deal with with respect to people trespassing on land. In that case, I think it was relative to picking up material off the land and perhaps removing it. Other members had raised issues about it, so when we took a look at the act, it made sense to make changes because it was clear that the act was not effective in its present form. So I would have to give credit to the Member for Little Bow for initiating it. Then as we circulated it, it was obvious that other members had concerns as well, so we were able to respond.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: On the bill itself, any further debate?

Bill 41

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be in the House this evening with my colleagues, and we look forward to this excellent debate on Bill 41 – I'm delighted to have the co-operation of my colleagues on this bill and the enthusiasm for it – being the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2003.

This bill was carried over from the spring sitting, so we've had lots of time for people to look at the bill. It's the third phase of corporate income tax reductions as announced in Budget 2003. The amendments cut the general rate to 12 and a half percent, down from 13 percent. They reduce the small business rate to 4 percent, down from 4 and a half percent, and they raise the small business income threshold to $400,000, from $350,000.

Since 2000 we've cut the general rate by almost 20 percent in this province.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Melchin: Twenty percent since 2000, cut the general corporate rates.

I was at a function recently, in fact just this evening, talking to a couple of tax accountants with Deloitte & Touche. These are anecdotal stories, but we see it in the amount of revenue that we collect. Despite reducing the level of our tax rates in the province, both personally and corporately, over time we see that we still collect more in absolute dollars than by having left high rates. From reports of tax accountants and the like, they see substantial inflows of people rearranging their affairs to be resident, either personally or corporately, here in Alberta. People come because we don't make it an impediment or punitive to actually come and invest their capital in Alberta. So we're going to continue in that direction.

In our business plan we hope to introduce further rate reductions next year, as we've talked about in our business plan already, to reduce that rate from 12 and a half to 11 and a half percent.

We recognize that high business taxes do discourage investment. New York fund managers will tell you unequivocally that Canada still has rates that are higher than those in the United States and that they therefore will look to leaving their money in the United States because they get better returns unless we do take steps like we are here in Alberta to make it attractive for their investments. Clearly, we need funds from the largest capital market of the world, the United States, to be attracted to coming here to Alberta. It's for those reasons that this is a major issue and has been supported by our government.

There are a few other technical amendments, deficiencies in the bill, which this is correcting. One is to expand the definition of "permanent establishment" upon which a corporation is required to pay corporate income tax to a certain province. It's to include the place where the corporation has a registered office or the place designated by the corporation as its office or registered office. This ensures that the tax revenue will flow to Alberta rather than to the federal government. Ontario has already introduced such provisions.

It also has, relating to the calculation of the royalty tax deduction, been rewritten to clarify the requirement for separate calculations for unsuccessful and successored pools.

It proposes the repeal of the general anti-avoidance appeals committee. This committee was introduced in 1996, and in conjunction with Alberta's general anti-avoidance rules this is unreasonably applied. The committee has never been used by taxpayers and is no longer needed. We have other methods to resolve those issues.

It corrects technical deficiencies relating to the calculation of the allocation factor in a tax-deferred disposition of assets, commonly referred to as the Quebec shuffle. That's why tax lawyers relating to the bill need to have clarity, to ensure that we get the appropriate amount of taxes that are due when collected.

It also ensures that federal rules applied in determining insurance corporation year-ends are adopted provincially for the purposes of insurance corporations tax.

In short, this bill is a tremendous benefit to all Albertans, Mr. Speaker, and I would encourage all members of this House to give their full support to Bill 41.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to this particular bill tonight. One of the members from the other side was admiring my tie, and it is a gift from the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, and he tied the knot, just so you know.

Dr. Taylor: He didn't tie it tight enough.

Ms Carlson: He didn't tie it tight enough. It's a nice red good old Alberta beef tie, and I'm quite happy to be wearing it in support of the industry.

Now, it's nice to hear the minister bring in the next phase of his tax cuts, Mr. Speaker, and in fact those were the exact tax cuts that we proposed in 1994. In fact, I proposed them in 1994, so thank you for finally getting to them. It's about time we gave small business the break that we promised them 10 years ago.

An Hon. Member: If Ottawa doesn't work, come on over.

Ms Carlson: Not a chance. It takes you guys a long time to catch up. You're not fast enough for me; sorry. [interjection] Something you'll never find out, Mr. Minister.

So in terms of this bill we're happy to see that these amendments have come forward at this particular time, but they're still a ways from what this government promised.

In 2001 they agreed to several recommendations of the Business Tax Review Committee, including cutting the general corporate income tax rate from 15.5 percent to 8 percent and the small business rate from 6 percent to 3 percent and doubling the threshold for small business deductions from $200,000 to $400,000. It really is about time they did that, Mr. Speaker, because businesses who only make $200,000 of income in a year in this kind of an economy are really microbusinesses, and small businesses also deserve to have those kinds of tax cuts. So we're quite pleased to see that they have moved forward with this. However, we are expecting them to keep their promise ultimately and actually get to the rates that they promised. They're getting closer, but they're still not there.

We also see this bill making some changes to the royalty tax deduction and also happy to see that. Some of the language changes are helpful as well.

We've always supported affordable tax relief in order to enhance Alberta's attractiveness to business investment, and that goes beyond just simple tax reductions. That means all kinds of tax relief within the system, which includes user fees and the other kinds of hidden fees that we've seen this government love to build on over the years. We definitely know that small business is the engine of the economy, and a healthy economy and higher employment is only good news for this province and the contribution that we make to Canada as a part of the federation. So we are happy to see this come forward.

We have a couple of questions for this bill, and they're really the same questions that we had last year when we saw the second phase of the bill, Bill 25 at that time. Why has the government delayed full implementation of the corporate tax cuts it announced in 2001?

Now, we hear the Minister of Revenue all the time talking about, you know, do you pay down the debt or do you give the tax cuts or do you inflation-proof the heritage trust fund? Well, we say that you have to keep your promises, and one of them was these tax cuts, and we haven't seen them yet. Of course, it's always nice for the government to be able to reannounce the tax cuts year after year after year, but ultimately they actually have to deliver on what they promise. I hear you laughing, but it's true. How many times has this tax cut been announced since 2001? Twice a year since then. Twice a year. [interjection] Well, maybe I'll just have to learn how to do that; won't I?

We've got a few more questions for the minister on this. We've heard that the Finance minister expects another big surplus at the end of this year, so when can we expect the delivery of these tax cuts? Before the end of this year? Before the end of the first quarter? Will they be in the budget? Can you tell us what you're going to be doing with that?

Where will the retained tax revenue be spent since it's being withheld from businesses at this time? Does it go towards helping the businesses, or does it just go into the general revenue fund? I think I know the answer to that one. It's where all the money goes, just into the general revenue fund, but if we could get that specified, it would be helpful.

We see changes in the language of the royalty tax deduction provision. We would like to ask some questions about royalty tax credits in general. We've seen this province not adopt the federal policy, which comes as no surprise to any of us in here, and that policy states that companies can deduct a resource allowance in an amount equal to 25 percent of their resource profits in calculating taxable income. Instead, if royalties exceed the resource allowance in Alberta, companies may claim an additional deduction equal to the difference between the Crown royalties paid and the resource allowance claimed. This makes royalties fully deductible for Alberta purposes. Any excess not deductible in their year may be carried forward and deducted in a future year. My question is: why does Alberta make extra allowances for oil and gas companies that the federal act does not? There must be a specific reason for that. If we could just have it explained, that would be helpful.

Also, we'd like to know how much money oil and gas companies saved in royalty tax deductions and credits last year, and how is the government ensuring that granting oil and gas companies both royalty tax deductions and royalty tax credits ensures that Albertans receive a fair return on nonrenewable resource developments? So we'd like to know about that, and if there are any other plans for any kinds of royalty deductions or credits in the next year or two, even if there are any general discussions about them, that would be helpful for us to know about, and some justification for why the royalty tax rates are where they are.

When we take a look at the Auditor General's report for 2002-2003, there was a recommendation that the Department of Energy "document and communicate the objectives of the Alberta Royalty Tax Credit program and develop measures to assess whether the program is meeting its objectives." That was recommendation 11 on page 96. So does the minister have plans to do this? As we see it, if you don't define these objectives and we don't see performance measures, then the government may not be making effective decisions, and then we're not getting the best bang for our buck that we possibly could.

I just want to speak for a moment about the appeal committee being abolished. Why is this happening, and then how will businesses pursue appeals in the future?

So those are my key questions at this time, I think. I have some points that I'll bring up later on during committee on the section-by-section analysis. Hopefully, those questions will be answered between now and then. But, generally speaking, we support this particular move. I wish they would get to the bottom, bottom line sooner rather than later, but certainly I'm sure Alberta businesses are happy for what they are getting at this stage.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to rise to speak to Bill 41. However, my view of the provisions of this bill are not in accord with the comments that we've just heard from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Far from it in fact. Alberta New Democrats have been resolute in their opposition to the massive corporate tax break that this government has promised, approximately a billion dollars across four years, and we take some satisfaction that in the last provincial budget the amount of the reduction was half only what had been anticipated, and we would like to think that we deserve some credit for raising opposition to that.

In fact, I'm somewhat surprised at the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie taking credit for initiating this particular tax cut and taking credit on behalf of the Liberal opposition for that because it seems to me that they want to have it both ways. Similar to Alberta New Democrats the Liberal opposition has positions which support increased funding for education, increased funding for health care, and, in fact, increased social spending in general. I certainly appreciate their opposition to the government's attack on middle-class Albertans.

However, one wonders how they're going to pay for it because you cannot afford to freeze tuition. You cannot afford to adequately fund education, health care, and any number of other things and not be able to pay for it unless you're prepared, of course, to perhaps run a deficit, but there's no doubt in our view that the attack on middle-income Albertans through a variety of charges, health care user fees for example, dramatic tuition increases in this province, and a host of other nickel-and-dime and loonie-and-toonie financial attacks are in order to pay for this tax cut for corporations. There is in fact no indication that there is any specific benefit that the government has in mind for this program.

The Auditor General has reminded the government on a couple of occasions at least that the objectives of these tax reductions need to be defined, and the government needs to measure exactly what they are trying to accomplish by bringing in these tax reductions. The government has yet to define the objectives that it is trying to achieve by cutting corporate taxes a billion dollars over four years. I think, then, we're left with the vague notion of a trickle-down economic benefit, which has long since been disproven.

The government likes to take credit for the economic prosperity of this province based on the tax regime. In fact, I have here something from the provincial budget called the Alberta tax advantage which brags that we have the lowest corporate taxes in the country. It says:

Cuts to corporate income taxes started in 2001, and will save Alberta corporations about $435 million in taxes this year. These savings are on top of the savings from cuts to other corporate taxes, such as the elimination of the financial institutions capital tax and the drop in the railway fuel tax.

It goes on to say that:

By following an affordable plan for corporate tax cuts, the government is making sure that it can continue to provide the public services that Albertans value, while laying the groundwork for the growth that will help pay for these services in the future.

Mr. Speaker, this paragraph is absolute nonsense. The government is in fact ensuring that it cannot pay for those services which Albertans desire, and it is one of the reasons why the government is in a financial straitjacket notwithstanding the fact that they have billions of dollars every year in additional surpluses, supposedly unanticipated surpluses. It is why, in fact, when there was a brief dip in the price of natural gas a couple of years ago, the Provincial Treasurer had to cancel preventative programs for aboriginal children and other children at risk. There's a clear and direct correlation between the government's hell-bent process of cutting corporate taxes and reductions and inability to deliver social services and other necessary programs in this province. It is also directly connected to the provincial government's addiction to gambling revenue, which is now one of the most significant sources of revenue for this province at about a billion dollars a year.

So these corporate tax cuts, Mr. Speaker, far from being beneficial for the average citizens of this province, are a direct threat to the kinds of programs that they have come to expect and which they often need.

I want to talk a little bit about the royalty reductions program because the Auditor General, again, has been very clear that these programs have no demonstrated value other than reducing the payable tax of corporations, and he has called on the government not once but several times to identify specifically the objectives that are trying to be met through these kinds of programs, and the government has again failed to do this. This is quite simply, Mr. Speaker, a transfer of Albertans' wealth, which is commonly owned through the ownership of our natural resources, into the pockets of large corporations, and, frankly, with no requirement that that additional money should be spent on anything of value in Alberta or even spent in Alberta, period. So, you know, again, the government likes to sound like they're very progressive and they're trying to do something for the economy, but there's no relationship between their policies and economic prosperity of this province. They are just handing over the natural resources to the corporations which in turn support the government at election time.

So, Mr. Speaker, I want to be very clear that Alberta New Democrats are opposed to this bill. We are a fiscally responsible party, and we do not seek to have our cake and eat it too. When we put forward proposals for government spending, we cost them, and we look at whether or not these programs can be borne by the Treasury. We do not want to be going to the people on one hand and say, "We will increase your funding for education; we will increase your funding for health care" and so on, and then to the corporations on the other hand and say, "Oh, by the way, you don't have to pay your share in order to support these programs." That is trying to have your cake and eat it too.

I think that that is just not a viable policy, and it's not being straightforward and honest with the voters of the province. So when we talk about spending money on badly needed social programs, avoiding layoffs of teachers, for example, as we've recently seen up to a thousand positions cut across the province in education, we are willing to stand and face the voters and say how we would pay for it. One of the ways we would pay for it is to not proceed with these kinds of tax cuts which are simply gifts to the corporate sector and have no discernable payoff, at least as I interpret the Auditor General's remarks, to the economy of the province or to any programs that may exist.

So I would urge all members of the Assembly, both from the government side and the Liberal Official Opposition, to stand up for ordinary Albertans and vote against Bill 41. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments, hon. member? Okay.

If there are no questions, then we'll have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on Bill 41.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with a great deal of interest that I participate in the debate on Bill 41, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2003, this evening. Certainly, when everyone considers that many, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands referred to them, ordinary Albertans own small businesses across this province, I think they would be very grateful for a reduction in their tax rate when you consider how the utility costs from energy deregulation have affected these small businesses. They need some relief, and they need it now. Many businesses have expressed a great deal of concern, Mr. Speaker, with the high cost of electricity and the high cost of natural gas, and any relief that they can get other than a rebate at election time I think puts them on a solid financial footing.

Now, we have seen over the years a gradual decrease in the small business tax rate. I think we can safely call this Lenny Kaplan's tax cuts because whenever Mr. Kaplan worked with the Official Opposition, this was one policy that he advocated be implemented. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is absolutely right. This was a policy of the Official Opposition for some time, and I am pleased to see that the government has incorporated it into this legislation. I think it is about time, and in light of the major public policy failures in other departments by the government I commend the Minister of Revenue for bringing this forward because it's much needed by the small business community in light of the bills that I talked about before increasing. I think Mr. Kaplan would certainly agree as well.

When you look at other parts of this legislation – and we can go to the general rate of corporate tax reduction and what has happened historically – I would be curious to know how the insurance industry in the province is going to be affected by this reduction. How much money are they going to save now? The insurance companies, I understand, have an extensive – some people would call it a consultation process; other people would call it a lobby process in place to have their premium taxes of 3 percent reduced or in some cases eliminated.

I was part of a public debate, and I reminded the consumers that the insurance industry had already received in the general rate from the previous reduction some corporate tax relief, and fair enough; we were collecting the premium taxes. I would like to see the premium taxes used for dedicated public campaigns to ensure that people have their seat belts on, their head rests adjusted properly, a public education program to ensure that we drive as safe as possible. That $57 million that's collected from the insurance industry on auto insurance premiums I think should have dedicated uses, and one of them would be to reduce our accident rates.

I'm not convinced that the insurance companies, for one, need tax relief at this time. They have received it. Small businesses certainly in my view warrant and merit tax cuts, but the insurance industry? The insurance industry, I'm not so sure. I would like to know just precisely how much money the insurance industry in this province would save with this corporate tax cut because I do not want to turn on the radio or open my newspaper and hear where they've been taxed out of Alberta, because I just do not believe that to be true whenever one considers the insurance industry.

Now, my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie talked about the royalty tax deductions. Certainly, the Auditor General in his report had significant things to say about tax royalties to energy companies in this province and exactly how they work. As the debate in this bill continues, Mr. Speaker, I too would like to know: how much money did oil and gas companies save in royalty tax deductions and credits last year? How does the government ensure that granting oil and gas companies both royalty tax deductions and royalty tax credits does not cheat Albertans from receiving a fair return on nonrenewable resource development? It was interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, in Saturday's Globe and Mail a story about Exxon corporation, and I believe it was the state of Alabama. Somewhere down in the Sun Belt, in the southern states, there was a court case, and Exxon owes that state I think slightly over $11 billion in resource revenue that had not been collected. I would just be horrified to think that we're not collecting our fair share in this province. I'm sure we are. I'm sure there are programs in place to ensure that our citizens are getting maximum return on their resources.

As the hon. member said earlier, we have schools that are overcrowded. We have laid off teachers. We have any number of what the government in the old days used to call pressure points that need funding. It would be just horrifying, again, Mr. Speaker, to find out that our share of our resources was not being collected properly by our government.

We at the same time are entertaining notions in public debates about putting a user fee on the homeless if they're going to get a night's stay at a government shelter. When we put all this in perspective, we just can't provide for one sector, which is the corporate sector, and ignore those who cannot help themselves. There are many people, unfortunately, in this province who through no fault of their own cannot provide themselves with a living. The government has a responsibility and a role, and if we're going to look after the corporate interests, then I think we should care for those who cannot care for themselves as well and do it adequately, allow them to live their lives with decency and respect.

Mr. Speaker, who has the Alberta advantage here? Albertans obviously own the resources, not the energy companies, and I would like to know: when was the last time the government system of royalty tax deductions and royalty tax credits was examined? I'm sure someone other than the Auditor General has had a look at this, but certainly the Auditor General in the recent report that I referred to recommended that "the Department of Energy document and communicate the objectives of the Alberta Royalty Tax Credit program and develop measures to assess whether the program is meeting its objectives."

Now, the risk of not defining program objectives and performance measures is that the government may not be making effective decisions and may be giving away the Alberta advantage for free.

In conclusion, I would like to bring up small businesses again. The small businesses, those that are owned by the so-called ordinary Albertans – I was one of them – are the engine of Alberta's economy. [interjection] Yes, you bet I'm ordinary, and I'm proud of it. I think we need more people like that in this Legislative Assembly, not less, and that's to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker.

The Official Opposition has always supported tax cuts for small businesses. In light of the public policy follies that have surrounded this government recently with energy deregulation, it's about time, because if we give those small businesses tax relief, they're going to be able to find another place for their money, and that's in their high utility costs.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to ask a question or make a comment.

Mr. Mason: It's a brief comment, Mr. Speaker. I just want to bring to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's attention the fact that the New Democrat opposition has always supported the tax reduction for small business, but the lion's share of the reduction in government revenue – that is, a billion dollars over four years – comes from the corporate tax rate reduction, which we firmly oppose.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue to close debate.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be happy to supply some answers in committee to a number of the questions. For some of them I don't have the specifics with me at the present time. I would say this, though, in general terms. When we take a look at tax structures, it is important that you look at the right climate for business. Sometimes "corporation" or "business" sounds like it's impersonal, but that corporation or business is made up of individuals. It's made up of Albertans. It's made up of people. It's made up of people that create jobs, that provide opportunity for jobs and employment for all Albertans. It's not looking after an invisible shell of an organization. It's looking at having opportunities to invest, to create jobs, and so forth, and it is also part of the structure.

I appreciate that the NDs would like to see the tax-and-spend philosophy as the approach, but I think the approach is: you create a bigger pie, and you create opportunities to create a bigger pie so your rates don't have to be so high. That is what will attract the capital that we need of the world to develop and create the infrastructure that we need in this province, and it is doing it. It's not just because prices in oil and gas are high, but the investment climate, the opportunity, the people that are moving here are a natural flow of allowing capital to come where it's not penalized so highly, and it benefits everybody. It benefits all the low-income people. It benefits the provision for social services and the like.

Anyway, with respect to a couple of things about the Auditor General's comments, the Auditor General did not say anything or put into context that there was anything wrong or implied that there is a problem with the Alberta royalty tax credit. He's only making comment with respect to a number of programs that provide credits, deductions, preferential treatment to quantify so that you would compare benefits and costs, and I think those are appropriate statements. We certainly are looking at the Alberta royalty tax credit in that perspective and will report in due course.

One thing was mentioned: why we allow for the higher of resource allowance or royalty deductions. The federal government introduced years ago in the whole taxation – they disallowed the deduction of royalties, and because of their disallowance of the royalties paid to Alberta from a federal claim, they allowed a resource allowance. The Alberta government's response, though, was to still allow the deductibility of the royalties paid in calculation of tax. Given that the federal government introduced its own legislation on resource allowance, we allowed them to take the higher of, not to be penalized by different laws.

Now, one thing that has changed: the federal government starts in this year actually a gradual phaseout of the resource allowance. Starting in January of this year, over about four years it's going to phase out the complete resource allowance so that royalty deductions will be the only thing that you can deduct both for provincial and federal purposes. So even in a transition it is being resolved by the federal government's own acknowledgment that it needs to change its rules.

I'll be happy to answer in committee the balance of the questions that were asked. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 41 read a second time]

8:40head: Government Bills and Orders
head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order. Because we have not met for some days and weeks, a reminder that while there is some leeway for quiet conversation, we have only one member standing at a time and talking. With that we'll begin.

Bill 37

Climate Change and Emissions Management Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I had the opportunity to speak to this particular bill in second reading this afternoon and then hear what the minister had to say. I was looking for something substantive from him, but instead what we got was the usual rant when they bring in these kinds of bills, which really should be dealing with substantive issues and instead really are positioning themselves to take advantage of what turns out to be mostly a lack of knowledge on the average Albertan's part, so they buy into the information that the government shares with them, which is not always accurate.

I didn't hear anything new this afternoon, and I didn't hear any new figures or new plans of what this government is planning to do, so I still have my initial outstanding issues with this bill, which I will summarize at this particular time.

The first and perhaps the most important of those – or perhaps all of them are equally important – is that this bill does not achieve any meaningful progress on reducing the level of greenhouse gases emitted in Alberta. In fact, what we see here is quite the opposite, Mr. Chairman, and that's a real shame because there is an opportunity to move forward on this particular issue. The rest of the world will be. Why shouldn't we? You would think that just once the Alberta government would want to lead on these particular issues.

What we're going to end up seeing is that industry will lead on this particular issue. They will drive it, and government will be playing catch-up. We see that happening in several other industries that I'm the critic for right now, not the least of which is Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, where industry is seeing what global markets are doing, they're seeing what the management issues are, and they're aggressively trying to be a part of the competitive advantage. But that does not seem to be this particular government's stance. That's letting all Albertans down, and that's too bad.

Secondly, this bill really is a poor legal framework for action. There are virtually no specifics in the bill that allow it to be evaluated for how efficient it will be in addressing Alberta's role in lowering greenhouse gas emissions. It delegates so much authority to the regulations that it really gives carte blanche to cabinet and the respective minister to operate in any way they choose. This gives us a couple of scenarios that could happen. We could have a best case scenario for some improvements or a worst case scenario of no substantial actions being taken at all, and that's very concerning.

Equally concerning is the fact, Mr. Chairman, that key components of this legislation will be decided behind closed doors by cabinet and minister. On this particular issue I have seen no leadership by cabinet or by the minister. Where I have seen the leadership is in the actual department, at the bureaucratic level. So hopefully they will have some influence on what happens here because if we leave this up to this cabinet, we're in trouble with this particular kind of legislation.

I talked this afternoon about there being no need for this separate piece of legislation. Everything here could be done more effectively by incorporating its provisions into a changed framework within the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. That would be much better. This bill doesn't allow the public the opportunity to be involved and participate in the establishment of regulatory systems.

Now, it used to be the practice of the government in the Loughheed days that they would bring the regulations forward for review prior to bills being passed, and in fact that's still what happens at the federal level. The regulations are publicly posted before the bill gets to the floor of Parliament, and that could be the same case here. What we would have then is much more openness and much more transparency, and that would be very helpful. Then corporations and people who felt that they were directly affected could have some input.

That doesn't mean that the government has to change the regulations by any stretch of the imagination, but it does give some ability for taxpayers and directly affected people to have some impact prior to the bill becoming legislation. What the federal government has found as a result of that is greatly enhanced and strengthened legislation. So that should be the goal of all of us in this Assembly. This would be a key bill to try that kind of approach on, but this government doesn't want to show that kind of leadership.

Lastly, my concern is that this bill is exceedingly weak on enforcement issues. Once again, we see a government that just wants to let the market correct itself and puts in regulations but doesn't actually put in the kind of backup system that can be enforced. Here in this legislation we've got no specific provisions for how it would be enforced, what penalties would be applied for infractions, and whether or not, in fact, there would actually be the personnel to do the enforcement and monitoring and carrying out. We know from all departments in this government that there is no support for enforcement, and that's a real shame because the best performers will always outperform what the government wants them to do, and the poor performers will sadly perform well below standards and often in a fashion that could not be considered legal by any jurisdiction.

So I continue to say that I have grave concerns about this particular bill. I will not be supporting it, Mr. Chairman. I was certainly hoping that this government would withdraw this bill after it had had some public exposure over the summer, but once again they chose not to listen to the vast majority of Albertans.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to address the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, Bill 37. This is carried over from the spring session, and it addresses the specified gas emissions responsible for the greenhouse effect as part of the Alberta action plan on climate change. It provides for sectoral agreements, emissions trading programs, reporting, and funding of technological approaches to address climate change.

Mr. Chairman, this bill was first introduced in last year's fall sitting. It died on the Order Paper and then was reintroduced in the spring. The politics which are behind this bill are clear. It was originally part of the Conservative campaign against the ratification of the Kyoto protocol by the federal government. When this strategy then failed, it's now seen, I think, by the government as some sort of defensive mechanism asserting Alberta's jurisdiction over climate change initiatives by setting up provincial mechanisms instead of participating in the federal mechanisms.

Now, many environmental groups have justifiably been harshly critical of the approach set out in Bill 37 for a couple of reasons, Mr. Chairman. It extends the time frame for meeting climate change targets to 2020 instead of 2012, and it calls for reducing emissions intensity as expressed in GDP rather than absolute reductions. This is, I guess, the real difficulty with this bill because it's based on the approach taken by the Bush administration in the United States. Of course, we know that the Bush administration was supported as the spokesperson for the oil industry internationally and particularly in the United States as well as the arms industry. Those were the biggest backers of the Republican campaign for President that managed to not elect George W. Bush but to have him appointed by the Supreme Court, notwithstanding the fact that his vote was less than that of Mr. Gore's.

The approach favoured by the big oil companies in Texas is the same approach that's favoured by this government, and that is to turn its back on the real issue facing the whole globe, which is a dramatic and accelerating climate change which is produced by emissions of greenhouse gases, in favour of a cooked-up formula that allows the overall, absolute amount of emissions to continue to rise. Now, of course, if you look at it from a scientific point of view, Mr. Chairman, just because the economy grows and therefore the allowable CO₂ emissions continue to grow makes no difference to the Earth, because the only thing that matters as far as climate change is the absolute amount of CO₂ production that is taking place. So you can go through all of the elaborate rationalizations you want to, but as long as we continue to pump out CO₂ into the Earth's atmosphere at an increasing rate, then climate change is only going to accelerate.

Now, most of us in this Chamber are old enough to remember what winters used to be like 20, 30 years ago, and we know that they're quite different today. Younger people probably don't realize this. I explained it to my son, and you know he wasn't there. He can't remember long, cold winters. But those of us of a certain age, Mr. Chairman, can recall this. Only the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is probably too young to remember really, really cold winters, but I think most of the rest of us are.

So the approach is that if your GDP grows, if the economy expands, you can increase the absolute amount of CO₂ emissions as long as as a percentage of the GDP you're declining. So if you get slightly more efficient relative to your economic output, then it's okay to increase your absolute emissions of CO₂ and other greenhouse gases. Of course, Mr. Chairman, this is completely unsustainable. This approach is, in my view, fundamentally dishonest and tries to pretend that it's doing something about greenhouse gas emissions when, in fact, it is permitting them to continue to rise.

So what, then, is the result? Well, Mr. Chairman, we are trading off economic advantages for ourselves at the expense of the well-being of our children, our grandchildren, and unless something changes, then two or three or four generations down the line the consequences for those that come after us are going to be very severe indeed. In fact, scientists who are most familiar with this phenomena have indicated that there will be mass reductions in the Earth's human population somewhere out to 50 years if things continue as they do.

The impacts of global climate change are severe, and it's not just that the Earth is going to heat up a few degrees and stop. What's going to happen is, in fact, that the rate of change is going to accelerate, and it will have a profound effect on the world's food supply as well as causing severe weather and so on. We've already begun to see that with the huge fires in the last couple of years around the world, not just here, not just in California, not just in B.C. but tremendous, tremendous increases in the number of hectares of forest lost in places like Siberia, in Europe, and so on. You just extrapolate that 10 years or 20 years, and you will see that catastrophe awaits. But this government doesn't really take that seriously for some reason and seems to believe that it's okay to continue to go down the path that we have chosen for ourselves or, rather, that those who have control of the levers of the economy have chosen for us.

Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that Bill 37 would be withdrawn or allowed to die once its usefulness as an exercise in fed-bashing was gone, but the government seems intent on pursuing it, and there are elements as well of infringement on the jurisdiction of the federal government. The provincial government is, of course, always ready to cry wolf whenever the federal government attempts to infringe on its jurisdiction, but whether it's marriage or environment or wheat, this government is prepared to try and step on the toes of the federal government. So to put it very politely, it's an inconsistency on the part of this provincial government.

Just in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I think that the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act is an irresponsible piece of legislation. I don't think it does anything to enhance Alberta's position, and what it will do is allow the government and certain irresponsible members of the corporate sector to continue to ignore this very serious problem and this treaty obligation on behalf of the country. As such, I don't see how members of this Assembly can support Bill 37, and I would urge them to vote against it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's always a pleasure to rise in this Assembly. I think Bill 37 could be one of the more important bills that we discuss during this session. I have a range of concerns with it that begin right from the fundamental approach of the bill and the underlying assumptions. I know, speaking for my constituency, that climate change is an issue of great, great concern. Last year about this time I held a town hall meeting in my constituency, and about 500 people came out to talk about and learn about the Kyoto accord and climate change, to hear some top-notch scientific presentations, and to discuss the issue. So it was pretty clear to me that jamming a good-sized church in a town hall meeting on climate change was a sign that the public is really concerned about this issue.

In the months that have passed since then, my impressions have continued to be reinforced that this is an issue of real concern to all Albertans across the entire province. Two weeks ago I had two separate phone calls from people in eastern Alberta, people I had no contact with before. I'm not sure why they called me, but both of them raised serious, serious concerns about climate change and the depletion of water resources in eastern Alberta, one near Oyen and the other, I believe, near Provost. They phoned me as farmers, as ranchers saying: "Hey, our climate is changing. Our land is drying out. We need to act."

9:00

Then the other day I had family in town for the rodeo. Believe it or not, there are genuine cowboys in my family, rodeo cowboys. They were chatting to me about the state of their ranchlands. One of them, who has ranch country west of Didsbury, was talking about how year-round he used to see white snow on the peaks of the mountains and now a good part of the year the mountains are bare, and how when he rides into the Ya-Ha-Tinda and the backcountry in the eastern slopes, he sees the land drying out and the damage to the land and how deeply he's concerned about that.

Other family members in central Alberta, both north and south of Red Deer, are worried about the health of the Red Deer River and the sustainability when we are pumping water out of that river through water treatment plants in the Innisfail area and then distributing it from there south of Red Deer, and at the same time we're starting to suck water out of the Red Deer River and pump it north all the way up to Hobbema. How much can the Red Deer River sustain, especially when the snowpack in the mountains is smaller and smaller every year?

Again, closer to home for me this summer, I had a STEP student do a history of the constituency. She went around and interviewed some of the original residents of Riverview. When she compiled all the interviews and I read through them, one of the striking things was how wet that constituency was on both sides of the river when it was settled 40 or 50 years ago, how there were lakes, McKernan Lake and Lendrum Lake, and a whole string of lakes on the south side, and how on the west end there were swamps and bogs and people actually could boat down what is now 149th Street. Living people have those memories. Now you go around Riverview and you can see trees dying by the hundreds because of a lack of moisture.

So there's no question this is a profound issue. The evidence of change is all around the province. I feel no great confidence that the leadership of this government accepts that evidence, and if they do accept it, it's been reluctant indeed.

Turning to the bill, Bill 37, and looking at the very first sentence of the preamble, it reads:

Whereas the Government of Alberta has a deep and well established commitment to protect Alberta's environment for future generations through proactive and responsible stewardship of the environment.

It goes on and on from there through the entire bill. These are noble words, Mr. Chairman, but to me they ring hollow.

Mr. Mason: So much CO₂.

Dr. Taft: As the Member for Edmonton-Highlands says, they feel like just so much CO₂.

Where is this deep and well-established commitment for the environment that this government claims to have? I don't see it very often. I certainly don't see it in this bill. This bill, in fact, sets up a mechanism that will allow greater and greater greenhouse gas emissions in the province. What we're seeing now played out is in some ways a tragedy, a tragedy that could have been prevented if the government had listened to its own advisers in 1988, who put forward a pretty comprehensive greenhouse gas emissions plan, one that's actually quite detailed.

Frankly, when I look at Bill 37 and I read that first preamble, I wish that the rest of the bill followed in suit because we could be looking at this issue not as a threat but as an opportunity. These are opportunities faced by Alberta that are being confronted by countries around the world, people around the world, and people around the world are going to be looking for leadership. How do we address climate change? How do we address water shortages? How do we address drought and disease and plague that come with that? How do we address massive forest fires? Alberta is positioned to become a global leader in constructively addressing climate change in sector after sector after sector, and instead of a bill that would provide that kind of leadership, we get a bill that puts in place a mechanism to allow, frankly, an increase in greenhouse gas emissions.

I would love to see amendments to this bill that take a more aggressive and constructive stewardship of our land and of our planet, and some ideas that I would like to see in this bill, some clauses that are not here, I don't believe – for example, addressing questions of demand side management. Rather than worrying about how we supply more and more and more energy and more and more and more water and so on and so forth, why don't we focus on reducing the demand, and why don't we have legislation that addresses climate change and emissions by concentrating on reducing demand? There are lots of ways this could be done.

I was listening to an interview just the other day with an energy expert who talked about the effect that regulations have had on improving the efficiency of something as simple as the household refrigerator. The household refrigerator is one of the largest energy consumers in a house, and up until about 10 years ago they were absolute energy hogs. Because regulations were brought in and steps were taken to improve their efficiency, you cannot now buy energy hog refrigerators. Every new refrigerator is substantially more efficient than it was before, than the older models were. That kind of example could be repeated over and over and over, from light bulbs to automobiles to water heaters, plumbing, toilets, showerheads, all of it. We don't see any attempt at addressing those kinds of issues in this bill that begins with noble words about "a deep and well established commitment to protect Alberta's environment." Unfortunately, none of that is here.

So this bill falls short, I think, falls badly short in what it purports to do. I expect the bill to be passed by the government, and it certainly addresses the concerns of the heavy oil industry, but I think it is much too narrow a bill when it's talking about climate change and emissions management and, frankly, fails to live up to the vision that's sketched out in the preamble.

Mr. Chairman, with those words I place some of my concerns on the record and look forward to some other discussion and debate. Thank you.

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 36
Environmental Protection and Enhancement
Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Yes. I have a number of amendments I'd like to offer. You have them. I'd like to have you pass them around please, Mr. Chairman. I won't comment much on them other than to say that we consulted with industry and so on, and these amendments are the result of the ongoing consultations over the summer. I would hope that the opposition would support the amendments as well.

Thank you.

9:10

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on amendment A1.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, just for a point of clarification, the whole package is going to be considered as one amendment; is that the case?

The Chair: The Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We will do it as a package.

The Chair: Is that in agreement?

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I was hoping that the minister was going to take a little bit of time to go through them and at least explain them to people, because as we have seen this afternoon, we rushed through second reading of this bill and now we have the amendments before us in committee and are expected to just approve them with what appears to be very little fanfare. At least those amendments should be read into the record, in my opinion, and have the opportunity for some debate.

First of all, I would like to say, though, that in terms of these amendments the minister did try to arrange a meeting with me and my researcher to talk about them and explain them in some detail. Our meeting was scheduled for tomorrow, but because this bill has gone through the Legislature so quickly, we haven't had a chance to actually talk about them. However, he certainly did get them to me as soon as possible, which was today, and we've had a chance to review them to some extent and make some comments on them, and generally speaking, Mr. Chairman, we do approve of them. What we see is that there are quite a few amendments here. Most of it is cleaning up of the bill and responding to concerns that we have also heard from government, but they are somewhat substantive in nature and so should really be talked about a little bit.

The first amendment, the A part, adds some more definitions to section 2. It talks about potable water, and then it talks about a wastewater system and goes on to define that. That's good. We needed more definitions, for sure, when it comes to those particular systems as defined in the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act.

The waterworks system then goes on to be defined to talk about potable water to cities or towns or municipalities or villages or hamlets or settlement areas and those kinds of water supply systems, like the lines, the on-stream, off-stream storage facilities, pump-houses, treatment plants, and so on. So more definition is better than less definition. In this case, we're happy with that.

A big section is then added after section 4. It talks there about director's discretion, and this is where we had most of our questions, because it always concerns me a little bit when this government hands more discretion to directors. On consultation with the minister's staff and reviewing this, it seems like in this particular instance this may not be a bad thing. I may rue the day that I agreed to this particular amendment, depending on how they end up applying it, but so far it looks like it's good to have some discretion for these applications in the cases where decisions need to be made and people may or may not be readily available. So we're going to conditionally support this particular one at this time, and we'll be watching closely to see how it is applied throughout the province and will see how it goes from there.

Then we go on to 4.4, where section 67 is amended by repealing some subsections and adding more. Here it talks about what the section does not apply to, and mostly that's repairs and maintenance and temporary changes to equipment and so on. As I review section 67, I don't have any issue with that.

Section 4.5 was slightly amended, and it talks about how notice is given and applications for registrations are done. It's a little bit more definition, and that's okay, I think. In C "section 9 is struck out," and the addition is added there that not just the director can address this particular section but "or an inspector." Once again, we'll see how that plays out, but it doesn't look like it's too bad to me. So then cleaning that up and tying it in in other sections, and the same thing happens for section 17 and section 18.

I agree that section 19 that's being struck out here is applicable in this particular case.

Then we get to H, section 21, where "section 142 is repealed and the following is substituted." We get the "environmental protection order after reclamation certificate" where it states:

If, after a reclamation certificate has been issued, an inspector is of the opinion that further work is necessary to conserve and reclaim the specified land and the work relates to matters that were not apparent at the time the reclamation certificate was issued, the inspector may . . .

and then it lists a number of things that the inspector can do, and this is the part of the amendments that I completely support.

This is a really good addition that strengthens this act because we have had circumstances in the past where it looks like the reclamation has been done well and then something comes to light afterwards where more work is necessary. It was a little fuzzy prior to this in this particular act about how the government could move forward on these issues and actually have the people or company to whom the reclamation certificate was issued clean up their act. So we like that.

Then of course in I it talks about section 22 being amended by striking out the dates as applied.

So, generally, it looks like some good things, really good things, in this amendment package, some that I'm slightly reserving judgment on and will support, and we'll see what follows. We may be coming back sometime in the future to complain about them if it turns out that they're not going to be applied in the manner in which we expected them to be. Otherwise, generally speaking, these changes to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2003, look to me like they strengthen the act. It looks like they're addressing a number of the concerns that I have heard on our side not so much from industry but from the environmental community.

So we will be supporting this particular amendment package at this time, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on amendment A1.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I rise to participate in the debate on this list of rather extensive amendments, in my view. It is with a great deal of reluctance that I speak because certainly I think this is a comprehensive list, and to receive them and then to have to make one's mind up in regard to whether they should be accepted or rejected is not, in my view, a legislative process that I would agree with.

Now, I have some specific concerns about this. Certainly the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie also has expressed concerns. But in specific relation to this amendment in section 142, when we have what it states here – and I'm going to read this into the record, Mr. Chairman, because my colleague did also – I have some questions in regard to the potential costs that we could be stuck with here. Did you have a look at the bottom of that? The costs are the responsibility of the government. This is horrendous.

Now, section 142(1), Mr. Chairman, reads:

If, after a reclamation certificate has been issued, an inspector is of the opinion that further work is necessary to conserve and reclaim the specified land and the work relates to matters that were not apparent at the time the reclamation certificate was issued, the inspector may.

Now, it lists in (a) what the inspector may do, and then when you get to (b), the inspector may "carry out any work that the inspector considers necessary to conserve and reclaim the specified land."

Now, 142(2) states:

No environmental protection order regarding conservation and reclamation may be issued under this section

- (a) in any case where the reclamation certificate in respect of the specified land was issued under the Land Surface Conservation and Reclamation Act . . .
- (b) in any other case, after the date prescribed or determined in accordance with the regulations for the purposes of this section with respect to different classes of specified land set out in the regulation.

Now, 142(3) states that "the costs of carrying out the work under subsection (1)(b) are the responsibility of the Government." When you carry out that work, how much is that going to cost, what exactly is this, and what exactly are we doing with this amendment at this time, putting it before the House in this manner? How many millions of dollars are at stake here?

I think this is wrong, Mr. Chairman. We could have any amount of land. We need further explanation from the hon. minister on this. There could be any amount of well sites, whether they're oil or gas. There are numerous ones. We have changed the rules as to how the reclamation process is to be done. How many abandoned well sites could be stuck into this section (1)(b) that are the responsibility of the government?

My belief is that the government then recovers the money from the reclamation certificate holders. Now, is that true in this case? If not, how much money is the government potentially risking? How many tax dollars are we potentially risking if we support this amendment? At this time until I get the answers, I for one cannot accept this amendment. I think it certainly requires clarification from the hon. minister because we need to make sure that the taxpayers aren't going to be on the hook for millions and millions of dollars in cleanup costs for oil and gas leases.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Yes. I'm more than prepared to answer his question on the cleanup costs. In the present legislation the oil and gas companies are only responsible for five years. Any cleanup costs after that revert back to the Crown. After five years their time is over. What we're doing with this amendment is we're making them responsible for 25 years. Now, is 25 years enough? I mean, I don't know. But that's the agreement we could get through hard negotiations with the oil industry, that they will be responsible.

So if their reclamation certificate gets yanked, which it can anytime in that 25 years if something shows up, and the landowner phones Alberta Environment 10 years down the road and says, "Hey, look at this; my crops aren't growing here," or "The grass has died here," Alberta Environment will then do an investigation. If it is shown that there is some kind of pollution or damage to the land, then we yank the reclamation certificate that the oil company or pipeline company or chemical company or whoever – I don't want to just pick on oil companies – has had for 10 years, and they have to go back in and reclaim. At that stage if that happens, then they're on the hook for another 25 years after because they no longer have a reclamation certificate. What would happen then would be that they'd ultimately clean it up, they'd get a new certificate, and then you're onto another 25-year period, so it's a long extension.

As I say, there were extensive negotiations with all the industries involved to be able to come to this. Is it long enough? Too long? I think it's a good first step to try and take a look at it, and if we feel at some stage we need to extend it a longer time, then one would have to get back into negotiations again.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the hon. minister. Now, does the department have any estimation of how much liability there would be for the taxpayers in this matter? Is there any estimate of the potential cost to the taxpayers at this time?

Dr. Taylor: I'm not exactly sure of the question. Do you mean after 25 years, the cleanup costs? No. We don't have that kind of estimation because we assume that after 25 years any damage . . . All the science would say, if one believes the science – and we all know that sometimes science doesn't actually work – is that within 25 years you will see any kind of situations or any kind of ongoing damage that would arise.

I'll tell you, though, that in terms of the existing laws – and the federal government has noted this as well recently – there are thousands of sites across Canada that need to be cleaned up for which there is now no longer an original owner, and the time lapse, which in most provinces is five to seven years and they aren't changing, has expired. So the federal government said recently that they don't know how many billions of dollars it will cost to clean up all those sites. In Alberta we will have – we're not sure the exact number – quite a number of sites for which you cannot find an original owner or the owner has gone broke or the owner has died, and those sites, because the old act was a five-year kind of time frame, will need to be cleaned up. We haven't even started to try and estimate what that would be yet.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on amendment A1.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to speak to the amendments to Bill 36 and, in fact, to Bill 36 in a more general sense. I want to indicate that the general approach of the bill is difficult. While we certainly appreciate the extension of periods of liability for abandoned sites from five to 25 years – we think that's a positive thing –

I guess I want to say that we have some serious difficulties with the bill.

Before I get on to that, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to deal with the amendment packages. I just find it a little bit amiss that we would have a significant package of amendments brought before us without consultation in advance and without any explanation, or any substantive explanation, from the minister. So it makes our job very difficult to see how these particular sections fit with the existing act. That's probably a couple of hours' study to be able to do that analysis and integrate the amendments with the bill that has been provided up to this point. So I want to register my concern with the approach, and I hope that the minister will just take a moment and go through the different sections and explain why the government feels that these things are necessary.

Now, with respect to Bill 36 more generally, I believe that the minister has indicated in the past that there are 40,000 uninspected sites and they only have the capacity to do 1,700 per year. So the approach, then, is not to increase the resources that are available to the department but basically go from government inspection of abandoned oil and gas well sites to one of industry self-regulation. I may be forgiven if I'm skeptical about the industry's potential conflict with respect to this. Now, it's true that the oil and gas company would have to hire a reclamation specialist and that this specialist would have to submit all the paperwork to the government and so on. It's also true that codes of practice for acceptable reclamation would be developed, but you know the government inspectors in the future will only do land audits of reclaimed well sites, access roads, and abandoned right-of-ways.

Mr. Chairman, I'm hard-pressed to see how this will actually improve the situation over the status quo. You know, we have a situation where it's been reported that there just aren't enough resources on behalf of the department to actually do their job, and instead of addressing that question, we've gone off in this direction of self-regulation. I think there's a lot of history now of self-regulation, and it's not all one-sided, but generally it has had very, very mixed results, and there is no guarantee in our view that this approach is going to be effective or even more effective than the limited amount that the department is doing now.

So those are my concerns. I don't know if the minister is able to respond to any of them, but I'll take my seat and wait with bated breath, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Taylor: Just to respond to a couple of them and give a little information before I respond. The member is quite correct. We have over 40,000 sites that need to be reclaimed. When you look at the history of reclamation in this province, since 1963 40,000 sites have been reclaimed. In 40 years 40,000 have been done. Quite frankly, I don't see this dragging on until my grandchildren's grandchildren have children before you get all the backlog of the existing 40,000 done. Then on top of the existing 40,000 we have 155,000 active well sites today. That's not pipelines or batteries or any of the other things that go around the oil industry. Just well sites, 155,000 active well sites. Some of their life span is relatively short because they're nearing the end of their life span. So when you look at those kinds of numbers and the fact that the government or the department has reclaimed 40,000 over 40 years, you can see that you have to do business differently.

So, one, let me state very clearly that it is not self-regulation. We establish the regulations. When I say "we," I mean Alberta Environment. We, Alberta Environment, write the reclamation certificates. We at Alberta Environment can pull that reclamation certificate at any time for cost. We at Alberta Environment will continue to inspect sites. We will audit sites, and I can assure you that within Alberta Environment the inspectors know who the good reclamation companies are and who the not-so-good reclamation companies are.

In previous legislation only a director could pull a rec certificate. This new amendment allows for inspectors to pull a reclamation certificate, so that's quite an advancement in the sense that an inspector on a site can pull a reclamation certificate. I want to be very clear. This is not self-regulation. The company, whether it's an oil company, a gas company, a pipeline company, a chemical company, whoever is doing the reclamation has to hire an outside expert.

If I could use the equivalent comparison of blueprints on a house, when I get my blueprints done for a building project, the engineer puts his stamp on the blueprint. If there's a problem with that stamp and the engineer hasn't done his job, there are all kinds of consequences on that engineer. He's got a professional association that can yank his right to do these things. There are the consequences of him getting sued because he didn't do it properly, and there are the consequences of me the builder never using him again, so he will not have any business.

It's the same thing in this area. If the reclamation professional doesn't do his job properly and signs off on something that is not reclaimed properly, then all of the same consequences can befall him. His professional association can yank his certificate. Both the government and the company may want to sue him, because the company is going to be annoyed because they're going to get their rec certificate yanked.

So there are very clearly consequences, and Alberta Environment stays very clearly in control. I hope that answers the member's questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a question for the minister. What is the current contingent liability for reclaiming those abandoned sites?

Dr. Taylor: Well, I'm not sure what the question means, but I will get you the answer. We'll have a record of it in Hansard, and we'll get you the answer. I'm not sure what the question was. It's getting a little technical for me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of various student groups: the Council of Alberta University Students, or CAUS, as well as members of the Alberta College and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council, also known as ACTISEC, and a representative from the University of Alberta Grad Students' Association. These organizations combined represent over 186,000 university, college, and technical institute students across the province. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'll ask them to rise as I give their names: Shirley Barg, the chair of CAUS and VP with the Athabasca University Students' Union; Brett Bergie, who's the provincial director for ACTISEC; Lee Skallerup of the University of Alberta Grad Students' Association; and Melanee Thomas, executive director of CAUS and a graduate of the University of Lethbridge. All four are strong advocates of postsecondary education in Alberta and are concerned about rising tuition levels. Please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce some visitors who, I understand, will be arriving at 2 o'clock, but if they are here, I'll ask them to rise. They are students who are very concerned about the passage of Bill 43. They are Chris Wudarck, Chelle Kelly, Lisa McLaughlin, Terra Melnyk, and Heather Wallace. I guess they'll be with us later.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly five individuals from the county of Smoky Lake who are here attending the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties convention. I'll ask them to rise as I introduce them and to please remain standing: Reeve Dareld Cholak, Deputy Reeve Mike Franchuk, Councillor Terry Katerenchuk, Councillor Bernice Van Iderstine, and executive assistant Lydia Cielin. Please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Automobile Insurance Reform

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Finance minister announced her government's plan for auto insurance, which is the same flawed plan that MLAs rejected a month ago. To the Minister of Finance: how can you promise lower premiums to 80 percent of Albertans when your program doesn't significantly reduce the costs of delivering insurance?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the government caucus has approved the plan that we have put forward, and they have taken many months of deliberations to make sure that we've put forward the plan that will work for the 3 million consumers within the province of Alberta.

The second part of the question from the Leader of the Opposition was: how does this work without a reduction in the cost of insurance? Well, if he read the press release, he would realize that in the very first paragraph it talks about the $250 million that is coming out of the system through reforms that will lower the cost to the consumers but give them wonderful coverage, the coverage they need to have within this province.

Dr. Nicol: But she can't document them.

To the same minister: why is the government introducing a cap on compensation for pain and suffering when a poll by TeleResearch Inc. shows that 86 percent of Albertans believe they should still have access to the courts for fair settlement?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, we absolutely agree. We have not taken access to the courts away from anyone that's involved in an automobile accident. What we have done, though, is put a cap on for what we call minor strains and sprains, and we've put that in place to do a number of things. One is to keep costs down but also to process claims on a quicker basis. If, in fact, someone is not satisfied with being classified as a minor strain or sprain, they have the right to go to court and to provide their case before the judicial system within this province. That has not been removed.

Dr. Nicol: So everybody will go to court.

My third question is: why doesn't your program guarantee that every Albertan with the same driving record will pay the same premium no matter where they live?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, let's go back in time. Mr. Speaker, back in 1991 there was a territorial split determined to address the cost of insurance. Now, that split was to have northern Alberta, with sparsity and density of population factors coming into play, and southern Alberta and then the large metropolitan areas being brought into two separate areas, so we would have four geographical districts within the province.

Now, based on accident claims experience, there has been a differentiation between the cost of insurance, and that means that the experience that they've had within those regions would warrant a cost of a premium to be this or that. In this particular case we saw that there was a differentiation between the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary, and I'm sure that's what this question is going towards. What we've said in this reform package is that we will move to three geographic jurisdictions over time and that time would be over three years, Mr. Speaker.

But let me make it abundantly clear. Under this new scheme any increase will be felt by all – by all – drivers throughout the province because this new plan is based on personal responsibility, and if you're a good driver, you will receive discounts. In fact, about 80 percent of the drivers in the province of Alberta will be discounted 65 percent off the base maximum premium. If you're a bad driver, however, you're going to be penalized, and you will pay surcharges to have the right to drive in this province.

Energy Prices

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier announced that during his trip to London he will meet with board members of the British energy firm Centrica. Centrica owns Direct Energy, whose application to enter the Alberta energy market is currently before the Energy and Utilities Board. A Consumers' Coalition report to the EUB warns of higher prices for Alberta utility consumers if Direct Energy's application is approved. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Does the Premier's meeting with Centrica in London interfere with the regulatory process here in Alberta?

Mr. Smith: No.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the same minister: doesn't the Premier's meeting threaten the independence of the Energy and Utilities Board hearing?

Mr. Smith: No.

Dr. Nicol: To the same minister: how will this government protect Albertans from "serious financial harm" that the Consumers' Coalition warns "will be wrought on [consumers] upon approval of these applications"?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the board is an independent, quasi-judicial entity. Its hearings are held in public, and various groups are intervenors. This sounds like one of them. I've not read the particular intervention, nor have I read the transcripts of the hearing.

Also, the member was on the Dave Rutherford show earlier this morning talking about a report from the advisory council on electrical issues, that already has established a consumer advocate, housed in consumer and corporate affairs with the Minister of Government Services, who, I know, wants to supplement this, which is one step towards increased protection for consumers.

The other step, of course, that sits there is with the EUB with respect to erroneous meter reads. There is a present policy in that consumers get a credit from that. So there are mechanisms established by law in this marketplace as well as other marketplaces that protect consumers from fraudulent practices, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With regard to consumer protection advocacy, we presently have appointed a consumer advocate, and the office will be announcing within a short period of time some of the things that that office is going to be doing in terms of protecting consumers around the province but, more importantly, to have a role to play in the regulatory proceedings in terms of advocacy for consumers. How we go about that is presently being determined, and we'll be making some announcements on that.

More importantly, when it comes to the marketing and new marketers coming onstream in Alberta, Direct marketing has put forward a million and a half dollar bond and are going to be out there making contracts for Albertans. Through contracts and through the provisions put in place under the Fair Trading Act, there are provisions that protect customers against a company that might be doing unscrupulous selling.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Postsecondary Education Policy

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many groups, including the Council of Alberta University Students, are concerned with this government's postsecondary education policy. The government's plan to off-load costs onto students and centralize power over the entire postsecondary education system spells trouble for Alberta's 200,000 voting postsecondary students. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Will this government adopt the Learning Commission's recommendation to conduct a comprehensive review of postsecondary education before making any changes to the system?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think that what needs to be said here is that the postsecondary education system in Alberta is absolutely second to none in this country and, indeed, in the world. When students such as the students up here attend postsecondary education systems, they are getting an absolutely excellent education.

With regard to the Learning Commission's recommendations, we are taking a look at each and every one of them. It's going through our process, and we hope to have a response within probably the next two or three weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. To the same minister: why has the government shifted costs onto students by allowing tuition fees to double in the past 10 years while at the same time decreasing its per student funding in real terms by 20 percent?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, about eight or nine years ago after extensive consultation – and I actually do believe that the tuition fee policy, the one that is adopted in legislation, was suggested by the University of Calgary Students' Union – that tuition fee was put in place.

Quite simply, the tuition fee policy states that the students should pay a maximum of about 30 percent in education costs. We have run into some issues with that in that we have some institutions that are at 30 percent. To give you an example, right now the University of Alberta is 24th, the University of Calgary is number 25, and the University of Lethbridge is number 40 out of approximately 50 universities in Canada when it comes to tuition fees, which is right where we would expect them to be.

Dr. Taft: To the same minister: why won't this government heed the cries of university and college students and enshrine affordable tuition in legislation?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I really don't know how to answer that one considering that Bill 43, which deals exactly with the topic that the hon. member is talking about, is up for discussion this afternoon and, subsequently, this evening.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the government announced an insurance package promising a $250 million reduction in the total premiums collected, which is about $2 billion in this province. That represents at most a 12 percent reduction after a 57 percent increase last year, and while the government is eliminating discrimination based on age and gender, it has decided that eliminating discrimination against Edmonton can wait. To the Minister of Finance: given the rate increases of 57 percent last year, how is a 12 percent reduction going to satisfy Albertans who are feeling gouged by private auto insurance companies?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, when we embarked on this process to review automobile insurance rates within this province, we did that keeping in mind that we have a law in Alberta that says that you must carry automobile insurance. What we were having difficulty with was the fact that it was too pricey, that it wasn't accessible to all, and it wasn't comparable to other jurisdictions. So as a caucus we said that we have to make some changes that put in place a structure that allows people to obey the law that we have in the province. So this structure came forward to meet all those objectives.

We also added another element. I won't tell you which member, but one of them spoke so eloquently about personal responsibility that our caucus embraced it immediately. There had to be some element of personal responsibility, and just because you were a male or a female or you were 25 or 35 or 85 shouldn't have mattered. So the structure was put forward to accomplish the goals of having the availability, the accessibility, and the comparability in place to meet the laws of Alberta.

Insofar as the difference between Edmonton and Calgary, Mr. Speaker, I did address this briefly on the other question from the Leader of the Opposition. When this was put in place – you know, the media reports that somebody wins, somebody loses, that this is a political situation, but clearly it is not – it was based on the actuarial facts of the claims experience within this area. It could very well have been the other way around, but the fact is that the claims in the city of Edmonton were higher than what they had been in Calgary.

Now, what we do know is that under the new system the rates will even out, and we believe that that will take less than three years, so there won't be a differentiation in the geographical territories within the province. Plus, we're going to move to three jurisdictions.

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

The Speaker: I appreciate that the intent of the question could lead to considerable debate, which allows for amplification, for answer, but this is question period. I suspect that the Legislative Assembly will probably be dealing with the bill on this matter, which would afford some debate. Let's deal with the question and answer.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is this government so intent on limiting the rights of accident victims, when B.C.'s public insurance plan lowers rates without picking on the injured?

Mrs. Nelson: I didn't hear the rest of it.

Mrs. McClellan: Just say that we're not.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, we're not, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, my final question to the Minister of Finance. She seems to be a little slow on her feet today.

The Speaker: Oh, oh, oh, please. We're going to have civility. We're going to have decorum. There were people talking back and forth, and the hon. member's colleague does it. That's not required. Please.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister is in regular meetings with insurance companies and injury lawyers, why is the government refusing to hold more broad-based, open-door consultations with Albertans and Alberta drivers across the province?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, first of all, I'm not in regular meetings with the insurance companies and injury lawyers; I can tell you that right now. I have met with the two groups. In fact, I asked the two groups last May to come to the table and work with us on the reforms that we were anticipating bringing forward. In fact, I said to them: park your scud missiles at the door and come and be the solution; don't be the problem. Guess what happened? They didn't come, so we had to call them in and have a meeting with them, and they still have been doing the lobbying of scud missiles.

So our caucus came together, and under the guidance of the Member for Medicine Hat we put together an implementation team to take the policy direction from our caucus and move it forward. Did we ask these people to come to the table again? Yes. Yes, we did. Did they? No. All they did was lob scud missiles. So our co-chairman of the implementation team continued on, Mr. Speaker, all summer and fall, and we are today at a position where we have agreed upon a framework, and we will be bringing legislation forward this session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Edmonton City Centre Airport

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first questions are to the Minister of Economic Development. Yesterday afternoon we all heard that the Edmonton Regional Airports Authority is going to shut down all scheduled passenger service at the downtown airport by the end of 2004. This is devastating news and a slap in the face for many northern communities that obtain services and do business in the city of Edmonton and, I would suggest, for many communities not so far north who support the capital city. To the minister: could he tell us if he or his ministry is aware of the negative economic impact that this decision might have on Edmonton and Alberta in general?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before I give my answer, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Peace River for not only articulating so well the concern but for being a lead on this through the Northern Alberta Development Council, which has really, really been a strong voice for the north. Thank you for that.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the impacts of this decision that came out yesterday are devastating not only to Edmonton, the city of many of us, but to northern Alberta and all of Alberta. As far as quantifying the economic amount, it doesn't take rocket science to say that with the proposal of two pipelines coming through the north to Alberta, with some $50 billion worth of projects in the oil sands, with the ongoing forestry industry that's booming, with the ongoing northern agricultural industry that's booming, that airport provides a hub to this city and to all of northern Alberta. To that end our department is going to be doing an economic impact study in the very short term to quantify the number.

Let me put it out very, very clearly. That airport services the north not only in the euphemistic gateway-to-the-north title but as a symbolic gesture to the north that (a) we understand where development is happening in Alberta and that (b) as long as we're the government, it's not going to close down.

Mr. Friedel: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given the far-reaching impacts of this announcement, should there be a role for the government of Alberta in this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Peace River, yes, obviously there should be a role. The airport authority is operating under the Municipal Government Act and the transportation act, and they do so at the willingness of the city of Edmonton, who is the landlord of that airport. But, clearly, it's got to a point now where the decisions that they are reaching do not coincide with the economic development plans for this province, they don't coincide with the economic development wishes for the citizens of Edmonton, and certainly they have absolutely nothing to do with the wishes of the north, which I've traveled extensively and heard over and over what an absolute jewel for economic development that airport is, what a convenience it is, and if it isn't there, guess what? They're going to Calgary. So we are going to do everything in our power as a government to get involved and deal with this issue.

2:00

Mr. Friedel: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Could she tell us if she or her ministry is aware of the impact that this announcement would have on northern communities in particular, considering that northern development is a part of her responsibility?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, absolutely. Northern Alberta, of course, is one of the best places to do work, and it is the next bastion of economic development in this province. We have minerals; we have mines; we have forestry. We have everything in the north. What we want to be able to see is Edmonton as our choice of city to work with, and either Edmonton is going to be a gateway to the north or it's going nowhere. So what we have to do is be able to find a solution to see that northern Alberta is the best place to work with and that they will see some solutions that they can find for this.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to supplement.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Just to supplement, I want to say that I was very pleased to learn that the mayor of Edmonton, in fact, stated that it is his intention to have that airport open for the next 45 years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Automobile Insurance Rates

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regarding auto insurance this government could be charged with a hit and run: hit consumers with large premiums, increases, skyrocketing bills, and then run behind closed doors with the insurance industry to discuss it. In fact, this government continues to discriminate against the citizens of Edmonton. This time the discrimination is against Edmonton drivers. Yesterday the Premier confirmed that discrimination against good Edmonton drivers by making them victims of bad government policy. My first question is to the Provincial Treasurer. What evidence does this government have that justifies this discrimination of Edmonton drivers with good driving records by forcing them to pay more for their auto insurance than other drivers in the province?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't like to break it to the hon. member, but the government is not the insurance company. We're not in the insurance business, unlike what they would like.

The industry has had a formula over the years that has determined how they set rates, and one of them was based on claims experience in four geographical areas within this province. We have said through this reform package that we want to review those and that we want to have some regulations come in so that Albertans have the best advantage in this country in having affordable, accessible, and comparable rates with other provinces. That's the move we're making, and I hope you'll buy into it, because obviously you're dissatisfied with the current system. So thank you for your support.

Mr. MacDonald: Your job is to regulate the insurance industry.

Now, given that the Consumers' Association of Canada study in September indicated that average auto insurance rates and costs in Calgary and Edmonton are equal, the same, why continue to discriminate with this bad government policy against Edmonton drivers?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, I'm going to ask him to read the Hansard and get the answer from the last three times I've answered the question, Mr. Speaker.

Under our new system we will move away from any kind of discriminatory practices on that basis. That's what our announcement was today. We're going to go from four territorial areas to three. We will move Edmonton and Calgary closer together over those three years. Now, I would ask him the question: if, in fact, the claims experience had been the opposite, would he have the same feeling?

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. So you do admit that there is discrimination against good Edmonton drivers. What are the total extra costs to private vehicle owners in this city and also to businesses that register their vehicles and insure them in this city because of your bad government policy? What are the total costs to drivers and businesses in this city?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjections] Actually, the Minister of Finance has the floor. She has been recognized.

Mrs. Nelson: Once again, Mr. Speaker, Edmontonians will not have any additional charges coming forward in this plan that anyone else won't experience. When he talks about good drivers, there are good drivers in Edmonton. There are a lot of good drivers in Edmonton. However, the cost of claims and the cost of claims over a number of years, which creates the claims experience, has driven up the premiums in Edmonton above what they were in Calgary. Now, it could very well have been the other way around.

With this plan we have, we've said that we don't want to be satisfied with that, so let's move away from that and put in place a system that has Calgary and Edmonton in the same geographical territory, and that will take away any kind of political play that this hon. member wants to put on a reality. So we are moving to a new system that takes away the fourth territory and cannot have us bantering whether it's a Calgary issue or an Edmonton issue. Clearly, what we're putting forward is a reform to benefit the people of Alberta, all of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glangarry.

Electricity Rates

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents and small business operators in Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert want to know more about what is happening in the electrical market as it relates to things like contracts, regulated rate options, forward purchases, flow-through pricing, competition, et cetera. The Minister of Energy announced some time ago that the regulated rates would be extended to protect consumers until a more heated small-user market materializes. So my first question is to the Minister of Energy. The regulated rate option has been extended for low-volume users of electricity. Why was this done, and how long will it last?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the regulated rate option is a regulated rate that is put in front of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board for approval. It applies to everybody who uses under 250,000 kilowatt-hours per year. That small marketplace was scheduled to come under regulation under a different rate structure January 1.

The CFIB, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, did quite an extensive study. We consulted with members and also consulted with companies across Alberta, and we found out two things. One was that they didn't like the idea of changing any rate structure in January. There's a much better time to change a rate structure, and that's June or July, when there's a little more time and a little bit more analysis can be put forward to making good decisions.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the decision on whether Direct Energy will be in the marketplace, as was brought forward in an earlier question, has not been finalized yet. Also, the marketplace wasn't ready to accept this full-blown competition option, so in fact we responded to what consumers asked for and we extended the regulated rate option until July of 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is also to the Minister of Energy. Given that one of the main issues in the Aquila/EPCOR area was high rate riders these past two years, will we see energy rate riders in 2004?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. What we do see is that there's no expectation of a rate rider in 2004 for the power used in 2003. Rate riders are generally for power gone past. Under the new regulated rate option structure suppliers are asked to hedge or buy long-term contracts for 75 percent of their power and only buy 25 percent of their power on the spot market. This will lead to a minimized requirement for any type of deferral account. So not only will we start to see deferral accounts drop off that were in the charges for the last two years and a published rate structure that shows lower rates; we're going to have reduced capability for rate riders as well. So Albertans in the Aquila/EPCOR network will have seen a reduction in their transmission rate, will see the drop-off of deferral accounts and a reduction in their energy charges.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister just mentioned that the companies will be allowed to hedge forward the purchases on the rate riders, is there any other situation which might arise that could also generate a rate rider?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is one way that you can absolutely make sure you don't have a rate rider, and that's to sign a contract. So that could get you into something where you know exactly what you're going to pay and how much you're going to pay for it. Those contracts are around. The probability of a rate rider that I know of at this point would be minimal indeed. I think that we've seen a consumer market that has asked for changes. We've responded to those changes, and we're looking forward to a market that has a certain element of consumer protection in that marketplace.

Calgary Courthouse

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, in 2002 the U.K. Centre for Public Services produced a report on the impact of P3s in the criminal justice system. The report outlines the many failures of P3s including a decrease in the independence of the judiciary. Considering that the use of P3s to fund such projects is so high risk, the government owes it to the people of Alberta to reconsider its use of P3s to go ahead with the Calgary courts centre project. To the Minister of Justice: will the minister table any reports produced outlining the issue of loss of independence of the judiciary relating to the Calgary court centre P3 project?

Mr. Hancock: Well, last I looked on the Order Paper, there's a place for written questions and motions for returns with respect to asking for tabling of reports, and I believe that there may be a written question on there asking for tabling of reports now.

The bottom line though, Mr. Speaker, is the question in constructing a courthouse or any other public building through a public/private partnership or any other mechanism by which we can ensure that Albertans have the services they need and the facilities and infrastructure they need. The question is: who gets to make that decision, how is that decision made, and what are the important factors in that decision?

Clearly, we've looked very closely at how to make sure that we have the court facilities necessary in Calgary to serve the community of Calgary and the surrounding communities over the long term, the 35- to 50-year horizon. That's a very necessary project, but it's a project of such magnitude that we have to look at innovative ways to do it. In the P3 partnership process, which we've gone through very carefully over the last two years, putting out requests for qualifications, requests for information, requests for proposals, working through the process, we've always been cognizant of the risks that might be involved in that, but I can say with a great deal of certainty that the risk to judicial independence is exceedingly small.

Albertans know that the courts in this province and the courts across this country are independent and that the judicial tradition is one of independence and that there's no appropriate way for a government to interfere with the independence of the courts. They get to make their decisions without any interference from government. The fact that they're in a public building or a private building or a public/private partnership building makes no difference to that. The Court of Appeal of this province in Calgary is located in a private building now. Courts in Ontario are located in private buildings, courts in other jurisdictions are located in private buildings, and there's been no suggestion that the independence of the court has been compromised.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: is the province's P3 proposal for the Calgary courthouse the first step in the unification of the criminal court system in Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the two processes are entirely separate processes, and neither is necessarily dependent on the other. Obviously, having all three courts in the same building in Calgary will be of assistance if and when in the future we proceed to the concept of a single trial court. It's useful to have the facilities together even if we don't proceed with a single trial court because there's an opportunity to share both facilities and manpower resources when you have the courts aligned in that fashion.

So, no, the Calgary court project is neither necessary nor dependent upon a single trial court, but there are two processes, and I make no apologies for the concept that we're discussing the organization of the courts in the 21st century in this province and how we can best deliver court services and justice services to the people of the province of Alberta. But the two projects are not dependent upon each other.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: is this government more concerned with preserving a political monopoly through the P3 project than it is with preserving justice in Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that's a really ridiculous question. There has been no question throughout all the discussions we've had with all the stakeholders we've had that the most important thing we can do, starting from the justice summit in 1999, which was organized by my predecessor, where we learned that people were concerned about understanding the justice system, is have a justice system that was simplified and accessible and cost effective, and that's what we've been striving for. We've made incredible progress on that objective with all of the stakeholders that have been involved at the table. We took the steering committee from the justice summit, made a Justice Policy Advisory Committee. We've worked closely with them over the years to make sure that we achieve those objectives of access, lower cost, affordability, and that's what we've been striving toward. It has nothing to do with political power or political processes.

However, I will say that Calgary has suffered in terms of the delivery of justice services over the years because the court facilities in that community have been spread out, have not been accessible, and quite frankly are aged. There has been a problem with mold and other problems. So we've had to deal with that situation, and we've dealt with that situation in a very appropriate way and in a way which will make the city of Calgary and the surrounding area proud of the facility that they get and the services that they get.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Police Services

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta municipalities are concerned about the types of crimes and level of police presence in their communities. There is a challenge to small communities when the costs of enforcement go up and budgets remain the same. In fact, there are some communities that are spending as much as 40 percent of their budgets on policing. To the Solicitor General: what is the government's participation in local policing, and can municipalities expect any funding assistance?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member raises a good question and one that I know he deeply cares about in asking me the question. I met with him and members of his council this week.

Mr. Speaker, policing has become very complicated and a complex issue right across this province. Two and a half years ago when I met with mayors, we were talking about siphoning of gas in their communities or their mailboxes being smashed or some sort of graffiti on some of their machinery. Now when we speak with them, we are talking about meth that is hitting their communities, organized crime that is affecting them, and all types of serious incidents that are happening in their communities.

We are working through the process, and it is something that I am concerned about as well as many members here. I appreciate their patience. As I explained, it's very complicated, it's complex, but we believe that we have a solution. I hope that I have an answer for them very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental: given that crime, according to the Solicitor General, is becoming more sophisticated and rural communities are facing increased concerns over crime, can the minister tell the House the status of the Policing Review Committee report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I certainly can. This review, the policing review, has been going on for some time, and again I want to thank all of the members in the House for being patient, including all of the mayors in communities across this province. We have finally come to an agreement, the first time in 30 years, with the AUMA and the AAMDC, which represent 3 million people in this province. We have an agreement from them regarding how to deal with policing, and we're just going through the final process of government. Again, hopefully we'll have an answer for him very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

2:20 Energy Retrofit Program

Ms. Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Toronto introduced the GreenSaver home rewards program in 2001. Ontario runs an Energy Star appliance rebate program. Saskatchewan has a variety of retrofit programs. The UBC has announced the largest energy retrofit in Canadian university history, and the Yukon runs a home repair program. What has Alberta implemented? The city of Calgary has implemented a toilet rebate program, the province nothing. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Why does this government refuse to take significant action to protect Albertans' environment and resources through the implementation of a retrofit program for consumers and industry?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, she gives me a very good opening to talk about what the Alberta government is doing, and I thank you very much for that, hon. member. The Alberta government has done more than any jurisdiction, including the federal government, in this country. We're 9 percent of the population, and we have spent more money than the federal government on greenhouse gas emission reduction programs.

Just to give you an example, through the good work of the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Finance we just recently committed a hundred million dollars . . .

An Hon. Member: How much?

Dr. Taylor: A hundred million dollars to the municipal energy efficiency program, Mr. Speaker, which will allow municipalities to redo new buildings or old buildings to make them energy efficient. That's just one program. I'd be happy to elaborate on others if the member would like me to.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, you know, the Alberta government has led the way in retrofits. Back in '96-97 we implemented a retrofit program, the energy retrofit, where we had the private sector come into agreements with the province. They paid for the retrofit, and then through a contractual agreement they got their money back out. That has decreased our energy costs by a considerable amount.

I must also comment about the fact that the Alberta government has signed a contract for green power. Ninety percent of our electricity will be green power. So if the hon. member is suggesting for one moment that this government isn't leading the way in eliminating greenhouse gasses, I think she has just been asleep, or maybe she's been paying too much attention to that Liberal leadership.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, none of them can listen to the question. The question is: when are we going to get a retrofit program that benefits consumers in this province?

Dr. Taylor: Once again, Mr. Speaker, we have done that already. We are benefiting consumers through the MEET program, consumers that belong to municipalities. All of us, including the member, belong to some municipality, I think. It might be outer space, but it's still there. So we are already doing this. I can go on.

I might just add that the Kyoto target was to have emissions 7 percent below 1992 levels. This government has reduced its emissions by 22 percent below 1992 levels, bigger than any government, including the federal government, in the country.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, I've got to spell it out for them. When are consumers going to be able to access a rebate program or an interest free program so that they can retrofit their homes so they can lower the cost of consumption in their houses?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, once again, I've indicated a number of alternatives. I will indicate a third alternative. We have a group called Climate Change Central. We have in that group an office called the office of energy efficiency, which is funded by the Department of Environment in this government. What we have is that the office of energy efficiency is designed to work with consumers, to help them and advise them on programs that can save money. So for a particular interest, if you have an older furnace in your home and you replace that furnace, the payback period to you as a person is seven years. You'll pay for your new furnace in energy savings in seven years. That's what the office of energy solutions is about at Climate Change Central, and that is where the consumer will be dealt with.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. On the issue of the consumer, how we connect it to consumers is in this way. If you have a child that plays hockey, if you have a child that swims, in terms of the hockey arena or in terms of the swimming pool this $100 million is going to be used for retrofitting those types of facilities that help consumers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, the Baghdad Bob of deregulation strikes again. Yesterday in this House the Minister of Energy suggested that deregulation had high power rates on the run. He made this astounding claim on the same day that Enmax customers saw an 8 percent increase in distribution charges approved by the EUB on top of another 11 percent to the regulated rate option that's also been requested by Enmax. If that wasn't enough, ATCO electricity customers have seen their rates go up by roughly a third since April. Why did the minister tell the House that power rates are going down when further increases, in fact, are being considered and approved as we speak?

Mr. Smith: Because, Mr. Speaker, unlike other parties in this Legislature I tell the truth.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much for that enlightening answer.

Mr. Speaker, given that rates in two major service areas have been moving upwards, will the minister now listen to his own advisory council and admit that it was unrealistic all along to expect that deregulation would bring lower electricity prices?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would challenge the member to determine how you would have lower electricity prices in 2004 when in fact it took 14 years under the regulated model to create the last approved coal-fired generating facility. In fact – and this is the NDS' solution – you wouldn't have to worry about the price of electricity today because there wouldn't be any electricity.

When you're the fastest growing economic jurisdiction in North America, you have to respond. Now, there are two ways. You can either, as we have in Alberta, deliver 45 percent more power in the last 10 years so that we can have the fastest growing economic jurisdiction in North America or you can take the New Democratic approach, and that's choke off economic growth, stifle it, put it down, put it to death, make sure there's no growth, add the debt, make sure people aren't working, increase all your unemployment insurance payments, increase all your welfare payments, and there you have it: B.C. or Manitoba.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether or not he is prepared to apologize to this House for misinforming us about the direction of electricity prices as well as, as we just heard, the causes of the problem.

Mr. Smith: I will continue to tell the truth, Mr. Speaker, as long as he continues to prevaricate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that last week the federal government sent a response to the most recent U.S. industry proposal for a possible interim solution to the softwood lumber dispute to the U.S. Department of Commerce. Residents and workers in my constituency have a great interest in the details of this proposal since the forestry industry is among the primary industries in West Yellowhead. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Could the minister advise how close we are to arriving at an agreement in the dispute given that the decision towards an interim solution appears to be on again?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, certainly I am well aware of the importance of this issue being resolved to the hon. member's constituency or for that matter to every part of the province which is dependent upon the forestry industry and particularly the softwood lumber industry.

Mr. Speaker, the recent proposal put forth by the Canadian side was a response to a previous position held by the U.S. industry which came forth in October. It's the nature of this whole process that we are moving toward, I hope, a solution in the fairly near future, but it is a very complex issue, one which requires give-and-take on both sides. Certainly, every effort is being made to reach a long-term solution in this particular case. We would not advocate here in Alberta that in any way we reject proposals outright, and we hope, of course, that the Americans will continue to look seriously at our proposals as well, and I'm hopeful of a resolution.

Mr. Strang: My first supplemental question is to the same minister. The federal government's counterproposal suggests a hard cap on export of softwood lumber amounting to 32 percent of the U.S. market share. What is Alberta's position on this figure?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, the member is quite correct here I think. The position that we're in right now is that Canadian and U.S. government officials developed a framework for an interim agreement this past summer which proposed a hard cap of 32.5 percent. That is, softwood lumber exports would be subject to export permit fees until the total amount of lumber exported exceeds 32.5 percent. It sounds like it's a very small difference, but this still translates into millions of dollars.

The U.S. industry proposal last month proposed a hard cap at 30.5 percent. That figure is simply too low to be acceptable to the Canadian government and to industry, so Canada's counterproposal is 32 percent with respect to market share. We believe at this particular point in time that from the Alberta industry's point of view it would be fairer to have a market access of 33 to 33.5 percent. This is our traditional market share and seems to be a reasonable share of the U.S. market, and we feel that should be maintained.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. The minister has talked in the past about the draft policy by the U.S. which could pave the way towards a long-term solution in the future. Can the minister provide an update about the status of this bulletin?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, it is our understanding that progress is being made in terms of developing this policy bulletin. Certainly, there is built into that policy bulletin, we understand, a number of conditions, but there has been, I think, considerable progress in making the bulletin one which may be acceptable to both sides. The situation right now is that we are waiting for the officials in the United States to complete that particular document. We are hopeful that that will be available in the next number of months and we will be able to get down to evaluating it. Hopefully, it will be the basis for opening the border again with respect to softwood lumber.

Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Allan Johnstone School

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour today to recognize and extend congratulations to the students of the grade 5 class of Allan Johnstone school in Hardisty, Alberta. Led by their teacher, Jerry-Lynn Burden, all 11 students of the grade 5 class painted pictures and wrote text that were compiled into a book entitled Standing Guard: Through the Eyes of the Sentinels. That compilation was submitted to the Kids Are Authors competition sponsored by Scholastic Book Fairs. The book recounts the story of grain elevators from their first appearance on the prairies to their sentinel stature in every small town across the land and, finally, to their current slow disappearance from prairie towns.

Out of hundreds of entries across Canada these grade 5 students won first place, grand prize honours for the entire nation. The students are Dayton Buelow, Megan Granger, Jayden Mowbray, Alex Drager, Meaghan MacKinnon, Tianna Thompson, Aaron Wasserman-Bitzer, Jessica Drozdowski, Taiten Maclean, Chantalle Striga, along with their outstanding teacher, Jerry-Lynn Burden. You've done your community and our province proud. Congratulations.

Peter Papisideris

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, Calgary-Currie is certainly the constituency of champions, and I'd like to tell you about yet another one of them. Peter Papisideris opened his corner beauty salon in our district in 1972. Not many people ever knew that our quiet little Greek barber is also one of the greatest long-distance rifle marksmen alive today, a man capable of hitting dead centre bull's-eyes at distances up to 1,000 yards.

Peter joined the King's Own rifle regiment in Calgary in 1967, winning three gold medals in the centennial that year. He quickly took silver at the nationals and since then more than three dozen other medals and trophies worldwide as a member of Canada's national team. Individually he took Queen's silver in England against 1,600 of the world's best shooters in 1983, silver again at St. George's in 1992, and, finally, the gold at England's famous Clement-Smith match, posting three perfect dead centre bull's-eyes at 500, 550, and 600 yards respectively. Peter has been asked again to join Canada's national shooting team next year as well as represent Greece in the next Olympics. Not bad for a 68-year-old soft-spoken hairstylist, the only person in the world to win the Des Burke award twice. He's also in the Canadian shooting sports Hall of Fame, although he can't seem to get into Alberta's yet.

Congratulations, Peter. Calgary-Currie is proud of you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

J. Percy Page High School

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to congratulate J. Percy Page high school on being recognized by Canada Schoolnet as one of Canada's innovative schools in 2003-2004. The recognition is for leadership, commitment, and success in the innovative integration of information and communication technology to improve learning. The telelearning programs at Page are made possible through partnership with Shaw Communications, Netera Alliance, the Galileo Network, and Canarie.

Tapping into Canada's high-speed communications network students and teachers at the school use videoconferencing to connect in real time with peers and experts around the world. Students have participated in conversations with their counterparts in Switzerland, Ireland, France, and Germany as well as at home here in Canada. Research, multimedia presentations, and consultations are the heart of those conversations. The school looks forward to even new learning opportunities that will be available in the spring of 2004 when the school opens their new telelearning centre.

J. Percy Page owes the success to the work of an outstanding professional staff and a student body intent on seizing the moment to become a cutting edge leader in telelearning.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Edmonton School Lunch Program

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to rise today and recognize the 10th anniversary of Edmonton's school lunch program, a program of the Edmonton City Centre Church Corporation. Beginning in November 1993 the program that struggled with limited resources managed to feed 300 children in two schools. Currently one in five children in Edmonton lives in poverty, so the program has expanded to feed 2,200 children in 11 elementary schools a hot nutritious lunch.

In addition to making sure these children have full tummies, this program also offers a nutritious snack midmorning to 6,400 children in 32 elementary schools. It runs a breakfast club for junior high students, a young chef's program to teach children to cook, and operates a collective kitchen for adults.

I applaud the hard work of Martin Garber-Conrad, executive director of the Edmonton City Centre Church Corporation, and Jasmine Hoeven, program manager, as well as all the hardworking staff and volunteers who work to feed the hungry children in our communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

City of Wetaskiwin

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and recognize the city of Wetaskiwin, which won the Communities in Bloom national award for the population category of 10,000 to 20,000 and the GLAD Tidiness Effort national award. The community of Wetaskiwin is extremely proud to be given this honour, and on October 30 the city had an awards ceremony to recognize the many volunteers, businesses, and organizations that participated in the Communities in Bloom program over the past five years.

The Communities in Bloom award is given to communities that are committed to fostering civic pride, environmental responsibility, and beautification through community participation and the challenge of friendly competition. The reward was foreshadowed by the receiving of the GLAD Tidiness award, which is given to the tidiest community. Receiving this award is a great honour but not totally a surprise, as many visitors to Wetaskiwin remark on how pretty and clean the city is.

Congratulations, Wetaskiwin, for good work and these outstanding accomplishments.

Thank you.

Dr. Harvey Woytiuk

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour for me to recognize Dr. Harvey Woytiuk of St. Paul, who was recently named Alberta's family physician of the year. Each year the College of Family Physicians of Canada presents these awards to outstanding family doctors in each province for their embodiment of all that a family doctor is meant to be: a caring, compassionate, and skilled personal physician committed to the health and well-being of their patients and community.

The Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency is indeed privileged to have Dr. Harvey Woytiuk serving the area as one of Alberta's many rural physicians who exemplify these traits. The balance between professionalism and personal life in small towns can be challenging, and I can personally attest to Dr. Woytiuk's professionalism when it comes to treating his patients. No matter how reluctant the patient, Dr. Woytiuk is ever ready with sound advice and direction, minus the sugarcoating, when dealing with hard-core resisters like myself.

Thank you, Dr. Woytiuk, for your tireless dedication to the wellness of your patients and community, and congratulations on receiving this well-deserved reward.

Kelsey Trach

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's a great pleasure for me today to rise and recognize a young lady and her family from the Vermilion area. With the devastating loss of her mother, Patricia, who succumbed to cancer this past April, Kelsey Trach was motivated to raise funds for support programs for cancer victims and medical research in hopes of a cure. Kelsey's story is proof that if you have the desire, one person can make a difference.

In conjunction with the Canadian Finals Rodeo Kelsey decided she would like to raise $1,500 for the Canadian Cancer Society by making a trip to the CFR, from Vermilion to Edmonton, by horseback. The task was a natural fit as Kelsey's mom loved to watch her ride. Kelsey's sincere and humble goal generated a tremendous outpouring of support from her family, friends, and community and even strangers who stopped to support her along the way. With the assistance of her father, Peter, and after a five-day horseback ride in abnormally cold temperatures Kelsey arrived at Skyreach on time, having raised over $15,000.

I'm honoured to recognize this amazing 16 year old who simply wanted to give back in her mother's memory. On behalf of the members of this Assembly I offer our sincere congratulations. We are honoured to have both Kelsey and her father, Peter, with us today.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour of introducing to the House four University of Alberta students who have worked very hard to generate public debate on Bill 43, focusing, naturally, on their primary concerns, dealing with removal of the tuition cap, the minister's power grab to be able to intervene in student affairs at the university, and centralization of power in his hands. These students are Zita Dube, Sara Katz, Tara Narwani, and Chris Samuel. I believe they're sitting in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today during question period we were joined in the public gallery by 16 grade 6 students and their instructor, Mr. Szott, from l'école Grandin school in my constituency. I was watching them watch the proceedings, and they certainly seemed engaged. I look forward to talking with them later, and I hope you will join me in recognizing their attendance in the Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present with your permission 1,077 Albertans who petition the Legislative Assembly to significantly amend Bill 43, the proposed Post-secondary Learning Act, such that the tuition fee policy be included in the legislation, and urge the Government of Alberta regulate tuition levels in a manner consistent with the principles of affordability and accessibility.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 1,000 Albertans for a "province-wide moratorium on confined feeding operations (also known as 'factory farms')." "

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Bill 46

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 46, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2003.

The bill includes provisions to confirm the authority of municipalities to collect off-site road levies as a condition of subdivision or development to help offset some of the transportation-related costs that come with new growth, and there's lots of new growth here in Alberta.

The bill also expands the liability protection of municipal boxing and wrestling commissions to cover other combative sports and the commissions and officials acting in good faith. [interjection] Question period is not part of that.

Finally, the bill adjusts the effective date for commencing the improved equalized assessment reporting process as outlined in Bill 23, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, of 2002. This will allow municipalities more time to prepare for transition to the improved reporting system.

Mr. Speaker, the bill in this proposed enabling legislation is based on consultation with municipal stakeholders and is a product of the minister's council on roles, responsibility, and resources, that three members of this Assembly also belong to.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 46 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Bill 47

Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2)

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 47, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003 (No. 2).

This bill amends the existing act to reflect a reduction to the cigar tax rate. These were previously announced effective August 1 of this year. All tobacco taxes were increased in Budget 2002, and while other provinces followed suit with cigarette and loose tobacco tax rate increases they did not do the same with cigar rates. This amendment will more closely align the rate with surrounding provinces. The new rate in no way represents a backing off on the commitment of this government's high tax strategy to discourage tobacco use. The new rate still represents an increase in cigar taxes from the 2002 levels.

Other changes included in the bill address administrative concerns, and all have been addressed and discussed with the tobacco industry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 47 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

2:50

Bill 48

Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand and request leave to introduce Bill 48, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Amendment Act, 2003.

The bill is a result of recommendations from the Auditor General of Alberta to clarify the meaning of the term "real value of the Endowment Fund over the long term."

[Motion carried; Bill 48 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Bill 52

Health Professions Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 52, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2003.

This bill would establish changes to how health professionals, professional colleges, and government collect and share necessary health information. These amendments will give regulatory colleges the authority to collect and provide information to government and for government to release that information. Other amendments will balance the need to collect and release information with the need to protect privacy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 52 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Well, Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you can start off quickly, briefly.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is an Enmax news release dated October 2, 2003, regarding their application to the EUB requesting a tariff increase. If approved, typical residential bills for customers served by Enmax in 2004 will increase by 11 percent to about $75 per month from the current average of $68.

The second one is a letter from Brett Bergie, the provincial director of ACTISEC, and he indicates that he's "concerned and outraged at the Premier for traveling instead of doing his job." He has enclosed a page from the popular children's book Where's Waldo? so that we can play "Where's the Premier."

Speaker's Ruling Referring to the Absence of Members

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to refer all hon. members to House of Commons Procedure and Practice. There's not going to be a backdoor way of doing something you cannot do through the front door. I quote from page 522:

It is unacceptable to allude to the presence or absence of a Member or Minister in the Chamber. The Speaker has traditionally discouraged Members from signaling the absence of another Member from the House because "there are many places that Members have to be in order to carry out all of the obligations that go with their office." This is time-honoured, and there's not going to be a backdoor way of doing something you cannot do by walking through the front door, and I will not allow such tablings in the future.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three tablings. The first one is a document prepared by Cambridge Strategies Inc. Its title is Alberta Bill 43: Post-secondary Learning Act, and their analysis leads them to claim that this act centralizes and concentrates power in the hands of the Minister of Learning as never before.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a copy of a letter that was sent to me by Tim Belec from Drayton Valley in which he expresses very serious concerns about Bill 43 and also urges the government and the Minister of Learning to adequately fund K to 12 education.

The last one, Mr. Speaker, is a news release dated November 18, 2003, from Action for Education, a parents group in Edmonton which is seeking to make sure that the government implements the recommendations of the Learning Commission.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a selection of letters that were written by young voters at a get-political party that I hosted on November 8 at Azimuth Theatre. I'm tabling the appropriate number of them. The first is from Jennifer Spencer, who is commenting on tuition fees and debt and the need for all socioeconomic levels to be able to access postsecondary education in Alberta.

The second is from Joe Vanderhelm, who writes his concern with Bill 43: the ability to dissolve student unions and the removal of tuition caps.

The fourth letter is from Nicole Schafenacker, who expresses concern with Bill 43 and asks that the Minister of Learning help them to strengthen themselves with education.

Finally, a lengthy letter from Mark Henderson talking about, among other things, deregulation of tuition, which will limit and "crush the dreams" of many bright Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling is a pair of lab test results for toxic molds at the Holy Cross hospital dated July 2001 and August 2001 and detailing extensive issues with toxic mold, the lab test paid for by the Department of Infrastructure.

My second tabling is five copies of an article regarding the health personnel restraints in Bangladesh. Yesterday the Premier seemed incredibly concerned that the MLA for Red Deer-North would be heading to a country with only one doctor. As the Premier said, "There is only a clinic and in the whole country one doctor . . ."

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're into tablings. Get on with it. Table the document, and let's move on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a study prepared for the Parkland Institute by Lisa Prescott. It's titled Unaccountable: The case of Highway Maintenance Privatization in Alberta. In this report she goes on to compare the current privatization of the primary highway maintenance system in the province with the previous government-run program in the province of Alberta and the major difficulty she encountered in trying to make a comparison over which system was cheaper.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is on behalf of a constituent. It's a letter that David Masluk from 50th Street wrote on October 30, 2003, and this is a message he's sending in regard to the Learning Commission recommendations.

The second tabling I have this afternoon is the Alberta Liberal Plan for Public Auto Insurance, because everyone needs to know "there is an alternative to skyrocketing auto insurance rates."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission as an agency of the government of Alberta reporting to the Minister of Health and Wellness contributes to the health and well-being of individuals, families, and communities in Alberta. The commission continues to provide leadership in delivering services that assist Albertans in achieving freedom from the harmful effects of alcohol, other drugs, and gambling. Today it's my pleasure to table AADAC's 2002-2003 annual report. This report summarizes the activities and achievements of the commission over the past year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling five copies of six letters written by members of the Red Deer community including the mayor of Red Deer, Gail Surkan; Councillor Morris Flewwelling; chairman of the Catholic school board, Gord Bontje; and other community leaders asking that the government help to protect and preserve the heritage of our province by rebuilding and restoring the beautiful and historic Michener Administration Building, that was struck by lightning and set on fire on June 18 of this year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, the chair would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a memorandum from the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul requesting that Bill 208, the Occupiers' Liability (Recreational Users) Amendment Act, 2003, be given early consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Privilege

Contempt of the Assembly

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday we had an initial presentation with respect to a Standing Order 15 application. I indicated today that we would be recognizing the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and additional participants if they wish to participate.

3:00

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Responding to this accusation

today, I will clearly show that my answers were consistent when he asked the questions. I will show that the answers were accurate when I answered the questions. I also would like to put the whole thing in context and draw to the members' attention how extremely important it is when we're dealing with issues like a situation where we're taking testing that the tests be complete and be accurate, because putting out in the public things that are not accurate just really creates nothing but misinformation. It can be construed in the wrong way. It creates nothing but havoc.

Starting on May 12, we had involved ourselves in trying to find a location to house the Court of Appeal in Calgary. There was a mold issue that had caused us to have to vacate the building, so we were trying to find a location to house them. This was started back in '01 – actually, they vacated in January – and through the whole process we were looking at a number of facilities. Of course, it was extremely important that whatever building we selected – there were a number of criteria, but one of them was air quality. The justices needed to have what they deemed superior air. So that was a real concern.

One of the buildings that we looked at was the Holy Cross hospital. Starting on May 12 in this Legislature, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview was asking questions relative to the testing and the mold situation in the Holy Cross. I'm not going to read the whole question and/or answer but just the portions that relate to his question relative to the Holy Cross.

His first main question on May 12 as recorded on page 1569 of Hansard reads: "Why have tests for mold at the Holy Cross [hospital] never been made available to the public?" My answer was:

The Holy Cross did not measure up in some other areas, so in fact I'm not even sure if the study was ever completed on the air quality, because there were other issues that determined that in fact that wasn't a suitable location for the Court of Appeal.

First supplementary: once again the member asks about and talks about the difficulty in what molds could cause, and he says, "Will the minister immediately release all test results for mold at that site?" My answer:

I just indicated that before the testing was completed, we had abandoned that site as a possible site to house the Court of Appeal. . . I'm not even sure that the air quality report was ever completed, and if it was, I'm not sure where it's at.

I never did see that report.

Then moving on to May 13, page 1621 of Hansard, again in the member's lead question he asked, "What policies does the Department of Infrastructure have for responding to buildings that test positive for these molds?" I won't go through the whole answer, but relative to the testing that this is all about I answered:

We do not know [when] the process started. I don't believe it was ever completed. We do not have in our possession, as far as we can determine, any final results relative to the testing on that site.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that I add in here that, in fact, because of what happened on the Monday, we started a process internally to try and find out if there was anything in the department. I still hadn't had anything by the time of the question period on this particular day.

The member then in his supplementary makes some comments that I had sidestepped the question, so I answered again:

Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, we cannot find any final results. As a matter of fact, as I said earlier, there has to be a lot of testing done in order to determine if there is a toxic mold.

Then in the next supplementary the member once again asks a question:

Given that sitting on the results of the tests for mold at the Holy Cross vastly increases the legal liabilities to this government, why has the department chosen to sit on the results, or have they simply [lost them]?

My answer partially was: "As far as this building was concerned, we never completed because there were other issues that came up that ruled out this particular building."

Then on the 15th, which is the Thursday – and this is the day that I tabled what we had received from the department on the 14th. Incidentally, I tabled the results that the member today, as far as I can understand from what he said – and I don't have it in front of me. I take it it's the same thing as I tabled back on the 15th. He once again in his main question asked, "What [has he] learned about his department's testing for toxic mold at the Holy Cross hospital?" There was an interjection, so we go on down to the comment that relates directly to the testing: "The fact is that I told the member on Monday and I told him again on Tuesday that the testing that was started in the Holy Cross hospital was never completed."

In a supplementary he asks again about being in possession of "any lab results that speak of toxic mold at the former Holy Cross hospital." The answer, again, was: "To do an air quality test, and clearly, as this shows, the tests were never completed."

Now, Mr. Speaker, as part of that filing that day – I've got what was filed here. Yesterday in the member's comments it was quite interesting how he selectively chose certain parts to read. So I will fill in the parts that he didn't read and also what he did read. From April Turnbull within my department – the response that came to us is dated May 14, 2003. It starts off:

Mr. Lee, I am sending this on behalf of Sandy Fisher, Alberta Infrastructure.

We are looking for any information you have on any testing you conducted at the Holy Cross Hospital that involves mould.

We have the one paper dated August 2001 that you sent our office (includes Petro Canada [building] and Bankers Hall tests).

We would really appreciate it if you could call Sandy Fisher . . . and let him know what, if any, additional information you have regarding the above.

Then Tang Lee e-mails back:

Enclosed is the report from the Microbiological laboratory that was completed on October 24, 2001. The XL file is for bacteria and the Word file is for the fungi and bacteria.

Sandy Fisher is aware that I did not complete our report for the Holy Cross Hospital as the decision was made for the Court of Appeal not to move into this building. I have a partial very rough draft of this project and will proceed to complete it if so instructed.

I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that, in fact, we had made the decision back in late July, early August not to proceed to this site. So, as a result, this testing was not complete, but I think it's important at this point to point out that because we were concerned about the issues the hon. member was raising, we actually took this report that was sent to us on May 14 – that was the first time that we saw it – and we sent it to a lab, Golder Associates, to have it analyzed.

Basically, in the conclusions they say:

Based on our review of the data provided, and taking into consideration the points listed above . . .

It's two pages, so I'll file it so that it can be seen by others.

. . . there is not enough information provided by the assessment to draw a conclusion on the state of the air quality in the Main and 7th Floor at the Holy Cross Hospital.

This is where the testing had occurred.

To address these concerns would require a comprehensive visual investigation, potentially including semi-destructive testing, conducting interviews with the building operators, gathering historical information regarding past history of water-intrusion events, and completing an inspection of the HVAC systems as a minimum. Following the results of the observations during the visual inspection, a sampling strategy (including surface, bulk, viable and non-viable airborne fungi samples) could be prepared to assist in [addressing] the impacts of potential fungi in the building and the quality of the air.

That's one of them.

Then I've got a copy of a letter that was sent to the owners of the building from Carrier Environmental Consulting. I'll read it.

As requested by Enterprise Universal Inc. at the Holy Cross Centre, Carrier Environmental Consulting Inc. completed a review of past . . . (fungi) investigations conducted by Jacques Whitford Environmental Limited and Mr. Tang Lee from the University of Calgary. The sample results conducted under the direction of Dr. Tang Lee in July of 2001 did not indicate sample locations, type of fungi species [determined], sample technique and whether indoor or outdoor samples were completed. The report is therefore considered inconclusive and can not be considered to be relevant in indicating a sound representation of the evaluation of microbial contamination. Jacques Whitford conducted an investigation . . . in the 1967 building of the Holy Cross Centre in September of 2001. On reviewing the results and conclusions of the Jacques Whitford report it is the opinion of Carrier Environmental Consulting Inc. that the results did not indicate fungi contamination.

As well, Mr. Speaker, in the package we did have this report from August. This one was sent, but it was a preliminary report that dealt with the Holy Cross – it was dated August 29, 2001 – with the very heading "Indoor air quality assessment of alternative facility for the Calgary Court of Appeal, Interim summary." When we go over to the section dealing with the Holy Cross, we read:

Many areas of this former hospital had been vacated for several years. It had previously been occupied by hospital beds, kitchen, cafeteria, etc. Presently the area being considered for [the government of Alberta] is being demolished which can affect . . . air quality sampling.

That, I think, is extremely important. It does go on to talk about some things that they have found.

One of the things that the member made a lot of talk about and emphasis on yesterday was the TNTC, which is the too numerous to count. Mr. Speaker, those can be dust particles, they can be bacteria, they can be a number of things other than fungi, so one should not get carried away just because you see TNTC beside a reading.

I want to read another couple of paragraphs.

There is a clear lack of maintenance of this facility but that may be due to a lack of tenants. Bird droppings were found near the air intake, on the roof and inside the stair penthouse (due to a broken window that permitted birds to enter).

If the [government of Alberta] is contemplating this building for occupancy then a considerably more extensive examination of the facility is required. As it is now, it is not suitable for occupancy [by the government].

Mr. Speaker, by this time we had decided that that was not an area that we were going to pursue.

The member went on yesterday in Hansard Blues – and I must apologize that I just got this off the Blues, so I don't have the exact numbers. His leadoff to the question or point that he was making says, "Is the minister saying that his department has never had possession of positive tests for toxic mold at the Holy Cross hospital?"

Then my response, Mr. Speaker. As I pointed out in the area, quoting from Hansard before, "The fact is that when we were looking at locations to house the Court of Appeal, the Court of Appeal asked Mr. Tang Lee to do an air quality test, and clearly, as this shows, the tests were never completed." That was the part that I filed on May 15, that was the part that the member filed also yesterday, and today I believe he filed the numbers. But, in fact, it clearly shows on the cover sheet that the tests were not complete.

Now, going on from yesterday, the member says that it is absolutely clear that the minister did, in fact, have the test results at his disposal. In the words of the e-mail . . .

And he's referring to the one that he filed yesterday.

" . . . the report from the Microbiological laboratory [that] was completed on October 24, 2001." Completed, Mr. Speaker, a [full year] before I asked the question.

That is absolutely not the case, Mr. Speaker. The author and the people that did the testing clearly state that that was not a complete test. They did a preliminary. Here again I have to emphasize how extremely important it is that we do not mislead the public with putting out information that is not complete. Test results in the first instance were as much just visual as opposed to actual tests. When they're not complete, it can really send the wrong message.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday when the member went on talking about the minister having this information earlier, the fact is that May 14 was the first that we had this, and Tang Lee, the author, clearly says that he had not sent it.

The member went on quite a bit yesterday talking about some e-mails from Fruman, one of the justices. She had toured the building and was talking about the situation, the way she felt. Yes, I toured the building myself, Mr. Speaker, and, yes, it was moldy, and it had a musty smell to it, but the fact is that without the proper diagnosis you do not know the level and what types of molds are in there.

Going on to some of the other areas, the member claims that there are a lot of, once again, TNTC strips, which means too numerous to count. But those are contaminated strips. They don't necessarily mean mold, and in some of the results that I've seen in other areas, that is a very difficult issue.

3:20

I want to take the opportunity to read into the record a fax that we got from Tang Lee. This is dated May 29, 2003, so it was after the House had adjourned. It says:

Hello Mr. Bob Smith;

Thank you for taking time from your busy schedule to come down to Calgary to discuss the air quality examination of the former Holy Cross Hospital building with me and Sandy Fisher. As you know, we did not complete our air quality report on this project as a decision was made to seek another site for the Court of Appeal.

In examining my files and e-mail correspondences, it is clear that I had kept both Alberta Infrastructure and Alberta Justice apprised of our examination, but we did not send them any microbiological laboratory report until I was contacted by Ms April Turnbull on May 13, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, that's what we've been saying all along, and that was confirmed by Dr. Tang Lee.

We had only submitted an interim summary dated August 29, 2001.

And that's the one I read portions of, and quite frankly that didn't tell us anything, as was confirmed by others that have looked at it.

Furthermore, our concerns about the air quality in this building is only valid for the date of the examination (July 19, 2001) and for the locations on the 7th floor and the main floor of one wing of the former Holy Cross Hospital site. It is unknown whether the air contaminants including moulds have amplified or spread to other locations as we have not examined the building since 2001.

I apologise if there is any misunderstanding of this matter that may have cast any doubt on the integrity of the Minister, MLAs and staff of your department.

I would like to file that.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker, the member asked the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner to investigate this. So that occurred. I want to also file a letter dated August 5, 2003. The part of it that I want to read into the record is the last page, and Case Closure is highlighted.

The Commissioner's interest in this matter is to assure the public and its representatives that the duty to warn is being performed.

The Commissioner and the public would not expect to see a warning issued where the public body does not see the presence of a risk. Given that Alberta Infrastructure effectively is saying that it does not see the presence of a risk, then it follows that no warning is to be expected from Alberta Infrastructure.

I have been given no reason to doubt, and several reasons to accept, that Alberta Infrastructure has properly applied itself to the examination of the information in its possession. That diligent application of public-body attention was the objective of our watch, and that objective has been satisfied. With the objective attained, the watch is now ended.

This letter was sent to Dr. Kevin Taft, MLA, Official Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, because we find it so important, if there is a danger to the public somewhere and we know about it, we, in fact, act. So we asked Tang Lee back in June to give us all of the information that he might have on file relative to this whole issue, and he writes back. This is dated June 12, 2003.

Hello, Mr. Smith;

As requested, I am sending you the e-mail messages pertaining to the Holy Cross building. It is a written record of the discussion during the time of our examination but may not necessarily convey verbal communications such as telephone calls and meetings.

Of interest to our discussions are the e-mail messages of August 26, 2001, July 26, 2001, and July 25, 2001.

Also attached is the key to the location of the mould samples. The keys refer to the location code in the laboratory report. Please contact me again if you require any clarification.

Mr. Speaker, I think that what we've clearly shown is that we answered the questions consistently; we answered them correctly. We did not have any completed reports. We have shown that when the information we did have, in fact even the information we got on May 14 for the first time, was sent to others that are in the business, the labs, they said that it was incomplete. Anytime you're dealing with something like this, it is extremely important that it be complete and it be accurate.

As far as I'm concerned, there is no way that I have interfered with the member's privileges. I have not done anything except make absolutely sure that if there's any danger, the public knows it.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, can I assume that all documents referred to by the minister will be tabled? All documents, so there's no misunderstanding in any of this.

I indicated yesterday that I would be prepared to hear additional members. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, briefly, as a result of your past experience at the Canadian House of Commons with respect to similar matters.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened attentively to the representation of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and again this afternoon from the Minister of Infrastructure, and I quote Beauchesne's 31(1): "A dispute arising between two Members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfill the conditions of parliamentary privilege." I would suggest to the House that this is a matter of debate and not a matter of privilege.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I take it that there is no further input.

Well, I will take this matter under advisement. Hon. members, I will not be in the House tomorrow. It's okay for a member to say that they're not going to be in the House tomorrow. I'm going to the graduation of my son at the University of Alberta, so I think that's a legitimate reason to not be here. So this matter will not be dealt with until Monday.

Bill 44

Personal Information Protection Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert on behalf of the Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 44, the Personal Information Protection Act.

Albertans value their privacy and want to ensure that their personal information is not being used inappropriately by business and other private-sector organizations in Alberta. The Personal Information Protection Act will establish clear, concise, and commonsense rules for private-sector organizations when collecting, using, and disclosing personal information. If Alberta does not enact the Personal Information Protection Act, the federal Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act will govern personal information collected in Alberta's private sector on January 1, 2004.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

3:30

Alberta's act will address Alberta's private-sector needs better than the federal act. Our legislation is drafted to make it easier for small businesses to follow. In developing the Personal Information Protection Act, Alberta has worked closely with British Columbia, which recently passed its own personal information protection act. In doing so, Alberta and British Columbia have been leaders among the other provinces in developing similar privacy legislation to protect the interests of their residents while balancing the needs of business.

The act requires businesses to obtain consent when collecting a customer's personal information. Once the customer consents, the business can use and disclose information as agreed with the customer. Exceptions to consent exist in certain circumstances. These include when using an employee's personal information for payroll purposes, if the information is publicly available, or for debt collection, the sale of a business, emergencies, and other similar matters when obtaining consent is not reasonable.

An individual will be able to obtain access to his or her own personal information held by a business as long as the request is reasonable and nothing prevents access. Organizations can charge reasonable fees for providing access. The act will not affect not-for-profit or charitable organizations unless they are carrying on commercial activities. In these instances the act will only apply to the personal information handled that relates to the commercial activity.

Alberta's Information and Privacy Commissioner can receive complaints under the act. If the commissioner finds that a business has breached an individual's privacy, the individual can go to court to recover damages for loss or injury.

The Personal Information Protection Act will not apply to personal information protected by the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act or when the Health Information Act applies. The act will also not apply to personal information collected, used, or disclosed for personal or domestic purposes or journalistic, literary, or artistic purposes.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have told us that they value their privacy. The Personal Information Protection Act protects Albertans' personal information held by businesses and other private-sector organizations while ensuring that these organizations can continue to collect personal information for legitimate business purposes. This made-in-Alberta legislation also ensures that both citizens and businesses can deal with a provincial independent body rather than a federal one to resolve disputes. I and, I know, the hon. Minister of Government Services look forward to the debate on this bill as our process continues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill 44, the Personal Information Protection Act, certainly is interesting legislation. It has been described by various interested parties as everything from being very necessary to being very, very fuzzy. Now, the purpose, of course, of debate in the Assembly is to get answered a lot of the concerns that have been raised by various groups through the drafting process of any legislation. Hopefully, we are going to get significant answers in regard to this legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we compare this draft legislation to that in B.C. and we compare this legislation to the federal legislation, of course everyone is aware of what would happen if we didn't have our own Personal Information Protection Act. We have many things to consider when we discuss personal information in any form, and there are many occasions where there are legitimate reasons to collect and use personal data, but occasionally there are dubious reasons as well. This is why we need privacy protection.

We welcome the debate on Bill 44, which has sat on the Order Paper since last summer. Now, I understand – and I'm very grateful for the time that the Ministry of Government Services officials have provided for a background brief on this bill – that there are some amendments coming forward later on. I think this side of the House will also have at least one if not more amendments to this legislation. So the fact that there are amendments coming forward indicates that the draft bill, or the bill that was tabled in the Assembly here in the spring, was a work in progress.

Certainly, there are reasons why we need privacy protection. The business community has known for a couple of years that this type of legislation was evident. Many corporations have by letter over the summer expressed their opinions on this legislation, and I would like to thank them for their correspondence. In particular I would like to express my public thanks to the Enmax Corporation for providing copies of what they along with the Calgary Chamber of Commerce stated in September to a standing policy committee regarding this legislation. It's interesting to note. Hopefully, some of their concerns and observations and research on this bill will be incorporated into the debate as we continue.

Not only the business community was consulted but also labour unions, Mr. Speaker. There are many organizations that are going to be affected by this legislation, but one of them certainly will be unions. To date I'm not satisfied that unions will not be hurt, that there will not be a harmful side to this for labour organizations. With this legislation in place, how will they be able to conduct an organizing drive? You know, a union organizer can start a petition. How will that affect the ability to gather names and addresses, et cetera, in the process of a certification drive on one business or another?

It has been explained to me that with section 17 in Use of Personal Information, 17(b) in particular, the Labour Relations Code will in fact work and work well, and there will be no problems. Certainly, on this side of the House we have to distribute this legislation, and it will be interesting to hear from the labour groups in regard to this bill and how it affects them.

Many consumers in this province, Mr. Speaker, commented regarding the pressure that's applied by businesses to supply personal information in order to receive a product or service. There's probably not an hon. member in this House who at some time has not been asked for a phone number when there was a cash transaction. We have to be very, very careful, and we have to be very cautious about providing information.

How will this be changed with Bill 44, Mr. Speaker? Businesses certainly will have to obtain our permission to use or share our private information. Section 8 of this legislation will allow consent to be either oral or written. It may be implied or deemed. There are also provisions for opting out. We are, as I understand it, delegating to regulations the form of consent. This is what was worrisome for the commissioner in Ottawa. The Privacy Commissioner of Canada in Ottawa had some reservations, which he expressed in May of this year regarding Bill 44.

Hopefully, as we go through this legislation, the reservations that were expressed by the Privacy Commissioner will be addressed, but in the review of Bill 44, the review of the draft, the commissioner states in a letter that has been made public:

I think it important to inform you now, before it becomes law, that Bill 44 has a number of very grave deficiencies that would in my view would make it impossible for the Government of Canada to recognize this legislation in its current form as substantially similar to the federal Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act.

Now, this is quite a long letter, and it's an interesting letter. The commissioner goes on to outline in this letter what are considered to be major weaknesses of this bill, and these are:

A major weakness of this Bill is the discretion it gives the Lieutenant Governor in Council (the Cabinet) to issue sweeping regulations dealing with a broad range of matters, including:

- giving consent;
- the procedures to be followed in making and responding to access requests;
- the circumstances in which personal information can be collected, used or disclosed without consent; and
- the personal information to which the Act does not apply.

So those are some of the concerns that the commissioner had.

Now, this government, we all know, likes to rule by regulation, and it has not escaped the attention of some of the commissioners in Ottawa.

Mr. Magnus: What?

Mr. MacDonald: "What," the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill states. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: There's just the one member that's been recognized, and I'll put you on the list for the next one if you want to.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These regulations that are discussed are not to my knowledge public documents. Therefore, I have a certain reluctance to endorse this bill from the start. Now, we have discussed the past practices, the habits of former Progressive Conservative governments. When you're looking at a 30-year period, you almost divide them up like you're studying Chinese history. The first Conservative government would routinely table regulations along with the draft legislation of the bill so that members of the House could see them. To my knowledge I have not seen these regulations tabled, and in order to have full support of this legislation from this member, I would like to have an opportunity to at least read this list of regulations.

Mr. Speaker, also, how much is this legislation going to cost corporations? My questions to the Minister of Government Services would be around these costs. Has the Minister of Government Services conducted any studies to calculate the cost of this legislation to Alberta businesses, large and small? Will the business community in this province with this legislation – and hopefully they will have a level playing field once this legislation becomes law. The Americans have been developing privacy legislation for several years. They're in advance of ourselves.

The federal act, which was referred to by the previous speaker, was a response to the European Community's 1995 data protection directive, which prohibited companies and member EC states from doing business with nonmember companies unless there was an equivalent privacy protection in the foreign law. So the sales pitch for the private-sector privacy laws is the same around the world, and that is: it's good for business, and it's good for freedom as well.

Mr. Speaker, when we discuss this bill further, we have to always recognize the balance between what is good for freedom, good for consumers, and what is good for business. Now, currently in this province there is a hearing going on at the EUB in regard to Direct Energy. Direct Energy is essentially buying a list of customers, over 860,000 customers, of utilities. It's amazing that we're talking about Bill 44 here and this company is willing, for $127 million, to purchase a lot of ATCO's goodwill that's been built up over the years. But along with that goodwill is the list of names of utility customers, addresses. There's a lot of information there, as there is a lot of consumer information with other utility companies. So we have to be aware of the transfer of information. We have to be aware of the big data banks that exist and how this information can be used and whether that use is inappropriate or appropriate.

So even though I have some reservations about this bill, I think that at this time it is the best we can do. Certainly it is fuzzy. The regulations are not public, but it'll be interesting to see and read the discussion on Bill 44 as it proceeds through this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like, please, to adjourn debate on Bill 44. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 43 Post-secondary Learning Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 43, the Post-secondary Learning Act.

Bill 43 is probably one of the most exciting bills to hit the postsecondary education system in Alberta in a long time. What we have done in this bill is we have combined four acts – the Universities Act, the Colleges Act, the Technical Institutes Act, and the Banff Centre Act – into one bill.

If you remember, Mr. Speaker, back in May of this year the bill was introduced, and at that time I had stated that I was going to take the bill out and talk to the people about the bill. Subsequently, we will be bringing forward several amendments effective, hopefully, as soon as committee on this bill takes place. We have had excellent consultations with all of the affected parties. As a matter of fact, I've met twice with the students' associations. All the presidents and boards of governors of our various postsecondary institutions are in favour of the new amendments and, indeed, are in favour of the bill. I have talked to the opposition parties about the particular amendments as well, so they are fully aware of what is coming forward this evening. Therefore, I would suggest that we table the amendments as soon as possible in committee, and hopefully we can do that as quickly as possible.

In direct response to what the previous member was saying, I will be tabling draft regulations as it affects tuition policy as well. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would urge the Legislative Assembly to take this bill into committee as soon as possible so that I can indeed put these amendments on the floor and we can start talking about it.

Mr. Speaker, again, I'll just basically say that this is a bill that will do a lot of things to the postsecondary system, not the least of which is to provide the ability for colleges and technical schools to provide baccalaureate degrees, to provide degrees where quality is warranted and thereby dramatically increase access for our students. So I would ask the Legislative Assembly to move into committee as soon as it sees fit, and I will be able to table the amendments.

Thank you.

3:50

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make a few comments at second reading of Bill 43, the Post-secondary Learning Act. As the minister has indicated, the process around this bill was one where the bill was introduced in the spring session and then left over to be reconsidered as we meet here in the fall. During that time there has been a lot of reaction and a lot of consultation with interested groups: the boards of governors, the administrators of the various institutions, the faculty and college and technical institute associations, the students. Of those groups the reaction has been primarily favourable from the first two and unfavourable, as best we can determine, from the students.

Now, the minister indicated that there had been consultation with the students, and I'm still not quite clear what the result of that consultation was. As late as yesterday the students were demonstrating on the steps of the Legislature, upset about the provisions in the bill with respect to tuition and also the provisions in the bill for a wide variety of other changes with respect to students' unions in the province and their governance and the role that they play in institutions.

I think it's for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that we are anxious to see the formal amendments that the minister will be proposing to the Assembly. I think that that has been the position of some student leaders, too, in the province, that they have held in reserve their judgments with respect to the bill until they see the amendments as tabled. They want to know exactly the wording of those amendments. The minister did extend us the courtesy of going through those amendments in chart form, and we, too, would like to see what exactly is going to be proposed.

One other important aspect of the legislation is the regulations. When we met with the minister, one of the things we discussed was the possibility of having at least a draft set of regulations available for consideration while the bill is before the Legislature, and I'd be interested, to the minister, with respect to if that is going to be done. It's extremely important for students, Mr. Speaker, because the regulations, as I understand it, will have some great impact or possible impact on those parts of the bill that deal with tuition. As I indicated earlier, tuition is a major concern for students and their parents and with respect to this act.

So we could go through the bill. Second reading is usually the opportunity to look at the principles that rest behind the bill. I think that as we've looked at it, one of our concerns is the centralizing of power in Edmonton, and that's done at the loss of autonomy, we think, for some institutions and for some of the groups that are involved, particularly students.

The bill has also, I think, an underlying principle that tries to make all postsecondary schools part of one large system. Our fear is that that might be at the expense of the uniqueness of each of the institutions, and I think that that's a fear that is shared by others. If we end up making each of the institutions and their programs interchangeable, then I think we'll have lost some of the very uniqueness that makes Alberta's postsecondary system a stronger system. We do have institutions like Athabasca, which has a unique contribution to make, the institutes. Anything that would take away from that uniqueness I think is something that we should question before we endorse. So it's that notion of centralizing power in Edmonton and within the minister's office that we would like to explore. We'd like to see how the amendments that are going to be introduced might affect that.

We're also concerned with the prohibition of strike action by professional staff, and, again, this has a long history in the province. We would be loath to see rights taken away from groups that they previously were able to exercise even if there has never been a strike in the history of the postsecondary system in the province.

The principles underlying tuition I think are really important principles. I imagine they are going to occupy a great deal of the debate once we move to the committee stage and we see the government's amendments.

There are other principles with respect to the powers of universities, particularly their actions within a municipal environment and being able to make moves that affect zoning and their exemptions from that zoning that are contained in the bill and, again, that I think are important and those provisions that are put forward with respect to expropriating land. So a lot of important principles have been embedded in the legislation, but, again, Mr. Speaker, the devil is in the amendments and in the regulations, and we are anxious to see both of those.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to rise and put a few thoughts on the record with regard to Bill 43, the Postsecondary Learning Act, which I see as being probably one of the most important pieces of legislation that this body will deal with in quite some time because it deals with one of the cornerstones of the future of this province and is recognized by the Learning Commission and by the Future Summit.

Over the course of the summer since this bill was first introduced, there has been a good deal of representation by the postsecondary education institutions: NAIT, SAIT, the universities, Grant MacEwan. There has been a good deal of representation from the students' associations, individually and collectively. Mr. Speaker, if I may, in speaking to that representation of the students' associations in particular, I want to acknowledge the considered and courteous representation of the students' association to me in particular. From those representations it seems to me that the students' concern as regards Bill 43 centres around tuition, tuition caps, and the nature of the representation of the students' association to the board. To whom should the students' association be accountable?

My response to them, Mr. Speaker, was that it makes, at least in my estimation, good common sense for the students' association to have fidelity to the board or to the institution of which they're a part. It makes sense because they are part of the whole.

Then the question of the composition of the board came into play, especially in connection with the tuition cap. With removal of the tuition cap the potential exists, in the minds of students that have contacted me, that eventually over time students may end up paying more as a percentage of the cost of their university education than they do now and that perhaps their representation on the board could be in proportion to the amount of tuition that goes in to paying the cost of education. So, for instance, if the students through tuition paid 30 percent of the cost of their education, then their board representation should be something in the neighbourhood of 30 percent so that there's a balance between what the students are paying in tuition and their representation on the board during their time at the particular institution.

Another notion that came up was the representation on the university senate. The representation was made to me that it would be of benefit to the educational institutions if the senate provided for more alumni representation, because the alumni representation on the senates of the various universities can become the centrepiece of community involvement in that educational institution. Whether this requires a change in the composition of the senate or of the number of seats available for people on the senate is a matter that would come up.

But we'll leave this contribution to this debate at this point now, Mr. Speaker. Again I commend the Minister of Learning for bringing this to the table. I think that this, in my estimation and representing the constituents of Edmonton-Rutherford, will be a cornerstone in the future of our country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, are you wishing to make a comment or ask questions? There being none, then the hon. member may continue debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 43 in its second reading. I must, however, express serious difficulty in speaking about Bill 43, which from my meeting with the minister two days ago, which I appreciate, is not going to be Bill 43. It's going to be substantially amended. It makes it very difficult, therefore, to be put in the situation in the House to commence debate in second reading of a bill which will substantially change, and we know beforehand that it will substantially change.

I had hoped that the minister would either make those changes that he's going to propose by way of amendments available to us ahead of time so that we wouldn't be unnecessarily wasting time commenting on the language of the bill as we find it incorporated in the bill or that he had in fact had six months – and I commend him for encouraging consultations and engaging in those consultations with various interest groups and stakeholders. But it would have been much better if the minister had in fact made changes in the bill and brought the bill in in its new form so that we could approach debate in the second reading of the bill in a more serious and effective manner.

That said, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to make observations on the bill as I find it before me. To begin, I think I want to acknowledge the role of the student leaders who were here earlier today sitting in the gallery and who represent students' unions and provincial umbrella organizations across the province, the Council of Alberta University Students and, similarly, the college and institute students' executive committee. They have done a wonderful job of encouraging debate and presenting their analysis, in many cases quite critical of various parts of the bill. I applaud their effort as students to show a level of engagement which is very refreshing. We need to revitalize and revive this tradition of public debate on legislative matters that concern many of us and are going to have an impact in a very important way on the future of postsecondary public education in this province.

I can assume that the Minister of Learning would agree with me that the leaders of student organizations have indeed made a very important contribution to this debate that has unfolded over the last few months. As a result of the efforts of student leaders and faculty associations and community leaders and others, what started out, in my view, as a very seriously flawed bill as presented in the spring sitting is now likely to be seeing some improvement in it, but I will withhold my judgment until we see the amendments and have debate on them.

The minister, as I said, met with me on Monday afternoon to brief me on the proposed amendments. While I appreciate the gesture and the opportunity, I think it would have served everyone's interest had copies of the proposed amendments been made available to all stakeholders and certainly to members of this Assembly.

During our meeting the minister and I had a little debate. He tried to blame me for my previous actions in the ruling of the Speaker on March 5, 2003, for not being able to make copies of the proposed amendments available prior to the actual amendments being tabled at the committee stage. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, the March 5 ruling focused very narrowly on the government's practice of providing information on bills once they were placed on notice and before they were introduced to the news media prior to the same information on a bill being provided to members. In the Speaker's ruling it was specifically stated that extensive consultations at the drafting stage of bills were allowed and strictly within the purview of the government and the minister.

Alternatively, the minister could have withdrawn Bill 43 and introduced it as an amended bill. That would have allowed us to have a more meaningful discussion at this stage of the debate. Given the fact that we have not yet seen the amendments, I will keep my comments somewhat more general and abstract. They have to be, I guess.

In all of the discussions I've had with students and community leaders, there's one issue that trumps all others, and that is the rapidly rising cost of postsecondary tuition. This has really emerged as a key issue for students. Imagine the outcry, Mr. Speaker, if our corporate taxes in Alberta had tripled over the past decade. Imagine the outcry if energy royalties had tripled over the same period. Far from raising corporate taxes, they are being cut in half over a number of years. But that's not what's happening to student tuition fees. Tuition and related fees have more than tripled since 1990, the highest percentage increase in Canada during this time frame, and tuition continues to go up at several times the inflation rate year after year after year, so students have a real concern.

In a recent study done by the minister's own department, high school graduates indicated that the number one reason for not taking postsecondary education was the high cost. Over 70 percent agreed that the tuition and other costs are a barrier to further study. Recently the TD Bank, hardly an institution that normally is critical of Alberta government policy, released a report indicating that the prohibitive cost of postsecondary education was becoming a significant obstacle threatening Alberta's future prosperity.

While the amended Bill 43 might try to keep a legislative cap of 30 percent on those postsecondary institutions below the cap, postsecondary institutions that have reached 30 percent will be allowed to go above the cap. In other words, students attending the University of Lethbridge and some other institutions will find their tuitions making up a larger than 30 percent share of the operating costs of those institutions.

What's needed, Mr. Speaker, is not a formula for endless increases in tuition as facilitated by Bill 43. What is needed is to put a brake on endless tuition increases. That's why I'll be introducing an amendment to Bill 43 that implements a freeze on tuition fee increases in this province. Quebec has frozen tuition fees for six years, Manitoba for two. Newfoundland has actually reduced tuition fees in the past few years. If these provinces, which do not have our oil and gas wealth, can afford to put a brake on tuition increases, why can't Alberta? That's what students keep asking me. Young Albertans not fortunate enough to come from well-to-do families have two options: go deeply into debt or not get a postsecondary education. An educated and skilled populace is the best investment a society can make in its own future prosperity. Alberta should be encouraging young people to seek postsecondary education, not punishing them with ever increasing tuition.

Bill 43 takes us even further away from the goal of making public postsecondary education affordable and accessible. For that reason, I have very serious concerns and reservations about Bill 43 and therefore my support for it.

Bill 43 also has several other failings which vastly outweigh a few of the positive features of the bill. For example, I remain unconvinced that the minister needs to give himself the power to audit and/or dissolve the elected student associations or their executives. Student union leaders should be accountable to students, not to the Minister of Learning, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 43 expressly prohibits both faculty and graduate students from free and fair collective bargaining, including those very rare instances where it may be necessary to engage in job action. In fact, Bill 43 not only strips away protections under the Labour Relations Code but also protections under the Employment Standards Code. All of these regressive measures are being implemented as part of a broader agenda, it seems to me, by the Tory government to take away the right to strike from everyone employed in the broader public sector. It would be one thing if the right to strike was being abused, but it has not been.

The history of collective bargaining in our colleges, institutes, and universities has been such that there has been rarely an action taken along these lines by any of the faculty associations. In fact, except at Mount Royal College, one solitary example, all other faculty associations have voluntarily negotiated away their right to strike, but these faculty associations and graduate student associations as well are free to negotiate back the right to strike. Unfortunately, this basic and fundamental right is being legislated out of existence in Bill 43. I'll wait to see the amendments. I hope the minister has changed his mind on that issue and that we'll be able to put this concern of mine away for good.

Finally – well, not quite finally yet – I do want to acknowledge that Bill 43 does provide some better protection to neighbourhoods from unreasonable expansion of universities and decisions affecting the neighbourhoods. I had a meeting this morning with representatives from the Windsor Park community as well as from Garneau. They still have some concerns, and they're waiting to see the bill in its amended form before they have anything more to say, but they did want me to reiterate their concerns about this bill and the protection they are seeking and hoping that this will provide to them. So I will have more to say on this as debate moves into committee; that is, how to make sure that protection could be made even better.

Mr. Speaker, I want to just quote the concern of faculty associations with respect to what the bill is proposing to do to their rights by using a quotation from ACIFA, which is the Alberta College-Institute Faculties Association. In a letter that I think they wrote to the minister, they particularly focus on section 88 of the bill, and they say that section 88, which imposes arbitrary restrictions on existing collective [bargaining] agreements freely negotiated in good faith, represents an unprecedented and unwarranted attack on the collective bargaining rights of faculty in our system.

In our view, Section 88 constitutes a clear violation of international conventions on freedom of association principles, as set out as recently as March 2003, in a series of rulings by the International Labour Organization (ILO) on complaints concerning several pieces of legislation passed by the government of British Columbia.

A legislated prohibition of strike action by academic staff members can only have a negative impact on the labour relations climate in our sector. No other jurisdiction in Canada has enacted such a drastic measure, which will do significant and lasting damage to the reputation of Alberta's post-secondary system, and create a bar to the recruitment of world-class scholars and teachers to our province.

Moreover, we are unaware of any actions or circumstances which necessitate or justify the inclusion in the proposed Post-Secondary Learning [Act] academic staff members of an express prohibition on strike action by academic staff members.

There's a bit of a problem with the wording there.

We do not accept that Section 88 can be justified by the need for consistency or uniformity throughout the post-secondary system, where currently only one academic staff association retains the right to strike under the terms of its collective agreement.

I will return to this later as we'll have more opportunities. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, the minister was making a signal, and I could only presume that's under Standing Order 29(2) to ask a question or make a comment, or was it something else? No? Okay. Fair enough.

Are you wishing to make a comment or ask a question?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, I did have a question. I'm wondering if the member can expand on his thoughts on the faculty associations.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, a door has opened for you.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Faculty associations are extremely concerned about the lack of any reasons, any evidence that the government has given with respect to why in Bill 43 it's being proposed that the right to strike by faculty associations and by graduate student associations will be taken away. In a reasoned debate in order to justify an action as drastic as this, what the faculty associations see is a violation of international agreements with respect to our fundamental rights to collective bargaining and the other instruments that are available to employees to seek redress to their concerns. These are matters that go to the very heart of democratic institutions and democratic societies and communities.

So faculty associations have two serious reasons to oppose this particular provision of the bill that is represented in section 88. One, it directly limits their own ability to exercise their rights, but secondly, and perhaps even more importantly, they see it as a serious assault on the very project of building a democratic society and expanding democratic freedoms and rights rather than rolling them back. Section 88 is seen by them as an attempt to roll back our democratic rights and the expansion of democratic practices across our institutions, in particular postsecondary institutions, which are most important because our future leaders are exposed to the practices and experiences in those organizations. They then learn how to conduct themselves based on the experience that they have had in those institutions. Often people mirror the experiences that they have had in such institutions when they become decision-makers themselves, and that's why I think the faculty associations are so profoundly concerned about the provisions of section 88, and they would like to see section 88 taken out of the legislation altogether.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to continue debate?

Ms Blakeman: Continue debate if I may.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. You're on.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in second reading on Bill 43, the Post-secondary Learning Act.

I would like to express my appreciation to the students who join us in both the public and the members' galleries. This is democracy in action, and I appreciate you coming down to listen to what's happening because it's your participation that's going to carry us forward and hopefully strengthen Alberta. My thanks to you all for coming down for this, and I hope you come back lots.

It's been an interesting situation. As I listen to the debates – and obviously there have been a number of meetings go on around this bill already with the minister and students' groups, official critics from the opposition and from the third party – I just want to name the situation that we're dealing with here with this bill.

We have a bill that's brought forward in the spring. It's left over the summer for people to have a look at – good idea, lots of feedback, excellent that it engendered that kind of discussion – but then when we get into debate on it, there's this all-fired rush to just get through second reading. Well, we have second reading as part of parliamentary process for a reason. It's an opportunity for us to discuss whether the general principle of the bill is something that we want to proceed with.

There's this interesting sort of pressure, perhaps attitude, and of course the minister has lots of opportunity to stand up and rebut me on this, but, sort of: let's get straight to these amendments because, gee, you know, spending even an hour debating in second reading is too much. We, especially in this Assembly, have got into a situation where that kind of pressure is always on, that any debate is too much as far as what I'm picking up from the good members opposite and could we just please proceed immediately to Committee of the Whole and, gosh, if you want to talk too much there, then there's the new guillotine motion which is a time-restraint motion.

So I just want to name what I've been listening to already today and some of what I've heard, admittedly thirdhand or secondhand, in exchanges to try and sort of hustle this all the way through. We have these processes available to us, and I would expect encouragement of good use of parliamentary process from the members opposite.

Two of the other things that I've heard are: the carrot dangling in front of us, that if we just hustle on through into Committee of the Whole, we'll get the amendments tabled. I appreciate that very much. I know that the students appreciate that very much, but there is nothing stopping the member from tabling the amendments now.

An Hon. Member: Yes, there is.

Ms Blakeman: Well, we've certainly had draft amendments out there circulating on other bills and certainly available for discussion. Draft ones have been circulated all kinds of times.

The second thing is this carrot again dangled about that the minister will make the regulations available. Well, I think that the students that are here in the gallery would like to know if he is going to do that or not. Will he table the draft workings or whatever he's talked about with these regulations? They need to see that. That's part of their decision-making process as to whether they can support it. So where's the tabling? Let's have the tabling. [interjection] Now we get into the semantics of the wording of this. You table all kinds of drafts and white reports and considerations of things. So, fine, as long as those things are available for people to continue and have the discussion and be able to read them. So if the minister is on record as saying he's going to do it, I'm happy with that. That's what we wanted to hear.

There have been a number of points of concern that have been raised around what's been brought forward in this bill, and I think they can be lumped very loosely into a couple of categories. One is around the tuition and the fears of rising tuition costs for students, removal of the cap, and then some sort of percentage where it can continue to rise, and the students' fear is that they will be responsible for an ever increasing portion of the costs of university tuition. It will be directly tied to that. So there's an issue around cost to students, and with that, I think, goes a debt load and access to student loans.

Second to that is, to me, a really important issue about the freedom and integrity and independence of our institutes of higher learning, and the easiest way for me to sort of explain that is to talk about tenure, professors or instructors in postsecondary institutions having tenure. The point is so that they can explore and test the waters and challenge and think. That is where we house our thinkers, and it makes me very uneasy to have a bill that essentially pulls all the reins of power and control into the hands of a minister who then has a shell bill in which he is empowered to do a number of things under regulation.

Does that mean that I think that this minister is going to go out as soon as this bill is passed and, you know, start to direct what the university does? The controlling mechanism here is the approval of the business plans. Do I think that that's what his intention is, is to immediately rush out and do that? No, I don't. But I think the potential is there, and I think we have to guard against that potential.

We talk about economic diversification all the time. We talk about how we need to get away from the oil and gas sector. We talk about being a smart province with a great emphasis on high tech and creative thinking, and it's our intellectual property that is going to move us forward in the province. I think that if we understand that, we need to be protecting and upholding the independence of our postsecondary institutions, and I think that is being challenged with what we're seeing in this bill.

Sometimes that comes about because people are anticipating the situation that arose. To quote loosely from Shakespeare: will no one rid me of this man, in which the followers of a particular king or whoever thought that the intention was that the person be killed. That was the wish of the lord, and off they went and killed him, came back, and he went: oh, well, I didn't really mean that. But you took it to mean that.

So it can be put onto people, a sort of self-censorship that happens, and I've seen this happen once before. I think we've climbed back out of it, but I have seen it happen once before where because of what had been stated by the government – what this was was around community standards. In fact, what happened was the minister, quite rightly so, was very carefully monitoring community standards and never came in and imposed a community standard on any play or book or film or whatever. But what I saw was that the choices that were being made by the organizations became more and more careful for fear they would cross that line of community standards. Nobody knew where the line of community standards was; nonetheless, they all pulled back, and what we had was a period of less interesting production in the artistic world because they were self-censoring.

So I just want to put that example forward on the kinds of freedom to challenge and think and push forward academically that happen when there is fear that perhaps their funding won't be approved. It doesn't even have to be anything overt. I mean, there's just: the business plan gets sent back and gets sent back, and people go, "Oh, we don't know what we're supposed to do." They start to make adjustments hoping that's going to please everybody. I think that's what we have to really guard against here and one of the real concerns that I see.

The hon. members for Edmonton-Mill Woods and also for Edmonton-Strathcona have spoken about their concerns with banning labour strikes in the universities and colleges, which is always an area that is going to concern me. You know, you don't get organizing of labour unless people feel that there's a good reason to organize, that they need to be able to have a collective bargaining process to go and argue with a much larger entity and feel they need to come together for that. That collective bargaining process is about a balance. If you take away one of the legs of that balance, you're going to tip the table. It is no longer fair for those workers because they no longer have the right to strike. I think that, again, places what we're trying to do in our institutes of higher learning, certainly for the support staff that are there, in jeopardy.

The user pay. I appreciated the comments that were made by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, bringing forward a sort of no-taxation-without-representation argument, that if they're going to end up paying higher tuition fees, they would correspondingly get more representation or more space on the decision-making board. Okay. Interesting argument. I think most of the students would far prefer not to have their tuition go up, and they would certainly prefer not to be taking on the kind of debt load that seems now to be an expectation.

I find it very interesting that the generation that we find in this House making the laws is, I think it's fair to say, a generation that came through university with fairly manageable student loans if any at all, yet this group is very quick to put a huge debt load on the students that come after us. Interestingly, this is also the same generation of you, my good colleagues in this House, that was the last generation that participated in student activism in our institutes of higher learning. Yet this is the same group that is so quick to want to slam that door closed on any student activism to come in the generation that's currently in these institutions or that are to come. Neat sort of: "Thanks, I enjoyed it, but no more for anyone else. We're going to close the door so no one else gets to enjoy those same privileges." Interesting.

You know the one thing that Bill 43 has done – and I really appreciate the minister giving this opportunity – is to mobilize and activate and energize a youth vote, which as we know we are not very good at in this province. Only 50 percent of our population votes now, and the percentage of people that are 18 to 30 that actually vote is one out of every five, I think, or possibly as high as one out of every four. So they account for 13 percent of the population, yet they're not out there. Frankly, I think it can be argued – and I will argue it – that when you see legislation like Bill

43, it's reflective of the fact that that 18 to 30 demographic does not vote and everybody knows it. So if students or younger people don't like this bill, at this point there is no repercussion on the government for passing it – none – because younger people don't get out and vote. They're not making their voice heard. So if nothing else, this will help to mobilize that and for that I thank you. I think that's an incredible gift. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member and hon. minister, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) you have an opportunity to ask questions or make comments, but right now we have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I think at this point I will conclude my remarks and carry on with further remarks when we're in Committee of the Whole. I certainly appreciate the opportunity to talk in wider terms about what this bill is presenting, particularly the context of this bill that we've had and all of the things that have surrounded it. It's been a very interesting process. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister rose first. To make comment or question, hon. minister?

Dr. Oberg: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have one very brief question. The hon. member had talked a significant amount in her speech about the centralization of power in the minister's office. I guess my question to her is: have you met with the institutions in your city – namely NorQuest, Grant MacEwan, and the University of Alberta as well as NAIT – in order to ascertain their views? They unanimously gave me support for this bill. So the question is: have you met with the affected postsecondary institutions?

Ms Blakeman: I didn't quite hear the question at the end of that. You made a statement, but there was no question at the end of it.

Dr. Oberg: My question was: have you met with the four public postsecondary institutions in Edmonton to ascertain their position on Bill 43?

Ms Blakeman: My responsibility is to my constituents, who live in Edmonton-Centre, and I have certainly been very happy to meet with any of the students that asked me to. I have a different responsibility, and that's to the constituents. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, if you wish to ask a question, please stand in your place and be recognized. Right now it's Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask the Member for Edmonton-Centre, who just spoke: notwithstanding the concerns over process and notwithstanding the responsibility that the member has as a member of the opposition to question the legislation, thereby making it stronger – and we understand the role of the opposition – I would really like to know . . . I'm really puzzled by the approach that the students' association has brought to me, saying that their fidelity is to their association, to the freedom. Some have represented to me that they feel that it's a violation of human rights that the students' association should have to report to the board, while it seems to me entirely legitimate that a students' association of a particular institution should have its fidelity to the institution through the board. It's a perfectly natural consequence of responsibility because it's the board and the institution, not the students' association, that should be of primary importance. So I'm wondering what the Member for Edmonton-Centre feels in that debate, in that conundrum.

Ms Blakeman: I think my starting point in that debate is around who's paying the piper – in other words, who's funding it, or where's the money coming from? – and also the fact that you're dealing with an elected body, so you have a group of individuals that are adults who elect a group of people to perform certain services for them and represent them. I take it that you argue – and you have an opportunity to clarify – that then they must report to somebody else. I mean, it's an interesting concept, but those students pay for the students' union, they pay for the services the students' union offers, and they independently elect them.

So I think there's validity to the argument of challenge in which they're saying: why do they then have to report to someone else and have to come under the control of a different group?

The Deputy Speaker: Any further debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to just make a few additional comments on Bill 43, the Post-secondary Learning Act. Certainly all the speakers that have been up so far have covered the fact that this particular bill will repeal four existing acts: the Banff Centre Act, the Colleges Act, the Technical Institutes Act, and the Universities Act. It will mold them into one act. As well, we have also heard that in this entire process there has been quite a bit of stakeholder consultation. Certainly, the introduction of the bill in the spring did allow many of us the opportunity to have some stakeholder consultation over the summer and into the fall. I also have to say that I along with all other members and all other stakeholders or students that are in the crowd look forward to seeing the amendments and the draft regulations tabled in this Assembly.

While we do want to commence debate in Committee of the Whole and look at how the amendments and the regulations are going to substantially change what we initially thought Bill 43 was going to do, second reading is also, as pointed out by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, a very important part of the process of passing a bill in this particular Assembly.

Overall the process has been a good process, particularly for two of the groups, and certainly to the extent that our students have had the opportunity to look at the portions of the bill that directly affect them, it is unfavourable. One of the areas that is very unfavourable to students is the section of the bill that will remove the 30 percent tuition cap from legislation and leave it up to regulations. This has been quite a contentious issue for some time, and in the early '90s, when my oldest daughter was studying at university, she saw her tuition fees triple in the course of a four-year science program. This has a huge, huge impact on students who have limited abilities to work during the school year and don't have the ability to make great amounts of money during the summer at the jobs that are available.

But what we also forget in all of this, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that students have a lot of other expenses. When I was at university and when my daughters and my son were at university and now for students today, the price of textbooks has increased immensely. With the fact that textbooks don't seem to be recycled that much anymore but new editions come on quite often, they are faced with these huge costs for textbooks as well. We all know that the cost of accommodation is another area where, certainly, expenses have risen drastically and continue to rise.

So what has happened here with these increased costs is that more and more we are limiting the accessibility of universities to all of our students. Certainly, that was not the dream of the pioneers in this province when, under the first Premier of this province, the University of Alberta was established.

An Hon. Member: A Liberal.

Mr. Bonner: Yes, Premier Rutherford was a Liberal and had an excellent vision. I know he'd be disappointed in the direction that we're taking with our students today.

I heard, as well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford describe our universities as a cornerstone of democracy. Certainly, when I think of democracy, I think of two key words, and they are: independence and freedom. What has happened in this bill is that when we do consolidate the minister's power over the universities and colleges and the students' union in there, we certainly are limiting independence. We are also limiting freedom. Perhaps the one greatest advantage that these institutions of higher learning have been able to offer students is the opportunity to exercise their creativity, and I would certainly not want to see any limiting of that ability for our students or that opportunity for our students.

Now, then, as well, when we look at the issue of consolidating the power with the minister, it has a tremendous amount of potential. It will also have great influence to limit the independence and the freedom of students. It is a loss of autonomy, and what I liked was the explanation given by the Member for Edmonton-Centre that certainly the students do have the right to their own associations because of all the reasons that she had given.

As well, I think that what happens here when we talk about consolidating power is that one of the ways that is done with this particular bill is it requires universities to submit regular business plans to the Minister of Learning, and it gives the Minister of Learning an opportunity to interfere in the operations of postsecondary institutions and certainly has the potential to threaten academic freedom.

Another point that was covered by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was the strike action of the professional staff being removed. For certain, I cannot see why we would want to make this part of the bill when it has never had a history. When we have never had a history of strike action in our universities, why would we want to limit job action? Certainly, even if we had, it is the right of workers to be able to take job action if, in fact, they do not like the negotiations that have gone on between them and their employer. So I definitely do have some concerns when we start to limit the rights of workers.

It almost makes me think: what do people envision down the road that they would require this put into legislation? What type of action is being planned that it would be put into legislation to limit job action by professional staff? When we take away these rights, rights that have never been abused, then it does lead to questioning, and we certainly want to see what is the detail of the regulations that limit this.

So with those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and listen to the comments of others as they speak about Bill 43, Postsecondary Learning Act. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: If there are no comments, then the hon. Minister of Learning to close debate.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to close debate. I think that a lot of the questions that have been raised by the hon. opposition parties will be answered with the amendments that will be tabled, hopefully this evening. The proposed tuition fee regulations will also be tabled this evening.

Just in quick response, as the hon. Speaker knows, as a minister of the Crown I am not able to share the actual writing of any amendments until they are tabled in the Legislature, which is the reason that we want to get into committee. It is not to stifle debate. It is actually to have a more reasoned debate as a considerable amount of Bill 43 has been changed following consultation with student associations, faculty associations, and boards of governors.

Mr. Speaker, the only comment that I would make on this is that realistically I certainly would ask each and every member who decides to speak on this bill to contact their postsecondary institutions and ask them quite simply whether or not they're in favour of Bill 43. What you'll find, I believe, is that there is unanimity among all the postsecondary institutions. I would ask as well that because of the ability of this bill to allow colleges and technical schools to grant degrees, there are an awful lot of students out there that are waiting for this bill. So I would just ask them to keep that in mind as we move forward to committee.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 43 read a second time]

Bill 45 Family Law Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do take great pleasure this afternoon in rising in the Legislature to move second reading of Bill 45, the Family Law Act.

This bill represents a huge step forward for the citizens of Alberta for it modernizes, simplifies, and consolidates much of our provincial family law, which has been sorely in need of review and revision for many, many years. Family law touches each and every one of us either directly or indirectly, so it is very important that our Alberta legislation be understandable, be relevant, and be reflective of what Albertans see as fair and appropriate. Furthermore, as much as it is possible, it is important that our legislation be harmonized with the federal Divorce Act so that we don't create two classes of family law litigants in this province.

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, I introduced Bill 45 on May 15, 2003, the last day of the spring session, with the intent that the bill be held over until this fall session to give a final opportunity for review and comments. I'm glad that we took the time to receive further comments on the bill for we have received much good advice which will result in an improved piece of legislation. The clarifications and improvements will be contained in House amendments to be introduced during committee stage later in the session.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, represents a fourth stage in government's overall plan for family law reform, a subject which is near and dear to my heart. I'm very proud that our government is committed to family law reform, and in my remarks today I want to provide some background and context for this bill, how it fits into the plan for general family law reform, to also provide an overview of the contents of the bill, and to talk about the nature of the consultations done over the past summer.

By way of background, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, there has been a longstanding need for family law reform in Alberta. I am told, in fact, that a general review of family law had not been conducted in the province since the 1920s. From my own perspective as a family law practitioner prior to my election in 1997 I had experienced firsthand in representing my clients the unnecessary confusion, duplication, and complexity caused not only by our outdated and overlapping family law statutes but also by the fact that we had two levels of court, our Provincial Court and the Court of Queen's Bench, handling family law matters as well as two levels of government involved in these matters.

It was in 1997 at the behest of the then Minister of Justice, Jon Havelock, that our government appointed an MLA committee to review the maintenance enforcement program and child access. I had the honour of chairing that committee along with the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake and the Member for Red Deer-South, now the Minister of Innovation and Science. The presentations that we heard from members of the public as well as interest groups and experts convinced the committee that significant changes were required to many aspects of family law in Alberta.

The report of the MLA review of the maintenance enforcement program and child access was presented to government in 1998, and since that time, Mr. Speaker, it has served as a guide to the government in changing family law to better serve the needs and priorities of Albertans in the 21st century. Some immediate changes were made as a result of the report of the MLA review, and members will recall that the government responded quickly with legislation to enforce access orders as well as with program and legislative changes to the maintenance enforcement program, which I think have served us very well.

The other two stages of family law reform called for by the review were a unified family court system and substantive family law reform. Because of the importance of these reforms to the everyday life of Albertans the government has proceeded most carefully and with extensive consultations to ensure that it is proceeding with the best possible suggestions for reform.

Progress is being made towards establishing a unified family court in the province, targeted for the spring of 2005, with the help of the unified family court implementation steering committee, which I am privileged to chair. This bill, the Family Law Act, represents many of the changes to substantive family law that were recommended by the report of the MLA review and addresses the goal of substantive family law reform.

Mr. Speaker, this bill represents countless hours of work by the Alberta Law Reform Institute and by Alberta Justice. Many of the proposals found in the bill came from reports on family law developed by the institute. The Department of Justice has also surveyed and studied best practices in legislation across the country and elsewhere. Hundreds of hours have been spent on public consultations as well as consultations with experts in family law. There have been extensive discussions inside government on these proposals, and all of this is reflected in Bill 45 as it now reads.

Over the summer, since introduction, there have been additional targeted consultations with government departments whose mandate may be impacted by Bill 45, with other justice programs and divisions which may be impacted, and there have been external reviews with senior legal practitioners, with all levels of court, with the Canadian Bar Association, family law and wills and estates sections. There has also been additional input from members of the public, including the Alberta grandparents association. As a result, Mr. Speaker, I feel very confident in saying that there is broad support for Bill 45, particularly with the House amendments we intend to introduce resulting from this last consultation.

I would now like to provide a brief overview of the bill, which has as its main intent to make family law legislation more accessible and understandable to Albertans, and it accomplishes this in three main ways. First, it updates the law in relation to parentage, including parentage achieved through reproductive technologies. It updates the law with respect to rights and responsibilities of parents and guardians of children, with respect to custody and access to children, with respect to child support and support for spouses and adult interdependent partners.

Second, it consolidates and rationalizes provincial law which is presently contained in the Domestic Relations Act, the Parentage and Maintenance Act, part 5 of the Child Welfare Act, part 3 of the Provincial Court Act, the Maintenance Order Act, and various other related statutes.

Third, it harmonizes as much as possible with federal divorce legislation and other provincial family legislation such as the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, the Matrimonial Property Act, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, and notably with the proposed unified family court, which is to be enabled through the proposed Alberta Court of Justice act to be introduced by the Minister of Justice later this session.

In structure, Mr. Speaker, Bill 45 contains seven parts, each of which is devoted to a significant aspect of family law. It continues much of the existing family law but uses more modern terminology, and it does include some significant changes to the current provincial law, which I will now mention.

Part 1, entitled Establishing Parentage, includes new provisions on surrogacy and assisted reproduction, which will allow infertile individuals a means to achieve parent status.

Part 2, entitled Guardianship, Parenting and Contact Orders and Access Enforcement, sets out a detailed test for determining the best interests of children in all family law matters, including special criteria for family violence. It also contains a comprehensive list of the responsibilities and powers of parents and guardians of children. It eliminates the concept of custody and access and replaces it with the concept of parenting orders, which has the effect, it is hoped, of turning parents and courts away from the win/lose language of custody and access and toward arranging parental responsibilities and rights in a way that meets the needs of their child. It also introduces the concept of contact orders, under which grandparents and siblings and others may obtain an order allowing visitation or other contact with a child.

Part 3, entitled Support Obligations, will be subject to substantial change by House amendments. Division 1, which deals with child support, now currently provides an obligation to pay support for children up to age 18. It contains broad objectives but little detail on how child support amounts should be calculated. House amendments will be introduced to allow for support for a child up to the age of 22 provided the child is in full-time attendance at school. This will better harmonize, Mr. Speaker, with the Divorce Act.

There will also be House amendments bringing in the implementation of child support guidelines based on those now used in conjunction with the Divorce Act. The use of these guidelines is not new to Albertans as courts have been applying them in nondivorce matters for some time now. These guidelines are proven to have reduced litigation in child support matters, and we would expect that to continue.

Division 2 deals with spousal and adult interdependent partner support. For the most part, the provisions in Bill 45 parallel the provisions of the Divorce Act for spousal support, especially as to the objectives that are to be met by support orders.

Division 3 is called Support for Person in Need. Currently, it re-enacts the almost 80-year-old Maintenance Order Act, which imposes an obligation on grandparents, parents, children, and grandchildren to support other family members who can't support themselves because of disability or similar cause. We will introduce House amendments to remove this division primarily in order to achieve greater consistency with our government's policy of encouraging financial independence of disabled adults.

Mr. Speaker, the remainder of the act contains general matters including the court powers necessary to operationalize the rights, responsibilities, and obligations set out in the act. Of note are provisions encouraging the use of mediation and other alternative dispute resolution processes, a clear right for a party to get financial disclosure for the purposes of determining support, and also provisions that will enable the court to require people to attend courses or programs such as parenting after separation. It will also eliminate such outdated legal concepts and actions as the jactitation of marriage. It will bring uniformity of concepts by making consequential amendments to other statutes, such as the Child Welfare Act, which deal with family matters as well.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, it is the government's intention to introduce other House amendments which will cover many areas of the bill, most of which are to improve the clarity of the bill. Some proposed amendments are especially for the purpose of setting out which level of courts will have jurisdiction over the various parts of the act.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to personally acknowledge our Minister of Justice and his predecessor and their respective departments, particularly everyone on the family law team that I named in first reading, along with the family law reform institute, our courts, our practising bar, the CBA sections in the Law Society, other individuals and agencies working in the court system, my MLA colleagues in government, and the members of the public for coming forward with their valuable contributions to this important legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude with the reflection that the introduction of this bill is a great milestone. It's the product of over six years of work with input from many, many Albertans. While we're not at the end of this journey, the bill does represent a major step toward achieving the government's commitment to complete reform of both the procedure and substance of Alberta family law and toward accessible justice for all Albertans.

Those are my remarks on second reading.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the sponsor of the bill. I said that I was looking forward to her opening remarks. I anticipated the thoroughness of them, and I do appreciate the effort that she put into doing a good explanation of what's contained in the bill, because others will look to Hansard in the future, and that's a nice sort of primer for them to go from.

As well, without repeating the many people that she named as being involved in the amending act, I would like to echo her thanks for people's time and care. This act covers topics which are very difficult for some people. We are talking about, for the most part, setting out the rules by which families come apart, and that is not an easy subject for anybody. So I appreciate the care that so many people have put into trying to craft the best possible legislation that they could.

I also think it was interesting to have the bill introduced at the end of the spring sitting and sitting over the summer for feedback. I think that process was very much worth while. It resulted in a great deal of feedback and has, as the member points out, resulted in, as someone once called it, a Mack truckload of amendments, which we are anticipating looking at this evening, in all likelihood.

So forgive me if I repeat occasionally some of the information that the member has already put on the record as I sort of walk through my initial reaction and discuss the bill in principle. The goal of this was to update and consolidate legislation. I think that for any of the lawyers in the Assembly here who've dealt with family law and certainly in my background in working with women's issues, there are some very difficult and trying situations that arise when legislation doesn't keep up with the times and doesn't necessarily recognize some of the new situations and relationships that have developed.

So it was certainly a good thing. Often I stand here and say: well, was it a good thing? Was there a need for this legislation? Yes, I think there was a need for this legislation. Is this the legislation that's going to address the need? I'm fairly confident that this is going to fill the gap that we needed it to fill. As I said, this is covering all the aspects of the statutes that deal with matters relating to relationship breakdown and children.

There are three acts that are being repealed, and it's also creating consequential amendments. It's repealing the Domestic Relations Act, the Maintenance Order Act, and the Parentage and Maintenance Act. It's essentially creating legislation that is the sole recourse of nonmarried couples upon the breakdown of that relationship. Married couples can still have access to the provisions in the Divorce Act. It is creating a more coherent legislative scheme for matters relating to relationship breakdown and specifically to children. This is long overdue and I think a welcome advance from the perspective of most of the family law practitioners.

I have spoken to some people over the summer that expressed reservations, but overall people were very glad to see this. Over the summer I identified a number of concerns that I had, especially where the legislation seemed to create an inequity, particularly between families that were married versus nonmarried. We cannot create those inequities anymore. The Charter, the Constitution, everything else says that you've got to treat those units the same, that same kind of family situation, and that's what we're trying to do here.

If we look at the general flow of what's happening in the bill, it's addressing a couple of key areas. It looks at establishing parentage, and as the member mentioned, there is some creation of some new ways of dealing with that now, and it's timely that we are looking at that and trying to set out some rules that everybody can operate by.

Part 2 is looking at guardianship, parenting and contact orders, and access enforcement, some of which we've done in this House over the last period of time, but in many cases not that many changes to the work that we did before but major changes to other things. Quite a section on guardianship, parenting orders, contact orders, and enforcement of access, as I said, support obligations, general powers of the court, and then you're into the consequential amendments.

So the establishment of parentage is putting mechanisms in place that will help determine who the father and the mother of children are. These were in the Parentage and Maintenance Act, and they provide the presumption of parenthood mechanisms by which parentage can be declared. The new ones in particular are dealing with surrogacy and assisted conception, which we would have called artificial insemination before, and now it's got a different name.

Under guardianship, parenting and contact orders, and enforcement of access to children it identifies the guardians of children, usually the parents, and allows for the appointment of additional guardians if necessary. It also is providing for courts to make parenting orders, and that includes things like residential care of a child or guardian access to a child, allowing the courts to distribute different powers to make decisions about a child's welfare or their upbringing or their place of residence, all those kinds of decisions that have to be made, so the custody and access provisions that we're used to seeing with additional aspects to them as needed.

Part of, I know, what some of my colleagues want to speak about includes talking about contact orders, the ability for grandparents to seek contact orders. This is a situation of high emotion and great commitment and great difficulty, and I know that some people are going to speak to that a little later.

I've spoken before on enforcement provisions, and I think that when we get into Committee of the Whole, I'm going to comment on that again.

The member spoke quite a bit, actually, about support obligations and provisions for child support. Also, it still includes provision for spousal support. Because we have far more women in the workforce and more expectation through sheer economic demand that both partners and heads of households are working, there's less call upon this, less demand, but I think we still need to have it there for a number of reasons.

The surrogacy and assisted conception sections that are in here. There are a few issues that I hope we're going to have looked at or dealt with by the amendments. The intention of this section is to allow parents to be identified according to the intention of the parties involved rather than just on the basis of determining who's the biological parent and who gave birth to the child. It's moving beyond the mechanics of it, if you will.

A couple of examples around why that becomes important. You can have Dick and Jane or Sally and Dick, who want to have a child. Sally can't get pregnant. They find Jill, who is willing to carry a child for them. Jill gets pregnant with Sally's genetic material, and the child is born. Now, everybody agrees that Sally and Dick are the parents. That's the point of this. That was the intention of it. That's why everybody started out into this. But legally, as it stands right now, neither Sally nor Dick are the parents. They have to go through an adoption procedure. I think that anyone that's been through that knows that it can be costly and unnecessary. There has to be another way for us to do that, especially when the intention of the parents is so clear.

Another example of that. We're going to go back to Sally and Dick again. They want to have a child, but this time Sally can't get pregnant, because Dick is infertile. Sally and Dick go to a clinic. Sally is artificially inseminated. When the child is born, once again everyone expects that Sally and Dick are the parents of the child. That was the point of it. That's why they go into all of this. The problem is that Sally is the mother, but Dick is not the father. He will have to adopt the child. Again, costly and unnecessary. The point of this, the intent, was pretty clear to everybody, but the law as it stands now doesn't allow that to happen. The only mechanism that it gives them to make it legal, to rectify the situation, is going through that adoption process.

So there has to be a way for us to start out from the beginning and say: knowing that that's the intention, how do we set this up from the get-go, from the start? The bill does address situation B completely. That's the one where we've got Dick not able to be named the father without going through the adoption process. He can be declared the father, and Sally, who gave birth, is going to be automatically the mother under the law. But the bill does not address situation A, and I'm hoping that we will see amendments. I know that I have offered some language by way of amendments that may well address this problem, allowing for Sally to be named the mother.

What we have right now is that Sally can be named the mother, but there's no provision to allow Dick to be named the father of the child. He still has to adopt the child. We're only halfway down this road. We've got to be able to do this better, especially when this is a huge bill, and I'm sure that there's no great wish to have to revisit it in an amending act anytime in the future. So it would be nice if we could get this right as we're doing it here.

We also have a third situation, which is a surrogacy situation with same-sex parents. We're in the same problem here. We would have Sally being the mother because she gave birth, but there's no provision for a Jane, for example, to be named the second parent. Again I have made suggestions on how that could be accomplished. The second parent, Jane, would still have to go through an adoption there. So possibilities.

Those two sections are in essence trying to name a mother and name a father, and I think that where, actually, we start to stumble is where we try and put those kinds of gender-laden designations on things. That's not helping us with what we're looking at.

The other area that I'm struggling with and I think that some others certainly have raised with me is the notification section. I think this is coming to me from those that deal very directly with a lot of family law. The concern that's being raised there is that the child is to receive notice of all guardianship and contact order applications provided that the child is older than 16. I think that's what we're trying to achieve.

The worry about this is that these children – they're 16, but they're children – are to be served with affidavits that may well be sworn by parents who are not fond of one another and can be fairly inflammatory and really get on their horse and ride with some fairly hateful language. You now have set up a situation where this 16 or 17 year old is going to be receiving these affidavits. Not the best situation.

I think that in some cases we know that where this really goes awry is where members of the family try and use other members as a pawn in trying to achieve their ends when we have family breakdown. I think we want to be trying to make sure and trying to achieve that balance between a fair notification for those that are involved and still some protection for children who just really do not need to be used in the middle of a war between parents who can be using the child in the middle as a pawn. Is it likely that we would be allowing for a relationship between a child and their parent to deteriorate because of information that they've had to read in one of these affidavits? So I suppose the argument can be made that, you know, they don't have to read it, but I don't think that's too likely. So I'd like to have a look at that when we get to these amendments.

As well, in the parenting orders only guardians can apply for parenting orders, so it's important that the surrogacy and assisted conception sections are addressed here. Those parenting orders direct which parent has custody and which has access, and if we have a situation where the relationship has broken down and they can't agree, then the courts are having to figure this out, and the direction comes from the act.

We've got the contact orders, which I'd referred to. The provisions allow a parent or a person standing in place of a parent, a grandparent, for example, if parents have separated, to make an application to have contact with the child. The test that's set out will make it harder than it should be for people like grandparents to get these orders. I know that I've had a sort of ongoing conversation with the Minister of Justice about what's fair here and what are best interests of the child and parental rights. That's where the discussion seems to get involved and continuous, so I'm sure that we'll be continuing it as we look at trying to make this the best legislation possible. I think that the test that's set out here is too difficult. It makes it harder than it should be for people to be able to get these orders, and specifically I'm addressing grandparents here. The test is just too high.

I know that I'm coming near the end of my time here. There are a couple of issues around child support obligations, making sure that we're being equal in both places here with all kinds of families, and I think that right now there is an inequity that needs to be addressed.

Financial disclosure I still think is an area where I have some real concerns, especially around safety.

So I'm looking forward to continuing this discussion, and at this point I would like to move adjournment of Bill 45, please.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:28 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 19, 2003 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 2003/11/19
 [Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders
 head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: We'll call the committee to order. Hon. members, before we proceed, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am very pleased this evening to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very excellent group that's joining us in the public gallery. This is the 25th Edmonton Christ Church, Cubs and Scouts. You can see them there. There are a number of them joining us, and they are accompanied tonight by their leaders Mr. John Simpson, Mr. Dwayne Hick, and Mr. Lance Bard. Also with them is Ms Clarkes. She's the parent helper that is along with the troop this evening. So we're very excited to have them joining us in the public gallery tonight to watch what we do here, and I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 43 Post-secondary Learning Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. As promised this afternoon, I would now like to have the table officers distribute the amendments, please. I would like them dealt with as one amendment.

The Deputy Chair: While the amendments are being circulated, I just want to mention for the record that we shall refer to these amendments as amendment A1.

Hon. Minister of Learning, you may proceed now.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As we all know the purpose of Bill 43, what I would propose to do this evening is go over the amendments that are being passed out right now. I would also like to go over the regulations, especially as the regulation on tuition fees is something that is of very much importance to the students that are here tonight and very much important to each and every one of us.

First of all, on the proposed amendments, Mr. Chairman, the first amendment essentially changes the definition of an applied degree. This was after consultations with the colleges and technical institutes. They wanted a new definition, and subsequently that has been incorporated into Bill 43.

The second amendment that is on the list before you is to allow the academic staff association to nominate one of two faculty members on the board of a university. The second member will continue to be nominated by the general faculties council. Mr. Chairman, after consultation with the faculties councils it became very clear that the general faculties council does not represent all of the faculty. Indeed, there are sections of the faculty that are not represented by the general faculties council, and what this will enable them to do is to have representation at the board level in much the same way as the student associations or the nonacademic staff associations do.

The next amendment that is in the bill is moving the powers of the general faculties council, and we are keeping all of the powers of the general faculties council in the act. As you know, in the previous Bill 43 these were moved to regulations. We are now putting them back into legislation.

Number 5, the academic council. This basically clarifies that the minister establishes admission requirements for apprenticeship students and that the boards must establish a process for program quality reviews. Mr. Chairman, we feel that it's extremely important to keep the quality of the apprenticeship program up. We also feel that it's extremely important that the qualifications for apprenticeship are done on a provincial level as opposed to an institutional level. This amendment has been done with a great deal of consultation with the affected institutions, and they're very much in favour of it.

The next one is about the disposition and development of land. We are still taking away the expropriation powers of land of the universities. Included in the original Bill 43 was the ability to extend the same rights that universities have to colleges and technical schools. Upon talking to the colleges and technical schools, they did not want these rights, and therefore they have been taken away, and they will continue to be under the MGA. Included in the legislation is the clarification that a regulation must be put in place to govern the process involved with consultation of community groups, and that is going to be worked on with the communities and the municipalities in regard to universities.

Another issue that has come forward is pensions, and quite literally upon proclamation of this act all existing pension plans will be considered valid and remain in effect. This is in response to concerns from the Auditor General, Mr. Chairman.

The academic staff. It will be clarified that compulsory arbitration is the only allowable dispute resolution mechanism to resolve collective bargaining impasses. This is very important because, again, in talking to the faculty associations, they did not want to lose the right to strike, even though they had bargained the right away some 20 to 25 years ago. We have changed that wording, and just for interest sake when I asked the faculty associations exactly why they had bargained away that right, interestingly enough they said that they could not attract top quality staff if the right to strike was there, and that was why all institutions in Alberta have bargained away the right to strike with the exception of Mount Royal. This will now essentially make the bargaining process the same in all of the jurisdictions: universities, colleges, and technical institutes.

Student associations, Mr. Chairman. The amendments show that the student associations' powers are all now in legislation.

The other issue that was causing some consternation with the student associations was the ability for the boards to call for an audit. We have now clarified that under the amendments, the boards cannot do the audit. The audit must be called for by myself as minister, and it must only be for financial irregularities. The question comes: why even do it for that? Well, we've had experience with two different student associations at one of the colleges in Alberta that literally absconded with the money. Whether it was legal, whether it was by throwing a party for their friends or lots of other things, these are moneys that are checkoffs by the students, so if there are financial irregularities, then there must be the ability for the minister to have these audits. The other thing that has been added here because of the concern from the students' associations about boards effectively running them out of money by continuing to ask for audits, the minister and the department will pay for any audits.

The other issues with that, as I've said, are that all of the student association powers will be included in the legislation and, indeed, are included in the amendments.

Another one, the dissolution of all assets, liabilities, and organizations, will be dealt with through an OC. This is as opposed to a ministerial order. It will be dealt with by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Mr. Chairman, the landmark purpose of this bill is actually the campus Alberta board of accreditation and co-ordination, and this was the body that was to oversee degree granting privileges for the technical schools and colleges and universities. What has happened is when we went out and talked to the universities and technical schools on this, it became very apparent that they did not want this body to be involved in the co-ordination. They felt that it would be very difficult for a member of the University of Alberta, for example, and a member of NAIT or a member of a different postsecondary institution sitting on a board to co-ordinate and decide whether Grant MacEwan should or should not have a degree. They felt that that was adding a degree of politicization that was not necessary and, indeed, was actually detrimental to the process.

So what we are doing, Mr. Chairman, is the campus Alberta board of accreditation and co-ordination has now been changed to the campus Alberta quality council. What literally will happen is an institution will come and ask the minister: can we have this degree? The minister will then say yes, or the minister will say no. If the minister says no, then that application is dead. If the minister says yes, then it will go on to the campus Alberta quality council where their new job, then, is only to determine the quality of that degree, and it will only be granted when the quality is sufficient to appease the people that are on the campus Alberta quality council.

There are also numerous House amendments, and indeed there are some probably 10 or 15 pages of House amendments and insignificant other amendments that are also here as well.

I now want to concentrate, Mr. Chair, on the tuition fees. What we have done in the amendments to Bill 43 is we have established two different ways that we have controlled tuition fees, and they're for two distinct institutions. The first one states that where a public post-secondary institution's revenue from tuition fees in a fiscal year is equal to or less than 30% of its net operating expenditures in that fiscal year, the maximum allowable annual increase in tuition fees for that post-secondary institution in the following year must be set in accordance with the regulations.

I will give you the regulations here very shortly. This is identical wording to what is in the existing acts with regard to the tuition fee policy.

We have then added a second section, and this is:

where a public post-secondary institution's revenue from tuition fees in a fiscal year exceeds 30% of its net operating expenditures in that fiscal year, the maximum allowable annual increase in tuition fees for that post-secondary institution in the following year is the Alberta Consumer Price Index plus 2%, which must not result in a decrease or be greater than 5%.

This has been agreed to. One of the reasons for this – I think we all are very familiar with the principle that we feel that parents and students should put in roughly 30 percent or up to a maximum of 30 percent, but what has happened in our postsecondary institutions is that we have some institutions that are incredibly efficient and have actually decreased their expenditures, decreased their costs of operation, and subsequently what has occurred is that they have been unable to raise their tuition fees.

The best example of this, that I cited today in question period, was the University of Lethbridge. We see the University of Lethbridge sitting at number 40 of roughly 50 universities across Canada. It has the 40th least expensive tuition fees. The tuition fees are somewhere around the range of $600 or $700 less than their equivalent institutions. Subsequently, they have not been able to raise their tuition fees to keep pace with the other institutions because they have hit the 30 percent expense cap, and they have hit that by good management, and I truly feel that we should not inhibit institutions from being good managers.

So, Mr. Chairman, that is what is included in the amendments. In the regulations what we have said is that the maximum allowable annual tuition fee increase for institutions under the 30 percent threshold, which is what I just talked about, for the '04-05 academic year will be $276, which is again identical to what the procedure is at the moment. In subsequent years the maximum allowable annual tuition fee increase is adjusted by the Alberta Consumer Price Index, again exactly similar to the way it is right now.

The other point that I actually have not told the students' associations about when it comes to tuition fees is something that they have been asking me about for a significant amount of time, and what that is is quite simply the fees that universities and colleges and technical schools have been charging, and what we have in the regulations are fees that also must be included as a tuition fee. Therefore, they must be included in the cap. They must be included in the tuition fee procedures that I have identified, and I will tell you what they are.

Fees that are payable to complete programs are approved by the board and are payable by students for materials and services that facilitate instruction but exclude fees or materials that are retained by students and so on down the road. We have put the tuition fees into the policy. So, Mr. Chairman, that will be, again, in regulation. It is going to be regulated. Again, this is something that is in direct response to what the students have asked us. They identified an excellent issue, that many institutions to get around the tuition fee cap that was there quite simply just raised the fees, and I did not agree with that. The students' associations obviously did not agree with that either, and now that will be included in the tuition fee guidelines, tuition fee regulations.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to at this time table the proposed regulations, if I may. I'll table the requisite number of copies of the regulation so that, again, they can be fully looked at by the students' associations and every other interested party in the postsecondary education system.

In essence, those are the amendments that are before you. There are several in the amendments that are nonconsequential amendments. There are approximately 20 pages of amendments, so we certainly will have time to go through them. The one point that I would really stress, Mr. Chairman, is that each and every one of the public postsecondary institutions is completely in favour of these amendments, is completely in favour of Bill 43.

I really do believe that it is time that we got on with the business of allowing colleges and technical schools to grant degrees. I think it's absolutely time to do it. The degree-granting status must be there for quality of degrees as opposed to just the institution. Again, we have complete concurrence with the universities, the technical schools, and the colleges.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would now like to adjourn debate and allow the opposition parties and the affected associations and institutions a chance to look at the amendments that were put on the floor, a chance to look at the tuition fee regulations that were put on the floor.

I must add one thing. We have been given advice that we cannot table the actual tuition fee regulations in that form, so you have a slightly modified form of it, but the intent is certainly there.

So, Mr. Chairman, it's a great day for postsecondary education that these are in, and it's time to move on with it. It's time to make this system the great system that it is and continue to make it greater. Thank you.

I would move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 41

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We have under consideration Bill 41, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2003. There are no amendments to the bill to be offered at this stage. I would like to just make a couple of comments in respect to some questions that were asked at second reading.

The first one, the rate reductions. There was a question asking why we haven't moved as fast or ahead with the plan to create corporate income tax reductions down to as low as 8 percent. Those were always subject to affordability. This one brings it down to 12 and a half percent. Next year's proposal is to go to 11 and a half percent on the general rate.

It was asked how much money oil and gas companies saved in royalty tax deductions and credits last year. In the 2003 Alberta Energy annual report $83.2 million in Alberta royalty tax credits was paid last year. Further analysis will be required to determine the tax savings from the royalty tax deduction, but that'll give them the general information as to the quantity.

The policy questions regarding the Alberta royalty tax credit program are questions that should likewise be and could be posed to the Minister of Energy. We are looking at quantifying the benefits relating to the program, though, as the Auditor General suggested.

The federal government has revised the income tax, and they're changing various aspects of the resource taxation regime. They're phasing out the ineductibility of Crown royalties. They're phasing out the national resource allowance deduction, including the Alberta royalty tax credit, in calculation of income. This will all be done over a period of years. So we are reviewing the federal changes and considering implications to the resource taxation regime in that respect.

As for the royalty tax rates, if it is the Alberta royalty tax credit rate that is referred to, the Alberta royalty tax credit rates are calculated based on a blended oil and gas reference rate provided by the Minister of Energy that is inverse to the oil and gas price. This ensures that the Alberta royalty tax credit is paid when oil and gas prices are low and less when oil and gas prices are high. The Alberta royalty tax credit rates can vary between a minimum rate of 25 percent to a maximum of 75 percent. So due to the high oil and gas prices, the Alberta royalty tax credit rate has been about 25 percent since 2001.

There were some questions asked about why the appeals committee is being abolished. The general anti-avoidance rules appeals committee has actually never been used in Alberta, and there are other appeals that can be used through the normal objection and appeals process provided under the Alberta Corporate Tax Act, so this was really a duplication. The one committee was never used, and as such we're repealing those provisions dealing with the general anti-avoidance rules.

There were some questions in regard to how much money the insurance industry would save under this tax rate reduction. An analysis would have to be done. I don't have that information presently available.

I think those are all the comments that I would offer at this stage, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 41, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2003. Just a couple of points and a few questions for the minister at the end of that.

I'm kind of tom here, actually, because I remember in the '97 election campaigning to have the minimum wage raised and, to balance that, the business tax fall to 4 percent. So I'm not unhappy about seeing the 4 percent there, certainly on behalf of the small business owners and entrepreneurs in Edmonton-Centre. But I'm always questioned and I continue to be concerned overall about why we're looking at so many tax credit, rebate, tax reduction programs when, on the other hand, we have the government saying: we don't have enough money for this, and we don't have enough money for that.

The explanation that I often hear is: well, you know, trickle down. We put a sweat-soaked loonie in everybody's pocket, and they'll spend it, and that makes the economy go round, more commonly referred to, I think, as Reaganomics, with the trickle-down theory that with tax reductions people will spend the money. In this case it's businesses. But, frankly, if that was the case, I think everybody in the U.S. would be a millionaire, and I really don't see that the trickle-down theory worked very well there.

So I listened carefully to the member, and I know he was sort of head down and going through his notes. It was actually a little hard to hear him; he was so focused on what he was doing. I'm still questioning how the government feels that it's balanced that, because I don't think they have, especially in light of some of the unresolved crises that we're dealing with right now, like deregulation, like investment in education, things like that.

More specifically, I'm interested in what plan exactly the Revenue minister has around justification of forgone revenue. This is an issue I've raised previously with him, but if we are not going to collect that money, if businesses are going to not remit $435 million worth of taxes this year and in allowing them that, how does the government see this as being advantageous? In other words, I'm looking for the proof that this so-called trickle-down theory does work. If they're not remitting those taxes, then it's forgone revenue to the government, and we're supposed to be getting something from that. It should be measurable, and I'm looking for that measurement from the government. I keep asking, and I don't believe that I've seen it, but I'll put that before the minister again.

I was listening as carefully as I could as he rapidly went through his response to some questions that had been asked around the royalty tax deductions. I would prefer to go and read the Hansard and not re-ask the questions to the minister, but I suspect that unless the minister is going to adjourn, this is going to pass out of committee, and then I'm trying to ask these questions in third reading, which is a bit more difficult because the time has passed.

Once again, I'm asked those questions by citizens on the street saying: what happened? We used to have this incredible royalty tax that was set up with the oil industry. You know, Syncrude's name is always bandied about. There seem to be all these holidays and reductions and tax credits and whatever we're talking about here, and again people say: well, what's the deal here? How are we getting our money's worth out of this? How is the payback coming to Albertans? I'm looking for – you'll forgive me, Minister – something more than the usual rhetoric about the Alberta advantage and yada, yada, yada. I mean, people are asking these questions because the information that they're getting from the government isn't satisfying them. They don't understand what's happening.

8:30

Part of my issue with this is coming through the Auditor General's report. One of the questions I have is: when was this whole system last re-examined? We all hear what's now become mythology from the Lougheed years about his renegotiation of a lot of these things, but when was the last time? Was that it? Obviously not if there's been a number of breaks and holidays and reductions since then, but people aren't tracking it well. So when was the last time there was really a thorough look at it aside from this 2001 which just said reduce it all? Did that come with an entire package that looked at whether these were in fact generating the kind of activity that was expected to be generated from the program? That's what I'm looking at.

In the 2002-2003 Auditor General's report there's a comment on whether, in fact, the Alberta royalty tax credit program is meeting its objectives. His suggestion is that there are not and there need to be measures developed to assess whether the program is in fact meeting its recommendations. For reference that's recommendation 11.

Overall, I know that the Official Opposition is willing to be supportive of what's happening here, and I started out by saying that I wasn't unhappy about seeing the 4 percent for small business, but people continue to be puzzled when they're told repeatedly that there is no money for things that they wish to see money for, yet they are aware that there are all of these breaks and various programs happening on the other side. Their obvious question is: well, then, if we don't have enough money for this, why do you keep giving breaks to businesses and the royalty tax credits and the resource royalties, oil and gas? It doesn't make sense to people. I don't know that the minister can be expected to answer that in Committee of the Whole, but I'm going to leave it on the table for him anyway. I'm just aware that those are questions that I continue to get asked in my constituency, and it'd be interesting to have something to hand them and say: well, this is what the minister says in response to those questions.

Thank you for the opportunity to put that on the record.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to make some general comments on Bill 41 at the beginning of its debate at Committee of the Whole. My colleague the New Democrat House leader, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, last night laid out our position very clearly on this bill. We are not supportive of the continuing handouts to corporations in terms of royalty tax credits or any other tax reductions, which is largely what this bill is about.

My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre alluded to trickle-down economics, the trickle-down theories of how money put at the top gradually comes to the bottom and helps everyone, lifts every boat. The bankruptcy of that kind of reasoning is for everyone to see everywhere. As a matter of fact, the father of George W. Bush, the present President of the U.S., called it voodoo economics, lofted it out of the court. There's no historical evidence that Reaganomics or trickle-down works. It's an excuse to put more money in the hands of those who already benefit most from the kind of market system that we have.

So voodoo economics are back in the U.S., and it's continuing its way here in this province, and you know what's happened in the U.S. In the U.S. they have ended up with more than a $500 billion annual deficit as a result of tax cuts, based on the belief that somehow these tax cuts are economically stimulative. Far from it, as we have all known about the state that the U.S. economy has been in.

The proposed tax cuts here would lead to another huge loss of provincial revenues. I spent a fair bit of time during the summer and fall with seniors, lots of whom live in my own constituency, and of course I've traveled around the province as well talking to them. They tell me that in their estimate the seniors are the group today that are paying a billion dollars more than they did in 1993. So are we taking from those seniors in order to pay for the revenues that are being lost through these absolutely unnecessary and unjustifiable tax cuts as proposed in this bill? That's my question to the minister.

Another question that I have is: will the minister indicate to the House how much of the revenue will be forgone if this bill passes through the House? What percentage of it? What millions of dollars will go to the small businesses – and I want him to define what he means by small business – as opposed to the millions of dollars that will go to already fat-cat transnationals who collect the money here? There's no guarantee they'll spend it in this province. They may spend it buying up some oil company in Kazakhstan or Kyrgyzstan or Siberia for all that I know.

The Auditor General of this province has raised some questions about the rationale and the ability of this government to find out whether or not these so-called tax reliefs, quote, unquote, can be shown to benefit Albertans and the Alberta economy either in terms of creating jobs or in terms of creating more economic growth directly resulting from these tax cuts.

So I would hope that the minister will pay some attention to these questions and bring answers back to the House with respect to the proportion of the close to $500 million that will be lost in public revenues as a result of this. What portion of that $500 million or so will go to the small businesses in this province? Lots of them operate in my constituency around Whyte Avenue seven days a week, 12 months of the year, and I want to have some answers for them about how they will benefit and how much they will benefit from the provisions of this bill. What portion will in fact go into the hands of corporations who already are hugely benefiting from the high oil and gas prices, as the minister himself said, at least since the year 2001?

If you are going to continue to put more pressure on our schools, on our universities and colleges, asking them to generate more revenues on their own or do with less and have overcrowded classrooms or ever increasing tuition fees, is it not time for us to also look at the revenue side and say, "Maybe these royalty tax credits are no longer needed"? As the Auditor General has also questioned, show me that they are needed. If they are not needed, if they cannot be justified, why is this government determined to continue with those?

So I would ask and urge the minister to answer some of these questions on the record so that they can be examined further in the ensuing debate during this Committee of the Whole discussion of Bill 41, Mr. Chairman.

With those brief remarks, I'll take my seat and let other members enter the debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just thought I would respond to a few comments made by the two members. There's quite a bit of discussion about the Alberta royalty tax credit and the benefits. The Auditor General talks about wanting it to be measurable and the like. One could look at the royalty regime in Alberta as being created to help drive incentives to create drilling and exploration activity, and the program of the Alberta royalty tax credit was actually driven to be more beneficial to the smaller companies than the larger so that those companies that would have a smaller capital basis could reinvest more dollars into exploration. That's one of the specific design criteria.

It gets capped at a certain amount per well, and therefore the large companies with larger producing wells get capped in the total amount that they can receive. So it is disproportionately favourable to the smaller companies in rates. Just as you've said the beneficial aspect of a small business tax rate of 4 percent, so was this structure trying to be beneficial in the royalty rates to the smaller companies versus the larger. So there are many very small companies in Alberta that are the engine of producing and exploring and providing reserves that eventually get acquired by the mid sizes and the larger sizes as they acquire reserves. It's very common.

It is very true that one could look at the macro aspects and see that we have been very successful in Alberta in creating oil and gas economic activity: drilling, exploration, producing, and the like. Where there are reserves in Saskatchewan and even B.C., they have not generated anywhere near the same level of activity, and a lot of it is to do with the broad policies, macro policies you put in to allow that to happen.

Now, personally, I have reservations about rebates and credits and those types of programs. I would prefer a broader rate and fewer exemptions, but I do recognize programs that have been long in place. Companies put together their capital and their business planning and their financial planning based upon certain expectations, certain promises, certain structures like royalty tax credits. It is very difficult once in place to remove those, and therefore I do concur with the Auditor General's comments that we will further examine and quantify the cost-benefit assessment of these programs as we go forward. I think those are very good comments, and we will follow up with that.

There were general comments made by both members about tax breaks put in the context of potentially being supportive to the corporations: is it not their fair share to pay for more, maybe in forgone revenues? I would remind that even when we reduced our personal income taxes, a $1.3 billion to $1.5 billion reduction in personal taxes by rates, we now collect in absolute dollars, in total dollars, more in personal income tax than before the rate reduction. We have broadened the base. There are more people coming here. There is a natural flow for people, and you can see it by those that choose to move to Alberta in great numbers many of their economic organizations.

An Hon. Member: Tell us about that.

Mr. Melchin: I'd love to tell a little more about that in particular. In a recent discussion I had with him, a noted Canadian individual – actually, this individual lived in a constituency now represented by the Member for Edmonton-Centre – talked about 100 of the top 300 companies that were in B.C. in the 1990s no longer existing in B.C., and Alberta was the primary beneficiary of that. Now, some of them don't exist anymore. There is some attrition, some amalgamation in the industries, but of the movement of people in capital and business and industry Alberta has been a natural attraction to say: this is a place where it's easier to invest, to create jobs that benefit all Albertans.

People come to Alberta because there are jobs. Our children stay here because there are jobs that they create and pay the taxes. We have more taxes, income tax and corporate tax, per capita in this province than the other provinces do with higher rates. I don't know about you, but part of the factor of creating wealth is allowing people to reinvest wealth, to let it build and grow. The Americans, by having had a smaller tax rate, have actually outproduced us by a capacity of more than 20 percent per GDP per capita, when you put it per capita.

When we go talk to investment fund managers around the world and we talk about Canada, as we do – these are people that can invest and choose to deploy capital anywhere in the world, large sums of money – they speak highly of Canada, as it's a great place to be. I've mentioned this about the New York fund managers, for example. I'll ask them all. They will all say: "Canada is a great place, but there's one problem with Canada. Your tax rates are still too high. It is better for us to leave our money here in the United States than to invest it in Canada."

Now, I'm not trying to tell you their words. I didn't solicit their response. That's their analysis of world competitive markets that we can't ignore if we think we're going to survive and have an opportunity for our children in the future. If we want to have funds to pay for health and education, which we do, we need to create a bigger pie. The governments don't have to take it all. They have to allow the broad macro events.

I appreciate some philosophical beliefs that think that governments ought to do everything and tax everything. I'm not of that opinion. The economic climate in Alberta is unparalleled in Canada. The capacity that gives us the support for the priority programs in this province is a result of many of these tax policies, so we won't apologize for it. We will continue to see that these rates are reduced to 12 and a half percent. Next year there are plans to reduce to 11 and a half percent. Those are the right directions, and they're the directions that Albertans support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Just a couple of quick reactions to the answers from the minister. By the way, I appreciate the minister getting up and actually participating in the debate. He was talking about driving the policies, driving incentives, and I'm wondering if you actually have performance measurements that are able to measure that driving of incentives, as you put it.

At one point he appeared to be saying that the increase in the tax base was related to this reduction in the business tax. Am I following his thinking correctly, believing that the justification there is that if the business tax goes down, this is his job creation argument? Is that where that came from? I didn't see those two things going together particularly. I don't know that the reduction in the business tax put more money in the pockets of average Albertans, but that's the linkage I think I heard him make.

Lastly, he references the ability to leverage wealth through these companies that can invest wealth and therefore make more. But to me all that does is underline the widening gap between the rich and the poor, and I don't think that's something we need to be admiring that exists in the United States. Is he recommending that he thinks that's a good policy to be importing into Alberta?

So just very quickly, based on what he reacted, those were some of the questions that came to mind. I'm most interested in the performance measurements.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, with your indulgence, I asked the minister a specific question with respect to the revenues that will be gone by next year if this bill is passed. How many millions of dollars will go to small business? Please define what you mean by small business so that we know what you are talking about. How many millions of dollars will go to large corporations? That's one of the questions that I asked, and I didn't get a clear answer to it.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Chairman, to the last question about the split of the deduction to small versus large business, a good question. Actually, I apologize; I don't have that figure with me right now. I'd be happy to provide that to you at a later time so that you've got that information as to the quantity and the dollar amount.

Small business in this category is still defined by the small business tax rate. We're increasing our thresholds gradually to $400,000. That's what's coming on this. The rates this year are going down to 4 percent and will eventually drop to 3 percent on the small business, but the small business category would now be defined as those thresholds below $400,000 of taxable income. So we can quantify what the split of the tax reduction would be.

As for the question on performance measures, specifically with the Alberta royalty tax credit, that is actually the responsibility of the Ministry of Energy. It's administered through the corporate tax, and that's why the amendment is being introduced through the Revenue department. We administer the corporate income tax, but the royalty rates and the policy around the Alberta royalty tax credit and performance measures are all part of the Minister of Energy's department. I think those would be appropriate questions to bring forward in review of the budget of the Minister of Energy or otherwise in a debate.

Bill 45
Family Law Act

[Adjourned debate November 19: Ms Blakeman]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make a few comments about Bill 45, the Family Law Act. I'd like to address the bill from the unique perspective of a relatively new grandparent. The last four years have been a bit of an eye-opener in terms of looking at the world through the perspective of a grandparent. It is from that perspective that I would like to look at Bill 45 and to base my comments on some of the work that was presented by the Alberta grandparents association in their presentation to the family law reform project of Alberta Justice in Edmonton on September 30, 2003. In their document they make a number of points that I think are extremely important from a grandparent's and a grandchild's perspective with respect to Bill 45.

Their overall judgment of the sections in the bill that affect grandparents is that Bill 45 really puts the onus on grandparents to take action for access in extraordinary fashion, and the rights of grandchildren having access to their grandparents are even more restricted in intact families where the grandparent is required to obtain leave of the court prior to bringing application for access. It seems that this onus on the grandparents is contradictory in terms of the years of research that describe the benefits to children and to parents and to grandparents when that grandparent/grandchild relationship is nurtured and protected. It's of major concern to that association and, I expect, to grandparents across the province.

They supplied some statistics on the number of grandchildren living with grandparents where there are no parents present, and in Alberta in 2001 that amounted to 7,000 grandchildren, not an insignificant number of youngsters who are residing with their grandparents. So the association has a concern that grandparents are being pressed to unnecessary and extraordinary action to preserve the relationship with their grandchildren, and they base their observations on five I think rather strong beliefs.

One is that grandparents provide a very stabilizing force in times of family crisis and that they actually reduce the reliance on public services in situations like this. They indicate – and some research will support it – that child development is fostered by socializing with grandparents, the kind of financial and emotional support that they get, the passing on of history and traditions, that that relationship is a source of strength for children in times of crisis, and that grandparents are the ones that can provide that strength. There's some research that indicates that those relationships with grandparents affect relationships with their own grandchildren and grandchildren two generations later.

They indicate that in terms of developmental issues, research has found that it's that unconditional love that grandparents bestow upon children that aids in the development of their self-esteem and efficacy. I think that if you talk to any grandparent, Mr. Speaker, they'll confirm that one thing that you do learn, that all of us learn from grandparents is unconditional love, what it means to give unconditional love. They point out in their presentation the positive psychological effect that this has on children, on their grandchildren.

The fifth point that they make with respect to the benefits of children having access to grandparents is the continuity that grandparents provide in relationships. With divorce rates and with economic hardships and drug and alcohol abuse, grandparents are for many young children the only stabilizing force. Again, that relationship can reduce the reliance of families on public resources. I think the five sort of beliefs, that are supported by research in some cases, that the grandparents put forward are worthy of consideration, particularly when we look at the principles and in fact, when we get into committee, the specific provisions of Bill 45.

I think the summary is that grandparents and others will be able to apply for access to children, and the test that must be satisfied for grandparents goes well past the usual best interests of the child. It includes a requirement that grandparents and others prove that the child's health would be jeopardized if access is not granted, and this, I think we would agree, is a test that's unnecessary and maybe really a very difficult test for persons to satisfy, especially if the child is very young.

At second reading we're to look at the principles. I think that the Alberta grandparents association has put forward some very sound principles that should be reflected in the legislation. When it comes to Committee of the Whole, I would also hope that we might consider some of the specific amendments that they have suggested that would take away some of the less attractive aspects of Bill 45 as far as grandparents in the province are concerned.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29 does any member have any questions for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few brief observations on Bill 45, the Family Law Act, as we begin the debate in second reading. The New Democrat caucus has also received some representations, some expression of concern by parent organizations and by some individual parents who have called in to ask us to draw the attention of this Assembly to the provisions of the bill which will make it more difficult than is presently the case for grandparents to have access to their grandchildren.

Even in the case of families which are intact families, the issue is complex; there is no doubt. There is the question, particularly when it comes to families that are healthy, that are intact, of the rights of the children themselves. The rights of parents clearly are also important and have to be respected, but grandparents see some unnecessary new obstacles they're asked to jump over, if you wish, in order to satisfy the authorities to have access to children. The question of the psychological health of children in addition to their physical well-being certainly is an issue that needs the most careful attention of this House when debating this bill and debating the provisions which are designed to regulate access to children by grandparents and other interested relatives and persons.

I haven't had, I must confess, enough time to look through the bill as amended, which was given to us this afternoon by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, before it came up for discussion tonight, so I will have perhaps more to say on it later on during the debate on this bill at the committee stage. At this stage I just wanted to share with the House some of the concerns that we have heard about from grandparents who see the provisions of the bill as a bit too restrictive from the point of view of some concerned grandparents.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona under Standing Order 29?

There being none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to close debate.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just briefly to respond to the comments made by the members for Edmonton-Mills Woods and Edmonton-Strathcona about grandparents' right to seek access by way of a contact order when the situation is an intact family. Yes, it is a very difficult situation, and the policy decision was made to try and strike a balance, because the considerations are a little different in an intact family where there is no contact between grandchild and grandparent versus one where the contact is due to a separation of the guardians, the parents, or perhaps the death of one of the guardians or parents.

Of course, the test is always the best interests of the child, but the thinking was that it was not unreasonable in an intact family situation to require an application to be made for leave before the full application could be brought. There's certainly not a denial of access by grandparents in this situation to apply but just a higher onus to satisfy the need because of the potential ramifications of such an application to the parents in an intact situation.

I agree. I sympathize with the Alberta grandparents association and the position that they have taken. Well, I can't say any more than that I do sympathize, but I do believe that the policy decision that has been made has struck a good balance in a very difficult situation, trying to choose the best for all parties concerned.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude my remarks and ask you to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 45 read a second time]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 45 Family Law Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure this evening to open committee consideration of Bill 45. At the table there is a large package of amendments to this bill which I would request be distributed at this time.

9:10

The Deputy Chair: The amendments are being distributed currently, and for the record we shall refer to these amendments as amendment A1. If you'll just hang on for a minute while the amendments are being circulated.

Hon. member, you may proceed now.

Ms Graham: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that you have declared that the package of amendments would be marked A1, and that is my request, that these amendments be considered as one package and voted on as a single unit. Due to the extensive nature of these amendments, which have been realized after very extensive input from Albertans since the bill was introduced last spring, I would like to give all members adequate time to review the contents of the amendments as contained in A1, and thus it would be my request and I do move that there be adjournment of debate on committee consideration of Bill 45 until we sit again.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I move that we rise and report progress on this bill.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. McClelland: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports progress on Bill 45. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 44
Personal Information Protection Act

[Adjourned debate November 19: Mr. MacDonald]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm grateful to the Assembly for allowing us to continue the debate in second reading for Bill 44, the Personal Information Protection Act. I think one of the things we have to be careful about with this bill is that once privacy has been violated, it cannot be restored. Once violated, it cannot be unviolated. So it behooves us to be extremely cautious in the areas that we allow this bill to move forward on.

One of the other things that I think is really important with this bill is that we create certainty. Certainly, the request that I've had from the business community is: we just want to know what it is we're supposed to do, because we're supposed to do it in six weeks, by the 1st of January. Some of them have been having seminars on what the federal legislation is and are preparing themselves to achieve the bar set by the federal legislation on January 1, 2004, if, in fact, this provincial legislation doesn't supercede it. Just as a refresher, the deal is that the provinces can pass their own legislation as long as it meets or exceeds the standards that are set by the federal legislation. Therein lies the rub. Who decides whether it meets or exceeds? That's where we start to get into the interesting negotiation points here. But what I've heard very clearly from the business community is: just create certainty for us, please; we need to move on here.

The other thing that I have experienced in working with collection of people's personal information. In that, we're talking about things that identify them, so either personal identifying information like a date of birth, personal appearance, address, phone number, contact information in other words, sex, marital status – and the list starts to get ever longer there – but identifying information, where if somebody looked at it or thought about it, if they read it in the newspaper, could they figure out that it was you? Could they track you back to your address? Would they know that the person with this name and particular gender is their neighbour? So identifying information is what we're talking about here.

The problem with collecting personal information about people is that it always tends to get away from us because there's always a great reason to use the information for just one more reason than you collected it for. It is overwhelming, the temptation to use it, because once the information is already there, what does it harm to just use it for one more really, really good reason: to extend a special offer to somebody, to give them something free, to let them know information about something that we're sure – and I'll underline that – they would want to know about. Well, gosh, that other person has already collected all the information. Why don't we just use it? That would be so handy. And that's where the problem is.

So the issue here is that once the information has been collected, the individual needs to have given their consent that it be collected, and it can only be used for what it was collected for. I think that's the very minimum standard that we need to be seeking to achieve here. It is a struggle because we have so many different reasons to want to use somebody else's list, someone else's information, or indeed for us to use the information. We collected it for a particular reason, and gosh, wouldn't it be perfect if we could use that information for this other reason as well?

You know, we collected it because people contacted us and said that they wanted information on bills and motions we were debating in the House, but we'd love to send them a Christmas card too. Well, we didn't collect the information to send them a Christmas card. A lovely thing to do, and doesn't it seem kind of silly that we couldn't send them a Christmas card? What a nice thing to do. But we collected that information, and we had their permission to use it to give them information on bills and motions.

So you can see how easy it is to just slide right along there and start to use that information for something outside of the reasons we collected it for. That's what makes this legislation so important and the onus on us to be very vigilant with how we allow it to be used so important.

Of course, the question is always: well, is the glass half full, or is the glass half empty? Is this good enough or not? We are creating essentially new legislation here, or rather we're extending it to a whole sector that's never had any experience with it. To a certain extent the sectors that are already involved in protection of privacy have had for a long period of time some familiarity with it. Specifically, there I'm talking about government and health sectors. You know, they're used to having personal information and having some onus on them to be careful with it. That has not been the case, and I think it could be argued that it was exactly the opposite in the private sector. That's what all the mail houses were about and all those interesting ways that people had to collect that mailing information and then get you on a mailing list and send you flyers for a hundred things.

One of the good things that I see in this legislation – but I don't at this point think it's enough to outweigh the things that I'm critical of – is that the disputes under Bill 44, under an Alberta version of personal information protection, could be adjudicated by the Alberta FOIP Commissioner, so locally resolved. If we're underneath the federal legislation, then it goes to the federal Privacy Commissioner, and, you know, that's just farther away, and they may not understand regional differences, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. I'm much happier with it being a local mediation process or arbitration process.

There have been a couple of speakers on this already, but I just want to go through a few things that, again, I've noticed in particular. This was interesting. You know, we all, I'm sure, as legislators get lobby letters from individuals, and of course when we start to identify that it's exactly the same letter with the same headings on it and that it looks the same, we start to sort of discount the importance of it or at least we go, "Well, you know, this is a campaign from somebody," and we understand it in context. I have never seen form letters coming from businesses until this bill, and here we have exactly the same letter coming from Enmax and somebody else: exactly the same formatting, the same heading, word for word. It quite made me laugh; I'd never seen that happen before. Talisman Energy: who would have thunk it? There you go. Enmax, Talisman Energy. So they must have had a little energy confab and decided to write form letters. Too funny. Anyway, just a little aside there.

You know, I have a problem with the concept of "reasonable person," especially as it affects this collection and use of personal information, partly because with the reasonable person, the person on the street, there's been a lot of effort put into convincing them of the goodness, the purity, the usefulness, even the benefits of handing over your personal information. All of those loyalty cards for shopping convenience: that's all about collecting your personal shopping habits. How they get you to buy into this and happily tell them every single thing you purchase and what size you purchase it in is all about: "Well, you'll get a discount. You'll get credit points. You'll get money off. You'll get special sales." We've now all been conditioned to this, so the thought of these loyalty cards is: "Oh, great. That's a good thing." Yeah, well, then how do you turn around and say to that same person: "Okay. Let's look at a test. You're the reasonable person. Let's look at the test of when we let that information out, when we collect it"? I think that that process has already been tainted, and I don't know that using that as a test is reasonable anymore. I guess what I'm saying is that I don't think it's reasonable anymore.

I have real problems with the grandfathering of information that was collected prior to January 1, 2004, provided that the information is used for the same – here we go again – reasonable purpose for which it was originally collected. How close is reasonable here? My example: "Well, we've got the people that submitted their information to the Legislature to use to send them information on bills and motions. Can we get away with sending them a Christmas card?" Is that reasonable here or not? It's not clear enough, and I don't think that information should be grandfathered. I think the onus has to be to go back and notify those people again, and I'll give you a very concrete example of where I saw that happen before.

When I was with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues, I organized the collection of a huge amount of contact information for women in the province to get information on the work we were doing around identifying issues on the status of women in the province. I think we ended up with a 5,000-name database, which 10, 12, 13 years ago was a big database. So we'd collected information from those women. In my mind we had their permission to use their addresses to send them information about the work that was being done on the status of women.

As the government started to change and realign and add departments together and what eventually became the Department of Community Development, the advisory council was sort of attached to the side of that and eventually subsumed under the Department of Community Development. The great idea here was: that was grand; we were just going to use that database and add it into and mix it up with all the information they'd already collected on people interested in the arts and human rights and everything else that ended up under Community Development.

I said, very forcefully: no. I felt a responsibility to those women, that I'd collected that information from them specifically to give them information on women's issues, and in a lot of cases for the work that we were doing at the time, these were women that probably had some fairly close encounter with domestic violence issues. The thought of them now receiving flyers about do you want to take a pottery class and multicultural folk dancing was not at all what they had signed on for, and I protested the use of it.

But you can see how it made perfect sense. It seemed perfectly reasonable that if the government was going to amalgamate all these departments, they would amalgamate all the databases. Of course. Why not? Because people were interested in information. Surely if they were interested in women's issues, they would also be interested in the arts and human rights and multiculturalism. Absolutely. Sports and recreation. Parks. Absolutely. If they were interested in one, being that kind of person, they'd be interested in it all.

But that's not why we had their permission to use their information, and you can see how quickly you slip onto that if you don't say: that's it, there's no grandfathering. You have to go back to everybody and get that permission again. Start over. You have to go back and get their permission.

I think there's also an issue around the third party. I'm seeing some familiar things here, and to me the flaws in the FOIP legislation that we have in the province are being instituted into this bill as well. That's around being able to not give someone access to their personal information if a third party gave it or if a third party is involved. Well, I've heard that before. That sounds very familiar.

The issue about charging for fees. The federal legislation says a minimum charge. This says – oh, here we go – is it reasonable? A reasonable charge again. Well, reasonable to who? We've had in the Official Opposition bills offered up of $75,000 to get information from the government. I don't call that reasonable. I'd call it an impediment to getting that information.

I think there are a number of other examples there where too much has been borrowed from our current FOIP legislation.

I also wanted to raise the issue: again, there's too much left up to the decision-making of cabinet, of Lieutenant Governor in Council, to be put in regulations and all after the fact. I think we have to be extra careful to be transparent and accountable on this legislation. So I'm not comfortable with that.

I think there's another issue around the privacy rights in the employment information. I think there are a number of flaws that are appearing under that section as well.

So in principle I'm not sure whether I can support this bill or not. I need to be convinced that this legislation is going to be better for all Albertans than what's already in place federally, and I think the federal one could use some streamlining, but I'm not convinced that this supercedes it.

Thank you.

9:30

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. Any questions for the hon. member?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We've made some good progress tonight, and I suggest that we adjourn until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

[Motion carried; at 9:31 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, November 20, 2003 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 2003/11/20
 [The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us pray. Heavenly Father, as we conclude this week's deliberations and return to our constituencies, we pray that we will be renewed and strengthened in our commitments to better serve our constituents and all Albertans. Amen.
 Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of human resources.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you today the government relations staff of the Workers' Compensation Board. As MLAs will attest, there are better relations that are taking place now between individual MLAs and the WCB, and the people that are responsible for that, of course, are led by Jordan Cleland and his staff of Kathleen Ruelling and Sarah Stevenson. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two groups today. First of all, from James Mowat school in Fort Saskatchewan. Accompanying these students are Mr. Fellows, Mrs. Kondro, and Mrs. Webster and parent helpers Mr. Babichuk, Mr. John Enns, a former principal and colleague of mine, Mrs. Geary, Mrs. Cockburn, Mrs. Conroy, Mrs. Schneider, and Mr. MacDonald. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

A second introduction, from Wye school. The teachers are Ms Janet Manson, Mrs. Allison Baker, and Mrs. Tanya Jordan, accompanied by Mrs. Debbie Beckwith and Mr. Stan Plociennik. I'd ask that these students and parents and teachers please rise and be recognized by the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am just delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students in the career options for new Canadians program at NorQuest College, which is located in my constituency. Here today is Ms Bev Cooper, who is the instructor for the class, and nine students. I've been out to talk to this class. They are very keen on current affairs, and they're also all looking forward to voting in the next series of elections. I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very, very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the House three outstanding young individual Albertans. I'll introduce the first two, ask them to rise, and then ask the House to welcome them. The first two are Tracey Nicholson, a social work student at Grant MacEwan College who is presently working in the Edmonton-Highlands constituency as part of her practicum experience. Her colleague Raul Rodas is also a social work student at Grant MacEwan College, and I have the pleasure of having him in my constituency office assisting with the day-to-day work. I would ask both of them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my third guest, who I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly, is Ms Melanee Thomas, executive director of the Council of Alberta University Students. The Council of Alberta University Students represents over 80,000 undergraduate students in this province, and Ms Thomas has been working very hard on behalf of this association to generate a debate on Bill 43, which is before the House now. I will now ask Ms Thomas to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Heritage Classic Organizing Committee

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this beautiful Alberta day as a proud Edmontonian to talk about the outstanding work of the organizing committee of the Heritage Classic, that's happening this weekend in Edmonton. This weekend's Heritage Classic celebrates the presence of many of Edmonton's great hockey heroes, including Wayne Gretzky and Mark Messier. Together, the players that are entering into Edmonton's realm have won a combined 127 Stanley Cups among them.

The game will shine an international spotlight on the city of Edmonton and the province of Alberta, and, Mr. Speaker, at the same time this game will generate an enormous amount of media attention not only in Edmonton, Alberta, but in North America and around the world. You cannot buy this kind of media exposure, and not only is this celebration a great event for the city of Edmonton, Alberta, but the economic impacts have been huge. [interjection] I will tell you how good it is. For example, it is expected that the economic impact will be similar to last year's Grey Cup, which was in the $20 million to $25 million range to the city of Edmonton. Furthermore, hotel rooms, according to all accounts, are fully booked for this weekend's event.

But interest in this game stretches far beyond Edmonton and Alberta, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton Oilers estimate that one-quarter of the people who attend the game on Saturday will be from out of province, and the Oilers have issued an unprecedented 350 media passes for a game which would normally see 50 media passes asked for. That's more coverage than the final for the Stanley Cup, and media have joined us from as far away as Finland.

Mr. Speaker, I as an Edmontonian and I know all the others in the caucus are so proud of the efforts of the Heritage Classic organizing committee and its chairman, Mr. Doug Goss, and the volunteers of this great city who have made this event happen. I congratulate them before the event happens on what I know will be a spectacular job, and I will join my fellow Edmontonians and Albertans in cheering on the Oilers in victory in the alumni game and the game on Saturday night.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Almost every Albertan can remember throwing on a parka and heading down to the corner rink or nearest pond and playing shinny on a cold afternoon. Usually you'd just throw your sticks in the middle, blindfold one player, and he'd throw the sticks from side to side to pick teams. There were no refs, no time-outs, and sometimes the net just consisted of two boots, but you were Wayne Gretzky or Guy Lafleur for that day on a small, frozen patch of ice.

These fond memories are going to be played out before us in a larger-than-life fashion at the Heritage Classic. This outside game will definitely be a spectacle with not only two of the most famous franchises in the NHL's history having a match but also the megastar matchup between the former stars of both teams that will precede the game. With players like Guy Lafleur, Larry Robinson, and Kirk Muller on the Habs side matching up against Oiler all-stars Wayne Gretzky, Mark Messier, and Paul Coffey, the game is going to be as good as any hockey fan could imagine.

This event is a first in the NHL, and we'd like to recognize the tremendous amount of effort by all parties involved in getting this off the ground. The international exposure that Edmonton will receive will be a major boost for the economy and an excellent way to showcase the city. This hockey game is just a culmination of a number of events that start the day and go on throughout the weekend so that everyone should and will get the chance to take part in the magic.

Thank you very much.

1:40head: Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold-Bar.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Support for this government continues to short-circuit. Today at the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties a resolution presented by Parkland county was carried by a vast majority of those in attendance. Part of this resolution reads:

Alberta's farmers, businesses, industry, residents and not-for-profit groups have faced hardships through higher annual energy costs, inconsistent provincial rebate programs, unfair and inefficient billing procedures and uncertainty in market supplies and contracts.

My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why is this government continuing to ignore this group of rural leaders who request that the government of Alberta abandon and reverse the process of deregulation of utilities?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was at the AAMD and C this morning. I didn't see the member there, but I did answer the one question that was put to me in the bear pit, and then I was notified of the resolution. In fact, individuals in the Aquila network have paid the highest prices for the last two years. They have the highest deferral accounts in Alberta.

An Hon. Member: That's EPCOR.

Mr. Smith: That's the Aquila network with EPCOR being a retail provider.

Not only, Mr. Speaker, have they had that charge on them, but they've also been plagued by commercial incompetency. They've had difficulties with meter reads. They've had difficulty matching distribution charges with the time that they bill the energy.

We are also at the end of that. This is the last 40 days of deferral accounts in that network and, as a matter of fact, all of Alberta with the exception of Enmax, Calgary. EPCOR has filed a rate bringing the price down by over a half-cent, and that alone is going to make substantial savings. So these people can look forward to as much as a 20 to 25 percent reduction.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Thank you. The first supplemental if it hasn't been answered yet.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why is this government continuing to spend $3 million on a propaganda campaign that attacks the sovereignty and the self-sufficiency of an Alberta tradition that works, rural utilities?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, there is so much fabrication in that preamble in that question that it really doesn't represent a question that could be logically answered.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the economic boondoggle that has been electricity deregulation has already cost Alberta consumers over $8 billion, how much longer will this government force higher energy costs on Alberta consumers before you unplug deregulation?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the economic boondoggle that sits in Alberta happens to be that this is the fastest growing economic jurisdiction in North America. When this growth started, there was a report out that said: how much electricity will you need? And it said: the amount of electricity that you're using today, in 2003, you will need in 2014. So, in fact, 45 percent new load growth supporting the fastest growing economic jurisdiction in North America has been put here on time and inside a price envelope that can be afforded by Albertans.

There have been difficulties in the consumer marketplace. We're working very hard to correct them. But deregulation, competitive generation has allowed Alberta to grow, unlike Saskatchewan, Manitoba, British Columbia, which have been choked off by the fact of socialist regulation.

The Deputy Speaker: Second main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Prices

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second question this afternoon is quite interesting. It's a comparison. Now, this document is an economic assessment from this particular government prior to 1993, when the current Premier was elected and the interprovincial industrial electricity prices for this province are the cheapest in Canada. Now, yesterday or the day before another utility study was issued, and it indicates that we have some of the highest electricity prices in North America. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. He may not want to answer, but how do you explain that this study indicates that Edmonton, Alberta, has the second highest electricity prices for residential customers in Canada? If electricity deregulation is working so well, explain that.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, how can the member explain the fact that British Columbia has a $7 billion debt on their hydro? How can the member explain that Manitoba, that's going probably 10 percent over the last four years, is swimming in a sea of red ink and they have a $7 billion debt that their taxpayers are going to have to pay for? He's very comfortable taxing tomorrow's Albertans, very comfortable, but we're not.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the average price for large power customers in Vancouver is 4 cents a kilowatt, in Regina it's 5 cents a kilowatt, in Winnipeg it's 3 cents a kilowatt, and in Edmonton it's 7 cents a kilowatt, how much longer before you unplug electricity deregulation and restore our economic advantage? These are the statistics, and you can't hide from them.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I mean, the answers are so obvious. I know he wants to talk about the one or two large users left in Manitoba. I know he wants to talk about the highest tax rate in Canada, in Manitoba. I know he wants to talk about a sales tax in British Columbia. I know they want to talk about the tremendous amount of debt left to those provinces.

You know, we're not going to dwell in the past, because we're the fastest growing economic jurisdiction in North America. It's been put forward by a number of groups that we're going to grow again, yet at the same time the Royal Bank comes out and says: "Where's the second most affordable jurisdiction to buy a house in Canada? Alberta." And that includes utility rates.

Mr. MacDonald: That is, Mr. Speaker, if you don't want to turn your lights on.

Now to the Minister of Economic Development: will you conduct a study, please, on behalf of the citizens of this province to just prove once and for all how much of our economic advantage has been eroded because of high electricity costs for power users in both small and large accounts?

Mr. Norris: You know, Mr. Speaker, I've been jumping to get up here. Thank you for the question, hon. member, because you are so wrong, so wrong.

Let me tell you exactly what we do. If the hon. member took the time to read the reports that our department produces, he would know that KPMG does an annual study about the cost comparative between seven cities in Canada and seven in the United States, all of medium to large size of Edmonton. Every single time Edmonton and Calgary come out number one or two. Lethbridge comes out number one in small; Medicine Hat, number two.

I would like to talk for a moment, Mr. Speaker, about reality. I want to talk about reality, about what we don't say as the government, what other people are saying about Alberta. The TD Financial Group says that the Alberta Calgary/Edmonton corridor has the potential to become the most prosperous place in North America. The Bank of Montreal describes the Alberta government as a fiscal paragon of virtue, and the Conference Board of Canada metropolitan outlook for Alberta says that it will lead the nation again . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. [interjections]

Automobile Insurance Rates

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for all of your support.

Mr. Speaker, under the government's auto insurance plan it won't matter if you're male or female, 16 or 60, married or single, but if you're from Edmonton, you'll pay more than any other Albertan. Again Edmonton government MLAs have failed this city. My questions are to the Minister of Economic Development. Given this minister's willingness to study the economic impact of consolidating Edmonton's airports, will he study the economic impact of charging Edmontonians more for auto insurance than any other Albertan?

Mr. Norris: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't even know where to begin. The inferences in the question to Edmonton MLAs not standing up for Edmonton is absolute poppycock. Absolute poppycock. As a result, we have through the hard work of the Member for Medicine Hat and the Finance minister worked out a program to realize that the actuarial function of Edmonton versus Calgary has been worked in and will be phased out over the next three years to level the playing field. In actual fact, if we wanted to get involved in managing insurance companies, which we don't, then we would do what the hon. member is suggesting. We are not going to do that; we're going to let the market decide.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, we want to talk about auto insurance rates before the next election. Will this minister tell us why he and his Edmonton colleagues could not stop the government from punishing Edmontonians with higher auto insurance rates than for any other Albertan?

Mr. Norris: It would appear to me that my answer flew right over the heads of the opposition, Mr. Speaker, so I'll try again. The bottom line is that we do not get involved in telling insurance companies the actuarial responsibilities they have. We do fight vigorously to say that if we are not looking at leveling the playing field in certain areas, then we'll do it in others, but in this particular case we have a commitment from this government to over the next three years level that playing field. I can tell you that every single one of the Edmonton colleagues as well as every colleague in here fought for that.

The Deputy Speaker: To supplement, the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to briefly supplement the answer from the Minister of Economic Development. I can tell you very clearly that the MLAs from the capital region have been very, very forthright in coming forward in this new package and making sure that everyone in this province is dealt with fairly and in particular have represented their ridings and have led the way to help us put in place a structure that takes us down from four regional areas to, in fact, three regional areas but keeps in mind the fact that the actuarial assessments that have occurred clearly show that in the past – in the past – the claims experience in Edmonton has in fact been higher than other jurisdictions within the province. That is balancing off and, therefore, has allowed us to move to a system that will bring us into three geographical areas, and that has been brought forward by our entire caucus.

Speaker's Ruling Improper Questions

The Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, just a reminder that question period is designed to bring the government, which is the cabinet, to account for what they're doing. It's not to bring the caucus to account. Many of the answers, although helpful, really were responding to a question that was inappropriate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that even the insurance industry is against this government's plan, isn't it time for a better plan? Why don't you just adopt a public insurance plan like we've been asking for?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance. [interjections] The hon. member, I'm sure, realizes that usually the question goes to the minister responsible for that avenue of concern. The direction goes to whomever, and in this case it's the Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This group across the way has been promoting government insurance and the government getting into the business of business. We are not in that mode on our side of the House. We believe that the industry can operate fairly and equitably within this province. Is the industry angry with some of the reforms? Yes. Are the accident lawyers angry with some of the reforms? Yes. Are the consumers going to be happy? Yes.

So, obviously, we are moving in the right direction because we are dealing with the obligation we have to the consumers to make sure that we have a fair, accessible, affordable, and comparably priced insurance package within this province, and that's the package we've put forward. I know the opposition party doesn't like that because they want government insurance. We're not going down that path, Mr. Speaker. We're going to have the private sector deliver insurance to the people of this province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the overwhelming majority of delegates at the annual convention of municipal districts and counties have sent a clear message to this government: abandon and reverse disastrous deregulation policy. The Tory government's foray into deregulation can be summed up by the five Cs: crisis, confusion, chaos, conflict, and confrontation. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Will the government turn its back on the five Cs and abandon and reverse deregulation of Alberta's electricity and natural gas utilities, and if not, why not? A clear answer.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, if it weren't so corny, concealed, coagulated, covert, and clandestine an attack by the other member, I would gladly respond to it. Just because the third party took claim to leaking the report of the Advisory Council on Electricity, I would direct the member – I guess he was busy leaking and didn't have time to do some reading – to read page 1, that says, "Specifically, the Council recommends that the government develop a clear game plan for the next . . . five years and stick to it," looking for that kind of certainty.

We're responding to those reports, Mr. Speaker. We're responding to the work that over 800 Albertans supplied to the Advisory Council on Electricity, the good work of the people on that advisory committee, the good work by the members for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and Leduc on this. So that is one area we take our direction from. Of course, we're going to listen to what the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties have said to us, but, you know, it's a large issue, and the good part of it is that there's power here, there's economic growth here, people are buying houses, land prices are increasing, and I'm glad that we have this item to discuss.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A second question to the same minister. I hope this time he'll listen more carefully. If he thinks that everything is hunky-dory, as he claims, then why did the overwhelming majority of delegates at the AAMDC convention urge the government and him to abandon and reverse utility deregulation? Why are they saying this to you?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, probably the same reason as why they asked me one question in a bear-pit session that lasted over an hour.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the more reasonable member of the front benches there, the Deputy Premier of the province of Alberta. Why is the government refusing to listen to rural politicians, who know firsthand the hardships caused by the government's disastrous deregulation policies, Madam Minister?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, as a member of a rural community and as a representative of a rural community I know how important it is to have a safe, reliable supply of power. If I were the operator of a hog operation, who depends by the moment on power, of a feather industry, where 15 minutes out of power can devastate their whole livelihood, I would appreciate the fact that I have a safe, reliable source of power. I am not facing blackouts, brownouts, or rolling power outages in rural Alberta today, which, if any of us look back to prior to deregulation, was a very serious risk. In fact, many of the same media that write stories today about deregulation wrote stories about the looming brownouts. We appreciate having increased energy occurring. In fact, we in rural Alberta appreciate being contributors to a good environment by cogeneration through collecting methane from hog operations.

Mr. Speaker, I would really encourage the hon. member, instead of trying to find the narrow political issues, to look at the other half of the glass and see what has happened since power deregulation. Talk about wind energy, talk about bioenergy, talk about the investments that have been made in this province, and talk about the fact that the economic advantage in this province comes from the complete economy, not a single issue.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Edmonton City Centre Airport

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Media reports this morning are claiming that the province is intent on seizing the Edmonton City Centre Airport in an attempt to keep the Edmonton Regional Airports Authority from following through on its announced intention to cease all scheduled flights into the airport as of January 2005. My first question is for the Minister of Economic Development. Can the minister clarify just what the province's intentions are regarding the survival of Edmonton City Centre Airport?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before I give my answer, I would like to reiterate my thanks to the Member for Peace River and the Member for Lesser Slave Lake for all the work they've done on this particular file.

Mr. Speaker, I need to clarify that comments that were portrayed to say that the Alberta government is looking at seizing the airport are absolutely false. They were taken out of context, and they were not the comments we wanted to make. What we did want to talk about is the absolutely vital nature that this municipal airport plays in economic development not only in northern Alberta but in rural Alberta, in Lethbridge, Medicine Hat. To that end we feel that the airport authority needs to revisit the decision they made. To that end we are going to encourage them with every ounce of being we have to look at what it is they're doing and look at the great opportunity that exists with that airport.

In 1995, the year that the decision was reached to consolidate some air traffic, there were some 3 billion dollars' worth of projects on the books. There are now some 50 billion dollars, Mr. Speaker, and the majority of them are in northern Alberta. So we see this tool as vital not only for economic development in northern Alberta but for all of Alberta and most specifically rural Alberta.

Mr. Vandermeer: My final question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Could the minister please explain who is on the government's committee and what they are looking at?

Ms Calahasen: Well, firstly, Mr. Speaker, our government recognizes the important role the city of Edmonton as well as the City Centre Airport play. I think it's really important for northern Alberta that whatever happens, we continue to work on this. As a result, the Minister of Economic Development and I will co-lead Infrastructure, Transportation, the chair of NADC, as well as Municipal Affairs to ensure that we continue to work with the city, the northern communities, and of course the members of NADC.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to talk about that because what we want to do is we want to bring people to the table, we want to hear their concerns, we want to gather information, but most of all we want to find solutions. I was so pleased to hear the other day that the mayor of Edmonton is supporting the continuation of scheduled aircraft at the airport, because Edmonton is the city of choice for northern communities and businesses and we want Edmonton to remain the gateway to the north, and I know Edmonton wants to remain the gateway to the north. Even the city's own audit echoes the saying that through the development of effective and actionable plans the operation of the City Centre Airport will continue to benefit the city, the region, and the province.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, I did hear you say that it was your final supplementary; right?

Mr. Vandermeer: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Students and parents are upset by the shift in government policy that will see these Albertans pay a larger portion of postsecondary school costs. It seems that for the government 30 percent is not enough. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How much is enough, Mr. Minister? Is it 35 percent? Is it 40? Is it 50 percent? Just how much is enough?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, as I related to the Legislative Assembly yesterday, the 30 percent tuition fee policy is still in place, and as was seen in the amendments that I brought before the House late last night, it is actually still in place. Where we ran into an issue was with those institutions that have already reached the 30 percent cap. The hon. member is fully aware that the reason they have reached the cap is because they were very good business managers, their expenses had gone down, and subsequently they were not allowed to increase their tuition.

The University of Lethbridge, for example, has frozen their tuition for two years. The Lethbridge Community College I believe is for three years. Mr. Speaker, it would be completely different if these institutions were higher than anywhere else in Alberta, but in reality they're significantly lower. As deemed in the Maclean's study, the University of Lethbridge is 40th of 50 universities across the country as the cheapest university.

Mr. Speaker, these people want the room to be able to increase their financial resources. Despite the fact that their expenses are down, their productivity is up. What we have done in the new amendments that were tabled last night is we have put a cost of living plus 2 percent to a maximum of 5 percent per year if they do hit 30 percent. That is less than what the rate of tuition rises right now. The other key thing that must be said here is that the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta, which are our two largest institutions, are still sitting at about 23 or 24 percent and indeed probably will never hit 30 percent.

So, Mr. Speaker, the amendments that were put in last night are to benefit those institutions that have been excellent managers, that have had lower tuition and now are going to raise their tuition by, at most, 5 percent per year.

Dr. Massey: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question is: is there a cap? Is there a 30 percent cap?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, for those institutions that are under 30 percent, there are specific guidelines or specific regulations that say that they can only increase their tuition by an average of $276 in the upcoming year. For those institutions who have reached 30 percent, they can at most – at most – increase their tuition by 5 percent.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So the answer is: no, there's no cap.

When will Albertans see a long-term plan for funding our postsecondary schools that will bring some stability to the amount contributed by students and parents?

Dr. Oberg: Last night.

The Deputy Speaker: The next question. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Cull Cow and Bull Program

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In October Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development announced that they were negotiating with the federal government on a national cull cow and bull program to help the beef and dairy producers deal with the difficulties they continue to face as they cull their beef and dairy herds. Many of my constituents wonder when the joint federal/provincial program will be announced. My first question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Minister, what kind of update can you provide concerning the national cull cow and bull program?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we understand from statements that were made by Minister Vanclief the day before yesterday that they will be proceeding with announcing a federal cull cow and bull program, and that may be exactly what they will announce. I prefer to talk about a mature market animal program, and that will be what we talk about. It is our understanding that this program and the details of this program will be announced officially tomorrow.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: well, what has the industry said that it needs with regard to a cull cow and bull program?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we've worked over the last several weeks, actually, with the industry on how to deal with these mature market animals. As most know, with this animal prior to May 20 the majority of that product went into the U.S. As of May 20 none of that product can go into the U.S., and it isn't expected that it can for some time. So the industry along with our caucus have talked about how to deal with this issue on a long-term basis. The industry and we agree that there are a number of things that you need. The first is a home for the product, for a product that used to have a different home. The second thing is that you have to have slaughter facilities for this product, and the third thing you need to have is a market for the product. Our industry and this government are very, very concerned about, again, interfering in the marketplace in a negative way.

2:10

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's November 20. My producers have been waiting for five months. When can producers expect details of this Alberta program?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting for five weeks to convince the rest of Canada, including the government of Canada, that we should have some principles behind dealing with mature market animals. Those principles first and foremost should be to deal with a market reality. Well, five weeks later I have failed to receive support from the federal government, some support from the government of British Columbia, which I think understands the marketing situation, and very little from the rest of Canada.

Obviously, there's no question that this is a major issue for us. We carry about 50 percent of the breeding stock in Canada in this province, so it is a big issue for us. We are still hopeful that sometime this afternoon, tonight, or tomorrow morning the federal government will recognize the marketplace in what they do and we could join in a national program. However, Mr. Speaker, failing that, producers in this province will know on Monday the details of the Alberta program.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Charles Camsell Hospital

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberal opposition has learned recently that a deal for selling the former Charles Camsell hospital in Edmonton may close within the next few days. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is the minister aware of plans by the proposed owners to provide health services at the former Charles Camsell hospital?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I have not been apprised of what appears to be a private transaction with an offer that has been made by an individual or a corporation that's not known to me. It would not come within my scope of knowledge. It wouldn't be within my jurisdiction to seek such information.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So, then, what assurances can the minister give Edmontonians that the Camsell will not just become another example of a public health facility being shut down only to be reopened by a private operator providing insured health services?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member well knows about our public health legislation which prohibits private hospitals from operating in the province of Alberta, but there's nothing wrong with private surgical facilities being set up by individuals who wish to do certain types of procedures. Not major surgeries, which can only be done in a public hospital, but there are many procedures that can be done in private surgical facilities that can provide insured services to individuals. They cannot charge such individuals, but they can provide such services under contract to a regional health authority. He well knows that there are many such contracts within the province of Alberta for the provision of such services.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental, Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the Minister of Infrastructure has stated in this House that the Camsell is, quote, not suitable for long-term care, end quote, will the minister confirm that publicly contracted long-term care services will not be provided at the Camsell?

Mr. Mar: I can't possibly tell members of this House what the plans are for such a person who may or may not be buying, for a deal which may or may not be closing, for a deal that may or may not be in the works. I would presume that if such an individual or corporate entity were to come forward and buy such a facility as the Camsell, they would have in their plans renovations that would make it suitable for whatever services or use that they choose to use it for.

Mr. Speaker, this is a perfectly hypothetical question that is not about government policy per se, which is the purpose of question period. I need not remind the hon. member of that. We do not delve into the private affairs of corporations that wish to make a commercial transaction on a facility.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Grande Cache Sawmill Closure

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Weyerhaeuser in Grande Cache recently announced that they will be closing their mill on February 8, 2004. This is a huge blow to the community, with over 156 employees losing their mill jobs. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister tell the Assembly: what are some of the challenges that the forest sector is facing right now that would have contributed to this decision?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a very, very good question. As I've indicated before in this House, forestry continues to be a very important part of our overall economic diversification plan in Alberta. In fact, up to 50 communities in Alberta depend on forestry as their major source of income.

Dr. Taylor: How many?

Mr. Cardinal: For over 50 communities a major source of income and, also, job creation. In this particular case, Grande Cache happens to be one of those communities, and it's a community that cannot stand the loss of that many jobs.

What we are doing, Mr. Speaker, is that I've asked my department to look at the reasons why the company is saying that it's not economically viable to operate with 130 million board feet. As a person that was involved in forestry in my previous life, I generally have a good handle on the situation. What I intend to do once I get the status report from the department as to what distance the trees have to be hauled, the size of the trees, and the way the mill is set up in that town is that I will then go over and spend some time and tour the area to determine what we will do from there on.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Three years ago the mine in Grande Cache closed down. Now this. For a town of this size these layoffs are really difficult. What is being done to deal with these workers?

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member is aware, we did meet with the company officials from Weyerhaeuser yesterday, and they've agreed that they will do anything they can to ensure that a certain number of jobs are retained in Grande Cache. They may not be at exactly the same mill that's there, but we will look at other options. In addition to that, I know that the Premier has contacted the town and advised them that there are a number of ministers that will be working on the issue along with the MLA from that riding, of course.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental, West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. What is going to be done with the wood supply in the forest management agreement for this area?

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There is, of course, a clause in the forest management agreement that after 15 months or so if the company does not come up with a different solution in relation to harvesting the forest and also processing the forest in that particular setting, the government has the option to take over the wood supply and possibly reallocate it to another, more viable process of job creation.

Calgary Courthouse

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, plans to have a private consortium build and operate a new courthouse in Calgary have continued to move forward despite concerns from Alberta's top judges. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Is the minister aware that one of the firms in the GCK Consortium, Great West Life Realty, is affiliated with Great West Life and its subsidiaries, which have been involved in more than 700 legal actions before the Calgary courts in recent years?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Attorney General for the province clearly outlined yesterday, there was no problem with the justice system operating in a building that happens to be owned and operated by the private sector. As a matter of fact, the Court of Appeal today is in a building owned by a private company. So I don't know why I would be searching to find out if the people that are financing and/or have got something to do with a project happened to have been in court.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice to supplement.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member should be aware that no one is before the courts of this province more often than the government of Alberta, both on behalf of the people of Alberta prosecuting under the Criminal Code and under other provincial offences and both as a plaintiff and as a defendant, and there has never been a question about whether or not the fact that the government operated and ran the buildings in this province that the courts operate in impeded the independence of the courts in terms of matters before the courts. The government of Alberta is before the courts more often than any other party.

Mr. Bonner: To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that private companies with potential conflicts of interest will be handling security responsibilities and the management of sensitive documents at the Calgary courthouse under the P3 model, how can this possibly maintain public confidence in the courts?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, this is a very prime example of that opposition continually making comments about things that they have not investigated, that they've not researched, nor have they ever taken the time to try to look into these kinds of situations. The fact is that the security will be handled in that building similar to security in any other courthouse that we operate, and it will fall under the Solicitor General similar to the way it is today. That will not change.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: will the minister, then, table a detailed business plan that outlines measures to deal with potential conflicts of interest arising from the involvement of private companies in the project?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the whole issue about security in any facility regardless of the owner – I just don't understand why these people can't get it through their thick skulls that, in fact, there are things like security that we are not putting out to the private sector. They stay in with the Solicitor General, and that's not changing just because someone happens to own the bricks and mortar of the facility.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, the Chamber is inhabited by people who are elected members, and the thickness of their skulls is not really the issue. They have the right to ask questions.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's now clear that the promise to roll back insurance rates to levels found in other western provinces was nothing more than the usual hot air we're used to getting from the Premier. The insurance plan released yesterday will, if everything goes well, roll back rates by, at best, 12 percent. To the Minister of Finance: given that rates increased by 57 percent last year alone, why is the government conceding that it is powerless to reverse the gouging that occurred last year when private insurance took Alberta drivers to the cleaners?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, we did not put forward a plan to roll back insurance rates. What we put forward was a plan that recognized that we had some difficulties with increased insurance rates, particularly in the automobile sector, but it had to deal with a whole restructuring of our insurance delivery program, because we found that there was poor accessibility, our prices were high, and we were not comparable to other jurisdictions. So we embarked on a program that would in fact move Alberta into a position that would give us accessibility, where people would not be denied access to insurance, where people would be able to buy insurance at a price that would not preclude them from buying it, so it would be affordable, and we would have a comparable price mechanism within this province in comparison to the other jurisdictions on either side.

That's the program we embarked on, and we also put an added element in there that I think is very important, that puts some personal responsibility into the mix, and said: if you're a good driver, you're going to be rewarded, and if you're a bad driver, you're going to be penalized because we don't want bad drivers on the roads. It's as simple a case as that. That's what we put forward. We didn't adopt anybody else's plan. We made our own plan here in Alberta, and the Member for Medicine Hat has spent since July with a team of people to implement a process that will get us to the point where we deliver that to the consumers of the province of Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will the government's plan bring rates in line with other western provinces, as the Premier promised, given that rates in Alberta are 40 percent higher than in B.C., 51 percent higher than in Saskatchewan, and 57 percent higher than in Manitoba?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, we will be introducing in this House very quickly a piece of legislation that will deal with the detailed particulars of how we will accomplish this, but in the short we recognized that in order to bring down premiums, we had to do a balancing act, and we said that in order to bring down our premiums so we had affordable premiums and comparable premiums, we had to remove roughly $250 million out of the system.

So the balancing act was to redesign the benefit side of the equation, and that we have done, and that's how you attain the reduction and enhance the benefits and make it affordable and accessible for Albertans. As the legislation comes forward in the next week, I'm sure that the hon. member will see a little clearer picture as to how that's going to happen. I think that, quite frankly, the job we had, again, was to have accessibility, affordability, and comparable pricing, and I believe that with the package we will be bringing forward, it will accomplish just that.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister clearly cannot find any way to bring rates down to the level of provinces with public insurance, can she tell this House one good reason why her government won't consider – won't even consider – a public insurance system?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's go back again. I just finished saying in the previous supplementary answer that we have put forward a plan that will see $250 million coming out of the premium side of the equation. That will be going back to consumers to lower premiums, and that will in fact go back to consumers in our new reformed insurance package.

The decision that we made as a government was to put a program in place, again, that will provide for accessibility, affordability, and comparability but at the same time will put personal responsibility into the mix. We made a conscious decision as a government that we were not in favour of moving to government insurance. We felt that that was not the answer for Albertans, and as a result, unlike the socialists over there, we said that this is a place where we believe that we are not in the business of being in business, and we would prefer to have, unlike what they would want, the private sector continue on to offer insurance coverage within this province.

Now, this is very important, Mr. Speaker, because what you have on either side of us, of course, are government insurance packages, and while they may be successful in some areas, we believe that we have had success with the private sector within this province, and we would like to see that relationship continue to grow and continue on to provide the kind of coverage that we want.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

2:30 Provincial Fish and Wildlife Officers

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that Albertans are very proud of our long history of resource management and conservation enforcement by our fish and wildlife officers, and I would like to see us maintain and even improve on that history. There have been some mixed reports lately, however, about our fish and wildlife division which are causing concern to some Albertans. My questions are to the Minister of Alberta Sustainable Resource Development. Mr. Minister, has there been a change in policy in your department such that the department no longer places the same value on the work of fish and wildlife officers as it once did?

Mr. Cardinal: No, Mr. Speaker. I've seen some reports from the media. There are really no reports out to indicate that we are mistreating employees. I believe this government understands that we do have, you know, a very efficient and effective public service here in Alberta, and we're proud of that. That's why we keep on getting elected: we have such good backup from the public service.

Mr. Speaker, in relation to the conservation or fish and wildlife officers, they're no different. They operate like other public servants, and we have high regard for our employees. In fact, I have 130 fish and wildlife officers in Alberta out of a staff of 2,000, and we do spend about $37 million a year specifically for fish and wildlife operations. That budget has increased by $700,000 in the past year. There are no layoffs, and we don't plan to lay off anyone.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: does the department have a thorough, well-established, and proper process to properly determine what funding should be allocated to officer patrols and poaching regulation enforcement?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker. We do have to operate within our budget – each ministry does – and we have to be very efficient as to how taxpayer dollars are used. Department officials in each division are involved in the development of the plans for the yearly operations, and our budgets are based on that. Therefore, they are directly involved in planning and staffing of particular divisions.

Mr. Lord: Well, my final question sums it up. Can the minister tell us: is his department taking poaching and wildlife conservation issues seriously in this province?

Mr. Cardinal: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. That is a top priority. But one thing I want to say. Poaching is mentioned a lot of times in a negative way. I would say that 99.9 percent of Albertans are honest and will never poach, so we are dealing with a small, small percentage of the population in Alberta. In the past six years, in fact, there have been approximately just a bit over a thousand people charged and fines of over $1.1 million. So the area is working very well.

We do have, though, another challenge, Mr. Speaker. That's the number of wild animals that we have on our roadways in our forests and in our towns. Last year alone we had over 6,000 accidents between motor vehicles and animals out in the wild, so we do have challenges.

The Deputy Speaker: Before we proceed to the next item of business, I wonder if we might have unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a great honour for me to introduce to you two wonderful ladies. The first one will be recognized tonight as a long-service employee with the government of Alberta at a special recognition. She has 35 years' service. She started with the government on July 15, 1968. She's had a variety of duties from finance and central personnel to training and staff development. At one time she worked for the minister of health, the Hon. J. Donovan Ross, moved into Premier's correspondence, and has worked with a number of MLAs. I've had the pleasure of working with this lady since I was elected in 1992. I would ask that Mrs. Dianne Wills please rise and receive the warm welcome.

I don't know if I'm allowed to do this, Mr. Speaker, but there's a lady up there who hasn't got an award for 32 years of putting up with me, but her family is very proud of a terrific mother, a great decorator, a super cook, a professional registered psychiatric nurse who drives 50 miles one way every day to help people with mental health needs: my wife, Mary.

The Deputy Speaker: I have three on my list today. The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Crystal Methamphetamine

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, what would you do if you knew that your child was ingesting paint thinner, gas line antifreeze, hydrochloric acid, diet pills, Drano, ammonia, and battery acid? Well, our children in Alberta are ingesting these ingredients in the form of crystal meth, a dirty, filthy drug whose use is growing to epidemic proportions in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we've been hearing about crystal meth in this Legislature since last spring. Crystal meth is a dirty drug. It uses dirty ingredients that are easy to obtain and cheap to buy. It's a cheap alternative to other drugs, including cocaine. A single hit of crystal meth costs about $10 to $20. It gives a more potent high than cocaine, lasts longer, and has a greater chance of hooking someone the first time they try it.

Should we be worried about crystal meth, Mr. Speaker? We should be very worried because crystal meth is a potent chemical cocktail brewed by amateur chemists in underground labs, that are cropping up with alarming frequency in rural and urban communities all over Alberta. You can find the recipes right on the Internet. Crystal meth has shown up in very serious quantities in Edmonton, Edson, Drayton Valley, Leduc, Bonnyville, Hinton, Evansburg, Camrose, and Fort McMurray. I know that Red Deer and other central Alberta communities have not escaped this curse.

I commend the Solicitor General of Alberta for taking immediate action and learning about the problem in the United States because our children are the next targets. Every community needs to be aware of this problem. I also commend the members of the Battle River drug response task force for developing and producing a guide called Responding to Youth Involved with Drugs. I encourage all school districts to send for a copy of this guide and to start informing our students about the dangers of crystal meth.

When I asked an honours student why she would take the first hit, she said because she didn't know what it would do to her, and if she had known, she wouldn't have touched it. This honours student from a middle-class home was able to fight her addiction and go back to school. She's helping to spread the message to other students.

I encourage everyone in this Assembly to make it their business to inform their school officials of the severity of crystal meth use. This can't wait. We need to do something now to prevent the next student from becoming addicted to this dangerous, dirty drug.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Official Opposition Health Care Policy

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of all the issues we debate in this House, none is more important than the health and well-being of Albertans. That is why the Alberta Liberal opposition, after consulting with health care professionals, academics, stakeholders, and hundreds of Albertans, is presenting a new vision for health care in Alberta, a vision based on bold innovation and strong, steady management.

Our policy contains 24 detailed policy positions aimed at strengthening our public health care system and keeping Albertans healthy. Some of our most innovative ideas include requiring all major government policies to undergo a health impact assessment to gauge their potential effects on Albertans' health and a community wellness fund aimed not only at supporting public health initiatives but through FCSS building stronger communities from the grass roots up. As well, the provincewide community health centre model we are proposing will improve Albertans' access to health services and give communities a direct say in primary care reform.

We also stick to long-held Liberal commitments: a commitment to a publicly administered and publicly delivered health care system, a commitment to eliminate health care premiums, a commitment to elect regional health authority boards, a commitment to long-term, stable funding for health care.

Since its release our health policy has received a great deal of praise and recognition, but this doesn't mean our work is done. We're going to continue to add to, refine, and review it. I invite all members of this Assembly and all Albertans to contact our office for a copy of our policy and to provide comments. Together we can make medicare better.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Automobile Insurance Reform

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been fed up with skyrocketing automobile insurance premiums for years, yet this government only chose to act when it saw elections in other provinces being decided by this important issue. What was this government's response? To propose a series of patches. Just like a car on a gravel road with a patch on a bald tire, Albertans can't get very far on a premium freeze after insurance rates have increased by over 57 percent. The government is also floating a number of other quick fixes that won't solve the root of the problem.

The Official Opposition, however, began looking for a solution to the crisis in automobile insurance a year ago. Our extensive research showed that Alberta's problems will only be solved by moving to a public system of insurance. Our alternative plan is called People before Profits, which isn't just a catchy title but a philosophy on how a mandatory financial product like auto insurance should be provided.

Our made-in-Alberta plan for auto insurance builds on some of the principles that have been successful for the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia, a public tort system of insurance. Our alternative plan would lower premiums for good drivers regardless of age or sex, guarantee basic coverage to all legal drivers, put an end to the excessive insurance industry profits that have picked drivers' pockets, reduce the medical, legal, and administrative costs of providing insurance. Our plan will not discriminate against Edmonton motorists. As well, it will promote and enforce measures to keep all Albertans on the road safe. Our alternative plan would not place unfair caps on necessary medical and rehabilitative services for Albertans injured in motor vehicle accidents.

It's about fairness and finding a real solution to a problem that's affecting virtually every Alberta household. If this government and the citizens of this province would like to learn more about this alternative plan, please go to liberalopposition.com.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund I'd like to table the report of the standing committee for 2002-2003, and while I do that, I'd like to thank the committee clerk, Karen Sawchuk, and the Hansard staff for the fine work that they've done this year. Also, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the Minister of Revenue and his officials for the great assistance they provided this past year as well as my committee on both sides of the House for their contribution as it relates to a fund that enhances life for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of Written Question 15.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, I'm very pleased to table five copies of the annual report for the council for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2003. I would also add that each member of this Assembly received a copy of the report earlier in the fall.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As minister responsible for sport in the province of Alberta it is my great pleasure to table the appropriate copies regarding a letter to Mr. Patrick LaForge, president and CEO of the Edmonton Oilers Hockey Club, congratulating them on this first ever reunion of National Hockey League players on outdoor ice and for the tremendous leadership they have shown in inaugurating this event in our city.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table six copies of responses to questions asked before us at Committee of Supply on May 6. I think we answered some 150 questions verbally. These are the remaining few.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've got two documents to table today in the appropriate number of copies. The first one is a letter from an Edmonton parent with children in the Edmonton public school board, Erica Bullwinkle, dated November 20, 2003, addressed to the Minister of Learning. She, having talked to the school board, writes to the minister that she considered the minister's recent funding announcement to be inadequate as it will enable the Edmonton public schools to hire back only 36 teachers.

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is a letter written by Mayor Bill Smith on behalf of the council to the Minister of Learning expressing the council's concerns with respect to Bill 43, including the following motion, which says that the Mayor's letter to the Minister of Learning include the City of Edmonton's concern . . . the effect that uncontrolled increase in post secondary tuition will have on attracting and retaining high quality students to the City of Edmonton.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have four tablings. They are from Anne Rieger, Charlotte Davis, Keith Siemens, and Kelly Thorburn, and they are all copies of letters that were originally sent to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. They're all concerning their disappointment over his response to their letters regarding the negotiations between the Provincial Health Authorities of Alberta and the United Nurses of Alberta.

Thank you.
